Dogged pursuit

Rusty, a Labrador retriever-Irish setter cross, charges after a ball thrown by his owner, Randy Kraft, 25, of Twin Falls. Kraft, who was exercising Rusty and his other dog, Goldi, in Harmon Park late Friday afternoon, says the two dogs "will chase balls forever."

1982 inflation a 10-year low

Prices climb only 3.9 percent

By DENIS G. GUIANO-United Press International

WASHINGTON — Consumer prices dipped 0.3 percent in December, holding inflation for 1982 to 3.9 percent — the best rate for any year in a decade, the government reported Friday.

The dollar, in its steadiest performance since 1972, lost just 1.3 cents in purchasing power last year, Labor Department figures showed.

Since 1967, the dollar has lost nearly two-thirds of its purchasing power to inflation and in December it was worth only 34.2 cents in goods and services compared to that benchmark year.

Lower mortgage interest rates and fuel price declines, despite skyrocketing natural gas prices, and the influence of a lingering recession helped bring last year's inflation rate down dramatically from 1981's rate of 8.9 percent.

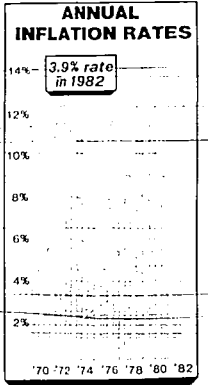

Gasoline was 6.6 percent cheaper and mortgage rates dropped about 4 percentage points over the year. Natural gas climbed more than 25 percent in price during the year.

Another major moderating influence was the slow rise in food costs. Up a modest 3.2 percent in 1982, the least since 1976.

Affecting all the categories in varying degrees was the severe recession, which drove the unemployment rate to 10.8 percent, forced cautious consumers to choose sale prices and discounts and also held down demand for fuel.

"The decline in prices primarily reflects the renewed decline in the economy," said Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers.

As businesses are forced to offer discounts to get rid of unsold surpluses, "it is inevitable that prices would fall," he said.

In another report Friday, the Commerce Department said new orders for the "big ticket" durable goods vital to an economic recovery shot up 12 percent in December, the most ever for one month. While durable orders for the entire year were 10.1 percent under 1981, the latest report prompted many analysts in and out of government to say the long-awaited economic recovery may already be under way.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker, whose "tight money" policies helped knock down the inflation rate, said in a speech Thursday night consumers this year "can and should look to further declines in the inflation rate."

Soviets say it's no big deal

World prepares for satellite's crash to Earth

By LEON BURNETT-United Press International

Emergency teams the world around stood ready Friday for the fiery return of a big fragment from Russia's derelict spy satellite, expected to rain radioactive debris somewhere on Earth Sunday or Monday.

Western space watchers declined to speculate where the remains might hit. But the Soviet government predicted the chunk of metal would plummet out of orbit into the Arabian Sea area late Sunday or early Monday Eastern Standard Time.

The remains of the spaceship, in the throes of terminal "orbital decay," already had reached the fringes of the atmosphere, and as of 12:22 p.m. MST, had dropped nearly three miles in just eight hours.

At that time, the derelict's closest approach to Earth on a slightly lopsided orbit was 102.6 miles, just within the atmosphere's normal outer boundary.

Two sections of the Soviet nuclear-powered satellite, Cosmos 1402, are currently in decaying orbits and descending into the Earth's atmosphere," the Pentagon reported.

One of the fragments, the smaller one possibly carrying the core of the spaceship's uranium power supply, was not expected to plunge from orbit until mid-February. But the Pentagon statement said:

"Based on our experience in association with the Canadian government in cleaning up the radioactive debris from the re-entry of the Soviet satellite Cosmos 954 in 1978, both sections of Cosmos 1402 are believed to be radioactive."

The official news agency Tass, however, dismissed as a "stream of impudent lies and slander" the warnings from Washington, saying the purpose was to divert attention "from the unprecedented arms race that has been launched by the United States."

The new readings on the derelict's path enabled Pentagon officials to narrow their estimate of when it is likely to come flaming back to Earth — any time between 4:45 a.m. MST Sunday and 6:17 a.m. Monday.

But the Pentagon statement said: "It is not yet possible to name even a general area of the world over which re-entry will occur. We would hope that the Soviets would provide timely prediction information as well, based on their knowledge of the satellite's characteristics."

The Soviets did just that later Friday, notifying U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar in a communique that the main part of the spaceship was expected to descend Monday over the "region of the Arabian Sea."

The twin forces of gravity and atmospheric friction will seal the doom of the two-ton hulk — but only in the final few hours will space watchers be able to predict just where between the Arctic and Antarctic circles the drama will end.

That friction will burn up the bulk of the debris, but observers expect some radioactive remains to smack down on Earth's surface. That happened in 1978, when an earlier Soviet spaceship dumped debris on a remote section of northwest Canada.

The fragments are given a 70 percent chance of falling in the ocean, since that much of the world is water, and only a 2 percent chance of hitting the United States.

Anticipation of Cosmos 1402's return ranged from playful to playful — reminiscence of the days in 1979 when the world awaited the return of America's Skylab, but with a generally more serious tone this time because of the nuclear pollution threat.

Federal emergency teams trained in dealing with radioactivity, along with those in many states, were poised to rush to the scene in the event the debris hits anywhere in the United States. Canada's radiation-detection search equipment was, again, on standby.

Stivers: mortgage plan best

By STEVEN CHRISTENSEN-United Press International

BOISE — House Speaker Tom Stivers said Friday it is almost certain the Legislature will have to approve the borrowing of up to $50 million against several state buildings as the only way to alleviate Idaho's revenue shortfall without massive tax hikes.

The Twin Falls Republican said the current plan of the GOP-controlled Legislature is to sell public buildings to the state Building Authority or another as-yet-uncreated entity, then have that agency take out mortgages on the property from local banks to raise up to $50 million.

Transfer of building titles to the authority or another body would sidestep legal and constitutional problems with the state taking out property mortgages, he added.

The mortgages would be paid back in less than two years by imposing a temporary one-cent hike in the sales tax — expected to generate at least $30 million annually, the speaker said.

