

Carter staging a major policy review

THURMONT, Md. (UPI) — President Carter Friday began a secretive domestic policy review designed, one told reporters, to guide America "for the remainder of the century."

The White House disclosed Carter had canceled a weekend public appearance and will remain secluded at Camp David, well into next week, conducting a sweeping review of economic and energy problems with unidentified advisers and eight state governors who arrived Friday evening.

Late Friday, two television network correspondents told White House reporters a top White House aide telephoned them from Camp David to say Carter is making policy "that will shape the direction of our society for the remainder of the century."

They said that was a direct quotation from the aide, who declined to be identified publicly.

Leading the procession of guests invited to consult with Carter was a delegation from the National Governors' Association meeting this weekend in Louisville, Ky.

Carter canceled his scheduled appearance at the conference and instead invited eight of the state leaders for an overnight stay at Camp David.

Arriving at National Airport en route to the presidential retreat, Gov. Julian Carroll, D-Ky., said Carter "is carrying a tremendous burden and needs help."

Gov. Hugh Carey, D-N.Y., also expressed sympathy with Carter's position but said, "I really feel the president must recognize that we're at or near a time of national fuel-emergency... The president himself said it looks like we're headed toward a recession. That's an emergency."

Gov. Elia Grasso, D-Conn., agreed.

"I'll tell the president again what we've told him before. That we're very concerned about the supplies of gasoline, the manner in which it is allocated to our various states, what's happening to price and then our constant and gnawing problem of the increasing cost of home heating oil and its availability."

Even as the open-ended, ultra-private Camp David talks got underway, the participants had more bad economic news to mull over.

The Labor Department announced wholesale gasoline prices rose 3.7 percent nationwide in June, as shortages created lengthening gas lines, and heating oil went up 8.4 percent wholesale in the same month.

The White House deepened the mystery surrounding Carter's activities — while insisting there is nothing mysterious about them — by announcing he has cancelled a weekend appearance at the national governors' conference in Louisville just as he scratched the energy crisis address slated for broadcast Thursday night.

Instead, an aide said, the president has begun "a comprehensive review" of domestic problems with selected visitors, including a delegation of eight state governors invited to sleep over at Camp David Friday.

Attending were the governors of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Georgia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Iowa and Indiana.

"In some sense, I suppose, it's almost a domestic summit," said a White House aide who declined to be identified.

"Obviously the economy and energy are two main subjects to be discussed, but the discussions certainly will not be limited to those two subjects."

Once back from his Asian economic summit trip, the aide said, "he basically decided that now is the time to pull all these issues together and have a more comprehensive review," cancelling the energy speech in the process.

Taiwanese buy grain from Idaho

BOISE (UPI) — The head of a Taiwan trade delegation said Friday the signing of a $35 million contract to purchase 203,000 metric tons of wheat and barley grown in Idaho and other western states would "increase friendship and correct the trade imbalance" between the U.S. and the Republic of China.

Dr. H.K. Shao, director of the Board of International Trade, Ministry of Economic Affairs, Republic of China, signed a contract purchasing 151,000 metric tons of wheat at $30.8 million and 52,000 metric tons of barley at $4 million.

Formal signing of the contract in Boise was witnessed by Sen. Frank Church of Idaho and Lt. Gov. Phil Balt, who is acting chief executive in the absence of Gov. John V. Evans, who departed Friday for the National Governors' Conference in Kentucky.

"Today, we are here to confirm the continuing ties between our countries," Church said.

He said Idaho and the nation would look forward to bigger sales "to help cement the ties" between the two.

Shao assured the group witnessing the contract signing "that the friendship between Idaho and Taiwan will be strengthened in the future, not only in the field of commerce but in other fields."

Despite diplomatic problems between the U.S. and Taiwan, Shao said the trade between the two countries remains unchanged and that it would be improved and "the friendship strengthened in the future."

Shao said his government was determined to bring the imbalance of trade between the two countries more in line by the end of the year.

Work pays off for Twin Falls mounted posse

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News Writer

FILER — Once each year they put weeks of work with their horses on the line.

This year the effort paid off for the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Mounted Posse. The 18-member team last month won the Idaho State Posse championship over five other teams, bringing home an elusive four-foot high, three-tiered silver and gold trophy.

The posse last won the trophy in 1970.

But this is more than just another horse race, said posse president Virgil Olson of Twin Falls. It is a partnership of man and horse fitted toward a goal of skill and precision.

"Pride, enthusiasm and precision — that's what I would call it," he said.

Capturing the overall prize required taking first in most of the individual contests at the June 23-24 Burley event. The Twin Falls posse — led by captain and drill master D.A. McGuire of Twin Falls — won first place in finishes in drill and parade — competitions, the one-eighth mile flat race, keyhole race, and scurry race. The posse also placed second in the inspection.

Doing that is no easy job, Olson said. Competition can be stiff, and the slightest error can mean the difference between the grand prize and second best. For instance, only one point separated first and second place in the inspection.

The posse's goal is to win the overall trophy three consecutive times. That entitles the victors to keep the trophy, Olson said. No one has ever done it in the 20-25 years of the contest.

Dam decision may raise Idaho power rates

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News Writer

AMERICAN FALLS — Idahoans may pay higher rates for their electricity in the future, due to the way the Idaho Power Co. and the American Falls Reservoir District (AFRD) chose to meet state water pollution standards.

Since June 3 the two entities have had to "spill" water over the American Falls Dam to meet state oxygen content requirements of six parts per million in water below the dam. Instead of spilling water, the companies considered purchasing equipment which would add oxygen. But this option was rejected as being too costly.

Some anti-pollution equipment is beginning operation at the dam today, but the utility and the district say they still fall short of the state's 6-parts-per-million oxygen requirement. The equipment is expected to add another two parts per million to the water. The oxygen level has been measured as low as two parts per million.

Spilling increases the oxygen level. It also reduces the amount of electricity produced. To replace the losses, Idaho Power has been buying power from other utilities.

The cost of replacement power probably will be passed on to the public, utility spokesman Bob Brown said Thursday.

The cost of equipment would have been passed on to the irrigators and the utility, although a share of it could be passed along to rate payers as a capital investment, according to Kurt Winterfeld, Public Utilities Commission rate analyst.

