PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS

Editor's note: This is the last of a two-part series that examines the growth of parochial schools in this area and how public schools have been affected.

TWIN FALLS — Parents turning to parochial schools face a serious hurdle in finding a quality church-related school for their children: Idaho has no system for rating or approving private or parochial schools.

It's a problem rooted in the American concept of liberty. Under both the state and federal constitutions, the state has a responsibility for ensuring an adequately educated citizenry. Yet, the separation of church and state in the Constitution makes even minimal regulation of parochial schools a hotly debated issue.

Nevertheless, Jerry Evans, the state's superintendent of public instruction, announced earlier this month that he will propose a bill in the upcoming session of the Legislature that would allow local school boards to decide whether private and parochial schools in their districts are doing their jobs adequately.

Evans' proposal would allow local boards to analyze the quality of education at non-accredited parochial schools in their districts. The boards would determine if children in the schools were being taught at a level comparable to the public system.

"We are not interested in regulating, controlling or directing these schools," Evans says. "We do intend to find out if the children in these schools are receiving comparable instruction to that offered in the public schools."

Evans says he is most concerned with very small educational operations, usually run by parents for their own children, that may be "masquerading" as schools or academies to avoid the scrutiny of the local districts.

Under state law, parents who teach their children at home must submit to local school boards to determine if the parents are offering an education comparable to that offered in public schools. Parents calling themselves a "school" or "academy" if, however, are not subject to this examination, and the state has no way of knowing how well the children are educated.

Evans says that he realizes that the bill treads dangerously close to the issue of separation of church and state, but he feels the state has a responsibility under the law to ensure that its citizens are educated adequately.

Superintendent Bob Pratt of Buhl School District, however, doesn't think this is the correct way to test the competency of parochial schools.

"I agree with the intent of the bill," Pratt says. "But the laxity of the terminology leaves us no better off. It's a foot in the door, but doesn't quite make it."

Pratt says that words such as "analyze" in the bill, referring to the local boards' scrutiny of parochial schools, are vague and would give any school board trying to check on a parochial school insurmountable legal problems.

BUHL — Parochial educators routinely say their schools are not in competition with the public schools. But if they are pressed, they will admit that if there is any competition, it's healthy for the educational system as a whole.

"Competition is good," says Robert Berry, the principal at Twin Falls Christian Academy. "Freedom of education is good. The public schools have become bogged down in a monopolistic endeavor. They've lost touch with people."

"We see ourselves as an alternative to the public system," says Jerry Smith, the principal at Clover Lutheran School south of Filer. "We aren't threatened by them, and we hope they aren't threatened by us."

The competition of three or four Christian schools drawing from the Buhl School District, however, has done more than threaten that system: it has hurt it financially.

"Money-wise, probably it has cost this district $44,000 to $54,000 in lost revenue," says Superintendent Bob Pratt. "It hurt badly. With a small school, we can't easily reduce the number of teachers."

Pratt says he bases his estimates on the state's funding-unit system. One funding unit, worth $23,000, equals 22 students at the elementary level and 16 students at the high-school level, enrollment-wise. When the Church of Christ-Mennonite school opened in the district last year, Pratt figures that he lost 28 students alone.

Although he has no hard figures, Superintendent Sheldon Kovarsky of the Filer School District says that it is obvious that his district and every other district in the state have lost state funding units, along with the students who have been placed in the parochial schools.

"We have Clover-School-near-here-with-over-100 students," he says. "We get most of the kids back in high school, but we've lost them in elementary."

"It's an excellent school," Kovarsky says. "But it's a parochial school, and it does take kids away from us."

Other administrators in the Magic Valley, however, say that the impact of parochial schools is minimal. According to assistant superintendent Gary Piller of the Twin Falls School District, the consistent growth pattern in that district has minimized the effect of the parochial-school exodus.

Superintendent Morgan Hunt of the Cassia County School District, also says that his district really has not noticed a funding problem from the small percentage of the district's 4,900 students who have left the public schools.

U.S. grants defecting Polish envoy asylum

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Polish Ambassador Romuald Spasowski, assailing a "reign of terror" in his homeland, said Sunday he is taking political asylum in the United States.

He said he took the step so he can fight for freedom.

Spasowski called on Americans to "show your solidarity" for the struggling people of Poland.

"Long live Poland," Spasowski said, his voice breaking at the end of an emotional statement televised across the United States.

"Don't be silent, Americans," he said. "To defend freedom is your tradition. Show your solidarity, show your support, show your humanitarian support to those who are in need at this hour."

The 61-year-old diplomat, whose defection had been revealed only a few hours earlier by Secretary of State Alexander Haig, spoke at the State Department. He revealed new details of the oppression and "state of war" imposed in Poland.

Haig said President Reagan promptly ordered asylum and protection for Spasowski, his wife, daughter and son-in-law after the envoy made the request Saturday.

The tall, bespectacled, sandy-haired diplomat, sporting a goatee said he made his decision to defect "the moment" he learned of the arrest of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who he called "the beloved leader of Solidarity."

"This is my expression of solidarity with him," Spasowski said in soft but firm tones.

In Poland Sunday, striking miners dynamited a shaft, holding 1,300 men underground and threatened to blow up a second exit to the mine near Katowice if troops intervene.

Martial law authorities dismissed striking shipyard workers in the Baltic port of Szczecin and replaced them with troops and police to keep production moving, according to Swedish Red Cross Secretary General Anders Wijkman.

Travelers returning from Poland also reported workers had seized shipyards and had gone on strike at some 200 other factories.

A State Department spokesman said there had been unconfirmed reports that a Polish diplomat in Tokyo and some Polish U.N.

diplomats were seeking asylum in New York. He said he had no knowledge of other members of the Polish Embassy in Washington seeking asylum.

Spasowski appealed to his colleagues in Warsaw's foreign service. "Be Polish, be true to yourself," he said. "Do whatever your conscience tells you to do."

Denouncing the crackdown on the Solidarity labor union, Spasowski spoke of thousands of Poles being imprisoned without food or heat, while others are being shipped outside the country to camps.

Spasowski — dressed in a jet black three-piece suit, black tie and white shirt — and speaking solemnly from hand-written notes — also made clear he sees the Soviet Union behind the repression of Polish freedom. "There are indications this is not an internal Polish issue," he said.

But he counseled against violence, declaring, "The only solution is a political solution." He called for three-party talks involving the Warsaw government, the Catholic church and Solidarity to resolve the crisis. "I cannot be silent. I cannot have any association... with the authorities responsible for this brutality and inhumanity," he said.

"I will do everything possible to assist the people of Poland in their hour of need. I have asked the government of the United States to give shelter and political asylum to me and my family," he said.

Mindful of his American audience, Spasowski said, "As you sit in front of your TV sets... think about these Poles, think about their lot... Remember they are the sons and daughters of my country..."

"A week ago a state of war was imposed upon Poland, a state of war against the Polish people. Under the umbrella of the military, specially trained and security police began an unprecedented reign of terror," he said.

He declared the fact that "Solidarity members have been arrested in their offices and at night at home" with "unique precision" and the fact that communications have been cut off.

Spasowski referred to his notes as he spoke.

Winter arrives officially this afternoon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — That shortest day of the year is upon us Northern Hemisphere again — which is a way of saying winter is upon us.

At precisely 3:51 p.m. MST today, the sun will be precisely over the Tropic of Capricorn (a shade over 23 degrees south latitude), kicking off summer in the Southern Hemisphere and sparing its teardrop near 10% of the globe.

Winter Solstice is the fancy term for this — solstice being derived from an old Middle English word meaning when the sun stands still.

So, up here, now, the weather's going to be getting worse before it gets better.

For although sun now will be making its way back north, the shortage of warmth has delayed effects and the upper latitudes will be inflating their frigid winds on the lower ones — all the way down to such places as southern Florida, at times.

Just as this is the season of seasons for such folk as skiers, skafers and waterfowl shooters, it is the low point of the year for those who would avidly agree with Shakespeare's linking the words "winter" and "discontent."

And as if to mark the change of seasons, a blast of Arctic cold cut a killing swath from the Great Lakes to southern Florida Sunday, damaging tender citrus crops and wrecking Sunbelt vacations.

Torrential rains flooded towns in the mid-Pacific Coast, washed out roads and forced more than 1,000 people to the high ground.

At least five deaths were blamed on the latest weather assault, two in Alabama and three in California, the day before winter's official debut.

Northern Indiana continued digging out from a storm that dumped nearly 2 feet of snow. Bitter cold, plunging to 11 below zero at Indianapolis, left a sheet of ice on some highways.

Freezing rain and sleet coated portions of western and central Iowa with ice crusts, shutting down airports, closing highways and causing numerous traffic accidents.

Nearly all of Lakeview, Ore., only about 15 miles north of the California border was flooded because of mountain runoff from nearly 2 inches of rain. Sandbags were stacked to contain 3-foot floodwaters in Bullard Creek.

Flooding also was reported in Medford, Ore., as water washed over the banks of Bear Creek.

More than a half-foot of rain deluged Northern California Saturday and early Sunday, forcing about 1,000 people to flee from the Russian River resort. The river hit the 28-foot mark at the Guerneville Bridge, 7 inches above the flood stage.

The River Road, the last open road to or out of the national area 50 miles north of San Francisco was closed because of 6 1/2 inches of rain that fell in 12 hours.

Three people were killed in the storm. Among the dozens of closed roads were coastal Highway 1 north of Jenner and main Highway 101 at Leggett.

CIA joins search for general

VERONA, Italy (UPI) — CIA agents and anti-terrorism experts joined the search Sunday for a U.S. Army general kidnapped by Red Brigades guerrillas. Italian investigators said the victim may have been taken out of Italy.

Brig-Gen James Dozier, highest ranking American officer at NATO's armored forces headquarters for southern Europe, was abducted from his south-floor apartment in Verona Thursday evening. Italian investigators said they were looking for the possibility the Red Brigades were holding 50-year-old general in a hideout outside Italy.

The American agents, some from the CIA and some from the Defense Intelligence Agency, arrived from Washington Saturday and interrogated Dozier's 47-year-old wife Judith into the early hours of Sunday, investigators said.

Home fires claim 9 victims

By United Press International
Home fires killed at least nine people Sunday, including seven children, in Chicago, upstate New York and Philadelphia.

Four children were killed and 11 other family members injured in the blaze on Chicago's far south side after relatives had gathered under the same roof to celebrate the Christmas holidays.

In Delaware, a mother and her three young children were killed in a blaze touched off by a wood-burning stove in their home trailer.

The dead children in Chicago, all found on the upper floor of the 1 1/2 story wood frame house, were identified as Renaldo Leonard, 9 months; Marlon Leonard, 2, O'Quinn Leonard, 4, and Anthony Hines, 8. Firefighters said the blaze began in the kitchen and rapidly spread through the heavy curtains.

All died of smoke inhalation, said a spokesman for Roseland Community Hospital where the 11 injured victims were taken for treatment.

Accident injures teenager

KIMBERLY — Samuel Alaniz, 16, of Twin Falls, was in fair condition Sunday after suffering injuries in a one-car rollover early Saturday morning.

Idaho State Police said that Alaniz apparently lost control of his car on Idaho 50, north of Kimberly, just after midnight Friday. The vehicle rolled over three times before coming to rest beside the highway.

Alaniz was taken to Magic Valley Memorial Hospital. State police have cited him for driving while intoxicated.

Balloonists off on voyage

JAIPIUR, India (UPI) — Two U.S. balloonists lifted off this morning above the camel and nomads of Rajasthan's desert on a dangerous, freezing attempt to be the first people to circle the earth in a balloon.

Amazed turbaned camel-riders watched the silver "Jules-Verne" balloon — with its emergency parachute missing — lift off at 5:35 p.m. MST Sunday, cranking its ropes above the silent desert and yanking millionaire pilot Maxie Anderson and co-pilot Don Ida into the windy sky.

The two men hope to make a 17,000-mile journey from Jaipur, capital of Rajasthan state, east across India, China, Japan, the Pacific Ocean, America, the Atlantic, Europe, and the Mediterranean.

Twin Falls child wounded

TWIN FALLS — A 6-year-old Twin Falls child was reported in fair condition Sunday following an accidental shooting.

Twin Falls police said that Dan Baker, the son of Pam Baker of 1966 11th Ave. E., was shot just below the right eye with a .22-caliber pistol late Saturday afternoon.

He and his brother, Novie Baker, 7, found the gun in a closet while they were at the home of a family friend, Dan Thornquist, 351 Fifth Ave. N.

Police said the boys were playing with the gun when it accidentally discharged. The accident occurred at 5:57 p.m. Saturday.

The boy is hospitalized at Magic Valley Memorial Hospital.

Concert in White House

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Eight young singers with the New York City Opera performed for President and Mrs. Reagan Sunday in a holiday celebration that concluded with the singing of traditional Christmas carols.

The concert was the second in a series of four performances featuring young artists by the Public Broadcasting Service, which taped it for airing later Sunday evening.

200 Haitians riot in camp

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — Two hundred stone-throwing Haitians rioted at the Fort Alcazar federal detention camp for illegal immigrants before dawn Sunday, injuring three federal security officials, police said.

Some of the refugees have been at the camp since it opened last August and their lawyers say the Haitians are deeply disturbed by their enforced idleness in the small fenced-in areas they are kept in.

Pilot discovers rescue party on glacier not hallucination

TALKEETNA, Alaska (UPI) — Pilot Ed Hommer thought he was hallucinating when rescuers climbed over the icy ridge.

They arrived to save him and another man who survived the crash of their plane and four days of blizzard conditions on Mount McKinley.

Their two companions died. "It was a nightmare. Reality in a super-heavy dose," was how rescue climber Keith Niytray described the scene.

Hommer looked at me and said "By God, it's good to see you." He thought at first he was hallucinating," Niytray said.

The drama that began when Hommer's Cessna 185 hit a blast of turbulence and crashed against a glacial wall atop North America's highest peak ended Sunday with a mixture of joy and sorrow for the town of Talkeetna.

The word spread quickly that Hommer, 26, a pilot for Hudson Flying Service — of Talkeetna, — and Mike Klausner, 30, of Darlington, Ind., had been pulled off the mountain Saturday afternoon by a dedicated hometown rescue crew known as the "Mountain Maniacs."

But the four-day effort to get to the wreckage came too late for Hommer's brother-in-law, Dan Hartman, 30, of Talkeetna, who died hours after the crash, and a fourth passenger, Pat Scanlon, 25, of the Anchorage area, who died on the mountain of unknown causes.

Hommer and Klausner were carried up a 900-foot ridge from the north side of Kahiltna Glacier and lowered down the equally steep, south side 800 vertical feet, where helicopters took them to Providence Hospital in Anchorage.

Dr. Bill Mills said both men were suffering severely frostbitten feet and possible other injuries, but their overall condition was "very good."

The bodies of the two dead men were also carried down to the helicopter base camp and flown to Talkeetna.

Niytray, George Orman and Arthur Mannix of the "Mountain Maniacs" were first to reach the crash site.

Hommer related the story of the four-day ordeal to Niytray, saying he lost control of the Cessna 185 about 1 p.m. last Tuesday — when a "sheer wind" blew the plane belly-first into the side of the glacier, tearing off one wing and a door and breaking the windows.

The impact knocked the four men when they awoke, several hours later. "It was dark and well below zero in a howling blizzard. There were four sleeping bags and eight blankets on board, as well as emergency food."

According to Hommer's account, Hartman died of internal injuries the first night. Scanlon crawled to the back of the wreckage the next day and died there of unknown causes.

The first night, the plane — perched on a 35 degree slope — slid 150 feet down the glacier, to within 20 yards of a sheer, 2,000-foot drop. In the slide, Hommer lost his boots, which resulted in severe frostbite.

The Mountain Maniacs climbed for three days through bitter cold, donning miners' lamps to ascend in darkness to reach the plane.

The weather cleared Saturday, allowing them to climb over the ridge and descend down the steep slope to the north side to rescue survivors.

