Right-to-work goes on Idaho ballot

By QUANE KENYON
The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho voters will vote in the next general election whether they want to keep the state's new right-to-work law.
Capping a quick referendum effort, labor leaders on Monday turned in what they said were 60,920 signatures of registered voters, nearly twice the number needed to force a referendum on the anti-union law. Late in the day, the secretary of state's office put the official count at 61,337, or 417 more than the number reported by the union leaders.
State AFL-CIO President Jim Kerns said at least another 10,000 signatures have been gathered and are awaiting verification by county clerks, signalling strong support for repeal of the law.

A spokesman for the sponsoring Idaho Freedom To Work Committee disputed that, saying the group's own polls show an overwhelming majority of Idaho residents favor right-to-work.
The drive took only half the 60 days allowed by law, and produced far more than the 32,666 signatures required to submit the new law to voter approval.
State election officials said the numbers still have to be verified, but that's only a formality because county clerks already have checked to make certain the petition signers were registered voters.

Kerns said the quick success of the petition drive indicates Idaho voters will reject the new law.
"The polls we have taken show an overwhelming majority of Idaho residents will support right-to-work," said Barry McKnight, co-chairman of the Idaho Freedom To Work Committee. "He (Kerns) has been wrong before, and he's wrong this time."
Kerns said unions already have spent $10,000 to $45,000 on the petition drive and legal battles against right-to-work.
The Legislature in January enacted a right-to-work law over the governor's veto, making Idaho the 21st state with a law banning union membership or compulsory payment of dues as a condition of employment.

Unions immediately filed a lawsuit, which has barred enforcement.
"Union people feel threatened by this law, and they want to get it on the ballot," Kerns said. "There will not be any trick of interest about it among the working people of this state."
The question of right-to-work was put before voters here once before, in the 1958 general election. Right-to-work was defeated then by about 3,000 votes out of 238,000 cast.
McKnight said the results of the 1984 election indicate strong support for right-to-work, since pro right-to-work Republicans won an overwhelming majority.

"The law would not have passed if there had not been overwhelming support for it in the last election," McKnight said.
Kerns said so far, all of the money raised against right-to-work has been from Idaho union members or supporters. At a labor rally last month, he said $1.5 million to $2 million would be spent on the battle against right-to-work.
He said Monday the campaign hasn't been mapped yet, and there is no definite budget for spending. "But the results will be no different here than they have been in other states, such as Missouri, which rejected right-to-work," he said.

Summit offer welcomed U.S. rejects missile plan

By BARRY SCHWEID
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has notified the Soviet Union that it rejects as "one-sided" a proposal by Mikhail S. Gorbachev to halt the deployment of Soviet nuclear missiles aimed at Western Europe, U.S. officials said Monday.
Robert C. McFarlane, the White House national security adviser, said the administration had told Moscow "this is no basis for a balanced outcome."
The presidential adviser told NBC News that in responding to the Soviet leader's announced moratorium "we have pointed out the problems that we find with this kind of one-sided proposal."
"Specifically, McFarlane said, the Soviet Union has 1,200 nuclear warheads already installed on intermediate-range SS-20 missiles, an advantage of more than 8-to-1 over the NATO allies.
"As a result," he said, "we're trying to point out that this is no basis for a balanced outcome."
McFarlane and other administration officials dismissed the moratorium as a propaganda play aimed at Western Europe. The State Department called it "a discredited proposal" and noted it was raised initially by the Soviets three years ago.
At the same time, though, the administration took a more positive stance than it had on Sunday to Gorbachev's statement that he was prepared to hold a summit meeting with President Reagan.

Analysis
"We are pleased that Mr. Gorbachev noted the importance of finding joint ways for improving relations between our two countries," the State Department said in a statement read by spokesman Bernard Kalb.
He reversed suggestions made earlier by other U.S. officials that Gorbachev had violated the secrecy of the weapons-limitation talks in Geneva, Switzerland, by calling for a halt to research on space-based defense systems. The subject is on the agenda there.
"In strict terms," Kalb said, "the confidentiality rules apply to the negotiators and the delegations in Geneva."
The spokesman said a Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting could address a number of issues apart from arms control. These include the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan and U.S. allegations that Moscow is promoting turmoil in the Caribbean.
Kalb said the administration moved Gorbachev was "willing to go forward" in these and other areas. He cited the Soviet leader's statement to the Communist Party newspaper Pravda that "a serious impulse should be given to Soviet-American relations at a high political level."
Meanwhile, a senior U.S. official said in an interview that the Geneva negotiations had not reached the point

Idaho farms in trouble, Evans warns

By QUANE KENYON
The Associated Press

BOISE — Up to one-third of Idaho's 26,000 farms are in serious financial trouble, Gov. John Evans says, and unless they get help, many may not be in business next year.
And if many small farms collapse, it will not be only an agriculture problem, Evans told a news conference here Monday.
"There is not a community on this state that is not closely tied to agriculture," he said.
"If farms go under, it will have a serious impact on the most important industry in this state," Evans said, and the entire state economy will suffer.
The governor and new Agriculture Director Richard Rush have been holding a statewide series of meetings with farmers on the economy.

Evans said it appears to him that fully one-third of the farmers are in "critical condition," and may not survive another year.
Another third appear to have no financial problems. The final one-third have heavy debts, but probably will survive for at least a few years, the governor said.
Evans said Idaho's farmers, as elsewhere, are suffering from low crop prices. He said the economic recovery which has surfaced elsewhere in the country has not come to Idaho.
"We're still suffering and we'll have to do something about that," he said.

He said small farms are suffering the most, but the financial problems are not confined to southern Idaho. Idaho's livestockmen also are suffering from continued depressed prices.
"The governor said although he dislikes the idea of trade barriers, they may be necessary.
"If it comes to a choice between protecting Idaho jobs, and free trade with neighbors such as Canada, Evans said he would prefer the tariffs."
"I'm for free trade, but only when it's fair trade," the governor said. He said some countries are allowing subsidized commodities such as beef and lamb to be dumped into this country, and American producers can't compete.
"We're just not going to stand by and see our markets erode and a decline in our employment base," he said.

Judge delays Lafferty's trial

The Associated Press

PROVO, Utah — Ron Lafferty has been ruled competent to stand trial on first-degree murder charges, but 4th District Court Judge J. Robert Bullock said in a court order Monday that no trial date will be set until a number of legal issues are resolved.
"We're making no determination of whether he can act as his own attorney or not," said court administrator Dan Price.
"Lafferty, 42, has told the court he wants to conduct his own legal defense, as did his younger brother Dan, in his trial on charges in the slaying of his sister-in-law and her baby daughter.
Brenda Wright, Lafferty, 24, formerly of Kimberly, Idaho, is 15-month-old Erica Lafferty were found dead in their American Fork home on July 24.

Attorney Richard Johnson, appointed to represent Lafferty over the defendant's objections, said he probably would meet with Bullock Tuesday to discuss his plans to appeal. Johnson said Bullock could set trial for as soon as April 18.
Johnson said he plans to file an interlocutory appeal seeking a Utah Supreme Court review of the competency ruling, which means the judge found Lafferty was capable of understanding the charges against him.
The defense attorney said he did not consider Lafferty, who has been at the Utah State Hospital since a Dec. 29 suicide attempt in his Utah County Jail cell, competent to face trial. However, he said he could not elaborate because the competency proceedings were confidential.

Bullock's order released Monday bars everyone involved in the competency hearing from discussing what they heard.
The judge also ordered the defendant to remain in Utah State Hospital "until and during the trial." He said the hanging attempt and a medical examiner's report on March 10 indicated Lafferty "may pose a serious physical threat to himself."
Lafferty is aware of the ruling and still wants to defend himself, Johnson said, but added he did not think his client would do a good job.
"I don't think he will do anything" as his own legal representative, the attorney said.

Farm aid facing cuts

By MARGARET SHAPIRO
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The broad budget agreement worked out by the White House and Senate Republicans last week contains more than a hundred specific proposals for cutting the deficit, from limiting farm-price-support payments and college student aid to keeping new fees for use of national parks.

Europeans march to oppose missiles

By MARK S. SMITH
The Associated Press

LONDON — Europe's anti-nuclear protesters, marching by the tens of thousands in traditional Easter-time peace rallies, called on Washington Monday to match Moscow's freeze on deploying medium-range missiles.
Arrests of trespassers and demonstrators were reported outside U.S.-missile bases in Britain, Italy and West Germany, but police reported no major incidents linked to the anti-nuclear rallies.
British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher rejected the call made by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Sunday for a freeze on deployment of new U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe.
"Mrs. Thatcher said to end NATO deployments now would 'freeze in' an enormous Soviet advantage, estimated by the White House at 10 to 1."
Other U.S. allies in Europe declined specific comment on Gorbachev's announcement of a freeze, made in an interview with the Communist Party daily Pravda.
Gorbachev said the Soviet Union would halt deployment of SS-20 medium-range rockets in Europe until November, but would resume the sittings if there were no similar action taken by the West. He also said he accepted President Reagan's offer to hold a superpower summit.
Initial press and political reaction in Europe was divided between those who dismissed the Kremlin gesture as a ploy, aimed at splitting the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and those who hailed it as a breakthrough in the East-West impasse.

"I think it is a good offer and we should take it up," said Denis Healey, foreign affairs spokesman of Britain's opposition Labor Party.
"Gorbachev's conservative newspaper Le Figaro said, 'The Kremlin's 'good faith' gesture is aimed much less at the White House than at Moscow's targeted allies in Europe — the German, Dutch and Belgian pacifists. (It) is just so much smokescreen."
In West Germany, anti-nuclear organizers claimed some 310,000 people marched in rallies Monday in 10 cities, bringing to 455,000 the number they said joined in a four-day Easter weekend of protests.
"In Britain, police estimated 11,000 people braved a downpour to rally outside Mofersworth U.S. air base, where cruise missiles are to be deployed in 1988."
At least 19 arrests were reported on a variety of obstruction, trespass and criminal damage charges.
Joan Ruddleck, chairwoman of British anti-nuclear groups, said

City offers refugees sanctuary

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The Cambridge City Council, after a noisy hearing before 200 supporters, voted 5-4 Monday night to declare the entire city a sanctuary to Latin American refugees.

Under the resolution, city agencies and employees would not cooperate with federal efforts to expel the estimated 5,000 illegal immigrants from El Salvador, Guatemala and Haiti who have fled to this university city of about 95,000 residents.

The resolution also would extend city services to all Cambridge residents, whether or not they are U.S. citizens.

Suspects convicted of slaying

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A court Tuesday convicted two underworld leaders of murdering a Chinese-American journalist in California last October and sentenced them to life imprisonment.

Chen Chih-li, 41, and Wu Tun, 33, were not present in Taipei District Court during the three-minute session when Judge Cheng Tsun-chia sentenced them for the murder of Henry Liu, 52, a writer for the Chinese-language San Francisco Journal.

Liu, whose writings were critical of the Nationalist Chinese government in Taiwan, was shot dead by two men in the garage of his home in Daly City, Calif., on Oct. 15.

Carolina brush fires contained

CRESWELL, N.C. (AP) — Wildfires that stretched in a 25-mile line, consuming 92,500 acres of coastal brushlands and destroying 25 buildings, were "mostly contained" Monday, a North Carolina forestry official said.

Across the Southeast, fires in the last week have consumed more than 479,000 acres.

The outbreak in three eastern North Carolina counties "still poses a threat to unburned adjacent areas," said E.F. Corn, spokesman for the state Forest Service. "The perimeter of the fire is approximately 70 miles. About 75 percent of this area contains ground fire."

Holdup funds linked to camp

BOISE (AP) — A suspected neo-Nazi arrested in Arkansas last week used money from a California armored-car robbery to set up a training camp in northern Idaho for recruits to a militant white-supremacist group, according to an FBI affidavit released Monday.

Ardie McBrearty, 57, of Gentry, Ark., was arrested Thursday in Benton County, Ark., on an Idaho warrant for receiving some of the approximately $3.5 million stolen from a Brinks armored car near Ukiah, Calif., last July 18.

Meanwhile, U.S. Magistrate Ned Stewart of Fort Smith, Ark., on Monday ordered McBrearty held without bond, and set a preliminary hearing on charges against him for Thursday.

Storms hamper hunt for plane

LOCK HAVEN, Pa. (AP) — Searchers hampered by intermittent snow Monday looked for a small plane believed to have five people aboard that has been missing since reporting engine trouble over mountains a day earlier.

The search for the single-engine Mooney was suspended at dusk, but would be resume at dawn, officials said.

The plane was reported missing Sunday evening on a flight from Jamestown, N.Y., to Newport News, Va., said Dave Coper, an air traffic controller.

Jackson addresses farm rally

PLATTSBURG, Mo. (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson brought his Rainbow Coalition to this tiny farming town in northwestern Missouri on Monday, urging about 300 people rallying before a foreclosure sale to work with urban laborers and blacks to fight injustices of the Reagan administration.

Jackson, wearing big overalls under a brown leather jacket, delivered a rousing 30-minute speech before the final 127 acres of the Perry Wilson farm was sold.

The crowd was orderly during the sale, a marked difference from the pushing and shoving match that resulted in five arrests and a few injuries when the first part of the Wilson farm was sold March 15.

Strong earthquake hits Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — An earthquake jolted Chile for three minutes during the supper hour Monday, sending hundreds of panicked people into the streets. Radio stations reported brief power blackouts and a fatal heart attack.

Fire officials said the roof of a house collapsed in the Pacific port city of Valparaiso. Unconfirmed radio reports said other houses fell down in Curacavi, a town just inland from Valparaiso. No injuries were reported.

Mario Pardo, director of the University of Chile Seismological Institute, said the late evening tremor apparently was an aftershock from the March 3 earthquake that killed 177 people in central Chile and left nearly a million homeless.

Columbia protest continues

NEW YORK (AP) — With folk singer Pete Seeger leading them in song, hundreds of Columbia University students continued Monday to protest the school's ties to South Africa and defied orders to stop barricading a campus building.

Faculty members organized in support of the students, and threatened to begin holding classes off campus to protest the university's South African investments and its handling of the student demonstration.

Summit Cuts

where a Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting could "give an impetus to arms control."

The official, who demanded anonymity, said "we're not even near there."

However, he said the two leaders could improve U.S.-Soviet relations in a number of areas, including the Middle East, Africa, Central America and Afghanistan.

The summit last month it was "high time" for a summit meeting. Instead of insisting that the outcome be scripted in advance, the president said "there are a number of things" he could discuss profitably with the new Soviet leader.

Behind the Scenes Money. It was apparent that the 54-year-old Gorbachev, in contrast to his three ailing predecessors, was considered a formidable challenge.

Anyone recognizes that the Soviet Union is going to be a different type of operation under Gorbachev than it was under (Konstantin) Chernenko, (Yuri) Andropov and the last years under (Leonid) Brezhnev," the U.S. official said.

The Soviet leader announced the unilateral suspension of new missile deployment in Europe until November as a gesture of goodwill to the United States.

According to American figures, the Soviet Union has deployed 41 SS-20s, of which 276 are targeted on Western Europe and the others in China and Japan.

The United States, meanwhile, as part of a 1979 NATO decision, has deployed 54 Pershing 2 ballistic missiles in West Germany and 48 cruise missiles in West Germany, Britain and Italy. A total of 572 missiles, in all, are to be installed in the three countries, Belgium and the Netherlands.

Some of the missiles are mobile and have three warheads each.

Apparently, Gorbachev's moratorium does not apply to the Asian missiles.

"They aren't even agreeing to stop in the Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam today in an ABC-TV interview. They will continue according to their own approach, to deploy in Asia. So that since these are mobile missiles if (the suspension) doesn't amount to much."

Gorbachev also proposed that the two superpowers call a halt to the development, research, testing and deployment of space arms and that they freeze their strategic offensive arms for the duration of the Geneva talks.

McFarlane, in an interview with the Cable News Network, described Gorbachev's proposals in the arms field as nothing more than "a guise, a snare, a delusion." He said he was "disappointed."

McFarlane said.

The State Department said a freeze on space weapons would block Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative "which would strengthen deterrence and global stability."

tain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, the group that organized the demonstration, said protests would be staged daily at Mole'sworth, 65 miles north of London, until the first of the planned 64 Tomahawk cruise missiles arrive.

Demonstrators in Britain and West Germany called on "Washington to answer the Kremlin's announcement in kind."

"Mr. Gorbachev has taken an historic independent step, and President Reagan should seize the opportunity to respond," said Mrs. Ruddock.

Demonstrators at West Germany's Ruhr area, said the White House rejection of Gorbachev's request to freeze NATO deployments showed "Washington is not going the way of disarmament."

Outside the NATO cruise missile base in Cosimo, Sicily, Italian police arrested three people on charges of violently resisting orders to disperse.

They were part of a group of about 100 people who staged a two-day demonstration, calling for the dismantling of missiles being deployed there, police said.

NATO is to deploy 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe by 1989, to counter Soviet SS-20 missiles it says are already in place. Latest Western estimates indicate 414 of the triple-warhead SS-20 weapons have been deployed. The NATO weapons have one warhead each.

