After clearing decks, attorney general quits

WILLIAM FRENCH SMITH
Reagan's close adviser

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — William French Smith, the multimillionaire corporate lawyer who directed sweeping changes in the Department of Justice and served as a close personal adviser to President Reagan, has resigned as attorney general, administration sources said Sunday.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified by name, said it appeared that a leading candidate to succeed Smith was presidential counselor Edwin Meese III.

The sources said that Smith was not pressured to leave but that he had simply decided that after three years in office it was time to go. They said he felt that he had accomplished his major goals.

One source said that Reagan's anticipated re-election campaign played a role in Smith's decision. The source noted that Smith had been active behind the scenes in every Reagan campaign and wanted to do so again but felt it would be inappropriate if he remained as attorney general.

The 66-year-old attorney general, who reversed civil rights, antitrust and criminal enforcement policies which had stood through four previous administrations, kept his plans to himself almost up until the last minute.

The sources said he told President Reagan of his intention to resign in a one-on-one meeting in the Oval Office on Wednesday. But even on Sunday, Smith had not advised assistant attorneys general at the Justice Department of his plans. And the reports of his resignation caught even some of Smith's closest friends by surprise.

During the Oval Office meeting, Reagan told Smith, who was Reagan's personal lawyer for many years, that the Cabinet post was his as long as he wanted it, the sources said.

Reagan, returning to the White House from his Maryland mountain retreat in time to watch the Super Bowl on television, dodged reporters' questions about Smith and a possible successor. "There's only one thing on my mind: the football game," Reagan said.

The sources said they expected Reagan to formally announce the resignation Monday.

Meese was out of Washington on Sunday and could not be reached for comment on the possibility of succeeding Smith. His spokesman, Jim Jenkins, also could not be reached for comment, as telephone calls to his home went unanswered.

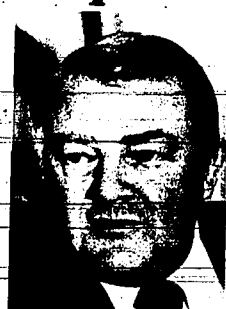

Smith is an intimate friend of Reagan and a member of the old Reagan "Kitchen Cabinet" until the president brought him into his official inner circle as attorney general.

One sign of his influence with Reagan came in the appointment of Sandra Day O'Connor as the first woman to the Supreme Court. Mrs. O'Connor was Smith's selection, and sources said at the time that he prevailed over the president's closest White House aides, including Meese, whose first choice was a man.

Smith was perhaps proudest of the attention and changes which he brought in the area of criminal enforcement, particularly against drug traffickers. He brought the FBI for the first time into the fight against illegal drugs, making it a partner with the Drug Enforcement Administration. This move had been studied by prior administrations, but they had shied away from actually making such a change.

During the transition period between the 1980 election and Reagan's inauguration, Smith chaired the Kitchen Cabinet's personnel task force which selected the key members of the administration, many of them — like Smith — longtime members of Reagan's informal group of friends and advisers.

Activists rally on abortion

For anniversary

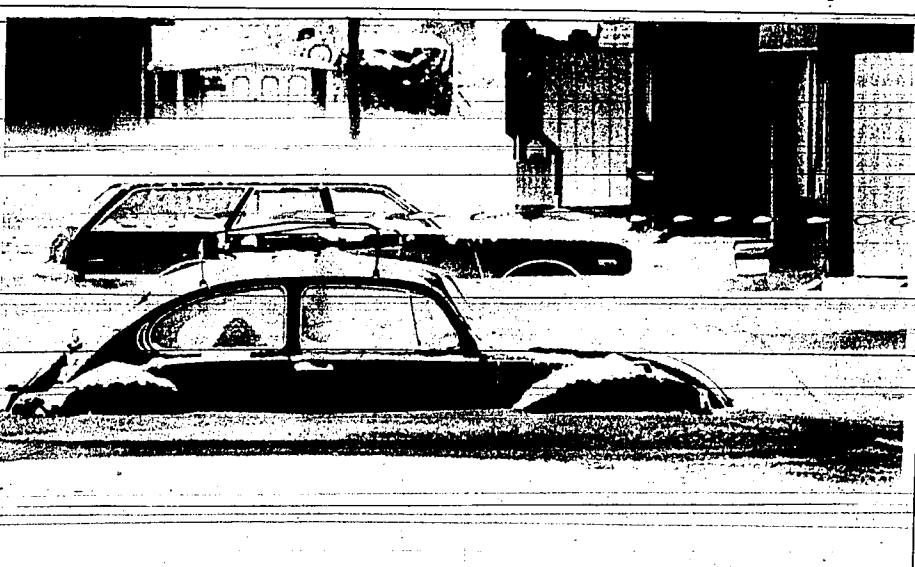

By The Associated Press

Abortion foes sang at the statehouse steps in Denver, dedicated memorials in southern Florida and marched to a Louisiana country courthouse to commemorate Sunday's 11th anniversary of legalized abortion, as New York feminists decried President Reagan's anti-abortion stance.

In Southern California, demonstrators on both sides of the issue rallied to remember the Supreme Court's 1973 decision in Roe vs. Wade, while a coalition of anti-abortion groups in Tucson, Ariz., readied for candlelight services Sunday night at five abortion clinics.

Participants in a Monday "March for Life" began arriving in Washington, D.C., by the busload on Sunday — the day proclaimed by Reagan as National Sanctity of Human Life Day.

Reagan, a longtime foe of legalized abortion, urged Americans "to gather on that day in homes and places of worship to give thanks for the gift of life."

Water from the Lemhi River overran this Salmon subdivision, flooding homes and vehicles alike

Residents make gains against flood

By The Associated Press

SALMON (AP) — Slowly moderating temperatures caused ice-jammed rivers near here to begin breaking up Sunday, giving some town residents some relief from flooding, authorities said.

"Right now we're pretty much in command of the situation for a change," said Dick Smith, spokesman for the Salmon Search and Rescue Unit.

Smith said the mercury rose to a balmy 20 degrees at noon Sunday, compared with a high of 7 above zero Saturday.

"Ice jams began to block the Salmon and Lemhi rivers late last week, as temperatures dropped as low as 25 below zero."

As the confluence of the two rivers, just north of Salmon, was blocked by ice, water began flowing outside the normal river channels. By Saturday, a 28-square-block area of Salmon was covered with up to six feet of water.

Smith said there was some additional flooding in the town Saturday night, which caused the evacuation of seven more residences.

He said a total of 127 residences have been evacuated since Thursday in the town of about 3,200.

"A few of the flooded homes on higher ground were accessible to occupants today, Smith said, and some people returned to get clothing and other possessions.

But he said it will probably be at least another two to three days before residents are allowed to return to their homes.

Smith said several miles of the river ice had cleared, but he added, "We have to have it warm enough to eliminate all the ice."

On Saturday, ice formations were reported to be as long as 1 1/2 miles in the Lemhi River and 30 miles in the Salmon River.

Salmon was declared a disaster area Friday by Gov. John Evans. Thousands of sandbags were shipped to the town as residents tried to fight the floodwaters.

Smith said residents whose homes were not affected by the flooding have offered food, shelter and other assistance for the homeless.

"The volunteering seems to be the most encouraging thing about this," he said.

Food riots bloody

Pricing stopped

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
The Associated Press

RABAT, Morocco — King Hassan II announced Sunday night that he has ordered his government to drop all plans for increases in the price of basic foodstuffs which led to bloody rioting throughout northern Morocco.

Hassan's speech over national television and radio — the first official comment on the riots — made no reference to casualties.

Diplomatic sources said dozens of civilians were killed in the past few days in Nador, Tetouan, Al Hoceima and other northern cities when troops and police fired into angry crowds.

Spanish press reports said as many as 200 people may have been slain.

The disturbances coincided with last week's Islamic summit conference in Casablanca, Morocco's largest city, but police and military security had been strengthened for the meeting and no violence was reported there.

Hassan angrily accused communist interests, the Israeli secret service and Iran's revolutionary Islamic government of fomenting the riots, and declared "law and order will prevail."

He recalled an earlier announcement that planned price increases of food and other commodities would not affect the poorest sectors of the population, and said: "I ordered an inquiry to determine how many people would be exempt from the increases. When I saw the results, I decided there would be no increases in basic foodstuffs."

Tunisia's President Habib Bourguiba took a similar step earlier this month in rescinding government-ordered food price increases after more than 80 protesters were killed in riots.

Shultz reveals 'hotline' nuclear-arms talks with Russians

By DAVID GOELLER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Sunday the United States and Soviet Union are conducting "pretty good" informal arms limitation discussions and could resume conventional force reduction talks March 16.

Shultz did not reveal the exact issues involved in the informal discussions, but he said Americans should "take heart" because the Reagan administration's military buildup has diminished the threat of nuclear war.

"We have pretty good discussions going on now on the hot line," he said on "This Week with David Brinkley" of ABC-TV. "That's a form of arms agreement."

Shultz said the United States is agreeable to a Soviet suggestion that the two superpowers resume in Vienna on March 16 their suspended Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction talks aimed at trimming conventional forces in Europe.

But Shultz moved away from the long-standing Reagan administration theory that the placement of U.S. Cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe would pressure the Soviets into serious talks about limiting the spread of intermediate-range nuclear devices.

"I don't know whether they'll come back or not," he said. "That's something they have to determine. ... Our position is to be realistic about what they are doing, to be strong in our own capabilities and to be ready to engage in reasonable negotiation."

Asked to characterize U.S.-Soviet relations, he replied, "There are some positive things. There are some negative things. It's kind of a mixed picture."