Figures presented to the State Health Board Thursday by the President of the AFRD show it would be cheaper to add more anti-pollution equipment. But Idaho Power spokesman Bob Brown said the company will not install any more air injection equipment than is presently in place.

Idaho Power has lost over $135,027 worth of power through spilling since June 3. If spilling continues long enough, the cost will be added to the power bills of its customers, Brown said.

In contrast, AFRD President John Barker of Buhl told the Idaho Health Board Thursday it would cost $10,000 to $125,000 a year to install facilities to meet the standards. Barker said that solution would be financed by Idaho Power and by American Falls irrigators, who would pay four cents per acre per year.

Winterfeld said the cost could be figured into the utility's rate base and passed on in part to customers in the form of higher rates.

Saturday a $20,000 system expected to improve the water-air content of the dam will be tested. The utility and the district have filed suit in Fourth District Court in an effort to have the oxygen standards lowered to match the newly installed equipment's capabilities.

The just-completed air injection system, which cost $240,000 to install, will shoot oxygen into water as it passes through power-generating turbines in the dam.

The equipment is designed to prevent problems like those faced since June 3, when Idaho Power has had to curb power production in order to bring oxygen levels up to regulation level.

The state says waters must contain at least 6 parts of oxygen per million parts of water. At least that's how the Department of Health and Welfare, the Health and Welfare Board, Gov. John Evans and the attorney general have interpreted the regulations.

The Legislature tried to lower the standard to five parts last winter, but the attorney general stopped the move, saying the Legislature can't change state regulations. Last week Idaho Power went to court in Ada County seeking a reversal of the attorney general's opinion.

We contend the Legislature adopted five parts per million, and that's the standard," Brown said Thursday. "The matter is up to the courts now."

The health department indicated Thursday it won't change its oxygen standards. The department proceeded to file a formal complaint against Idaho Power and the reservoir district with the Health Board. The department claims lower standards would endanger fish in the Snake River.

"Our position would be that the standard not be lowered," said Al Murray, chief of the department's Water Quality Division.

Water last week fell below six parts, and Idaho Power had to reduce power production as much as 30,000 kilowatts a day to correct the problem.

At the same time, the company was buying power outside the state at a cost of 2.7 cents of a cent per kilowatt hour in order to meet customer demands.

"In the dam's 1 1/2 years of operation, the waters below it have repeatedly fallen below the six parts standard. Utility officials are still not sure what oxygen levels the equipment will achieve. But they have said they doubt it will meet the six-part standard."

Skylab forecast narrowed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The time when Skylab will fall next week has been narrowed to a 48-hour period centered on 1 p.m. MDT Wednesday, the space agency reported Friday.

And at that time Skylab will be crossing over the Seattle-Vancouver area.

The 1 p.m. time on Wednesday is merely an arbitrary center point of the period of uncertainty and there is no greater chance that Skylab could fall then than any other time.

Since that is the time of re-entry into the atmosphere, debris would not begin falling for another 4,000 or 5,000 miles. That would place the hypothetical debris "footprint" over northeastern South America and the Atlantic Ocean.

Generalized maps showing areas Skylab will be flying over next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday indicated that the 77-ton spaceship will be passing over large sections of the United States six times each of those days.

On each day, one orbit would roughly go southwestward to northeastward over the populous northeastern seaboard while others would criss-cross over the nation's midsection.

Some would cross the Pacific coast in the northern California area, but Los Angeles, for example, would not be under Skylab's predicted flight path during those days.

On the other side of the country, Florida would be overflown on Thursday, July 12, according to the maps — which, NASA officials stressed, could be in error by a half a degree either way.

Meanwhile, in Las Vegas, hotel owner Jackie Gaughan has posted odds at the downtown El Cortez Hotel on where and when Skylab would fall to earth. Most states were listed at 30-1.

However, small Rhode Island was listed at 200-1 because of its size and large states such as Texas and Alaska were given a 20-1 chance of being hit by Skylab.

Armed man killed by Nampa officers

NAMPA (UPI) — A man armed with a shotgun was shot and killed Friday by Nampa police officers who were responding to a call from a Nampa residence reporting a telephone threat.

Canyon County Prosecutor Dennis Goff identified the man as Glenn Page, address unknown and described as being in his late 20s. He said the man had relatives in Middleton.

Goff said John Gonzales received a telephone call at 6 a.m. from Page asking to see his 13-month-old daughter. Gonzales refused and received a second phone call from Page who threatened to "get them

Gonzales reported the call to the Nampa police, Goff said. He said Gonzales then heard a vehicle pull up and Page began beating on the door of his home. He heard a second vehicle arrive containing two police officers and heard them warn Page to put his gun down.

Officers repeated the warning twice before Page pointed the shotgun toward them, Goff said. Both officers fired, striking Page in the right arm, the forehead and the lung. Paramedics worked 30 minutes to save him, but Page was dead on arrival at the hospital, Goff said.

Nicaraguan troops charged with using napalm

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Sandinista guerrillas and Friday President Anastasio Somoza's national guard used napalm bombs in an attack on the rebel-held city of Masaya, 16 miles southwest of Managua.

Earlier, the Sandinistas captured San Marcos, 20 miles southeast of the capital, chopping national guard routes to the southern front.

On the lookout

SPOKANE (UPI) — Washington, Montana and Idaho authorities have been asked to be on the lookout for a man from Minneapolis, Minn., who apparently left his 14-month old baby girl with a babysitter about a Greyhound bus Thursday.

The man left the child with Geri Thomas, 22. Mrs. Thomas told authorities she was accompanying a friend from Minneapolis to Spokane to help him care for the child.

Check record

BOISE (UPI) — State Treasurer Marjorie Ruth Moon said Friday the highest number of state checks ever paid in one day were processed Thursday by her office.

Mrs. Moon said 13,726 state warrants were individually checked and paid during a 4-hour period and some 400 more were returned to the banks for lack of endorsement.

Idaho sites removed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Friday removed 16 disposal sites in Idaho from the hazardous, persistent or potentially dangerous list.

The EPA was requested by Sen. James McClure to remove the 16 nuclear, mining or chemical disposal sites from its list six months ago, McClure said.

The sites removed from the EPA list include the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, Idaho Falls; Simpson City, Pocatello; Monsanto Plant, Soda Springs; FMC Slag Pile, Pocatello; and Galena Ponds and Star Tilings Ponds, Wallace.

