Workers: Hatchery trout go hungry

By HAL BERNTON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Past and present employees of Ken Ellis's bankrupt Valley Trout Farms Inc. have told The Times-News that up to 300,000 fish in a hatchery leased by the company have not been fed since late November.

According to trout-farm employees, the Royal Trout Farm, which is both owned and leased by Ellis's companies, and which is located a few miles west of Twin Falls in the Snake River Canyon, has received only one three-day supply of feed since late October for the estimated 160,000 to 200,000 fish that are kept in ponds and concrete raceways.

Many fish that should now weigh about 12 ounces and should be ready for market, weigh less than an ounce, according to their sources.

Valley Trout employees say the fish eventually might be salvaged for market, if feed is provided. But such an action might not be cost-effective, they say, because the cost of the feed might be more than the trout would be worth.

Few of the employees and former employees are willing to be identified publicly. They say they fear possible legal action and are hoping to collect

Experts say fish can go without food ... for a while

By DAVE LEWIS

TWIN FALLS — Government and commercial fish farms generally feed several times a day, persons involved in the industry say. But some persons think food can be withheld from trout for days and even weeks without affecting their health.

Most commercial trout farms in the Magic Valley follow a daily feeding pattern, although each may adjust its feeding frequency to fit its needs and management philosophy, says Mike Greene, the manager of Blue Lakes Fish Trout Farm Inc.

"Each trout farm generally has its own system," says Greene, whose family has operated the hatchery and processing plant since the 1940s.

Most trout farmers start with the recommendation of the feed manufacturer, then adjust it to get a desired growth rate and to meet customers' orders for a particular size trout on a given date, Greene says.

Rates and amounts of feed also vary with the size and number of the fish in a given raceway, Greene says. Trout that are being generally are fed more often and in smaller portions.

Greene said he feeds his fish every day, and he says he has never withheld food from them for a prolonged period.

Harold Ramsey, the head biologist for the state fish hatchery in Hagerman, says the state follows a similar feeding pattern, but changes it to fit the needs of its fish, which are destined for release, rather than for a processing plant.

All state hatcheries feed fish the same way, Ramsey says. "Our normal pattern is to feed fish daily, statewide."

Trout food is not cheap. It is probably the biggest expense in trout farming, with prices varying from about 20-cent a pound to about 40 cents a pound, depending upon the ingredients.

Its content varies, too. Lower-grade food may contain ground salmon meal and medium-grade wheat. Higher-grade feed contains more protein content.

back pay. Many say they have not been paid in recent months.

Contacted Thursday, Ellis at first declined comment on the reports. But in a second telephone call, he said, "This is one of the most inaccurate, libelous and lie-filled stories that I have ever, ever heard in my life."

Ever. But it is typical of The Times-News and its reporting.

Some employees who contacted The Times-News this week said they were motivated to call by articles detailing the arrest of 22-year-old Ross Parker, who released some golden trout from one of Ellis's other trout farms last week because he thought they were starving.

The workers say the current conditions at Royal Trout Farm are the result of frequent neglect during the past 18 months, which began in the latter part of 1982, as the financially troubled Valley Trout Farms Co. was unable to provide a steady supply of adequate feed.

At least until October of last year, trout raised at three other fish farms owned by Ellis also were neglected periodically, several former employees say.

According to them, the fish often went without feed for weeks at a time, and the quality of the feed, when available, was inferior. The food was severely lacking in adequate protein to obtain normal weight gain and also lacking in digestible materials, they said.

"It passed through the fish and ended up on the bottom of the raceways," said one former Valley Trout farm employee.

Jerry Johnson, a former worker at one Twin Falls-area fish farm leased by Valley Trout Farms, says that newly-hatched fry trout were supposed to have been fed six to eight times a day.

However, during the spring of last year, these fish were sometimes fed only 18 days out of a one-month period, he says.

"I carried the mortality losses off in five-gallon buckets, and it takes 25 or 30 of these fish to weigh a pound," Johnson says.

He says the mortality rates were much greater than when adequate feed was supplied.

Magic Springs farm, south of Hagerman, was one of the Valley Trout Co. farms that past employees say lacked both adequate amounts and adequate quality of feed throughout much of 1983.

During a six-month period ending in October 1983, one former Valley Trout employee says that fish often went for weeks at a time without feed. This weakened the fish and caused some disease to set in, he says.

Another former employee of the Magic Springs hatchery says that last year he had to grade through "almost every single pond and then go through by hand and measure just to fill a small order of fish."

Although not a fish-farm employee, Robert Tupper, a Gooding County commissioner, lives adjacent to the Town tied to school

School merger viewed harsh

TWIN FALLS — There is little doubt that consolidation would change the flavor and character of the towns involved — especially those that would lose their high-school buildings.

In many small, rural towns in America, the high school serves as the central community institution besides being a school building. Often it is the center of sports, artistic and civic events, and public meetings. To lose it is to take something away from the town's identity.

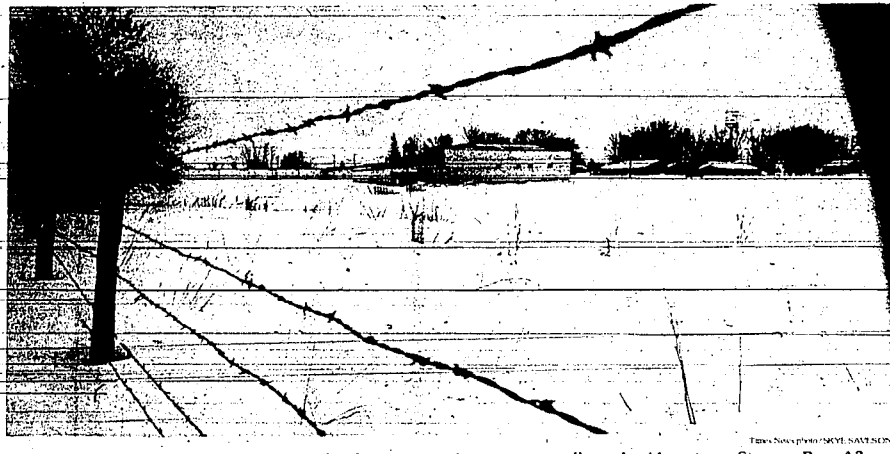

The problem of where to locate a high school in a consolidation plan has surfaced before in the Magic Valley. Before the Rupert, Paul, Acequia and Heyburn high schools consolidated in 1955, three elections were needed to pass a bond levy to build the new school.

The problem was not the higher taxes, but where to locate the building, says Gene Snapp, the superintendent of Minidoka County schools. When the site for the school was set in an empty field, approximately the same distance from the major communities in the county, the bond passed, Snapp says.

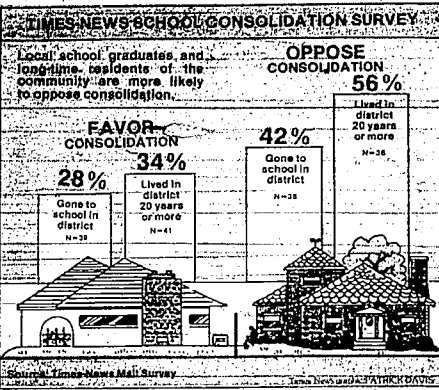

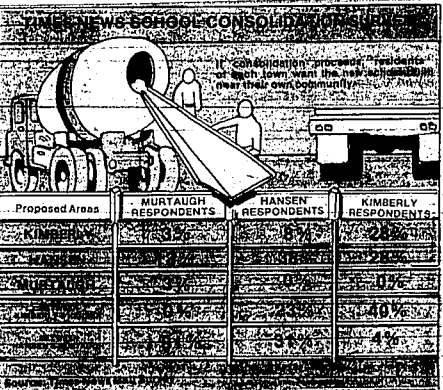

The same problem of where to locate a consolidated high school is one of the barely hidden issues in the proposed consolidation of the Kimberly, Murtaugh and Hansen districts, each of which has its own high school.

There are strong opinions on the Murder coverup charged

Involves Reagan

By ROBERT PARRY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador charged Thursday that the Reagan administration has covered up evidence that Salvadoran rightist leader Roberto D'Aubuisson ordered the assassination of that country's Roman Catholic archbishop.

Robert E. White, who President Reagan removed as ambassador in January of 1981, said D'Aubuisson presided over a lottery to select which Salvadoran military officer would assassinate Archbishop Oscar Romero, who was gunned down while saying Mass on March 24, 1980.

White said the administration had evidence of D'Aubuisson's alleged role in the killing when it entered office in 1981.

White House spokesman Robert Sims declined comment on the allegation, while a State Department official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said D'Aubuisson might be a politician by profession but classified information about his alleged death squad connections because some Salvadorans are upset with U.S. interference in their domestic affairs.

D'Aubuisson, who is considered a leading contender in El Salvador's March 25 election for president, has repeatedly denied involvement in Romero's assassination.

However, White said the U.S. embassy received an eyewitness account of the March 22, 1980, meeting that plotted Romero's murder.

In testimony prepared for delivery to the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Latin America, White said a reliable informant told the U.S. embassy that D'Aubuisson summoned about 12 men to the meeting, announced the decision to kill Romero and supervised the drawing of lots for the "honor" of carrying out the plot.

The scheduled subcommittee hearing was postponed because of a full committee debate over U.S. policy in Lebanon, but White released copies of the testimony and discussed it at an impromptu news conference with reporters.

In the testimony, White identified the winner of the lottery as Lt. Francisco Amaya Rosa and said Amaya Rosa chose a sharpshooter named Walter Antonio Alvarez to fire the bullet that killed Romero. White said D'Aubuisson later decided that Alvarez could not be trusted and ordered him killed by a death squad.

"For three years now, I have refrained from revealing the full extent of our government's involvement in the terror in El Salvador," White said in his prepared statement.

Reagan has a plan, but it's sealed until election

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has a plan for balancing the federal budget, but he won't say what it is unless the American people re-elect him.

That was the gist of what the candidate president told Congress Thursday in his annual economic message.

Once again he is determined foe of government red ink who criss-crossed America in 1980 telling countless audiences that "balancing the federal budget was like 'protecting your virtue, you have to learn to say no.'"

But he's the incumbent now and Democrats are gleefully racing around the country

decreasing the record deficits that emerged during the first three years of his administration — and the projections for more of the same for years to come.

"There are deficits 'as far as the eye can see' is a favorite line of former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, front-runner in the race for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination. "The deficits projected for fiscal 1986 and beyond are totally unacceptable to me," Reagan said in the budget he sent to Congress on Wednesday.

The president went on to say he is "committed to finding ways to reduce further the growth of spending and to put the budget on a path that will lead to a balance between outlays and receipts. In 1985, I will submit a budget that can achieve this goal."

But the election is in 1984 and deficits seem certain to be an issue — though no one can predict whether it is one that will help the Democrats or the Republicans.

Mondale says he has a plan to cut the Reagan deficits, now approaching $200 billion, by more than half. But he was a little sketchy on details at first, which prompted Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, another candidate for the Democratic nomination, to scornfully suggest the former vice president was offering "secret plans" to deal with national problems.

Mondale subsequently fleshed out some of the details.

Now comes the president with the ultimate in secret budget balancing plans: no plan at all until after his second inauguration.

The real problem, the president told Congress, is Congress. That probably didn't surprise anyone on Capitol Hill, Democrats or Republicans, who have assumed for three years that a Reagan re-election campaign would depend heavily on blaming Congress for any national problems.

"We would be much closer to a balanced budget today if the Congress had enacted all of the spending cuts that I have requested since assuming office," he said.

Feeding

Some research suggests that periods of limited starvating do little harm to trout and may be more desirable than continuing low-maintenance diets.

Bob Piper, the director of the Federal Fish Technology Center in Bozeman, Mont., says that his agency's research has found that a 30-day starvation period is advantageous over a low-maintenance diet.

"We've found that the fish are in better condition if we take them completely off feed for a period of 30 days, rather than feeding at an insufficient rate all the time," Piper says.

The main advantage of starving over a low-maintenance diet is that the fish do not begin to "peck" or cannibalize each other after the food is reduced.

This advantage is aesthetic, in that it leaves the trout's appearance untouched.

Piper says that withholding food from trout does affect their feeding behavior. On a partial diet, the fish maintain their feeding activity, characterized by their going into a "feeding frenzy" or mass surfacing, when a person nears a raceway.

When starved, trout reduce their feeding activity, Piper says. After the first week of starvation, they no longer go into a feeding frenzy when approached.

After 30 days, the longest the center has starved fish, they are gradually returned to normal feeding, with no adverse effects and with normal weight gain, Piper says.

A fish in warm water - such as is used in commercial fish-farm rearing ponds - demands more food than one in cold water, and starvation affects a fish, in warm water, more rapidly, Piper says.

A recent study by the International Aquaculture Research Center, an arm of Rangen Inc. of Hagerman, a fish and fish-feed producer, also found that starvation has limited effects on trout.

Williams after they attended a seminar given by Piper, found that after 39 days of starvation in a controlled, laboratory environment, the trout were emaciated. Their fat reserves were gone, their spleens were abnormal and muscle and body walls were thin, Williams says.

But when returned to normal feeding, the fish returned to a normal growth rate and did not show any prolonged effects from the starvation, she says.

Williams and Wood did not dissect the fish that were starved for 72 days, but when they went back on feed, they, too, returned to normal, Williams says.

During the starvation period, the mortality rate remained at a constant 5 percent. "We expected a higher mortality," Williams says.

After returning to normal feeding, all of the trout in both groups were returned to the regular hatchery fish populations. The researchers did follow the condition of the research fish after they were returned to the regular populations, Williams says.

Budget

That will eventually eliminate our budget deficit... blaming high deficits on massive increases in defense spending coupled with the president's refusal to consider tax increases to bring it more revenue.

Reagan says an election year is not the time "to enact spending reductions coupled with tax simplification that wouldn't help much unless it somehow brought in more money - in "tax increase."

That could be read two ways: "A second Reagan term will bring proposals for far deeper domestic spending cuts than he sought during his first three years in office, along with some kind of 'tax simplification"

It also reflected the political reality that this election year is likely to produce a lot of budget balancing rhetoric with a bit of blank space that just won't add up.

MOBILE, Ala. — A circuit judge, breaking Alabama precedent, overruled his jury Thursday and sentenced a Ku Klux Klansman to death in the electric chair for killing a young black man and hanging the body from a camphor tree.

Judge Braxton Kittrell Jr. set an April 30 execution date for Henry Francis Hays, who according to testimony killed 19-year-old Michael Donald at random "to show Klan strength in Alabama."

