Will 'dehomogenize' America Federalism revised, ready says Reagan

By DONALD A. DAVIS
United Press International

BALTIMORE — President Reagan, raking federal states to 'homogenize America' — said Tuesday his New Federalism program to break up the Washington bureaucracy will be sent to Capitol Hill by the end of this month.

The sweeping program, which Reagan said will "reorder the way American people govern themselves," would make the states responsible for nearly three dozen major federal programs. First presented in Reagan's State of the Union address in January, it bogged down and "has undergone a six-month overhaul."

must stop trying to homogenize America."

It appeared certain the New Federalism proposal, even in its altered state, would face toughing Congress — which has built the complex system of social aid and financial assistance to states and cities over the last half century.

Under the plan, it would be up to the states after a number of years to decide whether to keep the programs going — an option that provoked fierce protests.

The president's announcement that a scaled-back package is ready to go "to the Congress by the end of the month" came in a speech to the National Association of Counties meeting at the futuristic convention center overlooking Baltimore's busy harbor.

The key change in the transfer plan — totaling some $40 billion in spending each year at present levels — is dropping a call for states to take over the food stamp program, which costs more than $11 billion annually.

The National League of Cities, representing more than 18,000 mostly small and medium-sized towns, criticized the plan in a statement and said: "Abandonment and abdication must not constitute a policy for the cities."

Reagan said the New Federalism plan to be phased in over eight years, had been "altered and polished" during extensive meetings with local and state officials. While saying significant changes had been made, he insisted the revised version has "remained true to our first principles."

Attacking the "swollen" bureaucracy, Reagan called the trend toward power accumulating in Washington a "serious" mistake and declared, "We are turning American away from yesterday's policies of Big Brother Government."

"In the recent past, as the federal government has pushed each city, county, state to be more like every other, we have begun to lose one of our greatest strengths: our diversity as a people," Reagan said. "If we are to renew our country, we

Although food stamps were removed from the formula, Reagan retained other elements of the basic "swap" he proposed in January — the federal government would assume full responsibility for the costly Medicaid program of health care for the needy, while the states take over Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the nation's No. 1 cash welfare program.

Reagan said the number of programs to be turned back to states has risen from 40 to 38, excise taxes and other general revenues would replace the windfall profits tax to fill a gradually diminishing trust fund to finance the shift, and states could not drop out of programs until 1985.

Israelis give Habib a little more time

By United Press International

Israel strengthened its armored ring around Beirut Tuesday and, though rejecting most elements of a new PLO peace proposal, gave U.S. envoy Philip Habib more time to arrange a total PLO withdrawal from Lebanon.

The Syrian capital of Damascus, demonstrators tried to storm the U.S. Embassy but were beaten back by Syrian troops, reports reaching Beirut said. The official Syrian news agency Sana confirmed the protest but made no mention of casualties.

with Habib's efforts to end the 38-day-old war as long as Washington feels there is hope for success but added the Israeli Cabinet "harbors serious doubts" an agreement could be reached.

The report was the strongest indication yet that Israel would not invade west Beirut until all diplomatic efforts to remove 6,000 PLO guerrillas were exhausted.

Scattered fighting between Israeli and Palestinian forces was reported Tuesday but the latest cease-fire — the sixth of the war — appeared to be holding in Beirut for a third night.

It said only that a group of intellectuals shouting "Down with Reagan, down with Habib" tried to storm the embassy but were repelled by Syrian soldiers.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam left Damascus for Washington but White House officials said President Reagan would not meet with Khaddam and Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal until next week.

However, at least one person was killed and 43 wounded when a bomb concealed in a car exploded in an area of research and publishing center in a crowded neighborhood of west Beirut.

Panic erupted as gunmen sealed off the area by firing shots into the air. Two ambulances collided in the rush to evacuate wounded.

The trip followed Lebanese news reports the PLO now was seeking political recognition by the United States in return for agreeing to withdraw from Lebanon.

In Israel, Prime Minister Menachem Begin told an interviewer he was certain the PLO would eventually leave Lebanon "if we set with a bit of common sense and patience."

Israel television, quoting political sources, said Israel will cooperate

Confirming Lebanese newspaper reports, political and military sources said the Israelis reinforced their positions around Beirut overnight with at least 130 tanks and other armored vehicles.

The state-run Beirut Radio added the Israelis now have 35,000 troops, 300 tanks and 100 artillery guns arrayed around west Beirut, where between 6,000 and 8,000 Palestinian guerrillas are trapped.

Dispute over budget transfers

Evans, Leroy battle after 'missed' meeting

By MARK SHENEFFELT
United Press International

BOISE — Caustic charges flew between Gov. John Evans and Attorney General David Leroy Tuesday after the legal officer missed a crucial Board of Examiners session and accused the governor of ramming through a multimillion-dollar funding shift without proper review.

Leroy chased the chief executive into his Statehouse office at noon to demand the meeting be reconvened for reconsideration of a vote taken minutes earlier. That vote authorized the use of $4 million in fiscal year 1983 funds to help pay leftover state income-tax refunds from the just-ended 1982 budget period.

Board Chairman Evans refused to call another meeting on the spot, chiding Leroy for missing the first session. The governor promised, however, to put together an agenda and hold another meeting within a few days.

See related story — A2

"If he was so concerned about this, why wasn't he there," Evans complained to reporters afterward. "He knew about it (the meeting). Two people... had just told him about it."

Leroy, a Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, charged that Evans endeavored to hammer through the board a proposal he favored without giving other board members — Leroy and GOP Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa — an opportunity to raise objections before a vote was taken.

Later that day, Leroy and Cenarrusa formally requested that Evans call an immediate special meeting of the Board of Examiners to discuss the vote.

The attorney general also castigated Evans for accepting a state Tax Commission proposal that he said was "digging a bigger hole" for the state by paying old, fiscal year 1982 expenses with current funds.

The spat developed after the state Land Board — which includes all members of the three-man Board of Examiners — adjourned in the Hall of Mirrors. Leroy had stepped out of the room just before adjournment of the land panel. But the Board of Examiners then immediately convened, voted 2-0 on the funding shift and adjourned in less than five minutes.

As Evans and other members left the meeting room for lunch, Leroy returned, discovering he had missed the session.

"I was conferring with my deputy on this very issue," Leroy explained.

Leroy then convinced Cenarrusa — who had approved the funding shift along with Evans — to accompany him to the governor's office to demand

You think the weather's been odd lately? Naw!

By STEVE LIPSON

TWIN FALLS — A contest started in March — in which people tried to guess the first day the temperature would top 88 degrees — began to seem like a bad joke.

June passed without the high temperature recorded by the U.S. Weather Service station at Kimberly reaching 88. The high for the entire month was a tantalizingly close 87. So, the contest continued into July.

Kelley Garden Center, which sponsored the contest, ran out of entry blanks late in June, but it did not order more because state officials expected the contest to end any day.

See related story — B1

When it did not end during the first week in July, Susan Kelley broke down and ordered more entry blanks. They were due in early this week.

And wouldn't you know, Sunday was the first day of the year that the temperature went over 88.

"We'll have the entry blanks and hold the contest next year," Kelley says.

For the record, the closest winner is Claire Gibbs of Kimberly, who made the winning, and seemingly ridiculous, guess back in April.

Yet putting the contest and many thunder-showers of the last two weeks aside, the weather has not been all that unusual.

Crop development in the Magic Valley is slightly behind last year's pace, according to the Idaho Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, but not far.

The first 10 days of July were wetter than normal, with 0.43 inches of rain, compared with an average for that period of about 0.21.

But rainfall since March has been almost exactly average, 3.67 inches as measured at Kimberly. The average for that period is a scant 0.02 inches more, 3.65 inches.

Spring temperatures were quite a bit cooler than average. That trend has yet to be reversed, although temperatures started running nearer normal in June.

For example, corn requires more heat than many crops, and this year's crop has gotten plenty, thank you, says Daryl McRoberts, the manager of Green Giant's Bull processing plant.

"We're looking for a real good crop." The corn appears to be about two days ahead of last year's crop, he says.

For corn, 88 degrees is the "magic number," McRoberts says. "Corn doesn't grow any faster at 87 degrees or 90."

So even though the first 88-degree day was slow in coming, that suited the corn crop just fine.

Good morning!

Judges won't delay Haitians' release

ATLANTA (UPI) — The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Tuesday refused to stay a federal judge's order to release about 1,900 anxious Haitian refugees from detention centers across the country.

The three-judge panel heard oral arguments on the government's request early Tuesday and the brief ruling handed down late in the day refused to grant the stay the government requested but did order a full hearing on the merits of the case.

No date was set for the hearing.

"We are very, very pleased," said Ira Kurzban, the Miami attorney who pleaded the refugees' case. "We thought the government failed to demonstrate the grounds they needed to obtain a stay and the court of appeals recognized that summarily."

In Washington, Justice Department spokesman Arthur Brill declined to comment on the appeals court decision or say whether the government would ask the Supreme Court for a stay.

Brill said the government intended to proceed with a full-blown appeal of the issue in the 11th Circuit.

In the meantime, Brill said the government has been complying with Spellman's order processing the Haitians for release to sponsors.

"It is difficult to predict when the Haitians would be released," Brill said.

Associate Attorney General Rudolph Giuliani, the third-ranking officer of the Justice Department, asked for the stay pending a hearing on the merits of the eight-point plan for releasing the refugees.

"The order of the district judge files in the face of the other two branches of government," said Giuliani. "It flies in the face of executive, legislative authority and congressional intent of the immigration legislation."

He said Spellman's ruling was "based on a novel, if not bizarre, interpretation of the Administrative Procedures Act," assuring the refugees hearings before deportation. Giuliani said the immigration and Naturalization Service was ready to proceed with asylum hearings and to release about 180 Haitians who have legal counsel.

In Tuesday's hearing, lawyers for the refugees accused the government of stalling in its appeal of U.S. District Judge Eugene Spellman's order freeing the Haitians.

Attorneys Ira Kurzban and Bruce Winick, representing the refugees, said the federal government showed no evidence that Spellman's order would "irreparably harm" immigration policy or that Haitians would lose court jurisdiction if they were released pending asylum hearings.

"The defendants come into court seeking a stay to prolong the misery of Haitians who have been held for 13 months unlawfully," said Kurzban. "It would deprive the Haitians of the right to seek political asylum."

Another death, lawsuit reported in plane crash

KENNER, La. (UPI) — The father of 16-month-old "miracle baby" Melissa Trahan sued for $15 million Tuesday for the death of his wife and another daughter in the crash of Pan Am jetliner in a New Orleans suburb Friday night.

The suit filed by Gabriel Trahan sought $7.5 million for Trahan and $7.5 million for Melissa, who was found alive beneath a smoldering mattress three hours after the crash that killed her mother and 4-year-old sister. The suit was the first filed in the disaster.

The suit specified 10 areas of negligence on the part of Pan American World Airways, Boeing Co. and the Federal Aviation Administration.

Jefferson Parish Coroner Charles Odum, raised his death count in the fiery crash to 154 Tuesday on the basis of the death of a 7 1/2-month-old fetus.

The death Margaret Eymard, 30, of Marrero, La., who was 7 1/2 months pregnant, and her male fetus will be logged separately in his records, the coroner said. The fetus was removed from the mother and a stillborn death certificate issued, Odum said.

A federal safety spokesman said investigators will be able to reconstruct the crash closely even without a valuable cockpit voice tape damaged by a malfunctioning recorder.

All 145 people aboard the airplane and eight on the ground were killed when the plane tore through homes on four streets and exploded.

Opposition builds against budget amendment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Speaker Thomas O'Neill, D-Mass., predicted Tuesday a proposed constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget will pass Congress this election year, but he called it "a cowardly way out."

O'Neill made his prediction to reporters a few hours before the first bipartisan opposition surfaced in the Senate, which was debating the amendment for the second straight day.

Sens. Charles Mathias, R-Md., and Max Baucus, D-Mont., introduced a substitute that would kill the proposed constitutional amendment by requiring a balanced budget by law instead.

"The Constitution is too important a document to be used to get us out of a transitional political dilemma," Mathias argued.

Noting Congress just approved a budget with a deficit of more than $100 billion, Mathias said, "I don't think we should use the Constitution as a fig-leaf to hide our embarrassment over that deficit."

"I think we ought to level with the American people," Mathias said. "No legal formula will be adequate to save us from ourselves. The only thing that is going to get us out of the box we're in is courageous leadership and mature, responsible judgment."

Sen. Harry Byrd, R-Va., recalled sponsoring a balanced budget statute that was enacted in 1979 and subsequently ignored by Congress.

"The Congress has refused to obey its own laws," Byrd said. "The statutory approach won't work."

A co-sponsor of the proposed constitutional amendment, Sen. Budget Committee chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., told his colleagues he believes the measure has "several potentially serious problems," and said he will introduce a series of "perfecting" changes to make it "workable."

"It is not my purpose to weaken or side-track the amendment," Domenici said.

"The changes would make it clear the amendment would not give the president new impeachment powers, and would allow Congress to waive it during a war or "national emergency." The waiver now applies only to a war.

Senate Republican leaders predict the constitutional amendment will win the necessary two-thirds vote in the Senate, where it already has 61 of the needed 67 sponsors, but its fate is uncertain in the Democratic-dominated House, where it has been bottled up in committee.

O'Neill called the measure a "subterfuge," partly because it could be waived at any time by a three-fifths vote of both houses of Congress.

"It's an easy out in an election year," he said. "A cowardly way out; but an easy way out."

Florida sinkholes growing; threaten city water supplies

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — At least five sinkholes have been discovered in Gainesville in the past week and geologists said Tuesday one of the craters could threaten the city's water supply.

A small chasm was found Monday night near the Windmeadow Apartments, and two more were discovered Tuesday about 30 feet away. Officials said all three would probably continue chewing away at the ground.

"They will definitely grow," predicted Edward Reans, an engineer and co-owner of the Lakeland-based Sinkhole Data and Research Center. "As it rains, they'll grow because they are rain drainage sinkholes."

Leon Scarborough, a geologist with Reans's firm, said if they reach a depth too close to the lower aquifer, Gainesville's drinking water could be contaminated.

"We know that the elevation at the bottom of the reservoir is low, indicating that water is escaping," he said. "We feel like it is going down far enough to possibly contaminate the aquifer where well water comes from."

The three latest sinkholes were not discovered until Monday when a 10-year-old boy told a neighbor he saw a big hole near the area where he mows grass.

The neighbor alerted county sheriff's deputies, who contacted geologists.

Reans said the other two craters — a 50-foot-deep sinkhole in an apartment parking lot that swallowed an $11,000 car last week — are not as deep as the others — have stabilized and posed no further problems.

Spermbank mom accused of being former child abuser

CHICAGO (UPI) — A woman, who gave birth to the first child conceived through the "Nobel Sperm Bank" lost custody of her two other children because they were severely abused, state investigators said Tuesday.

In addition, it was reported Joyce and Jack Kowalski, both 39, of Phoenix, Ariz., parents of the child, were sentenced in 1978 to federal prison on fraud charges.

Jack Kowalski is stepfather to the couple's 4-month-old daughter conceived with sperm provided by the California-based Repository for Germinal Choice, an agency established to sire the children of Genuses.

Because of the child beating charges, questions were raised into the investigative procedures used by the Repository for Germinal Choice to screen potential parents of Genuses.

The Kowalskis were also sentenced in 1978 to federal prison on fraud charges.

They gained international attention with the birth of a daughter, Victoria, on April 21. The child's natural father, whose name was not known, reportedly is a mathematical genius.

"The founder of the sperm bank in Del Mar, Calif. — dubbed the "Nobel Sperm Bank" because it distributes sperm donated only by men deemed highly intelligent — said he did not believe the couple would abuse their baby."

State should drop its ERA challenge

The death of the Equal Rights Amendment has resulted in dozens of post-mortems by politicians, and editorial columnists, all espousing their commitment to equal rights for women but choosing their words carefully on the demise of the amendment itself.

Now, Attorney General David Leroy says he wants Idaho to pursue the state's case to rescind its endorsement of the amendment, despite the lapsed deadline for the ERA, which has rendered the question moot.

He says, with some justification, that Idaho's challenge is of the broader constitutional questions on whether a state can rescind a ratification of a constitutional amendment, and whether Congress can legally extend a ratification deadline.

All well and good, but we think most people will have difficulty separating those hoary concepts from the simpler one of Idaho's endorsement of the ERA.

The federal Justice Department has moved to dismiss the case on the grounds that the question is moot now that the ERA has died, and we think Idaho should go along.

Leroy says he does not want the state to be portrayed as opposed to women's rights. Again, all well and good, but what other conclusion is likely to get widespread attention if Idaho pursues the case now?

There are times, we think, when one should haul in rigging and wait for another day to sail. The constitutional questions raised by Idaho's challenge were, and are, legitimate, but the time to argue them has passed.

As a lawyer, Leroy surely knows that the law is defined by specific rulings on specific cases. That is how precedents are set. A moot case usually doesn't make good law, and that's what we have here, a moot case.

Films for kids need screening

Some weeks ago I had bought a season pass to the children's mall. Since the movies were sponsored by the PTA I thought that they would be wholesome entertainment for my youngsters, but I have been very disappointed in the movies they have shown to date.

