Treasury secretary says recovery at hand

By DONALD H. MAY United Press International

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Donald Regan told Congress Wednesday the economy is "poised for recovery" but unemployment still will remain at a "distressing" level — around 10.9 percent — for 1983 as a whole.

Testifying before the Joint Economic Committee, a day after President Reagan's State of the Union speech, Regan defended the president's package against Democratic charges it does not provide enough economic recovery and jobs.

"The economy now stands poised for recovery," Regan told the panel. "In fact, the recovery may well already be under way at this moment."

He said the administration projects "modest" economic growth of about 3 percent by the end of 1983 — about half the normal recession recovery rate — picking up to the 4 percent range in 1984 and beyond.

On what he called the "distressing" fact of high levels of unemployment, Regan released administration pro-

German workers send food to Detroit's jobless

HANOVER, West Germany (UPI) — West Germans, facing rising unemployment but remembering U.S. post-war aid, have collected $6,250 for needy Americans in the dole lines of Detroit, appeal organizers said Wednesday.

Most of the aid has been gathered among German autoworkers, concerned about the plight of unemployed carworkers in Detroit where the slump in the U.S. auto industry has left tens of thousands jobless.

"When I read about the Bethlehem Steel Company laying off workers the message came home because I had been in Pennsylvania," said appeal organizer Eckhard Minthe, a Lutheran minister.

Minthe, started the appeal before Christmas and West German labor unions, citizens and a car factory were quick to take it up and collect $6,250 so far.

A peace group in Wetzlar also collected 10,000 multi-vitamin tablets and citizens in Maubach sent clothes, oatmeal, dried foods, canned foods and candy to Detroit last week.

The aid has been directed to Detroit on information provided by Mayor Coleman Young, who late last year declared a state of emergency in the city due to its high unemployment rate.

In Washington, Frank Walick of the United Auto Workers, said, "I think we're slightly embarrassed because the problem is not lack of food; it's the fact the food doesn't get to people."

"We're the breadbasket of the world. We just have a terrible government that doesn't know how to handle things."

In West Germany 2.2 million or 9.1 percent of workers are jobless and the economy issue is being highlighted in the campaign for national elections in March. But workers have been quick to respond to the aid campaign.

"The metalworkers union picked it up fast and the Adam Opel factory in Russelsheim has already asked its 33,000 employees to donate at least one mark (40 cents) each for Detroit," Minthe said.

A spokesman for the Adam works council said workers had so far handed in $5,000 in response but more had been given directly to the appeals bank account. Minthe said Wednesday the account stood at $1,250.

"I have received half a dozen letters from Americans thanking us for the appeal and they contained some heart-rending accounts of their plight," Minthe said.

In Detroit, Geraline Green, 46, who is raising 10 children and seven grandchildren, learned a few days ago she was going to get a package of food and clothing from West Germany.

"How can that be possible. I think that's wonderful. That sounds great," she said.

time before employment increases in steel and other heavy industries. "I don't see a return in the heavy industries for another year or so."

Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., reminded Regan of a hearing a year ago at which the senator had asked the secretary what he should tell unemployed constituents faced with losing their homes. Regan had said then that recovery would soon begin.

"What do I tell them now?" Sarbanes asked Wednesday.

"You can tell them the secretary of the treasury made a mistake like most economic forecasters in early 1982," Regan replied. "I know of no one who thought then the recession would last as long. In all sincerity, I think now that we have turned the corner."

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., said the administration should "bite the bullet," delay the 10 percent income tax cut due this July, defer tax indexing due in 1985 and make bigger defense cuts to reduce the deficit — all aimed at more rapid recovery and more jobs.

School support dropping

BOISE (UPI) — A recently completed study shows Idaho's commitment to finance its public education system slid during the 1970s, even though the state's ability to provide increased funding rose significantly, says the Idaho Association of School Superintendents.

The association said Wednesday the study by Dr. Norman N. Hallett shows Idaho ranked 37th among the 50 states in 1970 in ability to fund its public schools and 33rd in actual expenditures per student.

By 1980, the study said, the state's economic capacity to finance education rose to 32nd in the nation, but actual spending fell to 41st.

"If Idaho had made full utilization of its increased capacity to fund public education, the state would have ranked 27th rather than 41st in educational expenditures and would have expended an additional $267 per pupil for the 1979-80 year," the study concluded.

Hallett conducted the research as part of his doctoral project at the University of Idaho.

He said Idaho was capable of spending $1,939 per student in fiscal year 1980, but only allotted $1,672 for each pupil enrolled in the school system.

jections which — as later corrected by him and his office — showed unemployment declining slowly in the years ahead.

The unemployment rate stood at a post-Depression high of 10.8 percent in December. The figures showed it averaging 10.9 percent for 1983 as a whole, 10 percent in 1984, 9 percent in 1985, 8.2 percent in 1986, 7.4 percent in 1987 and 6.9 percent in 1988.

Regan said the administration will try to bring those rates down faster by job training, youth employment, aid for displaced workers and other programs outlined by the president.

He said new jobs that economic recovery will generate will start to appear first in service industries and smaller companies and it will be some

Reagan hints at killing corporate tax

By DONALD A. DAVIS United Press International

BOSTON — President Reagan suggested Wednesday it might be time to abolish the corporate income tax.

He told a group of executives of high-technology companies the levy is "very hard to justify."

Reagan's extemporaneous comment came as he was discussing ways of encouraging growth in the burgeoning field of sophisticated technology. He toured three high-tech facilities during a quick trip to Boston less than 24 hours after praising the industry during his State of the Union address.

"In our tax structure, the corporate tax is very hard to justify, its existence," Reagan said. "Why isn't the corporate tax just passed on to stockholders where they will pay in dividend tax?"

The remark came almost as an afterthought during a session with executives at the Bedford, Mass., Millipore Corp. cafeteria.

Even before he made it, Reagan predicted he would be assailed with questions from reporters. After the business executives applauded the idea, he quipped, "I'll remember your applause when the press keeps questioning me for days."

Reagan told reporters afterward he had no plans to submit legislation to do away with taxes on corporate profits.

"So, I've said it was something to study and to look at," he said. "I said it was something that we ought to look into because it isn't really justified."

Deputy press secretary Larry

Reagan mugs for the cameras at a Boston pub

Speakes told reporters aboard Air Force One on the way back to Washington that abolishing the tax had had never been discussed officially at the White House but was "something he had thought about and it was just a thought."

Reagan said abolishing the corporate tax would help universities and other tax-exempt institutions that invest endowment money in businesses, only to see their dividends taxed before they receive them.

Corporate income taxes long have been criticized by some economists.

These taxes, they contend, are either added to prices of products, in which consumers pay them, or they are taken out of profits — in which case the firm's stockholders earn less.

Reagan has asked Treasury Secretary Donald Regan to conduct a long-range study of ways to reform the federal tax system. Regan told Congress' Joint Economic Committee Wednesday tax reform is a "very complicated subject and not one on which I'm going to come up with a quick answer."

Reagan also announced the point a bipartisan commission on industrial competitiveness and propose to Congress "an unprecedented increase" in federal research money next year.

He said he hoped to open "a national dialogue" on science and technology and its benefits to the economy, adding, "We are still the technological leaders in the world and we should not only keep that edge but increase it."

He left for Washington following his speech to the Massachusetts High-Tech Council forum in the cafeteria of the Millipore Corp., and a brief private meeting with 1980 campaign supporters.

Earlier, Reagan visited another high tech plant and computer retraining center in Boston's predominantly black Roxbury section.

Demonstrators booted his motorcade in Roxbury, and he got a hot-hum reception from working class patrons of the Fire pub in another neighborhood where he paid a surprise visit.

The visit was designed to underscore the importance of preparing workers for jobs in industries on the upswing in the changing economy, especially those dealing with computers and high technology. But it also looked on the appearance of a political campaign on the home turf of Reagan's Democratic adversaries, House Speaker Thomas O'Neill and Sen. Edward Kennedy.

"There is a need for just what we're seeing here — for retraining — because we are in a great transition period," Reagan said at his first stop, a high-technology training center in Roxbury operated jointly by the

ERA battle marks custard's first stand

By PAULA SCHWED United Press International

WASHINGTON — Phyllis Schlafly, labeling lawmakers backing the Equal Rights Amendment "wimps," Wednesday sent the 53 senators who reintroduced the measure quiche — custard in pastry that "real men" supposedly do not eat.

Mrs. Schlafly had the quiches delivered as a takeoff on the best-selling book, "Real Men Don't Eat Quiche," which pokes fun at macho men. Each pie had a label that said, "Real Men Don't Draft Women."

The ERA died last June, three states short of the 38 needed for ratification after a 10-year struggle. Reintroduction means it must again pass the House and Senate by a two-thirds vote and win approval from legislatures in three-fourths of the states to become part of the Constitution.

One of the two women in the Senate, Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., was among the 53 sponsors listed Wednesday. Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., opposes the amendment.

Mrs. Schlafly, an attorney who is the best-known woman in the New Right, led a nationwide campaign against the amendment on grounds it would allow drafting of women, blur differences between the sexes, and transfer to the federal government authority that now belongs to states.

"The American people support real public officials who have the courage to tackle tough problems — not wimps who hide behind a phony symbol," Mrs. Schlafly said in a statement released in Washington. She was at home in Altamonte, Fla., a spokeswoman said.

"I'd like to thank Phyllis Schlafly for the quiche that she sent me," said Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.

"You see, real men do eat quiche. Real men are sufficiently secure to eat anything they want to," he said, adding:

"I want to point out the ERA is about equal opportunity. It's not about abortion, quiche, men and women's bathrooms or the draft."

DeConcini joined Sens. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., and Bob Packwood, R-Ore., — the measure's principal Senate sponsors — along with 10 other senators at a news conference to announce the amendment's reintroduction.

Packwood estimated 25 senators are adamantly opposed to the ERA. But he said many more among the Senate's 100 members can be swayed by what he described as the growing political clout of women.

The amendment has also been introduced again in the House, where it had the backing of more than half the membership.

Dole breezes past Senate committee

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Elizabeth Dole, President Reagan's nominee for secretary of transportation, found the road smooth Wednesday during confirmation hearings before the Senate Commerce Committee.

Four senators, including her husband, Bob Dole, R-Kan., shared in introducing her to the panel. It confirmed by the full Senate, she would succeed Drew Lewis, who has announced he will resign Feb. 1 to head Warner Amex Cable Communications Inc.

"Have you filed your conflict of interest statement?" Committee Chairman Robert Packwood, R-Ore., asked Dole.

"There's no conflict. There's a lot of interest," the senator replied, eliciting loud laughter in the packed committee room.

"TV dinners are a small price to pay for better highways," Dole added. "I think she's well qualified and I intend to vote for her."

Mrs. Dole, Reagan's White House assistant for public liaison, is a former Federal Trade Commission member and assistant to the president for consumer affairs. She is a native of Salisbury, N.C.

support of wilderness, your actions belie your words," he told Watt.

WASHINGTON — Congressional critics told Interior Secretary James Watt Wednesday his performance in office has been "essentially an abomination," but Watt stood his ground, saying he has delivered the changes he promised.

"I inherited a program of mismanagement," Watt testified at a House Interior Committee hearing called by Chairman Morris Udall, D-Ariz., to ask about the controversial secretary's plans for the next two years.

"I vowed to bring about change — I came with an agenda," he said. "Did I bring about change? You bet I did."

Watt's claim to having had "marvelous" success in correcting "mismanagement" by his predecessors did not sit well with Democratic members of the panel. Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio, charged Watt is planning "to turn over what remains of the nation's wild lands to private interests who would exploit them for their own ends — usually at bargain basement prices."

Seiberling, chairman of a national parks subcommittee, said the "latest word" is that he plans to open wilderness study areas to oil drilling on a piecemeal basis to avoid "the public outcry" that met his recent decision to drop 800,000 acres of federal lands from further study.

Subscribing, a strong supporter of environmental protection, also accused Watt of having "hurled insulting epithets at those millions of Americans who have ... tried to protect our nation's heritage of natural wonder."

Watt did not respond to the attack, but went to Udall after the hearing to complain.

"A man who speaks in that way is not to be tolerated," he said of Seiberling.

Rep. James Weaver, D-Ore., demanded that Watt "explain" a recent Business Week interview in which he accused environmentalists of seeking "centralized planning and control of society comparable to Nazi Germany and Communist Russia."

But Watt refused, saying his words had been taken "out of context."

"I said what I said, and I meant what I said," he told Weaver.

Rep. Phillip Burton, D-Calif., also was blunt in calling Watt's performance "essentially an abomination."

Udall was more restrained, but said Watt's two years in office had been "marked by friction, controversy and, unfortunately, outright confrontation at times."

"The secretary came to his office promising an era of change and, for better or worse, the secretary has delivered on his promise," the Arizona Democrat added, drawing laughter from a packed hearing room.

Treatment a step toward cure of MS

BOSTON (UPI) — Progressive multiple sclerosis can be temporarily reversed or halted for the first time with a treatment that may be the first step toward a cure for a disease that afflicts 230,000 Americans, doctors said Wednesday.

Another study found that a controversial treatment using a high-pressure oxygen chamber had short-term benefits for multiple sclerosis victims.

Both studies were reported in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Researchers at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston said 13 of 20 patients with severe progressive multiple sclerosis who received chemotherapy and a hormone drug improved or had the progress of the disease halted.

The effects of the treatment were only temporary and doctors carefully avoided saying a cure was imminent. But, since the treatment offered the first real clues to the nature of the disease, they did suggest it could lead to an effective treatment.

"This is the first step toward finding an effective treatment for multiple sclerosis," Dr. Howard I. Weiner said.

High doses of the drug over a long time may cause cancer or leukemia and the side effects may outweigh the benefits except in the most severe cases of the central nervous system disease, the researchers said.

A second study by researchers at the New York Medical Center showed treatment with high pressure pure oxygen had "positive, though transient" effect on MS sufferers.

Twenty 90-minute treatments with a pressurized oxygen known as hyperbaric oxygen produced "objective improvement" in 12 of 17 patients, who became more mobile, less tired and had improved equilibrium. The results lasted six weeks or longer. Only one of 20 patients receiving another type of oxygen improved.

Senate leaders warn of showdown on defense

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Republican leaders served notice to President Reagan Wednesday that military spending must be trimmed at least $3 billion or $4 billion more in 1984, and forecast a "ferocious debate" on the issue.

Senate GOP leader Howard Baker predicted lawmakers eventually will make a compromise cut of $11 billion or $12 billion, while Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger want a reduction no deeper than $8 billion for next year.

Congressional leaders of both parties joined Baker in saying the administration will have to reduce the proposed increase in military spending more than Reagan has indicated he is willing to do so far.

Baker and other Senate leaders had breakfast with Weinberger, and Baker said he told the secretary that unless a larger cut is made in the president's ambitious $1.53 trillion blueprint to build up the military, "It's going to get done for us, and we'll lose control of this thing all together."

"The Reagan administration can expect a 'real donnybrook' about this issue this year," Baker said to the Weinberger. "It's going to be a ferocious debate, I expect."

That debate already has begun. Reagan proposed a broad domestic spending freeze in his State of the Union address Tuesday night. It did not include military spending — with the exception of pay — but he promised $55 billion in Pentagon "savings" over five years.

Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said Wednesday in the House. "The freeze he (Reagan) talked about is like calling your canoe the Queen Elizabeth II ... You can't freeze certain kinds of spending, allow other types of spending to accumulate and go on and on and on and call it a total freeze."

Bethlehem sets loss record

By United Press International

Bethlehem Steel Corp. said Wednesday it lost $1.15 billion for the fourth quarter and $1.47 billion for 1982 — Bethlehem's largest losses ever and the largest quarterly loss in U.S. corporate history.

Bethlehem spokesman Robert LeMay said the company's biggest previous yearly loss was $48.2 million in 1977. Bethlehem's largest previous quarterly loss, $477 million, came in the third quarter of 1977.

The largest previous quarterly loss by any U.S. company — $1.01 billion — was recorded by International Harvester for the three months ending Oct. 31, 1982, said Harvester spokesman Bill Greenhill.

Chrysler Corp.'s $1.7 billion loss in 1980 was the largest ever for an automaker and is believed to be the biggest loss ever posted by an American company.

The lion's share of Bethlehem's 1982 loss, $1.05 billion, stemmed from costs of the planned shutdown of its Lackawanna, N.Y., plant and the restructuring of its Johnstown, Pa., plant.

The losses compare with net income of $31.1 million in the fourth quarter of 1981 and earnings of $210.9 million for 1981 as a whole.

The recession-wracked No. 2 steelmaker said fourth-quarter sales totaled $1.02 billion versus $1.63 billion in the same period in 1981. Sales for 1982 were almost $5.36 billion versus 1981 sales of $7.3 billion.

Leak could postpone year's shuttle program

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — Engineers, their worst fears confirmed about a fuel leak in space shuttle Challenger, launched a massive effort Wednesday to solve the problem before it upsets shuttle mission schedules for all of 1983.

Kennedy Space Center spokesman James Ball said shuttle project teams from coast to coast were working around the clock in an effort to determine by Saturday precisely where the hydrogen leak is and what can be done to fix it quickly.

Project officials say at best the Challenger, originally scheduled to blast off Monday on its maiden flight, cannot be launched until March. The "leak problem must be solved first, lest it pose a fire hazard in flight, they said.

The space agency has scheduled five shuttle missions in 1983, each carrying a payload for hire. The schedule is so tight a major delay of one mission can force subsequent delays, in ripple fashion, for later flights.

Project officials fear such delays could discourage commercial users from hooking payloads on the space freighter, dealing the shuttle program aserious setback.

The hydrogen leak in Challenger's engine system, first suspected in December, was confirmed Tuesday by a test-firing of the ship's three main engines. But initial data from the test failed to reveal where and how big the leak is.

"It's a pretty depressed place around here today," said one official at National Aeronautics and Space Administration headquarters in Washington. "There's a lot of head-scratching."

Teams at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida took the first step toward tracking down the leak Wednesday by injecting controlled amounts of hydrogen gas through thin plastic tubes into the sealed engine compartment where the gas buildup was noted Tuesday.

They hoped tracking the movement of gas from known locations within the crowded engine compartment would help pinpoint the source of the gas detected Tuesday by 17 sensors.

Reagan's speech panned by Tass

By United Press International

West Germany praised President Reagan's State of the Union address Wednesday citing his conciliatory words for the Soviet Union, but Moscow said the speech distorted Soviet policy and attempted to excuse "anti-people" programs.

The Tuesday speech was delivered too late for most morning newspapers around the world to comment on and few countries had official comment.

The official Soviet new agency Tass, however, said the address showed Reagan had learned nothing while in office.

"His speech showed his administration has not drawn any lessons from the bitter experience of the past two years and is bent on stubbornly pursuing the bankrupt course for an all-round build-up of military spending and simultaneous reductions in social programs, thus eroding the well-being of millions of Americans," Tass said.

The agency said the federal budget deficit and a decline in the gross national product, housing and manufacturing all were a consequence of Reagan's "anti-people policy."

While most of his speech was devoted to domestic matters, Reagan did outline his stand on arms reductions and U.S.-Soviet relations.

"We are prepared for a positive change in Soviet-American relations," Reagan said. "But the Soviet Union must show, by deeds as well as words a sincere commitment to respect the rights and sovereignty of the family of nations."

Referring to the talks on medium-range missiles in Europe - which get under way in Geneva, Switzerland, Thursday - Reagan said: "We are also prepared to carefully explore serious Soviet proposals."

Tass charged Reagan "resorted to undisguised attempts to distort the Soviet Union's policy."

"He did not advance in his message any constructive ideas which would show that the United States is committed to peace in deeds and not merely words," the Soviet Communist Party news agency Novosti said.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said in a statement released in Bonn that West Germany saw "with satisfaction" that Washington had pledged to examine carefully any serious Soviet proposal in Geneva.

Genscher, currently visiting Washington, also said he welcomed Reagan's economic targets of abolishing the trade deficit, fighting inflation and lowering interest rates.

"We hope that the president's program will revive the American economy and that this will positively affect the world economy," he said.

Germany seeking ex-Nazi

LA PAZ, Bolivia (UPI) - Lawyers for Nazi war criminal Klaus Barbie, known as the "Butcher of Lyon," Wednesday offered to pay a $10,000 debt to obtain his release from jail as the Supreme Court debated an extradition request from West Germany.

Barbie, 69, was jailed Tuesday on a 10-year-old charge of owing the state mining company $10,000.

"It was a mistake," Barbie's lawyer Constantino Carrion said of his client's arrest.

Barbie is sought by West Germany for the murder of a French resistance worker. He is also held responsible for the deaths of thousands of Jews and French resistance workers when he was Gestapo chief in Lyon, France, during World War II.

Salvador rebels launch major attacks

By JOHN E. NEUHAEGEN
United Press International

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador - Leftist rebels on a nationwide drive Wednesday attacked 12 towns and halted 6,000 government troops outside a rebel stronghold in some of the heaviest fighting of the three-year civil war.

