

Carter approves MX-missile's 'race track'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter has approved a so-called "race track" system for the MX missile-based strategic intercontinental ballistic missile to hide them from a Soviet sneak attack, an administration official said Thursday.

The official said a White House announcement on Carter's decision is imminent.

The new system was approved by Carter at a meeting this week with members of the National Security Council. Carter had been presented several multibillion-dollar options.

The race track system was considered along with other options including moving the missiles on rails traveling through a 20-mile underground trench, or launching the missiles from transport aircraft.

Press secretary Jody Powell told reporters that contrary to reports, "I know of no last minute hitch" that would cause a postponement of the decision.

Under the chosen system, oval or circular roadways, in the arrangement of a race track, would be used with shelters for 200 MX missiles. There would be 23 spur roads leading to 4,500 hardened shelters. The missiles would be shuttled from shelter to shelter to prevent a first strike by the Soviets.

Each missile would be assembled in an open area in full view of Soviet reconnaissance satellites.

Then, the missiles would be towed by a giant transporter around the "racetracks" and hidden in one of the shelters.

Since the missile would be covered by a shield during its trip around the "racetrack," Soviet spy satellites could never be precisely sure in which shelters the missiles were located.

However, the Soviets would know exactly how many MX missiles the United States has but would not know their geographical location precisely enough to target them.

The Soviets have objected to this basing mode in conversations with U.S. negotiators, saying they did not see how they would be able to verify U.S. compliance with the terms of the SALT II treaty.

The method of basing the long-range missiles has cropped up frequently during the SALT II hearings.

Carter also is expected to make a decision shortly on increasing defense spending to meet the objections of Senate critics who have conditioned approval of SALT II on a hefty boost in Pentagon spending.

There were indications that Carter might soon send Congress a supplemental request for $4 billion.

Kennedy family OK's bid

By HEDRICK SMITH
© N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has rejected a step closer to becoming a candidate for the 1980 Democratic Presidential nomination by letting it be known that, for the first time, his family has given its blessing to his running for president.

The choice to do so.

Authoritative sources close to the Massachusetts Democrat said that he had ample time in the August Congressional recess to discuss the question with his wife, Joan, and his mother, Rose Kennedy, and that they had told him they no longer had objections to his making the race.

Publicly, Kennedy made no change in his long-stated position: "I expect the president to be re-nominated and I expect him to be re-elected and I intend to support him." Privately, his associates emphasized that Kennedy had still not made any final decision to run.

The decision to reveal through an aide the Kennedy family's approval of a presidential race was carefully calculated, Kennedy backers predicted, to stimulate a new burst of pro-Kennedy activity without prematurely forcing the senator's hand or jeopardizing the favorable media position of the draft movement.

Idaho sagebrush rebellion qualified

BOISE (UPI) — Attorney General David Leroy said Thursday Idaho should be selective in a possible legislative attack against the federal government on land issues.

Leroy, fresh from a multi-state lands session at Reno, Nev., said Thursday he hopes Idaho's Legislature, if it decides to join a so-called "sagebrush rebellion," will not adopt a "shotgun" approach as he said Nevada has.

"I would hope the structure of our effort would be designed to be more successful than Nevada's uphill battle," said Leroy, saying he believes Idaho's lawmakers may plan legislation to wrest control of public lands from the federal government.

The attorney general, speaking to Idaho Press Club members, said he hopes Idaho may center on four or five of the several land disputes now pending between the state and the federal government.

He said he is removed from the political aspects of the "rebellion" because he merely is an adviser to the Legislature.

Leroy said he favors "getting the Legislature involved in expressions of public policy."

"It is no secret there are serious problems," Leroy said, noting he thinks it is right for the state to rebel against the government on land issues.

"It is an idea whose time has come. I think it will be good if some respects and I believe we will have some chance of success."

"There is nothing magic in Washington decision-making. It is better done at home."

He promised that neither the Legislature or the Idaho Land Board, of which he is a member, would "go with the swing of the pendulum" and overreact to the land revolt.

State officials would be protective of the environment and would take a sure, balanced approach to acquiring control of federal land.

Leroy said he will discuss possible legislation with Idaho lawmakers who are attending the Reno conference. Among them are Senate President Pro Tem Reed Budge, R-Soda Springs, and House Speaker Ralph Olmstead, R-Twin Falls.

Also on the agenda are three meetings later this year with other attorneys general in the West to map legal strategy in land acquisition.

He said Nevada officials are frustrated because the government controls 84 percent of the state. Sixty-four percent of Idaho is owned by the government.

Leroy said he believes the Nevada Legislature has an uphill fight in its recent action against "the government. The Nevada lawmakers recently enacted a law instructing its attorney general to seek ownership of Nevada public lands by provoking a lawsuit with the Bureau of Land Management.

Environmental override

WASHINGTON — The House Commerce Committee voted Thursday to give President Carter's proposed new Energy Mobilization Board authority to set aside major provisions of the nation's environmental laws to speed construction of energy projects.

The far-reaching decision came on a 28-16 vote after the panel rejected a barrage of attempts by liberals and Western-state congressmen to restrict the agency's authority merely to waiving procedural timetables.

The action followed a defection from the administration's position by the Energy Department, which lobbied privately for the broadened role. Carter had asked originally only for procedural authority.

The move is considered likely to set off a bitter battle over the issue when the measure reaches the House floor. A final measure reported out by the House Interior Committee avoids any such broad powers.

The action came as, separately, the Senate Finance Committee approved a routine Carter request to exempt heavy oil from his proposed "windfall profits" tax, but lacked any momentum to go on to other provisions.

Finance Committee Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., had brought up the heavy-oil issue in hopes of stirring the panel into action. The committee is expected to water down substantially a House-passed windfall measure.

At the same time, the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office urged a Senate Budget Committee task force to go slowly in approving Carter's proposed $88 billion synthetic fuels program to allow time for planners to learn from their mistakes.

Both the CBO and the Committee for Economic Development, a liberal business group, cautioned that rushing to build 19 plants in the next three years, as Carter has proposed, might prove too fast for current technology.

The series of actions provided little encouragement for the White House that Congress would change its sentiment about Carter's energy program in the wake of the August recess.

Although congressional leaders still insist the House and Senate will pass some version of most of Carter's proposals, it's unlikely that the measures will go through easily, or very soon.

Jody Powell, the president's press secretary, said Thursday Carter is concerned that his proposals may lose any sense of urgency as vacation season ends and voters lose their memory of this summer's gasoline lines.

Chavez, labor oppose 160-acre amendment

By ELLEN HUME
© The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The war over federal water in the Western states is turning into a mud fight, as agricultural interests trade insults with Department of the Interior officials over a reclamation reform bill that comes up in the Senate next week.

United Farm Workers head Cesar Chavez and a nation's 400,000 lobbyists have joined the battle against the agricultural-supported bill, sponsored by Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho). It would virtually repeal the 160-acre limit on farms using federal water, providing exemptions for some of the West's largest farms.

Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus is fighting the bill, saying it "smells bad" because it favors "large wealthy landowners."

In turn, the bill's supporters charge that Andrus has mounted "a conscious attempt to destroy a major segment of the agricultural economy of the 17 Western states" with "some very base lies and distortions of well-known facts."

At issue is the 77-year-old reclamation law, which established 311 billion worth of federal irrigation projects in the Western states to encourage family farms on once-arid lands. Until a court order in 1977, the 160-acre limit and residency rules were not strictly observed, and some absentee investors — particularly in California — still are able to get the federally-subsidized water on huge farm tracts.

Western farmers, facing the breakup of their holdings or the loss of their subsidized federal water, mounted a $1 million campaign in 1977 to lobby for reform of the old law. The result was the pending Church bill, which farm lobbyist Gordon Nelson calls "goldplated" because it would eliminate residency requirements, raise the acreage limit to 1,280 acres and provide blanket exemptions for nearly every large farm currently violating the law.

APL-CIO legislative affairs aide Michael Gildea said that Chavez and other union officials have entered the fight against the bill because it would benefit several large farmers in the Central Valley of California, whom Gildea called "the big anti-labor crowd."

The bill's chief opponent, Sen.

Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., has charged that the large farmers receive $1,500 to $2,000 an acre in federal subsidies thanks to the federal water, and therefore should comply with the original law.

The farmers argue that public benefits of the reclamation program have far outweighed the taxpayers' investment. They say they are willing to accept an amendment sponsored by Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., which would provide an escalated surcharge for federal water delivered beyond each 1,280-acre limit.

Department of the Interior officials argue even with the Morgan amendment the cost of the water projects, including interest, would still be largely borne by the federal taxpayers.

As the vote looms on Monday or Tuesday, lobbying by California farmers, labor leaders and Interior officials has intensified. The outcome probably will involve an amendment fight on the Senate floor.

Ironically each side hopes to enlist the help of powerful Southern senators. The unions hope to mobilize Southern cotton interests against the large California cotton growers, arguing that the Church bill gives them an "unfair advantage."

The farmers argue that Southern war profits may suddenly become subject to the 160-acre rule if the laws is not changed.

SALT II treaty goes nowhere

WASHINGTON — Informed sources said Thursday that the strategic arms limitation treaty will not even be sent to the Senate floor for debate as long as Russian combat troops remain in Cuba, as concerns mounted in the Senate over Soviet intentions.

This assessment by senators and by members of the staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee came in the wake of Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance's warning Wednesday that the United States will not accept the presence of a 2,000 to 3,000-man Soviet combat brigade in Cuba, some 90 miles from the Florida coast.

Then, on Thursday, Chairman Frank Church, D-Ida., of the Foreign Relations Committee said that "unless the issue of Russian combat troops is resolved, I would be misleading you and the country to say the Senate would be prepared to ratify the treaty."

One of the most influential members of the committee's staff, who would not permit use of his name, went even further. He said "the chances of the treaty getting out of the committee are nil" so long as Moscow keeps its troops in Cuba.

While the administration searches for a way to deal with the SALT-Cuba controversy, the committee plans to go ahead with its hearings, which are presently scheduled to conclude on Sept. 14.

Vance met with Church for breakfast Thursday morning, and State Department officials later said the two would work closely to resolve the issue.

Official spokesmen for the White House, and the State Department spoke of the entire matter in carefully moderated — and uninformative — tones. The White House referred all questions to the State Department, and the State Department refused to add to what Vance said at a press conference Wednesday.

At the State Department, spokesman Hodding Carter told a press briefing that discussions are under way between State Department and Soviet embassy officials.

Until the presence of the Soviet troops became known last week, the committee had been expected to complete work on the SALT II treaty and send it to the Senate floor for debate about the end of this month.

So likely was this prospect that treaty opponents had begun planning strategy for having the agreement returned to the Foreign Relations Committee.

But it became clear Thursday that the situation had changed.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., a treaty supporter, was among those who perceived the change.

Dying storm dumps on New England

UPI

United Press International

Tropical storm David, sapped of the hurricane force that powered its devastating drive out of the eastern Caribbean and up the East Coast, cut a last gasp path Thursday through New England to the sea.

As the dying storm delivered its last blows to the nation's populous northeast, it claimed additional lives and caused tornadoes, heavy rains, flooding and blackouts and forced thousands to flee their homes.

The unofficial U.S. death toll climbed to 19 when Baltimore Police found the body of a woman who apparently had been trapped in a van on a flooded street. In Woodbridge, N.J., two children on a rubber raft in a rain-swollen creek and a policeman who tried to save them were swept into a storm sewer and killed.

The U.S. toll also included nine dead in Puerto Rico. Last week David killed 27 people on the island of Dominica and then swept through the Dominican Republic with 150-mph winds, killing more than 1,000.

Damage in the storm's 5,000-mile trek from off the coast of Africa where it was spawned was estimated to be at least $2 billion — a quarter of it in the continental United States.

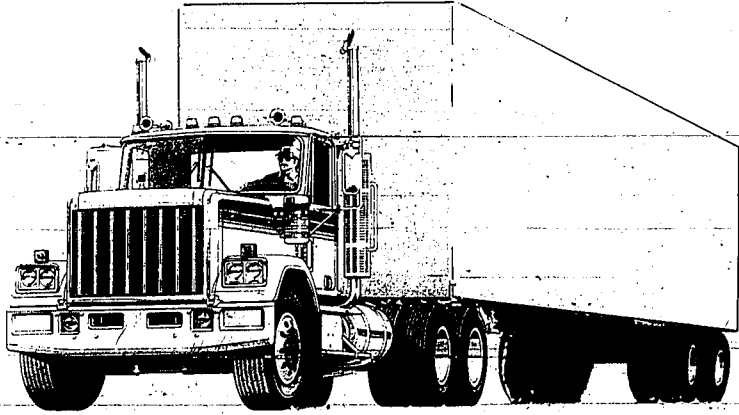

The storm swept north through metropolitan New York Thursday morning, causing blackouts and extensive delays in commuter rail traffic.

In New England, heavy rains and downed power lines blacked out another 100,000-plus homes and businesses in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. A flood watch for the region was in effect at nightfall.

High winds blew a tractor-trailer and police cruiser off a highway in Erving, Mass., and toppled the wall on top of a four-story office building in Hartford, Conn.

David passed through Burlington, Vt., in early evening heading east at 35 mph, according to the National Weather Service. Gale warnings remained in effect from the Merrimack River in Massachusetts north to Eastport, Maine.

Ethics law abused by cocaine affair

Hamilton Jordan's alleged cocaine sniffing incident looks like the accusation of despicable characters.

So far, there is no foundation for the accusation and none is expected. But even so, a full-scale FBI investigation was forced because of a federal law, enacted during the Watergate era.

Called the 1978 Ethics in Government Act, the law requires the Justice Department to conduct an investigation when a charge is made against a high government official.

In the Jordan case, the law has lent more credence than should have been lent to the charges leveled by the two owners of Studio 54, the famous New York nightclub. The owners are under indictment for tax evasion, and they made their claim during a plea bargaining session. They said Jordan asked for, and sniffed, cocaine in the basement of the disco.

The trouble is that Jordan's accusers and their attorneys will not come forth with their supposed evidence unless the tax case is settled or until a special U.S. prosecutor is appointed to investigate the cocaine affair.

In this case the simple utterance of an accusation against a high official by two men facing a jail sentence has forced the deployment of Justice Department lawyers and FBI agents onto a wild goose chase.

Hamilton Jordan, the chief of staff at the White House, has been purged a cloud.

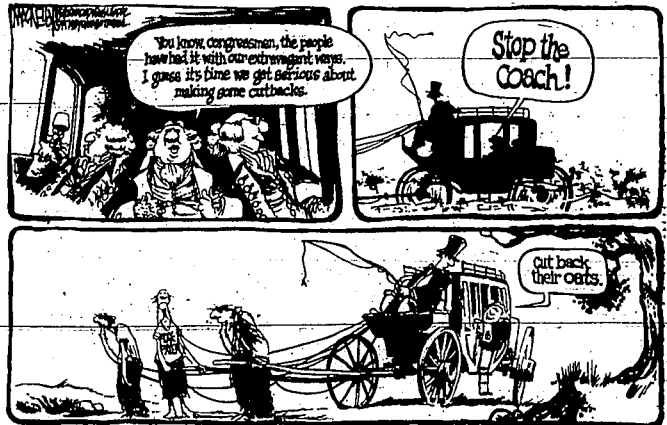

The argument on the other side has it that the dangers of a Watergate-type cover-up must be avoided and that the law is the only alternative.

However, there must be a simpler way to handle minor charges coming from suspect sources, who refuse even to cooperate.

Some members of Congress are likely to tackle the problem by amending the law and the Justice Department itself says the law was too hastily drawn.

One way to amend the law would be to reduce the scope of alleged crimes investigated. That would narrow the application of the law from any felony crime to specific crimes or only crimes having to do with a high official's duties.

Some curbing of the law seems wise to avoid the abuse the present cocaine accusation has committed.

NATO's force lopsided

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Near the palace where, recently, a conference met to mark NATO's 30th birthday, a road sign points toward Waterloo. The name is a synonym for defeat. But Waterloo might better be thought of as the place where, when the arrival of the Prussians sealed France's fate, a theme of modern European history — the problem of German power — was foreshadowed.

NATO was founded at a hinge of history, when the task was to reintegrate a shattered Germany into the West and to cope with the arrival of Russia in the center of Europe. NATO is a living monument to the burst of creative diplomacy in the immediate postwar period. But today NATO suffers from the cultural contradictions of peace.

NATO made peace possible; peace made Europe prosperous; prosperity made welfare states inevitable; welfare states made inflation probable; and inflation has formed public antipathy toward a form of public spending, for defense, that bears little responsibility for inflation.

The NATO assessment conference was organized by Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies. Of the various foreign policy institutes, it has the surest sense of who should be worrying about what. Henry Kissinger, one of CSIS's ornaments, wasted no time or motion in putting a stop before the Europeans.

NATO, he said, has assumptions and a force structure that are not adequate for an era when the United States has forfeited strategic superiority. The assumed destruction doctrine — the theory that a stable deterrent can rest on the threat to incinerate Soviet civilians) confers an excuse for not doing difficult things (specifically, for not developing a counter-force capability). It enables the West to adopt the standard of "adequate" forces that is substantially independent of the level of Soviet deployments.

But as the Soviets add to their nuclear war fighting capability, a Soviet attack in Europe. That way in some point, and soon, there will be only one way for the United States to fulfill its pledge to respond with strategic nuclear weapons to a Soviet attack in Europe. That way will be to attack Soviet cities. That, at some point, and soon, the U.S. nuclear guarantee, the core of NATO's deterrent, will be insufficiently credible. It is hard credibly to promise to commit suicide. Thus there must be (among other things) a threat to nuclear forces in Europe, so that invoking the U.S. acceptance of financial support from quickly become Europe's only option in a conflict.

Kissinger's comments startled those who have not monitored the evolution of his views, as expressed in many forums, but especially in his SALT II testimony. (And Kissinger's comments bewildered those whose understanding of that testimony derives from interpretations put on it by the Carter administration, and some news reports). But Kissinger wanted to startle.

All politics, of course, but especially and most dangerously today's politics of defense, it is true (as in Kipling's words), "There are more things told than are true; there are more things true than are told." There is a NATO calisthenic:

applauding while shrugging shoulders. The cynicism of some European leaders goes beyond an unwillingness to express to their publics the fears they express in private; the cynicism extends to opposing in public the positions they urge Americans to take publicly (for example, urging Americans to criticize SALT II).

Some other Europeans seem to have a complacency that is as unshakable as it is unfounded. The boast heard here that NATO has "stood like a rock" for 30 years is all very well; but a rock does not adapt to changed environments. Thus, after 30 years, and at a point when NATO members are spending $150 billion a year on general purpose forces, those forces could not fight 30

Robert Conquest notes that 70 years ago in Britain, a Conservative could win in a working-class district by demanding that the Liberal government build more roads. "We want eight. We won't wait." Not enough European politicians are ready to risk campaigning for theater nuclear weapons on the continent.

Here, as in Washington, people who have, or pretend to have, awakened with a start to the Soviet buildup and the inadequacy of NATO forces and doctrines, like to quote, with something like relief and self-congratulation, Dr. Johnson's axiom that the imminence of extinction will concentrate the victim's mind. But a concentrated mind does not stay the hangman's hand. Absent dramatic action, the victim is still a victim.

Water war in Northwest

Times-News Washington Correspondent
ASTORIA, Ore. — The mouth of the Columbia River is a bogging sight, several miles wide at the point where it enters the Pacific Ocean.

Looking across this vast expanse of fresh water at the heavily wooded hills of the Washington shore it's hard to imagine that water will ever become a point of argument between these two states or among Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

But if you travel the region, notice its agriculture and talk to those who are acquainted with the economics of the water resource, it becomes clear that the day is coming when the demand for water in the Northwest will outstrip its supply.

Virtually every river in Oregon is over-appropriated, even the Columbia. Eric Allen, editor of the Medford Mail Tribune.

The heart of the impending water crisis is a question of trade-offs or options.

At the center of every water war is a war over choices. As Kathleen Wiegner in a recent issue of Forbes magazine, "Water stored behind a dam can be used for recreation but not for irrigation, just as water used to irrigate wheat cannot be used to slurry coal or make paper. You can fish in it or you can drop waste in it. You can't do both."

The Northwest water war will likely be fought over the trade-off between irrigation and energy uses.

"It is predictable that there will be a collision between the demands for water for energy and for irrigation," says Mike Katz, head of the planning office at Bonneville Power Administration.

City dwellers might imagine that agriculture is a static business, practiced much the same as it was 20 years ago. But agriculture in the Northwest has been altered dramatically by irrigation in the last decade. Large portions of arid land east of the Cascades have been watered to produce significant new crop yields.

On a smaller scale, vineyards for wine production have made a noticeable appearance in the Willamette Valley and in Eastern Washington. Interestingly, a recent readership survey, taken by the Capital Press, a weekly agricultural newspaper published in Salem, Ore., and circulated throughout the region, produced one fascinating result. The largest single request from readers was for more information about small-scale and organic farming, reports Dewey Rand Jr., the newspaper's editor.

Irrigated farming around Hermiston, Ore., has dramatically boosted that area's economy. A person returning to that dry, windy country after 20 years' absence would not recognize it.