Hays repeatedly denied the killing. Appeal of a death sentence is automatic and such dates are routinely set aside.

Attorney for Hays, Chris Galanos had called the case "crime of racial hatred" and urged Kittrell to impose the death penalty despite conflicting Alabama case law.

A jury of 11 whites and one black convicted Hays of capital murder on Dec. 20 and recommended a sentence of life in prison without possibility of parole.

At the time of the killing, on March 21, 1981, the state death penalty law prohibited a judge from increasing a sentence to death if a jury recommended life.

The law was changed later in 1981, but Ed Carnes, assistant Alabama attorney general, has said the earlier statute applied in the Hays case.

But Kittrell said he believed, the Legislature intended to allow "the court itself, and not the jury, to be the final sentencing authority."

"Judge Kittrell set a precedent. I hope it sticks," said Galanos.

Hays, 29, shook his head silently Thursday when asked if he had any comment before sentencing.

Donald's sister and brother, who sat through the trial and sentencing, left the courtroom without commenting. But Hays' father, Bennie Jack Hays, a 67-year-old "Titan" in the United Klans of America, said his son was innocent and denounced the proceedings.

Schools key to town identity

by ANNETTE CARY Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — In many small towns, the school building is the most visible and most permanent structure in the community.

Without a school, a town lacks identity, some residents believe. It is little more than a cluster of houses and a few shrinking businesses, they say.

That image is held so often that loss of a school is fought vigorously in many small communities. That fight is going on in the Magic Valley.

"Consolidation would be the death of the community," says Ron Andersen of Murtaugh.

"You pull the school out, you have nothing left in the town," says Gary Nebeker of Murtaugh. "The school keeps the town and community together. Without it, the community would pull apart."

James Gentry, a lawyer who attended high school in Deltrich, has seen how school consolidation affects performance and ball games at which he felt the whole town had turned out to support him and his classmates.

"That support," he says, "is one of the most important things a small town has to offer. They are united in a common effort. Probably 90 percent of the town is directly involved in the school, with a grandchild or a niece or nephew in the school."

Responses to a Times-News survey in Kimberly, Hansen and Murtaugh suggest that long-time residents and former students of the districts are more likely to have a strong loyalty to their community and school.

Only 34 percent of the supporters of consolidation in the districts are likely to have a strong loyalty to their community and school.

A loss of town identity is not the only concern of those opposing consolidation. They fear a loss of revenue would follow quickly loss of the school.

"We're paying off a bond on the school and water system," says Allen Cummins, who is the mayor of Murtaugh, in addition to being chairman of the school board.

"The school is paying the biggest bill right now. That would really hurt if we lost it. There's no question we'd have to raise rates over here."

In Richfield, Mayor Charles Butcher says the school consolidation substantially to the local economy. He estimates the school buys $40,000 worth of hardware, food and other items from four local businesses each year. The local bank would lose about $50,000 in deposits from the school, he says.

And if four or five teachers were not rehired in a district, the loss of business from them and their families would cost the local economy another $50,000, he estimates.

That's just for the first year. As other teachers moved on or retired, there is little chance the teachers who would replace them would settle in Richfield, he says.

Charles Johnson Sr. has lived in Murtaugh for 74 of his 80 years. He went to Murtaugh schools, and he says he feels intense loyalty toward the town.

But he believes communities may be making more fuss than necessary about consolidation.

"I don't see how consolidation can hurt us. We don't have anything here anyway. I don't think it will change too much because we will still have the grade school."

A school is not the only institution that promotes community spirit, says James Gentry, a College of Southern Idaho history professor. Even after consolidation, towns probably would keep their grade schools. And other community events and gathering places can help give residents an identity.

For instance, Gentry says, Hansen fielded a town baseball team in the 1920s that drew most of the townspeople to games on summer evenings. Now, the town has community institutions like the town hall, a library and a cafe where farmers gather in the morning.

But not everyone agrees that the school can be even partially replaced as the town's center.

"Look at Eden and Hazelton," Ron Andersen says. "What are they since they lost their school? They're nothing."

Some persons may be placing undue value on smallness, says Murtaugh resident Pat Funk, who grew up in a Chicago suburb.

"There's more to life than Idaho, she says. There are things to do, places to go. Children need to grow up being prepared to live in the rest of the world."

"Small-town values are unreal," says Georgia Wolverton of Murtaugh, a member of the Kimberly-Hansen-Murtaugh consolidation committee. "They are not realistic to the real world."

Children a disservice by being "bored" in a small district, she says. Courses and social activities are limited, as are the choices of friends for students.

She favors consolidation, and she says Murtaugh will not be losing the community if the high school moves to another location.

"The community follows the school. There is an enlarging of the community, rather than a loss of it."

"Towns have to consider the needs of the students and the state over the graduate," Gentry says. "But you have to look at the maintenance of the community. That's the problem."

Consolidation

Continued from Page A1 subject and little agreement. The Times-News mail survey found that Kimberly participants were evenly divided between building the school either in Hansen or Kimberly or between the two towns. They do not want it built in Murtaugh.

Neither did the survey's participants from Hansen. They said they would prefer a Hansen location, or a second choice, a site between Hansen and Murtaugh.

Murtaugh survey participants, perhaps already "considering" that consolidation may come about, were less committed to a site in Murtaugh itself.

But 94 percent of the participants from Murtaugh wanted the new school built between Murtaugh and Hansen, or no farther west than Hansen.

Where the school should be built is more than just a matter of convenience. "The whole community sense of pride could go right down the toilet," says Anthony Stocks, an Idaho State University anthropology professor. "One of the school's functions in a town is a major focus of identification."

Part of that conception is the actual building, which serves as a gathering point for community activities, he says. Sports events promote rivalry between the towns, giving the communities a heightened sense of identity.

In Bliss, the school is the only building in town that can seat 50 persons in one room. In Hansen, there are few other events that draw as many citizens into the same building or get as many as basketball and football games.

While some citizens point to churches as unifying institutions that give towns identity, Jim Gentry, a College of Southern Idaho history professor, says they are just as likely to have the opposite effect. The reason, he says, is that different religious sponsor their own social activities and programs.

Where to locate the school also may play a role in other consolidation plans. Dietrich and Richfield high-school students might logically be based in Shoshone, but some Latah County residents think junior-high students, including Shoshone's, should go to one of the smaller towns in return.

In Gooding County — where Bliss, Hagerman, Gooding and Wendell form the corners of an eight-

12-mile square — the possibilities are even more complex. Bliss and Hagerman might be joined together, or one of them combined with each of the other two, or both. Bliss and Hagerman might be joined with one of the other two.

In Castletford, there is little question that if the school consolidated with Buhl High School, Castletford students would be consolidated into the Buhl school. The same would be true in Jerome County, where students from Hazelton and Eden most likely would be bused to senior high in one town.

However, most of the consolidation plans would require that at least some rooms be added to the existing schools in the larger towns.

In none of these districts is building a school between towns a strong option that is being considered. But in the Kimberly-Murtaugh-Hansen plan, putting the school in the country is one possibility, although not as practical as locating the school in one of the three towns.

A new school would need city services — such as sewer, water and police protection — says James Wright, the chairman of the Kimberly-Murtaugh-Hansen consolidation committee.

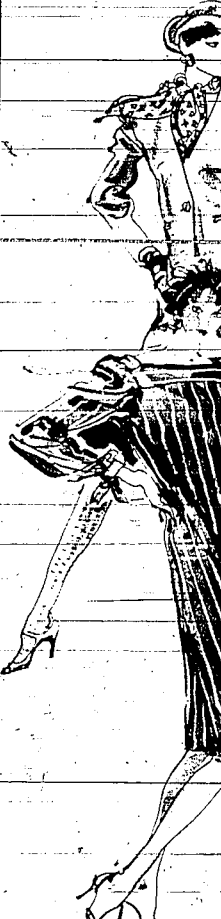

That view is echoed by Arlyn Bodily, the superintendent at Valley High School, which was formed from the consolidated Eden and Hazelton schools in 1952. Like Minico High School, Valley High is located in the country.

Bodily says vandalism skyrocketed at the new school. With no police protection, the school has had numerous burglaries, especially before it installed a burglar alarm, he says. Bodily's advice to Kimberly-Hansen-Murtaugh, if consolidation proceeds: "Build it in a town."

The consolidation committee seems to favor building a high school in Kimberly or Hansen. That would leave the present Kimberly High School for use as a junior high for all three towns, and no secondary school in Murtaugh.

However, the committee is not eager to make a final recommendation on where a consolidated high school should be built. They recommend that when, and if, that decision becomes necessary, population trends, transportation costs and community sentiment should be considered.

School consolidation Part Six

TWIN FALLS — In many small towns, the school building is the largest and most permanent structure in the community.

Without a school, a town lacks identity, some residents believe. It is little more than a cluster of houses around a post office and a few shrinking businesses, they say.

That image is held so often that loss of a school is fought vigorously in many small communities. That fight is going on in the Magic Valley.

"Consolidation would be the death of the community," says Ron Andersen of Murtaugh.

"You pull the school out, you have nothing left in the town," says Gary Nelson. "The school is the only kind of keeps the community together. Without it, the community would pull apart."

"James Meservy, a Jerome lawyer who attended high school in Deltrick, has nostalgic memories of school performances and ball games at which he felt the whole town had turned out to support him and his classmates."

"That support, he says, is one of the most important things a small town has to offer. They are united in a common effort. Probably 90 percent of the town is directly involved in the school, with a grandparent, a niece or nephew or their own child."

Responses to a Times-News survey in Kimberly, Hansen and Murtaugh suggest that long-time residents and former students of the districts are more likely to have a strong loyalty to their community and school. Fifty-six percent of the survey's participants who opposed consolidation said they had lived in the district at least 20 years and 34 percent of the supporters had lived in the district as long.

A loss of town identity is not the only concern of those opposing consolidation. They fear a loss of revenue would eventually lead to the school.

"We're paying off a bond on the sewer and water system," says Allen Cummins, who is the mayor of Murtaugh, in addition to being chairman of the school board. "The school is paying the bill right now. That would really hurt if we lost it. There's no question we'd have to raise rates out here."

In Richfield, Mayor Charles Butteane says the school contributes substantially to the local economy. He estimates the school buys $40,000 worth of hardware, food and other items from four local businesses each year. The local bank would lose about $200,000 in deposits from the school, he says.

And if four or five teachers were not rehired in a consolidated district, the loss of business from them and their families would cost the local economy another $56,000, he estimates.

That's just for the first year. As other teachers moved on or retired, there is little chance the teachers who would replace them would settle in Richfield, he says.

But he believes communities may be making more fuss than necessary about consolidation.

"I don't see how consolidation can hurt us. We don't have anything here anyway. I don't think it will change too much because we will still have the great school."

A high school is not the only institution that promotes community spirit, says James Gentry, a College of Southern Idaho history professor.

Even after consolidation, towns probably would keep their grade schools. And other community events and gathering places can help give residents an identity.

For instance, Gentry says, Hansen Field is a baseball team in the 1920s that drew most of the townspeople to games on summer evenings. Now, the town has community in-situations like the town hall, a library and a cafe where farmers gather in the morning.

But not everyone agrees that the school can be even partially replaced as the town's center.

"Look at Eden and Hazelton," Ron Andersen says. "What are they since they lost their school? They're nothing."

But some persons may be placing undue value on smallness, says Murtaugh resident Pat Funk, who grew up in a Chicago suburb.

"There's more to life than Idaho," she says. "There are things to do, places to go. Children need to grow up being prepared to live in the rest of the world."

"Small-town values are unreal," says Georgia Weyerstein of Murtaugh, a member of the Kimberly-Hansen-Murtaugh consolidation committee. "They are unrealistic to the real world."

"You do children a disservice by being bound in a small district. Children need to be aware of other things. Then, they can decide to come back to the farm or not."

No small school can prepare students to move out of the Magic Valley, she says. Courses and social activities are limited, as are the choices of friends for students.

She favors consolidation, and she says Murtaugh will not be losing the community if the high school moves to another location.

"The community follows the school. There is an enlarging of the community, rather than a loss of it."

"Towns have to consider the needs of the students and the state once they graduate," Gentry says. "But you have to look at the maintenance of the community. That's the problem."

subject and little agreement. The Times-News mail survey found that Kimberly participants wanted the school divided between building the school either in Hansen or Kimberly, or between the two towns. They do not want it built in Murtaugh.

Neither did the survey's participants from Hansen. They said they would prefer a Hansen location, or as a second choice, a site between Hansen and Murtaugh.

Murtaugh survey participants, perhaps already considering that consolidation may come about, were less committed to a site in Murtaugh itself.

But 94 percent of the participants from Murtaugh wanted the new school built between Murtaugh and Hansen, or no farther west than Hansen.

Where the school should be built is more than just a matter of mere convenience.

"The whole community sense of pride could go right down the toilet," says Anthony Stocks, an Idaho State University anthropology professor. "One of the school's functions in a town is a major focus of identification."

Part of that conception is the actual building, which serves as a gathering point for community activities, he says. Sports events, homecoming, and the towns, giving the communities a heightened sense of identity.

In Bliss, the school is the only building in town that can seat 50 persons in one room. In Hansen, there are few other events that draw as many citizens into the same building or area at once as basketball and football games.

While some citizens point to churches as unifying institutions that give towns identity, Jim Henry, a College of Southern Idaho history professor, says they are just as likely to have the opposite effect. The religion is that different, he says, as to different religions sponsor their own social activities and programs.

Where to locate the school also may play a role in other consolidation plans.

Dietrich and Richfield high school students might logically be bused to Shoshone, but some Lincoln County residents think junior-high students, including Shoshone's, should go to one of the smaller towns in return.

In Gooding County where Bliss, Engerman, Gooding and Wendell form the corners of an eight-to-12-mile square — the possibilities are even more complex. Bliss and Hagerman might be joined together, Kimberly might be combined with each of the other two, or both Bliss and Hagerman might be joined with one of the other two.

In Castletford, there is little question that if the school consolidated with Buhl High School, Castletford students would be assimilated into the Buhl school. The same would be true in Hazelton County, where students from Hazelton and Eden most likely would be bused to the Buhl school.

However, most of the consolidations would require that at least some rooms be added to the existing schools in the larger towns.

In none of these districts is building a school between towns a strong option that is being considered. But in the Kimberly-Murtaugh-Hansen plan, putting the school in the country is one possibility, although not as practical as locating the school in one of the three towns.