I don't think the movies were properly edited for children. As an example, in the movie "Crisis of the Titans," there were some mildly scary. These scenes are not appropriate for children's matinees. Of the four movies that were shown, three of them had some material which is unsuitable for young people.

I appreciate the PTA's efforts in trying to provide summer entertainment for our children, however, there should be more discretion shown in selecting these movies. They have been a real disappointment to me.

Foreign policy success from Tripoli's shores to Namibia

Asked at his last news conference to defend his foreign policy, President Reagan cited three "successes": the latest ceasefire in the Mideast, the "superhuman" effort to prevent the Falkland Islands war and "great progress" in Namibia.

Q. President Jefferson, air critics charge that your foreign policy is confused, especially when you're off on one of those long holidays at Monticello, chopping wood and cutting brush with Sally Heming. Can you cite any foreign policy successes?

A. Certainly, I wouldn't want to mention the Louisiana Purchase, because I'm constitutionally puzzled that off with consultation with the Congress, but there's my brilliant 1805 ceasefire in our war with the Barbary Coast pirates of Tripoli. Then there's the unprovoked attack by the British warship Leopard on our ship the Chesapeake. And, oh, of course, my embargo on trade with Britain and France that brought economic ruin to New England. Surely all that's equal to anything future presidents will do.

Q. President Madison, it's said your foreign policy is as dinky as you are, yet you incessantly yap about your successes. Name some.

A. Sure. The continued harassment of our shipping by British and French naval forces has to rank high by the standards of future presidents. The 1815 ceasefire with the Barbary Coast pirates of Tripoli has to count for a lot, too. But certainly if the United States survives into the 1980s, my crowning foreign policy triumph will have to be seen as the War of 1812, our failed invasion of Canada and the burning of Washington. Call me dinky again and I'll sic Delley on you.

Q. General Jackson, you've had a colorful eight years as president, what would you cite as your most significant foreign policy successes?

A. Foremost would be our superhuman effort to stop the 1833 war in the Falkland Islands, even though the British went ahead and attacked anyway and threw out the indigenous Argentine population. Also, we annexed the magnificent state of Arkansas and killed a hell of a lot of Indians.

Q. President Polk, you've served only one term as president. Did you have any foreign policy successes you'd care to name?

A. I could name our war with Mexico, which we won quickly, increasing the size of the United States by one third; my peaceful settlement with Britain of the Oregon Territory dispute, which gave us another huge chunk of real estate and established our long peaceful border with Canada; my opening of Japan to the Western world and my keeping the United States out of civil wars in Central America. But I'm sure none of that will compare with the brilliant statesmanship you'll see practiced by American presidents in, say, the 1980s.

Q. Now that you're between scandals, President Grant, could you outline for us what you consider your most important foreign policy successes?

A. Happy to. I've laid plans for a grand tour of the world after I leave office, and also we've killed a hell of a lot of Indians.

Q. President Roosevelt, you no doubt want to go down in history as something more than the man who charged up San Juan Hill and gave the world the Teddy bear. Can you name some of your foreign policy successes?

A. Well, I suppose you could put down acquiring the treaty for the Panama Canal, creating the Cuban republic, ending the threat of war between Venezuela and Europe, establishing the boundary of Alaska, paving the way for the Pacific cable, issuing my corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, persuading Japan to stop flooding us with immigrant laborers and taking American jobs, prohibiting the importation of narcotics despite foreign protest, achieving the first real arms limitation in the world with the Hague Convention, signed by 22 countries, and winning the Nobel Peace Prize for ending the Russo-Japanese War. But I never achieved my real foreign policy dream, which is to make great progress in Namibia, wherever that is.

Q. How about you President Wilson? What were your great statesmanship successes?

A. Our wild goose chase "punitive expedition" after Pancho Villa in Mexico, the outbreak of World War I and the Versailles Treaty, which my own nation refused to ratify. Certainly by 20th century standards these must make me a great president.

Q. President Coolidge, could you elaborate on...

A. Nope.

Q. President Carter, you've been called the most unpopular president of all time. Can you cite some foreign policy successes that will at least improve your standing in history?

A. It's all everyone else's fault, but I will probably be criticized most for my various failures involving the Iranian hostages, my weakening of the American military, my inability to stop the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and my failure to achieve a nuclear arms limitation treaty. But history will probably condemn me most for making possible the election of a man with an even worse foreign policy than I had.

Court wallows in legalese for commonsense answers

WASHINGTON — On page 15 of a 27-page Supreme Court opinion, this thought appears: "The value of permitting live performances and photographic reproduction of children engaged in lewd sexual conduct is exceedingly modest..."

Scrambling farther out on a constitutional limb, the Court adds: "We consider it unlikely that visual depiction of children performing sexual acts or lewdly exhibiting their bodies are an important and necessary part of a literary performance or scientific work..."

The Court complains mightily about its work load. But it has only itself to blame for the fact that it churns 36 pages of halspitting opinion and concurrences, just to rule — unanimously — that New York did not act unconstitutionally when it prohibited distribution of materials depicting children in actual or simulated sexual intercourse, lewd sexual intercourse, sexual bestiality, masturbation, sadomasochistic abuse, or "obscene" exhibits of the genitals.

I will not give readers migraines by detailing the intricate arguments by which the Court lumbered to a commonsense conclusion. Even when the Court rules sensibly in free-speech cases it does so for a chief's salad of wrong reasons. In this case it turned its collective brow to devise a justification for banning child pornography that is not (I'm not making this up) legally obscene. One justice mused: New York has an interest in protecting its children from exploitation, but what of a pornographic movie "if the child actor resided abroad?"

A state court, conscientiously struggling to comply with previous Supreme Court decisions, denied the constitutionality of a law banning an extraordinarily repellent and exploitative form of filth. Then the Supreme Court labored nervously and with ludicrous complexity to justify pulling such pornography out from under First Amendment protection. How did we get to such a situation?

We got here by a series of Court decisions that are heads without a string — opinions without a coherent constitutional theory of the scope of the free-speech guarantee. We got here by sleepwalking down a path strewn with irrational and grandstanding rhetoric, such as the idea that the First Amendment is an "absolute" (Hugo Black), that "even a reasonable regulation of the right of free speech is not compatible with the First Amendment" (William Douglas), that "one man's vulgarity is another's lyric" (John Hartian).

Regarding free speech, the Court has acted, as though a multiplicity of distinctions and criteria can make up for an absence of serious constitutional analysis. The Court has set itself and other courts such tasks as: detecting a "dominant theme" of pornography; measuring appeals to "prurient interest"; determining when offensiveness is "patent"; announcing when pornography is "utterly" without redeeming social value; gauging affronts to "contemporary standards."

Were the Court to go back to basics, it would begin by saying that free speech serves three basic values: individual development, individual enjoyment, and the discovery and dissemination of political truths. The first two are important private rights deserving broad scope, but are not the concern of the First Amendment. That amendment is an instrument of government. It concerns the democratic disposition of public power. Hence, its protections extend only to political speech.

A Court that accepted this premise would have quite enough to do monitoring the distinction between political and non-political speech. It could find uses for the hours hitherto spent watching pornographic movies and pondering the "expressive" value of nude dancing.

The First Amendment, properly understood, protects not "expression" but speech. As part of a political instrument, the amendment protects political speech — language addressed to other persons with a view to persuading them about political matters. Speech, unlike "expression," is intrinsically connected with the distinctive human capacity: reason. It is by reason that the individual governs his or her self; it is by reason that groups achieve self-government. The Court took a radically wrong turn when it "incorporated" the First Amendment into the 14th Amendment, thereby imposing on states the restrictions that the authors of that amendment clearly intended to apply only to Congress. It is, of course, arguable that, absent "incorporation," state governments would impose, and democratic processes would not correct, intolerably foolish censorship. And it is arguable that trusting democratic discretion would produce a worse situation than we have: unstarbuckable pollution by pornography, and courts improvising antic theories about how this and that "expression" involves constitutional — that is, political — values.

All that is, as I say, arguable. But it is rarely argued. Many people cite their libertarian interpretation of the First Amendment as evidence of their brave receptivity to all thoughts, but have minds scaled against more rational interpretations of the First Amendment.

IHSA closure may spark suit

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho Health Systems Agency Inc. is preparing to shut its doors due to Reagan administration budget cuts and enforcement of federal standards that have effectively closed the organization, agency leaders claimed Tuesday.

Nary Anne Saunders, administrator of the agency that credits itself with cutting Idaho health costs by millions of dollars since its founding in 1975, said her organization — and others like it across the country — have been targeted for elimination by the Reagan administration.

But methods used to achieve that apparent administration goal, particularly in Idaho, may result in legal action against the government, said Ms. Saunders and Ed Liebeson, director of an HSA in the Oakland, Calif., area and a committee member for the American Health Planning Association's Legal Trust Fund.

And Idaho Health Systems Board President Dr. Clarence Thompson said the board at its final meeting last week agreed to explore the possibility of a class-action lawsuit to help agencies in other states that might be forced out of business if the government's actions are allowed to stand.

"I'm not saying they hate us so much that they want to eliminate us," Ms. Saunders said. "There are serious problems with the federal budget. But we have been targeted by the administration. But we have been targeted by the administration."

The IHSA reviews all proposed health facilities or major changes in size or services of present health facilities. It has played a major role in the review of such Magic Valley health-care projects as the expansion of the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and the establishment of migrant health care centers.

The White House first recommended elimination of funding for health planning agencies across the country, she said. She said Congress approved an appropriation, although money was reduced.

But leaders of HSAs in Idaho as well as other states contend the Department of Health and Human Services' Public Health Service has worsened the impact of the budget cuts — effectively running the Idaho agency out of business — by drawing on a never-enforced statute.

That statute, Ms. Saunders said, requires that local HSAs maintain a full professional staff. That means one professional staff member for each 100,000 people, she said, adding a law requires them to be paid prevailing wages for the community.

But the agency's budget for the coming year was cut from $380,000 to $170,000, she said, making it impossible to hire the required 10 professionals-at-prevailing wages.

"We did not want to limp along and have all our critics say, 'You weren't doing much at the end anyway,'" she said. "Our board decided if we were going to go out, we were going to go out now and not try to limp along."

Ms. Saunders claims for years Public Health Service "wankers" reviewed her agency's operations and were told she had not met the statute's staffing requirement. But, she said, she always was told not to worry about the requirement because the staffing level was not strictly enforced.

Jane Wilson, public affairs representative for the Public Health Service regional office in Seattle, however, said the agency consistently has enforced the law.

Boise River gold mining proposal denied

BOISE (UPI) — A massive proposed gold-mining project in the Middle Fork of the Boise River died Tuesday when the Idaho Land Board voted to withdraw the scenic and environmentally fragile watercourse from large-scale minerals exploration.

Commissioners decided to shield a 27-mile stretch of the river because state and federal agencies feared the massive project could ruin trout spawning grounds and block various recreational activities in the area.

In protecting the river from all but "casual" dredge-mining, the board turned down a Meridian man's plan to mine a 496-acre, 17-mile section of the river between Roaring River and Arrow Rock Dam.

The panel in addition denied the miner, Russ Berbes, an opportunity to renew mining claims in nine spots covering another 10 miles of the river in the same region.

The Lands Department had warned the board that the project could "destroy or reduce" the quality of fishing and the esthetic experience of driving along roads adjacent to the river or floating on an unspoiled river.

Board action came after Lands

Department attorney Mark Riddick told the board the mining applications filed by Berbes did not conform to a state law passed in 1981 that was designed to protect Idaho's wild rivers from potentially destructive dredge mining.

Before the river-protection law was passed, riverbeds were open for excavation with heavy equipment. The statute, however, gave the board power to deny applications for large-scale mining — banning the use of heavy motorizing mining equipment and allowing only casual excavation by small-time miners.

Rainbow group fails to stop spraying

EVERY (UPI) — The U.S. Forest Service began spraying herbicides on land near Selzer Creek Tuesday about 20 "Rainbow Family" members tried to stop the project.

The Rainbow members — part of a loosely structured back-to-nature group that held its annual meeting at Council earlier this month — set up camp on Forest Service land Saturday in an effort to stop the spraying.

Government officials persuaded some of the protesters to leave before the spraying began, but the remaining hand stuck to their objective and tried to disrupt the spraying.

The spraying project was designed to kill a thick stand of brush that the agency said has been prohibiting tree growth in a 250-acre area.

State views buying land in fed's sale

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho Land Board members Tuesday directed their staff to review for possible state acquisition the 1,000 acres of public land in Idaho that the federal government has designated for possible sale.

The order was proposed by Republican Attorney General David Leroy and approved unanimously by the board, despite the reluctance of Gov. John Evans.

A presidential Property Review Board identified 317 parcels July 1 that might be among the first sold under a federal "asset management" review. Thirteen of the parcels, totaling 1,000 acres, are in Idaho.

Evans said he was worried some of the various parcels included in the federal disposal list might not be suitable for sale by the government — especially a 324-acre tract near Dworshak Dam.

He repeated earlier criticism of the Interior Department's handling of the current national public lands inventory, which has been called secretive by Evans and some other Idaho Democrats.

World 120 die in train disaster

TEPEC, Mexico (UPI) — The death toll rose Tuesday to at least 120, including three Americans, in the wreck of a train carrying 1,560 passengers which jumped the tracks and plunged down a mountain gorge, officials said.

The train was traveling from Nogales on the Arizona border to Guadalajara when it derailed on Sunday in western Mexico. Service on the line will be suspended at least two days, officials said.

Rescue squad helicopters airlifted many of the dead and most seriously injured to Guadalajara. The rescue mission was hampered Tuesday by rains and the mountainous terrain, a spokesman for the Red Cross in Tepic said.

A team of government investigators was en route to Tepic, about 400 miles northwest of Mexico City, to investigate why half of the train's 28 cars jumped the tracks and plunged into the mountain canyon.

Engineer Jose Luis Velasco told his superiors the train derailed because a section of roadbed had eroded and the tracks collapsed under the passing coaches, the Mexican government's Notimex news agency said.

Notimex said only 35 of the 120 bodies recovered had been identified. It said Mexican officials believed the death toll would climb higher. Between 115 and 120 people were reported injured.

"We don't know how many dead there are... There are many wounded, and the problem is that we don't have any way of pulling them out," said Hernan Sanchez, a spokesman for the Red Cross in Tepic. Sanchez said three of the dead were U.S. citizens, but he did not have their names.

Another Red Cross official said earlier one American was known dead and two were seriously injured. He identified the dead American as Peter Joseph Houbel, 31, hometown unknown.

A U.S. consular official in the Pacific resort of Mazatlan, responsible for the Tepic area, said it had confirmed the death of one American and believed the other two "probably" were dead.

Express hits Belgian local, 4 riders die

AALTER, BELGIUM (UPI) — An express train ran through three caution signals at 85 mph and smashed into the rear of a slow-moving local train Tuesday, killing four people and injuring 22 others.

The dead included the engineer of the express train, who was trapped in the wreckage for several hours and died before he could be freed by rescue workers.

A railway spokesman said three identified bodies and fragments of a fourth victim had been found. He said eight people were hospitalized, including one with serious injuries. Fourteen others were released after treatment.

The collision occurred at 7:15 a.m. just outside the Aalter station near Ghent, 30 miles north of Brussels, when the express bound for the North Sea coast of Ostend overtook and rammed the rear of the local train heading toward the sea resort of Knokke, 70 miles northwest of Brussels.

Chief railway engineer Georges Lammerling said the express train traveling at 85 mph — 1 mph below its top speed — ran through three amber caution signals without decelerating and plowed into the local which had just pulled out of the Aalter station.

Amber signals automatically stop the train if the driver does not press the button acknowledging the warning and to confirm he will slow down," Lammerling said.

"The driver pressed the button three times but he did not start braking. Some human failure seems probable."

'Forsythe Saga' actor More dies

LONDON (UPI) — Kenneth More, who starred in "The Forsythe Saga" television series and was one of Britain's most accomplished stage, screen and TV actors, has died, his agent said Tuesday. He was 67.

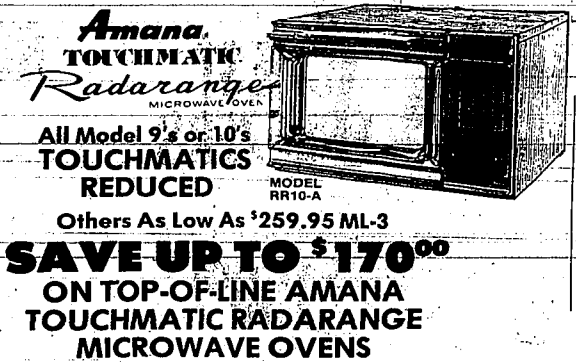

The cause of death Monday night was not disclosed but More had been suffering from the debilitating Parkinson's disease, a nervous disorder, for several years. Funeral services were being arranged.

More began his brilliant acting career as a model between striptease acts at the Windmill Theater, cradle of many stars.

World Poland journey put off

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Pope John Paul II's visit to his Polish homeland will probably not take place next month as he had hoped, a top church official said Tuesday.