One side effect of that prosperity, however, is that irrigation occurs at the expense of hydroelectric energy. Irrigation incurs two sorts of energy costs. Pumping water from the river to the fields uses electricity, and water put on crops cannot be run through the dams to generate electricity.

Katz of BPA says that there is now little slack in the Columbia River system. "We are quickly approaching the point where every bit of water can be used for electricity generation," he says. "There will be little spillage over the dams."

If the replacement electricity comes from thermal coal or nuclear plants, that energy will be more expensive than the hydroelectricity that was foregone for irrigation.

"The extra power needed to deliver irrigation water costs between two and four times as much as the electricity that is demanded for the pumping," says Katz.

Meanwhile, Idaho farmers are far more dependent on irrigation than their counterparts in Oregon or Washington.

Many in the Northwest hope that the region's conflicting demands for Columbia River water can be worked out by the states, because a federal solution, congressional or judicial, is presumed to be less palatable.

The region's water problems will not escape the federal gaze. However, a General Accounting Office study, requested by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., will examine how much U.S. farmland can reasonably be irrigated.

Agriculture is not the only sector with a large stake in the impending water crisis. Forbes magazine points out that about 47 percent of U.S. water is used by agriculture and 43 percent is used by industry. The remaining 10 percent is used for physical and domestic uses.

Some farmers in the region are exploring modes of irrigation that are more efficient than sprinkler systems, which are vulnerable to evaporation. One more efficient method is called drip irrigation. Unlike the energy supply, which can be expanded by new alternative modes of generation, our water resource is a closed system. That's why the Forbes article concludes, "The water crisis, when it comes, may make the energy crisis look like a brief thunderstorm on a soft summer day."

HEW bureaucrat's school busing punishes children

Chicago Sun-Times
CHICAGO — David Tatal is a name not known to most Chicagoans. Maybe Tatal prefers it that way. He's a Washington bureaucrat, and most bureaucrats hide behind their agencies. In Tatal's case, he is head of the civil rights office of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Yet, as little as Tatal is known, he could have almost as powerful an impact upon this city as Mrs. O'Leary's cow. The difference is that the cow didn't know who it was doing; Tatal should know, but doesn't seem to care.

He is the bureaucrat who is possessed by the idea of trying to integrate Chicago's schools, regardless of cost and chaos, and despite only 10 per cent of the students being white.

He seems determined to bus black and white students across the city until there will not be even one school that has a white majority.

Even if Tatal should achieve this goal, we will not really have an integrated school system, since there aren't enough white students to go around. And with Tatal's office unleashing proposals for the creation of a mad scientist, there probably will be even fewer white students available to him in the future.

It's difficult to grasp Tatal's purpose: Better education for black students? Broader education for white students? The easing of overcrowding in classrooms? Providing of special programs for troubled students?

Those used to be the arguments given for busing. And in some cases, limited busing achieved those results. But they aren't the reasons for Tatal zeroing in on Chicago.

All he and his office seem to care about are statistics — integration purely for the sake of having neat columns of figures showing that a certain percentage of students in a school are white and a larger percentage are black.

This is what his latest proposal consists of: Let's see, if we take 62 per cent of the students from this white school, and drive them only 10 miles to this black school, and if we take 47 per cent of the students in the black school, and take them only 10 miles to the white school — ahah! We will have a 51 per cent black majority in each school. Give the HEW computer a kiss.

The computers and Washington zombies who created Tatal's plan have even worked out the travel time. They say that his bus trip will take more than 25 minutes. That's right: It never will take more than 35 minutes for a bus to go from the Far Northwest Side to the Near West Side during rush hours.

I wish Tatal's traffic experts could work that out for the rest of us, who often spend an hour — longer when it snows — inching from the Northwest Side on the way downtown.

If you ask Tatal what effect his social juggling will have on the quality of education and on the lives of the children who are being shoved around to satisfy his computer, he answers: "That isn't my concern."

Just what is his concern? Your guess is as good as anybody's. Tatal came in one day to try to sell me on his goals. He's an intense young man who obviously believes that he's a Chicago lawyer. He used to be a Chicago lawyer. He is idealistic and involved in civil rights issues.

But, as he talked, I had the uneasy feeling that revenge could be part of his motive.

He dwelt on Chicago history specifically the way Chicago's schools had been systematically kept segregated in the 1930s, '40s, '50s and '60s.

He was right, of course. During those decades, Chicago's racist political and real-estate structure used little school administrators to isolate Chicago's blacks. It shifted school boundaries and crammed black students into mobile classrooms.

That's when we could really have used an aggressive approach by Washington, but nothing was done. Now comes Tatal, either trying to punish Chicago for its past or vainly trying to undo the past.

But if Tatal wants to punish Chicago, he's got the wrong defendants. The children — white and black — who will be busied are the victims. So why should they spend up to two hours a day in Chicago's congested traffic to receive the same education available to a few blocks from their homes? Their parents aren't at fault, either. Many of them were children themselves when those past sins were being committed.

I'm not sure who deserves punishment today. The people who set Chicago on its segregated course are gone. The current population has more pressing problems to deal with than the question of whether there is a white face in an otherwise black classroom.

But Tatal doesn't seem to recognize that. He's a man fighting battles that are the court's most idealistic as he may be, Tatal is a dangerous character. If the school administrator doesn't offer a plan that is to his liking, he will take the case to a federal court. And he'll probably win because if there is anyone with less sense of reality than a Washington bureaucrat, it is a federal judge.

And if that happens, the main results will be tens of thousands of confused children, the thousands of angry parents, a huge real-estate turnover, a shrinking city population and a multimillion-dollar busing bill.

One thing you can say for Mrs. O'Leary and her cow: We didn't have to PAY them for creating a mess.

Your letter to Jack Anderson, syndicated columnist,

In reference to article, "George Hansen Goes His Way," released Aug. 19, your column attacking Congressman George Hansen is unfairly treated. It has major discrepancies, too. The credibility of your information source is in question. I suspect you have an ulterior motive in trying to portray Hansen as a "bad guy."

Your approximately 60-word attack was concentrated in five areas: 1. Misdemeanor charges of camaign contribution report; 2. Speeding tickets; 3. Views on Somalia; 4. Acceptance of financial support from employers of a beer brewing company; and 5. His honorary chairmanship of an anti-abortion group. My rebuttal is directed to the first one of the above.

Your article tried to position Congressman Hansen along with Congressman Charles Diggs. Diggs was recently charged in keeping kickback money. This comparison you are trying to make is preposterous!

Your column, quoted "After originally being charged with multiple felonies — is false. The original charges were merely two technical bookkeeping misdemeanors (no worse than two traffic violations) caused primarily by a young and inexperienced staff.

Was this selective prosecution to cast Congressman Hansen because he is one of the court's most effective conservatives? We know that Congressman Hansen has hard on issues that are anti-Constitution, such as extracting millions from the taxpayers to pay Panama to take our canal.

Police probe drug sale link in Kennedy mugging at hotel

NEW YORK (UPI) — Police Thursday were investigating the possibility a drug sale was involved in the mugging in a seedy Harlem hotel of David Kennedy, 24-year-old son of the late Robert F. Kennedy.

Kennedy, a nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., police had been lured into the hotel, described as "a known narcotics location" in a major drug trafficking center, but residents of the run-down neighborhood said they had seen Kennedy there on numerous occasions.

Deputy Inspector Peter Prezioso said an investigation was being pursued on the possibility of a drug sale involving this case.

A police spokesman said Kennedy, who was not hurt in the incident, reported he was driving his BMW car in the Harlem area of upper Manhattan about 5:15 p.m. Wednesday — just "passing through" the area — when two pedestrians signaled to him to stop.

Kennedy told police he pulled the car over and approached the two, who lured him into the lobby of the Shelton Plaza Hotel.

Police said Kennedy told them that once inside the hotel, a third man joined them and "using physical force" robbed $30 from him. One top police official said Kennedy had up to $200 on him at the time.

Prezioso stopped short of linking Kennedy to a drug transaction.

"There were definitely drugs found on the premises," Prezioso said. "About 25 glassine envelopes (of heroin) were on the landing. But you have to remember that Kennedy is a victim in this case, and however much exploring reporters want to do, we don't investigate victims."

Kennedy's whereabouts Thursday were not known. A spokesman for the Kennedy family, Tom Southwick, said in Boston the family would have no comment on the case at this time.

Police declined comment on a report that Kennedy, who gave a report that he was driving the BMW, admitted to officers at the scene that he was in the area to purchase drugs.

A police spokesman said "Right now, as far as we're concerned, he (Kennedy) is just a victim of a crime, a complainant."

A high police official said, "All of the implications of a drug sale are there, but I don't know that this took place. It's a bad-rep hotel. You can get any kind of stuff you want up there."

"It's the best stuff in the world," another police source said. "That's why they come here."

One neighborhood resident, who asked not to be identified, said he had seen Kennedy's car in the neighborhood before.

"That boy came up here a lot," another resident said. "If he came here, he came here for drugs," a tenant of the hotel said.

During the mugging, a call was placed from the hotel to the emergency police number, and police arrived on the scene and arrested 25-year-old Sam Askins of Brooklyn, who they said appeared suspicious.

But when asked to identify the suspect at the local stationhouse, Kennedy could not, and Askins was not charged in the incident.

Police said they subsequently found Askins was wanted on charges of grand larceny and criminal possession of stolen property.

The three-story Shelton-Plaza Hotel has 41 rooms. A single room rents for $7.50 for 12 hours and a double for $15.

"It is a known narcotics location," said Captain Louis Ralford, commander of Harlem's Eighth Avenue stationhouse. He said there had been four felony and two misdemeanor narcotics arrests at the hotel since June.

Month rest coming up for Carney

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (UPI) — Oscar-winning actor Art Carney, promising to lay off the "sauce" and fatty foods, checked out of a Connecticut hospital Thursday for a month's rest before a making a new film.

Carney, best known as the wisecracking Ed Norton from "The Honeymooners" television series, talked to reporters at Middlesex Memorial Hospital at the conclusion of his two-week stay.

The actor, caring for the 60-year-old actor admitted him Aug. 23 because he said Carney needed rest and routine tests. He developed an irregular heartbeat and blood pressure problems and was held in intensive care for a few days.

But it was all jokes at check-out time Thursday.

"I think I'll watch my diet and stay away from the grape, you know what the grape is — the sauce," said Carney, dressed in a blue robe and hospital issue polka-dot nightshirt and white drawstring pants.

He said he tipped the scales at 210 pounds when he was admitted and lost about 13 pounds during his sojourn at Middlesex. He said he hopes to trim down to 185 pounds before beginning work on a new film in Monte Carlo Oct. 15.

"Instead of getting into a car to go up town and get a newspaper, I'm going to walk. But I won't jog," said Carney, who plans to take it slow and easy at his summer home in Westbrook.

He gave the hospital A-ratings for service but said "I wouldn't call it exactly a honeymoon."

"There are bedchecks you know," Carney quipped.

He listed his all-time favorite role was Ed Norton, the bumbling "senior" supervisor of subterranean sanitation and Jackie Gleason's sidekick in "The Honeymooners."

Horoscope

Pisces should avoid phone calls, disturbers

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Use your fine perception to better understand what is going on about you. You will be able to get out from under confusing conditions which seem to turn this day into one of tensions and strain.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Get right at the jobs awaiting you and get them done properly. Be encouraging to a tired co-worker and gain cooperation easily.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Try to encourage both your friends and your mate today and they cooperate more with you. Plan now for weekend socializing.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Studying fundamental affairs wisely shows how to improve them and you gain the approval of kin also. Starting a new project could cause you to hasten on those you have already started.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Exercise care in shopping and be sure to count your money well. Try to be of assistance to a needy good friend.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Gaining the goodwill of those who have power over your affairs is wise now since you need more backing. Study your financial position and know how to improve it.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Make any changes that you think are wise in any sphere of your endeavor. Avoid places where people who are likely to upset you congregate. Not a good time to entertain at home now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Solve your own problems and don't confide in others so much since they can be of little help to you. Be more independent.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Plan time for recreation that relieves tensions. Don't misjudge a friend harshly whose actions you do not understand right now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) The situation at home could be confusing early but then all clears up. Don't jump into any projects aimlessly that are without merit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Particular care should be taken in motion of all kinds, especially while out driving. Be careful in handling accounts and correspondence also.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Be practical where financial affairs are concerned and forge a careful thinking. Build up assets instead of spending more than you can afford.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Instead of worrying about personal affairs, get busy and take care of them in a practical way. Avoid those who disturb you. Avoid long telephone calls.

IF YOUR CHILD'S BORN TODAY... He or she will usually understand what is wrong with a situation and what to do about it. Give lessons early in philosophy and mind expression. Sports are a must here because of the fine physique.

Effect of blonde hair varies on facial types

Blonde hair tends to make the face look larger, women whose face is relatively small or whose eyes a closely set can gussy up her appearance by going black. But a woman with a large open face might just turn her doll's head type by becoming blonde. Or so says the expert.

A fire in straw makes a quick blaze and leaves nothing but ashes. It's to that fact the French allude when they refer to a teenage romance as "straw-fire love."

WOLVERINES

Q. Are there any wolverines in the Wolverine State A. Michigan. No, sir, no wolverines left in the wild there. Incidentally, no official act was ever undertaken to name the wolverine as the state animal nor was any official act ever undertaken to give the state its nickname. Footnote: In 1835, a clash between Ohio and Michigan was called the Toledo War. Ohioans dubbed Michigan as the Wolverina State because they thought wolverines were such vicious ugly, smelly, mean animals. And though it started as an insult, it eventually became a rather proud claim.

Non-aligned message tilted

HAVANA, Cuba (UPI) — Faced with growing opposition to its effort to "tilt" the non-aligned movement towards the Soviet Union, Cuba has agreed to compromise on the language of the resolution to be adopted by the 85 countries attending the summit, conference sources said Thursday.

"Things are going very well for us," said a Yugoslav diplomat, whose president, Josip Bronz Tito, is the sole surviving founder of the non-aligned movement.

"The Cubans have started to fall back and some compromises have been achieved" in the drafting of the "Havana declaration" to be adopted at the end of the summit, the diplomat added.

On Wednesday, Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere drew one of the longest rounds of applause when he warned the summit that a tilt towards Moscow would destroy the non-aligned movement and its influence on world affairs.

Then Thursday Indian Foreign Minister Shri S.N. Mishra and Pakistani President Zia Ul Haq argued against Cuba's position that the non-aligned nations are the natural enemies of imperialism and thus the natural allies of the Socialist bloc.

Menachem Begin bids goodbye to Anwar and Jehan Sadat

Egypt, Israel mark new ties

By WILLIAM CLAIBORNE

© The Washington Post

HAIFA, Israel — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, in a revealing demonstration of the growing mutual interdependence of Egypt and Israel, Thursday offered to pipe fresh water from the Nile River across the Sinai Peninsula to the Negev Desert.

At the same time, Sadat unleashed a bitter attack on the rejectionist Arab nations, calling Egypt an "island of peace" surrounded by instability. He posed the challenge, "Let's see what the Arabs can do without Egypt, and what Egypt can do without the Arabs."

Ending a three-day visit to this Mediterranean port city, Sadat told a group of Israeli newspaper editors, "We have cemented our agreements in Camp David and the treaty between Egypt and Israel and we are ready together, (Israeli Prime Minister) Menachem Begin and me, to face whatever comes."

This week's Sadat-Begin talks advanced significantly bilateral relations between the two neighbors, but little discernible progress was made toward Palestinian self-governance—in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Sadat presented what approached being a formal offer to pipe Egyptian water to Israel as soon as a Suez-Canal tunnel is completed next year.

"After the tunnel is completed I'm planning to bring the sweet Nile water — this is the sweetest of the four big rivers of the whole world — to Sinai."

"Well, why not send you some of this sweet water to the Negev Desert as good neighbors. ... Well, Sinai is on the border with the Negev. Why not? Lots of possibilities, lots of hope," the Egyptian leader said.

But his mood became almost combative when asked about Egypt's ability to withstand the pressures of the rest of the Arab world.

"What is this other camp?" Sadat asked rhetorically. And then, in a reference to the revolutionary tribunals that have been executing a growing number of alleged plotters against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, declared with unmistakable contempt:

"There is a plot there in Iraq and he has to remove his president (Ahmed Hassan Bakr) and kill his very intimate friends and see them by himself shot — Saddam Hussein."

"In Syria, the situation is deteriorating... Everything is deteriorating, especially after the Lebanese fiasco," Sadat said, noting with seeming sympathy Israel's shared border with Syria.

"What is happening between Morocco, Algeria, Libya, what is happening there on the gulf, what is talking place there in Saudi Arabia even (where) the king left for Switzerland and they talk about some changes there," Sadat said in a "recital of Middle Eastern states with varying degrees of domestic political unrest."

U.S. rescues 49 refugees

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — A U.S. military Thursday rescued 49 boat people, many of them young men fearful of being thrown into the Cambodian war; and 16 Vietnamese army deserters sought asylum in Manila.

The renewed refugee flights coincided with warnings from Thailand of a possible fresh Hanoi offensive in Cambodia with the end of the present monsoon season.

Making its fourth rescue in five days, the combat storeship USS White Plains rescued 28 men, 13 women and eight children from a disabled fishing boat in a pre-dawn operation, 250 nautical miles south of Vietnam.

Panic buying, soaring prices mark gold trade

By MARY TOBIN
United Press International

Gold soared more than $12 to the $340 an ounce mark Thursday and fluctuated in a wide range in trading that a dealer said amounted to "panic buying" before dropping $10 at the close.

The dollar was sharply lower in quiet trading, and dealers said the currency exchanges took a back seat to the gold market.

The dollar took its worst loss in several days and dealers said the drop reflected attention to metals and the relatively quiet trading.

In Frankfurt the dollar fell to 1.8125 marks, from Wednesday's close of 1.8203; in Zurich to 1.6402 Swiss francs from 1.6453; in Paris to 4.2395 francs from 4.2460; Amsterdam to 1.9265 guilders from 1.9265; in Milan to 812.55 lire from 815.05 lire and in Brussels to 30.445 Belgian francs from 30.505.

In London the pound rose to $2.2475 from $2.2425. In Tokyo the dollar fell to 220.75 yen from 221.75.

Since Monday, the price of gold has risen by about $25 an ounce; five months ago it was worth $220 an ounce.

"All normal goldpots for the market have been obliterated," said Marc Berkowitz, trader for James Sinclair & Co. "We're uncharted territory, flying blind."

GOLD's dizzy spiral began overnight in Hong Kong where dealers said there was heavy buying by Chinese speculators. The gold followed the pattern of recent weeks, because of concern over political tensions in that area and its historic reliance on gold, according to a New York dealer.

The buying spree carried over to the opening in Zurich, where gold roared through the $340 an ounce mark and to the London opening a few hours later. The price jumped up and down in a $17-range throughout the European and New York trading.

In Zurich gold closed at $30.875 an ounce, up from Wednesday's $29.825. In London, it fell back to $334.875 an ounce, still a record close and up from Wednesday's $328.375. In New York gold closed at $330.

Gold's sharp rise carried to other metals. In London platinum jumped $11.03 to $112 an ounce and silver surged $1.19 to $12.89, a massive jump in percentage terms. In New York silver fluctuated "wildly" and closed 1/16t up, Berkowitz said.

Gold dealers said the initial surge in part reflected the "satisfactory" average price of $333.24 an ounce for 440,000 million ounces of gold auctioned Wednesday by the International Monetary Fund. There were four successful bidders, Bank of Nova Scotia, Toronto, Deutsche Genossenschaftsbank of Frankfurt, Swiss Credit-Bank and Swiss Bank Corp., both Zurich. The IMF received bids for 1.6 million ounces.

Some buying was attributed to cover short positions of Frankfurt, but Berkowitz said nobody really knows the reason for what he called the "panic" element to trading.

"There's certainly not a crisis atmosphere that could account for what amounts to panic buying," he said.

Profit-takers stepped in throughout the day and when gold declined there were buyers waiting to snap it up, according to dealers.

Buyers were putting up their own bid without overbidding at the price," said a dealer for London bullion brokers Mocatta and Goldsmid.

There was some selling after it was known that Dresdner Bank, which has been a heavy buyer of U.S. and IMF gold, was not a successful bidder at the IMF auction, according to dealers.

But the big West German bank has turned a nice profit on the 750,000 ounces it purchased at the U.S. Treasury gold sale on Aug. 24. Gold has risen by about $40 an ounce since the auction giving the bank, or its customers, a paper profit of about $30 million if the gold was held.

Bid calls issued

BOISE (UPI) — Installation of intruder detection equipment at Gowen Field and a sprinkler irrigation system at the state Mental Health and Child Development Center in Twin Falls are up for bid from the Idaho Public Works Division.

Division Administrator Kenneth A. Hall said bids for the work at Gowen Field, a military installation, will be accepted until Oct. 2, at which time bids on work at Twin Falls will be accepted until Sept. 25 and then read publicly, Hall said.

Equipment investment climbs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — American business estimated it will spend an inflation-adjusted 4 percent more for new plant and equipment this year than in 1978, the Commerce Department said Thursday.

The department's latest survey, spending plans, conducted in late July and August, was lower than an earlier estimate because the government revised upward its estimate of inflation for 1979.

In a survey conducted in late April and May, the department said spending would rise by 4.5 percent in 1979. But that calculation was based on a capital goods inflation estimate of 8 percent.