Three inmates escape

RIVERVIEW, Wyo. (UPI) — Three of six inmates who overpowered a prison guard, eluded their captors Friday, leaving their chief pursuer — the local sheriff — stumped.

"We still haven't come up with anything," Fremont County Sheriff Tim McKinney said. "We haven't got any sightings so we can't concentrate on a specific place. It's the amount of time they had on us — they could have gotten most anywhere."

Trade agreement

FRANKING (UPI) — Despite the failure of textile negotiations between the United States and China, the two nations will sign an agreement Saturday granting China most favored nation trading status, U.S. officials said Friday.

It could lead eventually to a similar agreement with the Soviet Union, economists said.

Voyager 2 nears Jupiter

By JAMES J. DOYLE PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) —

Voyager 2, more than half a billion miles from Earth and aimed for a Monday close approach to Jupiter, will look for volcanic plumes on one moon and clouds of water around another, scientists said Friday.

The spacecraft, following four months after its sister ship, continued the observations of Voyager 1 and added its own close examination of the volcanic Io and the ice-covered Europa.

The spacecraft also will make extensive photographic and scientific examinations of the other two large Jovian moons, Ganymede and Callisto.

Dr. Edward Stone, Voyager project scientist, said the volcanoes of Io were spewing sulfurous dust into space and sending sulfur, oxygen and sulfur-dioxide into the entire magnetosphere of Jupiter.

not only by particulate matter, he said, but also by a "sulfur dioxide gas cloud," a very tenuous atmosphere.

Dr. Brad Smith, leader of the Voyager imaging team, said, "The spacecraft was not on a very good trajectory for this close approach."

"If it wasn't planned to do much," he explained, "but after finding eight volcanic plumes, we decided to look again and we will look for more."

Jet sale to Egypt delayed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States has postponed the proposed sale of 50 F-5 warplanes to Egypt, apparently because Saudi Arabia has withdrawn a promise to pick up the bill, it was announced Friday.

But the State Department, in a brief written statement, said the United States intends to go ahead with selling Egypt 35 F-4 jets drawn from active American Air Force units.

In reference to the F-5s, which Egypt had planned to buy with Saudi money, the department said only, "This proposed sale has been postponed."

The cost of the F-5 deal, which was initially set at $55 million, ballooned to $730 million as extra equipment and services were added on.

The Saudis promised to put up $25 million of the tab, but later pulled out of the deal to protest the U.S.-mediated Egyptian-Israeli peace agreement.

A Defense Department spokesman said the Pentagon formally notified Congress Friday of plans to sell the 35 F-4s to Egypt at a cost of $594 million.

The deal, the spokesman said, includes 100 AIM 9E missiles, 250 AIM 9P missiles, 70 AIM 7E Sparrow missiles, 500 AGM-65A Maverick missiles, support equipment, spare parts, training and technical services.

An estimated 50 to 125 U.S. personnel will go to Egypt "only for the period necessary to provide the Egyptian Air Force with an operational maintenance capability," the spokesman said.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Inflation held down despite energy rise

By JAMES HILDRETH

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Inflation at the wholesale level was held mostly in check last month despite another sharp climb in energy prices, while the jobless rate was the lowest in nearly five years, the government reported Friday.

Administration economists said each of the new reports contained "encouraging" signals — but hastened to add that both were affected by special factors that may disappear.

The Labor Department said wholesale prices rose a moderate 0.5 percent during June following May's 0.4 percent rise, the best back-to-back performance since last summer.

Food prices plunged, particularly meat, but the cost of gasoline and home heating oil jumped sharply again.

The Labor Department said the number of unemployed teenagers fell by 19,000 in June, while their jobless rate dropped from 16.8 percent to 15.3.

Richard Sybert, a department spokesman, the increase this June over a year ago resulted from "a slight slowdown in the state's overall economy."

But administration officials still expect the number of jobless to climb in the second half of this year as a result of an already slowing economy.

Unemployment dips to 5.1% in Idaho

BOISE (UPI) — While national unemployment dropped to 5.6 percent in June, Idaho dipped to 5.1 percent, the state Department of Employment announced Friday.

The agency said Idaho unemployment was down two-tenths of a percent from the previous month but was still above June 1978 when unemployment in Idaho was 4.8 percent.

Richard Sybert, a department spokesman, the increase this June over a year ago resulted from "a slight slowdown in the state's overall economy."

"The economy just isn't as steamed-up as it was at this time last year," Sybert said.

Mideast stalemate at an end

By MATHIS CHAZANOV

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (UPI) — An American proposal Friday ended a six-week-long stalemate. In the Egyptian-Israeli talks on Palestinian autonomy and the two sides agreed on an agenda. U.S. special envoy Robert Strauss said everybody came out on the winning side.

"This is a breakthrough," Strauss said after two days of negotiations. "Both of these groups go home winners. Actually all three of us. It's a fine two days when that takes place."

Observers cautioned the agenda agreement left substantive talks on emotional issues to come.

Conference sources said the agreement was almost identical to a written American proposal presented to the negotiators Thursday night.

Strauss said he reported on the decision to President Carter, who jokingly replied, "You're taking a lot longer to solve the Middle East problem than I expected."

The procedural deadlock was broken when the negotiators agreed to form two three-party working groups to explore the problems of creating an administrative council in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

One group will deal with elections and the other faces the tougher challenge of defining powers and responsibilities — terms that go to the heart of the dispute between Israel and Egypt.

"The work will be long, hard and tedious," Strauss said. But he added, "We're all rather amug and satisfied where we stand today."

Previously no agreement had been reached on which topics would come up first, but Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil said, "It's a step forward."

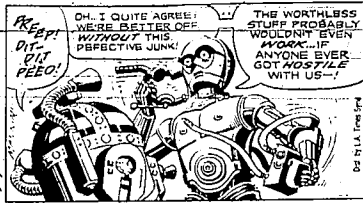

The fourth round of the autonomy talks was the first in which Strauss took part.

"We achieved every goal we set for ourselves on this trip," Strauss said.

As a news conference, Strauss was unwilling to take credit. But at a briefing for the American press later he conceded authorship of the deal-breaking proposal, saying Egypt and Israel "never would have agreed on a process" without American intervention.