A new school would need city services — such as sewer, water and police protection — says James Wright, the chairman of the Kimberly-Murtaugh-Hansen consolidation committee.

That view is echoed by Arlyn Bodily, the superintendent at Valley High School, which was formed from the consolidated Eden and Hazelton schools in 1952. Like Mincin High School, Valley High is located in the country.

Bodily says vandalism skyrocketed at the new school. With no police protection, the school has had numerous burglaries, especially before it installed a burglar alarm, he says. Bodily's advice to Kimberly-Hansen-Murtaugh: "If consolidation proceeds, 'Build it in a town.'"

The consolidation committee seems to favor building a high school in Kimberly or Hansen. That would leave the present Kimberly High School for use as a junior high for all three towns, and no secondary school in Murtaugh.

However, the committee is not eager to make a final recommendation on where a consolidated high school should be built. They recommend that when, and if, that decision becomes necessary, population trends, transportation costs and community sentiment should be considered.

Child car-seat bill sparks hot debate

BOISE (AP) — Parents in Idaho would be required to strap children into car seats under a proposed law that is advancing through legislative channels amid claims it violates personal freedom.

The mandatory-restraint measure that a legislative committee endorsed Thursday and sent to the Idaho House, for example, "is against the principle this country was founded on," said Rep. Mack Nelson, R-Fruitland.

But the proposal drew support from doctors, a child-advocacy group and others, and one legislator said his volume of mail supporting it outstrips letters on all other legislative issues combined.

Injury among young children, doctors said.

The proposal requiring restraints for children 4 years or younger, or weighing less than 40 pounds, is women with exceptions that spell out when restraints aren't required. Those range from diaper changes in transit to truck cabs already occupied by three adults.

One of the bill's opponents, Rep. Robert Forrey, R-Nampa, claimed the 40-pound limit was unclear. Using livestock-industry terms, he asked whether the figure applied to "live weight" or "dead weight."

Forrey said that though his family uses restraints, he couldn't support the legislation on philosophical grounds.

The spirit of the measure is too far-reaching, said Forrey, who asked committee members if eventually the state would want to send inspectors to homes to determine whether poisons are kept away from young hands.

Another opponent, Rep. Dean Haugen, R-Hope, said he cares about the safety of children, but he cares "even more about what kind of world they grow up in."

"I simply cannot support the notion that the state needs to be mother and nursemaid to all the young children in Idaho," Haugen said.

Rep. Raymond Parks, R-Blackfoot, cast the fourth negative vote.

"If the police will protect the brain of a teen-ager against marijuana, won't police protect the brain of a three-year-old child from a 30 mph impact against a windshield?" Twin Falls physician Will Chamberlain asked the House Transportation Committee.

More than 40 states have laws requiring the restraint of children in cars.

Advocates of the Idaho bill sponsored by Rep. Lydia Justice, Edwards, R-Donnelly, argued it can prevent disabling accidents that lead to years of nursing-home care, at public expense. Traffic accidents are the leading cause of death and serious injury among young children, doctors said.

House OKs new primary election date

BOISE (AP) — The subject was serious but the debate wasn't here Thursday as the Idaho House voted 45-24 to abolish the state's presidential primary and move the regular primary election from May to late August.

Thirty-four Republicans and 11 Democrats joined to approve the bill and sent it to the Senate.

Idaho held presidential primaries in 1976 and 1980 and this year's ballot is scheduled May 22. If the Senate goes along, this year's primary would move to Aug. 27, and there would be no presidential primary.

Turnout in the presidential primary has been low and this year the Legislature is snaggled in a legislative redistricting battle that hasn't been resolved. Filing for 1984 races opens Feb. 27.

Rep. Linden Bateman, R-Idaho Falls, said Idaho's presidential primary was planned to fall at the same time as others in the region, to increase the chances of a small state drawing major candidates.

But neighboring Oregon's presidential primary is one week earlier, Nevada has repealed its primary and Washington never had one.

"It really hasn't worked," said Bateman, and last time around, Ronald Reagan didn't visit the state until October.

Idaho's legislative session usually ends about April 1, and Bateman and others said that was too close to the primary election. "I said legislators might be tempted to do more 'grandstanding' than tending to business."

Rep. Dean Haugen, R-Coeur d'Alene, called the move an "incumbents protection act." He said a short fall campaign wouldn't give challengers much chance to get organized after the primary.

Other legislators said a May primary gets in the way of fishing, which traditionally opens on the Memorial Day weekend in Idaho.

Some lawmakers said an August primary might be hard on farmer-legislators, since that's a busy time on farms. Others, perhaps closer to the soil, noted that May's even worse, because that's when crop planting is completed.

"The basic reason for this change is that the May short fall campaign wouldn't give challengers much chance to get organized after the primary," said Bateman. "The public does not favor the long campaign between May and November."

Democrats' proposal for 5-cent sales tax flops

BOISE (AP) — An attempt to boost Idaho's sales tax to 5 percent on a permanent basis has been shot down by a House committee.

The Revenue and Taxation Committee voted Thursday to return the proposal to its sponsors, Sen. Jerry Wellard, D-Blackfoot, and Rep. Claude Judd, D-Orofino.

Wellard and Judd estimated an additional $96 million would be pumped into the state's general tax revenue if the sales tax rate went up to 5 percent, groceries were exempted and the present $16-per-person grocery tax credit were removed.

Judd, noting that a tax group on Wednesday started preliminary work on four initiative proposals, said his bill might "beat an initiative." He said people in his area don't want to pay sales taxes on groceries.

Exempting groceries would amount to "great tax relief" to low-income families, said Wellard, since the bulk of their fixed spending is for food.

But the proposal ran into objections from both Democrats and Republicans.

Rep. Harold Reid, D-Craigmont, questioned the $96.4 million estimate on net revenue, and Wellard acknowledged the estimate might not be accurate.

Rep. Robert Forrey, R-Nampa, said people in his area are urging lower

DUI trends changing

By BOB PICK
The Associated Press

BOISE — Fewer motorists are being charged under Idaho's tough new drunken driving law, but more of them are fighting the charges than before the new law went into effect, the administrator of the state court system reported Thursday.

"More defendants are pleading not guilty at their arraignments and more are asking for jury trials," Carl Bianchi told the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee.

"The reduction in drunken driving cases is apparently the result of tougher penalties under the new law and heightened public awareness of the problem, he said.

"Society's attitudes are changing toward drinking and driving," Bianchi said in explaining the drop from more than 7,000 cases a month before the law took effect July 1 to less than 900 after that.

"The law has been a factor, but equally important have been the education efforts," he said.

But it's the stiffer penalties that have prompted more people accused of drunken driving to fight the charges in court.

"Fines are much higher," he said. "In many areas around the state it's a standard penalty to spend at least some jail time."

While fewer cases are being settled, Bianchi said more than 40 percent of those handled under the new law resulted in incarceration. Before that, less than 35 percent of the defendants went to jail.

According to statistics for 1983, jury pleas to drunken driving charges fell from well above 70 percent a month during the first half of the year to 65 percent by December. In the same time, the number of cases settled monthly by trial rose from under 4 percent before July to 12 percent by year's end.

That, Bianchi said, is putting pressure on local prosecutors, who in many areas just don't have the manpower to handle the increased court load.

The result, based on the statistics, is that more and more cases are being settled by reducing or amending the drunken driving charge to obtain a guilty plea. During the first half of last year, an average of less than 4 percent of all cases settled each month involved plea bargaining.

Moslem units grab Beirut road posts

By FAROUK NASSAR
The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Shiite Moslem militiamen overran key Lebanese army positions Thursday, on a highway entrance to Beirut. It was the first ground assault in the civil war since Christmas.

In the mountains overlooking Beirut, Syrian-backed Druse militiamen battled the Lebanese army.

Lebanese police said five people were killed in Beirut and three in the mountains. They said 54 were wounded, including a French soldier hit by shrapnel. Spokesmen for Amal, Lebanon's largest Shiite militia, said at least one of its fighters was among the dead, and 25 were wounded. There was no word on Lebanese army casualties.

At midnight, after 12 hours of fighting, the army said it had regained control of St. Michael Church and two adjacent checkpoints that control the Galerie Seman gateway to Beirut's southern suburbs. Amal claimed it still held the positions.

The checkpoints control the Beirut-Damascus highway. Syrian-backed Druse fighters traded long-range artillery and rocket fire for a second straight day in hills above the U.S. Marine base at Beirut's airport.

Marine spokesmen said their base was untouched by Thursday's hostilities.

However, Capt. Jean-Yves Blouin, spokesman for the French contingent of the multinational force, said one French soldier was "slightly wounded in the left arm and leg" by an artillery shell that crashed near a French position in the southern suburb of Tayehneh.

The Amal militiamen charged about 150 yards from their positions in the south Beirut neighborhood of Chiyah to dislodge the Lebanese army from the St. Michael Church and adjacent checkpoints, said spokesmen at Amal leader Nabilli Berrri's Beirut office. They declined to be identified.

Western reporters who went to Chiyah just before sundown said army shells were slamming into the Galerie Seman highway intersection at a rate of one every 15 seconds.

The Shiite militiamen had captured an army armored personnel carrier, and were firing machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades from abandoned high-rise apartment buildings toward army positions about 500 yards away.

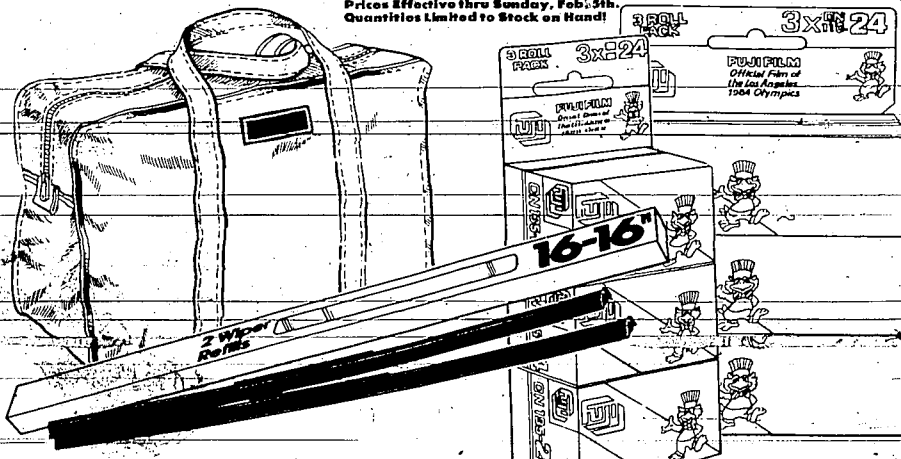

One Shiite militiaman screamed, "We are fighting for Khomeini." Many Lebanese Shiites have pledged allegiance to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's Islamic revolutionary patriarch.

Ambulances raced with wailing sirens to and from the battlefield. Beirut radio stations blared warnings to people to stay indoors as the staccato bark of machine guns and the roar of artillery echoed through the city. Flares and tracer bullets lit up the night sky.

Shultz pans Nicaragua

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz said Thursday that Nicaragua's rulers are suppressing freedom of speech and religion, and "must be worried" about the survival of their leftist government.

Shultz dismissed an allegation, made Wednesday by Nicaraguan junta leader Daniel Ortega, that the Kissinger commission on Central America secretly recommended to the White House that the United States invade Nicaragua and El Salvador to protect American interests.

Shultz told a news conference the charge was a "figment of his (Ortega's) imagination" and shows that "Mr. Ortega and his colleagues must be worried."

"If I were them, I'd be worried too. After all they are the people who betrayed their revolution. They are the people who have harassed the church and the pope. They are the people who declared an amnesty and found 1,000 Miskito Indians leaving the country," Shultz said.

"They are the people who suppress the press. They are the people who built up an armed force that goes beyond anything that anyone could conceivably think is needed for their own defense."

Both Shultz and Ortega were here for the inauguration Thursday of President Jaime Lenin Somoza. In Washington, Henry Kissinger also said through a spokesman, Herb Hetsu, that the charge of recommending an invasion was false.

No concessions to Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiator Edward Rowny said Thursday the United States would not offer concessions to the Soviet Union in a bid to resume talks on reducing long-range nuclear weapons.

"It's wrong to offer them a concession to come back," Rowny said at a meeting with Pentagon commissioners on Thursday. "The onus is on them" to fix a date for another round of talks since they were responsible for the December breakdown, he said.

The U.S. negotiator said it was his "gut feeling" that military experts on the Soviet side see the advantages of reaching an agreement with the United States but have to convince other Kremlin officials.

One incentive, Rowny said, is that U.S. nuclear submarines eventually will be capable of destroying the heavy land-based missiles that represent about 70 percent of Soviet nuclear might.

Moreover, the retired general said, "fundamentally, they would like to avoid the risk of nuclear war."

Before the breakdown, Rowny tabled a modified U.S. proposal that would trade off American advantages in some strategic weapons for Soviet leads in others. He said that offered the best basis for striking a deal.

Walesa under attack again

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's Communist authorities, responding publicly to a letter of complaint from Lech Walesa, on Thursday accused the Solidarity leader of arrogance and financial mismanagement.

The attack reopened a campaign by the official media that was stilled after Walesa won the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize.

"You show a persistent tendency to put yourself above the law," the government said in a rare public response to a private letter Walesa sent to Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

The Walesa letter, sent on Dec. 29, complained of systematic harassment by authorities. It was written after he was summoned for interrogation about meeting with fugitive leaders of the now-banned Solidarity union.

One version of Walesa's letter was leaked last week to Western correspondents in Warsaw by government officials.

Walesa's letter said: "I refuse to believe that it could be you (Jaruzelski) who is giving orders for the underhanded methods used against me."

Walesa charged the government decided "to destroy me" after he sought to revive the independent Solidarity labor union, which was outlawed following the December 1981 martial law declaration.

EPA to set levels for grain pesticide

By The Associated Press

Many states have tested various pesticides for traces of EDB, a food product which causes cancer in lab animals, but most said Thursday that they are deferring to the federal Environmental Protection Agency to set standards for allowable levels.

All 50 states were asked by the EPA to test grain-based products for EDB, or ethylene dibromide, before it sets a national standard for allowable levels.

A random survey by The Associated Press showed that the majority of the states performing the tests view the issue as a national problem and were waiting for EPA guidelines.

All grain-based grocery products, EPA spokesmen, however, denied the report.

The EPA's ban on soil fumigation was extended to forbid further use of EDB as a fumigant for combating insect infestations in grain already harvested, EPA officials said Thursday. They said they will issue guidelines to help state officials decide whether to take EDB-tainted products off grocery shelves.

