Reagan unveils tax overhaul plan

Personal taxes could fall 7 percent

Democrats cautiously supportive

RONALD REAGAN
Would raise corporate taxes.

By TERENCE HUNT
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan on Tuesday proposed to "radically change" the federal tax structure, scolding the current system as complicated, unjust and "un-American."

He outlined a plan to cut tax rates and impose a minimum tax on people and corporations "who are not paying their fair share."

"No one knows how many people died in the storm last Saturday. The government says 1,400 deaths are confirmed. The Red Cross says at least 5,000 were killed. Newspaper and other unofficial reports put the total as high as 40,000."

His remarks were laced with ridicule for a tax system "so complex that even Albert Einstein reportedly needed help on his 1949 form," and that "treats our earnings as the personal property of the IRS." Reagan urged new tax rates of 15 percent to 35 percent, far below the current cap of 50 percent.

By lowering everyone's tax rates all the way up the income scale, each of us will have a greater incentive to climb higher, to excel, to help America grow," Reagan said.

A White House summary said 79 percent of American families would pay the same or less in taxes under Reagan's proposal while 21 percent would pay more.

Reagan's 3,300-word address portrayed nearly everyone as a winner under his proposed system. One of the few specific mentions of a higher tax tab was a promise that the oil and gas industry "will be asked to pick up a larger share of the national tax burden" by an elimination of the "old oil" depletion allowance. But even here he provided good news: maintenance of current subsidies for exploration and drilling of new oil.

Other highlights: an end to the tax deduction for state and local taxes; a reduction in the tax on capital gain; an increase in the personal exemption; a tax for the first time on some

REP. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI
Praises Reagan's tax proposal

By JIM LUTHER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congressional Democrats on Tuesday lined up behind tax reform, with one key senator describing President Reagan's proposal as "a giant step forward" and the head of the House Ways and Means Committee promising encouragement but no rubber stamp.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, conceded that previous attempts to improve the system have produced meager results but said this time might turn out differently.

"This time, it's a Republican president who's bucking his party's tradition as protector of big business and the wealthy," Rostenkowski said in giving his party's nationally televised response to Reagan's speech. "His words and feeling go back to Roosevelt and Truman and Kennedy

But the commitment comes from Ronald Reagan. And that's so important and so welcome."

"Because if the president's plan is everything he says it is — he'll have a great deal of Democratic support," Rostenkowski said. "This time, I really think we can get tax reform."

There were dissenters, however, with one Democratic senator suggesting Reagan had caved in to special interests.

Rostenkowski called on Americans to let Congress know the country wants reform.

"If you've never stood up from your rights as a taxpayer — if you've never voiced your frustration and anger over the unfairness of today's tax system — sit down and write a letter to your representative and senator," Rostenkowski said. "And stand up for fairness and lower taxes."

"We will make some changes — correct some imbalances — seek to make it fairer," Rostenkowski said. See DEMOCRATS on Page A2

Mass burials begin for storm's victims

By DAVID BRISCOE
The Associated Press

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Ships and helicopters shuttled through the Bay of Bengal on Tuesday, bringing food and taking away bodies.

Mass burials were held on patches of mud that had been inhabited islands until a devastating storm swept them clean.

No one knows how many people died in the storm last Saturday. The government says 1,400 deaths are confirmed. The Red Cross says at least 5,000 were killed. Newspaper and other unofficial reports put the total as high as 40,000.

A government official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, quoted President Hussain Ershad, the army general who governs the country, as saying as many as 10,000 people may have been killed.

Government statistics Tuesday put the death toll at 1,400. The official had no explanation of why the number had been reduced from 1,464 announced earlier, and said he could not reconcile the official figures with the higher totals reported by other sources.

In Geneva, the International Red Cross quoted Ali Quorshi, secretary-general of the Bangladesh Red Cross on Tuesday as saying there were 5,000 confirmed deaths and he feared the figure would "rise significantly."

Quorshi estimated that 6 million people were affected by the storm and 275,000 "have lost everything."

On Urir Char, an island where nothing was left standing, Navy Cmdr. Iqbal Mujtaba watched the mass burial of 900 people Tuesday.

He said warning of the approaching storm had been given as early as Thursday, but the island people had "no place to go and no way to get there. All they could do was sit there thinking almighty God would help them."

An official who announced the government statistics acknowledged that there were no lists of people missing after the storm swept over the flat islands and coastal delta 220 miles south of Dhaka.

He said there was no complete record of the identities or number of people, many of them squatters with small farms, who lived on hundreds of the Bay of Bengal's 2,000 islands.

Mujtaba said 1,119 people were evacuated after the storm from Urir Char, described as the hardest-hit island, to nearby Sandwip, and between 4,000 and 5,000 other residents were unaccounted for. He commands two Bangladesh navy ships that brought rice, beans, milk and clothing to the survivors.

He said many of the 900 people buried on Urir Char were put into the mass grave without being identified. Urir Char is one of many islands formed by silt from the Ganges, Brahmaputra and Meghna rivers.

Small farmers moved to the islands after erosion destroyed their farms on the mainland, and officials in Dhaka said many may have remained in spite of the storm warning for fear other squatters would displace them.

Many delta villages also were devastated. Survivors at Charlaxmi, 10 miles inland, said a 20-foot wall of water swept in from the bay and crushed the village, killing an estimated 3,000 of the 10,000 residents.

Reporters who visited the area Tuesday said many bodies of people and livestock had not been removed and more were being washed ashore by waves moving in from the bay.

Administration: arms talks success depends on the Soviets

By W. DALE NELSON
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration on Tuesday accused the Soviet Union of backtracking on arms reductions during the first round of nuclear weapons talks in Geneva and said the success of the second round, opening Thursday, is "in their hands."

White House spokesman Larry Speakes outlined the U.S. position as President Reagan instructed his chief negotiator at the talks, Max Kampelman, before his departure for the Swiss city.

"The United States returns to the negotiations with hope if the Soviets are able to turn from their internal accounts and take advantage of the opportunity for progress," Speakes said. "For our part, we will be patient."

"If the Soviets would show some flexibility, some imagination to grasp U.S. proposals, then the opportunity for progress is there," he said. "It's in their hands."

Speakes noted that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was quoted by a West German official after a meeting in Moscow on Monday as saying the first round was "completely fruitless" because of U.S. refusal to halt research on high-tech, anti-missile defenses, the program known popularly as "Star Wars."

The spokesman said "we find ourselves in agreement" with Gorbachev's characterization, but he maintained the lack of progress in the first round was due to "Soviet backtracking from positions they took in previous negotiations" rather than the U.S. position on space weapons.

Robert Simms, deputy White House press secretary for foreign affairs, said the Soviets had made proposals for arms reductions in previous negotiations but had refused to renew them at Geneva.

Speakes later softened his description of the first round, somewhat, saying, "I wouldn't characterize the first round of talks as fruitless. I wouldn't pick up his words. They did not make progress, but it certainly served a useful purpose for the two sides to sit down and state their arguments."

Speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One as the president flew home from a speaking engagement in Florida on Monday, Speakes said:

"We knew the first round would be an opening, that both sides would be staking out a position. But we are prepared for a second round, and we have some serious proposals. We are prepared to be flexible and hope the Soviets will do the same."

Speakes said Reagan reviewed final instructions to the negotiators over the weekend and approved them. He said they would be cabled to the other negotiators, former Republican Sen. John Tower of Texas and Maynard Giltman, who left for Geneva before Kampelman met with the president.

Speakes said the instruction contained no shift in the U.S. bargaining position but called for "serious negotiations and flexibility in approach."

He described Gorbachev's comments as "an intriguing tactic for turning recalcitrance into a virtue."

"In the coming round, we will be flexible without rewarding the Soviets for their backtracking," Speakes said. "We hope for more positive results than we saw in Round One and we will be patient in our search for reductions of nuclear weapons."

Agent Orange settlements will be smaller, judge says

By JOHN N. DOYLE
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Eligible Vietnam veterans and their families will get less money than expected from the Agent Orange settlement, and they will wait at least a year before receiving any, a federal judge said Tuesday.

U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein approved a final plan for disbursing the $200 million settlement, allotting three-fourths of it to totally disabled veterans and the survivors of dead veterans. He estimated the largest individual payments would be about $12,800 for total disability and $3,400 for death benefits, down from previous estimates of $25,000 and $5,000. The money, from seven chemical companies, would be paid out over 10 years.

Weinstein's plan generally follows one recommended by a court-appointed special master in

Lafferty's attorney seeking a new trial

The Associated Press

PROVO, Utah — The Utah Supreme Court will be the next stop for an attorney trying to win a new trial for Ronald Lafferty, the self-proclaimed prophet who was sentenced to die for the slaying deaths of his sister-in-law and her infant daughter.

Fourth District Judge J. Robert Bullock ruled Tuesday against defense attorney Richard Johnson's motion for a new trial, and the lawyer said would appeal to the state's high court.

Johnson had argued for a new trial on the grounds that Lafferty, who claimed "a divine hand-written revelation ordered him to 'remove' the victims, was insane at the time of the murders and his trial.

Besides rejecting that argument, Bullock also refused a motion to set aside the jury's death sentence due to Lafferty's mental condition.

"The court observed nothing in the conduct of the defendant which in any way indicated that he was unable to understand the nature of the crime, or the punishment, or unable to assist counsel in his defense," Bullock said.

And when asked his opinion, Lafferty denied he was insane. "I don't consider myself mentally ill in any way," he told the judge.

"We all saw him using his attorney, and use him as well as any of us could have done under the circumstances," said Utah County Prosecutor Wayne Watson.

However, Johnson argued that during the trial, several court-appointed experts had determined Lafferty was mentally ill.

Johnson also challenged the impartiality of the jury selection, but Bullock rejected that argument as well, saying he was satisfied that jurors were unbiased.

Lafferty has been tentatively sentenced to die before a firing squad on July 2, but appeals and other legal maneuvers make it highly unlikely he will.

Brenda Wright Lafferty and her 15-month-old daughter, Erica, were found dead on July 24, 1984, in their American Fork home. Brenda Wright Lafferty was a native of Kimberly, Idaho.

Lafferty's brother, Dan, also was convicted of first-degree murder in the slayings, but was sentenced to life in prison when the jury could not reach a unanimous decision for execution.

"We will clearly measure the effect of the president's reforms on middle-income taxpayers," the veteran lawmaker added. "We will also be sensitive to American industry's increasing struggle to maintain a competitive edge overseas. . . . Democrats will not, however, give the president's reform plan a rubber stamp."

Rostenkowski's committee originates tax legislation on Congress, and that role gives the Chicagoan perhaps the most important voice in Congress on the fate of Reagan's proposal.

Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., hailed Reagan's proposal as "a courageous and historic initiative."