In Rome, Archbishop Jozef Glemp, primate of Poland, said the pontiff's visit would be placed "this jubilee year," indicating it could come any time until Aug. 26, 1983. The jubilee commemorates the revered Black Madonna painting at Czestochowa, Poland's national Catholic shrine.

Tuesday marked the seventh month of martial law in Poland, but there was no comment in the official press about it nor about the Solidarity activists who have been interned since military rule was initiated.

Poland's military rulers and church officials have agreed the pope's visit should take place, but setting a date has been subject to intense delicate negotiations.

Although Glemp said in a Rome television interview that John Paul would go to Poland "within the jubilee year," he did not mention the projected celebration Aug. 26 of the 600th anniversary of the installation of the Black Madonna portrait at Czestochowa.

The church official in Warsaw said the "church and the nation want to see the pope in August," but because the date is so near the 30 anniversary of Solidarity's founding, it was unlikely to take place.

"The people are not aware that a negative reply might come," the source said. If John Paul does not come in August, "it will be felt painfully."

He said a papal visit could defuse social tension and steer the country toward national accord, but "now everything is so hopeless."

Vatican picks bank probe panel

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — The Vatican announced Tuesday three international financial experts will investigate possible links between the Vatican Bank headed by American Archbishop Paul Marcinkus and the scandal-ridden Italian Ambrosiano Bank.

In breaking its silence on the financial scandal, the Vatican said the request for a probe was made by Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, second in the Vatican hierarchy to Pope John Paul II, and that all three experts had agreed to serve on the investigation committee.

The committee named the three as Joseph Brennan, former president of the Emigrant Savings Bank of New York; Philippe de Wech, former president of the Union of Swiss Banks; and Carlo Cassin, vice president of the Rome holding financial company STET, which is part of the state-run Institute for Industrial Reconstruction.

The Ambrosiano Bank has been deep in scandal since its president, Roberto Calvi, 61, was found dead, hanging from under a bridge in London's financial district June 18, eight days after he vanished from Rome.

British police said all evidence pointed to suicide, but Italian investigators said Calvi was murdered, possibly by the Mafia.

Aussies bar testimonial from Biggs

MELBOURNE, Australia (UPI) — Great Train Robber Ronald Biggs "appreciates a good cup of coffee," but he won't be allowed to say so — at least not on Australian television.

The Australian Broadcasting Tribunal has banned commercial featuring the British fugitive advertising a brand of Brazilian coffee.

The commercial was filmed in Biggs' Rio de Janeiro hideaway by a Sydney advertising agency. For a $10,000 fee, the fugitive says he appreciates a good cup of coffee "when you're on the run, like me."

But the Tribunal, a radio and television watchdog authority, said Monday Biggs is a criminal and banned the commercial.

William Garland, of the Garland and Farwagi agency, said he was disappointed with the Tribunal's stand but would have to abide by the ruling.

"I understand their point of view, but Ronald Biggs is a legend. It's not as if we went out and hired the Yorkshire Ripper."

HOUSTON (UPI) — A youth who said he wants to be a basketball player — but who robbed mini-groceries every day but Friday, his day off — was sentenced to nine concurrent 25-year prison terms.

Larry Wayne Jenkins, 17, who was 16 at the time of the holdups and certified to face prosecution as an adult, pleaded guilty to one robbery on Oct. 28, 1981, and eight more in 2½ hours on Nov. 4, 1981.

Sheik pays hotel, then goes to court

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (UPI) — Saudi Arabian sheik Mohamed al-Fassi paid off 31 bad debts, including his disputed $1.5 million hotel bill, then filed a $1-billion damage suit against the hotel.

About $200,000 in checks drawn on two local banks were dispersed Monday to cover the flurry of rubber checks the oil potentate had written to local businesses in the past few months. Payouts continued Tuesday at the office of one of his lawyers.

"We expect to have all our problems cleared up within two or three days," said Saud al-Rashed, an aide to al-Fassi.

Paying the luxury Diplomat Hotel, which had al-Fassi evicted last week and arrested on charges of defrauding the maker, was a formal affair. One of the sheik's lawyers presented a cashier's check for $1.56 million to the hotel's attorney, Richard Gerstein, in the chambers of Broward Circuit Court Judge Joseph E. Price Jr.

After the check cleared, al-Fassi's aides removed his jewels, furniture, four luxury automobiles and other valuables that the hotel had a judge impound. The belongings reportedly are worth $40 million.

"The sheik's attorney then filed the $1 billion suit in Broward Circuit Court, charging the Diplomat Hotel with malicious prosecution. Al-Fassi's suit also accuses the hotel of overcharging him and his entourage of 40 by as much as $11,000 a day, an allegation the hotel has denied.

Throughout the day, crowding into the office of attorney Thomas E. Williams Jr. were the "hite-peeps" the sheik owed the painter, shoe repairman, sculptor, dry cleaner, a luggage shop owner — to collect their bills ranging in amounts from $1,000 to $18,000.

Not everyone came away happy. To collect, the creditors had to present the original checks that had been returned from a Swiss bank marked

Newsmen examines copy of check for hotel bill

"Insufficient funds." Those who had only bills for goods or services were told to take them to the sheik's representatives for verification, Thomas said.

"They're still playing games," said a woman in a red dress who wouldn't give her name. She clutched bills imprinted with the name of a linen shop. One bill was for $210.

"Dry-cleaner Lou Medina collected a check for $4,087.

"Sure, I'll do business with him (the sheik) again. He's a good customer," Medina said.

One of the bills paid Monday was one for $137,864 that the Yellow Cab Co. of Fort Lauderdale has sued the sheik to collect. But apparently there are no hard feelings.

"They've been a good customer in the past, a very good customer," said Jesse Gaudis, president of the cab firm, "and we hope they'll be a good client in the future."

She read her obituary

UNIONTOWN, Pa. (UPI) — Cynthia Campbell read an unlikely obituary Tuesday — her own.

"Mrs. Campbell, 83, schoolteacher, said she was called from the shower by her frantic mother waving a copy of The Herald-Standard, Uniontown's morning newspaper.

Her mother showed her the death notice.

The stunned Mrs. Campbell, not even near having a foot in the grave, promptly called the newspaper and the funeral home to set the record straight. She also notified police, who are investigating.

"I have older parents, students and friends, relatives and neighbors who were quite upset," Mrs. Campbell called. "People (who saw the obituary) said my mother and got her up this morning. Fortunately she had been me last night."

"Oddly enough, I didn't feel strange reading it because I knew it wasn't true. But if I'd seen it myself first, I would have felt my skin to see if it was still elastic."

The newspaper staff was surprised as anyone after finding out Mrs. Campbell was "very much alive," said Sunday editor Jim Fletcher.

"It came in just like any other regular paid obit that we handle," Fletcher said. "We try to be as careful as we possibly can. Whoever called this in gave it in a very professional manner and it wasn't questioned."

Old horse, new role

Modern version of the Trojan horse is wheeled along a Fresno, Calif., street Monday during a protest in front of a hotel where federal Budget Director David Stockman was addressing a political fund-raising gathering. The demonstrators said the Trojan horse referred to Stockman's comments last winter about the Reagan economic program.

Witness blames half-brother of Corona for cafe stabbing

HAYWARD (UPI) — Aeri Jones, a surprise defense witness who collapsed before he could testify last week, took the stand Tuesday and said he saw Juan V. Corona's half brother stab one of the 25 victims whose bodies were buried in shallow graves along Northern California's Feather River.

Jones, 59, said he saw Natlidad Corona stab Sigurd "Pete" Belerman at the Guadalajara Cafe in late March or early April, 1971, and later saw Natlidad carry a body from the bar and put it in a green or blue van.

It was the last time Belerman was seen alive, Jones testified before a Superior Court Jury.

Juan Corona was convicted in 1973 of the deaths of 25 itinerant farm workers whose bodies were found in orchards along the river in what was then the worst mass murder in the nation's history. His conviction was overturned last year and a new trial ordered by the State Supreme Court on the grounds his defense attorney had been incompetent.

Jones, who had a seizure last Tuesday in the courtroom, said he worked for Natlidad at the Guadalajara Cafe in early 1971, and that one Sunday morning he walked into the bar and saw Natlidad and Belerman together.

"Natlidad was down on his knees and they was having sex," Jones said.

The witness said he left the bar for about 30 minutes and returned to hear "hollering and scuffling" in a back room.

"I saw a knife. He (Natlidad) was holding a knife up over his (Belerman's) head. He looked to me like he was trying to cut his throat. I seen him stab him."

Jones said the knife hand no hand guard on it and looked like a six-inch switchblade. He said he left the bar and saw two men enter that he didn't recognize. Neither of the two that went in was Juan Corona, he said.

Jones said he reported the incident to police the following day, "but because I was drinking, I got locked up for four hours."

Jones said he never went back to the cafe.

Natlidad disappeared before Juan Corona went on trial and investigators traced him to Mexico, where he reportedly died of advanced syphilis.

Idahoan pleads innocent to kidnap charge

BOZEMAN, Mont. (UPI) — Marian Dean Christianson, of Idaho Falls, pleaded innocent in District Court Monday to several charges stemming from the alleged kidnap and sexual assault of a 17-year-old Idaho Falls boy.

Christianson, 39, who remains jailed on $50,000 bond, entered innocent pleas to felony charges of deviate sexual conduct without consent, aggravated kidnaping, aggravated assault and two-misdemeanor counts of theft.

He was arrested in Minnesota following the alleged incident on April 11 and waived extradition to Idaho, where he faced a lesser charge. He later waived extradition to Montana.

The charges allege that Christianson offered to give the teenager a ride to the bus depot in Idaho Falls, but instead drove to West Yellowstone, Mont., and checked into a motel. Authorities say the teenager was handcuffed and forced to gun point to perform sexual acts.

The suit left the motel in the middle of the night headed back to Idaho. When Christianson stopped along the road and removed the handcuffs from the boy, the youth ran away, eventually calling authorities from a farmhouse, court documents said.

The theft charges are for allegedly taking a blanket from the motel and the boy's wallet containing $30.

Christianson is scheduled to appear in court again July 28.

BPA considers impact-aid setup at Montanans' request

MISSOULA, Mont. (UPI) — The Bonneville Power Administration said Monday it will reconsider its impact-aid formula, but a spokesman for the federal agency said Montanans shouldn't expect any major changes.

BPA is building powerlines across western Montana to deliver electricity from southeastern Montana power plants to the Pacific Northwest.

The proposed formula will provide the state and counties with substantially less than the millions of dollars in property taxes that would be collected if the powerlines were built by private utilities. As a federal agency, BPA is exempt from local and state taxes.

The proposed impact-aid formula would reimburse local governments only for actual costs of services provided to the powerline, such as additional fire protection. To qualify under the proposal, the cost would have to be at least $1,000.

Judge bars firm's pyramid plan

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A computer leasing company must stop operating an alleged "endless chain" pyramid investment plan even though investors insist they are not being bilked, a judge has ruled.

Superior Court Judge John Cole enjoined Commonwealth Micro Inc. Monday from operating the alleged pyramid plan which promises investors they will earn up to $40,000 a year for doing minor work on computers.

More than 35 of the would-be money makers crowded Cole's courtroom

Monday, apparently fearing an order from the judge would thwart their plans to earn money in their spare time.

But Senior Assistant Attorney General Herschel Elkins said he was just as fearful the investors would lose thousands of dollars if an order was not issued.

Elkins' $800,000 suit accuses the firm of operating an illegal "endless chain" or "pyramid" scheme that makes money by recruiting investors rather than by selling products or services.

According to Elkins, Commonwealth Micro staged public seminars to recruit investors who agree to lease computer equipment and pay $4,416.72 over a three-year period.

Investors are told they will work about one hour a day on computers to earn $40,000 a year, but just what work is to be done is not made clear.

Cole's preliminary injunction will remain in effect until the civil case is tried in three or four years.

Commonwealth Micro attorney Charles Clark said he will appeal the judge's ruling.

New Mexico officials seek plague source

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI) — Health officials are trying to find the source of plague that killed an 11-year-old western New Mexico boy and determine if it was a contagious form of the disease.

Dr. Jonathan Mann, the state's chief of communicable disease control, said his office wants to learn if the Thoreau area youngster died from bubonic plague or the contagious pneumonic strain.

"There's a difference between pneumonic and bubonic, both to the patient and to public health. If all you have is bubonic plague, then you have a form of the disease that cannot be spread. . . . Pneumonia has the potential for the person-to-person spread of the plague," Mann said.

"If this boy had pneumonic plague, we would take aggressive steps to make sure his contacts are well and stay well," he said. "If he had no pneumonia, there is no (public health) concern."

"A joint investigation is under way between the New Mexico Health and Environmental Department and the Indian Health Service."

Mann said the boy, whose name was not disclosed, died Sunday after he was brought to a medical facility at Gallup. The diagnosis of plague was not confirmed until the following day.

Three human cases of plague have been reported in New Mexico this year, all of them in the western part of the state. The two earlier victims, a 20-year-old McKinley County woman and a 68-year-old San Juan County woman, both recovered.

Intruder sparks studies to improve queen's security

LONDON (UPI) — Queen Elizabeth II called the police when an intruder entered her Buckingham Palace bedroom but they misunderstood her plea for help and took nearly 20 minutes to arrive, a news report said Tuesday.

In the House of Commons, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, under fire for her government's failure to provide adequate protection for the queen, Tuesday called for a "thorough review" of security for the royal family.

"The queen phoned the Palace police, but the first person to enter her room was a chambermaid 10 minutes after the intruder got in," the London Standard newspaper said.

"Police arrived another eight minutes after that when the chambermaid had already led the man away," it said. The chambermaid handed the intruder, identified by police as 31-year-old Michael Fagan, over to a footman, it said.

"The newspaper said the police failed to respond to the monarch's telephone appeal 'because she tried to make her call sound important but not hysterical to avoid alarming the man."

It said the intruder gained access to the queen's room at about 7 a.m. on Friday because the queen's night guard had gone off duty about an hour before.

"Until now it has been customary for him to go off duty soon after 6 a.m. when members of the queen's personal staff arrive for work, entrusting her safely early in the morning to unarmed civilians," the newspaper said.

The Standard said the casualty dressed Fagan in a police staff because they thought he was a workman.

Mrs. Thatcher told Parliament she hoped to have a report next week from Assistant Police Commissioner John Dellow, who was named to investigate security at the palace.

Dellow was assigned to investigate after Fagan entered the palace for the second time in a month. Armed with a jagged-end ashtray, Fagan spent 10 minutes sitting on the queen's bed chatting with her before she could summon help.

Parliament Conservative Hugh Greenway called for "a long term inquiry to take a deep and long look at security."

Mrs. Thatcher replied "I hope Dellow's report will give a thorough review of the security situation surrounding the queen and other members of the royal family."

The London Evening Standard reported when Fagan entered the palace early Friday he was out on bail after being arrested July 5 for assaulting his 15-year-old stepson. Police refused confirmation.

Other press reports said when he entered the queen's bedroom he was carrying a broken ashtray that could have been used as a weapon and that his hand was bloodied by it.

But Whitelaw admitted to Parliament Monday that the breakdown in palace security posed a threat to the queen and that had Fagan been a terrorist, the incident could have been "a catastrophe."

Germans to fund Soviet pipeline

MOSCOW (UPI) — West German bankers, despite strong opposition by the Reagan administration, signed a deal with the Soviet Union Tuesday to finance most of a multi-billion-dollar natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe.

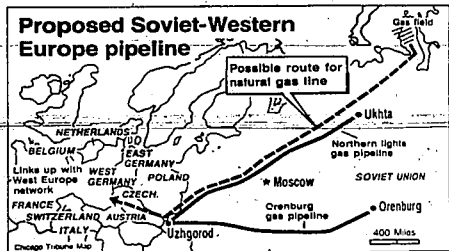

West Germany's Deutsche Bank said the contract signed in Leningrad means credit is available for export to the Soviet Union of $1.1 billion worth of equipment with an option of up to $1.6 billion by the end of the year.

"The final volume of the financing depends on the extent to which further delivery contracts are awarded to firms from the Federal Republic of Germany," a Deutsche Bank statement said.

"The bank's financing covers 85 percent of the contract value, the bank said. West German sources said repayment of the loans will stretch over an 8-year period at an interest rate of 7.8 percent.

In an apparent reference to Reagan administration opposition, the official Soviet news agency Tass said despite "certain difficulties," West Germany and the Soviet Union were "steadily broadening economic and trade links."

Reagan announced last month that, in addition to existing sanctions protesting the Dec. 13 imposition of martial law in Poland, European firms under U.S. license or U.S. subsidiaries were prohibited from supplying equipment for the Siberian pipeline.

The United States also expressed fears Western Europe could become dependent on Soviet energy. The decision was a blow to Western European firms already under contract to the Soviets and in need of U.S. equipment to fulfill them.

The sanctions affect key items such as gas turbines. Western observers said the Soviets will have to decide next year whether to insist on delivery from European nations under contract by claiming the firms in default.

Germany is the largest of Western European countries committed to the 3,000-mile pipeline. France, Italy, Austria, Switzerland and Belgium are also involved.