In Bonn, West German government spokesman Peter Boenisch would not go beyond noting that medium-range rockets sit among the items being discussed at disarmament talks in Geneva, and said, "It is up to the Soviet side to cooperate (with the West) to achieve such results."

In Amsterdam, the Foreign Ministry returned reporters to the Dutch government's decision last June to put off until November 1985 a decision on deploying the Dutch quota of 48 cruise missiles.

If the Soviets have more SS-20s than the 376 they had last June, Dutch deployment is to go ahead, and the Netherlands is the last NATO country scheduled to receive U.S. medium-range missiles for siting.

Dutch television said a defense spokesman for the opposition Labor Party, Bram Stemerink, said the government should not buy Gorbachev's offer inside NATO, because Washington might then consider making a counteroffer.

dozens of others, for an estimated next-leaf reduction of $5.2 billion next year.

The agreement proposes cutting defense less and many popular domestic programs more than the Republican-led Senate Budget Committee agreed to last month. Many of the cuts finally adopted were proposed by President Reagan in his 1986 budget request.

Senate officials said Monday that an informal count showed only 30 to 32 of the 53 Senate Republicans willing to support the plan, which is scheduled to be considered on the Senate floor during the week of April 22.

Among programs and agencies to be eliminated under the agreement are the federal subsidy to Amtrak, mass transit operating subsidies, rural loan programs, the Small Business Administration, federal crop insurance, most postal subsidies and direct loans by the Export-Import Bank.

Other items proposed for termination are Urban Development Action Grants, Jobs Corps, the Appalachian Regional Commission and Economic Development Administration, revenue sharing with local governments, federal "impact" aid for most local school districts, and school lunch subsidies for families with incomes over about $19,600 a year.

The Senate Budget Committee had proposed freezing or scaling back many of these politically popular middle-class programs, but not eliminating them.

Another 30 or so programs, including college student aid, Medicare and Medicaid, would be cut or restricted under last week's agreement.

Medicare recipients would have to pay higher premiums and deductibles. Medicare reimbursements to doctors and hospitals would be frozen. Medicaid reimbursements to the states would be capped and not allowed to increase more than the medical services inflation rate. Medicaid provides health services for the poor.

Medicare is the medical insurance program for the elderly and disabled. In farm programs, last week's agreement would limit income support payments to individual grain, rice and cotton farmers to $25,000 a year, half the current amount.

Average diversification programs that pay farmers to reduce their planting would be eliminated. The Farmers Home Administration would continue to service existing direct loans, but would make no more new ones. New borrowers would be assisted through federal guarantees. In addition, electric rates would increase for some users of rural electric cooperatives.

FDA approves 3rd screening test for suspected AIDS virus

WASHINGTON (AP) — A third commercial screening test to find indirect evidence of the virus believed to cause the deadly disease AIDS was approved Monday by the Food and Drug Administration.

The agency approved the test developed by Litton Bionetics, a division of Litton Industries, Inc., of Beverly Hills, Calif. The test, similar to two others previously approved, is designed to screen blood and other substances for antibodies to the suspected virus.

The newly approved test, as well as the others by Abbott Laboratories of North Chicago and Electro-Nucleonics, Inc., of Fairfield, N.J., uses an inactivated or killed AIDS virus at one stage to attract antibodies that might be present in the blood.

Health officials have begun using the tests to screen the nation's donated blood supply since the causative agent of AIDS appears to spread through intimate contact with bodily fluids, including blood.

The tests claim better than a 98 percent accuracy in detecting the viral antibody and the ability to identify true negative findings in 99 percent of cases.

Experts acknowledge that the tests are not perfect and may miss a small percentage of "contaminated" blood.

But they say the nation's blood supply should be significantly safer when the test is combined with existing guidelines designed to screen out donors at increased risk of having AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — or carrying the virus.

An estimated 1.5 million tests will be required monthly by 2,300 blood banks and commercial blood-product producers.

The tests look for antibodies to the virus but are not designed to diagnose AIDS or to find the virus itself, say health authorities.

A positive test indicates a person at some time has been exposed to HTLV-3 or a related virus, but it cannot tell if the person either has the disease or will get it.

Health experts estimate that 400,000 Americans have been exposed to the AIDS virus, and pilot studies with the blood test indicate that perhaps one percent of donated blood will show evidence of the viral antibodies.

A virus discovered independently last year by American and French scientists, and later called HTLV-III or LAV, is believed either to cause or play a significant role in AIDS.

Health care costs up, but by smaller margin

CHICAGO (AP) — The cost to hospitals of providing health care rose again in 1984, but by only 4.6 percent over the previous year, the smallest annual increase since 1963, the American Hospital Association reported Monday.

The AHA attributed the flattened rate of increase to a decline in the number of hospital admissions, an increase in outpatient visits and recent limits on government health insurance payments.

It cost the nation's hospitals $125.7 billion to provide health care in 1984, a 4.6 percent increase over the $120.2 billion needed in 1983, the AHA said. The rate of increase of 1983 over 1982 had been 10.2 percent.

"This is an indication that we are seeing fundamental changes in the way health care is delivered and financed," said Howard Berman, vice president of the Chicago-based lobbying and trade association, which has about 6,000 hospital and 38,000 individual members.

The study was based on a survey of about 2,000 hospitals, about a third of the nation's total, he said.

According to the study, the nation's hospitals admitted 1.5 million fewer patients in 1984 than in 1983, and the average stay of those admitted decreased from seven days in 1983 to 6.7 days in 1984.

At the same time, the number of outpatient visits increased by 1 million. Such visits represent less cost to the hospital and the patient than hospital admission.

Berman cited government changes in Medicare payment as another reason for the slowdown in the cost increase rate.

Before October 1983, hospitals treating Medicare patients would send the bills directly to the government. Under the new system, the government sets fixed fees for specific treatments. If the cost of the care is less than the fee, the hospital gets to keep the difference. If the cost is greater, the hospital must absorb it.

Imprisonment ends for 'spy'

NEW YORK (AP) — Wearing a beard and "riding a fine, euphoric cloud," William Mathers returned to the United States on Monday after nine months of imprisonment in Vietnam, where he was accused of spying.

Mathers, 41, appeared thin but fit at his reunion with his parents at John F. Kennedy Airport. He was freed Thursday from a military base at Can Tho, southwest of Ho Chi Minh City, after his father paid a $10,000 fine.

His father, William Mathers Sr. of Cove Neck, called the fine "theft" by the Vietnamese.

Mathers said he was interrogated 24 times for an hour at a time during his imprisonment and that his captors pressed him to agree to spy for Vietnam. He refused, he said, and was threatened with trial and prison.

He said his greatest fear was a public trial intended to embarrass the United States.

Mondale misjudges reasons for defeat

After a few months of sulking, former vice president Walter Mondale has come up with an interesting reason why his campaign against President Ronald Reagan went so poorly: communication.

But in laying the blame there, Mondale both underestimates the American electorate which decisively rejected him, and overestimates Reagan's ability to find the right words for his program.

Maybe he needs to see it differently. Losers of election contests often construct elaborate theories about their defeats. But Mondale lost, not because of any great communication skill by his opponent, but because the people considered his message and found it deficient.

Mondale is right when he says that Reagan offered "opportunity," but that he offered, "coal." He talked soberly about America's problems, telling us repeatedly that, in effect, the nation would go to hell in a hand-basket if Reagan was re-elected. The voters thought otherwise.

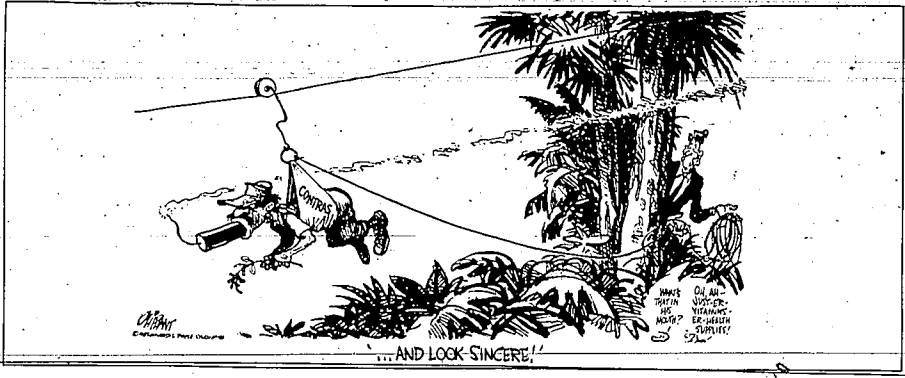

He is also off the mark, we think, when he says Reagan's ability to communicate "verges on genius" and when he urges the Democratic Party to field candidates who "can master this modern challenge of communication in this huge country of ours."

Reagan's success is not so much in his communication as in what he symbolizes: a kind of benevolent father-figure who is both patronizing and warm; petulant-and-understanding; short of logic but long on common sense.

In that he has more in common with Eisenhower than with Carter or Ford, more with Roosevelt than Kennedy, although he invokes both regularly.

Mondale's root problem, in our view, is the intellectual void of his party's leadership and its stated positions which run counter to those of many Americans.

Unless and until those change, the party is likely to come up short in national contests, regardless of how well the opponent communicates.

Truth is, folks, Manning was murdered

Can you smell it — the cover-up? Can you feel it, stifling, heavy with lies, hidden behind a cloak of fear and deceit? Conspiracy prospers in our quiet desert valley. Its tentacles grow from the ferment of our politicians, our police, businessmen and, yes, even this newspaper.

Did you read Dick Manning's final column Sunday, April 7, where he referred to himself as "slothful" and announced his move to Missoula, Mont.? There, he claimed, they would accommodate his idle ways? It's a lie!

Manning would never write with such humility. I know for fact that "humble" has been inked out of his dictionary.

Dick would not announce the following quote from the aforementioned article: "I'm looking forward to tossing a Democrat or two into the mix." (Meaning to snipe at his liberal cohorts as he regularly does Republicans.)

Dick Manning is dead! He was murdered! The publisher and the managing editor of this newspaper conspired to ghost-write the final column. What an easy way to appease their advertisers who were often exhoriated by Manning and, who in return, threatened to hold back ad revenue from The Times-News.

Here's how I know: these are the bare facts. Three nights before the final column hit print, I was whamming down MorningSide Drive, bounding in and out of the sundry canyons known as Twin Falls potholes when I espied coroner Jim Woods' pickup roaring through the intersection at Maple with head south. Tim Qualls speeding close behind.

Following surreptitiously, hiding my big Ford first in one pothole, then another, I gazed as both autos squealed to a halt in Manning's driveway.

Guest opinion Terry Rich Hartley

The two drivers then climbed out, talked briefly on the front yard, and disappeared inside the house. Silently, I tiptoed across the grass, slipped through the open doorway, and watched as the two men hunched over Manning's badly mangled body. Out loud, they took turns counting until Woods put a total to the figures. "37 bullet holes," he announced.

I could see that a barbed wire nose had been tacked resolutely around the corpse's neck and a bottle of rat poison nearby — open and empty. Clearing my throat to beckon the investigators' attention, I asked, "What do you gentlemen suspect?"

Surprised at my presence, they mumbled something to each other, then the chief looked me dead in the eye and answered, "Damnedest case of suicide we ever saw."

I needed to know the truth. Moreover, I knew veraciously could only come from On High; I'd be forced to contact the highest authority I knew in Heaven or Earth. In prayerful resolution, I decided I must contact HIM.

When Tom Stivers answered his phone I identified myself and said, "Mr. Speaker, it's most urgent that I talk to you about Dick Manning."

"Manning!" he shouted. "Why, the man's willainy knows no end!"

"But, it does," I corrected. "You must tell me that pusillanimous son-of-a-bitch to tell me that pusillanimous son-of-a-bitch the easy way out. ... And just when I was introducing legislation to run him out of the state?"

"You don't mean ... Manning Banning?"

"Precisely! I was going to turn banning Manning into a legislative recreation. Why, it would spread like break dancing to state capitols all over the country. We'd fairly well turn Manning Banning into such a fad that he'd soon be run clean out of the United States — maybe, even to Massachusetts."

"The police were covering up, the coroner's office, likewise; and now the state. Dammed if I wouldn't investigate the murder, myself. And, I had two prime suspects."

Manning, in one of his more renowned columns, had stuck the ol' lampoon to the owner of The Paris, Earl Paulner, pretty hard, even renaming his business, "The Paris (Gasp)!" Then he went on to expose the man and a new, heinous cult religion known as scarfology.

The other suspect, Businessman B, had also been punned fairly to the canvas in a Manning column. You'll soon understand my refusal to print his name.

I must confess, it's too big a task for me to buck this newspaper and the entire community to expose Dick's killer. Lord knows, everybody who ever read his column is suspect.

As for Manning, Goodbye, Dick. I'm sure by now you've reached your rightful destination. Just think of Lucifer as a Republican. That way, you'll have somebody to lance with lampoonery till the real thing shows up.

And, don't worry. Tip'll be along soon to give you your chance to lose a Democrat into the mix.

V-E Day observance displays history's 'antisocial' memory

BOSTON — There are times when history makes such an awkward guest. It hovers around some current event like a garrulous elder, interrupting the people who are trying to maintain decorum. It tugs on the sleeves of the guests, ruffles the diplomatic calm, whispers gossip from the old days.

See those two friends? asks history. Once they were mortal enemies. See those enemies? Once they were allies. See that righteous country in the corner? I knew it when.

History simply refuses to obey the rules of international etiquette. If it has one great social flaw, one unforgivably rude habit it's this: History remembers.

This is a perfect spring for history to make itself amiable. We are about to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the victory over Nazi Germany. But we are trying to do it without offending any Germans.

The U.S. government has come up with a politically polite solution to this social dilemma that would satisfy Erich Post, the President will make a pilgrimage to West Germany in May, but he has decided to skip the guilt-trip to the concentration camps.

What radically separated World War II from the other wars, what made the Allies liberators rather than more victors, what affirmed American belief in this "good war" was the Nazi technology of evil. The camps. If a presidential visit to these murderous shrines would embarrass the ally, ignoring them shines our own sense of values. Even the memory of these victims is sacrificed to politics.

The Germans themselves have wrestled with the difficult task; how do you tell a postwar generation about the millions of people murdered by their elders? It wasn't until 1962 that German schools began to teach the Holocaust. Not many parents and grandparents (tell their grandchildren) stories about what they did in the war. There is a strong notion to forget. Even this spring, it is said that the West German media concentrate more on the bombing of German cities, and the advance of Soviet troops from the Eastern Front than on the Nazi regime.

But if our friendship with West Germany requires that we tiptoe around the past, then we have given up too much. If avoidance requires that we delicately avoid mentioning the deepest shame of humanity, it's a sham.

History is a troublesome guest because it rooks of its favorite nourishment in the wilds of memory, especially the young Germans whose feelings our government is worrying about. They were also liberated from the evils of Nazism on V-E Day. But we can't let history be barred from its place by etiquette's petty morality.

Letters/ Reader admires Manning for alerting the public with his prose

The answer finally comes — Answer: Manning! I've had people, usually conservatives, ask me to do that once in awhile. Well, I'd read what he wrote and sometimes it was pretty harsh, but thought to myself, No, I don't see any reason to. Wasn't sure why.

Now I see where Manning is leaving, so now I'll answer. But first let me point out that E. B. White is no more admired by Manning than he. He is a master architect with the written word, a genius as a teacher and a great writer who's far more rare than the mercury trite.

What Manning did, as I see it, is strive to make people think. What else are good words for? I mean, sure, there are bad words; those arguments, the "you're under arrest!" and the slip-slop casualties that the so-called infelude indulge in to impress themselves. "Your hair looks marvelous, my dear!" (Her hair is falling out!)

But what I noticed with Manning was that he was seeking to alert the public, if of nothing else, of the fact that the powerful weren't all-powerful. Unfortunately, his talent didn't slip over to informing the public of the dope-pushing garbage that now permeates this town. But then, he worked for the newspaper.

Now I understand that there are people of influence that have trafficked cocaine. Well, I think even Mr. White would have had problems with this, for it's not a case of being safe in your writing when the gangster and the law seem to be welded together, but rather a case of an intense hatred for the scam that would introduce that poison into our society to the detriment of our children.

Enough. Back to Manning. I personally am glad that he contributed his considerable talent to this area and I've had no problem with his writing. It's the tremendous effort that goes into the written word.

So now I'll answer you, Dick Manning. I wish you well wherever you go and the reason I didn't ever answer you is because I suspect we're on the same side. You have a talent.

Insider's view of waste plant

I am presently employed by the City of Twin Falls at the Wastewater Treatment Plant. I have been here since June. Prior to that time I worked at the Lander Street Wastewater Treatment Plant in Boise.

In view of the recent media blitz on the so-called problems at the sewer plant, I thought I would present an insider's view of the people here at the treatment plant.

There are five sections of work emphasis here: Operations, Lab, Maintenance, Solids Handling and Management.

a) Operations: In operations, it is our job to see that the purification process is complete and cost-efficient. On average, the water that we put into the Snake River is cleaner than the river itself.

b) Maintenance: maintenance's job is to keep this plant running all the time. Since I have been here, the maintenance department has been short one man and recently has the crew size increased to three men.