Dole, too, said Congress may need to make some changes. But overall, he said, "This plan is a huge advance in the direction of greater fairness for all taxpayers and greater economic efficiency."

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, who had demanded that the president back away from an earlier Treasury Department plan to tax employee fringe benefits, said the American worker does well under the proposal. "The prospects of passage this year are excellent," he added.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, called Reagan's plan a letdown after the Treasury proposal. "Special interests have won the first round of the fight, he said, accusing Reagan of giving 'middle-income families the short end of the stick' while looking out for the wealthy and the oil industry."

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., who has been leading the tax-overhaul fight for four years, said he was elated that Reagan "has committed himself to supporting tax reform." That support "will move the whole process and forward for tax reform a giant step," Bradley said.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said the present tax system is so complicated and burdensome that it discourages work and saving. Reagan's plan will take detailed study, he said, but "I am particularly pleased to see those individuals in middle- and lower-income brackets being considered for further reductions."

In his speech, Rostenkowski borrowed a tactic from Reagan and appealed directly to his listeners.

The battle for a fairer, simpler tax system "comes down to a struggle between the narrow interests of the few — and the broad interests of working American families," he said. "You will lose this battle if America remains silent. The president needs your support — and has asked for it, as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and a Democrat, need your support. And I'm asking for it, too."

Although Democrats have been calling for tax reform for years, the chairman said, this year is different because, a Republican president, is leading the charge. "If we go together with good faith and determination — this time the people may win. This time I really think we can get tax reform."

But Rostenkowski, who was not briefed about the president's plan until seven hours before Reagan went on the air, said Democrats will have to withhold judgment in details until they analyze the pieces of the package.

But at times in his speech, he sounded the same themes Reagan has.

health insurance payments made by employers on behalf of their employees.

Reagan also promised to curtail depreciation deductions for business and to eliminate the investment tax credit.

And he would limit deductions for business lunches.

In the Democratic response to the president's address, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, called Reagan's plan "a starting point" to change the system. He said Democrats will not rubber stamp the president's package, but will take care to insure that it is made more fair — echoing one of Reagan's themes.

"Death and taxes may be inevitable but unjust taxes are not. . . . So let's get started," Reagan said. "Let's change the tax code, to make it fairer, and change tax rates so they are lower."

In his speech, Reagan offered few examples as to who would pay more to finance the reduction in personal rates. He said, "There will be one group of losers in our tax plan — those individuals and corporations who are not paying their fair share — or, for that matter — any share. These abuses cannot be tolerated. From now on, they shall pay a minimum tax. The free rides are over."

He provided no detail on the proposed changes in minimum tax provisions. A White House fact sheet said only, "Retain and tighten." Today, Reagan aides were to provide their first briefings on the tax proposal.

Tuesday night, the president said the tax system has been changed dozens of times in hundreds of ways. "Yet, most of those changes didn't improve the system, they made it more like Washington itself: complicated, unfair, cluttered with gobbledygook and loopholes designed for those with the power and influence to hire high-priced legal and tax advisers."

He said, "I believe that, in both spirit and substance, our tax system has come to be un-American."

Reagan said his tax revisions would create new incentives for entrepreneurs and individual wage earners which would send a "simple, straightforward message to an entire nation: America, go for it."

The White House fact sheet said overall taxes paid by individuals would be reduced by 7 percent, while total taxes paid by corporations would be increased by 9 percent.

Reagan said his plan would: Set a tax rate of 15 percent for up to $29,000 of taxable income on a joint return; 25 percent on income above

$29,000 but less than $70,000; and 35 percent for anything more. He said families living at or below the poverty level would be "dropped completely from the tax rolls."

• Increase the personal exemption from $1,040 to $2,000 "by next year. . . for every taxpayer and every dependent." He said the exemption would be indexed to protect against inflation.

• Nearly double, to $4,000, the amount that couples can deduct for an Individual Retirement Account when only one spouse works.

• Reduce the maximum corporate tax rate from 46 percent to 33 percent.

• Cut the tax on capital gains to no more than 17.5 percent.

• Repeat the investment tax credit and reform the depreciation system used by businesses to subsidize equipment purchases. He said the oil and gas industry will lose the "old oil depletion allowance but current subsidies for exploration and drilling of new oil would be preserved."

• Retain the mortgage interest deduction on a principal residence, but repeal the deduction for state and local taxes.

• Require employees to pay taxes of the first $20 a month paid by employers for family health insurance plans and $10 a month for individuals.

February, but estimated individual payments will be lower because the latest figures include a larger pool of potential recipients. The judge said about 245,000 claims had been filed.

The judge also said the money cannot be distributed until all appeals are resolved, a process he said could take at least a year.

Weinstein said $45 million would be used for "a class assistance foundation" for veterans and their families. About $4 million, or 2 percent of the fund, would go for the benefit of Australian and New Zealand claimants," said Weinstein.

The reaction among veterans to the judge's decision was mixed.

Michael F. Ryan, one of the first veterans to sue over Agent Orange, a code name for a defoliant used to clear jungles, said he was "angry, really angry" with Weinstein's decision.

Ryan, who said he was exposed to Agent Orange in 1966, said there was no specific provision for the children born with defects to veterans.

"My daughter was genetically drafted with me. She is a Vietnam veteran," he said of 14-year-old Kerry Ryan, who was born with 22 birth defects and is confined to a wheelchair.

But Frank McCarthy, the head of Vietnam Veterans, Agent Orange Victims, said he was pleased.

"It's all that we could get out of it," McCarthy said. "Our greatest concern is not compensation but the foundation. That's an entity that can grow."

McCarthy is a veteran who is not an Agent Orange victim. The suit was filed on behalf of all American, Australian and New

Eruption alert still in effect at St. Helens

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — An eruption alert remained in effect Tuesday at Mount St. Helens as dense clouds prevented scientists from checking for the emergence of fresh lava.

Scientists expect any eruption to occur on the south side of the jagged heap of steaming lava, reducing the potential danger from an explosive blast. They base that conclusion partly on the sighting of huge cracks in the volcano's dome.

The south side of the dome is shielded by crater walls that tower some 1,200 feet above it, Steve Brantley of the U.S. Geological Survey said Tuesday.

He said the walls along the, horse-shoe-shaped crater would reduce the hazard posed by flying rocks, superheated gas, volcanic ash and mudflows.

The 8,364-foot Mount St. Helens had been silent for eight months since a dome-building eruption Sept. 10, its longest quiet period since it awoke from 123 years of dormancy in March 1980.

Brantley said observers have been unable to visit the crater or even see it from aircraft since Monday because of foul weather and volcanic activity. Future flight plans were on hold pending a break in the weather.

Brantley and other scientists have said there remains a chance of a more explosive eruption until hagma — molten lava — emerges and forms a new lobe on the dome.

Measurements taken Thursday indicated the mound of cooling lava was about 800 feet high and 2,700 feet in diameter at the base, he said.

Von Bulow's ex-mistress: he watched wife slip into coma

Alexandra Isles is sworn in at Providence, R.I.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Claus von Bulow's former mistress testified Tuesday that he told her he watched his wife for hours without summoning help after she lapsed into a coma in 1979, but when she was on the point of death, "he couldn't go through with it."

"He watched her knowing she was in a bad way all day, and watched her and watched her," Alexandra Isles said in testimony that followed her dramatic return from Europe on Monday. "And finally once she was at the point of dying, he said that he couldn't go through with it."

The socialite and former soap opera actress, who was the final prosecution witness, said she had not mentioned this conversation when she testified at von Bulow's first trial because she "couldn't bear to think about it."

As she testified, von Bulow intermittently shook his head from side to side.

Mrs. Isles, 39, was a key prosecution witness at von Bulow's first trial on charges he induced his wife's two comas by trying to murder her with insulin injections.

Martha "Sunny" von Bulow, 53, recovered from the 1979 coma, but doctors say a coma she suffered a year later is permanent.

Mrs. Isles testified, as she did at the first trial, that she had given von Bulow a deadline to divorce his wife. And she said that prior to the first coma he had told her "he would be a free man after Christmas... because he would have come to an understanding about divorce with his wife."

Mrs. Isles said von Bulow told her that the night before the first coma he and his wife had a long argument about a possible divorce and that he watched her drink alcohol-spiked eggnogs and take a barbiturate.

She said he told her that the next day he watched his wife deteriorate and then finally called a doctor. That supports earlier testimony of a family maid that von Bulow did nothing for hours as his wife suffered.

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Thomas P. Puccio, Mrs. Isles revealed that after the first trial, she wrote von Bulow a letter suggesting they resume their relationship.

"When I wrote that letter, I didn't know what I was doing," she said. Mrs. Isles also said she was ashamed to admit that she continued to see von Bulow through 1980 even though she had suspicions about his wife's first coma.

She denied defense assertions she was trying to let Mrs. von Bulow know about the relationship, and perhaps speed up a decision on a divorce, by dropping off presents at the couple's Manhattan apartment.

Mrs. Isles said Mrs. von Bulow was "not a housewife who would pick up things at the front door."

The judge refused to permit the state to present its last witness, G. Morris Gurley, Mrs. von Bulow's longtime banker and estate manager. He had testified at the first trial about how much von Bulow would gain upon the death of his wife.

During a hearing on a defense motion to limit any new testimony, Mrs. Isles said she had not provided the information at von Bulow's first trial because she "couldn't bear to think about it" and was not directly asked to answer in the most minimal way.

Mrs. Isles said, "I couldn't cope with what I didn't say. I couldn't bear to think about it."

It was his behavior that troubled me... and I didn't want to recognize it for what it might have implied," she said.

Mrs. Isles left for Europe two months ago, saying she wanted to avoid testifying because she knew it would generate intense publicity. But after a state request, to use her 1982 testimony was rejected, prosecutors successfully negotiated with her New York attorney to get her back.

Mrs. Isles' testimony is critical to the state's charges that von Bulow wanted his wife dead so he could inherit $14 million of her $75 million Pittsburgh utilities fortune and be free to marry Mrs. Isles.

In 1982, Mrs. Isles told the jury she gave von Bulow an ultimatum to divorce his wife and marry her. The six-month deadline fell shortly before Mrs. von Bulow's first coma.

Before Mrs. Isles took the stand at the retrial, Superior Court Judge Corinne P. Grande denied a defense motion to limit any new testimony on grounds that the defense knew nothing about it.

Ms. Grande said the testimony was permissible because the state was not withholding it from the defense team.

Von Bulow, 58, faces 40 years in prison if convicted on the two attempted-murder charges.

Names are announced for Frustaci septuplets

ORANGE, Calif. (AP) — The names of the five surviving Frustaci septuplets and their two dead siblings were announced Tuesday during a packed news conference, which their mother was too weak to attend.

Previously known only by initials A through G, the babies were named in order of birth: A is Patricia Ann, B is James Martin, C is Stephen Earl, D is Bonnie Marie, E is Richard Charles.