For the second time in a week, the army rushed reinforcements to its 6,000-man force bogged down in fighting for a key city in Morazan province, dispatching 500 to 1,000 men and 100mm artillery in 20 trucks, officials said.

The government in a 10-day-old drive has been struggling to retake the strategic rebel-held town of Meanguera, 70 miles northeast of San Salvador.

Apparent fear of a major attack forced the army to seal off a 20-mile stretch of the Pacific Coast Highway beginning 35 miles southeast of San Salvador, the first time in memory the government closed a major road.

"There is heavy fighting going on between military units and terrorist groups a half a mile from the river," a soldier said, referring to an attempt to advance to the strategic Torola River crossing near Meanguera.

The Torola crossing and Meanguera control lead into rebel strongholds in the northern half of Morazan province.

In another development, guerrillas charged the U.S. State Department ordered Salvadoran authorities to transfer captured rebel commander Alejandro Montenegro and six other leftist leaders to Panama.

The clandestine Radio Venceremos claimed Defense Minister Gen. Jose Guillermo Garcia later agreed to exchange the seven for Col. Francisco Adolfo Castillo, the deputy defense minister captured July 19 when his helicopter was shot down.

"If they have not advanced up to now, they will never advance," the rebels' Radio Venceremos said of the army's attempt to drive guerrillas from Meanguera.

Walesa gets paycheck

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) - Former Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said Wednesday he was back on the payroll at the Gdansk shipyard but still does not know when authorities will allow him to resume work as an electrician.

Walesa told UPI by telephone from his Gdansk apartment he had been summoned to the Lenin shipyard's personnel department and told he had been on the payroll there since Jan. 17, the day after his leave of absence ended.

"I was told I would be getting payment from Jan. 17 which was tantamount to the approval of the continuation of my job at the shipyard," Walesa said.

"I was told that I will not be allowed to resume my job until the authorities take their decision in this respect," Walesa said.

"Until the decision is taken (by the authorities) I will be paid as if I was working," he said.

Walesa said the fact that he had been put back on the payroll meant he had won his dispute with the shipyard management and the local official who handles the disbanded unions affairs.

The conflict between faith and scientific truth created a personal crisis for J.D. Williams, a Mormon intellectual Mormon liberals fight for change

By JOHN ALOYSIUS FARRELL, Denver Post Staff writer

SALT LAKE CITY — This was the day they smoked J.D. Williams out of the theological closet — Aug. 28, 1982. More than 700 Mormon liberals have gathered in the high-ceilinged halls of the Hotel Utah for a religious symposium. Scholars, intellectuals, students — they are the closest thing to a loyal opposition to exist in the Mormon nation.

Williams is a great-grandson of Brigham Young and a well-loved figure among these Latter-day Saints. He has never been afraid to prod the white-haired patriarchs of his church when he felt the occasion demanded it.

And in a society where outspoken dissent ranks on the list of deadly sins with adultery, pornography and child molestation, he has become something of a figurehead for hard-pressed Mormon liberals.

People believe in him and depend upon him. His assigned topic this day: "The Phenomenon of the Closet Doubter."

Everyone in the room knows someone who fits the description: a friend or relative whose anguished doubts about church doctrine were kept secret so they could maintain their place in Mormon society. Many are doubters themselves.

Williams tells the crowd: "I suppose that this room is filled with people who have spent their time at the card game called Hearts. They will remember when a player starts to lead spades, that inevitably someone will say, 'Smoke 'em out, as the effort is made to expose the queen.'"

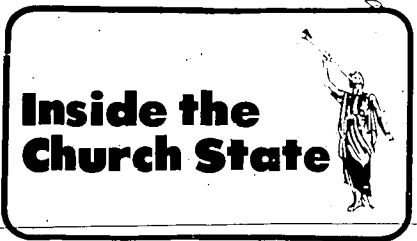

And the only conclusion I can reach about the organizers of this symposium is that they have taken a smoke-'em-out strategy with J.D. Williams.

What follows could only take place in Utah, where confessional public "testimony" is part of the Mormon creed. For 30 minutes Williams takes the audience on an intimate journey through his past — through highlights of faith and moments of dark doubt.

He never dons the mantle of full-fledged closet doubter. But he concedes that the demands his religion makes on its scholars, intellectuals and liberals — to maintain their faith in the face of anti-intellectual and conservative attacks by Mormon authorities — had carried him past the point of compromise.

Finally his wife had told him, "J.D., you have made up your own church."

"I suppose," Williams says, "that I plead guilty to the charge." Twenty-five years ago, sociologist Thomas O'Dea wrote of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that "Mormonism's greatest and most significant problem is its encounter with modern secular thought." O'Dea's conclusion is as true today as it was in 1957. And the basis of the crisis is simple. The Mormons are a people who emphasize education and the rule of reason while at the same time embracing a faith replete with miracles, revelation and angelic messengers. All of which, they claim, is historically, literally and provably true.

For more than half a century, Mormon intellectuals like J.D. Williams have been leaving Utah to study at institutions like Princeton, Harvard, Stanford or Berkeley. They are taught to follow scientific method, to demand historical proof. They get steeped in secular thought, such as equality for women and blacks.

When they return to their Rocky Mountain home, these young Mormon scholars measure their religion against those scientific standards and often they find that Mormonism doesn't meet the test.

Some shrug off the discrepancies — select the best from their religion and continue with a happy heart.

Others suffer a crisis of faith and leave the church for good. "They feel betrayed. Angry. They feel their choice is in or out," says Peggy Fletcher, editor of the liberal Mormon journal, Sunstone, and organizer of the symposium at which Williams spoke.

But many spend years struggling with their doubts. They may have no choice — immersed as they are in Mormon culture with ties to family, friends and professional associates. At times they feel guilty about their doubts; at other times they are euphoric when an experience in their lives bears testimony to the righteousness of their faith.

The religion is based on the story of a man named Joseph Smith — a farmer's son who dug for buried treasure until the day he received a visit from God and was told to re-establish the true church of Christ, here in the latter days.

Smith said that he was shown golden plates by an angel, Moroni. The plates told the story of a band of Hebrews who sailed the ocean and settled in the New World some 2,000 years before Columbus, where they were converted by Christ before ravaged their civilization. Smith named his tale the Book of Mormon.

The church insists that Smith was a prophet of God and that every bit of his story is historic fact and provable truth. There is no middle ground.

"The church has tied itself to Joseph Smith's vision and to the Book of Mormon, and it has done it thoroughly and over and over again," says Sterling McMurrin, a professor of history at the University of Utah, another leading Mormon liberal. "It officially says that if Joseph Smith didn't actually see God and if the Book of Mormon isn't authentic, then this whole thing is a fraud."

But no non-Mormon archaeologist has found proof to corroborate Smith's tale. The Smithsonian Institution says the story has no scientific basis. Documents have been discovered that contradict Smith's account or raise doubts about his character.

"The church has put itself into one hell of a predicament," says McMurrin. "It has tied itself to its own history, and that is why it can't face history the way it ought to."

Which puts Mormon scholars on the spot. Liberal Latter-day Saints would find it easier to stick with their church if only it would treat the Book of Mormon as an allegorical story that teaches righteous behavior but isn't necessarily historic truth the way that many Christian religions treat the Genesis version of creation when confronted with the theory of evolution.

But Mormon authorities won't budge when it comes to questions of literal history. Sometimes, the crisis of faith undergone by a Mormon scholar is compounded — by the church's anti-intellectual posture and fiercely conservative political views. Unanswered prayers over personal troubles can add to nagging doubts. Such was the case of J.D. Williams — no ordinary man — a man who believes he has worked miracles with his faith. When Williams finished speaking that day, the room was filled with emotional applause. Many gathered around to shake his hand or touch him lovingly on the shoulder.

He was, and is, a son of Utah. "To find the roots of my faith," he says, "you have to begin in my home, with two magnificent Mormon parents."

"They were the embodiment of all that is good about Mormonism. The gospel was lived there. And I had the good fortune in the Depression of Brigham Young's daughter — my grandmother — living with us for about a year, and thus literally having that kind of tie to Brigham Young in my generation. In that boyhood period a belief in God and Jesus Christ became vivid and firm." J.D. was a bright young man, warmly nurtured by the close-knit Mormon community that exists around the University of Utah in eastern Salt Lake City. His friends in the neighborhood and his teachers at East High School encouraged him to apply to Stanford University. He was accepted by the school and graduated magna cum laude, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, in 1946.

That same year J.D. Williams and Barbara Wright were married in the Logan temple. The Latter-day Saints believe that if a Mormon couple has their marriage "sealed" in a sacred temple ceremony, their relationship will outlast the grave and continue for all eternity.

"It was a ceremony that made eminent sense to me," Williams says, "that something as dear as my love for her could somehow be validated beyond death. I still treasure that principle of Mormonism."

After two years with the government in Washington, D.C., Williams won a fellowship at Harvard University. These post-war years brought dozens of bright young Mormon men and women to Boston, and a special community of scholars grew around the Cambridge, Mass., branch of the church.

By day they studied the classics, economics and engineering at Harvard or the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and when classes had ended they explored the New Testament together at the Cambridge Branch.

It was an idyllic existence — one of those places "where the celestial kingdom had come to rest on earth," says Williams. "We at Harvard and MIT were on the same struggling economic basis. We loved each other. It was simply life and the gospel in all of its beauty, and its fullness was true and gorgeous to behold."

Williams won his master's degree in public administration and his Ph.D. in economics and government from Harvard, then returned home in 1952, having accepted a teaching job from the University of Utah.

In 1950 Williams was "called" by the authorities of his church to serve in, his lay clergy and become a Mormon bishop. For three years he led the Monument Park Sixth Ward, a church subdivision, in eastern Salt Lake City.

"For those three years there was evidence after evidence for me to support the basic beliefs of the church. I now realize that there were exceptions to what I am about to say, but the most pressed-up lives in the ward that I presided over were the lives that were the farthest removed from the principles of the church," he says.

"That was empiricism. That was confirmation for the things we were trying to teach. And by the power of that priesthood, God performed miracles through my hands."

One night there came a call from a woman who was suffering from the fever and pain of an ectopic pregnancy. Her husband did not feel worthy enough to give the Mormon blessing for the sick — and thus called his bishop, J.D. Williams, to anoint his wife, lay hands upon her, and bless her.

"I promised her that before morning the poison would pour from her system," he recalls. "That happened six hours later, I could multiply one healing episode after another."

In 1971 he received another call from his church. The parents of six Mormon drug users had come to a local Mormon authority and asked him for help. He called Williams, her father. "For a year and a half I had the opportunity to lead one little corner of Zion in what I called the 'soft Jesus movement' — somehow to give to these young people a belief in the power of Christ as a replacement for LSD and marijuana," he says.

All these experiences sustained his faith, but as time passed Williams found "disquieting" features in his church.

He is a liberal Democrat and was an unsuccessful candidate for the U.S. Senate in 1968.

Throughout the 1950s he was comforted by the ecumenicism of the prophet David McKay, who made Mormonism a big enough faith to include liberals like McMurrin, Oert, Tanner and himself.

Yet the church steadfastly refused to accept blacks into the Mormon priesthood. It was a "painful and unhappy" refusal to Williams. "What disquieted me early on was my absolute rejection of our doctrine in regard to blacks," he says.

Williams was an early and active participant in the civil rights movement. In 1963 he was given awards by the B'nai B'rith Society and the Utah Bar Association for his "contributions to human brotherhood" and "a free society under law."

Throughout the early 1960s he worked to get open housing laws through the Utah Legislature. Simultaneously, the authorities of the Mormon church were diligently trying to fight the sale of liquor by the drink in Utah.

"There was lots of advocacy and involvement in politics on liquor," he recalls. "But we could not get one word from 47 East South Temple (the Mormon headquarters) in regard to the housing problem."

In 1963, when the Rev. Martin Luther King was murdered in Memphis, Tenn., "a thousand of us walked quietly down Main Street in mourning, but not a word was said inside the Tabernacle," where the Mormons were holding their worldwide church conference.

Throughout his youth, and his days at Stanford and Harvard, Williams had been "far removed from all the intrigues of the central stakes of Zion."

But after returning to Salt Lake City, and becoming involved in politics, he saw for the first time the activities of his church in secular affairs.

High-ranking church authorities were campaigning in the 1950s for a reapportionment plan that would enable each county, regardless of population, to elect one state senator to the Legislature.

Since most of the rural counties in Utah were overwhelmingly Mormon, this redistricting plan would give the church a firm hold on the state Senate, no matter how many non-Mormons moved into the urban counties along the Wasatch Range.

Said state Sen. Welby Young in 1960: "They made it clear to me that the whole idea of one senator per county in Utah would prevent control of the government by the gentile — Catholics, Jews, Masons and labor unions."

As a liberal who believed in the "one man, one vote" philosophy that would later be made law by the U.S. Supreme Court, Williams became active in opposing the plan and got an eye-opening, firsthand view of how Mormon authorities were trampling the principle of separation of church and state.

"The reapportionment plan would have forever transferred political control of the Utah state Senate to the outlying areas, where the Mormon population rises to about 90 percent," he says. "And (Mormon Church Apostle) Henry D. Moyle called in the chairman of my political party — Milton Weideman — who was against it, and asked: 'Milt, you are you fighting this? Don't you realize it will mean 26 out of 29 votes for the church every time the Senate meets?'"

The "Salt Lake Valley State President's Committee" was formed as a political action arm of the church in the state's most populous county (which would have lost six of its seven state senators had the measure passed).

Deseret Industry trucks from the Mormon welfare system were used to carry leaflets from ward to ward. Members of the church Mutual Improvement Association were picked to pass the literature out and apply pressure to legislators. Stake presidents, local church authorities, campaigned at conference time for the measure. Pamphlets were

Historian's firing emphasizes a dilemma

SALT LAKE CITY — The auditorium at the University of Utah's behavioral science building was packed last February when James Clayton, Ph.D., dean of the graduate school and prominent Mormon historian, rose to speak.

It isn't an easy time for Mormon historians, he told the crowd.

A dearly loved and respected scholar, "the most significant Mormon historian" in 80 years — Leonard J. Arrington — had been fired by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints from his post as official church historian.

Important archives of the church had been closed to all research, Clayton said, and "many projects of considerable worth are now stymied or will be finished with incomplete sources."

Plans for a 16-volume history of the church nurtured by Arrington, had been scrapped by the Mormon hierarchy. The Mormon Historical Department had been moved to the campus of Brigham Young University 40 miles from the church archives that were essential for scholarly work.

The climate for intellectual freedom was clearly at a low point in Mormon history — especially when it came to the kind of critical inquiry that professional historians bring to their work.

Referring to Galileo's 17th century struggle over scholarly freedom with a Roman Catholic inquisition, Clayton said that "in our own time and in our own community, this age-old controversy continues — only now the tension is not so much between faith and science as between faith and history."

"Selecting only those topics, events and doctrines from history that are comfortable and safe in order to lead the membership more easily into the promised land is, to put it bluntly, intellectually dishonest and morally irresponsible," Clayton said.

Though Clayton did not mention them, those in the audience knew of other attempts made by high church authorities to muzzle Mormon historians.

Two volumes on church history — a one-volume history of the church and a book on early Mormon economic cooperation — were not reprinted after their contents offended members of the Latter-day Saint hierarchy, especially the Apostle Ezra Taft Benson.

One volume had barely been saved from the shredder after the authors failed to give proper credit to a "miracle" in which seagulls descended on a swarm of locusts to save the early Mormon settlers. Neither book will be used for reference or in footnotes in future church histories.

And during the previous year, Apostle Boyd Packer and BYU political science professor Louis Midgely had publicly chastised the Mormon historians for not using their work to promote their faith.

It was a problem as old as their religion for the Mormons. Ever since Joseph Smith told his tale of golden plates and ancient civilizations, people have been building his reputation up, or tearing his memory down.

It is quite possible that, in Midgely's words, "There is no middle ground." But if anyone tries to walk the shore — it's the Mormon historians.

Unlike Judaism or Christianity, whose roots are safely sheltered by the passage of time, the Mormon religion is barely more than 150 years old.

Each blemish discovered in the story of Joseph Smith and his Latter-day Saints is usually well documented by letters, diaries or other 19th century records. A trained historian can't shut his eyes to such evidence.

It would be easier if the church were willing to treat such suspect Mormon volumes as the Book of Mormon and the Book of Abraham as parables, but the hierarchy — mostly businessmen with no concern for the intellectuals' dilemma — won't back down.

"The Mormon position has always been to argue that on the decisive question of the veracity of Joseph's prophetic revelations there are only two alternatives: he was either a genuine prophet, or a base fraud," says Midgely.

And so the Mormon historian is a troubled person, Midgely says, forced to choose between giving up faith or forfeiting professional ethics.

"To treat the Book of Mormon as merely an indication of Joseph's state of mind, or as a document that he somehow crafted out of contemporary materials when one writes as a historian, and then to treat it as a genuine ancient text and a divine revelation on Sunday is a clear case of intellectual schizophrenia," as Midgely put it.

During the Arrington years, the historians tried to gently nudge the church away from its insistence on literal interpretation. Their effort was called "The New Mormon History," but it ended when the church authorities launched their attack.

"The discordance between those roles of faithful saint and honest historian has produced more than a little self-deception, some blatant hypocrisy and some pretentious bad history," Midgely said.

"Facts should not only be taught as facts; they should be taught to increase one's faith in the gospel, to build testimony," Benson told a gathering of Mormon seminary teachers in 1976.

"Some things that are true are not very useful," added Packer, in August 1981.

Mormon-historian-Davis-Bilton says the church has used some subtle but effective means of behind-the-scenes repression as well. He said last August that church officials have selectively limited the material in the archives to just trusted, "safe" historians.

Notes are examined by church officials as students and professors conduct their research. Honest historians find that publication has been discouraged — with a chilling intellectual effect — when the church-owned Deseret bookstores, Utah's largest chain, passed the word down the grapevine that they would not carry certain works.

Church-owned magazines and newspapers don't review certain books, depriving the author of publicity. The church "has had rather good success in stifling historical writing," Bilton said. "The cumulative results can be powerful."

The historians counterattacked — with Clayton's speech, and with a defense of intellectual freedom the previous August by D. Michael Quinn, professor of history at Brigham Young University, who warned that "the Mormon history of benignly angelic church leaders apparently advocated by Elders Benson and Packer would border on idolatry."

The confrontation has slimmered since then. "It will never leave us," says University of Utah history professor Sterling McMurrin, one of the leading Mormon intellectuals.

The death mask of Joseph Smith shown here is part of the collection of early Mormon artifacts.

circulated on Sundays at the ward houses.

According to a contemporary account of the struggle, written by Kenneth H. Mitchell at the University of Utah, Mormon Apostle Mycle Be Leas worked when the measure was debated and called in seven editors from the church-owned evening newspaper, the Deseret News, to explain that they were afraid of the influence that non-Mormons would have as the state grew more industrialized.

When one of the editors was later asked if he felt he would be dismissed had the News not endorsed the reapportionment plan, he answered, "Without a doubt."

But then a powerful anti-Mormon backlash began to develop as both Mormon and non-Mormon voters grew alarmed at the church's involvement. The Internal Revenue Service stepped in and warned the Mormon hierarchy that the church was in danger of losing its tax-exempt status.

Less than a week before the election, the Mormon authorities backed off. McKay and his counselors wrote to a colleague of Williams — Professor Frank Jonas — that "the church takes no position" on the issue, and "no one is authorized to align us with either side of the controversy." Williams sent the letter to the newspapers, and the plan was defeated in a statewide referendum by a vote of 143,000 to 84,000.

"They were on the wrong side," he says, "and they lost."

In 1966 Williams called such incidents "rare." But by 1981, he was conceding in a public debate that such violations of church and state were "too legion to mention."

Throughout the 1970s Williams found his faith tested by the Mormon church's shifting politics. In 1974 the Mormon Apostle Ezra Taft Benson — first in the line of succession to the ailing prophet Spencer W. Kimball — told an Associated Press reporter that a faithful Mormon could not easily be a liberal Democrat "if he was living the gospel and understood it."

"Brother Benson essentially read us all out of the church," Williams says. "Benson's flirtation with the John Birch Society and his declarations against the welfare state have made it enormously difficult for the Mormon liberal to hang in there and feel he or she has an equal place in the Kingdom of God."

"I was burned sorely by it," he says, and by off-the-cuff comments from his fellow Mormons: "Brother Williams, you pray — just like a Republican!"

And then for five years the Mormon Church set off on a crusade against the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment.

The Mormon hierarchy raised $13,000 in two days from wealthy church members in California so they could send a delegation to persuade elect anti-ERA legislators. The Deseret News published an editorial against the amendment just days before the Utah Legislature was to meet and consider its passage.

A Mormon front group called Families are Concerned Today was formed to defeat the ERA in Virginia. And buses rolled up to ward chapels in Missouri to transport Mormon women from their Relief Society meetings to the state Legislature so they could lobby against the amendment.