Because of an industrial accident we are short one man once more. In spite of this, the plant has functioned relatively trouble free.

c) Lab: the lab's responsibility is to keep track of the condition of the system. Any other lab of this caliber would have three people working in it. Many are the days when the lab personnel have stayed late on their own time to fine tune the laboratory tests. What greater dedication could be asked for?

d) Solids Handling Crew: the solids handling crew takes the end product, increases the percent solids and hauls it to the farmers' fields in manure spreaders. These two men are constantly striving to increase efficiency and decrease cost. In the month of February, they saved the city approximately ten thousand dollars in fuel and maintenance costs.

e) Management: Finally we have management. The secretary does the work of two people. The superintendent and the assistant superintendent are available seven days a week, 24 hours a day to solve any problems that might arise. Mike Gann, the superintendent, is the most conscientious, dedicated and capable Water Pollution Control Specialist in the Pacific Northwest.

Support for bill distorted
Your March 17 editorial, "Symms' proposal is push for oppression," makes one good point: English is a useful language.

However, you have distorted my support for the English Language Amendment (ELA). You state that I object to bilingual ballots because I want to "deprive those who do not speak English of the most fundamental of Democratic rights."

Your statement is outrageous and absurd. Are you aware that last November, 71 percent of California's voters asked that bilingual ballots be abolished in that state? Here are the reasons why:

—English ballots do not keep anyone from voting. Anyone who needs help can bring an interpreter to the voting booth.

—Foreign language ballots invite abuse. A check of San Francisco bilingual ballot users in 1981 disclosed that 20 percent were not U.S. citizens.

—Foreign language ballots are not necessary because virtually all applicants for U.S. citizenship must pass an English language test.

—Foreign language ballots are discriminatory. Only Spanish, Native American and Asian languages are targeted for special treatment within the law.

—Foreign language ballots are an insult to millions of immigrants who learned English in order to participate fully in American life.

—Foreign language ballots are costly. The cost to California taxpayers is $1.3 million annually.

As for bilingual education, you again erroneously insinuate that my objections are flippant and somehow going to strip students of another right.

Nicholotes said we must help English-deficient students. And I agree. But not as we do now. My 13 cosponsors and I all advocate a training program that helps students learn English fast.

However, I believe that a good education includes the study of a foreign language. Mrs. Symms and I require our children to learn another language.

I am sorry that you believe the ELA is "a proposal to deprive minorities of their rights." But please do not make any claims that I support such a warped belief.

Stalking the wary wino

Our travels brought Jim, our TV crew and me to the remote regions of Idaho where a recent sport of hunting and tagging winos has mushroomed overnight due to a recent proposal declaring a $500 bounty on the wary breed.

We found that the best place to stalk our game was the darkened alleys and side streets, favorite habitat and watering holes.

We took for clues, among them erratic footprints. When one sights this kind of track, he knows he is on the trophy trail. This is where we set our trap.

Unlike the rest of the animal kingdom, the female of the species is much more colorful. The noisy male, however, can be more easily approached and captured, using MD 20/20 as baits.

The plan is to tranquilize the beast with our dart-guns, which contain a special paralytic formula, rendering the animal defenseless for a few moments while we examine and weigh the wine to determine its health and the abundance of its favorite nourishment in the wilds.

It frequents. Sometimes it takes a second dart to bring him down, depending on the amount of body fat and layers of clothing, but generally one dart will do the trick, after much reeling and writhing in a snaw bow. We will also attach a brightly-colored fine collar containing a small radio transmitter.

After an injection of the antidote the wino will be released, a bit shaky, but otherwise unharmed.

The beeping radio transmitter collar might make him unpopular with others of his kind, but will permit us to track the wino's movements and should he ever get behind the wheel of a motor vehicle we will be able to report him to local trappers and collect our reward.

The Idaho Albino Wino is usually a nocturnal creature and it takes considerable skill and strength on the part of Jimbo and me to stalk the Great White Wino in the wilds of Idaho. Alas, the Great White Wino may soon be on the endangered species list because of the never-ending hunting season.

What's what

Debate continues over the naming of children. Give the baby a simple unaffixed name, say some, so the child won't be handicapped by "being different." No, give the baby a distinctive name, say others, so the child will learn to emphasize individuality. What's your stand on this matter?

Open Question: What actor has "died" the most times in movies?

Not just many but most of the people in India think it's a sin to kill a cobra.

How well you water-ski has nothing to do with how well you snow-ski, and vice versa, evidently. A knack for either is utterly unrelated to a knack for the other, I'm told.

Why is a sense of time crucial to your sanity? That's what I asked. A kindly client offers this explanation:

"Your brain's memory bank stores data in sequential order even though you don't necessarily retrieve it that way. If you lose your sense of time, you lose the sequential order of your mental records and thereby lose the linkage that connects you to the past. You have to connect to the past to know where you are in any given moment of the present!"

Quick, what was the first outdoor game in which women competed on equal terms with men? Say croquet.

Alleged drug king could face charges

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Rafael Caro Quintero, the reputed drug baron captured in Costa Rica last week, may be charged with kidnapping and murder in the death of a U.S. narcotics agent, the Attorney General's Office said Monday.

It said in a statement that the charges probably would be filed in Guadalajara, where Enrique Camarena Salazar of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency was abducted Feb. 7. His badly beaten body was found March 5 along with that of a kidnapped Mexican pilot who had worked with him.

Caro Quintero was taken in a police van, part of a 15-vehicle convoy, to the capital's Northern Prison, which includes courts in which he is to appear before the judge.

Government attorney Guillermo Narvaez said the case against Caro Quintero and five other suspects was assigned to Judge Pedro Elias Soto Lara, who was studying it. Narvaez said the judge planned a hearing for 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The judge has until midday Thursday, 72 hours after he received the case, to continue the charges, modify them or drop them for lack of evidence.

"The Attorney General's Office said" Caro Quintero definitely will be charged with narcotics violations, criminal association and illegal inroduction of arms into Mexico. It said he also faces drug charges in the northern border state of Chihuahua, where he allegedly ran a huge marijuana operation. Mexican authorities destroyed more than 8,000 tons of the illegal weed in Chihuahua last year.

Officials of the Attorney General's Office have said little about the case since questioning of Caro Quintero and seven other people began shortly after they were brought to Mexico from Costa Rica on Friday.

Caro Quintero, 33, was arrested Thursday after a brief shootout with Costa Rican authorities.

South Korean head to visit

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Chun Doo-hwan will make an official visit to Washington from April 25-27 for his third meeting with President Reagan, the government said Tuesday.

The trip was announced earlier but the dates were not disclosed. Presidential spokesman Hwang Sun-pil said Chun, his wife and a party of 18 would leave Seoul on April 24 and visit Honolulu and Los Angeles before and after the trip to Washington. They are to return home April 29.

Major topics of discussion will include promotion of dialogue between South and North Korea and measures to "prevent the flow of high technology and military equipment to North Korea, particularly in relation to the recent smuggling of U.S.-made helicopters to North Korea," Hwang said.

Shrine to Polish officers built

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Polish government has quietly erected a monument at a Warsaw cemetery to more than 4,000 Polish Army officers who most Poles believe were executed by the Soviets during World War II.

An inscription on the monument supports the official Soviet and Polish government story that the officers found buried in the Katyń forest were killed by the Nazis. Most Poles and independent historians have disputed the Soviet version, maintaining the officers were slain by Soviet troops.

The monument, a thick granite cross 12 feet high surrounded by nine square granite blocks, was erected without official announcement. A cemetery guard said it was put up more than a week ago and that he had not heard of any unveiling ceremony.

Ortega rejects Reagan's bid

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega has rejected President Reagan's proposal for a cease-fire and peace negotiations, his office announced Monday.

The presidential press office said Ortega announced his decision during weekend talks with Colombia's foreign minister, Augusto Ramirez Oscampo, whom he met in Havana. Ortega also met with Cuban President Fidel Castro.

Reagan made the proposal last Wednesday in Washington. He coupled it with a warning that he would seek resumption of military aid to anti-Sandinista rebels if the leftist government did not agree to a settlement within 60 days after opening negotiations.

During the meeting with Ramirez Oscampo, Ortega "expressed with absolute clarity he does not accept the ultimatum presented by President Reagan," the press office statement said.

It said Ortega urged a resumption of U.S.-Nicaraguan talks in Manzanillo, Mexico, which the United States broke off in January.

Civilian demonstrations end in Sudan

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Doctors and other professionals reached an agreement with the new military government Monday and ended the general strike that brought down President Gaafar Nimeiri.

Gen. Abdul-Rahman M.H. Swareddahab, leader of the junta that ousted Nimeiri on Saturday, said anyone organizing a new strike would be charged with treason. The military banned unauthorized demonstrations.

Swareddahab repeated his promise to hold power only temporarily and return the government to civilian control.

In one last outburst in nearly two weeks of riots, demonstrations and strikes, thousands of professionals marched on army headquarters after union meetings Sunday night and Monday morning.

At the time of the march, heads of 31 professional unions summoned by Swareddahab, were inside the building discussing with him their conditions for ending the strike.

The meeting produced a statement from the United Professional Unions, read repeatedly over the official state radio, expressing their belief that Swareddahab would return power to civilians as promptly as possible. The statement urged union members to return to their jobs and to "produce more."

It said there was unanimous agreement on formation of an interim government to run the country.

Agreement by the unions appeared to resolve successfully the first serious test of Swareddahab's junta, which took power Saturday while Nimeiri was on a jetliner bound for Cairo on his way home from a nine-day visit to the United States.

London robbers pilfer exclusive outfits

LONDON (AP) — Zandra Rhodes, the British fashion designer who dresses Princess Diana, had her 100 most expensive outfits worth an estimated $240,000 stolen Monday by smash-and-grab raiders, authorities said.

The gang ignored racks of cheaper dresses and took models worth about $2,400 each after breaking a plate glass window to gain entry to the off-Bond Street store in London's West End.

Police speculated the clothes might be smuggled abroad.

U.N. chief meets with Iraq's president

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The secretary-general of the United Nations met with Iraq's president Monday to seek an end to the 4½-year Persian Gulf war, and the military said Iraqi planes staged 108 bombing raids on Iranian troops.

Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar conferred separately with President Saddam Hussein and Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz. He had met with Iranian officials in Tehran on Sunday.

The military said in its daily war communique that Iraqi warplane had attacked Iranian troop concentrations in the Huwazah region of southern Iraq.

City's funds sound

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The city of Twin Falls is in sound financial condition but should be wary of committing unreserved funds to long-term projects, said accountant Robert Seaman at a Monday council work session.

The annual audit of the city shows uncommitted funds of slightly more than $3 million. Last year, the city had $2.6 million of uncommitted revenues over expenses.

About $250,000 of the increase comes from money set aside by the council to build a new swimming pool before the August bond issue was defeated by voters.

City manager Tom Courtney also gives credit for the sound financial condition to "department heads who handle money conservatively. They don't look at spending every cent in the budget," he said.

"The last four or five years in a row we have received fairly positive reports," said Courtney. "We have received them in a time other cities have had trouble balancing their budgets."

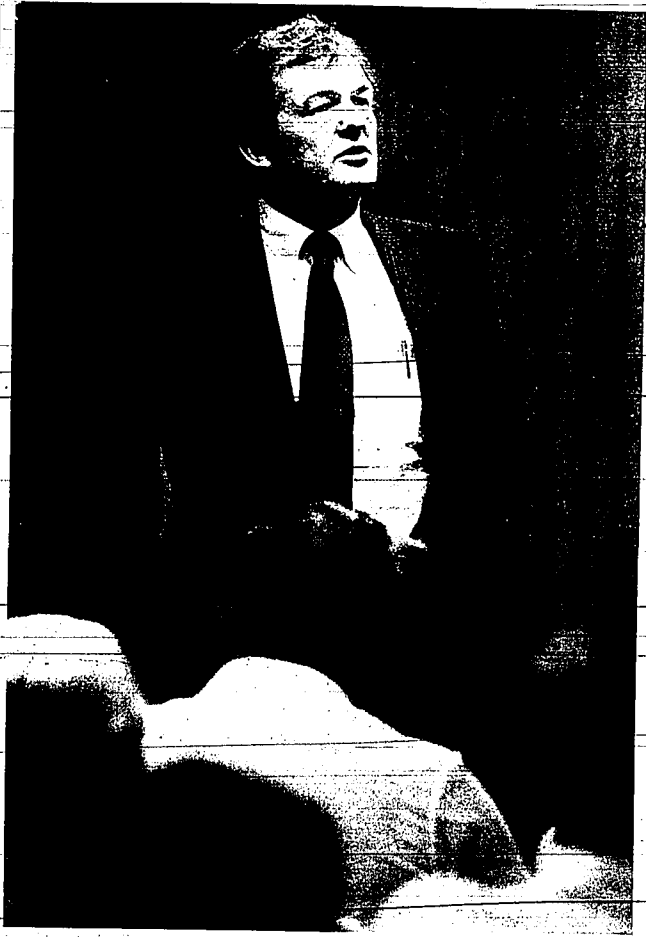

While city revenues have been confined by the One Percent Initiative in recent years, the city has started an investment policy that is partly responsible for the excess, Courtney said. Previously, funds were kept in checking accounts.

The city has also added to its unreserved fund in recent years by cutting two of its three communication dispatch centers, relying more on seasonal workers and eliminating city-maintained irrigation districts, Courtney said.

Some of the uncommitted money is put back into the operating budget in a contingency fund each year, but the amount of uncommitted money is not dropped below a minimum level.

In the past, that has been 20 percent of the operating budget, but now is 10 to 14 percent of the budget, Courtney said.

"This kind of surplus reflects the conservative nature of the community," said city council member John ...

Stallings sees the House moving toward a freeze on all spending, including agriculture

Farmers air discontent to Stallings

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

JEROME — Magic Valley farmers may not know what type of farm bill will keep them in business, but they are certain which proposal will not: the Reagan administration's farm strategy.

"What the Reagan has for us down the road will more than put us out of business," Buhl farmer Howard Harder told U.S. Rep. Richard Stallings Monday.

Harder and nearly a dozen other witnesses at a town meeting in Jerome slammed Reagan administration's agricultural policies, saying the policies are driving the family farm out of business.

Speakers also blamed lending procedures of the Farmers Home Administration and proposals for new grazing fees and government policies that permit outside investors to buy up farms and use their losses to cut taxes owed on profits.

Stallings said later the complaints confirmed what he has heard in other sessions with growers and ranchers. Leaders of the House Agriculture Committee already have told U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block that the Reagan proposals are, for all practical purposes, dead. Block is willing to make some compromises, Stallings said.

But the complexion of the 1985 Farm Bill still is unsettled, he indicated. A handful of serious proposals are now before the committee and, once one is passed by the House, it could face opposition in the U.S. Senate, Stallings said. Finally, the president can veto whatever emerges from the Congress.

Farmers and ranchers spoke up Monday to protect price supports, fearing that the Reagan administration's proposed cuts would be too drastic and too quick.

"There really has to be some sort of support system," said farmer odairymen and grain farmer. "Maybe it needs to be phased down a little, but it doesn't need to be phased out all at once."

Glenn Shewmaker, a diversified Kimberly farmer, said taxpayers should also be looking at their food bills when they think about price supports. Food is much cheaper in the United States than in other countries, he said.

"We hear a lot of talk about the taxpayer subsidizing farming ... (but) I don't know if farmers can afford to subsidize consumers for much longer," he said.

The American Farm Bureau Federation's proposals to gradually decrease supports over an unspecified number of years were perhaps most palatable to the farmers and agri-business interests Monday. But any backing was grudging at best.

Steve Goodman, a Burley-area grower who has spent 40 years tilling the soil, was blunt. "None of the proposals are going to be of any benefit to agriculture," he said.

One businessman interested in agriculture, Henry Westendorf, manager of Idaho First National Bank at Wendell, suggested some plans to be hammered into the new farm bill. They included keeping FmHA-owned farms out of production until buyers with ready cash will purchase them at market value; eliminating transfers of capital to unrelated enterprises; restricting government crop programs to family farms with a $25,000 limit on benefits from them; and automatically making 40 percent of farmer-owned reserves available for the "hungry" at world market prices every year.

Speakers also used the hearing to call against the FmHA's lending policies, alleging that the agency in Idaho balks at giving loans, does not always help farmers to qualify for them and is extremely slow in processing applications.

Consolidating public lands agencies is hardly a fresh idea

By DAVE LEWIS
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The idea of either consolidating the Bureau of Land Management and the Forest Service into one agency or in some way streamlining the way the two agencies manage the nation's public lands where their jurisdictions overlap is not new.

There have been several proposals and studies over the years, none of which has caught on.

The last edict from Washington, D.C., is different only in the manner in which it came down — forcefully.

Analysis

Following a report the U.S. General Accounting Office released late last year that outlines how the interagency planning process between the two agencies had "stalled," it took just one month for someone to get the program back on the fast track toward becoming reality.

"As one Forest Service official says, the tenor of the message from the heads of the two agencies was: 'Either you get the job done, or we'll get someone who can.' The most recent flurry of activity is an outgrowth of a plan by former President Jimmy Carter, whose original goal was to consolidate the two agencies under the Department of Interior, parent agency of the BLM.