Baby F, nicknamed "Peanut" because he was so small, died Friday; he was named David Anthony.

Baby G, a stillborn girl, was named Christina Elizabeth, said Nes Pane, director of obstetrical nursing at St. Joseph Hospital.

Patricia, Stephen and Richard were doing "extremely well" Tuesday, said Dr. Carrie Worcester, director of neonatal intensive care at Children's Hospital of Orange County.

"There is no reason for me to think these babies won't have a full chance for survival and normal development," she said of the three. "I think they're coming out of the woods."

While still listed as critical, all five were pronounced free of liver jaundice. However, Tiny James remains "extremely sick" with lungs unable to operate normally on their own because of hyaline membrane disease, and Bonnie was holding her own after having shown "remarkable improvement" during the weekend.

Legionnaire's disease toll is up

DETROIT (AP) — A second elderly person who contracted Legionnaires' disease during a church banquet probably died from the infection, which has been found in four other people, authorities said Tuesday.

Eight others, including a woman who was in "extremely critical" condition, probably have the disease, a Wayne County government spokesman said.

There were an additional 30 possible cases of Legionnaires' disease among about 550 people who attended an April 27 dinner of the Pentecostal Temple Church at the Airport Hilton Inn in Romulus, the spokesman said.

Legionnaires' bacteria was found last week in the air conditioning system that serves the hotel's banquet room.

The latest victim, described only as a 58-year-old man from Inkster, died Monday night at University of Michigan Hospitals in Ann Arbor, hospital spokesman David Friedo said.

Preliminary results from an autopsy indicate that Legionnaires' probably was a factor in the death of the patient, Friedo said Tuesday afternoon. "It is likely that Legionnaires' disease played a significant role in the death of the patient, but an exact cause will not be determined until culture results are available."

Doctors earlier said the man had contracted Legionnaires' disease, but that the illness was not directly related to his death.

The patient "was admitted May 8 with gangrene in the left leg, from which multiple complications developed, requiring surgery and life support," Friedo said.

United says it will not return to negotiations

CHICAGO (AP) — United Airlines said Tuesday there was no point in resuming talks with striking pilots and announced it was rebuilding what had been the nation's largest air carrier before the strike began 12 days ago.

The union accused the company of trying to destroy it.

The statements were made at back-to-back news conferences as the walkout by about 5,000 pilots continued. Talks collapsed Saturday morning after negotiators resolved most economic issues during a 23-hour bargaining session, but couldn't settle on a back-to-work agreement.

"I do not think further talks at this point in time would be of any benefit," said Richard Ferris, United's chairman and chief executive officer. He said United's objective now is to "rebuild this airline" with new pilots and with workers who have crossed picket lines.

He estimated the airline could be back to full operation by the end of the first quarter of 1986.

John LeRoy, a spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association, said the union was on standby and willing to meet with United negotiators.

A tentative agreement had been reached on the major strike issue — a two-tier wage scale that would put newly hired pilots on a lower scale than current pilots.

Pilots had opposed the two tiers, saying it would create animosity.

Court relaxes school food sale rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bowing to a court order, the Agriculture Department next month will change its regulations to ban the sale of soft drinks and some snacks only from school lunch rooms while meals are being served.

"In other words, restrictions on foods sold on school premises outside the food service area may now be imposed at state or local discretion, but are no longer imposed by the department," officials said Tuesday.

The department has been wrestling with so-called "competitive food" regulations since 1977 when Congress amended the Child Nutrition Act to give USDA authority to regulate the sale of foods that compete with regular meals served by more than 90,000 schools that share in the federal lunch program.

Instant visibility obscures character

The spectacle of a medical advance being followed by a media deluge has become so common that it barely raises a question anymore. Nonetheless, we find it a bit unseemly that every new breakthrough patient is now lining up an agent to sell his or her "story" exclusively.

The latest example is the Frustaci septuplets, five of which are alive as of this week.

What breathless news has come out so far? Well, we learn in a recent hospital news conference that Mrs. Frustaci touched the babies last week. The only ones present for this momentous event were security personnel and a photographer for People magazine, which has paid the Frustacis for their story.

Soon, no doubt, we will all be able to buy some of these photographs at our grocery checkout stand. Thus, another titillating media event in American medical history has been recorded, as has been the Frustacis' open appeal for bucks from anyone who wants to contribute.

One of the phenomena of the modern electronic age is that everyone is a celebrity in America for 15 minutes once in his life.

Capitalizing on such instant visibility is a long tradition, and among the parents of multiple-birth children, at least as old as the Dionne quintuplets.

Still, cases like the present one leave us a bit jaded. As far as we can tell, the event is noteworthy only because of the number of children in this multiple birth. But is that sufficient reason for anyone to dig into their pockets to help the Frustacis raise children they wanted to have?

The relationship of the instantly familiar to the buying public is not so simple as "Thanks for the check. Here's my story."

Such events come so rapidly that they fade quickly. That creates a demand for more of the same. A repetition sets in and soon, we can't remember who the person or the event is, much less what we are supposed to remember it for.

That leaves us with a disconnected barrage of unrelated events in our public lives, hardly something on which to build any sense of public policy or public purpose.

Furthermore, the "public" view of such instant notoriety is little more than a superficial account. Just open People to a 500-word story and a few pictures. The Frustacis and their children will be chronicled there, everything you need to know already selected for you. Do we learn anything of their character and motives?

Maybe that isn't of interest to some. But to us, the fascinating conversation would be the negotiations between magazines and their story-targets over the fees to be paid. Now there we could get a look at a human motive.

Pollsters feel better about prospects

WASHINGTON — A year ago some of the nation's leading pollsters were nervous about their industry, afraid that it was suffering from a loss of public confidence.

Today those same people seem to feel that the situation has been reversed — that if some parts of the public are not exactly in love with opinion polls, things nevertheless are pretty good.

Polls cannot work unless people voluntarily take part in them. Thus, the matter of public confidence is vital.

Barry Sussman

Americans have tended to like opinion polls almost since their inception in the 1930s. People want to know what others are thinking and how their own opinions fit in the broad picture. We know that reflexively; we also know it because pollsters occasionally make attempts to find out about it.

Nevertheless, there have been a number of complaints about the polls. One is the growing incidence of fake surveys, the practice of asking people questions by phone, in person or through the mails simply as a sales ploy.

What seemed to bother the professionals last year, though, were troubles they were bringing on themselves: perceptions that polls were interfering with the election process and that the polls were not very accurate.

In a report to the annual meeting of the American Association for Public Opinion Research (AAPOR) in the spring of 1994, Burns Roper, head of the Roper organization, focused on one of those problems. Election Day exit polls by the television networks, Roper said, have surveys had shown enormous public dissatisfaction with them, on the ground that exit polls violated the sanctity of the electoral system.

While the Gallup poll was perfect in 1984, getting President Reagan's 58-point margin over Walter Mondale on the nose, some polls were far off the mark. The range of nationally circulated polls just before the election varied from a Reagan winning margin of 10 points to one of almost 30 points.

Figures like those are beyond the margin of error and, in some instances, much worse than what the same pollsters had obtained in 1988. But all showed Reagan winning easily, giving the appearance that the polls were accurate. At any rate, after last year's election the Gallup firm did two opinion polls to test A sentiment toward the polls themselves. One was a survey of 246 members of the news media, a group that Robert says has "a particularly well-informed and experienced viewpoint on the polls."

Included were reporters, senior editors, publishers, station managers and other executives. Of the total, 56 were either publishers or station managers, the rest at lower levels.

Part of the grumbling about polls interfering with the process may be more political than intellectual. Among those who said they had voted for Mondale, 62 percent said the polls interfered with the process. Among Reagan voters, 56 percent said the surveys enhanced the process.

Gallup's survey of the general public, conducted by telephone in March, repeated some questions first asked by the Gallup poll in 1944, when polls were still a novelty, and it provides some nice comparisons between then and now.

Asked how well polls did in predicting election results, for example, 73 percent of those interviewed in 1944 said the polls were "right most of the time." In 1985, that figure climbed to 77 percent.

Asked in 1944 whether polls are in general "a good thing or a bad thing in our country," 73 percent said that they were a good thing and 6 percent that they were a bad thing; 21 percent expressed no opinion.

In 1985 the figures were very similar: 76 percent said that they were a good thing and 12 percent that they were a bad thing; 12 percent offered no

Burns Roper's report also described results of a recent poll of polls. One question, dealing with the accuracy of polls, found 10 percent saying they were almost always accurate, 46 percent saying they were usually accurate, 32 percent saying they were only sometimes accurate, 6 percent saying they were very seldom accurate, and 6 percent with no opinion.

Eighty-one percent said that nearly all or most of the people interviewed in polls give truthful answers; only 16 percent felt that only some or very few people tell the truth to pollsters.

One question touched on the role of public opinion polls in a democratic society. Similar to the Gallup question on whether polls are good or bad for the country, it asked whether "most opinion polls work for or against the best interests of the general public."

Roper got 68 percent saying they work against the public's best interests, 17 percent with no opinion and 15 percent saying the polls work for the public's best interests. Three out of four is not bad.

Solutions offered for farm problems

Gene Hull

Now it is spring and the farmers are busy in the fields preparing for another crop year. They haven't the time now to worry about what is going to happen this fall when harvest time comes but the farm problems of low prices for crops and high costs of production are still with us.

We know there are many simple solutions. We know that anything coming out of Washington, D.C. this year will be only temporary relief. If the theory of supply and demand is true, then agriculture must reduce the supply of food to increase prices.

Several years ago, farm commodity prices did make a good increase and it appeared that some good years were ahead. Then almost overnight everything the farmer went to buy increased in cost and he really had little to cheer about.

The increase in prices that the farmer gained from his raw produce dropped lower and lower and his costs of operation went to the higher level and stayed there.

We are told that as soon as the poor farm operators go broke, things will be better. I disagree. I do not believe there are many "bad" farmers left in farming. There are some farmers who have made some bad business decisions based on enthusiastic agricultural reports saying how much the world needs more food. (Time Magazine less than 3 years ago reported the U.S. by the year 2000 would decide who lived and died in the world as the U.S. would control all of the world surplus food supply.) Starvation reports such as those coming out of Ethiopia lead the American farmers to believe that sooner or later someone out there will have to have our food. That day seems slow to arrive.

Maybe never.

If we have too much food production, what can be done? I am like all others. I have a suggested solution. It would partially alleviate the problem over a period of time.

A simple example. If a buggy whip manufacturer can no longer sell his buggy whips, he goes broke, sells out, closes down, end of the business and the supply of buggy whips.

What happens when a farmer gets in financial trouble and goes broke? He can't pay his bills, his land is mortgaged, and his creditors force him to sell off equipment, assets, and auction off or in some way sell the land. The farmer and his family then move to town. This incident of bankruptcy and forcing the farmer to liquidate and move to town does absolutely nothing for the farm problem.