"I do not believe the situation represents any sort of emergency, and if I did I would have acted," Texas Health Commissioner Dr. Robert Bernstein testified Thursday before the state Senate Subcommittee on Public Health.

Bernstein described cigarettes as "a thousand times more potent" than EDB and said no human cancer has been shown to have been caused by EDB.

Florida has taken the strongest stand against EDB so far, issuing stop-sale orders on 76 products with the lowest detectable level, one part per billion, the lowest detectable level. National food companies have challenged that standard in federal court.

President's men take up budget battle

Highlights of Capitol Hill debate over new budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president's men swarmed Capitol Hill on Thursday in defense of his $925.5 billion 1985 budget, urging Congress to join the administration this year in a plan to reduce the projected $180 billion deficit. The result of inaction, they said, will be gloom and doom.

"We are in the same position of many companies on the eve of Chapter 11 bankruptcy, Budget Director David A. Stockman told the Senate Budget Committee.

"I don't think we can wait a year to deal seriously with the deficits," Martin Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, told reporters. Unless investors are assured the government will reduce the deficit, he added, "I think interest rates and the dollar will stay abnormally high."

Some top economic advisers to President Reagan signaled a willingness to accept cuts in the defense budget in deficit-reduction talks with Congress, but said the president insists that automatic tax cuts be allowed to go into effect on schedule. The president sent his formal economic report to Congress Thursday and promised a plan that, he said,

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here, at a glance, are highlights of the debate Thursday as President Reagan and top advisers discussed his new budget on Capitol Hill:

DEFICIT DANGERS: Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said he was "very worried about 1985" because of the possibility heavy government borrowing will dry up credit markets. White House chief economist Martin Feldstein said deficit reductions must be put off till next year. And said deficit reductions must be put off till next year. And said deficit reductions must be put off till next year. And said deficit reductions must be put off till next year.

TAXES: Feldstein said a $100 billion deficit-reducing "down payment" — recommended by Reagan without any details — would doubtless include significant tax-revenue increases.

BUDGET SPECIFICS: Several Democrats criticized the president's lack of specific recommendations on the $104 billion reduction. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, told Regan, "The budgets of this administration are becoming a joke — a bad joke."

MILITARY: All three economic advisers indicated the president's $36 billion defense budget could be negotiated downward, but if the administration had changed its position since Reagan sent his budget to Congress on Wednesday, nobody told Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. "We are here with a request that is higher than I would like, but it is necessary," he said.

PRESIDENT REAGAN: In a campaign-style pep talk, the president told Republican members of Congress that they should emphasize that the Democrats "don't want to cut spending; they want to raise taxes."

Friends of defense say 18% boost will be cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger was told by some of the military's best congressional friends Thursday that the proposed 18 percent boost in the Pentagon budget must be cut.

Weinberger attempted to sell President Reagan's plan for $395 billion in defense spending authority next year to the House Armed Services Committee, saying the figure is "higher than I would like, but it is necessary." But the top Democrats and Republicans on that panel, traditionally one of the friendliest to the Pentagon, virtually rejected the $47 billion boost out of hand.

And elsewhere in the Capitol, other senior administration officials already were undercutting the defense chief. Martin Feldstein, President Reagan's top economic adviser, told reporters "We're going to have to trim back" on the Pentagon budget as part of the effort to close the federal deficit.

"How far? More than the president would like, less than some of the people we're negotiating with (in Congress) would like," he said.

Treasury Secretary Donald D. Regan pointedly reminded members of the Senate Finance Committee that when he had earlier outlined budget items which couldn't be cut, "I said nothing about defense."

Rep. Ronald V. Dellums, D-Calif.,

told Weinberger that "to come in here with a $305 billion military budget at a time you are cutting and eliminating social programs and that is a level of obscenity that is extraordinarily difficult to rationalize." Weinberger replied: "I thought I had heard every conceivable criticism. That is the first time I've been accused of being a public plagiarist. The level of obscenity in our budget is extremely low."

Crime controls pass

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted 91-1 Thursday for a comprehensive crime control bill that would deny bail to dangerous federal defendants and keep them imprisoned after conviction without possibility of parole.

The first major bill to pass the Senate in the 1984 election year went to the House, where a key member of the Judiciary Committee predicted it would be "dead on arrival."

Rep. William J. Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the House panel's crime subcommittee, said members there preferred individual bills rather than a comprehensive anti-crime package.

Despite the signs of trouble, chief sponsor Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., called the measure the most important legislative contribution to effective federal law enforcement.

since a series of anti-crime laws passed 13 years ago.

The bill is supported by the Reagan administration, but opposed by the American Civil Liberties Union, which believes major portions are unconstitutional. The American Bar Association disagreed with some provisions but did not oppose passage.

The only no vote was cast by Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md.

Major provisions would make sentencing more uniform for the same crimes, permit dangerous defendants to be locked up pending trial, eliminate parole and severely limit use of the insanity defense.

Other portions would increase penalties for drug offenders, financially assist state and local law enforcement programs and strengthen laws against child pornography.

Meese foes start drive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Denouncing White House Counselor Edwin Meese III's record on civil rights as "scandalous and extremist," the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights on Thursday announced a campaign aimed at blocking his confirmation as attorney general.

"Blatantly — but, we oppose the nomination because, on the basis of our observations over the past three years, we do not believe Ed Meese, as the nation's chief law enforcement officer, would enforce, vigorously and objectively, our nation's civil rights laws," Ralph Nease, executive director of the conference.

"This is the first time in more than a decade that the conference has opposed a Cabinet or Supreme Court nomination," Nease said. "Only an extraordinary situation could compel such a decision."

The conference is an umbrella organization that represents the nation's major civil rights groups.

Nease said the conference, which has 165 member groups, intends to lead a "grass-roots campaign to educate the public, the press and the Congress" about Meese's record before hearings on the nomination are held by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

'Hot' pedestals going back

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Workers at a restaurant supply firm began loading thousands of radioactive table pedestals onto trucks Thursday so they could be returned to Mexico, company officials said.

David Lefkowitz, vice president of Falcon Products Co. in suburban Olivette which manufactured the pedestals, said the loading started after the company was given the go-ahead by the U.S. Department of Transportation and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Lefkowitz said he did not know how long it would take to load the cast iron pieces on tractor-trailer rigs for the return trip. The company has found 17,000 contaminated pieces so far, he said, and more may be discovered.

"It's tough to load these things," he said, adding the company had to test each piece for 30 seconds to determine if it was radioactive.

"We will keep them in a tightly secured area tonight," Lefkowitz said. "We will do everything we are required to do."

Fire marshal resigns force upon request

By DAVID MOFFAT
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Fire marshal Clare Harkins has resigned from the Twin Falls Fire Department after being requested to do so by City Manager Tom Courtney.

The request stems from an incident in early January, when Harkins was reluctant to investigate promptly the cause of fire at an automotive and muffler shop off Kimberly Road, according to city officials.

The city is treating the matter as a regular resignation, Courtney said Thursday evening from Utah, where he was researching police and fire department management in the city of Orem.

He said there was nothing improper about the situation, other than that promissness must be one of the department's top priorities.

The resignation, effective Feb. 1, was contained in a letter to Fire Chief Bobby Bopp.

In the letter, Harkins wrote that he felt he had made a "worthwhile contribution" in the areas of firefighting, fire prevention and public fire education.

He said he had enjoyed working for the department and found the work "challenging and rewarding."

Contacted Thursday, Harkins said he resigned because there were "other things" in which he was interested. He said he could not pursue these while working for the department.

Bopp said Thursday that Harkins was a "good employee," who among other things, directed the city's "Learn Not to Burn" program and other successful efforts at fire-safety education.

The duties of the fire marshal include enforcing fire safety laws and ordinances, conducting fire-prevention programs and investigating the causes of fires, according to a city job description.

At one point, Harkins also served as the city's chief building inspector. But he was not acting in this role at the time of his resignation, city finance director Bryce King said Thursday.

That responsibility was removed from the duties assigned to the fire marshal after a Fire Department re-organization several months ago, King says.

King said that Harkins began working for the city in January 1962, and he joined the Fire Department in July 1966.

Mayor Emery Petersen said that Courtney informed him of his decision Wednesday.

In Twin Falls city government, the city manager is responsible for hiring and firing all employees except the city attorney, who is hired by the council, and department heads, who are hired by the city manager with consent of the council.

Petersen said he understood the action took into account problems of long-term performance as well as the incident in early January.

King said that no decision on how to replace Harkins will be made until the issue of further reorganization in the department is resolved.

Petersen said that issue will be addressed by the City Council in February.

Panel to study hospital morale, fiscal woes

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Suggestions that employee wages or hours may need to be cut have brought animosity to the surface at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, hospital administrator Bill Burns said Thursday.

He told a special meeting late Thursday afternoon of the hospital's executive board and the three Twin Falls County commissioners that employees will form a committee to study employee morale and patient relations, to help avoid fiscal problems.

"The committee will find out what ticks off patients and what we can do to help the attitude to improve around here," Burns said.

Thursday's meeting was called at the county commissioners' request, after they said they received numerous complaints and questions from hospital employees during a two-hour period Thursday morning.

At staff meetings called Wednesday by Burns, employees asked him why a plan to save $35,000 by temporarily cutting full-time staff to 37-and-a-half-hours per week called for no sacrifices on the part of administration.

The employees suggested that the administrators take a 6 percent salary cut if employee hours were to be cut. Or, they suggested that their hours remain the same, but that both management and employees take a pay cut.

Burns said Thursday morning that management already puts in much more than 40-hour weeks.

"Management will pick up the slack" if employee hours are reduced, Burns said. "I did not realize the animosity held toward the institution when I started this. Maybe, I should have just laid off workers. The operation of the hospital is a business and has to run with business principles."

He said the animosity he spoke of was generated by workers who thought their supervisors were not working as hard as they should be.

Most of the complaints that reached the commissioners evidently resulted from misunderstandings at staff meetings held this week to discuss financial problems, Burns said.

When he told the employees that a low number of patients could lead to default on the bonds sold for the hospital's recent renovation project, they misunderstood him to mean that was occurring now, he said.

Burns said he may hold more staff meetings or attend employee breakfasts without administrators to improve communication with the staff.

Ron Fisse, a nurse who has agreed to serve on the employee committee, says the committee is a definite signal that hospital administrators want to hear more from the employees.

The current talk of possible financial difficulties has "stirred the fire" of employee dissatisfaction, he said Thursday. But he said he sees a look at the complaints as a positive step.

"The time is right to get control of our destiny," Fisse says. "I know the nurses sometimes feel totally out of control. They feel they make a suggestion, and it falls on deaf ears."

The hospital occasionally gets complaints, Fisse says, including ones about "patients not getting the attention they would like from a local hospital." The committee will ask for help from employees and the community to find out what patients do and did not like during their stay, so that care can be improved, he says.

But Fisse emphasizes that the committee is a positive, grassroots step by employees who are interested in improving morale at the hospital.

"There's been an attitude problem for several years," he says. "At first, it was blamed on the construction, that-caused disruption."

But now it has reached an "all-time low," Fisse says, because of the pressures caused by financial difficulties. However, he says he does not consider employee morale to be a problem the hospital cannot overcome.

Burns says employee morale is no morale-a problem at the hospital than at any other institution.

Possible buyer reveals Elkhorn plans

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Milton G. Kuolt II, the president of Horizon Air Industries, said Thursday that the Elkhorn Club will be operated as a public resort if he succeeds in his anticipated purchase.

"We do have a letter of agreement signed, and we are proceeding with the closing of the whole resort," Kuolt said in a telephone interview from his Seattle office.

The resort, now owned by Australian Adam Adams and general manager Jim Cunningham, formerly of Vail, Colo., includes the 140-room Elkhorn Club Hotel, an adjacent commercial mall, an 18-hole golf course and other facilities on 195 acres.

Kuolt says he is attempting to buy the resort privately, not in his capacity as the top officer of Horizon Air, which a headline in Thursday's Times-News indicated. However, his connection with the airline could have some benefits in the future, he said.

"I think there's an opportunity here to provide a superb resort environment," Kuolt said.

"The resort will get a complete sprucing up, but Kuolt says he anticipates no major remodeling immediately.

Adams and Cunningham are the two remaining members of a four-man syndicate that purchased the resort for $5.6 million last spring.

They had anticipated turning Elkhorn into a club that would admit the public, but would offer members and guests preferred use of the property. The two owners also had anticipated developing an athletic club this year and converting the skating rink in the shopping mall into a theater, those plans have not progressed, however, Adams said Wednesday.

Neither Kuolt nor Adams would discuss the terms of the negotiations, except to say that they hope to conclude a transaction by May.

Kuolt first announced his interest in obtaining the resort at a speech Wednesday before the Kootenai-Sun Valley Chamber of Commerce.

Buhl businessman seeking Senate job

By DAVID MOFFAT
Times-News writer

Buhl — Darrel McRoberts, the general manager of the Buhl Green Giant corn-processing plant, has announced he will run for the state Senate seat now held by veteran legislator John Barker, Buhl.

Barker already has announced that he will not seek re-election when his term ends at the end of this year.

The 45-year-old 24th District Republican revealed his plans Thursday at a press conference, at Munroe Chevrolet in Buhl.

Dave Munroe, the owner of the dealership and also the Twin Falls County Republican state committeeman, will serve as co-chairman of McRoberts' campaign.

McRoberts said Benny Blipek, a former county Republican Central Committee chairman, will serve as his other co-chairman.

"I grew up in the west end of Twin Falls County, and I believe I know what the needs are," McRoberts said. The needs, he said, are water, agriculture and education, in that order.

So far, only one other Republican has indicated an interest in running for the seat, which Barker has held for nine terms.

This is Doug Jones, the vice president of Leslie B. Jones Inc., a family-owned full-service farming company.

Jones was in Oklahoma on a business trip Thursday. But his wife said he is "very interested" in the seat, although he has made no firm plans so far.

McRoberts has been employed with Green Giant since he graduated from Twin Falls Business College and went to work at the Buhl plant in 1961.

A 1963 Buhl High School graduate, he was transferred by the company to Belvidere, Ill., in 1968. In 1975, he was transferred again and became a company regional manager in Dayton, Wash., near Walla Walla.

After Green Giant was purchased by the Pillsbury Co., he became an area manager, living in Le Sueur, Minn., in 1979 and 1980. He returned to the Buhl plant in 1980.

Although Munroe said that McRoberts is a "formidable and very informed candidate," both men declined to answer questions on specific issues Thursday, saying the news conference was to announce the candidacy only.