Nevertheless, Shultz said, "the American people should take heart" because a stronger United States is in a better negotiating position.

Asked whether the threat of nuclear war has diminished, he said: "Yes, I think so. I think deterrent strength diminishes the temptation of somebody to use their strength against you."

Appearing earlier on the same program, Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's national security adviser, said he was not concerned about cool Soviet-U.S. relations because, considering their rivalry, "it is quite normal."

Brzezinski accused the Soviets of creating "artificially an atmosphere of crisis. I think the crisis is a hoax, and it's also a Soviet tactic, and we should not succumb to that."

He said he thought the United States should pick up on a Soviet proposal to limit nuclear launch vehicles to 1,600. The United States should make a counter offer to limit warheads to 7,500, about 500 below current levels.

"I think we could have an arms control agreement of this type in five months," said Brzezinski, who stressed that the United States should be seeking simple interim agreements rather than comprehensive treaties.

Questioned about Lebanon, Shultz said the administration has no plans to withdraw U.S. Marines anytime soon.

"It's important to show the world that we have resolve, but we also have to pay attention primarily to our objectives there," he said. "Our objectives are to make whatever contribution we can ... to the emergence of a more stable and sovereign Lebanon."

Shultz said that he thought "there may be some swing in the pendulum" of opinion, particularly in Congress, that the Marines should be pulled out promptly.

Appearing on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., said he does not foresee any congressional action this year to force a withdrawal of the Marines.

BOISE (AP) — State Sen. Ron Beltschacher, D-Grangeville, says there is a good chance he will challenge U.S. Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, for the 1st District congressional seat in November.
Beltschacher, 38, said he would make a final decision toward the end of the current legislative session.

Bats overrun high school gym
LAKE CITY, Fla. (AP) — Hundreds of bats have invaded a junior high school gymnasium, perching on girders and chattering inside the walls, and up to 40 percent may be rabid, a health official said Sunday.
"We have already determined there is rabies in the colonies," said Steve Knight, environmental health director for Columbia County. "There have been no reports of bites to humans, officials said."
A state laboratory confirmed rabies in a dead bat found Jan. 13 on the gym floor, Knight said. Generally, 20 percent to 40 percent of a colony carries the disease, he said.
The gym at Lake City Junior High School-East in this north Florida town was closed off Thursday. County School Superintendent Ullas Pittman said he would post guards to keep students out.
Knight said apparently two colonies have invaded the building — one of about 100 bats inside the gymnasium itself and at least 400 more creatures burrowed in the walls.

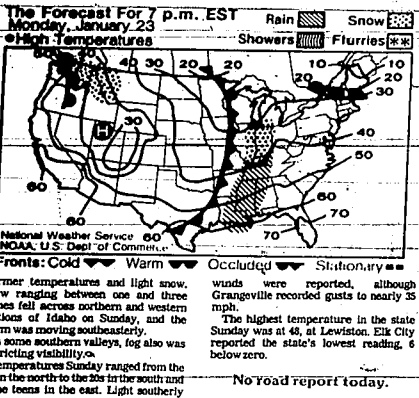

Jet malfunctions, lands safely
IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — A Denver-bound Frontier Airlines DC-9 Super 80 with 120 people aboard returned safely to Jeddah airport Sunday after having engine and landing gear problems on takeoff, officials said.
"After takeoff from Orange County it was found that the main landing gear could not be moved from the down position, so the plane was brought back to the airport and landed 20 minutes later without incident," said Bob Schumann, spokesman for the Denver-based airline.
"There was also an engine problem with the right engine," Schumann said in a telephone interview from Denver. "He (the pilot) did lose some power but he regained it before landing."

Temperatures fall to minus 40
By The Associated Press
Temperatures thudded to as low as 40 degrees below zero Sunday in New England as a bubble of arctic air that has frozen the north since the middle of last week shuffled slowly out to sea, trailing record lows for the third consecutive day and subfreezing temperatures as far south as the Gulf Coast.
"It's the coldest it's ever been in this century" in Massachusetts, said David Parrett, National Weather Service observer in the western Massachusetts town of Colerain, where the record low is minus 40 degrees, along with Guilford, Maine.

The meetings of that task force and of the Kitchen Cabinet generally were held in Smith's law offices at the Los Angeles firm of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, where Smith was the managing partner.
Smith's decision came as a surprise to associates who had heard him in the past express a desire to be the first attorney general since Herbert Brownell in the Eisenhower administration to complete four full years in office.
Smith first voiced that desire to aides when he was under attack in 1982 from Democrats, including Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., over his investment in oil and gas drilling tax shelters and for taking a $50,000 severance payment when he left the board of directors of the Jorgensen Steel Co. to become attorney general.
Smith diffused that controversy by returning the $50,000 and agreeing to limit his tax deductions in the two ventures to the amount of his cash investment.

Smith drew perhaps the most fire as attorney general for implementing Reagan's opposition to mandatory busing to achieve school desegregation and to hiring of promotion quotas to remedy job discrimination.
Through four previous administrations, Republican and Democratic departments had viewed mandatory busing as an acceptable though last-resort remedy and had sought hiring goals, although not quotas, for women, blacks and other minorities who had been victims of job bias.
Antitrust activity was handled by Assistant Attorney General William F. Baxter, but Smith set the tone for sweeping changes when he said in reference to large corporations early in the administration, "Bigness is not necessarily badness." He approved Baxter's decisions to loosen the restraints on corporate mergers while stepping up criminal prosecutions of price-fixers to record levels.

Smith also drew criticism of his extensive foreign travel, which was unprecedented for an attorney general. But Smith said that his foreign trips, including a 1982 trip around the world that cost more than $600,000, were necessary to impress foreign officials with how seriously the United States viewed their efforts to try to control the flow of illegal drugs into this country.
Smith's Justice Department prospered during a time of extraordinary federal belt-tightening. During his tenure, the Justice Department budget was increased by 50 percent, a larger percentage increase than even the Pentagon received from Reagan and the Congress.

suffer emotional turmoil afterward.
Rep. Lyman Winchester, R-Kuma, praised state officials' handling of the Baby Ashley case that arose late in 1983 and turned into a controversy over the merits of mechanical life support.
The Washington marchers planned to assemble behind the White House and march to the Capitol and the Supreme Court, then visit members of Congress before an anti-abortion fund-raising dinner on Capitol Hill.
In downtown Boston, foes and backers of abortion rights gathered at separate rallies, held just a mile apart. "Fidelity to human life is fidelity to real flesh-and-blood people," Peter Kreeft, a philosophy professor at Jesuit-run Boston College, told 700 abortion opponents, including Mayor Raymond Flynn, at Faneuil Hall.
Pickets representing both positions marched outside the hall, and about 150 people attended a pro-choice rally at the nearby Church of All Nations.

Eleven sweatshirt-clad feminists ran in place, rode stationary bicycles and walked a treadmill in an "exercise in futility" outside the Los Angeles office of Gov. George Deukmejian, protesting the governor's anti-abortion stance. The women, members of the Women's Equal Rights Legal Defense and Education Fund, wanted to refuel Deukmejian of "the uselessness of his efforts" to restrict funding for poor women's abortions.
In Denver, about 3,000 abortion foes gathered on the west steps of the state Capitol for songs, prayers and speeches, then marched to the offices of stations KNCN-TV and KMGH-TV on Saturday demanding "equal rights for all — born and unborn."
The demonstrators, many of whom brought their children, carried picket signs and balloons with "pro-life" slogans. One man carried a large wooden cross on his shoulders.
Protesters held similar streethouse demonstrations over the weekend in Boise, Idaho; Madison, Wis. and Salt Lake City.

In southern Florida, abortion foes gathered Saturday at Catholic ceremonies in Dade, Broward and Palm Beach counties to dedicate stone memorials to "the millions of unborn children who have been massacred by the terrible evil of abortion," said Rev. Victor Sheehy, secretary general of the Archdiocese of Miami.
Meanwhile, pro-choice advocates staged a silent march in West Palm Beach. "No one is forcing anyone to have an abortion, but we're saying for heaven's sake, give us a choice," said marcher Alice Coane.

The Moroccan government has not acknowledged any "casualties" and declared the troubled region along Morocco's Mediterranean coast off limits to reporters. Several foreign journalists were expelled over the weekend for trying to ignore the ban.
Tangier was another city in the Spanish-influenced region where Spanish news media said there were casualties.
The Spanish news agency EFE, quoting travelers in the Spanish enclave of Melilla on the Moroccan coast, said Saturday that more than 100 deaths were reported in Al Hoceima alone. It is a fishing town halfway between Melilla and Tangier.
Madrid's Diario 16 newspaper, in a report from Tetouan, said soldiers "killed over 400 demonstrators" there and 5,000 troops were keeping order.
Northern Morocco was a Spanish colony until independence in 1956 and there are extensive contacts between local Moroccans and the remaining Spanish enclaves of Melilla, nine miles from Nador, and Ceuta.
Major cities in central and southern Morocco were reported quiet following demonstrations. High school and university students were reported to have clashed earlier with security forces in the capital, Rabat, and in the southern city of Marrakech.
There have been no increases in the prices of subsidized staple foods since last August, though the costs of other foodstuffs have gone up.

Lebanese battle near Marine position

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese army troops and Shiite Muslim militiamen fought a one-hour battle in Beirut's southern suburbs Sunday and initial reports said four people, including one soldier, were wounded.

The fighting was the first major confrontation between the army regulars and Shiite Muslims in the southern suburbs, adjacent to the U.S. Marine base at Beirut International Airport, in almost a month.