After the farmer has sold it all, given up, moved to town, the land stays in production. Whoever holds the mortgage on the land immediately tries to find a buyer and almost inevitably that land is back in production for the next crop year. It doesn't make any difference as to who does the buying or the selling, the land goes back into production.

I have two suggested solutions. (1) Would it be possible for the federal government to take this land out of production and keep it out? All mortgages held by the federal government would be kept by the government in case of bankruptcy. Let the bankrupt farmer seek his new life and the government would hold that land in reserve. This would create a long term land reserve.

My suggestion in no way reflects on the farmer who is broke. He is broke and knows that he cannot make it. My suggestion would be simply the last resource. It is not a "quick fix" but is a way to get food production down by limiting the land being farmed.

Farmers may be broke for a number of reasons and the reasons are so numerous that no patch work of solutions to all the farm programs by the federal government will solve the problems to the benefit of those concerned.

The land going into this permanent reserve could be utilized. For example, the Idaho Fish and Game Department is seeking land for upland bird habitat. The federal government could lease these sequestered farms in Idaho to be seeded and planted for habitat use. Perhaps the land could be seeded and rented for grazing with no harvest or cropping allowed. Or just let the land lie fallow until such time that it could profitably be brought back into production.

(2) To make my suggestion really work, there should be no sale of new lands for farming by either the state or federal governments for at least 10 years. It makes no sense to have present farmers in financial trouble and at the same time allow new tracts of land to be opened for farming. This action should take place right now.

Any segment of American business or industry that faces a problem of too much production immediately starts taking steps to curtail, cut back, or lay off, as soon as possible in order to bring production in line with profitable sales. If farming is a business, then farmers should be learning from business.

Having soil banks or leaving a percent of the farms idle gets too complicated and too hard to control. Having the government hold land out of production that is presently held by the government either by lease or sale, might be a long term, simple step, partial solution, to a very complicated problem.

Letters/GemTec should tell what Idaho investors may anticipate

Wary of only subcontracts

It seems to me the GemTec venture people need to be a little more public with their plan and what the future will hold for the investors of Idaho.

First, issuing stock is a fine way to raise money but what do they have to sell? They do not own the building, none of the equipment and have only a contract to produce modular phones from E.F. Johnson. And we already know that Johnson has sold out without regard to the operation here in Twin Falls, putting them in the mess they are in. Subcontracts are at best short-term things that can be canceled for many reasons.

We would like to see some provision of wholly owned products of GemTec instead of all the talk of subcontracts from other companies. It would be great to have such a firm in the area for the local economy and employ local people and not bring them in from out of state or out of the local area. Our local residents have more to offer than given credit for. I can only guess that the Security Exchange Commission regulations could not be met and GemTec could only offer stock under the rules of the state of Idaho, which is far more liberal.

If GemTec's people were more advanced in thinking I would think that their management would have first, weeks ago, started an effort to purchase with that stock existing products of small companies who had producible products and established markets. Since even if they choose to develop their own, they will have research and development costs, production start-up costs and Marketing Costs, not to mention salary and everyday expenses.

I have read that certain people in the Magic Valley have pledged $5,000 each to help the stock offering under way. Great, if you look at those people you will find they are some of the most affluent people in the area and can afford to write off $5,000 a year less on taxes if the venture goes bust. As yet, we have not seen a prospectus on what they are selling and I believe they owe that to the potential investors of Idaho.

Social programs are needed

Our Republican senators and representative from Idaho continually talk of cutting government spending. They tell us how they want to cut the budget and curb deficit spending. Yes they do want to cut spending, but where do they plan to make these cuts?

Social security, veterans benefits, education, environmental conservation and protection, public transit and programs that return tax monies to citizens and taxpayers, is where they want to cut spending. This is a deceptive approach to solving the deficit problem. The most costly and wasteful spending will still continue.

Our Congressmen's pet programs will go on, like defense with its star wars, MX missiles and over a hundred contracts of billions of dollars to giant corporations. Land management programs that subsidize millions of big timber, oil, and gas corporations, and build new roadways through out counties potential wilderness areas.

Spraying programs on federal and state public lands that give $16 million to chemical companies, while destroying many more beneficial insects and animals in laboratory research, but produces no new or useful results.

It's really surprising the millions of tax dollars our government and our politicians spend for killing and destruction. All the while telling us that social programs that improve the quality of life and return money to the average tax paying citizen must be cut or eliminated.

Impressed by Judge Hart

I recently attended the National Judicial College at the University of Nevada-Reno and had the pleasure of participating in a two week course with a judge from your state, the Honorable J. William Hart of the 5th Judicial District.

As our course progressed, I became extremely impressed with Judge Hart. His intelligence, insight, understanding, and integrity became readily apparent to those in attendance.

Your readers and the residents of the state of Idaho can and should take great pride in having a person of Judge Hart's caliber serving in your judicial system. Meeting and getting to know him was one of the most meaningful and rewarding aspects of my attendance at the National Judicial College.

Christian protestors arrested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost 200 Christian activists, praying and protesting against "violence, militarism and injustice," were arrested Tuesday in demonstrations outside the White House, the Soviet Embassy and other major buildings in the nation's capital. They were among more than 1,000 demonstrators protesting against a range of issues, including nuclear policy, war in Central America and the death penalty, tying them together as anti-Christian "assaults on the sanctity of human life."

Through the breadth of the protest, said organizer Jim Wallis, "we hope to serve notice that wherever there are policies of violence, militarism and injustice, they will be resisted by the churches."

Judge allows TWA buyout bid

NEW YORK (AP) — The board of directors of Trans World Airlines voted Tuesday to put the company on the auction block after a judge refused to prevent financier Carl C. Icahn's $600 million buyout bid.

The board said that Icahn's $18-a-share bid "does not reflect full value for the company" and added that it will submit to a shareholder vote the best offer it receives within the next 60 days.

If no bidder tops Icahn's offer, the company said, it will put Icahn's tender offer before the shareholders — but only if Icahn agrees not to vote the 25 percent of TWA stock that his group already holds.

Father, son indicted as spies

BALTIMORE (AP) — A federal grand jury indicted a 47-year-old former Navy communications expert and his seaman son Tuesday on charges of supplying national defense secrets to a Soviet agent for money.

The six-count espionage indictment was returned in U.S. District Court in Baltimore against John Anthony Walker, Jr., now a Norfolk, Va., private detective, and his son, Michael Lance Walker, 22, a seaman assigned to the U.S. nuclear aircraft carrier Nimitz, from which some of the secret documents allegedly came.

For the first time, the government charged formally that the Walkers had worked against their country for money. The indictment said they had conspired with a Soviet agent that "each would be compensated for his role in the conspiracy."

Police shoot 21-year-old man

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Police fatally shot a knife-wielding man Tuesday after the man ignored commands to drop the weapon and jumped through the window of an occupied house, authorities said.

Wayne Holden, 21, died in surgery at Sharp Memorial Hospital, where he was taken following the incident, hospital spokeswoman Ann Verbyce said.

Several officers surrounded the man and demanded that he drop the knife, but the assailant began acting "irrationally" and alternately charged and retreated from police, department spokesman Bill Robinson said.

Police said witnesses told them they had seen the man thrusting the knife into cars parked in the San Carlos area of San Diego, a residential community about 12 miles east of downtown.

When Holden forced entry into a house by jumping through a window, two officers opened fire, Robinson said.

Holiday traffic death toll up 38

CHICAGO (AP) — Traffic deaths totaled 411 over the three-day Memorial Day weekend, 38 more than last year, and the National Safety Council said Tuesday the increase resulted from more people taking to the road because of an improved economy.

The council had estimated that the holiday period, which traditionally marks the start of the summer vacation season, could result in 380 to 400 deaths on the highways.

In 1984, 378 people died in traffic accidents during Memorial Day weekend. The highest recorded toll for the holiday period came in 1968, when 629 people died in traffic accidents.

Court upholds lawyers' right to solicit

By JAMES H. RUBIN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lawyers may use pictures in advertisements to attract clients and may advertise by soliciting clients to use specific companies, the Supreme Court ruled Tuesday.

The 5-3 decision expanded the right to advertise granted lawyers eight years ago.

In its latest ruling, the court said Ohio officials improperly reprimanded a lawyer who sought clients with grievances against the maker of an allegedly dangerous intrauterine device.

The ruling was not a complete victory for relaxed regulation of lawyer ads. By a 6-2 vote, the justices said the lawyer was reprimanded properly for failing to state in the ads that would be clients would have to pay court costs if they lost their suits.

Justice Byron R. White, writing for the court, said the right of citizens to sue must not be abridged by sweeping state regulations that prevent lawyers from placing ads offering legal representation on specific subjects.

"That our citizens have access to their civil courts is not an evil to be regretted. Rather, it is an attribute of our system of justice in which we ought to take pride," White said. "The state is not entitled to interfere with that access by denying its citizens accurate information about their legal rights."

In other matters, the court:

- Ruled by an 8-1 vote in cases from New Jersey and Washington state that anti-fraud provisions of federal securities laws apply when ownership or control of a closely held business is transferred by the sale of stock rather than by the sale of assets.

- Blocked, without comment, an attempt to force the Chilean government and its "national airline" to pay more than $5 million in damages for the 1976 assassination of Orlando Letelier, former Chilean ambassador to the United States, and an assistant.

- Agreed to decide in a Rhode Island case whether police officers may be forced to pay monetary damages to people they arrest after obtaining court warrants without "probable cause" to suspect a crime.

- Said it will decide whether a Berkeley, Calif., rent control ordinance may violate federal antitrust laws barring price-fixing.
- Refused to revive a $6 million libel lawsuit against syndicated columnist Rowland Evans and Robert Novak for what they wrote about a Marxist professor at New York University in 1978.

In 1977, the court wiped out the legal profession's long-standing ban on any advertising by lawyers, ruling such prohibitions violated lawyers' free-speech rights.

In Tuesday's ruling, the court said Ohio officials went too far in cracking down on ads placed in 38 Ohio newspapers in 1982 by Philip Zauderer of Columbus.

Consumer group says bank fees rising fast

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cost of banking services to consumers is rising rapidly as financial institutions raise existing fees and create new ones, according to a survey released Tuesday by the Consumer Federation of America.

"Inflation may be licked in some areas of the economy, but it remains a raging monster in the financial community," said House Banking Committee Chairman Fernand-Si-Germain, D-R.I., who joined in releasing the survey.

The small depositor must pay 5 percent more this year than last for a standard checking account, and 13 percent more in fees for a NOW interest-bearing account, according to the survey.

Savings accounts increasingly are subject to charges when a minimum balance is not maintained. In addition, more financial institutions are imposing fees for depositing checks that bounce, according to the survey of 73 banks and 69 thrifts in 14 states and the District of Columbia.