Nazi prosecutions to continue

BONN, West Germany (UPI) — The upper house of the West German parliament voted to abolish the statute of limitations on murder Friday, insuring that Nazis accused of war crimes will be liable for prosecution to the ends of their lives.

The vote followed a similar ballot Tuesday by the lower house.

Parliament's action to end the 30-year limit on prosecuting murder reflected the mood of the country, which was moved and horrified by

"Holocaust," the American TV film on the Nazi extermination of Jews.

Shown on West German television this spring, the film swung public opinion in favor of legislation to continue prosecuting Nazi murderers after Dec. 31, 1979.

For our own self-protection, after Auschwitz, murder in Germany cannot become undetectable," Justice Minister Hans-Jochen Vogel said Tuesday during debate in the lower house.

Foreign opinion, particularly in the United States and Israel, also played a role in getting the legislation passed. But most politicians agreed the bill would have been defeated without the shock the American film gave to German public opinion.

The lower house approved the bill at a special session before the summer recess by a vote of 235 to 22. A dozen men and women wearing the striped jackets of World War II concentration camp inmates demonstrated during the debate.

The upper house, which represents the 11 West German states, passed the bill unanimously.

Detective quotes Bundy in testimony

By PAUL SCHWED
MIAMI (UPI) — A detective said Friday that Theodore Bundy, on trial for the Chi Omega murders, told him he sometimes peddled his bicycle around Tallahassee at night feeling "like a vampire."

"Mr. Bundy talked to us about being a night-type person" after his arrest, Tallahassee detective Don Patchen testified. "He liked to ride his bike at night... He said that at times he felt like a vampire."

Bundy is accused of creeping into the Chi Omega sorority house at Florida State University in Tallahassee and killing two coeds and beating several others.

Patchen's testimony brought no change in the serene countenance of the 22-year-old defendant as exhibited all week.

But five minutes later, Bundy jumped to his feet and roared at Circuit Judge Edward Cowart for telling attorneys to be ready with their opening statements to the jury Saturday morning.

Cowart said he was anxious to bring the jury back from an oceanfront hotel where they have been "languishing" since the start of pre-trial motions on Monday. One defense attorney protested that he has not finished presenting evidence on six additional motions.

The defense — which lost its effort to bar testimony from the only person who says she saw the killer running from the sorority house — wants Cowart to suppress Patchen's testimony.

The detective played two hours of a tape-recorded interview made with Bundy at Pensacola following his arrest there for driving a stolen car in the Florida Panhandle. Bundy told them how he escaped from a Colorado jail at the end of December 1977 and came south to Tallahassee because "I know how to act to look like a student."

During the interview, Patchen said, Bundy, a former Utah law student, asked him to switch off the tape recorder.

Before hearing Patchen's testimony and the tape recordings, Cowart denied another defense motion and ruled that Nita Jane Neary could tell the jury what she saw.

Bike gang gathering for rites

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — Police said Friday Outlaws motorcycle gang members from across the country were converging on this area for the funerals of five persons found slain in the Outlaws clubhouse.

However, one unidentified gang member said, "There won't be anybody coming to Charlotte."

The gang member agreed to talk to a reporter at the small, green-shingled house where four men and a young woman were shot to death early Fourth of July morning.

"We'll have our own funeral but it won't be in Charlotte," said the long-haired man who stuffed a pistol in his back pocket and flipped a switchblade knife in his hand as he walked around a plywood barricade to meet the reporter. He would not give his name.

The Charlotte Police Department said it had received reports from across the country and in Canada that Outlaws members were headed to Charlotte for the gang's show of strength.

"Law enforcement agencies have said we should expect bikers from California, Ohio, Michigan, Canada, Tennessee — and Florida," Police spokeswoman Emily Hedrick said Friday.

"We have had indications that they are heading this way for purposes of funeral rites," she added.

Walter C. Hilderman III, the Charlotte Police Department's expert on gang activity, said he was convinced the five were killed by members of Hell's Angels, a rival gang that has been locked in a power struggle with the Outlaws.

Jury still out in Estes case

DALLAS (UPI) — A federal jury Friday pondered for the second day the complex fraud case against Billie Sol Estes, legendary Texas swindler whose multimillion-dollar paper empire dissolved in a whirlwind of debts and disclosures during the early 1960s.

The eight-woman, four-man jury must decide whether Estes was a victim of his own greed in his quest for some sort of empire — as federal prosecutor James Rolfe has claimed — or a victim of "the most classic case of government abuse ever flushed out in a courtroom" — as his attorney has contended.

Be Fair! response

Praise for editorial

Praise and condemnation for some recent editorials came in the Times-News mailbox this week. One person wrote to praise last Saturday's editorial headlined "If this be war, where's the general?"

He wrote: "This is the fairest editorial I have ever read. During the war, we were proud and happy to be a part of helping our country. We know cars can be made that travel 40 to 50 miles on one gallon of gas. And inventions on energy-saving devices have been ignored. This is no incentive for us to save energy. As you say, we need a general. We are ready."

The writer's final comment was that those editorials coming. And that we will.

Unfortunately, another reader had mixed opinions on another editorial. This one concerned the Mountain Home airman discharged for reading a Bible while on sentry duty. The last two sentences were: "Somehow he imagined he was being persecuted. His imagination was probably fed by his favorite literature."

Wrote the reader: "This excellent editorial made its point well and then lost its effect by an immature and bigoted closing statement."

Perhaps the reader is right. This editorial may have been a little stronger with out the opinionated final sentence. But then, opinion is what an editorial is all about.

We can't ban junk food, but we can try

Washington, D.C. has a habit of collecting a lot of junk, and not just the kind that ends up in the Smithsonian Institution.

Now it has what is being billed as the Junk Food Hall of Shame, which has been put together to show Americans what kind of junk that they are putting into their bodies at an incredible rate.

Some great American favorites are displayed, such as Frosted Flakes, Jell-O, Coca-Cola, Dream Whip, Shake and Bake, Tang, Hawaiian Punch and Fruit Loops. Wheaties, that "breakfast of champions" is even on the list.

This display was set up a day after the Department of Agriculture announced that it is mounting another attack on junk food, aiming specifically at the sale of junk foods in schools. The agriculture folks have tried before to restrict the sale of junk food in schools, but have failed. This time, however, they have a new scientific nutritional standard to use as a weapon.