That idea, however, did not fare well with Congress. Carter settled for directing the agencies to develop a joint plan for redrawing their overlapping boundaries, realigning or dropping offices and reducing personnel.

That process began in 1980 in Idaho and other states with the two agencies forming joint implementation groups to study the concept. But, according to a Dec. 27, 1984, GAO report titled "Program to Transfer Land Between the Bureau of Land Management and the Forest Service Has Stalled," the plan lost its way soon after it was turned over to field offices. It finally died in 1984 when the BLM director and Forest Service chief could not agree on the scope of the interchange.

For the report, the GAO surveyed 5 of 10 western states affected by the potential transfer of land. Its conclusion is that two agencies often ignored the goals and guidelines developed by their superiors that called for the elimination of offices and the reduction of personnel where it would improve efficiency in the management of their 341 million acres.

The report also says the planning teams in most states failed to meet various deadlines estimated to put the program into effect on a timely basis.

However, efforts in Idaho fared somewhat better than in California or other western states, the report says.

Under former BLM State Director Robert Buffington and Intermountain Regional Forester Jeff Strimon, the plan for exchanging

Sewer plant operation negotiations to open

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The city of Twin Falls will open contract negotiations with Operations Management International for operation of the city sewer treatment plant, the council voted 4-2 at a Monday work session.

The disagreement was not about whether the city should turn operation of the sewer plant over to a private company, as the council first announced it was considering a week ago after three months of discussion in closed meetings of the city.

Instead, the disagreement occurred over which of the two companies that have made a pitch for the contract should be considered after the council weighed the merits of experience, cost to the city and the financial conditions of the companies. No city plan in the state is now operated by a private company.

OMI, a subsidiary of employee-owned CH2M Hill Companies, operates 25 sewage treatment plants, making it the largest of such contractors in the nation. Operations Consultants, Inc., a subsidiary of James M. Montgomery Consulting Engineers, Inc., operates no sewer plants now, but Montgomery designed the Twin Falls plant and has done consulting work there, council members say.

Operations Consultants has offered to operate the city's plant at cost for the first year.

But council member Erik Andersen questioned whether that company could operate its first plant as economically as a more experienced company such as OMI could, even after a profit was made.

Council members and city staff also were impressed with tours last week of sewer plants and talks with city officials and plant employees in Hood, River, Gresham and Lebdon, Ore., where OMI operates plants.

"They were clean, well-operated and in compliance with (effluent) regulations more strict than those in Idaho," said city manager Tom Courtney.

The tour and further background checks of OMI have revealed no negative comments, he said. Officials in other cities have been "extremely positive," he said. Some indicated that the company had been able to resolve problems more quickly and efficiently than the city could and had operated the plants more economically, he said. Council members Jack Miller and Gale Kleinkopf, who toured the Oregon plants, also praised the company. Kleinkopf said they were "first-rate from a management and employee benefit standpoint" with employees motivated by bonuses for cost-cutting ideas.

Knighon calls Anaheim trip legitimate

By DEAN S. MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls School Trustee Robert Knighon says his trip to the National School Board Association convention last week was within his responsibilities as a trustee and was an educational experience for his children who accompanied him.

Knighon and board vice chairman Gary Fay took their children out of school last week to travel with them to the convention at Anaheim, Calif., the home of Disneyland.

"I feel I don't owe anybody any apologies. When you have a lay board responsible for a $10 million budget, it is irresponsible for us not to seek out opportunities to further our understanding," Knighon said Monday.

"I was there to attend meetings. An NASB convention is a large convention. It attracts some pretty important people. I felt it was a good chance to take my children to that," said Knighon.

Knighon said he took his children to hear former President Gerald R. Ford, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig, and columnist Ben Wattenberg. Knighon says his children, ages 13, 10 and 2, also toured the exhibition hall at the convention.

"We have a policy in this district that if a parent has a good reason to take their child out of school, they can. I think that's an important thing for them to be able to do," said Knighon.

Knighon said his wife's and children's expenses were not paid for by the district and that the trip was expensive for him. He said people who know what it is like to be locked in a station wagon with a 2-year-old for 10 hours would not feel the trip was a lark.

"My kids spent seven hours at Disneyland and would have spent more if I could have held up," he said.

Knighon said the two best workshops he attended taught board members how best to gain the support of citizens who no longer have children of school age and how best to merchandise school districts.

He said the Twin Falls district is approaching the time when it will have to market itself and tell people that good things are happening in their schools.

Knighon said another workshop about interscholastic academic competition between schools was interesting but would require organization of the entire state to be meaningful. "Some ideas you buy, some you say just aren't reasonable," Knighon said.

"I found out they (other school boards) have many of the same problems with their union that we have locally," said Knighon.

Computer investment pleases schools

By DEAN S. MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — With about $30,000 worth of personal computers in Twin Falls classrooms, and most of that invested in Commodore Vic-20s and Model IES school principals in the district appear well-pleased with their investment.

Despite the hundreds of peanut-butter-and-jelly-fingered schoolchildren who pounded at their keyboards in a week, the Commodore and occasional Radio Shack computers the district has bought during the last five years require little service, principals say.

Funding for the computers mostly came from Parent-Teacher Organizations and Associations, the principals say.

Morningside Elementary School principal Dennis Sontus says the district's computer committee has recommended that all future computer purchases for the elementary and junior high schools be Commodores and that the high school buy Apple computers.

He says the committee wants to encourage software compatibility between schools so that software can be traded rather than purchased.

The high school is using Olivetti computers now, Sontus says. He called the Olivetti's "Caddillacs." Software availability isn't as important for them since the high school classes emphasize programming, which doesn't require as wide a variety of software packages, Sontus said.

The Chapter One program for children of migrant families, 13 Sony computers costing about $36,000 were bought this year with federal funds. Chapter One program coordinator Marilyn Knigge says that after some initial problems, the 13 Sony computers and the specialized software that came with them are now working well.

In the junior high schools, a fleet of 18 Radio Shack TRS-80s are moved between the two junior high school buildings at mid-year as part of the junior high Electronics One course, says teacher Bill White.

White, who publishes a newsletter for school computer users on his own TRS-80, says it has been pleased with the Radio Shack computers, 12 of which are the older Model Three and

Peterson. "Now only do we not spend money we don't have, but we don't spend money we do have."

The city will use $500,000 of the uncommitted money for a new swimming pool. If voters pass a bond in two weeks, in the past, the money has been used for special projects such as street improvements, Courtney said.

Seaman said that the Twin Falls

School District was in a similar position several years ago before it decided to deplete its reserves and spend the money "on long-term commitments."

Board members have said they spent some of the money on teacher salaries.

The school district is facing difficulties, Seaman said, wanting the council to spend its extra funds cautiously.

Seaman also asked the council to continue work on internal accounting and administrative controls of money, although he said he was pleased with the progress the city had made in the area during the last year.

The city needs to establish a city accounting manual, says the audit report by Evans, Condie and Johnson. The city also needs better segregation of duties, better cash register procedures and fewer collection sites, the accountants said.

Neighbors Network, P&Z to meet

TWIN FALLS — Members of Idaho Neighbors Network, a group concerned with the storage and handling of hazardous material, will meet tonight with the Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning Commission to discuss proposed regulations.

The meeting will be part of the regular Planning and Zoning Commission session at 7:30 p.m. in the city hall.

Laura Kraft, a co-chairman of the board of Idaho Neighbors Network, said there are four major provisions proposed by the group for hazardous materials within the city.

These include requiring at least 900 feet between any storage area and residential housing; specifications for an eight-foot high chain link fence to enclose such a facility; requiring that a manager of such facility strategize adequate knowledge for handling the material and the posting of warning signs on any building containing hazardous materials.

Kraft said her group is concerned with safety precautions in the event of spills or other accidents. She said the larger the buffer zone around a hazardous material facility, the greater advantage for adjoining residents in the event of evacuation or in the dissipation of the material that might be spilled or leaked.

"The only problem would be that it may grow too fast," he said.

Kleinopf, Miller, Andersen and Mayor Emery Peterson voted to start contract negotiations with OMI and to allow company officials to spend time to plan the work to be investigated during negotiations. Council member Mary McClusky did not attend the meeting.

Council members Doug Vollmer and John Peterson opposed the start of contract negotiations with OMI. Vollmer said he wanted to consider the Montgomery subsidiary, at least until the city determined if the city could save a substantial amount of money from their offer to operate the plant a year without profit.

Peterson said that although he supports contracting plant operations, the city needs more complete financial information about the companies before starting contract negotiations with them. Both cities have agreed to be liable for fines imposed if they are hired and exceed offered standards.

If a private company is hired, the council would still set policy for the plant. But the company would be responsible for all maintenance and operations.

The company would hire its own employees to run the plant, but usually they hire from municipal employees at the plant.

six of which are the newer Model One. Principals said Sonius led the district to start working with Commodore computers. Sonius says the district shopped around and found that Commodore offered them the best price and software packages.

At Morningside, Sonius' oldest computer is five years old and his newest was bought for this school year. Sonius says he has 17 Commodores at Morningside, one of which he uses in his office for scheduling and school busness.

At Elkhead Elementary School, there is a computer in every classroom.

Principal Lillie Brown says she has only junked one of the 25 computers. The school uses and many of the Commodore Vic-20s and Model 61s are four years old. "They have done very well and they are getting very hard use," she says.

Brown says district teachers have written a number of educational programs for the machines.

At Harrison Elementary School, principal Bill Stover says he has seven Commodore computers — three in between classrooms, "I run them in classrooms; there is no room for a lab," he says. Stover says he has had minor problems such as blown fuses, but nothing more serious.

With a Commodore in every other classroom, Lincoln School Principal Ted Popplewell says he is pleased with the 12 personal computers at his school and has had small problems with blown fuses and power packs.

Sawtooth Elementary School's 15 Commodore Model 61 computers have been serviced for over-heating, but computer lab organizer Monte Katzenberger says the removal of some protective material in the keyboards relieved the over-heating problem.

Sonius says the computer committee is in the process of preparing an inventory of the computers in the district in order to insure them.

History — Shoshone objects to switch land in Idaho began early, with the joint-planning team holding public hearings and developing alternatives. Although the GAO accuses the Idaho team of also setting goals inconsistent with those set by their superiors by calling for no office closures or personnel cuts, the BLM staff published in the GAO's final report.

Initial progress for the land transfer in Idaho proceeded faster and farther than most states, even after Sirmon and Bullington were replaced by Stan Tixler and Claire Whitlock, respectively.

That the 250,000 acres of BLM land in northern Idaho should belong to the Forest Service was easily agreed upon. However, how to divide southern Idaho, and particularly the South Hills in the Twin Falls and Burley ranger districts, was a point of disagreement between Tixler and Whitlock.

JEROME — The Shoshone, Chamber of Commerce is asking the area's Congressional delegation to fight to keep the Bureau of Land Management's district headquarters at Shoshone.

Robert Lewin, president of the local chamber, told Rep. Richard Stallings Monday the headquarters should stay in Shoshone because the BLM already owns land and two offices there.

Idaho BLM Director Clair Whitlock decided last month to place the new district headquarters in Twin Falls. The switch is being made as part of a proposed reorganization that will place all public land responsibilities south of U.S. 20 in the hands of the BLM. The BLM and the U.S. Forest Service each currently manage land in the area.

Lewin told Stallings the government might save between $2 and $10 million by using its property in Shoshone. In Twin Falls, the government would be forced to either lease more office space or to build new headquarters, he said. In Burley, it would have to spend money to expand the current facilities. Lewin said.

Moving the headquarters also would drop the number of BLM staff from 48 to about 20. "It would just about run us," he said. Currently about 24 of the employees live in Shoshone.

"Besides contacting Stallings," the chamber also has written to Sen. James McClure — and received assurances that he will investigate the office relocation.

Burley city officials and business leaders also have protested Whitlock's decision recently.

Uninvited lake guests make vacation a chore

DEAR ABBY: We are dreading the summer because we live on a lake in Minnesota, which seems to make us fair game for uninvited summer guests.

They plan their summer vacations with our place in mind — not to mention the use of our boats, fishing equipment, gasoline, golf clubs and, most of all, our precious time.

We welcome invited guests, but how can we discourage those who pop in on us uninvited? They come with suitcases and kids, telling us not to fuss — they'll sleep anywhere!

This is a loud cry for help. Abby — not only from us, but from other lake dwellers, too.

We hate to be rude, but we are so tired of uninvited guests we've even thought of selling our summer place.

— NO NAMES, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAMES: As long as you permit yourself to be imposed upon, you will be, so in the interest of self-defense, you must do the following: When uninvited guests appear at your door with suitcases and kids, tell them without hemming and hawing or apologizing that you can't ask them to stay because you've made other plans: "You owe them no further explanations as to what the "other plans" are.

I am enclosing a poem for you and your fellow lake-dwellers. I ran it about five years ago, after which a Wisconsin reader informed me that he had it framed to hang in his beach home. Help yourself!

OUR PLACE AT THE LAKE
June is past, so is July,
August is ended — likewise:
The patting feel of summer and sun
Are over, complete, exhausted.

I've fed the young as well as the old,
I've cooled the warm, I've warmed the cold.

The wounded and weeping I have consoled,
The tender and touchy I have enjoyed,
I have steered the scared, I have scared the bold,
I have bit my tongue till it was gone.

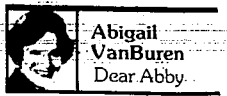

Specialized study can have its limits

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — College students today are sometimes criticized for being "too" career-oriented.

But that career interest "is a simple deduction from the professionalized world in which they are destined to exist," says Dennis O'Brien, president of the University of Rochester. "The modern university must come to terms with this professional trend."

"We just cannot repeat the classical curriculum in a world of computers and lasers."

But he also warns that specialized study isn't the only point of a university education, noting, "Some human practices — and those most important — are not necessarily improved by professionalization."

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

I've broiled the steak, I have casserolled,
And the grocer thinks I am made of gold.
(The other hills I have pigeon-holed.)
And frankly, friends, I am ready to fold!
Next time I live I'll make the most of being the guest, not the host.

DEAR ABBY: How do you feel about vivisection, which is defined as the cutting or operation on a living animal usually for physiological or pathological investigation; animal experimentation, especially if considered to cause distress to the subject?

— FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS IN N.Y.

DEAR FOR: The late George Bernard Shaw expressed my feelings perfectly when he said: "You do not settle whether an experiment is justified or not by merely showing that it is of some use. The distinction is not between useful and useless experiments, but between barbarous and civilized behavior. Vivisection is a social evil because it advances human knowledge, it does so at the expense of human character."

Adventists delay move on women's ordination

By JOHN DART
Los Angeles Times

Leaders of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, a denomination that considers the writings of co-founder Ellen White to be inspired, has decided to postpone voting on whether women should be ordained as ministers for at least another three years.

The Adventists' Spring Council meeting in Washington, D.C., Thursday accepted the unanimous recommendation of its special commission on women's ordination "to take no definitive action at this time" and establish a biblical study group. "It had been expected that the subject would be debated during the worldwide church's meeting this summer in New Orleans.

The 66-member ordination commission, which included 15 women, was about evenly divided in a straw vote taken last week on whether to proceed toward admitting women to ministerial ranks, said Lowell Beck, one of six vice presidents of the denomination.

"The church in that kind of split doesn't dare move ahead — not unless we have a good majority," Beck said. One often-repeated concern has been that the idea of women ministers troubles many overseas churches. Only 670,000 of the church's 4.3 million members live in North America.

In addition, a survey of North American church members recently showed that only 36 percent of the males and 30 percent of the females favored women's ordination. "The rank-and-file aren't ready yet," Beck said.

The independent Association of Adventist Women and other backers of the change had been pointing toward the June 27-July 6 General Conference session in New Orleans for open debate and voting on the matter. But commission members said they were uncertain about biblical justification for women's ordination and recommended that a new study be finished by 1989.

The Spring Council ruled out women's ordination for serious debate in New Orleans. A spokeswoman said the decision on ordination will probably be made by the Annual Council, a policy-making body of nearly 500 persons, in the fall of 1988 or 1989. If the Annual Council approves ordination, the 1990 General Conference session would work out the details. General Conference sessions are held every five years.

Though the Saturday Sabbath-observing denomination was co-founded in the 19th Century by Ellen White, whom Adventists consider a prophet, the theologically conservative church has only permitted small numbers of women to serve in pastoral roles — and without the ordination usually granted after four years' service in church settings, she Ellen White Example Adventist advocates of ordination said that church leaders of her day gave Ellen White a choice to be ordained. "Women should be given the same choice today," she asserted. Background material from the Assn. of Adventist Women, which has about 700 active members,

But because Ellen White also exercised great authority in the church, her example is often used to blunt arguments against giving women leadership positions in the denomination.

Slightly ill kids can still enjoy play

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Children who are not feeling well, but are not extremely ill, can enjoy play that is geared to their energy level, says Dr. Elaine Wilson, Extension parenting specialist at Oklahoma State University. When a child is not feeling well, she says, toys, books, puzzles and activities appropriate for a slightly younger child are most suitable. She suggests moving the toy box next to the child's bed. Magnifying glasses and binoculars can expand the child's view of the world from the bed, she notes. And, for extremely ill children, a mirror will expand their view of their room.

