CHICAGO (UPI) — A wide-bodied DC-10 jetliner loaded with holiday travelers crashed in a fireball Friday seconds after takeoff from the world's busiest airport in the worst air disaster in U.S. history. There were no survivors.

The death toll was set by American Airlines at 272 — 259 passengers, three crew members and 10 flight attendants.

"There were just pieces of bodies, nothing that looked alive," said a priest who rushed to the crash. "The destruction was so complete I'm sure they never knew what happened."

The worst U.S. crash in history

CHICAGO (UPI) — The crash of an American Airlines DC-10 wide-bodied jet taking off from Chicago Friday was far the worst air disaster in American history.

The death toll of 272 was nearly double that of the previous record established exactly eight months before — on Sept. 25, 1978 — when a Pacific Southwest airliner and a small Cessna 172 collided over San Diego, killing 144 people.

The deaths in the San Diego accident included 135 on the PSA Boeing 727 jet, two on the Cessna and seven on the ground in a residential neighborhood.

The worst single-plane disaster in world history was the March 3, 1974, crash of a Turkish DC-10 wide-bodied jet crashed at Ermenonville, France, near Paris, which took 346 lives.

The worst aviation disaster of all time was the collision of two Boeing 747s on the runway at Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Canary Islands, Spain, which killed 582 people aboard the Pan Am and KLM airplanes. Sixty-two people aboard the Pan Am jet survived.

Friday's accident was only the second major crash of a wide-bodied jetliner on American soil since their introduction nearly a decade ago. The first was on Dec. 29, 1972, when an Eastern Airlines Lockheed TriStar crashes on approach to Miami International Airport, killing 100. About the same number survived.

In another accident, three people were killed and some 50 injured on March 1, 1976, in Los Angeles when a Continental Airlines DC-10 en route to Hawaii with 199 people aboard took two tires, ran off a runway and caught fire.

Police and firemen worked through the night under floodlights searching for bodies in the fragmented wreckage. They said their job would not be finished by daybreak.

The plane's "black box" flight recorder of cockpit conversations was found "relatively intact," said a federal official.

The ground near O'Hare International Airport was littered with a grisly mixture of severed limbs, twisted bits of debris, books and airline brochures. Acting Police Superintendent Samuel Nolan said officers were dealing with "bodies and parts of bodies."

"We don't know where the bodies are," he said. "We're looking and trying to remove as much as we possibly can."

Body bags were placed in rows aboard trucks for transport to a makeshift morgue at the airport. An FBI disaster team was en route from Washington to aid in identification of the victims.

Three of the passengers were executives of Chicago-based Playboy magazine, including managing editor Sheldon Wax and his wife, Judith. They were traveling to a booksellers' convention in Los Angeles.

The silver, blue and red tri-jet — Flight 191 bound for Los Angeles — lost a left wing engine and veered to the left as it took off from runway 32-R. It came down almost in the middle of three mobile home parks 1 1/2 miles from the field.

It narrowly missed the mobile homes and a junkyard and smashed into a field used to train dogs for the Chicago police canine unit.

Three people in the trailer homes were injured by flying debris and were treated at hospitals. But there was no life in the downed aircraft. A department chaplain said the flaming wreckage was "too hot" to get close enough to perform last rites.

"I looked up, I saw one engine gone," said Tom Ring, 27, who was working at a junk yard as the huge jetliner hurtled overhead. "I knew it was going to miss that (nearby) tower by 10 feet, I knew it was going."

Ring said the plane was "going 45 to 50 miles per hour at the most... There was one engine gone from the plane. It just veered with the left wing down and hit."

The pilot tried hard to steer away from an area where there was a gas station and a lot of junked cars. He tried hard and he did it.

At a makeshift morgue set up at an American Airlines garage, a security guard said, "The bodies are going to be coming at three to five minute intervals. They'll be coming up all night probably."

The death toll was nearly double that of the previous worst U.S. air disaster on Sept. 25, 1978 when 144 died in the collision of a Pacific Southwest Airlines Boeing 727 and a small Cessna 172 over San Diego.

The worst aviation disaster of all time was the collision of two Boeing 747s on the runway at Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Canary Islands, Spain, which killed 582 people aboard the Pan Am and KLM planes. Sixty-two people aboard the Pan Am jet survived.

The three-engine American Flight 191 ran into tragedy as it took off at about 3 p.m. EDT on its non-stop flight crammed with holiday travelers getting an early start on the Memorial Day weekend. The weather was crystal clear and the plane took off into a 35 mph wind.

A spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration said the jet's left-wing engine burst into flames on the takeoff roll and fell to the runway.

The plane rose to about 200 feet heading north over lightly-packed suburban Chicago. Then, as it banked to the southwest, it turned nose upward, fell backwards and took what a witness described as "swan dive" into the ground.

The plane's landing gear was still down when it smashed into the ground. The airport control tower said communications with the plane were normal at takeoff but there was no "Mayday" call from veteran pilot Walter H. Lux of Chicago.

Black smoke plumed from the wreckage and could be seen for miles. The heat of the fire scorched the skin of residents of the mobile homes.

FAA Administrator Langhorne Bond flew from Washington to take charge of the investigation. Mayor Jane Byrne was one of the first city officials on the scene.

Warren - Holtzberg, an FAA investigator at the O'Hare control tower, said there was no emergency call from the pilot.

"The communications were all routine," he said. "The aircraft apparently lost its No. 1 engine at some time during the takeoff roll and the plane crashed about 1 1/2 miles north of the airport."

The wreckage still smoldered more than an hour after the crash. But there were only fragments to be seen — a 30-foot span of wing, an engine, a set of wheels.

The crash site was in an unincorporated area near Elk Grove Village close to the Touhy Mobile Home Park, Oasis Mobile Home Park, and Lehman Mobile Home Trailer Park. Flying debris hit the trailers, setting at least three afire.

"When I saw the flames the first thing I thought of was to run to a ditch and hide," said one witness. "I've always been afraid of something like this happening out here."

Another witness who saw the plane fall said, "It was turried completely upside down. When it hit the ground it just totally disintegrated. The heat was so intense it singed my face... There can't be a survivor in that plane."

John Wayne, a passenger on an Ozark Airlines flight arriving as the American aircraft was departing, said, "It went over some trees — bang — and then just a huge, red ball of fire. It looked like it pretty much nosed in."

Barbara Mueller, manager of Oasis Trailer Park, said, "I was sitting at my desk. I heard this like whining or rumbling sound. I saw this airplane wing starting to take off. The wings were going from side to side. It looked like the pilot was trying to get it under control. You could see then when one of the wings went down and the plane crashed into the ground. There were large flames and a lot of smoke."

Chicago Fire Department Deputy Chief Thomas Roche said from the scene, "There's no sign of life."

Are you sleeping, are you sleeping, Sen. Hayakawa?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., the Senate's oldest freshman, says he is just resting his eyes and fighting off boredom when he closes them during President Carter's briefings on such issues as the energy crisis and SALT II.

Some of his colleagues say the 72-year-old Californian has been observed dozing — and even snoring — in the presidential meetings.

The cat nap controversy surfaced last week during a White House meeting between Carter, California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., several state legislators and the entire California congressional delegation. The subject was California's energy shortage.

Several congressmen and state legislators told reporters Hayakawa had slept through most of the 45-minute discussion.

On Thursday, Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said he didn't know about that but he had seen Hayakawa dozing two weeks ago when Carter briefed Senate leaders on the emerging U.S.-Soviet strategic arms limitation treaty.

Hayakawa is a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Cranston said several people sitting near Hayakawa told him the senator "was snoring" during the briefing on SALT, which Cranston called "the most important issue facing mankind."

Since his arrival in Washington in January 1977, Hayakawa has been observed nodding off at other functions including Senate committee meetings, formal dinners and Senate sessions.

He initially refused comment on his energy snooze but finally addressed the issue at a news conference Thursday.

"Different people see different things depending on what they are looking for," he said.

He said he was not asleep but "bored" by the energy meeting. Although his eyes "may have been closed," it was "only for short periods — like one or two minutes."

"I don't fall asleep around here nearly as much as I did at San Francisco State," said Hayakawa, a world renowned linguistics expert and former president of that university.

"Things were really boring there."

Pilot's body found by climbers

CHALLIS (UPI) — The body of the pilot of a light plane that crashed in a rocky, mountainous area early this month was found Friday afternoon after searchers spotted the craft from the air.

Two of the four Canadians aboard the plane when it crashed — Brent Dyer, 27, and Donna Johnson, 17 — walked out to civilization Thursday night, providing authorities with a general description of where the wreckage was. All four were from Estevan, Saskatchewan.

Against a backdrop of snow and ice, they had burned gasoline from the plane's tanks to stay warm and eaten moss from the bottoms of streams after their supply of snacks ran out.

Custer County Sheriff Sid Teuscher said mountain climbers made it to the plane at mid-day and later found the body of pilot Norm Pischke, 37, about a mile from the crash site.

Pischke had left the plane shortly after the crash to get help. Teuscher said he presumed Pischke died of exposure. But he said that would not be confirmed until an autopsy was performed.

The Canadians were bound for Boise May 5 to pick up a puppy at Nampa, Idaho, after stopping for fuel at Livingston, Mont.

Teuscher said the aircraft encountered a spring snowstorm and could not make it over 10,000-foot mountains. Pischke tried to get out of the storm by flying low in the canyons. The plane's wing struck a tree, however, and crashed into a snowbank at the 9,000-foot level some 33 miles southwest of Challis, the sheriff added.

He said the crash occurred near Tin Cup Lake.

A fourth occupant of the plane, Donald Johnson, 50 — the young woman's father — was injured in the crash and died at the site a few days later.

Teuscher said the Cessna 172 Skyhawk crashed in a "very mountainous, rocky area, but it came down in a clearing on the side of the mountain, bare of timber."

The sheriff said crews airlifted to the crash site Friday morning were expected to transport the bodies of Johnson and Pischke to Challis sometime late Friday.

The two survivors found civilization at the Livingston mine some 46 miles southwest of Challis after walking through Idaho's wilderness, south of the Salmon River to the River of No Return, which received national attention last summer when President Carter spent several days running the white-water rapids.

Dyer and Ms. Johnson, thin from lack of food and ragged after days away from the civilization, were checked by a doctor at the North Custer Clinic Thursday

Dyer and Ms. Johnson, thin from lack of food and ragged after days away from the civilization, were checked by a doctor at the North Custer Clinic Thursday night and, after being released, spent the night at the Village Inn Hotel.

Donna Butts, an employee of the Hotel, said Friday afternoon the survivors were asleep and had been resting in their room all day. "They look really better," Ms. Butts said. "They're doing remarkably well. They're just a little thin."

Ms. Butts said Dyer, after telephoning his wife in Canada Thursday night, asked for a hot fudge sundae and a hamburger, and Ms. Johnson requested a hot dog.

"Today I fed them again and bathed them. I just checked them and they're asleep again. They said earlier they don't want to do anything until their relatives get here from Canada."

The two survivors told authorities Pischke decided to walk out for help during the first week. They said they stayed near the plane for about two weeks before deciding they had to find their way out of the wild country or they would die of starvation.

Dyer estimated he and Ms. Johnson, his sister-in-law, walked for five days before emerging at the mine Thursday evening. They were met at the mine by Elmer Swanson, who works there. Swanson, who does not have a telephone, drove seven miles to a pay phone, where he contacted Teuscher and the sheriff drove up to the mine and took them to Challis.

Spenklink executed in Florida

RAIFORD, Fla. (UPI) — A black-headed executioner sent three 2,500-volt jolts of electricity surging into the body of convicted killer John Spenklink Friday in a milestone execution which some lawyers predict will once again open the floodgates to such killings in America.

Spenklink, a 20-year-old California drifter who contended he killed in self-defense, went limp to his death.

With a black hood draped over his head and firmly strapped to the big oak electric chair which Raiford Prison inmates call "Old Sparky," Spenklink was hit by the first two-volt jolt of electricity at 10:12 a.m. EDT. Two more surges quickly followed, and the sallow-faced Spenklink went limp in the chair.

A sickening odor of burned flesh wafted from execution chamber, and Spenklink was pronounced dead by the prison doctor at 10:18 a.m.

