Racing fever

Running on Rupert's track lures holiday celebrants for day

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

RUPERT — As the thudding of hooves whipped by the group of spectators, one woman sighed, saying, "I just love that sound."

The rhythm of beating hooves and the whoops, hollers and groans of bettors filled the racetrack at the Minidoka County Fairgrounds in one of the most popular events of the county's Fourth-of-July celebrations.

An estimated 1,200 to 1,300 persons attended Monday's pari-mutuel horse racing, sponsored by the Rupert Chamber of Commerce, to try their luck with Son of Thunder or Go Dallee Go or Gem Raggety Ann.

Jack Erickson, his wife, Katherine, his son, Scott; and his wife, Sherrie, and their three children were among the families rooting for their favorites.

Studying the program for the fourth race, Erickson decided, "I like (No.) three. (Charlie D Cool.) I like the way he's built."

Erickson, a rancher in the Almo area, has long enjoyed the races, although he seldom bets more than $3 a shot.

He had been at the races Saturday, but he decided to return Monday.

"We couldn't hay today, so we thought we'd spend the day at the races."

In the fourth race, Erickson wagered "quinella" on two horses. That is, he bet that Charlie D Cool and No. 5, Heza Fantastic, would place first and second, regardless of the order of the finish.

"And they're off and running," came the announcement from the loudspeaker. Since this race was a 440-yard dash, it seemed like only an instant before the hooves come roaring past the Ericksons.

"C'mon Number One." "Turn 'em loose." The cries grew in volume as the finish line neared. There was a stream of Spanish exhortations from the Mexican-Americans pressed against the rails.

"C'mon, c'mon Charlie," Erickson intoned.

In seconds, it was over. Buster Chick was first; Heza Fantastic, second; Charlie D Cool, third; and Bugged Rocket Go, fourth.

"I didn't win nothing," Erickson said, but his voice was a chuckle. He turned to his son, who "didn't win nothing" either. Both took the losses cheerfully.

Spectators romped off to collect bets, place others, pick up a hot dog or check out the next set of horses being paraded at one end of the track.

Grant Southworth, a retired farmer from Hazelton, usually could be found there before every race, checking out the horse flesh, staring at the statistics on the program and discussing the possibilities with Gale Christopherson, also of Hazelton.

His ruminations were typical of those going through the minds of many of the persons watching the horses and fingering their billfolds.

The 11 races attracted a stream of onlookers all through the afternoon. Conversations usually started with the question, "Whuddabet?!"

The racing fever seemed infectious. A gaggle of teenage girls poured over a racing program, trying to make sense of the notations. "We're going to do it," two announce. "We're going to bet."

"I'm betting on Number 1," another piped in. "Let's go."

And they sauntered off, mingling with the crowds of people clustered around the betting windows.

Israel pulls ring tighter on Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli tanks and troops battled onto Beirut airport's runways Monday, half a mile from of one of last and largest PLO bases.

At the same time, and Israeli gunboats pounded the Lebanese capital in the worst fighting in 10 days.

The fighting, designed to heighten pressure on the PLO in peace talks aimed at forcing its total withdrawal from Lebanon, raged from dawn until late afternoon when a cease-fire was arranged, reportedly by U.S. presidential envoy Philip Habib.

Habib's efforts to negotiate an end to the Israeli invasion, which enters its second month today, were hampered by the assaults and Israel's continuing cutoff of all food, medical and power supplies to west Beirut — home to 6,000 PLO guerrillas and an estimated 500,000 civilians.

The advance put Israeli tanks and artillery for the first time directly on both runways of the closed airport, four miles south of Beirut and within a half mile of the Bourj Barajneh refugee camp, a Palestine Liberation Organization stronghold.

The center of west Beirut — struggling against Israel's total cutoff of food, medical and power supplies — echoed with the thuds of incoming fire as Israeli gunboat gunners zeroed in on guerrilla targets around Arab University and Fakhani Street.

In Tel Aviv, the military command said three Israeli soldiers were wounded in the fighting and one soldier was wounded in east Beirut by a Syrian sniper.

The PLO Voice of Palestine radio claimed guerrillas shot down a pilotless Israeli reconnaissance drone over the city sports stadium and knocked out 10 Israeli military vehicles.

The fighting, the worst since June 25, occurred on the 30th day of the Israeli invasion — Israel's longest continuous battle since its war of liberation in 1948.

Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, in a surprise trip, met with Habib in east Beirut, Israel Radio said, but gave no details of the talks.

Lebanese President Elias Sarkis also met with Habib at the presidential palace in Baabda.

Through emissaries, President Reagan told all sides it was "essential" that fighting cease and negotiations on the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon proceed, Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said.

Israel Radio said the government had put off its threatened invasion of west Beirut and given Habib additional time to reach agreement on an unconditional and complete PLO withdrawal from Lebanon.

But PLO representative Sa'ed Kamal told Cairo's Al Akhbar newspaper today that "Israel will surely pay a heavy price" if it invades west Beirut and claimed the longer the PLO rejects withdrawal, the more likely Washington will accept Palestinian rights to self-determination.

"We have learned from the Vietnam precedent that the U.S. would not respond positively to granting the peoples their right for self-determination unless these peoples hold on in their struggle for a longer period of time," he said.

As the battles raged, an Israeli road blockade into west Beirut entered a third day and the cutoff of all food, water, electricity and telephone service sparked panic buying of foodstuffs.

Most water from underground wells was undrinkable and small private generators still producing electricity have enough fuel only for a few days [illegible] city will face a total blackout.

Lebanese Prime Minister Chefik Wazzan asked the world "to wake up to the realities of this criminal siege. I hope that for once they will act and do something."

Wazzan said the siege was paralyzing efforts to negotiate a settlement with the PLO that would avert an all-out Israeli assault on the city.

State-run Beirut radio said Habib asked the White House to try to persuade the Israelis to relax the siege.

President's eye on war in Lebanon

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (UPI) — President Reagan has made it clear to all sides in the Lebanese conflict it is "essential" that fighting cease and negotiations proceed, his spokesman said Monday.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan has been in close contact with the situation through national security adviser William Clark, who was with him in Santa Barbara.

The Reagans currently are on an 11-day vacation at their ranch in the Santa Ynez mountains near Santa Barbara.

Reagan, wearing a blue western shirt, and his wife Nancy arrived in Los Angeles at 9:45 p.m. MDT and were driven to their hotel directly. They will celebrate Mrs. Reagan's 59th birthday with a private party tonight.

According to the official schedule, Reagan will make only one public appearance Tuesday, at a briefing for local officials, mayors and legislators on his economic program.

Other nations doing better against inflation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A study made for the Joint Economic Committee of Congress shows governments of other industrialized nations are doing a better job than the United States in fighting inflation, Chairman Henry Reuss, D-Wis., said Monday.

"Other industrialized nations have learned that a climate of cooperation and consensus in the fight against inflation is far superior to economic policy which fates millions of workers to unemployment lines," Reuss said in releasing the study.

The Wisconsin Democrat said leaders of some countries "use all the tools available — ranging from the art of persuasion to outright wage and price controls — to keep inflation at an acceptable level."

The study, prepared by the Congressional Research Service, examines the wage and price policies of Australia, Austria, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands and West Germany.

In a letter transmitting the report to other committee members, Reuss said each of the countries studied was supplementing "traditional anti-inflation macroeconomic policy with explicit or implicit wage and price policy, designed to minimize the social and economic costs imposed by deflationary economic policies — policies which only succeed in moderating inflation by creating substantial excess productive capacity and unemployment."

A summary of Australia's attempts to monitor prices and wages cited the conclusion of one analyst that "in the absence of compulsory arbitration there would probably have been more unrest and a faster increase in wages and prices in the strongly unionized sectors than that which actually occurred."

The report said Austria's Joint Commission on Wages and Prices went beyond controls to become "a system of economic and social partnership" that has been a major factor in damping inflation and in avoiding "debilitating swings" in the Austrian economy.

Canada, the report said, has alternated periods of voluntary policies with periods of mandatory controls and found that controls "became increasingly unpopular the longer they lasted."

19 Labor Department officials twiddle thumbs, draw pay

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In an alleged political move costing taxpayers more than $800,000, the Reagan administration has assigned little or no work for the past nine months to 19 highly paid career Labor Department policy experts.

One of the veteran bureaucrats said he and several colleagues, paid $40,000 to $50,000 a year, have spent much of their office time reading newspapers, phoning their stockbrokers or discussing their futures over coffee.

Under a directive from Labor Secretary Ray Donovan, 16 of the 19 officials were transferred to new jobs last week — placing many of them in roles in which they had no expertise or prior experience.

Assistant Labor Secretary John Cogan argues the transfers were forced by budget-cutting moves and a reorganization of the policy office.

Among those reassigned are two officers of Local 12 of the American Federation of Government Employees, representing 5,000 to 6,000 employees at the Labor Department's headquarters building.

Union President Jay Edelson, who was put in a new job in the office of the wage-hour admininistrator, called the transfers "unprecedented."

"They're counting on the fact that people won't fight back, will recognize they're not wanted and will leave," Edelson said. "If they can get away with these mass reassignments, what security would anybody have in government?"

Edelson also said it seemed "coincidental" that the shifts affected two union officers — himself and Local 12 Third Vice President Harry Martin.

He said the department provided little or no additional funding to the agencies where the officials were reassigned, meaning they could be laid off soon. Cogan said the positions were funded through fiscal 1982, ending Oct. 1.

Cogan acknowledged in an interview that since taking office last October, he has given virtually no assignments to a number of the department's career policymakers, and that others had only "hit and miss work."

"Some of them had very little work to do," Cogan said.

He said if he had realized it was going to take so long to reassign the employees to other jobs, "I would have tried to get them more work than I did."

Several of the employees, who requested anonymity for fear of reprisals, said they got no response when they asked their superiors for work. One said he felt the administration "doesn't trust" the career officials to carry out its policies, although many of them worked in their jobs during the Nixon years.

At least one lawyer in the Office of Personnel Management and an aide to a House civil service subcommittee say it is improper and probably illegal to deny work assignments to career specialists.

An aide to Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., who has questioned the transfers, charged that the Labor Department has "purged" the long-time career experts because their views are not ideologically consistent with the administration's.

Cogan denied any political motivation, but said: "I want to say candidly that I do believe that a policy shop in any department should have at least some fraction of its staff being people who are political appointees."

He said the reassignments were required because Donovan reorganized the policy office, trimming its research role and cutting its staff from 56 to 40. Cogan said about 80 percent of those being retained are economists.

Cogan defended the reassignments, saying those affected are "program people" who will now be working with programs they know "very, very well." But at the same time, he acknowledged the officials "are well justified" in being concerned about being unfamiliar with their new jobs.

Another of those reassigned was Larry Orr, who more than five years ago worked in the Department of Health Education and Welfare overseeing a research contract on which Cogan worked as a private consultant.

Orr was reported to have criticized Cogan's work at the time. "We did have a ... professional disagreement," Cogan said. "I do not at all hold any kind of a grudge."

Today's briefing

Brown hits Reagan cutbacks

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. blasted the Reagan administration Monday for leading the country down "a dark hole of nuclear escalation" at the expense of social welfare.

Brown told 7,000 delegates to the National Education Association convention Reagan's defense policy will divert hundreds of millions of dollars from the economy, ultimately weakening U.S. security. He said the nation must commit itself to quality education if it is going to succeed in a high-technology world.

The NEA, the nation's second largest union after the Teamsters, also planned a "teach peace" rally to protest the nuclear arms race and U.S. intervention in Central America.

New British strikes threaten

LONDON (UPI) — British Rail rolled out nearly 10 percent of its trains with the help of union dissidents Monday, hoping to break a strike by 20,000 engineers, but coal miners and a 6-million member labor federation threatened to begin new job actions.

Arthur Scargill, the militant new leader of the National Union of Mineworkers, told 250,000 union delegates in Inverness, Scotland, the union was prepared to strike over the planned shutdown of mines.

He said coal miners should be paid the same as members of Parliament and physicians.

The eight-union Trades Union Congress said its 6 million members would stage "sympathy actions" when National Health Service employees go on strike July 19.

Such actions would be illegal under a 1980 law that bars unions from involvement in unrelated work disputes.

Argentina wants Falklands

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — Argentina's new foreign minister Monday said his nation is respecting an unofficial cease-fire in the Falkland Islands war but also giving "top priority" to regaining the archipelago from Britain.

Installed Friday to replace Nicanor Costa Mendez who was ousted after Argentina's humiliating defeat in the Falklands conflict, Foreign Minister Juan Aguirre Lanari also warned that the dispute with Britain has not ended.

Aguirre did not say whether Argentina will use force to pursue its goal.

The new foreign minister also said Argentina is seeking help from the United Nations to obtain the release of more than 500 prisoners of war being held by Britain.

Korean draws jail sentence

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — South Korean courts sentenced one youth to jail for an anti-American arson attack Monday and prepared to try 29 other defendants responsible for a $1 billion scandal that rocked the regime of President Chun Doo Hwan.

Seoul District Criminal Court sentenced Chung Soon-chul, 26, to 5 ½ years imprisonment for setting fire to a U.S. cultural center in the southern city of Kwangju in December 1980.

Holiday death toll climbs

By United Press International

Motorcyclists — some not wearing helmets — slammed into parked and moving cars, collided with bridge abutments and spun out into ditches Monday, sending the holiday death toll soaring over 400 as travelers closed out the Fourth of July weekend.

A United Press International count Monday showed at least 402 people died on the nation's roadways during the holiday counting period, which began at 6 p.m. local time Friday and concluded at midnight.

Texas led the nation with 46 deaths and California was next with 37. Michigan had 21 deaths, Florida reported 17 and Ohio had 16 deaths. Louisiana and Pennsylvania had 15, Georgia, Illinois and New York reported 14, Mississippi and North Carolina had 13, Alabama 12 and Washington 10.

Searchers find Wyoming boy

CASPER, Wyo. (UPI) — Searchers Monday found a 2½-year-old boy missing for almost three days in the heavily wooded and mountainous area of Lodgepole Campground.

Hundreds of volunteers had looked for Nicholas Dailey since he was last seen about 9:15 a.m. MDT Saturday near his family's campsite in the Muddy Mountain area 15 miles southeast of Casper.

Details about where the blond Casper boy was found or when he was found were not immediately available. A spokesman for the Natrona County sheriff's office did not know the boy's condition.

Arab women stage protest

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a distant echo of the war in Lebanon, a quiet, extraordinary event occurred: A group of Arab women, many of them wives of ambassadors, stood on the sidewalk in front of the White House in silent protest.

Dressed in black, they handed out leaflets to passersby, reminding them "of the human suffering caused by Israeli troops and U.S.-supplied bombs."

According to long-time watchers of diplomatic row, a neighborhood not known for its radical behavior, such a thing has never happened before.

Judge delivers verdict today

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Judge James Sawaya will deliver his verdict Tuesday in the first-degree murder case of Marc Francis Schreuder, who could receive the death penalty for the self-confessed shooting of his millionaire grandfather.

Sawaya heard the case without a jury at the request of Schreuder's defense attorneys and began considering the case after closing arguments Friday.

Salt Lake County Prosecutor Ernie Jones has urged conviction of the 21-year-old defendant he terms "a cold-blooded killer by every stretch of the imagination."

But Defense Attorney Joseph Tesch pleaded for "justice tempered with mercy" and asked Sawaya to reduce the charges to manslaughter, claiming Schreuder was emotionally disturbed when he shot his grandfather, Franklin Bradshaw, an auto parts magnate.

Agreement by U.S., China would assure Asian stability

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States and China must compromise their differences over U.S. arms sales to Taiwan or risk creating new imbalances and instability in Asia, a Brookings Institution study said Monday.

The study titled "The China-Taiwan Tangle" by senior Brookings fellow A. Doak Barnett said the United States should place high priority on resolving the issue — the only serious conflict in its relations with the communist nation.

Sources on Capitol Hill said last week the Reagan administration has proposed an eventual end to arms sales to Taiwan, but the terms for a cut-off date are vague.

If the Chinese do not accept that proposal or something similar, Barnett predicted a major political crisis that could lead to downgraded diplomatic ties, setting the U.S.-China relationship back at least three years.

"A major shift in China's overall international posture, especially if it is perceived to be the result of political crisis between Washington and Peking over the Taiwan issue, could have more far-reaching and unpredictable effects" on other Asain nations, said the 70-page study.

"Most of these nations would view the future with greater uncertainty, and virtually all would feel compelled to reassess the regional balance and consider adjustments in their own policies toward the major powers.

"It is difficult to predict what the long-run consequences would be," it said.

The study said the administration should not try to solve the problem by offering arms to China without first setting firm political guidelines. Barnett said that would amount to "putting the cart before the horse."

Some conceivable reactions to a premature U.S.-China military pact "could increase tensions in the region or create new instabilities," he said, and "might even pose new dangers to China's security."

After Reagan's election, China joined world speculation on how far he intended to take his campaign talk of upgrading relations with Taiwan.

The White House moved quickly to take a tough stance against Moscow and to bolster U.S. defenses, but a clearly defined China policy never emerged.

When Secretary of State Alexander Haig offered to lift the ban on U.S. arms sales to China in June 1981, Barnett said the Chinese regarded the gesture as a reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and not as a well-planned policy move.

Iowa grain bin spills tons of corn

WHITING, Iowa (UPI) — With a billow of dust that looked "like an atomic bomb," a grain bin that had been tottering for more than a day collapsed Monday while workers struggled to shore it up.

No one was injured, but workers and spectators in the area were forced to run for their lives as 500,000 bushels of grain — weighing more than 28 million pounds — cascaded over Iowa Highway 75 and buried a rail car.

Bill Mortensen, owner of a tavern directly across the highway, said the bin collapsed in two seconds with a sound like a machine gun.

"There was big mushroom of dust coming from it; it looked like an atomic bomb," Mortensen said.

The overstuffed bin, owned by Lakin Grain Co. began leaking Sunday and by Monday workers were forced to stuff rags in three-foot-long slits to stop a steady stream of corn.

Dave Taylor, Omaha, Neb., Lakin's operations manager, said the grain flowed over Iowa 75 on one side and pushed over a railroad car on the other side, blocking the main Chicago & North Western track to Sioux City.

Californian seeks warnings of hidden record messages

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Bob Dornan, R-Calif., wants Congress to warn people of hidden messages — particularly those with satanic references — inscribed backwards on records and heard only when the disc is played in reverse.

The California conservative has introduced a bill to require that records with hidden messages bear a warning label:

"Warning: This record contains backward masking that makes a verbal statement which is audible when this record is played backward and which may be perceptible at a subliminal level when this record is played forward."

Although Dornan's bill is accompanied by a fact sheet listing several songs he said contain backward references to Satan, he said in an interview he wants warnings on any and all messages, including those with flippant notes as well as those with demonic overtones.

"Here's my bottom line," Dornan said: "If the message says Ronald Reagan isn't such a bad guy after all, or long live Al Haig, or vote Republican, on teeny boppers' little albums, then The New York Times or any other liberal organ of any sort would be screaming bloody outrage.

"There'd be hell to pay. It'd be just as offensive if it said 'Vote for Tip O'Neill' or 'Vote for Ronald Reagan.' It is not the specific message itself," he said.

Subliminal messages are words inserted at such high speed the eye does not see them but the subconscious perceives them.

Dornan said such messages can affect individual behavior. He cited anti-shoplifting messages under background music, and suggestions once inserted into movie theater breaks.

And, he said, there is some evidence suggesting the human brain can decode a recorded message even when it is inserted backward.

"You can argue the case either way," Dornan said, "but I'd rather give the benefit of the doubt" to the belief backward messages can influence people.

Legislation similar to Dornan's has been introduced in the California state Assembly, but is stalled pending further hearings.

Dornan emphasized it is not just satanic references that disturb him, it's the potential for any kind of message on a record.