"Are we a church or a political party?" Williams asked the crowd at a public debate. "Is this what regional representatives were set apart to do? To be the political fund-raisers for an emerging Moral Majority within Mormonism?"

The trend continued. Mormon ERA supporter Sonia Johnson was excommunicated from the church for her outspoken defense of the amendment. Such stifling of dissent was "deeply painful" to Williams.

And then Benson, in 1980, gave a speech to Brigham Young University students in which he said that the Mormon prophet, expressing God's will, could advise church members on political affairs as well as religious matters.

"For me it was a truly frightening speech," Williams says, "laying down the blueprint for an honest-to-goodness theocracy in which the prophet could speak on any issue, including political issues; that his words were to be given greater credence than those of the dead prophets or scripture, and that it would be obligatory on members of the church to follow his admonition."

While these political events especially gnawed at Williams, he and other Mormon scholars were also finding their faith challenged by a rash of discrepancies that were uncovered regarding church doctrine.

An assistant church historian discovered that Joseph Smith may have had as many as 12 wives for years before the official church doctrine on polygamy was recorded as divine revelation in 1843.

"Even with my forebearers having lived it, I just have to say bluntly that polygamy was not the word of God, and this was destructive to me," Williams says.

In 1967 the Museum of Natural History in New York discovered last fragments of papyrus that Joseph Smith had once "translated" into a standard Mormon work — the "Book of Abraham." When examined by modern scholars, the papyrus turned out to be just common burial documents that bore no relation to what Smith had written.

Mormon apologists rushed to explain the discrepancy, and suddenly all of Williams' training — the days at Harvard and Stanford, the hours in the classroom, his faith in history and science — was offended.

"All of a sudden there was a kind of character sickness, like the Russians rewriting the period of Stalin in order to suit current feelings," he says.

To head off such criticism, certain Mormon apostles began to crack down on Mormon professors and scholars. Apostle Bruce McConkie gave a speech called the "Seven Deadly Heresies." In 1980, and one of the seven heresies was a belief in organic evolution.

A professional church historian was sacked and replaced by a more dutiful religious authority. Books of church history were taken out of print, and Apostle Boyd Packer warned the historians that they should be em-bellishing faith, not searching for truth.

And finally, there were personal crises for Williams.

He developed eczema, spent thousands of dollars on doctors and countless hours in prayer to alleviate the pain and itching — to no avail.

A son ran afoul of the drug culture, and prayers again went unanswered.

"To a guy who has grown up with a deep belief in an intervening God, believing in all righteous kinds of things, this was a period of great pain. He was my partner, you know, and I believe that a fair part of the time you have an opportunity to gain his help," Williams says.

Faith became "an ongoing struggle."

He is still loved and honored by his fellow Mormons.

He still wants to turn his church from a religion of "thou shalt nots to a gospel of 'thou shalt ... and let's get on with it.'"

"Things may get turned around," he says.

But for J.D. Williams, "the last four years have been very difficult for me as a member of the Latter-day Saint Church."

"The church acting like a national political party to bring about the defeat of the ERA — its frequent emphasis on the 'thou shalt nots' rather than the 'thou shalt ... The Benson blueprints for theocracy ... The overwhelming social and political conservatism of the church ... all make it very, very difficult for one whose Mormonism rests so heavily on free agency."

"My Mormonism is the challenge to bring to pass much righteousness and the awareness of the great good that can be done by an affirmative fighting brand of Christianity. That is where I want the arrow of my compass to point."

Evans outlines grim picture

By ELLIEN MARKS
United Press International

BOISE -- State Superintendent of Public Instruction Jerry Evans presented lawmakers Wednesday with a grim picture of the state's educational system -- along with an 8.2 percent budget hike request -- but he was told to direct his concerns to the Legislature's tax committee and the public.

Evans and a number of educational associations told the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee the state lags behind in student expenditures and teacher salaries as well as curriculum, which is not keeping pace with a changing job market.

close to "crippling education in the state of Idaho," Hein said.

For fiscal year 1984, the education department is seeking $371.5 million in its prime "foundation" budget, which provides the bulk of money to the state's 115 school districts.

The agency proposes $228.6 million of that amount be funded through the general account -- a 21 percent increase over the appropriation from that fund last year.

The overall request for the public school budget for fiscal 1984, which begins July, is $420.2 million compared to $388.4 million this year.

Evans said the proposal represents a "healthy increase, but it's a responsible representation considering the needs of our public schools."

The request will begin moving the state's teacher salaries to parity with neighboring states, which generally rank 19 1/2 percent higher than Idaho, Evans said.

Idaho Education Association President Daryl Sallaz said the state is experiencing a "serious brain drain" as qualified teachers leave their jobs to find higher pay elsewhere.

He said the proposed budget is a compromise that is lower than teachers really need, but he said granting the funding request would provide "some reassurance of your commitment to resolve that problem."

"The job we're doing now just isn't good enough for the future," Evans said.

He said although state expenditures have been on the rise during recent years, contributions from the property tax have dropped since voters approved a one-percent limit on those assessments.

Meridian Superintendent Gus Hein called an "outright embarrassment" Idaho's position as third-lowest in the country in per-student expenditures, and he urged committee members to persuade their colleagues to increase state revenues through tax hikes, if necessary.

"We're moving dangerously

Funding formula may change

BOISE (UPI) -- The state Board of Education ordered preparation Wednesday of an alternate plan for dividing legislative appropriations among the four state-supported colleges and universities. The plan will decrease reliance on enrollment-based formulas.

Board members and administrators said the current plan for allocating the Legislature's lump-sum appropriation places too much emphasis on the number of students served without focusing enough attention on the unique roles of each institution and the quality of their programs.

While the board ordered its staff and a committee of educators to develop an alternate plan, members said they were concerned the move would seem to signal a shift away from fairness in funding.

"We've really got to emphasize that we are going to be working toward the same goals we've been working for all along," said board member Janet Hay.

Stephen Keto, the board's chief fiscal officer, said the decision will mean the board in April will consider funding based on two formulas.

Keto said the new funding alternative would incorporate findings of a Mission and Scope Committee, which is studying the unique roles of each university to determine priorities for different programs at each institution.

For example, he said, Idaho State University historically has offered a pharmacy program while the University of Idaho provides forestry education. Meanwhile, he said, all the schools, including Boise State University and Lewis-Clark State College, offer education and business programs.

Keto said the existing arrangement, which has been in place for three years, calls for decisions based on budget requests, historical funding patterns and an "equity analysis" aimed at ensuring equivalent funding per student for comparable programs from school to school.

New budget plan would hike sales tax

By MARK SHENEFELT
United Press International

BOISE -- Legislative leaders and their advisers said Wednesday they believe legal wrinkles in a new budget-balancing plan featuring tax-anticipation notes can be ironed out, but they fear Idaho's sales tax would have to be temporarily doubled to cover the program.

House Speaker T.W. Stivers, R-Twin Falls, said legislators were receiving "mixed signals" from various sources about when and how tax-anticipation notes could be issued to offset property-tax deficiency levy.

"The major worry, Stivers said, was that the Legislature might have to double the sales tax to 6 cents from 3 cents for a few months so the state could generate enough revenue to later reimburse the bonding market for millions of dollars gained through selling tax-anticipation notes.

The first point the Legislature must consider before issuing notes is that "there has to be a tax in place to raise those revenues" projected to be collected to pay off the notes, Legislative Council Director Bryan Schlichte said.

Stivers said the idea of a 3-cent sales tax increase was causing "deep trauma" among House Republicans.

The office of Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones issued the Legislature a set of legal guidelines saying issuing notes this fiscal year for revenue to be collected in fiscal 1984 would be unconstitutional.

School districts could issue such notes for the overlapping years, but only if state law were amended by the Legislature this session, the informal opinion said.

According to the guidelines, the Legislature could either schedule the issuance of tax-anticipation notes for the remainder of this year to cover a cut in school funding and significantly raise taxes to pay for the notes before June 30, or issue notes early in fiscal 1984 and pay them off with a lesser, but more long-term, tax increase.

Under that second option, however, Idaho's school districts could face severe cash-flow problems in the latter stages of the current fiscal year, officials said.

Some officials said lawmakers could issue tax-anticipation notes twice to spread out the cash flow, but others said that would only increase administrative problems and expenses.

Stivers said legislative leaders still were researching the feasibility of issuing notes, adding that a proposal to mortgage state buildings had been put "in a holding pattern" as somewhat of a last-ditch option.

Lawyer wants Dallas freed until after appeal

CALDWELL (UPI) -- Claude Dallas, a trapper sentenced to 30 years in prison for gunning down two game wardens, should be released from custody while his appeal is considered by the Idaho Supreme Court, says a defense lawyer.

Attorney Michael Donnelly made the request this week in documents filed with Third District Court Judge Edward Lodge -- the man who ordered Dallas to serve three consecutive 10-year terms for killing two state conservation officers in January 1981, at a remote campsite on the Owyhee River.

Lodge said he would hear arguments on the defense motion Feb. 4 in Caldwell.

Donnelly said Lodge should release Dallas 32 from the Idaho State Penitentiary, where he has been held since his Jan. 4 sentencing, while appeals of the voluntary manslaughter conviction and prison term are examined by the Idaho Supreme Court.

In the documents, Donnelly noted his appeal will be comprised of at least 11 elements.

They include claims that Lodge improperly denied defense requests for a change of venue and more time to prepare for trial, that the judge should have instructed jurors on the possibility of returning a verdict of involuntary manslaughter; and that imposition of consecutive, rather than concurrent, jail terms was unwarranted, he said.

Donnelly also wrote to Lodge that his client "desires to diligently pursue his appeal," and would not be an escape risk if freed.

Granting the motion would mean Dallas could work while his appeal is considered, earning money to help him "meet his financial obligations," the defense attorney added.

Group says McClure 'belittles' nuke fears

BOISE (UPI) -- An Idaho conservation group charged Wednesday that Sen. James McClure is trying to "belittle" the legitimate concerns of state residents who are worried about possible location of a weapons-grade nuclear reactor near Idaho Falls.

Janice Bernitt, spokeswoman for the Snake River Alliance, condemned recent statements by Idaho's senior GOP senator that groups fighting the reactor project are engaging in fear tactics.

"Why are we accused of attempting to scare the public when we raise questions that should be answered?" she said.

McClure last week told a Boise news conference that opponents of the effort to convince the U.S. Energy Department to build the reactor at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory were relying on the fear many people have of nuclear facilities.

"Fear is an easy commodity to sell," he said while reiterating his support for the project and updating reporters on his effort to gain approval of the Idaho site.

A task force of scientists recommended late last year the reactor be constructed at Savannah River, S.C., rather than INEL or two other studied locations. But the Energy Department has not yet acted on the recommendation.

"It seems Sen. McClure only wants to hear from those who already agree with him," Ms. Bernitt said. "We suggest the senator address the issues instead of indulging in name-calling."

Area merchants support sales-tax increase

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

BOISE — Most Magic Valley merchants favor increasing the state sales tax to help solve the state's funding problems, even though it will raise the cost of their goods.

"A sales-tax increase wouldn't help business, but I really can't believe it would hurt our business, either," says Henry Pharris, the manager of Pharris', a Jerome department store.

"A lot of people aren't working, so the people who can, have to pick up the tab right now," he says. "And a sales tax seems to have the fairest and broadest base for accomplishing that goal."

The advent of a 1- or 2-cent sales tax increase appeared even more certain Wednesday, as legislative leaders came out of closed-door sessions.

"We (leadership) did have a very productive meeting with the governor this morning," said House Speaker Tom Stivers, R-Twin Falls. "To solve our funding problem, we may have to incur some debts, and extra sales-tax revenue would be one way of paying those debts back."

Three programs to balance the state's budget - estimated to be in the "red" by $69.2 million this year - were under consideration Wednesday, and all hinged on sales-tax increases:

- A plan by Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, to issue tax-anticipation notes to raise money to meet the public schools' scheduled June appropriation, while implementing a sales-tax increase to pay back those loans
- A proposal by Senate Republicans that is nearly identical to Antone's except that it would require school districts to issue the tax-anticipation notes, rather than the state.
- Stivers' plan to raise money by mortgaging state buildings also could call for those bonds to be paid back in whole, or in part, with revenue from an increased sales tax.

"I'm guessing that by Friday, we should have some type of package put together, so that we really have an idea of what we're going to end up doing to balance the budget," Stivers says.

A poll of some Magic Valley businesses and chambers of commerce Wednesday indicated that almost all support a sales-tax increase.

"Idaho has a very low sales tax right now, so I don't think an increase would be a great deterrent to our business," said Gary Halverson, the sales manager for Itoy Raymond Ford in Twin Falls.

"The needs of the state for highways and schools have to be met, and I've already told my representative, Noy Brackett, (R-Twin Falls) to opt for a sales-tax increase," Halverson said.

But all the businessmen contacted opposed making the increase temporary. Instead, they say it should be made permanent.

"Temporary taxes have a way of becoming permanent anyway, so why don't they call it that," said Bob Parratt, the manager of the Twin Falls J.C. Penney store.

But most of the objection to a temporary tax - possibly lasting only 90 days - revolves around the prediction that customers may postpone major purchases until the tax expires.

"If legislators increase the sales tax for 90 days, we'll have to tool up our accounting and our cash registers, only to switch back in three months," said Pharris, who also serves as a Jerome councilman. "A temporary tax is like playing Russian roulette with our customers. They'll either try to beat it or wait until it expires."

"Besides, if we need the increased revenue to keep our government responsible this year, perhaps we'd better consider that the same will be true next year," he said.

Halverson said that using a temporary sales-tax increase could result in poor state budgeting, and that it didn't fit the ideals of good business.

But Stivers disagrees. He says a sales-tax increase is needed only to pay off the 1983 deficit and should not be continued.

He proposes only a 1-cent tax increase and opposes any kind of general tax increase - property, income or sales - saying that it would retard business recovery and make personal financing even tougher for recession-strapped Idahoans.

"We need to avoid a permanent tax increase at this time at all costs," he says emphatically. "A 1-cent sales-tax increase should only be used to relieve whatever debt we incur in meeting our current obligations this fiscal year."

Late-night emergency

A car-train crash Wednesday night at the South Blue Lakes and Kimberly Road crossing sent two men to the hospital with fractures and multiple injuries. Twin Falls police said the driver apparently did not heed the flashing crossing lights and drove into the side of the train. Both men had to be extricated from the wreckage. No other details were available Wednesday night from police.

New indigent plan would take burden off of the counties

And perhaps reduce property taxes

By MARTY TRILJAASE
Times-News writer

BOISE — Lobbyists for Idaho's county governments say they expect to introduce in the Legislature this week a bill that would repeal a law that obligates counties to pay the medical bills of indigents.

"It's ready to introduce in the House Health and Welfare Committee, and we'll see what kind of support we can get for it," says Chuck Holden, the executive director of the Idaho Association of Counties.

Last week, a group of county officials, including Twin Falls County commission Chairman Ann Cover, reviewed the proposed legislation and authorized its introduction.

The bill is the latest approach by county officials, who say the rising cost of providing medical care to poor people threatens to bankrupt them - or force a massive increase in property taxes.

Last year, IAC officials successfully lobbied for a statewide, $2 million insurance policy to cover bills for so-called catastrophic illnesses. That policy would have covered all claims in excess of the $10,000 that counties would have paid.

By July, however, IAC officials had concluded that the program's costs would outstrip the counties' financial resources. The result was a decision not to implement the system.

The new IAC measure asks lawmakers to replace the so-called medical indigency program with a "medically needy" program. That program would be administered by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, and it would be funded with federal and state dollars, instead of property taxes.

Repealing a county's obligation to medically indigent persons could cut the amount of property tax that residents pay to counties by 8 percent to 10 percent, Holden says. But it will not eliminate the need for some type of tax increase at the state level.

"This would be the offsetting benefit to the property taxpayer: to pay it on a broader form of tax, collected and administered by the state, rather than to collect it from the property tax," Holden says.

How much the program would cost the state is unknown, although Health and Welfare Department officials have put the figure at between $5 million and $7 million, Holden says.

"I know that's broad, but I'm not prepared to answer that question because that has to be a figure presented by the Department of Health and Welfare themselves," Holden says.

Seeking such an increase from lawmakers, who are trying to steer the state out of its present financial crisis, will be difficult, at best, Holden concedes.

"We believe it's going to be tough and go, and we believe it's going to pass by a narrow margin," he says.

Among the case studies that IAC lobbyists may present to skeptical legislators is Twin Falls County, where county officials say three claims currently pending could wipe out its entire $165,000 "poor"-fund, including the $100,000 budgeted for medical payments.

Of that medical indigent fund, about $94,780 remains. But against that fund, the following claims have been made:

- $112,000 for the treatment of prematurely born twins, who were treated at the University of Utah Medical Center in Salt Lake City.
- $30,000 for the treatment of a prematurely born baby at Primary Children's Hospital in Salt Lake City.
- $24,900 for the treatment of a baby born with birth defects. The child was also treated at Primary Children's Hospital.

Small-power producers want to make their product more attractive

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

BOISE -- A bill that may entice Idaho Power Co. to purchase power from small producers of electricity will be introduced in the state Senate.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission and the Idaho Power Producers Association back the measure, but so far, none of the three utilities operating in the state have offered to support it.

The Idaho Power Co. has been accused of dragging its feet in negotiations with several would-be power producers who wished to sell power to the utility, even though the utility is required by federal law and PUC regulation to purchase such power.

In the latest example of such a case, Gooding County farmer John Koyle filed a complaint against Idaho Power with the PUC. Earlier this month, the PUC ruled that Idaho Power failed to negotiate in good faith, and it ordered the utility to sign a contract to buy Koyle's power.

"The Magic Valley is where this concept of co-generation was spawned," says Vern Ravenscroft, who helped draft the proposed bill, and also a small-power producer, through a hydro project installed at his Gooding County farm.

"But we still have to do something to improve the working relationship between these small producers - farmers, ranchers, irrigation districts - and the utilities who purchase and distribute the power," says Ravenscroft, a former legislator and former candidate for governor.

The proposal would:

- Allow a utility to participate in the ownership and operation of small, private operations.
- Require private power producers to pay the utility a fee - to be set by the PUC - for marketing the power to consumers.
- Require producers to pay a $1-per-kilowatt fee to the PUC for administering contracts between producers and utilities.

- Continue to support the concept of long-term, fixed-rate contracts.

The bill would apply to the proposed hydroelectric projects springing up in large numbers in the Magic Valley and also to the wood-waste burners of the northern Idaho timber industry and garbage incinerators, such as the one owned by Cassia County and located near Heyburn.

One reason that the PUC supports Ravenscroft's measure is that it could ease the adversarial relationship between the utilities and the small-power producers, says Perry Swisher, the PUC president.

"The problem is that there is an absence of adequate incentives for the utility to participate," Swisher says. "Payments made by the utility are just expenses under current law - no earnings."

He acknowledges that the on-going complaint of regulatee power companies like Idaho Power is that co-generation agreements are made with fixed-term contracts. This means the rate Idaho Power pays to a private producer may be fixed for 30 or 35 years.

"The utility executive has spent his life getting jacked around by the PUC. Putting more regulations on the books only makes him more nervous," Swisher said in comment to the lack of utility participation in Ravenscroft's bill.

But if the measure can provide incentives for utilities to participate, it will be Idahoans who are the ultimate winners, Swisher says.

He cites the solid-waste burning plant of Cassia County as a type of project offering benefits beyond new power. That incinerator provides steam to a Simplot processing plant, while reducing the county's landfill requirements by 95 percent. Similar projects could be organized where the steam is converted to electricity, for sale to a utility.

Jerome woman will receive 'Seat Belt Survivor' award

By MARTY TRILJAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Idaho State Police officers say a Jerome woman's traffic accident last month shows why seat belts should be used.

And to draw attention to it, state police will present 26-year-old Susan Elizabeth Bean, of 836 E. 16th St., with the first "Seat Belt Survivor" award next week.

The award program, begun on Dec. 1, is designed to bring attention to drivers who escaped serious injury through the use of seat belts.

The award has left Bean "kinda surprised and kinda excited. I don't usually have something like this happen to me."

Bean and her 6-month-old son, Andrew, escaped what could have been serious injury on Dec. 30, when they were involved in a collision at Blue Lakes Boulevard North and Pole Line Road in Twin Falls.

State police say Bean had stopped her southbound car and was preparing to make a left turn when a southbound pickup truck driver failed to stop and struck her vehicle in the rear.

The second driver, 29-year-old Timothy Lynn Clarkson of Jerome, was traveling at an estimated 40 mph at the time of the collision, state police say.

Bean was wearing a seat belt, and she had secured her child in a child-restraint unit. "It was the opinion of the investigating officer, Dave Seal, that as hard as she was been hit - if she had not been wearing the seat belt herself and using the child restraint - it would have been seriously injured," says Sgt. Ed Strickfaden. "There was no question about that."