Funds from the loans, combined with budget cuts and a $6-million reduction in public-school funding,

REP. TOM STIVERS Outlines budget plan

during taping of the KTVB-TV "Viewpoint" program.

A previous proposal to issue bonds against the public buildings to raise funds was scrapped in favor of the mortgage program, he added.

"Our proposal now is not to go a borrowing route, but to go straight to a mortgage route through local banks. That would keep the money in Idaho, and the banks are willing to cooperate with us," Stivers said.

He said the only other way to significantly bite into the shortfall would be to impose tax hikes on residents and businesses.

Such tax increases, Stivers said, could not be absorbed by the private sector.

But a Democratic member of a select Senate subcommittee on the revenue problem, Assistant Minority Leader Ron Beltschpaecher of Grangeville, offered an alternative to the mortgage proposal.

Beltschpaecher's plan calls for alleviation of the shortfall by imposing a temporary 1.5-cent sales tax hike to raise $22.5 million, boosting corporate taxes by 1 percent for $300,000, and enacting a deficiency levy on property taxes to raise another $23.8 million.

Reagan seeks tax increase

By ROBERT MACKAY-United Press International

WASHINGTON — President Reagan will propose in his 1983 budget about $135 billion in contingency taxes that would take effect in later years if the deficit is too high, officials said Friday.

The contingency tax package, the last major decision made by Reagan on the budget he submits to Congress Jan. 31, would take effect Oct. 1, 1983, only if the deficit is higher than about $100 billion, administration officials said.

Several leading Republican congressional leaders had advised Reagan against including such a contingency tax plan in his budget, telling him Congress would not enact tax increases this year even on a "standby" basis.

Administration officials, who asked not to be identified, said Reagan will ask for a combination of energy taxes and an income surtax to raise $40 billion to $50 billion in fiscal 1986 and a total of about $135 over a three-year period.

MARTIN FELDSTEIN Explains Reagan's position

They said specific details had not been worked out.

Officials said one of the possible items in the package is a fee on each barrel of oil imported by the United States. This could make gasoline about 12 cents a gallon more expensive, they said.

Only last month, Congress enacted a highway repair bill that raises gasoline taxes 5 cents a gallon.

At the White House, the president's chief economic adviser, Martin Feldstein, told reporters a fee on imported oil would drive up the inflation rate, but only temporarily.

"It will be a one-time increase if such a cost were imposed... as opposed to a continuing ratcheting up of the price level, which is really what inflation is all about," Feldstein said.

Another item in the package is a one-time 4 percent to 5 percent surtax on income, similar to one President Lyndon Johnson imposed to help pay for the Vietnam War.

The government also may try to tax employees for part of the health insurance contributions made by their employers, which could raise as much as $9.7 billion in fiscal 1986.

CBS reports on murder plot

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Edwin Wilson, a former CIA agent convicted of smuggling arms to Libya, allegedly plotted from his prison cell to hire hit squads to kill two federal prosecutors and five witnesses. It was reported Friday night.

CBS News said federal authorities are charging Wilson attempted to arrange the contract slayings of the two Justice Department prosecutors coordinating three upcoming trials against him, and at least five major witnesses scheduled to testify in those cases in Houston and Washington.

The network said the federal government, in court papers served with Wilson's defense lawyers, accuse Wilson of arranging from his New York prison cell the delivery of a $10,000 down payment for the killings to an intermediary — along with a hit list. The courier was Wilson's son; the intermediary an undercover FBI agent who helped break up the alleged plot last week, CBS said.

Draft resisters' student aid cut

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Young men seeking federal student aid will be required to certify they have registered for the draft, under regulations proposed Friday for an already challenged law.

The measure requiring draft registration of eligible male recipients of student aid was passed by Congress last year and signed by President Reagan.

The law is today and the government will carry out its responsibilities fairly but firmly," Bell said. "The message is simple. No registration, no student aid."

Southern storm dumps snow

By United Press International

A massive storm packing freezing rain and snow fanned north from the South Friday, dumping 16 inches of snow on the Texas Panhandle and making travel hazardous from New Mexico to West Virginia.

Today's weather

Partly cloudy in Utah today with increasing clouds and widely scattered showers on Sunday. Highs in the 30s. Lows in the 20s.

Synopsis:
An approaching storm off the Pacific Ocean will produce windy, unsettled weather over Idaho today, with rain and snow arriving tonight.

This major storm will be preceded by slightly warmer temperatures and strong, gusty winds.

The extended forecast calls for mild but unsettled weather in the Magic Valley Monday through Wednesday. There will be rain in the valleys and rain or snow in the mountains. Highs will range from the 30s to the middle 40s with lows in the 20s or low 30s. Similar conditions are forecast for northern Idaho.

On Friday, skies were cloudy except in southwestern Idaho, where a little sunshine broke through. Burley, Strevett and Pocatello reported pockets of fog and light snow but precipitation amounted only to traces. Afternoon temperatures were generally in the 30s and 40s with the warmest 48 degrees at Lewiston. Rexburg's 12 was the coldest morning low on Friday. Minima range up to 46 at Boise.

Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the warmest temperature reported was 83 degrees at Zero Beach, Fla., with the coldest 14 below zero at Glens Falls, N.Y.

Idaho road report

Most roads in Idaho were bare or wet late Friday, although some snow and ice was reported on highways at higher elevations.

A road-by-road report was prepared by the Idaho Transportation and Law Enforcement departments.

U.S. 36 — Bare or wet. State Highway 55 — Wet with icy spots.

Inflation

The rare December drop in the government's most closely followed price index was only the second monthly decline since August 1965. The last time it fell was a 0.3 dip in March, For November, it was up 0.1 percent.

The last time the annual rate was lower than 1962's was in 1972, when the rate was 3.4 percent.

The Consumer Price Index in December was 232.4, equivalent to a price of $22.40 for the government's sample "market basket" of goods and services that cost $100 in 1967.

"It shows we've gone a long way in the battle against inflation," said White House spokesman Larry Speakes. But he cautioned the battle is not over because "in this day and age it is impossible to have a zero inflation rate."