Fresh snow was chest high around the plane from the blizzard of the night before, and the three Maniacs had to shovel a 150-foot trail to where they could use fixed lines and a pulley system to carry the men up a steep 300-foot slope.

Rescue reinforcements from Alaska Rescue Group and the U.S. Army were there to handle the descent to the helicopters.

"We had gone up and over the ridge and gotten to the crash site two hours before the others, but they showed up right on time, just like the cavalry. They were a sight to see," Niytray said.

Gates stop intruder

White House police and a bomb disposal team inspect a car which rammed the northeast gate of the White House Sunday morning. A Secret Service spokesman said Walter Witwer, 21, of Grayslake, Ill., was arrested and charged with destruction of government property. Witwer was treated at a hospital for minor injuries.

U.S. seeking united front

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A U.S. delegation was dispatched to Europe Sunday to line up a united Western front on the Polish crisis.

At the same time, the United States scored a psychological coup with the defection of the Polish ambassador in Washington.

While key Reagan administration figures refused to tip their hand on possible American reactions to the military crackdown in Poland, they made clear that Soviet complicity in the suppression of the Solidarity labor union figures prominently in U.S. thinking.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger also greeted with moderation—a blistering response from Israel to the U.S. condemnation of its annexation of the Golan Heights.

Lawrence Eagleburger, assistant secretary for European affairs, was scheduled to head a U.S. group to Europe Sunday evening for consultation with U.S. allies on creating a coordinated strategy to deal with Poland.

A State Department spokesman did not have Eagleburger's precise itinerary, but said "several capitals" would be visited, as well as the NATO headquarters in Brussels, Belgium.

A key consideration in the Polish situation is the deteriorating economic condition of the Soviet bloc nation.

The United States has suspended food aid to Poland, and there has been discussion of how to deal with the Warsaw government's $27 billion debt to Western nations.

Another member of the delegation, Marc Leland, assistant secretary of the Treasury for international affairs, said in a telephone interview, "We are just going to touch base with our counterparts there."

The State Department spokesman said the ambassadors from those countries—not visited by the Eagleburger group will be consulted in Washington starting today. The meetings are to be wrapped up before a NATO meeting scheduled for Wednesday in Brussels.

Questioned about possible American responses to the crackdown in Poland, Haig said, "With respect to actions that will be taken in the future, either with regards to the Polish government or the Soviet Union, I would prefer to let events speak for themselves."

But he reiterated the administration's belief that the Soviet Union stands behind the suppression of Solidarity.

Weinberger, appearing on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," said the United States is considering several approaches, "all with a goal of trying to restore these beginning glimmerings of freedom that had so aroused the hope and gratitude of the world."

Weinberger also said that several possible moves against the Soviet Union "are under more active consideration than they were a couple of weeks ago."

Lisa, Andrei reunited after flight to Boston

BOSTON (UPI) — Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov's suggestion in law, Lisa Alexeyeva, died a three-year separation from her husband Sunday with a reunion won by a 17-day hunger strike by the Nobel laureate and his wife.

Miss Alexeyeva, 26, was met at the customs station at Logan International Airport by her husband, Andrei Semyonov, 25, and other relatives. They spent about a half-hour in private before emerging for a brief statement to more than 50 reporters clustered at the airport's podiumistic international terminal. "I'm very grateful to everyone who came to meet us. I am very grateful to the American government," said Miss Alexeyeva, who clutched a pair of red carnations in one hand.

"The couple declined requests to embrace or kiss for the cameras and did not touch each other during a 10-minute news conference."

Miss Alexeyeva said she was concerned that Sakharov and his wife Yelena Bonner may be in for more harsh treatment by the Soviet government because of their hunger strike. The nuclear physicist, who won the Nobel Peace Prize for his human rights activities, was co-inventor of the Soviet hydrogen bomb.

"There are thousands of people who are not able to reach their relatives... hundreds of prisoners of conscience," she said. "And Sakharov is still in his illegal exile and we don't know what awaits him."

Miss Alexeyeva arrived from Paris at 12:24 p.m. MST and emerged from the customs station shortly after 1 p.m.

She wore a gray sweater, brown corduroy pants and a lacy white shawl, and had her black hair pulled back in a tight pony tail.

Semyonov, appearing earlier at a rally at Faneuil Hall in support of the Polish people, said his parents could be in for more trouble.

"It's possible they'll be persecuted more now than they were before the hunger strike," said Semyonov, a teaching assistant and graduate student at Brandeis University in suburban Waltham.

Rather, he would prefer to see parochial schools accredited by one of the regional or national accreditation associations. These associations are not controlled by state or federal governments, and therefore, they would avoid blurring the separation of church and state, while still weeding out the ineffective parochial and private schools.

Superintendent James Sawin of Twin Falls says that his district has a good working relationship with the parochial schools, and he fears that a law on the order of what Evans has proposed would mean a great deal of extra work for the local boards.

However, Evans says that he does not think the bill would pose an unreasonable amount of work for the local boards, which would have to check only the schools that already are not accredited by the state.

Accreditation is a voluntary option on the part of any private or parochial school. In the Magic valley, however, the majority of the parochial schools are not accredited.

The process a local board would follow under the new law, Evans says, would be identical to the one already used to check home schools. And this, he says, has not posed any insurmountable problems to the districts.

Some parochial school administrators in the area, however, feel the law would cause a serious entanglement of church and state.

Jerry Smith, at Clover Lutheran School south of Piler, says he can see a need for some control over parents teaching in their homes and calling themselves a school, but he has some doubts whether the state, through the local boards, is the appropriate way to do it.

Another problem, Smith says, is that parochial schools use textbooks that carry a Christian message, along with the academic content, which would not be found on the state's lists of approved texts.

"There is a fear that the state could interfere with what books we use," Smith says. "We want to choose books that teach Christian values."

He says that the Missouri Lutheran Synod has an accreditation service, which he feels would be a more appropriate authority on the quality of his school. And with all but one of Clover's teachers already certified by the state, the school easily could be accredited under the normal state process anyway, he says. Sandee Nelson, the principal of St. Nicholas Catholic School in Rupert, doesn't see meeting state accreditation as a problem. St. Nicholas was accredited last year and probably will be again this year when the process is completed.

"We make an effort to be an accredited school," she says. "We feel that it is important."

Parents appreciate the fact that their children are going to an accredited school, she says. But accreditation can be difficult for parochial schools to get and maintain, Nelson says, because they don't have the funds to provide the things that accreditation is based upon.

Particularly difficult to find, she says, are certified administrators who will work for the low salaries that many parochial schools pay.

She says the state accreditation process presented no problems for her school in the area of religious training or books. St. Nicholas tries to use the same books as the Mindoka School District.

But Robert Berry, the principal of Twin Falls Christian Academy, feels that any state or local government regulation of parochial schools would be an infringement of their rights.

"The concept of freedom in America must be upheld," says Berry, who believes that Evans' proposal is a good example of government over-involvement in the affairs of its citizens.

Twin Falls Christian Academy would face an especially hard road to accreditation under present state regulations, since none of the school's teachers can qualify for certification in Idaho, he says. They all hold degrees from Bible colleges in the East that are not recognized for certification requirements in Idaho.

Berry says that the academy will soon apply for accreditation through the American Association of Christian Schools, a non-denominational Christian organization.

Use of retirement funds a bad idea

The State of Idaho could do many things to aid in the sale of the beleaguered Bunker Hill Co.

But using state insurance and public employee retirement funds as a mortgage investment is not one of them.

The idea for investing those funds in Bunker Hill in order to make the sale of the firm more attractive, came from Gov. John Evans. Evans, understandably, wants the state to consider all the options it has at its command to prevent the company from being closed.

The biggest hurdle facing three businessmen who have secured an option to buy the company for $65 million is time. In fact, they have only until Dec. 31 to exercise that option for themselves or find another investment group.

Idaho would be making a big mistake if it rushed in and offered those retirement funds to shore up the deal. There is no guarantee that Bunker Hill could sustain itself as a wise investment, even if a buyer is found and costs are cut.

The risk is simply too great. And as such, Idaho has no business risking retirement funds. Besides, the money doesn't even belong to the state.

But the 'risk' here really is irrelevant. The state, as an entity, simply should not get involved in private enterprise in this manner.

We agree with Rep. Ralph Omstead, R-Twin Falls, who says that the state's role should be to offer tax incentives to Idaho's entire mining industry, Bunker Hill included. Such incentives might make not only make it easier to find a buyer for Bunker Hill, but breathe new life into the entire industry.

But here again, time is not on the state's side. Tax incentives would need the approval of the Legislature, which won't start meeting until the second week in January.

The fortunes of Bunker Hill, at this point, will rest on the merits of the case.

Nobody wants to see the mine close and thousands of jobs and millions in state taxes lost. But in less than two weeks, somebody's going to have to be convinced the risk is worth taking.

IRAs are A-OK

One of the better actions taken by Congress in recent years is the liberalization of individual retirement rules.

Those rules take effect Jan. 1, 1982. Anyone can thus invest in an Individual Retirement Account (IRA), whether covered by a private pension plan or not.

The new tax rules mean that individuals can begin socking away money now in a variety of plans and rates of return. Not only is that annual contribution tax free but it remains so until retirement when the funds are withdrawn. But by then most retirees are in a lower tax bracket.

There are numerous advantages to IRAs and a plethora of plans available to the individual. Our advice is to carefully read everything you can about IRAs (we devoted most of a page to the subject Sunday), then seek out an investment counselor at any bank or financial institution.

The important thing to remember is that now individuals have more control than ever over their retirement plans. Starting Jan. 1, you can begin to exercise it.

Moscow wins its point in Poland as NATO cowers

© The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The British prime minister, disappointed by the German chancellor's indifference to proper standards of debate, urged him to try harder to present "well-marshalled arguments." Although there is, I believe, only one photograph of Hitler smiling (it is of him examining a model of the first Volkswagen), surely he smiled broadly about Neville Chamberlain's suggestion. But so broader than Brezhnev must be smiling about the West's reaction to events in Poland.

The efficiency of Moscow's move, through its friends in Warsaw, is not just in its Hitlerian dispatch. (He, too, worked on weekends, occupying the Rhineland and the Anschluss.) With a single stroke, Moscow has secured the northern flank of the Warsaw Pact. It has set NATO nations to doing the one thing they do in unison, making noises like the cracking of empty, dried corn husks.

The London Times' report of Britain's declaration of war in 1914 began: "Back in 1870. . . . A report on today's condition of NATO might begin: "Back in 1945. . . ." or "Back in 1961. . . ." or "Back in 1975. . . ."

Some people, flinching from the facts about today's moral abdication, will argue that the military decisions that led to the Yalta agreement in 1945 made "understandable," even "inevitable," NATO's passive acceptance of the Berlin Wall in 1961. And they will argue that the acceptance made redundant the ratification at Helsinki in 1975 of Soviet hegemony over Eastern Europe. But such argument is a symptom of the degeneration of political will that is the real explanation for the West's supine reaction to events in Poland. NATO nations seem incapable of any common theme other than approbation for Russia's "non-involvement," "a patent fiction.

What is outrageous is the absence of outrage. The protests are perfunctory to the point of politeness. Imagine what would be the reactions of NATO governments if the Greek or Spanish military imposed dictatorship. Salvador Allende was overthrown in 1973? Some governments broke diplomatic relations with Chile before they knew who had done what, or why.

Given the primacy of commercial values in the societies that achieved prosperity behind NATO's shield when it really was a shield, it is hard to imagine what "grave consequences" the NATO nations are threatening in the event that Soviet involvement in Poland becomes so conspicuous that it can not be obligingly denied in the West.

NATO governments could inflict severe economic punishment on Poland's tormentors and could, by so doing, summon their citizens to a renewed seriousness about the struggle they are in. But the Russians know from the Reagan administration's words and deeds how much the administration dislikes grain embargoes and other interferences with free trade. And this year there are no Olympic medals to go.

With West Germany, the heart of NATO, positioning itself as an intermediary between the alliance and its adversary, what remains of the alliance? Soviet troubles — in Poland, Afghanistan and domestically — have given rise in the West to a cottage industry in the wishful-thinking business, if courage industry producing predictions that the Soviet empire will soon crumble like stale Sultana cheese. But what shows signs of crumbling is the alliance that was called into existence to contain the Soviet Empire.

Henry Kissinger notes that many NATO nations seem to believe that their identity should be measured by their diplomatic distance from America. Increasingly, the leaders and publics of Europe and America lack the emotional attachment to NATO that once derived from personal involvement in the creation of a response to danger that produced the alliance. NATO nations are beginning to gauge the success of their diplomacy by their relations with Russia, rather than with members of the alliance. And, Kissinger says, negotiations have come to be considered psychiatric exercises for establishing an atmosphere of goodwill.

The end of U.S. strategic nuclear superiority has meant the end of the ability to use threats of general war to enforce regional security. Europe increasingly rejects the concept of nuclear war for regional defense, and refuses to invest sufficiently in conventional forces to make any other war-fighting plan credible. As Kissinger says, if peace is the sole goal of NATO nations, the alliance lacks the political coherence that is a prerequisite for its continuation, and the future belongs to the power that is prepared to threaten war.

NATO is in imminent danger of becoming as ornamental as most modern monarchs. It has been said that modern monarchs are to live what illustrations are to books. But illustrations are pleasant luxuries and do no harm, which can not be said of an alliance that perpetuates delusions of security.

New twist to right to work issue

If right-to-work legislation is introduced again in 1982, no one will be surprised.

But there is a different twist this year — and it's coming from the Oregon side of the Snake River.

Nurses at Holy Rosary Hospital in Ontario, Ore. have been striking for a week and at the bottom of their bucket of grievances is the old right-to-work question: should workers be required to join a union as a condition of employment?

The administration said no, so the nurses, represented by Oregon's local Teamsters, took a hike.

This walkout could encourage similar action by unions at Idaho hospitals unless the Legislature enacts a right-to-work law this session, claims Idaho Freedom to Work Committee co-chairman Peter Bratt.

His scenario goes something like this: Nurses at an Idaho hospital decide they too want 100-percent participation in their union, and therefore include this as one of their negotiated items when contracting time comes. If administration fails to agree, the nurses walk out, leaving the ill and injured fend for themselves.

This is basically what happened in Ontario, except that 24 of the nurses disagreed enough to stay on the job. It's making it difficult for the 37 pickets to make their point.

Holy Rosary Administrator Jim Foerster says mandatory union membership infringes on individual choice and that the hospital will get along without the striking nurses.

His action — similar to Reagan's treatment of the air controllers — gives credence to Bratt's scenario. It is conceivable that Idaho nurses would demand a union closed shop, but it's also probable that administrators would refuse.

And so there's a stand-off. While he's able to argue, however, the rebuttal always sounds the same because either way, someone gets hurt.

Consider the nurse who doesn't believe in union action. Under a closed shop, she either moves somewhere else or compromises her beliefs. But equally unfair is requiring a union, just because it is the designated negotiator, to defend an improperly-fired employee who doesn't pay union dues.

The Holy Rosary strike adds a new dimension to this debate. It raises the scary question: Are nurses an essential group of employees, like firemen or policemen, that would critically harm communities if they strike?

"If they (nurses) are in a class like firemen, we all have to ask if they have the right to strike here in Idaho," acknowledges Max King, Idaho's Teamsters secretary/treasurer. "Certainly a strike can be considered only as a last resort."

There's a good cause for doubt: The thought of a hospital without nurses can bring nightmares to even the most hard-boiled citizen.

And so the burden falls to our elected officials. Last year, two bills were introduced with one being quite successful. It passed the House before being tabled for the rest of the session by a Senate floor vote.

The sponsor of the bill, Rep. John Brooks, R-Gooding, says he's still undecided whether he will re-introduce the issue, although after his bill's defeat he vowed another try. Undoubtedly, strong pressure is coming at him from both directions.