Instead, Bean says she suffered only minor neck-muscle pains and her child escaped any injury.

"From what they told me, he (the baby) would have been thrown around the car quite a bit," she says. "They said I probably would have gone backwards and maybe even out the back window. I even broke the driver's seat going back."

State police probably could not have selected a better candidate for the program, Bean says her parents trained her to use seat belts. Her husband, Cliff, also "believes in seat belts quite a bit, and he reminds me, so I'm in the habit now."

That attitude carried over to the safety of their baby, she says.

"We already had bought a car seat before he was born," she says. "So we were ready for that. I think it was just sort of a natural thing to do, to get that for him."

The award will be presented to Bean next Wednesday at the College of Southern Idaho. Through the award, state police hope to show off the advantages of seat-belt use.

Strickfaden says that National Safety Council officials estimate that 16,000 of the 50,000 people killed each year in traffic accidents would have survived if they had worn seat belts.

"If we can find particular cases that will really dramatize the effectiveness of the seat belt, we will point them out," Strickfaden says. "We hope it will make people aware of the value of the seat belt, and the child-restraint in particular."

The program comes at a time when seat-belt usage among drivers in Idaho appears to be declining.

An estimated 7 percent of Idaho drivers wore seat belts in 1981; compared to an 11.7 percent usage in 1976, Strickfaden says.

Yet, the use of special child-restraint units is up.

In 1976, 3.9 percent of Idaho drivers used child-restraint units. That compares to an 8.9 percent usage rate in 1981, he says.

Overcrowding problem hits several districts

By HARRIFT GUTHERTZ
Times-News writer

The state Board of Education is giving Magic Valley schools the stamp of approval, but many have been cited for overcrowded classrooms, according to a sampling of 10 area districts.

Twin Falls, Jerome, Cassia, Minidoka, Buhl and Gooding schools all have been advised or warned about overcrowded elementary-school classrooms. And uncertain funding has made solutions difficult.

Jerome Superintendent Stephenson Youngerman says that Central Elementary was warned -- during the yearly accreditation evaluation -- because four classrooms are overcrowded. The accreditation board also said the school had an inadequate library and a shortage of preparation rooms for teachers.

—But Youngerman doesn't see any easy solutions to the problem.

"There is no light at the end of the tunnel," he says. The district needs a building program, but there isn't any hope of starting one, he says.

Buhl Superintendent Bob Pratt faces the same problems that Youngerman does. Pratt says he has more than 800 children in the town's only elementary school. The state found seven classrooms are overcrowded.

"We have no place to go with the students," he says.

Schools that don't meet the state standards during the annual review by the state Department of Education are first "advised." If the problems aren't corrected, the schools are moved to the "warned" list.

Four out of the five Twin Falls elementary schools made the advised list this year due to overcrowding, Superintendent James Sawin doesn't think the district will be warned, because the board is attempting to alleviate the problem with a bond issue.

The $4 million bond issue would pay for a new elementary school and the remodeling of the high school gym. Sawin hopes to place it before the voters in March or April.

Blaine County also faced an increased number of elementary students, but it took care of the problem by building modular classrooms, says Superintendent Richard Jones.

School districts that don't have the money to build have had to get by the best they can.

Bond issues in the Minidoka and Cassia districts failed recently. Both districts have transferred students to other schools, and Cassia built a small addition at Deelo Elementary.

State officials have been understanding of the financial bind in which school districts find themselves.

If a school has been advised for having inadequate facilities but can't build new classrooms, they will still be accredited, says Al Luke, of the state bureau of instruction. But if the entire building is run down, then the school is in danger of losing its seal of approval, he says.

The state standards deal more with quantity than quality, Luke says. But quality usually accompanies quantity, he adds.

Although Magic Valley schools are experiencing increasing numbers of grade-school children, Luke says the state isn't experiencing a drastic growth problem. The total public-school enrollment in Idaho increased from 192,000 to 255,000 during the past year, he says.

Wayne Phillips, a state board official who works with population projections, has not been able to pinpoint a reason for the high birth rate in southern Idaho, but he says it has increased quite sharply over the past 10 years.

After practicing law for 50 years, 80-year-old Frank Rettig still enjoys his job and life in Jerome

Still 'appealing'

Jerome attorney doesn't need favors just because he's 80

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

JEROME — The senior partner of the Jerome law firm of Rettig, Fredericksen and Williams is a young 80 years old.

Frank M. Rettig is a practicing attorney who enjoys his work but also finds time to enjoy life in the small community, which has been his home since 1933.

A native of Ohio, he moved to northern Idaho as a child, then returned to Ohio to graduate from high school. Rettig then returned to Idaho and graduated with a law degree from the University of Idaho.

A party at the law firm's offices on Monday celebrated not only Rettig's 80th birthday, but recognized his 50 years of practice in Jerome County.

He came to Jerome when he lost his job as law clerk for Idaho Supreme Court Justice T. Bailey Lee.

Lee, a Republican, was defeated for re-election in 1932, Rettig says. At that time, Supreme Court justices ran on political tickets, and during that Depression-era election, the Democratic Party swept most of the Republicans out of office.

Rettig says his former boss returned to Burley and suggested that Rettig check out a practice in Jerome.

"Those were pretty lean years for law practices. I starved for a while," Rettig says.

"Fortunately, I was elected prosecuting attorney the next year, and that helped me survive."

Rettig served six years as Jerome County prosecutor but then was defeated. He says he decided that was enough, and he never again ran for public office.

During his term as prosecutor, he tried several murder cases, including a woman who shot a man in the leg and caused his death.

"Actually, he died later of gangrene, and she was convicted of voluntary manslaughter," Rettig recalls.

"At one time, there were only three women in the Idaho penitentiary, and I had put two of them there."

The veteran Jerome attorney says that at one time, he had the opportunity for a Supreme court appointment, but he turned it down.

"I'm not sure if I had it to do over again, if I would turn it down. The retirement benefits that are available now make it pretty inviting, but I have no regrets," Rettig says of his long career.

He says he doesn't think his white hair and years of experience win him any favors in the halls of justice. But his partner, Gene Fredericksen, says Rettig doesn't need any favors.

"He's a very sharp individual and a sharp attorney. He's the best teacher I have ever had," Fredericksen says.

There are several cases that Rettig has taken to the Idaho Supreme Court that have given him special pride.

One involved real-estate contracts, and it is now cited frequently in real-estate cases in district and higher courts.

Rettig also took a school-district case to the Supreme Court. When the school district declined to renew a teacher's contract, the teacher went to court. Rettig, representing the school district, took the case to the state's highest court twice before winning it.

For young attorneys, Rettig's sage advice is that the field of law in small communities like Jerome is an excellent one.

"Not only that, but I think we have an excellent bar in this area. I would put most of our young attorneys up against any in the country."

"There are some advantages and disadvantages in small-town law practices vs. those of metropolitan areas, but generally attorneys in rural communities are more ethical, and their practices cover a wide variety of law," he says.

Rettig says he doesn't keep a rigid work schedule at his office, and now confines it to part-time. That way, he has time to enjoy traveling and entertaining with his bride of three years. Rettig's first wife died after 29 years of marriage. Three years ago, he married Moseley Carter, whose husband had died several years earlier.

Workers in the law office say that couple keeps a strict schedule that would put many youngsters to shame.

Monday's party was held in the law firm's library, a special project that Rettig has built up over the years with hundreds of law books. He began it before there was a law library in the county Courthouse, and he says it still comes in mighty handy.

One of his birthday gifts was brought by a cousin who came from Ohio.

The needlepoint work is framed and in a prominent position in his office.

It gives Rettig a laugh, but he says it is probably all too true. The plaque reads: "Lawyers never retire, they just lose their appeal."

Lincoln County delays action on road numbering

By JANENE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — Rural road numbering is still pending for Lincoln County.

On the advice of county Prosecutor Douglas Rose, a decision on the rural-addressing proposal was postponed at Monday's county commission meeting.

Rose told the commissioners they have no jurisdiction over county roads and bridges, since that authority has been delegated to individual highway districts.

Highway maintenance is handled by four districts in Lincoln County: Richfield, Shoshone, Dietrich and Kimama. These districts would be required to implement the address system, as well as installing and maintaining the road signs.

No county highway fund is maintained.

Clerk Linda Stevenson said the county collects taxes and distributes them to the highway districts. State highway user fees also are distributed to the highway districts by the clerk's office.

"We do the paperwork, but that's all," she said.

A meeting between the members of the four highway boards and the county commission will be held Feb. 3 at 1:30 p.m. in the Lincoln County Courthouse to discuss the addressing proposal. Each board is composed of three elected members.

The commission did ask Rose to seek an opinion from the state Attorney General's Office on whether the county commission could enter a contract that would obligate the highway districts to complete the project.

The project originally was proposed by Mountain Bell representative Bill House of Halley. House contends that the rural-addressing system would improve police and fire protection, as well as the response time of emergency vehicles in rural areas.

Mountain Bell, the Intermountain Gas Co. and the Idaho Power Co. have pledged $5 per rural customer to finance the cost of the project in both Lincoln and Blaine counties. But making sure there will be enough money available to complete the program remains a major concern of the Lincoln commissioners.

In other business at Monday's meeting, the commission appointed Vivian Armstrong of Richfield to replace Peggy Robinson on the county fair board. Robinson resigned her position last month.

And Andy Payne of Shoshone was appointed to fill a vacant seat on the county Planning and Zoning Commission.

State will hold hearings on Snake River water use

By STEVE LIPSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A series of hearings will be held next month, including two in the Magic Valley, to discuss the future fate of the Snake River.

At stake is development of new farmland, using Snake River water between Twin Falls and Mountain Home, to add to the state's economic base. But weighed against this development is the portion of the state's low-cost base of hydroelectric power that is lost when water is diverted for irrigation.

A state Supreme Court decision last year seems to indicate that the water in the Snake River as it leaves the Magic Valley belongs to the Idaho Power Co., for power generation at Swan Falls Dam, south of Boise.

Whether that water should be used for power generation or be made available for further agricultural development will be discussed at the Idaho Water Resources Board hearings.

Hearings are tentatively scheduled for St. Anthony and Idaho Falls, on Feb. 15; Pocatello, on Feb. 16; Twin Falls and Burley, on Feb. 17; and Boise, on Feb. 18.

Wayne Haas, the administrative division chief for the state Department of Water Resources, says the board plans to consider the wishes of "both customers as well as farmers."

The power-vs.-irrigation issue also has been discussed in recent hearings before the Legislature. Those hearings were conducted in part by Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, the chairman of the Senate Resources and Environment Committee.

Further, Gov. John Evans has expressed concern over the issue because the state has until March 23 to comment to federal officials concerning the relicensing of Swan Falls Dam by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The state could request that federal regulators insert a clause in the Swan Falls license, which would allow water to be diverted upstream for agricultural uses.

It was Evans who requested that the Water Resources Board hold hearings on the impact of relicensing Swan Falls Dam without such a requirement.

Ken Dunn, the director of the Department of Water Resources, says that some agricultural developments in Twin Falls and Elmore counties might be forced to cease pumping water from the Snake River, in order to supply the water the Supreme Court said belongs to Idaho Power at Swan Falls.

He also said recently that he could not approve any new water rights within the Snake River Plain, including rights for wells used for drinking water, until the issue is resolved.

Snow-removal costs may put pinch in spring road repair

By KAREN CROWELL
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — The flashing yellow light and grating sound of a snowplow is a familiar winter occurrence in Ketchum and much of Blaine County — especially this year.

According to the Ketchum Ranger District of the U.S. Forest Service, there has been more than 72 inches of snow in Ketchum since Dec. 1, compared to 67 inches last year.

So much snow can make a snow removal an endless, thankless task.

"The street department does most of the clearing between 2 a.m. and 7 a.m.," says Jim Jaquet, the Ketchum city administrator. "But if it's a heavy, continuous fall, a driver might work up to 15 hours non-stop."

Jaquet says the priority concern of the street department is to clear the downtown area.

"We want to maintain the ability for people to get around, to get to and from town and the residences," he says.

The street department has seven drivers and six vehicles, including three snowplows, two loaders and one grader.

While this year's snowfall is welcomed with open arms by the ski crowd, it has city administrators nervous about springtime, when the snow melts and potholes begin to appear everywhere.

Jaquet says Ketchum's road maintenance and repair in the spring and summer will suffer as a result.

"Our snow-removal budget this year is $100,000," he says. "But if we go over that, it will leave less to repair the potholes and the usual winter damage."

As a result, he says that there probably will be less seal-coating this year. Seal-coating is a process that uses oil and asphalt chips to keep moisture from getting underneath the road.

The total Ketchum street department budget this year is $241,000. Last year, the department's budget was $191,000, with $76,000 allotted to snow removal.

Part of the budget increase is due to salary increases. Another $20,000 to $40,000 was added to try and keep street maintenance up. Jaquet says.

In Halley, the situation is much the same.

The street department has a budget of about $100,000 this year, according to Rupert House, the city street superintendent. It was about the same amount last year, he says.

"The snow came so quickly this year," he says. "If it takes more money for snow removal, there will be less available for improvements."

Halley has two snowplows, a grader, a front-end loader and a truck to haul snow to a dump site west of town. In addition, House says the city has hired some independent trucks and drivers to help with the hauling.

Twin Falls schools hire publicist

By HARRIET GUTHERTZ
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS -- The Twin Falls School District will attempt to increase communication with its residents when its public information specialist starts work Feb. 7.

Jane Baker, who has handled public relations for St. Benedict's Hospital in Jerome for two years, will fill the newly created half-time position. Baker says she would like to let people who don't have children in school know what's going on in the district.

Although the school board approved the position at the same time the district is attempting to pass an estimated $4 million bond issue, school board member Dr.

John McNeese says the timing was a coincidence. The board first started its search last spring but didn't find the right person until recently, he says.

Superintendent James Sawin also says the position was approved long before the bond issue came up. Baker's primary responsibility won't be working on promoting the bond issue, he says.

Instead, Sawin says he hopes a citizens-committee will help convince the public to support the bond issue, which would be used to construct a new elementary school and remodel the high school gym.

Baker will seek to inform the community about issues the media doesn't have time to cover. Sawin says.

McNeese says that the administrative staff's small size makes it difficult for the school district to do an adequate job of communication with teachers, staff members and the public. Hiring a specialist will free the superintendent for other duties, he says.

McNeese also says that the relatively low cost of a part-time specialist -- under $10,000, according to McNeese -- was a good investment for the district.

Baker, a 1979 graduate of the University of Idaho, says she is looking upon the job as a challenge. She also has worked for the Idaho Association of Realtors.

Baker says she really enjoys Twin Falls and would like to get more involved in the community.

Health district director warns Jerome County of more cutbacks

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

JEROME -- The Jerome County commissioners were asked by South Central District Health Department officials Monday to decline the level of public health services they want -- and are willing to finance.

Gerald Hurst, the administrator of the district, told the commissioners that the district may suffer still further cuts in state funding, resulting in the curtailment of some services.

"We are not here to beg for money, but to find out what kind of programs, you want. I am willing to run the district at any level you want, but it is your program and your health district, so you need to decide what you can afford," Hurst told the commissioners.

Because all three commissioners in Jerome County are new this year, Hurst and other district officials reviewed the health programs that are available in the district.

The district maintains an office in the Jerome County Courthouse, with a full-time health nurse, secretary and environmentalist.

Hurst explained that funding for district programs comes from state and county funds, as well as fees and contract charges established by the district. Each county in the district contributes on the basis of population and assessed valuation.

Jerome's share of the district's 1982-83 budget of $1.18 million is $30,425. For the coming year, the district is proposing a 5 percent increase, but Hurst said the eight counties served by the district -- the Magic Valley -- may decide on the increase they want to pay, based on the services they desire.

Hurst said there is no duplication of programs between the health district and the state Department of Health and Welfare, although the two agencies work together on some programs.

$72,000 less (for the year) than we had in 1979," Hurst said.

In other business Monday: The commissioners denied two requests for welfare assistance on the grounds that the applicants had not established the required residency in the county.

Commissioner Carl Montgomery reported that the city of Eden does not have sufficient funds to purchase law-enforcement protection from the county, and therefore, it will continue on the present basis of calling the Jerome sheriff's office at no cost when assistance is needed.

Last week, Eden City Council members had met with the commission to appeal for better police protection and to complain that on several occasions, calls to the sheriff's office had received no response.

Last year, Eden discontinued its contract with the sheriff's office for additional police protection because of a lack of money.

Easter Seal group plans preschool

By KAREN CROWELL
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY -- The Magic Valley Easter Seal Center will open a preschool on Jan. 31 for Blaine County children with developmental learning difficulties.

The preschool will be located in the Mormon Church in Hailey, says teacher Karen Fazio. "They (the church) have been very generous in giving us adequate space for the preschool."

The program is funded by a trust from the Easter Seal Center in Twin Falls.

Sessions will run for two-and-a-half hours, four days a week, and continue through June 24, Fazio says. There will be a charge of 25 cents per day.

"Our effort will be to work closely with the parents and children," she says.

Fazio is a certified teacher in Idaho and has been a teacher for the developmentally handicapped in Blaine County for many years, working within the school district at one time.

The preschool also will have a physical therapist and a speech pathologist from the Easter Seal Center in Twin Falls available to children and parents for consultation.

"A program similar to this one existed in Hailey several years ago," says Fazio, "but was discontinued -- probably because of funding problems."

She says this program was set up to incorporate the needs of the community as seen by the Easter Seal Center.

"We expect to get eight to 10 children," she says. The ages for children accepted into the preschool are from 2 years, 5 months, to 5 years. However, younger children can be worked into the program, she says, will be treated specially.

"Developmental delay in a child is a delay in emotional, social, physical or speech development," she says. "Most of the emphasis in the program is on speech and language skills."

A screening for the preschool will be held this Friday, Jan. 28, from 10 a.m. until noon and from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Mormon Church in Hailey.

Idaho short of science teachers

By The Times-News and United Press International

The demand for math and science teachers by Idaho schools outstrips the supply of qualified instructors, but Magic Valley schools have been able to fill their vacancies.

Nationwide, a teachers' union has estimated that in 1981 schools could have used 400,000 more math and science teachers. And a University of Idaho professor says that Idaho schools face the same problem.

University of Idaho education Professor Mike Heikkinen said that 324 jobs for science teachers were posted in the state between 1974 and 1979. But only 166 teachers qualified to teach the subjects were graduated from state schools during that time.

Math teachers are even in shorter supply. Only 115 graduated with math certificates at a time when 349 positions were open.

However, Larry Tinker, the principal of Gooding High School, says he hasn't had much turnover and hasn't had much of a problem. When a physics teacher went into private business two years ago, Tinker didn't get a lot of applications, but he was able to hire a certified teacher.

Wood River High School Principal Phil Homer also says he has been able to fill the vacancies he has had. Although he had to choose from a small pool, he says he found high quality candidates.

Frank Charlton, the Twin Falls High School principal, said Wednesday that he had heard about the shortage, but hadn't experienced it personally. Charlton says he hasn't had any vacancies, so he wouldn't know what it would be like to recruit science teachers.

Some Idaho schools have had problems, however, and Heikkinen says money is the issue involved.

"It's a matter of money," he says. "Once someone gets a degree in physics or math, they can get a job with twice as much pay as they could get teaching."

"The inevitable result of shortages of the magnitude described here is filling the demand with unqualified applicants," Heikkinen says.

Jerome hires full-time deputy prosecutor

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

JEROME -- The Jerome County prosecutor's office now has a full-time deputy.

Janice Kroeger, who has served as part-time deputy prosecutor since last May, was given full-time status. In a unanimous vote Monday evening by the Jerome County commissioners.

Prosecutor Dennis Adamson, who is a part-time prosecutor, said Kroeger already is putting in full-time service for the county because of the demands on the office.

Her salary will increase from $15,700 to $18,000, although Adamson and Kroeger both asked for a $3,000 increase.

Adamson said that the county dropped an extensive effort to collect delinquent child-support funds after a disagreement between the former prosecutor and the former commissioners over the revenue the county gains from collecting these funds.

He said that if Kroeger became a full-time attorney, his office would re-instate an effort to collect these funds. Based on the amount of the collections, the county then would become eligible for state revenue that Adamson said would more than offset the cost of a full-time deputy prosecutor.

On a motion by Commissioner Pam Smith, the commissioners agreed to a $2,300 pay increase. In discussing the matter, however, the commissioners indicated that state revenue from the child-support program would be watched and considered for a possible future pay increase for Kroeger.

Only Commissioner Carl Montgomery favored the full $3,000 increase.

Hagerman residents, council confused over cable service

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN -- Several Hagerman residents have voiced confusion about new cable television service in the city.

At a recent City Council meeting, Councilman Dave Beutler explained that Bronco Cable Co. of Pocatello was given a franchise by the city in the summer of 1982.

"The present cable company (from Buhl) is not the one given a franchise by the Hagerman City Council (in 1982)," Beutler said.