Youth wins exchange-student foray to Japan

By DIANE SCHORZMAN
 Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — Celanna Blick of Castleford has two months to learn to speak Japanese before she leaves for Japan as a foreign exchange student. Blick, 16, recently learned she has received one of 18 full-ride, eight-week scholarships to Japan offered by the Future Homemakers of America/Kikkoman Corporate Scholarship Program. Other sponsors of the Japanese exchange program are Future Homemakers of Japan and Youth For Understanding (YFU), a non-profit international education program based in Washington, D.C. The YFU program supports the belief that individuals will help achieve international understanding and stresses family living as the center of the learning experience. Blick, daughter of Benny and Mary Anne Blick of Castleford, will live with a host family while in Japan and attend Japanese schools. "I was asked if I wanted to live in a family with or without kids," says Blick. She chose a family with children. The scholarship competition was open to sophomore and junior boys and girls. Five students from each state submitted applications. "I thought it was a long shot," said Blick. "I knew there would be a lot of competition." Screening of applicants was done by FHJA and YFU national staff members. After Blick was notified she was one of 30 semifinalists nationwide, she was interviewed at her home by Sandy Williams of Twin Falls, the YFU representative for this area. Blick will miss a few summertime activities when she goes to Japan. "I was selected to go to Girl's State in June," says Blick, and adds that although she regrets that she will miss it, she and her family felt she should not pass up the trip to Japan. She also has been elected to an FHA state office as District 4 president and hopes she will be able to attend the Junior Student Leadership program in Boise before she leaves for Japan. "I also got out of irrigating on the farm — moving potato lines," she adds with a laugh. Blick and the 17 other students will participate in a three-day training and orientation program in June and then fly to Japan as a group.

Silver miners hope to gain boost from Statue of Liberty

WALLACE (AP) — The Northern Idaho silver mining industry is planning part of its hopes for recovery on another recovery — the renovation of the Statue of Liberty.

Legislation is pending in the Senate to authorize gold and silver coins commemorating the Statue of Liberty, Ellis Island and contributions immigrants have made to the nation. The House has already passed the bill.

The coins would raise money for the renovation project, but Hecia Mining Co. President William Griffith thinks the program will show that minting special coins is a good way to reduce the nation's silver stockpile.

"Disposal as coinage would have minimum impact on price simply because sales would be directed to the largest possible group of potential customers worldwide — the general public," Griffith said recently.

Mining company executives are worried about the surplus, which is three times the total annual production. The government has declared the entire stockpile surplus. The industry fears the government will lower the already low silver prices by dumping the stockpile on the market in large amounts.

The Statue of Liberty bill calls for minting 138 million ounces, a small percentage of the 138 million ounces in the stockpile, into commemorative coins.

The Silver Institute, a mining trade organization, concluded in 1983 that the public would buy 25 million ounces of one-ounce coins annually. That's about 80 percent of the annual domestic production.

Griffith, who heads the nation's largest producer of newly-mined silver, noted that arch-rival Sunshine Mining Co. has been selling 400,000 ounces of one-ounce coins and other small silver products each month out of three offices in Dallas, Boise and the Coeur d'Alene Mining District.

However, the association which represents silver users is against coinage idea and cool publicity to the Statue of Liberty bill.

The Silver Users Association of Washington, D.C., whose members benefit from low silver prices, has criticized the coinage program which raised $72 million for the U.S. and Los Angeles Olympic committees.

"The Olympic coins made a lot of money for the Olympics, but I'm not sure how much they cost the taxpayer," said Walter Franklin, executive vice president of the association. "I'm not sure the Statue of Liberty coin is going to make a lot of money for the Statue of Liberty, but I'm not sure the taxpayer isn't going to subsidize some of that."

The Treasury Department said taxpayers didn't subsidize the Olympics and won't subsidize the Statue of Liberty coins. Officials are, however, lukewarm to the idea, because the Mint is designed to turn out regular coinage, according to an aide of Treasurer Katherine Ortega.

A total of 12 coinage bills are pending in Congress, including one marking the 75th anniversary of the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts.

Rep. Frank Annunzio, an Illinois Democrat who heads key subcommittee, has set a quota of one special coinage bill annually.

Previous coinage bills have commemorated the 300th anniversary of York County, Maine; the 150th anniversary of Columbia, S.C.; the opening of the Oakland Bay Bridge and the debut of the Cincinnati Music Center.

Colonel receives promotion to National Guard chief

BOISE (AP) — Col. Darrell Manning has been promoted to the rank of brigadier general and named chief of the Idaho National Guard.

Gov. John Evans removed Manning's silver eagle, symbol of a colonel, and replaced it with a silver star over the weeks. Manning became chief of the Idaho National Guard, succeeding James Brooks, who retired after 10 years in the position.

"Nobody in the state is more deserving of this new responsibility and assignment than Darrell Manning," said Evans, praising Manning's long background of state, political and Guard service. The governor and Manning's wife, Rochelle, joined in pinning one star each on the new adjutant general.

Manning said he views his new job as a difficult assignment. "Both the Idaho National Guard and the Idaho Army National Guard are among the top-rated units in the country and it's going to be hard to keep them there," he said.

Manning said there may be "management style changes" but few policy changes under his administration.

He said he expects the Idaho National Guard to keep using the RF4 jets that have been a mainstay for years. He described the jets as well-suited for their role, reconnaissance, and said they could be around for another 20 years.

Manning, 52, is a Preston native. He's been active in Idaho politics for years and served in both the House and Senate. He has been director of the state Department of Transportation for nearly 11 years.

He was commissioned in the U.S. Air Force in 1958 after graduation from Utah State University and has more than 14,000 hours flying time in military and civilian aircraft.

If there are military cutbacks in an effort to reduce the federal deficit, Manning said he doesn't think they will hurt Guard units. He described Army and Air Guard units as among the least-expensive of the nation's military defense units.

Most of the state's top military brass attended the ceremony in the governor's office, including two other generals, Brig. Gen. Lawrence B. Campbell, assistant adjutant general for the Army Guard, and Brig. Gen. William Free, assistant adjutant general for the Air Guard, both serving directly under Manning.

All-female state prison at Orofino prepares to receive male inmates

OROFINO (AP) — Renovation work at the new Women's State Prison should be completed on one wing within the next few weeks, clearing the way for the initial transfer of male prisoners to the facility next month, according to Warden Dennis Bodily.

Twenty-two male inmates, ages 59 to 73, have been tentatively scheduled to move from the main prison in Boise to the Orofino facility during the first three weeks of May, Bodily said, with the remaining 32 male inmates brought to the prison in subsequent months.

The renovation of the women's prison, which opened just a year ago, was prompted by the need for state Corrections Department officials to reduce the population at the main state prison, where inmates have won a federal court order requiring improved security, medical services and other changes.

Transfers to Orofino will be limited to minimum and medium security geriatric patients along with younger inmates who have either medical problems or could be victimized if left in the main prison population at Boise, Bodily said.

Although the male and female inmates at Orofino will occupy separate wings, Bodily said there will be some interaction between the sexes in places like the prison school and church.

"There probably will be some positive spinoffs of having both sexes," he speculated.

Murder trial goes on shelf for third time

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — The second-degree murder trial of a Kootenai man accused in a shooting death last summer has been delayed for the third time, according to Second District Court officials.

The trial of Robert Caldwell originally was set for Nov. 26, but his first attorney asked to be disqualified.

The trial then had been scheduled to begin Jan. 21, and then was rescheduled for Monday, according to Idaho County Prosecutor Henry Boomer.

But the trial was delayed again because of schedule conflicts that have arisen because of two vacancies on the bench, according to district court officials.

Jury selection now is scheduled to begin April 19, officials said. Testimony is scheduled to begin April 20.

Caldwell has been charged in the killing of Claude Graham, who died after being shot in the back of the head with a handgun last June 9, authorities said.

Caldwell was released from the Idaho County Jail Jan. 2 on $10,000 bond and has been ordered to reside outside of the Clearwater Valley area until his trial.

Caldwell's first trial was set for Nov. 26, but his first attorney asked to be disqualified.

Boise men earn lifesaving award

BOISE (AP) — Two Boise men have been honored with the highest lifesaving award issued by the American Red Cross.

Amy Brestler, community service director for the Boise Chapter of the Red Cross, said Idaho Power Co. employees Gb Blackmer and Dave Hanson would receive the Certificate of Merit on Monday for reviving a co-worker who received an electrical shock on Jan. 6.

Blackmer and Hanson performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation on Nick Martinez after finding he was not breathing and had no pulse. Both men were trained in CPR techniques by the Red Cross, Ms. Brestler said.

The certificates bear the signatures of President Reagan and Jerome H. Jofland, chairman of the American Red Cross.

Russell: Right-to-work OK

BOISE (AP) — A state attorney says Idaho court precedent indicates that the state's right-to-work law is constitutional.

Robie Russell, deputy attorney general, on Monday filed a reply brief in 4th District Court here, the latest round of legal arguments over the state's right-to-work law.

The Idaho Legislature in January approved right-to-work. Labor unions immediately filed a lawsuit against the new law, contending among other things that its emergency clause was unconstitutional.

Since the law contained an emergency clause, putting it into effect immediately, that deprives voters of a chance to submit the new law to a referendum before it goes into effect, the unions argued.

Russell, in a reply brief, said two Idaho court decisions in the 1930s upheld the Legislature's right to declare an emergency and put a new law into effect immediately. The unions' reply brief was due in 4th District Court here Monday.

Contractor wins

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court has sided with a contractor in his dispute with the Ada County Highway District over the cost of a Boise excavation contract.

Contractor James Haener, doing business as J&D Construction, asked extra payment from the highway district after he unexpectedly struck abandoned underground lines.

School district's appeal expensive

BOISE (AP) — An appeal filed by the Canyon County School District over an employee's wage claim has proven costly.

Former employee Carl Gene Gilbert filed a claim against the district for unpaid wages and received a judgment of $1,162 in small claims court.

The district decided to appeal to district court. Third District Judge Roger Williams conducted a new trial and awarded Gilbert triple damages, $285 because he did not receive two weeks' notice of termination and $25 for attorney fees.

The Idaho Supreme Court ruled Monday the proper judgment should be $1,514 plus interest from March 2, 1984.

Reds' Rose starts his pursuit of Cobb hit record by going 2-for-3 at plate

By JOE KAY
The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Player-manager Pete Rose resumed his chase of Ty Cobb's all-time hit mark Monday, driving in three runs with a double and a single to lead the Cincinnati Reds to a snowy 4-1 National League opening day victory over the Montreal Expos.

Rose, basking in hometown adulation in his first opener as player-manager, warmed the crowd when he knocked in the first two runs of the game with a fifth-inning double. He added an RBI single in the seventh.

Rose, who returned from Montreal last August, was 2-for-3 with a walk, leaving him 93 hits away from breaking Cobb's all-time mark of 4,191. The game started in windy, 32-degree weather and twice fell victim to typically fickle spring skies that alternated among sunshine, rain and snow.

A sudden, intense snowstorm covered the artificial surface and forced a 21-minute delay in the top of the fifth. The storm sent the crowd, including Reds owner Marge Schott and baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, scurrying for cover.

Another brief, thick snowfall delayed the game 40 minutes in the bottom of the fifth.

Mario Soto, starting his fourth consecutive opener for Cincinnati, and Montreal's Steve Rogers, making his ninth opening-day start in 10 years, traded shutout innings until the fifth.

Soto singled with two out off Rogers, 6-5 last year, and took third on Eric Davis' double. Rose then led a 2-1 pitch to the opposite field for a 2-0 lead, and Dave Parker followed with an RBI single.

Soto, 16-7 last year, lost his shutout in the seventh when Luis Brooks hit a triple and scored on Tim Wallach's groundout. Soto scattered four hits, over seven innings, striking out five, before yielding to Carl Willis, who picked up a save.

Davis drew a seventh-inning walk from rookie Tim Burke, stole second and third, and scored on Rose's single to right.

The Reds sold a Riverfront Stadium opening-day record $2,971 tickets for the game, their first advanced opening sellout since 1981.

Ueberroth and Mrs. Schott watched the game from the stands. Ueberroth sat in a sweater and sports jacket through the fifth, declining to don a Reds warmup jacket offered by the club. But he relented and put on an overcoat during the second snow-telery.

Rookie sparks Tigers' win in opener

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit rookie Chris Pittaro, showing the savvy of a big-league veteran, answered a lot of questions Monday — including many of his own — as he helped the Tigers beat the Cleveland Indians 5-1 in their season opener.

Pittaro had three singles, driving in a run to start Detroit's two-run eighth inning, and Jack Morris and Willie Hernandez combined on a six-hit effort for the victory.

"Hopefully, this says I can hit major league pitching," said the 23-year-old Pittaro, who jumped all the way from Class AA minor league ball to the starting third base job with the World Series champions. "But, one day does not a season make."

Pittaro, who had never set foot on a major league field until he walked into Tiger Stadium for batting practice, said he really felt no pressure. "I didn't expect to be here, for one thing," Pittaro said. "Today, I really didn't have time to be nervous. There was too much going on. It wasn't until I came back into the clubhouse (after batting practice) to stretch out that I got a few butterflies."

Manager Sparky Anderson said Pittaro's performance was more than just a ballgame; it won the confidence of his teammates.

"See, we were all worried about him," the manager said. "Now, he's a man. This helps reinforce our decision to go with Chris."

Anderson said he didn't worry about pressure getting to Pittaro, a University of North Carolina product who is the son of Sonny Pittaro, baseball coach at Rider College in Trenton, N.J.

"Pressure is good for him because now he's one of us," Anderson said. "We live with pressure all the time. Let him live with it, too."

The Tigers trailed 4-3 in the eighth when Larry Herndon singled off Tom Waddell. Earnie Camacho, 0-1, came on for the Indians and walked Chet Lemon. Pittaro hit his third single of the game, scoring Herndon and sending Lemon to third. Lemon scored the winning run on a sacrifice fly by Lou Whitaker.

"I have no problem with the hit," Camacho said. "Pittaro hit a good pitch (a low fastball). I would throw the same one to him again. Give him some credit."

"He's a contact-type hitter who just wants to meet the ball. He just slapped it up the middle and it got through."

Morris, 1-0, was erratic, walking six while striking out one.

He gave up four runs on six hits in the eighth inning he worked. Hernandez, 1984 Cy Young winner and Most Valuable Player in the

It's Strange field for Masters

By BOB GREEN
The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Calvin Peete and Curtis Strange lead a cadre of new contenders against the more familiar favorites in the 48th Masters, which opens today.

Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson and Seve Ballesteros are of course among the more popular candidates for the green jacket that goes to the winner of the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness.

There are also defending titleholder Ben Crenshaw and Tom Kite among them — who can influence the outcome of the event that has become golf's annual rite of spring.

Generally speaking, however, the recognized leaders of the game have been less than totally effective, producing little but self-frustration in the three months of play this season.

Ballesteros, the Spaniard who holds two Masters titles and last season beat Watson in the British Open, did win at New Orleans. But he did little before and nothing since.

Crenshaw has had nothing but troubles since fulfilling his dream of glory in this tournament a year ago. "I went from the absolutely highest emotional level of my life, to the lowest," he said.

CALVIN PEETE Could be front-runner

CURTIS STRANGE Momentum?

Golf Club. Yet two of those front-runners have had up-and-down years, too.

O'Meara went into a deep slump after scoring consecutive triumphs in the Crosby and Hawaii tournaments.

Wadkins' set scoring records in the Hope Classic and the Los Angeles Open — "the most impressive performance of the year," Watson said — and is just now regaining his edge after a one-month break from competition.

The season has been smoother for Strange, although not without distractions.

Despite winning two titles and leading the tour in money winnings with more than $336,000, Strange was uncertain he'd be able to compete in the Masters until last week, with the arrival of David Clark-Strange. The baby was due next Friday.

"Now there's no excuses," Strange said.

Peete's impressive victory in last week's Tournament Players Championship -- a four-leading ninth triumph in four seasons -- has convinced him he has a chance in the Masters.

"I feel now I have a chance to win on any golf course I set foot on," he said.

Peete never has won one of golf's Grand Slam events — the Masters.

Cassia County teams gather for track debut

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

BURLEY — Four Cassia County prep track teams that have seen little but snow this spring will get their first crack at real competition here this afternoon at a quadrangular meet hosted by Burley High School.

Burley, Declo, Oakley and Raft River will start competition in the field events at 3:30 p.m., with the first running events to start about 4:15.

"This is the first chance a lot of us will have to get outside," said Burley boys' track coach Scott Crane. "Bastently, this meet will be an opportunity for us to get together and work some of the kinks out."

Today's event will be the first all-Cassia County track meet in a couple of years, and it may be the only opportunity for the four schools to compete in the same meet this season. Because of scheduling problems, it's uncertain whether the annual South Idaho Press Invitational, hosted by Mimco High School — will be held this year. And while all four schools usually attend the Magic Valley Classic in Jerome, the Magic Valley Conference schools — which include Oakley and Raft River — are discussing the possibility of holding their own meet in Filer on the same days as the Classic is scheduled, April 17-18.