"Here's a good example the liberals would understand," he said. If the Ku Klux Klan slipped a subliminal message promoting white supremacy into a record, "that would be extraordinarily offensive."

"We know subliminal advertising works. All this is was an attempt at truth in advertising," said Dornan.

Piggybacking space shuttle Challenger arrives at Kennedy Space Center in Florida Monday

Challenger finishes journey to spaceport

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — The space shuttle Challenger, a slimmed down sister ship of the SS Columbia, flew into the spaceport piggyback atop a jet freighter Monday.

It will be prepared for launch in January to give the nation a second proven spaceliner.

A tiny American flag flew from a cockpit window of the 747 jumbo jet as it taxied down the new 15,000-foot shuttle landing strip and rolled to a stop with Challenger perched on its back like a giant bird eager to become airborne.

The Challenger left Edwards Air Force Base in California's high desert Sunday on signal from President Reagan two hours after the shuttle Columbia landed from seven days of orbit. The second shuttle and its 747 carrier spent the night in Houston.

The Columbia's most recent pilots, Thomas "Ken" Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield, relaxed at their homes near the Johnson Space Center in Houston Monday. They begin a week of detailed engineering debriefings today, discussing virtually every detail of the shuttle's fourth and final test flight.

The Columbia is scheduled for its first "operational" launch Nov. 11, carrying a crew of four and two commercial communications satellites into orbit for the first time. It will mark the first time the ship carries payloads for a fee, turning NASA into a space charter outfit.

Richard Smith, director of the spaceport that once sent men to the moon, said he hopes to be able to advance flight No. 5's launch date by a few weeks if the satellites can be readied in time.

"I think it really performed better than we ever expected it to," Smith said, referring to the Columbia. "This bird (Challenger) is upgraded from the last one."

The Challenger has an improved set of heatshield tiles and is more than a ton lighter than the Columbia which means it will be able to carry that much more cargo into orbit.

Its cabin floors, for example, have been thinned so much that ground workers must stand on temporary platforms. Columbia's floors are substantial enough to support people on the ground.

Fritz Widick, head of orbiter operations at the Kennedy Space Center, said the Columbia will return to the spaceport July 16, marking the first time two manned spaceships have been prepared simultaneously for launch since the Skylab program in 1973.

"It's going to keep us busy," Widick said as the Challenger and its 747 carrier approached the space center after making a low pass down the Atlantic Ocean beaches crowded with holiday bathers.

Several thousand spaceport workers and their families, taking advantage of the federal holiday Monday, staged an impromptu lawn party on the grass next to the concrete apron next to the shuttle runway, cheering as the Challenger and its 747 cruised by.

Forty bus loads of tourists also got to see the sight, watching from a mound at the end of the runway where news photographers will be stationed when the shuttles start landing at the oceanside space center, possibly as soon as the next flight in November.

Naderites post list of mishaps

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A study done for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission warns the Three Mile Island nuclear accident was just one of 141 mishaps that could have led to "severe" reactor core damage, a Ralph Nader group charged Monday.

A draft of the study, obtained by the Nader organization, found that 141 incidents between 1969 and 1979 had the potential to cause the most dangerous type of accident at a commercial nuclear plant — a meltdown.

A meltdown, which did not happen at Three Mile Island, would result from the melting of overheated fuel rods in a reactor core. The rods theoretically would then melt through the reactor base and into the ground, leading to a large-scale, hazardous release of radioactivity.

"What this study verifies is that nuclear power plants are riddled with design errors and their operation plagued by equipment failures and human errors," charged Richard Udell, a nuclear safety analyst for the Nader group, Public Citizens' Critical Mass Energy Project.

The draft of the highly technical study, dated Jan. 15, 1981, was done by scientists at the Oak Ridge (Tenn.) National Laboratory for the NRC's Division of Systems Reliability Research. It is described as a status summary report on "Potential Precursors to Severe Core Damage."

The Oak Ridge researchers screened 18,000 "events" — most of minor significance — reported by plant operators in the 10-year period. They eventually gave 400 incidents a "detailed review."

Freak model accident kills federal official

LEESBURG, Va. (UPI) — The inspector general of the Small Business Administration was struck and killed by a radio-controlled model airplane in a freak Fourth of July accident, police said Monday.

Paul Boucher, 40, of Vienna, Va., died during surgery after the accident in a park near Arcola.

"It's the freakiest thing I've ever heard of," said Dr. David Caley, a local medical examiner who conducted the operation on Boucher. "I've never heard of this before."

The accident occurred after Boucher finished flying a radio-controlled airplane of his own and was standing in an area where other planes were being prepared for flight.

Witnesses said the model plane, which had a wing span of between 6 and 7 feet, was being guided from another area of the field and lost control after the tail section broke off. It struck Boucher on the right side of the chest.

Caley said an autopsy may not be able to determine if Boucher died from massive trauma when he was struck or if the eight-inch propeller cut directly into his liver.

Boucher, a lawyer for several government agencies over the past 10 years, was one of 15 federal inspectors general ousted in a controversial purge by President Reagan on his first full day in office on Jan. 21, 1981.

Crash kills pair

DENVER (UPI) — A crippled twin-engine plane trying to land flipped over on its back at an altitude of about 400 feet and plummeted to a taxiway at Stapleton International Airport Monday, killing both people aboard.

The names of the two victims were withheld while authorities notified their families, but Fano said the pilot apparently was from Riverton, Wyo.

The wreckage of the Cessna 310 burned on impact.

Inspectors pronounce Columbia in good shape after 4th mission

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — The space shuttle Columbia came through its final test mission in "flying colors" and in much better shape than its three previous flights, a space agency official said Monday.

"Generally speaking, the tile condition and the vehicle's overall appearance is much, much better this time than it has been on the previous three flights," said James Harrington, head of Columbia operations at Edwards Air Force Base.

"It is really in good shape. It came through the mission in flying colors. Overall, there are very few problems that we will have to deal with on the turn-around" for Flight 5, the first operational mission scheduled for Nov. 11.

Harrington said early inspection showed that none of the ship's 30,000 heat-resistent tiles were lost during the seven-day flight, compared to three dozen that came off during Flight 3 in March. He also said only 20 or so tiles were damaged during the fourth flight and the damage was minor.

This was despite a severe pre-launch hailstorm packing gale-force winds which pelted the spaceplane and nicked about 400 tiles. Many of the tiles were repaired before liftoff and it did not affect blastoff or Columbia's fiery re-entry.

Harrington, speaking at a news conference at Edwards, said the only problem encountered since the July 4 Fourth landing was a "very, very minor" leak in one of Columbia's little control jets — the same one that leaked at times during the flight.

Technicians wearing special protective suits quickly controlled the leak.

The Columbia, which has already logged 8.6 million miles in four flights, remained at this desert shuttle port to be readied for a piggyback ride atop a gleaming 747 jumbo jet to Cape Canaveral, Fla., next week, as soon as a tail cone is returned from the Cape.

Harrington said technicians will begin bolting the Columbia to the 747 July 13 and the two-day ferry flight to the Kennedy Space Center is scheduled for two days later.

Cleanup crews Monday began the awesome task of picking up the tons of beer cans, plastic bottles and food wrappers left behind by the largest crowd ever to witness the return of a spaceship from orbit.

Officials said the cleanup operation would take several days.

About 525,000 people, including President Reagan, watched in delight Sunday as Columbia glided into a picture-perfect landing, capping off a magnificent seven-day orbital mission and opening a bright new era in U.S. space travel.

Enquirer offers police evidence

LANTANA, Fla. (UPI) — The National Enquirer will provide Los Angeles police with tapes and transcripts of interviews with the last person who saw comedian John Belushi alive, editor Iain Calder said Monday.

An article based on the interviews with Cathy Evelyn Smith in the June 29 edition of the weekly tabloid prompted homicide detectives in Los Angeles to reopen their investigation into Belushi's death.

In the article, the Enquirer claimed Miss Smith said she injected the comedian with a mixture of heroin and cocaine just before his death. She met with Los Angeles detectives in Toronto Saturday and denied the story.

Today's briefing

Brown's Reagan cutbacks

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. blasted the Reagan administration Monday for leading the country down "a dark hole of nuclear escalation" at the expense of social welfare.

Brown told 7,000 delegates to the National Education Association convention Reagan's defense policy will divert hundreds of millions of dollars from the economy, ultimately weakening U.S. security. He said the nation must commit itself to quality education if it is going to succeed in a high-technology world.

The NEA, the nation's second largest union after the Teamsters, also planned a "teach peace" rally to protest the nuclear arms race and U.S. intervention in Central America.

New British strikes threaten

LONDON (UPI) — British Rail rolled out nearly 10 percent of its trains with the help of union dissidents Monday, hoping to break a strike by 20,000 engineers, but coal miners and a 6-million member labor federation threatened to begin new job actions.

Arthur Scargill, the militant new leader of the National Union of Mineworkers, told 250,000 union delegates in Inverness, Scotland, the union was prepared to strike over the planned shutdown of mines.

He said coal miners should be paid the same as members of Parliament and physicians.

The eight-union Trades Union Congress said its 6 million members would stage "sympathy actions" when National Health Service employees go on strike July 19.

Such actions would be illegal under a 1980 law that bars unions from involvement in unrelated work disputes.

Argentina wants Falklands

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — Argentina's new foreign minister Monday said his nation is respecting an unofficial cease-fire in the Falkland Islands war but also giving "top priority" to regaining the archipelago from Britain.

Installed Friday to replace Nicanor Costa Mendez who was ousted after Argentina's humiliating defeat in the Falklands conflict, Foreign Minister Juan Aguirre Lanari also warned that the dispute with Britain has not ended.

Aguirre did not say whether Argentina will use force to pursue its goal.

The new foreign minister also said Argentina is seeking help from the United Nations to obtain the release of more than 500 prisoners of war being held by Britain.

Korean draws jail sentence

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — South Korean courts sentenced one youth to jail for an anti-American arson attack Monday and prepared to try 29 other defendants responsible for a $1 billion scandal that rocked the regime of President Chun Doo Hwan.

Seoul District Criminal Court sentenced Chung Soon-chul, 26, to 5 ½ years imprisonment for setting fire to a U.S. cultural center in the southern city of Kwangju in December 1980.

Holiday death toll climbs

By United Press International

Motorcyclists — some not wearing helmets — slammed into parked and moving cars, collided with bridge abutments and spun out into ditches Monday, sending the holiday death toll soaring over 400 as travelers closed out the Fourth of July weekend.

A United Press International count Monday showed at least 402 people died on the nation's roadways during the holiday counting period, which began at 6 p.m. local time Friday and concluded at midnight.

Texas led the nation with 46 deaths and California was next with 37. Michigan had 21 deaths. Florida reported 17 and Ohio had 16 deaths. Louisiana and Pennsylvania had 15. Georgia, Illinois and New York reported 14. Mississippi and North Carolina had 13, Alabama 12 and Washington 10.

Searchers find Wyoming boy

CASPER, Wyo. (UPI) — Searchers Monday found a 2½-year-old boy missing for almost three days in the heavily wooded and mountainous area of Lodgepole Campground.

Hundreds of volunteers had looked for Nicholas Dalley since he was last seen about 9:15 a.m. MDT Saturday near his family's campsite in the Muddy Mountain area 15 miles southeast of Casper.

Details about where the blond Casper boy was found or when he was found were not immediately available. A spokesman for the Natrona County sheriff's office did not know the boy's condition.

Arab women stage protest

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a distant echo of the war in Lebanon, a quiet, extraordinary event occurred: A group of Arab women, many of them wives of ambassadors, stood on the sidewalk in front of the White House in silent protest.

Dressed in black, they handed out leaflets to passersby, reminding them "of the human suffering caused by Israeli troops and U.S.-supplied bombs."

According to long-time watchers of diplomatic row, a neighborhood not known for its radical behavior, such a thing has never happened before.

Judge delivers verdict today

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Judge James Sawaya will deliver his verdict Tuesday in the first-degree murder case of Marc Francis Schreuder, who could receive the death penalty for the self-confessed shooting of his millionaire grandfather.

Sawaya heard the case without a jury at the request of Schreuder's defense attorneys and began considering the case after closing arguments Friday.

Salt Lake County Prosecutor Ernie Jones has urged conviction of the 21-year-old defendant he terms "a cold-blooded killer by every stretch of the imagination."

But Defense Attorney Joseph Tesch pleaded for "justice tempered with mercy" and asked Sawaya to reduce the charges to manslaughter, claiming Schreuder was emotionally disturbed when he shot his grandfather, Franklin Bradshaw, an auto parts magnate.

Agreement by U.S., China would assure Asian stability

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States and China must compromise their differences over U.S. arms sales to Taiwan or risk creating new imbalances and instability in Asia, a Brookings Institution study said Monday.

The study titled "The China-Taiwan Tangle" by senior Brookings fellow A. Doak Barnett said the United States should place high priority on resolving the issue — the only serious conflict in its relations with the communist nation.

Sources on Capitol Hill said last week the Reagan administration has proposed an eventual end to arms sales to Taiwan, but the terms for a cut-off date are vague.

If the Chinese do not accept that proposal, or something similar, Barnett predicted a major political crisis that could lead to downgraded diplomatic ties, setting the U.S.-China relationship back at least three years.

"A major shift in China's overall international posture, especially if it is perceived to be the result of a political crisis between Washington and Peking over the Taiwan issue, could have more far-reaching and unpredictable effects" on other Asain nations, said the 70-page study.

"Most of these nations would view the future with greater uncertainty, and virtually all would feel compelled to reassess the regional balance and consider adjustments in their own policies toward the major powers.

"It is difficult to predict what the long-run consequences would be," it said.

The study said the administration should not try to solve the problem by offering arms to China without first setting firm political guidelines. Barnett said that would amount to "putting the cart before the horse."

Some conceivable reactions to a premature U.S.-China military pact "could increase tensions in the region or create new instabilities," he said, and "might even pose new dangers to China's security."

After Reagan's election, China joined world speculation on how far he intended to take his campaign talk of upgrading relations with Taiwan.

The White House moved quickly to take a tough stance against Moscow and to bolster U.S. defenses, but a clearly defined China policy never emerged.

When Secretary of State Alexander Haig offered to lift the ban on U.S. arms sales to China in June 1981, Barnett said the Chinese regarded the gesture as a reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and not as a well-planned policy move.

Iowa grain bin spills tons of corn

WHITING, Iowa (UPI) — With a billow of dust that looked "like an atomic bomb," a grain bin that had been tottering for more than a day collapsed Monday while workers struggled to shore it up.

No one was injured, but workers and spectators in the area were forced to run for their lives as 500,000 bushels of grain — weighing more than 28 million pounds — cascaded over Iowa Highway 75 and buried a rail car.

Bill Mortensen, owner of a tavern directly across the highway, said the bin collapsed in two seconds with a sound like a machine gun.

"There was big mushroom of dust coming from it; it looked like an atomic bomb," Mortensen said.

The oversurfed bin, owned by Lakin Grain Co. began leaking Sunday and by Monday workers were forced to stuff rags in three foot-long slits to stop a steady stream of corn.

Dave Taylor, Omaha, Neb., Lakin's operations manager, said the grain flowed over Iowa 75 on one side and pushed over a railroad car on the other side, blocking the main Chicago & North Western track to Sioux City.

Californian seeks warnings of hidden record messages

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Bob Dornan, R-Calif., wants Congress to warn people of hidden messages — particularly those with satanic references — inscribed backwards on records and heard only when the disc is played in reverse.

The California conservative has introdced a bill to require that records with hidden messages bear a warning label:

"Warning: This record contains backward masking that makes a verbal statement which is audible when this record is played backward and which may be perceptible at a subliminal level when this record is played forward."

Although Dornan's bill is accompanied by a fact sheet listing several songs he said contain backward references to Satan, he said in an interview he wants warnings on any and all messages, including those with flippant notes as well as those with demonic overtones.

"Here's my bottom line," Dornan said: "If the message says Ronald Reagan isn't such a bad guy after all, or long live Al Haig, or vote Republican, on teeny boppers' little albums, then The New York Times or any other liberal organ of any sort would be screaming bloody outrage.

"There'd be hell to pay. It'd be just as offensive if it said 'Vote for Tip O'Neill' or 'Vote for Ronald Reagan.' It is not the specific message itself," he said.

Subliminal messages are words inserted at such high spood the eye does not see them but the subconscious perceives them.

Dornan said such messages can affect individual behavior. He cited anti-shoplifting messages under background music, and suggestions once inserted into movie theater breaks.

And, he said, there is some evidence suggesting the human brain can decode a recorded message even when it is inserted backward.

"You can argue the case either way," Dornan said, "but I'd rather give the benefit of the doubt" to the belief backward messages can influence people.

Legislation similar to Dornan's has been introduced in the California state Assembly, but is stalled pending further hearings.

Dornan emphasized it is not just satanic references that disturb him, it's the potential for any kind of message on a record.

"Here's a good example the liberals would understand," he said. If the Ku Klux Klan slipped a subliminal message promoting white supremacy into a record, "that would be extraordinarily offensive."

"We know subliminal advertising works. All this is was an attempt at tryth in advertising," said Dornan.

Piggybacking space shuttle Challenger arrives at Kennedy Space Center in Florida Monday

Challenger finishes journey to spaceport

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — The space shuttle Challenger, a slimmed down sister ship of the SS Columbia, flew into the spaceport piggyback atop a jet freighter Monday.

It will be prepared for launch in January to give the nation a second proven spaceliner.

A tiny American flag flew from a cockpit window of the 747 jumbo jet as it taxied down the new 15,000-foot shuttle landing strip and rolled to a stop with Challenger perched on its back like a giant bird eager to become airborne.

The Challenger left Edwards Air Force Base in California's high desert Sunday on signal from President Reagan two hours after the shuttle Columbia landed from seven days of orbit. The second shuttle and its 747 carrier spent the night in Houston.

The Columbia's most recent pilots, Thomas "Ken" Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield, relaxed at their homes near the Johnson Space Center in Houston Monday. They begin a week of detailed engineering debriefings today, discussing virtually every detail of the shuttle's fourth and final test flight.

The Columbia is scheduled for its first "operational" launch Nov. 11, carrying a crew of four and two commercial communications satellites into orbit for the first time. It will mark the first time the ship carries payloads for a fee, turning NASA into a space charter outfit.

Richard Smith, director of the spaceport that once sent men to the moon, said he hopes to be able to advance flight No. 5's launch date by a few weeks if the satellites can be readied in time.

"I think it really performed better than we ever expected it to," Smith said, referring to the Columbia. "This bird (Challenger) is upgraded from the last one."

The Challenger has an improved set of heatshield tiles and is more than a ton lighter than the Columbia which means it will be able to carry that much more cargo into orbit.

Its cabin floors, for example, have been thinned so much that ground workers must stand on temporary platforms. Columbia's floors are substantial enough to support people on the ground.

Fritz Widick, head of orbiter operations at the Kennedy Space Center, said the Columbia will return to the spaceport July 18, marking the first time two manned spaceships have been prepared simultaneously for launch since the Skylab program in 1973.

"It's going to keep us busy," Widick said as the Challenger and its 747 carrier approached the space center after making a low pass down the Atlantic Ocean beaches crowded with holiday bathers.

Several thousand spaceport workers and their families, taking advantage of the federal holiday Monday, staged an impromptu lawn party on the grass next to the concrete apron next to the shuttle runway, cheering as the Challenger and its 747 cruised by.

Forty bus loads of tourists also got to see the sight, watching from a mound at the end of the runway where news photographers will be stationed when the shuttles start landing at the oceanside space center, possibly as soon as the next flight in November.

Naderites post list of mishaps

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A study done for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission warns the Three Mile Island nuclear accident was just one of 141 mishaps that could have led to "severe" reactor core damage, a Ralph Nader group charged Monday.