All of this anti-junk activity is all well and good, but the fact of the matter is that the government cannot put an outright ban on these foods. We are still a free society, and as such, people have a right to abuse themselves if they want to. The government's main role in this area is to make Americans aware that they are indeed poisoning themselves, which means lots of advertising to counter the huge amount of advertising used by the likes of Coca-Cola and General Foods.

One of the critical junk food problems remains in the schools, of course, and the Department of Agriculture's proposed restriction of junk food sales in schools may well help steer children to healthier intake habits. However, such an approach could also steer children off campus in search of potato chips and cola at nearby stores.

Some schools are trying to counter the students' off-campus trips by offering fortified junk food. The theory of this plan is that students can be served their old junky favorites but at the same time get their vitamins, minerals and protein. Buhl schools started this plan last year.

A fortified junk food program may indeed bring some of the students back to the cafeteria and may also put more nutrition in their growing systems, but will bad eating habits be fostered, or continued, because of such a program?

When junk food is fortified, are we merely contributing to the junk food habit, an encouraging people to gobble up such items, whether fortified or not? In other words, if we can't guarantee the nutritional value of all such food we shouldn't be helping to make such food a part of the regular diet.

No matter what is done or not done in school, a major part of the U.S. food dilemma can be solved at home.

It is still possible for parents to mix a little education with a little discipline here and there, and add the important ingredient of example-setting to encourage children to start making responsible food choices on their own.

And as for the adult "junkies"... there's the old adage that's still so true: We can quit if we really want to.

Gerry's back again

©Universal Press Syndicate
WASHINGTON — Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts signed the Declaration of Independence, helped to draft the Constitution, served in Congress, functioned as ambassador to France and wound up his career as vice-president under Madison. And what's he remembered for today? Because he gave his name to "gerrymandering," that's what.

The word goes back to 1812, when Gerry, as governor, signed a bill creating state senatorial districts that favored the dominant Democrats.

One of the northeastern districts was shaped like a salamander. It was an easy linguistic slide from salamander to gerrymander, and from that day to this the fun and games have continued. Given an opportunity to create legislative districts, a political party will play party politics every time.

Forgive the historical note. Governor Gerry would have understood exactly what the Republican Party is up to now. The Republicans have created a special political action committee, known as GOPAC, with but one purpose in mind. This is to elect more Republicans to state legislatures in 1980. Following next year's decennial census, lines must be redrawn for congressional districts. The GOP wants a larger hand in drawing them.

For the Republican Party, this is merely a matter of life or death: At present the Democrats control both houses in 31 state legislatures, the Republicans in only 11; in seven states political control is divided. (Nebraska has a unicameral body.) The 31 Democratic states elect almost three-fourths of the members of the House of Representatives. Unless the Republicans can reduce this overwhelming advantage, they stand to lose from 23 to 26 seats in the House as districts are reconstituted after 1980.

The reverse of the proposition also is true. If the Republicans could make significant gains in the state legislatures — if they could elect even 30 candidates in precisely the right places — their own judicious gerrymandering thereafter would produce a potential Republican gain of 20 to 22 seats in the House. This sport is known as political hardball; it is all men play in the major leagues.

To be sure, the rules are not as easy going as they were in Governor Gerry's day. By Supreme Court decree, legislative districts are supposed to be compact, contiguous and as nearly equal as possible in population. Even so, it is child's play for state legislators to juggle counties, cities and townships for political advantage.

All told, the 49 state legislatures (excluding Nebraska) have 7,513 seats. The Republicans gained 32 seats last November and now hold roughly 2,735 against the Democrats' 4,778. The remaining seats are held by independents or by third-party incumbents. The Republicans have no realistic hope of approaching even half of the total number of seats. Their hope is that by pouring money and effort into 800 state legislative districts, they might win another 300 seats in 1980. This would make a world of difference in the reapportionment battles that lie ahead.

In an astounding exhibition of solidarity, all 18 Republican governors are part of the GOPAC venture. Pierre S. du Pont of Delaware is chairman. As its executive director, the committee luckily wooed J.E.B. Carney away from the Republican National Committee. At 23, Carney exemplifies the new breed of young professionals in politics; he cut his baby teeth in Virginia's seventh district and served as an advance man for Bob Dole in the presidential campaign of 1976.

The GOPAC goal is to raise $1 million for the 1980 effort. By federal standards that's chickenfeed, but in terms of state legislative races the individual grants could make a large difference. In the nature of things, most of the big contributions next year will go into the presidential, senatorial and congressional campaigns, but young Carney has a most appealing pitch to people who understand politics: The shape of things in the Big House on Capitol Hill depends first upon the shape of things in statehouses back home.

If Republican contributors don't want to be Brownminded in California, or Carneyminded in New York or Grahnaminded in Florida, they'd better dig deep for GOPAC — for the Democrats, who long ago learned that to live by the word is to die by the word, surely will mount a vigorous statehouse effort of their own.

Needs change reality

© The Boston Globe Co.
BOSTON — "He is not really like that," she said apologetically as her husband left the room.

"Like what?" I asked, wondering which of the many things that had happened that evening she was excusing.

"Well, you know," she said, "cranky." I thought about that. Cranky. It was typical of the woman that she would choose a gentle, even childish, word for the sort of erratic outbursts of anger which had been her husband's hallmark for the past 15 years.

He was not really like that. This had been her sentence when they were first dating, when they were living together, and now, since they were married.

When he questioned, minutely, the price-tags of her purchases, she would say: "He is really deep down, very serious." When he disagreed with her politics, veering to the right while she listed to the left, she would cheerily insist that underneath all that he was "basically" liberal. When he blamed her for the condition of the house, as if he were a lodger, and blamed her for the children's illnesses, as if her negligence had caused their viruses, she would explain, "He is really very understanding."

Even when he was actually his most vital self, amusing and expansive, full of mirth and enthusiasm or himself — and she disapproved — he would forgive him because he wasn't really like that.

This time, dining with them out of town one brief night, I saw that this was the pattern of their lives together — a struggle, between realities. His real and her really. I had known the wife since college and the husband — from their first date. When they met she was a social worker and he was, it seems, her raw material. Was he the case and she the miracle worker? At times she looked at him that way.