The American Bankers Association, the largest bank industry group, said the study was one-sided.

"The CFA study fails to point out that hundreds of banks from coast to coast today offer low-cost no-frills basic banking accounts to meet the financial needs of low and moderate income consumers," said Robert Stevens, chairman of the ABA consumer issues task force, in a statement.

The survey was conducted by consumer groups affiliated with the federation in New York, Pennsylvania, California, Kansas, Minnesota, Oregon, Wisconsin, Maryland, Virginia, Connecticut, Ohio, Louisiana, Idaho, Missouri and the District of Columbia.

The cost of banking varied widely even between neighboring institutions. But they frequently don't make clear their fees, making comparison shopping difficult, said Allan Fox of the federation.

"Even sophisticated shoppers are unable to accurately compare prices," he said.

The survey found the minimum balance to avoid fees varied tremendously in checking and NOW accounts. On checking, the minimum balances ranged from $200 to $2,000. On NOW accounts, the minimum balances began at zero and ranged to $1,000. In both cases, some institutions impose fees regardless of the balance.

On the average, NOW accounts cost twice as much to maintain at banks than at thrift institutions, $101 a year compared to $49, according to the survey.

Other charges also varied widely. Bounced check fees ranged from $5 to $30. Some institutions charged nothing but others as much as $25 for a returned deposit check.

Teamsters split over right-to-work law

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Ten members of eastern Idaho's Teamsters Local 983, claiming their constitutional rights are being violated, publicly approved Tuesday to the new $2 monthly assessment approved by the union to help finance the fight against Idaho's new right-to-work law.

"There are many others where we work with whom we have talked who feel as we do and support what we are doing but are reluctant to come forward for fear of reprisals," the 10 said in a statement issued in Idaho Falls during a news conference set up by Republican State Rep. J.F. Chabrand.

Since the Republican-dominated Legislature enacted the law over Democratic Gov. John Evans' veto in January, the courts have stopped implementation pending a trial on whether organized labor's right to referendum was violated because the bill carried a clause putting into effect immediately rather than on the normal enactment date of July 1.

As the court case, now under Supreme Court review, continued, union leaders gathered twice the signatures needed to put the issue before voters in November 1986 and some local unions have held elections on whether monthly dues assessments should be increased to help finance the campaign against the ban on compulsory union membership.

"Although we are union members, we are opposed to having money withheld from our paychecks for the specific purpose of fighting the right-to-work law," the 10 union members said in their statement. "We firmly believe that every individual should have the freedom to choose what political causes and candidates he or she will support and to this end we would suggest that any donations to a political cause... should be strictly on a voluntary basis."

According to officials of Teamsters Local 983, which represents some 2,200 workers, the $2 assessment to fight the right-to-work law was approved in April on a 169-154 vote.

Land Board criticized

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Opponents of a major recreational development proposed for the shores of the Panhandle's Priest Lake are pressing for state officials to reconsider their approval of a land trade facilitating the project.

"There's a lot of widespread anger at the cavalier attitudes of three members of the Land Board," said Dean Stevens, a Priest Lake marina operator and member of the Priest Lake Coalition. "They don't know the impact they'll have on the environment of Priest Lake and of the increasing tax load on Bonner County taxpayers." The coalition has directed its attorney, Scott Reed of Coeur d'Alene, to ask the Land Board to rehear the request of Diamond Lands Corp. to trade 12,370 acres of its land in the Panhandle for 3,700 acres of state land adjacent to the lake's eastern shore.

The board, after months of review, approved the land swap earlier this month on a 3-2 vote. Gov. John Evans and Auditor Joe Williams opposed the deal while Attorney General Jim Jones, Secretary of State Pete Cenarussa and Schools Superintendent Jerry Evans backed it.

Prison staff suspended in Boise

BOISE (AP) — Two employees at the Idaho State Penitentiary have been temporarily suspended and the case of another turned over to Corrections Director Al Murphy after an investigation indicated they misappropriated prison property, Warden Arvon Arave says.

A food-service worker was suspended for a week beginning June 3 and a mechanical services employee was idled for three days beginning Tuesday, Arave said after talking to the men and reviewing their cases. He would not identify either worker.

The case of another employee, whom Arave described as falling under the direct supervision of the director of the Department of Corrections, has been referred to Murphy for further action, Arave said he made no recommendation.

The action came as a result of the same investigation that led the warden to ask for the resignations of three prison employees last month. These workers, also unidentified, all have left their jobs.

Arave said both the employees suspended Tuesday "were involved in having a very small amount of work done by employees or inmates at the prison's mechanical shop."

Arave said the suspensions should end disciplinary action as a result of the internal investigation, but that other steps could be necessary depending on the results of a continuing probe by the legislative auditor's office. That investigation, which began in late April, could take a couple more weeks, he said.

Idaho will ask for payment for dead fish

POCATELLO (AP) — State officials say they will ask the J.R. Simplot Co. to pay for hundreds of fish that were killed last week when a company truck overturned near Rapid Creek, spilling fertilizer and gasoline into the water.

"We lost fish in the hundreds, probably," said John Helmer, Idaho Fish and Game Department Region Five fisheries manager, adding the loss is less extensive than he had first thought.

The truck stalled on an incline, rolled back and over a bank, and overturned, dumping 550 to 600 gallons of ammonium nitrate and 50 gallons of fuel, some of which got into the stream, the Idaho State Police said.

Driver Diana Mitchell, 25, jumped clear and was uninjured.

The spill occurred about 11:30 a.m. Friday, said John Cochrane, director of environmental affairs in Simplot's Minerals and Chemical Division. It wasn't reported to the state police until 4:30 p.m.

Company workers pumped about 400 gallons of liquid fertilizer from the truck's tank, but Cochrane said he had reports the truck was holding 500 to 1,000 gallons.

Clayton man is river victim

By The Associated Press

A Clayton man drowned in a boating accident when he was thrown into the South Fork of the Salmon River on Sunday.

Michael Jerome Dunkin, 40, Clayton, drowned when he was thrown into the South Fork of the Salmon River in a boating accident, Custer County sheriff's dispatcher Lois Murphy said.

She said the accident occurred about 12:15 p.m. Sunday when a boat carrying Dunkin and two other men struck an abutment on the Squaw Creek Bridge about three miles south of Clayton.

One of the men swam to shore and another was thrown a rope by passing motorists, Murphy said.

She said names of the two survivors were not available.

Custer County sheriff's dispatcher Dixie Dexter said the Salmon River was running "very high" and boaters were being warned to stay off the river.

Alliance blasts coalition

POST FALLS (AP) — The National Forest Service has tried to strike a balance in long-range management proposals for forests in Idaho and the public must be made aware of that, officials of the Alliance for Recreation and Resource Management contend.

"Right now, the Forest Service is doing the best it can to provide reasonable access and use to the general public," said Don Satchwell of Post Falls, president of the year-old group formed to fight any major additions to Idaho's 4 million acres of current wilderness.

"A consideration must be weighed in terms of economic balance rather than environmental extremism and hysteria," Satchwell said.

"Last week, a coalition of conservation and sportsmen's groups accused the Forest Service of programming into long-range management plans more than $1 billion in roads for areas that currently are roadless.

The coalition claimed the plans are based on the erroneous theory that the roads will be needed to accommodate major increases in timber harvests of federal lands when there is no indication that the timber industry in Idaho will ever significantly recover from its current depressed state.

Spokesmen said the road plans will, if allowed to go forward, destroy thousands of acres of critical elk and fish habitat, threatening the continued recovery of Idaho's once-stressed elk herd. They urged all Idahoans to flood Forest Service officials with letters of protest.

But the alliance has called a June 10 meeting for Boise to effectively refute that claim and help the public understand the forest planning process, Satchwell said.

The long-range plans mandated by Congress several years ago have become the focus of the ongoing wilderness debate in Idaho now that a resolution of the preservation issue has failed in Congress. Conservationists have been pressing for 3.4 million acres or more in additional wilderness while the leaders of the state's congressional delegation proposed only 526,000.

The state Fish and Game Commission, which will send an emissary to the Alliance meeting next month, has called for 1.8 million acres of additional wilderness and is contesting any Forest Service plans for development in areas it wants preserved.

Straight talk from Farm Credit:

Strong, changing, essential to your success.

Agriculture has suffered through four tough years. Most farm and ranch families and every ag-related business have faced painful decisions. The economic crunch is real. It is forcing major changes wherever crops and livestock are produced or processed.

Whether you're a stockholder of one of our Farm Credit organizations or simply a concerned resident of the region, we want you to know how we are responding to these problems. We are, without doubt, strong and committed to serve. You should know that.

But changing times demand organizational change. And because we are a borrower-owned cooperative, our efforts are only as effective as our members' understanding of our situation and the plans we make. Here is an overview of where we are and where we want to go.

Clarence Holfield, chairman and leading operator, Hansen, Idaho

What is the financial condition of the Farm Credit Banks?

This Farm Credit District, one of 12 in the nation, is comprised of three individual banks. The Federal Land Bank — source of long term credit through 40 local Federal Land Bank Associations (FLBAs) offices in the Northwest. The Federal Intermediate Credit Bank — providing short term "production credit" through 23 local Production Credit Associations (PCAs). And The Spokane Bank for Cooperatives, which finances supply, processing, marketing and rural utility cooperatives.

Some 50,000 farm families and other ag businesses in Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana benefit from the services of these three banks.

The Land Bank is solidly in the black. It has a capital base of $522 million, and approximately $3.6 billion in outstanding loans, with a delinquency rate of 4.9% of loan amount or 16% of dollar volume. Loan charge offs in 1984 were $5.9 million.

The Spokane Bank for Cooperatives also is operating in the black and remains strong with capital of $54 million. The bank experienced $19.0 million in loan losses in 1984 on $450 million in outstanding loans.

The Federal Intermediate Credit Bank and member PCAs have been hit hard. Eight PCAs have been placed in liquidation because loan losses exceeded reserves. The bank earned only $1 million in 1983, lost $22 million in 1984, and has required financial assistance from other Farm Credit entities in the nation. Although predictions are difficult to make in this troubled economy, we expect all of the remaining 23 PCAs to continue satisfactory operations as a result of a financial assistance package now being arranged.

In sum, two of our three banks are strong. A substantial financial package is being arranged to keep the third bank — the FICB (PCA) — a vigorous lender.

What is the "financial assistance package"?

Through an interim loss sharing agreement among the nation's 12 Farm Credit Districts, $25 million is being provided to the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank on an as-needed basis. Additionally, a long term assistance package is expected to be approved soon. Initially we thought as much as $300 million would be required, but with further progress we now know that $200 million will do the job.

As you would expect, those providing the funds are asking that our District meet certain conditions. These are described later under our proposed plan for reorganization.