In the new survey, the department hiked the expected inflation level to 9 percent.

So, even though business plans to spend more money on new plants and equipment, the real — or inflation-adjusted — gain will be less.

The Commerce Department said that before inflation adjustment, businesses plan to increase spending by 13.2 percent over 1978 to $74.1 billion in the earlier survey, the planned rise was 12.7 percent.

The department said actual spending in the second quarter rose 4.6 percent, before inflation was factored in, to an annual rate of $173.5 billion.

The increase followed a first quarter rise of 1.2 percent. Plans call for a 1 percent rise in the third quarter and a 2.4 percent fourth quarter gain.

The second quarter performance was highlighted by a higher-than-planned outlay for most nonmanufacturing industries and in durable goods manufacturing, the Commerce Department said.

Truck regulation fight seems near

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Wednesday moved several steps closer to virtual deregulation of the trucking industry, raising the ire of several members and prompting immediate threats of court action by regulated truckers.

Further, by agreeing to proceed with formal consideration of a sweeping deregulation proposals, the commission demonstrated a growing rift between its old and new guards.

In fact, one of the regulatory system's most outspoken defenders, commission vice chairman George H. Stafford, a 12-year ICC member, admitted he may be fighting a losing battle.

Demonstrating his commitment to change, one new ICC member, Dennis W. Gaskins Jr., said a sweeping staff proposal to ease entry into the trucking business "may not go far enough."

Further, Gaskins, for the first time revealing a strong commitment to reducing ICC regulation, said allowing truckers greater freedom to raise and lower their rates "can accomplish a great deal," including "doing something about the backhaul problem." Backhaul is a term used to describe trucks that are forced to make empty return trips.

report on trucking regulation, the ICC agreed to immediately open rulemaking proceedings on a number of proposals including the establishment of zones under which trucking companies could raise or lower their rates without commission approval.

In addition, the commission asked the staff to open a proceeding to study at least 11 industry segments that could be regulated under "minimal regulatory requirements." Those segments include heavy haulers and bulk-material haulers.

The commission accelerated a staff proposal that the proceedings be struck out over a nine-month period, speeding up that schedule so that all the deregulation proceedings would be ready for public comment by Dec. 1.

Bennett C. Whitlock Jr., president of the American Trucking Association, immediately issued a statement, saying the ICC's proposals "far exceed the commission's statutory authority."

"If the commission proceeds with these unlawful proposals, the American Trucking Association will protect the interests of the industry by seeking injunctive relief in the courts," Whitlock said.

Unions seek altered wage guidelines

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Urging more evenhanded approach, workers, the AFL-CIO Thursday, proposed major changes in President Carter's wage-price guidelines.

The proposal was the labor federation's second choice. It said it still believes the voluntary guideline program "has not worked" and should be scrapped entirely and replaced by mandatory controls on prices, wages and other forms of income.

However, in response to a government request for public comment on how the program might be revised during its second year, starting in October, the AFL-CIO said if it is to be kept, the program needs "wholesale revamping."

In a 22-page presentation to the Council on Wage and Price Stability, the federation suggested a new system in which business would be asked to "absorb" a designated percentage of its cost increases.

Instead of a fixed standard for wage increases, now 7 percent, wage guidelines would be based on changes in consumer prices plus long-term changes in the productivity of manufacturing industries.

These variable wage guidelines, the federation suggested, should be set by a "tripartite panel" made up of labor, industry and non-governmental public representatives.

Sylvia Porter Trading patterns change

NOTE TO EDITORS: "1929-1979 — Can It Happen Again?" — Sylvia Porter continues her analysis of our chances of suffering through another Great Depression. RELEASE FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1979. IV Distinction No. 2: Who Is Buying (Fourth of nine columns.)

© Field Newspaper Syndicate (Fourth in a Series)

Who was in the wildly gyrating stock market 50 years ago in September-October 1929? — It's the historic "Black Tuesday" of Oct. 29 peared, and a stock price upsurge which had begun way back in 1921 climaxed in a convulsion felt around the world?

My young, financially naive, widowed mother was in with every penny she had inherited from my father, a physician whose primary hobby to her was a carton loaded with IOUs from his poor patients. She was gambling on a margin of 10 percent in it remember. Cites Services week over a modest hiccup in the market was enough to compel her broker to sell her out. She had plenty of company, male and female, plunging with their rent in the hope that other bigger suckers were waiting to buy their shares and help them get rich quick.

Also in was the speculative boy on the corner of Wall and Broad streets who begged the brokers whose shoes he shined to pay with tips on stocks instead of with cash. The chauffeur who had been avidly to the brokers he drove to and from the New York Stock and Curb Exchanges for gossip on stocks he could translate into purchases on the street — of certain safe margins — as soon as he dropped off his fares.

And side by side with these small-time, reckless gamblers were the big-time speculators. The speculators who were governed by virtually no rules of law or ethics and who formed "pools" among themselves to manipulate the prices of stocks they chose in order to run millions of dollars of paper profits into tens of millions of dollars of paper profits.

But while for the United States had peaked much earlier in 1929, months before the calamitous series of violent selling waves began which culminated in the stock crash of Oct. 29, 1929.

The stock-price breaks in sav. Chrysler or RCA did not slash the output of automobiles and radios. The stock price breaks undermined the confidence of business leaders who then cut back production and employment in 1930.

In the spring of 1931, when the European banking and currency systems fell apart, the U.S. economy was hit by another severe blow. Then, came the failures of thousands of U.S. banks plus both the unwillingness and inability of the then Herbert Hoover administration and Congress to adopt effective measures to fight the economic downturn, spreading a rash of business bankruptcies, soaring unemployment, etc. And the worst depression of all time kept deepening until it settled on an uneasy bottom in 1932.

As the previous column emphasized, a first crucial distinction between 1929 and 1979 lies in "how we buy." A second crucial distinction is "who is buying."

Today instead of a greedy get-rich-quick gambler, the typical individual in the market is in the middle-income bracket with some extra money to invest in the lower-income groups. He (or she) is typically an employee of a corporation buying stocks under a payroll plan (investing savings). And the active trader typically upper income, in the $25,000-and-up income bracket.

Then, there is the emergence of the institutional investor as the DOMINANT buyer and holder of leading stocks in this era.

An estimated 50 percent of all stocks listed on the NYSE are held by institutional investors — including insurance companies, investment companies, pension funds, trust funds of various types, non-profit institutions, mutual savings banks, foreign institutions, bank-administered personal trust funds, etc.

At the latest reporting date, year-end 1978, just a selected list of the major institutional investors owned $20.5 billion of NYSE issues, up a whopping one-third from 1974.

In earlier years, most observers (and even the Federal Reserve Bank) thought the institutions would be a great stabilizing force in stocks, because they would buy and hold indefinitely big blocks of top-grade stocks.

But while for the market as a whole, they probably are an influence for stability because institutions do not even try to switch their enormous holdings into cash on a large scale or at the same time, they are a DESTABILIZING FORCE for individual stocks.

This is due to the fact that managers of the institutional investment portfolios do get together at lunch, at the cocktail hour, at meetings to question a company's chief executive. They do discuss their stock portfolios and plans. They do tend to "run as a pack" — dumping a particular stock at much the same time, or buying another in a similar time span. Whether or not they admit it, this is so.

And their "sheep-like" behavior, so unexpected by most of us, repeatedly, has been an extremely unsettling influence on individual stocks.

But the institutions generally restrict their purchases to widely held stocks of world-famous corporations — and prevent them from gambling in fringe issues. Despite their deplorable tendency to run together when buying or selling individual issues, they are not in outsiders. On balance, they are a plus force in the stock market. In "how we buy" and "who is buying," the markets of 1929 and 1979 are simply not parallel.

Highway district sets budget

Doctors debate whether clinic planned to expand

BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Directors of the Twin Falls Highway District have approved a $1,783,700 budget for the coming year, including local matching funds for improvement of the lower portion of the Rock Creek Canyon road.

The budget, approved following a public hearing Tuesday, at which no protests were heard.

The budget calls for $687,000 for road construction in the coming year. Of this, the district has included $250,000 in matching funds for reconstruction of the lower section of the Rock Creek road south of Hansen. The lower three to four miles of the roadway has been proposed for reconstruction in several years, pending granting of federal funding and acquisition of right of way to realign portions of the roadway.

Highway District Manager Floyd Dayley said a field study is planned by the highway directors, and staff today to try to decide if the district should go ahead with the project as planned or drop federal participation and rely on the rest to local rather than federal standards, using 100 percent local funds over a two-year period.

Dayley said the total project cost, if federal standards are followed and federal funding utilized, is $1,251,000. The 80-20 percent ratio would require 20 percent or about $250,000 from the district. Federal funding has been approved for the project.

Dayley said the present federal and local project plans call for realignment of much of the road and acquiring right of way from ranch and other private land owners in the area.

After today's inspection, the board members will decide if they believe the project could be done with local funds at lower standards for less than the $250,000 local participation and possibly completed sooner.

The lower portion of the road was built many years ago with two other sections further up the canyon completed in later projects. Last year the upper six miles of the roadway was paved in a Forest Service project which had extended over a two-year period.

The middle portion, another five or so miles, is scheduled for a new overlay. It has been patched this year in a number of places and an overlay would extend the life of this portion. About $148,000 is in the budget for this purpose.

Dayley said if the district does the lower area with local funding, there will be some realignment but not as extensive as is planned in the federal proposal. The roadway would be about the same as the central section of the road, with which it connects.

This summer the highway district realigned a portion of the road south of Hansen, removing a double curve. This involved relocation of a portion of the Twin Falls High Line Canal and was also a two-year project.

Dayley said the district's budget shows anticipated revenue of $1,418,700 with expenditures of about $307,000 more than that amount. He said the district will be using some surpluses from previous years to make up the difference.

The highway district receives highway users tax based on the amount of gasoline tax collected in the district. This is expected to amount to about $560,000 for the coming year. Of this, the highway district must allocate $127,600 to cities within the district. Tax levies for the district will bring in $714,400 this year.

architects to draw up plans to enlarge the clinic. Miles said he was told at a general staff meeting that there is no way there will be more than four pediatricians at the clinic 20 years from now.

Clinic trustees Dr. Donald Pica and Dr. Russell Newcomb have testified the clinic is not locked into any particular long-range plan that would prevent the hiring of more pediatricians if the need arises. In fact, they said, a tentative plan, based on a poll of all clinic doctors, calls for an addition on present clinic staff and the hiring of seven more doctors, none of whom are pediatricians.

Miles said he favored a larger addition than the planned one, one which would provide space for more pediatricians.

Clinic attorney Robert Stephan asked Miles if it would not have been possible for the clinic to purchase some additional land to allow for a larger addition.

Miles responded, "Well, I was hoping the clinic would say that, because if they would have given me any indication of being willing to grow, I think it would have made a difference."

Miles also said his three fellow pediatricians at the clinic were not enough to handle his other patients when he was busy with a critical case at Magic Valley Memorial Hospital's neo-natal intensive care unit or awaiting the birth of a baby who was expected to require special care.

Out of 2,500 babies born in the Magic Valley last year, five percent or 120, required such intensive care, Miles said.

Pediatricians Benjamin Katz and Elmer Wright, whose practice Geist and Miles joined after quitting the clinic, are planning to expand their offices and hire more pediatricians. Miles testified he admitted, however, that Katz and Wright have been trying unsuccessfully to recruit more pediatricians for eight years.

Miles' own lawyer, Edward Benoit, asked him if he left the clinic expecting to make more money elsewhere.

"No, I think I'll take a bath financially," Miles said.

"I don't personally feel I am competing with the clinic," Miles testified. "I think the type of pediatricians that I am bringing did not exist to a great deal at the clinic before I came. And I don't see the type of pediatricians the clinic is advocating in terms of a small group, competing with the type of pediatricians I want to practice."

Six Twin Falls obstetricians testified Thursday in behalf of Geist and Miles. Fen Covington, Stephen Dahl, Stephen Green, Thomas Mayer, Earl Ritter, and Douglas Schow had all signed affidavits stating patients will be deprived of pediatric care if Geist and Miles leave Twin Falls.

"I feel the pediatricians here are terribly, terribly swamped," said Ritter.

Last week the clinic won a temporary restraining order against Geist and Miles which barred them from private practice pending further court action. When they joined the clinic as members, both doctors agreed in writing not to practice medicine within a 25-mile radius of the clinic for two years after resigning their posts. Claiming competition from the two doctors would hurt them financially, the clinic is asking District Judge Theron Ward to enforce the agreement with an injunction.

By resigning from the clinic will mean the number of Twin Falls pediatricians will drop from eight to five. A third clinic pediatrician, Joseph Weinberg, will move to Connecticut next week. Weinberg said he is moving for family reasons and because he and his wife feel Twin Falls schools are inadequate for their two sons.

Miles is also school physician for the Gooding School for the Deaf and Blind and medical director of the Green Acres Center for handicapped children, also in Gooding.

Fair crowd heads for record high

By MARJORIE LIERMAN
Times-News writer

FILER — The Twin Falls County Fair made a good start Wednesday toward reaching its four-day attendance goal of 80,000, as 14,867 visitors flocked to the opening day festivities.

On the first day of last year's fair, the attendance was 14,500 and the first day's crowd is always the smallest for the four days.

Last year, Thursday, Twin Falls Day, had 19,850 fairgoers and was topped on Friday, Westend Day, by 19,905.

The Hollister Grange won the plaque for Best Exemplifying this year's theme, "All That Sustains Us." The display shows a gold pump with running water and a picture of a farm stressing the importance of soil, water and sun.

Cedar Draw Grange won first in best quality in produce and fruit and also is drawing many laughs with its exhibit of a homemade suit made from a jug of moonshine and a gasoline can resulting in the new produce gasoline. Fairview Grange won second and Lucerne third in this category.

Lucerne placed first in best artist arrangement and general appearance with Cedar Draw second and Twin Falls third. Cedar Draw was first for best original arrangement and general appearance with Lucerne second and Twin Falls third.

An interesting display in the produce building is one brought by Don Culley, Paul, who raises all his vegetables organically, using no chemicals whatever.

A six-foot tall house plant, called Ladyfingers, won a blue ribbon in house plants. In Iowa the plant is said to grow wild like a weed but its attractive rose-colored flowers brought a prize for Mrs. Clara Nobles of Twin Falls.

Travis Brewer, Buhl, received a Pete Creed award from the Twin Falls garden club for his junior gardener exhibit. Gloria Heimgartner, Buhl, was named second and Susan Thomas, Buhl, third.

A 4-year-old boy, Hayden Horne, Twin Falls, won a blue ribbon with his arrangement of race cars and flowers on a sandfilled oval tray. Mrs. Ruth Yoder, superintendent, said next year she would like to include a category of arrangements for younger children.

Every space in the produce department is filled, according to Mrs. Bill Yoder, superintendent, who said produce and flowers are very good this year. A hail storm a few weeks ago injured the foliage on some flowering plants but the judge took this into consideration, she said.

The grand champion bull rosette and junior champion bull purple ribbon went to Dale Williams, Filer, for his Holstein with tags. Filer, Twin Falls, received junior champion female award. Senior champion cow and grand champion cow awards went to Steve Lemrick, Buhl.

The fair definitely plans on having the horse pulling contest back again next year as it was well received, officials said. Wells Brothers, Montpelier, was first place in the light weight class; Ben Brothers, Boise, first in medium weight; and Wells and Jackson, first in heavy weight. A bit of excitement was provided when one horse lost its battle and ran away, slightly injuring the man who was unhooking him and damaging some equipment. The West End Rodeo Show will begin at 8:05 a.m. Friday. The straight bred Hereford show is scheduled for noon. The Miss Rodeo Idaho Queen horse show is scheduled for 10 a.m. in the rodeo arena and the public is invited to watch the 14 contestants perform.

Singing, ice cream don't mix

From opera to ice cream in 24 hours

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

FILER — Marjorie Minshew-Smith likes ice cream and she couldn't be in a better situation than she is at county fair time.

The attractive 23-year-old brunette literally grew up in an ice cream stand at the county fair. Long before she was high enough to see the top of the counter of the small ice cream booth her parents operate, she was spending the fall fair season in Filer and Boise. "I think we have a lifetime thing going here, and I'm sure I will be back next year and the next," she says.

Her father, Robert Minshew, at one time managed the Meadow Gold Dairies operation in Twin Falls, where a major product was ice cream.

It was 27 years ago he began making the fairs each fall with a small booth where he served nut fudge sandwiches on a stick, along with other ice cream favorites from his dairy products business.

These easy to eat delicacies are made by cutting a quart brick of ice cream into about 10 portions, placing each on a stick and dipping them in chocolate and rolling them in nuts. The whole process takes less than a minute for the experienced hand such as Marjorie.

Minshew, now partially retired, still takes his ice cream stand to the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds each September. He also sets up business at the Western Idaho Fair in Boise each fall.

The whole business is a family affair. His daughter, and all of the other relatives usually lend a hand. One of the most consistent hands is daughter Marjorie, who now brings her husband as part of the work force.

"I've been around here as long as I can remember," she said, putting a final touch on a pineapple sundae. "Well, since I was four years old I've been hanging around. I can't remember when I first actually went to work."

Now a resident of Salt Lake City, she is not just an ice cream scooper, but a vocalist of considerable renown.

This year she had a concert in Salt Lake City during the fair.

Did her father give her a day or two off?

"Not at all," she said, chiding her father for utilizing family labor. "We climbed in the car Tuesday night as soon as the concert was over and drove to Filer. We (she and her husband, Greg Smith) were back on the job Wednesday morning right here behind the ice cream counter."

She was born in Twin Falls but grew up in Salt Lake City. The young vocalist will be receiving her bachelor of arts degree in vocal performance at the University of Utah this year. She says she plans to go on with her education and obtain at least a master's degree. Maybe later she will teach music in a college or to private vocal students.

Marjorie and another former Twin Falls resident, Aleann Luke, both sopranos, will be back in their native town Sept. 21 for a vocal concert at Vera C. O'Leary Junior High School. They are sponsored by the Twin Falls Chapter of the American Federated Music Clubs.

Marjorie has sung with the University Opera Workshop in Salt Lake City for three years and is currently singing the part of Dora in Mozart's "Così fan tutte." She studied music for two years at the Boston University School of Fine Arts before enrolling at the University of Utah. She is also studying voice with Blanche Christensen, a former leading soloist with the Utah Symphony and has presented her senior recital at the University of Utah. This solo concert is required of senior students and consists of at least 45 minutes of performing works in German, French, Italian and English.

Does she ever sing for her fairgoing customers?

"No, I never have time. I probably serve several thousand of these a day and you forget about singing," she says as she dips an ice cream bar into the jug.

There may be many concerts between now and next September, but she, her mother, father, brother, husband and maybe a few cousins will all be back for business as usual at the Twin Falls fairgrounds next September.

Lee Hotel case to trial

BURLEY — Jacqueline Johnson of Burley was bound over to district court Thursday on a felony charge of harboring a prostitute.

Magistrate Judge Nathan Higer said assistant prosecuting attorney Steve Bywater was able to show in preliminary hearing, through five witnesses and four exhibits, that there was reasonable cause to believe a crime had been committed and that Ms. Johnson, 40, could not be released. She will be arraigned in 5th District Court soon.

Judge Higer said defense attorney Mike Douglas presented no witnesses in the hearing. Ms. Johnson was arrested Aug. 29 on the felony charge and two misdemeanor charges; conspiracy to commit prostitution and conspiracy to exhibit obscene film. The preliminary hearing Thursday dealt only with the felony charge.

Burley infant drowns

BURLEY — A 16-month-old boy was drowned Wednesday near his home.

Brian Bingham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley B. Bingham, who live five miles south of Burley, was found in a canal three-fourths of a mile from his home by a neighbor, Paul Hogg. He had been missing for nearly an hour.

Family members took the toddler to Cassia Memorial Hospital, but he was pronounced dead on arrival.

Cassia County Coroner Bruce Young said death was caused by drowning.

Lenaghen after new status

BOISE (UPI) — Robert Lenaghen, acting director of the Idaho Energy Office, Thursday said he has made two major changes in office staff this week.

Lenaghen said, in addition to staffing changes, he has also gained approval from Gov. John V. Evans to seek departmental status for the Office of Energy during the next legislative session.

Lenaghen said he had a television interview on KATV named Jan Brink to be the assistant director of the office in charge of operations. Brink will report directly to Lenaghen, he said.

Lenaghen said he also elevated the fiscal officer, Bob Hall, to a new position of controller to "handle the hundreds of thousands of dollars that flow through this office."

Utility shutoff hearing opens, draws crowd

By MARK SHENE FELT
BOISE (UPI) — Freeloaders will profit and paying customers will suffer if restrictions on ending utility services are beefed up, an Intermountain Gas Co. vice president said today.

N. Charles Hedemark took the stand at a public hearing before the Idaho Public Utilities Commission, representing his firm as well as electric, natural gas and water utility companies from in Idaho, Utah, Oregon and Washington. An overflow crowd packed the hearing room, with several citizens groups waiting to state their case against current and proposed termination policies.