Martin Feldstein, the president's chief economic adviser, said, "Inflation is very much under control. (But) I think that you can't rest just because you've got one good year."

Feldstein gave the Federal Reserve Board, not the White House, the major credit.

"I think the Fed (policy) is the principal policy that has helped to bring down inflation," Feldstein said. However, he said the Fed would have had a more difficult time without the administration's support.

A decline in housing costs of 0.8 percent in December reflected the trend toward lower mortgage interest rates, only partially offset by rising house prices.

Budget

Reagan is opposed to any tax increases this year, although the administration projects the fiscal 1984 deficit would be about $20 billion if there are no new tax increases or spending cuts.

But Reagan intends to propose in the 1984 budget spending cuts of about $25 billion to $30 billion in domestic programs and a six-month delay in annual cost-of-living increases for recipients of Social Security and other programs, for a total savings of about $45 billion and a deficit of between $175 billion and $185 billion.

He still will seek a $30 billion increase in defense spending over this year's $209 billion level.

The administration decided to go ahead with the contingency tax plan despite strong opposition from Congress, including leading Republican tax writers Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y.

The tax package, even if rejected later by Congress, permits Reagan in his budget proposal to show smaller projected deficits for fiscal 1985, 1987 and 1988. Without any budget changes, the administration projects the deficit would hit $288 billion in 1988.

Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is "skeptical" of the plan, a committee aide said.

"He's not sure it will work and he's not sure Congress would agree to it even if it would," the aide said.

Sen. William Roth, R-Del., sent a letter to Reagan earlier this week warning him his administration is "on the way to becoming the greatest tax raiser in American history."

And Rep. William Danenmeyer, R-Calif., and other House Republicans sent a letter Friday to Reagan urging him to lower the deficit through federal spending cuts, not tax increases.

House Republicans will not support the tax plan, a GOP House leadership aide said, because it is "a reaction to out-year economic projections that have always been totally discredited in the past."

Despite the effort to obtain revenue, Reagan is determined to go ahead with the third year of the 10 percent cut in income taxes that is to take effect July 1, and also with the indexing of taxes to the inflation rate in 1985.

Dole has said indexing may have to be scrapped to cut the deficit.

Legislators say budget proposal a bitter pill

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

BOISE — Few state legislators are going to agree on all of the budget-saving measures needed to balance the state's books, but even so, a plan will be approved.

That was the general response of Magic Valley delegates Friday, as both parties debated behind closed doors the pros and cons of the various proposals offered them by the Special Committee on Budget Analysis.

"There is an understanding of the severity of the problem," and the public is clamoring for a solution," says Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly.

"I think everyone realizes that we'll have to accept things we don't like," he says. "An agreement will be reached before we go home."

According to the Revenue Projection Committee, chaired by Rep. John Brooks, R-Gooding, the state faces a $69.2 million deficit by the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

Trying to tackle that problem, the budget-analysis committee completed its work Thursday and has delivered to legislative leaders a list of ways to balance the budget. But neither Republicans nor Democrats took substantive action on the plans when they caucused Friday.

Among the proposals are sales- and property-tax increases, changes in corporate income taxes, borrowing from dedicated funds and mortgaging state buildings.

"The last thing I would want to see ... and it appears few legislators favor ... is triggering a property-tax increase," Noh says.

If the state fails to pay public schools all the money that has been appropriated to them, an automatic property-tax increase would be triggered, under a provision of the state constitution.

"In Twin Falls County, there already have been sharp increases in the valuation of downtown properties. So our people really are facing increased property taxes, more so than elsewhere in the state," Noh says.

However, a plan proposed Thursday by Senate Majority Leader Mark Hicks, R-Hobbsburg, — the co-chairman of the analysis committee — does include both property- and sales-tax increases.

Hicks' plan to balance the budget also includes:

- Reducing the public-school appropriation by about $7.4 million, a sum he says the schools unexpectedly received from investments and insurance dividends.
- Requiring businesses to pay corporate income tax on a quarterly basis — a move that would generate an extra $13.5 million this year only.
- Raising an additional $15 million in sales-tax revenue by increasing the tax 1 cent from February through May.

Budget-cutting, transferring some idle cash and borrowing from dedicated funds to raise about $10 million.

But Hicks' plan may not raise all of the missing $69 million, and therefore, it could trigger some amount of property-tax increase, warns House Speaker Tom Stivers, R-Twin Falls.

"It's my understanding, however, that Sen. Hicks drew out his proposal primarily to illustrate the severity of the tax increases we're looking at without looking to other means," Stivers says.

Specifically, Stivers was referring to his plan to mortgage some state buildings to raise between $20 million and $30 million.

"I think Sen. Hicks purposely left out the building bond-selling idea to illustrate how bad things will be if we don't borrow against some of our state buildings," Stivers says. "As far as I know, Sen. Hicks is not totally opposed to that idea."

Hicks, however, said Thursday he believes lawmakers would accept a budget-balancing plan without mortgaging state buildings.

Magic Valley delegates also are split over the mortgaging proposal. "I sure don't like it much, but I really don't see how we're going to get out of this mess without borrowing against the buildings," says Rep. Mack Neilbur, R-Paul, the vice chairman of the Joint Finance and Appropriation Committee.

But Neilbur's fellow District 21 delegate, Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, strongly opposes the plan, saying it's just borrowing to pay off one debt only to create more debts for future years.

"We have a shortage now, so let's solve it now and not push it off to later years," he says.

Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, criticizes the mortgage plan as skirting the intent of the constitution, which says Idaho government cannot go into debt over $2 million. The proposal would transfer the title of state buildings to the State Building Authority, a legally separate entity — which can go into debt.

But Peavey is enthusiastic about the proposal for paring corporate income taxes on a quarterly basis.

"Corporations already do this for the federal government, so their paperwork is already done," Peavey says. "And by implementing it this year, we'd get an extra $10 million payment now (Ricks estimates $13.5 million) that otherwise would not be paid in until next year."

Both Hicks and Noh, however, acknowledge that many Republicans will oppose quarterly corporate income-tax payments, since they believe it would harm Idaho businesses.

"But like I said, everyone is going to have to accept some methods that they don't totally approve of," Noh says.