Crane and the other coaches aren't sure what to expect at today's meet. Declo, the traditional track power of Cassia County, is without three of its starwarts from last season — Dan Kelsey, Kathy Wheeler and Lynn Darrington.

Oakley and Raft River were expected to have strong boys' teams this year, but coaches Neil Wyatt and Daniel Wallace weren't sure as of last week how many athletes they would get out for track this spring.

Oakley's girls, with several of the athletes from its successful volleyball and basketball teams out for track, could be strong, as could Declo — which had an exceptional turnout for girls' track this spring.

Plenty of sun forecast for area skiing resorts

Sun Valley will be open daily through April 14, and on a limited basis through April 28. Hours today: 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Idaho Falls — Closed today, reopens Saturday. Soldier Mountain — Closed for season.

Magic Mountain — Closed for season. Ski conditions Monday at other major southern Idaho ski areas: Bogus Basin — 60 total, no new. Grand Targhee — 123 total, no new.

Baseball the star of The Slugger's Wife

A characteristically placid, soft-spoken female colleague bristled when I recently mentioned I might go see the movie The Slugger's Wife.

"I wouldn't go," she snarled. "It's sexist." Of course, I saw the movie anyway. And though nobody ever has equated my views on women's liberation with Gloria Steinem's, it was indeed sexist.

But since this is a sports page and I'm a lousy moralist, the following comments primarily will be confined to the athletic aspects of The Slugger's Wife. The movie has been condemned roundly by the nation's critics, and for good reason. It's slick with romantic — and sexist — sap of writer Nancy Smiton, who relentlessly saddles us with tear-jerking, don't-worry-I'm-everything-will-be-OK plots.

Still, give Columbia Pictures some credit. The baseball scenes are well-conceived and smoothly produced. This represents a refreshing departure from the vast majority of movies, in which actors stumble, lurch and otherwise embarrass themselves when called upon to perform athletic tasks. Or haven't you seen Fear Strikes Out or Pride of the Yankees?

Viewers of The Slugger's Wife don't have to cringe from the scene shifts to Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. Most of the time, one gets the feeling a real game is going on. It helps when actors possess a modicum of athletic skill. For example, it's fortunate that Michael O'Keefe, who portrays Atlanta Braves outfielder Darryl Palmer and takes plenty of cuts in his role as the title slugger, knows how to swing a bat properly. And you, any Class A pitcher could strike out O'Keefe, and any batting coach would find dozens of flaws in his stroke. But he looks coordinated, which is enough.

O'Keefe's competence would be undermined if the surrounding players were inept. So for all this, the studio went out and got genuine former major leaguers: pitchers Mark Fidrych and Al Harabosky and infielder Bucky Dent. Why settle for imitations?

We see little of Dent, but Fidrych and Harabosky are fairly prominent. Because they're adept at winding up and delivering a pitch, we're spared the sight of some ungainly out short-arming or lobbing the ball to home plate. Moreover, Columbia couldn't have made better choices. Fidrych and Harabosky gained reputations for theatrics "during their playing days"; the transition from television to movie cameras is natural for them. Harabosky, obviously parading himself with his smiling, snarling and girding, is a particularly entertaining hulk.

Other elements enhance the movie's baseball realism. Some are obvious, such as employing honest-to-goodness announcers Eddie Johnson and Skip Caray, dressing the players in actual major league uniforms and using actual team names.

Some are subtle, like the "Palmer Power" scoreboard extravaganzas — it's something you'd see at any big-league game — and the music of Helen Dell, the Dodger Stadium organist who's regarded as one of the best at her trade. They all contribute.

The only truly awkward sight was a fleeting one. During one ballpark scene, when the ball was flipped back to a Cincinnati pitcher, a second baseman briefly appeared in the background — a portly second baseman. Everybody knows infielders are supposed to be slender. This is nipping, but heck, central casting got everything else right; why not this?

THE ACES BOBBY WOLFF

"My interest is in the future because I am going to spend the rest of my life there."

East must look to the future to beat today's game. The hand was played in the finals of the annual "Blue Ribbon" Pairs...

WEST: KQ7543, 63, 9.2, 9.2. EAST: A92, K1097, A6, 10.543. SOUTH: J, 10. SOUTH: A92, K1097, A6, 10.543.

Vulnerable: Neither. Dealer: South. The bidding: South-West-North-East. 1-4-2-3 Dbl. 4-4 Pass 5-4 All pass.

Opening lead: Spade king. BID WITH THE ACES. South holds: A92, K1097, A6, 10.543.

ANSWER: Two hearts. An awkward problem. Those who play lift raises (9-11 HCP) bid three hearts at the first turn to eliminate the problem.

Send bridge questions to The Aces, P.O. Box 12365, Dallas, Texas 75225, with self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

South ruffed the second spade and instead of leading trumps from his own hand, he crossed to dummy in clubs to lead the trump deuce from the table. The sleepy Aces ducked and were rudely awakened by an embarrassing end play.

South won the diamond, played a club and ruffed his last club in dummy. A spade was ruffed to eliminate the black suits and East was given the lead in trumps. Either a club lead (ruff and discard) or a heart lead (free finesse) netted South 11 tricks.

Emotions could still block U.S. phone sales

By BILL McCLOSKEY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — American manufacturers of telecommunication equipment say they welcome U.S. diplomatic efforts to open the Japanese market to their wares, but they're not sure they will sell enough to make it worth while.

"We have objectively evaluated Japanese equipment and we think American equipment is superior," Robert J. Gressens, president of GTE International said in an interview. But, he said, the Japanese are committed to making state-of-the-art telecommunication equipment "internally or do without."

On the other hand, Richard A. Lindenmuth, president of ITT's Telecom-Business and Consumer Communications Division in Raleigh, N.C., disclosed that his firm has just concluded a $12 million deal to deliver 400 telephones with features to Japan. Paul Vishny, general counsel and director of international relations for the United States Telecommunications Suppliers Association, had high praise for American negotiators who, he said, "broke down some of the Japanese governmental barriers restricting sales of American computers and telephone switching systems."

"Our representatives have acted with dignity... In terms of Japanese regulations and ordinances," he said in a telephone interview from his Chicago office. They are "persons of skill and dedication with a great grasp of the issues involved." But, he said, in Japan the attitude still is: "Export is good and import is bad." And that, he said, "greatly permeates Japan."

"The Japanese have failed to get the message that the trade imbalance won't be tolerated," Vishny said, voicing approval for congressional pressure to put trade restrictions on products from Japan.

The attempt to get Japan to lower barriers to U.S. telecommunication has become an acid test of Japanese willingness to try to close the $37 billion trade gap between the United States and Japan.

Last Tuesday, the departments of State and Commerce said the Japanese had made some concessions to U.S. goods.

However, their announcement appeared to be aimed as much at defusing sentiment in Congress for anti-Japanese retaliation as for anti-report on the status of negotiations.

Later, in a tone of optimism, Mike Mansfield, the U.S. ambassador to Tokyo, told the Washington Post that

UAW head blames Washington for woes

OWEN BIEBER
"We're exporting jobs."

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — If trade tables were reversed, the U.S. government would behave the same way the Japanese government is in protecting its automobile industry, the United Auto Workers president said Monday.

Owen Bieber, addressing the Economic Club of Grand Rapids, said at a news conference the Japanese are not solely responsible for the U.S.-Japan trade imbalance.

"I don't blame the Japanese," the union leader said. "I blame our own government. We're no longer exporting goods, we're exporting jobs."

Last month, President Reagan refused to ask Japan to renew quotas on cars it sells in the United States.

The Japanese government, in turn, said it would allow the nation's automakers to increase exports to the United States by 25 percent to 2.3 million cars annually.

"I think if the situations were turned around, we would do the same things," Bieber said, adding that he did not expect Japan to have open markets to U.S. goods in the wake of the trade restraint expiration.

"The Japanese are not, in my opinion, going to open those markets very much," he said.

Bieber said before restraints are scrapped, the "overvalued" dollar must drop on money markets, which would help draw trade between the two nations closer to a balance by shrinking the difference in the value of the dollar and the yen.

The United States is the only nation manufacturing automobiles or components that doesn't erect barriers to protect its industry, Bieber said.

politicians agree to.

"If there is an equivalent Japanese product" to one made in the United States, said Jack McDonnell, vice president for the telecommunications group of the Electronic Industries Association, then "there is an unbelievable bent not to buy anything foreign."

He said the Japanese have been conditioned that "to buy imports is to be disloyal."

Vishny noted that Japanese purchasing agents have a resistance to non-Japanese products. They are accustomed to "building and support of the domestic industry," he said. That attitude "has served the Japanese well," he said.

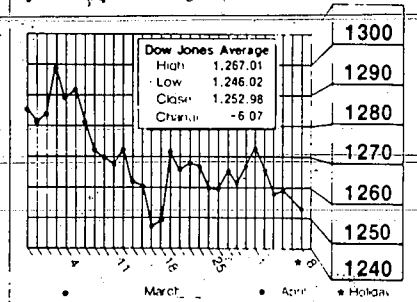

Vishny said U.S. companies can get around the resistance to foreign products by participating in joint ventures with Japanese.

Lindenmuth, the ITT official, said the U.S. government was "over-supportive" when ITT negotiated its $12 million sale of switchboards to Japan.

ITT has found success in selling American products which have been built to "Japanese" standards and marketed under a Japanese name. ITT will also start selling basic telephones in Japan soon, Lindenmuth said.

Dow skids to lowest in 3 weeks

By CHET CURRIER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market slumped to a three-week low Monday, yielding to some afternoon selling after a weak early advance faded.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up about 3 points in early trading, was off 6.07 at 1,252.98 by the close. That marked a low point for the average since it finished at 1,249.07 on March 18.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange dropped off to 79.96 million shares from 86.91 million last Thursday, before the long Easter-Passover holiday weekend.

International Business Machines, the No. 1 holding of investing institutions, fell 3/4 to 123 1/2. The company said last month that it would report lower profits for the first quarter, but still expects solid growth for the year as a whole.

Cox Communications jumped 1 1/4 to 79 1/2 for the day's biggest percentage gain among NYSE issues. The family-owned Cox Enterprises said it would make a $75-a-share offer for all the Cox Communications stock in public hands.

Allied Corp., a component of the Dow Jones industrial average, rose 3/8 to 39 1/2. The company said it struck a deal to sell a half interest in its oil and gas subsidiary, Union Texas Petroleum, to a group of investors.

Unocal led the active list and climbed 1 to 49 1/2 on volume of more than 2.6 million shares. A group led by T. Boone Pickens, chairman of Mesa Petroleum, said it began a tender offer for 64 million Unocal shares at $54 apiece.

Declining issues outnumbered those advancing by about 5 to 4 on the Big Board. The exchange's composite index dropped 4 1/2 to 103.28.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in these stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 95.81 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell 1.21 to 198.42, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 1.60 to 178.63.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market lost 4.11 to 116.31. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 227.51, up .66.

Mountain men face Virginia City court hoping to profit from trials

VIRGINIA CITY, Mont. (AP) — The trials of "mountain men" Don and Dan Nichols will cost Madison County thousands of dollars, but residents hope to recoup some of that when the media and other onlookers descend on their historic county seat next month.

Restaurants, taverns and other businesses in this summer tourist town are gearing up for the trials by opening their doors early and hoping a lot of people come.

"A lot of people are saying this will put Virginia City back on the map," said Virginia City Mayor Rose Sturgill. "It's gotten lost the last couple of years. The business people are hoping to get some money back. The Tavern people were talking about maybe having a 'Hangman's Special' or something."

Don Nichols, 54, and his son, Dan, 20, are charged with kidnapping triathlete Karl Swenson, 23, and killing her would-be rescuer, Alan Golestein, 36, near Big Sky last July. The kidnapping and their capture, after five months of eluding deputies in the rugged Madison Range, received national attention.

Authorities have said the Nicholses allegedly abducted Swenson to be a "mountain woman" for the 20-year-old Dan Nichols so he would continue to live in the woods.

There was some talk early after their arrest Dec. 13 that the trial might be moved from Virginia City because of extensive publicity. Now Virginia City business owners are relieved that the trial will be held here as planned.

The historic shoot-'em-up mining town is an ideal backdrop for the case, one said, and is itself replete with shades of the Old West.

"It'll be great for business," Darlene Jones, owner of The Tavern, said of the trials. "From what I hear, people are excited about it. It fits with the 'mountain men' and the Old West."

Bovey Restorations, which owns historic hotels, cabins and a restaurant in Virginia City and nearby Nevada City, is opening its businesses early for lawyers, reporters and photographers.

Bovey Restorations will open the Star Bakery Restaurant in Nevada City and either the hotel there or the Fairweather Hotel in Virginia City, said Bruce McCallum, general manager.

He said the businesses would normally not open until late May when the trial begins, but he couldn't pass up the promise of trial-related business.

But if businesses hope to profit, McCallum noted, "the county is going to feel the pinch."

Madison County officials have estimated the trials could cost $20,000 or more and said the county's District Court budget probably could not handle the added expense without an emergency property tax levy.

The county will pay for both Nicholses' legal fees and for psychological evaluations of Dan Nichols. In addition, the county is paying $10 a day for each man in jail costs.

Dan Nichols is scheduled to go on trial May 6, with his father's trial to follow.

Men offered new deal with special IRA rates

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Threatened with billion-dollar fines for offering extra individual retirement account interest to working women, Continental Savings of America says it will offer the same deal to men.

"We're scared," said Ben Langella, vice president of the savings and loan. Continental will comply with the "cease and desist" order from the state attorney general's office.

The S&L began March 18 to give wage-earning women 11.5 percent interest on new IRA accounts, while offering 11 percent to men. That prompted the threat of fines levied by Deputy Attorney General Martin Johnson under the Unfair Business Practices Act.

"We're caving in," he said, because under state law Continental could be fined $2,500 for each person who read about the extra interest offer — a story that was carried in newspapers across the nation.

"The fines could be in the billions," he said. Continental's attorney, Bernard Schoenberg, said the S&L "wanted to do something for the women of this country." At no time, he said, did the Federal Home Loan Bank of America say the program was illegal.

"It is extremely unjust and wrong that we cannot continue with the program which attempts to recognize the working woman of America," Schoenberg said.

In addition to making the 11.5 percent rate to men, the S&L will make it retroactive for men who took out IRAs after the date when the women's interest bonus began, he said.

An IRA is an account that allows a working individual to shelter up to $2,000 a year from taxes until retirement.

business research organization said. In its March survey of 5,000 households, less than 20 percent of respondents said they expected business conditions to improve over the next few months. That was down from 24 percent who expressed such optimism in February, the board said.

Consumers less confident in economy

NEW YORK (AP) — The crisis among Ohio savings and loan associations last month contributed to a decline in consumers' confidence about the economy, the Conference Board reported.

But the decline in confidence did not seem to hinder plans to buy homes, cars and major appliances, the strong performance in 1985, said Thomas H. Wyman, chairman and chief executive officer of CBS.

The broadcasting division performed solidly, Wyman said, with profit up 9 percent on a 3 percent gain in revenue.

A decline in the records division was attributed to the absence this year of the blockbuster sales experienced in the first quarter of 1984 from the release of Michael Jackson's "Thriller" album, Wyman said. Profits in that group fell 56 percent as revenues dropped 17 percent.

A poor performance by the publishing division reflected charges associated with the Ziff-Davis acquisition, which was completed Feb. 4, Wyman said. Publishing profits fell 39 percent while revenue rose 22 percent.

America's 'sandwich generation' faces fractured finances

As the American population ages — and the trend to unmitigated countless men and women among you who will be "sandwiched" between the needs of your aging parents and those of your growing children.

It will be a challenging situation. It will be a family embrace that can fracture finances and squeeze good will. And it will be a problem for which there are no overall quick, easy solutions.

The only simple thing about it is to do the best you can for the generation, in your young-middle to middle years, trying to save for your own future in common sense recognition that all of today's social programs — including Social Security, Medicare and others — will not be adequate to support you in your retirement years.

On one side of you are your parents, who even if not healthy and active, may require your help in housing, transportation and medical care, as well as some financial assistance.

On the other side are your children, who also need help in housing, clothing, medical care, food, allowances, tuition and many other essentials depending on their ages.

This series of three columns will focus on different aspects of the problems involved. Today's touches on planning with and for your older parents, setting goals and making arrangements.

"It's vital to sit down and talk things over," says Annette Buchanan, education specialist for the Institute of Lifetime Learning of the American Association of Retired Persons.

"Parents and children must discuss what expenses each can pay, and find out where they are expected to help." Just holding the discussion poses a challenge.

"People should be able to do this before the older person is no longer competent," Buchanan advises. "The obstacle is that people don't want to think this can happen to them. They keep putting it off."

At this family discussion, cover all the bases: finances, housing, medical care, legal issues. As older parents: • Get all personal papers in order so you can tell your children where to find them and how to use them.

• Tell your family the name and address of your attorney, where to find a copy of your will; copies of your life insurance policies; debts, leases; a list of all bank accounts, stocks, bonds, other investments.

• Assuring you have a safety deposit box, tell your children where you keep the spare key.

• While you may not wish to disclose the contents of your will, reassure your children that you have made a will by informing them where you have placed it under your lock and key.