During last session, both U.S. Sen. James McClure and state GOP Chairman Dennis Olson asked Republicans not to pass right to work, because it could turn into a campaign issue that Democrat Gov. John Evans could use as a springboard to re-election. Evans strongly opposes right to work as do most dues-paying Idahoans.

At the same time, people like Bratt, who helped Brooks last session, are perhaps stronger than ever in their campaign to make Idaho an open-shop state because of the emotionally scary strike of the Ontario nurses.

Sure, it's an issue that's been around a bunch of years. But it's also an issue that legislators had better not let bore them to sleep.

As King said, "I wouldn't mind the proposal half as much if I could only be convinced that it's what the people of Idaho really want."

And legislators won't forget the 4,500 people — believed to be the largest crowd ever for a legislative hearing — who showed up last session to oppose right to work.

The positive note, however, is that 1982 is an election year. Very slowly and reluctantly, a sensitive ear turned to their constituents' desires.

Perhaps this strike in Oregon will prompt enough Idahoans to speak out and put this long-winded argument to bed, one way or the other.

Congress couldn't even 'rush' right

By OTIS PIKE
Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — When an infant takes that first, precarious, wobbly step, mother says proudly to father, "Junior walked today." When a Congress quits after dawdling for 11 months doing only a portion of what common sense and reasonable government require it to do in nine months, everyone says Congress has been rushing.

Congress rushed home for Christmas and a six-week recess after passing 10 of the 13 appropriations bills for this fiscal year. The fiscal year began on Oct. 1, at which time Congress had rushed through exactly one of them.

When the fiscal year began Congress passed, at the very last moment (11:50 p.m. by the clock on the Senate wall), the first continuing resolution for fiscal 1982, allowing the government to keep spending money even though it hadn't passed any appropriations.

As a matter of fact, it was a little after the very last minute. They had stopped the clock on the Senate wall. No matter, in mid-afternoon on Oct. 1, President Reagan signed the continuing resolution to allow the government to keep operating. It said the government could operate until Nov. 20 of this fiscal year. Nov. 20, Congress had passed exactly one of the 13 appropriations bills. One group of federal workers was sure of getting paid — Congress. On Nov. 20 Congress was, of course, rushing to take care of everyone else.

After a weekend during which the government was "technically insolvent," the House at 6 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 22, passed a second continuing resolution. It was rushed to the Senate. At 10 p.m. Sunday the Senate passed it and rushed it down to the White House.

On Monday, Nov. 23, Reagan vetoed the continuing resolution, saying the government could continue with a little less money, and rushed his message back up to Capitol Hill.

Now the government was more than technically broke, it was REALLY broke. Congress rushed to bail it out. On the same day, Congress voted to keep the government operating until Dec. 15, but with a little less money. This was second continuing resolution No. 2, and Reagan was happy to sign it.

By Dec. 11, Congress still had passed only three of the necessary appropriations bills, so if they were going to be able to rush home for Christmas and their recess, they had to pass continuing resolution No. 3. They did, keeping the government going until March 31.

In its last three days, Congress passed — two and a half months late — seven more appropriations bills. This is called "rushing to adjournment." It was the slowest rush in the history of the Republic. It is a disgrace.

When Congress rushes back six weeks hence, they will be working on the budget for fiscal 1983. They won't have finished the appropriations for fiscal '82 — just pass a fourth continuing resolution; and perhaps a fifth, and a sixth.

The session of Congress just ended did just a few very large things. It heard what the people said in November 1980. Very slowly and reluctantly, it responded. It began a real cutback in some areas of federal spending. It passed a huge tax cut. It vastly increased defense spending, passing the largest defense appropriation in the nation's history.

Its actions will cause the largest deficits in our nation's history.

It has been described as a historic Congress. Because of the quality of its reaction to U.S. government, that is a fair description.

Just don't describe it as "rushing" into anything.

GOP aims for control of Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The new White House political director, Edward Rollins, says Republicans will target 40 vulnerable House Democrats next year and 20 open seats in an all-out effort to win absolute control of Congress.

Rollins, who will replace Lyn Neizerger as President Reagan's top political adviser at the first of the year, also said in an interview that he expects to solidify Republican control of the Senate by adding at least three or four seats to the GOP's current majority of 53.

"I feel that even if the White House falls down tomorrow, we'll pick up three or four seats in the Senate," said Rollins, who will work closely with White House chief of staff James Baker.

In the House, Democrats now hold a 242 to 192 advantage, with one seat vacant. Rollins sees 40 vulnerable House Democrats and 20 open seats as ripe for GOP picking.

He said his office will "pick the targets, pick them very tightly" and find the most qualified

Asked about the fate of conservative Democrats, who reportedly extracted a pledge from Reagan not to campaign against them if they voted for his economic program, Rollins said there were only 20 who supported the president on four weather-vane votes.

"Of those 20, 18 of them you couldn't beat with a stick of dynamite," said Rollins, a former amateur prize-fighter who knocked out 154 of 167 opponents.

"Any race where we feel there is a Democrat that can be beaten, and we have a viable Republican candidate — whether the White House is in it or not" — there will be an effort to defeat him, Rollins said.

What of the so-called Gypsy Moths, the moderate Republicans, most of them from the Northeast, who were not uniformly in line with the president?

"Republicans have been forced to cast some pretty tough votes on several of our issues," Rollins said. "We're going to help the Gypsy Moths. We're going to help them raise money.

"It's imperative," he went on, "for us to bring back (re-elect) as many Republicans as we can."

And then there is the "conversion program" — the Republican effort to woo wavering Democrats into the GOP. Rollins sees the potential for 10 or 15 conversions, plus three or four new Republican members due to reapportionment.

"There may be an added spur to switching parties, he observed, if the Republicans do well next November.

"If we're within 10 or 12 votes of a majority — that's when conversion becomes hot," he said. "That's when it becomes, 'Who's going to get in line first?'"

A dozen Senate Republicans are up for reelection in 1982, and Rollins said four of them are "serious Democratic targets." He named Sens. David Durenberger of Minnesota, Harrison Schmitt of New Mexico, Malcolm Wallop of Wyoming, and possibly Utah's Orrin Hatch.

Deaver to leave in year

DETROIT (UPI) — Michael Deaver, number three aide to President Reagan, will leave his $60,000-a-year White House job late next year because he says he can no longer afford to live in Washington, it was reported Sunday.

Deaver, 43, will leave his job as deputy chief of staff after the 1982 elections to go into private consulting or corporate public relations work, the Detroit News reported.

"A year from now I'll be gone," he told the News.

Deaver said the shift has nothing to do with any difference of opinion with the president — it's strictly a financial move.

"My wife and my accountant said I can't afford to stay in the job any longer," he said. "It's costing me more money to live here than I make and I'm never home."

Deaver ranks third among White House officials, behind presidential counselor Edwin Meese and chief of staff James Baker.

Party chairman expects to finish term

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Republican National Chairman Richard Richards expects to finish his two-year term, despite criticism from top-cholin White House aides and some conservatives, although he says he is uncertain about seeking reelection.

There had been speculation Richards would resign following a series of recent problems. But in an interview he said he was confident he had President Reagan's support and said he has several major accomplishments as party chairman.

"We've had some tough times," Richards said. "We're going to get more criticism. We have to make decisions here. If we don't have the guts to make decisions, we shouldn't be here."

"I expect to serve out my term," he continued. "I am not out of sync with the White House. I'm satisfied I have President Reagan's confidence."

As for the future, Richards said: "I wouldn't speculate on that. I never planned on running for another term. I'll have to see how bloody I am at that time. I came here to do two years."

Richards, a staunch conservative from Utah with more than two decades of party experience, was Reagan's choice to take over as GOP chief last January.

In recent months he alienated some New Right groups by telling them to stay out of elections, his New Jersey "ballot security" program was accused of intimidating and harassing voters, and he was charged with making the White House Conference on the Aging political by polling delegates to find ones sympathetic to Reagan's program.

But the incident that angered the White House was Richards' remarks that Reagan might not run for a second term and that both national security adviser Richard Allen and budget director David Stockman were finished.

"I'm a very candid and straight forward guy — I don't lie to people," Richards said. "These are probably things I had no business talking about."

Donovan awaits probe decision

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan is back at his New Jersey home awaiting a decision "at or about Christmas" on whether a special prosecutor will be named to investigate allegations against him.

The secretary, the last Cabinet member to be confirmed, was doing so amid uncorroborated allegations that he had ties to organized crime. While denying any wrongdoing, Donovan has refused to publicly elaborate.

Under the Watergate-era special prosecutor law, Attorney General William French Smith, based on a preliminary FBI report, may recommend to a special three-judge panel that a prosecutor be appointed to make a full-scale probe of the Donovan matter.

Senate Labor Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said in a telephone interview he has been informed the Justice Department will decide "at or around Christmas" whether to recommend a special prosecutor.

Hatch also said he was "mad" Justice Department officials did not tell his committee about the most recent charges to surface against Donovan when the panel held hearings almost a year ago on his nomination as secretary.

The allegation that Donovan's company made illegal payoffs to union leaders was reportedly made several years ago to a federal organized crime task force in New York City.

What's what

Do you think that a 37-year-old man can make an ideal marriage with an 18-year-old bride? None other than Aristotle thought that was the perfect match-up in matrimony. Younger-men, be-believed, tended-to-father-inferior children but not so younger women.

SIR FRANCIS BACON

Q. How will history deal with President Richard Nixon and his aides?

A. That's too big a query for this department. Ask instead about Sir Francis Bacon. As a judge in 1621, he was accused of corruption, was excused by some scholars who said he only did what everybody else in power did, and was fined 40,000 pounds. Then he was pardoned by the King who let him use the fine money any way he wished. Time came when neither Bacon nor history cared a whit.

Q. Does any bird sleep, like the bat, while hanging upside down?

A. Only one. The lorikeet of Sri Lanka. Pretty little thing.

Assorted hazards found lurking almost everywhere over holidays

By AL ROSSITER JR. United Press International

WASHINGTON — This may be the season of joy, but you better watch out for holiday plans, holiday dinners, holiday ornaments, holiday blues and other assorted holiday health hazards.

That's the word from the American Chemical Society, the Michael Reese Medical Center, the New York Lung Association, the American Psychological Association and the Medical College of Pennsylvania, respectively.

The chemical society says in a holiday warning that mistletoe, poinsettia and holly berries often used in Christmas decorations are potential poisons.

"As decorations, these and other holiday plants and accessories are harmless and enjoyable," the society quotes Dr. Robert Raffauf, a professor of Northeastern University as saying. "But if swallowed, they can cause nausea, vomiting and sometimes diarrhea."

dinner can trigger a chain of events leading to the chest pain of artery disease or even a heart attack. Kavin says the same circumstances are usually a middle-aged man whose coronary arteries are partially blocked.

He overeats at the holiday dinner table and then, feeling bloated and uncomfortable, takes a walk in cool weather outside. His heart can't keep up with its needs because of the artery blockage. The heavy load of food in the stomach draws away blood and the cool air constricts blood vessels just beneath the skin, forcing the heart to work even harder. The result is pain and a possible heart attack.

Much more common, and not dangerous like heart trouble, is heartburn. Kavin notes that this condition does not involve the heart but is a burning sensation in the chest caused by backing up of stomach acid.

tree ornaments in their mouths. The association cites the hypothetical case of a two-year-old child by a delicate plastic Santa Claus dangling from a low tree bough.

The child grabs it, puts it in his mouth, realizes it isn't candy and tries to spit it out. The ornament cracks and a piece lodges in the windpipe or is inhaled into the lungs.

"It's a possible tragedy in the midst of fun because aspiration of foreign objects is a leading cause of death and injury among children under six years of age," the lung association says.

The psychological association says the winter holidays can trigger feelings of longing, unhappiness and even depression in some "lonely" people while they bring joy and personal satisfaction to many others. These are the so-called holiday blues.

But the APA says the notion of holiday blues may have been given more prominence in recent years than it deserves.

Air Force to track Santa once again

GREAT FALLS, Mont. (UPI) — The North American Air Defense Command, for the 26th time this year, will track Santa Claus and his eight reindeer on his Christmas trip from the North Pole.

The 24th NORAD Region headquartered at Malmstrom Air Force Base at Great Falls has responsibility for the territory in the frozen reaches of the North. Children of 24th personnel, before going to bed Christmas-Eve, will be allowed to watch Santa's early movements on radar scopes in the "Blue Room" operated by Malmstrom weapons controllers, who will provide cookies and punch.

The jolly old elf, sleigh and reindeer will appear on the screen as a series of eight "blips."

The Air Force reportedly has a system to provide Santa with directional assistance if he runs into bad weather. It's called the Reindeer Uni-directional Omnidirectional Positioning-Hardware acronym RUDOLPH.

Israel no 'banana republic,' Begin tells U.S. ambassador JERUSALEM (UPI) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin accused Washington Sunday of treating Israel like "a banana republic."

Begin declared that U.S. sanctions to protest the annexation of the Golan Heights "canceled" their mutual strategic cooperation pact.

The unprecedented hour-long tongue-lashing, delivered by U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis and later released to the press, could only widen the growing chasm between Israel and its staunchest ally.

Israel Radio said several Cabinet ministers disassociated themselves from Begin's blistering attack, saying it should not be regarded as an official government statement.

The opposition Labor Party criticized both the United States and Begin—and the small Shinui faction—called for a no-confidence vote in Parliament.

Begin accused Washington of waging an "ugly anti-Semitic campaign" in the Senate to obtain passage of the Saudi AWACS aircraft deal and of being in no position to pass moral judgment because of its own policy of "bodycounts" in the Vietnam war.

He said "no power on earth" could make Parliament rescind the law passed Monday to annex the strategic Golan Heights and warned "You won't fight us with punishment."

"You delay the talks already scheduled on the strategic memorandum, saying your renewing the discussions will depend on the situation in Lebanon and the (Palestinian) autonomy talks," Begin told Lewis.

"You are trying to make Israel a hostage to the memorandum. Your announcement of the delay—the talks I see as a cancellation. No Dámoisles sword will hang over our heads. We note that you canceled the memorandum."

The contents of the Begin-Lewis meeting were relayed to reporters by Cabinet Secretary Arye Naor who refused to summarize the meeting in English.

Recalling the U.S. suspension of warplane deliveries to Israel after attacks on Iraq's nuclear reactor and PLO headquarters in Beirut, Begin said:

"Now you are blasting again that you are punishing Israel. What sort of talk is this, punishing Israel? Are we a vassal state of yours? Are we a banana republic? Are we 14-year-old boys who, when they don't behave well, get their knuckles rapped?"

"Israel has lived 3,700 years without a memorandum. It will live another 3,700 years without one," the statement said. "You won't frighten us with punishments."

Poland Church offers comfort

VIENNA, Austria (UPI) — Polish refugees gathered at the Church of the Resurrection Sunday to receive news of their homeland, spiritual comfort and donations of food and warm clothing.

"The worst part is not knowing what's happening to my friends and relatives in Poland," said Christina, a young woman who stood shivering on the snow-covered street outside the church.

"We've had no information of any kind since the martial law began one week ago," she said, asking that her last name not be used. "We're desperately worried."

"Hundreds of Poles unable to squeeze inside the Roman Catholic church to hear Mass stood on the sidewalk trading rumors although there was little news to ease the fears of dislocated families."

Franciszek, a young man from Rzeszow in southeast Poland, came to Vienna three weeks ago to begin a new life in Austria. His wife, who stayed at home until he was settled, has been unable to leave since martial law was declared.

"Who knows when we will see each other again?" asked Franciszek, who also requested anonymity.

Men and women also came to sell their belongings in order to support themselves in Vienna, where the cost of living is high.

A convoy of Polski Fiat cars, still bearing Polish license numbers, lined the curbs. Their drivers displayed small "for sale" signs on the windshields.

Virtually all of the 50,000 Polish refugees in Austria arrived before Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski declared martial law, sealing off the country.

The majority of them live in camps run by the Austrian government, but some have taken private lodgings, supporting themselves with earnings from odd jobs.