Council warns that more fish mean less power

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho Power officials said Friday they do not oppose an interstate plan to enhance Idaho's salmon runs, but they warned that if it's mishandled, Idahoans stand to lose more than 300 megawatts of power.

"Nobody's said what share of water will be committed from Dworshak Dam on the Clearwater (River) and how much from our Browlee Dam on the Snake River," said Larry Weimer, the fisheries manager for Idaho Power. "Idaho Power losses could exceed 300 megawatts."

Weimer was testifying before a joint meeting of the House and Senate resource committees, as the legislators begin a review of the Northwest Power Planning Council's fish and wildlife program.

The debate centers around whether Idaho should commit water from the two reservoirs that would be flushed into the river systems in April and May to help young salmon migrate to the Pacific Ocean.

"We are under the feeling now ... and this is documented — that a blast of water lasting about 30 days in the spring will shorten the time it takes these young fish to migrate, thereby reducing the losses," said Larry Mills, one of Idaho's two delegates on the Northwest council.

"If we can get a far greater number of these fish to the ocean, then we should get an astounding increase in the number returning to our state to spawn," Mills said.

But the plan has sparked two different controversies.

First, Idaho irrigators worry that committing large amounts of spring water reserves to the project could jeopardize agriculture during the summer.

Second, the lowering of the two reservoirs could cause significant power loss during summer months, when Idaho Power experiences its peak demands from irrigation pumping and air-conditioning use.

Idaho Department of Water Resources Director Kenneth Dunn told the legislators that he supports enhancing the fish runs, but he opposes using water from the two dams.

"Instead, it should be done by constructing a new dam on the Welsler River," Dunn said. "That would provide Idaho a new water supply, new power and provide flood control in an area that seems to get hit with floods every year."

Dunn warned that by tapping Browlee Dam, the project would cost Idahoans cheap hydroelectric power, which would have to be replaced.

But Mills said that such a replacement could be worked out with the federal Bonneville Power Administration.

Specifically, Idaho Power's surplus electricity — produced by the large spring discharge — could be given to Bonneville Power, which in turn would trade back power at no extra cost during summer months, when Idaho Power experiences peak demands, he said.

But Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, said there is concern that irrigators may lose some of their summer water supply from the Snake River system, especially during drought years.

"We won't let that be the case," said Mills, a former speaker of the House in Idaho.

"The irrigators have first right," he said. "Even if there are several drought years in a row, the irrigators will get their water and the fish will get dry."

Power council predicts no need for coal plant

By ELLEN MARKS
United Press International

BOISE — The region will not need any new coal-fired plants before at least 1996 because of potential savings through conservation, Northwest Power Planning Council member Robert Saxvik said Friday.

Saxvik told the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee the council's draft power plan, to be released next week, will show the four Northwestern states can save 4,800 megawatts of electricity through insulation and other means of conserving.

Saxvik explained to members the council's plan for energy needs through the next two decades is based on a range of between a 9 and 2.9 yearly increase in demand.

The draft plan says under the low figure, no coal-fired plant should be constructed before 2002 because the need for an additional 3,300 megawatts could be met through other sources. The plan excludes the second unit of Idaho Power's Valmy plant, which begins operation in two years.

The council decided not to forecast a single figure to provide flexibility in energy planning and because "reacting to a hard number has caused some overbuilding," Saxvik said.

Idaho's two council members, Larry Mills and Saxvik, made their remarks while presenting a $469,200 budget for fiscal year 1984, which begins in July. The current budget for the eight-member council is $543,200, all of which comes from federal sources.

No state funds are used for council activities, which include preparation of a power and fish protection plan, Saxvik said.

Earlier, the committee received a request for one additional position in the Division of Economic and Community Affairs.

Administrator David Porter said he needs $376,000 in general funds — up from a current figure of $307,000 — to match federal dollars for administration costs and to hire an additional worker to help find new markets for state products.

The agency's total budget request for fiscal year 1984 is $8.9 million.

Fund crisis cuts service

BOISE — Because of the state funding crisis, legislators won't have time this year to hold memorial services that normally are considered a traditional part of any legislative session.

At least that's the view House Speaker Tom Stivers, R-Twin Falls, says he is taking in managing his end of the Statehouse.

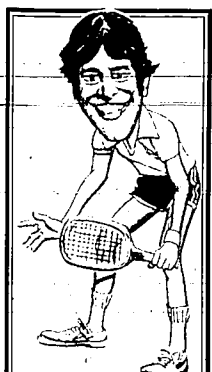

"I can say right now that there probably won't be a Lincoln Day service or a memorial service for deceased legislators, even though we seem to have always held these in the past," Stivers said Friday.

"There are five of these events, which adds up to upsetting an entire week of legislative work," the speaker said.

"Frankly, I would have even liked the governor to have made his 'State of the State' address at 7 p.m., rather than taking up legislative time during the work day," Stivers said. "But tradition is hard to get upset that tradition so early in the session."

Instead of holding the memorial services, Stivers plans to appoint a special House committee to publish sheets memorializing Abraham Lincoln and deceased legislators. He says the publications will be distributed throughout the House and Senate, as well as to family members of the honored lawmakers.

"I have decided that time is critical in solving these budgeting problems. We don't have any extra time at all," he said.

Baker won't seek re-election

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Sen. Republican Leader Howard Baker announced Friday he will not seek a fourth Senate term in 1984 and said he will "give serious thought" to running for president in 1988.

Baker, making the widely expected announcement that he will "return to private life," said he expects President Reagan to run for re-election and to "actively and enthusiastically support" him.

"I've made no secret of the fact that I would like to be president, but I think 1984 is Ronald Reagan's year for renomination and re-election," Baker told a packed news conference.

Baker, 57, said his announcement was not meant as any "signal" to Reagan and he had encouraged the president to seek re-election.

But the soft-spoken Baker said he will give "serious thought and consideration" to running for president in 1988 when the White House would be open at the conclusion of a second Reagan term.

Reagan, in a statement released by the White House, said Baker's retirement "will be a great loss to America." He called Baker "one of the finest, most skillful majority leaders of this century."