A draft of the study, obtained by the Nader organization, found that 141 incidents between 1969 and 1979 had the potential to cause the most dangerous type of accident at a commercial nuclear plant — a meltdown.

A meltdown, which did not happen at Three Mile Island, would result from the melting of overheated fuel rods in a reactor core. The rods theoretically would then melt through the reactor base and into the ground, leading to a large-scale, hazardous release of radioactivity.

"What this study verifies is that nuclear power plants are riddled with design errors and their operation plagued by equipment failures and human errors," charged Richard Udell, a nuclear safety analyst for the Nader group, Public Citizen's Critical Mass Energy Project.

The draft of the highly technical study, dated Jan. 15, 1981, was done by scientists at the Oak Ridge (Tenn.) National Laboratory for the NRC's Division of Systems Reliability Research. It is described as a status summary Report on Potential Precursors to Severe Core Damage."

The Oak Ridge researchers screened 18,000 "events" — most of minor significance — reported by plant operators in the 10-year period. They eventually gave 400 incidents a detailed review.

Freak model accident kills federal official

LEESBURG, Va. (UPI) — The inspector general of the Small Business Administration was struck and killed by a radio-controlled model airplane in a freak Fourth of July accident, police said Monday.

Paul Boucher, 40, of Vienna, Va., died during surgery after the accident in a park near Arcola.

"It's the freakiest thing I've ever heard of," said Dr. David Caley, a local medical examiner who conducted the operation on Boucher. "I've never heard of this before."

The accident occurred after Boucher finished flying a radio-controlled airplane of his own and was standing in an area where other planes were being prepared for flight.

Witnesses said the model plane, which had a wing span of between 6 and 7 feet, was being guided from another area of the field and lost control after the tail section broke off. It struck Boucher on the right side of the chest.

Caley said an autopsy may not be able to determine if Boucher died from massive trauma when he was struck or if the eight-inch propeller cut directly into his liver.

Boucher, a lawyer for several government agencies over the past 10 years, was one of 15 federal inspectors general ousted in a controversial purge by President Reagan on his first full day in office on Jan. 21, 1981.

Crash kills pair

DENVER (UPI) — A crippled twin-engine plane trying to land flipped over on its back at an altitude of about 400 feet and plummeted to a taxiway at Stapleton International Airport Monday, killing both people aboard.

The names of the two victims were withheld while authorities notified their families, but Fano said the pilot apparently was from Riverton, Wyo.

The wreckage of the Cessna 310 burned on impact.

Inspectors pronounce Columbia in good shape after 4th mission

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — The space shuttle Columbia came through its final test mission in "flying colors" and in much better shape than its three previous flights, a space agency official said Monday.

"Generally speaking, the tile condition and the vehicle's overall appearance is much, much better this time than it has been on the previous three flights," said James Harrington, head of Columbia operations at Edwards Air Force Base.

"It is really in good shape. It came through the mission in flying colors. Overall, there are very few problems that we will have to deal with on the turn-around" for Flight 5, the first operational mission scheduled for Nov. 11.

Harrington said early inspection showed that none of the ship's 30,000 heat-resistent tiles were lost during the seven-day flight, compared to three dozen that came off during Flight 3 in March. He also said only 20 or so tiles were damaged during the fourth flight and the damage was minor.

This was despite a severe pre-launch hailstorm packing gale-force winds which pelted the spaceplane and nicked about 400 tiles. Many of the tiles were repaired before liftoff and it did not affect blastoff or Columbia's fiery re-entry.

Harrington, speaking at a news conference at Edwards, said the only problem encountered since the July of Fourth landing was a very, very minor leak in one of Columbia's little control jets — the same one that leaked at times during the flight.

Technicians wearing special protective suits quickly controlled the leak.

The Columbia, which has already logged 8.6 million miles in four flights, remained at this desert shuttle port to be readied for a piggyback ride atop a gleaming 747 jumbo jet to Cape Canaveral, Fla., next week, as soon as a tail cone is returned from the Cape.

Harrington said technicians will begin bolting the Columbia to the 747 July 13 and the two-day ferry flight to the Kennedy Space Center is scheduled for two days later.

Cleanup crews Monday began the awesome task of picking up the tons of beer cans, plastic bottles and food wrappers left behind by the largest crowd ever to witness the return of a spaceship from orbit.

Officials said the cleanup operation would take several days.

About 525,000 people, including President Reagan, watched in delight Sunday as Columbia glided into a picture-perfect landing, capping off a magnificent seven-day orbital mission and opening a bright new era in U.S. space travel.

Enquirer offers police evidence

LANTANA, Fla. (UPI) — The National Enquirer will provide Los Angeles police with tapes and transcripts of interviews with the last person who saw comedian John Belushi alive, editor Iain Calder said Monday.

An article based on the interviews with Cathy Evelyn Smith in the June 29 edition of the weekly tabloid prompted homicide detectives in Los Angeles to reopen their investigation into Belushi's death.

In the article, the Enquirer claimed Miss Smith said she injected the comedian with a mixture of heroin and cocaine just before his death. She met with Los Angeles detectives in Toronto Saturday and denied the story.

Child porn ruling is a welcome one

One of the key amendments in the Constitution is the First, which protects freedom of speech and press. Its protection has helped nourish the wide variety of views and the broad exchange of opinion that characterize much of American society.

But like other rights, the right to free speech is not absolute. As Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes so aptly put it, freedom of speech does not protect a man who wantonly shouts fire in a crowded theater and thereby causes a panic.

It must be balanced against other rights that the government has a right to protect.

The court faced this issue squarely in a decision last week involving the right of states to pass laws prohibiting promotion of child pornography. We think it ruled correctly.

Essentially, the court held that the states have broad power, under a legitimate interest in protecting children, to regulate and stop distribution of so-called "kiddie porn."

A New York court had held that since the material in question was not legally obscene, state law could not restrict its distribution. Not so, said the Supreme Court. While First Amendment considerations of free speech were important, they were outweighed in this case by the harmful effects child pornography has on the children portrayed.

Some 19 states have child pornography laws that prohibit its distribution whether or not the material is legally obscene. Idaho is not one of those states, but Attorney General David Leroy says county prosecutors might well keep a close eye on adult magazine and book stores in the wake of the ruling.

We're not big on the prying eye of the police into private, adult activity, but we agree with the Supreme Court that the regulation of child pornography is a legitimate area for public concern.

The child pornography business is dominated by sleazy creatures whose money is thought to come from organized crime, but who often hide behind the complex maze of obscenity regulation and law. The court's ruling, we think, may open the way for some welcome, stricter regulation.

Billie Jean and the obituary page

BOSTON — Sometime during his mid-60s, my grandfather became one of the all-time great obituary readers. I mean a serious, major obit reader. Each morning, he would fold the page back and work his way down the paid death notices from A to Z.

Everybody in the family assumed that he turned a bit lugubrious in his retirement; in his illness, and was waiting for the cameo appearance of some old friend in the newspaper.

But I always suspected that he was interested in ages, not names. I figured that he was tallying up how many of the deceased were his age or older. He was reworking his odds if you know what I mean.

Frankly I thought it was a little eccentric at the time. But I was about 15 then and hadn't even started reading the engagement notices.

Now I assume that everybody comes upon some time or times in their life when they become aware of their age. Suddenly, when they read about a person who climbs a mountain, gains a vice presidency, delivers a baby, they are less interested in who the person is than how old he or she is.

Upon discovering that "John Jones, 42," invented the cure for cancer or ring around the collar, they forget the name and remember the number. They start ranking people at the beach, office, or cocktail party less by sex, race, and national origin and more by peer group.

A single friend of mine fell into a fit of age-obsession when one of her former students got married. My uncle experienced it the first time he voted for a President who was younger than he.

My own moment was less emotional, less political and altogether more physical.

Having spent a good deal of my youth as a minor jock (can a woman be a jock?), I found myself playing prone last fall. I have spent much of the past six months trying to get back, or anyway get my back, into shape. This is a bit like trying to return a pretzel to its original dough position.

During this period I also became obsessed with age, especially my own. Not in a mournful way; in an athletic way.

If my grandfather chose the obit news, I preferred the athletic news. Without the slightest interest in baseball, I became a forties fan: Carl Yazstremski, 42, Pete Rose and his Grecian Formula, 41, Gaylord Perry and his saliva, 43.

In the world of Movietone and muscletone I am by now less interested in Arnold Schwarzenegger than Jane Fonda, 44. In ballet I buck the Gudonov tide in favor of the oldie-but-goodie Nureyev, 44. And when I went to see Shirley MacLaine's new show, "47" danced before my eyes.

This culminated in the unseemly glee with which I greeted the Billie Jean King victory over Tracy Austin last week in the Wimbledon quarterfinals.

The 20-time winner played her 103rd singles match in Wimbledon with knees courtesy of surgeons, and a game held together by grit. She beat a kid who called her a childhood idol. Billie Jean won, 38 to 19 (years, not sets).

Once I'd rooted for Billie Jean as a woman in her match against Bobby Riggs. Now, I'd rooted for her against the teen-ager. I wanted to slap the lady on the shoulder in encouragement and utter some memorable phrase, like "One more for our team; way to go, honey chucker." It was age chauvinism, I'm sure, and age obsession.

Maybe people only become obsessed by their age at certain moments when they feel options closing down. They're finally, irrevocably, no longer going to pitch for the Seattle Mariners; no longer going to dance the four signets in Swan Lake. Then we start rooting for the keepers more than the comers, the tenacious more than the precocious. Those our own age.

I think that's what happened to me, anyway. I'll never get back to Wimbledon. I never got to Wimbledon. I'll settle for an hour of decent doubles. But it was great to give Billie Jean, 38, the proxy to keep my end open for the while.

My age obsession came with a sense of modest physical limits. I suppose my grandfather came with the fear of death. I wonder if one morning when he was reading the obits, he ever had the same thought that Billie Jean King had at Wimbledon: "Anything now is a bonus."

Kennedy gropes for new inaugural speech formula

WASHINGTON — Edward Kennedy was at a rolling boil about the "reign of budget terror":

"The administration's budget welcomes recession as a last, desperate restraint on inflation. At a time when millions more will lose their jobs, the budget rubs salt in their wounds by proposing, to deny unemployment compensation for 900,000 of the long-term unemployed."

Was that Kennedy speaking at the Democratic mini-convention in Philadelphia last weekend? Nope, it was Kennedy in the spring of 1980, denouncing the "ol' budget terrorist, Jimmy Carter.

Oh my. Rereading Kennedy utterances is my favorite form of mental refreshment:

"America is sliding into the worst depression since the Great Depression." (May, 1980) "...the deepest recession since the Great Depression." (June, 1980)

The statements Democrats adopted at Philadelphia were not intellectually scrupulous, but neither were they concerned with extreme positions and peripheral issues. They denounced Reagan as soft on the "national crime epidemic." Throwing caution to the wind, they expressed horror at deficits and promised "budgetary savings" and tax increases.

They said ... well, nothing specific, but they were foursquare for "open debate" about everything. Their problem is that Reagan's iniquitous (they now say) tax cuts were passed by the Democratic-controlled House and were supported by about 80 percent of Democratic senators.

The Democrats called for arms reduction "consistent with the maintenance of overall parity" with the Soviet Union — the kind of language Democrats used to find grating. They did not, as Kennedy implied in his speech, flatly endorse his "freeze" proposal.

In Kennedy's speech, the paragraph preceding his exclamation "These are new ideas" reads as follows:

"(We must) free our economy from the tyranny of high interest rates. We must stop the heedless borrowing of tens of billions of dollars to pay for needless corporate mergers. We must stand against the modern royalists who monopolize our finances — and we must set aside essential credit to revive small business and family farms, and to redeem the American dream of owning a home."

New ideas? Even the invective is borrowed. "Royalists" from FDR. Capital allocation is already a huge, costly government activity. Almost no one believes what Kennedy implies — that corporate mergers are to blame for high interest rate.

That Kennedy paragraph is an example of the muzziness that results when speechwriters sacrifice sense to melody. Evidentally rhyming is important to Kennedy's writers: They reached for the verb "redeem" because it rhymes with "dream."

Politicians speak constantly, and sometimes peculiarly. Sen. Lowell Weicker (R-Conn.): "It's vital to find out whether the American spirit remains bright or whether we accept a little tarnish to keep the boat from rocking."

Kennedy overworks things that work once. At the 1980 Democratic convention, he concluded: "The work goes on, the cause endures, the hope still lives, the dream shall never die."

In Philadelphia, there was another still-living dream ("Our dream still lives, and ERA shall never die.") and another four step formula: "...the dawn is near, our hearts are bright, our cause is right, and our day is coming again." If it is, Ted, please find another formula for your Inaugural Address.

Plaintiff in Auld libel action explains why he pulled out

BOISE (UPI) — One of the original plaintiffs in a libel and slander lawsuit against state Sen. James Auld, R-Boise, dropped out of the case because he didn't believe the lawmakers' comments "were directed personally at me."

Rick Rettler was among 11 Ada County and Boise City planning and zoning employees who last year sued Auld for charging that payoffs for zoning decisions allegedly were "common practice" in the two government agencies.

But Rettler, a planner for the city, said Monday that he withdrew his name from the suit last Oct. 6 — and, thus, was not mentioned in a letter of apology Auld last week sent the remaining 10 plaintiffs.

He said he dropped out of the suit last fall because, "I really didn't feel that his comments were directed personally at me."

The $5.5-million lawsuit was sparked by a letter Auld wrote a constituent in April 1981, saying, "In Ada County, zoning has been used to reward friends and punish non-friends. It is common practice to pay under the table for zoning."

But in a letter of apology and retraction last week, Auld said, "It was neither my desire nor intent that the (constituent) letter be made public. Nevertheless, an impression may have been cast from the letter and subsequent public comments that said persons were involved in wrongful activity.

"I do not now, nor did I then, mean to imply directly or indirectly that members of the Ada County Planning and Zoning and Boise City Planning and Zoning staffs, or any other persons currently in local government are involved in wrongful, dishonest or illegal activity."

Rettler said after he studied the lawsuit against Auld he decided the senator's comments weren't a personal attack. But he said his decision didn't rule out the possibility that others on the city and county planning staffs were maligned.

"I think there were people that I worked with that felt they were personally libeled and slander was directed at them," Rettler said. "But in my situation, I didn't think it was pertinent. I think everybody had to evaluate it on an individual basis."

Leads from robbery pursued to Oregon

SANDPOINT (UPI) — Bonner County and Sandpoint officers are pursuing leads in Oregon in an attempt to locate four unidentified men who brutally beat, handcuffed and robbed a North Idaho couple last week.

Sheriff's Cpl. Dave Biggerstaff said Monday city officers with law enforcement contacts in Oregon were seeking assistance from authorities in that state because a black van used in the incident apparently had an Oregon license plate.

Stephen and Diane Riese, Sandpoint, lost about $5,000 to the robbers, who stormed into their home last Monday, handcuffed the couple and terrorized them, officials said. The money was kept in the house as a building fund, Biggerstaff said.

He said officers have checked out "probably two dozen black vans in the area" during the past week in an attempt to locate the culprits' vehicle.

"It's not any of them we've checked," Biggerstaff said. "We figure the van involved has gone back to Oregon because we believe the plates were from Oregon."

Biggerstaff said authorities had few leads in the case and no descriptions of the robbers because the Rieses were ordered at gunpoint not to look up from the floor during the incident.

"The leads we have are just very sparse," he said.

Riese, 31, and Mrs. Riese, 27, were gouged and bruised in the incident. They were treated and released from a Sandpoint hospital last Monday.

State atlas due in fall

MOSCOW (UPI) — Cartography students at the University of Idaho are compiling a new atlas of the state in hopes of answering a host of questions about Idaho geography, climate and history.

Under the direction of Dr. Alan DeLucia, professor of cartography, students have been researching, designing and developing maps for the atlas for more than a year.

They expect to complete their work by summer's end and have the atlas ready for publication this fall.

The new Idaho atlas will cover all the major aspects of Idaho's economy, geology, politics and land use — and present the information in concise, easy to understand maps, DeLucia said.

"The advantage of an atlas is that it brings together all this diverse subject matter into a single, handy reference volume," he said. "All this information exists elsewhere, but it exists in many, many little cubbyholes and file cabinets scattered all over the state."

Companies show interest in loans from Shoshone County aid grant

WALLACE (UPI) — Two companies have expressed interest in applying for loans from a revolving fund that will be set up with a $350,000 grant awarded to economically depressed Shoshone County.

County Commissioner Bill Noyen said the state grant will be administered by the Idaho Panhandle Development Corp. to help the county hard hit by unemployment as a result of the Bunker Hill Co. closure and layoffs in other mining operations.

Bunker Hill's parent firm, Gulf Resources and Chemical Corp. of Houston, last August announced closure of the lead, zinc and silver producer because of declining mineral prices. Layoffs in other mining businesses also have hit the area.

But Noyen said Chemical Marketing Services, a Tulsa, Okla., firm that is attempting to purchase Bunker Hill's sulfuric acid and fertilizer plants, and PEM Corp. of Kellogg, which manufactures a masher for aluminum cans under contract for a Spokane firm, have expressed interest in applying for the loan fund.

CMS presently is awaiting a decision from Gulf Resources on the proposed purchase of the acid and fertilizer plants. A preliminary purchase contract for the plants has been settled between Bunker Hill and CMS.

In a letter to Art Blickenstaff, president of the Idaho Panhandle Development Corp., CMS President William O. Bohnefeld said the company could borrow up to $500,000 from a revolving loan fund. In the letter, Bohnefeld said CMS would employ up to 70 people in the Bunker Hill plants if the purchase were arranged.

PEM officials have said they would be interested in borrowing about $100,000 from a revolving fund.

Pocatello cyclist dies in accident

SODA SPRINGS (UPI) — A Pocatello man died in a motorcycle accident near here Sunday evening.

State police said David Lee Rassat, 32, lost control of his motorcycle on a curve and slid on the gravel roadway in Caribou County. He died at the scene at 8:40 p.m. Sunday, they said.

The accident occurred on a county road about five miles north of U.S. Highway 30 north of Soda Springs, officers said.

80 passengers evacuate airliner at Boise

BOISE (UPI) — About 80 passengers were evacuated from a Republic Airlines DC-9 on the runway at the Boise Municipal Airport Monday when the craft apparently slid off the pavement on takeoff, officials said.

No injuries were reported in the incident and there was no crash, Boise Fire Department and Federal Aviation Administration spokesmen said.

FAA officials declined to release details concerning the incident, referring all such questions to Republic Airlines.

Airline officials, in turn, referred inquiries to their public relations office in Minnesota, which could not be reached for comment immediately.

Fire department dispatchers, however, said the craft "kind of just slid off the end" of the runway.

The fire department dispatched two engines, a tanker and its special airport crash rescue team to the site, but dispatchers said there were no flames.

The FAA said the craft was taking off for Denver at 1:34 p.m. when the incident occurred.

Passengers evacuated from the craft were transported back to the terminal to catch other flights for their destinations, officials said.

What's what

The fictional Frankenstein monster created by Mary Shelley spoke perfect French, read Milton's "Paradise Lost," and grieved sympathetically over the injustices done to the American Indians. You wouldn't know the manufactured man was literate from the Hollywood versions, though. Something similar is true of the first Tarzan conceived by Edgar Rice Burroughs. None of that "Me Tarzan You Jane" stuff. The original Tarzan was a multi-lingual scholar.

The offspring of the jellyfish is not a jellyfish but a hydroid. The offspring of a hydroid is not a hydroid but a jellyfish. Got that?

Some medicos now claim a teaspoon of ginger relieves that large discomfort of seasickness.

