House passes $304 million school fund bill

By QUANE KENYON
The Associated Press

BOISE — A controversial budget bill granting public schools $304 million in state support for next year is on its way to Gov. John Evans.

The Republican majority in the House held together just enough votes to pass the bill Monday over opposition from a coalition of moderates and Democrats. Then, late in the day, as opponents of the bill worked to change minds on it, the majority won a 53-31 vote for immediate adjournment that prevented consideration and meant the bill was on its way to the governor. Earlier in the day, Evans said he did not like the bill, but probably will not veto it.

The key vote of the public school funding bill, which spends more than half of all revenue the state takes in for the year, was 43-41.

The vote actually was 43-41, but Rep. Steve Herndon, D-Sandpoint, switched his vote at the last second to be on the prevailing side. He had the bill held for possible reconsideration later in the day.

That effort failed when the House voted to adjourn. Also killed were efforts to reconsider two Senate bills, which go back to that body to agree on House amendments.

One change in the water for a permit truck tax system to a flat registration fee. The second will charge insurance companies interest if the company rejects an attempt at settlement of a claim, but it later is approved by a judge.

The Senate bill has to act on a companion measure, granting higher education $88 million from the general fund. That bill already has cleared the House.

The only major budget bill still not near passage as of Monday night was the $8 million appropriation for the state Department of Education. It's been stalled in the House for about a week.

Evans said earlier that although he wants more money in the education budgets, there seems to be little justification to veto the bill in hopes of winning a more money.

The House argued most of the day whether the public school funding was adequate, or an amount that would lead to a decline in the quality of education in the state.

Several opponents argued that the 1984 Legislature made a commitment to the Public School Improvement Act, promising continuing funding for the new career ladder program and higher salaries for teachers.

Sponsor Rep. Mack Nelbaur, R-Paul, called the school bill a "good, solid budget" that will allow school districts to continue operations at the same levels.

But others disputed that. They said at least another $2 million was needed to maintain current operations.

Rep. Robert Orr, R-Horseshoe Bend, led an effort to put the bill up for amendment, eventually losing a 44-40 vote.

On the final vote Rep. Gary Montgomery, R-Boise, switched his vote from the GOP majority to vote against the bill.

Montgomery said later he didn't like the education budget, but couldn't vote to increase it unless there is more tax revenue available to pay for it.

In another key vote, moderate Rep. Gary Robbins, R-Dietrich, made a similar comment. He said he could support higher spending for schools.

LDS not blocking merger

By DEAN S. MILLER
Times-News writer

MURTAUGH — The Murlaugh LDS church does not appear to be involved in any organized opposition to the consolidation of the Hansen, Kimberly and Murlaugh schools, church and school officials say.

Last week, an article written by The Times-News, Rep. Dean S. Miller, Twin Falls, said it had been told by church members that the Murlaugh LDS church was attempting to block consolidation efforts.

She said she was told a high official of the community in Murlaugh was unwilling to discuss the matter with her. "It's a tight group that considers church activity over school activity," Scott said.

"It would be foolish to have consolidation without Murlaugh. To me it's a foolish and unwise thing to do," she said. "I know very well that down the road it means a better educational opportunity for their children," Scott said.

There's a big world out there, eventually those kids are going to discover there's a real world out there they've got to deal with."

But Bishop William Nebeker says the church has no position on consolidation and has not been involved in blocking consolidation efforts.

"As far as the church itself is concerned, there is no decision-making whatsoever," Nebeker said Monday.

"The membership is encouraged to study it out, make themselves aware and by all means vote."

Murlaugh Superintendent Sam Saxon says church members are split over the issue. "Unequivocally, there are members of the LDS church who are volenteers for it and there are members who are volenteers against it."

Saxon said there are members who deplore the division and feel that the church should stand united.

Brent Stoney, a member of the committee that studied the feasibility of consolidation and a member of the Murlaugh LDS church, says there is no LDS church-organized effort to block consolidation. "There's people in the consolidation that are for it and against it," Stoney said Monday night.

Murlaugh board member David Moyes said Monday evening the church is not organizing opposition to consolidation.

Moyes, a Murlaugh LDS church member, says he opposes the current consolidation proposal because it has never been made appealing to Murlaugh residents.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev is new party chairman in the USSR.

Reagan skips chance to meet Soviet leader

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, skipping a chance to meet the Kremlin's new leader, said Monday he decided not to attend the funeral of Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko because he was busy visiting with other foreign leaders and "didn't see anything that could be achieved" by going to Moscow.

The president, whose administration now has spanned four Soviet leaders, said he would be more than ready to visit with the new Soviet Communist Party chief, Mikhail Gorbachev, 54, once he settles into office. Reagan did not meet with any of Gorbachev's predecessors.

"You have to wait for a new man now to get in place and establish his regime, and then I'll be more than ready to meet," he said. "I think there's a great mutual suspicion between the two countries. I think ours is more justified than theirs," Reagan said.

"I'd like to have a talk and see if some way we can't someday have a meeting of minds," the president said, standing before a huge bank of television cameras in the State Dining Room at the White House after a luncheon with regional editors and broadcasters.

Later, Reagan was driven by limousine to the Soviet Embassy, several blocks from the White House, where he signed an official book of condolences. Soviet officials, wearing red armbands, watched as the president placed a message in the book, which had been placed on a table beneath a photograph of Chernenko.

"My condolences and sympathy to Chairman Chernenko's family and to the Soviet government and people in this time of bereavement," Reagan wrote. "I wish to reiterate the strong desire of the American people for world peace."

The president also sent a message of condolences to the Soviet leadership and people, saying, "At this solemn time, I wish to reiterate the strong desire of the American people for world peace."

Reagan tapped Vice President George Bush to head a funeral delegation that includes Secretary of State George F. Shultz and Arthur A. Hartman, the U.S. ambassador to Moscow. Bush also represents the United States for the funeral of Leonid I. Brezhnev in 1982 and Yuri V. Andropov in 1984.

Gorbachev in power as Soviets shift swiftly

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko is dead at 73 and his youngest lieutenant, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, took power Monday in a lightning shift away from the aged elite that has ruled this secretive nation for two decades.

The Kremlin announced Monday afternoon that the long-ailing Chernenko, a staunch fighter for Communism, had died at 7:20 p.m. Sunday. He was 73 years old.

Chernenko's death marked the end of a 13-year reign. Gorbachev, 54, was named as the ruling Politburo member chosen to succeed Chernenko in the most important Kremlin post — Communist Party general secretary.

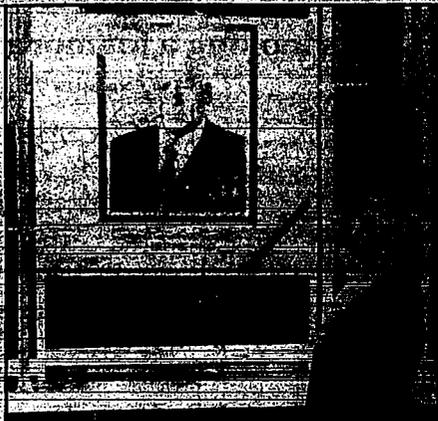

Chernenko was the third Soviet party leader and president since 1962. And his 13-month tenure was the shortest ever for a Kremlin chief.

But, although Gorbachev's accession to the post of general secretary marked a transition to a new generation of leadership, it was not expected to mean major alterations in either Soviet domestic or foreign policy.

In his acceptance speech Monday, Gorbachev said the party forged under Chernenko's predecessors, Leonid I. Brezhnev and Yuri V. Andropov, "remain unchanged."

Gorbachev is considered a staunch supporter of Andropov's reform-minded economic policies, more so than Chernenko was. Those policies included a crackdown on corruption and ineffectiveness, and efforts to boost individual initiatives for Soviet workers.

The sudden transition at the top came on the eve of U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms-control talks in Geneva, Switzerland, reopening after a 16-month suspension. The delegations announced Monday they would begin the discussions as scheduled Tuesday.

Kremlin policies to change slowly

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mikhail S. Gorbachev is a hard-nosed pragmatist who may bring new style to the Kremlin, but he'll probably wait before trying to shift the policies of the Politburo elders, Western experts said Monday.

"His life is so softy, he is a very tough, tough cookie, but a very smooth one," said Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was national security adviser under President Jimmy Carter.

Leader's profile — 85

Gorbachev, 54, was deputy general secretary of the Communist Party, the most powerful Soviet post, a few hours after official media announced the death of his predecessor, Konstantin U. Chernenko. Gorbachev is the youngest member of the ruling 10-man Politburo and the youngest man to head the party in more than 60 years.

Yakov Gorkov, an expert on Soviet affairs, said Adam Uram, director of the Harvard University Russian Research Center, "she will first have to establish a power base."

The other nine members of the Politburo are of the old guard. They want a chairman of the board, not a boss, Uram said in a telephone interview. "He needs to bring his own people, probably younger people, into the team."

Doctors say the president is in better health than he appears

WASHINGTON, March 12 (AP) — A group of doctors says the president is in better health than he appears to be. The doctors, who were part of a medical team that treated the president's heart condition, say they are confident that the president will continue to improve. They say the president's heart is now in better shape than it was when he was first diagnosed with the condition. They say the president's blood pressure is now under control. They say the president's cholesterol level is now under control. They say the president's overall health is now better than it was when he was first diagnosed with the condition.

Idaho prison inmates held in cells

BOISE (AP) — Tactical officers had to storm a close-custody unit at the state penitentiary Monday to prevent inmates from seizing three guards, a spokesman said.

Deputy Director of Corrections, Lt. James J. Wilbur, said several guards during a disturbance that left four other corrections officers injured.

Corrections Department Director Al Murphy said the prisoners are under lockdown, which means they are confined to their cells.

Larson said three corrections officers escaped to the roof of a close-custody unit as inmates broke through the glass to the unit's control room. The inmates had used furniture to break through a door leading to the area where the control room is located, he said.

Murphy said inmates broke up tables and furniture to make battering rams and weapons.

Idaho State Police and Ada County sheriff's officers were called for assistance, but the prison tactical unit had to act before aid arrived because the three guards' lives were in danger, Larson said.

Jackson, son under arrest

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson was arrested outside the South African embassy Monday along with two of his sons in an anti-apartheid demonstration, the civil rights leader called "non-cooperation with evil."

Jackson and sons Jesse Jr., 20, and Jonathan, 19, were arrested after going to the door of the embassy and holding hands while singing "We Shall Overcome."

Barbados leader dies Monday

BRIDGE TOWN, Barbados (AP) — Prime Minister Tom Adams, one of the English-speaking Caribbean's most prominent leaders and a key backer of the 1983 U.S. invasion of Grenada, died Monday of a heart attack, the government said.

There had been reports that Adams was ill and his death stunned residents of this tranquil resort island. The prime minister, who had been in office since 1976, completed a two-week trip to Japan and Jamaica March 1 and held a news conference after his return.

Adams was elected prime minister in 1976 and was re-elected in 1981 as leader of this island of 250,000 people.

Soviets

Gorbachev said in his speech that the Soviet Union wants a major reduction of the arms race and pledged to strive for arms control of the peoples of the world world with relief of the world's suffering.

He said the Soviets value the relaxation of international tensions achieved in the 1970s and would welcome peace accords based on respect and cooperation. But he also stressed the importance of maintaining the Soviet freedom peacefully.

From Washington, President Reagan sent a message of condolence to the Soviet Union, saying "in order to reduce the strong desire of the Soviet people for world peace."

Western diplomats here noted that Gorbachev's an agriculture and economic specialists who recently has taken on foreign missions as well, has been part of a collective Kremlin leadership.

Finally, at 2 p.m. Monday (Moscow time), the Tass news agency carried the death announcement, which was broadcast simultaneously over broad- casting stations.

It said Gorbachev had died "after a grave illness" and that the name of this "staunch fighter for the ideals of Communism and for peace with mankind" would be remembered by the Soviet people and of the whole of progressive mankind.

A later medical bulletin said he died of the lung disease emphysema, complicated by cardiac, digestive and chronic hepatitis that developed in the last years of his life.

Tass said Gorbachev would be buried Wednesday in Red Square, where all but one of his predecessors — the ousted Nikita S. Khrushchev — are interred.

The City of Moscow Monday donated its mourning garb for the third time in just over two years. Red buildings added a swathe of color to Gorky Street and other central thoroughfares.

On Monday evening, Gorbachev led Politburo members into the House of Unions, where Chernenko lay in state in a flower-decked coffin, to pay respects.

Chernenko had not filled three vacancies on the Politburo during his 13 months in power, and six of those remaining on the body are older than 70, noted Marshall L. Goldman, an expert on the Soviet economy.

"If he is smart, he will just let them die off," said Goldman. "He's got to bring in new blood. But he's probably got to go a little slower to see who his friends and enemies are. He does have a reputation for being a reformer, which he has taken over its breath-taking."

Brzezinski predicted that Gorbachev's Kremlin would make no major changes in foreign policy, but would launch "a major peace offensive" to undercut western support for the Reagan Administration; arms building on the body are older than 70, noted Marshall L. Goldman, an expert on the Soviet economy.

Such a campaign, he said, would "wrap the West with offers" with proposals, with attempts to divide the allies from the United States, with defensive to put the United States on the defensive with regard to the Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as "Star Wars."

The most important, immediate change in the Kremlin, may be the image of vigorous leadership after ing for education, only if there was some form of tax increase to pay for it.

Neibaur described the appropriation as a 4 percent increase overall, including a 10 percent increase in state funding. He said it would allow districts to increase salaries 3.5 percent, operating expense could go up 9.5 percent and districts would have a 5 percent increase in capital outlay.

He said the legislation also contains $1.8 million specifically earmarked for instructional materials.

Neibaur said many people calling for improved education funding are less willing to support changes in the quality of education.

"We're saying if we put more money into education, it will improve the quality. I personally can't buy it."

Neibaur said it would be easy to approve another $20 million to $30 million for education "if we could have more people get better education of their children" rather than raising teacher salaries.

He said in 1980, the average Idaho teacher salary was $13,600; by 1985 it was $19,850 and the average next year should reach $20,600.

Other legislators said taxes more money is put into education, it may have to be increased.

"We have short memories," said Rep. Larry Echols. "D. Poetzelle made last year 'Where is the justification for not following pledged continuing support for the school improvements started last year."

"I'm having an identity crisis. Which Republican Party do I represent?" he asked.

He said he was leading water for a long time on education. At least keep us treating water instead of going under," said Rep. Pam Bengson, R-Boise.

Rep. Reed Hansen, R-Idaho Falls, said the Legislature was "not keeping faith" with the promises made last year. He said he's a farmer and a taxpayer.