But Baker said he wants to "do other things."

Stepping down in two years will give Baker an opportunity to replenish his personal finances that have been depleted by political activities, including his ill-fated run for the 1980 presidential nomination captured by Reagan.

"It is time to do other things. My intention is to return to private life. I personally have decided that I will not seek a fourth term," Baker said.

"It has been the greatest honor of my life to serve the people of Tennessee. But after 16 years — it will be 18 years when I finish this term — I think it is time for me to do other things."

Baker gained national attention as the senior Republican on the Senate Watergate Committee in 1974, asking Nixon administration officials, "What did the president know and when did he know it?"

In 1977 he was chosen Senate Republican leader. When Reagan won the presidency in a landslide and the GOP gained a majority in the Senate in 1980, he became Senate majority leader.

Baker, reportedly somewhat disillusioned from the wrenching lame-duck congressional session, made a quick trip from Washington to make his announcement.

Abortion foes meet with Reagan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan met with anti-abortion leaders Friday to reaffirm his support for their efforts on the eve of the 10th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

Pro-choice groups mobilized behind the decade-old ruling as opponents of the abortion told the president they are close to agreement on legislation to prohibit federal tax money for any abortions except to save the mother's life.

Dr. Jerry Falwell, head of Moral Majority, said after the White House meeting Reagan "reaffirmed his support of everything the pro-life movement represents. There's never been any question that he was with us."

"We very much believe the president is performing. He is supportive and he is doing all he can, using the White House as a bully pulpit," Falwell said.

Dr. Jack Willke, head of the National Right to Life Committee, gave Reagan a lapel pin in the shape of two tiny feet, smaller than an adult's fingernail, which he said were the actual "size" of a 10-week-old fetus. Reagan left the pin in his box.

"We told the president we were very close to total agreement," Falwell said.

"I think we were able to reassure him that the act was pretty well together," Willke said. "Our approach here will probably be a permanent statutory prohibition of abortions except when necessary to save the mother's life."

Margaret Heckler, the former Massachusetts congresswoman Reagan has nominated as secretary of Health and Human Services, attended the meeting and won praise from both Falwell and Willke.

"She clearly shares our ethic," Willkosaid.

In recent months, the anti-abortion movement has appeared sharply divided over strategy and in the deepest disarray of its young political life.

An internal memorandum written by a staff member of the National Right to Life Committee, the nation's largest anti-abortion grassroots organization, deeply embarrassed movement leaders by questioning the ability of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., as their "point man" on Capitol Hill.

Dorfman slaying 'mob hit'

CHICAGO (UPI) — Allen Dorfman's little black book and two reputed syndicate assassins emerged Friday in the investigation of the Teasdale Union financiers' gangland slaying, which police said was undoubtedly a "mob hit" — New York style.

Judging from their style, the killers who vanished after pumping eight bullets into Dorfman's head were probably hired assassins from out of town, Chicago Police Superintendent Richard Brzezczek said.

"At this point I am convinced it was a mob hit," Brzezczek said.

"The one thing is that, historically in Chicago, they are not done in such an open and brazen manner. We usually find out about a homicide of this type by finding a body in a trunk."

"Usually, they grab somebody, take 'em somewhere, maybe take 'em to a hill, wrap 'em up and put them in a trunk and leave 'em somewhere where we find them," Brzezczek said.

"The open, brazen hits have traditionally occurred in New York City ... in recent years in restaurants in Brooklyn. The technique is different."

The Chicago Police Department's organized crime unit is aiding the investigation. The FBI and police in suburban Lincolnwood, where the shooting occurred, clammed up Friday.

Brzezczek said chances of catching the killers were "minimal."

Trial ordered for Bowen

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — A judge Friday ordered Richard Bowen to stand trial on a charge he tried to poison his wife with a cyanide-laced sleeping pill in what prosecutors contend was a scheme to blame tainted over-the-counter drugs.

"I'm outraged! I'm outraged!" shouted defense attorney Melvin Bell, jumping to his feet after hearing the order from Municipal Court Judge Edward Nelson.

"You have that right," replied Nelson.

Susan Bowen, 30, lapsed into a coma Nov. 26 and almost died from the poisoning which left her with speech impairment and difficulty swallowing.

Mrs. Bowen had testified earlier she did not believe her husband had tried to kill her. She said she did not remember taking any pills the night she became ill.

Kimberly officials debate council's methods

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — City Council members in Kimberly are receiving criticism from an unlikely source — one of their own.

Michael Langford, the councilman who last week blocked two of Mayor Ross Lee Whitehead's major appointments, says he's unhappy with the way that council conducts its business.

"I've never felt I was a rabble-rouser or anything like that. I've consistently tried to do my job and work within the council. But I'm just frustrated; I am torn.

"I want to be an effective member of the council. I do not want to put myself out in left field and not be able to get anything done," he says. "But the heck with it. Things have got to be done the right way, or not at all."

The showdown is set for Monday morning, when the four-member council is scheduled to resolve the two appointments blocked by Langford.

Langford voted against confirming the re-appointment of Bill Malone as public-works superintendent and the law firm of Langley and Greenwood of Twin Falls as the city's legal counsel. His vote blocked the appointments because only three council members were present. Approval requires the affirmative vote of half of the council members, plus one.

Councilmen Ted Wasko and Avis Allen supported the appointments, but Councilman Sterling Crothers was absent. Wasko, Allen and Langford say they have not changed their positions. And Crothers has not disclosed his decision.

Langford says his vote against Malone stems from a belief that Malone has not run city projects efficiently.

"If I were to do the things in my business that he's doing to the city, I'd be broke," Langford says. "There's no way that you can cost-justify what he's allowed to happen."

Yet, Langford's colleagues say the councilman's "credibility" is subject to "question where Malone is concerned. According to city records, Langford and the three council members split on the issue last year when Langford sought to suspend Malone from his job for three days.

"We dismissed it because it, in our opinion, was definitely a personally conflict that didn't warrant actions of any severe nature," Crothers says. "In my opinion, basically, we've got a couple of people who are not all that diplomatic."

But the apparent feud between Langford and Malone is only part of the dispute.