Soviet, Polish military bases spread across nation UPI

Crackdown leaves party in jeopardy

MOSCOW (UPI) — The crackdown on liberalization in Poland has irrevocably jeopardized the future of its Communist Party.

Western analysts and Soviet sources agree that a complete review of the role of the Polish United Worker's Party must be carried out — and some difficult decisions made — before civilian control of the nation can be expected to succeed.

"The party has been completely discredited," a senior Western diplomat said last week. "The imposition of martial law violates every Marxist-Leninist principle there is. The whole (socialist) system, the whole way of doing things has taken a crack."

The diplomat suggested that Polish leaders had few options but to introduce martial law "unless they wanted to hand things over to the Church or Solidarity."

"It wasn't a question of the military shoving the party aside," he said. "There was nothing to shove."

A Soviet source willing to talk about the events in Poland concurred with the main point of the diplomat's argument.

"The main thing now is to restore order. In a few weeks, in a few months, Poland will have to decide how to reintroduce the party as the leading organ in society. But it will be difficult," he said.

For the moment, it appears to be impossible.

The P.U.W.P. politburo has not issued a single official statement during the first week of martial law.

"The most important thing for Jaruzelski to do as soon as martial law is lifted is to show Poles that the party is an organization they can turn to for help," one Soviet source said. "These scandals have got to stop in anyone is to believe in it."

The senior Western diplomat agreed.

West worries Soviets

MOSCOW (UPI) — A week after martial law was imposed in Poland, Soviet decision makers are satisfied that Polish Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski can control the situation without Russian help, but are increasingly concerned about the American response, a Soviet source said Sunday.

"Martial law is working," said the source, who is not a Soviet official but has access to Kremlin pronouncements before they are made.

He said that while Soviet military aid is being held in reserve in the event it is needed to help Jaruzelski, it is generally believed that the military council in Warsaw has enough soldiers and power at its disposal to prevent anarchy.

"The concern is not so much what is happening in Poland as what is happening around Poland," said the source, referring to the reaction of Western nations, especially the United States.

More sharp criticism of President Reagan Sunday in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, appeared to confirm that assessment.

The article noted that the White House has set up a round-the-clock monitoring group, and charged that Radio Free Europe was intensifying calls for organized resistance to the military regime.

"All this fuss is nothing other than direct interference in the affairs of the Polish People's Republic, a member of the socialist community and of the Warsaw Treaty Organization," Pravda said.

The Soviet source also said that Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and leaders of the other Warsaw Pact nations — with the exception of Jaruzelski — agreed to provide whatever economic and food aid Poland needs.

Tiny Caribbean island under emergency rule

ROSEAU, Dominica (UPI) — Prime Minister Mary Eugenia Charles imposed a state of emergency Sunday on the tiny Caribbean island of Dominica as police searched for a group of men who fled into dense mountain forests after a bungled coup attempt.

Miss Charles said two of the attackers were arrested after about 15 men who attacked police headquarters were killed in the coup attempt.

Roseau early Saturday were beaten back by police fire. One policeman and two attackers were killed in the coup attempt.

The two arrested, as well as the two who were killed, were among nine men, including former Prime Minister Patrick John, who were arrested last March and accused of plotting a coup. Five of them had been released for insufficient evidence and four, including John, were still in jail.

In an hour-long interview with UPI, Miss Charles condemned John's Labor Party which ruled the tiny island 400 miles east of Puerto Rico from 1961 until her landslide election win in 1980.

"They are the only ones who feel they have a right, almost a divine right, to be in power," she said.

She said the attack Saturday was aimed at seizing weapons from the police armory and freeing John and the three others in jail.

The attackers held the police station for three hours but left after they failed to open the door to the armory, the island's only one since the army was disbanded after the earlier coup attempt.

Beirut blast takes 2 lives

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — A car exploded Sunday under a bridge near PLO headquarters killing two people inside the vehicle, police said.

The blast, the third in six days in Muslim west Beirut, brought to more than 60 the number killed in a week of terrorist violence in the war-scarred Lebanese capital.

Sunday's explosion was less than a mile from a gasoline station where a pickup truck exploded Saturday, killing five policemen and four civilians.

Lebanese police and Syrian peacekeeping troops sealed off the area around the offices of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Two miles away, rescue teams continued sifting the wreckage of the Iraqi embassy for 20 to 25 people believed still buried under the rubble. The building was destroyed Tuesday by a bomb which killed 32 people.

There was no immediate word on the identity of Sunday's victims, killed by five pounds of explosives, according to police.

Dear Abby

They dislike charity gifts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: If I get another one of those Christmas cards stating that instead of a Christmas gift, a gift in my name has been sent to such-and-such a charity, I will blow my top!

What is so generous about taking a gift from one person in order to give to another? I give to charities myself and do not need anyone contributing to the charity of his choice in my name. People who inform their friends that they are giving to charity, instead of sending Christmas gifts are either too cheap or too lazy to do both.

— DISGUSTED WITH SELFISHNESS

DEAR DISGUSTED: Now let's hear it from another reader who also presents the "gift-in-your-name" type of giving:

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing to complain about the presumptuousness of people who make a donation to

THEIR favorite charity and call it a Christmas present to ME!

In the first place, maybe I'm not all that excited about saving the whales or the poor of Pakistan or Bangladesh. I'd prefer helping the poor American Indians, or the NAACP, or my local race crisis center.

If my friends really want to give me a gift, let them send ME a check to forward to MY favorite charity!

— FED UP IN FULLERTON

DEAR ABBY: My boss gave a "6:30 to 8:30" Christmas cocktail party for about 60 people at his home. He had invited 14 of those guests to stay for dinner. (I had been invited to both.)

When it was time for dinner, the host wanted to get rid of the cocktail crowd, so he flashed the lights off and on several times as a signal that the cocktail party was over!

I thought that was in poor taste. Isn't there a more subtle way to break up a party?

— EMBARRASSED

DEAR EMBARRASSED: There is no subtle way to break up a party. The gracious host patiently allows a party to die a natural death.

DEAR ABBY: What are the parents' responsibilities for a daughter's second wedding? Our daughter was given a church wedding and reception for her first marriage. She is divorced, her ex-husband is married again, and now she is planning her second marriage.

I think a small, simple wedding would be in better taste and so does my husband, but our daughter's fiancé has never been married before and his family has suggested that it would be unfair to him to have a small, simple wedding just because it's the bride's second.

However, it's the bride's family that must plan it, put it on and pay for it, right?

No names, please, just your opinion.

— SECOND TIME AROUND

DEAR SECOND: Right! And I see your motion.

Columnist improves on Abby's advice

By BOB GREENE
© Chicago Tribune

Abigail Van Buren, in her Dear Abby column the other day, offered a piece of advice that disturbed me greatly.

"Abby had received a letter that went as follows:—

"Dear Abby: I recently attended a Barry Manilow concert, and I haven't been able to get him out of my mind since. I am perfectly in tune with all the feelings Barry expresses! All my life I've had the feeling that God put me on Earth to love and fulfill the needs of someone like Barry Manilow, someone who has everything in the world but happens to be very lonely. Please don't get me wrong, it's not the money, fame or glamour I'm looking for. I just want to devote my life to someone who wants more than anything in the world to be loved for himself but has never found that person.

"If Barry is involved already, I would like the chance to make Burt Reynolds happy. In spite of his macho, confident manner, I sense that Burt is also a very lonely person who needs love.

"I am not a fat, ugly old woman who has never had a date. I am 22, attractive and have no trouble getting dates. I just need help to do what the Lord wants me to do.

"Can you help me meet Barry Manilow or Burt Reynolds?"

The letter was signed "Needs an Introduction."

I quickly looked for Dear Abby's answer. I was grievously disappointed when I read it:

"Dear Needs: Superstars such as Barry Manilow and Burt Reynolds work very hard, and their schedules are so demanding they have very little time to become lonely. However, if the good Lord wants you to meet either one of these gentlemen, trust Him to provide the introduction."

And that was all. How unfair. The poor young woman wanted a straight answer, and Abby told her to trust in the Lord (and I don't think that Abby really even believed that).

"I happen to know that Abby is wrong—anyway. Most celebrities would welcome the chance to meet an attractive 22-year-old woman like "Needs an Introduction," and if Abby were honest with herself, she would admit this is true. But most young women—just like "Needs an Introduction"—are unaware of the many ways such a meeting might take place.

"Abby could have helped; she didn't. So I will.

"Dear Needs: You've come to the right place. I see no reason why you should not be able to meet Barry Manilow, Burt Reynolds or, for that matter, any other male superstar you desire. If you are as young and attractive as you say, they will welcome your company.

The problem, of course, is how to get your "foot in the door" in the first place. I am only too glad to offer the following suggestions.

"1. Disguise yourself as a dog. This is a very good method. Two young female fans of the late Elvis Presley once had themselves crated up in a container that said two prize Russian wolfhounds were inside. They then had the crate shipped to Presley's Graceland mansion. Knowing of Presley's fondness for animals, they assumed he would open the crate hoping to find the two dogs and find them instead.

The plan was foiled when a workman at Graceland opened the crate first—but the point is, they did get onto Presley's property, and how many women could claim that? Give it a try. Ship yourself as a dog to your favorite superstar, and let the chips fall where they may.

"2. Get a job as a cocktail waitress. Find out where the male celebrity of your choice drinks at night, and secure employment in the cocktail lounge there. You'll be surprised at what a superstar is also of and distant during the day often will undergo a complete change of personality once closing time rolls around.

You might think that he would ordinarily never give you a second glance—but once those lights start blinking and the bar manager gives out "last call," you may find that your favorite celeb is approaching you with an interesting invitation. The field of cocktail waitress has enabled many a gal to realize her fantasies.

"3. Lie and say you are a reporter.

Even the most faded celebrity loves to see stories written about himself. The most famous men in the world will welcome you into their offices and homes if they think they are going to get publicity out of it.

"You don't even have to have any contacts with a newspaper or magazine; all you have to do is say you are a freelancer with an assignment from Vogue or People. Most male stars will at least grant you an initial meeting to see if a story really is in the offing—and once you're in the door, young lady, the rest is up to you.

"4. Invite him to speak for money. Most celebrities go out on the lecture circuit, giving speeches before large groups. If you contact any of the major speakers' agencies and inquire about hiring a star to appear at your "lecture series," the agents will be only too happy to send you a contract and set up a time.

When the star arrives at the given address, he may be surprised to find an audience of one—you! But if you have a martini in your hand and a pleasant smile on your face, the two of you will soon be laughing about it. A warning: This may cost you six or seven thousand dollars, but what are life savings for, anyway, if not to make your life a Christmas come true?

"There are any number of other possibilities to meet your favorite male superstar, but I hope these have given you a start on thinking about how to go about it. I regret that Dear Abby gave you a bum steer—surely she thought she was doing the proper thing by protecting you.

So best of luck in your quest for the best!

Suit spurs drug action

By VIRGINIA RYBIN
© Knight-Ridder Newspapers

In 1972, a federal court ordered the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to proceed more vigorously in getting ineffective prescription drugs off the market.

But today one of every eight prescriptions filled is for a drug not considered effective by the government's own standards as revised in 1962, according to consumer advocate Dr. Sidney Wolfe. The prescriptions for those 607 drugs cost more than $1.1 billion in 1979.

"It is really inexcusable that this has taken so long," said Wolfe, head of health research for Public Citizen, the consumer group founded by Ralph Nader.

Now, thanks to a lawsuit spearheaded by Public Citizen, the FDA is moving faster, Wolfe said.

About a year ago, a federal district court ordered the FDA to add staff to speed up the process of getting ineffective drugs off the market, he said. The agency also was ordered to make drugs with high sales a top priority, rather than concentrating on ineffective drugs that are not as popular, Wolfe said.

He predicted that "well over 90 percent" of the ineffective drugs will be off the market within four to five years.

In the meantime, however, consumers may want to find out what those drugs are. A listing with details about each appears in "Pills That Don't Work," a paperback book by Wolfe, Harvard University medical student Christopher Coley and the Nader Health Research Group. It is published by Farrar Straus Giroux at $6.95.

About 35 of the 607 ineffective drugs are no longer being manufactured, Wolfe said. But they are still prescribed because their producers are allowed to stock left in warehouses.

Some of the drugs contain an effective ingredient. But a drug is considered ineffective if one or more of its ingredients do not work, the book says. This is the case because the patient is needlessly exposed to the risk of side effects from the ineffective ingredients.

An even larger percentage of over-the-counter drug ingredients is ineffective, Wolfe said. The National Council of Senior Citizens now is suing the FDA to get strict deadlines for elimination of two-thirds of the ingredients in over-the-counter drugs, he said. Public Citizen lawyers are handling the action.

During an interview about his book, Wolfe said the Public Citizen group won another victory last month when a federal court ordered the Reagan administration to stop paying federal medical assistance funds for many of the ineffective drugs. The administration was attempting to do so in spite of congressional action forbidding such payment, he said.

Wolfe said last year's court order required the FDA to notify all doctors and pharmacists about most drugs in the book.

The drugs involved have been on the market for at least 19 years and often for 25 or more, and many physicians are in the habit of prescribing them, the book says.

Early in the 1950s, published, scientifically controlled studies showed that DES (diethylstilbestrol) did not prevent miscarriages, Wolfe wrote. Yet DES, later linked to increased cancer risks, was prescribed for millions of women after that time.

Doctors saw women who had had miscarriages and avoided them in subsequent pregnancies when treated with DES. They were blind to the idea that this could be a natural variation from one pregnancy to the next, the book says.

The ineffective medications were marketed before 1962, when federal law was amended to require that drugs be proven effective in well-controlled studies.

The FDA ordered reviews of drugs marketed before 1962, and many were found to be ineffective under the new standard, according to the book.

In 1970, the American Public Health Association and the National Council of Senior Citizens filed a lawsuit challenging the FDA's failure to remove the drugs from the market. The 1972 court order set timetables for removal, Wolfe said, and the most lenient of them expired in 1976.

"When we realized they (FDA officials) were literally in contempt of a court order, we decided to revitalize the lawsuit," Wolfe said. The 1978 action led to the 1980 decision that finally appears to be bringing results, he said.

Public Citizen was not involved in the original lawsuit. Its own lawsuit group handled the 1978 suit for the two 1970 plaintiffs.

Three-fourths of the 607 drugs listed in Wolfe's book are in one of five categories: cold, cough and allergy medications; heart pain drugs; medications for circulatory disorders of the head and limbs; drugs for digestive disorders, and external medications for the skin, eyes or ears.

Some of the ineffective drugs also can have dangerous side effects, Wolfe said.

A drug shouldn't necessarily be taken because it is not listed in the book. Many other drugs are effective for serious diseases but over-prescribed for less serious ones, such as colds, the book says.

Dr. Lamb

Can she still get pregnant?

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am 35 years old and recall that in one of your columns you advised women not to assume they are past the possibility of pregnancy for at least two years after they have had their last period and after all signs of the menopause are over.

I am 33 years old, still having regular periods and have never had any menopausal signs. My doctor said when I asked him about the possibility of pregnancy that it would be a "miracle." On my medical chart I am listed as a "postmenopausal" patient. May I have your thoughts on this matter? I stopped using any method of birth control about six months ago when my doctor said it wasn't necessary.

DEAR READER — The two-year guideline is intended for women making decisions on their own. If your doctor is satisfied after examining you that you cannot get pregnant you should rely on his judgment.

Women can and do get pregnant after your age. It all depends upon whether or not there are any more ova being formed and if an occasional ovum is released. Women can get pregnant, and there are substantiated reliable records for this, even at age 56, some claim even older.

You may not be able to judge what has happened in relation to your menopause if you are taking birth control pills. You will have artificial menstruation when the pills are stopped once a month that may have

Shoplifting grows

NEW YORK (UPI) — After teenagers, women between the ages of 20 and 30 make up the largest group of shoplifters, a magazine article says.