The hearing was scheduled to draw comment on proposed revisions of deposit and termination rules, which were adopted by the PUC last year for all natural gas, water and electric utilities. Hedemark outlined a series of steps that he said would protect elderly, handicapped and minority persons from being victimized by termination of services.

However, Hedemark was challenged by the PUC's newest member, Perry Swisher, who criticized the utilities for not being flexible enough in their billing practices. Swisher cited testimony by several utility representatives that indicated upwards of 20 percent of their customers were listed in the "past due" category. "This says to me that accountants are running the ball game," Swisher said. "There is a stubborn hanging-on that may make good billing sense internally but does not address the needs of the public." Swisher said he was "struck" by the fact that some past-due notices arrived in little as two weeks after the previous billing. Hedemark countered, "We're doing a disservice to allow bills to accumulate." He said most of the past-due accounts were those of chronically bad credit risks and those with no credit rating. The Intermountain Gas official continued that a blanket moratorium on termination would be unjustly would increase power costs of "conscientious" customers and "protect those not wanting to pay their bills, when in fact they can." He said the companies terminate service "only as a last resort," after repeatedly receiving no response from a past-due customer. Hedemark also asserted that all parties can live under present rules that regulate termination practices and that the health of customers is protected. Citizens groups have expressed concern that service sometimes is cut to persons in the middle of winter. Hedemark proposed as alternatives to complete termination: — Addition of procedures to make more customers aware that utilities are willing to adjust payment schedules. — Establishment of a procedure in which a third party would be hired to help elderly or handicapped persons meet their payment obligations. He also said the utilities' effectiveness at collecting past-due accounts was damaged by earlier restrictions on deposit practices. Hedemark spoke for Washington Water Power Co., Utah Power & Light Co., Pacific Power & Light

Co., Intermountain Gas Co. and Idaho Power Co. Dr. Warren J. Samuels, an economics professor at Michigan State University, followed Hedemark on the stand, testifying on behalf of the Idaho Citizens Coalition. He said he understood that "the realistic threat of termination for nonpayment is the ultimate sanction available to utility companies to promote collection of revenues and to avoid unenumerated provisions of costly services." Samuels challenged the PUC to consider above all, the physical survival of utility customers. He also acknowledged that utilities must have some form of termination policy.

None attend as Rupert council adopts budget

RUPERT — The Rupert City Council unanimously accepted the 1980-81 city budget Tuesday. Except for the press, only one visitor attended the meeting. Gilbert Robbins objected to the water, sewer and garbage rates being charged at Gibb's Trailer Court on South F Street. The council said they would research the rates, and those of other trailer courts, and come to a decision at the next regularly scheduled meeting. Robbins left before the council adopted the budget. In other business building permits were approved and easements along F Street south of the Sunset Annex were accepted. With the city's recent block stretch, Mayor W.F. "Bill" Whitton reported the street could not be widened. Resolutions to purchase garbage containers, to change garbage collection rates, to formally accept HUD's grant of $300,000 for a city water project, and to raise city mileage reimbursement to 18 cents a mile were passed. Services to annex several properties to the city, and to change beer and wine license fees were adopted. Council members brought several community requests to the meeting.

Dwinelle Alfred reported the city library board would like to hire its own auditor in the future because it feels it can contract the job at a lower rate than the city. Mayor will meet with the board to make arrangements for the position. Clark Cameron reported the chamber of commerce has written a letter to the city requesting consideration on holding sidewalk sales on the square at specified times. A committee will meet concerning the request.

June Dombeck requested the city raise the salary of Ray Valdez, city engineer, from $12,000 to $13,000 because of his conscientious work. The request was granted, retroactive to Aug. 1. The council reported it will open bids on Oct. 2 on an asphalt contract for city streets. The council set Nov. 6 as the day for Rupert biennial election when two council positions will be filled. Finally, the council went into executive session where it discussed suspected litigation against the city. The "suspected" litigation was presumed to be the suit filed by the city Tuesday by Galey Construction Co. At the time of the council meeting official notice of the suit had not been given. The city was delivered by a deputy sheriff about noon Wednesday.

Filer couple hit by suit

TWIN FALLS — A Filer couple is being sued in 5th District Court here by two persons who claim they were beaten by the couple on Aug. 19. Max Danos is asking $15,500 from Wayne and Minerva Joslin. He alleges that on Aug. 19, the two defendants attacked him without provocation and Joslin beat him with his fists and Mrs. Joslin beat him with a club, causing serious bodily injury. Danos asks $10,000 general damages, $500 medical costs and $5,000 punitive damages. Patrick P. Danos, a minor, also filed suit through his legal guardian, Ruth Danos. He asks the same amount. He alleges he was attacked and beaten by the Filer couple on the same date, and that he suffered a broken hand and other injuries.

Headgate corrals car

TWIN FALLS — One driver suffers shoulder injuries and two vehicles were severely damaged in a rural intersection accident about 10:05 a.m. Wednesday southeast of Twin Falls. The driver, Steve Caxler of the Idaho State Police said Isabelle Hannah Street, 48, of Hansen was traveling west on county road 3600 North when she apparently failed to see the stop sign and drove into the path of the 1979 Ranchero driven by John McGinnis, 76, of Kimberly. He was traveling north on 3600 West. Caxler said to impact threw the McGinnis vehicle to the northwest corner of the intersection. It came to rest atop a headgate on a large irrigation lateral with the wheels extending over the water. The Street car, a 1964 sedan, was hit through the intersection and came to rest in a borrowpit beside a field about 100 feet north of the intersection. McGinnis escaped with minor cuts the suit had not been given. The car was delivered by a deputy sheriff about noon Wednesday.

Usury limit question resurfaces

BOISE (UPI) — Some financiers are considering an effort to convince the Legislature either to raise or repeal Idaho's 13 percent usury ceiling, which was enacted earlier this year. The old rate of 10 percent was lifted just last session after heavy lobbying and lengthy debate by the state lawmakers. The last change came at a time when housing construction had stalled. Now some in the financial community say the rising interest rates may make it necessary to lift the 13 percent rate. "The issue will come up again," said Richard Anderson, president of the Idaho Mortgage Bankers Association. "It's time to make the Legislature aware of the problem. Why deal with it when you're out of business?" The 13 percent limit was passed after Gov. John V. Evans vetoed a bill that would have lifted the usury lid completely. New housing starts and house sales, the financiers complain, have fallen below 1978 levels. Idaho home buyers, meantime, are resisting high real estate prices and high interest rates, said Dirk Kemphorne, executive director of the Idaho State Homebuilders Association.

Wreck shakes Burley teens

BURLEY — Two Burley girls were injured Monday when their car was struck on the side by another car at the corner of Conant and Eighth streets. Burley police reported Christine Kay Allhouse, 16, was driving south on Conant at 12:40 p.m. Falling to come to a complete stop, the car she was driving was struck broadside by Roberto Del Rosado, 16, of Heyburn. Both vehicles spun about, coming to rest on the curb and sidewalks. Both were extensively damaged. Neither Bosque nor his passenger, Alvinia Mosina, 18, was injured. M. Allhouse and her passenger, Shirley Allhouse, 17, were taken by ambulance to Cassia County Memorial Hospital, treated for bruises and released. Bosque was cited for violation of a restricted license; Ms. Allhouse for failure to stop at a stop sign.

Rangen suit begins

TWIN FALLS — Judge James M. Conroy said today that his court began hearing testimony Wednesday in a damage suit brought by Rocky Mountain Trout Co. against Rangen Inc. The case was filed May 3, 1978, and asks a total of $180,838.32 in damages allegedly owed on truck and trailer leases and purchases prior to 1973. Rocky Mountain Trout alleges it leased tractors and trailers to the defendant at a flat per-mile rate over a period of years prior to 1973. The total amount due, the plaintiff says, was $194,116. The complaint states demand for payment has been made but the defendant has refused to pay the full amount. A total of $190,388.84 has been paid and there is $5,000 due on purchases made by the defendant, the complaint states. This leaves a total of $160,935 which the plaintiff is asking in damages. The defendant firm argues it not only paid in full all that was owed by the plaintiff, but that because the alleged debt was prior to 1973, the state statute of limitations has expired and the plaintiff cannot legally collect on amounts dating back more than five years.

Husbands impede wives' treatment

By SUSAN FOGG
Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — Treatment of women with agoraphobia — an irrational fear of leaving home — can be impeded if their husbands feel threatened by their wives' growing independence.

In a study of nine successfully treated agoraphobics, a British research team found that six women relapsed into the phobic condition that had made even the prospect of a simple shopping expedition terrifying.

Six had been locked in loveless, compulsory marriages, in which their phobias and subsequent dependence on their husbands had served as a tie that binds, the researchers said in an account of their work in the Archives of General Psychiatry.

"Three (of the) women... had stated before treatment that they might or would leave their husbands if the agoraphobia allowed," the therapists said.

"As these patients relinquished their agoraphobic behavior, and with the compulsory aspects of their marriage, their husbands became increasingly worried that their wives really would leave them.

"They reacted to this by undermining their wives' self-confidence... and by hindering their progress in overcoming their agoraphobia."

While this bolstered the husbands' sense of security within the marriages, it did lead to at least partial relapses in the three phobic wives, all of whom had left therapy apparently cured of their fears of the outside world.

An extreme form of this pattern, the researchers said, has been reported in other couples, in which the husbands accused their wives of using their increased freedom to travel alone to indulge in infidelities.

In a second group of three couples who the British team treated and observed, the women relapsed into their phobias because they feared losing their husbands.

Although the husbands in this second group resented this behavior and accused their wives of deliberately exaggerating their symptoms, the women persisted.

"The husbands then felt obliged to increase their help and support, thereby enhancing the compulsory nature of the marriage," the therapist said.

This capitulation by the husbands "implies that at some level they accepted their wives' dependence on them," the researchers said, "illustrating how marriage to a neurotic can help preserve self-esteem in the ostensibly non-neurotic partner."

In one case, in which the husband related to be swayed by his wife's relapse and left her as he had wanted to do for years, the women had a complete breakdown into "borderline psychosis."

Women whom the phobia had served to preserve both the woman's marriage and her sanity, the researchers said.

In a third group of three couples, who enjoyed a high rate of marital satisfaction while the phobic condition persisted, the therapists found another pattern emerging. The wives were successfully cured of their agoraphobia and they did not suffer relapses after leaving treatment. Their marriages ran into trouble.

"The improvement in the wives' agoraphobia shifted the focus of dissatisfaction within the marriage from the wife back to the husband, with the effect of undermining the husbands' problems of inadequacy," they said.

Two of the husbands were sexually dysfunctional, while the third husband himself was a mild agoraphobic, and his problem was exposed only when he could no longer use his wife's illness as an excuse for avoiding social outings.

The researchers were Frank Milton of Kingston Hospital, Surrey, England, and Julian Hafner, St. George's Hospital, London.

Pregnancy class set on Tuesday

TWIN FALLS — An early pregnancy class for all couples in the first trimester of pregnancy will be held Sept. 11 at 7 p.m. in room 107 of the Shields building on the College of Southern Idaho campus.

Linda Pettinger will be the instructor. This class is free of charge. The classes are new in the Magic Valley and the college will attempt to hold one a month. No registration is required to attend the class.

The class is designed to give important information needed at the beginning of pregnancy to make it a positive and well-informed period of the couple's life. Information and handouts will be distributed concerning nutrition, maternal changes, physiology, doctor-patient relationships, and exercises for discomforts and fitness.

Impressive view

BENARES, India (UPI) — The view from a boat cruising on the Ganges river through this teeming city — now known as Varanasi — leaves the dual role of the city and the river deeply impressed on the traveler.

It is the city's lifeline: The narrow lanes and bylanes form giant honeycombs to merge on the spacious waterfront and its pilafox of ghats (steps).

Women wend their way down the ghats to herald the birth of a child, while nearby a procession of a different sort brings a corpse to be cremated and thus win eternal salvation from the holy river.

Dr. Lamb

Caution about hormones

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.
Newhouse News Service

Dear Dr. Lamb:

I am a 47-year-old female. I'm 5 feet 4 and weigh 128 pounds. I have high blood pressure and take Inderal and Hydrodiuril daily.

When my high blood pressure was discovered, I had dizziness, vomiting and loss of memory. The doctor discontinued my Premarin. I had had a hysterectomy three years before that.

Now I have hot flashes that are very annoying and uncomfortable, especially at night. It is dangerous to take hormones in my state of health, and if so, why?

Dear Reader:

There are many factors related to high blood pressure. There are specific medical conditions that can cause it, but in the vast majority of cases we don't know why one person has high blood pressure and another seemingly similar person does not.

Your description suggests that you had very high blood pressure, possibly associated with accumulation of fluid in the brain (cerebral edema). The acute increases in blood pressure associated with those kinds of symptoms are sometimes called a hypertensive crisis.

I hope the medicines you are taking have controlled your blood pressure so that it's within relatively normal limits now.

I'm sending you The Health Letter number 1-8, Blood Pressure, to give you a better idea of the factors that control this condition. Other readers who want the issue can send 75 cents in checks or coin with a long stamped self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

There's no way I can tell you whether you can take hormones. Certainly you don't need to worry about cancer of the uterus since you had a hysterectomy. But the question is whether the hormones are related to your blood pressure.

There are a small number of women who develop high blood pressure with birth-control pills. After all, they, too, are nothing more than combinations of female hormones. It's important for these women to discontinue the birth-control pills altogether.

The only way the question—can really be answered in your case now that you're on medicines to control high blood pressure—is to find out if resuming the hormones will have any adverse effect. Certainly you don't want to go through the problem you had before because that's relatively dangerous. So, it would have to be a very carefully controlled study in your case.

Meanwhile, in the absence of that information, you certainly should not take female hormones.

Dear Dr. Lamb,

I read your column about the gadgets you can get for ringing in the ears. Isn't there any medication you can take before you resort to that?

Dear Reader,

Usually not, but you have to remember that ringing or noises in the ear is a symptom. Before you treat it, you need to find out if possible, what's causing it.

It can be caused by taking various medicines, including common aspirin in some people. So, in that case, taking medicine won't relieve the condition but stopping the medicine might.

BEEF AND POTATO PUFF

- 2 tablespoons chopped onion
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
- 2 tablespoons fat
- 3 cups ground cooked beef
- 3 cups mashed potatoes
- 1 cup gravy or milk
- 3 eggs, separated

Salt and pepper to taste

Cook onions and parsley for a few minutes in the fat, then mix thoroughly with the meat, potatoes and gravy or milk. Season to taste. Add the beaten egg yolks, and fold in the beaten egg whites. Pile lightly into a greased baking dish and bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour or until set in the center, and lightly browned. Turn over the dish. Pass the tomato sauce.

Art show opens at CSI

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho Art Department is sponsoring Mary Rolland: A One-Woman Show, Sept. 10 through Oct. 12 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at the CSI Fine Arts Building.

The exhibition will feature acrylic paintings on paper that incorporate photographs, memory, and observation. All of the paintings are Idaho landscapes and most represent landscapes from the Sun Valley area.

Ms. Rolland has been the exhibits director for the Sun Valley Center and director of the Sun Valley Gallery for the past seven years. She will be moving to New York City in January 1980 for six months of independent study in painting.

Dear Abby

If she's old enough to ask, she's old enough to be told

BY ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© The Chicago Tribune
New York News Syndicate, Inc.
DEAR ABBY: I am a 17-year-old who needs some advice on several things having to do with sex and pregnancy. My mother has never had me anything. Of course I know what is done, but I would like to know if there is any way a girl can do it all the way without getting pregnant.
I have heard about the Pill, but I don't know where to get any or how they are used. If I wish to use a diaphragm will they sell me some? Are there instructions on the bottle?
I have also heard that there is a certain time of the month when a girl is "safe." When is that time? I studied it in biology class, but were told we shouldn't depend on it because it is not 100 percent safe. I am really confused.
I have been told that some boys like to have sex without getting pregnant, so what are they for? I hate to sound dumb, but I would like to know the answers to your questions and I don't know who else to ask.
A POORLY INFORMED GIRL
DEAR GIRL: Your questions are good, and you deserve straight answers. Phone your local PLANNED PARENTHOOD office and ask for an appointment to see a "teen counselor" about birth control information. If you're old enough to ask, we're old enough to know.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the young mother whose 20-month-old child screamed and trembled every time a vacuum cleaner was turned on brought back memories.
I went through the same thing with my son, John, now 21. When John was an infant he not only screamed whenever I used the vacuum cleaner, he would double up in pain. He reacted the same way to power tools and other high pitched noises.
The doctor said he probably would outgrow it and I should try to get him used to it. It didn't work. Sometimes the noise would make Johnny physically sick and the poor kid would throw up. I finally put away the vacuum cleaner and used a carpet sweeper instead.
I raised four kids, and Johnny was the only one with this problem.
E. T. IN. J.
DEAR E. T.: I heard from several ear specialists that some children are born with an extremely high sensitivity to loud noises. They suffer severe pain when subjected to them and should not be forced to "get used to it." (Some outgrow this sensitivity and some do not.)

A child who reacts violently to loud noises should be examined by an ear specialist.
DEAR ABBY: Out of the blue, my sister's husband (I'll call him Neville) has asked her for a divorce. They're both 50 and have three married children.
Neville teaches English to foreigners, and it seems he has fallen in love with a 28-year-old pupil.
I have always gotten on quite well with Neville, so he keeps ringing me up to ask when he can bring his girlfriend over to meet me. I always give him some kind of excuse: "Sorry, not tonight. I have another engagement," etc. Soon I'll run out of excuses.
My sister is very upset over what her husband has done, and so am I. Furthermore, I am not the least bit interested in meeting his young girlfriend.
How can I handle this without hurting his feelings?
CANADIAN READER
DEAR READER: Why look for "excuses" when you have a perfectly legitimate reason? Tell Neville and you don't care to meet his girlfriend. And don't worry about his feelings. He seems well able to take care of himself.

Russians refuse to invent jeans

By ERMA BOMBICK
© Field Enterprises, Inc.
In last month's Saturday Review, John Mariani wrote an intriguing article on American products.
The consensus was startling. It seems we are noted throughout the world for only three products that we make better than anyone else: washing machines, toilet paper and jeans.
That is the most depressing thing I have ever read. It means jeans are so good as they're ever going to get.
Ever since they appeared on the fashion scene nearly a decade ago, I have had a wish. Just once I'd like to wear a pair of jeans with the shirt tucked INSIDE.
I have never seen proportions so incoherent. When the leg fits, the seat blouses. When the seat fits, the waistband gaps. When the waistband fits, the zipper won't meet. When all of the above fits, you have to have an 18-inch hem in them.

Jeans are possibly the only secret weapon that the Russians refused to invent after it was produced. In fact, they can't even copy them, and I think I know why. Russians are too practical. I can just see a garment weaver in Odessa where the tables are laid with blue denim, and the tailors are poised over it with chalk, while on the wall for easy reference is the form of a female.
She is hunk like a parking meter. He chalks and he cuts. He pieces and he pins.
Finally in exasperation, he throws down his chalk and removes his glasses. "It can't be done," he says.

"Who can wear pants that have only three inches between the crotch and the waistband? Who would buy something that stands up long after you've sat down? Who can wear legs so small they should have a mace strapped to them? I tell you the Americans have beat us. It's impossible.
A few years ago, my husband and I visited Russia and in our infatuation with jeans is, not just propaganda. It's true. We heard stories of how Russians approached Americans and offered them valuable icons, medals and even rubles for their jeans.
I even heard where one visitor was thrown to the ground and the jeans pulled right off her body.
I wasn't shocked. It seemed like a humane way to get out of jeans to me.

Expensive jewelry sold by mail

By PADDY CALISTO
© The Los Angeles Times
Mary McFadden will sell jewelry. The New York designer is the first seventh Avenue heavyweight to adopt the "couture-by-courier" concept, using a full-color matter that she says is "the most successful" of 15 tulle homes nationally in October.
McFadden won't start by selling clothes by mail. Instead, she'll offer eight pieces from her jewelry collection, each a limited edition, each priced about $350. After the test with her jewels, $350. After the test with her jewels, McFadden says she plans to expand the scope of the quarterly catalog, adding her Coty Award-winning clothing designs.
But with her jewelry retailing for $350 and gowns going for anywhere from $700 to $3,000, does McFadden really think the catalog is a viable shopping vehicle for her clientele?
"Cartier does it. Neiman-Marcus does it. So does Tiffany. And they're all very successful," explains McFadden, who owns no retail outlets for her designs. "We're channelling our efforts into mail order instead of opening boutiques."
It was McFadden who, with her Social Register background, cropped black hair and clothing-as-art ideals, raised fashionable eyebrows in 1974 when, without any design credentials, she showed her at starkly simple collection of hand-painted silk occasion pieces. Two years later, she won her first Coty Award.
McFadden's collection has evolved into more intricate silhouettes. "Technical developments complicate the work," says McFadden, who for all 1979 has found ways to add sculptured shoulders, heavy crisscross columns or a hint of a bustle to what would have been a streamlined Marl-pleated sheath in her early days.
Although most of her autumn designs are colored in shades of amber, ochre and colored in shades of amber, ochre and aubergine, she has used ebony lace, embroidered marquisette, Lurex fabrics and velvets in a group she calls "variations on black." When McFadden dresses a bride she opts for golden pleating rather than white and crowns her in Jewels. Her art-for-art's-sake attitude still predominates.