FOUNTAINS

Q. What city has the most fountains?
A. Next to Italy's Rome, it's Kansas City, Mo.

Q. Writer Jack London wrote 51 books and then killed himself at age 40. How?
A. With a dose of drugs.

Q. What makes San Francisco sourdough bread taste that way?
A. A bacteria now called "Lactobacillus sanfrancisco." It was only discovered in 1973.

Q. You said the word "biscuit" comes from the French for "cooked twice." Why that?
A. First biscuits were cooked twice so they'd keep longer aboard ships.

ACTOR IN POLITICS

Do you recall the 1963 movie "The Ugly American" starring Marlon Brando? In that film, a Thai actor named Kukrit Pramoj played the role of prime minister of some unidentified Asian country. The actor must have liked the part. He went into politics thereafter and wound up in 1975 as Prime Minister of Thailand.

Ambulance crew revives small boys

HALEYVILLE, Ala. (UPI) — Two small boys believed to have been clinically dead for 20 to 30 minutes were revived Monday.

They were resuscitated by ambulance attendants who rushed to a water-filled ditch where a pickup truck had overturned.

George Anthony Price, 6, and Jimmy Ray Brewer, 10, were listed in critical condition after being taken by helicopter to Children's Hospital in Birmingham.

Cathy Price, 25, George's mother, said the two boys were riding in the back of the pickup truck when she met another truck that crossed the center line of Alabama 5 north of Haleyville.

"I swerved to miss it and turned the pickup over," said Mrs. Price from her hospital room in Haleyville. "My little boy was in the back and it pinned them in."

Mrs. Price, 4-month-old Angela Price, 17-month-old Steve Price and Mary Brewer, 29, all of Haleyville, suffered only minor injuries.

The two little boys were not so lucky. Cpl. Gene Gravlee of the Alabama Highway Patrol said both were believed dead.

"They were out from 20 to 30 minutes," he said. "We had already counted one of them as a fatality."

Roy Baccus, an employee of Lyle's Ambulance Service, said the boys were pinned under the truck and were lying face down in the water-filled ditch.

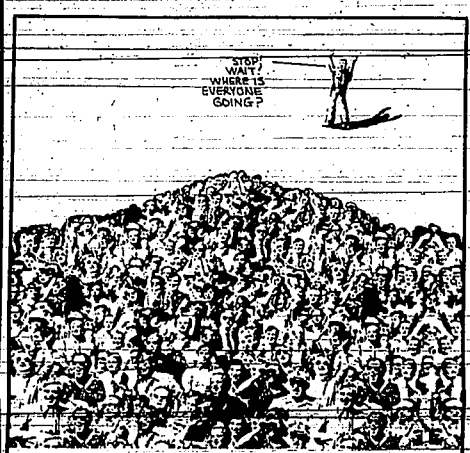
"We started CPR," he said. "We didn't get any pulse and they were not breathing. The one I was working on, he took more water in than the other one did."

Baccus said young Brewer responded to CPR, as did Price, who was administered aid by ambulance service owner Mary Jo Lyle.

"They are possibly going to have some internal injuries," said Baccus. "The littliest boy had a bruise about the size of a football over the spleen. If they make it, it'll probably be touch and go for a few days."

Mrs. Price had harsh words for the driver of the truck that caused the accident.

"He didn't even stop," she said.



IGOR KORCHNOI
Faced induction again

Korchnoi family reunited

VIENNA, Austria (UPI) — The family of Russian chess master Viktor Korchnoi arrived in Vienna after struggling for six years to join Korchnoi in the West.

Korchnoi's wife, Bella, their son, Igor, and Korchnoi's stepmother, Rosa Friedman, arrived aboard an Aeroflot flight from Leningrad.

The chess master's son served 2½ years in a Siberian jail for refusing military service and had been given another draft notice when word came the family could join Korchnoi in Switzerland, where he has lived since defecting in 1976.

"I am very happy my son won't be convicted a second time," Mrs. Korchnoi said, smiling as they waited for a Swissair flight to Zurich. "He's very happy that he is free now.

"We have no plans yet," she told reporters, but young Korchnoi said he wanted to study in the United States.

Igor, 23, said, "I'm glad, but there is a little bitterness. I've left a lot of friends in the Soviet Union."

Accompanied by Korchnoi's lawyer, the family planned to be reunited with Korchnoi later Sunday in Zurich.

Korchnoi, ranked the secon best chess player in the world, has been a bitter critic of the Soviet Union since his defection after a chess tournament in Amsterdam in 1976.

Korchnoi, who apparently had gambled on world opinion to force the Soviets to release his family, wrote letters to President Leonid Brezhnev, former President Carter, Pope John Paul II and Sen. Edward Kennedy asking for help in getting them free.

In January, 1979, Korchnoi was stripped of his Soviet citizenship along with his titles and decorations, and efforts were made to blacklist him internationally. But Western countries blocked the move and Korchnoi sought political asylum in Switzerland where he alleged that the moves against his family were part of Moscow's "psychological pressures."

Prof lands glider atop power line

WEATHERSFIELD, Vt. (UPI) — A Princeton University professor trying to land his glider in a hay field miscalculated.

He wound up sitting for more than an hour atop a 72,000-volt power line.

"If the wire had gone across the other wing, that guy would have been a french fry," Springfield Fire Department Capt. Barry Stevens said after Richard Ullman was removed from his precarious perch unharmed.

The vacationing professor had to be rescued by utility workers after they cut power to the line.

"It was just bloody stupid," Ullman said.

Ullman, who described himself as a veteran glider pilot who had not flown in two years, said he was flying the rented sailplane at an altitude of 3,800 feet — heading for the Springfield State Airport — when he began losing air lift and decided to set down in a hay field.

But he said he miscalculated.

The tip of the $8,000 glider brushed a tree and spun the plane around as he approached the wire. The plane's left wing caught in the tree and the right wing came to rest across the power line.

But the wing's tip came to rest on a dirt road underneath, sparking as it grounded out the voltage.

Nixon ruling tops court term

By ROBERT SANGEORGE
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court's 1981-82 term saw the justices crack down on the rights of criminals but give presidents immunity from lawsuits — even for deliberately violating the rights of citizens.

The just-concluded term touched on burning legal controversies with wide-ranging social and political ramifications, including book-banning in schools, the rights of illegal aliens and government's responsibility to the handicapped.

The justices drew the most attention to their marble-columned courtroom by ruling on a historic case that pitted the only president ever to resign from office, Richard Nixon, against a man who achieved a measure of fame as a Pentagon "whistleblower," Ernest Fitzgerald.

The high court, in a ruling certain to provoke debate for years to come, declared that the president cannot be sued for his actions as chief executive.

Four justices filed a furious dissent, charging the decision threatens the Constitution's most basic principles by placing the president "above the law," and reverting "to the old notion that the king can do no wrong."

The outcome was a victory for Nixon, who waged a decade-long legal battle against Fitzgerald's accusations that Nixon and his aides fired him because of Fitzgerald's public statements on multibillion dollar aircraft cost overruns.

JUSTICE O'CONNOR
Cracks down on courts

In a related ruling, the justices concluded high-ranking government officials have "qualified" — but substantial — immunity from lawsuits.

While important, the Nixon decision involved an isolated issue. By contrast, the court handed down a series of criminal justice rulings that went to the heart of the national debate on crime.

The most significant law-and-order decision gave police new power to search items they find in cars without first getting a warrant. It cleared up 60 years of uncertainty about how far police may go in searching an auto stopped from legitimate law enforcement purposes.

Leading the way in other criminal rights decisions was Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. In her most important opinion, the court's first woman justice restricted a criminal's right to contest his conviction indefinitely by claiming technical errors were committed at trial.

Mrs. O'Connor also authored a ruling in which she lashed out at what she believes to be excessive federal court second-guessing of state court actions.

The court waited until late in the term to address several explosive cases. Among them was a decision on book-banning, in which the justices gave students the right to challenge in court the removal of books from school library shelves.

Another such case was a landmark legal victory for illegal aliens, when the court ruled children of such immigrants are entitled to free public education.

In a decision that could save millions of dollars for schools nationwide, the court declared deaf students are not entitled to free sign language interpreters in schools. And the court ruled retarded people in state institutions have a right to treatment that least restricts their freedom.

In other noteworthy actions, the court:

•Settled a "headshops" controversy closely linked to teenage drug abuse, ruling 6-0 local governments can ban the sale of drug accessories to juveniles.

•Reinstated the murder conviction of former Green Beret Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald for the slayings of his wife and two daughters, in a decision narrowing the right to a speedy trial.

•Rejected a major challenge to the 1980 Census, ruling cities cannot gain access to population records in order to check their accuracy.

•Took a strong stand on the rights of parents to raise their natural children, ruling that even those who have not been "model parents" enjoy family ties that cannot easily be cut by state agencies. But in another case the justices said the federal courts cannot meddle in such decisions once a state makes a child custody decision.

Reagan to study Senate tax bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan, mindful of the need to weaken the public perception of his party as favoring the rich, will take a careful look at the $21 billion tax bill approved by the Senate Finance Committee last week.

His immediate reaction, from his ranch in California, was lukewarm despite awareness that his own tax experts worked with the committee's Republicans for several days preparing the outline before presenting it to the full committee.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the president greeted the package of more than two dozen tax changes for businesses and individuals with tentative approval.

"We are generally supportive of the action taken by the committee," Speakes said in Santa Barbara. "But we will review (it) in detail before pledging full support."

Committee Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan., described it as having the potential to "bring fairness, balance and more equity to the tax system."

Many smaller taxpayers would be hit by a proposal to raise about $1.8 billion by doubling the current tax on cigarettes from 8 cents to 16 cents a pack, increasing the taxes on telephone service, and substantially reducing current deductions for medical expenses and casualty losses.

Speakes said the president seemed more enthusiastic about the 12-7 Senate committee vote preserving the third year of the individual tax cut. Sen. Russell Long, D-La., had moved to defer the final stage for three months, and then to apply the full 10 percent cut only to those with incomes below $40,000.

But wealthy individuals would pay a stiffer minimum tax under the new package and upper-income professionals who incorporate their businesses would be allowed to shelter less income in private pension plans.

And about half of the bill's provisions would affect business taxes, including a substantially tightening of the controversial "leasing" provision that currently allows unprofitable companies to sell their unused tax credits to profitable firms that want to reduce their tax liability.

GAO frowns on Maverick

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The $5 billion Maverick missile program should not move from the drawing board to production because tests fail to show it can kill tanks as its backers claim, government auditors said Monday.

The General Accounting Office said in a letter to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger the "evidence is lacking" that the Maverick "can be used effectively by U.S. military personnel in combat."

The unclassified report contained numerous deletions for security purposes.

The report said that although the missile is supposed to work at night and in bad weather, "we seriously question its operational ability under these conditions."

The "Maverick missile program should not leave its development stage before certain deficiencies have been corrected," the GAO said. "Evidence is lacking that the IR Maverick missile system can be successful in missions it is proposed for."

The Pentagon is to decide next month whether to order 200 of the missiles as a first step towards buying 61,000 of the weapons.

Intelligence capabilities 'marginal'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. intelligence community is only "marginally" able to do its job during the rest of this century and was slow in seeing the size of Cuban involvement in Central America, the former CIA deputy director said Monday.

"The United States intelligence community, as currently structured and manned, is marginally capable to deal with the world of the late 1980s and 90s," said retired Adm. Bobby R. Inman in an interview in The New York Times.

"That judgment is shaped by my view that this country's primary problems in that period will be found in the competition for raw materials, natural resources, and markets in an unstable world with the potential for minor conflicts that could escalate in areas where we have little or no intelligence effort."

"Our major weaknesses include a minimal effort both in collection and analysis about many of the non-communist countries. We lack the encyclopedic effort that will let us understand trends before we get to the level of a crisis," he said.

Inman said although the CIA is working to improve "there are many areas of the world where we have the potential to be surprised by events."

Ball scores U.S. policy

NEW YORK (UPI) — George Ball, former undersecretary of state and ambassador to the United Nations, called President Reagan's foreign policy weak and lacking in both cohesion and leadership in an interview published Monday.

Ball also said the U.N. Ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick should be fired and that Secretary of State-designate George Shultz lacks the necessary experience for his new position.

"The president just isn't leading," Ball told People magazine. "There has been no single policy. Reagan's views lack any central concept; they consist of bits and pieces of slogans and tags that he developed in the years when he was giving speeches all over the country; they are filled with contradictions."

Severe crises face Mexico's new president

By FREDERICK KIEL
United Press International

MEXICO CITY — Less than a month before Mexico's presidential election, a strong earthquake shook Mexico City, damaging little else but the brand new headquarters of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

A 20-foot by 30-foot section of concrete wall collapsed and fell to the street beneath a huge smiling photograph of presidential candidate Miguel de la Madrid, 47, the overwhelming winner in Sunday's vote.

Embarrassed, the party, known by its Spanish acronym PRI, mobilized an around-the-clock work force and in less than two days erected a temporary wall to cover up the inner offices which had been exposed to open air by the mishap.

The mammoth repair job was indicative of the muscle and energy the PRI — ruler of Mexico for the past 53 years — can apply when its image is jeopardized.

However, despite the victory of de la Madrid, a former minister of budget and planning, the PRI faces one of the most severe crises of confidence in its history — the longest uninterrupted rule by one party in the Western Hemisphere.

And it is uncertain whether the PRI can solve the crisis, no matter how much muscle and energy it pumps into the job.

Current President Jose Lopez Portillo, who picked de la Madrid as his successor to assume office Dec. 1, took power in 1976 in an era of inflationary recession that provoked serious social unrest.

But the discovery of enormous oil reserves and Mexico's debut as a major oil producing nation restored a fragile calm that was based on high expectations of sustained growth and prosperity.

Lopez Portillo promised to avoid the mistakes of other Third World nations suddenly rich in petroleum.

"Six years ago, Lopez Portillo asked us for time," one Mexican said shortly after casting his ballot Sunday.

"We have been too noble," he said.

MIGUEL de la MADRID
Winner by wide margin

Analysis

"We gave him the whole six years, and look what's happened. All we have is inflation, devaluation, unemployment. Oil was supposed to be our salvation but what happened to it all?"

A poll taken just 48 hours before the election showed pessimism was widespread, among Mexico's 73 million inhabitants.

The poll, commissioned by the Novedades Editores publishing company, showed 82 percent of the electorate thought Mexico's economic situation was critical.

Only 17 percent thought the president-elect would be able to solve Mexico's staggering problems of soaring unemployment, inflation likely to hit 50 percent this year and the second largest foreign debt in the Third World.

Only 10 percent believed any of de la Madrid's campaign promises of an attack on government corruption and a "moral renovation" of Mexico.

There have been hints the party would like to clean house, but with no real threat to its dominance, the solution to Mexico's problems will take more than the quick installation of a temporary wall.

Filipino group plans protests during Marcos visit to U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Movement for a Free Philippines said Monday it has made plans for a demonstration and counter forum during the official visit of President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines to the United States.

Marcos is expected to come to Washington in September.

Raul Manglapus, a former Philippine senator and head of the free Philippines movement, said he and his staff have made final their plans to counter the Marcos visit. Details were not announced.

Tony Romero, executive secretary of the movement, said in a statement that "despite our limited resources, the Movement for a Free Philippines, in collaboration with other anti-Marcos dictatorship groups will stage a massive demonstration and counter forum against the president's visit . . ."

Marcos, elected in 1965 and re-elected in 1969 to the presidency, ruled the Philippines by martial law from 1972 for eight years before reinstating elections, and winning a new six-year term in 1981.

In its statement, the movement said Marcos' brother-in-law Benjamin Romualdez, as the new Philippine ambassador to the United States, has "intensified his campaign by giving lavish parties and picnics."

Dominicans weep at Guzman burial

SANTIAGO, Dominican Republic (UPI) — Thousands of weeping Dominicans lined up under a blazing tropical sun Monday to watch a funeral procession move along a 100-mile route to bury President Antonio Guzman in a town near his birthplace.

The 71-year-old Guzman, architect of the turbulent Caribbean nation's transition to democracy, died of a single bullet wound in the head Saturday in what close political associates said was a suicide. He was to step down in August.

Guzman's body, in a casket draped with the red, white and blue Dominican flag, was lying in state at the city hall in Santiago, 12 miles from the humble town of La Vega where he was born Feb. 12, 1911, to a cattle rancher and his wife.

A funeral mass at the local Roman Catholic church was beginning at 3 p.m. MDT. Burial at the municipal cemetery was scheduled immediately afterward.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., President Reagan said he was "deeply saddened" by Guzman's "tragic death" and assured the Dominican government of "close cooperation," the White House said.

Thousands of Dominicans stunned and saddened by the death — watched the funeral procession bear Guzman's remains from the capital of Santo Domingo to Santiago, 100 miles northwest.

"It is a death that puts the entire citizenship into mourning," said Jorge Blanco. Elected in May, he assured Dominicans of a smooth transition of power with his inauguration Aug. 16.

Jorge Blanco lauded Guzman, the first Dominican president to voluntarily give up power, for transforming the coup-prone armed forces into an "apolitical" body.

Guzman, head of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, is credited with cementing the nation's fledgling democracy.

Former Vepezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez, who along with Jimmy Carter helped enforce Guzman's 1978 election victory, was to attend the funeral along with Haitian Foreign Minister Jean Estime, whose nation shares the Caribbean island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic.

Guzman was found dead of a 38-caliber pistol wound to the head in the bathroom of his offices at the national palace, the government announced Sunday. It said he died under "tragic circumstances."

But high-level sources close to Jorge Blanco said Guzman, depressed in recent weeks, committed suicide.

Bombs cut power line

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI) — A series of bomb blasts that destroyed two power stations in Tegucigalpa will leave most of the Honduran capital without electricity for at least three days, authorities said Monday.

No one was injured when at least four bombs exploded in key locations in the capital's two power stations Sunday evening, plunging the entire city into darkness.

No group has taken responsibility for the attack.

A leftist Salvadoran group last week denounced the Honduran government for sending its troops to join El Salvador's army in fighting leftist rebels.

The sabotage came only one day after the most powerful bomb in Costa Rica's history damaged a downtown building housing the offices of the Honduran airline Sasha in San Jose.

German Aparicio, manager of the National Electric Energy Company (ENEE), said most of the capital would remain without electricity for three days and the government-owned company would require at least a week to fully restore service.

A small plant has been put into emergency operation to supply electricity to about 30 percent of the capital, he said.

Goldwater: Begin 'unstable'

By IRA R. ALLEN
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin is "an unstable man" whose Lebanon invasion may cause a normally pro-Israel Senate to reject any more arms sales to the Jewish state, says Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

While supporting Begin's original intent to clear Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas out of an area north of Israel's border, the crusty 73-year-old Intelligence Committee chairman said in an interview:

"He had no right to invade another country. And the United States has no right to support the invasion of another country unless it's a matter of a world war."

"Had our intelligence been more accurate, say three months ago, it could have said to us 'This is liable to happen.'" Goldwater went on. "Then we probably could have brought the heat on Begin necessary to prevent it."

He said he doubts the Senate today "could put together enough votes" to support additional weapons for Israel.

"We are bound to support Israel if Israel is attacked, but we have no bind to support Israel if Israel attacks — and that's something we have to get through our head and get through rather fast," Goldwater said.

Referring to Israel's bombing of an Iraqi nuclear reactor last year, Goldwater said, "The action Begin took against that atomic plant should have indicated that he was an unstable man and would probably get more unstable, and he has."

Goldwater made the comments in a wide-ranging interview with United Press International in his Senate office last week.

On another subject, the patriarch of modern conservatism said he "can't put up with" New Right groups that criticize his refusal to join them on all issues.

"On some of the positions they've taken, they are resembling the very actions of the liberals I fought so long in my life," he said.