When the hood over Spenklink's head was lifted, his face, jaw and cheeks appeared charred black.

Spenklink was the first person to be executed in the United States since Gary Gilmore was put to death before a Utah firing squad in 1977, and the first to be executed against his will since Luis Monge went to the gas chamber in Colorado in 1967.

Protests erupted immediately from within the prison and all the way to the Supreme Court building in Washington.

Inside the prison inmates pounded on the bars and screamed, and across from the penitentiary in a cow pasture another 100 protesters pounded on oil drums with sticks and shouted "pig," and "Killer pigs" at the highway patrolmen who were keeping watch over the scene.

"You wouldn't kill a dog like that," shrieked Darlene Downs, whose ex-husband, Ernest Downs, has been on the Florida death row for a year.

Thirteen protesters were arrested outside the Supreme Court in Washington after the high court refused for a final time to stay the execution, and in Tallahassee about 100 demonstrators pounded with such force on the door to the private office of Gov. Bob Graham that aides feared it would burst open.

But the door held and Graham remained secluded, rejecting a telephone call from a woman identifying herself as Lois Spenklink, the condemned man's ailing 67-year-old mother.

The disturbances died with Spenklink.

South African charge d'affaires blasts U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — South Africa, banned from the U.N. General Assembly's debate on Namibia, blasted the world body Friday for making "a mockery" of a Western-sponsored plan for free elections and independence in the mineral-rich territory.

South African Charge d'Affaires Adrian Eksteen, in a letter to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, said the General Assembly, in "diatribe after diatribe ... has urged that the problem of South West Africa-Namibia be solved by violence."

Eksteen packed up his papers and left the assembly hall Thursday after an over-voting vote to bar him from the Namibia debate. The United States and its Western allies voted in favor of South Africa on the issue, although they have strongly opposed Pretoria's policies on Namibia.

The wordy debate resumed in fits and starts

Pacer recall

DETROIT (UPI) — American Motors Corp. announced the recall Friday of 9,600 1978-model Pacers for inspection of a part that could cause front suspension damage.

AMC said the cars may have been assembled with a metallurgically deficient suspension ball-joint assembly.

Explosion kills four

SHELBY, N.C. (UPI) — Four persons were killed and at least 19 others were hurt Friday night when an explosion ripped through a burning clothing store where firefighters were attempting to put out a fire.

"We thought we had it under control and then boom, it just exploded," said Assistant Shelby Fire Chief Lovon Kennedy.

Spanish killing

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Two Basque separatist guerrillas attacked an army staff car Friday, killing three high-ranking military officers and their driver one day after Spain's parliament called for stronger measures to fight terrorism.

Within four hours of the attack in downtown Madrid three more persons died in political violence.

Duke's birthday

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — There will be a gathering of the clan at UCLA Medical Center today when John Wayne's children and grandchildren celebrate the actor's 72nd birthday with an enormous cake and a toast to his recovery.

The cancer-stricken movie star's two brightest gifts are a special gold medal authorized by Congress and an honorary captaincy in the Texas Rangers bestowed by that legendary law enforcement group.

SALT planning

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Presidents Carter and Leonid Brezhnev will meet five times at the Vienna SALT summit in a busy, tentative agenda that might produce bonus agreements on trade and killer space satellites, officials said Friday.

They said the agenda for the June 15 summit — apparently conditional on Brezhnev's health at that time — has been approved by Soviet Ambassador Anatoli Dobrynin and U.S. national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

Rescue defied

HONG KONG (UPI) — A British ship captain ignored criticism from refugee-saturated Hong Kong Friday and defied his decision to rescue nearly 1,000 Vietnamese from their sinking boats in the South China Sea.

"I do have these people in the condition they were in would have been to condemn them to certain death," Capt. Healey Martin told reporters who boarded the British freighter Sibonga, anchored just outside Hong Kong waters.

Friday. After the meeting was called to order 32 minutes late to hear Malaysia speak for 10 minutes, Assembly President Indelacio Llevano Aguirre adjourned the session because "the majority of speakers listed this morning are not prepared to speak."

The speeches began yet again later and they all bore a similar theme — lambasting South Africa's policy of apartheid and its refusal to accept the guerrilla-led South West Africa Peoples Organization as the "legitimate representative" of the Namibian people.

Nixon to move

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — Former President Nixon will probably move out of La Casa Pacifica and into a smaller but still spacious home a short distance down the coast within the next six months, it was disclosed Friday.

Nixon sold his present estate — the former Western White House, which he once promised to leave to the American people — earlier this week to a group of Orange County businessmen.

Medicinal pot

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) — Cancer and glaucoma patients can legally possess and use small amounts of marijuana to overcome the effects of their illnesses if Gov. Van Alstyne signs a bill re-passed unanimously by the House Friday.

House Bill 2267 permits physicians to prescribe marijuana to cancer and glaucoma patients and allows them to possess up to one ounce of the drug as a method of controlling glaucoma symptoms and the side effects of chemotherapy treatments.

Bundy's bite?

Theodore Bundy, charged with the killings of two Florida State University co-eds, states his case Friday in trying to convince a Florida court that the bite marks on one of the murder victims should not be allowed as evidence.

Dr. Dewayne Devore, a dental expert at the University of Maryland, said a number of people's bite might match the marks.

Bit of occupied Sinai returned to Egyptians

EL ARISH, Egypt (UPI) — Egypt and Israel took the first concrete steps toward carrying out the terms of their peace treaty Friday with the return of a slice of the occupied Sinai to Egyptian control and the opening of talks on home rule for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

El Arish and a strip of coastal Sinai in a 30-minute military ceremony. It was the first Israeli surrender of Arab territory in more than three years.

The 40,000 residents of the dusty Sinai capital in the Mediterranean Sea cheered and chanted wildly in jubilation when the red, white and black Egyptian flag fluttered over El Arish at 11:15 a.m. for the first time since 1967 war.

Egypt closed its new border with Israel shortly after the ceremony, and cut telephone, electricity and water links with the Jewish state. The lines were switched to Egyptian grids Thursday.

Israelis expressed hope the border will reopen soon after Sunday's summit meeting in El Arish between Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Maj. Gen. Dan Shomron, chief of the Israeli southern command, handed the town over to Egyptian Maj. Gen. Abdel Hamdi Hamdi, the assistant defense minister.

"We will conquer this area out of desire for expansion but because of the state of war that threatened our

"It is a great honor for me to be the first Egyptian soldier to raise the flag of the Egyptian armed forces on the land of El Arish," Hamdi responded. He spoke Arabic and his remarks were translated into Hebrew. Shomron spoke Hebrew.

Hundreds of joyful El Arish residents broke through police cordons as the blue and white Israeli flag went down the staff for the last time.

"Allah is great!" the yelled ecstatically. "We give our blood, our soul for you, Sadat!"

Some scuffles erupted among the more enthusiastic residents—and Israeli and Egyptian soldiers in jeeps cooperated in controlling the crowd.

Chinese shopping for flicks

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — A Chinese delegation has concluded a 10-day shopping tour of Hollywood, looking for a batch of modern movies to be shown at theaters throughout the world's most populous nation.

The delegation, which flew to San Francisco Friday, has been authorized to make the first legal purchases of American movies for viewing in China since the Communist government came to power three decades ago.

The group's choices, expected to total between 10 and 23 films, will be announced next week.

Hong Zang, general director of the China Film Corp., led the three-member delegation on the tour of studio offices and screening rooms, spending some of their time in negotiations and the rest watching the movies they might want to buy.

They spent Thursday at 20th Century-Fox viewing "Romana 8," the tale of a woman union organizer battling the textile industry in a Southern town.

They have also seen "Network," "Swing in the Rain," "Buck Rogers," "The Blackboard Jungle," "To Russia With Love," "Cleopatra," and "Patton," the story of the victorious U.S. general which was reportedly one of former President Nixon's favorite films.

Four inch sold temperature trend is maximum today up 2 degrees, minimum tonight no change. Pan evaporation is .35 today and .32 Sunday.

They are not looking for political pictures but are interested in historical and socially significant films," said Beverly Austin of Sino-American Export Co., who escorted the visitors from New York and Washington.

"She said Hong and two companions showed great enthusiasm for many of the films, which they plan to dub into the Chinese language.

Anti-U.S. rally in Iran

TEHRAN, Tehran (UPI) — An estimated 200,000 followers of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini shouting "Death to America! Death to Carter!" marched on the U.S. Embassy Friday, ripped apart an effigy of the president and burned an American flag.

The Iranian state radio, in unprecedented, day-long coverage, said millions of Iranians took part in anti-American demonstrations across the country to show "the Iranian people's hatred of America and its crimes in Iran."

The Tehran demonstrators—a mob twice as large as the crowd that assembled for similar demonstrations Thursday—also tore to pieces an effigy of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, burned an Israeli flag in front of the Palestine Liberation Organization office and shouted "Death to Sadat!" — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

The demonstrators propped the effigies of Carter and Begin next to the embassy wall to resemble condemned men before a firing squad.

Army reassessing bomb move after finding two leaks

DENVER (UPI) — Two more leaking nerve gas bombs have been found at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal, forcing the Army to reassess its plans to ship 896 of the containers to Utah, the arsenal said Friday.

Arsenal spokesman Peter Copeland said the two leaking bombs were inside air tight containers and there had been no leakage of the nerve gas agent into the atmosphere. Copeland also said the amount of nerve gas that leaked from the bombs was "minuscule."

Army technicians have been testing the bombs since Monday to determine if any were leaking before they were scheduled to be flown to Tooele Army Depot in Utah starting June 11. Utah Gov. Scott Matheson has filed a suit to try to block the bombs' transfer.

Copeland said the Army would reassess its plans to fly the bombs to Utah because of the discovery of the two leaking bombs.

The GB nerve agent was discovered in the air in which the bombs have been kept at the arsenal. Air samples have been drawn from 231 of the 896 bombs and tested.

Copeland said tests detected the traces of nerve agent. The amount of nerve agent in one bomb was 3.86 parts per billion parts of air, and 0.04 parts per billion parts of air in the second, he said.

One leaking bomb was discovered Wednesday and the other Thursday, he said.

"Due to the structural integrity of the containers, there was no release of the agent into the environment," Copeland said. "The leaks pose no threat to the health and safety either to the general public or to workers at the arsenal."

The leaking bombs were segregated in a separate area and the arsenal and will be tested and analyzed, he said.

Three leaking nerve gas bombs had been discovered at the arsenal last year, which delayed the Army's plans at that time to ship the bombs to Utah.

Thursday the arsenal said he was going ahead with the testing (after it was discovered that an Army technician's illness was not induced by nerve gas).

Rousing speech President claims he's set for fight

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter came out swinging Friday after a week of draft-Kennedy moves and energy policy defeats, saying "I've never backed down from a fight" and predicting he will whip any challenger in 1980. "I'll and when I decide to run."

Obviously relishing the chance to speak out, Carter addressed the Democratic National Committee in a rousing campaign orator's style that drew waves of applause.

Portraying himself as "a lonely voice" in the wilderness on energy issues, he attacked Congress and the public for refusing "to accept the simple fact" that energy shortages are real and for expecting "miracles" and "quick-fixes" instead of difficult long-range policies.

He also reassessed his titular leadership of the party in a declaration that could not be lost on supporters of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., or California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

"I have never made my announcement of what I'm going to do in 1980," he said. "In many ways I have been a lonely voice...

"But I've never backed down from a fight. I've never been afraid of public opinion polls and if and when I decide to run, it will be in every precinct in this country, no matter who else ran.

"And I have no doubt I'll be successful."

Although Carter did not say so, it was clear in this political setting that his remarks were a rejoinder to the draft-Kennedy movements now sprouting up within the party — the most recent announced only Wednesday by five Democratic congressmen.

Carter told the applauding party leaders he is well aware that, in 1980, "the energy question is going to decide who wins or loses."

He went on to upbraid both Congress — where House Democrats recently voted by 2-1 margins to "disapprove his oil price" decontrol decision — and the public in unusually harsh terms on the energy issue.

"I have been scorned and ridiculed when I said the energy problem was the moral equivalent of war," he said. "In many ways I have been a lonely voice...