Diplomatic sources said, however, conciliatory moves by Poland's military regime may be announced on July 22, the Polish national day. The move could lead to a relaxing of the U.S. sanctions.

British Rail holds off on strike

LONDON (UPI) — British Rail said Tuesday it would not call a strike on the nation's railroads pending the outcome of a fresh attempt to mediate the dispute over working conditions with striking locomotive engineers.

"But Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told Parliament the 10-day-old strike was 'stupid' and the government would insist the engineers accept flexible work hours as an efficiency move.

"We want a settlement on terms and conditions that will produce a modern and efficient railroad," said Mrs. Thatcher.

Quitting the words of another rail union that has accepted the flexible work shift, Mrs. Thatcher said: "This is a narrow, stupid dispute."

British Rail billed Tuesday as "decision day," but after a four-hour meeting, officials did not announce a shutdown or any other action pending a new arbitration move.

The railway has been running 10 percent of its 15,000 daily trains with the aid of locomotive engineers crossing picket lines.

However, it has been paying its non-striking staff and losing more than $14.4 million a day operating the minimal service on the 11,000-mile system.

The strike has affected 1.4 million regular passengers — particularly around London — and cut into Britain's lucrative summer tourist industry.

A complete shutdown of the railroad could force British Rail to layoff a significant number of its other 200,000 employees, adding to Britain's problem of 3 million jobless.

The railway already has threatened to fire the 20,000 striking members of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen.

Julian Pallfrey, spokesman for state-owned British Rail, said the board made a decision about the strike at its meeting, but that it would not be announced until another move to arbitrate was made.

Falklanders hope war will have a good side

By GARY KEMPER
United Press International

STANLEY, Falkland Islands — All they wanted was to be left alone, but the 10-week British-Argentino war waged out that dream for the "kelpers" of the Falkland Islands.

"We were a small community of 1,800 people, in search of a living and security in this day and age," said the Rev. Daniel Martin Spraggon, for 11 years the only priest for 218 Roman Catholic Islanders.

"Here we have a quiet, peaceful way of life. And now we face a change — a big change," added Spraggon, who said Argentine occupiers left 27 bullet holes in his house — including one in his Bible.

"There is bound to be a permanent change," said Gen. Jimmy Moore, British land forces commander.

"I think there were signs of change even before this," said ex-governor Rex Hunt, now the islands' civil administrator. "But he said Argentina's April 2 invasion and the British reconquest 'will accelerate change.'"

Most "kelpers," as the locals call themselves, came to these remote South Atlantic islands to find solitude, peace and an escape from the world's woes.

The bloody Falklands war ended that forever. Now they politely put up with a military garrison three times the population's size, with limited water supplies, fuel shortages and, for the first time — a touch of inflated prices.

"We've lost what we had in March, and we can't go back to that state at all," said Terry Feck, for 11 years Stanley's police chief and now a member of its two government councils.

"There's a certain amount of people here who want something positive to happen," Feck said. "They feel that having come through a bad patch they're going to be strangled into, well, leaving the islands."

"We've had just about three months of occupation by an enemy force. And now we've got 4,000 or 5,000 British troops. Another occupying force, really."

"You can't go back to normal when there are three times the population in troops around," said Feck. "The garrison would bring prosperity to the islands' service industries."

"I hope there will be a spinoff that is to the benefit of the Islanders," he said.

Hunt spoke hopefully of possible developments — of a deep sea fishing industry, of salmon ranching, of future settlement and investment, of small-scale "cottage industries, so to speak," which would give on the Falkland Islands name.

But kelpers see little but welcome change in such ideas.

"What Hunt is talking about is not what the people want," Feck said. "They are trying to force their policies and their ideas onto the Falkland Islanders."

Ireland convicts IRA agent of crimes against England

DUBLIN, Ireland (UPI) — A criminal court Tuesday sentenced suspected IRA terrorist Gerard Tuite to 10 years in prison in Ireland's first trial of an IRA suspect accused of committing crimes in England.

Once on Scotland Yard's "most wanted" list, Tuite, 27, listened impassively as the three-judge panel in Dublin's Special Criminal Court issued a guilty verdict and sentenced him to 10 years in an Irish prison.

The court found Tuite guilty of having explosive substances with intent to cause serious injury," said Judge Liam Hamilton. Tuite was arrested on charges he kept the explosives in his London apartment between 1978 and 1979.

Hamilton said the court gave Tuite 10 years in jail instead of the maximum 20-year sentence because of his lack of previous convictions. The two-week trial was conducted under tight security by Dublin police and British troops.

It was the first time ever an Irish Republican Army suspect was tried in Ireland for crimes committed in England. The Criminal Law Jurisdiction Act under which Tuite was convicted previously was aimed at terrorists operating only in Northern Ireland.

The court rejected Tuite's defense claim that Irish courts had no jurisdiction in his case since the crimes were committed in England.

Tuite, from County Cavin, Ireland, faces a second trial in October on charges of conspiring to carry out a bombing spree in five British cities in 1978 and 1979.

He escaped London's Brixton Prison in 1980 while awaiting trial on terrorism charges. He embarrassed prison officials by tunneling out and evading electronic surveillance and patrol dogs.

He was arrested by police in Drogheda, Ireland, in January 1982.

After Christmas terrorist bombings in 1978, Scotland Yard put Tuite at the top of its "most wanted" list. Nine people were injured in the 1978-79 bombing campaign allegedly carried out by Tuite in Britain.

New Iraqi battle could dry up oil glut

LONDON (UPI) — Iran rejected a U.N. plan for a cease-fire in the 22-month-old Persian Gulf war Tuesday, saying a new wave of artillery battles Tuesday that U.S. officials feared were a prelude to an 80,000-man Iranian invasion of Iraq.

"There is a considerable number of troops on both sides concentrated and there is the possibility of a bloody battle," Pentagon spokesman Henry Catto said.

U.S. officials said 80,000 Iranian troops were massed on the Iraqi border for a possible invasion. Tehran radio also said the appeal for the cease-fire by U.N. Secretary-General Waldhauser.

Washington fears an Iranian invasion could engulf other Arab states — including America's largest oil supplier Saudi Arabia — and spread Iran's revolutionary brand of Islamic fundamentalism to more moderate nations.

Renewed heavy fighting also could knock out Iran's 2.2 million barrels a day oil output as well as Iraq's estimated 1 million barrels a day — eliminating the worldwide oil glut and driving up gas and fuel prices.

On Monday, the U.N. Security Council passed a resolution 150 that urged both nations to withdraw to "internationally recognized boundaries" and permit U.N. observers to monitor a cease-fire.

But Iranian Prime Minister Mir Hossein Mousavi, in a Tehran Radio broadcast monitored in Ankara, rejected the appeal as "a Soviet and American vote of confidence in Iraq."

Tehran Radio said artillery and air battles raged on the southwestern border. Iranian jets chased away Iraqi warplanes and Iraqi artillery wounded 13 Iraqis and set ablaze six areas of the border city of Abadan.

Iraq began the war Sept. 22, 1980, in a dispute over the Strategic Shatt al-Arab waterway.

Iraq made impressive initial gains, but by this spring a revived Iranian force recaptured its largest port at Khorramshahr and drove the Iraqis from most Iranian territory.

Hussein declared a unilateral cease-fire in June and said he withdrew all Iraqi troops from Iranian territory, but Iran's U.N. Ambassador Said Rajala-Khorassani last week said Iraq still occupied some Iranian territory.

Iraq has demanded the ouster of Hussein, a formal Iraqi declaration that it was the aggressor, and $150 billion in reparations for Iraqi war damage to Iranian oil installations.

Hussein's regime "must withdraw from our land without any condition, pay for the damages, and be condemned and the war will automatically be over," Mousavi said.

Body may be American

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — The badly decomposed body of a "gringo" found near San Salvador could be that of American journalist John Sullivan, who disappeared 18 months ago, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said Tuesday.

Sullivan, 29, from Bogota, N.J., disappeared Dec. 28, 1980, two hours after he arrived in the country and registered at the Sheraton Hotel in the capital.

Salvadoran judicial authorities told UPI the remains belong to a male more than 6 feet tall, but the bone structure indicated the victim was in his 40s.

A witness told UPI Tuesday two American coins were found in the pockets of the dead man's clothes before he was buried.

The U.S. Embassy in San Salvador received an anonymous letter June 10 saying someone who looked like an American was buried in the Nueva Cuscatlan cemetery.

Peasants found the body on the evening of Dec. 28, 1980, one day after Sullivan disappeared, a local judge said. The head was almost fully destroyed by an explosion and one hand was missing, he said.

The body was immediately buried when its identity could not be established, the judge said, adding it was of a man over 6 feet tall who had a beard. Sullivan was a tall, bearded man.

North Korea seizes three fishing boats

TOKYO (UPI) — North Korean naval vessels Tuesday seized one South Korean and two Japanese fishing boats in the Sea of Japan, apparently for violating its territorial waters, Japanese and South Korean authorities said.

Japan's Maritime Safety Agency in Tokyo and South Korea's Office of Fisheries in Seoul reported a total of 48 crew members on the three captured boats.

A spokesman for the Japan Red Cross Society said it had asked the communist North Korean government to confirm the captured crewmembers' safety.

"We have not received any response," the spokesman said.

The two Japanese fishing boats were ordered to stop by a North Korean patrol vessel in the Sea of Japan some 250 miles north of the island in the Korean Strait, a Maritime Safety Agency official said.

The official said the area was within waters claimed by the Soviet Union and North Korea.

The owner of Hamaeyoshi Maru in the western Japanese city of Hyogo said he was alerted to the seizure by a radio message which said: "We are terminating the communications because North Korean soldiers are coming onboard."

No other details on the seizure of the Japanese fishing boats were immediately available.

It was the first seizure of Japanese boats by North Korean vessels since a non-official fishing agreement expired at the end of June.

In Seoul, the Office of Fisheries announced an unarmed South Korean fishing boat with 35 crewmen was seized by North Korean vessels in the Sea of Japan.

An announcement said the 114-ton Masan-bo was captured by North Korean naval craft 170 miles northeast of the island of Ulleung-do. The Masan-bo was intercepted while fishing in an area where 170 other South Korean fishing boats are operating, the announcement said.

Four North Korean troops boarded the Masan-bo before it was taken to North Korea, it said.

The incident took place in an area where another South Korean fishing boat, the 135-ton Hyongjin No. 5, escaped a North Korean capture attempt July 5, the office of fisheries said.

North Korea has seized 454 South Korean fishing boats and 3,568 crewmen since the end of the Korean war in 1953, according to the office.

The communists still hold 32 South Korean boats and 406 crewmen, it said.

Rebels win battle in Somali war

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Somali rebels claimed Tuesday they killed hundreds of government troops and captured strategic villages on the Somali-Ethiopia border in 12 days of intense fighting in the disputed Ogaden Desert.

Radio Kulmiis, voice of the anti-government Democratic Somali Salvation Front, said rebel forces killed more than 345 Somali government troops and shot down two Somali MIG 19 jet fighters in heavy fighting on two fronts.

Broadcast from the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa and monitored in Nairobi, the radio said Somali defenses were crumbling and that some units had mutinied.

The radio claimed rebels captured the key village of Banbahle, 250 miles northwest of the Somali capital of Mogadishu, wiping out a Somali Army motorized brigade and capturing an undisclosed number of troops, 15 armored Western diplomats ruled out rebel claims of no outside support in the fighting because of the broad fronts and heavy weapons used by the invaders.

Somalia and Ethiopia fought a war over the disputed Ogaden region, populated mostly by ethnic Somali nomads but governed by Ethiopia. The conflict ended in 1980 with a crushing Somali defeat by a combined Ethiopian and Cuban force.

Ethiopia maintains a 10,000-strong Cuban garrison in the last August signed a mutual defense pact with Libya and South Yemen. Somali diplomats claim Libyans and Cubans are involved in the current fighting, which began July 1.

Hospital board opens door for new operators

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The board of the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center has opened the door to proposals from other hospital management companies.

At a special meeting Monday night, the board set up a timetable for reviewing proposals from companies that may wish to provide daily supervision of the hospital's medical and financial operations.

The board's management contract with the Hospital Corporation of America, a Nashville-based firm, expires Sept. 30. Before then, the board must decide whether to retain HCA, seek a contract with another company or drop all contracts and hire its own administration.

On Monday, the board voted to accept written proposals for management contracts until Aug. 16.

A committee — composed of Ann Cover, the Twin Falls County commission chairman, and board members Ted Pence, Cal Butler, Everett Norris and Don Sharp — was appointed by board Chairman Clarence Hollifield to review all contract proposals and select the best two or three.

Only two or three proposals are submitted, oral presentations on those proposals will be made at the Aug. 23 board meeting.

If the hospital board does not make a decision at that time, a special meeting will be called before Sept. 30. This timetable was devised after much discussion among board members, county commissioners and county Prosecutor Harry DeHaan.

James Salandi, a representative from American Medical International Inc., a California-based management firm, has asked Hollifield for information that would allow AMI to put together a proposal for the hospital.

Salandi also has approached the county commissioners and other community leaders about hearing a proposal from his company. He has

New schools, keeping kids in them discussed

By GLEN WARCHOL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls School Board discussed new schools — and keeping kids in them — at Tuesday's meeting.

The ad hoc building committee's April recommendation that a new grade school be built as soon as possible, moved a little closer to realization as the board discussed elementary school overcrowding problems and requested hard information on the costs of the project.

"It is our responsibility to make that decision, and convince the community that it's in their best interests and the best interests of the state," said John McNees, a member of the school board. He said the decision had to be made, "Although it might not be the most opportune time (financially)."

The recommendation for the new school — to be built on property east of Robert Stuart Junior High School — is based on information gathered during the committee's 10-week study. Overcrowding in the district, the committee reported, had reached the point that three elementary schools — Harrison, Lincoln and Ningsringside, are on the state's "advised" accreditation list due to overcrowding. These schools will have in excess of 800 students each this fall.

"Most districts don't have high schools this size," said Robert Knigfion, who was elected chairman of the board Tuesday.

Superintendent James Sawin said that the administration would present the board with more information at the August meeting, including estimated costs of construction and bonding.

Ironically, the board also discussed the problem of students leaving the high school prematurely.

According to district policy, students who complete their graduation requirements in less than four years can leave school. Most early graduates are at the end of the first semester of the senior year. But a few students gain their diploma at the end of their junior year.

Board members have expressed concern that early graduation is a breakdown in school spirit.

"We should discourage graduates during the junior year entirely by some means or other," said Gary Payne, who was sworn in Tuesday as a new board member.

The superintendent will present recommendations on the problem at the August meeting.

Computer aid

New 'electronic brain' should improve efficiency at library

By SUSAN GALLAGHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Whether they're assessing readers' interests or assessing fines for overdue books, staff members at the Twin Falls Public Library expect to be doing it with greater efficiency this fall.

Much of the library's pencil-and-ledger record-keeping will be eliminated when the facility is linked to a central computer at the Boise Public Library.

While most of the adjustments will be behind the scenes, library patrons will notice a few changes — such as the use of a laser device to check out books — when the computer system goes on line in October.

And during the first week of August, the Twin Falls staff will start re-registering the estimated 8,000 to 10,000 people who hold library cards, to develop files compatible with the new system. Cardholders will be re-registered when they borrow library materials.

Librarian Glenna Rhodes says that since December, workers have been tagging books and other materials with black and white "alpha" codes, much like the price tags now common on supermarket goods. As in markets where coded products are slid across an electronic "reader," books will be checked out by placing them under the laser machine, Rhodes says.

Coded information on the books and on the new library cards, which will be kept on file at the library, will allow the staff to maintain closer tabs on what is shelved and what is checked out at any given time.

Rhodes says it will be easier to pair reserved books with readers who want them, interlibrary loans will be expedited as a result of the computer linkage and persons who have excessively overdue books will receive prompter notification.

Another bonus will be the availability of data showing how much use certain categories of material receive. When ordering new books, the staff will have a better grasp of what people want, Rhodes says.

Computerization is the best way for the library to cope with its bleak financial forecast, Arlan Call, the library's director, told Twin Falls City Council last year when he requested funding.

The library has suffered, along with other public agencies, with Idaho's tax constraints, and Call says he has reduced personnel by a third and cut the hours of operation accordingly. Volunteers help keep the library functioning, he says.

The computer system appears to be the most cost-effective way of rendering adequate library services in the wake of limited staffing, and in anticipation of static revenues during the coming years, Call says.

Local funding consists of a $15,500 municipal allocation this year, and Call has asked City Council to grant $41,500 in 1983 for the second of the computer project's two phases. The state gave the Boise Public Library $25,000 to buy the equipment necessary for Twin Falls to join the system, which also serves the Nampa and Caldwell libraries.

Rhodes says the computer will not replace any existing staff members. Rather, she says, there will be a rearrangement of responsibilities to more effectively use the personnel available.

The general operation of the library may slow down a bit in October, as the staff adjusts to the new system, she says, but there are no plans to close for the transition.

For awhile, the library will operate under its present methods and also with the computer system. The adult collection will be adapted for the computer, and when that hurdle is cleared, the children's collection will be switched over, Rhodes says.