Langford says he's opposed to the lawyers because, he says, they have allowed city officials to violate the state's open-meetings law. The councilman contends that council has held several meetings in which no advance notice to the public was given and no minutes were taken.

One such meeting apparently was called for Jan. 6 to announce Whitehead's appointments, although no minutes of that session were kept.

More often than not, Langford says, the rules are observed. But even then, council does little to get word of its decisions out to the public. And informal workshop sessions are held, at the convenience of council members, during the early morning when few members of the public can attend, he says.

But one of Langford's biggest criticisms involves council's decision to increase city employees' salaries substantially last year. In all, the city's monthly payroll jumped from $9,054 to $11,910.

That increase, supported by Langford, was designed to bring the employees' salaries in line with the salaries paid to employees of other cities.

It was approved in two stages, following an hour-long executive session on April 13 and an early morning special session on April 20.

"My objection was that the public wasn't aware of it," Langford says. "We went into executive session to have a salary adjustment, and no one was aware of it. I questioned why we were doing it, and I was told the public didn't need to know. These things were said to me in executive session."

Langford admits that he only recently began to openly criticize the meetings. And

Volunteer improves Rupert's parks

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

RUPERT — During most of 1982, Rupert's municipal parks belonged to Chet Dalpiaz.

Dalpiaz, 55, is a retired real-estate broker who gave time, equipment and himself to improving the parks by volunteering as the city's parks director.

"The relationship between the city and Dalpiaz began simply enough.

"He was a member of the city parks committee and he complained about the poor condition into which the city's 14 parks had fallen," says Mayor Bill Whitton, who is also a good friend of Dalpiaz.

The city was receiving many complaints during the summer because neglected sprinklers, nourishing park greenery, also were flooding nearby residential basements, Whitton says.

And city officials had had difficulty finding a person to supervise park maintenance during the summer because the job lasted for only 9 months, the mayor says.

Dalpiaz, who felt he owed something to the community, volunteered to "oversee" the eight-man park crew.

Dalpiaz took his job seriously and soon, he was spending 10 to 16 hours a day with the crew.

He arranged to water some sections of parks that had been forgotten. New trees were planted to replace the old Spruces trimmed after years of growth. A flower garden bloomed in an abandoned—muddy—wading—pool—in Neptune Park.

And the park watering was watched more closely; complaints to the city dwindled to a few.

Dalpiaz says the men he worked with were "excellent. I couldn't have asked for a better crew," he says.

Although it seemed at times that there was so much to do and so little time, the parks began showing improvement, Dalpiaz says.

Fairfield officials still checking June shooting

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

FAIRFIELD — Eight months after the fatal shooting of Billy "Randy" Fruit in Fairfield, the Camas County Sheriff Department is continuing to investigate the circumstances of his death.

Fruit died June 13 at a home he shared with David Conway, 27, of Fairfield. Fruit was shot in the head with a .30-30 caliber rifle bullet.

Camas County Coroner Dennis Venzon ruled the death "accidental" shortly after the incident.

However, Sheriff Harold Lee said Friday that he and county Prosecutor John Varin will meet with the coroner this week to discuss additional evidence being submitted by Venzon.

Lee says his office then will make a public statement on the disposition of the case. However, he says, the case probably will not be declared officially closed at this time.

According to Lee, Conway had returned to the home about 1:30 a.m. Sunday, June 13, and reportedly found Fruit holding a rifle that belonged to Conway. Fruit flung the rifle at Conway, who caught it, Lee says. The gun discharged, the bullet striking Fruit in the head.

Lee says that Conway said no conversation took place before the gun was tossed. Varin says that investigators had not been able to determine what caused the gun to fire.

Conway apparently ran from the home, seeking assistance. Lee was contacted and met Conway at the sheriff's office, and the two returned to the home.

Fruit was found slumped in a chair; and the gun was found in another room. He was pronounced dead at the scene by the coroner.

Evidence shows that both Conway and Fruit had been drinking that night, according to Lee. Conway appeared to be in shock after the shooting, Lee says.

Tests on blood and tissue from the victim and on the rifle have been conducted, Lee says. He

Rupert won't charge worker

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

RUPERT — A former Rupert city employee, who admits accepting a $10 gift after ordering light bulbs from an Indiana company, will not be charged with accepting a bribe.

And although the county will continue investigating B.I.C. Products, a Muncie distributing company, it appears the firm may escape, too.

Because no "high city official" was involved in the transaction with B.I.C. Products, the most that the prosecutor's office could expect to file is a misdemeanor bribery charge against the firm or the sales representative who called the unidentified employee, Charlie Creason, the Mindoka County deputy prosecutor, said Friday.

And under state law, suspects who face a criminal misdemeanor charge cannot be extradited to Idaho, Creason said. The phone call to the employee, whose name has not been released, apparently was made from out of state.

Finding no criminal intent on the part of the employee, the prosecutor's office is not contemplating filing any charges against him, Creason said. A city mechanic, the employee was a "victim of circumstance," he said Friday.

Earlier, Creason had reported that investigators are awaiting background information from Muncie law-enforcement agencies on B.I.C. Products, whose president has denied any knowledge of the sale to Rupert.

Also under investigation by the prosecutor's office are reports of similar phone calls to other offices, like the Mindoka County Highway District in Rupert, Creason said.

The gift received by the employee was a small barbecue grill worth about $10.

The cost of the 60 bulbs involved was $241, according to Mayor Bill Whitton. The bulbs could have been obtained in Rupert for "half that" price, he said.

It is city policy to buy supplies locally, Whitton said.

In a related development, the fired employee's boss took issue Friday with the first news accounts of the incident.

"According to the employee, the gift was not mentioned until the order was made," Don Courtright, the Rupert public-works director, said in a prepared statement. "They then asked him his name and address, which he gave them. They then told him that there would be a gift sent to his home address. The employee came to my office and told me about

McClure thinks Reagan should use his veto power more

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Ronald Reagan could be more effective if he resists the urge to compromise with the Democrat-controlled Congress, says Sen. James McClure.

McClure says that he offered Reagan that advice as early as September 1981, after the president had secured a number of congressional victories.