Her husband was erratic and difficult, but he had a streak of humor and zinniness as attractive as Alan Arkin's. Over the years, he had grown "crankier" and she more determined in her myth-making. This trip, for the first time, I wondered what it must be like to be a text living with an interpreter. To be not really like that. And what it must be like for her, living with her myth as well as her man.

I know many other people who live with their ideas of each other. Not with a real person but with a reality. They doggedly refuse to let the evidence interfere with their opinions. They develop an idea about the other person and spend a lifetime trying to make him or her live up to that idea. A lifetime, too, of disappointments.

As James Taylor sings it: "First you make believe. I believe the things that you make believe. And I'm bound to let you down."

Then it's I who have been deceiving. Purposely misleading. And all along you believed in me."

But when we describe what the other person is really like, I suppose we often picture what we want. We look through the prism of our need.

I know a man who believes that his love is really a very warm woman. The belief keeps him questing for that warmth. I know a woman who is sure that her mate has hidden strength, because she needs him to have it.

Against all evidence, one man believes that his woman is nurturing because he so wants her to be. After 20 years, another woman is still lapping hidden wells of sensuality in her mate, which he has, she believes, "repressed."

And maybe they are right and maybe they are wrong, and maybe they are each other's social workers. But maybe they are also afraid that if they let go of their illusions, they will feel like each other.

We often refuse to see what we might not be able to live with. We choose distortion.

Leaving this couple, I thought about how much human effort can go into maintaining the "really." How much daily energy that might have gone into understanding the reality — accepting it or rejecting it. How many of us spend our lives trying to sustain our myths, and how we are "bound to be let down." Because most people are, after all, the way they seem to be. Really.

Boat People backed by immigrants

By MICHAEL ZIELENSIGER
©1979 Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — On Independence Day they gathered together; recent refugees and descendants of immigrants, to sing "America the Beautiful" and demand a larger U.S. commitment to the homeless Indochinese victims of political upheaval.

"We are testifying to the world that we are indeed our brothers' keepers," Rabbi Yechiel Eckstein of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith told the crowd of a few hundred, many with relatives still searching for freedom and a new homeland.

Poems, hymns, speeches and a Buddhist prayer ritual marked the gathering of Chicago's Indochinese communities joining together in an effort to dramatize the plight of their brethren the "boat people," the estimated 30,000 homeless refugees from Southeast Asia who have been expelled from Malaysia, Singapore and other countries in their search for a new life.

"It is the first time our people have gotten together to speak out," said Bieu Hoang, who emigrated from Saigon four years ago and was one of the leaders of the rally.

Many at the interfaith service in Clarendon Park were recent immigrants to the United States, and some barely knew enough English to sing the "Star Spangled Banner." So that all could participate, the speeches during the 90-minute program were translated into Vietnamese, Cambodian, Laotian and Hmong, the language of the ethnic Laotian group that fought with the United States during the Vietnam War.

As Neal Ball, chairman of the American Refugee Committee, reminded the audience, America is unique

"as a home for the homeless, a harbor for the oppressed." He quoted from the inscription on the base of the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor: "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free."

"A denial of commitment to the Indochinese refugees is a denial of commitment to human rights," Truong Nguyen, chairman of the Committee for Indochinese Human Rights, told the service.

The United States, on an emergency basis, accepted some 650,000 Cuban refugees after the 1961 revolution there. Hugh Schwartzberg, co-chairman of the Emergency Task Force for Indochinese Refugees, told the rally. "We can already embrace the entire present population of the camps," he said. "Let us empty them."

Schwartzberg said the recent move by the Carter administration to increase monthly immigration quotas for Indochinese from 7,000 to 14,000 is not strong enough.

"The (immigration) system must be changed," Schwartzberg said. "The federal executive has lacked the political will to do the difficult. If all that is required is sacrifice, let us sacrifice."

Eckstein said he hopes to establish a network of similar groups around the country to organize similar rallies and raise the issue of U.S. responsibility for the homeless of Indochina.

BEARING MUCH FRUIT?

Jesus speaks on this subject. "Read what He has to say: 'I am the vine, and my Father is the vinedresser. Every branch of mine that bears no fruit, He takes away, and every branch that does bear fruit He prunes that it may bear more fruit. You are already made clean by the word which I have spoken to you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit by itself unless it abides in the vine, neither can you unless you abide in me.' (John 15: 1-4) We are God's orchard. And we are either plums or we're prunes."

How would American like to inherit harem? Reactions might differ

Middle East harems are inherited. Or have been so, traditionally. Not every potentate's son is glad of that. In bygone years, the harem women were fed oils. Fat was the fashion. The youth bequeathed a houseful of elderly heavyweights did not always admire his father's choices. The young man was at liberty, certainly, to add his own specimen to the collection. But as generation succeeded generation on call, the mood of the place deteriorated. Our Love and War man does not understand how they kept from tearing one another's hair out.

Something else you can do to white away the time at twilight is call to mind all the various animals that can't look back over their shoulders. Start with the elephant. It can't. What other?

WIDOWERS
Q. A widow in search of a widower would have the best chance of finding some in what states?
A. Arkansas, Florida, Missouri, New Hampshire or Pennsylvania. So report the statisticians.

The dueling pistol that Aaron Burr shot to kill Alexander Hamilton in 1804 was the same dueling pistol that George Eacker shot to kill Hamilton's son Philip three years earlier. And at the same place on Weehawken Heights, incidentally.

The original Henry Ford kept a glassful of salt water and used razor blades on his bathroom shelf. He dipped his comb into it every morning and combed his hair. This treatment kept his hair from falling out, he said.

NATIVE INSTRUMENT
Quick, what's the only popular musical instrument that's native to the United States? Say the banjo. And soon that's almost not right. It was adapted from something fairly similar that was brought here by slaves from Africa.

Claim is that during the winter months we sprinkle four times as much salt on our streets as on our food.

Navratilova wins Wimbledon title

WIMBLEDON(UPI) — Martina Navratilova, winning one-for her mother, used her explosive power to overwhelm Chris Evert Lloyd, 6-4, 6-4 Friday and capture the Wimbledon Championship for the second successive year.