A survey article in the January issue of Ladies' Home Journal says shoplifting is "the fastest growing form of larceny in the United States. Between one-fourth and one-third of all shoplifters are women in the 20-50 age group, the article says, and 'most steal for thrills or for attention, not out of financial need.'"

The reasons why relatively well-off women steal, a psychologist and a criminal justice authority told the magazine, include escape from monotony, neglect or unsatisfied sexual desire.

nothing at all to do with ovulation. Such periods do not mean you have not already gone through the menopause. The hormones in the pills also may prevent hot flashes and other symptoms of the menopause.

You can use temperature guide and other signs, such as changes in mucus, as well as presence or absence of menstruation to help judge if you are still ovulating or not.

These and normal reproductive cycles are discussed in the Health Letter No. 17-2, Female Reproductive Function, which I am sending you. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N. Y. 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am a teenager and a very active athlete. However, I also have a big appetite. I can easily consume 3,000 calories a day. I burn it off, but on occasions when I don't get the chance to exercise as much I'd like some weight.

exercise a little less and eat less. I was thinking of trying an appetite suppressant just to lose a few pounds until I was down to normal-sized meals. Are appetite suppressants safe? I'm kind of scared to try them and might just stick to old-fashioned will power.

DEAR READER — I'll vote for old-fashioned will power. Most diet pills do have some undesirable side-effects. Some can cause you to be nervous because they contain a nervous system stimulant such as caffeine.

You have made an important point. When a person is active he uses lots of calories and many former athletes get fat because they stop being active and keep on eating the same number of calories.

May I suggest that you might change the kind of foods you eat? Use more low-calorie foods such as salads without rich salad dressings and avoid sweets and fats. That change alone may put you back in calorie balance when you cut down on your physical activity.

These drugs termed ineffective

© Knight-Ridder Newspapers

The following five are among the more familiar of the hundreds of drugs that Dr. Sidney Wolfe's book classifies as ineffective:

— Acetified, a cold and allergy medication in syrup or tablet form manufactured by Burroughs Wellcome. The antihistamine in this combination drug is an effective allergy reliever. But the drug contains pseudoephedrine, a decongestant that can aggravate high blood pressure by constricting blood vessels. There is no proof that the added ingredient enhances the effect of the antihistamine on allergies, the book says. Such an oral decongestant narrows vessels rarely does much for nasal stuffiness, it says, and antihistamines are not effective against colds.

— Donnatal, an oral drug for digestive disorders manufactured by Robins. There is no evidence that anti-spasmodic-antisercretory drugs, the major ingredients in Donnatal, promote stomach ulcer healing, the book says. Donnatal also contains the sedative phenobarbital, which can become addictive.

— Hydrocortisone-neomycin, a generic drug in cream, ointment or lotion form. It contains neomycin sulfate, an antibacterial agent, and hydrocortisone, a corticosteroid. The book says use of corticosteroids for skin infection can mask evidence of infection or cause its spread. Neomycin can cause skin rashes and make people sensitive to other, more important antibiotics.

— Isordil sublingual, a drug for angina pectoris (heart pain) in tablet form manufactured by Ives. Nitroglycerin tablets under the tongue are the appropriate treatment for acute angina attack, the book says.

— Papaverine, a generic oral or injected drug for blood vessel disease of the head and limbs. Vasodilators like papaverine dilate major blood vessels, rather than selectively affecting areas where blood supply is deficient, the book says. They can divert blood from a diseased area served by smaller vessels.

Aboard ship,
but ashore...

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — The Navy permits women aboard ships these days, but there's no kissing allowed aboard the USS Yellowstone.
Still, the commander says, nearly a quarter of the female crew members got pregnant last year.
Capt. John Campbell said "expected relations" do develop between the men and women aboard his 22,000-ton vessel and he has no qualms about his crew members dating once they go ashore.
"The one rule — no public display of affection" aboard ship, he said. And woe to the crew members caught in private displays.

Of the 1,000 crew members aboard the huge Yellowstone, 100 are women and four of them are officers. They represent only a tiny fraction of the 37,266 women who were in the Navy as of March 31. None are permitted on combat ships.
"The women are outnumbered 10 to 1 and they feel outnumbered and tend to feel watched," Campbell said.
Like most tenders, the Yellowstone generally stays in port and mothers the destroyers that lie up alongside in need of repairs — ranging from dental work for the crews to the problems.
The women share the work with their male counterparts in machinery, teletype and optics repair and as electricians, pipe fitters, clerks and radiomen.

"We haven't got a title for women who work with the radios, so we call them radiomen," Campbell said.
Despite the rules against amorous adventures aboard the Yellowstone, there are pregnancies, Campbell said they represent the worst problem for both him and the Navy generally because it means a transfer.
There were 23 pregnancies in the past year, nearly 25 percent of the Yellowstone's female crew, Campbell said.
"The thing that bothers me is the number of pregnancies, both among the married and the single women," he said. "I'm concerned about the turnover."

TWIN FALLS — In the Southwest, the newest note in the Salvation Army's venerated Christmas bell-ringing appeal involves placing two ringers side by side, one with a "ding" and the other with a "dong."

Such novelty apparently isn't necessary in Twin Falls, where contributions placed in the traditional red kettles have topped the Salvation Army's $1,000 goal.

The number of sites staffed by bell ringers in Twin Falls ranges from one to four, depending on the availability of volunteers, according to Capt. John Greheiver, who says he tries to minimize the use of paid workers. The majority of the bell ringers do it for free, and the few who are paid are chosen on the basis of need. "When we put out a kettle, we have to be sure it's worth doing," Greheiver says. "The traffic pattern is the key."

Kettles routinely are placed at Twin Falls' two shopping centers, at Sears and at Kmart. The shopping centers are valued because foot traffic is concentrated in one area, Greheiver says, whereas shoppers are more dispersed downtown. Kettle appeals are held downtown only when service clubs are available to ring the bells.

"They see familiar faces, and they'll get out and stop the cars," Greheiver says of the clubs' members. In this year's annual competition among the clubs, the Kiwanis Club placed first in the amount of money raised, Rotary earned second place and the Lions were third.

The kettle appeal began around the turn of the century in San Francisco when a Salvation Army kitchen offered a Christmas dinner for people in need.

One of the organizers wanted to "keep the pot boiling," so he placed a huge kettle in front of the meal site, rang a bell and appealed for money. The effort was so successful that it was adopted widely, and "Keep the pot boiling" subsequently became the slogan for what developed into a Salvation Army hallmark.

Greheiver says the Salvation Army will not host a Christmas dinner for the needy in Twin Falls because it's not economical.

"That works in the cities because there are so many people," he says. "Here, it's cheaper for us to give people food vouchers." Most families in need can obtain a voucher, redeemable for $25 to $30 worth of food at local supermarkets, Greheiver says.

Hardships elsewhere increase aid demands

TWIN FALLS — Economic hardship in other parts of the country appears to be creating a special demand for Christmas assistance from the Salvation Army of Twin Falls.

"I don't have any figures to verify this," says Capt. John Greheiver, head of the local Salvation Army unit, "but it just seems to me that we're getting more people who get laid off somewhere, or for some other reason just couldn't make it, so they came to this area with hopes of finding work."

"The economy seems to be holding up in the Magic Valley, and we're getting the spillover from other places."

"But a number of job-seekers have yet to find work, Greheiver says, while others obtained only short-term jobs. However, the state's statistics for November, the most recent available, show little change between the unemployment rate this year and that recorded for November, 1980.

Greheiver suspects otherwise, though, given the requests he's receiving.

"You see people who are living from check to check, and then dad gets laid off," Greheiver says. "A lot of people are out in the cold this year."

"The Salvation Army hopes to spend about $12,000 on food, toys and other gifts this holiday season to make things a little merrier."

This fall, the organization set a Christmas fund-raising goal of $18,500, about $6,500 of which is needed to keep the Salvation Army going for the first part of 1982. The balance will be used for Christmas assistance, such as the $5,300 worth of food vouchers called for in the Salvation Army's Christmas budget.

A Salvation Army spokesman says it appears the $18,500 goal will be met, though at last count, about $6,000 still had to be raised.

But the Salvation Army also could be looking at $6,000 to $8,000 less than expected this year if the United Way fund-raising drive doesn't meet its goal, he says.

Greheiver, whose work has taken him to a number of communities, says Magic Valley residents appear willing to give the Salvation Army what they can, and many of those who are unable have written to him.

"We've had letters from people who say, 'I'm only getting $300 a month, and I just don't have the money,'" he says. "I think there's a general feeling of support among people. It's universal."

Rain creates wet worries at ski resorts

TWIN FALLS — Weekend rains caused some anxious moments for ski resort operators and left flooded intersections and soggy conditions in general over Magic Valley.

Ski resorts all reported rain had turned to snow by Sunday and conditions were good with skiing in full swing. There were no closures reported by ski resorts.

Sun Valley added about eight inches of new snow Sunday morning after reporting rain on lower elevations Saturday. Resort officials said it was a little sloppy on the lower part of the slopes Sunday morning, but good from midway to the top. Lower temperatures Sunday afternoon improved lower runs as well.

Pomerelle, where rain fell most of Saturday, had new snow by Sunday morning and good conditions.

Although resort operators were not happy with the wet weather, all agreed they were not hurt since the storm was followed by cooler temperatures and snow.

Claude Hinkle of Soldier Mountain said the area got its share of rain Saturday followed by about eight inches of new snow Sunday morning. He said it was cooling rapidly Sunday afternoon.

"Magic Mountain," planning an opening Wednesday, reported rain Saturday and Saturday night, turning to snow by Sunday.

"We have about three inches of new snow," said resort manager Jody Anderson, "and since we aren't skiing on it yet, I don't think we were hurt. If it stays that way we'll be in good shape."

Resorts are operating daily through the holiday vacation. Buses will run daily to Soldier Mountain and on weekends to Pomerelle and Magic Mountain.

The College of Southern Idaho weather reporting station in Twin Falls measured 3.1 of an inch of precipitation for the 24-hour period ending Sunday morning.

Police in Twin Falls said they received a number of calls about flooded intersections. City crews were working Sunday to remove debris from some of the clogged storm drains.

Farmers were not complaining. Areas such as the Salmon Tract where water supplies were short this summer are in need of moisture and the rain and snow brightened the outlook for the coming season.

Idaho State police reported roads throughout Idaho were wet with wet heavy snow in mountain areas. Chains were advised for Galena Summit and several other high elevation highways around the state.

The Welser River created about six inches above flood stage Sunday, falling after rain slackened off. Only minor flooding of pastures and farmlands along the river was reported. The river was expected to continue falling through the night as temperatures cooled.

Fog cut visibility to less than half a mile in many Idaho valleys.

Officers investigate shooting at Kimberly

KIMBERLY — A young Kimberly woman was wounded critically in a shooting incident at her home Sunday night.

Sheriff James Munn said that Patsy Collins, in her 20s, was in critical condition and undergoing surgery Sunday night at Magic Valley Memorial Hospital.

Her husband, Larry Collins, in his late 20s, also was under doctor's care late Sunday. Munn said the husband had had medical problems prior to the shooting.

The woman was shot shortly before 7 p.m. at the Collins home, two miles east and three-and-three-quarters miles south of Kimberly, the sheriff said. The woman was shot in the back.

but Munn said he did not know the exact location.

The couple was alone at the time, and Collins called officers to report that his wife had been shot. Sheriff's records indicated that the incident was reported at 6:57 p.m.

The investigation was continuing Sunday night, and Munn said he had not determined if the shooting was accidental, or if it occurred while the two struggled over the gun.

"No, we're not saying at this time that Collins did the shooting," Munn said.

He said more information will be available when both Collins and his wife can be questioned.

Buhl's water gets OK

BUHL — Residents of Buhl can stop boiling their drinking water.

Gary Burkett, Idaho Division of Environment engineer, said Sunday several recent samples of water from the Buhl municipal system have tested clear and the order to boil water has been lifted.

On Dec. 8, routine samples of the water at Poppelweil Elementary School revealed coliform bacteria content sufficient to prompt the state agency to request the school use only bottled water for drinking.

Later in the week it was discovered the contamination had spread to neighboring dwelling, and to other areas of the city.

On Friday, state officials urged all residents using the city water source to boil water for drinking purposes.

Burkett said the city has since stepped up the chlorine content of the water pumped from the city wells and it now appears all of the water is safe.

Burkett said tests at all Buhl schools indicate those supplies are also clear.

Source of the contamination has not been determined, but environmentalists said apparently the school was not causing the problem. Officials said there was no danger to residents from the coliform bacteria, but it was an indication that other bacteria could be present and could result in illness.

Burkett said the agency will continue to monitor the water and attempt to determine the cause.

Christmas-basket time draws near

List of needy lengthening

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Janice Stone, who is coordinating the Christmas-basket program in Twin Falls, says that the list of needy families and elderly in this area is growing daily.

Stone is heading project through the Community Action Agency, which is acting as a clearing-house for the effort. While this is the first time the agency has assisted in this manner, she says that increased unemployment and less money, in general, have made the need much greater this year than in the past.

A rough estimate at this time indicates that about 200 names have been submitted and more are coming in, she says.

"We are acting as a referral agency, mostly, but we take applications from those whose names are turned in to us and those referred to the clearing-house by other agencies. We then refer many of these back to groups and individuals volunteering to assist with the program."

"The applications are necessary not because we want to eliminate anyone, but simply to have a record of those we have referred and to eliminate duplication."

Stone said the Twin Falls Elks Lodge and the Salvation Army will be handling the bulk of the baskets, although CAA will be taking care of about 40 families directly.

Two volunteers, Mike Dillon and his wife, Cyd, are collecting donations from merchants and preparing the 40 or so baskets the CAA will be distributing.

Stone says that churches and service groups, as well as a few individuals in Twin Falls, Filor, Buhl and Kimberly have "adopted" an individual, a family or even a number of families to help.

Funds are needed to purchase turkey or other meat for each of the gift baskets, and in the case of families with small children, toys and sometimes clothing will be given.

"This depends on the needy family and also on the agency preparing the baskets," she says. "The Salvation Army will be giving toys and clothing as well as food, while the Elks concentrate on food needs."

"We have set several deadlines on receiving names of needy persons and have passed by all of them. We will try to accept names right up to Christmas, but of course, we have to have a day or so for delivery," Stone says.

She asks that residents willing to assist with meat purchases or assist a family or senior citizen directly, should call her at the Community Action Agency at 733-9351.

Names of needy persons also may be submitted by calling Stone at the CAA office.

"This is the first time we have had a central agency we are trying to work with all of the churches and agencies that assist the needy children and families for Christmas," she says.

Evans says boycott could injure farmers

BOISE (UPI) — Conservationists threatening to boycott Idaho products to protest the slaughter of rabbits could jeopardize the state's depressed agricultural economy and severely harm farmers who already are suffering because of the crop-eating animals' destruction, Gov. John Evans said Sunday.

Evans told United Press International he hoped conservationists "don't go to those kinds of extremes" — a boycott — to protest the rabbit roundups that are harming the state's reputation.

And he vowed to attempt to work out an acceptable alternative to the rabbit drives in which eastern Idaho farmers have clubbed to death about 17,000 animals this year.

"Some method of exterminating the rabbits was necessary," however, because of the severe damage the animals have dealt to Idaho farmers this year, he said, and the possibility of even worse destruction next year.

About 600 ranchers, family members, and friends converged on a 5,000-acre farm near Marsing, Idaho, Sunday to destroy about 15,000 of the animals that have eaten more than $5 million in Idaho crops in a peak infestation that occurs about once each decade.

A member of the Fund for Animals, who attended Saturday's drive as part of that group's three-member oversight team, said conservationists may band together to boycott Idaho products if the slaughter continues.

But Evans said Idaho farmers "have very serious problems" with the rabbits — and it is unfair to lay all the blame for the slaughter on the growers.