Several still out of control

Lightning sparks a dozen range fires

By The Times-News

SHOSHONE — Federal fire crews got their first big workout Tuesday, as thunderstorms lashed off nearly a dozen blazes in an area of rangeland between Bliss and Richfield.

Three large fires still were burning out of control Tuesday night in the Shoshone, Richfield and Hazelton areas.

Dale Chatterton, a fire-control officer for the Bureau of Land Management in the Shoshone District, said the largest fire had blackened 6,000 acres along Idaho 26, between Shoshone and Gooding.

Another fire near Hazelton had burned 3,900 acres by Tuesday night. Chatterton said the blaze was burning on federal land in heavy brush, just south of where the Star Lake fire blackened 30,000 acres last year.

Two fires southwest of Richfield together had burned an estimated 5,000 acres by late Tuesday.

Chatterton said spotty rain showers helped firefighters with several of the blazes. He said the rain might enable crews to get a line around some of the fires during the night and hopefully, bring them under control by sometime today.

Earlier in the day, Carlos Mendiola, a fire-management officer for the BLM's Shoshone District, said 10 fires were reported in the district following the day's lightning storms. Of those, five still were classified as active fires at 9 p.m.

There were 60 BLM firefighters from the Shoshone District on the fire lines Tuesday night, aided by another 60 to 70 men on loan from the Sawtooth National Forest, and the Boise and Burley BLM districts.

The U.S. Forest Service loaned its helicopter to the Shoshone District earlier Tuesday, but recalled it to Twin Falls after lightning peppered the South Hills with "ground strikes, averaging one every five seconds," according to Forest Service dispatcher Bob Powers. Rains helped knock down most of those fires during late afternoon and evening.

Other active fires in the Shoshone District included a blaze north of Mindoka, which had not been surveyed but was estimated at about 500 acres, and a 60-acre fire between Bliss and Hagerman.

One lightning strike ignited a small fire just behind the BLM offices in Shoshone, Mendiola said, and two other fires less than an acre in size were extinguished between Shoshone and Gooding. There also was a small 10-acre fire in the Richfield area.

Prior to Tuesday, the district had burned just 13 fires for the season, recording a total of only 350 acres. Last summer — one of the worst on record — range fires had blackened 150,000 acres in the Shoshone BLM District by mid-July.

Powers said fire activity in the Sawtooth Forest also had been light prior to Tuesday, with snow still keeping many areas in the higher elevations damp. Forest crews have extinguished five fires so far this season, the most recent a quarter-acre blaze triggered by a lightning strike Tuesday morning near Jones Creek.

Fire activity also has been light in the BLM's Burley District, which shares dispatch offices with the Forest Service. The most serious fires in the Burley district have been in the eastern half of the district, near Pocatello, Powers said.

Learning center to seek reversal of funding denial

By The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The director of the Early Childhood Learning Center says she will ask the area United Way organization to reconsider the center's request for financial assistance in 1983.

Of the 16 agencies that requested United Way funding, the Twin Falls learning center was the only one rejected last Friday, when United Way's directors approved 1983 allocations.

On Oct. 1, United Way will launch a $190,000 fund-raising campaign to meet those commitments.

The directors of the United Way said the learning center's request had merit. But if the request was approved, the directors said, other child-care facilities justifiably would expect assistance, also.

Pal Verstraete, the learning center's director, said Tuesday that she will seek reconsideration of her agency's request for $10,000, because she believes the scope of services that the center offers is not understood fully.

The learning center, located at 329 Madrona St. N., is non-profit and tax-exempt. According to Verstraete, the Twin Falls facility fits the Internal Revenue Service's definition of a learning center, rather than a day-care center, because it offers instructional programs as well as child care.

About 40 percent of the enrolled children come from single-parent homes, she said.

Verstraete said she wants to talk to United Way officials before elaborating on the center's financial situation.

New $3 million recreation center highlights growing Rupert economy

RUPERT — A new $3 million recreation center will be built in Rupert.

Plans for the development of the facility, which will be located on an 11-acre site north of East Minico Junior High, were announced at a press conference Tuesday at Rupert City Hall.

Originally conceived by local businessman Kurt Catmull, the private project involves a number of local investors, according to Mayor Bill Whitton.

"Construction of the Country Court and Racquet Club will take place in three phases, Whitton said.

Initial construction tentatively is scheduled to begin early next year, with some facilities being available by fall.

Phase I will be a complex featuring indoor and outdoor tennis courts, a jogging track, a pro shop, locker rooms, eight racquetball courts, a 25-meter indoor swimming pool, a 3-meter diving tank, a weight room, administrative facilities and "a large game room, with every kind of video game imaginable," Whitton said.

Phase II will involve construction of a 10-meter diving tank and a 50-meter outdoor swimming pool. Whitton said. And "if the public response is there," the developers, Country Courtyard Association Inc., have plans for a competition ice rink, with seating and support facilities for Phase III.

The project will be funded through the sale of 1,000 shares of stock, with the remaining funds being obtained by membership sales, which could begin as early as this summer. All stockholders will receive individual memberships.

Whitton said the facility could draw professional athletes from around the nation to events held at the site.

"This will put us on the map, from a recreational standpoint," he said. "This is really what we need here. It's not just another handball court."

Whitton said the facility may be made available to other institutions in the area, including the city, which may contract to use it for some recreation programs. He said the school district and the hospital (for therapy programs) also will be contacted.

Whitton said the project should draw families from throughout the Magic Valley, and it comes at a time of "new hope and optimism" for the Rupert-area economy.

As an example of the city's growth, he cited the dedication ceremony Tuesday for the city's new 1.3 million-gallon water tower.

"That supplements the 50,000-gallon capacity we've had," he said. "Every summer we've had to ration water. But we've got a new shopping center that anticipates using 600,000 gallons a day, so you see we're really starting to grow."

That shopping center, the financially troubled Rupert Plaza, has been given a new lease on life following its recent acquisition by the Tertling Co. of Boise.

Whitton said Tertling officials told him last week that they expect to locate 12 new businesses in the facility by the end of the year, "including a major supper club, which this community doesn't have right now."

The Rupert mayor also said a Magic Valley industrial firm, which he declined to identify, "is also looking at a substantial development in the community."

"We've got a lot of enthusiasm around here these days," that economic conditions will be improving, Whitton said. "These things are making people smile. They're starting to say, 'Hey, our community isn't dead anymore.'"

Whitton said the revitalized shopping center and the recreation facility should draw more business to the Rupert area from throughout the Magic Valley.

"I see the trend for Rupert to become a major shopping center for the valley."

Dave Winfield's mean slide into NL 2nd baseman Steve Sax showed how hard the AL tried to snap his losing streak (above). . . . but when it was over the National Leaguers were the ones rejoicing and congratulating MVP Dave Concepcion, 13 (below)

All-Star

 Concepcion and Solo emerged as the two major stars of the contest since the theme of this year's All-Star Game was "A Salute to International Baseball."
 Twelve former players, including 10 retired All-Stars, representing 11 baseball-playing countries participated in the traditional first-ball ceremony. Among those who took part were Concepcion's boyhood hero, Luis Aparicio of Venezuela, and one of Solo's idols—Juan Marichal of the Dominican Republic.
 Concepcion admitted that the mere presence of Aparicio inspired him to perform better.
 "It was so happy to see Luis today," Concepcion said. "He is one of the greatest shortstops and one of the greatest players ever to come out of Venezuela. He was an inspiration to me today. I always admired him as a player. I'd like to show that I can take it over for him."
 It appeared in the first inning that the AL might actually take charge of the game and put an end to its two decades of frustration. Just as it had done in the previous two All-Star Games, the AL grabbed an early lead. Taking advantage of a rare wild pitch by Rogers, the AL scored a first-inning run on a sacrifice fly by Reggie Jackson.
 Rickey Henderson, who had three of the AL's eight hits, opened the game with a single to left and after Fred Lynn fled out, George Brett singled to left to put runners on first and second. Both runners advanced when Rogers, who had thrown only two wild pitches in 193 2/3 innings this season, sent his catcher, Carter, scampering to the AL dugout to retrieve his errant pitch in the dirt and Jackson got Henderson home with a long fly to center.

 It didn't take long for the NL to take the lead, however. After Eckersley retired the first five batters in order, he walked Dale Murphy and Concepcion then ripped a 1-and-1 pitch on a line just inside the left-field foul pole for his first All-Star homer.
 "It was a slider, up and in," Concepcion said. "I don't think it broke and I was able to get it pretty good. I hit the last pitch in batting practice to almost the same spot. You always try to hit one out on the last pitch. I was not to do that; it may have helped."
 "I've been in the National League for 13 years and I've played on four World Series teams, but I would have to put winning the MVP award in this game as one of my greatest thrills."
 The NL quickly added to its lead in the third, getting a run when Jones, batting for Rogers, tripled off the right-center field fence and scored on a sacrifice fly by Pete Rose.
 The Expos' contingent of Oliver and Carter helped the NL pad its lead to 4-1 in the sixth. Oliver, who had replaced Rose in the lineup, led off with a double off reliever Dan Quisenberry and went all the way to third when the ball skipped past left fielder Henderson for an error.
 Meanwhile, Tony Grimes of Scottsdale, Ariz., shot a course-record 4-under-par 68 to win medalist honors.
 Grimes was the top scorer among the 55 golfers who qualified for match play, starting today and ending in a 36-hole final match Saturday. Grimes, an Arizona State graduate, finished the two-day qualifying with a score of 4-under-par 140.
 Grimes' record-setting round included five birdies, one eagle and three bogeys.

 The previous record of 69 was set in 1979 by Steve Barnett of Anderson, Ind., who played in the tourney this year and qualified at 150.
 Seventeen golfers, tied at 11-over par 135 after two rounds, will play Wednesday to determine the last six match-play spots. Pairings will be determined after the playoffs.
 Billy Tuten, last year's Public Links runner-up to Jodie Mudd, had the second-best score among qualifiers with a 2-under-par 142. Tuten, 20, of Palatka, Fla., shot almost identical 71's, getting two birdies and a bogey in Tuesday's round.

Frank White struck out, Henderson beat out an infield hit and then stole second to put runners on first and third—Solo—then—reared—back—and struck out Wilson and Bell to end the inning.
 The AL had one more serious threat in the eighth, when Fernando Valenzuela walked two batters, but reliever Greg Minton came on and got out of the jam with the aid of a sparkling play by shortstop Ozzie Smith, who charged Parrish's slow roller over the mound and threw him out at first.

 Buhl's big inning in the first game was the third, when the Indians struck for eight runs. Len and Charlie Carter each contributed two-run singles to that outburst.
 Dave Sigel went all the way for Buhl, allowing just one hit. It was Sigel's first game of the year as a pitcher; he had been out with an injury.
 In the second game Buhl benefited from 15 walks.
 The Indians' 27-4 doubleheader twinned at Pocatello tonight starting at 7 p.m., before heading to Salt Lake City for single games Thursday and Saturday and a double-header Friday.

Chisox tab Scheuler's successor

MONTREAL (UPI) — Roland Hemond, general manager of the Chicago White Sox, announced Tuesday that Ken Silvestri, a former major-league catcher and baseball instructor for the Sox, would succeed Ron Scheuler as pitching coach.
 Hemond said that Silvestri, 66, will serve as interim coach at least until the end of the season.
 Scheuler resigned Saturday amid reports that Sox owners Eddie Einhorn and Jerry Reinsdorf planned to fire him at the All-Star break. Chicago first offered the job to Seattle broadcaster Wes Stock, a veteran of 32 years as a major-league pitching coach. Stock declined, citing his contractual obligation to the Mariners.
 Silvestri was fired by the Sox as a full-time minor-league instructor after spring training but was retained in a part-time role. Hemond said that Silvestri was responsible for the acquisition of pitcher Britt Burns.
 Silvestri, born in Chicago, was a catcher in the majors with the Yankees, Phillies and White Sox and had a .217 career batting average. He has coached with Philadelphia, the Milwaukee and Atlanta Braves, and the White Sox.

Baseball could be in Olympics

MONTREAL (UPI) — Baseball could become an official Olympic sport depending on the outcome of an experimental tournament at the 1984 Los Angeles Games, a baseball coach told Tuesday.
 Robert Smith, president of the 42-nation International Association of Amateur Baseball, said the International Olympic Committee will review its bid to have baseball included in future Olympics following a 4-team baseball tournament at Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles.
 Smith said the IAAAB hoped to have baseball included as a regular Olympic sport by the 1992 Games in South Korea.
 In addition to the United States, three other teams are to participate. They are to be selected through regional qualifying competitions in Europe, Asia and the Americas.

Corzine signs with Nets

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — Dave Corzine, San Antonio's reserve center for the past two seasons, has signed an offer sheet with the New Jersey Nets for a reported five-year contract at $650,000 a year. Spurs officials said Tuesday.
 Corzine, 4-11 and 265 pounds, became a free agent this year after averaging 10.1 points, 7.8 rebounds and 27 minutes a game.
 His contract with the Spurs paid him $100,000 annually. Last fall the team rejected his request for a raise to $400,000 a year.
 Corzine played two seasons for Washington before being traded to San Antonio.

Saints star Rogers confirms cocaine use, swears 'it will never happen again'

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — NFL rushing leader George Rogers Tuesday admitted using cocaine during his record-breaking rookie year, but said he had completed a drug rehabilitation program and declared "it will never happen again."

Rogers, the 1981 NFC Rookie of the Year, met with reporters for the first time since reports indicated he bought more than $10,000 worth of cocaine last year.

"I'm sorry for what I did," Rogers said. "I am human and I did make a mistake and I can't help it. It will never happen again. That's as honest as I can get."

Rogers' attorney, Ed Holler, refused to discuss details of his client's drug involvement but said the bruising running back had checked into the Palm Beach Institute in south Florida.

Rogers entered the hospital July 7 and was discharged two days later after undergoing intensive psychiatric evaluation and extensive tests for drug dependency, Holler said.

The tests found no evidence of drug dependency and indicated Rogers was physically and emotionally healthy, Holler said. Further, the attorney said, it was determined Rogers engaged in only recreational cocaine use and had not taken any habit-forming drugs since January.

"Physicians concluded George will not engage in the use of cocaine or any other habit-forming drug in the future since these drugs are not compatible with his good moral character," Holler said.

"And brief experiments he made with cocaine proved to be a painful personal experience for him."

A protective Saints head coach Bum Phillips told reporters Rogers could not answer any questions about his drug involvement on advice of counsel.

A federal judge last week slapped a gag order on everyone involved in the trial of former Saints running back Mike Strachan, who is accused of selling cocaine to NFL players and others.

Rogers and more than a dozen other Saints players who admitted buying cocaine could be forced to testify in Strachan's trial, which might turn into an expose of drug use in professional sports.

"Phillips said he called the news conference to attempt to halt widespread rumors about Rogers and other Saints players before the start of summer training camp in Vero Beach, Fla., next week."

"I think it's important to this football team, to this town and I think it's important to the National Football League," he said. "But more important than that, it's important to a bunch of individuals who have made a mistake. But they haven't made a mistake that cannot be rectified."

Phillips said he considered his football players part of his family, and trusted Rogers to mend his ways.

"It's always been easier to judge other people's children," Phillips said. "I raised six of my own and 3,300 of other people's children. And I've always tried to treat those 3,300 like they were mine."

"I'm certainly not a believer in drugs. But I am a believer in people. If it comes out like I think it will, I'll give him an opportunity to prove he doesn't believe in drugs either. I am in my mind convinced that it's over and done with."

Cards set up program for players with 'psychological or physical' problems this month

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — The St. Louis Cardinals set up a program for players with "psychological or physical" problems this month.

The program, which was established by team president and chief operating officer, said he was directed to establish the program by Bill Bidwill, owner of the Cardinals.

"The first thing I saw on my desk when I got back here was a copy of Bill Bidwill's statement on the situation," said Devine, who returned to the football team earlier this month after resigning his job as vice president of the Montreal Expos baseball club.

Devine said the Cardinals would put medical personnel on retainer to assist the players.

"We're approaching this as educational assistance rather than looking for somebody breaking the rules and penalizing them," said Devine.

"Any player in need of help will be able to get confidential assistance without fear of public disclosure or of jeopardizing his position on the team, said Devine."

Kirby Criswell, a defensive end with the team last year, faces a 5-year prison sentence for conspiracy to manufacture and distribute methamphetamine.

Criswell, who has been released by the Cardinals, said in an interview over the weekend that he and other players had smoked marijuana and used cocaine, but he declined to identify the players.

Linebacker E. J. Junior, the Cardinals' top draft pick in 1981, has been indicted on charges of possession of cocaine in Tusculossa, Ala. Junior is expected to be at the team's training camp later this month.

Coach Jim Hanifan said he would recommend the program to any player he feels in need of counseling.

"Obviously we think it is needed or we wouldn't have it," said Hanifan.

Hanifan said he had known of Criswell's drug problems last season and told him to seek rehabilitation. Criswell later was arrested on the drug charges.