John Spenkellink executed in Florida

Opponents of the death penalty had regarded Gilmore's execution as a fluke, since he lauded authorities and said he wanted to die. But Spenkellink fought his execution with every legal weapon at his command virtually up to the hour of his death, and opponents of capital punishment predicted his death would trigger a rash of executions among the nearly 500 people on the death rows of prisons across the nation.

Five times Spenkellink took his case before the U.S. Supreme Court, and five times he lost. The final ruling that sealed Spenkellink's fate came at 9:50 a.m., just minutes before his execution.

Spenkellink gave to his friend and spiritual adviser, Rev. Tom Feamster, what he intended to be his last words.

"Man is what he chooses to be. He chooses that for himself," he wrote.

"The last thing he said was that he loved me ... We shook hands," Feamster said.

Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark, one of Spenkellink's defense attorneys, called the execution "a tragic moment in our history as we regain the nations that seek to control populations by killing."

"I believe that the imperative need of our time is a reverence for life," he said. "Any person's death does diminish us all. I would hope America would soon abandon this barbaric practice."

Millard Farmer of Atlanta, another of the defense attorneys who helped engineer Spenkellink's final, futile appeal to the Supreme Court, predicted there "will be a tremendous amount (of executions) everywhere. This thing today is a monument to our failure."

"They (Florida officials) might kill 130 in the next year," Farmer told a newsmen bitterly just moments after Spenkellink died. "From what I've seen in the past few days, if their appetite continues, they possibly will."

Farmer referred to the fact that Florida Attorney General Jim Smith had flown to New Orleans and Washington in a state plane getting the federal courts to dissolve the stays of execution which they issued in Spenkellink's case.

Spenkellink and another convicted killer, Willie Darden, were first scheduled to die last Wednesday at 7 a.m. before the federal courts interceded.

Executions return, but none are expected soon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The death penalty has returned to the American scene — but civil liberties lawyers say it will be some time before any substantial number of people are executed.

There are more than 500 people on death row in the United States.

However, Henry Schwarzschild, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's capital punishment project, said Friday only about 20 of these have reached the federal courts after exhausting two rounds of state court appeals.

It is possible, he said, that none will reach the end of the line and be denied executive clemency in time to be executed this year.

But referring to the electrocution of John Spenkellink in Florida Friday morning, Schwarzschild said, "There is no doubt that we have begun now to resume involuntary executions in this country."

"Though there may now be some additional delays to others, we will have involuntary executions in substantial numbers probably at the very least by 1980."

Since the Supreme Court ruled in 1976 that capital punishment is constitutional under certain specified circumstances, Spenkellink is the first person put to death against his will since 1967.

Two judges order delays in Mississippi executions

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Judges in two U.S. District Courts Friday ordered delays in the planned Monday executions of death row inmates John Lewis-Washington and John Buford Irving.

Judge William C. Keady at Greenville granted Washington's stay of execution a matter of hours after fellow Judge Orma Smith at Oxford took similar action on Irving's appeal.

The federal court action followed a denial of both appeals by the Mississippi Supreme Court.

The legal moves to stay the executions of Irving and Washington coincided with the electrocution in Florida Friday of John Spenkellink.

Washington's attorneys claimed their client lacked effective representation during his murder trial.

Both Irving and Washington, two of 12 men on death row at the state penitentiary, were convicted of murder during armed robberies.

Irving, 23, was convicted for the 1976 robbery-slaying of Gambrell Ray in a holdup at Ray's rural grocery in Pontotoc County, Washington, 24, was convicted for the 1977 shotgun slaying of J.K. Woods.

In granting Irving's stay, Smith cited a 1963 Supreme Court decision stating a persons convicted of a crime in state court had the right to appeal to federal court to determine whether constitutional rights had been abridged.

He imposed no time limit on the proceedings and passed the case to U.S. Magistrate J. David Orlansky for further action.

Man in living room grins and bares it

By MIKE ROYKO
Chicago Sun-Times
CHICAGO — An unusual question of etiquette has been asked by two young ladies named Pearl and Liz, who live in an apartment complex in the suburb of West Chicago.

This column occasionally deals with matters of etiquette. It was I who once articulated the famous social question: Should a gentleman offer a lady a chew of tobacco?

Anyway, the situation involving Pearl and Liz is this:

They both have ground floor apartments in the complex. And their problem is that they have a neighbor, a young man, whose conduct they consider offensive.

His apartment is between their apartments. Thus, when they visit each other, which they do frequently, they have to walk across his patio and past his parlor window.

And, they say, he makes a practice of sitting in his living room and grinning at them when they walk by.

Grinning in itself is not a breach of etiquette. If anything, it normally would be considered the neighborly thing to do.

But what bothers them is that when he grins, he is usually naked.

This is not the kind of story I like getting involved in, because if you write about one naked man grinning at his neighbors, it encourages hundreds of others with the same problem to call up and ask for equal space.

However, Pearl and Liz raise some interesting social and legal questions because their local police, the sheriff's office and the state's attorney's office all say there is nothing that can be done. Pearl says that the authorities have told her that if this man wants to sit in his living room naked, grinning at his passing neighbors, that is his right.

"I think it is just terrible," says

Pearl. "I called the police and they said there was nothing they could do about him. I asked the policeman: 'How do you know he is not a rapist?'"

"And do you know what the policeman said to me? They said: 'Lady, men who are exhibitionists do not commit rape.'"

"Do you know if that is true?"

"To be honest, I don't know if it is true or not, since I've never seen a Gallup poll on that particular subject. However, it seems logical that a man who is content to sit on his sofa, grinning at the passing scene, is less dangerous than the one who hides behind a tree or a hedge."

Pearl says that the first time she noticed her neighbor acting this way was several days ago, "It was about 2 a.m.," she said.

And what were you doing looking in his window at 2 a.m.?

"Uh, we were walking back and forth between our apartments. We had a problem with a friend of ours that is too complicated to explain. But Liz had been at my place, then I had been over at her place, and we went back and forth several times."

"The first time we went by, he was sitting there on his couch, nude, with that big grin on his face. He's divorced, you know, and he's only about 28 or 29."

"Anyway, we went by a little later. And that time, he was lying on the couch."

Still grinning?

"Yes, he was grinning." And then?

"Then I walked by again, and he was still on his couch."

Still grinning?

"No, he was sleeping. And then we went by again at 9:30 in the morning. And he was still on the couch, but he was still sleeping."

So, Pearl and Liz want to know what is the best way for them to handle this situation.

The first thing to consider is that the young man is grinning, a facial expression generally considered genial and friendly. He is not, by their description, leering which the dictionary says is an expression that is "sly or insulting or . . . malicious."

Now, if he was leering or winking or rolling his eyes — or doing all three at once — then his behavior would be, as the British say, "bad form."

But since he is merely grinning, we have to assume that he is just a friendly person who happens to be naked.

Why he is naked, we don't know. Maybe his air conditioner doesn't work. Or he only has one-change-of-clothes, and it is in the washer. Or it could be that he is a creep.

But his motivation isn't the issue. The real question of etiquette here is not his nakedness and his grinning. It is whether young ladies should be casting sidelong glances into his apartment window.

Consider it from his point of view. There he is in his own apartment, sitting on his couch, wearing a happy grin. Suddenly two female faces appear at his window.

And not once, but two or three times — at 2:30 a.m. and later.

Why, he would have been justified in calling the police and complaining that he was being peeped at by a peeping Pearl and a peeping Liz.

And since they kept returning to peek at him, it would be understandable if he believed that they were pleased with his appearance.

So I suggest that Pearl and Liz, if they must stroll by his window that often, should show some ladylike restraint and avert their heads. And no littering and giggling either, ladies.

And the young man should consider wearing some sort of garment so as not to encourage his neighbor's curiosity.

Black day at the United Nations

Chalk up another bad move for the United Nations.

In the continuing debate over the status of Namibia, it appeared that there had been some sincerity in the U.N. actions, and then — wham! — the basis for that hope was suddenly cast asunder when the U.N. general assembly voted Thursday to eject South Africa from its debate on the matter.

Several other western delegates can be congratulated for voting against the ouster, but those who voted yes must be condemned for permitting their stubbornness and political game-playing to win out over political foresight and the principles of fair play.

As Young pointed out during the debate on whether the South Africans should take part in the debate, he and the U.S. administration disagreed with many of South Africa's policies, the chief of which being, of course, apartheid, but such disagreements should not interfere with the right of that country to participate in open debate, especially when that country has so much involvement with the territory in question.

At stake in the U.N. debates is the Western-authored plan for bringing independence to Namibia via one-man, one-vote elections under U.N. protection — a scheme the general assembly may have further undermined by ousting South Africa from the debate, mainly because South Africa's cooperation is necessary if such a plan is to work.

But now how willing will South Africa be to cooperate after their figurative tongue has been cut off?

The South Africans have shown signs of softening their original hard-line stand on the question of independence for Namibia, and have even stated that they would go along with the original Western plan for independence, but now there is danger of that country reverting to previous policies, a show can we afford that to happen?

Adriaan Eksteen, the South African charge d'affaires, overstated the situation when he declared in an angry letter to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that the U.N. has been saying in resolution after resolution that the Namibian issue must be solved by violence, but one cannot deny that the decision to eliminate the South Africans from the debate increases the chances of violence over the Namibian issue.

It has been proved too many times that when the free expression stops, the fighting begins.

Young said it best after Thursday's U.N. vote: "The strength of the United Nations is in no small way its diversity, in the exposure of us all to differing views. We must agree to talk to those with whom we disagree."

Amen, Mr. Young.

"Gentlemen," beams the chief executive, "I am pleased to announce that we have a gorilla."

The speaker is not a zoo keeper; nor is he the head of an underworld organization, using "gorilla" to mean "strong-arm man" or hoodlum imported for intimidation. The speaker is the boss of a music-publishing business, using the newest noun that denotes "smash hit" throughout an industry that is sociologically fecund to noise.

Why "gorilla" to describe great success? Edward M. Cramer, president of Broadcast Music Inc., surveyed his branch offices on his behalf. He and his associates think the word is derived from the previous word for huge success, "monster"; it is but a short leap from "monster" to "gorilla."

In addition, to "get down" is to lose one's inhibitions, and to be "wrapped tight" is to be in good shape, replacing "up-tight," the meaning of which has changed to "tense." "Boss" and "tough" are adjectives used to replace "far out" or "wonderful."

"That's tough" no longer offers sympathy, but high praise. An individual in any sort of difficulty is "losing the ball" or "finding undone" and will soon find himself "allegedly whipped" or unpaid.

Thus, an alley-whipped, plus-in-the-door kid on chump change can — if he will only get wrapped tight and his work matted down — be able to produce boss music, blowing them all away with a gorilla.

Curiously, a parallel use of "gorilla" (a Greek word for a race of hairy women, later used for an animal species) can be found in television news lingo, the patois of a related form of show business. Commenting on a piece here a few weeks ago about "the word from egypt" or electronic journalism, a network producer who insists on namelessness writes: "I most often hear 'on-air talent' graced on what you might call the gorilla suite," which hardly is unique to broadcasting.

"There are '800-pound gorillas,' or top stars, sometimes known, when out of earshot, as 'The Gorilla' or 'The 800-Pounder.' Lesser but important correspondents occasionally are called '400-pounders.' The nameless networker went on to commentate about a word I have been tracking remorselessly: the verb "to crash." Originally, the word — a variant of "cracken" — meant "to collide noisily." In 1960s slang, "crash" came to mean "to arrive uninvited and plunge deeply into sleep," as in a "crash pad." Recently, it picked up the hurried connotation of "crash program" and today means "to race against time."

"To crash" describes hurried work against a deadline, "writes the keeper of the 800-pounders: "When someone announces, 'We may crash with the lead piece,' or 'Chicago's crashing on both pieces tonight,' they're telling the producers putting the broadcast together in New York to start thinking of other options." (In this new meaning, a "crashing bore" is one who hastens to be tiresome.) A related terminological development in the minor-disaster area: "Going down in flames" is another no-kidding warning that a piece may not be finished in time to make the broadcast. Everybody trying to help "throw it together" is said to be "doing a crazy dance."

The gorilla and crashing metaphors mix well. Whether in the forest primeval, or in the jungles of the music or television business, when an 800-pounder starts to crash — better let him crash.