"One more time," the jubilant Navratilova shouted at her mother, whom she hadn't seen since her defection from Czechoslovakia four-and-a-half-years-ago, a moment after Evert drove the final ball over the baseline.

A ripping service, the fastest-of-any-woman-player, kept Evert off balance throughout the one hour match and dealt her "the most disappointing defeat-of-her-career." It also marked the third time she has been beaten in the Wimbledon final, including the last two years.

"I think I'm a lot more disappointed this year than I ever have been because I felt so much support from the English crowd and my family, and I felt I had reached my peak," said Evert, who recently married British player John Lloyd.

"I started practicing eight weeks ago and I knew I'd have to win this tournament to be considered the best player."

Navratilova got her first serve in 31 of 56 times, and Evert said this was what made the difference.

"I think I would have beaten her if she hadn't gotten the defensive and I never got in the match. I thought she would let up, but she didn't."

"I never really felt in the match. I wasn't nervous. I was more nervous yesterday anticipating the match. It was the same in last year's final. I didn't feel anything at all. There were times I felt myself rushing a little instead of taking my time."

Navratilova felt good going into the match, and the confidence factor received a big boost when she held service in the opening game. As Martina explained, "I've been losing the first serve consistently in this tournament, and when I won the toss I thought, 'oh, God, maybe I should receive!'"

The two sets were nearly identical in pattern. With Navratilova breaking off to a 3-0 lead, only to have Evert twice break service in the 9th game, stirring hope among the capacity crowd at Center Court that she could achieve a comeback. But in both cases, Navratilova broke right back.

"I wanted to win so much more than last year, and it seemed it meant more than last year," said Navratilova, who said she was surprised the match didn't go three sets. "You can't compare the joy from one year to another. It meant a lot to win, particularly with my mother here."

Navratilova earned $39,600 for her victory, plus an invitation for her and her mother to have tea with the Duchess of Kent, who made the presentation, while Evert had to settle for $19,200. It was only the second loss in the last two months for Evert, making a new commitment to her career following her marriage and after resting a month she will begin preparation for the U.S. Open.

Navratilova lays claim to No. 1

WIMBLEDON (UPI) — For Martina Navratilova, it appears there's always a need to prove herself.

Even after winning the Wimbledon championship for the second consecutive year Friday, beating Chris Evert Lloyd, 6-4, 6-4, Navratilova cast some doubts on her prospects of earning the World No. 1 ranking.

"For the moment I'm No. 1," she said with a trace of sarcasm. "But what happens at the end of the year when Chris beats me for the last time? That's all you guys remember."

Evert, who wasn't present when Martina made the remark, echoed the same feeling a few minutes later when she said "This is the same position I was in last year (when she also lost in the Wimbledon final to Navratilova) and finished No. 1."

"The first six months are over and there are six months to go. I'll have to win almost every tournament I play."

Navratilova has had to contend with the mighty reputation of Evert since the day she first proved she could be a champion, and it is a shadow she's still hasn't been able to wash away.

"Last year a lot of people thought it was a fluke or the only reason I won was because Chris was away half the year, she wasn't match tough, blah blah blah," Navratilova said.

"When she came back at the end of the year, they said she was No. 1, or equal with me. It seemed that whenever I was on top it was because of this, not because I was playing well. This year she has been playing all year."

Because of the presence of her mother, who Navratilova hadn't seen since her defection from Czechoslovakia four and a half years ago, she said this championship meant more than last year.

"I wanted to win so much more than last year, and it seemed it meant more than last year," she said.

"You can't compare the joy from one year to another. I was a lot lighter this year. Last year I was blowing easy."

"When it was over today I think I felt relief to be No. 1."

Although Navratilova felt Evert was nervous, Chris said that wasn't the case. Instead, she placed the blame for her defeat strictly where it belonged — on the strong game played by her rival.

"She's played that well before, but the difference today is she got her first serve in," Evert said.

"I think I would have beaten her if she hadn't gotten her first serve in so much. She put me on the defensive and I never got in the match. I thought she would let up, but she didn't."

Evert, who had lost only one match in two months in Europe as preparation for Wimbledon, didn't attempt to hide her disappointment.

"I think I'm a lot more disappointed this year than I have ever been because I felt so much support from the English crowd and my family, and I felt I had reached my peak," she said.

Jerome's Troy Prairie dries off after winning first and registering a qualifying national B time.

Tupperware Invitational Local swimmers make a splash

By RANDY FREY Times-News sports writer

JEROME — They began diving into the pool at 8 o'clock in the morning, and by the time all 84 events were completed 11 hours later, six Idaho swimmers had earned their national B times and 14 more Magic Valley swimmers had achieved state A times.

It was the annual Tupperware Invitational, and more than 400 young swimmers turned out representing 12 Idaho cities. Those who achieved their state A times will now participate in the annual state meet in August.

Pocatello took home the team trophy with 36 points, edging the Burley swim club by 30 points. Gooding was third with 277 followed by Nampa, both Jerome, Idaho Falls and Minico. The Magic Valley Swim Club finished 11th with 36 points.

The meet was geared to the less advanced swimmer, with most of the competitors in the 8 and under and 9-10 year old groups. Many of the teams participating have only summer programs with no year-round swimming.

"A lot of these kids are swimming for the first time," said Jerome coach Dennis Mueller, who was happy with her team's fifth place finish. "We only entered 25 swimmers, so I didn't think we would finish this high." A couple of her swimmers turned in some impressive times, including 12-year-old Troy Prairie, who made his national B time with a 25.19 in the 50 fly.

Prairie, who has been swimming for only four years, will now see how he can do in the state meet to be held this year in Pocatello.

"Now that I have made my B time I want to make my national A time," said the Jerome swimmer. "I have to cut about four seconds off my time to do it."

But Prairie, like the rest of the Jerome swimmers is handicapped by not swimming year-round.

"I might join the Magic Valley Swim Club so I can swim all year around," said Prairie. "I know because I live in Jerome I will have to get up at 5 in the morning and go to Twin and then go back again in the afternoon. It is really a hassle."

Prairie also earned his state A time in the 100 backstroke with a time of 1:24.25.

Jerome teammates Debbie Cook and Rick Rodgers took home individual high point trophies. Cook racked up 17 points in the girls 15-18 competition and Rodgers scored 19 points in the boys open competition.