USFL club representative Ralston won't attempt to sign McMahon

CHICAGO (UPI) — John Ralston, who represents the owner of the United States Football League's Los Angeles and San Francisco teams, Tuesday does not plan to talk with quarterback Jim McMahon, the Bears' unsigned first-round draft pick.

Ralston told radio station WGN he has not spoken to McMahon's agent, Jerry Argovitz, and does not have any signing planned. However, he said if Argovitz asked to see him, he would tell him McMahon should play for the Bears.

JIM MCMAHON Still hasn't signed with Chicago Bears

The Bears and Argovitz have been stalled over McMahon's contract since he was drafted.

Bears General Manager Jim Finks met with McMahon and his agent Monday but Argovitz called the meeting a "waste of time" and threatened to take McMahon's 56 NCAA records for total offense to the new USFL.

Argovitz had said he was scheduled to go to Los Angeles to meet with Jim Joseph, owner of the California team in the new USFL.

"There's no doubt that certain agents are using the United States Football league as a wedge," Ralston told WGN in an interview from San Francisco.

Threatens not to report to training camp Cribbs remains irked over pact

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) — Joe Cribbs, the Buffalo Bills' All-Pro running back, has reiterated his intention of missing the start of training camp July 25 unless his contract situation is settled.

"As of right now, if the contract isn't settled and I have no intention of coming (to camp)," Cribbs told the Rochester Times-Union by telephone from his mother's home in Sulligent, Ala. "I haven't had contact with the Bills lately. I don't know what the situation will be when the deadline comes to report to camp, but right now I see no point in me coming. I don't think I'll be coming in."

Cribbs, who has rushed for more than 1,000 yards in each of first two NFL seasons, said he wants the Bills to pay him a salary that would place him in the "top 5 percent" among running backs in the league.

Cribbs' basic salary in 1980 and 1981 was $85,000. He is signed for two more years, which means Cribbs would be unable to play for another NFL club should he decide to sit out the season.

"The way I feel is that I've given them (the Bills) more than my total contract is worth," Cribbs said. "I feel I can stand toe-to-toe with any back in the league. I just want to establish my salary at the level of other backs in the league."

Cribbs denied reports he is seeking millions a year.

"We never even asked for half of that," he said.

Cribbs said he likes Buffalo and its residents and the Bills' coaching staff but has "total respect" for the club's administration.

"Buffalo seems to be more profit oriented than win oriented," said Cribbs, referring to the Bills losing linebacker Tom Cousineau. "I'm starting to feel that they don't want to do what it takes to win."

Colonials? Fireworks? Militia? Generals? One could be USFL's Philly club name

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The Philadelphia franchise in the new USFL Football League will be known as the Colonials, Or the Fireworks, Or the Franklins, Generals, Militia, Sentinels, Spirits or Sticks.

These are the eight choices that area sports fans will have to choose from in voting for a nickname for the new team, owner Myles Tannenbaum said Tuesday.

Tannenbaum said that he and his partners came up with the eight names, which they think best represent the Philadelphia area.

"These names recall our area's historic heritage, and we prefer to identify our team in every way with our traditions," Tannenbaum said.

He said that voters can call the team office at (215) 337-1250 or write to the team at P.O. Box 135, King of Prussia, Pa.

The results of the voting will be announced during the week of Aug. 2, Tannenbaum said.

Pre-NCAA cage tourney elimination round gives 4 more schools a chance to triumph MISSION, Kan. (UPI) — The NCAA Tuesday announced it will retain its 48-team postseason basketball championship but will initiate a pre-tournament elimination round, giving a total of 52 schools a chance to win national title.

The 1982-83 tournament begins with 28 Division I teams and 20 Division II teams and 24 at-large teams. The Final Four, to be held at the Louisiana Superdome in New Orleans, the site of the 1982 championship, and the 1988 championship to Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., which will be the site of the 1983 regional.

The plan, which was proposed by the NCAA for the 1983 tournament, 28 Division I conferences are to send representatives to the tournament. But of those 28 schools, teams from eight conferences are to meet in a March 15 pre-tournament elimination round. The four winners advance to the regular bracket, which would also include 20 automatic qualifiers and 24 at-large teams.

The NCAA said the March 15 games would be played at neutral sites. One double-header would pit the representative of the Midwestern City Conference against the Eastern College Athletic Conference's Metropolitan-South champion and the Ivy League winner vs. the East Coast Conference representative.

In the other double-header, the Eastern College Athletic Conference North champion would play the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference representative and the Trans-America Conference winner would meet the team from the Southwestern Athletic Conference.

The four winners would be placed as No. 12 seeds in each of the four regionals. The losers would be awarded a share of championship receipts equal to a first-round loss.

"The committee feels this expanded field provides for a conference that meets the criteria for automatic qualification a chance to compete for the championship," said David Gavett, Division I basketball committee chairman.

"At the same time, it creates a balance in the 48-team bracket of 24 automatic qualifiers and 24 at-large selection."

The procedure for selecting the conference that would compete in the preliminary games would be reviewed each year, and there probably would be different conferences participating in these games each year.

Westhead lures Temple head man Casey to join Chicago Bulls' staff as assistant PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Don Casey, now over by the soft-shell approach of Chicago Bulls' Coach Paul Westhead, resigned as Temple coach Tuesday to become Westhead's assistant and join the growing ranks of former Big 5 men in the NBA.

Casey, who compiled a 151-94 record in his nine years as Owls' head coach, said he has signed a two-year contract with the Bulls and expects to join the club July 15 at rookie camp.

Casey wouldn't discuss his salary as Westhead's first assistant, but said it was less than a reported $55,000 per year.

Casey said his decision to go to Chicago was made quickly, but not easily. He said he didn't want to uproot his family from their home in Hickory Township, N.J.

But in the end, he said, "Paul Westhead offered me an opportunity and I just took advantage of that opportunity with the idea that I've got to take the challenge of an assistant in the NBA and look at it that way rather than emotionally. That was difficult for me to have to admit that."

Casey, 54, said Westhead telephoned him early last week and offered him the job but didn't push him.

"He didn't play the role of a listener, you know, come with me because it's a 30-year-in-a-lifetime challenge," Casey said. "He just weighed things to me as I questioned him. At no time did he try to — and I'm grateful for it — paint a picture as something I absolutely have to do."

PAUL WESTHEAD Didn't 'push' Casey

"We're friendly," Casey added. "It was like a call from an old friend."

Westhead, fired by the Los Angeles Lakers in November, joined Chicago in June. Westhead at one time coached La Salle, Temple's Big 5 rival.

Casey's resignation, which takes effect July 31, was submitted to Temple president Peter Lacomaras.

"It is with sincere regret that I accept your resignation," Lacomaras said. "You have been a good and loyal Temple man from your earliest years, first as a student and then as assistant coach and most recently as the head coach."

Just seven weeks ago Lacomaras was reported ready to buy out the remaining two years of Casey's contract. But Casey secured a promise that the final two years would be honored.

Casey is the latest Big 5 coach to jump to the NBA. Jim Lynam last year left St. Joseph's to be assistant under Jack Ramsay at Portland. Jack McKinney, another one-time St. Joe's coach, is now head coach at Indiana. Penna. Bob Weinstauer resigned in April to become head coach of Arizona State.

Of the NBA-Big 5 connection, Casey said: "It's a line of friendship and respect for one's ability, feeling comfortable, the chemistry and all that instead of going elsewhere (to recruit coaches)."

Saudis forfeit some clout with fellow OPEC members

By ROZLISTON
United Press International

The breakdown of OPEC's emergency summit on production and pricing could mean Saudi Arabia — America's largest foreign oil supplier — has forfeited some of its clout within the 13-nation group, analysts say.

Analysis

U.S. consumers may see falling gasoline and heating oil prices if OPEC's rebel members continue to overproduce and discount their crude, moves that could trigger rampant price cutting in the already surfeited world oil market.

Gasoline and heating oil prices on the U.S. spot market, where oil is sold to the highest bidder, dropped by 2 to 3 cents a gallon Monday in reaction to the OPEC statement.

Saudi Arabia might have averted the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' failure to agree in Vienna this past weekend on maintaining its production ceiling in face of widespread cheating by Iran, Libya and Nigeria, analysts said.

Oil production quotas of OPEC

Bar chart showing oil production quotas in millions of barrels per day for various OPEC countries. Saudi Arabia is the highest at 1.20 million barrels per day.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, who did not attend the Vienna meeting presumably because of his kingdom's political breach with Iran, was "the one person with the talent to help OPEC reach an accord," Tovey said.

"It is worrisome that Saudi Arabia is letting emotionalism and political considerations creep into its oil policy," said William Randol, senior oil analyst at First Boston Corp. in New York.

Some OPEC members reportedly were willing to raise the production quota for Iran — the worst offender — but the Saudis refused to lower their output to keep OPEC's overall 17.5-million barrel-a-day ceiling intact.

"The Saudis appear unwilling to cut their own production further to stabilize the world oil market," Randol said, "but ultimately they must be the market balancer of last resort."

Although Saudi Arabia did not join OPEC's unprecedented agreement to curb production April 1 in a bid to prevent prices from collapsing under the global oil glut, the kingdom slashed its output by 1.5 million barrels daily as a gesture of goodwill.

But with the quotas breakers gaining market share at the Saudis' expense, the kingdom now is making noises about lowering its $34-a-barrel price.

"But it appears Saudi Arabia's power position is eroding," said Joseph Tovey of Tovey & Co. in New York.

Airlines drop orders for jets

SEATTLE (UPI) — Two airlines have cancelled orders for Boeing jets, Boeing Co. officials announced.

Mexicana Airlines had ordered six 727-200 jets, with deliveries scheduled for June and November of this year through June 1983.

The sluggish economy was blamed for the cancellations by both airlines.

Building in Boise continues decline

BOISE (UPI) — Construction in Boise and Ada County continues to dwindle.

The number of building permits issued during the first six months of 1982 dropped for the fourth year in a row.

Between January and June, the Boise Building Department issued 3,758 construction permits, down for four straight years from the 5,000 permits issued for the first six months of 1978.

Ada County figures were similar: a total of 392 permits were issued in the first six months of 1982, compared with 1,052 in 1978.

Hearings next month in Penn Square failure

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A congressional committee will hold hearings next month into the failure of the Penn Square Bank in Oklahoma City, officials said Tuesday.

Rep. Bernard St. Germain, D-R.I., chairman of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, said the hearings will be held over a number of weeks in Washington and Oklahoma City.

"The Penn Square failure raises a multitude of significant banking issues and it is our intention to explore all aspects of this case," St. Germain said.

St. Germain said he wanted to explore whether federal officials took sufficient action in a timely fashion once they learned of the problem and did they make full use of their powers.

He said he was also interested in looking into the actions of the bank, supervisory agencies, auditors and the Federal Reserve System.

Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., wrote St. Germain requesting the hearings. "I am not interested in placing blame. I am interested in seeing that the financial regulatory agencies perform their jobs in a capable manner. And I want to make certain that there are no other Penn Squares waiting out there to happen," he said.

"We can only get answers to all of these questions with a full and complete investigation and public hearing," he said.

Food safety procedures proposed

By SONJA HILLGREN
United Press International
WASHINGTON—A council financed by food and agribusiness corporations has proposed detailed procedures that government regulators could follow in evaluating if food additives should be permitted in the marketplace.

The procedures are expected to be useful to the executive branch and Congress in reviewing food safety risks and procedures.

Whether the ban a substance linked to cancer, the decision process would permit use of substances found to have low cancer risk to humans if there was reasonable certainty no harm would result from its use.

The Food Safety Council issued a pre-publication version of its report in March. With publication of the final version in June, the council went out of business. The report is entitled "A Proposed Food Safety Evaluation Process."

Tough issues that would be addressed under the proposed decision-making process would be ones like the highly publicized controversies on saccharin and sodium nitrite.

Saccharin is the artificial sweetener kept in the marketplace only through an act of Congress after it was linked to cancer in animals. Sodium nitrite is the meat preservative on which the Carter administration wanted to phase in a ban after research linked it to cancer. But the issue was dropped when a review of the initial study found insufficient evidence linking nitrite to cancer.

In publishing the final report, J.B. Cordaro, the executive director of the council, said he could not predict what regulatory decision would be made for any specific substance under the process.

The council, created in 1976, was financed by corporations like General Foods, Coca-Cola, Dow Chemical, H.J. Heinz, Pillsbury and Hershey Foods. Cordaro said he believed the credibility of the study was ensured by the structure of the board of trustees. Half of the members represented consumer, environmental, public interest and academic sectors. The rest represented business.

Revolving food safety laws has been discussed for several years but Congress has failed to tackle the controversial issue. Now the administration is close to advancing a proposal. The basic thrust of all legislative proposals is to base regulatory findings on the significance of risk rather than to seek zero risk.

Central to discussion of food safety is the 1958 Delaney amendment, which requires banning of any food additives found to induce cancer in animals or man. Critics of the Delaney clause say that it was enacted when laboratory tests were much less specific. Any substance detected then was sure to be harmful. That is not necessarily the case now when parts per trillion of a substance can be measured.

The food and agricultural industries have been highly vocal in calling for revision of the laws that govern about 2,700 food additives and 33 color additives in food regulated by the Food and Drug Administration.

The council said the report represents a broad consensus arrived at by diverse interests that deal with the report over the past six years.

On the other side of the coin, some groups say they would like the laws tightened by closing a loophole that exempts additives in use before 1958 from the Delaney clause.

Advocating a tighter law, Bruce Silverplate of the Washington-based Center for Science in the Public Interest said he feared the council's decision process might let dangerous additives fall through loopholes.

He opposes reliance on qualitative risk assessment because he believes techniques for measuring risk are not well enough developed. And he said relying on mutagenicity tests to see if an additive had an effect on genes may not be sufficient to determine if it causes cancer.

"We believe the most interesting facet of the report is that it recommends no new legislative changes," he said.

The council said the most difficult issue it faced involved substances that cause cancer in animals. In deciding whether to reject a substance or perform further analysis, the "basic for decision is relevance to human safety," the council said.

A substance would be banned if scientific studies established cancer dangers relevant to humans.

Noting that the government currently does not have published guidelines for the sequence of testing substances, the report suggests an evaluation and testing sequence with 49 steps. It is called a decision tree.

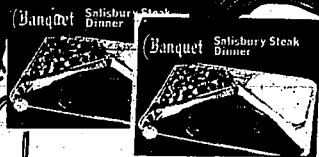

The council said the sequence should be set by agencies when legislation or regulation because the science of toxicology is evolving.

"Rather the decision-tree approach should be used as a general guideline by regulatory agencies when determining the appropriate test protocol and sequence of testing to be employed based on available knowledge," the report said.

The council recommends broad and effective participation in decision-making by all affected interests, such as scientists, consumers, food companies and farmers.

Bread recipe is figured by computer
 By DICK POTHER
 Knight-Ridder Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA — Drexel University researcher Stephen E. Dubin picked up a knife, cut a slice from his loaf of bread and offered it to a visitor at his laboratory Thursday. "Tastes pretty good, right?"

The answer was a definite yes, which might have been unexpected in view of the fact that the recipe for the bread was created by a computer.

The recipe for "Dr. Dubin's Computer Bread," as some Drexel people call it, came from a Digital FDP-12 computer at Drexel as an example of the kind of help computer recipes can offer to vegetarians, along with general consumers. The computer, on the other hand, could design a low-protein bread that would meet the needs of kidney patients.

The computer-designed bread is no idle project just to make something good to eat. Dubin said he works long and hard to make his bread the right way.

"I've probably baked 30 loaves since I started work on the project about three years ago," he said.

Among other advantages, "Dr. Dubin's computer bread" contains more than twice as much protein per slice as commercial white bread. The bread is also money-saving, because its ingredients — honey, powdered milk, whole-wheat flour and 80y granules, among other things — cost only about 30 cents a loaf. The ingredients are, in just the right proportions, designed to maximize protein and minimize calories, Dubin explained.

"But it takes me four hours to make it and bake it. If I had to sell this commercially, considering the time involved, I just couldn't do it," said Dubin, who is a researcher and professor in Drexel's Biomedical Engineering and Science Institute.

Dubin, who is the staff veterinarian for Drexel animals, is also a vegetarian, which makes him a vegetarian veterinarian.

One of his research areas is the use of computers — now in the laboratory but ultimately in the home — to design foods and diets that maximize the food's nutrition for as little money as possible, or that help patients with kidney failure eat the proper mix of foods.

So far, the research has centered on the problem of supplying the right amounts and mixtures of various protein sources to create the optimum protein mixture.

"Protein," Dubin said, is made up of 20 chemical building blocks called amino acids, eight of which cannot be synthesized by the body.

"For example, wheat flour is limited as a source of protein because it is low in one of those essential amino acids, lysine. It is high in another, methionine.

"Those foods, together, add up to a good source of protein. There are many foods that are, by themselves, poor sources of protein, but together are high in protein."

The problem is, he said, that calculating all these possible combinations to reach a desired mixture "takes literally hours, by hand. I spent 4 1/2 hours doing one calculation, using a hand calculator. Then I fed it all into a computer, which does the work in minutes."

What the computer produces, he explained, is a recipe "predicted to be the best possible combination of essential amino acids," based on food values programmed into the computer.