Some Thistlebottom, whose marbles are all puries, is taking teaky pen in hand at this moment to write a complaint about the verb used twice above: "commentate," a clip used here to mean "making analytical noises like a commentator." The complaint is the same type course who comes out of an orientation course and likes to say he finds it difficult to "orientate" himself, and wanders off to the school administrator to see if that worthy can "administrate" some good comfort.

Let's get back to verbal basics: If you want to orient yourself, or get the administrator to administer intelligently, we can stop commentating and start commenting.

Evidently, the word "hopefully" has become the litmus test to determine whether one is a language snob or a language slop. Angriously, traditionalists hold that the word is an adverb, usually intended to modify a verb. In the sentence "He hopefully looked at her hopefully," the "to look" is modified by "hopefully." Purists reject "Hopefully, he will look at me" because it is confusing. Does it mean "with hope in his eyes" or "I hope he will look at me?" They argue that when you mean to say "It is hoped" or "I hope," you should come out and say those words, and not cloak your hopes in a fuzzy "hopefully" that can be misinterpreted.

Additionally, the anti-dangling-adverb crowd insists that "ing" has a use in helping understanding and should not be corrupted. For example, if you say "Close the door tightly," the adjective "tightly" modifies the noun "door," thus describing accurately the desired condition of the door; but if you say "Close the door tightly," the adverb "tightly" modifies the verb "close," and does not describe the door.

Coolly, and against all that good sense, the language snob replies, "What most people use becomes 'correct,' and most people use 'hopefully' to mean 'one hopes.' To wrinkle your nose at common usage is to be a language snob."

Fortunately, we do not have to choose up sides in the debate of slop versus snob, descriptive versus prescriptive linguistics, to deal with "hopefully."

Basically, I use "hopefully" to mean "it is to be hoped" not because I "hopefully" accept new standards, but because I embrace time-tested and readily understood usage. The English language has been using adverbs to qualify a whole following clause or sentence for centuries; with one deft dab, an adverb can quickly and vividly color a sentence that follows, infusing the words that come after it with a meaning that otherwise would have to be evoked with a long and often awkward qualifier. The anti-hopefully brigade wishes a word like "hopefully" existed, to do for "hopefully" what "regrettably" does for "regrettably," but (one greets) "hopably" is not a word — so it makes no sense to keep fighting the extended use of "hopefully."

Importantly, the editor of Webster's New World Dictionary, David Gurnak, agrees: "Happily, there are many precedents for such usage," he writes. "Presumably, purists hounded when each one first appeared. Probably time will take care of 'hopefully' as well."

Doubtlessly, my deliberate decision to adopt "hopefully" in its sentence-coloring sense, and to defend it vigorously as structurally correct rather than to accept it listlessly as common sloppy usage, will be attacked by people who get their kicks out of hanging out on old ramparts. But while they're knocking "hopefully," they'll have to deal with the deliberately dangling adverbs that begin every paragraph in this entry.

Consumer prices soaring

By DONALD H. MAY
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Fueled by the biggest jump in gasoline prices since the 1974 Arab oil embargo, consumer prices soared by another 1.1 percent in April — and the government said Friday it is largely up to the purchasing public to stop the spiral.

Alfred Kahn, the administration's chief inflation fighter, gave this advice to consumers:

- "Buy pork, not beef." Beef and year prices took a 1.1 percent leap in April, but pork went down 1.7 percent.
- "Use less gasoline." Gasoline prices rose 6 percent, the largest monthly increase since the Arabs cut off the oil five years ago.

• "Don't speculate in new houses." Housing prices rose 1.3 percent in April, and mortgage rates increased 1.9 percent.

The 1.1 April rise in overall consumer prices, reported by the Labor Department, was a shade worse than March's 1 percent, a shade better than February's 1.2 percent. If the April rate continued a full year, prices would increase 13.2 percent.

Last month's readings put the Consumer Price Index at 211.5, meaning it took $211.50 to purchase goods and services that went for $100 in base-year 1967.

Over the past 12 months, overall consumer prices have increased 10.4 percent, those for food and beverages 11.7 percent, housing—10.3 percent, apparel 4.4 percent, transportation (including gasoline) 12 percent, medical care 9 percent and entertainment 6.2 percent.

The report triggered another attack by AFL-CIO President George Meany on the administration's "cost-of-living" rules — a standard for coal-fired power plant emissions that may cost industry $3 billion.

The standards apply to only new coal-burning power plants that went into construction after Sept. 18, 1978.

In announcing the new emissions standards, Douglas Costle, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, called the rules "balanced" in their consideration of the nation's economic, environmental and energy needs.

But Charles Shultz, chairman of President Carter's Council of Economic Advisors, said he expects the administration program to take hold later in the year, moderating inflation generally and, in particular, the rate of increase for food.

Inflation samplings reported

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In the Bronx, newspaper home delivery costs jumped, in New Orleans the cost of mooring yachts doubled, and in Phoenix the rent on a one-bedroom apartment was surging upward every six months, price monitors for the AFL-CIO reported Friday.

The 13.6 million member labor federation said early returns from Operation Price Watch volunteers nationwide found what every shopper knows — that there is "a continuing upsurge in the prices on all sorts of consumer goods."

The AFL-CIO launched the program in April to monitor the cost of necessities and conveniences and to point out violators of President Carter's price guidelines.

A spokesman said that because of complexities of the president's program, monitors were unable to determine if the sharp price they observed actually violated the standards.

He said "a representative sampling" of the findings had been forwarded to Alfred Kahn, chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, for possible action.

Reports forwarded to Kahn included:

Grocery probe urged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A 4.1 percent increase in retail beef prices last month when cattle prices were stable prompted the Agriculture Department Friday to order a stepped-up investigation of middlemen and grocery prices.

Howard Hopt, the department's chief economist, said costs added to beef and pork after animals leave the farm until purchased in the supermarket have risen 30 percent over the past year.

Thus, costs added by middlemen and grocery stores increased at a rate about three times the rate of general inflation, Hopt said.

Part of the explanation could be a lag in the time it takes to move beef to the supermarket, Hopt said.

"But I believe it is fair to say that it appears on the surface to be extremely difficult to justify an increase on the order of 30 percent over the past year," he said.

Sunday trips may be touchy

By United Press International
There will be little difficulty across the country Friday getting gas to take off for the Memorial Day weekend. The catch was whether there would be enough to get home again.

A national survey indicated a majority of stations would be open Saturday but as few as 10 percent in some areas would sell fuel on Sunday. That left the big question of what the situation would be on Monday.

West Virginia officials, who estimated 90 percent of their stations would close Sunday, gave its citizens this advice: If you take a trip, make sure you can do it with one tank of gas.

There appeared to be plenty of fuel in many areas. The shortage was most critical in California, parts of New England and the Middle Atlantic states. Iowa also had problems and Texas' shortages were confined to Dallas, Fort Worth and Houston.

Prices rose relentlessly. The 99.9 cents per gallon for premium was becoming "not uncommon" from California to Minnesota and in New York stations operators had been given permission to price gasoline by the half gallon as the charge went past $1.

The long lines in Southern California continued to shrink but the Automobile Club predicted 80 percent of stations in metropolitan areas would be closed Sunday. Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. ordered that stations could sell no more than two gallons to people coming in with portable containers.

New standards for coal plants

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government Friday announced one of the nation's most costly "clean air" rules — a standard for coal-fired power plant emissions that may cost industry $3 billion.

Religion Energy saving urged

U.S. currency sacred?

ADSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Altheist leader Madilyn Murray O'Hair and her son have asked the U.S. Supreme Court to order removal of the slogan "In God We Trust" from coins and currency.

O'Hair and Jon Garth Murray filed the high court May 3 in a petition asking the Supreme Court to review a 5th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling rejecting her argument that the motto violated constitutional principles of separation of church and state, and that laws prohibiting the motto from appearing on coins or paper money violated their freedom of religion.

LDS plan Whitmer complex

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — The Mormon Church plans to commemorate its 150th anniversary by building a religious complex at its founding site in western New York state.

The complex will be built on the old Peter Whitmer Farm, just south of Waterloo, N.Y. Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball says the project will be completed next year to celebrate the church's founding by Joseph Smith in 1830.

Whitmer was one of six men who helped Smith organize the religious organization on April 6, 1830.

Kimball said Saturday the project includes construction of a replica of Whitmer's old log house where the church was formally organized. A new meetinghouse and chapel for the Fayette, N.Y., branch of the church, a visitors center and a remodeled 19th century farm house will also be built.

TWIN FALLS — Support for energy conservation measures was renewed today in a statement from the first presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"We urge Latter-day Saints and all citizens to join in efforts nationally and locally to conserve precious energy resources," the first presidency said.

"Worshipers should walk to church meetings where it is feasible and can be done without undue hazard to personal safety," he urged.

The church leaders also urged members and other citizens to join car pools for transportation to make maximum use of mass transit facilities and to curtail unnecessary travel.

"It is also important that all motorists observe prescribed speed limits, both on the freeways and in residential or business areas," the statement continued.

"We also suggest that thermostats in homes be adjusted where it is feasible and that all unnecessary consumption of electricity or fuel be eliminated."

The statement was issued in support of programs being encouraged by the President of the United States and governors of various states.

In addition, the statement urged that the topic of fuel conservation be seriously discussed by all family members in a family home evening.

The LDS Church in 1976, during an earlier stage of the energy crisis, endorsed and adopted these and other conservation measures that are still in effect.

Turin shroud seems genuine

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (UPI) — A member of a scientific team which examined the Holy Shroud of Turin last October says initial analysis of evidence gathered in the four-day study seems to rule out a hoax.

"I was really about 90 percent sure we'd walk in, spend 30 minutes looking at it and decide it was hoaxed — not worth our tests on," said Raymond Rogers, a Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory microchemist.

"Now, I believe the burden of proof is on the skeptic."

Rogers was one of 27 American scientists who examined the shroud Oct. 9-13 to conduct an extensive series of tests on the cloth which is said to have covered Christ at his burial. The shroud, which measures 14.5 feet by 3.5 feet, is a negative image of a man who may have been Christ.

Chapel in the Pines sets summer services

MACK'S INN — The Chapel in the Pines summer worship schedule, effective June 10 through Sept. 2, has been announced by the Vacation Ministry Committee of the Regional Council for Christian Ministry.

Two services are scheduled for each Sunday — one at 9:30 a.m. and another at 11 a.m. The interdenominational services are under the auspices of some 10 participating churches. Roman Catholic Mass is celebrated Saturday evenings.

Rogers said the image is a light yellowish-gold. He said tests have shown that the coloration is superficial, appearing only on one surface of the thread and not down its sides. However, the tests have indicated that the image was not painted on the cloth.

Other information gathered so far by the tests indicate that the shroud was made from a cloth which was produced only in Roman times; that the wrapping of the body in the cloth was typical of burials in the Holy Land A.D. 30; the man's hair style was typical for the period; that the image shows anatomical details which were generally unknown until the 1300s; and that the color of the image has not been altered by a fire or water.

What's what

Earl morning TV show inspires ad man; lobbyists far outnumber legislators

Still one more thing you can do to while away the time at stoplights is count the plants that furnish both food and drink. Like the coconut. And grain. And grape. And most intriguingly, the Mexican magwey otherwise known as the Century plant. I say most intriguingly, because the magwey not only supplies the tequila but the caterpillar that no-squeamish drinkers eat with it.

Weird logical dreams are not all bad, according to the sleep researchers. They indicate your mind is taking a real rest. When your dreams are organized and logical, your mind is still working, they say.

Can you name the only Southeast Asian country never ruled by a foreign power? Say Thailand.

NATIONAL FLOWER

Q. Do we have a national flower?
A. No, but several have been nominated. The marigold, the chrysanthemum, and that most widespread one of all, the cost-of-living rose.

The earthworms in the earth outweigh the human beings on the earth by at least 10 to one, remember.

In nine out of 10 households in this country, you can find a deck of playing cards, if you look.

Brow hair grows about half as fast as scalp hair.

LOBBYISTS

"The Washington Influence Directory" indicates the lobbyists in the Nation's capital outnumber the legislators there by 28 to one.