He said he's ready to support reasonable efforts to support education. "We must make an honest attempt," Herndon said the Legislature must make a continuing commitment to education. "Not one that we can make one year and forget the next year when things are tough," he said.

Rep. L. Ed Brown, R-Pocatello, reminded members that the Idaho Republican Party platform for 1984

Evans signs no-smoking bill

BOISE (AP) — Calling its enactment a "mile in behalf of good health," Gov. John Evans has signed into law the Idaho Clean Indoor Air Act that imposes restrictions on smoking in public places.

"This spotlights the case," the governor said Monday in signing the bill that he had cleared both the House and Senate. "It's an appropriate and proper direction to go."

The bill, similar to legislation now on the books in 28 other states, bans smoking in most public places and requires other like restaurants to set aside non-smoking areas. Exempted are workplaces, taverns; bowling alleys and halls used for private social functions. A violation carries a $50 fine.

Although restaurateurs and others protested the legislation and won the support of some lawmakers who called it an unwarranted intrusion on the use of private property. The tobacco industry, citing the multimillion dollar contribution to the state treasury through the cigarette tax, also opposed the bill.

But Rep. Deean Sorenson, R-Boise, the physician who spearheaded this year's drive to passage, responded: "When all is said and done, it's near 100 percent of the community that's in favor of the restriction, however, invoked the call of U.S. Surgeon General Everett Koop who said it was time to provide nonsmokers protection from hazardous second-hand smoke. The Environmental Protection Agency has claimed second-hand smoke is responsible for between 500 and 5,000 lung cancer deaths a year and has labeled it a greater pollutant than all other air pollutants combined."

To counter the argument about intrusive government regulation, they contended that business managers decide to turn his private property into a public place he assumes the responsibility to protect public health.

Senate votes to take Kiser off parole board

BOISE (AP) — The state Senate, emphasizing its belief that vicious new crimes should carry lengthy prison terms, has voted to remove Bill Kiser from the state commission on Pardons and Parole.

"There is a very sad fact of life, and people in corrections must recognize it, that there are people who should never get out," Kiser said. "I'm somewhere in the middle... The truth is for the same crimes a person can be released after five years while another may have to serve 18 or 20 years. I don't think you can generalize about the length of sentence."

Although the commission is named by the Corrections Board, Gov. John Evans called the Senate's decision "unfortunate and contended that at times Kiser's actions, like those leveled at Mrs. Kiser by the Senate's commission, she said, "We've could well make it difficult to find qualified people to fill such positions."

House finally clears up conflict in sales tax law

BOISE (AP) — After many false starts, the House finally has approved legislation clearing up a conflict in state sales tax laws.

The House voted 71-11 late Monday for legislation clearing up a conflict caused last year when separate bills set the minimum sale subject to sales tax at 11 cents in one bill and 15 cents in another.

The measure now goes to the Senate, making the minimum sale level 11 cents.

Sponsor Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, told House members the legislation contains a specific exemption for newspaper subscriptions.

"The net effect is that newspapers sold for less than 24 cents, deducting costs such as distribution expenses, are not subject to the sales tax."

Earlier versions of the bill ran into complicated battles over amendment and whether newspapers should have an exemption.

Rep. Kathleen Kelly, D-Cursey, R-Boise, tried to get the House to amend the bill to declare that any newspaper which does not collect sales tax would lose its collection facilities tax exemption. But she lost a 66-18 vote, which earned her the House "row" awarded for any motion that is defeated.

"I don't think it's fair that newspapers get a production exemption on the front end, and get a sales tax exemption on the other end," she said.

"I'm worried about the power of the press," said Rep. James Lucas, R-

Pair arrested for kidnapping, beating incident

OSBURN (AP) — Authorities in San Francisco, Calif., have arrested two California men and are questioning them about a kidnapping incident that resulted in the beating of an Osburn girl.

Authorities are questioning James Bradford VIII, 37, Pullen, Calif., and Warren Howard-Treacher, 34, Albany, Calif., after arresting them at the San Francisco airport Sunday night on unrelated drug charges.

Officials said they believe the men traveled to Boise from the Osburn area in a rented car and then flew to

San Francisco, where they were arrested Monday to question a third man about an early Sunday morning kidnapping.

James Grant, 17, was "in a serious but stable condition" Monday afternoon at Sacred Heart Medical Center after undergoing emergency surgery for a skull fracture, hospital officials said.

The girl was abducted when she answered a knock on the door of her family's home in the Sunnyslope addition, said Sheriff Lt. Harold Lee.

The girl was found in Kootenai County near its border with Benewah County Sunday morning by unidentified persons on their way to church who took her to Benewah Community Hospital in St. Maries, Crmkoivich said. She was transported to Spokane by helicopter, a supervisor at Sacred Heart Medical Center in Spokane said.

"The child was hit with a blunt instrument and left possibly for dead," Shoshone County Sheriff Frank Crmkoivich said.

Evans signs bill on cable TV theft

BOISE (AP) — Legislation imposing criminal sanctions for cable television theft has been signed into law by Gov. John Evans.

At almost the same time Monday, the Senate gave final legislative approval to a bill making it a crime to steal electrical services.

Both measures follow on the heels of last year's legislation making a computer crime a crime as the Legislature moves to update the state's criminal laws to meet changing social circumstances.

The cable television industry in Idaho estimates that as much as $2 million in services are stolen every year from the companies now providing cable service to some 10 Idaho cities.

The bill, which takes effect July 1, imposes a $300 fine and six months in jail for theft of the cable signal and a $1,000 and a year in jail for manufacture of gadgets used to steal the signal.

"There are some criminals out there stealing the signals off the cable for their private use," the governor said.

The electrical theft measure, which cleared the Senate without objection, was prompted by reports from rural electric cooperatives across the state that some customers "have been tampering with the meters, turning them back at risk to their own lives to reduce their monthly bills."

The bill now awaits action by the governor.

Right-to-work opponents gain momentum

POCAHELLO (AP) — Idaho labor's drive to repeal the state's right-to-work law is gaining momentum in Bannock County.

So far, more than 4,000 people have signed the petitions being circulated by volunteers to get the legislation out of the November 1986 ballot.

"Nearly 90 percent of the people we ask to sign our petitions are doing so," said Glen Hatch, a labor spokesman. "The response has been overwhelming and encouraging."

Union leaders began their petition drive a week ago Sunday in hopes of getting more than 32,000 signatures to force a referendum to repeal the controversial right-to-work law which prohibits labor organizers or employers as a condition of employment.

Hatch said more than 200 volunteers were working in Bannock County, conducting a door-to-door campaign. He said petitions were also being circulated in stores, businesses and other work places throughout the county.

About 84 percent of the names submitted for verification have been accepted by the Bannock County clerk's office, he said.

Organizers hope to complete the petition drive within the next month, even though state law allows 60 days after the Legislature adjourns to obtain the signatures.

Idaho lawmakers passed the right-to-work bill over the veto of Gov. John Evans earlier this year.

The unions also are trying to block implementation of the law by challenging an emergency clause approved by the Legislature. Labor lawyers contend the clause is unnecessary and are prepared to argue the issue before a 4th District Court Judge in Boise in early April.

Jail bond proposal has shortcomings

Despite the pressing need for a new jail in Twin Falls County, we are not in favor of the $6.3 million bond issue to be voted on by county residents a week from today.

We think the proposal has a number of serious shortcomings among them: the huge amount of additional county office space and the underestimation, in our view, of the likely operations costs.

Following the vote Tuesday, the county commissioners should begin to consider alternatives to this proposal which would answer the need for a jail at less cost.

That will not be easy. The jail architects, Richard Heindel and Griff Davenport, are right that there is not much saving to be achieved if the county's jail and office goals remain the same. Something has to give.

Still, the man who decides to buy a car has a wide range of choices, from Volkswagen to Mercedes. The present proposal is closer to the latter.

Nonetheless, the outlines of a second proposal can be seen in this one.

First, the proposal can be scaled down in total size. A facility of 60 or so beds would answer immediate and short-term projected needs.

Eliminating the amenities like large recreational space and a prisoner library would leave the new facility a class 'B' jail by national standards while achieving the main goal of getting prisoners out of the present inadequate facility.

The biggest item which should be jettisoned, in our view, is the extra county office space which now is up to 25 percent of the total.

Cramped though they may be, we think the current offices of the county prosecutor, driver's license bureau's public defender, and sheriff's offices should not be tacked onto this jail proposal.

If these departments need more space, the county commissioners should propose space for them directly on an adjunct to the jail concept.

County officials are juggling the space request on the basis that all of these are "support" services to the jail. That may be true for the sheriff's office, but we think it stretches credibility to make that argument for the prosecutor, who is an officer of the court system, or for driver's licensing.

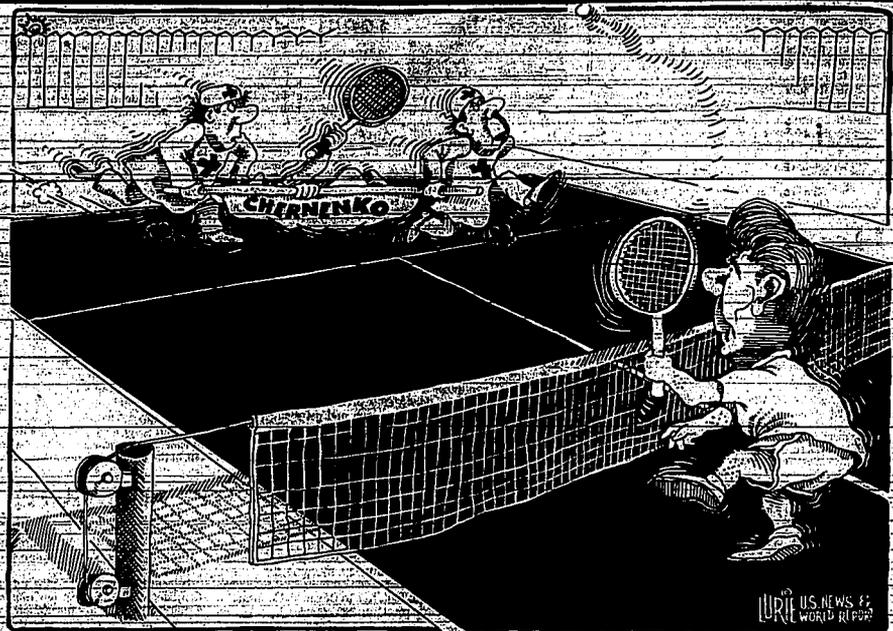

The size of these requests bothers us, too. For example, the current prosecutor's office has about 1,200 square feet; Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter asks for twice that in the new building, including room for staff not yet even in the planning phase, much less hired.

We also have a problem with the 3,400-square-foot emergency operations center which, despite recent hemming and hawing about its multiple uses, is being planned as a nuclear fallout command center for Twin Falls and Elmore counties.

It may, to be sure, have other uses. But we don't see how or why such a center is necessary for the Sheriff's office to handle routine chemical spills and floods.

All of these are extras, we think, which should be dropped. In the next proposal, that would leave the county focused on a jail plan for which the need has been clearly demonstrated: a modest, class B jail, adjacent to the judicial building. The cost, we would bet, would be under $5 million.

And we would bet further that county voters would pass it. The need for a jail is obvious; a modest proposal like this would, we think, answer it.

Vote in favor of bond for jail

The voters of Twin Falls County elected our County Commissioners to do that which we cannot conveniently do for ourselves. Those of us who have worked closely with these Commissioners have found them to be skillful, realistic and dedicated. That they adhere to the trust we have placed in them, commendable. That they explore all avenues before dispensing our tax dollars, remarkable.

There are few, if any thinking voters in this county, who are not aware of our long overdue need for a new jail facility, not for the comfort of the prisoners, but rather for our own protection. Failure to face up to this fact is akin to playing Russian roulette with our future security.

Now that we have burdened the commissioners with this unpopular situation we should confront our responsibilities and back these commissioners by voting for the jail bond on March 16. It is by far the most economical solution of all the alternatives.

Home for boys deserves support

As a Christian Study Group, one of our assignments was to research out a special concern in our community. During our research, we became convinced that the program they have initiated is an outstanding service to the Magic Valley.

A home has been purchased in Twin Falls, which will be modeled after the Kimberly Shelter Home. Much help is needed to bring this group shelter in to a working reality. They need financial support and home furnishings. Specific items include: twin beds or bunks, linens, kitchen equipment and living room and dining room furniture.

An interim home for troubled youth has been a long standing need in our community. We encourage individuals, businesses, churches and civic organizations to become involved in this noble and progressive program.

Teachers working with humans

Dear Joanne Stadman:

My first thought on reading your letter to the editor on how teachers need a break from the children to restore their ability to teach was:

- (1) Children cannot stay home from school at the first sign of a cold many children have these symptoms all of the time. There would not be enough children to hold classes.
- (2) Keeping children from going outside when they are starting to get a cold is not unreasonable.
- (3) Children are not animals (sounds like you'd be real good with animals). They have feelings and rights too. If they do not wish to go outside especially when it is cold, they should not be forced to do so.

May I suggest that you take a break outside when you are starting to get a cold? (I'm sure you stay home and in bed at the first signs). Be sure the temperature is 32 degrees and don't take into consideration the chill factor which could be near zero if the wind is blowing. Remember — the break will do you good! It's a change of pace for you. Don't forget that you are not allowed to come in until the bell rings — it takes that much time for you to get hauled until the next break comes.

Who determines when it is too cold? What is cold to one person, may be warm to another. That is why I feel as though a child should be able to remain indoors if he pleases — maybe he just doesn't want to go out. I don't force my children to go outdoors when they aren't at school and there are six of them that live in a small home.

I have lived in other areas where the weather is not near as severe as it is here. The teachers take time during their lunch hours and recess to supervise the children who wish to stay in. They actually had some marvelous activities for the children.

If the teachers are so dedicated they really will take the child's best interest to heart. I too have taught school and know the pay here is terrible but these are human beings that we are working with. Our family lives in Cassia County and several weeks ago our boy was frosted in on his face, because he was not allowed in the school building. The teachers, of course, said the surely could have gotten in some how.

Treaty should not be ratified

The Genocide Treaty is an international law drafted by the United Nations in 1948. It has established UN authority to try and punish those accused of crimes against racial, religious, national or ethnic groups.

For 39 years this treaty has been coming up before the U.S. senate and they have refused to ratify it every year it seems to me we should let a dead dog die, or by some hanky panky it may be passed, as was the Zorowitz confirmation to be an ambassador to Israel.