• Be sure your medical insurance is up to date. "It's vital to have a good medical policy," Buchanan stresses.

"If there is one benefit you can pass on to your children, this is it."

As children in the sandwich generation: • Nudge your parents to take care of essential but often overlooked details as they age. For example, if your parents have moved to another state in recent years — and if they haven't reviewed their wills since doing so, make sure they rewrite their wills in accordance with their current state's laws or rules.

• Consider helping your parents with the management of their finances if they indicate they want your help. You may take over the chore gradually if this seems appropriate. You can get power of attorney or you can set up a revocable trust. You can manage your parents' assets as trustee of the trust. At their death, the assets revert to their estate.

• Or you can create joint accounts so your signature will suffice for transactions.

• Each of these actions on the part of parents or children has major consequences, affecting the welfare of all of you. Do not move without legal advice! And if you decide to set up a trust, do so with a specialist in estate planning to assist.

The basis of his entire report is one of trust and love. On this basis, you can plan so every one of you will come out ahead.

U.S. trade deficit shows up clearly in numbers of jobless

NEW YORK — You can read the trade deficit in the jobless figures. Since last August, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, there has been no growth at all in manufacturing employment, even though the economy has grown and total employment has risen.

At least two explanations stand out: The economy is becoming increasingly dominated by the service sector, which includes such industries as financial brokerage, insurance, accounting, advertising and the like, and by retail sales and construction.

Manufacturing employment is being shipped abroad.

The latter factor helps explain why American legislators, unions and corporate management are becoming so distressed about the trade imbalance, marked by warnings for Japan to open wider its markets to U.S. goods.

Those warnings include an "or else" clause, the meaning of which is:

to warn Japan that the United States might limit access to its own markets if U.S. goods aren't given a fair shake in that country.

What constitutes a fair shake may be interpreted differently in Japan and the United States, since Japan repeatedly has asserted that its markets are more open than Americans say they are. But the numbers cannot be ignored.

The United States is now buying more from foreigners than it is selling to them, and doing so at the rate of more than $100 billion a year, a rate that U.S. manufacturers and exporters thought to be undesirable and maybe even suicidal.

Suicidal because it eventually strips the importing country of the ability to pay for those goods, weakens its ability to protect its own infrastructure and creates pockets of unemployment wherever factories close.

More than one-third of that deficit is with Japan, which exports automobiles, electronics equipment and a great variety of other manufactured goods into the relatively free markets of the United States.

Without such imports, protectionists argue, those goods would have been made in the United States by American workers. The number of American jobs, they suggest, would be well below its current level of 8.4 million.

Others aren't so sure, and that includes the White House.

There is much doubt among American manufacturers and trade officials, for example, that all those imports represent jobs denied to American workers. Out of the imports, they say, and the total number of cars sold would decline.

Moreover, to protect American markets from foreign competition almost certainly would mean greater domestic inflation. Lower priced imports have had much to do with the calm price structure over the past couple of years. Remove competition, history shows, and prices soon begin to creep higher.

Those who have studied international trade contend that limitations on free trade mean smaller markets for both exporter and importer, simply because free trade seems to be a catalyst in creating a higher level of economic activity.

President Reagan's economic advisers restated that again this February in the White House economic report to Congress.

"Countries that have followed the least restrictive economic policies both at home and abroad," they said, "have experienced the most rapid economic growth and have enabled the greatest proportion of their populations to raise above subsistence living standards."

This thesis rests not on abstract economic reasoning, the White House economists contend in the report, "but from concrete historical comparisons of the achievements of free trade against those of protectionism."

Pragmatically concrete, however, are those unemployment numbers, and they add a dimension to the free trade vs. protectionism argument that political figures cannot ignore.

GE prepares for its fraud case trial

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — General Electric Co. is preparing for a May 13 trial on charges it defrauded the federal government by padding expenses on a $47 million Minuteman nuclear warhead contract.

GE, the nation's fourth-largest defense contractor with $4.5 billion in annual military business, pleaded innocent to 108 counts of making false claims that led to an alleged $800,000 overpayment.

The plea was entered last Thursday by GE attorney Henry Ruhl, a former special federal prosecutor in the Watergate conspiracy investigation that led to the resignation of President Richard Nixon a decade ago.

Ruhl objected to the May 13 trial date set by U.S. District Judge Louis Bechtle, arguing unsuccessfully that with more than 100,000 documents involved in the case, many of them "highly classified," he would need more than five weeks to prepare.

Ruhl acknowledged that every passing day causes economic harm on the company whose right to do business with the Pentagon was suspended pending outcome of the case.

More than one-third of that deficit is with Japan, which exports automobiles, electronics equipment and a great variety of other manufactured goods into the relatively free markets of the United States.

Without such imports, protectionists argue, those goods would have been made in the United States by American workers. The number of American jobs, they suggest, would be well below its current level of 8.4 million.

Firm seeks protection Potatoes

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Management Corp., a government securities dealer, filed Monday for protection from its creditors while it reorganizes under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy code.

U.S. District Judge Dickinson Debevoise then froze the assets of the Livingston, N.J.-based company until further order of the court, and said he would appoint a trustee.

The filing comes only a month after another securities dealer, FSM Government Securities Inc. of Florida, was closed after the Securities and Exchange Commission found the firm may have left dozens of its mostly governmental and banking customers with $220 million in losses.

The failure of FSM led to a run on one Ohio thrift and eventually led to the state-ordered closing of 69 other savings and loans which were insured with it under a private program. Many of those thrifts have since re-opened.

The FSM failure highlighted the fact that many small government securities dealers can operate subject to no regulation, and it prompted renewed calls for greater oversight of dealers.

News of the filing contributed to a decline in the dollar in light trading on the foreign exchange markets, dealers said.

Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Management Corp. said it prepared to file for the U.S. Bankruptcy Court that as of Dec. 31, 1984, its total assets were $502.7 million while its total liabilities came to $498.2 million.

SEC officials added that there was a $48 million gap between the $428 million worth of the company's agreements to repurchase government securities and the $378.7 million in agreements to sell such securities.

Rags-to-riches-to-rags mountain man doesn't regret losses

SEATTLE (AP) — Bill Nicolai, a brash ex-hippie who climbed Mount Rainier in the nude and turned a business into an overnight success story, has watched his dreams succumb to debt and cash flow traumas. But he says he has no regrets.

"I'm a human being who's had more success than most people could dream of," says Nicolai, 39. "I gambled and lost."

Before the crash, Nicolai was lionized as a marketing whiz and the man who built Early Winters Ltd., an outdoor recreation firm whose products won national awards.

Heralded by the Wall Street Journal and imitated by competitors, Early Winters twice appeared on Inc. magazine's list of America's fastest growing companies.

But the rocket-like history of Early Winters was a story of cash used to finance unrestrained growth.

"It was like a drug addiction; and the drug is cash — now," Nicolai says.

Nicolai went through a divorce, lost his father and tried desperately, and eventually successfully, to sell the company he built and wanted to keep.

August, he turned Early Winters over to Leigh Perkins Jr. of Vermont's Orvis Co. a seller of fishing gear and outdoor clothing.

Orvis largely paid Early Winters' debts, invested $1 million in capital and sent Perkins, the son of Orvis' president, to run the company.

Nicolai now retains a small share of the company and a small degree of liability for its debts. The sale meant Nicolai narrowly averted a possible bankruptcy that would have thrown 200 people out of work.

Early Winters went into a steep decline last year when an already dicey cash flow situation began to deteriorate rapidly.

The mail-order business, swollen by new companies, suddenly took a dive. Only established firms with cash reserves could survive.

The highly leveraged Early Winters had no reserves and the slight downturn was enough to wipe out its profits. Sales of $16 million left a $350,000 loss.

When Nicolai went looking for a buyer, his firm's catalog printer was refusing to deliver unless its outstanding bill of $800,000 was reduced. And Peoples Bank was nervous about its $2 million loan, a deal personally approved by bank chairman Joshua Green III.

Nicolai now says he's nearly broke and doesn't know what's next. He plans to travel.

After the fall, critics can fault Nicolai for many errors in judgment.

John Hall, a writer for the company catalog who left to work for Eddie Bauer, says, "Nicolai and some of the other managers were not too handy with people. He was always gone. That bugged people who thought he was living like a king while not paying people very well."

And former designer Kathy Hawley recalls Nicolai "had brains and ideas but no sense of reality. He walked around with holes in his pants ... I don't think he was trained in social courtesies."

But defenders see him as an errant genius who took little pay, developed a fiercely loyal group of customers and built a remarkable company against the odds.

"He was a door, mentally creative," says ex-employee Heather

Wehman. "He built a good company."

To enemies, Nicolai was rude, cheap and dominated conversation. Friends say he is fascinating, lovable and difficult, but worth the trouble.

He is a man who spent six years at the University of Washington studying Sanskrit, history and mathematics, then dropped out 10 days before graduation to climb in Yosemite. He admired the leadership qualities of Capt. Abah of "Moby Dick."

While he spent summers at the Harvard Business School, he could also spend entire weekends reading the Bhagavad-Gita, a sacred Hindu text.

In 1971, when the Early Winters story began, Nicolai was a self-described mountain bum who lived in a $75-a-month apartment, earned $2 an hour at a government job and drove an ancient Cadillac hearse.

When his tent shredded during an autumn storm in the North Cascades, Nicolai spent three sleepless nights thinking about tent designs.

Then he spent a month designing and building tents on an ancient sewing machine. The result was the Omnipotent, a tubelike design that did away with a rainfly and used fiberglass poles and an unusual wetting system. He sold them for $165 at Seattle street fairs.

"Climbing buddy Ron Zimmerman joined him, later to become vice president for marketing, and helped develop the special Early Winters marketing mix of technical data and hype."

Early Winters' big break came in 1975 when it began using Gore-tex, a then-new waterproof, windproof fabric, for tents and other outdoor products.

Early Winters struggled to stay on the edge, to provide "unique outdoor equipment."

Nicolai was a shrewd marketing man who kept pace with the Yuppie crowd. As Yuppies cut back on climbing and spent more time indoors, Early Winters moved moving into pricey goods that recalled the Pacific Ocean or Ultimate Thunderstorm.

The past year has been hush for the man who gained international fame as a "mountain bum turned businessman."

In the "most harrowing time of my life," Nicolai went through a divorce, lost his father and tried desperately, and eventually successfully, to sell the company he built and wanted to keep.

thankful were not sold here," he said. Griffin referred to the Texas securities board decision against the sale of shares of the ill-fated DeLorean Motors Holding Company and Flowerlands, Inc. He also said the current state law guaranteed refunds for investors who had lost a total of $5.5 million when Baldwin

United Corp. filed for bankruptcy in 1983.

Wolens' bill would leave Texas in the same situation as Colorado, according to Griffin, who said he has little power to protect investors.

"We're white-collar cops. We get after the guy after he's stolen the money," he said.

Charge: Con men would flourish without 'merit review'

Regulator warns against securities bill

By KEN HERMAN
The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas investors would be ripe for rip-offs if lawmakers kill the required state review of new securities offered for sale, a Colorado regulator warned Monday.

"This law passed in a very short period of time you'll have the kind of wide-open, wild and woolly securities market that has made Colorado, Utah, New Jersey, Florida and Nevada open havens for con men who operate outside the law," said Royce Griffin, Colorado's securities commissioner.

The Texas House has approved, and a Senate committee on Wednesday will review, a bill that would end the State Securities Board's "merit review" of securities.

Instead, securities could be offered for sale after filing "full disclosure" statements. Under merit review, securities cannot be sold in Texas unless the securities commissioner determines they are "fair, just and equitable."

It's a layer of protection that is needed, according to Griffin and Texas Consumers Association President Brad Wievel, who held a joint news conference.

"The power of inspection really is the difference," said Griffin, vice president of the North American Securities Administrators Association. "If you buy a car, you can kick the tires. You have a tangible object before you. Securities are intangible. They're ideas. They're promises."

Wievel said the law change is sought by "greedy securities dealers that we believe have in mind making money whether it's a fast buck or a slow buck."

"I guess you could call it deregulation," he said. "That's the kindest thing you could say about it."

Rep. Steve Wolens' bill won House approval with a minimum a debate on March 27-28. He said Monday that Texans now are "cheated" into believing state officials predict what stocks are safe investments.

"Stocks are patently risky. It makes no sense to have a securities board say a blessing over a stock," said Wolens, D-Dallas. "The average Texan is going to be cheated every time he relies on the securities board to make a judgment for him. It is rolling the dice. You're betting on a stock. Anyone who doesn't do his own research shouldn't be betting on a stock."

He did not appreciate the Coloradoan's comments on the bill.

"They never learned how to regulate their own industry. A lot of people went bust and people lost their shirts. Texas ain't Colorado. We don't spend our time on the ski slopes. We are a little more intelligent," said Wolens.

In House floor debate, Wolens complained that state regulators kept Texans from buying shares of EDS when it, like Enron, started the electronics firm 17 years ago. The stock quickly increased in value.

Griffin said bill supporters "have to go back 17 years to find a security offering that wasn't cleared that turned out to be a great success story."

"There may be an occasional great success story, but I would submit that every great success you'll find 100 offerings that your citizens can be thankful were not sold here," he said. Griffin referred to the Texas securities board decision against the sale of shares of the ill-fated DeLorean Motors Holding Company and Flowerlands, Inc. He also said the current state law guaranteed refunds for investors who had lost a total of $5.5 million when Baldwin United Corp. filed for bankruptcy in 1983.

Wolens' bill would leave Texas in the same situation as Colorado, according to Griffin, who said he has little power to protect investors.

Shaky faith doesn't alter buyers' goals

NEW YORK (AP) — The crisis among Ohio savings and loan associations last month contributed to a decline in consumers' confidence about the economy, the Conference Board reported.

But the decline in confidence did not seem to hinder plans to buy homes, cars and major appliances, the business research firm said.

In its March survey of 5,000 households, less than 20 percent of the respondents said they expected business conditions to improve over the next few months. That was down from 24 percent who expressed such optimism in February, the board said.

Fabian Lindén, the board's executive director of consumer research, said "public reaction to the savings bank crisis in Ohio may well have made some consumers uneasy," especially since the decline in confidence "was largest in the East-North Central region, which incorporates Ohio."

The board's Consumer Confidence Index tumbled to 88.1 in March from 95.8 in February. However, its Buying Plans Index rose to 113.5 in March from 107.1 in February.

Financial woes delay sale of mill

BOISE (AP) — Financing problems have delayed the Boise Cascade Corp.'s plan to sell its Newcastle, New Brunswick, pulp mill.

But company officials said the problems should be resolved soon and the sale to Acadia Forest Products Ltd., affiliated with Repap Enterprises of Montreal, should be completed in the near future.

Because of the delay, however, Boise Cascade will not report the anticipated $17 million in pretax gains from the deal with its first quarter earnings as it had originally expected.

Artworks give new insight into workings of the insane mind

By SHARON COHEN
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The hand is open and upright. It looks realistic except for one thing: The human eye staring out from atop the middle finger.

The drawing is more than 50 years old. Only one fact is known about the artist — he was insane.

The untitled work by Berthold L. — or L. Berthold, not even his name is certain — is one of about 370 pieces of art created from 1890 to 1920 by patients in European insane asylums and being shown for the first time in America.

They are creations of fantasy and fear: magical visions of monsters and imaginary kingdoms and more mundane drawings of soldiers and saints.

The people behind the works, gathered around 1920 primarily by Dr. Hans Prinzhorn of the University of Heidelberg Psychiatric Clinic, had a common bond.

"They tend to perceive themselves as ... being acted upon by outside forces they can't control," said Reinhold Heller, acting director of the University of Chicago's Smart Gallery, where the art is displayed.

The prisoner-motif is ever-present, drawings of barred windows, people in hospital beds and stern guards. One untitled picture shows thousands of tiny crosses over an outline of plates and a spoon, a manic repetition that "reflects the monotony of their life," Heller said.

In other works, however, he said it would be difficult to determine the artists were mentally disturbed. Most were diagnosed as schizophrenic.

"In terms of technique and quality, there's nothing to keep it from becoming classified as art," Heller said, noting that Pablo Picasso and Max Ernst, among others, were impressed and influenced by some of these works.

The exhibit, which will move in late April to the Cornell University Art Museum in New York, includes drawings, paintings, sculptures and textiles from Switzerland, Germany, Austria, and the Netherlands.

Some were done on paper bags, orange wrappers, tissue paper, scraps of wood, bread or whatever the patients could scrounge.

"The Art of the Insane: Selected Works from the Prinzhorn Collection" is part of 5,000 objects collected by Prinzhorn, an art historian and physician in the 1920s.

Little is known about many of the patients. Few had any artistic training.

"Though most were labeled schizophrenics, you can't diagnose illness from looking at the art," said Harry Trosman, professor of psychiatry at the university.

Because schizophrenics lose the ability to differentiate between themselves and the outside world, Trosman said, some works depict "a lot of bodily distortion" or half-human, half-animal beasts that could be "representations of forces within one's self."

One painting by Franz Karl Buhler, a medical smith known as Pohl, shows a Minotaur-like creature with a human face, big eyes and horns on the top of his head entering a parlor with three butterflies and a dog.