We emphasize that no government funds are involved in any of the Farm Credit Banks or associations. They are farmer owned and farmer operated. The financial assistance is coming from other Farm Credit District Banks, not from the Federal government.

What about competitive rates?

For generations, our banks and associations have made the competition in agricultural lending. We operate solely to serve farmers and ranchers — we plow our net earnings back into the system to build our capital base — to keep interest rates down. Currently, the PCA interest rate is higher than that being charged by some banks. When our reorganization is complete, you can expect us to again set the pace in competitive rates.

What about farmers' stock in PCAs and FLBAs?

Since these lending organizations are owned and financed by farmers — and not by anyone else — members must purchase stock when they obtain a loan. This provides the capital, the equity. Without member owned stock, there would be no PCAs or FLBAs.

Stock investment gives members ownership and control through the elected directorate. For 48 years it has allowed members to own businesses which have provided a dependable source of credit at low cost. Most importantly, stock investment provides the risk capital so essential to any business. This is how the private enterprise system works.

Regrettably, the "at risk" nature of PCA capital is an anomaly for the first time in the Twelfth District since 1938. The stock investment of 2,100 farmer members of the four PCAs which were closed in 1985 is now in jeopardy. The return on their investment will be determined by the results of the liquidation of their PCAs. The important question is: will they have to preserve as much of the investment as possible — as well as pay the association creditors.

What is the proposed "Plan for Reorganization"?

It has several parts. First the technicalities — then the benefits.

Financial assets (stock and reserves) of PCAs will not be merged or mixed with the FLBAs. Current law does not provide for the merging of unlike institutions.

Here is what we propose:

1. Merging all 40 local FLBAs into one FLBA. It would have a farmer elected board that, in turn, would select the management. Each local office or branch would elect associate directors to assure grass roots involvement.

2. Merging all 23 local PCAs into one PCA. Management and member control would be provided in same manner as described for the FLBA.

3. Consolidating management, staff and facilities of local PCAs and FLBAs into local financial centers. This would result in one stop credit service and more efficient use of staff.

For increased operating economy, management and staff of the three District banks at Spokane already have been consolidated. We have one set of officers where formerly we had three. And it's working.

Why are other Districts pursuing reorganization?

Because consolidation, as proposed, has been tried and proven effective. Eleven of the 12 Farm Credit Districts now have some form of consolidated management.

Creating one stop financial centers with FLBA and PCA services in a single office is not new. Three such centers have existed in this District for many years. They are at Great Falls and Shoshone, Montana, and The Dalles, Oregon. They are financially strong and effective in serving members.

What benefits can members expect from reorganization?

- Strength and financial stability: In banking, size and diversity mean strength. With all PCAs merged into one, security of each member's investment will be enhanced. Stock will be more secure. The same will be true for the FLBAs.

- Competitive rates: With a greater financial base and a more diversified loan portfolio, we expect interest rates to be lower and more stable.

- Grass roots input: The fact that farmers themselves set the policies and employ management has been the source of this organization's strength. This grass roots involvement will be preserved, and strengthened too. Each local center will have its own elected associate directors. The Boards of the District FLBA and PCA will also be stockholder elected.

Will fast, local service be retained?

Absolutely. Our staff of dedicated, knowledgeable loan specialists will continue living in your area. You can expect the same prompt, local service that has been our tradition.

Your participation and vote are needed.

While space has permitted only highlighting our reorganization plan, each FLBA and PCA member will receive a comprehensive package of information on this subject. We ask that you study it carefully. Then, attend the stockholder meeting of your local association and vote.

The Farm Credit System is at a crossroads. It has served its members and the entire business community of the Northwest with dedication and efficiency. Now, changes are needed to allow it to compete under the changing economy of the 1980s. The future of your system depends on you.

Your understanding and support will be greatly appreciated.

U of I eyes S. African investment

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho Foundation is studying its investments in corporations that do business in South Africa — then will decide if those investments are responsible.

The foundation has asked university administrators for more information on divestment, United States operations in South Africa and legal requirements governing investors.

The Idaho Coalition for Peace and Justice, a group of UI faculty members and students, has asked the university to divest nearly $1 million it has in five corporations with ties to South Africa's apartheid regime.

"American investments in South Africa give the white minority government legitimacy and false dignity," said Kenneth Harris, an assistant professor of English and coalition leader.

South Africa is the only nation that constitutionally limits the political, social and economic rights of non-whites. Blacks and Indians account for 44 percent of South Africa's population.

But Marythea Grebner, UI information director, said foundation board members needed more information before voting on any divestment or reinvestment resolution — so postponed a decision until their Aug. 27 meeting in Idaho Falls.

"The full board wants to be better briefed on the kinds of actions other universities are taking," she said. "And they need more background on the legalities involved."

Idaho's questionable investments, Harris said, include $210,000 in Ford Motor Co., $204,000 in General Motors, $44,000 in ITT, $136,000 in Mobil Oil and $94,000 in ITT debt securities.

Also protested by the coalition was $184,000 in Union Carbide stock.

The foundation's portfolio totals $15.4 million.

Ms. Grebner said Idaho Foundation members discussed the investments at length last Wednesday in Boise. "The foundation is required by Idaho Code to make responsible investments," she said. "But the board thought it needed a better definition of 'responsible.'"

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country star Waylon Jennings, guitar at the ready, flew to Canada to help out longtime friend Johnny Cash when his band lost a member.

Cash called Jennings for help when guitarist Bob Wootton had to leave the band and fly home to deal with a family emergency.

Jennings' spokesman Mike Hyland said Tuesday that Jennings played in the band Monday night and remained in Toronto for another performance.

Nuclear sub on last trip

By STEPHEN J. SIMURDA
The Associated Press

TREASURE ISLAND, Calif. (AP) — The once-mighty USS Nautilus, the world's first nuclear-powered submarine, lumbered through the Golden Gate under tow Tuesday on route to its final mission as a naval museum attraction.

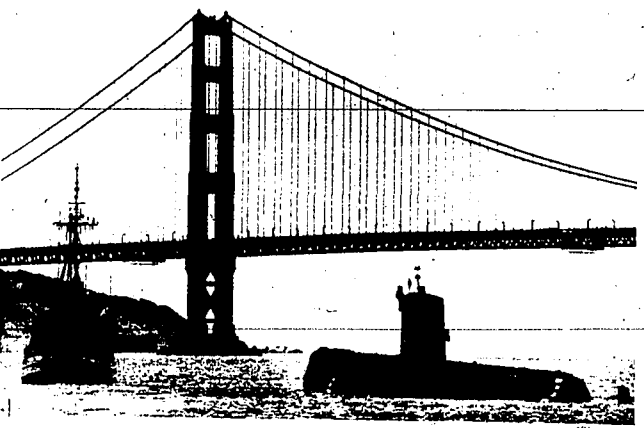

For several years after its launching in 1954, the 319-foot Nautilus was the pride of the Navy's fleet. It could travel farther, move faster and stay submerged longer than any previous submarine. In 1958, it became the first vessel to journey beneath the North Pole.

Its current five-week voyage will take it through the Panama Canal to a dock at New London, Conn. It will sit there until next spring, when the $7.3 million USS Nautilus Maritime Submarine Force Library and Museum opens at Groton, Conn., near the Electric Boat Yard where it was built.

Cutting slowly through San Francisco Bay under gray skies Tuesday toward the Pacific Ocean, without the benefit of a crew or its once-unique nuclear engines, the Nautilus belied its sometimes glorious past.

The ship set off for its first ocean voyage on Jan. 17, 1955, and its first commander, Eugene P. Wilkinson, signalled the historic words "Under way on nuclear power" to his superiors at the Submarine Force Command.

On its first long trip four months later, the Nautilus broke records for distance traveled, as well as time spent and speed traveled underwater.

When it went in for its first refueling in January 1958, after traveling more than 100,000 miles, President Dwight D. Eisenhower noted the performance of the "gallant ship which has paved a revolution in naval tactics and construction."

Later that year, the Nautilus did what many had considered impossible, passing beneath the North Pole in an underwater cruise beneath the Arctic ice cap that lasted 96 hours.

The Rev. Shepherd M. Jenks, now a deacon of the Episcopal Diocese of California, served as navigator on the polar crossing and recalled Tuesday that the crew was "elated and still proud" of its success.

"People had been trying for centuries to go to the North Pole," said Jenks. "We prepared a whole year for that trip. We tried to get up there in 1957 but got lost and had to come back."

Jenks recalled the ship had the nickname "Lola," and the crew had no trouble with red tape when it came to getting supplies. "Anything we wanted, we got. Whatever Lola wants, Lola gets," as in a line from a song in the 1959 musical "Damn Yankees."

"It's been a big part of my life ever since then," said Jenks, who served on the Nautilus for three years and still gives talks about it in the San Francisco Bay area.

The ship continued its naval activities after the polar crossing but its missions were mostly limited to training exercises, except for its involvement in the naval quarantine of Cuba in 1962.

The ship's final voyage under its own power ended in 1979 and the Nautilus was decommissioned at Mare Island naval base, about 20 miles northeast of San Francisco, on March 3, 1980.

The six Trident nuclear submarines in the Navy's fleet today are descendants of the Nautilus, although they are nearly twice the size of the Nautilus and carry nuclear weapons in addition to nuclear reactors for power.

Wilderness drug busts imminent

CONCORD, N.H. — The camper in the next tent could be an undercover narcotics agent, say authorities who plan to put plainclothes officers in the White Mountain National Forest this year to crack down on wilderness drug use.

"Don't be surprised if the guy who has pitched a tent next to you comes over and says 'You are under arrest,'" Carroll County Deputy Sheriff Chuck Morneau warns hikers and campers who carry drugs into the woods.

"I realized while on normal, routine patrol that drugs were all over the place," Morneau said, adding that marijuana is common and that there has been a recent upsurge in cocaine use in the wilderness.

He said authorities made more than 50 drug arrests at the campgrounds last year, but that sheriff's deputies, state troopers and federal service personnel surpassed that number during the Memorial Day weekend alone, with 55 arrests, including 30 on charges of possession of a controlled drug and four on cocaine charges.

Morneau said officers will be in the woods along the scenic Saco River and Kancamagus Highway in "plain clothes and unmarked cars — and I'm talking blue jeans, tee-shirts and unshaven — no shirts and ties."

"That's what we're going as, campers and hikers. There will be some who will actually be pitching tents and camping there," Morneau said.

He said he doesn't think there is anything sneaky about going undercover on the trails.

"It's all being done in public view and open to the public," he said. "It's not like we are spying on people on private property or anything."

Takes turn wrong way on off-ramp

Driver fires at police, crashes with car

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Five people hospitalized after a truck driver opened fire on a police officer on a downtown street, fled onto a freeway off-ramp and crashed head-on into an auto carrying a family of four, authorities say.