MENACHEM BEGIN
Target of wrath

SENATOR GOLDWATER
Rips conservatives, too

"If we say the courts can't bear busing, how long is it going to be before someone says, 'Well, we don't want them to hear drunk driving, we don't want them to hear robbery, we don't want them to hear this, that and the other thing?'"

Goldwater, who also chairs the Senate communications subcommittee, denounced the "junk" that appears on television, including advertising, which he called "absolutely lousy."

Recalling the 1964 campaign commercial that depicted his would-be presidency as a threat to world survival, Goldwater said he recently met the man who created the ad and told him: "I have to tell you it was pretty goddamn clever advertising and . . . it didn't upset me too much."

Goldwater said he rejected ads against President Lyndon Johnson that "likened him to Hitler."

"I think television is just getting worse and worse," he said. "I'm not talking about pornographic. I think the violent television shows we see are probably as bad for the young person as pornography.

"And I tell you, some of this is literally — I can't use the word shit in print — but that's, by God, what it is. And I'm amazed that these networks can survive."

Goldwater conceded he gets a lot of complaints from constituents about his salty language, but when asked if it bothered him, the retired Air Force Reserve general laughed, "Nah, hell no."

Force attacks Sahara Wall

CASABLANCA, Morocco (UPI) — Two heavily armed divisions of Polisario guerrillas attacked a Moroccan garrison on the Sahara Wall, killing seven soldiers and wounding 25.

The attack shattered six months of quiet in the region, where Morocco recently built the Sahara Wall, a heavily fortified sand wall equipped with American-made radar detection devices.

Three hours of fighting followed the Saturday attack leaving seven Moroccan soldiers dead and 25 injured, a Moroccan military spokesman said. He offered no estimate of the number of guerrillas killed but said they suffered heavy losses of equipment.

The guerrillas launched the surprise attack on the Moroccan wall at Smara, about 75 miles south of the Moroccan border and about 110 miles inland in the desert, fleeing after losing four armored trucks, two land rovers, several cannons and a machine gun, the army said.

The Polisario Liberation Front, backed by Libya and Algeria, has been fighting since 1975 against Morocco for possession of Western Sahara. The desert land in northeastern Africa was annexed by Morocco when Spain withdrew seven years ago.

The United Nations does not recognize the annexation.

Warsaw seeking delay in papal August visit

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope John Paul II met with the Polish archbishop Monday amidst reports the Warsaw martial law regime would like to stop the pontiff's planned visit to his homeland next month.

Archbishop Jozef Glemp hinted that the plans for John Paul to come to Poland for the Aug. 26 feast of Our Lady of Czestochowa might be shaky.

"Why link this visit with August?" Glemp said on his departure from Warsaw airport.

Upon his arrival at Rome, Glemp said he could make no statement on the "precise date of the visit of the holy father. I can only express my hope that it will be possible to receive him in a dignified way in Poland in the near future."

The Vatican released no details of Glemp's private audience with John Paul but reports from Poland said the government is urging the pope to cancel or at least postpone his proposed trip next month.

The Warsaw authorities want the papal visit put off, Polish church sources said, so it will not roughly coincide with the Aug. 31 second anniversary of the founding of the Solidarity independent trade union movement, now outlawed under martial law.

The Polish government was also rumored to be concerned that the pontiff might serve as a rallying point for angry citizens at a time when the country's economic condition is steadily worsening.

Glemp, on his third visit to Rome since the declaration of martial law in Poland, said that he came to find out "the intentions of the holy father."

Departing from Warsaw, Glemp had said that "the starting point of the negotiations with the Polish government) was good."

He said the government side had stressed that a certain "climate" had to be created for the visit, but Glemp would not elaborate on the government's specific conditions.

In official statements, the authorities have made clear that this "climate" means no unrest and no protests organized by the Solidarity underground.

Prince Charles leads best dressed

LONDON (UPI) — Prince Charles is among the seven best-dressed men in the land and the reason is Princess Diana, a tailoring firm said Monday.

The princess, 21 last week, was given credit for the heir to the throne's "major improvement" in the style of his suits.

The tailoring firm compiled its "Magnificent Seven" list after a poll conducted through out-of-London newspapers. It also selected a "scruffy seven," led by movie star Richard Burton, described as "an expert at looking as though he has just been wrapped up by an over-cautious nanny."

South African miners, police clash

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (UPI) — About 12,000 black mineworkers broke out of their locked residences Monday and burned down a shop in the fifth day of rioting over wage levels in South Africa's gold belt.

Police used tear gas to disperse several hundred laborers throwing rocks at a mine gate.

Production at the Kloof mine west of Johannesburg was halted by the unrest, a spokesman for the mine said, but police reported no injuries.

The latest incident began when "intimidators" stopped men working on the Sunday night shift and also halted production early Monday morning, the spokesman said.

Dear Abby

Ataxia foundation ready to help

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
©Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My speech is slurred, I can't walk straight, my coordination is off, and it's hard for me to swallow. Worse yet, most people think I'm drunk.

I am a victim of ataxia — a hereditary disease that is often incorrectly diagnosed as multiple sclerosis. An estimated 15 million Americans are afflicted with hereditary diseases. Approximately 250,000 are victims of some form of ataxia. It affects people of all ages and [illegible] and it cannot be diagnosed before the symptoms appear. It is a tragic and deadly disorder, yet surprisingly few people know it exists. (It is not contagious and it is not a mental disease.)

There are ataxia clinics throughout the United States that stand ready to offer genetic counseling, neurological testings, financial assistance and reliable information concerning insurance, legal rights, where to find home services and nursing homes.

The National Ataxia Foundation is eager to locate victims and their families in order to help them. Please help spread the word, Abby.

— MILDRED'S IN WOODLAND HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR MILDRED: I have checked out your organization and found it to be a legitimate, sincere, non-profit organization that welcomes all inquiries and will respond (free of charge) to those who write. The address: The National Ataxia Foundation, 6681 Country Club Drive, Minneapolis, Minn. 55427. Phone: 1-612-546-6220. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DEAR ABBY: I just wanted to share something nice. (I read your column in The Day in New London, Conn.)

On June 8 an ad appeared directly under your column. It featured a sketch of a single rose with the following message:

"Nancy, may the next 25 years be just as joy filled. — Dick"

I have no idea who Nancy and Dick are, but apparently Dick bought an ad in that newspaper requesting that it be placed where Nancy wouldn't miss it, so I assume she's a faithful reader. Imagine her thrilled double-take when she saw it!

How terrific to see evidence of a good marriage out there. And what fun to be married to a man so thoughtful, loving and imaginative! Neat?

— BETH IN MYSTIC, CONN.

DEAR BETH: Neat, indeed! I'll bet Dick's ad plants that unique idea in the minds of other lovers.

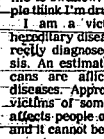
DEAR ABBY: A woman who was married in a Catholic church in 1958 said her husband took a ride one Sunday afternoon and never came back. She asked if she was still married, or did she need a divorce if she wanted to start life over as a single woman.

You advised her to see a priest about an annulment.

Regardless of what the priest or the church says, she had better consult an attorney. The only legal dissolution that can be had must come from a court.

— HOUSTON LAWYER

DEAR LAWYER: I assumed the priest would tell her not only how she stood with the church, but how she stood with the law. Wrong! (That's like assuming that a lawyer would feel obligated to tell his clients how they stood with the church.) Mea culpa.



Dr. Lamb

Walking helps to lose weight

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am 63 and on Social Security. I'm 5 feet 6 and weigh 180. That is my problem or one of them.

I had two disks removed from my back 10 years ago and had three operations on my breasts but no cancer. Thank God!

I am so depressed and all I do is eat all the wrong things. The only way I can stop is by going to bed. I am on my husband's Social Security. He died five years ago.

This town is so small I can't find a job. I am not happy. My doctor put me on Tenuate and I lost 10 pounds but couldn't afford the price of the pills and don't want to get hooked on pills anyway.

I try to exercise. I got a bike that rows as you pump and it cost me $50 but every time I use it for a couple of days I get muscle pain in my back and neck like spasms. Is there any way I can get myself in shape? I need help.

DEAR READER — Your letter certainly points out the psychological aspects of overeating. A lot of people simply eat because they are depressed, anxious, bored or get emotional satisfaction out of eating.

That is why behavior modification is often useful in losing weight and keeping it off. But make no mistake. If you don't consume fewer calories than your body uses, with or without behavior modification, you will not lose weight.

At the early stages of your program I would recommend that you start a walking program. Don't overdo it at first. Start with a short walk and set up a schedule so that you gradually increase the number of times a day and the length of each walk. The longer walks as time goes on will occupy you and keep you out of the kitchen. You have plenty of time to walk. It may help your mood.

Keep food out of your house, except low-calorie food that fits with your diet. Don't reward yourself for walking by eating extra.

And follow a sensible diet that helps you lose about a pound a week. I'm sending you The Health Letter 4-7, Weight Losing Diet, that you can use as a basic plan. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I'm 30 years old and the serology part from a routine blood test came back positive. They did a different test which came back negative, which was what it should have been.

The doctor explained that I had a false positive test and every blood test I have will give a false positive reading. For some reason I cannot accept this explanation. Why would the lab pick up a positive test with my first blood test? Can you offer a believable explanation?

DEAR READER — Your first test was undoubtedly a VDRL test for syphilis. It is the one commonly used for screening. It can give a false positive test in some acute medical problems such as during viral infections.

It may give chronic or persistent false positive tests with some diseases and in some people for no apparent medical reason. After all, it is just a chemical reaction. False positive tests occur in 10 percent of people over 80 years of age.

Your second test was probably a different type of blood test that is frequently used to evaluate the initial VDRL screening test reaction. If you had had syphilis it would have been positive, too.

Your doctor is giving you correct information.

New uses found for kitchen tools

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — Leave it to home gardeners to find new uses for common kitchen tools.

One uses a colander or a supermarket-type wire shopping basket for picking vegetables — to make it easy to wash them under an outside faucet.

Another stitches potholders inside or outside the knee area of old jeans to be worn when kneeling in the garden.

Take your pick from different 'life-saving diet' advice

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

Are you fed up with all the official diet advice coming from Washington, D.C. — from the Department of Agriculture, the National Research Council, the Senate Subcommittee on Nutrition?

Are you confused about which "save-your-life" diet from other sources you should follow, if any? The American Heart Association diet? The American Health Foundation's?

For instance:

The Dietary Guidelines for Americans from the Department of Agriculture and the then Department of Health, Education and Welfare came out of Washington a little over two years ago.

The new National Research Council interim guidelines for reducing cancer risks through diet came along a few weeks ago.

At the American Health Foundation in New York, Dr. Ernest Wynder, president, for years has been trying to woo Americans onto his diet track — one designed to reduce risks of cancer, stroke and heart attack in persons susceptible to those ailments.

A few days after the new National Research Council dietary advice about fighting cancer risks through proper nutrition came out Wynder confirmed that the diets, in the main, are similar.

That is — they all recommend less fat, more fruits and vegetables. The Senate Subcommittee Guidelines add a warning: if you drink alcohol, do so in moderation.

All the save-your-life diets were preceded by one published by the University of Iowa Press at least 5 years ago called the "Alternate Diet." Proved out by Dr. William Connors, now at the University of Oregon, Portland, it was based on studies funded by the National Institutes of Health Clinical Centers program.

This diet recommended that red meat be reduced gradually — to the point where meat no longer would be a main course. Rather, red meat would be used almost like a condiment — cut up and mixed through big bowls of vegetables.

The "Alternate Diet" called for less sugar and salt. It recommended more fresh fruits and vegetables. It included recipes for alternates to meat sandwiches. Recipes included one for a bean sandwich.

Here is a listing of dietary guidelines from various sources to give you a chance to see for yourself the similarities in the recommendations. That should make it all the easier for you to modify your diet to a course that seems best for you:

"Dietary Guidelines for Americans": Seven Recommendations from the Department of Agriculture and Department of Health, Education and Welfare, 1980: (This included recommendations from the Senate Subcommittee on Nutrition.)

1. Eat a variety of foods.
2. Maintain ideal weight.
3. Avoid too much fat, saturated fat and cholesterol.
4. Eat foods with adequate starch and fiber (such as carbohydrates and fruits and vegetables).
5. Avoid too much sugar.
6. Avoid too much salt.
7. If you drink alcohol, do so in moderation.

"Dietary recommendations" from the American Heart Association:

- Control caloric intake to achieve and maintain ideal body weight.
- A reduction in total fat calories achieved by a substantial reduction in dietary saturated fatty acids.
- A substantial reduction in dietary cholesterol.
- Increase intake of carbohydrates.
- Decrease dietary sodium.

Howard Lewis, chief of science information for the American Heart Association in Dallas, Texas, said the Heart Association diet is a basically balanced diet — and requires people to eat less. He said it also means more fruits and vegetables.

The American Health Foundation diet:

Wynder recommends less fat, more grains and fresh fruits and vegetables. Fat — including that from cheeses and dairy products in excess — appears linked to cancer of the breast and prostate in susceptible persons.

The grains and fresh fruits and vegetables add bulk. Dietary bulk is believed a bulwark against colon cancer.

The AHF diet isn't much different from that recommended by the American Heart Association, the Senate Subcommittee On Nutrition and the one from the University of Iowa Medical School.

Wynder, as with others pleading for a switch to less fat, more grains and fruits and vegetables, admits the positive proof of a link between certain dietary styles and cancer, stroke and heart ailments is missing.

County zoning board will meet Thursday

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning Commission will meet this Thursday at 8 p.m. to consider variance requests and further consideration of the county's mobile-home standards.

Listed on the agenda are:

- Blick Trucking's request to locate on a butte northeast of Castleford.
- Lee Martin's request for a conditional-use land division of a parcel about one mile north of Buhl.
- The Mal and Harris request for land division — two divisions each of land previously divided northeast of Filer.
- Vaun Clements' conditional-use request for a land division one mile north of Buhl.
- Consideration of a request by Ron Isaac for a farm-supply store, to be located at the headquarters of the Bell Rapids project.

Filer girl hurt in 'hit-run' mishap

TWIN FALLS — A 16-year-old Filer girl received minor injuries in a one-car accident early Monday morning.

Lisa Hall was driving on a county road, one mile west of Twin Falls, when the accident occurred about 1 a.m. Two other persons who were riding in the Hall vehicle have not been identified.

According to police reports, Hall was rounding a corner when an on-coming vehicle allegedly forced her car off the road. The Hall vehicle spun into a fence and then struck a tree before stopping.

The other vehicle, which reportedly was not struck in the accident, did not stop. No citations were issued.

Hall was treated at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and released.

Sunday accident victim listed as 'fair'

TWIN FALLS — An investigation is continuing into the two-car, head-on collision Sunday that claimed the life of an unborn child.

The accident occurred on a county road about one mile east and three-quarters of a mile south of Hansen.

According to police reports, Edie Ledbetter, 18, of Kimberly, was injured when the car in which she was riding, driven by her husband, Randy, 23, collided head-on with a second auto, driven by Rodney Tipton, 35, of Route 1, Murtaugh. Mrs. Ledbetter, who was nine-months pregnant, was transported to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, where the baby was delivered.

The attending physician told police that the baby died from injuries suffered in the accident. Mrs. Ledbetter was listed in fair condition Monday.

According to Twin Falls County sheriff deputies, no cause for the accident had been established by Monday afternoon. The accident occurred on a slight rise in the road.

Seat belts credited with saving couple

HAILEY — A man and woman from Boise apparently were saved from severe injury and possible death because they were wearing seat belts when their small car collided with a horse Sunday night, just south of Hailey.

Michael Aguilar, 24, was treated for minor injuries at the Blaine County Medical Center and then released. A passenger in his late-model compact, Tamra McAndrew, 19, was uninjured.

The crash occurred on Idaho 75 at milepost 113 about 10:30 p.m.

"It was actually the worst animal-related accident I've ever seen," said state police Cpl. David Rich. "The horse hit the windshield and caved the front part of the roof flat.

"I really have to credit their wearing the seat belts with saving them from real harm," he said. "If they hadn't been wearing them, their heads would have been up where the windshield used to be."

Rich said the accident is under investigation.

The horse, which belonged to Dwayne Fox of Hailey, apparently had broken a tether and escaped onto the highway, where it was killed by the Aguilar vehicle.

Rich said it would be up to Blaine County Prosecutor Keith Roark to decide whether to press charges against Fox for the unattended animal.

The finale

BOB DELASHMUTT/Times-News

Gov. John Evans campaigned with constituents and canines alike Monday in Rupert

What's the Fourth without politicians?

Evans talks of helping business climate . . .

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

RUPERT — A feathered cowboy hat on his head, the man shyly approached the state's highest official.

Speaking in a heavy Spanish accent, he said he had a problem he wanted to discuss with the governor of Idaho.

Rupert resident Jose Rodriguez wanted to complain that he has been unable to find a job due to "so many illegal aliens" in the fields and in the food-processing plants.

Unemployed for two years, Rodriguez said he's even been told to tell prospective employers he's a "wetback," since that might improve his job chances. "The taxpayers, we don't have a chance," he said.

Gov. John Evans directed one of his staff members to take down the man's name to check into the problem. Then, he proclaimed, "Here we have, once again, an American citizen unemployed because of illegal aliens."

Evans appeared Monday evening in the Rupert City Park to speak and answer questions as part of the city's Fourth of July events.

After presenting the prize to the winner of the Governor's Cup race at the nearby pari-mutuel racing, Evans arrived late at the park, but about 30 people braved a chill wind to see him.

Many of his comments concerned Idaho's economy and descriptions of his efforts to improve employment conditions.

"More than 41,000 Idahoans are out of work — the highest (number) in many, many years. If you remember the late 1930s, it's getting that bad in Idaho today."

Evans said that with high interest rates — which, he feels, is something state government cannot control — the only way to combat unemployment is to attract new businesses to Idaho.

He contends that Idaho is now the "fifth best business climate in the entire nation" and "it's been done during our administration."

The governor also discussed the cutbacks recently ordered for all state agencies due to a projected revenue shortage. Evans defended his order that cut state employees to a four-day work week, noting it was a "substantial sacrifice for them," but "I had no other way to turn."

"If there are any state employees in the park today, thank you very much," he added.

Nor did Evans feel that the state's financial problems that caused a monetary scramble at the end of the 1982 fiscal year, which ended June 30, would hurt his campaign. "I pride myself on my fiscal astuteness and responsibility."

When he was first elected governor, state government was growing rapidly, and "it was necessary to bring this rapid growth to a halt," he said.

. . . But Hansen says a new leader is needed

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

JEROME — Idahoans need to oust Gov. John Evans, a Democrat, so a complete team of Republicans can govern the state in a uniform style, says U.S. Rep. George Hansen.

Hansen, along with most other state and local GOP candidates, spoke to about 100 Jerome Republicans and their families during an "Old-Fashioned Fourth of July Barbecue" Monday night at the Jerome Country Club.

Included in the outdoor program were: gubernatorial candidate Phil Batt, attorney-general candidate Jim Jones, auditor candidate Nolan Young, plus several local legislative and county GOP nominees.

"When electing a governor, you have to look at the team he'll bring in to important posts on the land board and fiscal offices," Hansen said. "We're not just talking about a Phil Batt.

"You'd better elect somebody who is going to appoint your type of people, and that means a Republican team, top to bottom."

But a Republican sweep won't be easy in Idaho this year, acknowledged Young, who is opposing a six-term Democratic veteran, Auditor Joe Williams.

"Yes, it is going to be a tough road," Young said.

"I'm just going to continue stressing my professional credentials."

Young ran on his accounting background in his unexpected primary victory over long-time state Sen. Dean Van Engelen, R-Burley, for the GOP auditor's nomination. It was Young's first ever political campaign, and few Republicans knew him before this year.

He has been stressing that Williams is not a certified accountant, and that in this era of recession and state revenue shortages, an experienced auditor is needed for the state's highest bookkeeping office.