Comparing the prices of the two companies, Beutler said the Buhl company, which now is offering cable service to the community, charges $1.80 per month for nine channels and two "premium" channels -- Cinemax and HBO -- while the Pocatello company, not yet in service, is scheduled to charge $28.90 per month for 13 channels and two premium channels -- HBO and Showtime.

Beutler says that a franchise was given to the Buhl company in 1976, but the franchise was never published in the city's ordinance book.

"So nobody on this council knew of it (the 1976 franchise)," the councilman says.

Council also discussed a lawsuit that the Pocatello company had pending against the Buhl company. According to Mayor Karen Yarbrough, the Pocatello company lost the lawsuit, but it may still install cable service to the city, thus competing with the Buhl company.

Beutler voiced dissatisfaction with the Buhl company, saying company representatives did not notify the city of their plans to exercise their 6-year-old, non-exclusive franchise. This, he said, resulted in confusion because both council and some residents thought the new cable service in Hagerman was from the Pocatello company.

According to Beutler, the Pocatello company would have had lower rates and would have paid the city 3 percent of its profits. But now, he said, the Pocatello company is reconsidering installation of its service because of the additional costs and the competition.

However, Yarbrough, acting on advice from the city's attorney, Cecil Hobday, said the city will not take action against the Buhl company.

VERN RAVENSCOFT

The results of more cogeneration over time will surely include more dollars kept in the Idaho economy, more work for Idaho people and a better environment," Swisher says.

He estimates that as much as 300 megawatts of power may be developed in Idaho yet this century due to cogeneration projects. Ravenscoft was more conservative, however, setting his estimate at about 100 megawatts.

Ravenscoft says the bill -- to be introduced to the Senate State Affairs Committee by assistant majority leader Terry Sverdrup, R-Cataldo -- would not change the fixed-term contract provision because private producers need that security.

"To get financing for a project, an individual has to ensure his income from the sale of electricity for 10 to 15 years," he says. "But ratepayers will benefit in the long run -- 30 to 35 years -- because after that first 15 years, my rates as a private producer can go down, but they cannot go up."

Valley Neighbors Calendar

Thursday, January 11, 1984 • Twin Falls, Idaho • 15

Editor's note: With this issue, we are changing somewhat the format of our weekly "Valley Neighbors Calendar." The calendar will continue to appear each Thursday in the local news pages, but only listings of club and organizational meetings will appear.

Starting next Monday, the Times-News will publish a weekly list of upcoming governmental meetings — city councils, school boards, etc. — to keep our readers better informed about the public meetings that affect their lives.

For special events, your group may publicize its activity in our daily "Valley Happenings" section.

We want to make our Thursday calendar as inclusive as possible of all Magic Valley groups. So if your group would like to be included, call Glenda May at our office, 734-6111, between 9:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. Mondays through Friday, or mail your information to: The Times-News, Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83421. If you are submitting information by mail, include the phone number of someone we can contact in case more information is needed.

The Thursday calendar is designed to be a permanent listing of groups that meet on a weekly or monthly basis. Only the time and place of the meeting will be used in this calendar.

Twenty Twin Falls High seniors finish at mid-term

TWIN FALLS — While most Twin Falls High School students were registering for this semester's classes last week, 20 seniors took advantage of early graduation.

The students were: James William Baker, Janel Burke, Christine Casperson, Holly Joy Eggink, Kim Casper, Gregory Rik Pak Mettenback, Sharon Marie Key, William Allen Maxwell, Rogena Dee McKenzie, Janet Marie Miller, Angela Jane Holcomb Moore, Craig W. Parker, Bobbie Ann Schenkel, Cindy Renee Spencer, Tammie Lorenze Steen, Pamela Joanne Stubbs, Robert Jeffery Thompson, Michaela Marie Ward, Amy Lynn White and Brenda Denise Wilson.

According to Principal Frank Charlton, preparations for early graduation must begin early.

Because a full year of senior government courses is required for graduation, it's necessary for the students to go to summer school to take the classes, he says.

Including their summer work, early graduates are, in reality, completing eight semesters of classes, which amounts to a full four years of high school, Charlton says.

The approval of counselors, a faculty guidance committee, the principal, the superintendent, the school board and state Education Department is needed before a student can graduate at mid-year, Charlton says. Grades, credits, and other graduation requirements also are reviewed, he says.

This year, only seniors were eligible for early graduation. Before a school board decision made last spring, juniors also had been able to leave school early, Charlton says.

It was the board's feeling that it would be beneficial for the juniors students to stay in school at least one more semester, Charlton says.

An average of 20 to 30 students do graduate ahead of time each year, he says.

And there are a number of reasons why students want to complete their high-school years early.

"Some of them are married, occasionally a pregnancy is involved, some want to work or go to college," Charlton says.

Even though some students are able to graduate at mid-year, most return in May to participate in the commencement exercises, Charlton says. No diplomas are presented until after the traditional cap-and-gown ceremony, he says.

Hansen, Symms announce service academy nominees

TWIN FALLS — Rep. George Hansen and Sen. Steve Symms have announced their nominations to the U.S. service academies, for the classes entering during the summer of 1983.

These Idaho high-school seniors now will compete for vacancies at the Air Force Academy, in Colorado Springs, Colo.; the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md.; and the Military Academy, at West Point, N.Y. Additional candidates have been named to compete for slots at the Coast Guard Academy.

Nominations were made on the basis of individual academic records, college-entrance test scores, extracurricular activities, physical condition, citizenship qualities and personal recommendations.

The final selections will be made by officials at the academies. Classes begin this summer.

Hansen's Magic Valley nominations for West Point are: Mike Cobble of Jerome, Brian Johnson of Burley and Andrew Williams of Glenns Ferry.

Nominations for the Naval Academy are: Tim Langdon of Twin Falls, Mark Cobble of Jerome and Alan Bokma of Wendell.

Nominations for the Air Force Academy are: Marguerite Butts of Filer and Mark Cobble of Jerome.

Nominations for the Coast Guard Academy are: Tim Langdon of Twin Falls and Joseph Wagner of Twin Falls.

Symms' Magic Valley nominations for the Naval Academy are: Robbin F.

Mein of Jerome, Tim Langdon of Twin Falls and Mike Cobble of Jerome.

Symms also has nominated Andrew Williams of Glenns Ferry to attend West Point.

OLD GLORY
 Q. How did the U.S. flag come to be nicknamed "Old Glory"?
 A. A sea captain, William Driver, from Salem, Mass., gave it the name. At age 21, he was licensed to command his first ship. His mother gave him a U.S. flag as a going-away present. He dubbed it "Old Glory" and flew it on his ship, the Charles Doggett. In 1837, he settled in Nashville, Tenn., and during the Civil War, he kept the flag hidden inside a quilt. That same flag is now in the Smithsonian.

Son's switch to ballet study upset Reagan Thanksgiving

By FREDERICK M. WINSHIP
United Press International

NEW YORK — The decision of young Ronald Prescott Reagan to quit college six years ago to study ballet was an "awful experience" for his parents, William F. Buckley Jr., a close family friend, says.

An article by Buckley in the current issue of New Yorker magazine cast new light on the First Family's acceptance of Ron Reagan's decision to drop his formal education at Yale University for a career as a dancer.

President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, had always insisted in the past that they were happy to let their son follow any profession that interested him.

In the magazine article, Buckley said young Reagan told his parents of his plans on Thanksgiving eve in 1976 when he went from New Haven, Conn., to meet them in New York. The Reagans drove to Sharon, Conn., the next day for Thanksgiving lunch with the Buckley clan.

"Just before lunch Nancy had drawn Pat (Mrs. Buckley) aside while Ron, Sr., took me into another room, and each of us was told their awful experience the night before," wrote Buckley. "Their son had arrived in New York Wednesday night to announce that he had decided to leave Yale to study ballet."

"Such a decision is not easily received in any household. In this household it was received with true shock. 'Who am I to object?' the father said to me, pacing the floor of the music room. 'I mean, I ought to know about show business, and the ballet is great stuff. But so few people make it. And pulling out of college ... in the middle of a semester.'"

"Reagan does not act excited, but one can sense when he is excited. He was thinking out loud. He paused. And then said he was determined his son should finish the semester, because that way his record at Yale would be clean. 'If he comes out of it -- you know, if he doesn't make it!'"

Buckley, who said he had been impressed with Ron's "extraordinary nimbleness" during a traditional Thanksgiving turkey football game, said the future First Son told him later in the day that most ballet students start their studies at 14, whereas he was 18, "so there wasn't a moment to lose -- no, not even the months of December and January."

President, Mrs. Reagan were stunned by son's 1976 decision

"So his career began," Buckley concluded. Ron Reagan studied at the Robert Joffrey Ballet School in New York and danced for two seasons in New York and on national tour with the Junior Joffrey II ballet. He was graduated to the senior Joffrey Ballet last year. However, he decided last week to resign from the company to follow other interests, apparently ending his six-year effort to forge a career in the dance world. Friends said he was giving serious thought to becoming a writer of nonfiction articles.

"What it comes down to is just a question of personal happiness -- how do you live your life so that you'll be a happy man? I discovered ballet wasn't it, so ...," he said in an interview at the time of his resignation.

Other members of the ballet company said Ron was embarrassed by the front page publicity given worldwide to his application for unemployment compensation when he was furloughed by Joffrey last fall during one of the company's layoffs between bookings. He was photographed standing in an unemployment line.

The company was furloughed again Jan. 17 until Feb. 7, and Reagan announced his resignation the day the furlough began.

Pen pals

135 inmates, ex-drinker writing regularly

PHILIPSBURG, Pa. (UPI) — A Pennsylvania man who turned to religion three years ago after alcohol nearly ruined his life has become a pen pal to 135 prisoners, including convicted murderers, in jails across the nation.

Fred Hockenbury, 37, of Philipsburg, says his "writing ministry" started about two months ago at the suggestion of a local pastor.

He is typing an average of 25 one-page letters each day to prisoners in 16 states, mostly in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Georgia.

"It's a one-on-one thing -- no two letters are the same," Hockenbury said. "The point I'm trying to get across is they are loved, that they do have somebody who cares. I'm trying to share God's love with these people. They are human beings ..."

Hockenbury, a custodian at a Philipsburg church, said his effort is needed because of the hardness of prison life.

"Punishment without love will not work," he said. "With the way the system works today ... there has to be a little love initiated."

He said he knows about the subject first-hand. Up until three years ago, he was periodically in jails for days at a time because of his alcohol problems.

"I would spend two or three days here, two or three days there," he recalled. "But it gave me knowledge of what it felt like to be on the inside. It was not a pretty feeling."

Hockenbury said the response to his letters has been "overwhelming" and continued to grow. In the last week, he added 32 prisoners to his list.

Hockenbury, whose wife lends a hand in the letter-writing project, said he hopes the effort doesn't outstrip his ability to answer all of the prisoners who write to him. So far, he said, all the work has been worth it.

"I'm paid in full for writing these letters by the responses I'm getting," he said.

Hockenbury said most of the letters from prisoners -- who range in age from 17 to 60 and are serving anywhere from two months to double life -- simply express thanks for remembering them.

"I had a youngster write and say 'I've shown him more love through these letters than his own mother,'" he said.

'Contractor' razes man's house but nobody's laughing at prank

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — It was a great prank, the lawyer said, but nobody's laughing -- neither the bewildered homeowner nor the 75 men hired to tear down his $80,000 house.

"It seems so easy to be able to do this," attorney Marc Mazer said. "All the guy did was call up and say I need 75 people to demolish a house. It's beyond incredible."

A man who identified himself as Gil Candell of Gil Candell Construction Co. in San Leandro telephoned the state employment office in San Jose last week and said he needed 70 or 80 workers to tear down a vacant house.

About 75 jobless men hungry for the $5-an-hour jobs accepted.

With zeal, they had the house down to its foundation by Tuesday.

That's when owner Mark Campbell showed up.

"Who gave you permission to tear my house down?" he asked Robert Robinson, one of the workers.

"He told us to get off of his property," Robinson said. "We didn't know we were tearing down somebody's house we weren't supposed to. We thought he was legit."

Mazer, Campbell's attorney, tried to find the mystery contractor but discovered neither Candell nor the construction company existed.

Nobody even knows what Candell looks like. His only contact with the employment office and his workers was by telephone.

"It was a great prank," Mazer said, but nobody's laughing, he said. Not Campbell, who likely will recoup most of the loss through insurance. And not the 75 men who put in a couple of days' work for nothing.

Mazer did not know why anyone would single out Campbell or his boarded-up house.

Pain ends teenage lovers' suicide pact

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (UPI) — Two teenagers under court order not to see each other apparently tried to commit suicide Tuesday but called for help because their gunshot wounds became too painful, police said.

Kevin Fleming, 19, Newburgh, was reported in critical condition at St. Mary's Medical Center. His girlfriend, Lisa Reed, 14, Chandler, was listed in fair condition.

Investigators said the two, from nearby small towns just north of the Ohio River in Warrick County, may have made a suicide pact after their parents and a judge ordered them to stop dating.

But police said the pair apparently sought help after they were shot and "the pain got too much."

Police said the shootings occurred about 4:30 a.m. Tuesday in the unoccupied home of Fleming's grandmother on the south side of Evansville.

They said the angle from which the shots were fired would have kept the wounds from being life threatening.

Cpl. Larry Qualls of the Evansville Police Department said Fleming called his parents about 90 minutes after the shootings. They called for emergency medical assistance.

Warrick Circuit Judge Donald Hendrickson ordered Miss Reed to a juvenile home at Booneville on Jan. 14. He also issued a restraining order preventing Fleming from seeing or talking to the girl.

T-shirt fuss fair fight

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — A man who set up nine corporations for $5 to sell T-shirts and other souvenirs of the 1984 World's Fair said Wednesday he is fighting the exposition's attempts to shut down him down.

Kenner attorney Gordon Logue said he realized several years ago, before the Louisiana event became a reality, a person could get a piece of the action by registering with the state.

"It occurred to me that the little guy would be left out of the world's fair unless he reserved the right to do business," Logue said before going to court to protect his corporations.

Louisiana World Exposition Inc. asked U.S. District Judge Charles Schwartz Jr. to forbid Logue and his companies to sell what the event's backers called bootleg merchandise.

Paul 'Bear' Bryant dies at age 69

A massive heart attack claimed 'Bear' Bryant Wednesday

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (UPI) — Paul "Bear" Bryant of Alabama, who won more football games than any other college coach in history, died of a massive heart attack Wednesday 28 days after winning the game he knew would be his last.

He was 69 and a legend in his own time.

Bryant, who announced his retirement Dec. 15 and then coached his Crimson Tide for the last time in a Liberty Bowl victory over Illinois Dec. 29, entered Druid City Hospital Tuesday night suffering chest pains.

"I think what he had last night was a warning. He had his heart attack today," said Bryant's physician, Dr. William Hill, who led an heroic, hour-long effort to revive him.

Bryant won 323 games in his 38 seasons, and his craggy face, hounds-tooth hat and gruff, gravelly voice became part of the lore of the game long before he left it. Men who played for him 20 years ago and more wept when they heard of his death. So did many who never knew him.

His image in Alabama transcended the sports world to border upon the religious.

"I grew up in Tuscaloosa," cried Terry Perry, a 26-year-old Birmingham department store clerk. "There was just always Bear. Just like there was always Jesus."

"You almost had the feeling that it might not ever happen to him," said a long-time associate.

Gov. George Wallace ordered flags at half staff throughout the state.

President Reagan called Bryant's wife to offer condolences.

"We Americans lost a hero who always seemed larger than life," Reagan said in a statement. "He was a hard but loved taskmaster, patriotic to the core, devoted to his players and inspired by a winning spirit that would not quit."

Asked several years ago if he was considering retirement, Bryant was shocked.

"Quit coaching?" he rasped. "I'd croak in a week."

Bryant was in the cardiovascular intensive care unit, talking to his nurses, when he went into "sudden cardiopulmonary arrest" at 11:24 a.m. MST.

A team of 15 doctors and nurses worked frantically to save him.

"We did put in a pacemaker through the chest wall and were able to restore a weak heartbeat, which subsequently failed," Hill told reporters.

"We quit working with him and pronounced him dead at 1:30 p.m."

He said the cause of death was a massive coronary occlusion.

The first official word of Bryant's death came in the Alabama Senate, where Lt. Gov. Bill Baxley broke the news to a hushed chamber.

Bryant was at the home of a longtime friend, Jimmy Hinton, when he was stricken by the chest pains Tuesday night. He was rushed to Druid City Hospital by ambulance.

"He had been here about 10 minutes and was talking about how good he felt and I was telling him how good he looked. And in a few minutes after he sat down, he had a few pains and some breathing problems and we called his doctor and then the paramedics," said Hinton.

Nursing supervisor June Hoggle said Bryant "slept good" Tuesday night. "His vital signs remained stable."

The sudden death of the most famous living college football coach cast a pall over the nation's athletic community. At least 45 of his players became head coaches in the college or pro ranks.

"Bear Bryant was one of a kind and I think that when we go to try to find a replacement in our profession for him we're gonna find that there is none," said John Merritt of Tennessee State, the fourth winningest coach in college history. "There perhaps will never be one that can take his place."

"I hated to see him across that field more than any coach I had the pleasure of coaching against," said his old nemesis, Bobby Dodd of Georgia Tech. "He came a long way for a boy who came out of Fordyce, Ark."

"They just don't make them like Bear Bryant anymore," said former Arkansas Coach Frank Broyles.

"I talked to him about three years ago and told him he'd better get out of there before it killed him," said retired Clemson Coach Frank Howard.

"I tell you, he stayed in that stuff too long."

Bryant once described himself in a typically terse fashion.

"I ain't nothing but a winner," he said.

Bryant started his career at Maryland, then went to Kentucky and Texas A&M before returning to his alma mater at Tuscaloosa, where he spent the last 25 years.

Bryant retired after the Crimson Tide beat Illinois 21-15 in the Liberty Bowl last month. It was

Knox joins Seattle

SEATTLE (UPI) — Chuck Knox, who has guided teams to the National Football League playoffs in eight of the past 10 seasons, Wednesday was named coach of the Seattle Seahawks.

Knox resigned as coach of the Buffalo Bills Tuesday and he and his wife flew to Seattle Wednesday for a news conference at which he was introduced as the successor of Jack Patera, who was fired at mid-season last fall.

He promised to turn around the franchise, which has had only two winning seasons during its seven years in the league.

"I'm very excited about the challenge," Knox said. "I feel the Seahawks exist to win — from the janitors, secretaries, to the players."

In five years at Buffalo, he took the Bills to the playoffs two times. At Los Angeles, all five of his teams won the National Football Conference-West championship and qualified for the post-season tournament.

"Seahawks' football stands for pride and commitment," he said. "We expect to turn things around. I didn't come all the way out here not to."

Before talking to reporters, Knox met with Seahawks players.

"They were the first people I wanted to meet with because they are the first and most important part of building a winning team," he said.

Knox said he plans to bring several assistants with him from Buffalo and his regard for Seahawk president and general manager Mike McCormack.

Knox, 49, who visited with the Seahawks and the Los Angeles Rams last week, resigned as Bills coach following a long contract-extension meeting with team owner Ralph Wilson.

The Seahawks fired Coach Jack Patera during the players' strike last fall and McCormack, who had been the club's director of football operations, replaced him on an interim basis. After the season, McCormack was named president and general manager and has been heading the hunt for a new coach.

Knox, who took the Bills to the playoffs three times in five seasons, resigned after he turned-down an extension of his contract, which had a year to go.

"I decided I should resign and be relieved of any contractual obligations," he said.

Known as a players' coach, Knox has compiled an impressive record covering 10 NFL seasons. He is just four wins short of 100 victories. Only four other NFL coaches in recent decades have reached that mark: Don Shula, John Madden, Bud Grant and Vince Lombardi.

During his tenure at Buffalo, Knox transformed the Bills from a 3-11 club in 1977 to a first-place finish in the AFC East in 1980, and back-to-back playoff teams in 1980 and 1981.

The Bills finished the abbreviated 1982 season with a disappointing 4-5 record and failed to make the playoffs.

Loose ball scramble

A tangle of arms and fingers stymies Valley's Jana Burnett and Julie Willis of Glenns Ferry in this race for a loose ball during the Fourth District A-3 Girls Basketball Tournament in Wendell Wednesday night. Although this encounter ended with no decision, Valley went on to topple the Pilots 35-27, eliminating Glenns Ferry from the playoffs.

Defenses may not dominate

By JOE CARNICELLI
UPI executive sports editor

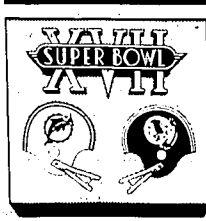

LOS ANGELES — Put the two top defenses in the National Football League on the field in the Super Bowl and you'd naturally expect a low-scoring, bitterly fought game.

But both coaches — Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins and Joe Gibbs of the Washington Redskins — don't necessarily agree.