The driver of the pickup truck, identified by police as Dennis Lee Thompson, 44, originally of Algonquin, Ill., was in serious condition at LDS Hospital Tuesday, said spokesman Tim Madden.

Shamua Waters, 36, a passenger in the other vehicle, also was in serious condition at LDS. Madden said both suffered multiple traumas.

Randall Waters, 36, was in serious condition at the University of Utah Health Sciences Center with chest injuries, said spokesman John Dwan.

The couple's children, 4-year-old Kathryn and 8-year-old Christian, were in stable condition at Primary Children's Hospital, said spokesman Maury Christensen.

The chase began shortly after 10 p.m. Monday when officers were sent to investigate an anonymous report of a man in a red pickup brandishing a pistol, said Police Lt. Dick Johnson.

Officer R. Marks, the first to arrive, pulled up behind the pickup. The driver leaped out of the truck and fired several shots — one splintering the windshield of the patrol car, Johnson said.

He said Marks and other officers gave chase, although Marks suffered some glass in the eye, for which he later was treated and released.

The truck driver turned west onto 600 South, going the wrong way on the one-way street, and headed up the Interstate 15 off-ramp at 600 South. The pickup slammed into Jeep Wagoneer, carrying the family, Johnson said.

Another motorist, Calvin Wendelboe, 25, who was driving about 200 feet behind the Jeep, said he stopped to help after the collision.

"I ran over to the car and the mother in the front seat was screaming, 'Get my baby out of here!'" She handed her daughter to me through the window.

"As I pulled her out, the police got here and they started yelling, 'Get away from the truck, the man in the truck has a gun,'" Wendelboe said. He grabbed the girl and ran behind his car and crouched down.

Wendelboe said he heard police shout a warning and fire a shot. Johnson said when the gunman did not get out of the truck, officers first shot a tear gas shell and then one revolver shot at the truck, and the man crawled out.

The man was not wounded by the gunfire, Johnson and Madden said.

Officers had no idea why the man bolted, Johnson said.

Detective Steve Diamond of the Salt Lake Police Department said Tuesday that no charges had been filed, but that authorities would present their case to the Salt Lake County Attorney's Office.

Rookie officer saves motorcycle 'fatality'

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The victim of a motorcycle accident initially treated as a fatality was alive and in serious condition Tuesday after a rookie officer and an unidentified passerby applied emergency first aid.

"I was out at that accident. It was worked as a fatality," said police Sgt. Lucien Jones. "Obviously, this officer didn't act like it was a lost cause."

"It wasn't like they had written him off," Oklahoma City Police Lt. M.T. Bery said Tuesday. "The victim was attended to as soon as the officers arrived there." He said officers gathered information necessary for a report on a fatality.

The cyclist, Kent Foster, 22, was reported in serious condition Tuesday at Baptist Medical Center, where he was taken after Saturday night's accident.

Rookie policeman Steven McCool used a ball point pen to dig dirt out of the motorcycle's mouth and suppress his tongue while another man pressed on the accident victim's chest to get him breathing again. The other man's name was not known.

"He was breathing, he was alive," McCool said Monday. "When I got to the man I saw dirt from the impact jammed and crammed inside his mouth."

"I took my pen. It was the only thing I had at the time. It was the next best thing to a tongue depressor, so I used it and it worked."

McCool and Officer Larry Shaals, who was training the 23-year-old rookie, had made a traffic stop near the accident site and were told about it by a passing motorist.

When they arrived, McCool said he found a good citizen who had enough foresight to stop and look for a body when he saw the motorcycle lying on the side of the road.

The two of them kept the man alive until an ambulance arrived. By then, McCool said, "It was shaken a little bit."

"I felt pretty good. I'll give it everything I've got. That's what I'm out there for."

American hospital director is kidnapped by Beirut gunmen

By ED BLANCHE
The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Six gunmen driving a blue van kidnapped the American director of a university hospital on Tuesday as he walked across a Beirut street to go to work.

The abduction of David P. Jacobsen, 54, of Huntington Beach, Calif., heightened alarm that the few Westerners remaining in the embattled city are still targets of roving gunmen.

Jacobsen, director of the American University of Beirut hospital, is the sixth American kidnapped in Beirut since March 1984. He was walking to work with a doctor from the hospital when six men with guns jumped from the van.

A witness, who declined to be identified, said the gunmen all carried handguns and fired a shot at the unidentified doctor's feet. The ricochet ripped a hole in his trousers, but did not hit him.

The witness said Jacobsen told the assailants in broken Arabic: "Okay, I'll go, I'll go." He was bundled into the back of the van and driven off.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said the kidnapping made it obvious that the threat to Americans in Lebanon remains high.

"No one should consider oneself immune from that threat," he said. "We believe that Americans should avoid travel to Lebanon and Americans in Beirut should take advantage of opportunities to leave."

In London Tuesday, the British Broadcasting Corp. announced it has withdrawn its three correspondents from Beirut after they were threatened. A BBC spokeswoman would not specify what threats had been made but said the BBC "became concerned about their safety."

Jacobsen was the third Westerner kidnapped in mostly Moslem west Beirut in a week.

Unidentified gunmen grabbed two Frenchmen on the road to the city's airport last Wednesday. Police said they still are missing. Jacobsen, who lives on the campus, was appointed director of the university's hospital, the biggest medical center in Beirut, last fall. He directed a hospital in Saudi Arabia before coming to Lebanon.

Robert Barry, New York spokesman for the American University in Beirut, said Jacobsen's apartment is adjacent to the hospital, but that Jacobsen had to cross a public street to reach the hospital entrance.

Barry said Jacobsen was educated at UCLA and had administered the Alhambra Community Hospital in California from 1973 to 1981 and worked with National Medical Enterprises in Santa Monica.

The American University's acting president, Lutfi Diab, said the university's administration was trying to contact government authorities and militia leaders "to assist in having Mr. Jacobsen freed."

A statement by the university said it believed the kidnappers were not aware of Jacobsen's identity. The medical faculty, professors and other university staff appealed in a statement to the kidnappers to release Jacobsen "and give free scope to doctors and all hospital personnel to do their work properly, away from all existing conflicts."

Papal assailant Agca disrupts trial

ROME (AP) — The state's star witness in the trial of seven men accused of a plot to kill the pope disrupted the trial for a second day Tuesday by claiming he is Jesus Christ reincarnated.

Mehmet Ali Agca also politely refused to testify about the gun he used to shoot Pope John Paul II, but indicated he might be willing to talk about it later.

Prosecutor Antonio Marini said he was not concerned by the Turkish gunman's erratic behavior. "When he begins to speak about facts, he is very believable," Marini told reporters.

Agca, 27, initially said he acted alone in shooting John Paul on May 13, 1981, in St. Peter's Square. He told investigators later of a plot arranged in Bulgaria.

His testimony led to the indictments of three Bulgarians and four Turks now being tried on charges of complicity. Of the defendants, only Agca, two other Turks and one Bulgarian are in Italian custody. The others are being tried in absentia.

The prosecutor who brought the indictments, Antonio Albano, contended that Bulgaria, possibly with Soviet help, masterminded the plot to kill John Paul because of his support for the Solidarity free trade union in his native Poland.

Giuseppe Consolo, who represents the Bulgarian in custody, said of Agca, "This is a man who has been fooling with Italian justice for three years. He has been playing with innocent people who are in jail because of this fellow's lies."

The pope, who was seriously wounded in the shooting, said he "prays every day for a good, positive solution of this episode so that it does not weigh heavily on the name of a Slavic people."

He was seen making that statement while receiving a Bulgarian delegation last Friday, in a news film shown by Italy's state-run RAI television network Tuesday. RAI said the film was provided by the Vatican.

The Bulgarians were in Rome for the feast day of St. Cyril, who is credited with developing the Cyrillic script used in several Slavic languages.

At the trial, when Judge Severino Santapichi asked Agca where he got the 9mm Browning pistol he used, Agca replied: "I am sorry, I can't answer today. This is not a refusal."

Agca, now serving a life sentence for the assassination attempt, is being tried this time for illegally importing the pistol. Prosecutors in his first trial four years ago did not know the source of the gun.

Before the opening trial session was adjourned Monday because of problems with the sound system, Agca had begun answering questions about the pistol's history.

He said he got it from Omer Bagel, a fellow Turkish defendant in the courtroom.

Bomb in S. Africa rips army center

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A bomb exploded at an army medical center Tuesday, injuring at least 16 people and shattering windows in the downtown office tower where it is located, officials said.

Palestinians lose Tuesday's gains

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Encircled Palestinian guerrillas on Tuesday recaptured some key positions from Shiite Moslem forces besieging the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps, but were driven back after a four-hour bombardment by Shiite guns.

Palestinian fighters infiltrated via the tunnel network under the Sabra and Chatilla camps and recaptured one wing of a nursing home. A Shiite official said the Palestinians launched a sneak attack after drugging the tea of the garrison and then "slaughtered them like sheep."

"Akraf Haidar," head of the Shiite Amal militia's politburo, claimed the Palestinians massacred 20 Moslem fighters.

The Palestinians, who have accused the Shiites and the Lebanese army of committing "atrocious massacres" in the refugee camps during the nine days of fighting, denied Haidar's claim.

Police reported 20 people killed and 62 wounded in fighting Tuesday, raising the known casualty toll to 389 killed and 1,755 wounded.

New Soviet assault reported

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — At least 10,000 Soviet troops backed by tanks, jets and helicopter gunships have launched one of the biggest offensives of the Afghan war to cut off guerrilla supply lines at the Pakistan border, Western sources said Tuesday.

Western diplomatic sources, speaking here on condition they not be identified further, said Soviet troop formations and armored columns began moving out of the Afghan capital of Kabul earlier this month in preparation for an offensive in Kunar and Laghman provinces.

Council approves draft of long-range plans

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Council Tuesday approved a first draft of long-range plans for the city that include establishing user fees for street maintenance and supporting public action to preserve the downtown.

Those plans were in the first half of a document listing long-range plans, which the city has paid J-U-B Engineering $27,378 to develop. The second half will be discussed at a work session at 4 p.m. today.

Plans to be discussed by the council today, include:

- Encouraging private ownership of some streets.

- Establishing a truck route east of Twin Falls from the intersection of Pole Line Road and Blue Lakes Boulevard to the southeast industrial area.
- Supporting private efforts to develop a "greenbelt" connecting Harmon Park with Sunrise and Frontier parks, using right-of-way easements along the Perrine Coolie as practical.
- Maintaining reserves of 10 percent or more of the preceding year's budget.
- Financing capital improvement programs from interest earnings from invested reserves.
- Holding annual reviews of services and eliminating the ones that produce the least benefit for money spent if cuts have to be made.

As the council agrees on broad planning statements, J-U-B will develop more detailed plans to reach goals, said Wayne Forrey, J-U-B city planner.