Young said he still wants to shift the state's accounting from a cash basis to an accrual method used by most businesses, and in fact, by most state agencies.

The accrual method calculates future bills as current debts, creating what Young believes is a better picture of state finances.

However, he said this may not be the year to make the change because it would further strain state spending by requiring money reserves for future bills during the first year of implementation.

Changing the topic to current events, Hansen threw his support behind his fellow Idaho congressman, Larry Craig. Craig's name has been mentioned in a Washington, D.C., probe by the FBI connecting some congressmen with sex and drug scandal.

Organizing Rupert's celebration is almost a full-time occupation

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — For more than 15 years, John Trevino has had celebrations on his mind.

Trevino, 65, is a long-standing member and chairman of the Rupert Chamber of Commerce Rodeo Committee, which organizes, promotes and administers the annual Fourth of July celebration in Rupert. This year's five-day celebration ended Monday.

A Rupert farm-equipment dealer, Trevino says he first became involved in the celebration when he told chamber officials he would volunteer for only one job, and the rodeo committee is "what they gave me."

JOHN TREVINO
Rupert's chief 'planner'

Planning a good time for other people is hard work, Trevino says. And even the best laid plans can go wrong.

One year, the celebration was almost washed out by rain. "The cowboys (in the rodeo) rode in the mud," he recalls.

A chuckwagon barbecue dinner and dance used to be part of the July 4 activities, but as the years went by, fewer and fewer people ate, and even fewer danced, he says.

And there have been times when he was called on for more than his planning talents. At one celebration, Trevino says he was asked to ride in a chariot drawn by a fiery Brahma bull. He declined, however.

"It was a miracle," he says, because during the show, the bull mauled the chariot.

The committee's work on the July 4 activities is almost a full-time, year-round job, Trevino says. The secret to a successful celebration is the good committee members he works with, he says.

"You have to let them do their work."

Buhl parade marshal accepts her role with pride, modesty

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

BUHL — Monday's cool winds did little to discourage spectators from attending Buhl's 20th annual Sagebrush Days parade.

Although no attendance estimate was available, organizers of the parade were claiming it was the largest turnout ever by the time the first float started the hour-long parade at about 10:30 a.m.

"It was a lovely parade," exclaimed Lucile Huston, the parade's grand marshal, who toured the course in a 1963 Buick convertible.

"Of course, you never can really appreciate how big it is until you've ridden around it as part of the parade.

"I was really surprised by the length of the parade, even though we've had it for so long now (since 1962)," she said. "I was especially surprised by the literally hundreds of people lining the streets all along the way."

Huston was chosen as the 1982 grand marshal because of her long-standing service to the community as both a teacher and elementary principal.

She began teaching as soon as she graduated from Buhl High School, and she retired 40 years later. Later, she completed a college degree from the Colorado State College of Education in Greeley. Born in Albion, Huston moved to Buhl with her family in 1919.

Huston served as principal of the now-demolished F.H. Buhl Elementary School.

"I'm just a senior citizen," she said, laughing. "You don't have to say how old I am."

She is equally modest about her community involvement. "I only do what feels natural to me, that's all."

Idaho's largest gem show starts Friday

TWIN FALLS — Gov. John V. Evans will open the Idaho Gem State Days show in Twin Falls this Friday, July 9.

Gene Anthis, one of the sponsors of the show — billed as the largest gem and mineral show in the state — says the governor has agreed to open the show and spend about two hours at the event Friday.

The show will be held Friday through Sunday in the exposition center at the College of Southern Idaho.

Anthis says this year's show, the sixth, will be the first to be held in the CSI building, which he says will give adequate display space for the booths and special exhibits.

In conjunction with the gem show, the Twin Falls Optimist Club will sponsor a barbecue Saturday, July 10, beginning at 4 p.m. The cost will be $4 per person, with the proceeds going to help support the seventh-grade football program in Twin Falls.

One of the highlights of the show will be daily "treasure hunts." Those people who search with metal detectors will be allowed to keep all of the coins they find. Several hundred dollars in prizes will be offered, according to Anthis.

There will be a "rock hunt" for those without metal detectors. It will be similar to an Easter egg hunt — people who find gold-colored rocks with numbers will turn them in for prizes.

Separate awards will be made to the winners of each day's hunt.

Another new attraction will be the Hill Air Force Base Commander's Guard Drill Team. The group, which has appeared on major television shows, will perform Saturday afternoon.

One of the featured exhibits this year will be a fossil collection from Bainbridge Island, Wash.

In addition, more than 100 dealers from throughout the United States are expected to participate in the three-day show.

On Friday and Saturday, the show will open at 9:30 a.m. and continue until 9:30 p.m. Show hours on Sunday will be 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

But Mayor Jim Barker commended Huston for her dedication to Buhl's youth for four decades.

"As I recall, Miss Huston was teaching when I was in school," he said.

Buhl's parade, usually held on the Fourth of July, was postponed this year "so it didn't conflict with church activities on Sunday," Barker said.

"Next year it will be held on the Fourth as usual," he said. "It was only changed because once before the parade was held on a Sunday, and few of the churches were able to participate. Since most banks and businesses are closed on the Monday after anyway, it worked out well for us this year."

In addition to dressed up flat-bed trucks, antique cars and horse riding teams, the parade featured several politicians who are seeking office this year.

Drawing the most attention was the race for the District 25 House seat being vacated by House Speaker Ralph Olmstead, R-Twin Falls.

Twin Falls Mayor Chris Talkington, who is running as an independent, rode through the streets in a 1957 Thunderbird convertible. His opponent, Republican Donna Scott of Twin Falls, participated on the GOP's float by tossing bags of peanuts to both youngsters and oldsters.

Other candidates riding in the parade included Sen. John Barker, R-Buhl, and Rep. Noy Brackett, R-Twin Falls.

Huston noted that spectators came to the parade from all over the Magic Valley, including Twin Falls, Hazelton and Wendell.

Evans

Evans said he is "proud of the fact" that state government has 1,000 less employees than when he came into office.

Questioned about his opinion of Secretary of the Interior James Watt, Evans focused on the possible sale of federally owned lands.

"The thing that irritates me is, people in Idaho are not involved in the decision of what land is to be sold. It would be a drastic mistake to move very far in the direction of disposal of our public lands.

"Each of you in the park today, make sure you watch the process very carefully," he told the audience.

Without prompting, Evans also launched into a discussion of his decision to veto right-to-work legislation, saying such legislation was an effort to "weaken union organizing on a statewide basis."

"Only 15 percent of the working people in the state of Idaho are represented by a union. I say, why not we leave it that way?"

Evans also defended his decision not to debate his Republican challenger, Lt. Gov. Phil Batt, in a televised program sponsored by the League of Women Voters and the Idaho Press Club.

He said he did not want to "debate in a sterile studio format" but preferred to argue with his opponent in a "town-hall setting" where "the people of Idaho can ask the questions."

Hansen

"I've been a victim of these kinds of cheap shots, too," Hansen said. "I'm sure that's all this is. Larry Craig is one of the best congressmen I've worked with, and he's one of those that do the most homework.

"He's a real straight arrow," he said.

Hansen said he believed part of the allegations against Craig were politically motivated because "he has stepped on some big toes, especially some union toes, while working for our state."

Much of Hansen's speech was devoted to applauding President Ronald Reagan's economic programs. He said that most presidents need two years to overcome programs of the previous administration, and that Reagan should be granted more time to make his tax cuts and business incentives work.

"If we have a few more months of Reaganomics, we're going to get this country back on the high road. It's just a matter of the voters seeing who the economic witch doctors are and who the real physicians are."

Currently, revenue from rodeo admissions and concessions pays for the other operating expenses of the July 4 event, Trevino says. In past years, surplus revenues have been used to help build the chamber building and run the office, he says.

The cost of sponsoring the event runs into the thousands of dollars, Trevino says. However, the economy is hurting the effort.

"The expenses are getting closer to our intake all the time. Everything is costing more."

Still, Trevino says it is important to spend the money for a quality program.

"You can't put on something mediocre and expect people to give up their holidays for it."

Despite the many years of hard work organizing the celebration, Trevino says he still enjoys himself during the festivities.

"I enjoy being with people and where the celebration is."

NFL contract deadline also showdown date for Garvey, agents

By MICHAEL MADDEN
Boston Globe

Circle July 15 on your calendar. That day will be extremely interesting and not just because the contract between the National Football League and the NFL Players' Association expires.

July 15 will also be the showdown date in the increasing power struggle between Ed Garvey, the executive director of the NFLPA, and the agents who represent rookies and veteran free agents. Garvey is maintaining that only the union will have the right to negotiate individual contracts for players after that date. Agents such as Jerry Argovitz and Howard Slusher, according to the NFLPA, will no longer have the right to negotiate players' contracts after that date.

With a third of first-round draft choices still unsigned, not to mention many name free agents, this showdown could soon turn into a war. "I think it's safe to say," said Chuck Sullivan, the Patriots' executive vice president and head of the NFL Management Council, "that there's a lot of potential for a lot of disarray after July 15."

The issue is related to — but should not be confused with — the entire collective bargaining agreement that will expire on July 15 and is in the infant stages of being renegotiated. Under the contract between the union and league, the NFLPA is authorized to bargain an entire collective agreement for all players. This dispute, however, deals with individual players bargaining for individual contracts with a particular team.

Under labor law, a union such as the NFLPA has the right to negotiate all salaries of its members. The NFLPA, however, has traditionally waived its right to negotiate individual salaries for players above the contract minimum. Under that waiver, each NFL player — or his agent — has the right to negotiate with teams.

According to the union, however, that waiver expires with the contract on July 15, and Garvey says the right to negotiate all salaries returns to the union. After July 15, according to Garvey, it will be the union, and not the player or the players' representatives, which will do the negotiating for new contracts.

Indeed, the NFLPA last week contacted unsigned rookies and veterans and notified them of its position. Both the league and the agents have fought back.

• The NFL Management Council, in a May 27 memo from assistant executive director Vince Lombardi Jr. to all 28 teams, warned the teams not to negotiate with any unsigned players after July 15. "After July 15, 1982," the memo read, "all negotiations in respect to player salaries must be between the Management Council and the NFLPA. Any club engaging in direct negotiations with a veteran free agent or his representative after that date will be committing an unfair labor practice . . ."

Italy eliminates Brazil in World Cup

W. Germany gains semis

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Italy and West Germany, two of the giants of world soccer, Monday advanced to the semifinals of the World Cup.

The most severe jolt of the day was Italy's 3-2 victory over mighty Brazil in Group C at Barcelona that eliminated the South Americans from the tournament and touched off waves of celebration in Italy.

Italy was backed three goals from Paolo Rossi, the wayward son of Italian soccer, who individually lifted the Italians into a semifinal meeting with Poland on Thursday.

West Germany advanced thanks to a 0-0 tie between England and Spain in a critical Group B game Monday night in Madrid. West Germany, completing the semifinal field, next meets France, the Group D winner, Thursday. Poland, winner of Group A, takes on Italy in the other semifinal. The survivors of that round meet for the championship Sunday in Madrid.

The English needed to beat Spain by two goals to move to the semis. But England, which tied West Germany 0-0 earlier in the round, failed to generate the necessary offense and West Germany was in the clear.

With the shocking exit of Brazil, the three-time champions and class of the 24-nation tournament, Latin America is without a team among the last four for the first time since the 1966 World Cup in England.

Rossi, a 25-year-old striker, redeemed himself in the eyes of the Italian soccer community. He resumed playing just nine weeks ago following a 2-year suspension for his involvement in the Italian bribery scandal and came close to being left off the team.

But Rossi was magnificent in delivering his hat trick that silenced the Brazilian samba drums in front of a capacity crowd of 44,000 at Sarria Stadium.

He scored in the 5th, 25th and 75th minutes to take Italy ahead after Brazil twice tied it on a goal by Socrates in the 12th minute and by Falcao in the 68th.

Steal, overthrow give Jerome win

BUHL — Zane Ostler stole third base and scored on the ensuing overthrow in the bottom of the ninth inning Monday to give Jerome a 4-3 win over Buhl and the championship of the Sagebrush Days American Legion Baseball Tournament.

Jerome's winning rally started when Kevin Rice singled. One out later Ostler hit a grounder and Buhl forced Rice at second. Ostler, known for his speed, then stole second. A few pitches later he took off for third and when Kyle Davis' throw was wild, Ostler scored.

Ostler teamed up with Rusty Palmer and Kevin Boer to pace Jerome's winning effort. Ostler stole three bases and Palmer went the distance, striking out 17 Buhl batsmen and yielding just four hits. Boer hit a solo home run in the sixth inning.

Jerome, winning a coin flip to become the home team, took a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the fourth inning as Palmer reached on an error, advanced on Boer's single and scored on Troy Prairie's single.

Jerome made it 2-0 in the last of the sixth inning on Boer's one-out homer to left field.

Buhl narrowed the deficit to 2-1 in the top of the seventh inning as Randy Carney doubled, took third when Jerome dropped Chuck Steele's fly and scored on a passed ball.

Jerome pushed its lead back to two runs in the bottom of the seventh inning as Ostler reached on a fielder's choice, stole second and scored on Brett Koepnick's single.

Not wanting to go down easily, Buhl tied the game in the top of the ninth inning, a pair of dropped third strikes helping the effort.

Carney started the rally when he was safe on a third strike. Davis followed with a single to put runners at first and second. Charlie Carter then fanned, but a dropped third strike allowed Jerome to load the bases. Mark Munroe then drew a walk from Palmer to force in a run and Davis scored on a wild pitch to bring about the 3-3 tie.

Buhl, 20-5 overall and leading the Magic Valley American Legion Conference with a 10-1 mark, visits Wendell-Gooding tonight for two games at 6 before visiting Jerome Thursday at 8 p.m. for a single game.

JIMMY CONNORS
Wins after 8 years

Wimbledon '82

Seemingly doomed at the start, tennis' grand event closes with flourish

By STEVE GOLDSTEIN
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WIMBLEDON, England — It began as Borg's revenge, a Wimbledon doomed by bad weather, inauspicious matches and the absence of some of the world's greatest players.

It ended in a wild flurry of excitement, a nod of the head to the game's present and future stars and a deep bow of appreciation to those whose best years are behind them, particularly Chris Evert Lloyd, Billie Jean King and James Scott Connors.

In short, Wimbledon '82 came face to face with Murphy's Law and came away with its reputation intact.

Not that it was easy. The bottom liners will tell you that the fortnight fell far short of financial expectations. The transport strikes, the awful weather — it rained 11 of the 13 days — combined to drop attendance nearly 38,000 below last year's level, even with the addition of the extra day. Perhaps it was the heresy of playing on a Sunday or the heresy of not admitting five-time champion Bjorn Borg without qualifying. The event seemed snakebitten.

Then along came Billie Jean King. Surely it was enough that the holder of 20 Wimbledon titles was coming to compete again at age 38? Then we had the added treat of her winning her 100th singles match. But wait. She still wanted to come back from the brink and save three match points against the impish Tanya Harford. We hardly had time to catch our breath before King pulled the upset of the tournament in ousting third-seed Tracy Austin.

By now King was into her 13th semifinal and her 250th match at Wimbledon. Chris Evert Lloyd put it best after surviving a nerve-racking three-setter when she said, "Billie Jean played very well. In fact, I don't think her game has changed that much. She still has one of the greatest volleys in the game."

But then King was gone and with her the lucky blue-and-white dress that she wore for every match, even seeing that it was laundered and dried during every rain delay so she could put it back on.

"I was getting tired of looking at that dress," cracked Evert, who then had to go out and face the most awesome player in the game today, Martina Navratilova. If there was anything remarkable about Navratilova's three-set victory, it wasn't that Evert came back after losing the first set so badly. It was that the defending champion failed to come all the way back. Up a break in the final set, the old Evert would have mowed any opponent down. The thrust, the fire, are gone from Evert. She believes she has nothing to prove, and she is right. She doesn't want it enough.

"I'm very disappointed," Evert said, sounding almost apologetic.

Many felt that if Evert had beaten Navratilova, she would have announced her retirement. The U.S. Open looms ahead and with it another chance to go out in style, yet Evert, 27, may choose to take her last bow at Flushing Meadow, win or lose. Navratilova is gunning for the grand slam and no sentiment is going to get in her way. "I didn't give it away today," Navratilova said, "and I won't give it away out there."

Having lost only one match this year and only a total of five matches since last year's Open, Navratilova, 25, is still young enough and hungry enough to dominate the women's tour for two or three years.

By the time the Evert-Navratilova clash had ended, many believed that this was to be the silver lining in a cloudy Wimbledon. Certainly the men's semifinals did nothing to change that notion. Tim Mayotte and Mark Edmondson both played valiantly, but they were lopsided losers to John McEnroe and Connors. Nor did the first three sets of the men's final do anything to stir our imagination. If anything, the tennis was really dreadful, well below what these two are capable of. McEnroe was so off his game that he spent more time castigating himself than the officials, and Connors was struggling with his familiar enemies, his serve and his fluky forehand.

As someone said, "Maybe they should have made these two qualify."

But if two sets can be said to put things right, then the fourth and fifth on Sunday did just that. Connors is something to watch when he gets rolling. He slaps his thigh, he snorts, he shakes his Prince Valiant haircut, holds his fists out and shakes them in a wild gesture of bravado.

Only Tarzan did it better.

McEnroe, who admitted that he was worried about channeling his energy into controlling his emotions at the expense of his game, was as lost as he's ever been. Gone were the decisive volleys, the defiant passes, the tricky returns of serve. He went down so meekly it was unnerving.

The night before, at the conclusion of a doubles match, McEnroe had a run-in with Steve Denton, one of his opponents. Words were exchanged on the court and later in the locker room. Security types had to be called in to break things up.

McEnroe refused to discuss the incident, but he did answer when asked if it affected him in the final.

"That had zero percent to do with it, at most," snapped McEnroe.

So Connors won for the 11th time in 19 meetings with McEnroe. He had won his 10th only three weeks ago at Queens Club in London and that no doubt helped him Sunday, for McEnroe had beaten him badly twice prior to that.

Can he be No. 1 again? "I'm playing like it," said Connors, who will turn 30 midway through the U.S. Open. "We both gave everything we had today and that is why I like playing McEnroe. He brings out the best in me because he fights for every ball."

But the most apt comment came out of the unusually boisterous Centre Court crowd. At a crucial moment with Connors in the lead, a small group broke out in song: "There's only one Jimmy Connors," they trilled.

Record Philly crowd sees Davis, Giants win

United Press International

On a warm night in Philadelphia, a Giants rookie made a big crowd feel a little Chili.

Chili Davis tripled to touch off a two-run sixth inning that was aided by defensive mistakes Monday night, enabling San Francisco to defeat the Phillies, 3-1, before a regular-season Veteran Stadium record crowd of 63,501.

Davis, who has hit safely in 11 straight games, led off the inning with his triple down the right field line off loser Dick Ruthven, 6-7, and after Jack Clark walked, Milt May delivered a run-scoring single. As Clark went to third on May's hit, the throw from center fielder Garry Maddox skipped past third baseman Mike Schmidt. Ruthven failed to back up the play, allowing Clark to trot home with the go-ahead run on Maddox's error.

The Giants added an insurance run in the eighth when Clark doubled, went to third on a groundout and scored on a sacrifice fly by Darrell Evans.

The Phillies, who stranded seven runners in the first four innings and 12 for the game, scored in the fifth when Pete Rose doubled, went to third on Gary Matthews' single and scored on a fielder's choice grounder by Bo Diaz.

Astros 6, Pirates 4

At Pittsburgh, Phil Garner hit a three-run homer and Jose Cruz added a two-run homer and an RBI double to lead the Astros, who have won six of their seven games with the Pirates this season. Winning pitcher Joe Niekro, 7-6, gave up nine hits, walked one and struck out six in hurling his fifth complete game.