"Right after that, I said, 'Mr. President, you've had a very, very good first nine months. But you've made the easy gains. From now on, it's going to be veto politics.'"

"He elected to go for the 51 percent, and in order to do that, he's had to make more compromises than were good for him or the country. And I think that's exactly where he is today. He's got to rely on veto politics."

McClure's remarks, in an interview Friday with The Times-News, came one day after Reagan marked the close of his second year in office. And the second half of Reagan's term promises to be filled with more confrontations with Congress, given Democratic gains in the fall congressional elections.

"Once in a while, the risks of confrontation appear greater than the risks of accommodation. I think in the long run, it's just the reverse," McClure says.

By relying on the veto, Reagan need only maintain support from a third plus one in either house of Congress.

"I think the president has to change his rhetoric in order to get there. He can't say, 'Let's stay the course.' He can't say, 'We've got everything in place, all the elements in place, that are necessary for economic recovery,'" McClure says.

"He's got to take a case to the American people that a majority of the Congress has denied him the things that are necessary to save the country, that the course is not yet complete.

'He's got to take a case to the American people that a majority of the Congress has denied him the things that are necessary to save the country'

Sen. McClure

"We're on a course, but it hasn't yet gotten there, and there's a willful majority in Congress that won't let him."

Reagan has come under increasingly intense criticism from some conservatives, who allege that the administration is moving quickly to the "left." While some of that criticism is genuine, McClure says much of the flak coming from the "right" is intended for the president's benefit.

"There's some strategy in that. There's some realism in that," he says. "First of all, that has happened to a degree. But the strategy is, if you have some people on the left yelling, you better have some people on the right yelling to balance the dialogue, give the president a little running room between those two extremes. So there's some strategy in that, but there's also some real disillusionment."

While giving Reagan high marks for declines in interest rates, inflation and government spending, McClure says he's frustrated with the administration's failure to address the "constant escalation" in the cost of federal "entitlement" programs, which he says are growing at a rate of 16 percent each year.

"The president has not been willing to face that. And yet, it's obvious that's the area of real confrontation," McClure says. "You could cut every appropriated account; you could decimate the Defense Department; and you still would not have solved the problem."

One example is the Social Security program. McClure makes no bones about his opposition to the 1-week-old proposals of the presidential-appointed Social Security Commission to salvage the ailing system. The commission's proposals would generate an additional $109 billion in revenue for Social Security through tax increases and benefit holdbacks.

"The commission fell short for the same reason that the system is in trouble today," McClure says. "It's a

What's what

A Republican president has only two chances in 15 of completing a second term, statistically. Grant and Eisenhower completed theirs. Lincoln and McKinley were assassinated. Teddy Roosevelt and Coolidge served the unexpired terms of predecessors plus four years. Nixon resigned. Service was for four years or less for Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Benjamin Harrison, Taft, Harding, Hoover and Ford.

 A. Finely crushed glass otherwise known as diamond dust. Usually. But it varies.

Q. Louis, m'lad, what percentage of the rainfall falls right back into the oceans from which it does cometh?
 A. About 91 percent.

Q. Two of the three words with the largest number of slang synonyms are "drunkenness and "money." What's the third?
 A. Sex.

MERRY-GO-ROUNDS
 There's a reason why merry-go-rounds turn counter-clockwise. First of same were built by the knight-admirers for the noble boys of old Europe. Before they learned to fence and joust, those lad rode in circles and practiced with their little lances the stabbing of stationary rings. Counter-clockwise was a must. Most were right-handers.

Some people write from the bottom of the page to the top, and some from right to left. But the old Greeks wrote from left to right and then (and from left to left in switch-back-lines - It was called "boustrophedon" which meant "as the ox turns").

Salvador troops blunt rebel offensive

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — U.S.-trained troops reached the outskirts of a hamlet deep in guerrilla-held territory Friday in the spearhead of a 6,000-man government operation to push rebels away from the provincial capital, officials said.

Leftist guerrillas, pushing a "January offensive" they claim has killed nearly 100 government troops, bombed out electricity service and shut down most traffic on highways in the eastern 40 percent of the country.

The 1,000-man "Ramon Bellosa Battalion" trained last year in Ft. Bragg, N.C., reached the outskirts of Jocotalque, 75 miles northeast of San Salvador, a military official said.

Jocotalque was abandoned by some 300 defenders last Sunday in fierce fighting.

The battalion is part of the 6,000-man force sweeping rebel-dominated Morazan province in an effort to "relieve pressure" on the provincial capital of San Francisco Morazan, 16 miles to the south, a military observer said.

The government sweep entered its fifth day and has retaken nearly all the seven hamlets rebels grabbed at the beginning of their offensive, officers said.

Guerrilla Radio Venceremos, believed located in the northern half of Morazan province, was not on the air at its usual time Thursday.

U.S.-supplied A-37 "Dragonfly" warjets, helicopters and 105mm artillery pounded rebel positions throughout the northern reaches of Morazan on Thursday, military officials said.

Rebels trying to take pressure off the assault on Morazan blew up electricity line poles that blacked out El Salvador's four easternmost provinces.

Andropov continues shakeup of government

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union Friday disclosed two more high-level changes under new Soviet leader Yuri Andropov, the replacement of the minister of trade and the deputy premier in charge of light industry and consumer goods.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Grigory Vashchenko was named minister of trade, replacing Alexander Struyev. The Communist Party newspaper Pravda said Valentin Makeyev has been removed as one of 14 deputy prime ministers.

The changes were the latest in a series of personnel shifts since Andropov assumed the top leadership post of general secretary following the death of Leonid Brezhnev in November. Many of the changes seem designed to put people close to Andropov into positions of power and remove Brezhnev's appointees.

Vashchenko, 62, has been deputy premier of the Ukrainian Council of Ministers since 1972. Tass said. The news agency said Struyev, who has served as minister since 1965, was retiring. It gave no further details.

Tass said Vashchenko worked as an engineer in machine-building factories. In 1958 he moved up in the hierarchy of the Communist Party to serve as first secretary of the Kharkov, Ukraine, regional party organization.