There were no reports of hostilities at the Marine encampment. The army and Shiite militias battled for three days at Christmas time for control of positions evacuated by the French troops of the multinational force in Lebanon. Sixty people were reported killed and 136 wounded before a Dec. 26 cease-fire ended the hostilities.

Each side blamed the other for starting the hour-long afternoon battle on Sunday, which tapered off at five p.m.

State-run Beirut Radio reported that formations of U.S. F-14 Tomcat jets from U.S. carriers off Beirut's coast made reconnaissance flights over the capital and the central mountains. It said four Israeli jets also crossed the skies of southern Lebanon, but no bombing runs were reported.

Lebanese army positions on the slopes of the central mountains overlooking the capital came under artillery and rocket fire briefly Sunday, but the front between the army and anti-government Druse militia was relatively quiet after two days of fierce fighting.

Druse leader Walid Jumblatt vowed in an interview published Sunday that his men would continue fighting unless the Cabinet of Prime Minister Amin Gemayel is replaced.

Speaking to the Jordanian al-Rai newspaper, Jumblatt said, "We will not stop fighting this time unless and until the Gemayel government resigns. Its staying in power would mean the complete destruction of Lebanon."

He told reporters later he was referring only to Gemayel's Cabinet and not to the president himself.

"Gemayel seems unable to reach a comprehensive solution that would secure the full rights of all sectors of the Lebanese community," Jumblatt told the newspaper.

Meanwhile, sources said the highest-ranking diplomat of the United Arab Emirates left Lebanon Saturday after receiving a kidnapping threat, possibly from the same group that was believed to have bombed the U.S. Marine base in Beirut in October.

The sources said charge d'affaires Hassan Sali left aboard a commercial flight to his country after spending five days in the protection of Nabih Berri, leader of the Shiite Muslim militia group, Amal.

The sources said a telephoned caller who claimed to represent "Islamic Jihad" told Sali on Tuesday that said he would be the "next victim after (Hussein Abdullah) Farrash," the Saudi consul who was kidnapped last week in Beirut.

Resort citizens grieve for bus-wreck victims

WHITEFISH, Mont. (AP) — Townspeople in this mountainous resort grieved Sunday for nine people who were killed when a school bus returning with the high school wrestling team crashed into a fuel tanker in a snowstorm.

"A little bit of all of us died yesterday," Mayor James Putnam said of the fiery crash Saturday night that also injured 19 people.

"The people of Whitefish are in shock. I'm sure that Jan. 21 will remain in the minds of Whitefish people for many, many years as one of the most tragic things that ever happened to us."

The bus, carrying about 30 wrestlers, coaches, cheerleaders and others from Whitefish High School, was returning from a losing match at Browning, 94 miles to the northwest. It collided with the empty fuel tanker truck on U.S. 2 and burst into flames.

It was the worst traffic accident in Montana history, said AJ Goke, state highway traffic director, adding that the National Transportation Safety Board will investigate.

The injured included the driver of the truck, Harold Belcher, 63, of Our Bank, said Flathead County sheriff's spokesman Corky Derby. Only one person remained hospitalized Sunday, she said.

Belcher said the truck "seemed to slip out from underneath me," and slid across the highway just before it was struck by the bus.

Ms. Derby said the dead included the bus driver. Identities of other victims were not being released until Monday because of problems locating relatives. But among those unaccounted for were wrestling coach Jim Wilthorn and assistant coach Wade Davis, his wife and one of their two young children.

Many ministers in this town of 4,600 residents included prayers for the victims in their Sunday worship services.

"With only about 500 kids in the high school in a close-knit community like ours, this is a far-reaching tragedy," he said. "But we'll bounce back, survive and maybe be better for this."

Gandhi says U.S. helps dictatorships

By GENE KRAMER
The Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi says America cultivates dictatorships around the world while displaying indifference and a double standard toward India.

"They don't seem to be bothered about India," Mrs. Gandhi told The Associated Press during a weekend interview.

"Mrs. Gandhi, who has pursued traditionally close Indian relations with the Soviet Union, also denied that India is dependent on arms from the Soviet Union, its major foreign supplier."

"When we need it and we get it on attractive terms, we take it, but it's not binding us in any way..." she said. India recently has moved to diversify its arms purchases, buying weapons from Britain, France and West Germany.

"I don't want to be sounding as if I am anti-U.S., because I am not at all," said the 66-year-old leader of some 700 million Indians.

"I greatly admire much of what's been done there (U.S.). And I have many American friends," she continued. "But you see, the administration talks of democracy but actually whom does it help? The majority are not democratic. They help dictatorships of one kind or another."

Asked if by dictatorships she meant countries such as Pakistan, the Philippines and South Korea, which receive U.S. aid, Mrs. Gandhi said yes, adding, "And in Africa also you know, Latin America and so on."

She said she and several other government leaders have a frustrated feeling "that we're trying to keep our country democratic, but what do you get for it in terms of better relations with the Western democracies?"

Mrs. Gandhi, who also heads the 100-country movement of non-aligned nations, said her cordial relations with President Reagan and with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain are "entirely on a personal basis. From the point of view of policy, as you know, their views are entirely opposed to ours."

"They say it's because of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan, but the guns are pointing towards us and not to Afghanistan."

She noted that Pakistan used American weapons against India in 1965 during the second of three recent wars on the subcontinent.

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. national security is endangered in part by Americans' ignorance of foreign languages and cultures, according to a report endorsed by the heads of 15 universities.

The report, entitled "What We Don't Know Can Hurt Us," will be distributed to members of the Senate by the American Council on Education when Congress reconvenes next week. The council is an alliance of nearly 1,500 institutions of higher learning.

"We Americans no longer have the luxury of time and distance to justify our lack of concerted attention to the serious and dangerous lag — a shortfall in our international competence," President C. Peter McGrath of the University of Minnesota wrote in the report's foreword. McGrath is chairman of the council's 27-member Commission on International Education.

To support its conclusions, the report cited polls in 1981 that found only one American in four able to locate El Salvador, and fewer than half who knew that the United States belongs to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Aide claims asbestos fact sheet inadequate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government fact sheet intended to guide school administrators in dealing with asbestos insulation is "grossly inadequate" and could embroil school officials in legal problems, says an Environmental Protection Agency official.

Dwight Brown, the EPA's regional asbestos coordinator in Atlanta, said in a memo to Washington headquarters that the proposed EPA fact sheet is "grossly inadequate" to inform school administrators how they should deal with asbestos found in the schools.

The fact sheet tells school administrators that technical information is available from the agency when in fact, Brown said, detailed technical advice has not been provided.

The summary may "mislead further," Brown said, "since the reader is likely to believe EPA guidance is sufficient for this decision process."

"Nothing could be further from the truth," Brown said. "EPA guidance in this area is grossly inadequate in demonstrable ways."

He said failure to advise school officials of specific documents, particularly an attorney general's report on legal liability, "is likely one day to be a matter of criminal investigation" because it could open school officials to lawsuits while barring the officials from taking legal action themselves against asbestos manufacturers.

But the congressional author of the 1980 Asbestos School Hazard Deterioration and Control Act said after reading Brown's memo that it indicates serious deficiencies in the Reagan administration's approach to the problem.

Redistricting fiasco threatens election

BOISE (AP) — With the filing period for this year's election just five weeks from opening, Idaho lawmakers may reach agreement this week on a solution to the legislative redistricting dilemma.

It takes five things to come together a little," said Senate Majority Leader Mark Ricks, R-Boiseburg, co-chairman of the special joint committee that's been working on the plan that will meet mandates of both the state and federal constitutions.

"We hope to have a plan... that we can start going through by no later than the end of the week," Ricks said.

In the House, floor consideration is scheduled on the 1985 revenue estimates, that once adopted by the full Legislature will set the limits on spending in the new budget year.

The House has also scheduled a vote on legislation giving the Department of Fish and Game clear access to all the money it will need to provide emergency winter feeding for the state's big game herds.

The redistricting battle, which is threatening cancellation of the May presidential primary and delay of the state primary until later in the year, is the result of a state Supreme Court decision voiding the 1982 reapportionment plan.

The high court upheld a lower court ruling that said the plan was invalid because it included legislative districts that overlap county lines.

"Although legislation has been proposed to delay the primary election until August and eliminate from the state constitution the prohibition against district's overlapping county lines, legislative leaders have been pushing to come up with another plan acceptable to both political parties in time to meet the current election schedule."

The key date there is Feb. 27, the opening of the period for candidate filing for the May 22 primary.

State, company disagree over waste location

BOISE (AP) — Environsafe Services Inc.'s hazardous waste landfill in Owyhee County is an "excellent" location because of the area's dryness, geologic stability and sparse population, company officials say.

However, members of a state task force meeting in Boise Saturday said the 177-acre waste disposal site near Grand View is an "unfavorable location in case of contamination."

The disagreement flared at a meeting of a 10-member panel of legislators, scientists and others appointed by Gov. John Evans to study the site's safety and health threats.

Environsafe President Edward Ashby of Horsham, Pa., and about 12 company experts and outside consultants spoke and answered questions for six hours. The discussion centered on geology, groundwater and "compaction plans for safe operation of the facility for the next 50 years."

"It certainly is an excellent site," Ashby said. "We think we're operating in good faith out there."

Company test-wells last October discovered water about 150 to 250 feet underground. Previous studies and drilling dating back to 1958 concluded that the nearest water was 3,000 feet underground, below a thick layer of clay.