Tests show a good prizefighter can deliver a jab about five times faster than a rattlesnake can strike.

A few years ago, a Kansas City, Mo., adman named Al Coleman was watching television when he heard an announcer refer to a group of demonstrators as "crackpots." It was 1:30 a.m. He'd been looking for a name for a slow cooker made by one of his clients, the Rival Manufacturing Co. Discipline, of course. He wrote down "Crock-Pot." The tricky-trade name stuck.

Religion Energy saving urged

U.S. currency sacred?

ASTIN, Texas (UPI) — Atheist leader Madaly Murray O'Hair and her son have asked the U.S. Supreme Court to order removal of the slogan "In God We Trust" from coins and currency.

Ms. O'Hair and Jon Garth Murry assigned the high court May 3 to determine if the motto on U.S. money has a clearly secular purpose, advances religion, or excessively entangles government with religion.

Their request came in the form of a petition asking the Supreme Court to review a 5th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling rejecting her argument that the motto violated constitutional principles of separation of church and state, and that laws prohibiting ministers from removing the slogans on their money violated their freedom of speech.

A federal district court had ruled the slogan had nothing to do with religion, and "its use is of a patriotic or ceremonial character."

"If God has nothing to do with religion, then every church in the United States which worships God, or 'trusts in God' should be stripped of its religious tax exemption, since, after all, trusting in God is only being patriotic," Mrs. O'Hair said.

"Atheists have no escape, no alternative lifestyle, which would allow them to avoid the daily use of theological currency which plainly states that they, as patriotic Americans, must not only believe in God but must pay for placing the motto indicating the same on their money as well," the petition said.

LDS plan Whitmer complex

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — The Mormon Church plans to commemorate its 150th anniversary by building a religious complex at its founding site in western New York state.

The complex will be built on the old Peter Whitmer Farm, just south of Waterloo, N.Y. Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball says the project will be completed next year to celebrate the church's founding by Joseph Smith in 1830.

Whitmer was one of six men who helped Smith organize the religious organization on April 6, 1830.

Kimball said Saturday the project includes construction of a replica of Whitmer's old log house where the church was formally organized. A new meetinghouse and chapel for the Fayette, N.Y., branch of the church, a visitors center and a remodeled 19th century farm house will also be built.

TWIN FALLS — Support for energy conservation measures was renewed today in a statement from the first presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"We urge Latter-day Saints and all citizens to join in efforts nationally and locally to conserve precious energy resources," the first presidency said.

"Worshippers should walk to church meetings where it is feasible and can be done without undue hazard to personal safety," it urged.

The church leaders also urged members and other citizens to join car pools for transportation to make maximum use of mass transit facilities and to curtail unnecessary travel.

"It is also important that all motorists observe prescribed speed limits, both on the freeways and in residential or business areas," the statement continued.

"We also suggest that thermostats in homes be adjusted where it is feasible and that all unnecessary consumption of electricity or fuel be eliminated."

The statement was issued in support of programs being encouraged by the President of the United States and governors of various states.

In addition, the statement urged that the topic of fuel conservation be seriously discussed by all family members in a family home evening.

The LDS Church in 1973, during an earlier stage of the energy crisis, endorsed and adopted these and other conservation measures that are still in effect.

Turin shroud seems genuine

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (UPI) — A member of a scientific team which examined the Holy Shroud of Turin last October says initial analysis of evidence gathered in the four-day study seems to rule out a hoax.

"I was really about 50 percent sure we'd walk in, spend 30 minutes looking at it and decide it was hoaxed — not worth doing our tests on," said Raymond Rogers, a Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory chemist.

"Now, I believe the burden of proof is on the skeptic."

Rogers was one of 27 American scientists who examined the shroud Oct. 9-13 to conduct an extensive series of tests on the cloth which is said to have covered Christ at his burial. The shroud, which measures 14.5 feet by 3.5 feet, is a negative image of a man who may have been Christ.

Was arrest political?

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

FILER — A Filer city councilman arrested on a charge of assaulting a Filer city police officer said Friday his arrest was "strictly a political move."

Councilman Les Alexander, who was arrested Wednesday the day after the alleged assault, was reluctant to speak with the Times-News about the incident for fear of harming his court defense.

"I really can't say too much. I'll have a hearing the 13th of June," Alexander said.

But he said, "As far as I'm concerned it's strictly a political move." But he would not reveal who his political enemies are.

Filer Police Chief Randy Lammers said Friday Alexander was arrested for an incident which occurred Tuesday night.

"It involved one of our police officers and Mr. Alexander, and they had a disagreement over a contact the officer had made in reference to a city ordinance violation and the argument ensued. That's all that we are going to go into at this time because it is going to go to court and we don't want any more problem," Lammers said.

He added when questioned that the incident occurred at Mr. Alexander's residence, in front of the house or in the driveway, in the early evening, and resulted from the officer's attention to a city ordinance violation by Mr. Alexander's next door neighbor, and Mr. Alexander was involved.

Lammers would not reveal the identity of the officer involved.

Alexander, however, said the officer involved was Danny Lammers, the brother of the Filer chief.

Alexander recounted some of the events leading up to the incident.

"I had called him (Danny Lammers) over an incident which I feel is harassment which I'd rather not go into at this time. It's been toward the community, you might say, just a series of nitpicking events which have taken place over the past."

Woman killed

WENDELL — A 27-year-old Portland woman was killed on Interstate 80 near Wendell late Thursday when her car was sandwiched between a semi truck and a pickup driven by her husband.

According to the Idaho State Police, Mrs. Patsy Jean Kearn, 27, of Portland, died when the car she was driving was hit from the rear by a truck tractor driven by Jeri Brown, 32, of Concordia, Kan. The impact caused the car's gas tank to explode and threw the vehicle into a pickup in front of her, which was driven by her husband, Barry Kearn, 35.

The car was engulfed in flames and the woman was pronounced dead at the scene, officers said. Kearn's pickup rolled and he was taken to Gooding Hospital, where he was listed in fair condition Friday with a broken collar bone.

The accident occurred at 11:25 p.m. Thursday on I-80, approximately 11 miles west of Wendell.

Mrs. Kearn was driving a 1972 Cadillac. Her husband was driving a 1971 Ford pickup. Brown, who was driving a 1975 Kenworth truck tractor, was not injured in the accident. Officers said no citations had been issued and the accident was under investigation.

Woman Twin Falls man electrocuted

BELLEVUE — A 22-year-old Twin Falls man was electrocuted about 4 p.m. Friday while working on a power pole about four miles south of here.

Blaine County Sheriff Orville Drexler said the victim, Steven R. Slinger, was pronounced dead at the scene.

Drexler said the victim was working for Claiborne Construction Co. of Twin Falls which is installing a power line to a well south of Bellevue.

He said the man apparently came in contact with the power line while working on a pole and was electrocuted.

Involuntary manslaughter

TWIN FALLS — Nolan Melvin Schorzman of Buhl was arrested Friday on a charge of involuntary manslaughter in connection with an automobile accident May 10 near Castletford which caused the death of another Buhl man.

Schorzman, 52, was arrested by Twin Falls county sheriff's deputies and released on his own recognizance Friday, after Gary Louis Bohling, 39, died Thursday in the LDS Medical Center Hospital of injuries suffered in the accident.

Bohling was treated initially at Magic Valley Memorial Hospital and later transferred to Salt Lake City for special treatment.

QUESTION...

My husband and I live in Twin Falls now, but we have not yet transferred our church membership here. If something should happen to either of us, we would like to have a church funeral. Could this be arranged?

ANSWER...

It would be prudent certainly to transfer your church membership to Twin Falls as soon as convenient. The pastor will welcome your affiliation, and you will gain the spiritual strength to be found only in church membership, and attendance. If, however, something should happen to either of you before you become affiliated with a church, we would contact the pastor of the church of your choice. We know from experience that those arrangements can be made.

Double killing probe reaches second stage

By MARK SHENEFELT-BURLBY (UPI) — Early in April, Cassia County authorities were baffled when they found a car near Oakley that had been drenched with flammable liquid and set afire.

Since then, the bodies of two Pocatello men have been pulled out of the Snake River and their fate linked to the burned-out automobile. They had been tied up, shot and dumped in the river.

Now the case has reached a second stage of mystery, says Cassia County chief investigator Don Taylor.

"You could pick any one of a thousand different motives and there's a chance any one of them could turn out to be right," Taylor said Thursday.

He indicated that authorities, at least for now, are relying on matching the bullets that killed Paul Kennedy, 24, and Steven Taylor, 29, to one of thousands of weapons confiscated by authorities in the western states.

"We're still trying to get everything processed," Taylor said. He said the victims' car, which was found at the side of a county road April 4, probably was torched by the killer or killers in an effort to destroy any evidence.

Kennedy's body was retrieved from the river 2 1/2 miles below Milner Dam May 6, while the badly decomposed body of Taylor was sighted by a pair of canoeists Saturday just below the dam.

The chief investigator said Kennedy died as a result of a gunshot wound in the side and strangulation, while Taylor was killed by a bullet to his heart.

The victims were reported missing March 30 by relatives in Pocatello. Taylor said so far there is no indication where the killer or killers entered the picture or exactly when, where and under what circumstances the Pocatello men were murdered.

As to suspects, Taylor said, "We have no one in mind in particular. There are a lot of possibilities."

He said the Sheriff's Department is awaiting results of ballistics and other tests being conducted by state and federal authorities. Results of all tests should be available in two or three months, he said.

Schlesinger promises action on diesel fuel

PULLMAN, Wash. (UPI) — Energy Secretary James Schlesinger promised farmers the Carter Administration would be giving refineries "more than encouragement" in the near future unless more diesel fuel is produced.

Schlesinger, in a news conference prior to a speech at Washington State University Friday, fielded the diesel question from a local reporter concerned with this area's farmers.

"We certainly see the possibility of a problem with regard to diesel fuel. Refinery production of distillates is lower than we would have preferred. We have encouraged refineries to shift over to distillates."

"If they do not do so in the near term, we will give them more than encouragement to shift over." He did not elaborate.

Cuts 'baffling' Evans asks Brock to save Pioneer

BOISE (UPI) — Idahoans and others are "bewildered and confused" by the proposal to eliminate Amtrak's Pioneer passenger service, Gov. John V. Evans said Friday in urging reversal of that recommendation.

Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams has recommended abandonment of many Amtrak routes, including the Pioneer, which operates through southern Idaho between Seattle and Salt Lake City.

In a letter to Adams, Evans said the people of Idaho and other states served by the Pioneer "are bewildered and confused by the fact that they are going to lose a train that has demonstrated, among other things, increasing ridership trends."

He urged Adams to revise his final report on the proposed restructuring of Amtrak, suggesting the secretary "examine each route more completely."

"This would lead you to different conclusions regarding the Pioneer, and possibly other trains eliminated in the restructuring proposal."

Evans said the Amtrak system nationally showed passenger increases in January and February over a year earlier.

He said Amtrak statistics indicate that in February 11,232 passengers rode the Seattle-Salt Lake City train, where as 10,962 people rode the

"But the situation does pose a longer term problem because distillates, which are the most constrained of all the products that come out of a barrel of petroleum, are one in which demand is increasing most rapidly."

On other subjects, Schlesinger said there is a need for a west-coast oil pipeline to handle current and future Alaskan oil that is now being transferred to the gulf coast states via the Panama Canal by boat.

"There is an underlying need for the pipeline. Something like 350,000 barrels of oil per day are being shipped through Panama. If production is increased as we hope it will, there will be a need for a pipeline."

He added the west coast does not have the capacity to handle the oil in its refineries.

Chicago-New York-Washington trains.

Evans said in February 1968 the Pioneer carried 42 passengers per train mile traveled while in February this year the figure was 62, an increase of 52.5 percent. He said that was the largest increase of any train in the Amtrak system.

From October 1978 to February 1979, Pioneer averaged 78 passengers per mile traveled, Evans said, adding the elimination of a train which demonstrates equal or greater ridership and lower operating cost than trains retained in the restructured system."

"I recognize that the Northeast Corridor, and other trains included in the final plan are an integral part of the nation's transportation system," Evans wrote. "I do not understand the elimination of a train which demonstrates equal or greater ridership and lower operating cost than trains retained in the restructured system."