Almost all crimes of actual genocide are committed by communist regimes as they have in Tibet, Cambodia, Afghanistan, and many other places. Yet they have never been charged with genocide by the UN even though all of them have ratified it.

When the United Nations exempted political crimes from the treaty that should have been enough for all sound thinking men to abandon the thought of ratification.

Most acts of genocide are committed by governments or their political agents and yet they are exempt by the treaty. Therefore, the treaty only applies to private groups and individuals.

If we ratify the treaty, we are circumventing the Constitution and burning our citizens over to the United Nations international authority.

Therefore, the senate should never, "but never," ratify the genocide treaty. (Let your senators know).

American farmers deserve help

As important as food production is to this country, it's funny that we can't afford to help our American farmers in their time of need. We can afford to let defense contractors rip off the American taxpayer for untold millions of dollars. Amounts of money which should be considered acts of treason against the American people. Money we can't afford to waste in any fashion, let alone "High Fashion." Why do we allow these corporate businessmen to walk the streets, when they have stolen more money than most small governments operate on. Personally, I think the people involved should be jailed.

These businessmen don't pay taxes — they just spend your tax dollars.

I hope I'm not alone.

Burley is as quiet as always

Last Sunday, I took a drive to Burley. I expected to see blood, broken glass and eyeballs on Burley streets. I drove all over town and couldn't find any. I expected to see wines throwing up on the sidewalks, but I couldn't find any.

I drove by the police department to see them hanging in the drunks, muggers and rapists, and I

Cable TV brings in wider selection of undesired offerings

BOSTON — I didn't mind when they came and dug up the street. This was progress after all. The way for cable TV.

The night of the work crews last fall was actually, I think at the moment, exciting. We were living in an urban valley where pictures were intercepted by a full range of eyes, ranging in a fashion, and needed by the limited number of channels. We were about to enter the wonderful world of videochoices.

In the first introductory offer rush, we signed up for the entire package. Choices galore: 106 channels. Of course, 12 of them were reserved for future use. One was in Spanish, but two of them had no subtitles, which was a problem for those of us who speak more than one language and there were dozens of others.

The whole thing was a curiosity at first. Flicking through the cable menu was like walking through a multi-appliance catalog. Wow, look at that! An electric yogurt maker, an electric can opener, a battery-operated carving knife or toothbrush. The offers were so appealing I never thought that they might languish in the sink. Cable TV got a good reception in our home in more ways than one.

But now, after three months of living with it, I have come to realize with exacting cable television offers me a much wider selection of things that I don't want to see.

Those of you in the cabinet lot of TV households probably doubt that. What about the times, you ask? Once, cable was sold to the public as the tool to break the networks' stranglehold. It was to be a way to allow a thousand geniuses to blossom. Now movies are the biggest hype. Cable creativity is a Hollywood rerun and a rerun of the Hollywood rerun.

But I'll tell you about the movies. There are some 100 limited in my monthly cable guide, about five of them headliners, new to TV, two of them remotely of interest. Let us suppose for a moment that two people sit down with a bowl of homemade popcorn to watch one movie a month. At the top cable tier, our community, you have just spent about $55 to go to the movies. For the same price, it is possible to buy a baby-sitter, a two-star dinner, and a movie on a real live theater. If you pay an average monthly cable fee of $25 on the other hand, you could save in for a year, buy a VCR and then rent a movie you like, see it a time you like, for about $2 a night.

Of course, if you watch cable television seven hours a night, it's a bargain. But if you watch it seven hours a night, you're not a bargain.

I don't want to simply dismiss cable. I like my pictures without buzz. C-Span is a political junkie's version of "What are There?" Sometimes, they will be writing P.D. those on the videos that play MTV.

But it was an MTV commercial that made me realize it was time to correct my cable vision. For 60 long seconds, a cast of hyperactive dancers plunged across the screen in perfect video style toward the startling, world-shattering, cinematic message: THERE'S MORE NACHO CHEESE FLAVOR IN DORITOS! I could only think of all the carpenters and painters, all the dancers, all the dancing lessons, all the English classes, all the time and energy that had gone into communicating this Nacho-cheese announcement.

In the same sense, the basic scientific research, the manufacturing and programming and broadcasting of modern television has combined to bring "There's a Crowd!" into private homes. Now, a huge enterprise has laid thousands of miles of cable across the country in order to bring "SBLeah" into those same homes.

The concept behind 100 or more channels is that you could have all your TV. That's about as common for cable viewers today as it is for fast-food lovers. Most of the cable channels find themselves competing for popularity — the largest number of viewers. They do it, they way the networks do; by offering a low common denominator.

At the end of the cable line, we don't have choices in the real sense of that word. We just have more TV. The picture is terrific, but the purpose is way out of focus.

Lottery proposal rejected in Senate by one vote

BOISE (AP) — A Senate vote on a controversial proposal to create a state lottery was rejected by a single vote Tuesday.

The Senate voted 19-20 to reject the ban on a state lottery.

The Senate voted Monday night on the lottery proposal after Sen. Herb Carson's Senate floor speech in favor of the measure. The vote was 19-20, one short of the two-thirds majority needed to submit the issue to voters by November 1986.

It also mirrored an earlier vote on the issue in the House, where the proposal fell 10 votes short of the needed two-thirds majority.

Sen. Lannan, McCloughlin, Peavey, Reed and Sweeney were all known to be voting against the measure.

Sen. Anderson, Bragg, Crystal, Darrington, Parry, Rick, Ryan, Snyser, Swisher and Watkins were known to be voting in favor of the measure.

Sen. Blythe, Horsch and Marley were not known to be voting.

Hellar appointed to humanities panel

BOISE (AP) — Governor Bill Hellar has been appointed to the Idaho Association for the Humanities, replacing Rep. Jeanne Givens. D. Coeur d'Alene.

Gov. John Evans announced the appointment Monday, and also said he had named Card M. Dick of Boise to a new six-year term on the state Tax Commission.

Ms. Hellar is the wife of Bill Hellar, who ran for Idaho's 2nd District congressional seat against Ken Larry Craig in the 1984 election.

TIBETANS' TONGUES

Q. You said Tibetans stick their tongues out at you as a greeting. Why?

A. It's not done the way a little kid does it here. Nor is it like Archie Bunker's Bronx cheer. It's just an opening of the mouth to reveal the tongue. It means literally "Your nose, I have no words in my mouth to tell you how happy I am to see you." The Bengalis do it, too. As an apology: "I have no words to say how sorry I am."

Q. Aren't all substances more dense in the solid state than in the liquid state?

A. Almost all. But not water - fortunately if ice were more dense than water, ice would sink. And all the rivers, lakes, even oceans would freeze solid from the bottom up.

Conservationists vow to fight farm soil erosion

BOB KERREY
Supports erosion battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Sierra Club and other major conservation groups leaped into the debate over agricultural policy Monday, vowing to "play hardball" with Congress in the battle against soil erosion.

"It's time to straighten out the serious environmental problems caused by agricultural soil erosion, and it's going to take a major change of federal policy," Douglas Scott, the club's chief lobbyist, said at a news conference.

To that end, the club and such groups as the American Farmland Trust, the Audubon Society and the National Wildlife Federation have laid plans for a heavy lobbying effort, both in Congress and in grassroots America.

In an unusual turn of strategy, the groups said they will approach members of Congress who have conservative views on conservation issues — primarily those from urban and suburban areas — for support and involvement in this year's farm bill debate.

"We're going to play hardball," said Robert Gray, policy director for the American Farmland Trust.

The groups are seeking to include two new provisions in the law that will form the basis for government involvement in agriculture over the next several years.

One, known as a "sodbuster" provision, would penalize farmers who plow up and plant otherwise fallow land deemed highly erodible by denying them government price supports and other benefits.

The other would be a "conservation reserve" program to pay farmers to idle for as long as 10 years parts of their land susceptible to erosion damage. The plan calls for idling 30 million acres of such delicate land, and paying individual farmers about $40 per acre per year to do so.

Sodbuster bills passed both houses of Congress last year but died when the House and Senate could not work out their differences on the legislation. Some form of the idea is expected to be written into this year's farm bill, with the blessing of the Reagan administration.

But conservationists acknowledged they will have a harder time selling the idea of a conservation reserve, which would have an up-front cost of more than $800 million, at a time when Congress and the administration are under heavy pressure to cut federal spending rather than expand it.

Scott said the issue has been made one of the Sierra Club's top legislative concerns this year and volunteer lobbyists will fan out of Capitol Hill this week distributing "green" notebooks packed with information on the soil erosion threat.

The Agriculture Department says some 100 million acres of U.S. cropland is washing away at a rate faster than the soil can be replaced through natural processes. Some 33 million acres of that, or 8 percent of total cropland, is so erodent-prone that an amount of earth can be lost from washing away when tilled, the department says.

The problems the erosion creates are many from the gradual weakening of the nation's food resource base to the "pinpoint" of water and soil siltling in of rivers and harbors.

Organizers of the anti-erosion push said they will press these points hard, as well as claiming other benefits to farmers and the government, including means surplus commodity production would be cut, enhancing crop prices, they said. And cuts in planted acreage also mean lower government outlays for price-support payments.

While the conservation reserve would cost money initially, Scott argued it would save some $1.6 billion over three years.

Arms talks to go ahead despite Chernenko's death

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Nuclear arms talks between the United States and the Soviet Union were expected to start today as scheduled, despite the death of Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko.

But it was unclear whether substantive bargaining over missiles and space weaponry would proceed quickly. Ambassador Max M. Kampelman, leader of the U.S. delegation, said Chernenko's death Sunday would "delay the start of the talks in Geneva."

Kampelman's spokesman said, however, the United States had offered to consider a delay if the Soviets wished.

"Naturally our first concern was to make sure we made it clear to the Soviets that their needs in respect to these times would certainly be accommodated," said spokesman Joseph Lehman said.

Lehman added, however, the United States had not formally suggested a postponement, but had left it to the Soviets to make clear their desires.

There was no direct word from the Soviet mission, where telephones were either busy or went unanswered throughout much of the day.

But Kampelman's statement, plus details given by Lehman, indicated there was no change in previous expectations for the initial meeting.

Lehman told a news conference the framework for today's session was worked out in an hour-long meeting between delegation aides Monday at Geneva offices of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Lehman said Kampelman and his co-negotiators, John G. Tower and veteran negotiator Maynard W. Gillman, would meet with the Soviet delegation at the Soviet mission at 11 a.m. Tuesday (9 a.m. MST).

Kampelman, a Democrat who negotiated with the Soviets for three years at the Madrid European Security Conference, will deal with space arms.

Pop song for famine relief popular with fans

NEW YORK (AP) — "We Are the World" — the song, the cause and the "crazy" in record stores and getting heavy airtime on radio stations, disc jockeys and stores reported Monday.

The debut of the video version was set for Monday night on MTV.

Written by Michael Jackson and Lionel Richie to raise money for African hunger relief, the song has audiences listening intently to identify the voices of the 46 pop artists — a veritable Who's Who of the American music industry — who recorded it.

The American Music Awards in January.

"There's been a tremendous amount of curiosity," said Larry Berger, program director for radio station WPL-FM in New York. "It's become a trivia game with audiences asking who was that, who was that?"

Berger said WPL-FM's DJs have not been breaking in to identify the particular solo artists, who include Bruce Springsteen, Willie Nelson, Cyndi Lauper, Jackson and Diana Ross.

"We don't want to blow that illusion," he said.

On Sunday night, it was the station's second most requested song, after Madonna's "Crazy for You," Berger said.

The single of "We Are the World" was released in New York on Wednesday nationally on Thursday, and record stores reported that their shipments were quickly depleted.

"This is one of those cases that no matter how much they press, it's never enough," said Jim Hale.

House task force split on ballot-counting rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional task force investigating the disputed election for Indiana's 8th District seat in the House, voted 21 Monday to count ballots lacking precinct clerks' initials and precinct numbers required by state law.

In the absence of fraud, it seems to be the voter's intent which is the final determination in counting ballots, said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., head of the House Administration Committee's task force probing the election.

"We obviously do not have any evidence of fraud or irregularity," the lone Republican on the task force, Rep. William M. Thomas of California, complained to the panel on Monday. "We're setting up our own rules to count, so your guys win."

Thomas said, "We have adopted rules which do not give minimum deference to the fundamental intent of Indiana law in the letter told reporters.

"On any point of substance, I'm going to lose 2-1. Why bother?"

Rep. William Clay, D-Mo., the other member of the panel, maintained that "you can't set aside whole precincts for some technicality."

Panetta and Clay voted to adopt the majority's proposed rules for recounting ballots. Panetta said both sides agreed well as the Indiana secretary of state, a Republican, would have 24 hours to comment on the rules.

On Dec. 17, Indiana's secretary of state certified Richard McIntyre, the Republican candidate, was a 34-vote winner over Democratic incumbent Frank McCloskey in the Nov. 6 election.

But on Jan. 3, the Democrat-dominated House voted to seat neither McIntyre nor McCloskey, instead the case being sent to the House Administration Committee for an investigation.

Pastor leaves hearing

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A Lutheran minister, tired for dividing his blue-collar congregation with bitter rhetoric against corporations, walked away from a church disciplinary hearing Monday after he was forbidden to record the proceedings.

The Rev. D. Douglas Roth, 33, former pastor of Trinity Lutheran church in nearby Clarion, refused to return after a lunch break to face a hearing panel called by Sturgis, the council head of the regional Lutheran synod.

Roth, his wife, Nadine, and Wayne Cochran, president of the church council, attended the hearing's opening session Monday at St. John's Lutheran Church of Highland in suburban McCandless Township. Roth said the short session was taken up with his arguments to make an audio or written record.

"I will not be part of a fixed hearing," Roth said.

Soviet leaders since the revolution

Nov. 7, 1917: Vladimir Lenin is named premier following the overthrow of the government established after the abdication of czar Nicholas II. Lenin withdraws Russia from World War I and suppresses opposition with his secret police.

1922: Josef Stalin, son of a shoemaker and close Lenin aide, becomes general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, a position he holds until his death.

Jan. 21, 1924: Lenin dies of a stroke.

February 2, 1924: Lenin supporter Alexis Rykov becomes premier. Rykov, along with Stalin in Stalin's fight for power with Red Army leader Leon Trotsky, but later falls in favor. He is forced to resign in 1930 and is executed in 1938.

January 1928: Trotsky is exiled and assassinated in Mexico in 1940.

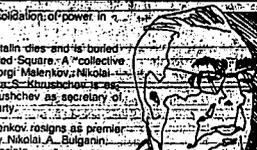

Vladimir Lenin

land the later consolidation of power in Eastern Europe.