But do people understand art couture? "The more artistic I get — the more extraordinary and unique the design is — the better it sells," she explains. "My best-selling items are always the most unusual, regardless of price."

Now, like many other designers, McFadden will soon see her name on sheets.
How does she rationalize her nobly commercial venture with her purist design philosophy?
McFadden doesn't see the slightest implication that the move is too commercial.
"Obviously, you haven't seen my sheets," she retorts. "They will be the most highly technical designs on the market. The screens for the prints alone cost $50,000. There are 12 colors and six interrelated designs," she says.

Volunteers to monitor beach

ATHENS (UPI) — A new ecological volunteer group has announced plans to monitor bathing beaches around Attica on a continuous basis to make sure they are safe for swimming.
A spokesman for the Pathallente Center of Environmental Studies said the group, consisting of a dozen environmental experts, had carried out studies on coliform bacteria, chemical and petroleum wastes in the Saronic and Corinthian Gulfs.
The group said that many of the popular beaches around the Corinthian Gulf are threatened with pollution from industrial waste, while beaches along much of the Saronic gulf are close to sewage outlets.

Ironing board was reason he got married

By ANATOLE BROYARD
©N.Y. Times Service

NEW YORK — "Most people marry for unconscious reasons," says a friend of mine who is a psychotherapist, "and that's one of the difficulties. Not knowing why they did it in the first place, they're always wondering whether they should stay married."

I did not have too much difficulty knowing exactly why I married. It was because of an ironing board.

I can see it now, after 17 years. It had X-shaped aluminum legs and a muslin-covered pad that was patterned with burnt marks. It stood in the middle of my apartment like an announcement, an uncanny visitor.

I had gone to Europe for the summer and the girl I was married to the time had asked me if she could live in my apartment while I was away. She shared a small, airless place with another girl.

My apartment was purposefully bare, a machine for living, as Le Corbusier said, or for not living. It was so stripped down that you could feel the absence of things like a repressed question: But what came back from Europe in September, I opened the door to find, in the dead center of the room, an ironing board.

The girl I was married to had a room that was a single large room with a skylight and the late afternoon sun filtered down with a painter's clarity. I dropped my luggage and sat on the bed. My head was filled with Old Masters and cathedrals and they all fell away before the reality of that ironing board.

Bookcases, bamboo blinds, captain's chairs, a table made of a door, a box spring and a mattress: That was my apartment, a geometry of austerity. An empty canvas, now suddenly disgraced by this grotesque object, this placidly, this skinned, ugly, suffering shape that spoke to me of home and family and mother and brought tears to my eyes.

How frivolous, how arty Europe was next to the ironing board of my best friend in my Americanism. What if I were to put my life on this board and iron it out? Would it have that clean smell of things dried in the sun and pressed by hand? I was tired of climbing stairs behind girls. There was too much time for second thoughts behind their backs. I remember an evening drinking in a Greenwich Village bar with a girl who was not the girl I was with — not the girl who owned the ironing board — said, "I'm too tired," and I picked her up and ran away from the others with her in my arms.

That's bachelor life, running with a girl in your arms, hurrying nowhere, a heavy freedom, a tension between hello and goodbye. Someone said that French writers — fall exhausted into the arms of the church, and I think that marriage was my church, or at least a substitute for it.

I needed something to turn to on Sundays. If I had no God, I would settle for a fallen angel. Sunday afternoon, especially, was serious. It was a time when one felt the dark encroachment of that old catastrophe, "as a poet put it. By Sunday afternoon, I was all played out. I turned around and looked back over the week with "muzzling" eyes. Those quiet, empty hours were filled with a sense of anticlimax.

It seemed to me that bachelor life was an arrangement of anticlimaxes. I thought I would get married and have instead one grand sonorous anticlimax like a chord struck on an organ, an anticlimax profound enough to stand as a philosophical statement. I would settle down to a rhythm, like waves lapping gently on a shore, or a church bell tolling in the night. I would have breakfast with the same person every morning.

Yes, marriage was the answer to Sunday afternoons, for the lull after lunch that breaks the back of the day, that time between waking and sleeping when you come to a dead stop and ask yourself why you should ever start again. If you have a wife, you can confront yourself with symmetry, or play a dialectic. At the very least, you're ashamed to lie down and cry in her presence.

How do you go about getting married? I was never good at mechanical things. I had developed a trained incapacity, as Veblen called it, for simple procedures. I knew, of course, that I had to get a license and a blood test to determine whether I was sane enough to live legally with another person, but I had no idea who I wanted to perform the ceremony.

I did not want a judge or a justice of the peace. While I was not actively religious, it seemed to me that marriage was a religious act, a crucifixion and a resurrection rolled into one. I consulted with the bride and we decided on a minister.

A friend who was an assistant professor in a university suggested a minister who taught theology and drama there. He also wrote drama criticism for a religious journal. These seemed to me to be appropriate qualifications.

When I met him, though, he seemed too young to marry us. He was quite sophisticated for a minister, smoking a cigarette and lounging back in his chair. After asking some rather intellectual questions about the nature of our beliefs, he wanted to know whether we wished to amend the marriage service, to add any modifications or emendations of our own designing.

I thought of barbed marriages and topless marriages and marriages on television. I thought of expressions such as, "We propose to respect one another's space or privacy or integrity," and said no, we would take the service as it was.

Would we prefer to have him officiate in a dark suit such as the one he was wearing or in his vestments? We chose the vestments.

The ceremony took place in a duplex apartment that belonged to the parents of a friend. When the minister arrived, I led him upstairs to a bedroom where he put on his vestments. After he was invested, he jogged down the stairs so athletically that a shower of dandruff shook down onto his shoulders.

I was upset by this, and I wondered what to do about it. While the minister was very casual, I did not feel free to dust off his shoulders. I considered slapping him on the back as a means of dislodging the dandruff and discarded the idea as impractical. In the end, I was married by a minister with dandruff on his vestments.

It flattered the ceremony for me. It symbolized, I thought, the general fakiness, the sociological fallout, of the age. I was being married by a drama critic with dandruff on his shoulders and what I really wanted was Lancelot Andrewes in Charters Cathedral, music by Bach, poetry by Donne and Herbert and Crashaw, philosophy by Aquinas and a painting of the ceremony by the Master of Avignon.

I did not see the situation with an ironical eye. For the moment, I had put irony behind me. I was filled instead with moral indignation, one of the luxuries of the married man.

In spite of everything, the marriage held up. While we have worn out several ironing boards, we still have pretty good Sunday afternoons. Sometimes, when the children are out playing and the light comes in the window in a certain way, I look at my wife and wonder why she married. One of these days I'll have to ask her.

Vitenam refugees are Americanized

By RICHARD H. GROWALD
UPI National Reporter

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — The Americanization of Mr. and Mrs. Pham Cong Nga is under way. The couple, boat people refugees from Vietnam and now in their second month in America, displayed what they call their treasure — a table-top refrigerator.

The 31-year-old husband opened the appliance door slowly, as if unveiling the secrets of life. The metal box was crammed with ketchup, salami, stew meat, bread, peanut butter, jam, melon, eggs, frankfurters, apples, oranges, cheese, potatoes, onion, cola bottles and what could not be seen behind the Fibber McGee's closet arrangement of the food in front.

His wife smiled. "We like tomato ketchup so very much."
Husband nodded. "My favorite is a ketchup, salami and cheese sandwich. America is so wonderful."

Some of their Americanization may travel in their stomachs. But it goes other ways, too.
"I saw my first baseball game. I was taken to see the Pittsburgh Pirates. Pirates? Well, I don't understand baseball. But one thing I certainly did understand and admire is the seventh inning stretch," he said.

The husband walked around a kitchen chair and shook his arms. He said his brother, a Roman Catholic-religious teacher in America for four years, is also introducing him into another local ritual rite, tennis.

"I am told I must stop hitting the ball at the net," he said.
Immigration also changes names. In Vietnam, Pham, being the family name, took first place. Nga, being his given name, came last. Now, Americanization is switching the legal name to Nga Cong Pham.

And the Catholic couple are dropping their Vietnamese first names in favor of their church christening names. Nga is now becoming Thomas. His wife, Nguyen is now being called Christianne.

Did she prefer Nguyen or Christianne?
"Christianne," she said. "It's more American."

The couple are living currently in a three-room, third-floor apartment. Never have they enjoyed such luxury. In Vietnam there was no lock on the door; there was no door. On the Malaysian boat people prison island of Pulau Tengah, their home for nine months between the fishing craft voyage from Vietnam and the jet flight to America, there was no green carpet under the bed. The bed there was a plywood board.

"American even smells sweeter," Thomas said. "Maybe Americans do not realize it, but each country smells different. America smells the better for not being filled with too many other smells."
"In Vietnam the dominant smell was of nuoc mam (fermented fish) sauce. Here we smell the trees outside the window."

The Phams also have educated themselves on public transportation, newspapers that are more than six pages thick, cats — such as their black-and-brown feline named Kitty — which are for pet and not eating, and so curious, Pittsburgh does not seem to have a black market.

Christianne reached into the refrigerator for a cola drink. "One thing, American women drink coffee. In Vietnamese coffee mainly was for men. Also, please tell me why I am offered food salads. Are there salads that are not tossed?"
Thomas reached for a letter on a table. The smiles of Thomas and Christianne went into a winter. The letter was from Thomas' brother, still in Vietnam.

"My brother wants to escape, too. But it is very hard to escape from Vietnam now. Because security is tighter now."

Thomas reads from his brother's letter. "And I feel very unhappy in this city. This (Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon) is a dead city, a city of sadness. All that remains of good are the memories..."

Thomas says one of his sisters remaining in Vietnam had wanted to go to college this year. The Communist authorities said no. "For, you see," said Thomas, "they said we are a bad family and threw her application away."

His father, in a Communist prison camp since the fall of South Vietnam four years ago, however, sends word he is "very pleased." Thomas and Christianne made it to America.

"He says we are the family's tomorrow," said Thomas. "And the place of tomorrow is America."

New tools for home use

By RICHARD DELANO
© Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — Gardeners and homeowners soon will have a sizable group of new tools to use. That's the story from the recent Hardware Show in Chicago.

Considering the big snow of last winter, one company had an interesting display of snowblowers. One claims that its new 12-hp cord-electric power shovel can clear a four-inch snowfall in one pass. It reportedly handles as easily as a snow shovel.

Because of its light weight and small size, it may appeal even to folks who already have a large snowblower. The "power" shovel, which sells for less than $90, is particularly suited for clearing steps and narrow walkways.

For fall soaking and watering, a new type of hose reel is offered that allows twisting and tangling. Newcastle's Hosemate R automatically rewinds 50 feet of hose into a canister. Attach one end of the hose to the faucet and stretch the other to the desired length.

Several sugar alternatives under study, in use

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Family Editor

Please pass the glycyrrhizin.
Or maybe you'd prefer neohesperidin. At least it's easier to pronounce.

Both are among about a dozen low- or no-calorie alternatives to sugar, or sweeteners, that are either in limited use now or being investigated for safety.

One is now widely promoted in health food stores and available in some supermarkets: fructose, which occurs in many foods, including fruit, honey and sucrose. Under certain conditions it tastes 1 1/2 to 2 times sweeter (on an equal weight basis) than the sucrose which most commercial fructose is derived.

Another possible alternative is 2,000 times sweeter than sugar: an extract of the West African plant that it adds taste but not calories, says a report prepared for the Consumer Affairs Department of the Food Marketing Institute.

Neohesperidin is an orange peel by-product, 1,000 times sweeter than sugar, the report adds. The Food and Drug Administration has denied a petition for its use in chewing gum, toothpaste and mouthwash because toxicological data is lacking.

The report prepared for FMI by its consumer affairs representative Linda E. Halleran and student intern Sarah Orvig of Hope College, Holland, Mich., says glycyrrhizin is being used on a limited basis as a flavor enhancer in some confectionery and tobacco products. It is only 50 times as sweet as sugar.

Health food stores generally carry three forms of fructose: crystalline, tablets and high-fructose corn syrup.

Some manufacturers now use crystalline fructose or the syrup to reduce the calorie count in products such as soft drinks, baking mixes, frostings, jams and jellies, mayonnaise and yogurt.

Fructose as a sweetener for home use has some drawbacks — including a chameleon reaction to heat and acidity; high prices; and a strong tendency to lump in even low humidity.

Fructose tastes 1 1/2 to 2 times as sweet as sucrose when used in high-acid, cool foods. But heating reduces its sweetness to that of sucrose. Cooling the food (or beverage) again reverses the sweetness perception. Unfortunately, none of the package and bottle labels we've read pass this information on to consumers.

Costs are figured on a price per pound basis. The $1.69, 5.3 ounce portion-pack crystalline fructose we found would be $5.10 per pound, compared with 29 cents per pound for granulated sugar bought in a 5-pound, $1.45 bag.

A 1-pound plastic bag of fructose at a health food store proved a better value at $2.49.

Six dollars a pound is the common price in Europe, says Bruce Samlan, president of a Beloit, Wis., food company that makes a wide range of fructose-sweetened products and also packages crystalline, liquid, tablet and powdered fructose for home use.

In a telephone interview, Samlan said most fructose is produced in Finland from regular sugar. He said import taxes and manufacturing costs are largely responsible for the high retail prices, adding that it would be "prohibitively expensive" to make from honey or fruit.

It requires special recipes, available from manufacturers, because the grains are larger than regular sugar and the syrups' calorie content varies by brand.

If the one cake recipe we tested from a manufacturer's booklet is typical, inexperienced bakers may have trouble. We found the directions inadequate, although the cake itself had a good — albeit very sweet flavor.

"The batter never achieved the 'completely smooth' texture called for but appeared curdled instead."

"The shape wasn't specified, so we baked it in a square pan. The cake tested done when poked in the center with a toothpick (the conventional testing method), but had an underdone, fudge-like texture in the corners and the bottom half when sliced horizontally for frosting.

Health food stores are currently promoting fructose in conjunction with a book, Dr. Cooper's Fabulous Fructose Diet, by J.T. Cooper, M.D., with Paul Hagan (Evans $8.95). Cooper is a weight control specialist in Atlanta.

Ardyll Gillespie, an assistant professor of nutrition at Cornell University, urges caution in the amount of fructose consumed.

In a newsletter published recently for extension home economists, the professor says its perceived sweetness may vary with the solidity, viscosity, mouthfeel, flavor, starch and protein level of a fructose-sweetened product.

"For example, fructose added to hot tea or coffee is not as sweet as in iced tea."

"Fructose has also become a popular component of several fad weight reduction diets," she adds.

She describes Cooper's regime as "essentially another recycled low carbohydrate-high protein diet with a new twist — a fructose supplement."

Cooper recommends fructose to stave off hunger pangs between meals because it doesn't stimulate the body to secrete insulin.

"... whether it (the Cooper diet) really has advantages over other sugars is unclear," Professor Gillespie writes. She adds that weight loss from the diet is a result of lower food intake, not fructose consumption.

"For some people, fructose may even be dangerous. The professor says two genetic abnormalities involve the sugar. One is benign; the other, which is hereditary, "is much more serious" and increasing fructose consumption might make it "more significant in our population."

"In a weight loss diet, it is primarily an unnecessary source of energy," she adds, providing 160 calories in the 40 grams prescribed daily for one diet.

Erosion of ozone may affect food

By B.J. MCFARLAND

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — An Oregon State University scientist says more cases of skin cancer would be but one of the serious problems that would affect mankind should there be a serious breakdown in the ozone layer surrounding the Earth.

Robert C. Worrest, a professor of general science at OSU at Corvallis, says the increased mid-ultraviolet radiation from the sun that would reach the Earth from erosion of the ozone radiation shield could drastically affect food supplies, particularly those from the oceans.

Laboratory studies with sunlamps at OSU have shown that small marine organisms are vulnerable to harmful ultraviolet radiation.

"Little is known, however, regarding the potential increase in ultraviolet radiation under natural solar conditions," Worrest said.

Another step in assessing the effect of increased ultraviolet radiation, known as UV, upon such basic sea organisms as zooplankton (microscopic-sized ocean animals) and phytoplankton (tiny plants) is scheduled by studies with sunlamps at OSU. A $50,000 grant from the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency will fund the work.

Research, he says, will be carried out at the OSU Biological Sciences Center on the Oregon coast so that a continuous flow of seawater is available for the large tanks to be established with a greenhouse.

"The work," says Worrest, "will let us evaluate the potential impact of increased solar ultraviolet radiation upon the organisms that form the base of the food chain within estuaries and along the coast. Phytoplankton and zooplankton are the first links in the long, complex food chain of ocean life which culminates in a food supply for many societies on earth."

Adult fish might not be directly affected by mid-UV radiation but destruction of their food sources could spell trouble, the scientist says.

The 10 to 20 mile high layer of ozone in the atmosphere ozone has been endangered by release of fluorocarbon gases into the atmosphere. The United States has banned the use of fluorocarbons in most spray cans. But the gases still are used in auto air conditioners, plastic foams and other products.

Worrest says the greatest concern is the Environmental Protection Agency.

"For each 1 percent decrease in stratospheric ozone," the professor says, "there would be approximately a 2 percent increase in the amount of biologically harmful ultraviolet radiation penetrating to the surface of the Earth."

In clear oceanic water, mid-UV radiation may penetrate to a depth of nearly 100 feet, he said.

"In nature," Worrest added, "the behavioral responses which tend to protect many marine organisms from excessive exposure to biologically harmful ultraviolet radiation are cured, most likely, by long-wavelength ultraviolet radiation, and not by mid-UV radiation."

"Therefore, marine forms which are capable of tolerating present levels of mid-UV radiation may lack the cue for a protective response to increased levels of that radiation."

"Of the other hand," he said, "if organisms do respond to mid-UV radiation by going down into deeper water, this could carry them into a region of different ecological, chemical and physical properties. In either case, there is a potential for adverse effects."

Good substitute

TOLEDO, Ohio (UPI) — Tubular elastic makes a good substitute for buttonhole twist for sewing buttons onto winter coats. This homemaker tip comes from a member of the National Family Opinion, Toledo-based market research firm. Thread the elastic through the buttons and sew the elastic to the coils.

Hair and skin undergo changes in pregnancy

Friday, September 7, 1979 Times-News, Twin Falls, Idaho B-7

MR. AND MRS. RICH STEEN

Blake-Stein

TWIN FALLS — Rhonda Blake of Jerome and Rich Steen of Twin Falls exchanged wedding vows Aug. 6 in the Christian Center with the Rev. Douglas Sigel officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Blake of Jerome and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Steen of Twin Falls. Maid of honor was Debbie Blake, sister of the bride. Mrs. Greg Blake, the bride's sister-in-law, and Sherri Crisp, the bride's cousin, were bridesmaids. Treva Blake was flower girl. Kurtis Snyder was best man. Ushers were Marlon Nussbaum and Greg Blake, the bride's brother.

Patrick Steen, the bridegroom's brother, was ringbearer. Candelighters were Michael and Phillip Steen, twin brothers of the bridegroom. A reception was held in the blue room of the Christian Center. Mrs. Douglas Sigel and Kurtis Snyder sang solos. Sheri Steen, the bridegroom's sister, was guest book attendant. The gift table was attended by the bridegroom's sister, Kathi Steen. The cake was served by Patty Blake and Lowayne Wall. Janice Kennison served punch and Rosie Wall served coffee. Following a wedding trip to Glacier National Park in Montana and Canada, the couple resides in Twin Falls where he is employed with Logos Inc.

In the aftermath of last year's severe winter, physicians in many parts of the country are expecting a baby boom this fall.

Those of you directly involved in this phenomenon know that as your shape changes with pregnancy, your hair and skin go through changes of their own.

During pregnancy, many women find that their hair becomes thicker. Normal hair loss rate is between 50 and 100 hairs per day. Increased estrogen levels during pregnancy cut that loss in half.

Shortly after giving birth, however, most women will experience increased hair loss. The important thing to remember is that this shedding is normal and that there is no net loss of hair.

The amount of loss can vary. Women who deliver in the fall may lose slightly more hair than those who deliver during other seasons, since everyone's hair loss is greatest at that time of the year. Breast-feeding, however, may postpone the fallout.

Minimize the effects of this loss with a shorter cut. Try a soft shape that can be left to dry naturally, requiring only finger-fluffing to give it fullness.

Shorter hair can mean easier care for the busy new mother. In fact, there's no need to postpone a cut until after the baby is born. As pregnancy progresses, many women find their energy begins to lag and it's a relief not to have to spend time on their hair.

Many women, however, prefer longer hair during and after pregnancy, feeling this helps offset the changing figures. If long hair is the choice, keep it simple. Try a blunt cut to the collarbone. When freshly shampooed, this style will look wonderful worn loose and bouncy or pull it back in a braid, knot, roll when you're short on time.

Pregnancy is an exciting time — time to pamper yourself.

What kind of romantic are you?
There's a fragrant way to find out...

Brewers to try to cut drunkenness

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The brewing industry Wednesday announced a national campaign to curb alcohol abuse by adolescents, college students and drinking drivers.

The "Alcohol Awareness Program" is modeled on a successful plan developed and tested at the University of Florida for the last four years. The program included student activities aimed at curbing alcohol misuse and a fully accredited course on alcohol problems.