If conservation groups succeeded in boycotting Idaho products, he said, "severe problems" could develop for the state's agricultural economy "that's already suffering severely from low prices." A boycott along with the rabbit infestation also could force financially troubled farmers out of business, he said.

Evans said the use of children in the roundups and the photographs that have been disseminated of club-wielding farmers beating rabbits to death are "not a good image to portray among the people."

"That's why I said let's look at it as a more humane way," he said.

Evans and Idaho Humane Society officials had recommended the use of gas to kill the animals this weekend — but farmers said they only would consider it for later drives because using the untested method was impractical for Saturday's roundup.

The governor said he would instruct his staff today to contact state and federal agricultural representatives, U.S. Energy Department officials at the eastern-Idaho nuclear installation — the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory — and wildlife specialists in hopes of working together with farmers and conservationists to find a better method of exterminating the animals.

The Energy Department must participate, Evans said, because that agency's vast land holdings in eastern Idaho have turned into a prime breeding ground for the rabbits.

But he warned that funding limits on all the agencies would hamper efforts to solve the problem, saying farmers more than one month ago asked for money to help distribute poisons but became "frustrated" because they couldn't find anyone to assist them.

Members of the Twin Falls Smokey Bear Club meet their hero face to face.

Club members tell gift wishes during visit with Smokey Bear

TWIN FALLS — Most youngsters might find December a good time to visit Santa Claus, but if you belong to a Smokey Bear club, a chat on his knee might do just as well.

Seven of Smokey's fans dropped by the Sawtooth National Forest headquarters recently to greet the big fellow and present him with a giant Christmas card they had made.

Smokey thanked the members for being such good helpers and presented each child with a special badge and a letter bag containing posters, pencils, rulers and a balloon.

The club members arrived wearing cardboard Smokey hats they had made. And they sang a few bars of the Forest Service's fire-prevention song.

Helping the junior rangers with their presentation were three Cub Scouts from Twin Falls No. 1. Smokey also presented the Cubs with a special Boy Scout-Smokey poster.

Vincent's mother, Jeanette Martinez, said she helped form the club and consented to be its assistant leader in order to channel the activity into something educational.

All of the youngsters, ages 4 through 6, are too young to join scouting or 4-H activities, she said.

The Martinez family has a framed picture of Smokey on one wall, she said, and youngsters in the Crestview Drive neighborhood responded enthusiastically to the suggestion.

"What is really rewarding is to see these young kids learn about fire prevention and then watch them tell other people when they see them doing something wrong with fire," Martinez said.

Paul Barker, the Sawtooth National Forest supervisor, said he was pleased to learn of the club's existence, adding that the participants' early interest in natural resources will be useful later in life.

The club usually meets once a week. Activities include working with Smokey's Junior Ranger Book, making posters about fire prevention and, in general, learning how to be careful while hiking and camping in the forest.

Current members are Martinez, Brad and Curtis Bogulawski, Stacie Woodall, Brandee O'Connor and Emily Severance.

National water law changes receive only spotty support

BOISE (UPI) — Changes in national water law proposed by Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, are drawing limited backing in Idaho, but some national groups don't support the measure.

McClure is proposing to change the 1902 Reclamation Act by enlarging the so-called 160-acre limitation, which most interests agree is too small to be useful to the modern-day farmer.

The act says farmers may receive federal water for up to 160 acres — a limit imposed at the turn of the century — on today's farms, which have expanded to keep pace with rising production costs.

The average size of a family farm using federal water ranges from 200 to 225 acres in southcentral and south-western Idaho and about 500 acres in eastern Idaho, where growing seasons are shorter, said Sheri Chapman, Idaho Water Users Association director.

Some of the farms exceed the 160-acre limit, while others are family farms with 10 or more members, occupying 160 acres. The state has a total of 1.5 million acres that are served by 11 federal water projects.

McClure's bill offers irrigators two options. The first retains the acreage limit and allows unlimited leasing. Farmers also would not be required to live on or near the land.

The second option expands ownership for individuals, families or small legal entities benefiting 25 people or fewer. The new limit would allow federal water for 1,600 acres of land that is owned and for another 1,600 acres of leased land.

But Idaho Change Master Gordon Tate said allowing the larger acreage limit invites corporate farming.

"We fool when you get up to 3,200 acres (owned and leased) ... there are many family operations that would need to have that acreage," Tate said. "We feel the family farm is the very backbone of American agriculture."

Milt Hakel, spokesman for the National Farmers Union, also said problems with the bill make it woefully.

"It repeats the family farm objectives of the 1902 Reclamation Act by providing what we call a subsidy smorgasbord to present violators ... by giving them several options to bend the law to their advantage," Hakel said.

But southwestern Idaho farmer Ray Volle, whose family corporation owns 280 acres near Homedale, said the need for change is critical.

"One hundred sixty acres is not a very good economic unit anymore," he said. "To gain efficiency, you have to have economies of scale. If you have a new large tractor to do heavy work, you better have more acreage so you have a better investment."

Refugees from Poland due in Idaho

BOISE (UPI) — Eight refugees from Poland will arrive today to take up new lives in Idaho under the sponsorship of the state's AFL-CIO union president Jim Kerns said Sunday.

Kerns said the refugees would arrive in Boise this morning on United Airlines, and "the public is invited to greet them when they get to Idaho."

Kerns said the AFL-CIO agreed to accept the refugees in a show of solidarity for the Polish labor union, Solidarity. He said officials were expecting three to six more refugees to relocate in Idaho by the end of the year. "So there will be a small community of Polish people here for companionship."

One of the refugees, whom Kerns identified only as Karol, 27, was a metallurgist in Poland and was arrested in a Solidarity strike. He will bring his 26-year-old wife and 7-year-old son, Kerns said.

"They've all got relatives in Poland, and we've been advised by the (national) refugee agency not to identify them too closely yet" for the safety of those relatives, Kerns said.

He said a news conference would be held when the party arrived in Boise, but officials probably would identify the refugees by first names only as "another" promotion. The union also had been instructed not to identify the refugees' hometowns, but they got out of Poland or how many relatives they left behind, he said.

Society counts birds near Boise

BOISE (UPI) — About 30 Idaho Audubon Society members scoured the foothills near Boise Saturday in the group's 82nd nationwide Christmas Bird Count.

Golden Eagle Chapter President Al Larson said returns from the nine-hour sifting put the total at about 10,283 birds of 87 species.

"The purpose of the count was to spot and record as many birds of as many species as possible — but Larson said members also were warned not to count the same bird twice."

He said members counted about 2,000 starlings, 700 California quail, 36 chickadees, 5 mature bald eagles, 3 tree sparrows, 2 green herons, 1 great horned owl and a snow goose.

Basques stage Christmas festival

BOISE (UPI) — The Oinkari Basque Dancers performed before 500 spectators at the annual Basque Christmas celebration in Boise Saturday night despite having to call stand-ins to the stage because of mishaps last week.

Basque and non-Basque Idahans jammed into the Mardi-Gras tavern for the yearly event. But one of the dancers, Chris Bieler, 25, Boise, said the show went on despite some trouble.

"Two or three of the guys got hurt over the (last) week, and we had to put some new guys in that hadn't done it before," Bieler said. Despite the difficulties, Bieler led eight young men through the zortziko dance of hopping, spinning and trading places in a two-column formation.

Chicago endangers Denver playoff bid with 35-24 surprise

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Chicago Bears came out of hibernation on a wintry Sunday afternoon too late for their own playoff hopes and too soon for the playoff aspirations of the Denver Broncos.

The Bears, long since out of contention in the NFC Central, completed a sweep of AFC West teams by whipping the Broncos 35-24, forcing Denver to sweat out the outcome of tonight's game between San Diego and Oakland.

Denver, 10-6, can make the playoffs only if Oakland defeats the Chargers, giving the Broncos the AFC West title. A San Diego victory eliminates Denver.

"We just have to hope for a miracle from Oakland," Denver Coach Dan Reeves said. "I see our chances are slim. I'm extremely proud of this team, I just feel sorry for their sake that we fell short."

Reeves conceded the two big defensive plays by Chicago cost his team the game. Gary Fencik returned a Craig Morton pass 69 yards for a touchdown on Denver's second play of the third quarter and Al Harris returned a Morton toss 44 yards for a TD later in the quarter to allow the Bears to finish 6-10 with their third straight victory.

"You can't give anybody 14 points. It's tough to win football games when you're shut," Reeves said. "It is frustrating to make the mistakes like we did today, but Chicago does those things to you."

Chicago Coach Neil Armstrong, whose job may have been saved by the late-season surge, said his team was able to come to life because "the guys never did quit."

"The last two or three weeks, we played like we knew we could play. I just wish the season would have started then," Armstrong said. "The passing game also got going and everybody contributed."

Walter Payton caught two TD passes from Vince Evans — a 19-yarder in the second quarter for Chicago's first TD and a 7-yarder to cap the team's biggest offensive output of the season.

"We played physical today and I can't tell you why we did so well against the AFC West," he said. "We were like the Monsters of the Midway today."

The Bears recorded six sacks, 3 1/2 by Alan Page — who closed out a distinguished 15-year career. "It was a difficult week but I'm glad it's over and I was extra glad to be able to contribute to win this game," said the Bears' defensive tackle.

In the third quarter, Morton threw a 6-yard TD pass to Riley Odums and reserve quarterback Steve DeBerg came off the bench to throw the first of two TD passes — a 25-yarder to Rick Upchurch. But Denver could never overcome the two interception returns for touchdowns. Upchurch caught a 39-yard touchdown pass with 3:15 left in the game.

The Broncos' best drive of the first half came on their opening possession when Fred Steinfort kicked a 46-yard

San Diego could capture third straight AFC West crown

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — With a big "thank you" to the Chicago Bears, the San Diego Chargers suddenly have a chance to win their third straight AFC West Championship tonight in a "do or die" NFL season finale against the Oakland Raiders.

The Chargers needed help to get into the playoffs, and they got it Sunday when the underdog Bears defeated the Denver Broncos, 35-24.

If San Diego can beat Oakland, it will win the West with a 10-6 record and go to Miami's Orange Bowl either Jan. 2 or 3 for a divisional playoff game against the AFC East champion Dolphins. If the Chargers lose, they would be out of the playoffs and Denver would win the only post-season berth from the division.

Tonight's nationally-televized game at San Diego Jack

Murphy Stadium is a sell-out of more than 52,000. Kickoff is at 7 p.m. MST.

The big stories in San Diego last week revolved around the quarterbacks for both the Chargers and Raiders, the defending NFL champions who are suffering their first losing season in 16 years.

Dan Fouts, earlier listed as questionable for the game with a severely bruised hip, was reported Sunday as a probable starter.

Earlier last week, the NFL Players Association had demanded that the Chargers immediately suspend Fouts for "failure" to pay $1,222 in union dues. After the quarterback refused and the team indicated it would defy the union order, an "anonymous" donor came through with the payment to ensure Fouts' eligibility.

The Raiders, meantime, announced that last year's Super Bowl hero Jim Plunkett would probably get his first start in 10 weeks. Marc Wilson, who has been quarterback for most of the games this season, still has not fully recovered from a severely sprained thumb on his throwing hand suffered in last week's 23-6 loss to Chicago.

Plunkett's last appearance against the Chargers was Jan. 11, 1980 when the Raiders beat San Diego 34-27 in the AFC championship game. Plunkett completed 14 of 18 passes for 261 yards in the game.

Although they were crushed by the Chargers 55-21 at Oakland four weeks ago and have failed to reach the playoffs for the third time in the last four years, the Raiders still possess several motives for winning the game.

"It would be a nice way to end an otherwise disappointing season by knocking someone out of the playoffs," said Raider Coach Tom Flores, whose job is reported to be in jeopardy if Oakland loses its final game.

Oakland, which has not lost to the Chargers twice in a season since 1965, also would like to add to its amazing record of 18-1-1 in Monday night games.

The Raiders, 9-9 at home and 9-1-1 away in the Monday-night contests, have won 14 straight such games. Their only loss was against the Bills in Buffalo in 1974, 21-10. The tie was at Denver against the Broncos in 1973, 23-23.

In the Chargers' favor, home teams have won 11 straight Monday night affairs. San Diego has a 6-3 record in the games, including a 44-23 loss to the Seahawks in Seattle earlier this season.

First postseason berth in 12 years

Jets smother Packers, reach playoffs

NEW YORK (UPI) — Christmas is five days away but as far as New York's football fans are concerned it came on Sunday.

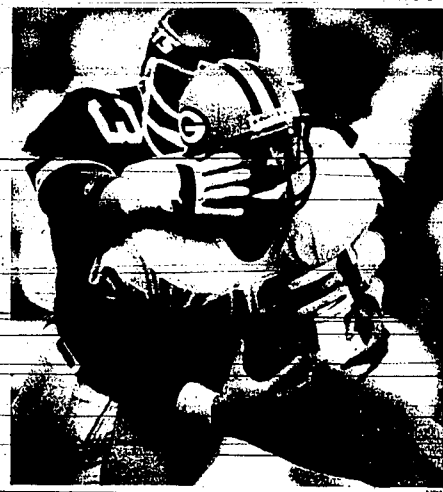

The New York Jets crushed the Green Bay Packers 28-3 Sunday to earn a wild card playoff berth, guaranteeing their first playoff appearance in 12 years.

The Jets' victory eliminated Green Bay from playoff contention and also brought the rival New York Giants into the playoffs as an NFC wild card club. The Giants will be making their first post-season appearance in 18 years.

The Jets will play host to Buffalo at 10 a.m. MST Sunday in the AFC wild card game. The Giants will be at Philadelphia Sunday at 1:30 p.m. MST in the NFC wild card battle.

Kevin Long and Bruce Harper scored on short runs and Richard Todd had touchdown passes of 47 yards to Lam Jones and 38 yards to Wesley Walker for the Jets. New York's defense, meanwhile, overwhelmed Green Bay. The Jets bottled up the Packers' explosive receivers, James Lofton and John Jefferson, all afternoon. The Jets sacked Lynn Dickey nine times to finish the season with league-leading 56 sacks, one of the league records set by Oakland in 1967.

"A lot of people talk about a good defensive team in this area," said Jets' Coach Walt Michaels. "Well, I saw another one today. I feel good — it's always great when you make the playoffs. I also feel good for management. When we were 0-9 early this year and things looked darkest, they were the brightest."

The Jets' front four — Joe Klecko, Marty Lyons, Abdul Salaam and Mark Gastineau — hounded Dickey all day. Even when Klecko missed much of the second period with a foot injury, rookie Kenny Nell came in and kept the pressure on.

"We were conscious of the record and it's...too bad we missed," said Klecko. "But the playoffs are the most important thing. I thought our defense was simply superb today. When you allow a professional team less than 100 yards total offense, it's got to give you quite a bit of gratification."

"This is a great thing for the club and I feel so good. We're so united — this is a family-type thing. We came back from adversity — we came together when everybody was down on us and we showed it in everybody's face."

Lyons, bothered by a hamstring injury for most of the second half of the season, had one of his finest games.

"The adrenalin was flowing through me," he said. "I played in some big games at Alabama, but this was the biggest game in my life. These are a great bunch of guys and I didn't want to let them down."

"I was emotionally up for this game. There was no way I could hide it before the game and there's no way I can hide it now."

Packers Coach Bart Starr admitted his team was overwhelmed.

"They played well," he said. "Except for a few plays defensively and a few offensively, we didn't do anything. They did it all."

"Early in the game we were able to control it. At halftime, we had plenty of optimism in the dressing room even though we were behind 21-3. But in the second half we made foolish mistakes that we hadn't been doing recently. The credit belongs to the Jets."

"They played very well. I take exception to anyone saying the Packers choked. Getting this close

Playoffs for Bues, but not for Detroit

PONTIAC, Mich. (UPI) — Bill Casper kicked a tie-breaking 30-yard field goal 12 seconds into the fourth quarter, and nose tackle Dave Logan returned an Eric Hipple fumble 21 yards for a touchdown just 70 seconds later Sunday, lifting the Tampa Bay Buccaneers to their second NFL Central Division title in three years with a 20-17 upset of the Detroit Lions.