March 5, 1953: Stalin dies and is buried next to Lenin in Red Square. A "collective leadership" of Georgi Malenkov, Niko- lita Khrushchev and others is estab- lished with Khrushchev as secretary of the Communist Party.

Feb. 8, 1955: Malenkov resigns as premier and is replaced by Nikolai A. Bulganin, a Khrushchev associate.

March 27, 1958: Khrushchev son of a peasant family, is named premier in addition to party secretary, he is ousted in October, 1964, and dies in obscurity in 1971. Khrushchev denigrates Stalin in 1956 and launches a program of de-Stalinization.

Leonid Brezhnev

October 15, 1964: A leadership troika is formed with Leonid Brezhnev as party secretary, Alexei Kosygin as premier and Nikolai V. Podgorny as president.

June 16, 1977: Podgorny is re- moved as president and Brezhnev is appointed to that position after signing the adoption of a new Soviet constitution. Brezhnev leads the USSR through détente with the U.S. and orders the 1979 invasion of Afghanistan.

Oct. 23, 1980: Kosygin resigns after 16 years as premier and dies less than two months later.

Nov. 10, 1982: Brezhnev, a former steelworker, dies after 18 years as the Soviet leader.

Nov. 12, 1982: Yuri V. An- dropov, 88, KGB chief for 15 years, becomes general secretary of the Soviet Party; he is appointed president June 16, 1983. He dies Feb. 5, 1984, after only 15 months in office.

Feb. 13, 1985: Konstantin Chernenko, 69, becomes the oldest man appointed general secretary of the Soviet Party.

Konstantin Chernenko

New Soviet leader rose rapidly to top

By WILLIAM J. EATON
The Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — New Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev rose rapidly to the top of an unusually early age with the help of powerful patrons.

He became a member of the ruling Politburo less than five years ago, at the age of 45, and then moved into the No. 2 position when Konstantin U. Chernenko took the top post in Febru- ary 1984.

With the death of Chernenko, the succession of Gorbachev, a stocky, balding man with a large birthmark on his forehead, symbolizes a dramatic transfer of power from an older generation of Soviet leaders, mostly men in their 70s.

In contrast to his oft-touring Polli- buro colleagues, he is described as personable, even witty. His wife, Raisa, has a fashionable elegance not usually associated with the wives of high-ranking Kremlin officials.

Gorbachev is regarded as a technocrat, a modernizer who can be expected to make changes designed to improve the performance of the Soviet economy and to modify the agricultural role of government in the agricultural sector.

Many Western observers, however, expressed skepticism that he would depart significantly from established Kremlin policy on foreign and domestic issues.

"The style of leadership may change with the succession, but the substance will not," said Malcolm Toon, a former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union.

Other analysts said that they expect to look several years for Gorbachev to consolidate his power and to exert his personal authority over the entrenched bureaucracy.

He was named to succeed Chernenko as general secretary of the Communist Party — the nation's most powerful post. However, he was not immediately chosen to fill Chernenko's position as president, or formal head of the government.

Gorbachev's recent speeches in- dicate that he will carry on the anti- corruption and labor-discipline cam- paign initiated by the late President Yuri V. Andropov, who was Gor- bachev's mentor.

Since he was responsible for farm policy during a period that saw five poor harvests, Western students of Soviet affairs believe that Gorbachev must have had powerful protectors high in the party to avoid being made a scapegoat.

Gorbachev was born on March 2, 1918, in the village of Privolnoye, in Stavropol province in the northern Caucasus region. As a teen-ager, he drove a grain harvester at a machine and tractor station in his home area.

He became a top official of the Young Communist League in his city, then in the province, before enrolling in Moscow State University Law School, one of the most prestigious in- stitutions in the Soviet Union.

Israeli troops storm town, leave 34 dead

ZRARIYE, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli troops and armored vehicles stormed this southern Lebanese town outside their occupation zone Monday, over- powered the small Lebanese army garrison and killed 34 people, the Israeli command reported.

It said those killed were suspected guerrillas who tried to flee with weapons.

The dawn assault on the Shiite Moslem town about two miles north of the Israeli occupation zone followed a night-long artillery bombardment. Residents said the shelling began a few hours after a suicide bomber in a pickup truck filled with explosives killed 12 Israeli soldiers and wounded 14 near the Israeli border.

Zrariye's assistant police chief said an Israeli force of as many as 300 vehicles and about 1,000 soldiers in- vaded the town and took away enough prisoners to fill two buses and a truck.

The Israelis pulled out just before sundown, their withdrawal covered by smoke grenades, permitting the entry of reporters and Red Cross teams who had been waiting in near- by villages.

Residents picked to answer survey on city's future

By ANNETTE GARY
Times-News Staff

TWIN FALLS—Two thousand Twin Falls residents should receive notification at the end of the week that they have been picked to give the survey answers that officials hope will guide the city for the next 25 years.

The questionnaires, worked out by the Twin Falls City Council at a Monday work session, range from what services should be cut if the city should face financial problems to whether more tables are needed in the parks.

O.E. Engineering Inc., is conducting the survey, as part of its contract to help the city come up with some long-range plans.

The completed survey should have 25 to 30 questions after last-minute additions are made. The range from such simple questions as whether residents favor water use of questionnaires to guide city policy making to a request that residents rate 11 different elements of four different city parks.

The scope of the survey ranges from a request for ratings on a scale from poor to excellent of present city services to a complicated question about the rate of growth favored. The question gives data on growth and development of the population in Twin Falls and the state since 1980 to help city leaders to help the city grow and help points.

Other questions cover development across the Shane Canyon, commercial growth within the city, downtown parking meters, central library, private services, contracts and creating a library zoning district.

The city plans a test of the survey on a few residents before Thursday to make sure the questions are easily understood. Letters explaining the project will be mailed Thursday to residents randomly picked. The survey should follow next week.

The council also gave College of Southern Idaho baseball coach Jim Walker approval to begin construction of new seating at Frontier Field.

The college plans a partially-covered grand stand large enough to seat 350 to 400 people.

Rudeen faces charge

Feelings flare outside court

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News Staff

TWIN FALLS—Paul Rudeen, who allegedly faked his own death Jan. 24, had an emotional reunion with his wife Monday.

The meeting followed Rudeen's appearance in court on a perjury charge for allegedly providing false information to obtain a driver's license.

The emotion flared when Marjorie Rudeen met the Pocatello woman who allegedly aided the 46-year-old Rudeen in his apparently planned disappearance from the area.

Rudeen, a Twin Falls businessman residing in the Jerome area, had been believed drowned Jan. 24 in the Snake River.

Rudeen, who called himself "Julie Brown," had phoned authorities to report she saw a brown car plunge into the river near Brimmer Bridge.

Rudeen's family later reported him missing. Rudeen had been in the area and was driving a brown car.

An intensive search of the area involving more than 100 people, no sign of the car or body was found.

The Twin Falls County Sheriff's office then focused its investigation on the woman called "Julie Brown" who had been identified as Rudeen had pushed the car into the river and she was from the area.

Upon further investigation, it was found Rudeen allegedly obtained a second driver's license in Twin Falls County under the name of Lawrence.

Rudeen allegedly told the driver's license office that he was born in Ogden and he previously held an Idaho license.

born in Ogden and he previously held an Idaho license.

It was under the name of Rudeen that he was located in Roswell, N.M., last month. He was extradited back to Twin Falls last week and held on a $25,000 bond in the Twin Falls County Jail.

After the Monday hearing, Rudeen and Lively then left armed against Lively for allegedly pled guilty to perjury.

Rudeen and his wife, who pleaded guilty to perjury, refused to obtain her husband's release from last week's filing for divorce.

As the couple walked from the courthouse, they were met outside by authorities earlier in the week on the relationship between Rudeen and Lively.

Mrs. Rudeen told her husband that she did not know if Lively had drowned in the goddam river.

Rudeen and Lively then left armed against Lively for allegedly pled guilty to perjury.

Rudeen and his wife, who pleaded guilty to perjury, refused to obtain her husband's release from last week's filing for divorce.

Lively could not be contacted. A preliminary hearing on the perjury charge will be held for Rudeen at the request of his attorney, Hadden DeHaan.

Along with the criminal charge, the county will seek civil settlement against Rudeen for the cost of the two-day search of the Snake River. Hutchinson said the county will file a $11,000 lawsuit.

Rudeen and Lively then left armed against Lively for allegedly pled guilty to perjury.

Council courts BLM

TWIN FALLS—Twin Falls is not the place for the district office of the Bureau of Land Management, the Twin Falls City Council said Monday.

The Shoshone City Council disagrees.

"Between Boise and Pocatello, we're the only extra-wide spot in the road," said Mayor Emery Petersen.

"The BLM needs to decide whether the office for the central district should be in Twin Falls, Shoshone or Burley," said Larry Woodard, a BLM representative from Boise, at a Monday council meeting.

The council members said the town is not picked would still have resource offices, he said.

The change is part of a recently announced public lands exchange between the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management.

Three of the state's six district offices would be cut under the plan, Woodard said. Boise will keep an office, either Pocatello or Idaho Falls will keep an office and the third will be in the Magic Valley.

Twin Falls has a junior college, an airport capable of four-engine jet service and a regional hospital, the council told Woodard.

Shoshone, which serves an eight-county region, plus draws people from such distant areas as Elk, Nev., and Salmon, council members said.

Councilman Erik Andersen also argued that Twin Falls offers better opportunities for the husbands and wives of BLM workers to find jobs, than do the two smaller towns.

"Needless to say, we want the office in Twin Falls," Petersen said.

Last week, the Shoshone City Council went on record supporting keeping the office in this town.

At the meeting, Manager Charles Hasler met with the council to explain the effect the proposed BLM Forest Service land swap might have on the town.

Resort cities work behind scenes to revive option tax bill

By DAVE LEWIS
Times-News Staff

HAILY—Last minute, behind-the-scenes negotiations were being made Monday to try and revive the resort cities option tax that was killed by an Idaho Senate committee last week.

Ketchum Mayor Jerry Seltzer told the City Council Monday morning that officials from Ketchum and the city of Sun Valley were making a last-minute attempt to save the "Titanic" by trying to get the bill back before the Senate Local Government and Taxation Committee, which rejected the amendment Friday.

The amendment to the tax would place a 5 percent limitation on the tax to remedy what a judge ruled last fall was a lack of safeguards to prevent abuses in levying the tax.

Seltzer said officials were trying to reach an acceptable compromise with legislators within a limit of 24 percent on the tax, a general ly Administrator Jack Brown, Monday afternoon about supporting a compromise.

Although Huffman would not say at what level the Huffman proposal was made, he said he would not support anything other than a 1 percent, broad-based sales tax for all cities, not just resort cities.

With a general sales tax at any higher rate, the city could collect more taxes than it collects under its existing tax, he said.

The city of Sun Valley now has a 5 percent tax on only room rentals and barroom drinks, while Ketchum has a 1 percent general sales tax and a 2 percent tax on rooms and drinks.

The original tax, passed in 1978, was on only rooms and drinks. It was amended last year to include a general sales tax after strong objections from lodge and bar owners, who said it was hurting their businesses.

Neither the original bill or the 1984 amendment placed a limit on the tax.

Last fall, Fifth District Judge George

Granata Jr. ruled the tax was unconstitutional because it lacks a limit and other safeguards against abuse.

Granata ordered the city to stop sending taxes paid after Feb. 28. Collections will then go into an escrow account until the Idaho Supreme Court decides the city's appeal of Granata's action.

The high court will hear arguments from the company and city in either late April or early May.

The battle over the tax has been heated, and Huffman said Monday he is reluctant to support a compromise with the city because of the personal attacks by Sun Valley Mayor Ruth Lieder on the company.

"I'm not going to make any deals with a city with a mayor who's out telling the press we are liars," Huffman said.

Lieder was quoted Monday on the local radio station KKRI, saying some of the testimonials given by company officials were "lies."

Neither Lieder nor Brown were available for comment on Monday.

Huffman said the company had "tried to attack with the issues and not personalize" the fight over the tax.

"But, I'll have to say, I am disappointed about the attacks made by the mayor. I don't think it helps the resolution of this issue. It only blinds it," he said.

Following the defeat of the tax amendment on Friday, the city of Sun Valley announced an immediate 35 percent cut in personnel and city services.

In the Ketchum City Council also passed a resolution saying it will make immediate cuts in staff and services.

The cuts would include $311,700 and 11 of 26 employees. In the police, fire and street departments.

The cuts also include the transit system operated by the city of Ketchum and Sun Valley.

Police say victim was strangled

Sanders charged in Perkins' death

TWIN FALLS—Robert Wade Sanders was charged Monday with the strangulation death of Darwin Perkins, whose body was found Feb. 18 in Twin Falls.

Sanders, 36, of Mesa, Ariz., had been extradited last week from Phoenix, Ariz., to face the first-degree murder charge.

The suspect had been residing with the 66-year-old Perkins at the victim's cabin at Graeceman's Auto Park, 146 Addison Ave. W., according to an affidavit filed in support of the charge.

Perkins' body was found at the cabin by his brother. Death was caused by manual strangulation.

Perkins' truck, motorcycle, two guns and about $200 in cash were reported missing when the body was found.

In a statement to police, two women claimed that Sanders told them he would hurt Perkins if the older man didn't lend him money to fix a motorcycle.

At the Monday court hearing, Magistrate Charles Brumbaugh said Sanders would be held without bond in Twin Falls County Jail on the murder charge. Brumbaugh imposed a $5,000 bond and a charge of grand theft also was filed against Sanders, who allegedly had some of Perkins' property in his possession when arrested Feb. 25 in Arizona on a warrant issued by Twin Falls police.

A public defender was appointed to represent Sanders.

Sanders said Monday his plane has been sold, but that he will continue to appeal the decision.

The main point of view is that the defendant is innocent until proven guilty. Sanders said he has the evidence.

He says the limited evidence submitted in the appeal before the FAA will limit the issues he can appeal on.

Area farmers consider cost of fixing Jackson Lake dam

By BOB FREUND
Times-News Staff

TWIN FALLS—Protecting Jackson Lake Reservoir in Grand Teton National Park from earthquakes is hardly a distant issue to many Magic Valley farmers and ranchers. They rely on water impounded behind the 70-year-old dam to irrigate their crops at the peak of the growing season.

Next week members of three Magic Valley Irrigation companies begin deciding whether they will help pay for rehabilitation of the dam, which federal authorities say is critically prone to earthquake damage.