Evans said last month 97 senior citizens from The Dalles, Ore., spent "nearly $10,000" for round-trip tickets to Salt Lake City to promote the Pioneer.

"These are not wealthy people. Removal of the Pioneer will deny efficient transportation to such citizens at a time when auto travel is becoming increasingly beyond their reach."

on the future of the Idaho Primitive and Salmon River Breaks Primitive areas and testimony has been divided over the proposal by environmentalists and the timber industry. There also is a third proposal — a 1.9 million acre recommendation by the Carter Administration.

Church said the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee probably will write its own Central Idaho wilderness bill, taking into account the testimony received at the three hearings.

He said he didn't think it was possible to please everyone and Congress may end up pleasing nobody.

Compromise likely

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho's U.S. senators say compromise wilderness legislation for Central Idaho is expected as the result of three public hearings held in the Gem State.

Sens. Frank Church and James McClure made the remark at the conclusion of the third Idaho hearing Thursday in Boise.

They said the compromise would be somewhere between the 2.3 million acres sought by environmentalists and the 1.3 million requested by the timber industry.

McClure said Congress likely would approve compromise legislation.

Church said the ultimate bill must bring into fair balance all interests.

Seattle will benefit from packed Kingdome

Chicago Sun-Times
LANDOVER, MD. — A lot of people go to basketball games and Sunday there's going to be a whole slew in Seattle. More than 19,000 were crammed into the Capital Centre here Thursday night to see Seattle square the NBA championship series at 92-82 with a 92-82 win over the Washington Bullets. Ho, ho, ho. A measly old 19,000.
 More than FORTY THOUSAND are going to be in the Kingdome Sunday afternoon for Game Three. Ticket sales will be cut off around 41,000, team officials said, and some of those Seattleites are going to watch the game from seats somewhere in the vicinity of SkyLab.
 When they start cheering, though, there's gonna be a Sonic boom.
 "And if Washington let us win two games in a row at home," the Sonics' Paul Silas said, "ain't no way in hell the game come back."
 What a weird game Thursday's was. Here's what you may have missed:
 — Seattle held the big, bad Bullets to 30 points in the second half.
 — Seattle had an eight-minute scoreless stretch in a 48-minute game and still won.

— Seattle didn't use super-sub Downtown Freddy Brown in the entire second half and still won.
 — Seattle used a zone defense and still won.
 Or get away with it, you might say. That's what Dick Motta might say. In fact, he did say it. "I'm not critical of their strategy," he stressed. "I'd do it, too, if I could."
 The Sonics led 40-20 before their eight-minute goose egg. They wound up trailing 32-49 at halftime, and it was 56-49 almost as soon as the third quarter began.
 So they zoned.
 "What they did," Washington guard Tom Henderson said, "was trap us with the forward. Every time I came over midcourt, John Johnson was there for the trap. We must make them PAY for the trap."
 "I'm not crying," Motta said. "I'm just saying we didn't function well against their zone."
 Couldn't he complain about a little?
 "I yell 'Zone!' once in a while, but it falls on deaf ears," Motta said.
 It was so effective, Elvin Hayes didn't get a point in the fourth quarter after scoring 20 in the first three. Bobby Dandridge's 21 led the Bullets for the game.
 "I won't call it a zone," Dandridge said. "I just call it a double-team. Teams have been takin' us to seven games in every series usin' some sort of defense like that. I'm not gonna be laborin' the subject any more."

 Hayes did. "If they let them use it against us, it cuts our effectiveness in half. By the time we beat the zone trap, we've only got 12 of our 24 seconds left to start working the offense."
 Neither team's offense was anything you couldn't see in somebody's driveway. Seattle hit 43.5 per cent of its shots, Washington 42.2 per cent.
 "I don't think you'd take the film of this game to a clinic and brag about either team," Motta said.
 As usual, guards Gus Williams (23 points) and Dennis Johnson (20) did most of the scoring for the Sonics. They did without the help of Brown, who played seven minutes in the first half, sank one basket and never returned.
 "Hopefully," Silas said, "we can play a total team game next time, but that's difficult to do because these young fellas see the hoop and they want to put the ball in it."
 Washington's starting guards, Kevin Grevey and Tom Henderson, combined for 14 points, and this time Larry Wright did not come off the bench to score 26. He got eight.

These young fellas saw the hoop and wanted to jump through it.
 "Thirty points in the second half?" Motta said, looking startled. "Phew. I didn't think we had that many." X X X
Playoff Notes: You should have heard Elvin Hayes pointing out losing the NBA's most valuable player award to Houston's Moses Malone: "I don't think I'll ever get it. I don't think the players do a good job of picking the MVP. Too many of them don't understand the game. Half of them don't know what the game's all about, what it takes to win." "If you quote me on this, I'll burn down your paper," a Seattle player said, "but Elvin Hayes is so overrated, it's funny. In the seventh game last year, they had to bench him to beat us." Yeah, but he still had a good series. "Don't make me laugh," the Sonics said.
 Washington's Bobby Dandridge was fifth (somehow) in the MVP-voting, behind Malone; George Gervin, Hayes and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. "I think a lot of young players are still awed by past performances," Dandridge said. "I don't know how much they know, but I do know they're home watching the games on television. Maybe, that's where they get all their bad information; from television."

Winning attitude important in Legion

By RANDY FREY
Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS — Between now and June 2, the day the 1979 American Legion baseball season opens, Twin Falls coach Gary Barker has a few things he has to change.
 There are always several ballplayers who need to alter their swing or change the way they throw a baseball, but the biggest concern of Barker right now is not fundamentals. He has to change the team's attitude.
 "These guys don't know how to win," Barker said. "They don't want it to be a winner, and hopefully they will learn it before the season is over."
 Barker is used to coaching winning clubs, being an assistant to Jim Walker with the College of Southern Idaho baseball team and a former coach in the Lewiston American Legion, where his teams were two-time state champions.
 "If you think you will lose you will find ways to drop ballgames," Barker said. "Our teams in Lewiston weren't that good, but the kids knew they were supposed to win and they did."
 "I don't care if we were down by two, five or eight runs in the last inning, we would always come back and win," he said. "You could just see the other team telling itself it was going to lose the game."
 That's the kind of attitude Barker hopes to develop in his Twin Falls.
 The 29-year-old Barker, who teaches and coaches football at Robert Stuart Junior High School, has been coaching the baseball in the few practices he has had so far.
 "We haven't had a full team here yet because of senior graduation parties and the All-Star football game," Barker said. "But the kids will have been working hard and showing they want to play."
 Richie Lowe and Curtis Grant have not practiced yet, both getting ready for the football game, which will be played the day the Legion team opens its season.
 Also missing from practices are pitcher Rocky Brown, who is still in school at Treasure Valley Community College, and John

Catcher Craig Beutler and the rest of the Twin Falls American Legion team are working hard to develop a winner

Miller, who is still studying at the University of Idaho.
 And Andrew Barbee, starting center fielder for CSI, has not yet received clearance to play in the Twin Falls program, although Barker said he expects the speedy outfielder to be in the lineup for the opener.
 "We are going to be a young team, especially in the pitching department," Barker said. "We really only have three true pitchers right now, and two are off the high school team."
 Brown was the No. 1 pitcher on last year's squad, which played 500 ball in what Barker said was a B League schedule.
 Twin Falls will this year field both an A and B team for the first time in the program's history.

 Barker will keep 18 ballplayers on the A squad, with the rest moving down to the B team. However, he said he has only 10 ballplayers on the B squad right now and would like some additional numbers.
 As a team goal this year, Barker wants a trip to the state tournament in August.
 "The real season is the district," he said. "I don't care if we get our ticks kicked early in the season as long as we get ourselves ready for district."
 He said his team has shown good improvement already, and when graduation and football are over and the final rosters have been determined the team can begin to work on some of the finer points of the game.

 "From what I have seen, this team should be able to hold its own," Barker said looking ahead to a schedule which includes teams from Minico, Burley, Blackfoot, Pocatello, Idaho Falls, Malad, Rexburg, Boise, Nampa, Meridian and Caldwell.
 "Pitching is always the key," he said. "Good pitching will always beat good hitting, so we will concentrate on getting the pitchers ready."
 Besides Brown, Barker will go with Mike Ferrell and Kerry Brown, both off the Twin Falls High School varsity. Rounding out the staff are Greg Iabel, Adam Blake and John Witter.

Craig Beutler has the inside track on the starting catcher's job, with Greg Tate and Nick Fisher backing him up.
 Pat King and Miller, when he returns from Moscow, will share duties at first base with Billy Burton having the inside track at second.
 Randy Cummings and Scott Nass are battling it out at shortstop with Logan Easley and Bob McMillan the third basemen.
 In the outfield, Barker has Gary Crum, Grant, Lynn Thorpe, Kerry Brown, Lowe, Scott Bradley and hopefully Barbee.
 The Legion team will open play at home with Blackfoot beginning at 6 p.m. All home games will be played at Harmon Park.

Special qualifying back on

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — An unprecedented special qualifying round will be held Saturday, just 24 hours before the running of the Indianapolis 500, for 11 cars previously eliminated or disqualified.
 A joint announcement from the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and the U.S. Auto Club Friday night said each of the 11 cars will have one attempt to make the starting lineup for Sunday's million-dollar race.
 Included were cars bumped last weekend driven by Larry Cannon, Jerry Karl, Al Loquasto and rookie Dana Carter. The decision for the extra qualifying day was made when a special USAAC board saw merit in the appeals from owners and drivers of these four cars.
 The special qualifying period, however, does not include the car of rookie Dick Ferguson, whose car owner, Wayne Woodward, has gone to court in an effort to regain a starting spot. His case will go before a special appeals board Saturday morning.
 Woodward may be forced to make a final appeal in court later Saturday, but the judge involved has insisted he will do nothing to delay the race.
 The USAAC-IMS announcement said a special drawing would be held in the morning for qualifying positions followed by a 30-minute practice period and qualifications.
 Cars equaling or surpassing the speeds of the slowest of the 33 machines now in the field — just under 184 miles per hour by Roger McCluskey — will join the lineup for the holiday classic.
 USAAC's list of 11 included some cars assigned to drivers who have qualified backup cars already. The remaining seven of those are: Steve Krisloff, Spike Gehlhausen, John Martin, Bill Vukovich, Tom Bigelow, Joe Saldana and John Mahler.
 Earlier Friday, Judge Michael P. Dugan of DeWitt County Superior Court ordered Woodward to follow the appeals procedure of USAAC, a "private, voluntary organization" of which he is a member.
 "I have no intention to delay the race," the judge said. "To me the question is whether 33 or 34 cars will start the race. The only thing that will delay the race is a rainstorm."
 Sunday's million-dollar race has been marred in a series of controversies ranging from entries to qualifications.
 The judge ordered bench warrants issued for four-time race winner A. J. Foyt and driver Danny Ongais, both of whom refused to accept summonses to appear for the hearing,

Changes may be imminent in Region 18 playoff system

TWIN FALLS — The Oregon Community College Conference is starting to feel its voting muscle.
 At least that is the indication that can be read into the Region 18 junior college athletic directors deciding to select the site of next year's regional basketball playoffs. Usually that site is decided in the spring meeting. This year, however, they suggested the matter be tabled until the fall meeting because there really was no big hurry.
 It would appear that the Oregon schools, which, in our memory, have won only two games against Idaho competition, are toying with the idea of moving the thing into their area, probably on an alternate year basis.
 Mike Mitchell, who represented CSI at the regional meeting, said the Oregon officials were "very vague" about their ideas or suggestions for next year's tournament.
 "The thing at first blush doesn't seem to make a lot of difference — unless we again are treated to high school style officiating as we were in the bi-regional playoff. Then the Idaho schools will have to take a bunch of shrinking violets along with us to have enough people left to finish the game."