Cardinals 6, Reds 5 (10)

At Cincinnati, Ozzie Smith delivered an RBI single with one out in the 10th, handing the Reds their eighth stright loss. Willie McGee led off the 10th with a single off Tom Hume, 1-4, and took second on a sacrifice by Mike Ramsey. After Darrell Porter drew an intentional walk, Smith singled off first baseman Dan Driessen's glove to make a winner of Jim Kaat, 3-1, who pitched one inning.

Dodgers 4, Mets 1

At New York, Ron Cey and Mike Marshall hit third-inning home runs to back the five-hit pitching of Bob Welch and lift the Dodgers. Welch, 9-5, struck out eight and walked two in besting Pete Falcone, 4-6. The only run Welch allowed came on Dave Kingman's 19th homer in the sixth inning.

Baseball

Braves 7, Cubs 5

At Atlanta, Glenn Hubbard hit a two-run homer in the seventh to spark the Braves to their sixth straight victory. The NL West leaders have won 22 of their last 31 games.

Padres 8, Expos 6

At Montreal, Ruppert Jones triggered a six-run seventh inning with a double and capped the rally with a run-scoring single to spark San Diego. Trailing 6-1, the Padres began their comeback when Jones led off with a double off Scott Sanderson, 6-7, and scored on a single by Sixto Lezcano. Terry Kennedy hit his 10th homer of the season for San Diego in the fifth.

Brewers 16, White Sox 4

The Chicago White Sox, led by shortstop Bill Almon, are becoming adept at throwing away games.

Almon leads the league's shortstops in errors with 20 after committing three in Chicago, and his White Sox teammates added four others in losing to the Brewers.

Roy Howell had four hits, including an RBI single in a three-run first inning and a solo homer in the seventh, to power the Brewers. The White Sox lost for the fifth time in their last six games, while Milwaukee has won eight of its last 11 and 11 of its last 13 on the road.

Twins 5, Tigers 3

At Detroit, Kent Hrbek led off the second inning with a home run and John Castino capped it with a two-run double, leading the Twins. Bobby Castillo, 4-5, notched his second straight triumph as a starter as the Twins won for the sixth time in their last eight games.

Red Sox 4-3, Royals 3-4

At Kansas City, Mo., Jim Rice's bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the 11th inning gave the Red Sox the victory. Mike Armstrong, 2-2, hit Gary Allenson with a pitch to open the inning and took second on a sacrifice by Wade Boggs. Jerry Remy then walked and both runners advanced on a wild pitch.

In the second game, Frank White knocked in three runs with his third homer of the season and a single to give the Royals a split. Don Hood scattered seven hits over 5 2-3 innings to move his record to 2-0 while Dan Quisenberry finished to record his league-leading 22nd save.

Rangers 3, Blue Jays 2

At Arlington, Texas, Jon Matlack and Danny Darwin combined on a seven-hitter and Billy Sample's RBI single capped a three-run third inning that led the Rangers over the slumping Blue Jays. Texas has won seven of its last nine while Toronto has dropped nine of 12.

Orioles 8, Angels 5

At Anaheim, Calif., Rick Dempsey, Eddie Murray and Floyd Rayford hit two-run homers to power the Orioles. The Angels have lost six straight, scoring only 10 runs in the process.

Ken Singleton collected two doubles and a single to drive in the other two Baltimore runs.

Mariners 5, Yankees 4

At Seattle, Julio Cruz went 3-for-4, stole two bases, scored three runs and drove in two to help the Mariners defeat the Yankees and move into third place in the American League West.

Cruz's two steals set up the winning run for Seattle in the seventh inning.

With New York leading 4-3, Terry Bulling doubled with one out in the seventh, went to third on an infield out and scored the tying run on a single by Cruz off reliever George Frazier, 3-2. Cruz then stole second and third and scored on a Texas League single by Dave Edler. Edler also had three hits and two RBI.

A's 2, Indians 0

At Oakland, Calif., Tom Underwood scattered six hits over 7 2-3 innings and Dan Meyer belted a solo homer to lead the A's.

Meyer provided the A's with their first run when he lined a two-out homer, his fifth, over the right field fence in the third inning.

players — such as Houston's Leon Gray, Pittsburgh's John Stallworth and Donnie Shell, San Diego's Dan Fouts, New England's Tom Owen, Kansas City's Gary Barbaro, Dallas' John Dutton, Detroit's Tom Skladany and others. The letter threatened a suit against the league and stated Slusher's conclusion that his players would be free to negotiate with any team in the league after July 15.

"It must also be remembered," Slusher said in his letter to Lombardi, "that such a determination (a player's right to negotiate his own contract expiring on July 15) would also imply that each other provision of the collective bargaining agreement expires on July 15, 1982. This, of course, leads to the conclusion that each unsigned veteran free agent ... will be free to negotiate with any club in the league after July 15, 1982, without his club retaining any rights to compensation and-or 'refusal.'"

"Slusher's wrong," said Lombardi. "The union has the right by law to negotiate hours, terms and wages for its members. Those terms and conditions continue until we sign a new agreement except for the waiver. The union has indicated that it will not continue the waiver after July 15, so once again the union is the only entity that has the right to negotiate for its members."

Actually, said Lombardi, it makes no difference to the league whether the union or individual players and agents negotiate contracts with teams. "A lot of people are under the impression that this is jointly agreed between the union and the league," said Lombardi. "All we're doing is reacting to the union's decision. We'd be happy with the status quo."

Doug Allen, Garvey's assistant with the NFLPA, would not comment on whether the union actually intends to negotiate contracts for unsigned rookies and veterans, whether the union would collect fees for its services and other details. "We don't want the players to learn the practicalities in the press before we contact them," said Allen. "We've been contacting them this week and we'll be doing it next week.

"Our position has always been that, after the 15th, the union waiver to negotiate salaries above the minimum expires," said Allen. "After that date, we not only have the right but the obligation to do it."

Now if you can imagine Garvey negotiating Dan Fouts' contract with the Chargers, you know this summer will be very interesting. Israel's Begin and the PLO would sooner sit down for tea and an afternoon chat.

streets of Rome and other Italian cities — honking horns and waving banners with partying lasting well into the night.

This was a day of great revenge for the Italians, who lost 4-1 to Brazil in the 1970 Mexico World Cup final and 2-1 in the 1978 contest for third place in Argentina.

Brazil needed only a tie Monday to finish first in Group C on goal difference, having defeated defending champion Argentina 3-1. Italy had beaten Argentina 2-1.

Still, Brazil manager Tele Santana promised his team would stick to the familiar rhythmic style that made his team the clear favorite. But the Italians had other ideas, stifling Brazil with their vaunted defense and swift counter-attacks.

"We built on what we learned from the games against Poland, Cameroon and Peru," said Enzo Bearzot, the Italian manager. "And our last two games (defeating Argentina and Brazil) were the result of the first phase."

Brazilian coach Tele Santana said Brazil's defeat was the result of individual mistakes.

"I have never said that we would win the World Cup," he said. "The team was not overconfident, but I have said that Brazil could be beaten and now you have seen it.

"It was a well balanced match, both teams were in good form and both made attacking tactics. Brazil made mistakes and Italy took advantage of them."

Across the ocean in Brazil, fans reacted in shock and with tears. Desolation fell over the streets of Rio de Janeiro that in recent days were filled with revelers and samba dancers.

"The party is over," said one television newscaster.

Brazilian flags were swept into gutters and a few disgusted fans stripped off their yellow and green T-shirts and jerseys.

Pampering of athletes one reason behind drug problem

By FRANK DOLSON
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Commentary

The drug stories that appear almost daily must come as a shock to many American sports fans. We are a society that looks up to our pro athletes. Our kids revere them, collect their autographs. Companies hire them to plug their products.

It's a jolt to find out that many of those heroic figures who deliver clutch home runs, dash the length of the field for touchdowns and lead breathtaking fast breaks are beset with such terrible problems.

It's an even bigger jolt to discover how lax some of our pro leagues and teams have been in combatting those problems.

"I know one thing," St. Louis Cardinal catcher Darrell Porter was saying the other day. "Guys (athletes) aren't afraid to do drugs. Nobody's afraid to do drugs. I wasn't because I knew one thing. If I got caught somebody was going to bail me out. It's just like one of us driving down the road going 90 miles an hour. They don't write us tickets. They let us off.

"That was one of my problems. Nobody ever made me be responsible for what I was doing. They'd always get me off the hook some way, so consequently I said, 'Hey, I can get away with this stuff.'"

That's one of the problems athletes face today in this country. From the time they're in high school they're pampered, sometimes spoiled rotten. College recruiters line up, ready to ply them with illegal offers. Star athletes quickly learn they're special, that they can get away with just about anything.

It isn't easy for a young man to keep his head straight under those circumstances. By now, it should be painfully clear that many of them don't.

The Don Reese drug confessional in Sports Illustrated angered Porter when he first read it. Porter's initial reaction was: "Who knows if that stuff is true? I know what cocaine does to you. You start believing things that aren't real."

It's Porter's belief that the baseball-cocaine connection isn't nearly as strong as the football-cocaine connection. But that doesn't mean baseball is above all this.

"We've definitely got a problem," Porter said, "but I think our problems are more with alcohol . . . and I think we've got a problem with a lot of uppers. Guys get to where early in the season they take one. By the middle of the season they get to two — every day."

Porter should know. He tried it all. What happened to him should be a warning to every young man who goes into pro sports. And also to the men who run pro sports and, too often, seem more interested in covering up the problem than dealing with it.

Alcohol and drug problems in sports may be a reflection of society as a whole, as our pro sports leaders like to point out. But the pressures and the big money that are so much a part of today's pro sports world make athletes especially susceptible.

The Porter case is illuminating. As a kid, he fit the all-America boy image. He didn't smoke. He didn't drink. He never dreamed of "doing" drugs. An outstanding football and baseball player, he chose pro baseball for a career, turning down a rather lucrative — and very illegal — college offer from the University of Oklahoma.

Yet he, too, fell into the morass of alcohol and drugs. Like Don Reese, like Carl Eller, like so many others caught up in the pressure-cooker life of a pro athlete, he was on the verge of self-destructing.

For him, the introduction to alcohol and amphetamines — baseball players call them "greenies" — came in his first minor league season.

The alcohol came first.

"I was lonely," he said. "And I got to struggling. I was hitting like .205. I was real down in the dumps, and a couple of the guys asked me if I wanted to out and have a few beers and just relax. . . . I found out I sure didn't worry about hitting .195 or .200 then, and I wasn't lonely any more. I kind of found a way to relax. It's the way too many of them find."

The amphetamines came next. "One of the players came up to me and said, 'Try this. This will make you feel better,'" Porter said. "I popped one of them things. It did make me feel better. I don't know if I did any better, but I sure felt good out there."

Porter became psychologically dependent on those little pills. "I don't think in the end those things did much for me, but I'll guarantee you I would go to the clubhouse and I would feel rotten — until before infield practice. That's when I'd always take my 'greenie.' When I put that thing in my mouth all of a sudden I felt better. I know that stuff didn't have time to get in my system, but I'd feel better."

By the mid-'70s Darrell Porter, the all-America boy — from Oklahoma, had become a deeply troubled man. In addition to being a regular "greenie" user by then, he was on cocaine.

"My attitude toward life and toward myself and everything else had changed so much. I knew I was a sick man. It just got to the point it was unbearable. I was in misery all the time. From the time I got up to the time I went to bed, and I just didn't want to go on like that."

To his great credit, Darrell Porter didn't go on like that. In part, it was a spring training, Don Newcombe talk on alcoholism that brought him to his senses.

"It didn't take much courage (to seek help)," he said, "because I was so down."

Maybe not, but you have to admire him for persevering and eventually straightening himself out. The all-America boy who went wrong has put liquor and amphetamines and cocaine out of his life and turned into a first-class man.

But he knows, just as Newcombe and Eller and so many others know, that those frightening headlines only represent the tip of the iceberg that professional sports has hit head-on.

TERRY CUMMINGS
Lost 6 games in 3 years

Cummings may have to adjust to losing in NBA

NEW YORK (UPI) — When Terry Cummings was growing up in Chicago, he was a teenage terror. Since then, his life has seen some changes.

At the age of 16, Cummings turned to religion and is now an ordained minister. Instead of stalking street people, he began terrorizing college basketball while playing for the Blue Demons at DePaul. Now Cummings hopes to make the NBA his next prey.

Cummings, a 6-foot-9 power forward, was the No. 1 pick of the San Diego Clippers in last week's NBA draft, and the second player chosen overall behind North Carolina's James Worthy. Cummings was one of 12 undergraduates to pass up their final year of college eligibility for the pros, nine of whom were picked in the first round.

When Virginia's Ralph Sampson turned his back on the megabucks the NBA had to offer for the second straight year, Cummings wasted no time in dropping his name into the draft bowl.

"It was the best time for me to leave — for the ministry's sake and for my financial stability," says Cummings.

Cummings, 21, has been a Pentecostal minister in the fundamentalist Church of God in Christ for more than three years. Once a tough street kid from Chicago's Southside, he was converted to the faith when he was 16.

"The Lord came to me one night in a dream," says Cummings. "He was coming back to get his chosen ones. I saw what was happening but I was unprepared for the event. That was my first call to the ministry and that's when I gave my life to Christ."

In all of his three seasons at DePaul, Cummings led the Demons in rebounding, averaging 10 per game. He also led the team in scoring last season, averaging 22.3 points a game, as DePaul went 26-2 to earn an NCAA tournament bid.

DePaul Coach Ray Meyer once said of his 220-pound star: "No matter where he goes, no matter what team he plays for, the other players will look up to him. He's a leader."

Like any rookie out of college, Cummings will have to adjust to the hectic NBA lifestyle.

"The biggest part will be the travel," says Cummings, "and certain other things like learning how to take care of myself — eat the right foods and get the proper amount of rest."

But an even bigger adjustment for Cummings could be moving from a winning program to a team that will probably lose more games in a month than he lost in his three years at DePaul (six).

"I'm not worried about the San Diego franchise," says Cummings of the Clippers, who lost 65 games last season. "Everything will take care of itself. If I give everything I got, I can't go home mad."

Cummings is a fine all-around offensive player. He is a terror under the boards with a strong inside game. He has an excellent outside shot, and can hit consistently from the 10-to-15 foot range.

"There are a lot of things I can do," says Cummings. "I like to run, I can play facing the basket or with my back to it. I have a lot to offer."

The competition he'll face in the NBA will certainly be unlike any other he faced in college, but Cummings welcomes the challenge.

"I can rise to the occasion," he says. "The better the competition, the better prepared I'll have to be. I want to be where the action is. When push comes to shove, I'll be there to play."

Walcroft 8th in judo competition

HONOLULU — Twin Falls' Wally Walcroft took eighth place in the 12-year-old heavyweight division at the National Junior Judo Tournament here Sunday.

Walcroft was among 30 competitors in his division, so earned a place in the top third.

The youth had some troubles keeping his weight within the prescribed limits for the division. He weighed 117 pounds when he left Twin Falls last Thursday, but but lost three pounds to get down to 114 in order to compete.

Kingman-Martin scuffle settled

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — Oakland A's Manager Billy Martin and pitcher Brian Kingman nearly came to blows last week, but it was pitching coach Art Fowler who apparently threw the only punch.

Details of the fight were revealed during the weekend. Apparently all the participants in the argument have since shaken hands and apologized.

Eyewitnesses said the early morning dispute in Kansas City occurred Tuesday when Martin chewed out Kingman. The pitcher then poked a finger at Martin's chest. Martin responded with a slap to the pitcher's jaw.

Fowler followed Martin and Kingman into a parking lot and Fowler clipped Kingman's chin with what was described as a non-serious right hand. All apologized Wednesday.

U.S. team wins cage tourney

TAIPEI, Taiwan (UPI) — Aubrey Sherrod of Wichita State scored 27 points Monday night, leading a U.S. college basketball team to 79-62 victory over Canada and the championship of the 12-nation William Jones Cup.

The Americans, who won eight straight games en route to the title, took a 13-point lead over the previously undefeated Canadians in the first 10 minutes. Canada trailed 41-33 at the half.

The U.S. team opened a 17-point lead in the second half but Canada pulled within 7 points with three minutes left. Jay Triano led Canada with 22 points.

"We relied more on offense than on defense because we did not have enough time together to develop a good defensive system," said U.S. Coach George Raveling of Washington State. "We had only one week together before we came here. Good defense is team defense and it took a long time to develop it."

Anderson leads Tour de France

LONGWY, France (UPI) — Belgian cyclist Daniel Willems won the third stage of the Tour de France Monday while Phil Anderson of Australia retained the lead in the overall standings.

French ace Bernard Hinault, shooting for his fourth Tour de France title in five years, dominated much of the stage. He and Anderson engaged in a wheel-to-wheel battle during the first half of the circuit.

Philadelphia activates Maddox

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The Philadelphia Phillies Monday activated center fielder Garry Maddox and sent rookie first baseman Len Matuszek to Oklahoma City of the American Association.

Maddox, who was batting .299 when he went on the disabled list June 19 with a pulled right hamstring, was to start Monday night against the San Francisco Giants.

Matuszek played 15 games with the Phillies and hit .107.

Nanne's son loses right leg

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ontario (UPI) — Doctors amputated Michael Nanne's right leg Monday, said a spokesman for his father, Minnesota North Stars general manager Lou Nanne.

The younger Nanne, 18, who was injured in a motorcycle accident last Thursday, was in stable condition following the above-the-knee amputation needed to halt an infection, the spokesman said. Doctors planned to transfer Nanne Tuesday to a London, Ontario, hospital better equipped to treat the infection.

Nanne suffered two broken legs, two broken arms, a fractured pelvis, internal injuries and head injuries in a two-motorcycle collision that killed the other driver, Brian Martin, 16, of Sault Ste. Marie.

Trade hassles with Japan include soda ash

By JEROME IDASZAK
© Chicago Sun-Times

The chairman of one of America's top companies is making a good argument that all the bluster over trade with Japan can be reduced to soda ash.

Robert H. Malott of Chicago's FMC Corp. is one of a handful of U.S. business leaders, including James Bere of Borg-Warner and Robert Galvin of Motorola, who are beginning to raise their voices. Their words show that while the Japanese trade waters are becoming calm, the storm is not yet over.

Soda ash comes from limestone, which is mixed with salt. The ingredients add up to something familiar — glass. While glass isn't a trade issue as autos or steel are, the soda ash story does have elements of a classic.

The production of soda ash doesn't require a lot of workers but it does take plenty of cash. Five U.S. companies make the product, including Chicago's FMC Corp., which exports it to several countries, including Japan. FMC and the others have been told they each can send Japan 12,000 tons a year. No more, no less.

There's the rub. And the rubbing makes Malott a bit raw with anger.

Malott says FMC makes soda ash for $96 a ton. Japan, which uses 1.3 million tons of the stuff a year, makes it for about $230 a ton for its domestic buyers. The Japanese charge more because they import the ingredients and then use a production method that requires expensive imported energy.

"We should be supplying 600,000 to 700,000 tons in their market," Malott says about the U.S. producers.

That would be a tidy sum of more than $60 million.

Here's where the case becomes a classic. Whenever the Japanese don't want U.S. products, they counter with complaints. Either the product isn't designed to appeal to Japanese consumers, or the U.S. producer has neglected to line up support of Japanese distributors. Or the American product is too expensive, or of poor quality.

Sometimes, they're right. The workers in suburban Tokyo make better-quality cars than the workers in suburban Detroit. That's not sentiment of the Japanese, that's an opinion held by a large number of American car buyers.

Sometimes, their arguments draw sympathy. The Japanese ambassador to the United States, Yoshio Okawara, says his government can't push too hard to import more oranges and beef because Japan's farmers are the political foundation of Japan's ruling party. Because of politics, America protects some of its workers, too.