Still, the area's low rainfall of about eight inches a year makes contamination highly unlikely from downward movement of toxic chemicals, company scientists said.

Also, wastes will be buried in trenches lined top and bottom with impervious plastic and other materials. The site will be inspected and tested twice a year for 30 years after the facility closes in about 15 years.

PUC rejects phone petition

BOISE (AP) — A proposal that small businesses be allowed to own coin telephones "poses too many problems," the Idaho Public Utilities Commission says.

The PUC has rejected a Hayden Lake man's petition claiming small businesses should be able to own coin phones available only for legal calls, and collect the money from them.

Woman's Christmas treasure is couple's trash

DEAR ABBY: Bless your heart for repeating that column on what to give and what not to give older people for Christmas.

neither of us can eat smoked meat, and what is more, we don't care for it. We also got candy and fruitcakes — unwelcome gifts because they make us bloat in the wrong places. I could go on and on.

Abby, we do not need food. I love jewelry, perfume and nice things for the house and my husband loves records, books and camera equipment.

Now for heaven's sake, please stop recommending gifts for older people!

— ELDERLY BUT NOT HUNGRY IN ARKANSAS

DEAR ABBY: I'll make this short and to the point. Last year I had a rather brief affair with my boss. (He's married, I'm not.)

I thought I was pregnant in August, so I told him and he quickly gave me $300 for an abortion. Well, as it turned out, it was a false alarm, so I spent the $300 on clothes and never told him the abortion wasn't necessary.

He still thinks I had the abortion and my conscience is bothering me. I rationalize it in my own mind by telling myself that the scare was worth the $300.

What do you GUILTY CONSCIENCE

DEAR GUILTY: Scare up $300, give it to your boss and tell him the truth.

DEAR ABBY: May I use your column to send a message of thanks to the people back home?

"I'm sure I can speak for everyone here in Lebanon when I say that we are proud to serve our country as multinational peacekeepers."

I want to thank every kind person who sent us Thanksgiving and Christmas cards, as well as care packages and gifts. Their generosity showed the true spirit of love and caring, and made the holidays a little brighter for those of us who were thousands of miles from our families.

Protecting freedom requires losing some, but the taste of giving is sweet!

(Problems? What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90028. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

This year instead of getting perfumes, dusting powder and a lot of useless jewelry and trinkets for the house, I received tins of tuna, chicken, ham, packets of instant soup mixes, herbal tea, assorted cheeses and fancy cookies for guests. What practical gifts!

Please run that column every year, Abby.

— LOVE YOU IN BENTONVILLE

DEAR LOVE: Thanks, but not everybody in Arkansas "loves" me. Witness this letter from Fayetteville:

DEAR ABBY: I wish to high heaven you would stop putting out that list of gift-suggestions in which you recommend food for elderly people.

Ever since you put that out, we have gotten great heaps of food for Christmas, and we simply loathe it! Not only do we not need it, we can't eat half of it.

Last year we got enough cheese to keep all the mice in Christendom happy. I don't like cheese, and my husband can't tolerate dairy products of any kind.

We were given a whole-smoked ham, which we gave away because

Strategy laid to choose county jail architect

ANN COVER
Wants choice before August

By DAVID MOFFAT
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A scheduling problem has set back planning for the new Twin Falls County Jail, but the county commissioners are preparing to choose an architect for the potential $4 million project in the meantime.

The county received word late last month that its representatives would not be able to attend a federal jail-construction conference in Boulder, Colo., early next month.

The National Institute of Corrections, which sponsors the conference, bumped Twin Falls from the list because of over-subscription, the commissioners say.

County representatives now will participate in a similar conference on April 23-28.

Regardless, the commissioners have asked the 11 architectural firms that submitted proposals for the project last summer to send additional material that might be relevant to their credentials.

This material will be reviewed by the county's citizens advisory jail committee this Wednesday. The commissioners plan to make their decision shortly afterward.

One reason for selecting the architect before August, the month for which the choice originally had been scheduled, is so he or she can attend the April conference, says Ann Cover, the commission chairman.

County officials see the conference as an important step in designing the new jail.

A proliferation of regulations and court rulings have made jail construction a tremendously complicated process, says Sheriff James Munn. If done badly, the county could open itself to lawsuits, he says.

At the conference, representatives of the NIC, a branch of the U.S. Justice Department, actually walk local officials through the design process, he says.

The federal government will pay for four county representatives to attend conference, Munn says. But the county may send more, he says.

He expects two county commissioners, himself and jail administrator Jim Hopkins to attend. The courts also may send a representative, and several jail committee members may attend as well, Munn says.

The sheriff says he has completed a statistical profile of inmate populations over the last five years, in preparation for the conference.

Among other things, his figures show a steady increase in the number of county prisoners — from an average of 29 per day in 1978-79 to an average of 41 per day in 1982-83.

Munn says one reason for the increase clearly is the new strictness of the courts, especially in DUI sentencing.

The strictness has compounded the 72-year-old facility's overcrowding problem, he says.

According to guidelines published by the federally funded American Correctional Association, each prisoner must be allocated 90 square feet of space. Using the figure as a yardstick, the present jail is designed to hold 23.4 prisoners.

There are 66 beds in the fourth-floor "dormitory cells" alone.

Design inadequacies lead to another key deficiency, Munn says. Under Idaho law, different classes of prisoners must be segregated from one another.

In particular, juveniles must be separated "by sight and sound" from other inmates. This is impossible in the Twin Falls County Jail, he says.

Female prisoners must be held in the Twin Falls City Jail.

Phex and Dorice Taylor rode with Averell Harriman to resort area and were first ever to register at Sun Valley Inn

Taylors among first at Sun Valley

By DAVE LEWIS
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — Phex and Dorice Taylor have been a part of Sun Valley for a long time.

In fact, their first visit was in 1937, the resort's second year of operation, when they came aboard the maiden run of the Union Pacific Railroad's new streamlined passenger train, "The City of Los Angeles."

They made that trip with railroad President Averell Harriman, who founded the resort in 1936 as a destination for railroad travelers.

On that visit, they were the first two people to register in the Sun Valley Inn, where they now own an apartment.

Following their first visit, the Taylors returned to Sun Valley each of the next two years, before deciding to move to here in 1940. And with only World War II briefly interrupting their stay, they've been here ever since.

Dorice, 82, worked for many years with the resort's publicity office, rubbing elbows with the likes of Ernest Hemingway and Gary Cooper and other notables. Phex, 84, is a lawyer who spent some time serving in the Legislature. He is now the oldest regularly practicing attorney in Idaho.

More recently, they have spent a great deal of their time traveling about world.

The Taylors came here for the same reason most everybody else did then and does now — to ski, a sport Dorice brought into their lives.

"It's my fault that we are connected with skiing, because I had my first pair of skis made at the age of 8 at a wagon-wheel shop," she says.

"They weren't sold commercially at that time. This was in Pennsylvania."

Next, she skied in high school and college, going straight downhill without turning.

"There were no turns then," she says. My class was 1923, and controlled skiing did not come in until after the (1936) Olympics at Lake Placid."

The Taylors were married in 1931, and Phex — short for "the Pheasant," a college nickname — after graduating from Yale Law School, was working as a lawyer with the City Bank of New York. Dorice was teaching in a boarding school.

Dorice took her first controlled skiing lesson on a bark slide in New York City, after which she got her reluctant husband to take up skiing.

Phex had tried skiing at Dartmouth College with a friend from Minnesota. But just once. "I thought it was for the birds."

Still, in 1936, the two went on a ski vacation to Canada. The next year, with the Union Pacific pushing its new streamliner along with a vacation in Sun Valley, they took the trip west.

Not liking New York and leaving Sun Valley, they decided to move here. Phex came out first to meet the residency requirements for taking the Idaho bar exams.

However, World War II interrupted their stay, when Phex joined the Navy, only to leave after a short hitch with a medical discharge — because of steel plates in his leg put in after a skiing accident.

Back in Sun Valley after his discharge, Phex took up his law practice, which centered around divorces of prominent Easterners. Idaho had a new six-week residency requirement for divorce, much more liberal than most states, and Phex's

Defense rests in sewer case

By DAVID MOFFAT
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — One of two major defendants in the lawsuit between the city of Twin Falls and the manufacturers and designers of its ill-fated sewage plant rested its case Friday in federal court in Boise.

That action — by Envirotech Systems Inc., the California-based company that provided the sludge-handling equipment for the plant — opens the way for lawyers from the other chief defendant to begin presenting evidence today.

The case from that second defendant, the Corvallis, Ore.-based Neptune-Microfloc, which provided the major components of the secondary treatment system, will take a week, lawyers for the city predict.

The jury then will hear closing arguments before recessing and attempting to reach a verdict in the case in which the city is attempting to win several million dollars in damages from the companies.

Although the lawyers for Twin Falls are confident they have presented their position better than their opponents, they say they received a setback several weeks ago when federal Judge Ray McNichols, who is presiding over the trial, issued a ruling, limiting the amount of damages recoverable from Envirotech, should the city win.

McNichols ruled the city is entitled to no more than the $1 million the Envirotech equipment cost, which the city claims did not work.

The judge based his decision on a letter from former City Manager Jean Millar to the company in 1978. The letter called for the company to remove its equipment and return the city the full purchase price.

Millar's request was made on the basis of a clause in the city's contract with the company, which said if the equipment did not work within two years, the company would provide a full refund. The judge said the letter represented an "election of remedies."

Lawyers for the city say the letter was ignored by the company. And they say they will appeal the matter should they receive a favorable verdict from the six-member jury.