However, the key thing is the possible gigantic swing in finances.
 It costs several thousand dollars to stage a regional basketball tournament. The referees run into several hundred and then there's the matter of guarantees for the out-of-town teams. That has arisen to about $3,000 now.
 One needn't go back very far to find the kind of financial crunch a school can run into if things don't go well when they are hosting the tournament. Several years ago, North Idaho, which sustained some crippling injury losses the last 10 days of the season, had the regional but not the players to get past the first-round Oregon confederacy. In the finals it was CSI against one of the Oregon schools and maybe 200 people showed up to watch it.
 The result was that North Idaho lost $2,100 on that two-day debacle and there were a couple of years there that North Idaho hierarchy ordered the athletic department to not host regional due to that loss. Of course, that since has been cleared up.
 But it brings up the point that if Ricks and CSI played in Bend, Ore., for the region 18 championship, how many fans would file past the box office? Not many.

And that brings up point No. 2. It could be such a thing that the Oregon schools — they hold the voting balance 12-4 — could arbitrarily do away with visiting team guarantees. Pay your own way to play, would be the rule.
 If such would occur, there would have to be an immediate belt tightening process among the western division schools.
 There was a time that then CSI Coach Jerry Hale said if CSI hadn't hosted regional and made a few bucks on it, he would have had to sign a personal note at the bank to get the team to Hutchinson.
 There is a tremendous financial swing that would hurt any athletic department. Say it costs you $2,000 to travel to Salem and stay for two days. You win it and the next week you go back to Huts. The tab there generally runs over $5,000 these days. On alternate years you would be facing the inter-regional and it would cost at least $3,000 to play in Dixie in St. George. That amounts to about as much as the scholarship program.
 Very probably the Oregon schools are trying to work up some format under which it would be able to come up with some type of guarantee for visiting teams. But one failure would dent the two eastern representatives something fierce.

 Coach Eddie, this kinda goes back to reaping what you sow. Coach Eddie Sutton bought the first couple of sub-regionals (in the days before region 18 became an entirely separate from Utah and Arizona) by offering guarantees. He could guarantee westward fans turned out. Before then, he had to pay for them either. From there the matter of homecourt advantage has escalated the prices — but travel and inflation costs have more than matched them.
 This, of course, is speculation on our part. But it is certain that CSI fans will have to adjust to changes in the regional set up. Remember, last month the other three eastern representatives — Ricks, North Idaho and TVCC — voted the change that in cases of ties, the regional would automatically go to the concerned school that had had the tournament last recently.
 A tie next year, and you know it won't be held at CSI. If things go as they have, it could be four years before the regional would be back here — in speculation included.

Booing Don Zimmer is chic in Fenway Park

By United Press International
BALTIMORE — In Boston's Fenway Park, he is booed at the first opportunity, as when he leaves the dugout with the Red Sox batting order in hand. And when he makes a pitching change. And when he doesn't make a pitching change. When for any reason he leaves the bench and becomes visible to the crowd.

It is Boston chic to boo Manager Don Zimmer, a nasty and vicious cog to vilify them. On appearance, he is a model of the baseball coach's art, a blow-up of the figurines found on the gift shop shelves.

He is short and thick, and fills every thread of his baseball doubleknits. His cap is clamped too far down on a hairless head, coming to rest on fat cars, ruddy ones. His left cheek, wadded with his favorite Red Man chewing tobacco, gives him the topkicked look of a case of mumps.

But Zimmer does not amuse Boston fans. For two years, he has been a target of their growing hostility. His sin has been a clear one. He didn't win those two pennants Boston fans expected won in 1977 and 1978. No matter that he came awfully close.

In Boston, the prevailing view of the fans is that the games the Red Sox lose are Zimmer's fault; the games they win are despite Zimmer.

They are conditioned to this belief by the constant mouthings of an depraved group of radio talk-show hosts as ever fouled the air. They do this with the massive second-guess whenever the Red Sox lose, which is always more than 60 times a year.

The minds of Boston fans are shaped by these instant baseball experts who, with an eye to their own ratings, have latched onto the Red Sox as the hottest topic in town. Nowhere else does baseball radio talk begin at 10 in the morning. The two prime topics everywhere else are politics and the weather. In Boston: baseball and politics.

Boston was once described as "a state of mind," by Mark Twain. He might now describe it as mindless of at least two things: (1) that those talk-show baseball mavens have doubtful qualifications and, (2) that no Boston manager in 36 years won as many games as Zimmer's team in each of the past two seasons.

They are called "them talk-show idiots," by Zimmer. "One day last season," he said, "they kept asking on the air why I didn't pitch Dick Drago in the late innings in Texas when we let an 11-10 game get away. They wanted to know what kind of a bum Zimmer was for not using his best reliever pitcher."

"They didn't bother to find out that Drago said he was pooped after pitching three straight games and asked me for the day off."

This year in spring training, former Red Sox hero Joe Cronin, who was aware of the boos in Boston, attempted to give Zimmer some friendly advice. "Don't go out there yourself to lift a pitcher," Cronin said. "Send a coach out there to do the job." Zimmer said he told Cronin, "Thanks, Joe, but I ain't going to hide."

On another day, one of Zimmer's radio critics agreed with all of the bad names a caller was calling the Boston manager.

"You're absolutely right about that man," the radio fellow said, "and as far as I'm concerned I'll never mention his name on my show again. From now on I'll prefer to him as Chiang Kai-shek."

One of the reasons Zimmer isn't going to hide, other than his native combative bent, is that the Red Sox owners like the way he kept the team in contention. He also is insulated by knowing Fenway Park attendance can hardly suffer because of him. There are always enough seats, anyway, in that small stadium. You can scarcely buy a ticket for the rest of the season.

Zimmer said most of the hostility toward him began in Boston because of the behavior of pitcher Bill Lee, a flaky, fun-loving and articulate lefthander who finally was traded to Montreal last year.

Lee constantly pitched verbal barbs at Zimmer, to the delight of the thousands of Red Sox fans who are kids in the Boston area's 96 colleges and universities.

"When I took Lee out of the pitching rotation in 1977, he called me a gerbil, whatever that means. (A gerbil is a burrowing rodent.) He also called me an S.O.B., and I think I know what that means. Lee had lost seven straight when I took him out of rotation."

Softball tourney underway

TWIN FALLS — The weather was perfect Friday evening for the start of the Newton's Sports Center Invitational, but unfortunately it could be a perfect evening for only half of the 18 teams which opened play at Harmon Park.

The remainder of the first round games in the double-elimination tournament will be played today beginning at 8 a.m.

The first game to be completed saw the Clip of Twin Falls edge Lee's Electric of Gooding 11-10 on an inside-the-park home run in the bottom of the seventh by Jerry Atkinson.

The Clip led 10-6 entering the final inning when Lee's Electric rallied for four runs to tie the game.

But Atkinson hit a sinking line drive on the first pitch he saw which got past a diving center-fielder and rolled to the fence.

Rod Schaeffer scored three runs for the losers.

Rancher's Irrigation of Gooding outlasted Coca Cola of Twin Falls in another first round game, holding on for a 10-6 win.

The Rancher's scored four times in the first and three more times in the second to take a quick 7-0 lead.

Shane Klundt had two hits in four trips to the plate for Coca Cola.

In women's action, Idaho First-Safece Title defeated H&K Electric of Burley 11-5.

Scores of other tournament games were not turned into the Times-News.

Shane Klundt is out at first and his Coca Cola team is out of the winner's bracket following a 10-6 loss

Rockets sold for $9 million

HOUSTON (UPI) — Albuquerque, N.M., businessman George J. Maloof Friday completed his purchase of the NBA Houston Rockets for a reported $9 million and said he would ask assistant coach Del Harris to become the team's head coach.

Tom Nissalke, the present head coach, has been offered the general manager job to replace Ray Patterson but it was not known whether Nissalke would take the job without the power over player transactions.

"This is the highlight of my life," Maloof said at a news conference. "I have great expectations for this team. We have the greatest basketball player in the world. I'm dedicated to bringing a world championship to the city."

Maloof said he would keep the franchise in Houston.

Although he had once investigated buying the Boston Red Sox, Maloof, 58, said the purchase was his "most serious involvement with a pro sports franchise. He owns a majority of stock in the First National Bank in Albuquerque, a statewide beer distributorship in New Mexico and seven hotels in New Mexico, Arizona and California.

Asked why he became involved in owning a pro sports franchise, Maloof said, "Athletics excites me."

News papers had been reporting the price of the franchise would be $9 million and Maloof said, "I think it's (the suggested price) probably in the ball park."

The sale was subject to approval of the NBA Board of Governors. The renegotiated lease for use of the Summit had to be approved by City Council.

Negotiations were "long and tough," said a representative of the former Rockets owner, Greenway Pizza Ltd. The Summit lease was the primary barrier to the sale.

"The fact that we were able to negotiate a 12 1/2 per cent lease for the next five years at the Summit with continuing options through the end of this century certainly indicates to us that the Arena Operating Co. has a strong desire to assure the continuity of NBA basketball in Houston," Maloof said.

AOC holds the Summit lease with the city.

Amazing Tom Watson surges to Memorial lead

DUBLIN, Ohio (UPI) — Tom Watson, threatening to turn this year's PGA tour into his own personal showcase, fired a 3-under-par 69 Friday to grab a commanding four-stroke lead midway through the $300,000 Memorial Tournament.

Watson, already the winner of three PGA events and easily the leading money winner with $299,674 already pocketed, was the only one among 105 pros competing who was under par for 36 holes.

His subpar round gave him a two-day total of 2-under 142, a 2-stroke lead over Jack Nicklaus, who designed and owns the par-72 Muirfield Village Golf Club course, Tom Kite, and Peter Jacobsen.

Nicklaus fired his second straight 73 while Kite carded an even-par 72 and Jacobsen a 74. All alone at 147, five strokes off the pace, was veteran Miller Barber, whose 73 Friday included a 4-under 32 on the back nine.

Tied at 148, six behind Watson, were Don Bles,

Lon Hinkle and first-round leader Lanny Wadkins, who soared to a 79 Friday. Seven shots back were Peter Osterhuis, David Graham, Tom Weiskopf, J.C. Snead and Bruce Lietzke.

Terry Diehl was the only one beside Watson who could break par Friday, coming in with a one-under 71. But an opening-round 79 left him at 150.

Because of the steady rain, the Muirfield course was shortened from 7,101 to 7,064 yards, but the pros still found the going difficult with Thursday's poor weather.

The steady rain was bolstered by winds up to 35 mph and temperatures hovering near 50 degrees. When Watson finished, the temperature, including wind chill factor, was computed at 13 degrees.

"Needless to say, it was a very difficult day to play golf," said Nicklaus, who noted that even though he wore mittens his hands remained cold. "I don't even remember ever wearing gloves at the Crosby," he added, referring to the PGA stop most noted for inclement weather.

Watson, winner this year of the Heritage, the Byron Nelson and the Tournament Players Championship, said, "That was one of the best rounds I have ever played. I hit the ball very well, but it was a struggle. It was hard to get comfortable. The important thing is keep your hands warm."

Making Watson's round even more incredible was the fact that he did not record one bogey, while many of his fellow players were registering in the 80s.

"A 75 or 76 would be a good round today on this golf course and under these conditions," said Watson.

Those golfers at 13-over 157 and higher were cut from the field. They included defending champion Jim Simons and Roger Maltbie, who won the first Memorial three years ago.

Overcomes bogeys

Rankin leads Corning golf

CORNING, N.Y. (UPI) — Judy Rankin overcame bogeys on four of the first five holes Friday to gain a par 70 and a share of the second-round lead—in the $100,000 Corning Classic with Susan O'Connor, who managed a 73 on the rain-soaked course.

With their 2-over-par totals of 142, Rankin and first-round leader O'Connor held a two-stroke lead over Sandra Spuzlich and Dot Germain, who finished at 72, matching their scores of Thursday.

Donna Young shot a 1-under-par 69, the day's lone subpar round, to tie Sue Roberts, Amy Alcott and Cathy Sherk at 70, three strokes off the pace.

Rankin followed her bogey binge with birdies at the sixth, seventh and ninth holes to finish the front nine at 1-over 35. A bogey and two birdies, one at 18, secured her par round, one of only two on the day.

For the second straight day, heavy rain and fog seemed to stretch the course's 6,203 yards.

"I'm not surprised that 2-over-par is leading the tournament," said Rankin, whose 4-iron shot at 18 landed a foot from the pin. "Considering the weather conditions, it could've been much higher."