Sexual images, pictures of saints and imaginary kingdoms — believed to be an attempt by patients to create order in their lives — are other common themes.

"Some schizophrenics believe they are saviors or have religious missions to perform," Trosman explained.

Images that reflect sexual longing or obsessions are not unusual in a life of confinement. Heller said. One work, "Dance," shows women with enormous breasts.

"In the art of the insane, one finds the capacity to release oneself from social constraints," said Heller, chairman of the university's art department.

Still, Heller said, most of these patients, who probably would be on a light medication today, had a sense of what was going in the world.

"Much of the motifs of mentally ill people reflected popular thought," he said, "but they tended to take them to extremes."

S. African blacks strike at leaders

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Blacks angered by white rule are striking out against the nearest symbols of the country's government: the black councilors and policemen in the increasingly turbulent segregated townships.

Although most blacks slain in rioting in recent months have been killed by police, 30 blacks have been slain by other blacks so far this year, according to the South African Institute of Race Relations. Seventy-one blacks have died in clashes with police using live ammunition, handshot and tear gas.

The black surrogates for the country's white leaders have become prey for black mobs unable to challenge directly an overwhelmingly powerful government and police force.

Black crowds burn the homes of black councilors and policemen and pummel the streets for "collaborators." In some cases, they have hacked and burned to death those working within the system.

"In our situation, whitey is so beautifully, so effectively insulated from black anger that blacks cannot reach out and grab him by the throat, as they would like to do because of the armored ars and tanks interposed between him and black dissidents," said Soweto community leader Nthato Motlana.

"The before" black people will vent their anger on those they consider puppets of the system," Motlana added.

The government-run broadcasting system and pro-government newspapers have emphasized the black-against-black bloodshed. Die Vaderland, an Afrikaans-language daily, said blacks had murdered the charred remains of dandered victims in a display of "barbarism in its crudest form," and that persons guilty of such acts "belong in the jungle."

But Motlana said the government and its supporters had "hatched on like a man grabbing a life belt after his boat has sunk, grabbing onto this thing of black-on-black violence to deflect attention from the major issues, particularly police brutality in Langa," Motlana said.

Nineteen people were killed March 21 when police fired into thousands of black marchers approaching two parked police riot vehicles in the black township of Langa near Uitenhage in eastern Cape province.

"I feel quite disgusted that so much attention should be focused on this sideline," he added. "As long as oppression and exploitation and brutality continue, our people are going to continue to kill those who are part of the system. There's nothing odd about that."

Most black targets of violence are members of government-backed black town councils and, less often, black policemen. The councils were created in late 1983 to replace virtually powerless community councils.

They were given increased authority over rents and other financial matters but little additional power.

The new bodies were widely rejected in elections, with a boycott holding the overall turnout to 21 percent and less in large city townships.

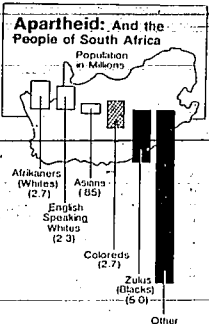

Soweto, Johannesburg's mammoth township, had a turnout of 10.7 percent after boycotters called the council an attempt to impose second-class local government without any national vote at all for the country's 22 million blacks.

When rioting erupted last September in the Vaal area south of Johannesburg, four members of the town council were hacked to death by mobs incensed by rent hikes. Dozens more blacks were killed in clashes with police. That set the tone for the months of unrest that followed.

Two days after police shot the marchers in Langa, the only member of the township council who had not yet resigned was one of five people hacked and burned to death by crowds.

T.B. Klinkini, an undertaker, and his son, also killed by the mob, were accused by residents of turning over youths to police and even of shooting several youths.

"It was Klinkini against the community. You mustn't say black against black," said Finson-Bandini, chairman of the Uitenhage Parents' Committee, one of hundreds of community groups set up as rivals to the official councils.

Ancient Christian sketch at holy site

By EARLEEN F. TATHO
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — In a small chamber in the bedrock beneath the Church of the Holy Sepulcher a crude picture of a boat is sketched in charcoal on the smooth stone wall. Inscribed beneath it are the Latin words Dominus venimus... Lord, we have arrived.

Scholars believe it to be the work of an early Christian pilgrim who sailed to the Holy Land. They say the boat appears to be the sort of vessel that brought the Christians to worship in Jerusalem, where Jesus preached, taught and was condemned to death.

The Latin words are written on a smooth white wall that archaeologists and religious scholars believe may once have formed part of a pagan Roman temple or an early Christian church, built within a century of the first Easter.

The Church of the Holy Sepulcher, a dark and cavernous building, is the focus of Easter celebrations this week in Jerusalem, but worshippers are not likely to see the drawing.

The wall on which the little boat was drawn is 30 feet below the church floor. The wall curves around a great mass of dark gray rock that Christian tradition says is Golgotha, the Place of the Skull, where Jesus was crucified.

The drawing of the boat has been hidden since at least the 4th century when a church was built overhead by the Byzantine Emperor Constantine the Great. The present-day Church of the Holy Sepulcher, built in the 12th century by the Crusaders around the ruins of Constantine's church, further obscured the site.

Throughout the centuries, during the building, rebuilding and the destruction of wars and earthquakes, the drawing survived.

The charcoal sketch was discovered during the early 1950s, but little importance was attached to it and it was soon forgotten. It was rediscovered when the underground chamber was excavated in 1972.

"This beautiful place was full of rubble. When we removed the rubble, we found the wall and the drawing," said Bishop Kapikian, whose Armenian Orthodox Church is custodian of the drawing.

"It is an important discovery, because it must have been drawn by one of the first Christian pilgrims to the Holy Land and it shows the authenticity of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher as the place of the Crucifixion," the bishop added.

The 10-inch rendering of the boat is seldom seen by today's pilgrims and tourists, for it lies at the foot of a stairway whose door is locked to the public. The door is itself out of sight and is reached only by easing through a narrow stone passageway behind an altar in the Armenian chapel.

But by prior arrangement, Bishop Kapikian, director of the Armenians' excavations, will unlock the door for "scholarly-minded visitors" down stairs to see the boat.

"There are several theories, spanning a thousand years, about when the boat was sketched.

James Fleming, director of the inter-denominational Jerusalem Center for Biblical Studies, said it is a "reasonable assumption" that soon after Christ's crucifixion his followers started meeting secretly at the site to preserve the faith outlawed by Roman rulers. European pilgrims, who soon started arriving by sea, must have sought out this place, he added.

"Most scholars believe the drawing dates from close to 300 A.D.," said Fleming, a Los Angeles native. "The style of the boat seems to be from the Roman period."

Dan Bahat, the Israeli government's district archaeologist for Jerusalem, said: "My own theory is that it was done in the early period of the first pilgrims, by a devoted pilgrim who came from the West, perhaps, Italy since he knew Latin, about 200 A.D."

ped to keep them from flying away.

Jilly Cooper, who writes about English society, believes that English eccentricity springs from the late tourists. Certainly not, retorts Jonathan Hawkins, manager of the Eccentric Club, where London's upper-crust oddballs hang out. "If they did it only for tourists, they wouldn't do it every night including dreary winter nights when there's not a tourist in sight," he said in an interview.

And Brig. Kenneth Mears, deputy governor of the Tower, argued whether it still housed prisoners was "immaterial." The only reason it hasn't held a prisoner since 1941 is that it haven't had a war since. If we did, the tower might be used as a prison again. "Meanwhile," he said, "we have formal ceremonies that just have to be done. It's a question of 700 years of English history."

And since legend has it that if the ravens ever desert the Tower, disaster will befall Britain, six ravens are kept on the premises, their wings clip-

British eccentrics muddle jokes, reality

By MARCUS ELIASON
The Associated Press

LONDON — This April Fools' Day the Foreign Office had the boss, Sir Geoffrey Howe, attending a fish-hanging ceremony, while the Department of Energy unveiled a thermal necktie to keep you warm.

Some laughed, some harrumphed, and a few were taken in. After all, in Britain one can't always readily distinguish the real thing from the spoof.

Would a thermal necktie really stand out in a land where judges still wear shoulder-length wigs? And why not a fish-hanging ceremony in a country where the coat hangers in the House of Commons cloakroom have red straps to hang your sword on?

If foreigners think Britons are an eccentric lot, it is partly because the British cherish their traditions long after they have outlived their usefulness.

This in the age of the atomic clock, the ball still comes down the pole every day in Greenwich Observatory signaling the stroke of noon to non-existent ships' captains on the Thames.

Writing thrillers from the Senate

Hart, Cohen combine talents

By MIKE SHANAHAN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A U.S. senator travels to Miami and Amsterdam on secret missions designed to unravel connections between the assassination of John F. Kennedy, organized crime and a renegade terrorist squad inside the walls of the Kremlin.

He investigates the mysterious death of an aging Mafia chieftain and later meets with an internationally known assassin.

Truth or fiction?

The answer begins at 3 a.m. on a pre-dawn morning in July 1986 when real life Sens. Gary Hart and William Cohen found themselves drinking coffee in the Senate Dining Room, bored and exhausted during an all-night filibuster on an issue both have forgotten.

Cohen: "I said to Gary, 'If you were not a senator right now, what would you rather be doing?'"

Hart: "I'd rather be in Ireland writing a novel."

Cohen: "You can't go to Ireland, so why don't we write a novel?"

And so "The Double Man" was born on the back of a large U.S. Senate Manila envelope.

Over the next four years, Democrat Hart from Colorado and Republican Cohen from Maine crafted a spellbinding story sending the hero, Thomas Chandler, through a byzantine maze of superpower and international, murderous intelligence operations.

Hart and Cohen, who have both been members of the Senate Intelligence Committee, finished the story outline all the way to a surprise ending that catches the reader off guard, and opens the question of whether to expect a sequel. They say not.

During the four years following that July meeting in the Senate Dining Room, the project intermittently flared-to-life, especially in 1981 and 1982 when most of the writing was done. But there were interruptions; Hart and Cohen each ran for re-election and the Hart sought the presidency.

Hart and Cohen, who has published one book of poetry and has, another in the works, say that when they had the time to work on the book, the writing went smoothly, with no significant conflicts.

The publisher, William Morrow and Co., remained interested. Late last year the final twist of plot was completed.

Neither author has illusions about the serious literary merit of their book. Nor are there plans for a movie or television production.

"It's just a hell of a good story," says Hart. "We were conducting an experiment to see whether two elected officials could collaborate on a work of fiction when neither one of them had ever done it before."

And when Cohen is asked if there is a moral to the novel, he recalls that the book opens with a bomb attack by the KGB on an American secretary of state's limousine on a tree-lined, picturesque route through Washington called Rock Creek Parkway. The secretary's wife is killed instead.

So the moral, Cohen says with a chuckle, is, "Stay off Rock Creek Parkway."

Ocean promoted as wave of future

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mankind for centuries has taken oceans for granted, pulling fish out and throwing garbage in. Now, Americans are being urged to recognize them as being among "our greatest resources."

Although the Year of the Ocean officially began by presidential proclamation on July 1, 1984, the program is just getting rolling in its effort to carry the banner "Wave of the Future" across the nation.

Oceanographers see mankind's relationship with the sea as much more detailed than simply savoring seafood; and while they strive to learn more about the oceans, an effort is also under way to acquaint Americans with their dependence on the sea and its products.

"The Year of the Ocean program can help our nation to examine carefully its ocean problems and opportunities and to define issues and priorities as we move toward the next century," Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, has said.

"A foundation for renewed interest in the ocean has been developed. Now is the time to involve the people of the United States in developing a national resolve to wisely use the resources of the ocean," says John V. Byrne, president of Oregon State University.

Byrne, former head of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, was instrumental in getting the Year of the Ocean program launched.

Program coordinator Diane Boratyn is scheduling a series of roundtable discussions across the nation to assess and analyze issues concerning the oceans and to bring them to the attention of the public.

Water pollution was the topic of the first symposium, held March 12 in Cherry Hill, N.J.

Currently the United States dumps more than 8 million tons of municipal and industrial wastes into the oceans annually, along with 10 million tons of dredge materials.

This waste disposal has begun to threaten marine life in some areas, especially estuaries, and some chemicals are being detected in fish and shellfish caught for human consumption.

tion. "The Mid-Atlantic states are privileged in sharing a border with the ocean. However, this privilege must be responsibly exercised and care taken to preserve the ocean — one of our greatest resources," said Rep. H. James Saxton, R-N.J. "Controlling land-based sources of marine pollution is one crucial step in exercising this privilege."

The next panel discussion is slated for Washington in June and will focus on the future of the U.S. maritime industry.

As recently as 1950, the U.S. Merchant Marine ranked first in the world in tonnage, but by 1980 it had fallen to eighth despite the fact that the nation depends on ships for 99 percent of overseas trade. Today, ships carrying the U.S. flag carry only 4 percent of the nation's international trade.

Other topics to be discussed at subsequent roundtable discussions include ocean industries exports, establishing protected marine areas, oil and gas resources, developing pharmaceuticals from the sea, and the interaction of people and the sea.

Still in the planning stage is a session on fishery resources and their relationship to human health and diet.

Helping spur interest in the ocean was a proclamation by President Reagan in 1983 that more than doubled the area of the United States by extending the nation's Exclusive Economic Zone 200 miles from the shores.

This act has been hailed by oceanographers as one of the most significant expansions of the country. Some have called for a new Lewis and Clark expedition to explore the new territory, which they say could be as important in time as the Louisiana Purchase.

So far the U.S. Geological Survey, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and other agencies have cooperated in mapping 250,000 square miles of seafloor off the West Coast and developing studies of cobalt and manganese deposits, and sources of sulfides as well as zinc, cobalt, nickel, silver and cadmium.

Pay equity isn't always looney idea

By JILL LAWRENCE
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration may consider the idea as crazy as Looney Tunes, but pay equity — also known as comparable worth — is finding a more receptive audience in state and local governments across the country.

All but seven of the 50 states are studying or moving toward the goal of comparable worth: paying men and women comparable wages for jobs that require similar education and carry similar responsibility.

Proponents of comparable worth contend wages in job fields dominated by women are depressed due to a long history of sex discrimination. But a draft report by the Civil Rights Commission, to be voted on April 11, concludes the concept is "profoundly and irretrievably flawed" both as a theory of and remedy for discrimination.

Clarence Pendleton, head of the civil rights panel, has called comparable worth "the loneliest idea since Looney Tunes." William Niskanen Jr., a former White House economic adviser, dismissed it as "a truly crazy proposal."

Nevertheless, a pay equity program was begun with little fanfare four years ago in Colorado Springs, Colo., after a study disclosed, among other things, that secretaries were making $300 less per month than truck mechanics.

"It was fair and appropriate," said Republican Mayor Robert Isaacs. "Our pay is public. When you have 3,000 employees, it's extremely important to have internal equity."

Business groups are among the most vocal opponents of the concept, afraid that changes in government wage scales will drive up their employment costs as well.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce contends that comparable worth is equivalent to "bureaucratic control of the economy" and "wage controls for the entire economy." The chamber calls it "a critical issue if freedom of contract is to be continued in the United States ... Writing bureaucratic control of our wages into the Constitution would be a disaster beyond comprehension."

But despite the criticism, the states are moving ahead with their own comparable worth programs.

According to the National Committee on Pay Equity, 17 states are evaluating their employee pay scales to identify wage disparities, while five others — Idaho, Minnesota, New Mexico and Washington — already have adopted revision plans and raised some salaries. Twenty-one others are studying the issue.

unions and others are pending in 14 states. Arguments are scheduled Thursday in Washington state's appeal of a federal court order to raise wages for workers in woman-dominated jobs.

At the federal level, a House bill on comparable worth calls for a job evaluation study of the federal civil service system. A Senate bill would study the wage scale in agencies overseen by Congress, such as the General Accounting Office.

The controversy over comparable worth runs deep, centering on whether there is discrimination in present-day wage scales and whether discrimination is a cause of the eight-per-dollar wage gap between men and women.

"Whenever you have segregation, you have wage discrimination that flows from it," says Winn Newman, an activist attorney involved in several major pay equity cases. "Before 1960, there was open discrimination and segregation. We don't talk about black jobs today, but we still talk about women's jobs."

Newman and his colleagues believe current wage scales reflect past discrimination and should be adjusted within individual plants, offices, local governments and other work units. They do not advocate across-the-board wage scales for the entire economy and do not believe pay equity will negate market forces.

As rep. Mary Rose Oaker, D-Ohio, once put it: "They said the same thing about slavery and child labor — if you free the slaves, you're going to upset the marketplace."

The administration disagrees with two key points: "That there is hidden discrimination in women's wages and that comparable worth would not in fact determine salaries today," said Linda Chavez, staff director of the Civil Rights Commission. "What determines salaries today is the marketplace. I would like to see that continue. It is the fairest, most equitable system."

The commission report acknowledges that women are concentrated in lower-paying job categories such as nursing, teaching and clerical work, a finding Ms. Chavez attributes partially to socialization and past educational discrimination.

"But you don't remedy those problems by burdening an employer and forcing an employer to abandon a neutral, non-discriminatory practice," she said. "Do I think it is the government's role to insist that 50 percent of secretaries be men? No, I don't. What the government can do is guarantee that everyone has the opportunity to be hired."