If the answer is yes, the Northside Canal Co., Minidoka Irrigation District and Twin Falls Canal Co. will assess members close to $5.2 million over the next 20 years to firm up the structure. That is 70 percent of the $7.4 million to be contributed by the 27 districts that tap the reservoir.

The amount to be paid is based on ownership of the reservoir's capacity, and the Magic Valley companies are the three largest waterholders in the Jackson Lake Reservoir.

The assessments will differ for members of each irrigation district. In the Northside Canal Co., which owns 38.3 percent of the dam, the cost will come to $2.7 million or about 85 cents per acre of water per year. The cost would be added to the current water fee of close to $14, says John Rosholt, canal company attorney.

Bargen's pilot license suspended

RENO—After a March 3 hearing before the Federal Aviation Administration, Richard Jacob's fly-in doctor, Richard Bargen, M.D., has been handed a 60-day pilot's license suspension.

Bargen had appealed the suspension. He said he was given a 90-day suspension rather than a 30-day suspension, but is still frustrated by the decision.

He says he will appeal the FAA's decision to the National Traffic Safety Board.

FAA aviation safety inspector Ron Steele, contacted by phone in Reno, said Monday Bargen has 11 days to enter his appeal and 10 days to surrender his pilot's certificate to the FAA office in Las Vegas.

Briefly

Hoefer gets SNRA post
RECREATION—The Sawtooth National Recreation Area's new superintendent is Halley Hoefer. Hoefer served as the recreation area's planner prior to the new assignment and his old position will not be refilled.
 Hoefer replaces Pat Aguilar as the SNRA's program manager. He was transferred to the Boise National Forest as district ranger of the Lowman Ranger District late last year.
 "Hoefer will have the responsibility for the management of many of the resources in the NRA such as trails, minerals, wildlife, water, timber, recreation, fisheries, recreation and roads," Aguilar says.
 In his new position, Hoefer says he will continue doing some of his old duties as planner, but now will be giving more direction to field workers.
 Before coming to Idaho, Hoefer was a district ranger in the White River and Red national forests in Colorado. He holds bachelor's and master's degrees in forest management.
 In his old position, he worked on the management plan for the Sawtooth National Forest and the management study for the White Cloud Peaks within the recreation area.

GOP women OK jail plan
TWIN FALLS—The executive board of the Twin Falls County Republican Women has endorsed the proposed Twin Falls County Jail-law enforcement building.
 The 15-member board voted March 4 to support the proposed location on the 35.2 acre site.
 "Which will finance the building, will be held next Tuesday."
 "We just discussed it and felt it was necessary for us to take a stand and show our support," said Miriam Watson, a member of the group.

Horizon helps with project
HAILLEY (AP)—Looking to Horizons Airlines for financial help, the Blaine County Airport Commission has authorized completion of architectural plans for expansion of the Friedman Memorial Airport terminal.
 The commission's attorney said Horizon President Milton Knott has proposed plans in which his company will help with the construction project. They include underwriting the full package and underwriting the $20,000 a year needed to pay off a bank loan.
 The project is expected to cost more than $400,000, with the Federal Aviation Administration providing up to $200,000 if matching local funds are guaranteed.
 Knott, whose airline serves Halley, owns the Elkhorn resort at Sun Valley and has said he wants to see the expansion project completed by the 1985-86 season.

Judge rules against King
BOISE (AP)—A federal judge has ruled that top lawyer Charles King-Sorenson has no right to inspect certain U.S. Forest Service records.
 The single-composer has been involved with a series of long-running disputes with county and federal officials, mainly over road access at her Robinson Bar Ranch along the Salmon River between Stanley and Clayton.
 She's been trying to win a court order forcing the Forest Service to let her inspect certain records on her case.
 U.S. District Judge Marion Callister, in a ruling filed in Boise Monday, rejected most of her requests.
 Callister ruled Ms. King and her attorneys can inspect only one page of one document, a total of eight paragraphs on two other documents, and two attachments.
 She had asked to review 14 Forest Service documents and reports.

CSI schedules non-credit courses

TWIN FALLS—Several continuing education, non-credit courses are scheduled to begin this month at the College of Southern Idaho.
 Keyboarding, which will teach fourth through ninth graders the keyboard techniques and basic typing skills, will meet from 9:10 to 10:30 a.m. Saturdays for 12 weeks, beginning March 25. The fee is $25. The instructor and fee is $25.

Two introductory Game Bird Taxidermy classes are being offered with Bob McDonald as the instructor. The first class is March 25 and the second on March 28.
 Each runs for five weeks and the fee is $27. Students will learn the art of preparing, stuffing and mounting. Each includes techniques of skinning and flushing out and the use of chemicals. Each student will receive a taxidermy specimen in class.
 A four-session Spring Workshop is scheduled to begin March 25 with four two-day sessions. The purpose of the class is to develop a working knowledge of the use of tools to glaze wood. The fee is $20.
 For more information, contact the Registrar, 1000 S. Broadway, Twin Falls, 733-8554, ext. 363, 364 or 365.

Agriculture women slate Ag Days

BURLEY—The Women's Chapter of the Idaho-Winter Association of Agriculture will celebrate Ag Days Saturday at the Burley Mall.
 Activities will include a breakfast, fashion show, fund raising, equipment show and a booth of farm-related organizations, says Renae Samples, chapter president.
 The breakfast, prepared and served by chapter members from 9 to 11 a.m., will cost 97 cents. The price symbolizes the fact that 3 percent of the population who are farmers feed the remaining 97 percent, says Samples.
 The fashion show at 1:30 p.m. will be presented by 4-13 club members. A sprinkler pipe moving contest is scheduled at 2:30 p.m., weather permitting.

The Idaho Women for Agriculture will distribute 3,500 agriculture-related placemats throughout the day and sacks of two cups of pink or white beans also will be given away with a recipe card, courtesy of the chapter. A and B Bean Warehouse and the Idaho Bean Commission.
 The Ag Day is being held in conjunction with National Agriculture Week March 15-21. Other activities include an essay contest for farm women only. Deadline is March 23, and entries should be mailed to Agriculture Chapter, National Route 3, Box 3636, Burley, Idaho 83318.
 Chapter members also plan to present the program at the Rupert Chamber of Commerce luncheon March 21.

Reservoir

 The cost of Jackson Lake Reservoir project actually is estimated at $82 million—more than 10 times what irrigators would pay. The remaining $74 million is coming from the federal government, which values the project for flood control, fish and wildlife development and recreation as well as irrigation. The total cost could be less.
 The Jackson Lake dam is located directly over a major earthquake fault line, says Leo Busch, chief of the operations and maintenance division for the Mindoka Project of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation at Burley.
 "If a severe earthquake struck, 'The actual foundation and the embankment itself would likely and you'd lose the dam,'" he says. "The water-soaked soil would act a lot like quicksand."
 "Because of the threat, the BOR has cut the maximum amount of water allowed in the dam twice since 1977 when the danger was discovered. 'We're down now to where only one-third of the reservoir is usable; the other two-thirds is restricted,'" he said.
 The rehabilitation project essentially will reinforce the foundation and compact the embankment around it to great density. It also will broaden the base of the dam to firm it up.
 When the four-year project is finished in 1989, the dam should be able to withstand an earthquake with intensity of more than 7.0 on the Richter scale, Busch says. Work is scheduled to begin this year with reconstruction of a road over the top of the dam.
 Rosholt says if shareholders vote against the government proposal, they could jeopardize their stake in the Jackson Lake Reservoir.
 "We draw some of the Jackson Lake reservoir every year," he says. "The Twin Falls Canal Co. draws only about 10 percent of its water from the reservoir, but the Northside Canal Co. and Mindoka Irrigation District take as much as a third of their water from Jackson Lake."
 The Jackson Lake stockers normally are used in the peak parts of the irrigation season, the last week of July and the first two weeks of August, Rosholt says. "This is the (water) space that assures us that the crops can be finished in this valley," he says.

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: On the subject of cowboys wearing their hats indoors in more genteel times, restaurants had "coaltoms," which had proper spaces for hats and someone to watch them — and prevent their being pilfered.

Nowadays, if a restaurant has a coatroom at all, it is "at the customer's risk" and has no place even to hang a hat. Often not even a peg card.

I'm always seeing either wearing the hat during meals or putting it on the seat of an adjacent chair, subject to being slipped on by careless waiters, or sat upon by incoming customers.

I sometimes hang my hat on a convenient projection from the wall, be it stee horns, false beams or a bookcase. In roudier places, I have been known to take out a knife, stick it in a wall plank and hang my hat thereupon.

Lucky (and rare) is the home nowadays that has a hall closet, much less one with room for anything but a ski cap. Throwing the coats on the bed in the spare bedroom often results in coats landing stop a hat and crushing it. Sometimes the coats even have people still in them!

— WILLIAM D., DEER PARK

DEAR ABBY: Perhaps I can provide a reasonable explanation for why cowboys wear their hats indoors.

Those hats are so big, there is no place to put them. Also, each brim is shaped individually by the owner according to his personal taste. A real cowboy bends the brim of his hat to suit himself, and when he removes it, he always places it upside down on the crown with nothing touching it to keep the brim from being bent out of shape.

Concert raises funds for renovation

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Efforts to raise funds to renovate the historic Austin Organ at the First-United Methodist Church culminated successfully Sunday night with an organ concert by Helen Connolly.

The Rev. Tom Tucker said Monday that $19,499 has been donated either as cash or pledges sufficient to cover the cost of the extensive work needed to repair and replace many of the mechanical parts of the 1920 instrument.

Connolly, who has been church organist since 1977, received a standing ovation for her keyboard skill at the conclusion of the concert, which drew a near capacity crowd.

Her repertoire reflected a variety of programming, ranging from classics by Bach and Handel to "Suite Breve" by the 20th century French composer, Jean Langlais.

"Ironically, the need for the organ renovation was simply illustrated during the Langlais suite, the last day night on the program, when the mechanism on an organ which activates the full reed chorus of stops became stuck and could not be released.

After several futile attempts to shut down the organ, Connolly was advised to turn off the electricity which released the mechanism, and she was able to conclude the other movements of the suite.

The organist said the button had never before gotten stuck. "It really demonstrates why the organ needs to be renovated," she said.

She said representatives of the Austin Company who have inspected the instrument report many of the moving parts have worn out over the 60 years since it was installed in 1921.

Although the incident conveniently underpinned the reason for the benefit concert, Rev. Tucker emphasized it "definitely was not planned."

The minister also said enjoyment of the concert was enhanced with the loan of a large television set and video camera from Curtis Mathis. The equipment was positioned so the organ keyboard and some of the foot pedals could be viewed on the large screen in the front of the sanctuary.

Tucker said arrangements will be made Monday with the Austin company for the repair project which is expected to be done this summer.

DEAR ABBY: Your column about the cowboy hat reminded me of a story that circulated in the Houston area about the former Houston Oilers coach, Bum Phillips, now coach of the New Orleans Saints.

Bum always wore his 10-gallon hat, which made him easily identifiable on the sidelines at football games. However, he never wore his hat when the Oilers played at home in the Astrodome.

A reporter once asked Bum why he never wore his cowboy hat at a home game as the story goes, he replied, "My mama taught me that a gentleman always removes his hat when he enters a home, and the Astrodome is home to me."

— MARCIA B., TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: I know why cowboys always wear their 10-gallon hats. An honest-to-God cowboy wears his hat to shade his eyes from the scorching sun, but his face gets tanned anyway, taking on the look of leather.

Meaning his forehead is as fair as a newborn baby's bottom, and if he removes his hat, he will look silly with his tan face and his pale forehead, so he never takes his hat off unless he's going to bed.

DEAR ABBY: Who said a cowboy never removes his hat? I just saw Gene Autry on the news. He was all dressed up in his spiffy restaurant clothes, including a beautiful 10-gallon hat, but when a lady approached him, I noticed that he took his hat off. Now, there's a gentleman for you!

Come to think of it, John Wayne always took his hat off in the presence of a lady, and so did Hopalong Cassidy, Gary Cooper and George Montgomery.

Community school holds registration

By JANE NEBUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE Registration is under way for the second session of Shoshone Community school.

Director Linda Payne said deadline for registering is Wednesday. A minimum of 10 participants must register for a class to be held, and fees are to be paid to the instructor at the first session, she said.

High school music teacher Ross Gedeborg will offer his guitar class again this session with instruction for advanced beginners, students with a basic knowledge of the guitar.

Classes for this nine-week course begin March 19 and will be held each Tuesday from 6-7 p.m. in the high school music room. There is a $20 fee plus cassette tape and work book to be purchased at the first class.

Area artist Carol Bourdeaux is also continuing her oil painting class with an advanced beginners session scheduled.

The six-week course for students with a basic knowledge of oil painting began Thursday from 7-10 p.m. at the high school art room. There is a $24 fee.

Juanita Harris Trentle's Motivation Workshop was popular in the first session, that she is going to offer a follow-up, two-hour presentation on goal writing, April 2.

There will be no charge for this one-time-only class to be held at the high school at 7:30 p.m. Participants are asked to bring a list of their goals and desires.

"Stretch and sew" with Clairollette Swainston from Richfield will be offered again this session also.

Classes begin March 22 in the school home economic room and will be held each Thursday at 7 p.m. There is a $15 fee and participants will need to provide their own sewing supplies.

New in this session of community classes will be fly tying classes, women's weight training and a co-ed adult recreation class.

David Hatmaker of Jerome will teach fly tying each Tuesday for four weeks beginning March 19 at 7 p.m. at the high school.

There is a $1 per week charge and

A $24 fee will be charged for the course and child care is available by checking with Joy's Hair.

The women's weight training course will be taught by John Montagna of the Jerome Fitness Center to acquaint women with the various weight training apparatus in the high school weight room. The six-week course will be held at the weight room each Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 10 a.m., beginning with a free demonstration March 19.

A co-ed adult recreation class will be held in the Lincoln-Eliemen Center to acquaint women with the basketball, martial and jump rope available for class members to use for individual practice.

The six-week session begins at 7 p.m. March 19 and will be held Monday evenings. There is no fee or specific instruction.

A one-time only class on caring for children's teeth will be taught by Sandra Engle at 7 p.m. in the high school. There will be no charge for the two-hour course.

Registration forms are available from Payne, several Shoshone merchants or the Lincoln Eliemen Center.

Uniform fire code discussed

By DIANA HOOLEY
Times-News correspondent

GLENNIS FERRY Fire Chief Dick Anderson says Glennis Ferry to operate under the 1982 Idaho Uniform Fire Code.

Anderson said with the adoption of the code by the department would become eligible for certified fire hazard inspector training from the state.