Miami led the NFL in total defense this season and has been especially impressive in the playoffs, holding New England and San Diego to 13 points each and shutting out the New York Jets 14-0 in the AFC title game Sunday.

Washington ranked second in defense and allowed seven points each to Detroit and Minnesota in the playoffs and only 17 to Dallas in the NFC title game.

"I think that after the strike ended, we were really a one-dimensional team. We were winning with our defense. Our offense had trouble getting a first down, much less a touchdown. But we've started getting ourselves together in the playoffs and we've been getting some good balance. We had an excellent game offensively against San Diego two weeks ago."

Gibbs agreed with Shula's assessment.

"I think people see how we're ranked second defensively and naturally assume that's the reason we've made it as far as we have," Gibbs said. "People also have seen us really running the ball well during the playoffs and feel that we're strictly a grind-it-out, running team."

"Actually, our approach has been to strive for balance. We've run well in the playoffs because it's been working for us. We've been a 50-50 team this season in the ratio between our running and passing but if we see something is working well in a game, we'll lean that way. We've been running well in the playoffs so we've kept winning."

Shula, who will coach his fifth Super Bowl team, said offensive philosophy in the game has changed since he made his first appearance with Baltimore in Super Bowl III against the Jets.

Vandals visit unfriendly Montana gym

By The Times-News

Idaho's Vandals visit Coach Don Monson's least-favorite fieldhouse and Idaho State takes on the best and worst in the third week of the Big Sky Conference basketball schedule.

The Vandals, trying to win their third straight league title, will be at Missoula against University of Montana tonight while Idaho State will be home to pace-setting University of Nevada-Reno. Boise State, Idaho's traveling companion, will play Montana State in Bozeman.

On Saturday, Idaho goes to Bozeman, MSU moves into Missoula and Idaho State will entertain winless Northern Arizona.

Idaho comes into the Montana game with a 13-3 record against 14-3 for the host Grizzlies. The Vandals were nipped at the buzzer by South Carolina Saturday, following a 26-hour marathon trip.

Montana and Idaho have one loss each while Reno is running undefeated at this time. However, this marks the first time Reno has left its homecourt.

The homecourt and crowd are two of the things that Monson fears most in tonight's battle — that and a talented bunch of Grizzlies paced by top gun Derrick Pope. The Montana crowd is the most vocal and possibly the most unsociable anywhere, according to Monson — and he wishes the Vandal supporters in Moscow would copy them.

an all-time high, the Vandals must find a way to control a team that boasts four returning starters from last year. Montana ended Idaho's season-opening winning streak at 16 last January.

Idaho anticipates having matchup problems with 6-11 senior center Craig Larsen. They also must hold Pope to reasonable numbers. The 6-6 Pope is averaging 17.2 points and 8.4 rebounds per game, and is second in the conference in field goal shooting percentage at .641. He is third in rebounding.

Buhl seeded No. 1, but others threaten

By CHRIS HAPT
Times-News writer

Based on regular-season performances, the Buhl Indians should be considered a lock to capture the A-2 Fourth District Girls Basketball Tournament, which begins tonight.

However, one must also weigh recent trends.

Top-seeded Buhl (14-4 overall; 5-1 against district opponents) meets the bottom seed, Jerome (8-9; 1-5), at home Thursday night. In the other tournament opener, Burley (8-11; 4-2) entertains Wood River (6-9; 2-4).

While Buhl obviously sustained a higher performance level throughout the season, Jerome has been steadily improving.

The Tigers, winners of the last two district titles, lost all four games they played against district foes before Christmas. But they own a three-game winning streak entering tonight's regular-season finale at Caldwell.

"I'm a firm believer in peaking, and I feel our kids are peaking in playing together as a team," Jerome coach Jim Stauffer said. "I'm just really pleased with the way they've been playing — really scrappy, staying in there and fighting in every game."

"I told the girls at the beginning of the season that we had a lot of individuals, that we had to learn through the season to forget this individualism — and — they — have. They've really come around."

Tonight's Games

8 p.m. — Wood River at Burley

The Tigers climaxed their resurgence last Thursday, defeating Buhl — at Buhl — 30-28. It was their third consecutive victory for Jerome, winner of the last two district titles. "I don't know if I wanted to win them or a week from it," joked Stauffer.

Much of Jerome's strategy was predicated on stopping Karl Easton, Buhl's leading scorer. "We tried to keep Easton from the baseline and make her shoot from 20 feet instead of 12 to 14," Stauffer said. "She likes to move either left or right toward the baseline and take a 10- to 12-footer."

Blackwood brothers amuse, but on field they only abuse

By RICK OSTROW
The Baltimore Sun

PASADENA, Calif. — The Miami Dolphins were boarding their team plane Monday night for the flight to the Super Bowl, and there were two important players missing: the Blackwood brothers. Lyle and Glenn, the hard-hitting starting safeties who make up the National Football League's only single-team brother act, were nowhere to be seen.

Suddenly they appeared together at the front of the plane. Both were dressed in the dark shades, black hats, thin ties and dark suits popularized by Dan Akeroyd and the late John Belushi in their hit movie, "The Blues Brothers." Only the Blackwoods were duded up to live up to their new nickname, "The Brulse Brothers."

"We're on a mission from Don (Dolphin coach Shula)," Lyle announced, paraphrasing one of the film's more famous lines. "But we've got to get over big." "It cracked up the entire plane," reported one witness. This season, Lyle and Glenn Blackwood have been cracking up lots of people, mostly opposing wide receivers. They've become the anchors of a secondary that is among the league's most physical, and probably its best.

But for a long time, the only thing free safety Lyle, 28, Glenn's elder by 2½ years, was in danger of cracking up was himself. His story is of a youth spent careening out of control in the fast lane, one that differs only in that it has a happy ending.

"I ran real hard in the fast lane," Lyle Blackwood admits freely now. "I ran as hard as anybody I've ever seen. I drank a lot. I did drugs, everything. I don't want to go into all the particulars, but it was crazy. There were times when I'd lie on the training table before practice, after a night out partying, and I'd think, 'What am I going to myself? Why do I live like this?' But I was living the life that being a professional athlete made accessible to me."

"Whatever you consider a hell-raising lifestyle, Lyle has done it — twice," says Bob Trumphy, the light end-turned-sports-caster who played with Blackwood in Cincinnati, the second stop on Lyle's six-team career through the NFL. "The abuse he put his body through the rest of the week made people wonder how he ever played on Sunday. He would come in and you could literally take blood from his eyes and donate it to a blood bank."

Lyle Blackwood remembers himself as a wallflower in high school in San Antonio. He first started drinking while at TCU and discovered alcohol unlocked the outgoing "ide of his personality. It allowed him to socialize with his teammates as an equal. But the drinking soon got out of control. He had no idea who he was when he was sober. Not surprisingly, his play, his marriage and his friendships suffered.

He was drafted in the ninth round by Denver in 1973 and cut in pre-season. He was picked up by Cincinnati and put in three years as a backup until he was asked the Bengals to trade him. "I felt I was getting the shaft from them, but I know now it was my lifestyle," he admits. "I don't blame them for getting rid of me. I was a mess."

"Left unprotected in that year's expansion draft, he was picked up by Seattle. There, he was thrown in with quarterback Jim Zorn, a born-again Christian, as roommates, and Zorn's quiet self-control began to have an influence on him.

"Talk about unsuited — we were like night and day," Blackwood says. "He was committed and in control and I was still crazy on the streets. I'm sure I offended him, but he never hit me over the head with his disappointment. But his lifestyle was a real witness to me."

The Seahawks witnessed an inconsistent, totally undisciplined player. The following year, Blackwood was waived again and picked up by Baltimore, where he became an immediate starter and led the league in interceptions, with 10. He lasted three more years with the Colts, cleaning up his lifestyle but starting fewer and fewer games.

He asked then-coach Mike McCormack to trade him, and though Miami, which had drafted younger brother Glenn in 1979, was interested, he was sent instead to the New York Giants, who cut him during training camp. Baltimore called him back and expressed interest in re-signing him, but then-general manager Dick Szymanski dragged his feet and Don Shula beat him to the punch.

Not that Shula didn't have help. Glenn kept telling his head coach that he knew where the Dolphins could find someone to solve their secondary problems. He thought his advice was falling on deaf ears, until one day when he was pulling on his socks for practice — and in walked his older brother.

Now they are both quiet, responsible Christians who practice their religion on everybody except those who wander onto their turf while either carrying or trying to latch onto footballs.

Theismann provides Redskins with diversity

COSTA MESA, Calif. (UPI) — Washington quarterback Joe Theismann, preparing to face the swarming Miami defense in Sunday's Super Bowl, was reminded that the Dolphins have intercepted 10 passes in their last two playoff games, five each from the New York Jets' Richard Todd and San Diego's Dan Fouts.

"It doesn't faze Theismann. They act weird big." "I cracked up the entire plane," reported one witness. "Todd and Fouts are both very intellectual quarterbacks," Theismann said. "Those people get rattled by a good defense because there's something to rattle. But when you have nothing upstairs, there's nothing to rattle."

Theismann was joking. The Notre Dame graduate has plenty upstairs. But probably more important to the Redskins' offense is what he has downstairs — his right arm and his legs. A capable passer, he is also a constant threat to break from the pocket and run, adding another dimension to the Washington attack.

The Redskins refer to their use of Theismann's running ability as a "controlled scramble." Theismann calls it terror.

"Fear is a great motivator," the nine-year NFL veteran said. "I don't like to get hit and I really hate to get hurt. They call it scrambling. I call it running away."

Theismann's critics know all about his ability to run away. They say he used it in 1971 when he signed with the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League, turning down an offer from the Dolphins, who used their fourth pick to select him.

"In 1972 and 1973 when I was with Toronto, the Dolphins won the Super Bowl twice," he said. "People think that must really bother me, that I lost out on the Super Bowls, but it doesn't really. We went to the Grey Cup, Canada's Super Bowl.

"I made a decision. I stuck with it, and now I won't go back and second-guess myself. I did what I did and I'll live with it."

The Redskins obtained the rights to Theismann from Miami in 1974 and in eight seasons, the 6-foot, 200-pounder has become the third most prolific passer in the team's history, trailing only Sonny Jurgensen and Sammy Baugh.

The same motivation that has stamped him into the Redskins' record book also sent him to Notre Dame and to Toronto.

"The idea of playing bridesmaid never made it with me," he explained. "I knew I'd be the quarterback at Notre Dame and I knew I wouldn't be at Miami in 1971. So I went to Canada and was the quarterback."

His life has been a long list of successes, from Notre Dame to Canada to Washington and to Hollywood where he has appeared in a movie and a television show. His lone setback, however, came at Notre Dame. And it cost him his name.

Born Joseph Theismann (pronounced "Theesman") to German and Hungarian parents in New Jersey, he agreed, at the urging of the Notre Dame athletic director, to change the pronunciation to its current one, which rhymes with Heisman. As in Trophy. But he finished second behind Stanford's Jim Plunkett in the award balloting his senior year.

But the name still rhymes with Heisman.

"It's the same as everything else I do," he said. "I made a decision and I won't go back on it. When I go back home they still call me Joey Theismann, and that's fine. But when I decided to make it Theisman I also decided it would stay that way."

Theismann appeared relaxed during the buildup to the game, joking with teammates and reporters. But he said there's something smoldering inside that will come out Sunday.

Bryant

his 32nd career victory, more than any other college football coach. He broke Amos Alonzo Stagg's record of 31 wins in 1981.

His teams provided the professional ranks with some of its greatest players - quarterbacks Babe Parilli from Kentucky and Joe Namath and Kenny Stabler from Alabama. Linebacker Lee Roy Jordan and receiver Ray Perkins. It was Perkins who only a month ago replaced Bryant as coach at Alabama.

"The national championship is always our goal at Alabama," said Bryant. "We go into every season with that in mind."

Bryant did not take kindly to losing. He announced his retirement after his team lost its last three regular season games, saying he was to blame for their collapse. In what was, for Alabama, a lowly 7-4 regular season, dropping from the No. 2 spot in the rankings to a tie for 17th after the bowl victory.

However, his age was working against him in recruiting - recruiters from other colleges warned prospects that the Bear would not be able to see them through their careers at Alabama.

The Alabama legislature's attempts to waive the state's mandatory retirement age of 70 for Bryant were knocked down in the courts.

The idea of eclipsing Amos Alonzo Stagg's elderly record of 314 career wins became a Holy Grail for Bryant, and to that end he stayed on at Alabama well past the age that most coaches less in the towel.

Bryant reached his goal, at age 68, when the Crimson Tide beat Auburn on Nov. 28, 1981, for his 315th win.

"I think it was paramount to the future of college football that, if his health remained good, Coach Bryant set a record," said Bryant.

"He was the only one who could ever do it because of his tremendous dedication to and love of the game."

"He was a man among men," said Wallace. "No amount of words will permit me to describe the loss we have suffered with Coach Bryant's passing."

Alabama House Speaker Tom Drake said the funeral will be held at 9 a.m. MST Friday at First United Methodist Church in Tuscaloosa, with a graveside service at noon Friday at Elmwood Cemetery in Birmingham.

Bryant is survived by his widow, Mary Harmon Bryant, a son, Paul Jr., and a daughter, Mrs. Johnson Tyson III, and five grandchildren.

Bryant was hospitalized in 1966 after collapsing in Los Angeles during a coaching clinic, and again in February 1979, when he suffered from respiratory problems after cracking a rib when he slipped while stepping out of a shower. Doctors blamed the 1966 collapse on exhaustion, complicated by minor internal bleeding caused by irritation of the small intestines.

But he signed a five-year contract prior to the 1979 season and promptly led the Crimson Tide to a 12-0 record and the No. 1 ranking in the nation.

Bryant was one of 11 children raised on a small farm near Fordyce. He got his nickname - few people knew him by any name other than "Bear" - when as a boy he wrestled a bear at a carnival trying to win a few dollars.

He recalled that he was being fine until the bear got mad.

He was "the other end" with Don Hutson on Alabama teams that went 23-2-2 during his three years, including a 1934 Rose Bowl victory over Stanford.

He spent six years as an assistant coach, four at Alabama and two at Vanderbilt, before serving with the U.S. Navy during World War II. He spent one year after that as head coach at Maryland, where he was 6-2-1, and then went to Kentucky to compile a 60-23 record in eight seasons, including the Wildcats' only southeastern Conference championship and four bowl trips.

In 1954 he went to Texas A&M, where he was 25-14 in four years.

But it was at Alabama where the legend began.

Bryant called 'one of a kind'

By United Press International

Paul "Bear" Bryant, the legendary coach at Alabama who died suddenly Wednesday at the age of 69, was praised by the college football fraternity as "one of a kind" who greatly influenced those who came in contact with him.

"Bear Bryant was one of a kind and I think that when we go to try to find a replacement in our profession for him we're gonna find that there is none," said John Merritt of Tennessee State, the fourth winningest coach in college history. "There perhaps will never be one that can take his place. I think Bear Bryant is one of the true human beings who went about this earth doing good."

Defensive tackle Marty Lyons of the New York Jets, who played at Alabama, was so stunned by the news of Bryant's death that he could barely speak above a whisper.

"It's so hard to put into words. I just owe the man a great deal of love and respect," said Lyons, trying to fight back the tears. "It's a terribly sad day in my life. I can just hope and pray that he will be rewarded for all the things he has done for people, people not just in football."

"I'm just shocked," said Jets' quarterback Richard Todd from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., another former Bryant player. "He was a great man, a mentor but he had a warm spot for his players. I'll best remember him for the discipline he taught me. It has helped me with my career and will continue to. But he should be best remembered for all the help he gave to a lot of people."

John David Crow, a Heisman Trophy winner under Bryant at Texas A&M in 1956, said there was not a man he loved or respected more than his former coach.

"To me, we were very, very close. It's really a very difficult time for it to say anything about something that hurts me and my family as much as

"He knew that while he was still with us, I know that because I told him enough times. It's a great personal loss for me. I think I was in touch with him every day I live and I will be every day that I live. My prayers and thoughts go out to Mrs. Bryant (and the family)."

Ermy Bellard, coach at Mississippi State, said the impact of Bryant's death would be felt across the nation.

"There's certainly going to be an entire nation that's going to be saddened. For years, he has been the epitome of college football. Just his retirement was devastating. Just his death when you lose a human being of his stature, it's just a great loss," said Bellard.

Many of Bryant's coaching colleagues were extremely saddened by the timing of his death. It came at a time when Bryant said he was going to begin enjoying many of the things he had been unable to do during his years as a coach.

"I'm as sorry as I can be personally. I was looking forward for him to have time to do the things he wanted to do - to fish, hunt and travel," said Duke Coach Steve Sloan, one of 12 active coaches who played under Bryant. "I know he mentioned he was really looking forward to having some time off on his own. I spent the night at his house about a month ago. He looked great."

Former Clemson Coach Frank Howard, a close personal friend of Bryant's, said he had warned the Alabama coach to quit several years ago or risk problems with his health.

"I talked to him about three years ago and told him he'd better get out of there before it killed him," said Howard. "He made a great contribution to football and it just goes to show you that anybody who works hard at whatever they're interested in can make a success out of it. I know him when he didn't even have a pair of shoes to wear."

"I tell you, he stayed in that stuff too long."

Morgan won't be around to pester Wadkins at Phoenix Open

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) - Lanny Wadkins gets a break from a recent nemesis on this year's PGA tour as he opens defense of his Phoenix Open title today.

Cliff Morgan - who won the Tucson and Los Angeles events, in which Wadkins finished in the tie for second - is skipping the Phoenix tournament to enjoy the $100,000 he has earned in the past three weeks.

Wadkins is among eight of the top 10 money-winners in 1982 entered in the $250,000 Phoenix event, which carries a top prize of $63,000. He finished seventh on last year's list when he won the Tournament of Champions and Buick Open in addition to Phoenix and finished second in the PGA Championship.

His challengers at Phoenix include 1982 money champ Craig Stadler, who missed the cut at Tucson but came on strong at Los Angeles and in last week's Bob Hope Desert Classic at Palm Springs.

Stadler said his game felt "good" in Wednesday's pro-am, in which he shot an even par 71 over the Phoenix Country Club course.

"I started playing a little better at Los Angeles, and it carried over last week," he said. "I feel I'm back on track, my swing feels good."

Keith Fergus, winner of last week's Bob Hope Desert Classic, also is entered, along with Rex Caldwell, the playoff loser at Palm Springs.

Besides Morgan, those passing up this does. I can say that I'm real proud and feel good about the fact that I know that he knew how much I loved him and how much he did for us," said but we trapped her and double-teamed her with our zone. I'd love to see if they could hold her under 10 points we can beat them." The Tigers' play worked, as Easton managed just eight points.

The Tigers' victory didn't surprise Buhi Coach Janet Smutny. "Jerome is a team we never overlook," she said. "We didn't overlook them the other night, but we thought we really had to prepare for Burley, who we had to play the night before."

Nagging ailments - sore throats, colds, coughs - have hampered several Indians lately, though Smutny refuses to offer illness as an excuse for the loss to Jerome. "Every team we've played has probably gone through the same thing," she said.

Two Indians who have been somewhat weakened, Taci Hulse and Stacy Walker, are also among Buhi's better rebounders and defenders. The Thursday opening should help them recover. "It's nice to have this whole week (off), before we get started," Smutny said.

Like Jerome, Burley would like to continue a recent burst of competence. Though the Bobcats fell last Friday at Rigby, 58-47, Burley Coach Mac Mills hopes the loss proves to be a benchmark performance.

"We ran the break well and played good defense," Mills affirmed. "One (Rigby) girl scored 20 points, but she'd hit shots over a double-team - in the past we wouldn't even get the double-team there."

"After the game, I told them. 'If you play this well in the district tournament, nobody will beat you.'"

Mills admitted that anybody could beat the Bobcats if they shoot free throws as they did against Rigby. The woeful five-for-26 effort at the line was the lone chink in Burley's armor that night.

Against Wood River, the Bobcats will have to try to stifle Lori Pascoe, who has averaged 14 points and eight rebounds per game. "Pascoe has given us a tremendous amount of problems ever since she was a sophomore," Mills said.

Anise Morrow has been another productive Wolverine, scoring 14, 11 and 10 points in her last three games, according to Wood River Coach Patrick Shannon, who realizes that his team will need a well-rounded effort to succeed.

"We need more consistency out of the other girls too, not just Anise and Lori," Shannon said. "In our game at Jerome we had balanced scoring and that's why we won. I think we'll need that in the tourney. I think everybody will be keying on Lori and if we can get production from the other girls on the court, we can surprise Burley and Buhi."

Though the game is days away, Mills already had something to say about the officiating, though it wasn't of a critical nature. "The Burley coach simply believes that the referees' style could influence Thursday night's outcome."

Sports violence: a product of poor morality?