Many golfers felt the par-4 first, second and 13th holes could be par-5s.

"I simply cannot reach No. 2 in regulation," Rankin said. "I can barely reach No. 1 with a wood and I couldn't reach No. 13 even if the weather were good."

O'Connor, who fell off from her first-round 69, said the foggy air made the course play even longer than Thursday.

"The ball gets up in that heavy air and doesn't carry," she said after recording birdies at 15 and 17 and kept pace with Rankin.

Cathy Thompson, who matched Rankin's 70 while playing in a steady downpour, was in a group of eight at 146.

Steinbrenner still eyes Martin to guide Yanks

CLEVELAND (UPI) — New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner indicated Friday he will rehire Billy Martin as manager of the world champions in 1980 if Martin's explanation for his run-in with a Nevada sports writer last year is acceptable.

During a speech at the Cleveland City Club, Steinbrenner was asked what plans he has for Martin and current manager Bob Lemon.

"So far as I know, Bob is in the hotel getting ready for tonight's game and Billy is leaving Reno," Steinbrenner replied with a laugh.

"I haven't had a chance to sit with Billy and discuss the facts and until I don't discuss that," Steinbrenner was referring to a punch Martin allegedly landed on Reno sports writer Ray Hagar's eye last Nov. 10. Hagar reportedly asked Martin a question concerning Reggie Jackson.

Martin publicly apologized to Hagar on Thursday and no charges were pressed.

"Bob Lemon will become the general manager next year," Steinbrenner said in a point-by-point Billy Martin is my manager for 1980. We're going to sit down and discuss the whole thing when he gets back to New York in a couple of weeks.

"Billy is just leaving Reno. I haven't had a chance to sit with Billy and get all the facts. I've had everybody out there telling me what happened. Lemon wants to manage about one more year and then get off. He's said that time and time again."

Thursday, Martin said in a press conference, "I'm sorry I hit Ray. I'm sorry it happened. Our fighting days are over."

Hagar said the public apology was what he wanted from his $10,000-plus lawsuit filed after the incident. He said that and a $7,500 payment from the Reno Bighorns professional basketball team settled the case.

Martin had been in Reno to promote the Bighorn's game and the fledgling Western Basketball Association for his long-time friend Bill Musselman, coach of the Bighorns.

Hagar apparently asked Martin a question he did not like and the firey manager hit him twice in the face. The question concerned his relationship with outspoken star Reggie Jackson.

Good tops All-District selections

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern may not have been good enough to win the region baseball title, but the Eagles impressed region officials enough to place nine ballplayers on the All-District Team.

Six of those ballplayers were then named to the All-District squad, which is the top 10 players in the northwest who will now receive All-American consideration.

Jim Good, whose 18 home runs were good for a new single-season record at CSI, was named the No. 1 player in the district and outfielder-catcher Albert Romero was chosen the No. 5 player.

Pitcher Brian Lunden finished the season with a perfect 9-0 mark and was selected the No. 6 player in the district while second baseman Rocco Zandano was named the No. 8 player.

The No. 9 selection was pitcher Lee Cline while freshman Andrew Barbee was tabbed No. 10.

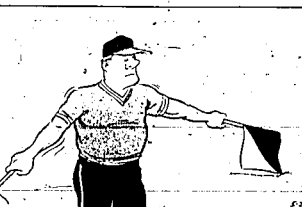

"That has to be a pretty good reflection of our program when we have six of the top 10 players in the northwest," said coach Jim Walker.

Walker thinks Good, whose 18 home runs were tops in the nation, has to be a shoe-in for All-America while Romero "might have an outside chance."

Lunden, Romero, Zandano, Good and Barbee were all named to the first team All-Region squad while Cline, third baseman Ron Kollman, shortstop Rick Yraguen and designated hitter Tony Wilson all received second-team recognition.

CSI finished the 1979 season with a 33-1 record.

ChiSox halt Ryan's Express

By United Press International
 Ryan's express was abruptly derailed Friday night. Rookie Ross Baumgarten allowed only one hit — a seventh-inning double by Bobby Grich — in eight innings and Lamar Johnson drove in four runs with three hits in leading the Chicago White Sox to a 6-1 triumph over the California Angels for their fourth straight victory.

Baumgarten, 31, had a no-hitter for six innings before Grich led off the seventh with a sharp grounder just inside the third-base line for a double. The 24-year-old left-hander struck out five and walked eight but was replaced by Randy Scarberry after walking the first two batters in the ninth. Scarberry got the last three outs to hand the Angels their fourth straight loss.

Chicago took a 2-0 lead off Ryan, 5-9, in the second inning on back-to-back doubles by Eric Soderholm and Alan Bamster and a single by Johnson. Johnson tripped home on two more runs in the fourth, then doubled home another single by Bill Nahorodny. Milwaukee edged Oakland 3-2, Kansas City nipped Minnesota 4-3 and the Boston-Toronto, New York Cleveland, and Baltimore-Detroit contests were rained out.

Leon Roberts hit a two-run homer in the second inning and Willie Horton singled home what proved to be the winning run in the fifth inning of Seattle's nitecap victory over Texas. In the opener, Larry Cox scored a run and drove in another to help the Mariners start their twinning.

Sixto Lezcano slammed a pair of homers and scored the winning run on Gorman Thomas' two-out, run-scoring single in the eighth inning to lift Mike Caldwell and Milwaukee to victory.

Willie Wilson tripped off reliever Mike Marshall and scored on Amos Otis' one-out single in the ninth to give Kansas City a win over Minnesota for Paul Splittorff's seventh triumph.

Brown leads TF lady golfers

TWIN FALLS — Karen Brown of Twin Falls fired a 75 Thursday over the city's municipal golf course to lead the Twin Falls Municipal Ladies to victory in the second Magic Valley Ladies Inter-City competition of the year.

Twin Falls Municipal tied up 13 points with the win and now has 34 1/2 points on the season. Blue Lakes Country Club of Twin Falls and Rupert Country Club are tied for second with 23 1/2 points.

Canyon Springs Ladies are next with 21 points, followed by Burley with 14, Buhl and Jerome with 13 1/2 each and Gooding with 10 1/2.

Lori Vegwert of Burley also came in at 75, and Penny Jones of Rupert carded an 83. Shirlee Straughn of Canyon Springs came in at 84. Lenora Kasworm of Rupert had an 85 and Jackie Gasser of Twin Falls Municipal had an 87.

Sue Langdon of Canyon Springs had the low net score with a 65 followed by Betty Colner of Blue Lakes with a 66.

Canyon Springs will host the next round of golf June 10.

Sunday races at Les Bois

BOISE — A short field of six three year olds will contest on the short course Sunday for a $1,380 purse in the Elmer's Pancake House Handicap at Les Bois Park.

It will be the first serious tuneup for the horses and their quest for the three-year-old stakes to come later this summer in Boise.

High weight in the field belongs to Beal Boy at 120 pounds. We Wise and Bolero's Agate coming in at 118 pounds.

Burnt Boy has won for a $10,000 claiming tag in Portland and is the only horse in the field to have won two races. Both We Wise and Bolero's Agate have one lifetime win.

First post of the 11-race card will be at 2 p.m., with the main event the ninth race of the day. Racing will begin at 2 p.m. on Memorial Day as well.

Harrelson ends retirement

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Veteran infielder Bud Harrelson, 34, came out of retirement Friday to sign with the Philadelphia Phillies following an injury to shortstop Larry Bowa, who was placed on the 15-day disabled list with a broken thumb.

Harrelson, who signed with the Phillies last season from the New York Mets, batted .214 in 71 games. He became a free agent at the end of the season.

Chris Wheeler, Phillies spokesman, said Harrelson would join the Phillies Friday night in a home game against the Chicago Cubs.

Paul Owens, director of player personnel, said Harrelson "is a perfect guy for what I am looking for. Someone to back up (infielders) Rudi Moeil and Ramon Mota who have done a great job for us. I know Buddy, and he knows in the league and the hitters."

Upset in NCAA tennis

ATHENS, Ga. (UPI) — Unranked Larry Gottfried overcame first set service difficulties to upset second seeded Andy Kohlberg of Tennessee; 2-4, 6-1, 6-2, Friday in the second round of the weather-plagued NCAA tennis championships at the University of Georgia.

Top-seeded Kevin Curren of Texas won his opening match with little difficulty and was to play Tony Giammalva of Trinity in a second round meeting later in the afternoon.

It was the second time in two years that Gottfried, a Trinity junior, had pulled off a major upset on the opening day of singles competition. Last year he dethroned defending champion Matt Mitchell of Stanford in the second round.

The only other seeded player to fall in the early singles rounds was EMU's Jay DeLouie, who was easily beaten by Chris Mayotte of South Carolina, 6-1, 6-4. DeLouie was seeded 11th.

U.S. over China in softball

PEKING (UPI) — The Connecticut Falcons, champions of America's women's softball, won the sixth and final game of their China tour Friday when superstar pitcher overpowered and outpitched them to a hard-fought 1-0 win over a Chinese all-star team in the city of Lanzhou (Lanzhou).

The American team thus won all six of its games in its China visit, three in Peking and three in Lanzhou, a center of keen interest in baseball and softball in China.

For the final game, the China Sports Federation pitted against the Americans the best players from their teams in Peking, Shanghai and Canton, members of the U.S. team said by telephone to Peking.

An estimated crowd of 50,000 crammed the stadium, even more than the 45,000 who appeared for the first two games in Lanzhou, where foreigners seldom go.

Burleson to start suspension

BOSTON (UPI) — Boston Red Sox shortstop Rick Burleson will begin on Sunday to sit out his three-day suspension for bumping substitute umpire Lester Pratt at Fenway Park last week.

The club said Friday that Burleson and the Major League Players Association have withdrawn their appeal of his suspension by American League President Lee MacPhail.

There was speculation the appeal was made so Burleson could play in a three-game series just ended in Baltimore against the division-leading Orioles.

Chargers top team in AFC West

NEW YORK — Why are the San Diego Chargers suddenly the team to beat in the AFC West this coming season? Mostly because of the progress the team has made since last season, when they closed with a second-half record of 7-1.

Trades for Willie Buchanon and Mike Thomas have given the Chargers enough added talent in the right spots to deserve the accolades as the team to beat within what has suddenly become the toughest division in the AFC. Adding the likes of Buchanon — the leading interceptor with Green Bay in the NFC with nine interceptions — means he'll be heading home for San Diego where he starred as a collegian under the direction of Chargers coach Don Coryell.

The deal for Mike Thomas with the Redskins has given San Diego an alternative with Lydell Mitchell, who has sore legs and knees, and will help establish enough of a running game to challenge both Denver and Oakland for the division championship.

The Chargers also added a supposed starting tight end with the drafting of Missouri's Kellen Winslow, who was picked with a choice obtained from the Cleveland Browns.

San Diego not only has an improved defense but the additions on offense should move the team into a better position to grab a playoff spot in the AFC West. No wonder Al Davis of the Oakland Raiders has been living in fear for the Chargers for the last two seasons.

San Diego may well be the team to beat this coming season, mostly because of the astute drafting policies of John Sanders, the team's affable G.M., who learned his trade at the expense of the Los Angeles Rams two seasons ago.

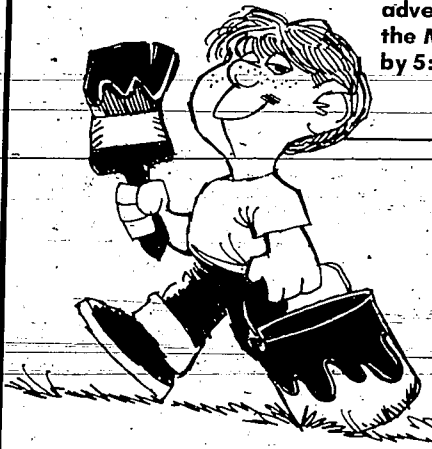

IN TODAY'S TV GAME THE DODGERS host Cincinnati, and with Don Sutton are 7-5 favorites over the Reds, scheduled to go with Tom Hume.

In the backup game Atlanta visits San Francisco, and if it's Hallicki pitching against Matula, the Giants are favored 9-5. If newly-acquired Dave Roberts goes for San Francisco, the Giants are 7-5 favorites.