The city's lawyers had asked for approximately $4 million in direct and "consequential" damages from Envirotech, based on the cost of replacing the company's equipment and running the plant while it was made.

The trial has now lasted two-and-a-half months.

After the city rested its case earlier this month, Envirotech lawyers called a series of witnesses, including former company employees, a former city sewage-plant worker and a well-known professor of sanitary engineering.

Company lawyers were attempting to prove the city failed to staff and • See SEWER on Page A8

Development board proposes summer jobs

By DAVID MOFFAT
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Region IV Development Association board has voted to place a proposed plan for a summer jobs program up for public comment.

The program, which will be run by Job Service of Idaho, will attempt to convince more than 228 Magic Valley youths to stay in school by offering them summer work.

The Region IV Development Association acts as a clearinghouse for federal grants in south-central Idaho.

In this case, the federal money comes as a result of the federal Job Partnership Training Act.

After the proposal has been available for public comment for 30 days, Region IV board members will vote to approve it.

The summer program is designed to give economically disadvantaged youth real work experience. They might not find elsewhere, says Jim Engels, manager of the Twin Falls office of Job Service — a division of the Idaho Department of Employment.

The youth, from 14 to 21 years of age, will work for eight weeks at jobs such as office clerk, forestry aide, • See JOBS on Page A8

Stress: Dangerous troublemaker, but with a positive side

By KATE LOPEZ
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Stress is something we all live with.

But too often, we look only at the negative side of stress. Used positively, stress can enable us to lead more productive and energetic lives, says a College of Southern Idaho teacher.

Marilee Kohz, a CSI counselor and teacher, says prolonged stress can destroy our systems. But Kohz, who currently is teaching a course on stress management, says that positive responses to stress can be learned.

However, in order to understand stress and the effect it can have on us, Kohz says the body's physical reactions to stress first must be understood.

Primitive man reacted to stress in what is known as a "fight or flight syndrome," Kohz says. Primitive man either reacted by fighting whatever was causing the stress or fleeing from it. And today, a part of us still does that, she says.

Several hormones in our bodies are affected by stress. Among these are cortisol, aldosterone and epinephrine.

In a cortisol reaction, the body is attempting to make sure enough energy is present for the fight or flight response.

Physiologically, that is done by pulling sugar from cells to the bloodstream. However, according to Kohz, there is not always

A quick test for evaluating levels of stress

Do you suffer from stress?

Here's a quick test developed by Dr. John Farquhar of the Stanford Heart Disease Prevention Program, to test your stress levels.

For each of the following questions, answer "many times a week," "few times a week," or "rarely." Give yourself two points each time you answer "many times a week," one point each time you answer "few times a week," and no points if you answer "rarely."

The scale for rating the results will be explained after you answer the questions.

enough sugar in the body, so the reaction also pulls fats from the cells.

The result is that platelets are formed in the bloodstream, and these adhere to arterial walls, which can lead to heart disease, she says.

At the same time that fat is being pulled from the cells, protein also is being taken from the cells. The result is a lower energy level and a loss of protein from muscle tissue.

In addition, this reaction lowers the body's amount of antibodies and white blood cells. Kohz believes this leads people to be more susceptible to disease.

1. I feel anger or frustration at work or at home.

2. I feel tension or anxiety.

3. It is difficult to concentrate due to worry.

4. I finish what others are going to say, or I interrupt.

5. My work involves deadlines or pressure.

6. It is difficult for me to relax.

7. People at home or at work make me tense.

8. I take tranquilizers or drugs to sleep or relax.

9. My mind continues to race when trying to relax or sleep.

10. It is hard to find time to relax.

11. I eat, or drink, or smoke in response to tension.

12. I have migraine headaches.

13. Sleep is not refreshing.

14. I perspire during ordinary conversation or perspire excessively.

15. Annoyances build during the day.

The mean score on this test was 7.7. A rating of 18 to 30 was considered high above the average. A rating of 10 to 17 was considered above average. Six to nine points was average, while zero to five points was below average.

Despite the body's negative physical responses to stress, Kohz believes there are definite ways to benefit from stress, and more importantly, there are beneficial methods of dealing with "negative" stress.

A key bit of information, according to Kohz, is knowing that "we have to perceive something as a stressor for it to be a stressor. All people react differently to stress," she says.

"But we do have control over what will stress us."

Most stress responses are learned behavior, and as easily as "bad" responses to stress are learned, they can be unlearned and replaced with beneficial responses, she says.

Getting caught in a traffic jam is a stressful situation that most people have experienced. However, instead of reacting with anger, she says, the time can be used to plan a meeting or study for an upcoming exam.

"Psyching up" for a musical performance is another example of a positive response to stress, she says.

Kohz advocates several methods for dealing with stress.

Clean, deep breathing is the first method that can help us to deal with stress, she says. Deep breathing forces the body to slow down and provides more oxygen to the lungs. At the same time, it lowers the blood pressure, she says.

Another method for reducing stress is the use of imagery.

"It's going back to the statement about stressors being what we perceive them to be," Kohz says. The body reacts to positive things as well as negative to replace that stress with positive images, she says.

Imagine a serene, peaceful, happy setting, she says. The setting should alert all the senses. "Smell the smells, enjoy the colors, feel happy," Kohz says, "then retreat there several times a day to relax."

In addition to these techniques, Kohz says that plenty of rest, proper nutrition and good communication skills can produce beneficial stress responses.

Appeals court upholds embezzlement verdict

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

BOISE — The legality of a search warrant used in a 1981 embezzlement case in Blaine County has been upheld by the state Court of Appeals.

Kenneth Huskey was arrested in March 1981 on five counts of embezzlement. The charges were based on allegations that Huskey fraudulently had misappropriated money or property from the customers of his body shop, located south of Ketchum, according to the appeals court ruling, made earlier this month.

Huskey was found guilty of the charges by a jury in Fifth District Court. Huskey's attorney, Robert Fallowfield of Ketchum, appealed the conviction. Fallowfield challenged the use of evidence that was gathered during what he said was a questionable search.

The search had been conducted by a law-enforcement officer after Huskey had been arrested on the charges.

The officer had obtained a warrant to search the home of a friend of Huskey's, who co-owned a vehicle with the defendant. The warrant was obtained because of information concerning possible evidence at the friend's house.

Before the actual search, the officer met the friend, who voluntarily accompanied him to his house. The friend told the investigator that some items belonging to Huskey were in the vehicle that was parked in the yard, the opinion states. The officer then searched the vehicle.

The defense argued later that the search was unconstitutional because the vehicle had not been included in the original search warrant. Since it was an illegal search, the evidence found in the vehicle could not be used against Huskey, Fallowfield said.

Fallowfield said that the friend was faced with a policeman who said, "I have a warrant." The friend just went along with the policeman on the search, he said. The friend's consent was not voluntary.

In its argument, the defense also pointed to the friend's testimony at a hearing to suppress the evidence. The friend said, "I wouldn't think of resisting a search warrant."

The state argued, however, that the friend, who also owned the vehicle, had given his consent to the search. And the appeals court has agreed.

In addition, the officer did not claim that the search was a pretext, where his attention had been re-directed after obtaining information from the friend, the decision states.

operate the plant effectively. They also argued that excessive amounts of potato-processing waste were discharged into the system by Idaho Frozen Foods, causing the system to overload.

Envirotech employees called to the stand included the company's construction engineer for the project, the advisor in charge of training city operators and several special report bishoppers, who visited the plant in 1977 and 1978 in attempts to get the Envirotech equipment to work according to specifications.

In addition, the company's lawyers called Donald McNeill, a former city worker at the plant, who claimed the city's supervision was poor.

And the lawyers called Prof. W. Wesley Eckenfelder of Vanderbilt University. Eckenfelder, a sewage-treatment expert, argued that Envirotech's system of heat-treating and dewatering sludge could never have worked — given the inadequate treatment provided by the plant's "wet-end" equipment, which was provided by Neptune-Microfilm.

Planning for a new jail has been slow deliberately. Munn says, because the county does not want to make costly mistakes. Under the most optimistic scenario, completion of the new jail will not occur before early 1986, he says.

Nonetheless, Munn is satisfied with the public's acceptance of the cost of the new jail, even though most people will never see the inside of the old one.

Public acceptance ultimately is the key to the entire project because taxpayers will have to foot the bill one way or another.

The $4 million figure is just a guess at the final price tag at this point, Munn says.

Even though the county bought land in 1979 for a new facility northeast of the Courthouse for $900,000, falls currently cost between $100 and $175 a square foot to build, he says.

For comparison purposes, hospitals cost between $70 and $75 per square foot to build, Munn says.

attorneys friend sent their clients out to undo their unwanted marriages. Among his clients were Pat Kennedy Lawford, Ralph Bellamy, Mrs. Henry Ford and Happy Rockefeller.

Dorice, having written an off-Broadway play, had other ideas. "I was going to write the great American novel here."

She didn't, but she became involved in the publicity office for the resort, fed copy to United Press and Associated Press, and worked at the Sun Valley and Ketchum correspondent for the old Holiday Times.

Eventually, she became the director of the publicity office, where she became friends and acquaintances with many movie stars and other famous folk.

During that time, she made contacts with many ski writers. Those contacts paid off in December 1983, when she was inducted into the National Ski Hall of Fame by the U.S. Ski Educational Foundation. She will travel to Ishpeming, Mich., for induction in May.

She did, however, write a book on the history and glamour of Sun Valley called "Sun Valley." She also plans to write another book on the travel adventures the couple has had in the last 30 years. She plans to call this book "Around the World in 80 Years."