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — A couple of psychologists at the University of California suggested Wednesday that athletic violence is related to moral development and that the tough guys on the field are not "morally mature."
"The roughest players, whether male or female, appear to possess the least mature moral reasoning," said a release issued by the university.
Who came up with this speculation?
It was the work of Brenda Jo Bredemeier, sport psychologist and assistant professor of physical education at the University of California in Berkeley, and David L. Shields, doctoral candidate at the Graduate Theological Union in Berkeley and a local church minister.

Bredemeier and Shields analyzed the athletic aggression and moral development of 24 men and 22 women who were members of four college basketball teams in the San Francisco Bay Area. All were between 18 and 21 years old.

They said their study found that, overall, the athletes had "exceptionally low" moral reasoning levels compared with other college students.
Furthermore, they said, "athletic aggression is a moral issue" not just a legitimate part of playing the game.
The researchers suggested that the claimed lower level of moral maturity among athletes may be accounted for by the fact that "sports is a setting that tolerates and at times encourages violence."

Six-player swap with Cubs overloads Chisox with hurlers

DALLAS GREEN
Did not discuss Jenkins

CHICAGO (UPI) -- The Chicago White Sox two-for-four player swap with the Cubs Wednesday left the Sox top-heavy with pitchers and willing to listen to more trade talk.

The Sox got right-handers Randy Martz and Dick Tidrow, plus infielders Pat Tabler and Scott Fletcher. In exchange, they gave the Cubs left-hander Steve Trout and right-hander Warren Brusstar.

They then picked right-hander Steve Mura from the St. Louis Cardinals in the compensation draft.

The flurry of activity boosted the Sox' proven pitching corps from 13 to 14. Manager Tony LaRussa plans to carry no more than 10 hurlers. "We are in a position to make more deals," General Manager Roland Hemond said. "There may be a long line of trades in the years to come."

"My goal is that we win some world championships. I think that we're closer to that now," he said, adding Tidrow particularly is "a good consideration for a later transaction."

The Sox reportedly have been negotiating with Texas for third baseman Buddy Bell but have been unable to put together an acceptable package. The addition of three right-handers to the staff increases their flexibility in dealing with the Rangers -- if they do not want to entrust third base to 23-year-old Tabler.

Hemond said the Sox initiated previous conversations but "now that we've added a pitcher, it may not be necessary for us to make all the calls."

The Sox' selection of Mura put to rest speculation Hemond would take Cubs' mound ace Ferguson Jenkins as compensation for the loss of free agent Steve Kemp. The Cubs reportedly left Jenkins unprotected because they thought no one would be interested in an aging player with a high salary.

But both Hemond and Cubs General Manager Dallas Green denied the Jenkins decision was part of the trade.

"Roland and I did not discuss the Perle thing. I cannot dictate to him," Green said.

Hemond said the Sox decided against Jenkins in part because Jenkins wanted to stay with the Cubs as he seeks the 22 victories he needs for 300.

"We always like to get players who have a tremendous desire to wear the White Sox uniform," Hemond said, citing Carlton Fisk and Greg Luzinski as examples.

Green said Wednesday's trade was under discussion long before the Jenkins situation cropped up.

"This is a trade Roland and I have talked about off and on, mostly off," said Green.

"Roland insisted Trout was not available unless it was a very big deal. At that time, we didn't have the numbers and the versatility, so we just put it on the shelf."

He said the signing earlier this month of Dodgers third baseman Ron Cey "allowed us the versatility to try it again."

Green acknowledged Trout had some problems with the Sox last year but said he hopes the change of clubs will have a beneficial effect.

"We want him in our starting rotation. We're going to go out and give him the ball," Green said.

Trout, 25, was 6-9 last year with a 4.26 ERA. Brusstar, 30, was 2-0 for the Sox with a 3.74 ERA after being acquired from the Phillies Aug. 30. He was 2-3 with Philadelphia.

Seattle's Caudill gets rich contract

SEATTLE (UPI) -- The Seattle Mariners have reached a basic agreement with top reliever Bill Caudill that would reportedly give him the richest one-year contract in the team's history, a spokesman for the club said Wednesday.

The contract, which is not expected to be signed for several days, would give Caudill a base salary of $300,000 and would include heavy incentives for appearances and awards.

If Caudill duplicates or betters his 1982 output, he would earn in 1983 nearly $500,000 in a contract that includes the first attendance and weight clauses ever given by the Mariners.

Caudill and Mariner owner George Argiros met Saturday at an Orange Country Calif., country club to make a last stab at salary discussions before the arbitration deadline Tuesday night.

"It was some place," said Caudill, who at the time said he was close to filing for salary arbitration. "The food was impressive, but the best part of it was the golf course. I told George, 'Quit -- worrying about -- all -- this negotiating. You write down what you offer, and I'll write down what I want, and then we'll play a round of golf for it. Winner take all.'"

Argiros laughed and told him he might need a few handicap strokes.

Caudill reportedly started talking in the $700,000-$800,000 range, while Argiros began at the $350,000 level, which Mariner General Manager Dan O'Brien already had made as a final offer.

"By the time we were done, I thought we were close to something, so I had Scott fly out from Chicago," Caudill said.

Scott Boras, Caudill's agent, reached Los Angeles Monday morning and talked to Caudill before both met Argiros at his Orange County office at 2 p.m.

An agreement was finally reached about 9:30 Monday night.

In addition to a $300,000 base salary, the contract reportedly gives Caudill $2,000 per appearance for 37-50 games, $3,000 per appearance for 51-55 games, and $6,000 per appearance for anything over 55.

Caudill pitched in 70 games last season.

The agreement also reportedly pays Caudill $20,000 if he makes the all-star team, $20,000 if the Mariners draw 1.5 million in attendance, $50,000 for winning the AL relief award, $25,000 for finishing second, and $15,000 for finishing third.

Caudill also gets a weight clause that will pay him $1,000 every Friday if he weighs 161 at 195 pounds or less. When he was in Seattle last week, he weighed 198, down 20 pounds from the final day of the 1982 season.

The Mariners have reached agreements with all their players except second baseman Julio Cruz and shortstop Todd Cruz, who filed for arbitration prior to the Tuesday night deadline.

Mile record could fall in K of C track

CLEVELAND (UPI) -- Distance runner Fannom Coghlan said Wednesday his world indoor record in the mile could fall in the upcoming Knights of Columbus track meet because of the level of competition in the race.

Besides Coghlan, who holds the world indoor record at 3:50.6, the race will feature Steve Scott, John Walker, Sydney Maree and Ray Flynn.

The 43rd annual meet will be held Feb. 18 at the Richfield Coliseum.

Coghlan told reporters it probably will be the first time that the milers all face each other in an indoor race this year.

"If all goes well, then the world record is on the boards," said Coghlan, who set the mark in 1981.

Coghlan, an Iristman who graduated from Villanova University, said, "This is a world-class field. It could be 3-4 to the mile."

"The one who has the best kick at the finish will depend on who feels the best that night and who has the most determination to win," he said.

Bullheads endanger Carey Lake fishing

JEROME -- The illegal transfer of fish into waters of Idaho is one of the most serious problems facing fishery managers in Idaho. The law states it is against the law "to possess, transport, or use as bait any live fish" because this practice could lead to introduction of undesirable species into additional waters of the state.

A recent case of these illegal transfers has been discovered at Carey Lake Wildlife Management Area and could jeopardize the fisheries program on that body of water.

The lake went almost dry in 1977 and the Idaho Department of Fish and Game spent about $100,000 in drought funds to construct 15-foot-deep by 50-foot-wide channels to provide additional water areas to avoid winter kills during low water years. The area had historically provided excellent fishing for bluegill, bass and perch with two pound bluegills recorded in the 60s. Considerable effort and cost was involved in catching and transplanting bluegills and largemouth bass from Sand Dunes Lakes and Hagerman WMA to start a new population which would provide area anglers with a quality warmwater fishery.

All the time and effort is now in jeopardy because bullhead catfish were illegally planted in Carey Lake. When I checked it last Saturday, the catfish were literally churning the water where the hot water springs enter the lake.

According to Bob Bell, regional fishery manager, he had not observed bullheads in Carey Lake in the past and it appears they were transported alive from other waters of the state.

Bullheads compete directly with the other fish species present for food and space in addition to preying on their eggs. They have the ability to multiply rapidly and eventually could become a severely stunted population. Fish biologists have speculated the reason for lack of growth by largemouth bass in the lake may be partially because of the competition between the two species for food. Bullheads are extremely difficult to control once they are established in a body of water.

Checks of fishermen at the Carey Lake recently showed poor to fair fishing for bluegill, bass and perch but excellent for bullhead catfish averaging three-quarters of a pound each.

Catfish fishermen are urged to fish the area to help thin out the population. There is no limit to this prolific species but fishermen should be advised it is considered littering to dress fish and throw the entrails or filleted carcasses on the bank. Our conservation officers have the authority to enforce litter laws. There was a real mess of dressed-out fish around the area when it was inspected last weekend.

The recent Idaho Fish and Game Commission hearing in Boise drew more than 100 professors against the introduction of walleye into additional waters of the state. One of the main reasons for their concern was the possible illegal transport by private citizens of this predatory species into good trout areas if walleye became established in easily accessible areas throughout Idaho.

Oakley Reservoir and Bray Lake in Region 4 were tentatively scheduled to receive walleye plants but the commission decided against any further introductions because of the public protest and concern over possible detrimental effects on trout, salmon and steelhead. Several of the western states have documented a serious decline in trout populations in water that contained introductions of walleye.

There is a real demand for warmwater fishing in Region 4 and Bell hopes to meet this need with releases of less controversial species. For example, Milner Reservoir is scheduled to receive fingerling plants of several hundred thousand smallmouth bass, channel, flathead and blue catfish this summer. Bell feels the blue catfish has considerable potential in this area of Idaho because they grow rapidly in colder water.

Some releases of adult yellow perch and bluegills are also scheduled for the Turley area. We will plant Emerald Lake near Rupert, with blue catfish this summer. Bell feels the blue catfish has considerable potential in this area of Idaho because they grow rapidly in colder water.

Some releases of adult yellow perch and bluegills are also scheduled for the Turley area. We will plant Emerald Lake near Rupert, with blue catfish this year. A 20-pound channel cat has already been caught from past plants in this popular fishing spot.

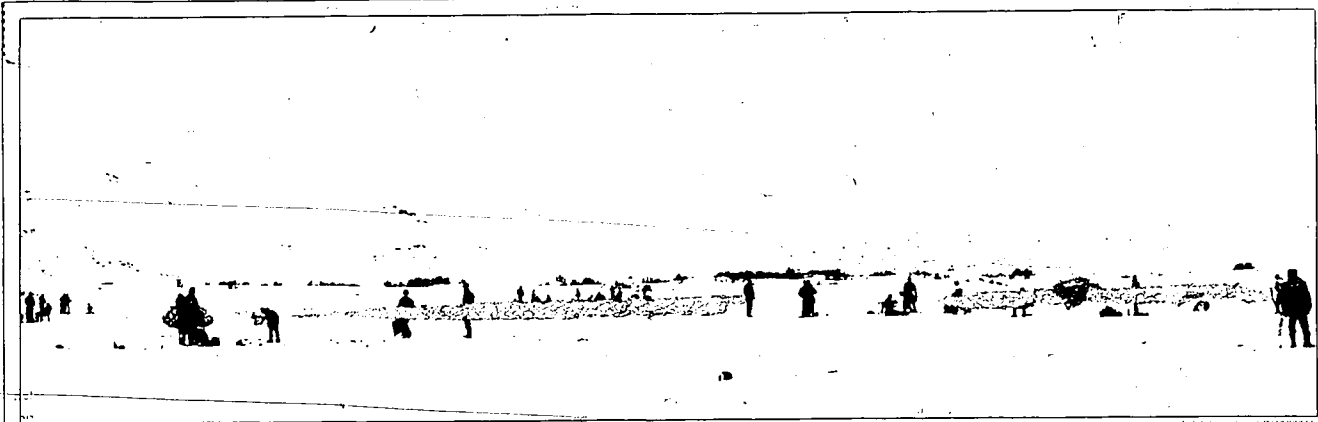

Murtaugh and Wilson lakes are scheduled to receive channel cat introductions. Lower Salmon Falls and Stone reservoirs will receive largemouth bass and black crappie releases if these two species can be obtained. Bell plans to continue an extensive development of warmwater fisheries in Region 4.

Fish Creek Reservoir provides winter fun

CAREY -- The Idaho Department of Fish and Game's fish management program at Fish Creek Reservoir is really paying off, according to department spokesman Stu Murrell.

Last Saturday there were close to 200 people fishing, camping, sledding and snowmobiling on the ice at the reservoir located about 10 miles northeast of Carey. The fishing was reported to be excellent, with many limits being taken.

The trout are averaging about 10 inches long with some up to 14 inches. They are particularly fat rainbows and provide superb eating.

Fish and game personnel planted 200,000 fingerlings and 18,000 catchable trout this year and it appears survival was excellent with the full reservoir conditions accompanied by excellent food production, Murrell said.

The ice is about a foot thick so an adequate auger is necessary for drilling holes. The fish were biting on all the standard baits with corn and yellow salmon eggs holding a slight edge. If you would like a nice winter outing, you might want to try Fish Creek Reservoir. The ice fishing season will continue until Feb. 28.

Grizzly encounters will never fade

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of columns about grizzly bears. The second column will appear next Thursday.

While hiking up a slope in Waterton Lakes National Park just north of the Montana border last October, my son Halieck and I suddenly became aware that we weren't alone.

We were climbing toward an area where we'd hoped to photograph Alberta bighorns when I noticed grizzly tracks in the muddy trail and we were following.

We left the trail and sought a bald ridge where visibility was better than in the thick willow and fir growth through which the trail snaked.

Once we obtained a view of our surroundings, we rested and checked the nearby cover with field glasses.

There, about 150 yards away, my worst fears were realized.

A large bear was sitting on his haunches deep in the underbrush.

Although I've attempted to get some good photos of a grizzly for years, I had not thought of the camera hanging at my belt. Photographs would have involved getting closer, and there was no protection for us.

Then the bear dropped to all fours, gave us a threatening profile, and then headed downhill through the dense firs and brush.

Pat and I moved out in the opposite direction. The bear was moving in a classic pattern as it circled downward to get our scent. Depending on the class of the bear, its state of parenthood and personality, it could either run away or charge upwind, its jaws popping when it smelled us.

Pat and I junked our plans for the day and left -- believing that the best defense against grizzlies is complete avoidance of contact.

My son and I are not strangers to the grizzly mountain. We've hiked extensively in Waterton Lakes and its southern neighbor, Glacier National Park in Montana.

And you might argue that our reaction was a little extreme.

But during the days that I was a full-time outdoor reporter for a Canadian newspaper. I gathered a reasonable fear of the king bear that I'll carry to my death.

'I'll spare you the details. But that reddened trail will haunt me the rest of my life.'

I'll never forget a telephone call from a news source at East Glacier, Mont., in the fall of 1977.

"Mike, you'd better get down here -- another girl has been killed by a bear."

I left a note on the city desk and headed south, arriving in the Many Glacier Valley about 10 a.m. Just in time to help park rangers with the carcasses of two grizzlies which were then suspected of killing the girl.

Human blood stained the trail and fist-sized chunks of flesh were mixed with the strands of a good sleeping bag.

The signs were the aftermath of death on a sunny fall morning when five University of Montana coeds who knew about grizzlies and had done everything right were attacked in their tent. One of them was eaten alive as the others watched.

I'll spare you the details. But that reddened trail will haunt me the rest of my life.

Our mountain grizzly encounter happened about 30 miles from that trail and about five miles from where a grizzly killed a child as she played beside a stream 10 years ago.

Although several grizzlies were killed in searches for both man-eaters, wardens and rangers aren't completely sure that the right bears were killed.

It was also in the same stretch of country where campers at Granite Park Chalet in nearby Glacier Park, Mont., were awakened by screams from others sleeping outside a cabin Aug. 13, 1967.

In a short time, one of the outside sleepers, Roy Ducat, staggered to the cabin and said he had been attacked by a bear. He and Julie Helgeson had been sleeping about 500 feet away.

Later, Ducat told of awakening to a terrific blow which knocked both campers out of their sleeping bags. Both came to rest about five feet beyond their sleeping site.

The bear "gnawed" into Ducat's shoulder, then went to Helgeson and mauled her for a time.

Ducat remained silent and motionless as the bear returned and chewed on his left arm, then returned to Helgeson.

Remainder motionless and soundless during the attack may have saved Ducat's life, according to a Glacier National Park report.

For when the grizzly returned to Helgeson and resumed mauling her, she screamed, "It hurts," then "someone help us." She continued to scream as the bear dragged her away down the hill and her voice faded.

At least three hours later, a park ranger found the girl horribly mutilated. She died before a helicopter could airlift her to a hospital.

That same night, rangers were sent to nearby Trout Lake where a grizzly was thought to have attacked a five-person hiking party out of their campsite. One of them -- Michele Koons, 19, was missing.

Investigating, rangers followed an 87-foot trail of blood and feathers from the victim's sleeping bag.

At the end of the trail was little more than bones, a park official later told me.

In recent years, attacks on man have become common in grizzly country, except Yellowstone National Park, where improper management has all but eliminated the bears.

For the most part, the attacks occur in national parks, where decades of mismanagement have created generations of problem bears.

But the national parks of the United States and Canada were created as much to provide sanctuary for rare wildlife as to provide human recreation, so killing the bears isn't the solution to the problem.

Later columns will discuss bear country camping and management.

Letters

Writer lacks knowledge

Mike Harrop may indeed be an "award winning outdoors writer," but he apparently knows next to nothing about the judicial system and particularly the criminal justice part of that system.

In his article about the Claude Dallas verdict he attempts to absolve the district judge from all responsibility for that verdict and to generally berate the jury system. While I would tend to agree with Harrop that the Dallas verdict was a miscarriage of justice, I would think that would scarcely establish that the hundreds of juries which sit in this state are somehow tainted by that one irresponsible verdict.

If Mr. Harrop were to study the system, he might be surprised to learn that jury verdicts are molded a great deal by the instructions which the district judge chooses to give, by the evidence which the district judge chooses to allow to come before the jury, and by the manner (in the Dallas case) that the jury is constituted and reconstituted. Judge Lodge's sentence does deserve commendation. Harrop's attempt to relieve the learned judge of any responsibility for the verdict should not, however, be taken very seriously.

The most ludicrous suggestion found in Mr. Harrop's article, a suggestion rather libelous of those citizens who serve on juries, is that if you are innocent you tend to ask for a court trial and if you are guilty you tend to ask for a jury trial. Not possessing Harrop's pristine ignorance of the judicial system and with 27 years of experience in that system, I can assure your readers that whether a person charged with a crime believes himself innocent or guilty will be almost invariably ascertained by a jury trial. While judges he will almost invariably be in the law, they seldom have any greater ability to glean fact from fiction than do jurors. More significantly, some judges tend to identify with the system, and particularly with the prosecutor, which is part of what the right to trial by jury is all about and why our constitutional forefathers gave it the sanctity it now enjoys.

If Dallas is in fact released in 10 years, I will be more offended by a parole board that reduces the 30-year sentence to 10 than I will be with a jury system which, contrary to Mr. Harrop's suggestion, has in most cases preserved and not lost the truth and has, much more significantly, preserved our freedom.

Magic has its secrets

Stu Murrell, of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game was in the office two weeks ago to remind me that he had been ice fishing at Magic Reservoir and after drilling 20 ice holes and listening to himself on the radio telling how good Magic ought to be, he came away after several hours' empty.

Stu, you should have a system of "catch-en-tells" that I have put together over the years.

Stu was fishing near the resorts on the west side of the lake, when he came up empty. Well, if he had made a few phone calls he would have found out that they were knocking 'em dead near Warm Springs landing and in the Carnas Channel.

Informants tell me that if the fish were not biting at Warm Springs just take the short trip up the road towards Fairfield and fish near the turnout where the Moonstone Lodge formerly was.

"Seems we caught 'em one place or the other," was the report of my informant.

Each year I hope to go Cisco fishing at Bear Lake with my friend Cy Steadman. Was traveling last week and found the peak of the Cisco fishing had come and gone. "Wednesday, it was real good netting, but it slowed down Thursday," was the report. "The fishing has been slow during the day, but the persistent fishermen are getting their limits."

"Fish and game officers say that the run will peak next Saturday," reports Cy. "But I think it is all downhill now."

So, you may still have time to get your limit of 39 cisco this year.

There is no ice at Bear Lake on Cisco Beach, so anglers must be prepared to wade if they hope to catch fish.

The Utah Fish and Game Department is collecting seven million cisco eggs during this year's run. The eggs are being sent to Flamingo Lake Reservoir in hopes of establishing the cisco there for use as a forage fish.

While writing about the fishing conditions to the south of us, let us scare the h--- out of the Idaho fishermen.

It is now law in Utah . . . it will be required by all fishermen planning to catch and keep trout, to purchase a stamp in addition to their fishing license at an annual cost of $1.30.

This fish-stamp idea came from a panel appointed to come up with ideas on how to raise needed money for another state that is in the hole.