"We'll have lots of ideas in the next month," Munroe said.

McRoberts did say he felt the long-term safety of Southern Idaho water from out-of-state users is still a "very viable issue." And since his children have gone to school in four states, he said he has a good understanding of the relative strengths and weaknesses of public education in Idaho.

In addition, he said his business management experience would be important in his performance as a legislator.

Largely on account of that experience, Barker said Thursday that he would be willing to sign McRoberts' nominating petition. McRoberts

Easter Seal center to lose director, programs

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Due to a lack of clients, the Magic Valley Easter Seal Center will eliminate its director and its speech and language therapy services at the end of this month.

Penny Dalton, the director of the center and the speech therapist, will step down from her duties, effective Feb. 29.

Although there will be some changes, the center will continue to function in the Magic Valley and possibly take a new direction, says Deborah Youngblood of Boise, the director of clinical services for the Idaho Easter Seal Society.

The Boise office conducted a study of the area and found that speech and language therapy were being provided by schools, private therapists and the state Department of Health and Welfare, as well as the Easter Seal Center, Youngblood said Thursday.

There simply were not enough clients to justify a full-time speech therapist, she says.

Dalton says that she helped about 18 persons last year, when a usual case load would be close to 30.

It is the philosophy of the Easter Seal Society to help as many people as possible and provide services not otherwise available in a community, Youngblood says, based on the study and other discussions with community leaders.

Job 'search' staged to evaluate training needs

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — W.G. "Jerry" McBratney is looking for jobs.

Not just one job. Try 40 or 50. Or 300 or 400.

McBratney will be surveying 1,200 Magic Valley employers by mail and dropping in on 700 businesses himself during the next three months.

He and the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce are trying to find out what job openings the businesses have and what types of workers they want. The statistics could turn into new training programs and new jobs for low-income workers, he says.

The Chamber of Commerce is doing the legwork for the South Central Private Industry Council, which will spend close to $1 million worth of federal job-training funds in the Magic Valley this year.

The chamber has landed a $13,000 grant to generate the basic information the non-profit council will use to design a spending strategy for the next two years, Mike Dalton, the chamber's executive director, said earlier this week.

The information will tell the council if job-training programs are needed in areas such as word-processing, welding or bookkeeping.

"The $1 million is coming from the federal government under the 1982 Jobs Training Partnership Act.

As a successor to the federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act program, it is designed to help workers who have low incomes or are hampered by other problems — such as lack of education, lack of training or physical disabilities — when they enter the job market.

About 600 confidential questionnaires already are in the hands of Twin Falls business people," and McBratney has been pounding the pavement in the area. The survey will expand to other Magic Valley areas during the next two months.

"We've already got a sampling, and we are quite impressed at the job openings we've come up with," McBratney said Wednesday.

Twenty-one of the first 40 surveys returned expected job openings within a year, many of them for part-time workers, he said.

The questionnaires seek information such as what types of jobs are or may become available, what the jobs will pay, how prospective employees should be trained and whether the employer would consider participating in an on-the-job training program. Those programs generally pay half of an employee's wages.

Part of McBratney's mission will be to tell Magic Valley businesses about the South Central Private Industry Council, a volunteer group composed of business leaders and representatives from other employment-related agencies.

It's a topic he knows. He worked for three-and-a-half years for the council's predecessor, the Idaho Private Industry Council, as a marketing representative, until it was disbanded to make way for regional committees.

McBratney, 61, also is familiar with the Magic Valley, having run the former Mayfair women's clothing store in the downtown mall from 1971 to 1979. He could have used a job-training program in his business back then, he says.

"It was available (through CETA)," McBratney says, "and nobody told me about it."

Man in hospital after rollover

TWIN FALLS — Julio Manicas, 49, of Gooding, was listed in fair condition Thursday night, after being injured in a one-car rollover on U.S. 53, two miles north of Jackpot.

Manicas was injured at 10:36 a.m. Wednesday, according to an Idaho State Police officer. He has been cited for driving while under the influence of alcohol, driving on a suspended license and failing to have insurance.

The officer said his pickup truck was northbound when it went off the right side of the road, hit a post and as the driver overcorrected, the vehicle skidded off the left side of the road, struck a snowbank and flipped over, coming to rest on top.

Damage to the vehicle has been estimated at $2,000. Manicas was alone at the time.

Burglar isn't neat in office

TWIN FALLS — Someone caused a lot of damage over the weekend to the offices of Mr. Print, at 622 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. in Twin Falls. According to a Twin Falls police report, employee Mike Mathews reported Saturday that the office had been burglarized. Only about $65 in cash was taken. But the most damaging was the destruction of office equipment, which was broken into and ransacked. The total loss to the business has been estimated at $2,265.

The incident occurred between Friday evening and Saturday morning.

Pins will aid Wendell library

WENDELL — Red, white and blue 75th anniversary pins have been selling well in Wendell.

In conjunction with the city's celebration this year, the American Legion post in Wendell is selling the pins to raise money to buy books for the public library.

"We've sold a bunch already," Legion member Mike Wetzel says. "I hope we'll have to order more."

The large, square pins, designed by Legion member Larry Osborn, are done in gold-4rimmed enamel with a double clasp on the back. They cost $3 each and are available from all Legion members.

BURL — A Buhl School District policy that was adopted last year may have to be amended because of a problem that has arisen with one school board member's son.

At a school board meeting earlier this week, the board voted to clarify the policy and reinstate the board member's son in basketball this time, but it agreed to look into revising the rule later.

Under the policy, adopted in March 1983, high school students who fail one or more classes are not allowed to participate in extracurricular activities.

To regain eligibility, the student must have no more than one failing grade in any class.

However, the board had not anticipated the effect of the policy and how a teacher of an extracurricular activity might feel about having the student continue in the class.

Board member Grant Atkinson asked the board to reinstate his son, Tracy, in basketball because the policy requirements had been met, he said.

Although Tracy could not play basketball at the beginning of the season because he had four failing grades, on his last report card, his son had only one failing grade, Atkinson said.

"So I feel that he has met the criteria under this policy," he said.

However, basketball coach Wayne Humphreys told the board he did not want Tracy back on the team because he had missed practice for the past nine weeks.

"Technically and legally, I guess he should be able to play, but ethically he should not," Humphreys said.

"If one student is allowed to return to the sport after missing practice, it is unfair to the other basketball players who have been working so hard," he said.

"He could have been out practicing on his own," Humphreys said.

Even though the board did decide that Atkinson should be reinstated, to correspond with board policy, the members agreed that the policy needs to be amended as to intent, to avoid future problems.

In the meantime, board member Howard Hopkins apologized to Humphreys because the policy has interfered with the coach's rules.

"I understand your problems," Hopkins said. "We don't want to tell you how to run your basketball team."

Prison release sought Judge hears retarded man's case

By PAM MARCANONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A hearing was held earlier this week to decide whether a mentally retarded man convicted of beating a woman with a pipe will return to the state prison.

Fifth District Judge Douglas Kramer of Hatley took the case of 36-year-old John Howard Johnson under consideration.

For six months, Johnson has been serving a five-year sentence at the state penitentiary for conviction of aggravated battery. Johnson admitted beating a Twin Falls woman on Feb. 15, 1983.

However, Johnson's attorney, Greg Fuller of Twin Falls, had asked the court to reconsider Johnson's sentence. The prison is no place for a retarded individual, Fuller said.

He had suggested that Johnson be placed in a shelter home in Nampa, on probation, where he could receive treatment.

In October, Judge Daniel Meehl approved Fuller's request. Dennis Voorhees, a deputy Twin Falls county prosecutor, objected, however.

because he said that Johnson still was a risk to society.

Later, Meehl halted his order to release Johnson, and he disqualified himself from the case, at Voorhees' request. Kramer then took over.

On the stand, Johnson said Monday that other inmates at the prison farm have taken advantage of him and have made sexual advances.

"I walked away," Johnson said. Under questioning by Voorhees, Johnson said he has learned from his experiences to keep his hands off people and hurt nobody.

"That's why I'm in prison," Johnson said.

Johnson's brother-in-law and mother-in-law, as well as a neighbor who lived by him in Twin Falls, testified that Johnson was gentle and caring. They said they never had seen Johnson act violently.

Harold Anderson of Nampa, who operates the shelter home that Fuller had suggested, also testified that he did not believe Johnson would be a difficult one to manage.

Voorhees, however, questioned whether the shelter home was secure enough to protect society from Johnson.

Johnson.

Voorhees said he concurred with a doctor's psychiatrist who said that Johnson should be placed in a secure, therapeutic environment, where he could be watched 24 hours a day.

"That's all I want," Voorhees said. "He said he was not seeking to punish Johnson but wanted to protect society. And he said he did not believe Anderson's shelter home was secure enough to meet the recommendations of the psychiatrist."

However, Fuller said that the psychiatrist had suggested Anderson's home to him.

Johnson's act was an isolated incident, he said. At the prison farm, Johnson would receive no treatment. In addition, there was a risk he could leave the minimum-security facility. There would be the same risk with a shelter home, but at least, it would be a more conducive setting for Johnson, Fuller said.

Kramer said that the case was a difficult one.

"I'm very concerned about the protection of society and also the individual in this case. I don't know how long society can be protected," he said.

Minico-Bruin faceoff mapping league future

By LARRY HOVEY Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS — And you thought the Minico-Bruin encounter in Twin Falls tonight was just another basketball game. Listen, we're talking three distinct things here: 1. possible Gem State Conference championship; 2. home court advantage in the district tournament...

out Minico Athletic Director Mike Erling. "Twin Falls has to earn it's right." The difference in the two teams really is that Jan-7 meeting in Rupert — and the difference was very large that night. Minico beat Twin Falls in every aspect of the game except fouls.

ence championship since I came here five years ago," Dexter said. "And its good for our players to have that experience. Then, obviously, with the home court advantage in district it's very important. And it's important to Twin, too, because I'm sure they can beat us on a given night and they're telling each other that."

"I spent several years in that program and I know how much basketball means to them and the kind of coaching they are receiving from Coach Dexter. I will admit that I was a little surprised that they got off as well as they did. I thought they might lose a couple games in December but I've always felt that by this time, Minico would be playing as well as anyone. They had a solid nucleus of players coming back and some potential in the kids moving up. All of them have held up and improved very well."

As to actually playing this game, Dexter says he has the same game plan for Twin Falls he has against most. "We're going to try to do the things that have put us in this position, play good defense, rebound as well as we can and take quite the shots we know are ours," he said.

Fortunes vary at tourney For area wrestlers

By CHRIS HAFF Times-News writer

JEROME — Fortune, both ill and good, played a paramount role Thursday night in determining two team champions at the Fourth District Wrestling Tournament. A frightening injury to Minico 170-pounder Clay Cooper accidentally administered by Twin Falls' Mike Smith helped give the Spartans enough points to edge Mountain Home for the A-1 crown, 236 1/2-236.

Meanwhile, surprise performances by Stacey Dayley, Bruce Johnson and Shawn Hurst lifted Declo to the A-3 title. The Hornets amassed 148 team points to 130 for second-place Filer, which had its streak of two consecutive league championships ended.

As expected, the Jerome Tigers ravaged their competition winning each individual championship matches and four consolation finals to take the A-2 laurels easily, 224-161 over Buhl.

The top two finishers in the A-1 and A-2 divisions advance to the next week's three-day state tournament. In A-1, the top two placers and consolation-round winners advance.

"We were lucky. Very fortunate," Minico Coach Jerry Ennis said upon learning that the Spartans had indeed edged Filer's Mountain Home. Ennis declined to say Spartan's effort as pivotal. His top wrestlers, he felt, performed as expected. "We thought we had eight kids (Paul Thacker, Ricky Sallinas, Kory Thurston, Ron Haug, Sam Crane, Stacy Kay, Clint Cooper and Clay Cooper) with a chance of going to state, and that's what happened."

Clay Cooper's triumph, however, was the ugliest. At 1:15 of the second round Smith drove Cooper's head into the mat, immobilizing the Spartan. "It was an unfortunate situation," Twin Falls Coach Andy Barron said. "Mike's knees were down — there was a lot of pressure and force going into that. It's not the best situation and he's slammed somebody. The whole pressure came down on the side of (Cooper's) neck."

Cooper remained prostrate for about 20 minutes until attendants, one holding a cold pack to his left jaw, helped him from the gym. The extent of his injury was not known at press time.

Jerome will take 14 entrants to the state tourney, one less than last year. Yet this year's district showing represented an improvement for the Tigers.

"The nice thing about it was that everybody did a really good job," assistant Coach Leon Madsen said. "Our team score was 27 points better. And we had our best final round we've had all year."

Such was Jerome's dominance that only one championship-round final was Tiger-less. In three, one Jerome wrestler faced another.

Providing Declo with its winning impetus were the unseeded Dayley, who reached the 122-pound final and upset top seed Loren Miller of Wendell; Johnson, the 141-pound second seed who defeated No. 1 seed Travis Crane of Glenns Ferry in the finals, 9-4; and Hurst, who Mike Dayley was unseeded but tipped second-seeded Danny Anderson of Gooding on his way to the finals.

"They all worked hard," Declo Coach Jay Darrington said proudly. "They peaked at the right time." Team scores and consolation-round results appear in Scores and Stats, Page B-4.

Bengals top BSU by four

By STEVE CRUMP Times-News sports editor

POCATELLO — Basketball, for all its fancy ways, is first and foremost a street game. Boise State's Vince Hinchen and Idaho State's Buck Chavez ended up playing a little one-on-one Thursday night in a Big Sky Conference basketball game. Chavez won this time as the Bengals took an 85-81 victory.

"That was a good match-up," said ISU coach Wayne Ballard. "Hinchen and Chavez are both the same kind of players: about the same size, quick and smart."

Chavez, a 6-foot-5 senior from Marin, Calif., hit four free throws in the last 23 seconds to provide the margin of victory for ISU, but it was what he did against Hinchen — the Big Sky's leading scorer — that won the game for the Bengals. Hinchen picked up three quick fouls in the middle of the second half, all of them attributable to moves by Chavez. His fifth foul came on a charging call underneath the Boise State basket with 5:37 remaining in the game.

After Hinchen ran into Chavez, his layin dropped through the hoop. Had the shot counted, it would have brought the Broncos to within three points. Had Chavez been charged with a defensive foul instead, it would have put Hinchen at the free-throw line for two shots and sent Chavez to the sidelines.