The Glennis Ferry City Council agreed Thursday to see what the department must do to qualify.

The department is currently operating under a code established in the 1960s, said Anderson.

He said the 1982 code, developed by the state fire marshal, is a standard detailing safety features and building structures to prevent fire hazards.

Anderson said he is unsure whether or not the 1982 Fire Code adoption is mandated by the state.

"I think," said Anderson, "the state fire marshal is just encouraging every fire department to adopt the new code, so we're all moving in the same direction."

Anderson said the new code is similar to the old one with no drastic changes or more stringent regulation.

The real benefit of adopting the new code would be to acquire fire department training at the expense of the state and to get two or three certified fire inspectors within the department, Anderson said.

Desire helps lift Jerome

Tigers prepare for A-2 finals

By SCOTT TUDEHOPE
Times-News writer

JEROME — If the road to state begins with one small step, perhaps that step for the Jerome Tigers came very early in the season.

Maybe it came down to a determined attitude. "I think there are two reasons why we're here," said second-year Jerome boys' basketball coach Ben Allen of his players, "who will face Snake River High School at Moreland Thursday at 4:45 p.m. in the first round of the Idaho Class A-2 tournament in the Boise State Pavilion. One is that they're high achievers... these kids just refuse to die. The other thing is that they're good in school — and as most teachers know, good students make good athletes."

The Tigers, who usually have no one in the lineup taller than 6 feet, finished third this season in the South-Central Conference. Confident behind co-champions Wood River and Burley. But they won the District 4 tournament — and the Magic Valley's only berth to the state A-2 nest — by outshooting and out-defending the other three teams.

If marks were given for consistency, one would have to consider awarding starting 5-foot-11 senior Jeff Burnham a 4.9 for his team-leading 76 percent free throw performance and a credible 43.6 percent shooting percentage from the field. The personable point guard was selected by his teammates before the season began as the player most of them would pass off to for the classic last-second clutch shot.

That didn't surprise Allen, who said Burnham would be his choice too.

And while it's nice to think his teammates and coach have that much confidence in him, Burnham said it came down to who had the hottest hand on any given night.

"As a team we shoot really well from the outside," he said. "Brian Martens had a great night against Burley (in a victory in the Tigers' first season finale), so maybe it'd be him."

"I've given them the green light to shoot," said Allen. "Maybe I'm wrong in doing that, but I feel that the players know it's important to take those 30-footers. It's a good shot. What do you do with a small, zippy ballclub? Ask advice from another coach who's faced the same situation.

"One thing that helped me was that I got a lot of help from Kirk Williams at Borah," said Allen, who had won the SCIC title in his first season at Jerome with the help of 6-5 Gary Hulsey, since graduated to Utah State. "Kirk had a team very similar to ours... but I sat down with him and he helped us (develop game plans)."

While size certainly contributes to who collects the most rebounds, Allen claims there's more to it than what Mother Nature has bestowed upon the Tigers.

"When you're our size you block out," said the coach. "Besides, you don't have to be tall to get rebounds. It's positioning."

The Tigers' leading rebounder is Dee Herfel, a 5-11 senior. Aid will Herfel's averaging five boards a game, that could prove to be a problem at state — although the Tigers effectively dealt with state A-3 runner-up Gooding, which features a bevy of tall players, in two games this season.

Does the prospect of going up against human trees worry players like Shawn Black, a 5-10 senior? The trick, he said, is to think positively.

"A lot of people said we were short, so we kind of started thinking that way," he explained. "We just decided to play our style of game and we began to win. We had the confidence before, but the three-overtime (Feb. 14) win over Burley gave our fans the confidence. That's what we really needed."

Jerome's roller-coaster season began with a pair of non-conference wins, but soon evolved into short-lived spurts of victories and defeats. On Feb. 8, Wood River was the last SCIC team to hand the Tigers a loss. Six days later, Martens hit a pair of three-pointers with just seconds to play in the Valentine's Day win over Burley, which would be a harbinger of things to come.

"That game really turned us around," said Black. "It helped us a lot, and we came alive."

The Bobcats again fell victim to Jerome just five days later in the opening night of the state tournament. See JEROME on Page C2

Jerome will need a top effort at state from Jeff Burnham.

All-America: Tisdale joins Ewing again

NEW YORK (AP) — Patrick Ewing of Georgetown and Wayne Tisdale of Oklahoma were named to The Associated Press' All-American basketball team for the fifth straight year Monday.

Chris Mullin of St. John's and Keith Lee of Memphis State joined Ewing and Tisdale as unanimous choices for the first team. Also chosen to the first team was Wichita State's Xavier McDaniel, who could be the first Division I player to lead the nation in both scoring and rebounding.

Ewing, Tisdale and Mullin were teammates on the U.S. Olympic gold medal team last summer.

Ewing, a 7-foot, 240-pound senior center, led the defending NCAA champions to a 30-0 record, including the Big East Conference tournament title over St. John's. He averaged 14.5 points, 7.7 rebounds and blocked 121 shots — the fourth straight season he has blocked 100 or more shots.

An intimidating defensive force, Ewing is a sure choice as the National Basketball Association's No. 1 draft choice. "I'm really impressed at his shots from the field this season, raising his career total to 2,096 points. He also grabbed 1,377 rebounds and blocked 479 shots in four seasons."

Tisdale, a 6-9 junior center, led the Sonoma State to a 28-5 record this season. The Big Eight Conference regular season and tournament crowns with a 25.5 scoring average on 57 percent field goal shooting and a 10.2 rebound average. He's the Big Eight's all-time leading scorer with 2,570 points.

Tisdale is expected to be a leading draft pick by the NBA if he passes up his senior season. Tisdale's high regular season and tournament crown this season was 55 points against Southwestern (Texas). See TEAM on Page C2

WAYMON TISDALE Third time, along with Ewing.

Mullin, a 6-9 senior guard, became the Redman's leading career scorer with 1,838 points. His total to 2,550 points will be 19.5 average on 53 percent field goal shooting and 82 percent from the free-throw line. St. John's posted a 27.7 mark, including the Big East regular season title.

A complete player, Mullin also led the Redman to assists and steals and was the team's third best rebounder.

Lee, a slender 6-10 senior, became the leading scorer and rebounder in average. He's the Big Eight's all-time leading scorer with 2,570 points. He is expected to be a leading draft pick by the NBA if he passes up his senior season. Tisdale's high regular season and tournament crown this season was 55 points against Southwestern (Texas). See TEAM on Page C2

Top tourney seeds head college poll

By The Associated Press

Georgetown, Oklahoma, the Big Eight regular season and tournament champion, and Oklahoma, the top four seeds in this year's NCAA tournament, will be finished in the top spot Monday in the final Associated Press college basketball poll.

The Hoyas, 30-2 and the top seed in the East Region, were the unanimous choice of the nationwide panel of 63 sports writers and broadcasters, finishing with 1,280 points.

Georgetown, the Big Ten tournament champion, and defending NCAA champion, held the No. 1 position in the poll for all but five weeks in the 1984-85 season.

Michigan, the Big Ten champion, and top seed in the Southeast Region, improved from third to second with 1,175 points. The Wolverines' 25-3 narrowly escaped defeat in their regular season finale as they beat Indiana 72-61 on a buzzer-beater by freshman Gary Grant.

St. John's, which was the only other team to hold the top spot in the poll, fell one place to third with 1,124 points after suffering its third loss of the season, 92-80, to Georgetown in the finals of the Big East tournament.

Two more Redman's three losses in their 30 games came at the hands of Oklahoma, the Big Eight regular season and tournament champion, held fourth place from last week with 1,061 points. The Sooners, 25-5, will be finished in the Midwest Region.

Memphis State, 27-3 and the Metro Conference champion, remained fifth with 1,004 points while Georgia Tech, 24-7, which defeated North Carolina Sunday for the Atlantic Coast Conference title, jumped three places to sixth with 901.

North Carolina, 24-8, dropped one place to seventh with 794, while Louisiana Tech, the champions of the Southland Conference, and holders of the second best record at 27-2, remained eighth at 737.

Nevada-Las Vegas, 27-3, the champions of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, jumped from 11th to ninth with 728, while Duke, 22-7, which was eliminated in the semifinals of the ACC tournament by Georgia Tech, rounded out the Top Ten at 653.

Virginia Commonwealth, 25-6 and the Sun Belt Conference champion, improved one place to lead the Second Ten, followed by Illinois, Kansas State, Texas Tech, Tulsa, Georgia and Louisiana State.

Rozelle says cease-fire in bidding war aids NFL

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Complicated issues that roiled the NFL for two months ago that the National Football League's 28 teams were heading for financial trouble said Monday that the United States Football League's retrenchment has made the NFL financially sound again.

"I think we're in pretty healthy shape," Rozelle said during a break in the annual NFL owners' meeting here. "None of our teams are in trouble. I would think that virtually all of them made money last season and will take steps to make money in the future."

Rozelle's position was a 180-degree reversal from the one that league officials had been setting forth for the past year and that the commissioner himself resisted at his annual pre-Super Bowl conference — that escalating salaries caused by the bidding war for players with the 3-year-old USFL could put most NFL teams into the red by 1988.

Rozelle said Monday that these predictions were based on a continuation of that war, which he said could have meant a 40 percent increase in costs in a three-year period. That was evident last season, when the USFL signed up about a third of the top 100 players coming out of college.

Since the Super Bowl, however, the USFL has signed only one prime rookie — Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie — who received a contract from the New Jersey Giants that will bring him an estimated $8.5 million over six years. "I don't think there will be the kind of bidding for players this year that there was in the past," Rozelle said.

Based on what's happened so far — and it can change — Flutie's is one of the five or six rounds of one in the first five or six rounds of our draft. That doesn't mean they're not going to come back and bid aggressively after our draft, but that's the situation as it is now."

Asked if any teams had lost money last season, Rozelle said he didn't know, because some teams, like the San Francisco 49ers, are continuing to pay off the debts incurred by their purchase. But he added, "I way over a majority were in a profit situation."

Meanwhile, the owners were presented with a 66-page report from the league's Competition Committee, the gist of which was a series of procedural or rules changes designed to speed up the game. They include 20-second instead of 90-second timeouts during the last two minutes of each game, restarting the clock after some penalties and encouraging the officials to put the ball into play more quickly.

Rozelle and members of the committee, including its chairman, Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys, have stressed they don't want to do anything that would take players out of the games. The league average is about 160 players per game.

Palmer still dreams of victory at PGA

By BOB GREEN
AP golf writer

ORLANDO, Fla. — Dreams die hard. Age does not affect them. If anything, they become more hardy with the passing years. When they are nourished and cherished and pursued for something more than three decades, their vitality does not decline.

There comes a time, however, when they must be recognized for what they are — dreams. "I still have the dream," Arnold Palmer said. "I still have the dream that someday, maybe in the PGA, like Lee (Trevino) did last year, I can put it all together again," he said.

The PGA national championship. It's the big one that got away, the one major title Palmer has not collected. He's come close, so tantalizingly agonizingly close.

He tied for second with Jack Nicklaus behind Bobby Nichols in Columbus, Ohio, in 1964. He tied for second with Bob Charles behind Julius Boros at San Antonio, Texas, in 1969. And he chased Dave Stockton to the title at Southern Hills in Tulsa, Okla., in 1970.

But he never won it. It's the one blank in a marvelous record, the one omission that prevents him from joining Nicklaus, Gene Sarazen, Ben Hogan and Gary Player as the only men to sweep the game's Big Four titles.

Of course, he still has the dream. But it's only that. A dream. "I would take a miracle," he said. "And I know better than anyone in golf that miracles don't happen."

Palmer hoped to make a miracle happen early this year. He headed him.

At the start of the season, in the Bob Hope Classic, he said he would play only three regular-tour events, the Hope, Hawaiian Open and his own Bay Hill Classic, and spend most of his time on the seniors tour.

"If I play pretty well, though, I might decide to wrestle more," Arnold said. "But I might not play well."

He missed the cut in the Hope. He missed the cut in Hawaii. And last week he missed the cut at Bay Hill.

It convinced him the time has come. "There comes a time when your skills erode," he said. "I have decided that I will no longer take up a tournament spot that could go to someone else," said the man who has had such an enormous influence on the growth of the game. "He was not saying goodbye. Not exactly. There are conditions."

In selected tournaments, if the sponsors feel my presence would be of benefit to the tournament, I may play," he said.

There are certain others — at Bay Hill, the Masters, perhaps the British Open — And, too, there is a lifetime exemption in the PGA.

He'll still try that one. He'll still chase the big one that got away.

After all, he said, "I still have the dream."

ARNOLD PALMER Disappointments don't daunt him.

ATLANTA (AP)—Jerry Cummings was a little bit out of position most of the night but it didn't seem to matter as he and Sidney Moneer each scored 26 points to lead the Milwaukee Bucks to a 121-115 National Basketball Association victory over Atlanta Monday night.

Center Paul Moneer had 22 rebounds, 10 assists and we had to move Terry into the post," said Bucks Coach Don Nelson. "He responded well."

"Ricky Pierce did a good job," Nelson said. Craig Hodges and Paul Thompson did a fine job also."

"We've been playing in spurts, playing up and down," said Moneer. "But we've made some legitimate runs."

The Hawks are a very sloppy team and young and they stay in a lot of games because of their enthusiasm," Cummings said. "Every time we've seen them they've come to play."

With Williams tied at 17 at the half, Allan Lister opened the third period with a layup that put the Bucks ahead 79-77.

Milwaukee built its third period lead with an 8-2 streak, making it 87-72, and went on for a 92-84 third quarter score.

Milwaukee gets out of place, but still tops Atlanta 121-115

ATLANTA (AP)—Jerry Cummings was a little bit out of position most of the night but it didn't seem to matter as he and Sidney Moneer each scored 26 points to lead the Milwaukee Bucks to a 121-115 National Basketball Association victory over Atlanta Monday night.

Center Paul Moneer had 22 rebounds, 10 assists and we had to move Terry into the post," said Bucks Coach Don Nelson. "He responded well."

"Ricky Pierce did a good job," Nelson said. Craig Hodges and Paul Thompson did a fine job also."

"We've been playing in spurts, playing up and down," said Moneer. "But we've made some legitimate runs."

The Hawks are a very sloppy team and young and they stay in a lot of games because of their enthusiasm," Cummings said. "Every time we've seen them they've come to play."

With Williams tied at 17 at the half, Allan Lister opened the third period with a layup that put the Bucks ahead 79-77.

Milwaukee built its third period lead with an 8-2 streak, making it 87-72, and went on for a 92-84 third quarter score.