The Taylors do not have any children. And when the reached 50, they took up a life of traveling; they have circled the globe three times.

They've visited many of the world's wonders, including the Taj Mahal and the Great Wall of China. Their travels also have taken them to Russia, across Europe, Africa, South America, and Antarctica twice.

The Taylors were planning to visit Russia during this past Christmas, but the downing of Korean Airline's Flight 007 resulted in the canceling of their chartered trip.

But undaunted, they have tentative plans to visit South America in February.

Still, the Taylors spend most of their time in Sun Valley, and although they have given up downhill skiing, they still enjoy cross-country skiing.

The board voted to recommend that only 4.1 percent of the additional money be used for administration.

What's up at CSI

Engine, electrical classes begin

TWIN FALLS — An evening class on small engine repair and a preparation course for taking the electrical-code examination will begin this Tuesday at the College of Southern Idaho.

The engine class will cover parts, assembly and tune-up of two- and four-stroke engines. It will meet Tuesdays from 7 to 10 p.m. in Room 104 of Vo-Tech Building D.

The electrical-code course is designed for persons planning to take the electrical licensing exam. It will meet from 7 to 10 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday in Room 111 at Vo-Tech Center.

Other fees for both courses are $74. To register, call 733-9554, extension 290.

Area's history to be examined

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho will offer a glimpse of this area's history in a continuing-education course that begins Tuesday.

The class, which will meet at 7 p.m. in Room 109 of the Shields Building, will trace the settlement of the area — from pre-historic dwellers, through the adventures over the Oregon Trail to the founding farmers who brought irrigation and agriculture to the Magic Valley.

Among the topics will be stories about well-known places, such as Shoshone Falls and Devils Corral.

August 19, 1984 tickets of Jerome, the class will meet for four Tuesday sessions. To register, call 733-9554, extension 243.

Richfield hosts computer class

RICHFIELD — The College of Southern Idaho will offer an introductory course to micro-computers at Richfield High School, starting this week.

The course will be a general introduction to computers, including operations and various types of software applications.

The class, which will begin this Wednesday, is scheduled to meet in two sections, one from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m. and the other from 7 to 10 p.m. It will run each Wednesday through Friday.

The cost will be $32.50, plus $5 for materials. Enrollment is limited to 20 students. For more information, call A.J. Jones at Richfield High School at 487-2900, or Dave Makings at CSI at 733-9554, extension 312.

Learn how to use less energy

TWIN FALLS — The Center for New Directions at the College of Southern Idaho will hold a free energy workshop from 1 to 4 p.m. this Thursday, Jan. 26, in Room 108 of the Vo-Tech Building.

George Clawson, a CSI energy consultant, and Roxie Simcoe of the Idaho Power Co. will be the speakers. The topic will be "How to Conserve Energy with $100 or Less."

Rout (n.), see Super Bowl XVIII

By KEVIN LAMB
Chicago Sun-Times

TAMPA, Fla. — Even Tom Flores chuckled in disbelief at the play. The Los Angeles Raiders' coach would have been content with an 11-point halftime lead at the Super Bowl Sunday. His team had the Washington Redskins on their own 12-yard line, 12 seconds before intermission.

The last thing Flores could have expected was for the Redskins to seize that moment to open up their offense and jump.

They landed out of the game, which Los Angeles won 38-9, leaving a splinter on the Redskins' 14-2 regular season and their dream of consecutive Super Bowl victories. After a week when Raiders players had talked about knocking the Redskins' heads off, Washington wound up handing over its head on its own sword. Future dictionaries may define "rout" as what happened in the XVIIIth Super Bowl.

The game fell apart like a rotting chair when the Redskins chose not to settle for a 14-3 halftime deficit. Instead of falling on the ball to end the half, quarterback Joe Theismann threw a screen pass toward halfback Joe Washington near the left sideline. Jack Squirek, a Raider linebacker, caught the ball on the run and carried his interception five yards for the touchdown that gave Los Angeles a 21-3 halftime lead and a hammerlock on its second NFL championship in four years.

The Raiders built that lead with a three-prong scoring attack from offense, defense and special teams.

Derrick Jensen rode with Squirek on a meteor to fame by blocking a punt and covering the ball in the end zone for a 7-0 lead with just 4:52 elapsed. Cliff Branch set up his 13-yard touchdown catch with a 50-yard catch. And in the second half, Marcus Allen put the game away with touchdown runs of 5 and 74 yards and a 39-yard run to set up Chris Bauer's late field goal.

Allen, voted the game's MVP, set a Super Bowl record with 191 rushing yards. The Raiders' 38 points and 29-point winning margin also were records. All this against a team that had won 31 of its last 34 games, had led the league in rushing defense without allowing any player 100 yards in its last 17 games.

"Not only are you the greatest Raider team of all time," owner Al Davis told his players in accepting the Lombardi Trophy, "but I think you rank with the greatest teams of all time that have ever played any professional sport."

As losing Coach Joe Gibbs said, "They beat us in almost every way." Gibbs was even outcoached on the turning-point play. Squirek hadn't been on the field when the Redskins lined up with three wide receivers to the right and a tight end to the left. Defensive coordinator Charlie Sumner recognized it as the same formation from which the Raiders had thrown a 67-yard screen pass to Washington against the Raiders in October, igniting a comeback victory with 17 points in the final 7 1/2 minutes.

So he hustled Squirek into the game, told him to cover Washington one-on-one and watched his brainstorm paralyze the Redskins.

The Raiders' early lead helped make a footnote of John Riggins, the Redskins' one-man infantry. Washington had outscored its previous 18 opponents 325-135 in first halves and was more accustomed to shoveling dirt into second-half graves than climbing out of them. Riggins, who had run for at least 119 yards in six straight playoff games, did not even play in the fourth quarter and finished with 84 yards on 36 carries.

He may not have done much better in a close game, the way nose tackle Reggie Kinlaw plugged the inside running lanes and right linebacker Rod Martin patrolled the carrier. On consecutive possessions in the first half, Martin tackled Riggins for a 3-yard loss when Riggins ran behind two tight ends, and he stopped Riggins for a single yard when the advance convey was two yards. But Martin's biggest play all day, near the end of the third quarter, was stopping Riggins in the backfield on fourth-and-a-foot at the Raider 27.

"I was surprised they used Rick Walker to block me instead of Don Warren," Martin said. "I played against Walker in college, and I knew he was a better receiver than blocker."

At the time, the Redskins were still in the picture, even if only a few fingertips were showing. The score was 28-9. Each team's first drive in the second half went 70 yards for a touchdown, but the Raiders picked up a point because Don Hasselbeck blocked the Redskins' extra point kick.

Raiders were workmanlike in big victory

By RON RAPAPORT
Chicago Sun-Times

TAMPA, Fla. — Put me in a foxhole during an enemy barrage, and I will not put out a call for artillery cover. All I want is a Los Angeles Raider out there with me.

Send me out in a rainstorm 50 miles from the nearest lightning rod, and I will not be afraid for a moment. Not if a Raider is by my side.

I'd like to shrink one of those guys who beat up on the Washington Redskins in the Super Bowl Sunday down to a size where I could mount them on my dashboard. Or maybe I could dangle him from my keychain or put him near my front door, where I could pat him on the head on my way out.

One thing is sure: If you could bottle the good fortune the Raiders were enjoying all over the Redskins during their 38-9 victory, you'd soon have enough money to retire to a yacht in the Grecian Isles. Either that or put on a Super Bowl halftime show. I'm not sure which costs more.

The Raiders earned this Super Bowl win, make no mistake. They hounded Joe Theismann into running for his life at the same speed he usually talks about it.

They turned John Riggins, the terror of defenses everywhere, into just another plodding fullback grinding out yardage by the twos and threes instead of the tens and fifties.

They made their offense work — if not always consistently, then at least efficiently much of the time.

But the big reason they won had little to do with any of that. The big reason they won is that nothing they did went counted, while everything Washington did wrong hurt like hell.

The Raiders did not play a perfect game Sunday. They fumbled the ball three times and lost it twice. They committed seven penalties. Seven of their drives ended in punts.

But what does it matter if at times you are merely mortal as long as an unseen hand is guiding your destiny and covering for your mistakes?

Several days before the game,

More Super — B3

Raider cornerback Lester Hayes, a big fan of the "Star Wars" movies, said a "treasure in the Force" had indicated to him that the Los Angeles score would be in the 40s.

His prophecy failed by two points, but the Force was with the Raiders every other way Sunday.

Did Raider cornerback Ted Watts fumble a punt in the first quarter, giving Washington one yard only 43 yards from the Los Angeles goal line?

No matter. Mark Moseley's ensuing 44-yard field goal try was wide to the left.

Did Marcus Allen fumble near mid-field on the next series and have it lie there exposed and untouched for several agonizing seconds?

Never mind. Guard Charley Hannah finally fell on it.

Did Todd Christensen, the Raiders' poetry-writing tight end who doubles as the center on punts, launch a sonnet into never-never land instead of the spiral to the belly that Ray Guy was expecting?

Pay no attention, Guy just jumped as high as he could, reached as high as he could, caught the ball, hauled it down and punted it 42 yards into the end zone.

"It was a long way up there," Guy said of his catch. "I think I'll patent it."

Things like this went on all day.