As it turned out, Chavez hit both of his free throw opportunities giving ISU a seven point lead. "It was a judgement call on the referee's part," said Chavez, who also had one foul with a career-high 29 points. "It could have gone the other way, but it is nice to have our guy for a change."

Hinchen's third and fourth fouls were also charged while the 5-6 senior was trying in defense Chavez, who scored 20 points in the second half. "Buck Chavez is just a fine basketball player," said Boise State Coach Bobby Dye. "We knew he was going to be tough, but he played some kind of game tonight. Give credit to Coach Ballard. This is a well-coached team."

The victory, coming three days after Idaho State had forfeit Saturday's home game against Idaho for scheduling to many games, improved the Bengals record to 4-4 in conference and 25-14 overall. Boise State, which must play Weber State in Ogden Utah on Saturday, fell to 2-4 in Big Sky play and 11-8 for the season.

The game started out as if it would be much different, with Boise State outscoring the Bengals 12-6 in the first five minutes. But behind the shooting of 6-4 Junior forward Nelson Peterson, Idaho State rallied to score 38 points in 15 minutes and take a 44-40 lead into the locker room; Peterson hit five of eight shots from the field in the first half, all but one of them from beyond 20 feet.

The result was to take Boise State out of it's zone defense, and in the first few minutes of the second half, the Bengals had a field day. The Broncos missed five of their six shots from the floor and the Bengals got nine consecutive rebounds to open the second half.

That put Idaho State ahead by 14 points, at 62-48, with ten minutes left in the game. But that was when 6-7 forward Mike Williams picked up his fourth foul and Chavez was whistled for number four two minutes later.

With 39 seconds on the clock, BSU guard Mike Hazel fouled the Bengal's Tony Malvez, who missed the front end of a one-and-one free throw opportunity. The Broncos were pulled down the rebound and dishied the ball off on the fast break. Hazel drove to the basket, pulled up and shot the ball, which was blocked by Williams. The official called goaltending against ISU, awarding Boise State two points and cutting the lead to 61-59.

Squabbles on eligibility, 'torch' and Heiden ignite games

By D. BYRON YAKE AP Sports Editor

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia — Eric Helden took five gold medals away from the 1980 Winter Olympics and returned little or nothing to speed skating, a former teammate charged Thursday.

Controversy was a key word in Sarajevo, which sat ready for the 1984 Winter Games to begin 4 1/2 days. On the official level, the International Olympic Committee dealt with an issue involving the Los Angeles Olympics this summer and prepared to take up the sticky matter of eligibility in ice hockey. The United States and Canada have been sniping over possible Canadian plans to include players who have minor-league contracts on their Olympic roster. And on Thursday, the eligibility question touched the Finnish team. Willi Daume, chairman of the IOC's Eligibility Committee, said he would question at an IOC eligibility meeting the status of Hannu Kampure, a first-string goaltender for Finland, who played in one game for the Edmonton Oilers of the old World Hockey Association in the 1978-1979 season. "He did not follow the rules," Daume said. "He played in a professional league." Earlier, the IOC agreed not to interfere with a plan to have the Olympic torch carried through the United States at a cost of $3,000 per kilometer for sponsors. The small village of Olympia, Greece, population 700, site of the first Olympics, protested the commercialization of the torch — a protest joined by the government of Greece. — Los Angeles Olympic officials have said they will contribute the estimated $30 million in proceeds to youth sports centers. "The Olympic torch and the flame are the property of the IOC, not of Olympia," Monty Berlioux, director of the IOC said at a news conference. "The mayor of Olympia and the Greek Olympic Committee are only the guardians." With the Olympic torch here to be lit at Haverhill, an alternate on the 1980 United States speedskating team, ignited the first controversy by criticizing Helden, who will be an ABC commentator during the Winter Games. Helden was reticent even during the 1980 games and has not become a spokesman for speed skating interests since then.

"The '80 Olympics bring back fond memories, something I don't want to forget," said Helden in an ABC press release. "But I also don't want to live in 1980. I want to move on." He entered Stanford and will graduate in June and hopes to attend medical school and a career in sports medicine. Since 1980, Helden also entered competitive cycling and served as a commentator for ABC in several speed skating and cycling events. "He disappeared from our sport for four years," Henrikksen said. "His visibility would have given the sport more visibility," said Henrikksen. "We could have used a personality, an Arnold Palmer-type of personality. Someone who could court public exposure." He could have brought the sport the funding it needs and set it up in a way that he thought would produce the best results," said Henrikksen. "He could have become an awesome man by giving something back to the sport." — Helden, who was to arrive in Sarajevo on Thursday night, was not immediately available for comment, according to ABC spokesman Irv Brodsky. "There were other considerations" at the Olympic site on Friday, Helden said, officials were bemoaning too much snow on Mount Bjelasica, where the men's alpine races will be held. A major snow fall was expected Thursday night and heavy fog and soldiers standing by to haul in snow, officials had snow-scrapping machinery standing by to scrape off excess snow.

Baseball has no successor for Kuhn

FEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The principal owner of the San Francisco Giants said Thursday that neither Peter V. Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, nor anyone else has been chosen as the next commissioner of baseball.

"I can tell you unequivocally there is no commissioner of baseball," said Bob Lurie, a member of the special search committee seeking a replacement for Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

"If somebody had been picked and it had been worked out, it would have been announced," Lurie said in a telephone interview early Thursday with RKO Radio sports. "We all want to get this over with as quickly as possible for ourselves and the good of the game."

Lurie predicted that a choice would be made in the "near future." He did not elaborate, nor would he discuss possible candidates for the job. He did not say whether he planned to discuss the job with Ueberroth. Both men are in Pebble Beach for the Bing Crosby Pro Am golf tournament, but Ueberroth could not be reached for comment.

The Boston Globe reported Thursday that Ueberroth would replace Kuhn.

The Globe, quoting unidentified sources "inside baseball," said Ueberroth, 46, has reached an agreement with the committee to move into the position after conclusion of the Summer Olympics in mid-August.

Kuhn, who became commissioner in 1969, failed to get enough votes from the club owners to rekindle his contract. He has been serving in an interim capacity.

Ueberroth, who was scheduled to play in the golf tournament before leaving for Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, for the Winter Olympics, told the search committee it would be "unconscionable" to take the commissioner's job until after the Summer Olympics he helped organize, the Globe reported.

Payton a free agent

NEW YORK (AP) — Running backs Walter Payton of Chicago and Joe Cribbs of Buffalo and more than 200 other players became free agents Thursday, free to bargain with any of the 28 National Football League teams including their own.

Billy Sims of Detroit was originally on the list, but an NFL spokesman said that was in error. The running back, center of a court battle over his services, was said to be on his way to have signed a contract on Dec. 16.

Several other names on the list were reported to have signed contracts with their 1983 clubs. Joe Browne, the league's director of public information, said the list released Thursday, which included 217 names, may not have been updated.

Some players, like Cribbs, quarterbacks Brian Sipe of Cleveland, Cliff Stoudt of Pittsburgh and Vince Evans of Chicago, and tight end Dan Ross of Cincinnati, already have signed with NFL teams.

Some others, such as Cincinnati cornerback Ken Riley and New York Giants linebacker Frank Mariani, already have announced their retirement.

Each player has received a qualifying offer, meaning their 1983 team has the right to retain his services by matching any contract offer from another NFL team.

Ex-manager says Sims knew contract terms

DETROIT (AP) — Billy Sims was told of all the provisions in the contract he signed last July 1 with the Houston Gamblers, his former personal manager testified Thursday in federal court.

Gene Burrough, now general manager of the Houston team of the United States Football League, told judge Robert DeMascio that he read the complete contract to Sims before the Detroit Lions' running back signed it.

"I read it over and he listened well," Burrough said, adding that he did so because "most football players do not read detailed material, speculating that 'maybe they're lazy about it.'"

Last December, Sims sued to have the contract he signed with the Gamblers voided on the grounds that his then-agent, Jerry Argovitz, misrepresented him—and misled him—about negotiations with both the Gamblers and Lions.

Argovitz, a co-owner of the Gamblers, was in partnership with Burrough in a management agency at the time.

Sims signed a contract with the Lions of the National Football League, Dec. 16, saying he did not consider his contract with the Gamblers valid.

Burrough, who continued as Sims' manager until shortly after becoming the Gamblers' general manager, called Sims' move to sign with Houston "an emotional decision."

"He was disgusted with Detroit, he didn't have any love for Jerry," Burrough testified. "They had mis-treated him, they had lied to him."

Burrough added that Sims knew there was a potential conflict of interest in having he and Argovitz represent Sims during the negotiations, noting "Billy knew full well what my involvement was and what Jerry's was."

There was no effort made to inform the Lions about the Houston contract before it was signed, Burroughs said, claiming "we asked Billy several times if he should call and he insisted that we didn't call."

Murphy gains tie for lead

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP)—While most of the gallery congregated with the big-name players and celebrity amateurs at Cypress Point, veteran Bob Murphy took advantage of ideal weather and relative peace and quiet for a 67 and a share of the first-round lead Thursday in the 43rd Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

"For a while there, I really felt like I knew what I was doing," said Murphy, who birdied four-of-his first five holes at Spyglass Hill.

While some of the game's more celebrated players—including Tom Watson—had their first round of the extremely good greens at Cypress Point, the 40-year-old Murphy was tied for the top spot with Jim Nelford, a left-handed putter from Canada, and long-time partner, Tom Gray, a two-time Crosby champion from Arizona State.

Gray, who has missed the cut in his last three starts and has changed putters in every tournament this year, did not make a bogey in his 69 under-par effort at Pebble Beach. Nelford, who played at usually tough Spyglass, preserved his share of the top spot by making five of the 18 green greens.

Cypress Point, which often produces some of the best scores in the event that is played over three courses at the Monterey Peninsula, this time produced mostly misery.

"For example, there was Watson, a two-time Crosby champion—and winner of the first event of the 1984 season. He finished and thrashed to a tie 77 in sunny weather and gentle breezes off Carmel Bay.

At the same course, where the unusually good weather has provided the fastest greens the tournament has seen, Andy Dalton, a 70, former U.S. Open and PGA champion David Graham took a 77 and defending title-holder Tom Kite escaped with a 73.

"The greens were very, very fast. You get on the wrong side of the hole and you're in big trouble," said PGA champion Hal Sutton, one of the few able to master Cypress. He birdied seven of his first 11 holes, then had to work hard to preserve a 3-under-par 69.

Jack Nicklaus scored an eagle-3 and a 69 in his first competitive round of the year, also at Cypress Point. But he offset them with a double bogey and two bogeys and had to settle for a round of par-72. His amateur partner, former President Gerald Ford, helped the team three strokes.

Champions lead alpine team

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — World Cup champions Phil Mahre and Tamara McKinley head a talented 16-member alpine team which experts think might give the United States its first Olympic gold medal in ski racing in 12 years.

Not since Barbara Cochran won the slalom in the 1972 Winter Olympics at Sapporo, Japan, has the United States placed a skier on the top step of the victory platform. The best performance since then was Mahre's slalom silver in the 1980 games at Lake Placid.

Mahre, 26, of Yakima, Wash., has won three World Cup overall titles since then and comes into the XIV Olympic Winter Games as the acknowledged best all-around male skier in the world. Even though he hasn't won a race this season—a fourth is his best result—he has skied well recently and is apparently peaking for the Sarajevo Games, which open Feb. 7 and continue through Feb. 19. The alpine events begin Feb. 9 with the men's downhill, and the team was announced Thursday by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Phil's twin, Steve, also of Yakima, is the only American man ever to win a gold medal in world championship competition. He turned the trick in 1982 when he bested Sweden's Ingemar Stenmark in the giant slalom at Schladming, Austria.

For a decade, the Mahres have been the only male skiers of note for the United States. But this season, Bill Johnson, 23, of Van Nuys, Calif., has produced a "boost" in that most European-of-events, the downhill. He became the first American man to ever win a World Cup downhill when he captured the prestigious Lauberhorn event at Wengen, Switzerland. He comes into Sarajevo off a solid fourth at Cortina, Italy.

Women have delivered most of the Olympic medals won by American skiers — 11 of 14, including all four golds — and the strong contingent this year could continue that tradition. In addition to McKinley, the overall and giant slalom champion of 1983, the team includes dynamic Christine Cooper, a slalom and giant slalom virtuoso, and venerable veteran Cindy Nelson, a bronze medalist in downhill in the 1976 Olympics at Innsbruck who is penciled in to start all three events despite a knee injury.

The squad also features Rolly Pflanders, 26, of Deerfield, N.H., runner-up in the downhill standings in 1982 who has recently returned to form after a miserable 1983 season.

Trainer John Atkins has said of the women's chances: "If we put in the same amount of work as the Europeans we would not have a prayer. We have to work harder, sweat harder and cowboy it out. What wins is the slalom and bachelors' downhill."

McKinley, 21, of Lexington, Ky., set a team record with seven race victories last season in becoming the first American woman ever to capture the overall title. Prior to that, a third-place finish by Cooper in 1982 was the best.

Cooper has a second and three thirds and McKinley a pair of seconds this season. The duo ranks sixth and seventh, respectively, on the overall charts.

Nelson, a Lutsen, Minn., native who now resides in Vail, Colo., damaged a knee in the opening event of the season and has been undergoing a therapy program devised by the team's physician, Dr. Richard Steadman. Steadman's reclamation projects include the plate-and-screw rebuilding of Phil Mahre's ankle in 1979, a pair of knee operations on Steve Mahre and, most recently, surgery on Cooper's knee. All subsequently visited the winner's circle.

Joining the Mahres in slalom and giant slalom competition will be Tiger Shaw, 22, Stowe, Vt.; John Buxman, 23, Vail, Colo.; Mark Tache, 24, Aspen, Colo.; Hansi Staudelner, 23, Squaw Valley, Calif., and Dan Stripp, 22, Old Forge, N.Y.

Other downhillers include Mike Brown, 21, Vail, and Doug Lewis, 20, Salt Lake City, Utah. The women's team also includes downhill giant slalom skier Debbie Armstrong, 20, Seattle, Wash., and downhiller Maria Marichev, 22, Sun Valley, Idaho.

'Torch' to raise youth fund

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — Relay runners will carry the Olympic torch across the United States to Los Angeles next July raising $100 every kilometer for youth clubs — even though the Greeks think it's undignified.

The sponsored relay is the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee's idea for making money for American scouting and other youth activities.