But these typical responses don't apply to soda ash.

Quality isn't a big problem, and soda ash can be stored indefinitely. "We export 400,000 tons of soda ash, and there's no contamination problem," Malott says.

The Japanese say they need a consistent supply, and they're not certain they can trust the United States. Malott argues that U.S. soda ash makers easily supply U.S. needs so shortages are unlikely. He says FMC would agree to a contract, but Japan has never wanted one.

The Japanese suggested that the Americans send a study team to Tokyo to learn why more isn't imported. American producers went there last month and met with officials from Japan's government, trading companies and soda ash makers and users. FMC Vice President James McCling said the result was unproductive.

The remaining obstacle raised by the Japanese is lack of storage. Malott says FMC can build silos as it does elsewhere.

"When you really press them," Malott says, "they say that 'If we buy from you, we'll be creating unemployment problems in Japan.' To which we say, 'Why don't you send a study team to Detroit to see how they handle the problem.'"

Because soda ash production doesn't employ many workers, Malott says that's not the major issue. He estimates that the displaced Japanese workers would equal the number of U.S. autoworkers displaced by 5,000 imported cars.

He suggests the real reason for the barrier is that the Japanese trading companies, as part of their global business, ship the salt to Japan to make soda ash, own interest in the companies that make glass and carry some of the glass out of the country. It's all tied together, financially.

Malott may lose his battle. Already, Japanese officials are saying they've calmed U.S. trade worries with their latest package of non-tariff concessions and, with recent visits by Japanese politicans and government leaders to U.S. cities. The U.S. Senate is quieting its earlier angry voice; and no nation pointed a finger at Japan at the Versailles economic summit.

Malott says, however, that the problem remains and the Japanese take a risk that "the international business community will turn against them." That opinion may be too harsh, but it seems harsh words and threats of retaliation from Americans are what brings change by the Japanese.

Growing confidence sends more money into partnerships

By JERRY C. DAVIS
© Chicago Sun-Times

Investors are putting more money into the big publicly registered real estate partnerships than a year ago, indicating continued confidence in the performance of this investment.

A new survey by tax-shelter consultants at Robert A. Stanger & Co. in New York found that sales of shares in these limited partnerships reached $374 million in the first quarter of the year, up 8.1 percent from a year ago.

In fact, the 8.1 percent year-over-year increase among the top 15 sponsors really understates the magnitude of sales growth because JMB Realty, which had sales of $95.4 million in the first quarter of 1981, did not have an income program on the market in the first quarter of 1982, Stanger said.

Sources in the industry attribute the increased investment in real estate partnerships to a combination of the new, more favorable tax laws, the lack of confidence in the stock and bond markets, and the good results shown over the years by the big companies that form these partnerships.

In a limited partnership that is registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, small investors can buy shares for $5,000 or less to seek the tax benefits, cash return and appreciation in value of real estate purchased by the partnership. Stockbrokers can sell these shares, and increasingly have shown a tendency to do so instead of counseling their clients to go into the stock market.

"There is no question that Wall Street is selling more dollars of real estate program investments," said James Joy, president of Robert A. Stanger & Co. "But the sponsors themselves have a lot of selling horsepower, and can raise money almost anytime they want to. Those firms that are good are awfully good and they have high-powered and aggressive sales efforts."

Two of the largest companies are Chicago-based Balcor Realty and JMB Realty Corp., which between them raised more than $300 million for real estate investments in 1981. At Balcor, the continued public interest in real estate is not surprising in view of several favorable developments, says James E. Finley, senior executive vice president.

"The new tax laws are definitely part of it because real estate receives by far more favorable treatment," Finley said. "Also, the demand for rental housing is at an all-time high, and that is where we are looking at more investment. The rental age group has grown dramatically, and rents and occupancy are at a peak."

Balcor, like most of the other sponsors, has had to make some adjustments in its previous strategy of concentrating on shopping centers and office buildings. Now, the investment groups are looking at a combination of residential, which offers more favorable treatment of depreciation, and commercial real estate. Both benefit by the new tax laws providing for faster depreciation write-offs — 15 years instead of 30-40 years.

"The sponsors also are reducing leverage and paying cash to avoid high interest costs in some situations, Joy said. "Clearly, a lot of properties cannot support leverage at today's interest rates. There is a tendency to be more selective and careful in the use of leverage, though it can have a dramatic impact on returns if properly applied."

Balcor says it raised a record amount of investment funds a year ago, "but we are far outstripping that this year," according to Finley. "Part of it has to be reaction to other investments. Real estate just has more appeal than stocks or bonds at this time."

Take a good look at interstate highways

© Universal Press Syndicate

This summer, as you roll down the interstate highway system on a weekend or vacation auto trip, take a good look at the road surface you are driving on.

In some parts of the country, our 42,000-mile national system of superhighways is deteriorating badly and urgently needs major repair.

The interstate system of limited-access highways crisscrossing the nation was originally the dream of Gen. John J. "Black Jack" Pershing. In the 1950s, construction was begun at the urging of another famous general — President Dwight D. Eisenhower. Most of those roadways have now been completed, at a cost of $82 billion, 90 percent paid for by the federal government, the rest by the states.

The construction job has been bigger than the building of the pyramids of Egypt, bigger than the engineering of the Panama Canal, bigger than the creation of the Great Wall of China.

But now comes big trouble — because the roads, which were superbly engineered for maximum safety, attractiveness and driving comfort, were planned for a life of 20 years. Parts of the system are now well past the 20-year mark.

This presents the Reagan administration with another of its defiantly difficult funding problems.

At least 10 percent of the existing interstate system mileage needs resurfacing immediately. The interstate system, representing a little more than 1 percent of the nation's total road and street mileage, carries 20 percent of all traffic.

Use of the interstates has been far greater than the planners anticipated, particularly due to the growth of long-distance heavy truck traffic. Assuming that present trends in travel and user fees continue, almost half the interstate system will need basic repairs by 1995.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said recently, "Our interstates are in terrible shape."

And the latest official government report on the highways says that at least $1.5 billion a year will be needed to pay for the federal share of reconstruction, restoration or resurfacing (4-R work) in the next decade.

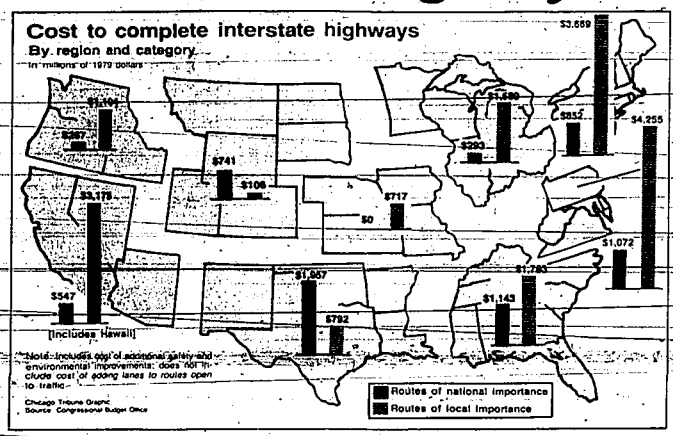
Initially, this type of work was supposed to be the responsibility of the states. Four years ago, however, the federal government started to make money available for these purposes. In this current year, Congress has provided $900 million — but obviously more is required.

The money for construction and 4-R work on the interstate system (and other federally-aided highways) is supposed to come from the Highway Trust Fund. This is a fund set up by Congress that gets its money from the federal 4-cents-per-gallon gasoline tax and otherway highway user charges, such as taxes on motor oil, tires and tubes, heavy trucks, and intercity buses. This was designed to pay for the federal share on a pay-as-you-go basis. But costs of construction and repair have been outrunning revenues. The trust fund has drawn down its balance of funds from $12 billion a couple of years ago to less than $9 billion now.

Lewis suggested the federal gasoline tax be raised by 5 cents a gallon, with 4 cents to go to the Highway Trust Fund, the other 1 cent to go for mass transit. Bills were introduced in Congress to carry this out, but then Reagan came out against it. And of course, the trucking and other organized lobbies of highway user groups were delighted to see the gas tax hike postponed.

Chances are the 5-cent gas-tax increase is merely postponed (maybe to next year). Otherwise, where will the essential money come from?

So let's enjoy our summer trips on the interstate system — but also get set to put up another 5-cents-a-gallon gas tax, to keep the interstate system and other highways in tiptop shape. They're a joy — and safe — only when they are in good repair.



Service key to locating cheapest gas

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Motorists have a better chance of finding below average gasoline prices at stations that offer only one type of service, a survey by oil analyst Daniel Lundberg shows.

"Nationally, motorists are encountering more of the lower prices at stations offering only one type of service, full or self, and greater numbers of higher prices at split-island stations," Lundberg said in his weekly oil industry newsletter.

The reason, he said, is that split-island dealers "use their extra pump flexibility to compete with self-service stations, and attempt to recover sacrificed (profit) margin at their higher-priced full-service pumps."

Forty percent of the stations offer only self-service, accounting for 53 percent of volume, and nearly 40 percent of the stations are so-called split-island operations, offering both self and full service. Those stations account for 35 percent of gas volume.

Lundberg said motorists in Salt Lake City and New Orleans have a better chance of finding lower than average prices at independent or non-major stations, while Washington, D.C., has the greatest number of brands priced below the combined national average.

New Orleans had no major brand averages below the average prices charged by independents, and Salt Lake City, known for its self-service marketing, had no major averages below the non-majors' average for regular leaded, regular unleaded and premium unleaded.

Idaho phone rate boost seen likely

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho Public Utilities Commissioner Conley Ward warns Mountain Bell telephone service rates may double in the next two years because of the breakup of the parent company, American Telegraph and Telephone.

"It's not unreasonable to expect local rates to double ... over the course of a year or two (after the breakup)," Ward said.

But Mountain Bell officials have softened predictions of a major rate increase after the agreement drawn up by AT&T and the Justice Department to settle a longstanding anti-trust lawsuit is ratified by a federal judge.

The agreement would split off 22 local telphone companies from AT&T including Mountain Bell, with the parent company retaining its long distance, Yellow Pages, research and manufacturing operations.

Losing the money made by the Yellow Pages operation and the long-distance business will hurt the local companies and lead to a skyrocketing in local charges, say critics of the agreement.

Gene Hill, Mountain Bell vice president, said he has heard of no expected doubling of rates since the January announcement of the pending divestiture of most local telephone companies by the nationwide company.

"I do not believe that divestiture itself will make for sharp increases. I can't see why rates would double or triple."

The PUC has joined forces with utility regulating commissions in other states and Mountain Bell in seeking to modify the federal anti-trust agreement.

"I want the toll (long distance services) back," Hill said, "I want the Yellow Pages."

Ward said he feared the local operating companies would fall behind technologically, so the agreement amounted to "a death sentence for the kind of service we know now." Hill said he agreed with Ward.

Ford trying attractions for women

DALLAS (UPI) — The Ford Motor Co. is spending $500,000 on wine and gold bracelets in an attempt to increase car sales to women.

The experimental project in Dallas and San Diego is aimed at the middle-class, professional woman, trying to erase fears that buying a car is a traumatic experience.

District Sales Manager M.J. Ellsworth said women are "very apprehensive" when they walk into a car dealership, and the new Ford approach is supposed to "reduce these fears and eliminate these fears."

He said 110 cars have been sold to women who attended showroom parties at 14 Ford and Lincoln-Mercury dealerships in the Dallas market area.

At Miracle Ford this week, more than 500 women responded to engraved invitations and attended the showroom party, sipping chablis and collecting their free 14-carat gold bracelets.

Fashion models pranced among the new cars, as the women guests closely examined the new models and price tags. All 140 employes were on hand, including the president, wearing carnations and big smiles.

"We're after the business-type woman, the upper-middle income woman," Ellsworth said.

Protect freedom, one-time envoy tells Utah audience

PROVO, Utah (UPI) — Former Polish Ambassador to the U.S. Romauld Spasowski told an overflow crowd of 23,000 at Brigham Young University to "never take freedom for granted" in a special Independence Day celebration Sunday night.

Spasowski, who defected to America following the imposition of martial law in Poland last year, was joined by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir and U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch as guests at the annual Freedom Festival.

"There is no compromise to freedom," Spasowski told the audience. "The United States and only the United States shows to the whole world how to defend freedom and stand against communism and aggression."

The former Polish diplomat asked Americans not to abandon the Polish people in their hour of need. "Show us your solidarity and give as much peaceful assistance as you can," he urged.

Spasowski suggested ways Americans could help Poles, including sending food and medicine, strong moral support and free radio broadcasts. He also stressed economic support should be cut off to the oppressors.

The former ambassador said martial law still exists in his native country, and people are still arrested daily. He said even school children are punished in the same way adults are, and secret police "are everywhere spying on workers."

"What is strong is the Catholic church," he said. "Catholic churches have masses every hour on the hour, and never before have people been so attached to the Christian faith, and the pope."

He praised the Polish labor organization, Solidarity, and called it "a wonderful influence."

"It spread like lightning across the country for 16 months and it existed during the finest hours of our history," Spasowski said. "It had a beautiful and noble birth but never a chance to be full grown."

He said he defected during the Dec. 19 takeover because "I had decieved myself for too long with Communist point of view."

Spasowski also strongly criticized the proposed Siberian pipeline, connecting western Europe to the Soviet Union.

"It is going to be slave labor to build up the Soviet armament program and the billions of dollars for gas will only go to armaments," he said. "Remember what the Soviets have done in last 20 years."

"The Soviets are playing skillfully in Poland," Spasowski added. "But there is no doubt in my mind the Polish people can win. However, at what price?"

"Thirty-five million highly spirited people cannot be stifled forever, and Poland will be Poland again," he concluded.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir sang many patriotic songs, including their world-famous rendition of the Battle Hymn of the Republic.

Big sharks keep beaches clear

STINSON BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Great white sharks feeding in shallow waters along the Marin County coast kept people off the beaches during the holiday weekend and merchants in the seaside town of Stinson Beach took it in stride.

Kendrick Rand, owner of the Sand Dollar Restaurant, the only bar in the tiny community 10 miles north of San Francisco introduced a new drink: "The Great White Shark." It was made of vodka, creme de cacao and a splash of blood-red grenadine.

"It'll make you take a bite out of somebody," quipped Rand, who is also the chief of the town's volunteer fire department.

Another resident, Jan Buryn, donned a foam-rubber shark suit, causing double-takes by motorists and others along the town's block-long main street of shops.

Swimmers were ordered to stay out of the water or be arrested and fined. A brisk wind, along with the warnings, kept people off the sandy beach, usually packed on summer holiday weekends.

Lorraine Miller, a shop owner, called the shark sightings a perfect "Hollywood-type hype" which kept people away from the ocean and sent them into the shops to buy souvenirs and gifts.

"It's good for business," she said. "They're in the stores, not on the beach."

Predator sharks are known to feed on sea mammals in the coastal area, but they're rarely sighted along the three-mile stretch of protected beach between Stinson and Bolinas.

"In nine years, I've never seen this many incidents or sightings this close to shore," said Scott Tye, chief lifeguard at Stinson Beach.

Shark expert John McCosker from the California Academy of Sciences in San Francisco said the shark attacks could have been enticed by the unusually large number of marine mammals and birds killed recently in fishermen's gill nets.

"It's not a normal biological phenomenon," Tye said.

Paiute land quest in Utah runs into political roadblocks

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Paiute Indians, with their recently-restored tribal status, are looking for 15,000 acres of appropriate land to expand their reservation, but political roadblocks stop them at every turn.

The tribe, which was granted the right to the additional acreage in a bill sponsored by Sen. Orrin Hatch and Rep. Dan Marriott, was denied its first expansion proposal in an Interior solicitor's opinion. A second proposal, including lands in five southern Utah counties, is under consideration.

The Paiutes have stirred political waters by demanding land with valuable mineral resources.

Hatch said he agreed with restoration of reservation lands but "I never for the life of me thought they would ask for millions of dollars of coal land.

"That has caused tremendous discussions down there," Hatch added.

Colorado searchers end quest

ESTES PARK, Colo. (UPI) — Searchers who spent a week covering miles of high-country timberlands and rocky gorges near the Continental Divide said Monday they were mystified by the lack of any sign of a 12-year-old boy missing in Rocky Mountain National Park.

Park spokesman Ulen Kaye said he has notified the family of Robert Baldeshwiler of Lansing, Ill., that if Monday's search fails to yield any clues the effort will be ended at nightfall. The boy disappeared June 29 while on a hike up Flattop Mountain with his family.

"No trace has been found in all the search zones," Kaye said. "We have given them enough coverage that if he had been in the area we would have found him. I'm mystified.

"There is absolutely no trace and the search was thorough. There has not been a footprint or piece of clothing — nothing."

He said the family began preparing to return to Illinois.

The boy was last seen by a hiker descending the Flattop Mountain trail, who later told authorities he had been concerned because a storm was coming in and the boy was clad only in T-shirt, blue jeans and tennis shoes. Temperatures dropped below freezing at least one of the nights since Baldeshwiler vanished.

Sunday the search party included 220 people, but Monday the force dwindled to 55 and five tracking dogs.

Each night, search parties placed lanterns at trailheads throughout the area, in the hope the boy would see them. The search yielded combs, sunglasses and knives, but nothing connected with Baldeshwiler.

Kaye said the total cost of the search reached $114,000 Monday, including emergency hires, overtime for park personnel, food, helicopters and fuel, maps and office supplies, and travel for two expert search teams from two other national park facilities.

Court denies man's appeal

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — The Utah Supreme Court has denied the appeal of a man convicted of manslaughter, ruling he was not entitled to acquittal when the state failed to prove he was guilty of the charge of second-degree murder, but did establish his guilt of a lesser crime.

Luckie Howell appealed his Sept. 24, 1980, conviction of manslaughter in the death of Travis Powell, of Ogden, and his conviction of attempted manslaughter of John Irwin, of San Diego.

The two were shot during a fight in June, 1980. Howell was charged with second degree murder, but he claimed he fired his .357 magnum revolver in self-defense.

He testified he had been beaten and feared for his life. The jury returned a verdict for manslaughter and attempted manslaughter. Howell is serving a prison term of up to 30 years at Utah State Prison.

Howell's attorney Gary Cale appealed the decision, claiming there is no crime of attempted manslaughter, and also that the jury erred in convicting Howell of a lesser crime than that with which he was charged.

Utahns to meet with Reagan today

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Utah Senate Majority Leader Karl Snow of Provo, and Majority Whip Jack Bangerter will meet with President Reagan today to discuss budget and federalism issues.

Snow said Reagan has invited western legislative leaders to a special budget briefing at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles.

Snow said the leaders will discuss budget, land and water issues.

Vulnerable: Both. Dealer: South. The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	All pass

Opening lead: Heart 10

Not many would find the winner in the defense of today's interesting game. It takes some inner strength and a casual air from East to lead declarer astray.

Declarer wins the first heart and passes his club jack to East's queen. East shifts to diamonds, but it's all over. Declarer wins knocks out the club ace and 10 easy tricks light up the scoreboard.

It might be another matter if East makes a deceptive and not so daring play. When declarer leads the club jack for a finesse, East makes life difficult by playing a casual five. The odds favor another finesse by South and now East can score his queen.

What's the difference in East's imaginiative duck? Three tricks and a game swing if declarer takes the bait. Instead of scoring three club tricks, declarer gets only one as the single dummy entry cannot bring in the suit.

How does East know to duck his queen? He can't be sure, of course, but there are some clues. South's play of the club jack points to the club ace with West and there's little promise in any other suit. A-Q-5 in clubs, East would find the play. With Q-7-5, it's the same principle, only West has the ace instead of East.

Note that too much study ruins East's chances. Declarer might then go up with dummy's king on the second lead and then he's got two overtricks.