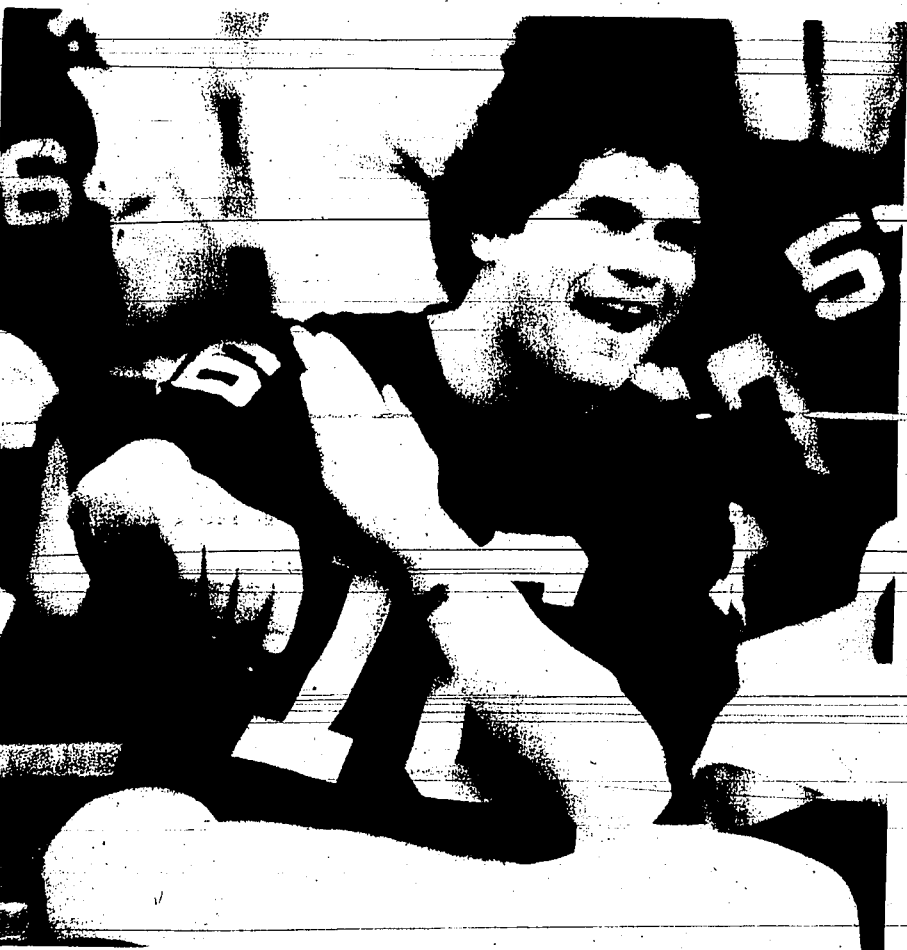

In the second quarter, Hayes appeared to bump Washington receiver Charlie Brown on a long pass play down field. No penalty was called, and the Redskins had to punt.

Later in the period, Raider quarterback Jim Plunkett fumbled after being hit, but was ruled down because he lost the ball.

In the third period, Raider receiver Cliff Branch fumbled after catching a pass, and Anthony Washington recovered at the Raider 36.

But this turned out not to hurt when

TAMPA, Fla. — When Washington faced fourth-and-1 in the fourth quarter of last year's Super Bowl, John Riggins turned it into a 43-yard touchdown run that sent the underdog Redskins to a 27-17 victory over the Miami Dolphins.

On Sunday, in a similarly crucial fourth-and-one against the Los Angeles Raiders in Super Bowl XVIII, favored Washington and Riggins failed.

On the next play, Marcus Allen of the Raiders raced for a record 74-yard touchdown that gave Los Angeles a comfortable 28-9 lead and the Raiders went on to a 38-9 victory, the most lopsided in Super Bowl history.

"Everything turned sour right from the beginning," said Washington coach Vince Smiley, who missed a field goal and had an onside play blocked, continuing his slump that began in the National Football Conference championship game against the San Francisco 49ers when he missed four field goal attempts.

"It started when they blocked Jeff's punt and we just seemed to go downhill from there."

Moseley was referring to a Jeff Hayes punt that "was blocked" by Derrick Jensen and recovered in the end zone for a Los Angeles touchdown early in the first quarter.

The Redskins saw their streak of 24 straight games of scoring at least 21 points ended by an aggressive Raider defense.

"We played hard, but the Raiders were all over us," said Redskins wide receiver Art Monk, who was held to just one catch. "We just seemed to be a little out of sync."

The Redskins, who had reached the Super Bowl while compiling a 16-2 record and had led the National Football League in the "plus-minus" turnover ratio, fell victim to their own mistakes Sunday.

"Let's give all the credit to the Raiders. They played a great, great game," said Redskins guard Russ Grimm. "You have to be a smooth, cool machine offensively and we just didn't have it today. We didn't have it because the Raiders didn't let us have it."

The Redskins, trailing 21-3 at halftime, opened the second half with an impressive touchdown drive to pull within 21-9.

"If we could have held them on that next drive, we could have made a drive of it," said safety Mark Murphy. "But they came back, thanks to that bum call and we never recovered."

Murphy referred to a pass interference call against cornerback Darrell Green that netted the Raiders 38 yards. Los Angeles then moved in for a touchdown that increased the margin to 28-9.

"I can't agree with the call, but I'm not going to argue, that's the way those things go," Green said. "Sometimes you get the calls, sometimes you don't."

With less than two minutes remaining in the third quarter and the Redskins trailing 28-9, they faced the fourth-and-one at the Raider 26.

Riggins, last year's Super Bowl Most Valuable Player, ran wide left and was stopped short.

"I felt there was some daylight to the outside, but when I got there, I just couldn't see it," Riggins said. "I didn't have 20-20 vision today. I made some bad reads and I was guessing on their defense. Unfortunately, I was guessing wrong almost all day."

Time to begin the Post-Game Phone Call Reduction Talks

At a lonely outpost somewhere in Siberia on Monday afternoon (Sunday night in the United States), a Soviet lieutenant charged with monitoring American telecommunications sat bolt upright at his console and picked up the phone.

"Comrade Colonel," he said excitedly. "I think you'd better come down here at once."

The colonel dashed down the staircase and entered the control room just in time to see the President of the United States on the television, sharing a split screen with somebody named Tom Flores.

"What's the problem?" asked the colonel. "Have the Americans invaded the Lesser Antilles?"

Steve Crump

"Worse," gasped the lieutenant, rewinding the videotape. "Listen to this."

"That was a wonderful win tonight," intoned the familiar voice. "You've given me some problems. I've already gotten a call from Moscow. They think Marcus Allen is a new secret weapon. They insist we to dismantle it."

The colonel picked up his code book and leafed through it furiously.

"... they've given me an idea about that team ... of yours," Reagan added. "If you would turn them over to us, we'd put them in silos and we wouldn't have to build the MX missile. You proved tonight that a good defense can also be a pretty good offense."

The colonel tossed the code book aside and leaned close to the TV screen.

"... well, ah, thank you Mr. President, this somebody named Flores was saying, we, ah, played a good game tonight. Our, ah, players, ah, were just tremendous in every phase. We, ah, totally dominated. I think, ah, we proved to the whole world that the silver and black is, ah, the best team."

The colonel stepped back, and stroking his chin he watched somebody named Davis shake hands with somebody named Rozelle as if both men were expecting to contract anthrax from the encounter.

"Lieutenant," asked the colonel. "Have you ever heard of an American missile called the Marcus Allen?"

"No, sir," responded the lieutenant. "But it must be an air-launched ballistic missile. All of those men are wearing flight helmets." "Those are football helmets, stupid," snapped a KGB major, joining them. "And this is the Super Bowl, a barbaric capitalist rite in which hogs and snurfs are sacrificed before and after something called the halftime extravaganza."

"You apparatchiks have no perception," scoffed the colonel. "We have obviously tapped into a high-level strategy session using a new code. Why else would the president say something so naive?"

Bowie leads No. 3 Wildcats past Houston

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Sam Bowie of third-ranked Kentucky rose to the occasion Sunday, grabbing 18 rebounds in the Wildcats' 74-67 college basketball victory over No. 4 Houston.

Bowie, a 7-foot-1 senior, had help from 6-11 Melvin Turpin, who had 11 rebounds, and 6-8 Kenny Walker, who grabbed 10, as the Wildcats posted their record to 14-2 and dropped the Cougars' mark to 16-3.

"They had Akem. We had Walker, Bowie and Turpin," said Bowie, "so it was 3-1 in our favor. It worked out."

Kentucky outbounded Houston 51-45. Akem Olajuwon, Houston's 7-foot senior, was in foul trouble much of the game and fouled out with 6:14 left after scoring 14 points, grabbing 12 rebounds and blocking five shots.

"We knew Olajuwon would block some shots, but we feel like they've never seen a team go after the ball like we did," said Bowie.

Olajuwon, who had three personal fouls in the first half, was upset about the officiating.

"I just raised my hands and they called the fifth foul," he said. "They called everything. They decided the game. I'd like to play them on a neutral court."

"Foul trouble bothered us. Foul trouble bothered Kentucky, too. We just don't have as many big horses to put in there at they do."

Walker paced Kentucky with 20 points, while Turpin added 19 as the Wildcats snapped Houston's six-game winning streak.

Houston's chances seemed doomed when Olajuwon left the game with Kentucky leading 61-54.

But Alvin Franklin, Houston's sophomore guard who finished with a game-high 25 points, kept the Cougars in the game.

Houston pulled within 70-67 with 1:59 remaining when Franklin scored his 10th straight point.

The nationally televised (CBS) game then became a foul shooting contest as the Cougars fouled in order to break up the Wildcats' stalling tactics.

Freshman Winston Bennett made three of four free throws in the final 31 seconds to add to Kentucky's margin. He finished with 11 points.