The nationwide effort will attempt to reach as many college campuses as possible with programs similar to Florida's.

For underage drinkers, the U.S. Brewers Association said newspaper advertisements will be used, along with "point-of-sale" posters with the message:

"Underage? Don't ask us to sell you beer."

For drivers, the program calls for providing a true and false test on the dangers of drinking and driving. Motor vehicle bureaus will handle distribution of the material.

"Our industry's position," said association President Henry King, "is that parents below the legal age should not drink at all. Similarly, for those who tend to misuse alcohol, abstinence is the better answer."

The effort is co-sponsored by the National Beer Wholesalers Association of America Inc.

Borah Lions smother Bruins 52-0

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News sports writer

BOISE — The Borah Lions blew Twin Falls away in the first seven minutes Thursday night and cruised into a 52-0 victory over the Twin Falls Bruins.

Borah dominated the field defensively never letting Twin Falls out of its own end of the field.

Meanwhile, 100-yard dash champion Randy Holmes carried the ball mostly infrequently but always for big yardage and with five minutes left in the first quarter Borah held a 21-lead.

"I'm glad it's over," said Coach Bill Jones, "because no one really likes to play Borah with a young team. But we saw the offense move a couple of times against their first team and there were some other bright spots."

"Defensively we stunk," the coach said in answering questions concerning Twin Falls' inability to stop the option and prevent punt returns. Most of Holmes' big gains came on option pitches and Borah returned four punts from 20 to 41 yards.

"We didn't have any corner containment," he said about the options. "Our kids just got big eyed and confused at times."

On discussing the punt returns, the coach said our sprint men found out what it's like in the SIC and got caught inside.

Twin Falls opened the second half by hitting three straight passes for two first downs and moving to its own 46-yard line. But at that point the Bruins went back to the running game, Coach Jones explained.

"We talked about offense at half time, and I took the option to look at the passing game and then work our veer against their defense. We saw we could pass," he said of the early moments of the second half and "we know we can hit."

Overall the coach said about next week's game with Skyline and the remainder of the season, "It's like we told them after the game, if they want to regroup and improve on their mistakes, next week we'll be an improved team. Then we'll be on our way to becoming a good team, but if they make the same dumb mistakes next week, we will have learned nothing from this 52-0 defeat."

Borah took the opening kickoff and moved 75 yards in four plays to score. Holmes carried three times for 51 yards and got the touchdown from six yards away.

Art Jensen kicked the first of seven points after. On its next position, Borah scored on a 45-yard run - by Holmes and two minutes later collected six more points on a pass Jack Jacobs from Lance Dunn.

After that, Borah finished the half with the second offense and Tom Roach picked up the fourth Borah score on a one-yard plunge-four minutes into the second quarter.

Borah's first punt returned for the third quarter getting a 21-yard touchdown pass on the Dunn to Jacobs 16-yard combination and a 21-yard bomb from Dunn to Jim Hurt.

Jensen kicked a 32-yard field goal earlier in the fourth quarter and Ron Hick got the final score on a fourth and two late in the game.

Several WAC games set

By United Press International

The Utah Utes and Hawaii Rainbow Warriors got an early jump into the Western-Athletic-Conference-league football race Saturday night in a game Ute Coach Wayne Howard terms the most important of the year for his squad.

The game, the first WAC match played in Honolulu since Hawaii joined the conference, is one of six games Saturday involving WAC teams, but the only league contest.

Three WAC teams will be playing their first season game all on the road. Defending champion Brigham Young is at Texas A&M, San Diego State meets Big Eight power Missouri and Wyoming opens at Washington.

New Mexico, victorious in its opener last Saturday, hosts Oregon State and Texas-El Paso returns home against Pacific after an opening loss.

Colorado State, which opened last weekend with a 33-17 loss at Arizona, is idle.

Utah goes into Honolulu with an impressive 24-10 win over Long Beach State, but the win was costly.

Two Ute starters — free safety Tony Reed and offensive tackle Tim Davis — will miss the Hawaii game and more. Reed probably is out for the year with torn ligaments while Davis' sprained knee will sideline him for at least two games.

Utah already had lost offensive tackle Rich Ayers in the pre-season win/loss.

Randy Holladay likely will take Davis' spot Saturday and Vincent Brock will move to free safety.

Because of the injuries and the youth of the season, Howard said the game should be a pivotal one for the Utes.

Hawaii coach Dick Tomey will be sending his team into its first WAC game, and he's apprehensive about having to meet Utah in the conference opener.

"But you can't always have what you want," Tomey said.

The Rainbow Warriors, who had a 6-5 season last year, have a productive offense built around running backs Gary Allen and Keith Hill. Allen and Hill each ran for more than 500 yards.

Quarterback Brad Wright is the man of the hour, again for New Mexico, who meet Oregon State for the first time. Last weekend, in a 34-7 romp over Louisiana Tech, Wright was the Lobos' leading rusher with 50 yards and completed 16 passes for 171 yards.

BYU, picked up successfully defended WAC title, will be playing Texas A&M for the first time. The Cougars still have the luxury of two all-conference-quarterbacks in Marc Wilson and Steve Howard.

Cougar all-WAC defensive end Matt Mendenhall is not expected to play because of a ruptured appendix suffered last month.

Another first meeting will be played at Husky Stadium in Seattle, in an unusual road opener for Wyoming.

The Cowboys, who have not opened the season a 13-10 loss at Nebraska in 1968.

Denver quarterback Craig Morton was taken down all night by the Rams.

Rams rally from behind to topple Denver 13-9

DENVER (UPI) — Linebacker Jack Reynolds had quarterback Craig Morton pegged from the start.

Reynolds, who scooped up a loose ball jarred from the veteran quarterback's hands on one of four straight sacks, scurried four yards into the end zone with 9:04 remaining in the game Thursday night to lift the Los Angeles Rams to a 13-9 victory over the Denver Broncos.

"When Morton came in we knew he wasn't going anywhere," Reynolds said. "He wasn't going to scramble and we weren't worried about him doing that."

The 10-year veteran defensive player said his first reaction after seeing the loose ball was to get it and head for the nearby end zone.

"I wasn't worried about advancing the ball at first. I just wanted to fall on it," Reynolds said. "I couldn't believe it popped out of Morton's hand the way it did."

Morton, following his mediocre performance of completing only 5-of-11 passes for 58 yards, refused to talk with reporters.

"I don't want to talk to you guys," he said. "All you do is stir up controversy."

The Rams, who were defeated 24-17 Sunday by the Oakland Raiders, are now 1-1 along with the Broncos, who smacked the Cincinnati Bengals 10-0 in their home opener.

Morton, who replaced starter Norris Wenge midway through the third period, was sacked four times prior to Reynolds' scoring run, losing 38 yards on four straight pass attempts. The veteran quarterback was sacked a total of five times for 46 yards in losses.

Los Angeles' other scoring came on the kicking of Frank Corral, who booted field goals of 30 and 34 yards, capping two impressive offensive drives led by quarterback Pat Haden, who completed 22-of-31 passes for 188 yards. Corral's first field goal followed an 11-play march downfield which began on the Rams 33.

The Broncos, who were shut down offensively during the first period, notched their first points with four minutes gone in the second period.

The score came on a penalty call against the Rams' John Williams, who was called for holding in the end zone, resulting in a two-point safety for the Broncos.

The third period ended with the Broncos leading 9-6 on a 2-yard burst by running back Dave Preston. The drive was engineered by Morton, who was "called in to replace Wenge, who managed only eight completions in 18 attempts for 94 yards."

Morton went to work, firing a 25-yard pass to Jack Dolbin and a 17-yarder to Riley Odoms to move deep into Ram territory. Fullback Jim Jensen then chipped up the defense, picking up a first down on a run of seven, (two and one yards before Preston scored).

Corral also attempted a 40-yard field goal but the boot hit an offensive lineman's back and was deflected by Denver's Don Lattimer. The Broncos' Louis Wright then grabbed the ball and raced to midfield with no time remaining in the first half but his run was nullified by an illegal block called against Denver.

North Dallas Forty Players don't like movie

©1979, The Washington Post

As "North Dallas Forty," a film that portrays the world of professional football as violent, lascivious and narcotic, plays to big crowds theaters throughout the country, three former pro players who had key acting and advisory roles in the filming find themselves less than boffo in the National Football League. The three players—Tommy Reamon, Tom Fears and Pete Rozelle—have been severed from football.

Reamon, a running back who was cut in training camp by the San Francisco 49ers, claims he has been "blackballed" by the NFL because of his participation in the movie, which began filming in December. Reamon also claims there is "a conspiracy," directed by the NFL against himself, Fears, Biletnikoff and John Matuszak of the Oakland Raiders. NFL owners and management are known to be upset with the themes of "North Dallas Forty," based on the book by Peter Gent, a former wide receiver for the Dallas Cowboys.

Pete Rozelle, the NFL commissioner, Wednesday called the conspiracy suggestion "absolutely ridiculous." He also said, "The Cowboys did not like the book, but a lot of us in the league." Rozelle has not seen the movie.

Reamon, at best a reserve in his NFL career—the Redskins cut him in preseason 1978, because of his active NFL players involved in the filming. He played a supporting role, a speaking role as a character seemingly based on Bob Hayes, former Cowboys All-Pro receiver who was recently sent to prison after pleading guilty to selling cocaine.

Fears, a member of the Professional Football Hall of Fame, was an All-Pro receiver with the Los Angeles Rams and coach of the New Orleans Saints. He advised on the filming. He recently began a scouting service for professional football teams, but his three NFL teams that subscribed to his service dropped him last month after "North Dallas Forty" opened.

Biletnikoff, for years an All-Pro wide receiver for Oakland and a technical adviser to the star of the movie, Nick Nolte; he coached Nolte on pass receiving. The Raiders dropped Biletnikoff last May.

Frank Yablons, producer of North Dallas Forty, said that his "honest opinion is that there isn't a conspiracy." But after cataloging the situations facing Reamon, Fears and Biletnikoff, he added, "I'm not, by emphasis, he said, "But I'd call them pretty strange coincidences... my feeling is that football is such a business that if a player's important to a team, he plays. But with a borderline player, well this movie might be the catalyst for a team to get rid of him."

"Good football players play in this league," Rozelle said. "Anyone who knows the 28 managements in the NFL knows they couldn't conspire on anything. It is totally untrue. "I can't say that some clubs in their own judgement didn't make decisions based on many factors, including that they did not like the movie," he added, "particularly a team directly involved, like Dallas. I think, when you talk about blacklisting, you're talking about a league conspiracy and that's ludicrous. Rozelle, who had not heard about the termination of Fears' scouting contracts, said, "If Tom Fears called me and said, 'I think I'm being blacklisted throughout the league,' I'd make a few calls and call him and tell him what I found out. But I'm sure he's not being blackballed."

Rozelle said that Fears' problem might stem from "a few unfortunate remarks he made about one of the teams he was working with, the Houston Oilers."

In an article printed last month in the San Angelo Standard-Times, Fears was quoted as saying that the Oilers had only "four gold nuggets" on its team while the Steelers had 18.

Reamon, Fears and Gent, said they had heard that Matuszak, an active NFL player who played a major role in the film, was having trouble negotiating a new contract with his current employer, the Oakland Raiders. Matuszak, once the No. 1 draft pick of the entire NFL, perjury an offensive lineman on the North Dallas Bulls in the film. In a key soliloquy toward the end of the film his character accuses a North Dallas assistant coach of having no understanding whatsoever for players and their motivation in playing pro football.

"It's definitely a movie with something to say," Matuszak said Wednesday from Tokyo. "There's some truth and some distortion but it's just a movie. There's a lot of Hollywood in there."

Matuszak said he knew nothing of a "conspiracy" terming it "bull." Matuszak is a starter for Oakland, an important player — not the kind to be cut.

For him to go, a conspiracy would have to be in effect. He said he wanted to set the record straight because other people have asked him about this. "No pressure from anyone," he said. "I'll tell you like it is. I haven't had any problems. That's stuff about having trouble negotiating is dead wrong. I negotiated two months ago and signed a three-year contract. I'd be the one to know, wouldn't I?"

Gent said he had no doubt there was at least a conspiracy directed toward the book and the movie by the NFL. "It's been going on for a long time," he said. "I'm not a Rozelle's office. Rozelle and Tex Schramm (Dallas president) are very tight — very tight. Schramm hired Rozelle into football as an assistant P.R. man with the Rams. Rozelle is Schramm's man."

Gent told a story about the promotion of his book when it went into paperback sale in 1974. He said that New American Library filmed a television commercial on all three networks in conjunction with the opening of the football season.

Gerulaitis whips Kriek in U.S. Open play

NEW YORK (UPI) — Vitas Gerulaitis finally lost a set, but he didn't lose the match.

Gerulaitis won 12 straight sets in the U.S. Open before losing the first set to Johan Kriek of South Africa Thursday night, but the fourth-seeded right-hander from Kings Point, N.Y., came back to win 6-7, 6-3, 6-4, 6-3 to advance to the second round.

Gerulaitis' opponent Saturday will be fifth-seeded Roscoe Tanner, who surprised Bjorn Borg on Wednesday night.

"I just loosened up a bit after the first set," Gerulaitis said. "He played really well in the beginning and he would get down really low and muscle over the net."

"This is probably my best Open ever. I won most of my matches comfortably. There weren't any fluke wins. Last year, I squeaked through a couple."

Meanwhile, Kriek, who made an obscene gesture at the umpire as he walked off the court, said, "If you have an umpire who overrules the linesman every time, why even have the other people there? It was outright cheating. But what can I do? I just don't like to have to win a point twice."

The match, played before a U.S. Open record crowd of 18,000, seemed to turn several times in the first set. Kriek fought off a set point in the 10th game, then broke Gerulaitis' serve in the 11th before holding service for the set. Gerulaitis then broke in the 16th game of the second set to propel him to the 6-3 set.

Neither player was serving very forcefully, and in the third set — possibly the pivotal one — Gerulaitis broke in the fifth and seventh games while Kriek managed one in the sixth, and that was the difference in the set. Gerulaitis passed Kriek several times with perfect baseline drive, preventing the 21-year-old South African from charging the net.

The fourth set was all Gerulaitis as he broke in the first game and breezed the rest of the way. Kriek broke in the fifth and seventh games while Gerulaitis broke in the sixth and seventh games over umpire calls.

In a later quarterfinal match Thursday night, second-seeded Martina Navratilova overcame an early scare from eighth-seeded Kerry Reid to win 6-4, 6-1, and move into the semifinals Saturday against Tracy Austin.

Reid jumped off to a 4-1 lead before Navratilova came back to win the next five games and the first set. Reid's strategy of slamming a hard forehand and rushing the net began to fall when the powerful Navratilova's first service started falling in.

Martina carried her play into the second set, as Reid, looking listless, surrendered in easy fashion.

Earlier in the day, John McEnroe was awarded a default victory when Eddie Dibbs had to withdraw in the fourth game with a bad back. It was the second time the third-seeded McEnroe had advanced by a default and it put him into the semifinals Saturday against Jimmy Connors.

The default by Dibbs was the 12th in singles competition, either among the men. McEnroe earned a third-round pass when Briton John Lloyd was unable to play because of illness.

McEnroe was leading 2-1 with Dibbs serving at 0-30 when Dibbs retired. The start of the day's play had been delayed 4 hours and 18 minutes because of heavy wind and rain the last effects of Tropical Storm David — and on two occasions when they had come out for a warm-up, McEnroe and Dibbs were driven back to shelter because of another shower.

"I felt good before the match," Dibbs said. "I didn't know I would not be able to run full force until I started playing. To play John you need two good legs and a healthy back as I figured why continue and increase the risk of further injury."

Tracy Austin, who had to default from a doubles match Wednesday when she took ill, still wasn't feeling her best Thursday but she had enough tennis in her to win 11 consecutive games and rout Sylvia Hanika of West Germany, 6-1, 6-1, and gain the semifinals.

Austin called her match against Hanika "one of the weirdest matches I've played."

The semifinals schedule will pit Chris Evert Lloyd against Billie Jean King on Friday, and on Saturday, it will be Austin vs. Navratilova, McEnroe vs. Connors, and Gerulaitis vs. Roscoe Tanner.

Steinbrenner did not want to comment on the story but a spokesman for the Yankees said the use of the word "nigger" was not in making a racial slur, according to public relations director Mitzey Morabito.

NFL picks

A look at the second full weekend of NFL action:
St. Louis (0-1) at N.Y. Giants (0-1)
Rookie Otis Anderson gives Cardinals a ninth-round pick McGraw always plays well against the Giants as does Jim Hart. Big Red defense permitted just two TDs against Dallas. Giants' offense came alive in second half against Philadelphia but didn't produce enough to back up quality defensive performance. St. Louis by 3.
Washington (0-1) at Detroit (0-1)
QB Jeff Kistner, a ninth-round pick from Delaware, will start for the Lions in place of injured Gary Danielson and Joe Reed. Redskin offense is improved, but defense - especially against the run - is suspect. Even.
Cincinnati (0-1) at Buffalo (0-1) - Bengal offense is overdue after being shut out by Broncos while Buffalo's defense is a roller coaster to date. Bengals' rushing game will be improved with the return of Pete Johnson. Cincinnati by 3.
New Orleans (0-1) at Green Bay (0-1) - Saints' offense explosive, but defense is suspect. Packers are another inconsistent team. Two weeks ago they blew Atlanta off the field and then struggled for just a field goal against the Bears. Pack running game was greatly improved, but loss of Eddie Lee Ivey is a severe blow. Green Bay by 3.
Minnesota (0-1) at Chicago (1-0) - Tommy Kramer finally put some points on the board against the inept 49er defense but will have a more difficult time of it against the Bears. Chicago's offense is limited to the hard-running efforts of Walter Payton. Viking defense is vulnerable to long-distance completions. Chicago by 3.
Houston (1-0) at Pittsburgh (1-0)

Earl Campbell picked up where he left off in his rookie season with a sensational performance against Washington. Steelers showed their depth when three starting defensive linemen were sidelined against the Patriots and the Steel Curtain still came up with four sacks. Oilers could be vulnerable deep if Terry Bradshaw is fully recovered from toe injury suffered Monday night. Pittsburgh by 5.
Seattle (0-1) at Miami (1-0) - Jim Zorn had tough time against San Diego as the Seahawks turned the ball over five times. Dolphins didn't show much offense either, but are pleased with the return to form of Larry Csonka. Miami will have to play tougher pass defense to contain Zorn. Miami by 6.
Tampa Bay (1-0) at Baltimore (0-1) - QB Bert Jones is doubtful and former Lion Greg Landry will start against Tampa. Buc offense is much improved because of a healthy Doug Williams. Colt linebackers will have a difficult time containing improved Tampa ground game led by Jerry Eckwood. Baltimore by 1.
N.Y. Jets (0-1) at New England (0-1) - Jet quarterback situation is uncertain. Pats' defense is coming off an aggressive game against Steelers. Patriots need to run the ball more effectively. Grogan will test rookie cornerback Donald Dykes deep, long and often. New England by 8.
Cleveland (1-0) at Kansas City (1-0) - Brown defense will keep the pressure on QB Mike Livingston. Even.
Oakland (1-0) at San Diego (1-0) - Ken Stabler back in top form while Raider defense and special teams unit excelled against Rams. They will need a duplicate performance to stop the Chargers. San Diego by 3.

Bid favored, Affirmed bows out of race

NEW YORK (UPI) - Trainer Laz Barrera stuck by his decision to keep 1978 Triple Crown winner Affirmed out of Saturday's $300,000 Marlboro Handicap. Spectacular Bid was tabbed the 8-5 favorite as a field of seven was drawn Thursday for the 1 1/4-mile race. Barrera was upset at the weights which gave Affirmed high impost of 133 pounds and Bid, who will carry 124 pounds, a nine-pound advantage.

The trainer said the 4-year-old colt, voted the 1978 Horse of the Year, would start next in the Sept. 22 Woodward Stakes at Belmont, a weight-for-age event in which he would only yield five pounds to his younger rivals. Bid, who easily won his first race in August after finishing third behind Coastal in the Belmont Stakes and being laid off for two months because of a bruised foot, will be ridden by Willie Shoemaker as he starts his fall campaign for the Horse of the Year title. The big gray colt, winner of 15 races in 18 starts and $1,166,667, will be vanned to New York on Friday under the care of trainer Bud Delp. Coastal, who won the Belmont and is undefeated in six starts this year, was the solid second choice at 5-2. The strapping chestnut colt, trained by David Whitley, will leave from the No. 3 post and carry 122 pounds including jockey Ruben Hernandez.

Barrett hits 460 mph

BONNEVILLE SALT FLATS, Utah (UPI) - Stuntman Steve Barrett pushed his 48,000 horsepower rocket car to 460.184 miles per hour early Thursday in another test of the vehicle before he attempts to break the speed of sound. Barrett, 36, Bishop, Calif., drove the solid-fuel vehicle for about six minutes on the Salt Flats before popping his chutes. A team of doctors immediately checked the driver's pulse and blood pressure. Barrett recorded a pulse of 94. His blood pressure was normal.

Beat USC? Arizona coaches disagree

By The Associated Press-International
Four coaches of Arizona's leading football powers have widely differing views of Southern California's chances this year in the Pac-10 conference.
Arizona Coach Tony Mason predicts that USC, last year's national champion, has nothing to worry about as they open up defense of their title Saturday night against Texas Tech.