Bullets 119, Bulls 112

LANDOVER, Md. (AP)—Jeff Malone scored 37 points to pace the Washington Bullets to a 119-112 victory over the Chicago Bulls Monday night.

It was the third consecutive game in which Malone, a second-year guard from Mississippi State, has finished with 30 or more points.

Che Williams added 22 and Cliff Robinson 20 for the Bulls, who moved ahead of New Jersey into third place in the NBA's Atlantic Division.

Washington, 33-32, led throughout the second half. After trailing 95-94 at the quarter, the Bullets took advantage of long-range shooting by Tom McMillen to take a 63-59 halftime lead.

Cavaliers 122, Indiana 110

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP)—World B. Free scored 28 points and the Cleveland Cavaliers used a full-court trapping defense to overcome a 16-point deficit to defeat the Indiana Pacers 122-110 Monday night.

Cleveland, 28-38, won for the seventh time in its last eight games while sending the Pacers, 47-45, to their sixth straight loss.

The Cavaliers trailed by 18 points late in the first half, but rallied behind the press and 10 points each from Free and John Bagley in the third quarter to tie the game 90-90 entering the final period.

Pistons 121, Clippers 114

DETROIT (AP)—Forward Kurt Tribacka scored 12 of his 22 points in the fourth quarter to help lift the Detroit Pistons to a 121-114 victory over the Los Angeles Clippers Monday night.

Center Bill Lumberg, who scored a team-high 23 points, and guard John Long each netted 10 points in the third quarter to cut a 63-82 halftime deficit to an 89-89 tie going into the final period.

Eight Pistons gave Detroit the lead for good, 83-82, with 10:35 remaining in the game. Tribacka then scored six straight Pistons baskets in a four-minute stretch to give Detroit a 111-105 advantage with 3:38 left.

Mavericks 103, Sonics 100

DALLAS (AP)—Brad Davis, the league's best free throw shooter, hit a pair of foul shots with one second left to seal a 103-100 victory for the Dallas Mavericks over the Seattle SuperSonics Monday night.

The victory was the 70th career victory in the National Basketball Association for Dallas coach Dick Motta. Motta, in his 17th season, is fourth on the all-time NBA victory list with a record of 701-673.

Seattle had cut the lead to 101-100 with two seconds remaining on consecutive three-point goals by Tom Chambers and Jack Sikma.

On Dallas' inbound play, Gerald Henderson fouled Davis. Davis hit both attempts to give Dallas its fourth victory in five games and a perfect 4-0 mark against Seattle this season.

Burley team enjoys scoring spree

FILER—Brothers Jeff and Jesse Miller scored 28 and 24 points, respectively, as Oneida Burger King of Burley outscored Magic Valley Dairy of Jerome 129-94 Monday night in the opening round of the Filer Outlaw Basketball Tournament.

Rusty Palmer led Magic Valley Dairy with 20 points.

In another game, Farmers National Bank of Buhl defeated the Filer 61-52, with Greg Bostock leading Farmers with 19 and Alan Sample getting 18 for Red's. Also, Person's of Murtough at 6:15; Coors of Magic Valley faces Rangen of Buhl at 7:30; Buhl Auto Body plays Clover at 8:45 and Mr. B's of Filer confronts Diamond Laundry of Gigans Ferry at 10.

Arizona gets luxurious 41-21 win over Bulls

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP)—Arizona Outlaws Coach Frank Kush called Monday night's 41-21 rout of the Jacksonville Bulls "a luxury." Kush said the United States Football League game was played in a steady drizzle.

Doug Williams threw three touchdown passes and Reggie Brown scored twice on such runs for Outlaws, who had generated just 23 points in the first two games.

"We've done a lot with the offense and now the people are acquiring the knowledge to execute it," Kush said. "This is the type of ballgame this team is capable of playing."

He told the team tonight that he could be more than a first-half football team. We made ourselves a good number of opportunities and that big lead was a luxury."

Ahead 13-7 at halftime, Arizona turned a fumble into a 41-21 rout. The victory was the 14th in a quick points which sealed its second win in three games.

"We got beat by a good football team. We made too many mistakes to beat anybody tonight," said Bulls Coach Lindy Infante. "We made errors that put us in terrible field position, but we're a better ballclub than what we showed."

51. But the next evening fell prey to Jerome's outside attack, 63-52. Then Burley, in its fourth and final meeting with the Tigers this season, lost by five points. The Fourth District representative was finally chosen on Feb. 26, after three months and 23 games.

"Personally, I've felt we were from the beginning these kids made up the best team in the district," said Allen of his 13-10 ballclub. "They're very confident."

Economists see '86 recession

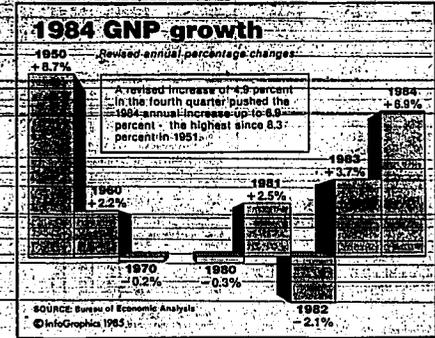

By MARTIN CRUISINGER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's economy, which just completed a year of the strongest growth in three decades, could be in a recession next year, economists say.

The forecast of many of the nation's top economists. Even those who are not calling for an outright recession believe the country will face a hybrid recovery — a "growth recession" next year.

In a growth recession, the nation's output of goods and services — the gross national product — keeps expanding but at a pace that is so slow that the unemployment rate begins rising as well.

The traditional view is that the GNP needs to grow at an annual rate of at least 3 percent to create enough jobs to accommodate a growing labor force.

While the consensus among private forecasters is for growth this year of 3.5 percent to 4 percent, the estimate for next year is much lower. A recent survey among members of the National Association of Business Economists found that a majority believe the next recession would begin in 1985. Steve Liden, president of the association, said this view was only slightly more pessimistic than the mainline forecasting firms.

The difference between our forecast of a mild recession and the mainline forecasters' is relatively small," he said.

Liden, who is chief economist for Rowe Price Associates, an investment firm, said he expected the economy would hit its next recession from April through September of next year.

He predicted it will be a mild recession with the unemployment rate rising to only 8 percent before growth resumes in the final months of the year.

One reason many economists believe the next recession will be milder than the steep 1961-62 downturn is that some of the problems that plagued the economy through the 1970s — soaring oil prices and high inflation — are no longer present.

Those economists who believe the economy can "escape" an outright recession that the Federal Reserve Board will come to the rescue by pushing interest rates lower if growth begins to weaken. The central bank did just that last fall after growth slowed dramatically in July through September.

But as inflation stays low and that will give the Fed the flexibility to keep "the expansion going," said Robert Westcott, senior economist at Wharton.

Uniformly, economists cite huge federal budget deficits as the reason they believe this recovery will not last as long as the average expansion.

The budget deficit, economists believe, "gobbles up the money" the private sector needs to expand and drives up interest rates.

Champion selling off lumber

SALMON (AP) — Champion International Corp., which is closing its Salmon sawmill, predicts sale of the facility's lumber inventory will be complete by April.

The inventory, located about 1.5 million board feet when sawing ceased on Feb. 27. Planning operations ended five days later.

Jack McFadden, sales manager at the mill, said the Salmon operation is the victim of a severe slump that continues to cripple the Northwest lumber industry.

The sale of lumber at the same price as 10 years ago, he said. This is good for the consumer, but not very good for the producer.

The closure stands to have a ripple effect on employment in the Salmon National Forest, where Champion harvested timber, said Ernie Schneider, the forest's timber officer.

Alaska serving Boise again

BOISE (AP) — Alaska Airlines was to fly one round-trip flight between Boise and Seattle Monday, company officials said.

The company resumed service to and from Boise on Sunday, with a flight leaving for Seattle in late afternoon, a spokesman for the carrier said.

The airline resumed service to Boise on March 4, after its Boeing 737 and baggage handlers went on strike.

Jim Johnson, an Alaska Airlines spokesman in Seattle, said Friday that the company would re-establish its full schedule of three daily flights to and from Boise as soon as possible.

Service number established

BOISE (AP) — Mountain Bell has established a single statewide telephone number, 1-833-9440, for Idaho customers to call when they need to contact the company on service or billing matters.

The number will connect customers with a service representative responsible for handling local services.

Mountain Bell continues with two additional toll-free Idaho numbers to handle repair needs for services provided by the company. Residential customers with repair needs should call 1-851-1631. The business number is 1-851-1633.

Mountain Bell is responsible for outside telephone writing or writing inside the home or business for which it has a maintenance agreement.

Sunshine acquires oil firm

BOISE (AP) — Sunshine Mining Co. has announced it has reached a definitive agreement to acquire Oklahoma-based Woods Petroleum Corp. for about $305 million in cash and stock.

Each share of Woods common stock will be exchanged for $5 cash, 1.5 shares of Sunshine common stock and one share of newly established Sunshine preferred stock valued at $9.25.

Previously, Sunshine agreed to buy about 25 percent of Woods common stock from shareholders, including four of Woods' nine directors and members of the Woods and Voss families, founders of the company. Sunshine will pay $25 a share.

The merger still must be approved by Woods and Sunshine shareholders, and by the federal Securities and Exchange Commission.

When the merger is completed, Woods headquarters will remain in Oklahoma City and employees will be retained at their present location, Woods President V. Lee Powell said.

Southwest buys out Muse Air

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines, embroiled in a Texas-style shootout with Muse Air for four years, announced Monday that it was ending the feud by buying its competitor for cash and stock valued at more than $60 million.

The deal delivers a $6 million to $8 million profit to Dallas financier Harold C. Simmons for his recent $10 million investment in Muse and brings rival executives Herbert D. Kelleher and M. Lamar Muse together again.

Kelleher, Southwest's chairman, fired Muse as Southwest's president in 1978. Muse had been president and chief executive since 1971, when Southwest was founded.

Wall Street posts 4th straight loss

By CHEY CURRIER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market posted its fourth straight loss Monday with a moderate decline in the Dow Jones Industrial Average ending the trading day in more than two months.

Some computer and technology issues bucked the downturn.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 29.70 points last week, lost another 1.11 to 1,289.35.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to $4.11 billion shares, down from 96.59 million Friday and the smallest total since 77.48 million changed hands on Jan. 4.

An upswing in interest rates of late has been cited as the major reason for the market's skittishness. Even when rates fell back sharply on Friday, stocks were unable to mount a rally.

Analysts say confidence in the prospective strength and durability of the economic expansion have to have faltered a bit in the past few weeks.

There appears to have been a recent increase of skittishness, pessimism, whatever, amongst the professionals in Wall Street," said William J. Lafferty, an analyst at Purcell-Graham & Co.

"Much time is being spent currently trying to decide whether the market has topped out. We think this is a positive development. A few weeks ago there were just too many bulls," he said.

Fresh evidence of the pace of economic activity is due later this week with reports on retail sales and industrial production for February.

The brokerage firm of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. estimates that the figures for 1984 will show gains similar to the relatively healthy advances recorded in January.

However, some analysts said the figures could show evidence of slowing growth, which in turn might allow interest rates to fall again.

J.M.C. Mull Industries jumped 6 to 19 1/4. Inland Steel made a bid to take over the company for $18 a share. Inland Steel shares gave up 1 to 22 1/2.

Office equipment and technology issues recording gains included: International Business Machines, up 1 1/2 to 41 1/4; rebounding from a 6 1/2 point drop last week; Digital Equipment, up 1 1/2 to 105 1/2; Teletype, up 2 1/2 to 22 1/2; and Hewlett-Packard, up 1/2 to 37 1/2.

IBM Data General fell 1 1/2 to 46 1/2.

J.M.C. Mull Industries, which came in with steady weekly earnings for the fiscal quarter ended Feb. 23, fell 2 1/2 to 38 1/2.

Phillips Petroleum led the active list, down 1 1/4 to 49 1/2 in trading that included several large blocks.

In the daily count on the Big Board, declining issues outnumbered advances by more than 3 to 2. The exchange composite index dropped 23 to 103.59.

Settlement turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 109.5 million shares.

serious recession, but by no means are we forecasting a 'bust' growth," he said.

As a result, Chimerine and many other economists have an equally bleak outlook for unemployment predicting virtually no improvement in the jobless rate over the next two years.

The civilian unemployment rate reached a post-Depression peak during the last recession of 10.7 percent in November 1982.

While unemployment dropped dramatically during the early part of the recovery, those big gains have disappeared. The government said Friday that the unemployment stood at 7.3 percent of the civilian workforce in February, a 0.15 percentage point higher than the jobless rate last June.

Even the Reagan administration is predicting unemployment will be down only slightly to 7 percent by the end of the year.

The administration, however, is more optimistic about the economy's overall performance, forecasting growth of 4 percent annually for the next four years without recession in sight through the end of this decade.

Interior wants to end grazing right leasing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Department of the Interior is proposing the leasing of grazing rights to holders of its permits to run livestock on public land.

Until last October, holders of grazing permits for land managed by the Bureau of Land Management were allowed to lease their rights to others.

Congress then required the bureau to recapture for the government through fines whatever profits permit holders made by leasing, if any, after October 1.

With grazing rights to private and military land typically running at $8 to $4 per cow-calf pair for a month, some ranchers found they could profit by leasing out permits for which they paid the government $1.37 under a congressional set formula.

The National Forest Service, which also leases land for grazing, has the allowed permit holders to lease their rights to others.

G.L. Edwards, spokesman for the bureau, said he did not know how much money ranchers made by leasing their permits. The bureau said last year that 693 ranchers had leased their permits in 1983.

The bureau said it would accept public comment on its proposal until May 15.

Bob Wright, superintendent of the new Eastern Oregon Correctional Institution, looks over the grounds of the prison

From a hospital to a prison

Old Oregon mental institution in Pendleton gets a facelift

By BOB BAUM
The Associated Press

PENDLETON, Ore. — From a distance, the changes at the old Eastern Oregon State Hospital building are subtle. The massive institution—brown, four-story structure, a familiar landmark on the northern edge of Pendleton for nearly three-quarters of a century, looks the same to the thousands who travel past on nearby Interstate 84.

But those who look closely will find a new 12-foot double fence stretched around the perimeter of the hospital property, with a strange-looking spiral wire just inside the outer fence.

Inside the building, the interior walls have been gutted, exposing the thick concrete exterior of the old mental institution that, as the story goes, helped inspire Ken Kesey's "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

Evidence of construction is everywhere as workers, who until a few months ago were hospital staffers, try to make a modern prison out of one of the state's oldest big buildings.