Michael Young scored 19 for Houston.

Houston led at the start 7-0 and 11-1 before Kentucky got rolling as Bowie collected 10 rebounds in the first half.

After three ties, Kentucky led at halftime 35-31.

"To come back like we did took a lot of guts," said Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall. "I thought we played with tremendous aggressiveness. We came through the way a good team should."

Walker's alley oop stuff shot with 8 minutes left had given the Wildcats their largest lead 61-51.

Kentucky, which suffered two losses after winning its first 12 games, now has won two straight.

Kentucky outshot Houston from the floor, 49 percent to 34, helping overcome 24 turnovers to the Cougars' 13.

Louisville 86

UCLA 78

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Charles Jones pumped in a career-high 27 points and grabbed 15 rebounds to key first- and second-half outbursts that carried Louisville to an 86-77 victory over No. 9 UCLA in a nationally televised college basketball game Sunday.

The game was a designated Metro Conference contest for Louisville and the victory upped the Cardinals' record to 11-4 overall and 4-0 in the conference. UCLA fell to 11-3.

Louisville blew the game open in the first half, outscoring UCLA to take a 14-4 lead with 16:58 left in the half. Jones had six points during the run.

Louisville then outscored UCLA 20-9 to go up 34-13 with 9:55 left in the half.

Louisville led by as much as 23 points in the first half, as the Cardinals shot a blistering 67.7 percent from the field, while holding UCLA to 42.4.

UCLA then began its first comeback, outscoring Louisville 14-5 to pull within 49-35 at halftime.

UCLA trimmed the lead to nine several times in the second half, the first time at 57-48 with 14:12 remaining.

But a free throw by Jones ignited a 10-2 spree that put Louisville back on top 67-50 with 3:37 left.

UCLA closed the gap again in the closing minutes but consistent free throw shooting by Louisville preserved the victory.

Mike Wagner added 18 and Billy Thompson 17 for Louisville. Manuel Forrest contributed 11.

Kenny Fields led UCLA with 25. Ralph Jackson added 19 and Stuart Gray had 10.

Zayak a surprising third

Summers breezes to U.S. skating title

By TERRY TAYLOR
The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — World champion Rosslyn Sumners and her partner, Tiffany Chin, instead of Elaine Zayak to win her third straight women's title at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships Saturday.

Later, Judy Blumberg and Michael Seibert were awarded two perfect 6.0 marks for style and easily claimed their fourth straight dance title.

Finishing second and joining them on the U.S. Olympic squad were Carol Jean Fox and Richard Dalley, who were second, and Eliza Spitz and Scott Gregory, who took third.

Blumberg-Seibert, world bronze medalists, skated an innovative program to "Scherezaade," which included complicated steps and a eye-popping ending.

Chin, who had the best scores on the final program, was boobied on one triple jump, finished second overall and Sumners archrival, Zayak, was third.

Chin, 16, of Toluca Lake, Calif., and Zayak, 18, of Paramus, N.Y., both were chosen to join Sumners, 19, of Edmonds, Wash., on the U.S. Olympic squad.

All the women skated a flawed final program.

Chin, who also won Friday's short program, skated ahead of Sumners and was excellent except for an inadvertent hand touchdown on a triple Salchow.

Sumners skated next and although she received three scores of 5.9 of a possible 6.0 for style, she took a spill on a double axel.

It was then left to Zayak, who started out strong with a combination triple-double jump and looked to be headed for the title.

But she fell on two triples, which cost her marks for technical merit.

Sumners finished second, the freestyle, and Zayak third.

The last U.S. woman to win an Olympic gold medal for figure skating was Dorothy Hamill in 1976. Linda Fratianne won a silver medal in 1980 at Lake Placid, N.Y.

"I'm going back home and really work on my figures," said Chin, who finished fourth in compulsory figures on Thursday.

"My coach, John Nicks, was really upset the way I did them and so was I."

"I'm very pleased with my second place," she said. "I'm competing with two world champions here and it is quite an honor."

Chin landed a difficult jump that neither Sumners nor jump-specialist Zayak attempted — a triple flip.

In fact, Scott Hamilton, the men's champion, had been having problems with it the past year in competition — although he landed it beautifully Friday night when he won his fourth straight title.

Sumners said she wasn't nervous but was "relieved it was over."

"I definitely think this competition was harder than the Olympics," the world champion said.

"I think we're going to train a little bit harder. Now we know exactly what to work hard on and everything will come together a lot better for the Olympics," Sumners said.

On Friday night, three-time world champion Scott Hamilton skated off with his fourth straight U.S. title and picked up four perfect marks for style on the way.

He's this country's surest shot for a gold medal at the Games.

Joining him on the U.S. team are Brian Bolkano, 19, of Sunnyvale, Calif., and Mark Cockrell, 21, of Burbank, Calif.

Kitty and Peter Carruthers will lead the U.S. pairs contingent.

The four-time champions are joined by Billy Fauser and Lea Ann Miller and Jill West.

Agreement reportedly made on Cowboy sale

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Dallas real estate developer Vance C. Miller says he has reached an agreement in principle to purchase the Dallas Cowboys, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

Miller and W.O. Bankston, a Dallas car dealer, have been negotiating privately to buy the National Football League club, which was put on the block last year by Clint Murchison.

However, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle said there had been no agreement, and to his knowledge, the Cowboys had yet to narrow the field to a single group.

Miller, who arrived here Saturday for the Super Bowl, said he felt his group has "the blessings of the Cowboys."

"As far as the price goes, yes, we have reached an agreement," Miller said. "Right now I would say I'm feeling pretty positive about the deal. We need to get the lawyers from both sides together, and we need to get approval of the NFL owners. We have some technical things to work out."

Cowboys President Tex Schramm, who has been interviewing potential owners, refused comment Saturday night, the Times Herald reported. However, Schramm arranged tickets for Bankston and Miller and planned to sit with them during Sunday's game, according to the newspaper.

A Dallas businessman, who asked not to be identified, and who was asked to join Miller's group, said Schramm is asking $60 million for the club.

"Yes, major, and why else would somebody name Flores look as if he's being embarrassed in front of 90 million people?" added the lieutenant.

"Lieutenant, do you have that tape from last October?" demanded the KGB major. "Put it on the videotape machine."

The lieutenant pushed a few buttons and on the screen flickered the image of a middle-aged man wearing a white shirt with the English word "Orlons" inscribed in script across the front. His hair was wet and he was straining to hear something over a headset.

"As the audio level came up, the three officers heard Reagan's voice again."

"Joe, you've certainly proved what we thought today," the president said. "I'm just sorry I couldn't be there. You know I wish there were other night and I certainly enjoy myself. What a pitching performance by..."

"What on earth is the man talking about?" asked the colonel.

"Wait," said the KGB major. "It gets more interesting."

"Well, ah, Mr. President, ah, I couldn't hear as well as you, but it certainly was, ah, nice of you to call," said the middle-aged man with gruff on his shirt, who the tape now identified as somebody named Albobelli. "I'm, ah, sorry, ah, you, ah, couldn't hear."

The KGB major abruptly switched off the machine.

"I'm inclined to agree with you, colonel," he said. "It doesn't make sense for a man as crafty as Reagan, whom the Americans call the Great Communicator, to go on national television after a big sporting event and make a fool of himself. What purpose would it serve? It has to be..."

"Sir, the announcer — they call him the Musberger — just said that the raiders had thoroughly intimidated the Redskins," the lieutenant interrupted. "Our records indicate that Reagan used to try to do to Indians himself during his years in the cinema."

"It amounts to the same," replied the KGB major. "No matter who the target is, Colonel, I suggest you contact Moscow."

The colonel picked up the red phone. It rang just once, and the voice on the other end said "Operations Central, Colonel General Scrofolofski here."

"Comrade Colonel General Scrofolofski," began the colonel.

"Novosibirsk Operations Center here. We've just monitored a television broadcast from the United States in which President Reagan has declared his intention to replace the MX missile."

"Well sir," said the general.

"Well sir, it came the end of a broadcast on something called the Super Bowl in which swine and small big cartoon characters are destroyed before and after a fireworks display. After its conclusion, Reagan telephoned some named Flores, who looked embarrassed while the president told him that he was going to have trouble with Moscow because we would object to his replacing the MX with a 2.1-meter, 85-kilo soccer player from California named Marcus Allen who was designed by the team of Silver and Black, who would soon dominate the world."

"Excuse me, you said?"

"Your vodka ration is eliminated. Both me like this again and I'll exile you to our embassy in Washington as cultural attaché."

"The colonel replaced the receiver."

"Lieutenant, the next time the President of the United States comes on the television, do me a favor. Call the CIA station chief in Moscow."

THE ACES

BOBBY WOLFF

"It is commonly seen by experience that excellent memories do often accompany weak judgments." — Montaigne.

Take a good look at today's trump suit. If you're sure you know how best to play it for no losers, you probably remember how you misplayed it sometime long ago.

South wins the heart lead and quickly sees that his diamond loser is unavoidable. Barring any complications, the hand should be a claimer for 12 tricks. Should South claim now or should he first lead a trump to dummy's king?

This trump combination is not to be confused with the same holding including the 10. When the 10 and nine are both held, a high honor is first played from dummy so that a finesse may be taken in either direction in case of the 4-0 break.

In today's layout, the Jack and 10 are both missing. East has all four trumps. There is nothing that can be done. However, if West has them, South must first play his trump ace to discover the bad break. When East discards, repeated finesse through West pick up the trump suit and the defense