"You can't let the computer be totally automatic, though. For example, one time I asked it for the best combination of milk, peanut butter and bread for the best balance of essential amino acids.

"The answer came out, 'Use all milk.' Clearly, you have to use some intuition, too."

"Another question the computer can't answer is, is the bread bakeable or edible?"

The current version of Dubin's computer bread is a high-protein, nutty tasting whole-wheat bread that is fairly heavy and light-brown in color. A single slice supplies about four grams of usable protein, nearly enough to meet the average adult requirement for protein.

The computer can easily maximize the ingredients for any particular purpose, Dubin explained.

For example, patients with kidney failure must sharply limit their intake of protein, sodium, potassium and water. But they must also eat a sufficient number of calories, he said.

"It's a tough, tedious diet to live with for someone who already has a life-threatening disease. The nutritional elements in it all interact with each other. If you add or subtract just one item, you have to recalculate the rest of the diet to take the change into account."

Dubin said he believed the use of small computers in the home would make computerized recipes more common not only for medical patients, but for individuals and families seeking to save money but still eat well.

"Protein from animal sources — milk, meat, and dairy products — is getting more expensive while computers are getting cheaper. Within a few years, I think, people will be creating recipes on the home computers to eat a better diet for less money."

Old favorite foods still star in summer weekend picnics

By BEV BENNETT
Chicago Sun-Times

There's no better way to spend a weekend than to pack a picnic basket full of all-American favorites.

Save those trendy dishes for other occasions. A summer picnic is a time when children or family favorites are most appropriate.

Cherish the flavors of succulent fried chicken, smoky baked beans and potato salad. The familiar dishes are as comfortable a part of an outing as a red-checked picnic cloth.

There's a fried chicken recipe that James Beard claims as a favorite. Although the dish is easy to make, Beard has elevated its preparation to an exact science.

The baked bean dish is part of the early American menu featured at the White Gull Inn in Fish Creek, Wis. The chef puts a bean mixture in the oven in the morning and lets the ingredients simmer all day.

Yogurt and dilid used by New York caterers and food store owners Sheila Lukins and Julie Russo transform an everyday potato salad into a tangy, refreshing dish. The recipe offered here is an adaptation of the one in the Silver Palate Cookbook. That version uses more onion seasoning.

The summer fruit salad — well, that is just a small suggestion. Liqueur seems to bring out fruit's naturally sweet taste. Some people enjoy a sprinkling of sweetened coconut or silvered almonds in a fruit salad.

"Essential," called "fabulous" carrot cake, is one of the best to reach the Chicago Sun-Times food department.

Lynn Morrall and Cornelia Fogie, who worked on "Picnics & Tailgate Parties" cookbook ($4.95, Sunset Books), have some tips for putting sparkle into the day.

Yogurt Potato Salad
Time: about 1 hour
Cost: less than $3

5 cups cooked, peeled potatoes
1 cup sliced celery
¼ cup finely chopped scallion
¼ cup peeled and chopped onion
1 cup plain yogurt
½ cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon fresh, chopped dillweed
1 teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
1 cup cherry tomatoes, stemmed and halved

Combine ingredients, except tomatoes, and stir gently, but well. Store in refrigerator until serving. Just before serving, garnish with cherry tomatoes and serve in 8 to 8 servings. Recipe easily can be doubled or tripled.

White Gull Inn's Baked Beans
Time: about 6 hours
Cost: less than $6.50

2 pounds dry navy beans
2 onions, chopped
1 cup firmly packed brown sugar
3 cup chopped bacon (about ¼ pound)

1 tablespoon each salt and pepper
¾ cup molasses cup-and-a-half cup ketchup
Put beans in large pot. Add water to more than cover by about ¼ inch. Bring to boil. Sidm foam off top. Cover pot and reduce heat. Simmer beans for 45 minutes, checking occasionally to make sure water continues to cover beans.

Either spoon beans into roasting pan with cover or if there's room, keep in same pan and add remaining ingredients. Cover pan.
Place in pre-heated 325-degree oven and bake for 6 hours, checking about 3 times during baking to make sure beans haven't dried out. Makes about 30 servings.

Southern Fried Chicken
Time: about 1 hour
Cost: less than $3.60 (from "The New James Beard")

1 to 1½ cups flour
¼ teaspoon fresh ground black pepper

2 (2½- to 3-pound) frying chickens, cut into 4 drumsticks, 4 thighs, 4 breast halves, 2 backs and 2 necks
¼ cup oil for frying (or substitute peanut or corn oil if you prefer)
Mix flour and seasonings in plastic bag. Add chicken pieces and shake well. Then remove and rub in flour so meat is well coated. Let pieces stand on cutting board for 30 minutes before frying.

In 2 large heavy skillets, melt enough lard to come up to ¼ inches in pan (or use same amount of oil). When hot, fit chicken pieces without crowding; otherwise, you won't get an even color.

Start pan of white meat 5 minutes after dark. Add necks and backs to pan of white meat after 5 minutes. When reduced to cook chicken more slowly, and keep turning. You don't want chicken to stew in fat but to cook to a delicious crispness. Total cooking time, according to how you like your meat done, is 20 to 25 minutes for dark meat, 15 to 20 minutes for white meat and 10 to 15 minutes for necks and backs. Gauge your timing carefully.

Remove cooked chicken to paper towels to drain briefly, then arrange on hot platter. Makes 8 servings.

Note: In his book Beard writes that he fries white meat in 1 pan and dark meat in another pan. If dark and white are cooked together, he suggests browning the pieces, then putting white meat on top of dark for final cooking so chicken stays warm without overcooking in the fat.

He prefers moist and juicy chicken with perhaps a bit of pink remaining on the dark meat, so he uses the minimum time suggested above.

Fabulous Carrot Cake
Time: about 1½ hours (without frosting)

Cost: less than $6.80

1 (20-ounce) can crushed pineapple in syrup
¼ pound butter, softened
1 cup packed brown sugar
1 cup granulated sugar
4 eggs
1 cup carrots, peeled, trimmed and shredded
1 cup raisins
2 teaspoons vanilla
3 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 teaspoon ground ginger
½ teaspoon salt Cream cheese frosting (optional, recipe follows)

Drain pineapple well, pressing out excess syrup with back of spoon.
Cream butter and sugars until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs until blended. Beat in pineapple, carrots, raisins and vanilla. Combine flour, soda, cinnamon, ginger and salt. Beat small amounts of dry ingredients into pie-ace mixture until well-blended. Pour into greased and floured 13-by-9-inch baking pan. Bake in pre-heated 350-degree oven for 50 to 60 minutes or until toothpick inserted comes out clean. Cool completely. Makes 20 servings.
Note: Cake can be frosted if it is be eaten soon; otherwise, serve it plain. Frosting will melt and may even spoil if kept unrefrigerated for several hours in warm weather.

Cream Cheese Frosting:
1 (8-ounce) package cream cheese, softened
¼ pound butter, softened
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1 teaspoon fresh grated lemon peel
1½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar
Cream cheese and butter until light and fluffy. Beat in lemon juice and peel. Gradually beat in confectioners' sugar until well-blended and smooth.
Fruit Salad
Time: about 1 hour

Cost: less than $3.90

2 cups each sliced hull strawberries; sliced peaches; seedless grapes (or halves if large) and cubed cantaloupe
Sugar to taste
Grand Marnier to taste
Lemon juice
Prepare fruits. If not being mixed with sugar and Grand Marnier, immediately sprinkle fruit with a little lemon juice. Add sugar to taste, splash of Grand Marnier. Let sit for minutes. Taste and adjust flavors necessary. This can be made a day advance and refrigerated until pic time. Makes about 12 servings.

Willetta Warberg Eggplant bows into season

Times-News correspondent

Volumptuous Miss Garden America — purple-skinned eggplant — is bowing into season within the next few weeks. Now would be a good time to examine the ways this low-calorie vegetable can be used.

We enjoy it because we've learned ways to fix the delicacy without letting it soak up a lot of oil as many recipes designate.

Here are a few uncomplicated methods of preparing fresh eggplant.

BOILED EGGPLANT
1 large eggplant, stemmed vegetable or olive oil salt
Put broiler shelf 6 to 7 inches from heat source. Turn on broiler. Cut eggplant into 8 lengthwise wedged strips, as you would a melon, leaving skin on to hold flesh together while it boils. Place wedges on broiler tray. Lightly brush the white flesh of each strip with oil. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Put under broiler; broil 5 to 8 minutes, or until eggplant becomes golden brown. Serve immediately as meat, poultry or fish companion.

GRILLED EGGPLANT KABOBS
1 large eggplant, stemmed, peeled and cut into 2-inch cubes highly seasoned, low-calorie homemade or commercial Italian salad dressing.
In bowl, put eggplant cubes and salad dressing; coat eggplant cubes. Cover; let stand at least 1 hour. Thread eggplant on skewers; slowly grill eggplant over hot coals and baste often with salad dressing. Serve hot with grilled meat, poultry or fish.

EGGPLANT SALAD
1 large eggplant, stemmed only, cut into 2-inch pieces leaving skin on ¼ cup vegetable or olive oil
1 medium-sized sweet onion, peeled and chopped
1 large clove garlic, peeled and mashed
1 large tomato, peeled and chopped
1 tablespoons more vegetable or olive oil salt and pepper to season to taste
1 tablespoon drained capers

½ cup drained pimento-stuffed green olives
Put eggplant pieces, flesh side up, on piece of foil; sprinkle lightly with salt; let stand at least 15 minutes. In medium-sized skillet, put ¼ cup oil. Add eggplant; cook 4 minutes, turning until lightly browned. Add onion, garlic, tomato, parsley and 2 tablespoons more oil. Cover; slowly cook vegetables 30 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove cover; let vegetables simmer about 10 minutes longer. Remove skillet from heat; stir in capers and olives. Season with salt and pepper. Serve on lettuce leaves as salad. Or, may serve as an appetizer with crusty chunks of bread or crackers. This eggplant salad will keep covered in refrigerator for at least 10 days.

FRIED EGGPLANT SLICES
¾ cup bread crumbs
½ cup grated Parmesan cheese
2 eggs
1 teaspoon celery salt
pinch white pepper
1 large eggplant, stemmed, peeled and sliced crosswise into ½-inch thick slices
2 eggs beaten with 2 tablespoons milk
½ cup vegetable oil, margarine or butter

PAPRIKA
In small bowl, combine bread crumbs, grated cheese, plain salt, celery salt and white pepper; set aside. Coat eggplant slices with flour; dip into egg and milk mixture; then dip into bread crumb mixture. In skillet, heat oil, margarine or butter. Add coated eggplant slices, one at a time, and brown on both sides. Drain slices on paper towels. Serve immediately as vegetable accompaniment to meat, poultry or fish.
THE WEEK'S BEST MARKET BUYS: Special buys are few and far between. Eggplant will begin to cost less as soon as locally grown vegetables start flooding our markets. The weather should stay warm now so we can expect better prices on all fresh produce. Meats are still costly and our best way to get around their prices, is chunking, marinating, skewering and grilling the tidbits.

Mangos unknown fruit

By ROBERT STRUBE
Chicago Sun-Times

Eating a mango will be a new taste experience for most people, because only about 15 percent of the U.S. population has tried one.

Mangos are available throughout the year, but their peak season is June through August with July the heavy producing month.

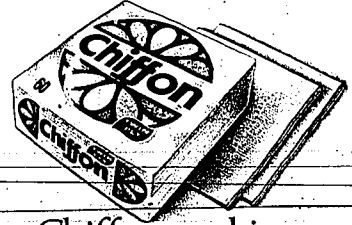

You will find mangos in two different shapes: oval and kidney. Skin color may be yellow, green or bluish with red or yellow. Whatever variety you choose, the inside flesh is golden yellow with a flat oval seed in the center.

Mangos are ready to eat when they yield to gentle pressure. If you buy firm mangos, let them ripen at room temperature for a few days. You will notice the skin of most mangos becomes tinged with more red or yellow color as the fruit ripens. Refrigerate ripe mangos if you do not plan to use them immediately. They will keep for several days. If you use only a part of a mango, cover the unused fruit tightly with plastic wrap and refrigerate.

To serve mangos on the half shell, cut the fruit in half lengthwise and gently separate the halves. Remove the seed carefully. Scoop the fruit right from the shell or enjoy it topped with chicken salad or cottage cheese. For mango chunks, peel back the skin from each mango half and cut as desired. You can enjoy a mango out of hand, too. Just score the skin in quarters and peel like a banana.

Two delicious sandwiches which contribute to a portable feast are Curried Tuna Packables and Chili Beef Take-Aways

Take picnic basket on vacation trips

NORWALK, Conn.—Summer is the season of the portable feast. More and more travelers going off on vacation trips are opting to bring along a well-stocked picnic basket rather than looking for the nearest fast-food restaurant.

If you prefer dining out under a sunny blue sky overlooking a flower-filled meadow, these two recipes should interest you. They demonstrate what an imaginative approach can do to transform the usually prosaic sandwich into something different and delicious.

The first one, called Curried Tuna Packables, is an unusual contrast of texture and flavor. The tuna fish is combined with the crunchy texture of chopped apple and peanuts, along with bits of celery and onion. Then it is accented with the spiced flavors of curry and garlic powder. All this is spread over slices of robust rye bread, family style.

The colorful influence of Mexico's cuisine is seen in this second recipe for Chili Beef Take-Aways. This is a hearty roast beef sandwich topped with a zesty mixture of refried beans, minced onion, chopped tomato, green chilies, all flavored with chili powder and garlic powder. For the final touch, sprinkle shredded Monterey Jack cheese over the sandwich before putting on the top slice of rye bread.

- CURRIED TUNA PACKABLES
- 1 can, 7 oz., tuna drained and flaked
 - 1/4 cup finely chopped celery
 - 1/4 cup sliced green onion
 - 1/4 cup chopped celery
 - 1/4 cup finely chopped tomato
 - 1/4 cup finely chopped onion
 - 2 tablespoons chopped green chilies
 - 1 teaspoon chili powder
 - 1 generous dash of garlic powder
 - 1/2 thin slices roast beef
 - 1/4 shredded Monterey Jack cheese
- In a bowl, combine first 6 ingredients; blend well. On 6 slices rye bread, arrange lettuce and roast beef. Top with bean mixture and cheese. Top with remaining 6 slices of bread. (Makes 6 sandwiches.)

In a bowl, combine first 6 ingredients. Toss apple with lemon juice. Add to tuna mixture with mayonnaise. Toss to blend. On 4 slices rye bread arrange lettuce. Top with tuna mixture and remaining 4 slices bread. (Makes 4 sandwiches)

- CHILI BEEF TAKE-AWAYS
- 1 can, 16 oz., refried beans
 - 1/2 cup minced onion
 - 1/2 cup finely chopped tomato
 - 1/2 cup finely chopped onion
 - 2 tablespoons chopped green chilies
 - 1 teaspoon chili powder
 - 1 generous dash of garlic powder
 - 1/2 thin slices roast beef
 - 1/4 shredded Monterey Jack cheese
- In a bowl, combine first 6 ingredients; blend well. On 6 slices rye bread, arrange lettuce and roast beef. Top with bean mixture and cheese. Top with remaining 6 slices of bread. (Makes 6 sandwiches.)

Cast iron skillet old tradition

By ROBERT C. MARSH
Chicago Sun-Times

Most of the best food I enjoyed at home as a child was cooked by my father in a large, black iron frying pan that looked as if it were never washed from one year to the next.

That, basically, was correct. My father would pour the fat out of it after each use, wipe it down, and put it back on the stove for the next round. Anything more, he insisted, would ruin its seasoning, and in a cast-iron skillet, seasoning was all.

This reflects a great American cooking tradition. The iron frying pan with its eternal coat of grease traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and in many a Western camp, it was the single cooking utensil at hand.

As my father proved, you can cook a lot of different foods, from pancakes and biscuits to steaks and fried chicken, in a well-seasoned iron skillet—PROVE IT YOURSELF!

I like cooking in cast iron, but I have preferred the type in which a layer of enamel is baked on the surface. Enamelled cast-iron pans do not have to be seasoned and easily can be kept clean. (They may stain a little in time, but that can be attended to easily.)

But recent summers provided a reminder that enamelled cast iron and the bare gray-black metal are not the same. In my Wisconsin cabin I was supplied with cast-iron frying pans, just like Daddy used to use, and I liked them.

There is no perfect material for frying pans. If you want uniform distribution of heat over a large surface, copper is excellent. It is also heavy, expensive and fragile, because it must be lined with tin and must not be permitted to get so hot that the tin will be damaged. (Even if you're careful, retinning is necessary from time to time.)

Aluminum distributes heat well, but aluminum frying pans usually lack the mass that makes them effective heat reservoirs. Stainless steel is easy to clean, but it is not particularly good at distributing heat—an aluminum or copper insert in the bottom is useful. Ceramics are easy to clean too, but I just don't like them.

I was raised with iron, and I guess I retain an inner feeling that cast iron is the right material for the job.

Look at cast iron under a magnifying lens and you will see that it is porous. Seasoning consists of filling the little irregularities and spaces in the surface with fat.