The Greek Olympic Committee has complained that the sponsored run will commercialize the Olympic tradition of which Greeks are very proud. The International Olympic Committee (IOC), which owns the torch and the Olympic flame, Thursday reaffirmed its support of Los Angeles in the dispute. At the same time it expressed concern at reports of high prices expected in that city when the XXIII Olympic Games open there July 28.

"We have had meetings in the last few days of the IOC's press, television and radio commissions, and they were all worried about Los Angeles prices," IOC Director Monique Berlioux told a news conference Thursday.

"We have a delegation from the Los Angeles committee coming here to report to the IOC, and we are asking them for details of hotel and telephone prices."

The Los Angeles committee promised the IOC that hotel prices would not be increased after January 1, 1984. But in December one downtown hotel announced a hike in room rates from $80 to $120 per night.

Some European National Olympic Committees are reported unlikely to take up their full press quotas because of high prices, aggravated by the rising value of the dollar.

But a reporter who suggested that the Los Angeles committee is a "mercenary organization" concerned with making money was politely rebuffed by the IOC director.

"I would put it the other way round," Berlioux said. "I think the Los Angeles committee is first trying to provide good games for the athletes, and secondly is trying not to run into the red. I think we should commend Los Angeles for trying its best."

The Greeks are so sensitive about the sponsored torch relay that the mayor of Olympia, where the torch traditionally begins its journey from the site of the home of the ancient games, threatened to refuse to light it.

Berlioux said the IOC will meet with the Greek Olympic Committee in Sarajevo in the next few days to try to soothe ruffled feelings, he said. The sponsored relay will go on as planned.

"The IOC executive board approved the idea at Lausanne last November," she said. "The IOC is the owner of the Olympic flame, and the Greek Olympic Committee and the mayor of Olympia are only the guardians. We decide what is good and what is not."

The board learned of the death of the IOC's member in Turkey, 73-year-old businessman Sait Erler, a former Turkish swimming and highboard diving champion. He died as he was leaving his home in Istanbul for the Sarajevo meeting. The cause of death was not immediately known. His death brought the membership of the IOC down to 87, of whom 78 are expected in Sarajevo.

Artist traded status for life

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Jim Ginney decided to stop taking life so seriously five years ago, and his photography, now being shown at the Sunspot Gallery, reflects his decision.

In 1979, Ginney sold his Porsche, quit a $22,000 a year job with IBM in the Silicon Valley and hit the road with a travel-trailer to become a professional photographer and to live his dream.

One of the first places his travels took him was Ketchum, a town he continues to visit many times a year. The first time he visited Ketchum, he had only a few photographs to show, really more snapshots than art, he says.

But this week he was back in Idaho, with an extensive portfolio developed in five years of nearly full-time photography and enough experience to lead a workshop for College of Southern Idaho photography students.

He is leaving a collection of his work, drawn from groups of major subjects he has photographed, for a show in the gallery on the second floor of the Taylor Administration Building at the college.

The show is designed to show his range as a documentary photographer, he says.

"It's important to be open to more than one thing," he says. "People get stuck and never change."

Still, Ginney's style is evident with a careful viewing of the prints.

"I love to play with people's minds," he says. "Either a print needs enough impact visually to stand on its own or it makes a person smile," he says. "Something in a photograph for me is it's fun. But it's done in a serious way."

When photographing landscapes, Ginney says he is looking for more than the grandeur of the scene that classical photography artists work to capture.

"I'm more interested in the different levels of the print," he says.

In some prints, he shows classic scenes that most tourists would recognize, he says. But he subtly distorts the scene with filters and lenses to make new images.

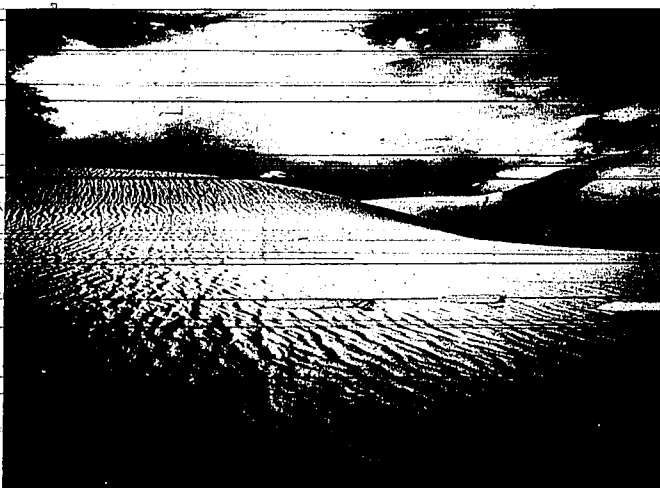

Another print in the exhibit shows a scenic sweep of dunes in Death Valley. But with a little imagination, a viewer can pick out body shapes in the natural landscape, Ginney says.

Other landscapes show the intrusion of modern day life into pastoral or desert scenes.

"I play games with people who are into the environment," he says. "Just because something is old and falling down is no reason to tear it down so the place is what it was 150 years ago. I'm not saying that is good or bad, but that you can make a billboard look beautiful."

When Ginney visited Alaska, it was how the newcomers lived that compelled his attention, more than the scenery around him. The resulting photographs show "plastic houses," often built of ripped clear plastic tied over structures made from rocks and driftwood and furnished with tires and sleeping bags.

Behind the makeshift shelters are serene beaches and the snow covered mountains that most viewers associate with Alaskan photography.

"People have ideas about rural life," he explains. "I like to show something taken from the city to the country and make people see that."

Not surprising for a man who has chosen an unusual lifestyle himself, Ginney often documents distinctive lifestyles. One of his favorite groups of prints shows the aging travel trailers the elderly visitors to a Nevada community live in during the winter.

Like the Alaska prints, there are no people in the pictures "because I wanted to show that it could have been anyone — you or I — living there," Ginney says.

The plastic house and travel-trailer series are not what most Idaho persons would consider art, Ginney admits.

"But I can't sit back and say this is very important. Either a person gets it or he doesn't," Ginney says his prints are selling as artwork, and he has worked as the parks department photographer of Death Valley. But he is dependent on income from giving workshops, and occasionally, from working in fish canneries or painting houses, he says.

And he still talks fondly of the Porsche he sold, even though he thinks leaving his job with IBM was the right decision.

"Lots of people think I've gone crazy," he says. "But what I'm doing is living my dream."

Ballet's fund-raiser tied to film with secret title

KETCHUM — It is dramatic, romantic and unforgettable — but it's title is a secret, says Hilarie Neely of a fund-raising film to be shown Feb. 12 and 13.

Neely, director of the Ballet School Foundation in Ketchum for which the benefit is being held, said the school can't release the name of the film because it has been classified by its distributors as "for private showing only."

That's made advertising somewhat of a problem. Posters, distributed around the Magic Valley leave off the title of the film, explains Neely. The distributor is allowing the non-profit ballet school to show the film as long as it does not advertise the film's name or give any specific details about the film.

Neely does say, however, that it is a classic film of the caliber of "Gone with the Wind."

"It's based on a novel, and it is a love story," she says. "Gone with the Wind," she says. "It is a historical film."

While Neely says she cannot reveal what year the film was produced, it was sometime in the 1940s and filmed somewhere in Europe, she says. The film won several Academy Awards when it was originally released, she says, adding that dancers would still recognize the name of the lead lady.

"It is considered one of the greatest dance films ever made," she says. "But persons who really are curious can call the Ballet School at 726-5003 to learn the name of the film."

"We can do that because it's not considered advertising," she says. The film will be shown Feb. 12 at the Liberty Theater in Hanley at 3 and 7 p.m. A complimentary glass of wine will be served to adults at the evening performance, Neely says.

The Feb. 13 showings will be at Old City Hall in Ketchum at 7 and 9:30 p.m. A champagne reception will be held after the Ketchum showings for purchasers of reserved-patron seats, which cost $3.50 and are partially tax deductible, Neely says.

Tickets for the other shows cost $14 for a family, $3.50 for adults and $2.50 for children under 12.

Mann sets potpourri of song

By TERRY RICH HARTLEY
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — In keeping with its promise of a busy winter, the Renaissance Academy of the Arts is presenting professional musician, Bill Mann, Wednesday at 8 p.m.

Raised in the Southeast, Mann began his musical career in Tampa, Fla., in 1965. Playing both acoustic guitar and mandolin, he performed with numerous bands and has been composing songs.

Mann says his solo stage performance is influenced by a wide variety of musical styles, including light rock, folk, country, country swing, bluegrass, American and British traditional, blues, reggae, big band swing and light jazz.

"I like most styles of music," he says, "and I try to keep my performances as varied as possible. I stay away from hard edged songs, however. Over the years I've come to prefer music that lifts people up and makes them feel good."

Mann says he likes to offer his audience a potpourri of songs including some selections from well-known songwriters, as well as many from obscure and often unpublished composers. And, of course, his own compositions, from the light rocking "Johnny and Moses" and the swiny "That Lowdown Jive" to the haunting "Songwriter's Dream."

"I try to be responsive to my audience's needs, and, in addition, I always try to give them something extra," he says. "I think that it's really important for all concerned to enjoy themselves. Very near the top of my priorities is a sense of humor. I like to laugh a lot, and I couldn't keep it off the stage even if I tried. People seem to appreciate that no matter what part of the world you're in."

In late 1975, Mann teamed with Janey Wing to form the duo "Eskimo Pie" and for the next 18 months they toured Holland, England, Germany, Denmark, Korea and East Africa.

In Denmark, the pair were invited to participate in the recording of the first album of the folk duo "Road Sweet Road." Besides playing acoustic lead, slide guitar, mandolin and singing harmony, Mann also contributed one song, "Straight Home To You," to the project.

From there, the pair went to Alaska where they formed a bluegrass band.

Songwriter, performer Bill Mann strives to be 'responsive'

'Scarface': A gangster film with modern twists

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — In "Scarface," director Brian DePalma has created an American nightmare, a horror story with monsters that look human, but are no less terrifying than any obscene creature from space.

"Scarface" mixes use of the standard gangster formula. A punk hood rises to stardom in the underworld and meets a bad end. The formula has been imposed on the wave of Cuban refugees to Miami in the 1970s, but instead of Prohibition booze, white cocaine is the maker of kings.

Tony Montana, played by Al Pacino, is an ambitious Cuban criminal who learned English from watching Humphrey Bogart and

Review

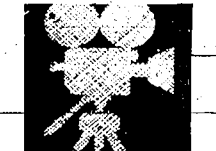

James Cagney movies. Tony wants it all and is smart, brutal and ruthless enough to get it. He is a crude, street-wise bad guy who wants to be a powerful, suave and gay. His aspirations are symbolized in Ellivra, the lean blond coke-sniffing moll of kingpin Frank Lopez.

Tony sets his eyes on Ellivra and on Lopez's kingdom.

When Tony hits the top, he creates a grotesque and gaudy stronghold, with an Olympic-size bath, silk shirts and a tiger in the backyard.

Yet, any resemblance between other gangster movies and "Scarface" stops at the formula. DePalma tells his story with gritty verve and twisted morals. He sprinkles subtlety among the gore.

When Tony is making a drug buy at a motel, a cop and robbers show flashes unobtrusively on the television. After Tony upholds his own particular warped sense of right — no doublecrossing — he looks up and sees an advertising blimp in the pale sunset tell him, "The World is Yours." Tony later emblazens the motto in neon.

What makes "Scarface" jive is Pacino, who gives his best performance in years. Gone are the earlier angry young-man roles because Tony is a heel through and through.

You can't take your eyes off Pacino. He's Tony in an intense and raw bundle of guts who knows no sense of others and knows only to feed, survive, fight and do it all with flash.

As Ellivra, Michelle Pfeiffer does well at being a bored bombshell with "Scarface" with help of a moody soundtrack. It's so effective that even the bright beaches of Miami seem to hold dread and death nearby.

"Scarface" is shocking and well done. It is a horror story about a monster with a gun, $800 suits and a perverted sense of the American dream.

The film is not for the weak in stomach or sensitive of ear. Tony's vocabulary consists of a four-letter word and its derivatives. It justly earns its R rating for such talk and the violence. But, such is the dark world of Tony Montana.

DePalma is no stranger to creating darkness and suspense. In films like "Carrie," and "Dressed to Kill," DePalma maintains a feeling of uneasiness and doom in an audience.

He does it extremely well in "Scarface" with help of a moody soundtrack. It's so effective that even the bright beaches of Miami seem to hold dread and death nearby.

"Scarface" is shocking and well done. It is a horror story about a monster with a gun, $800 suits and a perverted sense of the American dream.

Plot set to counter-program Olympics

By BOB WISEHART
Newhouse News Service

UNDATED — What's that? You don't know a luge from a lunge? Does a hockey puck move too fast for your eye to follow? Do the words double axle bring to mind the greasy underside of an automobile instead of what figure skaters do while trying not to fall on their knees?

Sure, ABC paid $91.5 million for rights to the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, and the network will air 65-plus hours of it from Feb. 6 through Feb. 19.

But do you care? A lot of people do. That's why ABC paid all that money for all those hours.

But NBC and CBS won't take the Winter Olympics lying down. Kneeling down, yes, in prayer that ABC (which has broadcast seven Summer and Winter Olympics since 1960) won't benefit from an unpredicted dramatic story like the U.S. hockey team's stunning upset of the Russians at Lake Placid in 1980.

The name of the game is counter-programming. In addition to the Olympics, it's also a sweeps month, when the TV audience is counted to set advertising rates. Let's look at some of the outstanding ordinary things CBS and NBC will throw against old man Winter Olympics.

Feb. 5: This is before the Olympics start, but the TV competition begins to heat up. CBS will get us in an Olympian mood with "Chariots of Fire," the exhilarating movie about two British runners (Ben Cross and Ian Charleson) and the pursuit of excellence in a more innocent time 60 years ago.

Feb. 7: "The Sky's No Limit!" Is a TV movie with Sharon Gless, Anne Archer and Dee Wallace as astronauts vying to be the first woman in space. It doesn't soar like an eagle. It waddles like a turkey.

Feb. 8: "A Good Sport" is another TV movie, a comedy with Lee Remick and Ralph Waite. She's an elegant fashion magazine editor and he's a rough-and-tumble New York City sports columnist. They don't like each other, but they like each other, if you know what I mean. Seem familiar? Think back to "Woman of the Year" in 1942 with Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn.

Feb. 14 and 15: What more can be said about "Gone With the Wind," which CBS will spread over two nights? It's 45 years later, and Rhett Butler still doesn't give a damn.