Overseeing the project is Bob Wright, superintendent of the new Eastern Oregon Correctional Institution, Oregon's first prison outside Salem.

Wright says the prison would not exist if Pendleton leaders hadn't made the original proposal. Ground was broken on the project last April, just 10 months after the Legislature appropriated the necessary $9.6 million for the converting the old hospital, which was completed in 1972 at a cost of $500,000.

The average time nationally for locating a new prison is 18 years, Wright said.

Oregon Corrections Division officials, plagued by overcrowding at the state's two major institutions in Salem, had been pushing for a new prison for years. But lawmakers struggling with massive budget problems had rejected the pleas. A new prison would cost at least $21 million.

Then Pendleton officials, faced with the imminent closure of the mental hospital, approached lawmakers with the idea of converting the structure, and the plan was approved. Pendleton's attitude is unusual, Wright said.

"I think if you look a survey of cities in the United States and asked what was the type of institution you'd like to come in, corrections probably would not be among them," he said.

"But the building was available, and a much-needed prison seemed like the logical answer."

Originally, the plan called for 50 prisoners to be transferred to the Pendleton facility to do the demolition and some construction work. But that idea fell through because the "perimeter wasn't secure" around the new prison, and it would take 40 corrections officers to oversee the construction workers, Wright said.

"Instead, people who worked at the hospital were hired to do the work. They already had undergone training at Blue Mountain Community College to become corrections officers at the prison."

"It's been a tremendous savings for the state," Wright said, "because it didn't require any support services."

He also said the workers have been extremely industrious, especially by state bureaucratic standards.

"What we're encountering out here is a work attitude that's unusual. Perhaps they have a tremendous incentive," he said, noting that many of the workers had homes and long-established lives in Pendleton.

They have torn out old winding stairwells that would have presented a security risk. The staves of 1,340 hospital patients whom no one claimed after death were moved out of the hospital basement and buried. The old crematorium, where the bodies were burned, sits idle at the rear of the building.

When the work is done, most of the 350 inmates will live in six large dormitories. Of 38 individual cells, six will be segregation units.

It will be the second medium-security prison in the state. Wright was the assistant superintendent at the other facility, the Oregon State Correctional Institution, for 11 years. OSCI was the last prison built in Oregon, finished in 1959. Designed to hold 470 prisoners, OSCI now has a population of 970.

Wright said the new prison, which will take first-time prisoners from 18 Eastern Oregon counties, won't eliminate the crowding problem in the state's prisons, "but it's a light in the tunnel."

Only half of the huge hospital is being used, and Wright expects the Corrections Division to ask the Legislature in 1987 for funds to use the entire building, housing 700 to 800 prisoners.

Instead of guard towers, an electronic sensory system will detect activity along the new prison's fence. The activity is monitored in a control center in the heart of the prison.

A spiral "razor ribbon" wire inside the outer fence will help deter would-be escapees.

"It's like Berber Rabbitt's briar patch," Wright said. "It's to slow them down."

Two corrections officers in cars constantly patrol a road that circles the prison boundary, and are to respond immediately to any detector of trouble along the prison fence.

Wright said the security system doesn't make escape impossible. Instead, it is designed to slow down any would-be runaway to make capture by patrol guards inevitable.

The system, selected after a tour of U.S. Bureau of Prison facilities, also is being installed at OSCI and the Oregon State Penitentiary, Wright said.

Sonitron's technology, that came out of Vietnam, would be a "noisy" way to make capture by patrol guards inevitable.

Wright likes the idea of eliminating the guard towers.

"I think it's humane," he said. "Instead of my staff having to watch and be snatched and overbook from the tower position, we'll use our staff inside the prison."

The first batch of prisoners is expected to move in sometime this spring.

Then Pendleton officials, faced with the imminent closure of the mental hospital, approached lawmakers with the idea of converting the structure, and the plan was approved. Pendleton's attitude is unusual, Wright said.

"I think if you look a survey of cities in the United States and asked what was the type of institution you'd like to come in, corrections probably would not be among them," he said.

"But the building was available, and a much-needed prison seemed like the logical answer."

Kellogg faces cleanup of environment

By MIKE GREEN
Coeur d'Alene Press

KELLOGG — When Neah Kellogg first started ore claims in the 1800s, he probably never would have guessed his silver-laced cloud eventually would blacken the city — literally.

Kellogg's claims were in the country's richest silver, lead and zinc mining district. But after a century of mining and ore refining, the area encompasses areas damaged by major environmental blights.

As part of the federal Superfund program to clean up hazardous wastes, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has targeted for study a 20-square-mile area around the Bunker Hill smelter in Kellogg. Cleanup costs could reach $60 million.

The Bunker Hill complexes have been shutdown since the end of 1981, but questions remain about the extent of environmental damage, the number of toxic wastes involved, the type of cleanup that would be most effective and who should pay for it all.

The Superfund study will attempt to answer the first three questions, said Charles Findley, director of EPA's regional hazardous waste division.

Lead in high concentrations around the smelter is the chief health concern, but the Bunker Hill smelter area, which has performed some studies, has identified other heavy metals as likely sources of contamination in soils and water.

Among those are radium, fluoride, PCB, arsenic, cyanide and mercury.

An environmental specialist for the state Health and Welfare Department, Ian von Linder, told a legislative committee the cleanup study area is 22 square miles.

"Bunker Hill promises to be perhaps the largest Superfund project undertaken in the country," von Linder told state senators.

"We may expand the area if, for example, we find extensive groundwater contamination coming from beyond the study boundaries," EPA's Findley said.

Under an agreement with EPA, the state will receive $4,000,000 to study the area. The state and $5,000,000 to develop a community relations plan for the study.

Under provisions of the Superfund Act, the state in December 1989 filed suit against Kellogg, the former Bunker Hill Health and Welfare Department, has begun a $15 million study that will define the nature and extent of contamination. Proposals to solve the problem then will be presented to the state.

"We're still in the initial stages," said Wayne Grothen, EPA project manager in Seattle.

Grothen said the first step in the study will be to assemble and review existing data collected on the smelter area over the years.

The Superfund study has come under fire by Bunker Limited Partnership, an East-Bunker Hill concern, and the Shoshone County Commission, which contends the study duplicates many others completed over the past dozen or so years.

"It's a waste of taxpayers' money," said Jack Kendrick, Bunker Limited president.

Wrote the commission in a letter to the EPA, "surely by this time, the EPA and the Department of Health and Welfare must know every source of hazardous waste and what the soil content is."

But the EPA says this study differs from others because it focuses directly on what to do about contamination of the area. The study also will be more complete than others have been, the EPA said.

"We will be working closely with the state to be certain duplication and unnecessary studies do not occur," said Charles Findley, director of EPA's regional hazardous waste division.

MIT student hopes to be 1st Mexican astronaut

BOSTON (AP) — A Mexican graduate student at Massachusetts Institute of Technology says he would be able to serve his government better if he becomes her country's first astronaut later this year.

"I would like to see how human beings behave in space (and) what sort of activity could be expected for people living in space later on," Carmen Teresa Villarreal Alvarado, 24, said Friday.

"Having been in space would give me a better perspective on things and help me better serve my government," said the Mexico City native, working on master's degrees in aerospace engineering and in technology and policy.

"I think that the space program is going to get a boost, so I think Mexico would need some person knowledgeable on space matters to represent it," Miss Alvarado said.

She applied last month to the Mexican Secretary of Communications and Transportation Office to be the country's first astronaut, who will accompany a communications satellite aboard a U.S. space shuttle flight set for November.

Mexico enters the space age with the launch May 31 of Morelos 1, the first in a $150-million program, but that is unannounced flight.

Miss Alvarado, who said she is one of several applicants for the payload specialist position for the Nov. 6 flight, would not speculate on her chances of winning the slot.

However, she said she looks forward to the space training.

Her parents, Carmen Alvarado and Herman Villarreal, have been very supportive of her plans, she said.

Former state employee still carries on his legal battle

By DEBBY ABE
The Idaho Statesman

BOISE (AP) — A Boise man who has represented himself in a legal action against the state Health and Welfare Department, says as far as the Idaho Supreme Court said he will carry on with his court struggle even if it takes years.

"I didn't get into this as a bill or to break up my week," said Raymond Bowden. "It's a matter of principle."

The Idaho Supreme Court recently ruled against Bowden, who was challenging his 1982 layoff as chief of the Bureau of Health Care Services. The ruling upheld the Department of Health and Welfare's decision for ultimate Bowden's position in the midst of budget cutbacks necessitated by the 1 percent tax limitation.

Deputy Attorney General Sladdock, the most recent of the four attorneys general to defend the department against Bowden, said that to his knowledge, Bowden is the only person laid off during the 1 percent cutbacks who has appealed his layoff to the Idaho Supreme Court.

"I've had people from the Idaho Personnel Commission ask me when I was going to quit — and that was 2 1/2 years ago," Bowden said. "I told them if I was going to quit I wouldn't have gotten into it."

Although he originally sought reinstatement, Bowden said he now is satisfied to receive answers to the legal questions he has raised, which have not been addressed by any of the courts that rendered decisions in his case. In addition, he seeks unspecified lost income.

Bowden has maintained his layoff violated the department's own rules, which he said were not accomplished. In addition, Bowden, who held his position for two years, says his dismissal was "arbitrary and capricious" because it was the result of a department reorganization accomplished in less than two days.

Bowden said he intends to ask the Idaho Supreme Court to reconsider its decision. He said he chose to represent himself throughout the nearly six-year effort because the costs of hiring an attorney would be "staggering for the average guy."

Instead, Bowden has had to expend his own time on the case. He estimates that over the past five years, he has spent at least $50,000 on writing briefs, appearing in court and studying. At least 40 to 50 hours of the time was spent in the library learning the terminology and mechanics of law, he said.

He estimates his cash outlay for required filing fees and transcripts at $500 to $1,000.

Bowden's battle began when he filed a grievance protesting the manner in which he was laid off in June 1979. A review committee found no merit in his grievance, and the Personnel Commission later turned down Bowden's appeal of the committee's decision after a hearing before the hearing officer.

Bowden appeared in 3rd District Court, only to learn the transcript of the hearing had been destroyed. In order to obtain a transcript, he had to have a second hearing before the same officer in 1982.

The Personnel Commission once again upheld the department's action based on the hearing officer's findings. A District Court judge later upheld the Personnel Commission's decision.

On Dec. 4, Bowden stood before the five justices of the Idaho Supreme Court to argue his case. But he said he wasn't nervous.

"I was just anxious to get this thing on the way," he said, adding that he has tried to keep from getting angry or too emotionally involved in the case.

Smell's in your mouth, not in your hand

KELSO, Wash. (AP) — Take the "No, thanks," many will reply. "You take the smell."

Darwin Weber, opted for a plainer and another, — of the small, silvery fish. Sunday at the Kelso Eagles Small Eating Contest, until he had a bellyful.

The look about Weber is, by the time he's had a bellyful, others can no longer smell a fish in the face. Or they're full of whatever else they might be swallowing to try to forget they're also eating small — chocolates, soda pop, beer — and couldn't help it.

So Weber did it again, for the third time in a row.

He's the champion Smell Eater of the World — at least the world as recognized in Kelso, Longview and various other small fishing centers along the Columbia and Cowlitz rivers, each year to procreate and multiply, and give Weber a chance to retain his title.

Weber ate 7 1/2 "finger-sized" fish but foundered toward the end as the effects of dieting and a two-year layoff sank him short of a personal record. Still, the 37-year-old Longview resident left competitors green around the gills in the contest, which wasn't held last year, perhaps because the weather phenomenon "El Nino" cut the small run.

A pungent piscine odor permeated the Aerie Hall as Weber and 49 others devoured dozens of river denizens.

In the ladies' division, Phyllis Clawson chomped on chocolate between swallows to finish off 49 thin-smelt, and narrowly defeat Ann Crieser, who netted 34.

Black students still find Oregon State campus disquieting

By FAY RIGGS
Corvallis Campus Times

CORVALLIS, Ore. — When Joyce Marshall walked across Oregon State University quad in 1979 for the first time in a decade, she felt none of the nostalgia another graduate student might have had for her alma mater. She felt dread.

But Marshall, now a 35-year-old Oregon State graduate student in nutrition, "I did not want to be back in Corvallis."

When she left the campus in 1968, it had been a year of black students who quit the university en masse to protest Oregon State's treatment of minority students. Their protest, sparked by a black football player's refusal to shave his beard, drew national media attention and forced Oregon's highest education system, forcing changes in the way the state's universities recruited and assisted blacks and other minorities.

But 18 years later, Ms. Marshall said Oregon State blacks say many of the issues that triggered the 1969 protest still simmer. For blacks, they say, the years have brought few changes to Oregon State and Corvallis.

The number of black students at Oregon State has reportedly tripled from about 60 in 1969 to perhaps 180 now — not counting some 50 African students on campus this year.

Exact numbers are impossible to come by, Oregon State officials say, because students report their backgrounds only voluntarily. But most officials say barely 1 percent of Oregon State's student population. There are 30 few black faculty members that, as one on one hand, "I can count all of us on one hand."

with assault on an incident that followed a moving match during an intramural basketball game. Despite the fact that the man he allegedly assaulted said he didn't want to press charges.

Campus police stopped in to investigate a recent social gathering at the Black Cultural Center where, students say, they were playing the blues and singing gospel songs. The center has no immediate neighbors.

A black student was stopped by city police as a drunken driving suspect after two breath tests showed no traces of alcohol, he says, who had me, I guess, be high on marijuana or some drug.

Black faculty members, too, report having been stopped by police for no more apparent reason than their color.

Both campus and city police officials deny that their officers single out blacks — although Walt Pflughaupt, Corvallis Emergency Services chief, acknowledged that slightly more blacks, in proportion to their numbers in Corvallis, have run afoul of the law in recent years.

Oliver Powell, chief of campus security, says his office studied the question a few years ago at the request of the Oregon State Affirmative Action office and found no correlation between race and on-campus arrests.

Powell also says his officers get special opportunities for blacks. Within months after the walk-out, the state Board of Higher Education had approved Oregon's colleges to admit, as up to 5 percent of their student population, students who did not meet the normal minimum admission requirements. The policy was aimed at reaching blacks and others who, because of race discrimination, poverty or other causes, lacked the academic skills to get into college.

Originally established to help those 5 percenters, the Educational Opportunity Program today serves a broader purpose: Besides recruiting, testing and counseling minority students, the program offers remedial classes and tutors for any student with academic weaknesses. The program also helps students find jobs.