Tampa Bay, 9-7, eliminated the Lions from playoff contention by handing Detroit, 8-8, its first Silverdome loss of the year after seven victories. The Buccaneers will open their post-season play in Dallas against the Eastern Division champion Cowboys in two weeks.

Cedric Brown's second interception of the game, which came with 7:02 to play and took place in the end zone, halted one late Detroit effort to get back into the game and Tampa Bay clinched the game when Terry Bell recovered an onside kick attempt by the Lions after they had scored with 1:21 left on an 8-yard pass from Hipple to Leonard Thompson.

Detroit dominated the game offensively, but Tampa Bay, which has yielded fewer touchdowns than any team in the NFL, let the Lions cross the goal-line just twice. The first time came when Hipple bootlegged nine yards around left end to give his team its only lead of the game, 7-3, with 12:21 left in the first half.

Casper, who kicked a 40-yard field goal to open the game's scoring, kicked his 30-yarder on the second play of the fourth quarter at the end of a 68-yard drive which was highlighted by a spectacular 35-yard catch by James Owens while lying flat on his back.

Detroit was forced into a passing situation and Hipple faked back on third down but was hit from behind by defensive end Lee Roy Selmon and the ball popped out.

Logan picked it up on one bounce and raced 21 yards untouched into the end zone to take Tampa Bay from a 10-10 tie to a 20-10 lead in a span of just 70 seconds.

The Lions marched from their own 17 to the Buccaneers' 13 after Logan's touchdown but Hipple, who completed 17-of-26 passes for 197 yards, was intercepted in the end zone by Brown for the second time in the game.

Fred Scott, who became the first Detroit player to gain 1,000 yards in receptions in a season since Pat Studstill in 1966, saw a throw bounce off his chest while he was in the air and was helpless as Brown snatched it on the way down to half the drive.

It took Detroit 1:05 to score in its next possession, with Hipple hitting Thompson, but the obvious onside kick went to Tampa Bay in a mad scramble.

Dave Kragthorpe—a rare man, a successful coach

Considering that only one team can finish in first place while all others must lose, a championship in any sport is a rare treasure.

It's fitting, then, that the Division I-AA football champion Idaho State Bengals are led by a rare individual.

ISU's head coach is a gentleman, a diminishing breed in athletic environs. He is a sensitive person, as evidenced by his understanding of his players. These qualities, combined with a sufficient knowledge of football, make him a winner, which is what has transformed the Bengals into.

People began to suspect Dave Kragthorpe was somebody special last year. Coming from Brigham Young University, where he had served as offensive line coach for 10 seasons, he had a reputation as a 1979 Bengal of reaching the I-AA playoffs.

This season the Bengals began with five consecutive victories, lost 24-21 to Montana, won their four remaining regular season games and crushed through their three playoff games to take the title.

Like all successful teams, ISU was gifted with a few standout performers — quarterback Mike Machurek, punter-kicker Case de Bruijn — and a host of modestly talented but hard-working players who exercised their talents to the fullest.

Kragthorpe was the man who got the most out of the Bengals.

He did it by treating his players with friendliness and respect.

"You might say he's sort of a classy guy," said free safety Reggie Chapman. "He's very easygoing, he gets involved with the players... he talks and jokes. If he's late for a meeting, he'll run. Like if we're late, he'll run."

He did it by realizing that working his players into a fever of excitement every Saturday would be the wrong approach.

"The way we tried to treat this game is typical of the whole year — not many peaks or valleys," Kragthorpe said after Saturday's Pioneer Bowl triumph.

This steady attitude prevents the Bengals from getting overly aroused or let down and helps them play at a constant level of quality.

Witness that in his 13 games, ISU scored 90, 74, 102 and 122 points during each quarter while giving up 37, 49, 20 and 43. The differences between each period are negligible. Consistency is a hallmark of athletic success, and the Bengals' mental and emotional stability obviously influences their on-the-field consistency.

In this era of high-fives, slam-dunk spikes and masses of bellowing players gathering in huge circles with frenzied fingers just before the kickoff, the Bengals stand out by remaining relatively calm, even in jubilation.

"We're not the kind of guys who go out and make a lot of noise," de Bruijn said.

Fittingly, instead of congratulating each other with the now-universal high-five, the Bengals approach each other as if to give a high-five but intentionally miss palms.

He did it by realizing, as a football tactician, what the Bengals lacked.

Kragthorpe started by gathering a competent group of assistant coaches. Jim Koetter, who was Highland's head man for 15 years before becoming Kragthorpe's top assistant and backfield coach, particularly impresses the players.

"Koetter is just as good as Kragthorpe," one player stated flatly.

Kragthorpe also incorporated much of BYU's offense, which emphasizes passing, into the Bengal program. He did this not only because Cougar Coach LaVell Edwards had proven it effective, but also to hasten ISU's journey to success.

"It takes out of five years to recruit running people," Kragthorpe said. By contrast, he could recruit transfers like Machurek and receivers Chris Corp and Charles Ewing almost immediately.

Kragthorpe's style obviously impressed other schools. Utah and the University of Texas-El Paso were among the institutions courting the 48-year-old mentor before he decided to remain in Pocatello.

The Bengals are the lucky ones.

Austin outlasts Navratilova despite long losing streak

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (UPI) — Tracy Austin, seemingly beaten after disappointing night games in a row, slaked her claim for the world No. 1 ranking when she beat Martina Navratilova 2-6, 6-4, 6-2 Sunday night to win the $250,000 Toyota Tennis Championship.

Just as she did in the U.S. Open final against Navratilova, Austin put up only a feeble effort in the opening set and suddenly turned the match around with her crisp strokes from the baseline. Once she took command, Austin was relentless in the final set, breaking with an overhead smash in the opening game. Navratilova managed a break point in the fourth game, but this bid failed as she sent a forehand wide.

The 19-year-old Californian then ended the suspense with a break in the fifth game despite a pair of aces by Navratilova.

Navratilova managed to hold serve after struggling to duce in the seventh game, but Austin then ended the one and 42 minute match by holding at 15.

The victory was worth $75,000 for Austin and boosted her earnings for 1981 $453,400, although she missed the final month of the year with a back injury. Navratilova's runner-up money of $47,000 boosted her total to $851,437.

Navratilova experienced difficulty with her serve and managed to get in only 15 percent of her serves in the opening set. Austin took advantage of the weakness to open the match with a break, and then held for 2-0.

But Navratilova, outdueling Austin from the baseline, then went on a tear streaking through the next eight games. In the last five games of the opening set, Austin managed only six points, looking nothing more than a schoolgirl playing far out of her class.

Navratilova seemed to be coasting when she jumped to a 2-0 lead in the second set, conceding only three points in the process. But just as suddenly the match turned around. Austin broke in the third game at 15 and then made the decisive break of the second set with a forehand pass in the ninth game. Navratilova had triple break point in the 10th game, but Austin managed to hold to end the set.

Given this boost, Austin took advantage of increasing errors by Navratilova to jump to the lead in the deciding set and she had a streak of five consecutive games before Navratilova held for 1-2.

It was Austin's fourth victory in six meetings with Navratilova this year. In the final of the U.S. Open, Austin dropped the opening set 6-1 to Navratilova then won the final two sets in tie-breakers.

Rival Jets put Giants in playoffs

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (UPI) — With a tip of their helmets to the rival New York Jets, the New York Giants rejoiced Sunday and started preparations for their first playoff game in 18 years.

The Giants raised their record to 9-7 Saturday with a dramatic 18-10 overtime triumph over Dallas but had to wait for the results of Sunday's game between the Jets and the Green Bay Packers to determine how they would spend the Christmas holiday.

"This means I can hold my head up at league meetings," said Giants President Wellington Mara after the Jets' 28-3 rout of the Packers lifted both New York teams into the playoffs. "It's been a long time for me (1963) without a playoff game. Maybe we can play more than one game ... maybe four games. It was strange rooting for the Jets but I had to do it."

With the entire Giants' family watching the Jets-Packers game in the press lounge at Giants Stadium, cheers reverberated throughout the room as the Jets pummeled Green Bay and sent the Giants to the NFC wild card game in Philadelphia Sunday at 1:30 p.m. MST.

"We go into the playoffs approaching a peak, which is exactly what you aim for," said Giants Coach Ray Perkins. "Before the season, said we would be either 8-8 or 9-7 and if we could have split with Green Bay, we would have been even better."

Jets

will help the team next year."

The Jets' defense, meanwhile, bolted up the Packers' explosive receiver, James Lofton and John Jefferson all afternoon. The Jets, who lead the league in sacks, had nine Sunday to finish with 66 — one short of the NFL record set by Oakland in 1967.

Green Bay was limited to just 68 yards in total offense, the best defensive effort in Jets' history, as New York raised its record to 10-5-1. Green Bay, which had won six of its last seven games to move into playoff contention, finished 8-8.

Todd hit 15 of 33 passes for 247 yards. Quarterback Lynn Dierker recovered McNellie's fumble on the Jets' 44 and the Packers, apparently unprepared on third down, picked up 15 yards to the Jets' 22 on an unsportsmanlike penalty against Lyons.

Jan Stenerud then connected on a 31-yard field goal.

New York then chewed up the next 9:43 of the second period, going 80 yards in 20 plays to go ahead 9-3.

The Jets converted five third-down situations in the drive as Todd hit key passes of 16 yards to Walker, 13 yards to Bruce Harper, 8 yards to Jones and 7 yards to Scott Dierking to set up 3rd-and-goal at the 3-yard line.

Harper blew up the middle behind a superb block by All-Pro center Joe Fields to put New York ahead 14-3 with 57 left in the half.

The Packers looked totally disorganized after taking over on their 5-yard line with 1:51 left in the half and had to punt the ball back to New York with 55 seconds left.

That was enough time for the Jets as Dierking plowed eight yards to the Packers' 47 and Todd then hit Jones, former Olympic gold medal sprinter, streaking down the right sideline for a 47-yard touchdown pass and a 21-3 lead 42 seconds before halftime.

Green Bay was able to move into jet territory only four times during the entire game, twice in each half.

field goal to give Denver its only lead at 3-0 with 9:10 left in the first quarter.

But Payton caught Evans' sidetrack pass for the 19-yard TD with 14:07 left in the first half to give the Bears a 7-3 lead they never relinquished.

Fullback Roland Harper added a 4-yard TD run with 2:02 left in the half that was set up by a 25-yard pass from Evans to Ricky Walters.

On the second play of the second half, Payton snared Martin's pass at the Chicago 31 and reeled down the left sideline for his first NFL touchdown.

Later in the quarter, cornerback Dean Smith intercepted Evans and returned it 65 yards to the Chicago 20. Evans caught the short TD pass from Morton five plays later.

But Harris intercepted a Morton pass at the Denver 4 and returned it for a touchdown to give the Bears a 28-10 lead with 4:33 remaining in the third quarter. DeBerg's first pass was a 25-yard TD to Upchurch with 2:15 remaining in the period.

Payton's second touchdown reception sealed the triumph for the Bears.

Seattle capitalizes on 10 Cleveland turnovers to win 42-21

SEATTLE (UPI) — Rookie Kenny Easley returned an intercepted pass 82 yards for one touchdown and Gregory Johnson ran 31 yards with a recovered fumble for another score Sunday to lead the Seattle Seahawks to a 42-21 victory over the stumbling Cleveland Browns.

The Browns, 5-11, lost seven fumbles and had three passes intercepted, leaving them just two short of the NFL record for turnovers in a single game.

The chief victims of the turnover spurge were running back Charles White, who lost three fumbles, and second-year quarterback Paul McDonald, who also lost three fumbles and had one pass intercepted.

In addition to the scores by Easley and Johnson, Seattle, 6-10, scored on passes of 4 and 14 yards from Dave Krieg to Steve Largent, a 10-yard strike from Krieg to Paul Johns and a 2-yard run by Theotis Brown. The Seahawks scored each of their touchdowns following a Cleveland turnover and had only one scoring drive longer than 25 yards.

Easley, a safety who was named to the NFL All-Rookie team, had a hand in each of Seattle's first three scores with two interceptions and a fumble recovery. Seattle defensive end Jacob Green was credited with causing three fumbles and he recovered one.

Largent, the only Seahawk named to the AFC Pro Bowl team, completed a superb season by catching six passes for 80 yards, giving him a career-high 75 pass receptions for 1,224 yards and nine touchdowns in 1981.

McDonald threw TD passes of 5 yards to Greg Pruitt, 16 yards to Dave Logan and 8 yards to Calvin Hill for Cleveland's scores. It was the last game for Hill, who has announced his retirement after 12 years in the NFL.

Although outgained 250-56 in the first half, the Seahawks held a 28-7 lead at halftime, largely because of Cleveland's generosity.

On Cleveland's opening-drive, Easley cut in front of wide receiver Ricky Feacher at the Seahawks' 18 to pick off a pass from Brian Sipe. Easley then raced untouched to the end zone to give Seattle a 7-0 lead with 11:42 remaining in the first quarter.

The Browns drove right back down the field to the Seattle 16 on their next series, but again coughed up the ball, this time with White committing the fumble, and Easley recovered.

The Seahawks then put together their only long drive of the game, moving 60 yards on just seven plays, with the big gainer coming on a 43-yard pass interference call against rookie defensiveback Hanford Dixon. The drive was capped on Brown's 2-yard scoring run, giving Seattle a 14-0 lead late in the first quarter.

Easley got his second interception on the first play of the second period on another attempted pass from Sipe to Feacher. Easley returned this one 43 yards to the Cleveland 7-yard line and Seattle scored two plays later on Krieg's 4-yard strike to Largent.

McDonald replaced Sipe on Cleveland's next series, but the Browns' turnover woes continued. On his second play, McDonald hit White with a short pass and the former Heisman Trophy winner from Southern Cal fumbled. The ball was picked up by Johnson and returned 31 yards for Seattle's fourth TD.

Jaworski silences Eagle boo-birds in 38-0 rout over Cards

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The greeting given to Ron Jaworski at Veterans Stadium Sunday could not be confused with the welcome that people normally give a conquering hero.

But Jaworski, booed as he stepped onto the field for the first time, quickly won the fans over with three touchdown passes to spark Philadelphia to a 38-0 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals that enabled the Eagles to clinch the home field advantage in the NFC wild-card playoff game.

The Eagles, 10-6, will meet the New York Giants at 1:30 p.m. MST Sunday at Veterans Stadium.

Philadelphia coach Dick Vermeil was pleased to see Jaworski vindicate himself, and later vented his feelings about those dissatisfied with his quarterback.

"I'm pleased to see Ron Jaworski do so well under what could have been a pressure situation," Vermeil said. "For each person who ever booed him, they can stick it."

"You never give up on good people. He's got more character than any one person who ever booed him. I'm pleased that Ron got through this crisis. He's a winner."

Jaworski had guided the Eagles to only 43 points during the four-game losing streak, but he helped them break out of their slump by leading the offense to a total of 44 yards.

Jaworski fired TD passes of 4 yards to Charlie

Smith, 6 yards to Harold Carmichael and 29 yards to Billy Campbell before leaving the game with 9:48 left in the third quarter.

"Needless to say, this game is what we needed," Vermeil said. "We played good football and that was very important. Our confidence had been shaken and we weren't playing the football we were capable of."

St. Louis Coach Jim Hanifan said the Eagles looked stronger Sunday than they did in a 52-10 rout of the Cardinals last month in St. Louis.

"We didn't feel as if it would be a blowout," he said. "I thought it could have been a close game. We were hurt early when we lost (strong safety) Lee Nelson and had to put in Steve Carpenter, who we just got last Wednesday."

Wilbert Montgomery, who gained 108 yards in 13 carries, and rookie Hubs Oliver ran for second-quarter touchdowns on dashes of 9 and 18 yards, respectively. Tony Franklin added a 44-yard field goal in the third period.