Feb. 19, 20 and 21: CBS' big gun for the month is "Master of the Game," a nine-hour mini-series based on the Sidney Sheldon novel. Dyan Cannon plays Kate Blackwell, a Venus flytrap who eats the people in her life and is so rich she has gold-plated money. Cannon ages from 20 to 90. With Ian Charleson, Harry Hamlin, Donald Pleasance, Leslie Caron, David Brinley and Jean Marsh.

NBC:

- Feb. 5: The late Henry Fonda and Katharine Hepburn grow old together in "On Golden Pond."
- Feb. 6: As a TV series, "Little House on the Prairie" burned down. But it miraculously reappears as a TV movie with Michael Landon, Karen Grassie and Melissa Gilbert.
- Feb. 10: "The Fantastic World of D.C. Collins" has Gary Coleman as a diplomat's son and fulltime day-dreamer, sort of a Walter Mitty Jr. With Fred Dryer, Marilyn McCoo, Michael Ansara and George Gobel.

- Feb. 12, 13 and 14: "Celebrity" is a crackling mini-series based on the late Tommy Thompson's novel, a panoramic six and one-half hours story of three Texas high school buddies who rise to fame and fortune but are haunted by the dastardly deed they committed as youngsters.

Patty Hadley says the church is providing most of the housing and meals for the chorus, which is enroute to Boise.

United Artists and its own labels and has made a number of specials for NET, CBS and BBC.

John Denver is an alumnus of the group.

The chorus consists of over 100 boys between the ages of 8 and 15. The touring group of 28 boys is composed of the best voices from the Training and Townesmen Chorus, says Hadley.

There is no charge for the concert, but donations will be accepted after the performance.

After 2 Oscar-winning films, actor gets only recognition

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — The only actor to appear in each of the last two Academy Award-winning best pictures, "Chariots of Fire" and "Gandhi," could walk the streets of Hollywood without being recognized.

IAN CHARLESON
Chariots of Fire, Gandhi

Jan Charleson gets respect but not much attention. In fact, his costar, Bryan Cannon, in this month's "Master of the Game" misrepresents, didn't get to meet him until after that nine-hour movie had finished production.

"Hi, I'm Bryan," Miss Cannon said, clasping Charleson's hand when the two were brought together for a recent press conference. "I admire your work."

Actually, Charleson once passed Miss Cannon during a shooting break, but "she didn't recognize me," he said. He was wearing a wig and take beard at the time.

That the credit met was really a fluke of filming. In CBS' "Master of the Game," which will be broadcast Feb. 19, 20 and 21, Charleson plays Jamie McGregor, an ambitious diamond prospector who dies in the first episode — before he can share a scene with his grown-up daughter (Miss Cannon).

"Master of the Game" conflicts with ABC's Winter Olympics only on Feb. 19, the last day of the Stanley Cup playoffs. "It's the only part," Charleson said, "and people will be watching people skiing down slopes."

Before that appearance, Charleson gets additional American TV exposure in the syndicated "Chariots of Fire" this Sunday. It should be his biggest shot yet. When Charleson said he almost turned down the Liddell part, fearing it was too goodly-goody. "It's hard to play someone who is so virtuous without making him somehow unappealing," he said.

His character in "Master of the Game" breaks the divine typecasting, although once again, he's Scotsman with an "identistic" nature. But that doesn't last. "I like the opportunity to be mean," Charleson said. "I get to rant and rave, and even die on screen."

Charleson said he didn't particularly enjoy reading Sidney Sheldon's soapy "Master of the Game."

"It's a good story, but not great literature," he said. "It's not Anna Karenina, but I was bored with doing all Chekhov and Ibsen. I like to do good stories." And, besides, "Master of the Game" was filmed in Africa, a place he could turn down a job in Kenya.

In choosing scripts, Charleson said he goes by "smell."

"Some things just grab you," he said. "My one rule with scripts is that if I'm still reading them an hour later, then that's the impact they'll have on the screen."

"Chariots of Fire" ran on cable last spring. It didn't attract large audiences.

"Chariots was disappointing," said Steve Scheffer, in charge of movie acquisitions at HBO. "It was primarily an off-shore film, with no names in the cast."

In that film, Charleson, a Scot, played Eric Liddell, a Scottish missionary and world-class runner. The gentle Liddell believed his talent was God's gift, and that calling helped him find the motivation to qualify for a berth on Great Britain's 1924 Olympic team.

Charleson played another idealistic minister in "Gandhi." His character was one of Gandhi's first followers.

'New' Lennon album modest

By GEORGE KANZLER
Newhouse News Service

NEW YORK — Three years after his assassination, John Lennon has returned to the airwaves with six new songs, half of an album that, like the last one he gave us while alive, alternates cuts by Lennon and his widow, Yoko Ono.

"Milk and Honey," John Lennon-Yoko Ono (Polydor Records), is one of those really modest works that is nonetheless essential, being, as it is, the last testament of one of pop music's most important artists.

Yoko Ono has produced it as "A Heart Play," an unabashedly romantic love story reinforced by the very intimate pictures of the two together — on the jacket, and given romantic resonance with the inclusion of epigraphs from two poets who lived one of the great romantic love stories of the 20th century — Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

The Browning poems — his "Grow Old With Me" and her sonnet, "How Do I Love Thee? Let Me Count the Ways" — form the basis for the two songs that Yoko sets central to the album, John's "Grow Old With Me," and her own "Let Me Count the Ways." Both are presented in forthrightly artless versions recorded on cassette at home, with the added poignancy that "Grow Old With Me" was John's last recording.

According to Yoko, "For John, 'Grow Old With Me' was one that would be a standard, the kind that they would play in church every time a couple gets married. It was horns and symphony time."

As it exists on the album, it has the plaintive charm of a folk song, with a simple, hymn-like benediction. Whether it could bear the weight of a symphonic arrangement is doubtful.

It is one of four songs that take on macabre, subtextual meanings in the harsh light of the assassination. The others are "Borrowed Time," about learning to live a day at a time; "Nobody Told Me," with the chillingly prophetic refrain: "Nobody told me there'd be days like these, Strange days indeed, most peculiar, mama." The ironically titled, "I Don't Wanna Face It" — song is the best, most fully realized Lennon on the album, and it also serves as half of the most effective pair of songs. It is followed by Yoko's "Don't Be Scared." John's song poses problems about living in a world that demands moral imperatives from him, while Yoko's offers personal love as an answer.

Lennon's wrestling with the problems of "looking for a world of truth" reminds us that even though he craves for love in most of these songs, it was his moral commitment that made him such a very special pop artist. Even when he casts a jaundiced eye on politics and public issues, as in "Nobody Told Me," it is comforting to know that he was still engaged by them.

When he informs us that he, the house husband, is "stepping out" for the night on the album's opening song, we feel confident that he would have eventually become engaged with all the public issues that were "out" there. Lennon was an artist who could not ignore the moral issues of the time, even if he did write songs as sentimentally naive as "Forgive Me" or "My Little Flower Princess," the weakest of his contributions to "Milk and Honey," with its treacly Caribbean lounge beat.

As for Yoko, her songs here are moving in the context of her tragic loss, as well as being incisively contemporary. At least one, "Sleepless Night," is as emotionally involving as anything she has ever done.

grass band and did a six-week tour of the state before the week-end party camp for a year and a half while Mann moved back to Florida to play lead singer and rhythm guitarist for "The Palm Breeze Band."

"But the palm breeze" must have been blowing north by northwest because the musician found himself back in the 49th state to join a trio composed of himself, Wing, and

Stephen Kenyon. The trio, "The Tilt" cut an album of original music half of Mann's songs on it.

Wishing to pursue his own career, the musician left the other two and moved to Seattle, Wash., where he began doing road gigs along the West Coast. He has since come to call the Northwest home.

"There are some stunningly beautiful places in this immediate area," he says. "There is also a very creative flow here. That's important for a songwriter, or any artist, actually. I'm very glad to be here."

He says his first solo album, consisting of 12 original songs and entitled "Solo Dancer," will be available in the near future.

Tickets for the Wednesday night performance can be purchased at the Sunshine Corner, Warner Music, Ann's Hallmark and the Music Center.

An inventor named James Puckle in 1718 patented a gun designed to shoot round bullets at Christians and square bullets at Turks. When your great, great granddad was a lad, it was against the law in Massachusetts for anybody there to own a pet dachshund. Among even the most ardent of football fans, not one in umpteen jillion knows the prescribed width of the U.S. football field. Bet on it. Then ask around. Few will say $3 1/3 yards. How many is "a few"? In the New Testament, St. Peter says it's eight. WEST VIRGINIA Already mentioned that West Virginia is at the top of the list when it comes to the count of residents who own their own homes. In another category, though, it's at the bottom of the list. Only 36.5 percent of its women hold down payroll jobs. Nationwide now, about 50 percent of the women are in the work force. It is also true that West Virginia has fewer college graduates - 10.4 percent - than any other state. In no society in the history of mankind have men and women been treated alike. Nor have they dressed alike. Nor have they done the same sorts of work. So wrote Vance Packard. AVALANCHES AND LIQUOR Snow avalanches have killed 257 people in this country since 1950. Death tragedies do not serve well in comparisons. Still, it should be noted that drunken drivers kill more people than that in four days. That Cesare Beltrami of Lyons, France, died of pneumonia is only noteworthy here because of the fact that he'd been struck by lightning five times previously. Odds you'll be injured in a car smashup in this country are high, true. But they're not as high, surprisingly, as the odds you'll be the victim of a violent crime. Informing others of what you want from them, this will bring excellent results today. Safeguard fundamental interests. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You have a fine idea how to add to present income and should put it in motion right away. Use care in driving. AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Early get personal affairs handled intelligently. Get financial affairs in order and stay within your means. PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Make that plan quickly so that you can gain more prosperity in the future, but don't be too demanding later. IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY, he or she can easily learn about such things as computers, robots and the like and will strive for a New Era kind of profession. Your progeny will always do things a little differently from others, so don't try to change.

Parents oust boyfriend for his bedroom antics

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend, Roger (not his real name), is in big trouble with my parents because they caught him in my room at 2 a.m. My father told Roger that he was not to come back until they (my parents) told him he could.

I totally understand their reasons for this, but I am afraid to ever bring up the subject because my father might blow up. Roger would like to come over and apologize to my parents and ask for a second chance, but I'm afraid to even mention his name.

I love Roger and want to be able to see him again, but how can I arrange it?

—AFRAID TO BRING IT UP
DEAR ABBY: Allow for a cooling-off period of about two weeks. Don't sulk or moon around or act deprived or mistreated. Then tell your parents that Roger wants to come over and apologize to them in person and ask for a second chance to be accepted.

Most parents would accept a sincere apology and agree to a second chance. And if you do, Roger had better respect your parents' rules, or his real name will be "Mud."

DEAR ABBY: After reading about "Tex" Langburg, the "terrier" you knew in Sioux City, Iowa, who would eat only kosher food, I had to write. My oldest daughter is married to an orthodox Jew, so not only does she keep kosher, she buys special food for the Passover holiday.

The first year she was married, we all went to her house for Passover, and I saw her feeding her goldfish Passover matzo meal instead of the usual fish food! I told her the fish would surely die. She said that was a Jewish home and the goldfish would have to eat whatever they ate.

Well, the fish loved the matzo meal! I'm sure it knows when Passover is near because it becomes very irritable. You may think this is funny, but it's a true story.

MARGARET FREEMAN, SAN DIEGO
DEAR MARGARET: Thanks for a wonderful fish tale.

DEAR ABBY: You were wrong to

tell that 21-year-old mother to leave her 3-year-old daughter at home or she could kiss her boyfriend goodbye. The mother said the child fussed and spoiled her evening when she took her on dates with her boyfriend.

If her boyfriend can be upset by a 3-year-old, then she should kiss HIM goodbye now. What would he do if they married? Slap the child around for fussing?

I speak from experience. I was a 21-year-old widow with a baby. When I met the man I eventually married, I took the child everywhere we went. That way I had a "father" for my baby as well as a boyfriend.

Many a widow and divorcee will marry a great guy who isn't any kind of a father—thus child abuse, and in the end, no marriage. I say, take your child with you on dates. You will sure weed out the bums fast.

—HAPPILY MARRIED FOR 34 YEARS IN TEXAS
DEAR HAPPILY MARRIED: I agree that a "single woman" with children to raise should not marry a man who doesn't love children. But I wouldn't recommend taking a child along on the first date, or there might not be a second.
(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

TV hit takes type casting

LOS ANGELES (AP)— Casting the bit parts on "Hill Street Blues" is a lot like picking characters from a police lineup. The right types look like they could have done the crime. "We're looking for a definite city person, nobody who looks rural," said Lori Openden, director of casting for NBC's gritty cop show. "You must get a 'feel' that they belong on the hill, that they belong in a lower socioeconomic level."

Ms. Openden rejects "the Californian look, the blond, beach-boy type and anybody who looks like an actor." She said walk-ons for "Simon & Simon" wouldn't get a look on "Hill Street."

"For the purpose of the story line, the writers will write Latin, black or white on the script," Ms. Openden said. "Then I meet with the producers and director about the characters. When I audition, I want criminals who look like criminals. Our show doesn't have a lot of white-collar crime."

Besides incorporating hard knocks and hot sidewalks into their characters, the irregular players on "Hill Street" must act with a passion and an oomph, a touch of humor. In talent and performance, these secondary roles resemble the minor parts that contribute to the success of the great British works on "Masterpiece Theatre."

"Hill Street" gets highly trained performers because many actors are fans of the show and covet the roles. Also, the non-Hollywood profile of the parts allows Ms. Openden to scout both coasts for talent.

"And, more than any other show, 'Hill Street' hires black and Hispanic actors—for roles on both sides of the criminal justice system."

"We're real careful about bad guys not always being black and Hispanic," said Ms. Openden. "We rotate the criminals as much as we can. But the problem is that 'Hill Street' takes place in a ghetto, and certain types of people tend to live on the hill."

THE ACES BOBBY WOLFF
As the firefly only shines when on the wing, so it is with the human mind when at rest, it darkens. Letitia E. London.

East can take his top hearts quickly or he can... South does well to compete to three spades. Three hearts is unbeatable and unless East is alert, South will make three spades.

East wins the first heart and the dummy tells him He can save himself only two heart tricks, so if the hand is going down, West must hold at least three black suit winners.

At trick two, East should shift to his club seven. Whatever tricks West has in trumps will always be his. If he has any, they will disappear.

ANSWER: One heart. Intruding the four-card major in preference to raising clubs. Send bridge questions to The Aces, P.O. Box 1293, Dallas, Texas 75222.