Mason says USC will win the "Pac-10" conference, says Mason. "Other than that, we're all in the war."
On the other hand, Arizona State coach Frank Kush believes his Wildcats have a chance to upset USC in the Pac-10 but so one plays a whole lot of attention.

The Trojans have 15 starters coming back, eight on offense and seven on defense. USC has two solid All-Americans in tight end and quarterback Paul McDonald and running back Charles White, and the only question mark is the team's kicking game, where they must replace Frank Jordan and Marty King.

"We have the potential to be excellent again," Robinson says. "With the balance to football today, repeating (as national champion) is more difficult than ever. I'm sure most of the people picking USC to be No. 1 or 2 also said Spectacular Bid was a cinch to win the Triple Crown."

Another key matchup in the West Saturday will feature No. 19 UCLA against Houston. The Bruins will feature a strong defense sparked by All-American Ken Easley at free safety and strong running with Freeman McNeil. Also on hand will be seasoned quarterback Rick Bashore, a better scrambler than passer. The Bruins, however, have a big challenge in replacing running back Theotis Brown and his 1,199 yards.

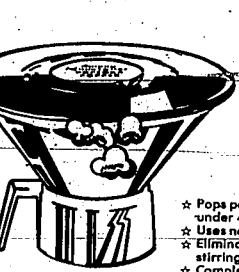

In a Southern clash, No. 3 ranked Alabama meets Georgia Tech for the first time in 15 years with the Crimson Tide rated the 15-point favorites.

"If Alabama doesn't make any mistakes, they'll beat most anybody," says Tech Coach Pepper Rodgers. "Who one has a better prepared team than Alabama, year in and year out. They're always prepared. That's why they are an exceptionally tough opener."

In other Saturday games involving top 20 teams, No. 6 Michigan plays Northwestern, No. 8 Purdue takes on Wisconsin, 10th rated Michigan State meets Illinois, 12th rated Missouri faces San Diego State, No. 13 Washington tackles Wyoming and 18th rated Ohio State goes against Syracuse.

Oswald Jacoby and Alan Sontag

Correct broken suit play

North South was ready to attack trumps. He came to his hand with a spade and led a heart toward dummy's queen. East took the queen with his king and led back the jack. This left East with the high trump and South with two small trumps in each hand. South led a second-high spade from his hand. He then ruffed the jack of spades with one of dummy's trumps, cashed dummy's ace and his queen of clubs and ruffed his last club with dummy's last trump.

Of course, East could have ruffed at any time he wished to do so, but South was still sure of his 10 tricks.

A Canadian reader asks if we consider opening one notrump with this hand. Yes, we consider it but do not bid it. Nineteen high-card points make the hand too strong for a notrump opening. We open one club. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISES ASSN.)

Twin Falls

The Twin Falls County Fair features a rodeo at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday, with pre-rodeo entertainment scheduled at 7:30 p.m.

The Miss Rodeo Idaho Queen Horsemanship contest will be held at 2 p.m. today. The Wranglerette Horse Show will be at 9 a.m. Saturday.

The Old Time Fiddlers will perform at the bandstand at 2 p.m. Saturday.

"The First International Antique & Art Exposition and Electronic Auction" will allow Magic Valley Cablevision subscribers to view and bid on items being offered Sept. 13-15.

The four-day telecast features more than 200 dealers, including 20 from Great Britain, consigning over $2 million in selected antiques and related objects for the event. ArtNet International Ltd. Auction items range from classic 19th-century American furniture, Korean treasures, Oriental rugs and modern paintings to antique jewelry.

According to Gene Rittner, Cablevision's area manager, the live telecast auction, originating at the Capital Center in Washington, D.C., will be beamed to the RCA Satcom 1 satellite and then be received at the Cablevision Center-Satellite receiving station in Twin Falls. Cable channel 10 will carry the auction.

Those interested in bidding may register in advance by calling toll-free (800) 331-1000. An auction catalog is available.

The programs will be informative and directed toward a general audience. Interviews with recognized specialists will cover such topics as "The Pleasure and Profit in Art Deco," "Opportunities in Oriental Art," "Guidelines for the Novice Collector" and "Recognizing Treasures in Your Attic."

Cablevision Special Events Channel 10 will broadcast the auction Sept. 13, 6-9 p.m.; Sept. 14, 5-8 p.m.; Sept. 15, 5-6 p.m. and Sept. 16, 1-4 p.m.

Mackay

The 40th Annual Mackay Free Barbecue will be held at noon Sept. 14 at the Mackay Tourist Park.

With the slogan, "Tons of Meat, It's Mackay's Treat!", the barbecue serves meat, buns and all the trimmings, plus potato chips and coffee — all for free. A concession stand will sell beer and pop.

Denzil Marker and the Old Time Fiddlers will provide the entertainment.

The event, held consecutively for 49 years except during World War II, is sponsored by the Mackay merchants to show their appreciation to their customers, and the town of about 600 people. Many Mackayites plan family reunions to coincide with the barbecue.

The Oven Committee fires up the oven on Thursday and the meat begins cooking Friday.

Donations are still being accepted to defray the expenses. Contributions may be mailed to Lew Greene at the Lost River Electric.

The public is cordially invited, according to the barbecue's general chairman Randy Ivin.

Movies & Music

Running gamut of vulgarity

By SHELLY KINZEL
Times-News writer

Some films should never have been released at all. "Americanation" is one of these. Purporting to be a satire of the future of America, the film is actually a garbage heap of tasteless and vulgar humor.

The year is 1998. America has run out of gas, and people are living in their cars instead of driving them. The only means of transportation is bicycling or jogging. To make matters worse, the government is bankrupt, owing 400 billion dollars to the American Indian entrepreneur by the name of Sam Birdwater (Chief Dan George).

The president (John Ritter), a smiling numbskull who has moved the White House to a condominium in Southern California, decides to raise money by raffling off The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier on nationwide TV. A media expert is called in to design the show, but he has a brainstorm of his own. According to Eric McMerkin (Peter Riegert), what the country needs and loves is a television — a last-ditch effort to save America in other words, an "Americanation."

The original idea has potential. With a degree of intelligence, insight and wit, the screenplay might have been very clever. The writers, however, were content with a string of flimsy jokes and situations, most of them juvenile and in poor taste. A British billboard sporting a picture of Queen Elizabeth selling toilet paper is a good example of the film's caliber. Another is the United Hebrah Republic, a union of Israel and the Arab nations who finally discovered a common bond — an intense appreciation of blonde women with shapely posterior. This "bathroom" humor may appeal to pubescent 13-year-olds, but it may offend the more sophisticated viewer.

The actors are sorely wasted. Harvey Korman, usually an enigmatic clown, is the pathetic, heavy-handed as the nation's neurotic and egotistical emcee. Ritter, who looks a lot like California Governor Jerry Brown, has a few funny moments, but isn't given enough material to really work with. The only imaginative character is one called Moulting Jackson, a "Puke" rock singer from Vietnam. Played by Zane Bushy, the character is a wonderful exaggeration of the more outlandish rock superstars.

"Americanation" reminds one of a comedian whose act is not catching on. The more he struggles to be funny, the more he falls on his face. The audience feels embarrassed, then bored, and finally annoyed.

A film satirizing America's present and future dilemmas would certainly be welcome at this time. Poignant humor is a painless way to expose weaknesses and make people more aware. "Americanation," sadly enough, is a symptom of our problems rather than a remedy.

Film and TV producers may unionize

By ALEXANDER AUERBACH
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD The popular image of a Hollywood producer is that of a fat cigar, screwing a guy with a public phone in Beverly Hills about scripts and contracts and box office receipts. The idea of a producer walking a mean picket line sounds like something out of a Mel Brooks comedy.

Yet the Producers Guild of America is now in the throes of deciding whether it will become a strong bargaining unit for its members or continue to be the "social club" that some say it is today.

The guild's 500 or so members, out of perhaps 4,000 film and TV producers, assistant producers and line producers in town are now voting by mail for the officers and directors that will run the PGA during the coming year.

Ordinarily such a routine move by a trade group that is barely visible in or outside its industry would hardly be news. But this election is being hotly contested. The outcome could reshape the guild.

A group of 34 guild members, calling itself "The Committee for an Independent PGA," has nominated a slate of four officers and seven board members to run against those selected by the guild's nominating committee.

The group's slogan is, "We support an independent Producers Guild of America and will oppose all efforts to affiliate with the Teamsters Union."

On the face of it, the effort by the insurgents is curious for two reasons.

Several members of their slate also are among those selected by the nominating committee.

Furthermore, the guild is not making any efforts to affiliate with the Teamsters Union. Its leaders talked about doing so last year, but the membership overwhelmingly voted down the idea, and that vote closes the door on a linkup with the Teamsters, says Rosalind Wyman, the PGA's executive director.

But David Levy, one of the leaders of the "Committee for an Independent PGA," says the group also opposes any affiliation between the guild and the international alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees.

The PGA has begun discussions with IATSE. Mrs. Wyman says, but the talks had barely begun when IATSE's full attention was of necessity focused on the current bargaining talks between it and the studios its membership works for, which may wind up in a strike vote.

Any PGA-IATSE merger talks, therefore, will have to wait.

Robert Cimder, co-chairman of the group negotiating with IATSE and an executive producer now working at Universal Studios, says—that is, a union—the Producers Guild is totally important.

"It has no contracts with any studios except Universal (and Paramount, and certainly those are not comparable with the agreements that the writers and directors (guilds) have."

Mrs. Wyman explains that producers are about the only workers in Hollywood not covered by a trade-union contract or guild agreement that spells out working conditions and job responsibilities and provides basic health, welfare and pension benefits.

Several years ago, she says, all of the major studios agreed to sign a contract with the PGA if it would drop an earlier effort to affiliate with IATSE. The affiliation talks were dropped, but the agreement fell apart, and only Universal and Paramount ended up as signatories to a PGA contract.

Producers do need the protection of an industry-wide guild contract, Mrs. Wyman says. "The industry has changed tremendously in the last year. Most producers today are not the Zanucks or Goldwyns."

"They are working people, most of them working on TV shows rather than feature films. They are employees, just as writers and directors are. They are not managers. They

Death haunts Fellini film

ROME (UPI) — Filming has stopped on Federico Fellini's latest movie, "City of Women" because of the death of one of its actors but producer Renzo Rossellini says he will be completed no matter what it costs.

The movie, starring Marcello Mastroianni and a cast of several hundred women, was halted following the death of actor Ettore Manni.

"We've decided to finish the film whatever it costs but the final decision is of course up to Fellini," said the producer, son of the late director Roberto Rossellini.

In any case, Rossellini said, it will not be possible to debut the film by the end of the year as originally planned.

All-star cast in Korean War epic

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — "Oh, the cast which includes Jacqueline Bisset, Richard Roundtree, Ben Vereen" financed by Japanese General and David Janson with war epic "Inchon" by Japanese General and David Janson with war epic "Inchon" will, will Terence Young directing and co-producer, said the producer, son of the late director Roberto Rossellini.

In any case, Rossellini said, it will not be possible to debut the film by the end of the year as originally planned.

Laurence Olivier, portraying $1 million plus a percentage of the Gen. Douglas MacArthur, heads gross for this part.

Q: What's happened to Red Skelton? I don't hear about him anymore. — R.P., Niagara Falls, N.Y.

A: Skelton is anything but retired. His work schedule has him performing at least every fourth day somewhere in the country (including three weeks a year at Las Vegas' Nugget). But performing is only one creative outlet for this astounding active 66-year-old. He has written poetry, symphonies, and is currently working on his autobiography, which he says, "I've been writing since I was 5 years old." Red is also writing a "adaptation of Dickens' 'A Christmas Carol'" that he says is more sympathetic to Scrooge's problems than the traditional version and will show what Scrooge was really like.

FAREWELL EXPENSE ACCOUNT LIVING: Columbia records on the West Coast is cutting since the record business has been sliding recently. The company has taken away all expense accounts from lower echelon executives. No using credit cards, and each lunch and dinner has to be cleared with a boss ahead of time before it will be paid for by Columbia.

DIAL A LANGUAGE: A Parisian teacher has found a new use for the telephone. Michel Lahlou is offering language lessons over the telephone with a private teacher. The lessons, available in 13 languages, including Mandarin Chinese, cost $270 for 18 25-minute periods or $15 a lesson. So far the program, called Tutor Phone, is only offered in Manhattan, but Lahlou plans to branch out with his patented course.

Q: I think Orson Welles is one of the world's great actors. Why isn't he doing any movies? — S.L. Johnston City, Ill.

A: He is. Welles just started work on "Never Trust an Honest Thief" which is being filmed in Toronto and co-stars Michael "Manhattan" Murphy. The movie, a comedy, is about the theft of $1 million in cash of undisclosed income and Welles plays the town sheriff.

OLD ROMANCE: A long-time confidant of the late heiress Barbara Hutton is writing her biography titled "The Would-Be Queen of England." Writer Tony Depart bases his title on his information that Hutton never married the Duke of Windsor. Apparently, they had a secret romance which lasted about a year until Wally Simpson came on the scene and won the man who would be Edward VIII for herself.

PETER USTINOV ... pleasingly plump

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN
© King Features Syndicate, Inc.
Q: Hasn't Peter Ustinov dropped a lot of his characteristic poundage for a new movie he made? How does he look now that he's slimmed down? — I.V., Barnstable, Mass.

A: Just the same as ever. Although Peter recently finished a French movie, "We'll Get Thinner Together," he emerged with his avoirdupois intact. The comedy, as a filmmaker whose obstinate corpulence actually enhances his romantic life.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES: Insiders are not at all surprised that the recent divorce of two celebrities was so amicable. She married him, knowing he was homosexual and their marriage gave him a much needed macho image, so with both their careers well launched, they parted on the friendliest terms.

Q: Hasn't Faye Dunaway let her looks go now that she's in between movie assignments? — F.L., Erie, Pa.

A: Since she was paid a bundle for her last movie, "The Champ," Faye is directing her attention to other areas, notably boyfriend Terry O'Neill. She and Terry, who's a photographer, recently opened an art gallery and boutique in California to display the works of women artists and designers. Faye showed up at the gallery-launching looking plumper than usual — little makeup and a hang-down hair style. Her hair was darker and it appeared as if she had gained some weight. But Terry doesn't seem to mind in the slightest, and besides, Faye is such a natural beauty, she could whip herself into glamorous shape in little time flat, although she has had a recurring weight problem and, indeed, recently lost a Los Angeles magazine cover because she was too fat.

Q: You said in a recent column that young Teddy Kennedy was an apprentice at a summer theater. Can you tell us more about it and do you intend to be an actor? — M.L., Bowie, Md.

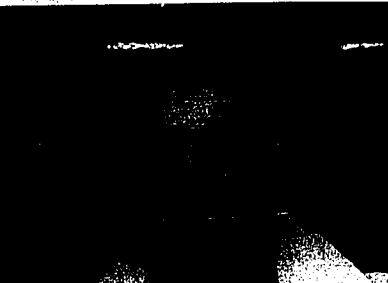

A: Teddy was one of 14 young apprentices ranging in age from 17 to 28 who paid $50 to work at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, Mass., doing everything from shifting scenery to making brief appearances onstage. The idea is that, although he enjoys acting and is interested in it, he has no intention of becoming a professional. Maybe Teddy is thinking of following in family footsteps and becoming a politician. Learning some stage practice wouldn't be a dumb move at all.

Q: I hear that Bella Abzug's been advised to tone down her brusque, brash and boisterous act and be more subdued? Has she changed? — J.J., N.Y., N.Y.

A: Not absolutely. But recently, my preview spy was seated directly behind the once-bellifose Bella at a screening of "The Seduction of Joe Tynan." Bella removed her typical broad-brimmed hat just before the picture began, and she and her husband, Martin, leaned back to enjoy the film. Whenever she felt called upon to comment, it was in a surprisingly considerate whisper, and every now and then Bella would squeeze Martin's hand and affectionately caress his shoulder. Matter of fact, the Abzugs were quite lovey-dovey as they viewed the flick.

Q: I have been reading for a very long time in various columns that Anne Bancroft has the inside track to play Joan Crawford in the movie, "Mommie Dearest." Anne does seem ideal. Is she definitely locked into this coveted role? — R.D., Rapid City, S.D.

A: Not quite. An unexpected new casting wrinkle has it that Pauline Kael, prestigious movie critic for New Yorker magazine and now a consultant and scout for Paramount Pictures, is quietly putting her own favorite, it's beautiful Sigourney Weaver, star of "Alien" — and since Kael has much to do with Paramount, her pronouncements carry a lot of weight. It will be interesting to watch and wait.

OMAR SHARIF

... women not in his cards

Q: I remember reading that Jackie Onassis has a charming BRIDGE OVER TROUBLED WATERS: Actor Omar Sharif may have alienated every female bridge player in the world. Sharif has mounted a campaign to have women banned from bridge championship tournaments. The actor, an avid bridge player, maintains that, "Women lack the killer instinct and can't match the superior concentration and physical resistance of men."

A: As an acquisition editor, one who brings book projects to her publishers, she isn't required to do any writing. However, Jackie did do a charming introduction to "Atget's Gardens," a book of photographs by Eugene Atget, the famous French photographer of the early 1900s.

Q: Is it true that John Travolta is playing superstar to the bill while filming "Urban Cowboy" in Texas? I read he sits with his entourage in his air-conditioned trailer, sipping between takes. — S.S., Verona, Va.

A: There have been many conflicting reports about John Travolta, who has gone through so much pain and agony recently, so I checked with various sources close to this production. They maintain Travolta's been easy-going, and quite cooperative, and that, though, that at times he appears a little preoccupied.

JOAN FONTAINE ... burning memory

Apparently, "Rebecca," Alfred Hitchcock's 1940 thriller, still shakes viewers no matter how many times they catch it on TV. That stirring climax in which the mansion is set aflame by Mrs. Danvers (played by Judith Anderson) evidently has its effect to this day even on Joan Fontaine, the film's leading lady. A few months ago, a magazine writer visiting her apartment noticed that the star was holding one hand to her path. When he asked what happened, Miss Fontaine explained that she'd received a slight burn while working in the kitchen. facetiously, he asked, "Are you sure it wasn't Mrs. Danvers who set the fire?" The actress suddenly became tense and nervously saying, "Don't ever talk like that again — even jokingly. I've had nightmares about that fire ever since I made "Rebecca," and it still haunts me."

Jefferson's mistress-slave

By JOHN RUSSELL

©N.Y. Times News Service

SALLY HEMINGS By Barbara Chase-Riboud, 348 pages, A Seaver Book by the Viking Press, $19.95

Sally Hemings was the quadroon slave with whom Thomas Jefferson lived for 20 years. He seduced her when they were in Paris and she was the very young servant of his daughter Polly. He had many children by her. Quite possible she was his person in the world who knew him best. She ran his house in the country. Thanks in part to his teaching and in part to her own quite exceptional capacities, she grew up to be well-informed, well-spoken in both French and English, and a good judge of people. She was never intimidated. When she chose, she was the best-looking and the best-dressed woman in the room. But she never sat down at Jefferson's table when guests were present. She went to Washington only once, and by stealth, during the presidency. And he never freed her.

This is one of the great American stories, and it is admirably told. The writer and subject would have loved any one of the great 19th-century novelists. Barbara Chase-Riboud showed a colossal ambition, therefore, when she took as her subject at her first novel. She needed to recreate the slave world of Virginia in Jefferson's day. She needed to know the white man's world there and elsewhere. She needed to know something of politics, something of Paris at the time of the French Revolution and something of the route of freedom that broke out on both sides of the Atlantic in the 1770's and 180's and 90's. She had to give life to someone of whom we know almost nothing and match her, speech by speech and action by action, with one of the best-known and most-loved of American historical figures. She had to deal with private dramas that had an operatic intensity, and she had to bring to a great sprawling mass of material some-thing as shapeless as the great country house to which Jefferson gave so much of himself. She had to make us believe in her—Jefferson, her Lafayette, her Aaron Burr, her Dolley Madison, her Abigail Adams; and she had to make us believe in herself as a predestined interpreter of events that even today make us catch our breath.

The good news is that she succeeded. We believe in her Sally Hemings from the moment that we first come upon her, a woman of 56, living near Monticello after Jefferson's death in "the most beggarly habitation for girls of her age." We believe in her elegant instincts, her well-turned speech, her continuing beauty and her fine eye for furniture. Believing, we are eager to turn back the clock a museum piece, in this case, and read the story of her life, year by turbulent year.

Mrs. Chase-Riboud has a little trouble in getting that story under way. A more experienced novelist would have sensed that the lone monologue in which Sally Hemings's mother goes over the family history is not right in pace, in tone or in texture. We don't believe that any human being ever talked that way. From time to time Mrs. Chase-Riboud compounds this difficulty of tone by introducing real observations, real letters, and real newspaper articles. These make us momentarily uneasy about her setting an imagined late 18th century in which unlettered people speak of "gaining their equilibrium" and others fall back upon the slang of our own day.