Coupon impact is studied

By SONJA HILLGREN
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Coupons that permit consumers to get nickels and dimes off the price of grocery items are the fastest growing form of food promotion and advertising.

Four of every five American households use coupons to save on their grocery bills. The growing importance of coupons led three Agriculture Department economists to study their impact on the marketplace.

Entitled "Couponing's Growth in Food-Marketing"—the study—said coupons are used primarily for store-brand items rather than less processed perishable products. That leads to questions about the impact of coupons on food choice and nutrition, but the authors did not answer those intriguing questions.

Products with the highest farm value compared to retail value—fresh meats, poultry, eggs, dairy products and fresh produce—are least likely to be sold with coupons. The economists concluded that use of coupons to promote foods with a relatively low farm-value probably has 11 percent of the demand and prices for farm products.

Coffee, tea and cocoa accounted for about 20 percent of the value of all coupons redeemed, but only 3 percent of the value of consumer budgets.

When coffee, prepared foods, breakfast cereals, flour and four mix products are lumped together, they make up about 80 percent of the value of coupons redeemed, but just 10 percent of the consumer food budget.

Soups, baby foods and prepared meals accounted for 16 percent of the value. Breakfast cereals accounted for 11 percent of the value of coupons.

Flour mix products and processed meat, poultry and fish (mostly tuna) each accounted for about 5 percent of the value of coupons. Canned and processed vegetables, bread and rolls, ice cream, candy, desserts, seasonings and spices each accounted for 4 percent of the value.

Food sold with coupons is the most heavily advertised by television, radio, magazines, Sunday supplements and billboards.

"Coupons, as other forms of advertising, may be most effective when used for products which can be distinguished from each other rather than for more homogeneous products like farm commodities," the study said.

Leading food firms tend to issue the most coupons. So some farmer-owned cooperative organizations are marketing more branded products and using coupons, but they are the exception.

Economists Anthony Gallo, Larry Hamm and James Zellmer said the number of coupons distributed by food product manufacturers and retailers grew from 10 billion in 1965 to 90 billion in 1980.

About 60 percent of the value of coupons redeemed in food stores went for food, for a value approaching $900 million.

The economists said coupons make up the smallest portion of major food advertising, but the value rose from less than 6 percent of total advertising in 1970 to 11 percent in 1979 and thus were the fastest growing advertising medium.

About 3.3 cents for every $10 spent by consumers for food pays for the cost of coupons, so consumers who do not use coupons are subsidizing those who do. The average face value of coupons is 23 cents.

But the economists concluded, "There is no hard evidence that food prices would drop in the absence of coupons because manufacturers could shift to other types of advertising."

Manufacturers like coupons to introduce new products, to build brand loyalty and to pass price reductions on to consumers.

Lighter wine

Everything is light these days — on calories, that is. After light beer made its big splash, the nation's wineries decided to get in on a good thing.

Here's a report from Executive Fitness Newsletter on the value of light wine for the physical fitness buffs' viewpoint. The new low-calorie wines are supposed to have a 25 to 30 percent reduction in alcohol, which means that a six-ounce glass should have about 90 calories instead of 120. (It also means the wines would provide good sipping after a jog, one observer pointed out.)

For persons really interested in losing weight, the newsletter warns alcoholic beverages ought to be no-no right from the start. ("Low-calorie alcoholic beverages are like low-calorie chesecake.") But for those who insist on having a glass or two of wine with dinner and have no intention of cutting it out, the light wines would be a way of reducing calories.

Here's one estimate of the food it would do to make the switch: Two glasses of wine a day, at 30 calories fewer a glass, would translate into 21,900 fewer calories a year. According to standard calculations, the number-of-calories-involvement in gaining weight, that's about 6 pounds a year that you wouldn't be gaining from your grape habit.

Also Bastille Today is garlic day at eatery

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — Many a man of good character has been seduced at Chez Panisse.

The mistress of the restaurant, a pale and gentle woman named Alice Waters, says flatly there's "not a single person" who can resist her bouillabaisse.

Once the aroma from the kitchen touches you, the game is over, Ms. Waters has won.

It may be spring lamb or sucking pig, or a baby garlic plant pulled from the garden that morning.

"I like inducing people into something they don't expect, and playing on their smells with the pizza oven, the breads, the bouillabaisse," Ms. Waters said in an interview.

She didn't intend to be a restauratrice when she visited France as a college girl.

"I came back with the idea of having a little country inn, simple but very real food," she said.

At first she cooked for her Berkeley activist friends in the 1960s. Then she drew professors and local professionals to her restaurant in the 1970s. Now food lovers come from all over the world. She has been hailed by respected restaurant critics as a brilliantly creative chef.

July 14, Bastille Day, is garlic day. "People were calling from the East Coast for reservations, but we were all booked up," said Ms. Waters. "We used to run the garlic festival for a week, then two weeks. People wanted to make reservations a year ahead. We cut it back to one day this year."

"We've tried to find interesting and unusual foods and to get them fresh. We'll make the effort to go down to the ocean and get the oysters with the little bugs still crawling on them. You can get them the next day. They'd be two days old. And they're fine, too. But there is a little something different."

Ms. Waters and her employees, whom she calls her family, pick wild mushrooms and wild watercress. They fetch rock cod from the Farallon Islands.

A rancher up north has been taught how the spring lambs are to be prepared. Another grows the sucking pig especially for her restaurant.

Ms. Waters grows unusual lettuces in her Berkeley garden.

A patron grows plain and exotic vegetables especially for the restaurant.

Chef Jean Pierre Mouille has a garden of herbs and lettuce in the Berkeley hills.

"I get excited when I go to the garden," Ms. Waters said. "I guess it's because ... Well, unless you grow them yourself you don't see them anywhere."

"A little baby garlic, before it's formed the cloves, I take it and make a soup out of those, whole. It's a taste of garlic that you've always been looking for. Usually, garlic is too old, or exposed to the air or one thing and another. You know that little special quality the garlic has."

"The menu changes daily and is always a surprise to patrons."

"I get excited when I go to the garden," Ms. Waters said. "There is no choice, and you never know until you come for dinner. Even if you read the menu posted outside, it may not be what you get that night."

Early July is garlic time. "Then, there are the onions that in July taste just like apples."

"We haven't had a tomato in this restaurant for a year. We don't have any tomatoes in this restaurant until it's tomato time, no corn until it's corn time ... You wait a whole year to get the truffles. And then, you savorate yourself at truffle time and then you wait a whole other year."

Patrons who pay $35 each to eat whatever Ms. Waters has found ready that day "mostly seem to be happy" when they leave, she said.

The restaurant serves about 25 diners every night, in two sittings. The cafe upstairs has an à la carte menu and no reservations. It serves 300 to 500 people a day.

Ms. Waters thinks the informality has helped make her restaurant a success.

"There's no wall between the dining room and kitchen. I have an open and interesting waters, but not wearing tuxes. I think people are pleasantly surprised. They can go into the kitchen and say 'I don't really want this' or 'I would like a little more of this.'"

Her recently published "Chez Panisse Menu Cookbook" (Random House $16.95) contains recipes for a lot of the things served at the restaurant.

For example, whole baked garlic with white cheese and peasant bread, split-roasted squash with walleye olive butter, new potatoes in parchment, garden salad and Linda's chocolate cups, to be filled with cream and dropped into after-dinner coffee.

Some of the recipes are simple, but some call for rare things like truffles. "I'm not going to stop mentioning truffles just because they're expensive," said Ms. Waters. "I put them there. If someone ever happens to come across a truffle, they can look it up in my book."

Dear Abby

Sisters' sour notes ruin harmony

DEAR ABBY: My daughter and her husband are well, happy and prosperous. They have been married for 20 years and on the surface all seems ideal, but here is the problem:

They have three daughters, 18, 17 and 13. The two older girls, who are 16 months apart, have always been very competitive. It was our hope that as they grew older this rivalry would fade, but it seems to have intensified instead.

The 18-year-old is very jealous of her younger sister, and she's making life miserable for the rest of the family. The 17-year-old just goes along, having a wonderful time, and does nothing to alleviate the situation.

Both girls are very pretty and popular. The 18-year-old has had the same steady boyfriend for three years. He comes over, they watch TV and sometimes they go out for a hamburger or a movie — nothing terribly glamorous.

The 17-year-old has been dating for only six months, but her boyfriend sends her flowers, takes her to expensive places and is giving her the royal treatment! The 18-year-old is understandably very envious, and she takes it out on the entire family, sulking, slamming doors and taking it out on the entire family in childish and unfair.

Family members can't help her. She needs to unload on a professional counselor. Recommend it. Everyone in the family will benefit.

For my help, I don't know what to tell her, so I am asking you.

— OUT OF IDEAS
DEAR OUT: The older girl is hurting and needs to express herself, candidly to someone who is sympathetic and non-judgmental. She needs to be assured that while her jealousy is understandable and nothing to be ashamed of, sulking, slamming doors and taking it out on the entire family is childish and unfair.

Family members can't help her. She needs to unload on a professional counselor. Recommend it. Everyone in the family will benefit.

will surely ask. They will also want to know if she is an orphan, illegitimate, and other facts about her background. How much should we tell?

Also, would it be proper to send announcements to friends and relatives to let them know that there is a new addition to the family? And if so, would it be in poor taste to mention that the child is Korean?

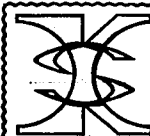

DEAR GRANDMA: An announcement is most certainly in order, and it would not be in poor taste to indicate that the child is from Korea. It isn't necessary to tell anyone the facts of the child's background and history. Simply say that the adoption was arranged through an agency that finds homes for Korean children.

Exotic food now easier to purchase

By BEV BENNETT
Chicago Sun-Times

At a recent meeting of the Food Marketing Institute (a conference for the supermarket industry) in Chicago, a speaker described a formerly exotic produce that is now commonplace in stores. Her examples included bananas and mushrooms.

Other foods haven't hit the big-time yet, but are nevertheless far more accessible than five years ago.

I noted this recently when shopping for cracked wheat, also called bulgur. I used to find it in health-food sections or Middle Eastern departments of my local supermarket. The nutty grain is the basis for a delicious salad I make called tabbouleh.

The dish has become so popular that several companies are offering a tabbouleh mix complete with seasonings. Unfortunately, plain bulgur seems more difficult to find.

So much for success. The recipe I'm offering is a variation on the traditional tabbouleh seasoned with mint. I prefer an onion-garlic flavor and omit the mint. I also add garbanzos to make the dish more substantial.

Bulgur (which looks like bird seed) still can be found in stores specializing in whole grains and in some supermarket health-food sections. Don't buy a seasoned tabbouleh mix to use in its place.

The beans and grain make this dish substantial enough to serve as an entree. A simple sauteed chicken breast, however, would make a nice accompaniment for those who crave something more.

Garbanzo and Cracked Wheat Salad

Time: about 1 hour; 15 minutes
Cost: less than $1.30
1/2 cup bulgur
1/2 cup water
Olive oil

1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
4 tablespoons chopped scallions (finely sliced; 4 scallions should yield 4 tablespoons)
2 large clove garlic, peeled and chopped
1/2 cup chopped tomato (1 small tomato)
1/2 cup canned garbanzo beans (also called chick-peas), drained

Salt and plenty of freshly ground pepper to taste

Place bulgur in serving bowl. Add 1/2 cup water and set aside 30 minutes for water to be absorbed. Stir occasionally. Add about 4 tablespoons olive oil, lemon juice and remaining ingredients. Stir well and set aside for another 30 minutes. Taste. It may be necessary to add more olive oil. The flavor should be slightly, not strongly tart. Makes 2 servings.

Sauteed Chicken

Time: about 20 minutes
Cost: less than $2.10
2 chicken breast halves
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 teaspoons capers

1 teaspoon fresh lemon juice
Salt and pepper to taste
Bone and skin chicken breast halves. Wipe clean of bone chips. Meat butter in skillet. Add chicken and cook about 5 minutes on each side over medium heat until breasts are lightly brown and done in center. Add capers and lemon juice and salt and pepper to taste. Spoon this sauce over chicken and simmer 1 or 2 minutes more. Remove chicken. Pour butter/capers sauce over and serve to 2.

Chicken is hard to beat for summer barbecues or picnics

By CHARLENE NEVADA
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

If you are planning a barbecue, keep chicken high in your pecking order.

It's not only inexpensive, but also easy to prepare, delicious to eat and full of nutrition.

Hamburgers are swell and hotdogs are dandy, but there is something about the smell of barbecue sauce that will have the picnickers waiting in line for chow time.

With mixed fryer parts selling for as low as 50 cents a pound, now is the time to feather your nest.

If you aren't an old hand at barbecuing chicken, there are a few things you should know.

First, decide how you want to cook the chicken — as a whole fryer or in pieces.

For big groups, pieces would probably be best.

For a small group, you might want to consider stuffing a chicken and cooking it whole.

A whole chicken is delicious cooked on a spit. You need do no more than sprinkle the bird with a commercial fried-chicken seasoning while it is cooking. Then sit back and watch the eaters fight over the crispy skin.

Most grills will hold at least two chickens — either side by side on a spit or on the rack in a kettle-type grill. With two chickens, you can feed six to eight comfortably.

Cooking time will vary. Figure at least an hour, depending on the heat of the coals (generally, hot coals are best for spit-cooking). As a rule of thumb, the chicken is done when you can shake its leg.

For larger groups, you would do best with chicken pieces.

Choose your barbecue sauce first. There are a number of excellent bottled sauces on the market. Or, you can make your own and flavor your chicken with everything from tomatoes to lemons to oranges.

If you choose to make your own, make it ahead. You will have enough to attend to once the coals are simmering without worrying about simmering sauce.

Put your coals in a mound and heat until they form a gray ash. Then separate them into one layer. You want the coals medium to medium-hot.

Put the chicken pieces on the grill — three to six inches above the heat — and turn every 10 to 15 minutes. Allow about 45 minutes to cook the pieces.

If you are using a tomato-based sauce or one with lots of sugar or honey, do not baste until the last half of the cooking, since these sauces have a tendency to burn.

If you are in a hurry or are uncomfortable working over the grill, there is one fall-safe way to barbecue your chicken. Pre-cook the chicken pieces in a conventional oven (325 degrees for 30 to 40 minutes) or in a microwave on high, allowing about six minutes per pound.

In the meantime, heat up the coals. When the chicken is pre-cooked the careful not to overcook; place it on the grill, cover with sauce and cook until the pieces are brown and crispy, about 10 minutes.

If you want to try something different, here are some suggestions. First, here is a recipe for a low-calorie

 1/4 cup raisins
 1/4 teaspoon pepper
 1/4 teaspoon ground sage
 1/4 teaspoon thyme leaves
 1/2 teaspoon grated orange peel
 1 stalk celery, chopped

 One-third cup light corn syrup
 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
 One-third cup lemon juice
 1/4 cup corn oil
 1/4 cup finely chopped onion
 1 1/2 teaspoons dried tarragon leaves
 1/4 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon pepper
 Place chicken in shallow dish. In small bowl, stir together remaining ingredients. Pour over chicken. Cover and refrigerate several hours or overnight.

Remove chicken from marinade. Grill six inches from heat, turning and basting with marinade frequently for 45 minutes or until chicken is tender. Serves four.

 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
 1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
 3 lbs. chicken pieces
 3 lbs. beef back ribs
 Garlic salt, pepper
 In medium bowl, combine garlic, onion, ketchup, brown sugar, vinegar, vodka, Worcestershire and mustard. Sprinkle both sides of chicken and ribs with garlic salt and pepper. Place on grill. Cook 45 minutes to one hour, or until tender. During last 20 minutes of cooking, baste generously with sauce, turning frequently. Serves six to eight.

Editor's note

The Times-News purchases dozens of graphics each week and illustrates stories from the Chicago Tribune news wire. We use these graphics to illustrate and explain news stories and features. But we receive many interesting illustrations from our readers. We hope you find them interesting and informative.

Every week our news wire offers an opportunity to see how illustrative there is, especially space to run the artwork with the story. Other times we didn't find a story to go with it. Our designers have assembled some of the most interesting graphics we have been able to use in the past. We hope you find them interesting and informative.

Declarer tried brute force in his attempt to make today's challenging game. The direct approach didn't work and the defenders got themselves a plus score. North's bid of two spades was a variation of the Jacoby Transfer Bid, promising length in both minors. South's rebid of two no trump denuded minor suit length and indicated a preference for playing in no trump.

West led his fourth best heart and declarer won East's jack with his king. Attacking his strongest suit, declarer promptly took a losing club finesse and with that the game was lost. East won and continued hearts to knock out declarer's ace and West's suit was ready to cash before declarer could establish his ninth trick.

A more subtle approach would have landed the game easily. Instead of trying the immediate club finesse, declarer should have led to dummy's club ace to lead a diamond. If East hops up to clear the hearts, declarer can then manage four diamonds, one club, and the two tops in both major suits.

If East ducks the diamond ace, declarer wins and reverts to clubs. East gets his king but declarer now has his nine tricks.

What if West had held the diamond ace? It would no matter. West could not continue the attack on hearts