He is a member of the Central Committee and a delegate to the Supreme Soviet, or parliament. Tass said.

Mideast talks stalled

By United Press International

U.S. Middle East envoy Philip Habib conferred with Lebanese leaders Friday amid reports he will return to Washington on Monday to brief President Reagan on the slow-moving Israeli-Lebanese talks.

While Habib met with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel and later with Prime Minister Chefik Wazzan and the Lebanese negotiating team, Israeli television reiterated Israel's refusal to make concessions on its key security demands.

for an "in principle agreement," without specifics, on mutual relations and open borders with Lebanon.

Habib was told in Jerusalem before he flew to Beirut that Israel had no interest in a "quick fix" with Lebanon, Israeli officials said.

Until the Jewish state is satisfied, the Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas will not return to southern Lebanon and that negotiations will produce good neighborly relations, Israeli troops in Lebanon will stay put, the Israeli officials said.

Child born to 'dead' woman

SOUTHAMPTON, England (UPI) — Doctors fought Friday to save a premature baby boy born to a young mother who had been clinically dead two days.

The baby, Michael Terry Hickmott, had been given just one chance in 10 of survival when he was born last Sunday 11 weeks prematurely, doctors at Princess Anne Maternity Hospital said.

Now 5 days old, the infant is in stable condition in an intensive care unit incubator, the doctors said.

"Please save my baby," 20-year-old Susan Hickmott begged her husband before slipping into unconsciousness after suffering a stroke Jan. 14.

Her husband, Philip, 23, who was married to Susan only last June, said he pleaded with doctors to keep his wife on life-support systems until the baby could be delivered.

NIC OKs funds to fight lawsuit

COBUR D'ALENE (UPI) — Trustees at North Idaho College have agreed to pay more than $14,000 in legal fees to fight a lawsuit filed by a former basketball player, who claimed he suffered a nervous breakdown because he could not meet scholastic standards.

The figure represents only attorneys fees incurred so far. NIC officials said Friday. The case remains alive in the Michigan court system and more defense costs are expected to be paid.

Ex-NIC basketball player Curtis Jones filed the $15 million lawsuit in 1981, alleging NIC athletic director Roland Williams helped him complete one year of classes at the two-year college so Jones could help the Cardinal basketball team challenge for a berth in the national junior college championship.

Jones also has charged officials at NIC collaborated with coaches at the University of Michigan who wanted him to play for the Big Ten school after he improved his academic standing at NIC.

Jones, who entered NIC in 1977, charged he suffered a nervous breakdown during his second year at NIC because he was unable to cope academically. He claimed he has been treated at mental institutions ever since.

North gets nod in Senior Bowl

MOBILE, Ala. (UPI) — The North, featuring the proven aerial punch of Dan Marino of Pitt and Tom Ramsey of UCLA, has been established as the favorite for today's 34th annual Senior Bowl.

Marino, the North's starting quarterback, was the No. 1 pick in the recent draft of the fledgling U.S. Football League. Ramsey, who is expected to see almost as much playing time, led all collegians last season in passing efficiency. Ramsey's career totals (6,000 yards and 50 touchdowns) weren't as impressive as Marino's, but he outshone the Pitt star as a senior, passing for 2,824 yards and 21 touchdowns.

Maricich second in downhill

MEGEVE, France (UPI) — Maria Walliser of Switzerland won her first World Cup race Friday, taking a downhill in which rank outsiders also shone.

Walliser, 19, clocked one minute 24.52 seconds down the 2,060 meter course with a drop of 529 meters. With a daring run down the upper part of the course she clocked the second fastest intermediate time, and glided to the finish line to win.

A surprise second was Sun Valley's Maria Maricich, who started 40th. Although she was fastest in one of Thursday's two runs, the 21-year-old improved her performance by almost five seconds to clock 1:24.71 and record her first-ever World Cup points in emphatic style.

Connors, Lendl meet in semis

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jimmy Connors rallied from a 4-1 deficit in the opening set to beat Johan Kriek 7-6, 6-2 Friday night and set up a semifinal showdown with Ivan Lendl in the $400,000 Masters Championship.

Lendl, with an opportunity to bring his official earnings for 1982 over the $2 million mark, used one service break in each set to earn his berth in the semis with a 6-4, 7-5 victory over Frenchman Yannick Noah.

The tournament is known as the Volvo Masters.

John McEnroe will meet Guillermo Vilas in today's opening semifinal starting at 10 a.m. MST, followed by Connors and Lendl in a replay of their U.S. Open final won by the American.

Swiss 2nd-teamer pulls big upset

KITZBUHTEL, Austria (UPI) — Bruno Kern of Switzerland, a 21-year-old newcomer who failed to make his country's national team, stunned the world's elite Friday by winning a World Cup downhill race on the alpine circuit's most-demanding track.

Kern, a member of the Swiss second team, hurtled down the 3,519-meter Sirent downhill track in 2:06.68, followed by Canada's Steve Podborski, second in 2:06.79 and Urs Haebler of Switzerland, third at 2:07.10.

Walton can play on regular basis

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — San Diego Clippers center Bill Walton was given permission to play every day, except back-to-back games, for the rest of the season by his doctors Thursday.

Walton's chronically injured foot was declared sound enough for him to become a regular in the Clippers lineup.

The only restriction given was that Walton sit out one game if the Clippers played a game the following day or the day before. That restriction could be lifted in early March if his foot gives him no more problems.

There's a bit of the miser in all bridge players. Test yourself in the play of today's game and see if you can cast the test (cover the east-West cards with your thumbs).

West leads the spade seven and East plays the jack. How do you plan to play? All plays with it the club king is with East; it will be just a matter of how many overtricks. What happens if the club king is with West? In that case, South must do whatever he can to steer West away from a diamond switch.

The key to the hand lies in South's play to trick one. If he wins a miserly spade queen and crosses to dummy in hearts to take a losing club finesse, West wins and will know what to do. The only suit left for the defense is diamonds and the game will go down.

As a bit of insurance, South should win the first trick with his spade ace. If the club finesse wins, that will have cost an overtrick. But when the club finesse loses, West is most likely to continue the attack on spades and South will make