Swimmers were allowed to compete in three individual events and both relays. Leon Beard of Minico made his national B time in the boys 11-12 100 free when he swam a 1:06.80. He was the only other Magic Valley swimmer to make his national time.

Several swimmers made their state A times to qualify for the Pocatello meet, including 14 from the Magic Valley.

Debbie Cook of the Magic Valley Swim Club swam a 1:33.39 in the 100 IM and a 49.02 in the 50 fly. Justin Sudweeks of MVSC swam a 2:58.24 in the boys 11-12 200 IM. Jay Green of Minico turned in a 2:23.10 in the boys 15-18 200 IM; David Hackney of MVSC swam a 2:28.15 in the same event and a 1:12.42 in the 100 back; Wright of Burley came in with a 2:30.55 in the girls 11-12 100 backstroke; Wendy Price of MVSC had a 43.64 in the 50 fly and a 37.50 in the 50 free; Pat Towle of MVSC had a 36.11 in the boys 11-12 50 fly and a 1:02.32 in the boys 11-12 breaststroke; Leon Beard of Minico had a 33.80 in the boys 11-12 50 fly; D. Graves of Burley had a 51.63 in the girls 9-10 50 breaststroke; Brian Fosco of Gooding swam a 1:58.39 in the girls 11-12 100 free; T. Stroud of Burley had a 45.04 in the girls 8 and under 50 free; M. Beaver of Burley had a 49.53 in the girls 8 and under 50 free; Wendy Anderson of Gooding swam a 35.31 in the girls 9-10 50 free and S. Newman of Burley swam a 1:10.26 in the boys 11-12 100 freestyle.

Magic Valley swimmers taking home individual high point trophies were Beckl Kimmes of Gooding in the girls 8 and under competition, Cyndi Graves of Burley in the girls girls 11-12 girls 11-12 50 fly and T. Stroud of Gooding in the boys 13-14 bracket, Debbie Cook of Jerome and Rick Rodgers of Jerome.

U.S. athletes add more Pan Am gold

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — Although falling for the first time to record a flawless performance, the United States' glittering "Aquacade" of swimmers and divers put on another all-star show Friday night by capturing five gold medals in the Pan American Games. Led by Jesse Vassallo's world record performance of 2:03.29 in the men's 800-meter individual medley, the star-studded U.S. swimming and diving team also earned gold medals in the women's 400 meter freestyle and 200 meter backstroke, the men's 800 meter freestyle relay and the women's platform dive. It gave the U.S. swimmers 22 gold medals in the swimming and diving competition but the U.S. stranglehold was snapped at 21 straight gold medals when Canada's duo of Anne Gagnon and JoAnne Bedard posted a 1-2 finish in the women's 200 meter breaststroke in the next-to-last event of the night. The best the U.S. could do in the event was a third-place finish by Patty Spess of Walnut Creek, Calif. "When you win that many, you don't want to lose any," said U.S. swim coach Frank Keefe. "That was a fantastic swim by Gagnon. Our girls swam well. There's a tremendous difference adjusting from the long course (no turns) to the short course. They don't have the walls in the long course." — It was not the first time the Canadians had broken a gold medal swimming streak for the U.S. In the 198 Games, Canada's Lynn Chenard ended U.S. domination by taking the 100 meter backstroke. Joining Vassallo on the winners' platform were Cynthia Woodhead of Riverside, Calif.; Linda Jezek of Los Altos, Calif.; and Barbara Weinstein of Cincinnati, and the 800 meter freestyle relay team of Brian Gagnon, Gagnon, Kirchner and Rowdy Gaines. The overall depth of the U.S. squad was perhaps best demonstrated by its victory in the men's 800 meter medley relay. In the qualifying heat earlier in the day, the U.S. used an entirely different team and posted the third best time. Then, they switched to the "first" team for the finals and breached to victory over Brazil and Canada in 7:31.28.

Overall, it was a splendid day for the U.S. to the U.S. team.

In addition to the gold medals won by the swimmers and divers, the U.S. picked up four gold medals in archery, roller gold medals in the 12 1/2 mile roller skating marathon and team trap shooting event; notched silver medals in archery, skating, gymnastics, pistol shooting and weightlifting and earned bronze medals in weightlifting and fencing.

Referees pay tribute to Rudolph

NEW YORK — Funeral services were held Friday for Marvin (Mendy) Rudolph, who refereed 2,112 games during a flamboyant 22-year career in the National Basketball Association. Rudolph died Thursday of a heart attack in his home in Manhattan. He was 53 years old. Rudolph, whose trademarks were a loud whistle and an emphatic way of making calls, was dubbed "Mr. Hollywood" by the players because of his dapper offcourt dress and his theatrical manner. In his time running up and down hardwood courts, he presided over more games than any other NBA referee. — Red Auerbach of the Boston Celtics, noted as a referee-baller, had many run-ins with Rudolph. "I used to kid him a lot about how dapper he looked," said Auerbach Thursday from his home in Washington. "I used to tell him if he would spend more time running and less time worrying about his looks and his hair, he would work a better ball game. But he knew I was kidding him. When Mendy worked a game, he had complete control. He was as good as anybody who ever blew a whistle." — Rudolph was raised in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. He became an official when he was 20 years old and worked his first professional game in the old Eastern League, teaming with his father, the late Harry Rudolph. They operated as a father-and-son team in more than 125 games. Rudolph officiated his first NBA game, between the Knicks and the Baltimore Bullets, in February 1963.

"It's style and there's no substitute for it," Rudolph said of his officiating. "I was fortunate enough to have it from the beginning. I've got this philosophy about this business. My theory is, don't get 'em to like you, get 'em to respect you." Rudolph, when he was the league's chief referee, was forced into retirement after suffering a pulmonary embolism in a playoff game between the Buffalo Braves and the Washington Bullets at the Capital Centre in Landover, Md., on April 25, 1975. He left the NBA two months later to become a television commentator. "We are deeply saddened to learn of the death of Mendy Rudolph," said Lawrence E. O'Brien, the NBA commissioner, Thursday. "He was one of the great basketball officials of all time. He symbolized the fine qualities and knowledge of officials that all officials should possess. Mendy's contributions to the integrity of pro basketball are legendary. His passing is not only a personal loss to his family, but to all basketball and sports."