The Philadelphia defense, ranked No. 1 in the league, limited the Cardinals, 7-9, to 211 yards of total offense, forced six turnovers and sacked rookie Neil Lomax seven times.

St. Louis did not advance past the Philadelphia 38 until late in the fourth quarter and Nell O'Donoghue missed a 38-yard field goal attempt with 6:45 remaining. A pass from the Eagles' 4-yard line in the last minute was intercepted by John Sciarra.

The Eagles fashioned touchdown drives of 47, 47 and 48 yards en route to a 28-0 halftime lead while outgaining the Cardinals 309-43.

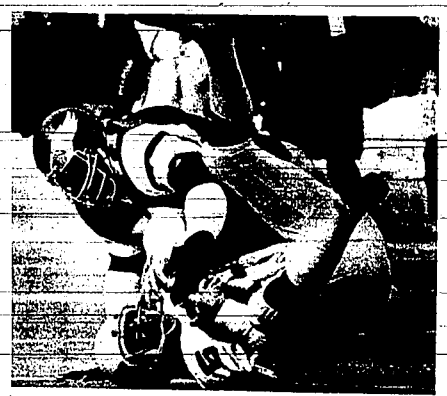

Dennis Harrison's recovery of a Lomax fumble at the St. Louis 47 sparked a seven-play drive to the first touchdown. Jaworski touched off the march with a 29-yard pass to Carmichael and found Smith on a quick slant six plays later for the score.

A short punt put the Eagles in position for their next touchdown. Jaworski and Oliver connected for a 27-yard pass play to the 18 and two plays later from the 3-yard line, Montgomery took a handoff, broke tackles by Mike Dawson, Rusty Lisch and Jeff Griffin and dove into the end zone.

Montgomery raced 41 yards to set up Philadelphia's next score. On the fourth play of the 83-yard drive, Oliver took an inside handoff, broke two tackles and scored for his first NFL touchdown.

A 22-yard pass from Jaworski to Wally Henry and a 12-yard toss to Smith led to a 6-yard alley-ooop TD pass to Carmichael with 43 seconds left in the half.

The Eagles drove 41 yards on their first possession of the second half for their final touchdown. Montgomery gained 12 yards in the march to go over the 100-yard mark for the eighth time this season. Jaworski later spotted Campbell over the middle and Campbell ran over defender Roger Wehrli to score.

Niners defeat Saints, but Rogers finishes as top rusher

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — There was some good news and some bad news for the New Orleans Saints at the close of the 1981 season.

The bad news was predictable enough — New Orleans finished another season on a losing note Sunday as the 4-12 Saints suffered a 21-17 loss to the playoff-bound San Francisco 49ers.

But 43,639 fans were treated to a rare surprise when sensational rookie George Rogers rolled up 107 yards on 38 carries to become the NFL's rushing king — the first in Saints' history.

"It all turned out well for us, other than losing the game," a smiling Rogers said.

The rookie from South Carolina finished the year with 1,674 yards to become the NFL's leading rusher and to shatter Otis Anderson's 1979 rookie rushing record of 1,605 yards. Rogers passed up previous leader Tony Dorsett of Dallas, who finished the year with 1,646 yards.

Saints' quarterback Archie Manning, who finished the game 14-for-21 for 110 yards, said Rogers' achievements were even more incredible because the running back had played injured during the last six games.

"He ran better than any other back I've seen all year long," Manning said.

Despite the outstanding rookie performance, Rogers refused to take all the credit.

"But even though I got the rushing title, it's a compliment to the entire team," he said.

Injuries and the 49ers didn't stop Rogers from plowing his way into NFL history. The usually reserved Saints' coach — Bum — Phillips was noticeably pleased by Rogers' accomplishments.

"He took all the licks everybody handed out all year long," Phillips said. "It's a compliment to the whole team."

"Getting over 100 yards against the 49ers is pretty doggone good."

San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh, who lifted the 49ers from the basement of the NFC West to the top in just three years, praised the Saints and predicted they were on the way up.

"There's every indication that New Orleans will be right up there fighting for a similar position in the playoffs," he said. "There's talk of parity in the NFL, and there are those that are upset with the young teams such as San Francisco that have come out of the crowd."

The victory allowed San Francisco to finish the year with the best record in the NFL at 10-3.

Joe Montana threw first-half touchdown passes to Charlie Young and Freddie Solomon and Johnny Davis ran for another score to carry the 49ers over the Saints.

Rogers rushed for first-half TDs of 6 and 5 yards to keep the Saints close for the entire game. Besides Rogers' two touchdowns, the Saints' only other points came on a 27-yard field goal by Benny Ricardo.

At the end of the first quarter, New Orleans punted to Solomon, who dropped the ball into the hands of Guido Merkenz at the 18. Four plays later, Rogers raced around the right end for a 6-yard touchdown and a 7-7 tie.

On the next play, Amos Lawrence bobbed the kickoff three times before dropping the ball on his own 7-yard line. Scott Peelle recovered for the Saints and three plays later, Rogers crashed through from the 5-yard line for his second touchdown and the all-time NFL rookie rushing record.

San Francisco came right back, however, as Montana marched the 49ers 69 yards in nine plays for their second touchdown and a 14-14 deadlock. Montana finished the drive with a 2-yard scoring strike to Solomon.

Montana, who left the game in the second quarter to rest up for the NFC Divisional Playoff game Jan. 2 or Jan. 3 against either Philadelphia or the New York Giants, opened the 49ers' scoring in the first quarter with a 13-yard TD pass to Young on San Francisco's first possession.

Kansas City's Mike Bell hits Viking quarterback Tommy Kramer in Sunday's first quarter

Vikes end dejecting season, 21-year tenure at the Met

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — The final seconds of Minnesota's last game of 1981 just about summed up the Vikings' frustrating season.

Quarterback Tommy Kramer fired a pass intended for tight end Joe Senser in the end zone, but the Kansas City Chiefs broke up the play and held on for a 10-6 victory in the season finale.

"We were within a play of doing it right," Minnesota Coach Bud Grant said. "It would have been a telling ending, but we couldn't even do it right."

The Vikings ended 21 years at Metropolitan Stadium with their fifth straight loss.

"We have to wonder why we are losing," Kramer said. "Everybody is going to have to do some soul searching."

Kansas City quarterback Steve Fuller hit Stan Rome on a 15-yard touchdown pass in the third quarter despite 20-degree temperatures and a brisk wind that hampered both teams.

"You're limited in what you can do when it's this cold," Fuller said. "But as far as Dec. 20 in Minnesota goes, I thought it was a nice day."

"I think people saw a good game here for the last game in this stadium and we were glad to be a part of it."

Kansas City Coach Marv Levy, who praised rookie running back Billy Jackson for carrying the Chiefs' offense, said he was pleased the team posted its first winning season in eight years.

"Our record this year is better than it has been and that's progress," Levy said. "We didn't go as far as we wanted, but it's progress."

The Vikings tripled stadium security for the game, but a spokesman said there were several reports of injuries from broken glass and one fan twisted an ankle in the postgame melee.

Hundreds of the 41,110 fans swarmed onto the frozen field after the game, the last ever in the 25-year-old Met. They tore down the goal posts and scoreboard and dismantled bleachers for souvenirs.

The Chiefs, who snapped a three-game losing streak, ended their season at 9-7 for their best record since 1971, when they were 10-3-1. The Vikings, who lost their final five games, finished at 7-9.

Kramer guided the Vikings from their own 29 to the Chiefs' 3-yard line with 3:50 to play, hitting 5-of-6 passes in the march. On 4th-and-goal with 19 seconds left, Kramer fired a pass intended for tight end Joe Senser in the end zone, but it was broken up by two Kansas City defenders.

The game was tied 3-3 at halftime after a 43-yard field goal by Minnesota's Rick Danmeier and a 30-yard field goal by Kansas City's Nick Lowery. Defensive end Art Still recovered a fumble by the Vikings' Tony Galbreath on Minnesota's 21 to set up Lowery's score.

The Chiefs opened the second half with a 26-yard kickoff return by James Murphy that put Kansas City on the Minnesota 37. Fuller hit Rome eight plays later on the scoring strike to give the Chiefs a 10-3 lead with 10:03 left in the third quarter.

Bengals edge Falcons, gain home-field playoff advantage

ATLANTA (UPI) — Ken Anderson passed for 299 yards and two touchdowns to lead AFC Central Division champion Cincinnati to a 30-28 victory over Atlanta, clinching the home-field advantage for the Bengals through the playoffs.

The Bengals, 12-4, withstood a valiant Atlanta comeback bid which saw the Falcons drive 97 yards for a touchdown with 1:19 left to play, and then recover an onside kickoff only to have rookie Mick Luckhurst miss a 33-yard field goal as the final gun sounded.

Cincinnati finished with the best record in the AFC and will meet the winner of next week's wild card game between Buffalo and the New York Jets in two weeks in the second round of the playoffs.

Anderson, who completed 19-of-34 passes, hit reserve tight end M.L. Harris on a 21-yard scoring toss in the first quarter and found rookie Chris Collinsworth with a 74-yard TD bomb in the second quarter.

Reserve running back Archie Griffin scored on an 18-yard run in the second quarter for the Bengals, who also tallied on field goals of 45, 29 and 20 yards by Jim Breech.

The Falcons, 7-9, who saw their wild card playoff hopes wiped out Saturday when the New York Giants beat Dallas 13-10 in overtime, trailed 24-7 before scoring twice on 1-yard runs by William Andrews in the second quarter to narrow the gap to 24-21.

Andrews, who ran 15 times for 53 yards, became only the fifth player in NFL history to go over the 2,000-yard mark in a single season for combined rushing and pass receiving.

The Falcons also scored in the second quarter on a 10-yard pass from Steve Bartkowski to Lynn Cain but Bartkowski suffered a bruised elbow just before halftime and sat out the rest of the game.

Breech's 29-yard field goal with two seconds left in the half put the Bengals on top 27-21. He added a 20-yarder with 8:07 left in the game for a 30-21 Cincinnati lead.

Colts win battle of losers over Patriots, 23-21

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Bert Jones fired three touchdown passes, two to Ray Butler, and the Baltimore Colts snapped a 14-game losing streak Sunday with a 23-21 triumph over New England, guaranteeing the hapless Patriots the first pick in the 1982 college draft.

Jones hit Butler for scoring strikes of 53 and 37 yards and added another score on a 5-yard toss to Don Mc-Cauley. Mike Wood hit a 30-yard field goal to complete the scoring as Baltimore beat New England for the second time this year and handed the Patriots, 2-14, their ninth straight loss.

The Colts' first victory came Opening Day in Foxboro, Mass., and since then, Baltimore, 2-14, had not won a game. The tie between the two also-rans was snapped because Baltimore played a tougher schedule under the NFL tie-breaker formula.

New England held leads of 7-3 and 14-10 in the first half on a 4-yard run by Sam Cunningham and a 15-yard pass from Tom Owen to Don Westerbrook. Matt Cavanaugh came off the bench late in the game for the Patriots and led New England to a fourth-quarter touchdown, capping an 80-yard drive with a 2-yard pass to Westerbrook with 1:58 to go.

But the Patriots, who lost six games this year by less than five points, could not pull out the victory.

Baltimore came out strong for the second half and marched down the field for what turned out to be the winning score. Jones, who had 287 yards passing in 17 completions in 28 attempts, hit Butler on a 37-yard pass to cap the drive.

Nielsen's 3 TD strikes leads Houston, 21-20

HOUSTON (UPI) — Gifford Nielsen threw three touchdown passes to tight end Dave Casper Sunday, the last with 1:51 remaining, to rally the Houston Oilers to a 21-20 season-ending victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Young Steeler quarterback Mark Malone ran two yards for a touchdown and passed the Steelers to another score in the third quarter to give his team a 14-14 lead, and the Pittsburgh defense — led by tackle Tom Beasley — shut down the Oilers in the second half until late in the fourth quarter.

Nielsen, who passed for 376 yards by completing 24 passes in 37 attempts, drove the Oilers 71 yards in four plays for the winning touchdown, throwing a 44-yard pass to Michael Holston, which carried to the Pittsburgh 16.

Malone brought the Steelers back to midfield after Houston took the lead, but Steelers' running back Franco Harris fumbled and defensive end Andy Morris recovered at midfield with 2:30 left to play.

In the first half, Casper caught TD passes of 15 and 41 yards as the Steelers countered with David Trout field goals of 40 and 37 yards.

On their first possession of the second half, the Steelers moved to a touchdown to trail by only 14-13. Running back Sidney Thornton carried a draw play 17 yards for a score after Malone had completed passes of 30 and 11 yards to John Stallworth.

Pittsburgh took the lead 20-14 on Malone's 2-yard rollout following a pass interception by linebacker Robin Cole.

Harris was held to 36 yards rushing, 13 short of what he needed to gain 1,000 this year and become the first NFL player to get 1,000 yards in each of eight seasons.

The performance was Nielsen's finest since taking over as the Oilers' quarterback from Kenny Stabler three games ago. Until the Oilers' late scoring drive, however, the Steeler defense trapped Nielsen for four sacks in the second half and kept the Oilers from mounting any drive.

Nielsen's leading receivers were Casper, with 139 yards on six catches, rookie Holston, with 128 yards on five catches, and Ken Burroughs, with 44 yards on three catches.

Houston improved its record to 7-9, and the Steelers, 8-8, failed to have a winning record for the first time in 10 years.

The Steelers, who recorded five total sacks, also bottled up running back Earl Campbell, holding him to 24 yards on 13 carries. Campbell finished the season with 1,376 yards but failed for the first time in his four seasons to win the NFL rushing title.

Theismann sets record in victory over Rams

ANAHEIM, Calif. (UPI) — Joe Theismann set a single-season team record for completions, passing for 247 yards and a pair of touchdowns Sunday to lead the Washington Redskins to an easy 30-7 victory over the Los Angeles Rams in the final game of the season for both teams.

Theismann, an eight-year veteran from Notre Dame, completed 14-of-22 passes, including TD passes of 4 yards to Joe Washington and 37 yards to Virgil Seay. He finished the season with 293 completions, breaking the old mark of 288 set by Sonny Jurgensen in 1967.

The Redskins finished the year with an 8-8 record while Los Angeles concluded the season with a 6-10 mark, their worst record in 16 years.

The Redskins dominated the Rams from the start, rolling up 351 yards in the first half to just 89 for the Rams. For the game, Washington had 502 total yards to just 165 for Los Angeles. It was the most yardage given up by the Los Angeles this season.

After building a 16-7 halftime lead on Theismann's first touchdown pass to Washington, a 1-yard TD run by Brian Riggins and a 3-yard field goal by Mark Moseley, the Redskins broke the game open with a pair of touchdowns in the third period.

Washington took a 23-7 lead with 2:55 left in the period on Riggins' second 1-yard TD run, set up by Monte Coleman's interception of a Dan Pastorini pass.

On the next Los Angeles series, backup quarterback Jeff Kemp, a rookie from Dartmouth, replaced Pastorini. On his first play in the NFL, Kemp was sacked for a 9-yard loss and one play later, his first NFL pass was intercepted by Joe Taven-

On Washington's second play, Theismann and Seay connected on the 37-yard TD bomb to close out the scoring.

Washington led all rushers with 96 yards in 14 carries while Art Monk led a group of seven Redskin receivers with 96 yards on just two catches. Mike Guman had just 41 yards rushing to lead the Rams while Drew Hill led Los Angeles receivers with a pair of catches for 45 yards.

The Rams' only points came on the first play of the second period on a 1-yard run by Guman. That touchdown was set up by Washington's Jeris White was called for pass interference, giving the Rams a first down at the 1-yard line.

Sims wows Akers more than Campbell did

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Texas Coach Fred Akers recruited Earl Campbell and coached Campbell during his Heisman Trophy winning senior season. And after a while Akers simply ran out of noteworthy things to say about the Southwest Conference's all-time leading rusher.