Sheldon Frych, president of the Utah Wildlife Federation, asked that the stamp idea be delayed, "and let's see if the legislature can solve this problem it has created."

"It isn't had enough for them sons-a-guns to tax what they consider my sins, smoking, drinking, but now they are taxing my fun," was just one of the nicer comments coming from the hearings on this bill.

Idaho fishermen, watch out, you may be next, legislatures are looking in every direction possible to raise money, perhaps they can't resist this easy way out.

Youth fishing being boosted by pro angler, lure maker

By ANDY ANDERSON
Dallas Morning News

Tom Mann the lure designer, manufacturer and professional angler from Alabama. Is opening the door for a lot of kids to know the thrill of fishing, and for a lot of adults, individually or as members of an organization, to propagate their sport.

Not only should the manufacturers, suppliers, servicers and retailers of fishing and fishing-related equipment be glad to accept Tom Mann's offer and run with it, but fishing clubs and woods and water organizations -- especially those that have taken so long without putting anything back -- should be first in line.

These are, after all, the people who have been wondering where our next fishermen and hunters are coming from.

Tom Mann's Fish World is cranking up a junior fisherman program. "It's for youngsters 9 to 18," Mann said, "and all of us interested in keeping the future of fishing bright should go for it. We can do so only by educating our kids so that they will be good fishermen and conservationists as well."

"Our young people are faced with so many evils in the modern world that just growing up to be decent adults is difficult. What we want to offer is a healthy alternative to these evils."

The Tom Mann Junior Fisherman Team is a nationwide organization. Local groups will be designated as "tribes." From its Fufaulta, Ala., headquarters, the program will offer to send $12, and that's where the adults, manufacturers, dealers and clubs come in. Most could afford to "adopt" a tribe, finance it and, along with Mann's help, work and have fun with it.

There are, incidentally, a limited number of $100 lifetime memberships. Those funds will be used by the national staff to bring in kids who could not otherwise participate.

Maybe it is a little commercial. Maybe there is too much "Tom Mann" stressed. But one would assume that Mann cannot over-commercialize or his idea will not long survive. Besides, having met the man and knowing what he has done at Fish World, I believe he is genuinely concerned about the lack of young people being educated into the outdoors.

Talk it up among your group. Some of your youngsters might benefit. If not, then the finest contribution would be in seeing how many memberships a group could support toward building a tribe in town.

It would be a new year's project that could bring Christmas to many youngsters throughout the year.

Guides for establishing tribes -- which will function much like Scout troops but with the main emphasis on teaching youngsters to fish and enjoy the outdoors -- are being prepared.

For information and special charter memberships ($12 check and money order for the latter), write Tom Mann's Junior Fishing Team, Highway 431 North, Route 2, Fufaulta, Ala., 36027.

Help needed with deer project

ARCO -- Magic Valley residents are being encouraged to help with a mule deer survey being conducted by both the National Park Service and the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

During the summer of 1980, a study on the "mule deer hear within" the Craters of the Moon National Monument was initiated.

As of Jan. 11, 1983, more than 100 deer had been marked so that careful observations could be kept on the life cycle of individual deer.

Both the observations of live deer and the retrieval of the tags taken during hunting season (and for other reasons) has provided information on deer movements, fatalities, population growth and environmental influences that effect the deer.

The study will provide important data concerning the management of the entire mule deer herd population in southern Idaho. The northern wintering grounds for deer in the craters area has been well documented during the study, but little is known about the large portion of the herd that winters in areas south of the monument.

Because of the large area involved and because it is so sparsely traveled during the winter months, only a handful of reports concerning these deer has been received. Information on these deer herds needs to be gathered if all pertinent data concerning the herd is to be included in the final stages of the research.

Robert Hontges, superintendent of Craters of the Moon, would like any body in the Twin Falls, Burley, Jerome or Mindokka areas who observes a deer marked with ear tags, ear streamers or that has a radio collar, to report it to him. Information needed includes:

- Location of the sighting.
- Date and time of the sighting.
- Sex of the deer.

Snowfall continues to grace resorts

TWIN FALLS -- New snow has been falling on local ski resorts this week, promising more powder and packed powder for the weekend. John Abbott, manager of Soldier Mountain, reported two inches of new snow Wednesday with all lifts running and runs packed and groomed. He said Soldier has 52 inches of snow at the lodge and 60 inches at the top. The big event coming up at Soldier is a "sweetheart" sale at the ski shop with equipment and clothing marked down from 50 to 80 percent. The sale starts Feb. 9 and runs through the week.

Pomerelle has been receiving new snow daily with 10 inches having fallen since Sunday. Woody Anderson, resort owner, said it was snowing off and on Wednesday afternoon. He said the resort has 50 inches of snow at the lodge and 81 at the top of the mountain. Runs are packed powder with Punch, Bowl and some outlying runs left for powder fans.

Anderson said Magic Mountain has received eight inches of snow in almost daily storms this week. Depths there range from 39 to 56 inches and runs were open powder and packed powder.

Roads to both resorts are plowed although snow tires are recommended.

About two inches of new snow is reported at Sun Valley since last week and runs are packed. All lifts are open. Temperatures Wednesday ranged from 28 to 32 degrees.

Cross country skiing is also reported excellent in both the north and south areas of the Sawtooth National Forest. The National Recreation Area reports about four inches of new snow with "very good" conditions. Cross country trails at North Fork and Prairie Creeks are set and NRA officials say by the weekend those at Billy's Bridge, Lake Creek and Red Fish Lake will be set. Galena Lodge and Busterback Ranch report excellent conditions with groomed and set trails.

Sawtooth National Forest reports indicate avalanche hazards are low, but skiers and snowmobilers are urged to stay away from steep canyons and other hazard areas regardless of conditions.

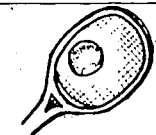

Snowmobile trails were groomed this week in the Diamondfield Jack area and also north of Stanley. The area is now open to snowmobilers from Stanley to Lowman.

Some areas remain closed to snowmobilers to protect big game in the deep snow conditions and recreationists are asked to observe the closures.

There will be a cross country skiers' seminar -- Monday and Tuesday at Galena. The two-day seminar on "personal correction technique" is designed for cross country instructors and skiers. Information is available from Galena Lodge.

Dear Abby

Help for parents of gay children

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: This is in reply to "Sick Inside," a mother who fears her son may be gay. She wrote that her husband had a heart condition and she was afraid he couldn't handle discussing the situation.

Please let that mother know that in all the years of helping parents to understand their gay/lesbian children, we have never lost a parent. However, we do know of gay/lesbian people who have committed suicide because their parents either did not understand them or refused to accept them.

Whether her son is gay or not, we here at PARENTS FLAG (Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays, Inc.) are in a position to support and help her. We have parent groups and contacts throughout the United States.

The latest edition of our booklet, "About Our Children," with information in five languages (English, French, Chinese, Japanese and Spanish), is now available free if the request comes with a stamped (20 cents), long, self-addressed envelope. The address: Box 21953, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

ADOLE STARR, PRESIDENT

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is being married soon. She's living in a one-bedroom apartment and has no room to store anything. After the wedding, she and her husband plan to live in the same apartment.

Would it be proper to include a letter with the wedding invitation suggesting that if anyone wishes to give a gift, money would be greatly appreciated?

Our daughter wants to do this, but my husband and I wonder if it would be considered poor taste.

SOMEWHERE, U.S.A.
DEAR SOMEWHERE: You and your husband are wise to wonder. To include such a letter in the wedding invitations would be in very poor taste.

DEAR ABBY: Everyone says, "It's a man's world." It isn't. If anything, it's a woman's world. Explain this:

If a woman undressed in front of a window with the shade up and a man stood outside and watched, the man would be arrested as a peeping tom.

But if a man undressed in front of a window with the shade up and a woman stood outside and watched, the man would be arrested for indecent exposure.

A MAN IN A WOMAN'S WORLD
DEAR MAN: Not necessarily. It is doubtful that a man or a woman who disrobed inadvertently before an unshaded window would be arrested for indecent exposure.

Nor would one caught in the act of observing someone of the opposite sex disrobing before an uncovered window necessarily be arrested as a peeping tom or tomlette, whichever the case may be.

Couple gains custody of boy

By SPENCER SHERMAN
United Press International

SAN FRANCISCO — A couple succeeded in their two-year court battle to gain custody of a Down's syndrome teenager whose parents refused him medical treatment, but doctors say too much time may have lapsed for a life-saving operation.

The state Court of Appeal Tuesday granted custody of Phillip Becker, 16, to Herbert and Patsy Heath of San Jose, Calif.

The Heaths battled with Phillip's natural parents, Warren and Patricia Becker of Los Altos, Calif., for custody of the child after the Beckers refused to allow doctors to perform an exploratory heart catheterization to see whether Phillip needed corrective surgery.

"The Heaths are ecstatic," Jay Spear, the Heaths' lawyer, said Tuesday night. "But the question over whether he can have the heart catheterization (test still remains).

"The only way it will be resolved is if and when the California Supreme Court rules on the case."

Phillip was born with Down's syndrome, a genetic disease that causes mental retardation, often accompanied by physical abnormalities including heart defects.

Without the surgery, the Heaths argued, Phillip would live only into his 30s. The Beckers said they did not want to prolong his life beyond their own life expectancy because he might not have anyone to take care of him.

The exploratory surgery may now be a moot issue because doctors believe Phillip has grown too large for the operation to have any benefit, the court said.

Spear echoed that concern. "He has a progressive disorder," he said. "In 1977, when the first tests were done they showed that he was operable. Today, doctors are not sure that is still the case."

In making the Tuesday decision, the court decided that removing Phillip from the psychologically supportive atmosphere in the Heath home would have a severe effect on the boy who earlier showed signs of stress when removed from the Heaths' care.

The court said Phillip's frequent visits to the Heaths' home "provided an adequate foundation to establish the crucial parent-child relationship." The Heaths met Phillip in 1972 when they worked as volunteers for the We Care home for the mentally retarded in San Jose. They began bringing him to their home for visits.

The Beckers, who institutionalized Phillip soon after his birth, did not visit him often and refused to pursue medical treatments for him when they became aware of his condition, the court said.

"The record contains abundant evidence that (the Beckers') retention of custody would cause Phillip profound emotional harm," justice John T. Racanelli wrote.

Texas judges gain time to obey order

LAREDO, Texas (UPI) — A federal judge in Laredo has given the Texas judiciary an extra month to comply with a court order that would have led to the release of hundreds of involuntarily committed mental patients.

The original order, issued by U.S. District Court Judge George P. Kazen in Brownsville last Nov. 23, held that the detention of people in protective custody for longer than 72 hours without a hearing is unconstitutional.

Kazen's order was to have taken effect today.

At the request of Attorney General Jim Mattox, Kazen Tuesday stayed the order.

Flaming fuel halts travel on freeway

A tanker truck and trailer carrying 3,700 gallons of gasoline burns on a freeway in South Gate, Calif., Tuesday. Firemen allowed the blazing fuel to burn out on its own. The fire closed all lanes of the freeway. The driver of the truck escaped without injury. Cause of the fire was not disclosed.

Judge keeps DeLorean case documents under his thumb

By MARK BARABAK
United Press International

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge refuses to modify his order requiring all documents in automaker John DeLorean's drug case be filed in his chambers under seal, saying he will decide what documents are made public.

"The court's intention is not the preservation of secrecy, but of the judicial system's integrity to preserve a fair trial," U.S. District Court Judge Robert M. Takasugi said Tuesday in rejecting the motion to modify his Dec. 22 order.

In rejecting the motion by The Associated Press and four other news organizations, the judge said he found "substantial likelihood" that the pre-trial rights of the defendants will be damaged if the documents are not first reviewed.

Takasugi said he has received "innumerable telephone calls and written communications from around the world," each "unusually emotional and opinionated."

Howard Weitzman, representing DeLorean in his defense of charges he tried to set up a $24 million cocaine deal to save his failing sports car company, praised the judge's decision.

"This court's order is 100 percent appropriate," Weitzman said. "We should decide on a document-by-document basis. I think that what the court has done is admirable."

The attorney said many of the documents contained information that "may or may not come into evidence" and could prejudice potential jurors.

DeLorean, who is free on $5 million bond, did not appear in court Tuesday, but his two co-defendants, William Hetrick and Stephen Arrington, attended the hearing.

The judge took under submission a request by NBC and CBS for copies of video tapes made by undercover agents if and when they are introduced as evidence in the trial.

The judge rejected the contention of AP attorney John Karaczynski that the order sealing the documents improperly tipped the balance that presumes the public has a right to documents unless proven otherwise.

He said reporters do not even know what has been filed in the case or when such filings are happening — impeding their ability to cover the story.

Takasugi said he is willing to release certain materials after reviewing them and determining they pose no danger to a fair trial.

He asked members of the media to designate some representative who can serve as "central receiver" to be contacted by a court clerk if and when documents are unsealed.

Joining the request for unsealing the documents were NBC, CBS, the Los Angeles Herald Examiner and the Los Angeles Press Club.

Montana schools may cut to 4 days

HELENA, Mont. (UPI) — The state House has given tentative approval to a bill allowing some schools to try out a four-day school week.

The bill, which passed on a 52-47 vote Tuesday, allows the Board of Public Education to permit up to five school districts to try the shorter week.

No school for Butte this week

BUTTE, Mont. (UPI) — A strike by school principals and administrators in has closed Butte public schools at least until the end of the week.

Thirty principals and administrators went on strike late Monday after mediation talks broke down, and schools were closed Tuesday morning when pickets were set up at the school administration building.

Later in the day, union spokesmen said they weren't going back to the bargaining table without their chief negotiator — who is out of town until Friday.

About 6,700 students from kindergarten through high school are out of school because of the strike. Some 1,600 high school students got a break from semester exams, which would have entered their second day on Tuesday.

Butte School District Supt. Bill Milligan said the main stumbling block in negotiations is seniority rights. The board doesn't want to be tied strictly to seniority when it must lay people off or fill vacancies. Administrators want their seniority to be a primary consideration in layoffs, transfers or the filling of vacancies.

The strike was not expected, and came as a surprise even to union president Cliff Steele, who said members had been extremely close to reaching a contract agreement.

Negotiations started almost 11 months ago, and the contract expired June 30 of last year. Wages are not an issue in the strike, for a tentative agreement already had been reached on a three-percent pay increase. The administrators receive annual salaries ranging from $23,350 to $35,500.

The action is the second strike against the Butte School Board this school year.

Sisters sue crematorium over policy

COSTA MESA, Calif. (UPI) — Two sisters are suing an Orange County crematorium for allegedly chopping up their brother's corpse before cremating the remains with other bodies.

Eileen Heffley and Jean Schneider filed a class action suit claiming the body of Robert Mahoney, 56, who died two years ago, was to have been cremated by itself in a single chamber at Harbor Rest Memorial Park.

Instead, the suit alleges, Mahoney's body was cut up and put with others in a single chamber, resulting in the mixing of ashes from all the corpses.

The suit, filed on behalf of "others similarly situated," alleges that Harbor Lawn-Mount Olive Mortuary and Memorial Park in Costa Mesa regularly breaks its written contract with customers by treating bodies "in a cavalier manner."

Also named in the civil suit were five Orange County mortuaries and the Neptune Society, a cremation service.

The Register in Orange County reported three embalmers employed between 1979 and 1981 at Harbor Lawn-Mount Olive Mortuary, one of the defendants in the case, told reporters that a large proportion of the 9,000 bodies processed during that period were placed in groups of five to eight in cremation chambers meant to hold one body.

Doctors acted properly, priest states

By MARK BARABAK
United Press International

LOS ANGELES — Two doctors who disconnected a respirator from a comatose patient and denied him food and water until he died acted properly, a Jesuit priest who consults a presidential commission on medical ethics says.

"In my experience, it happens regularly," Father John Paris testified during Tuesday's preliminary hearing to determine whether Dr. Neil Barber and Dr. Robert Nejdil will be tried on charges they murdered Clarence Herbert.

Herbert, 55, entered Kaiser Permanente Hospital in Harbor City in August, 1981, for routine abdominal surgery. But shortly after the operation, he stopped breathing long enough to lapse into a coma and suffer irreversible brain damage.

Several days after he lapsed into a coma, doctors disconnected the respirator. When Herbert continued to breath without the machine, doctors withdrew the intravenous tubes supplying him with food, water and medication. Herbert survived six days without food and water.

"I believe that the actions of Dr. Barber and Dr. Nejdil were the appropriate medical responses to the situation," said Paris, professor of social ethics at College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass., and a consultant to the President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research.

"Any steps to actively kill a patient are not appropriate in our society," said Paris, adding, however, that there is a difference between actively killing a patient and merely allowing a patient to die.

Paris said the presidential commission, which will publish its final report March 31, said, after three years of examining the issue, "As a matter of public social policy, it's good practice to cease treatment for hopeless patients."

Among the factors that must be considered, he said, are the feelings of relatives, the cost and the possibility that limited medical resources could be put to better use.

Paris said Pope John Paul II in 1983 restated the Catholic Church's long held position that euthanasia does not constitute suicide and that physicians who carry out a family's wishes to cease treatment have "no reason for reproach."

The key question, he said, is whether treatment prolongs life or merely prolongs a patient's suffering.

"Care depends not on the state of science," Paris said in reference to increasing medical capabilities through technology, "but the state of the patient."

Outside the courtroom, Paris said prosecution in such cases was detrimental.

"The cases create enormous fear in the medical community that gets translated into inappropriate extension of treatment," Paris said. "Dying is a natural process and when it happens, you should let it occur."

Settlement with store costs man $300,000

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — A man who reached a settlement with a grocery store chain at the same time a jury was reaching a verdict in his lawsuit against the firm lost nearly $300,000.

The jury awarded Danny McGee, 32, of Austin a total of $701,000 in damages from Safeway Stores Inc. and Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Fort Worth. The suit involved an incident in which a quart bottle of the soft drink fell from a store shelf, shattered and partially blinded McGee in one eye.

While the jury was deliberating, McGee reached a settlement with Safeway for $75,000 — $296,000 less than the amount the jury had assessed against the grocery chain.

The settlement superseded the jury award, although a $330,000 assessment against the Coca-Cola bottling company was left intact.

The jury found the bottling company was negligent in stocking the bottles too closely together and said the store should have corrected the situation.

Rowboat off course on voyage

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Peter Bird, a London photographer rowing across the Pacific to Australia in a 22-foot boat, is being pushed off course by trade winds and ocean currents, radio reports indicate.

"The Pacific weather has gone nuts!" Kenneth Crutchlow, Bird's sponsor, said after talking with him by radio. "The so-called westerly trade winds just aren't there."

"Every day he rows like crazy but he loses it to the wind. He is drifting off course all the time and for the first time Tuesday night he also went to the north. He's getting blown both ways wrong, north and east."

Bird, who left San Francisco in August in an attempt to become the first person to row solo across the Pacific, was averaging 28 miles a day.

He is about 1,000 miles south of Hawaii where rain and strong winds and currents are giving him a "hell of a ride," Crutchlow said.

Bird's spirits are "good but he's getting frustrated. The so-called westerly trade winds just aren't there and he's making less headway than he thought he would," Crutchlow said. Bird has used half his food supply, he added.

The whole trip was projected by a computer to take five months, but Crutchlow said "nine months is more like it." Bird has only seen one ship on the little-traveled sea route.

Bird's position and weather readings are being monitored via satellite by the National Oceanographic Atmospheric Administration and the French Service ARGOs who are interested in the shifting current and weather patterns around the equator.

"He's a one-man experiment," Crutchlow said.

Astrochimp will end up in museum

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ham, the pioneering space chimpanzee that died last week, will be stuffed and loaned to the International Space Hall of Fame in Alamogordo, N.M., by the Smithsonian Institution, an Air Force spokesman says.

Cap Ronald Rand said Ham's bones will be retained by the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, which conducted an autopsy on the chimp. He said the Smithsonian's National Air and Space Museum will handle the taxidermy.

Ham, named after the Holloman Aerospace Medical Center in New Mexico, rode a Mercury capsule on a sub-orbital spaceflight Jan. 21, 1961, to clear the way for the flight of Alan B. Shepard, the first American man in space.

Ham retired from the space program in 1963 and was transferred to the National Zoo in Washington, then to the North Carolina Zoological Park in Ashboro, N.C.

He died Jan. 17 at the age of 26. The cause of death will be released next month when an autopsy is completed.

Cops strike in Anaconda

ANACONDA, Mont. (UPI) — Anaconda's 22-member police force went on strike early Wednesday.

Union spokesman Gary Jacobs said the strike is over unfair labor practices, and that management has been bargaining in bad faith.

The policemen have agreed on a wage package, but are still in dispute over other issues — including scheduling and health-insurance payments.

Sheriff Jim Conners will be the only lawman on duty. But union members said they will respond to emergency ambulance calls for 48 hours.

Eight prisoners in the Deer Lodge County Jail were transferred Tuesday to Butte and Deer Lodge.