This said, the book is vastly enjoyable. The slave world is made vivid to us in terms of physical and psychic hardship alike. The scenes of high life, whether in Monticello or in Paris, are as succinct as they are deft. As an educated black woman who knows her way about the world, she is everywhere on top of her material. If we want to know what Washington looked like during the Presidency of Jefferson, or what it felt to roam the streets of Paris on July 14, 1789, she can tell us. She can also tell us, as no white writer can, what it felt like to be born into slavery, to rear slave children, and to see one's whole family sent off in different directions, never to see one another again.

But "Sally Hemings" does not make no sense if it was not also a love story, and one that carried conviction. We have to believe that Thomas Jefferson chose this one woman above all others; and we know her by him for 20 years, not caring what anyone said. We also have to understand how, in that troublesome context, he gave in to local custom, gave in to political necessity and yielded, even if only a little, to family pressure. It takes a very fair-minded person to set that part of the record straight without preaching. But Barbara Chase-Riboud achieves it. This is the kind of book that gives newuster to the words "historical novel."

Inside the capitol

Confessions of a Muckraker, by Jack Anderson and James Boyd (Random House, $12.95)

The authors subtitled this interesting and informative chronicle of capitol events as "The Inside Story of Life in Washington During the Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson Years." That covers an important stretch of American history, including the dropping of the Hiroshima atom bomb, the McCarthy era, the Eisenhower years, the New Frontier and the Great Society. Anderson tells how he became Drew Pearson's legman with only a modicum of experience in investigative reporting. In a part of the book is an oblong profile of Pearson, who was the most feared reporter in Washington.

There is an interesting section which deals with Howard Hughes and his verbal sparring with the Brewster Committee, Anderson serves as a coach for Hughes during the story. Congressional hearings.

And those Americans who revered Dwight D. Eisenhower as a father figure will wince at Anderson's iconoclasm in divulging that the bested gifts amounting to half-a-million dollars,

Moscow a hostile host for International Book Fair

By HERBERT MITGANG

©N.Y. Times Service

NEW YORK—Lawrence Hughes, president of William Morrow & Co., whose visa to enter the Soviet Union to attend the International Book Fair in Moscow next week has been delayed for two months, was granted the visa Aug. 23. Hughes is the chairman of the Association of American Publishers' international freedom of publication committee. It is concerned with the right to free expression and cultural exchange without government interference.

Robert L. Bernstein, chairman of Random House, whose visa had been canceled last week, Wednesday received a telephone call from the State Department advising him that a Soviet embassy official had said that his government would "reconsider" the cancellation if the Random House head would "not abuse Soviet hospitality."

Bernstein asked, through the State Department, for a clarification of what would constitute "abuse of Soviet hospitality." The Soviet embassy then replied that the visa would not be reinstated because it was apparent that Bernstein would not agree to abide by conditions.

"No American publisher should have to do business with the Soviets in this way," Bernstein said, particularly when many Soviet writers are not free to see and talk with their American publishers.

Carl R. Proffer, editor, and his wife, Elienda Proffer, president of Ardis Publishers in Ann Arbor, Mich., were informed Wednesday that they would not be granted visas to attend the book fair. Ardis publishes English- and Russian-language books and facilitates translations of Soviet works. A spokesman for the company said its emphasis was on literature.

Sam Cerberding, 8, of Gooding hopes to sink the ball for a big stuffed dog

Win a few, lose a lot, step right up

By STEPHANIE SCHORW

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — "Oooh-uh. Nice try. Try again. OOOOH-uh. The carnival man grins appreciatively as the 10-year-old heaves the baseball toward the battered bushel basket. "Almost! Try again. OH-UUUH! Sorry you didn't get it. Have a nice time, kid."

The carnal waves on the youngster, who half walks, half slides toward the next stand. "Try a toss, three balls for a buck. Hey kid, ya wanna play?"

That's the way it goes in the carnival games at the Twin Falls County Fair. It's a time to test your skill or test your luck. Fuzzy bears, raccoons and dinosaurs achieve a value-all-out-of-proportion to their stuffing. For the chance to cuddle one, eyes are strained, wrists sprained, nerves steeled and allowances shot.

"Ring one you win one," Evelyn shrills as kids peruse the knives, watches, do-dads and do-hickys strapped to the rows of slant-top blocks. She's worked in carnival life on and off for 53 years, and when she tried to retire she found herself "deacyling" and deteriorating. "On-a request from a friend she's back on the midway. A small lad in a baseball cap stares at the blocks. "Three rings for 50 cents, seven for a dollar," Evelyn tells him.

He lays down two quarters, she hands him three rings, and he hunches over the counter, wrist cocked. He misses one, two, three. Evelyn shows him how to toss, "Like a Frisbee." Hit it here and she presses the edge of the ring, tilted at an angle, against the block. He shoves two more quarters at her. He misses one, two, three.

Carnival time. As substantial as cotton candy, as nourishing as popcorn.

The balloon game is a favorite. Fifty cents and you throw darts until you hit one. If you're lucky, the tag behind the balloon will have an M (for medium), L (for large) or C (for choice). That means you get a medium or large stuffed animal or your choice. If you're not lucky, the tag will read S (for small) and you will get a small, consolation prize. Like a fake finger. A plastic elephant. A rubber creepy crawler. Most of the balloons popped contain S's.

Still, you get something every time. And you can build-up your stock of creepy crawlers and trade them in for a large prize.

"Oh, be a good one," begs the girl, whose rolled-up jeans dragged the ground. She clutches a pink raccoon as she throws a dart. "I popped it!" An S. Her boyfriend hands over another 50 cents. She throws. An S. But now her pile of fingers and deals has grown to 10 and she can turn them in (which she does with an impetuous "take these away.") For a grey-raccoon. "I spent 35 bucks for that raccoon," her boyfriend muses after some mental arithmetic. "Look, how darling," she coos, pressing the raccoon against his chest. He doesn't seem upset.

Balloon gameswoman Veda pulls off another popped balloon, reads the tag (an S) and hands the kid his prize. How can you tell which are the L's and C's, kids ask as they stand poised with darts in hand. You can't. "They're up there," she says and she takes down a few to show them and then mixes them around before she puts them back up. She says there has to be more S's than M's for the carnival to turn a profit. "Just like any business downtown," she asserts. "Where all care at," a kid asks. "On the board," she replies.

You can win a beer decal mirror if you shoot out a red star on a paper target. Toss a dime into a dish and win a glass. Stand a beer bottle on end with a ring hooked to a string, hooked to a stick and win a doghouse sized stuffed dog.

Under the carnival lights, all things look bright and beautiful. And all the wide-eyed kids are staring, staring, staring.

A youth wins a panda bear when he knocks over the milk bottles on his first try. (He says he's pitched baseball for eight years.) His 18-year-old friend tries for several dollars before giving up.

His friend says he has worked on and off at carnivals for nine years, as a kid helping his dad and on his own. He said the games he worked at were rigged: hoops were smaller than the basketball intended to go through them, rings could not fit over bottles, knockdown stuffed animals had pegs in their backs so they couldn't move.

"You know those ones with the baskets, you know like bushel baskets. They got springs in them so even if the ball goes in it bounces out," he said. "I know, I worked at one of those." He asked his name not be printed.

But he hasn't worked in a carnival for six years. And he still comes to play at this one, though he says he knows the odds are stacked against him.

Jim, who oversees a bowling game, doesn't like the suggestion that his game is anything but skill. "Ninety percent of the games here are games of skill, not games of luck," he says. "Thirty years' experience in the carnival business has taught him, he said, that those who call the carnival a ripoff are wrong, "because the biggest ripoff in the world is toilet paper."

The 18-year-old former carnal feels there are several no-question-about-it games based on skill. Like the dart game where you win a poster every time — get three and trade them in for a poster of your choice. Another winner is the ring toss where 50 cents gives you three chances to hit a paper target with darts to get an elongated soft drink bottle. Judging from the number of winners toting the twisted results, success was frequent.

The former carnal's father, who once ran a carnival booth, worked as what he called a "shill" when a young man. "Say you got a booth, you give me so much money in the back of the tent, I come up to play the game and put down my quarters. I start winning. So I'm winning and hey, the guy says, this man is a winner and the crowd gathers. Then I ease back and leave and go give the man his (prize) money back — I get a little bit. But I get them a crowd." "There's a gimmick for everyone," he says. "They're in there to make money."

But the "gimmicks" don't upset the father. It's all part of the carnival life, the lure of the elusive prizes, chasing that lady luck. "People go down to Jackpot and play a lot. They know where they play the percentages against them. Here, I'm trying to beat them, to win a prize for 50 cents that cost them 75 cents so I'm as much of a crook or a ripoff as they are."

"If you don't figure on losing money, don't play the other man's game," he said.

Furthermore, "why holler about something like this. If they close down the carnival, what the devil are we going to have here?"

Of the nearly 30 games at the show, "I'd like you to find a game of chance. We do not have one," said Dona Williams, one of the employees of Inland Empire, a local firm who puts on the carnival. "I can't drive a diesel truck. Some kids can't put a ring over a bottle."

Lady luck might make a child pop a balloon with an M, not an S. Practice makes a teen-ager successful in knocking-over-milk bottles. Marksmanship skill makes the marl a winner at the shooting gallery.

It took a squat man with a lady by his side and a grim expression as his face one try to rattlestat his red star target into oblivion. Without smiling, he was handed his mirror. Without smiling he handed it to his lady. She smiled shyly. He took her arm. They walked on without him cracking a grin. A small hint of satisfaction gleamed in his eye.

Amusement parks use live hooks

By ALJEAN HARMETZ

LOS ANGELES — How do amusement parks from Disneyland in California to Disney World in Florida make customers hook after they've ridden Space Mountain, Pirates of the Caribbean, the Great American Revolution or Rolling Thunder three times?

"You can't change the rides every six weeks, so you've got to find other ways of making people come back," said Charles Curson, an independent talent coordinator who looks for Knott's Berry Farm in Southern California and has recently had Sea World in San Diego, Old Chicago, and Hershey Park in Pennsylvania among his clients. "The year one of the biggest ways is live entertainment. Live entertainment is getting more important every year. Live hook-up performers are responsible for between 20 percent and 30 percent of our business."

Amusement parks are spending up to $1 million a year on live entertainment. Each theme park has daytime marching or Dixieland bands, shows or circuses. At Disneyland, live performances are on the payroll all summer, including eight troupe acts who dress up as Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. At night, live entertainment can mean a country and western show starring Charlie Pride in Six Flags Over Texas's 5,000-seat Music Mill or a disco show starring Chic in Great Escape in Jackson, N.J.

Booked into amusement parks this summer at prices ranging from $2,000 to $25,000 a night are such stars as the Mills Brothers, Sister Sledge, Bobbi Vinton, Letti Garrett, Loretta Lynn, Shari Lewis, Johnny Pacheco, B.J. Thomas, The Spinners, and Peaches and Herb. All the entertainment is free to customers who have bought their $1, $1.50 or $10 tickets to the park.

"Although the object of hiring live performers is the same everywhere, the strategies of how to use them vary. Just south of Los Angeles, Knott's Berry Farm has booked its Good Time Theater each Friday and Saturday night this summer with expensive entertainment including Jim Nabors, Vikki Carr and Dick Clark's "Good Ol' Rock 'n' Roll Revue," starring Bo Diddley and the Shirelles.

A few miles away at Disneyland, Jim Garber, director of marketing, said: "We don't bring in big names on a Friday or Saturday night basis during the summer when our park is crowded anyway. Over a million people come here each year and 5 million of them live within a 100-mile radius of the park. We use big names for a series of special events during the off-season, when we're dependent on the local market. On season, the talent is a whole new reason to come back."

Disneyland's biggest nighttime entertainment this summer is a twice-nightly Electrical Parade Pavilion, decorated with half a million tiny white lights, of fairy-tale characters such as Cinderella as well as animals from familiar Disney movies. New Jersey's Great Adventure, a Six Flags park situated midway between Philadelphia and New York City, spends $200,000 on name entertainers during its seven months of operation; most of that money is spent during the off-season.

The teen-age audience is now a prime target of the theme park. Last June, Disneyland held seven Grand Night parties for a total of 130,000 high school seniors. The parties took place between 11 p.m. and 5 a.m. in the accompaniment of Rose Royce, Arpeggio, G.O.G. and half a dozen other disco and rock groups.

In addition, there is a sub group of 11- to 14-year-olds for whom the parks also program. Teen shows starring such television performers as Scott Baio ("Happy Days"), Stephen Shortridge ("Welcome Back, Kotter"), Lou Ferrigno ("Incredible Hulk") and Willie Ames ("Eight Is Enough") have been successful at almost all the parks that have tried them.

At the other extreme, several of the parks — particularly in Southern California and Florida program special events with discounted tickets for the elderly. On Oct. 5, Disneyland will have a daytime event to be advertised in such publications as the Leisure World News. It will star performers from the Lawrence Welk television show. In November, Knott's will have a five-day soap opera festival with 12 soap stars to perform and answer questions. (Because men who work at night often become soap opera fans, Knott's always gets a hefty number of truck drivers and policemen in addition to the targeted elderly.)

summer, most parks program middle-of-the-road entertainers with special ethnic or pioneer days left for the off-season.

Uniformly the most successful special events are Christian music festivals, variously called Christian Family Day, Contempo, Jubilation, or Night of Joy. Last spring's Christian Family Day, starring the upbeat gospel singer Andrea Crouch, at Great Adventure brought so many letters that the park is planning a second Christian Festival on Sept. 29. Disney's Night of Joy always sells out its 20,000 tickets well ahead of time.

That the parks expect live entertainment to become an even more potent factor in their business is evident from the number of parks that are now building more and bigger theaters. At Magic Mountain next year, the new 1,500-seat theater will have air conditioning. Knott's recently spent $250,000 upgrading its Cloud 9 disco area.

Royal Ballet slates season

LONDON (UPI) — The Royal Ballet's ambitious program for the 1979-1980 season at the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden will begin with a performance Oct. 3 of Kenneth MacMillan's "Romeo and Juliet."

The season also will include a new one-act ballet by MacMillan and major revivals of ballet hits of the '60s, including Frederick Ashton's three-act "OnDine," "A Wedding Bouquet" and Leonide Massine's "Samzelle andango."

There will be a revised and refurbished production of "Swan Lake" and revivals of Ashton's "Cinderella," Bronislava Nijinska's "Les Biches," and Jerome Robbins' "Dances at a Gathering."

Other ballets of the season include "The Sleeping Beauty," "Mayerling," "La Fuite en Egypte," "The Dream," "Symphonies Variations," "Jazz Calendar," "Les Sylphides," "Les Noces," "Four Schumann Pieces," "A Month in the Country," "Elite Synchronisms," "La Fin du Jour," "Voluntaries," "The Four Seasons" and "The Concert."

Conference to revise global radio spectrum

By JOHN A. CALLOTT

GENEVA, Switzerland (UPI) — Freedom of information will be a key issue when nations of the world gather in Geneva this month to review and revise slices of the global radio spectrum. Developing countries want a bigger share of the cake so they can get their news out. Communist countries want to restrict foreign news getting in.

Western countries strongly oppose any move that would limit the free flow of information around the world.

But U.S. officials and the International Telecommunications Union (ITU), the U.N. specialized agency hosting the 10-week conference starting Sept. 24, hope and believe the meeting will be more technical than political.

"Everyone will suffer if it doesn't succeed," says Dexter Anderson, telecommunications attaché at the U.S. diplomatic mission in Geneva. "We expect success and are cautiously optimistic that the conference won't get too political."

Founded in 1865 and thus the world's oldest international agency, the ITU is a World Administrative Radio Conference like this one every 20 years.

Its purpose is to review and revise where necessary the allocation of radio frequencies to all varieties of radio services — broadcasting, maritime, space communications, radio astronomy and the like.

It does not allocate firm numbers of frequencies to individual countries — an idea often mooted by communist states but always rejected by the West. "While more people will be fighting this time over which frequencies get used for what purpose, we expect the table of allocations to look very much like the present one," Anderson says. He notes that the ITU, like most of the conference delegates, is highly conservative. Delegates take an engineering approach to change "and are as slow and cautious as is the church in certifying a miracle."

But the Soviet Union may well introduce politics in allocating frequencies for direct satellite broadcasting and satellite sensing using sensors in space to observe ground activities.

With direct satellite telecasting now near, Moscow insists that this be done only with the prior consent of a country where the programs could be received.

"Some regimes fear admitting information and ideas that might endanger their security," ac-ording to a background document prepared by the U.S. State Department. Other countries believe foreign television programs would destroy their cultural heritage.

The Soviet Union, like other countries including Argentina and Brazil, also wants remote sensing tied to a prior consent clause. Mongolia, for example, says a country's natural resources come under national sovereignty, and that country's permission should be obtained before information on its resources, obtained from satellite sensors, is disseminated.

Washington and other Western nations firmly reject such restrictions on the free-flow of information, saying it would violate both the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Helsinki Agreement.

Both direct satellite broadcasting and satellite sensing are under debate in the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. There has been deadlock in the committee since talks began in 1972.

Jamming is not expected to be discussed at Geneva — unless Moscow provokes an argument.

"It is clear that the Soviet leadership does not intend to modify its policy of selective controls over information flow from outside sources," the State Department paper says.

The continued jamming of Radio Liberty and other stations, the crackdown on dissidents for contacts with Western newsmen and other restrictions on information flow underscore this policy.

But Western experts remain uncertain how this policy will influence Soviet strategy at the radio conference.

The north-south dialogue forms another backdrop to the meeting, with developing countries demanding a larger share of the radio-spectrum-for-their-broadcasting.

They argue that advanced nations "enjoy" 90 percent of the entire spectrum, an argument rejected by the developed nations on grounds that frequencies are not allocated to countries but to different radio services.

Developing countries want more frequencies for shortwave broadcasting, but advanced states want more shortwave bands transferred to other uses such as satellite broadcasting.

More equitable access to the spectrum can be achieved within the present structure as it now exists, the United States maintains. Developing countries can better be helped by promoting up-to-date technology so they can use more modern equipment.

Classic music by satellite

By SHARON RUTENBERG

CHICAGO (UPI) — Radio's first "superstation" was already unique.

WFMT-FM in Chicago, one of a handful of financially successful classical music outlets, rejects advertising jingles that might offend its Beethoven listeners. It varies the length of its newscasts depending on the amount of news.

Now it has gone national, bouncing its signal off a satellite so it can be heard on cable systems in 49 states.

"We are the first radio station that is being sent by a satellite across the country for distribution to cable systems," said station President Raymond Nordstrand.

The signal is beamed to the Satcom I satellite, orbiting 22,300 miles above the equator, and transmitted to cable systems "at a price of a penny a subscriber a month" by United Video Inc. of Tulsa, Okla. There are already four television "superstations" available to viewers in all states except Hawaii.

"They chose us because of the uniqueness of our programming... classical music and with high audio standards we have that does not exist in other communities," Nordstrand said.

The station will not be paid for providing its broadcasts to the cable systems, but will benefit from "a larger audience which may ultimately mean more advertising revenue for us," he said.

The station was already carried by more than 30 cable systems in six Midwest states with more than one third of a million subscribers.

More than 80 percent of the station's music is classical. The remaining programs are comprised of drama, poetry, prose, discussion, folk music, live concerts. It originates Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Chicago Lyric Opera and Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra broadcasts heard on more than 300 stations across the country.

It is not uncommon to hear a WFMT newscaster announce: "There is no news of sufficient importance — here is the weather."

Although it might lose some ad revenues, WFMT has chosen to reject advertising jingles.

"It would be an intrusion and an insult to give them a jingle after they've just heard a symphony," Nordstrand said.

The station, owned by the non-profit Educational Television Association, was established in 1951. It owns Chicago Magazine, which has a circulation of more than 200,000 — the largest of any city monthly in the country. The magazine, which provides a good share of the station's profits, grew out of a program guide started 10 years ago.

Miss America nets high stakes, ratings

By LAWRENCE LAURENT
©The Washington Post

Some women's groups denounce the Miss America Pageant as a disgrace to womanhood. It always runs too long. And the contestant I choose during the semi-finals as a certain winner is always a runner-up.

Despite such shortcomings—the "Miss America Pageant" unfailingly attracts one of the largest TV audiences of the year. Last year, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co.'s ratings, about 35 million persons saw "all or part" of the pageant.

The reasons for the pageant's success are not hard to find. It's been going on for 59 years, and the stakes have gotten progressively higher. In addition to the prideful boasts that a state with a winner gets to make is the briskly paced production, filled with nostalgia and beauty; plus good musical production numbers.

Albert A. Marks Jr., the executive producer of the pageant, says that the scholarship awards at the local, state and national contest level now surpass $2 million a year. At the top of the list, of course, is the new Miss America prize. She gets a $20,000 scholarship (and will earn more than $50,000 in public-appearance fees during her 12-month reign).

At the bottom is the contestant who comes to Atlantic City but never wins any special prizes or advances to the semi-finals. Just for representing a state, "a contestant gets a scholarship award of $1,000. In between are some pretty good prizes, too.

Other national awards include $15,000 for the first runner-up, $10,000 for the second; $7,000 for the third, $5,000 for the fourth and $3,000 for each of the five other semi-finalists. In addition are $2,500 awards to talent preliminary winners and $1,500 to swimsuit preliminary winners (if they are not included in the 10 semi-finalist awards). The pageant also issues eight non-finalist scholarships of $2,000 for "most talented contestants."