A city-wide service fee for street maintenance could produce the federal revenue sharing money the city now spends on street maintenance, Forrey said. Twin Falls now receives more than $350,000 a year from the fund but the federal program is expected to be eliminated next year.

Residents responded in a survey by J-U-B this spring that they wanted no more tax increases, Mayor Emery Petersen said. However, they also wanted better street maintenance, Forrey responded.

On the subject of support for downtown, the city has to consider plans that keep in mind that Price Development is ready to build a mall on the north end of the city, Forrey said.

However, the city should not try to force downtown into the major retail center as Boise has tried unsuccessfully, he said. There a major mall was prohibited to keep the downtown strong, but major retailers still refused to do business downtown because of transportation and other problems, he said.

Twin Falls might consider zoning action such as allowing no more offices outside the area and permitting special apartment zoning if much of the downtown area becomes vacant, he says. As the downtown develops more office and residential use, the city could remove parking meters from the downtown, he said.

Council members generally agreed that the council should support public actions to preserve the downtown, but some members doubted that the Price mall would have a dramatic impact on downtown, at least anytime soon.

Council member Erik Andersen said he questioned putting public money into the downtown, unless merchants showed they were willing to cooperate by doing such things as staying open evenings.

The council supported development within the city, unless annexations are large enough to create new tax revenues. State law prohibits more tax revenues to be raised unless the annexed property is valued at $30 million. The city will support policies and programs to promote expansion of the local economy.

Rapist decision delayed

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A decision on the placement of a 15-year-old rapist was delayed in Fifth District Court Tuesday for two weeks to allow his attorney time to find alternatives to prison.

In a letter to Judge Daniel Meehl, however, the defendant, Robert Allen Morris, stated he wanted to go home.

"I think that I should go home to live with my mom and dad because I have learned my lesson and I promise not to do it again," Morris wrote.

Morris, a Twin Falls resident, had been sentenced to life imprisonment in November for raping a 16-year-old girl in a cave along Rock Creek Sept. 9.

Meehl had retained jurisdiction in the case for four months and ordered the youth sent to the North Idaho Correctional Institution, a state rehabilitation program, at Cottonwood for evaluation.

On Monday, Meehl was supposed to have decided the next step for the teenager, be it prison, probation or other programs.

Yet, Public Defender Mike Powers asked Meehl to delay his decision until the state Department of Health and Welfare could determine if Morris benefited from the Cottonwood program.

Powers also said he needed more time to find alternative programs for the teenager. In the meantime, Morris should be released to his parents, Powers said.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter objected to the delay and release. Powers had ample time for the sentencing, Baxter added.

Since the Department of Corrections recommends sending Morris back to Cottonwood or to the Idaho Youth Services Center at St. Anthony, she objected to releasing Morris to his parents, Baxter added.

If Meehl granted the delay, Morris — although legally an adult but chronologically a juvenile — can't be housed in the Twin Falls County Jail, she said. Sheriff Jim Munn didn't want to place Morris with other convicts.

City councils will keep buses rolling in summer

KETCHUM (AP) — Citing possible loss of federal money and the benefits buses provide to the local economy, the city councils in Ketchum and Sun Valley have backed summer operation of their struggling rapid transit system despite uncertainty over the sales tax that has helped finance it.

"The ... board felt that summer service does have a beneficial effect on our economy," said Ketchum City Administrator Jim Jaquet.

The actions by the two city councils will keep the buses running from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily between July 1 and Labor Day.

The future of the transit system has been up in the air along with other local services since last fall when a 5th District judge declared unconstitutional the local-option sales tax both communities had been using to support it.

Although that decision is under review by the state Supreme Court, the revenue from the taxes is going into an escrow account and is not available to local officials. In a challenge by the Sun Valley Co., the area's largest employer, the court held the tax was delegated by the Legislature to local officials without constitutionally required safeguards.

After failing to win remedial legislation from state lawmakers last winter, the two cities faced major service cutbacks. Businessmen came to the rescue of the transit system for a time.

But Jaquet said that even closing down the system would leave the two cities with an $82,000 yearly operating bill just so they are in a position to resume service when the money is available. Running the buses this summer will add only $17,000 to that bill, he said, adding that if the system is shut down the cities could lose federal matching money that has been made available for public transportation.

"It makes sense for the cities to spend their local share of funds to keep the buses going," Jaquet said.

Fire codes eyed

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls City Attorney Shane Bengochea will investigate removing requirements from the city code that lounges meet Uniform Fire Codes before liquor licenses are renewed.

Mayor Emery Petersen said at a Tuesday work session that he did not want the city to require certain businesses to meet fire codes when codes are not strictly enforced for all businesses.

The discussion came after bar owners complained in February that they were being required to comply with needlessly strict interpretations of the fire code to keep their liquor licenses.

The council agreed then to postpone compliance agreements they had worked out with city officials until it was determined if the city could change the code or otherwise avoid strict enforcement.

The city has to enforce the minimum standards of the code, Bengochea said Tuesday after talking to State Fire Marshal Bill Wallis and receiving an opinion from the attorney general's office.

The city does have some discretion, for instance, when the fire code makes statements like "not too close," but not when the code spells out a specific distance, he said.

The city also can use discretion when the conditions violating the code were in existence before the code was adopted, he said. However, the city will still have to work with the businesses to gradually bring them up to code, he said.

Most likely is legal for the city to require businesses to meet the code before liquor licenses are renewed, he said.

Although bar owners have argued that is selective enforcement of the law, council member Erik Andersen said inebriated patrons needed more protection than patrons of other businesses.

Western Days kicks off today

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls Western Days rides into full swing today with several events scheduled throughout the city.

Headlining today's action is the Western Days Shoe-In, a replacement for last year's controversial salmon crawl.

In this year's event, participants will still be carted from bar to bar by buses, but will compete in a traveling rubber horse shoe pitching tournament at each of the bars.

The 12 participating bars include the Log Tavern, Beacon, Holiday Inn, Rock Creek, Oasis, Windbreak, Sandpiper, Pocket, Cove, Alley, Elks, Country Inn and Diamondfield Jack's.

The event, which goes from 6 p.m. to midnight, costs $2 a couple. For this fee, each couple receives bus rides from bar to bar, two T-shirts and a scorecard.

To be eligible for the top prize, a one-day river trip for two on the Salmon River, a couple must pick the rubber horseshoes in at least nine of the 12 participating bars, says organizer Laura Ochsenr.

Participants begin at the bar at which they sign up, but can ride the buses to another bar about every 20 to 30 minutes, says Ochsenr.

Those who don't want to drive at the end of the night can arrange in advance to have the buses drop them off at home by calling Trans IV before 5 p.m. and paying an additional $5.

Also today, the American Cancer Society continues to hold those guilty of non-participation in Western Days and previously selected individuals in their jail at the Lynwood Shopping Center.

Arrested individuals must either spend a certain amount of time in the jail or make a contribution to the American Cancer Society to be released.

Briefly

Police investigate cabin death

CASTLEFORD — Officers were continuing Tuesday to investigate the death of Darrell Phillips, 74, of Castleford, who was originally believed to have been asphyxiated from a propane gas leak in his cabin at Roseworth Reservoir, about 25 miles west of Rogerson, during the Memorial Day weekend.

An investigation Tuesday at the cabin by Twin Falls County Coroner Jim Wood and Deputy Sheriff Harold Jensen, along with propane gas experts, all but ruled out asphyxiation from a gas leak in a refrigerator in the cabin. The officers said investigation is continuing but it appears the death was probably from natural causes.

There was no sign of foul play, Jensen said, and a minor gas leak in the refrigerator was not sufficient to cause death or serious illness.

Wood could not be reached Tuesday night, but Jensen said he doubted an autopsy will be called. Several laboratory tests including a blood test will be made, he said.

Deputy Sheriff Gary Kaufman said Phillips and his wife had just closed their home in Castleford for the summer and moved into the cabin for the fishing season.

His wife had suffered what at first was at first thought to be a heart attack Friday night and was being treated at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. Kaufman said Phillips apparently returned to the cabin after admitting his wife to the hospital and may have died Friday night.

He was discovered Monday afternoon by friends, Gerald and Peter Byer of Castleford, who went to check on him when they became alarmed because he had not returned to the hospital.

Jensen said further investigation was being conducted before a final ruling on his death can be made.

Angered bull injures cattleman

THREE CREEK — Bill Swan, 65, a former president of the National Cattlemen's Association, was reported in stable condition Tuesday after he tangled with an angry bull at his House Creek Ranch Monday evening.

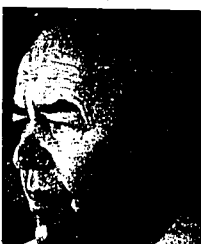

Members of the Swan family said he was moving small group of bulls from his House Creek Ranch at Three Creek to the ranch of his son, George Swan, when one of the bulls turned on him. It knocked his horse down and then attacked Swan.

He suffered two broken ribs and face injuries. The family said a hill separates the two ranches and when he failed to arrive on schedule, George Swan went to look for him and found him walking and leading his horse.

However, he got back on the horse and helped move the bulls to their destination before letting the family take him to the hospital.

Deputy Sheriff Gary Kaufman said the accident occurred shortly after 7 p.m. at the House Creek, part of the Swan Land and Livestock Co., owned by Bill and George Swan and located west of Rogerson.

He said one of the large bulls became angered and went after Swan and the horse. He struck the horse, causing it to fall and when Swan hit the ground, the bull butted and trampled him before the rancher could get away from the animal. He was taken to the hospital by his family about 8:30 p.m.

Woman denies stabbing mate

TWIN FALLS — Deanna Kay Parks, who is accused of stabbing her 62-year-old husband to death April 30, pleaded not guilty Monday in Fifth District Court.

The 38-year-old Parks is charged with second-degree murder for the stabbing death of her husband, Walter Lewis Parks — the couple's residence at 555 1/2 Main Ave. S. in Twin Falls.

Walter Parks died at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center of a single knife wound to the chest area.

At the Monday hearing, Judge Daniel Meehl continued Parks' release on a $2,500 bond. The case will be set for trial.

According to a complaint filed with the court, police found the wounded man after responding to a call about a frantic woman in a bar. When police arrived they found Mrs. Parks running in and out of the bar. She led police to her residence across the street where they found her husband in the living room. The stabbing apparently followed a domestic quarrel.

Two rob Gold Mine Tuesday

TWIN FALLS — An employee of the Gold Mine, an electronic games business in the Blue Lakes Mall, told police he was robbed at knife point early Tuesday morning by two young men.

Public Safety Director Tim Qualls said the report was received at 11:38 a.m. from Mike Woodruff, who said police he was cleaning out the game machine coin boxes in the business when someone knocked on the door. He thought it was probably the assistant manager so he unlocked the door.

The two unidentified suspects forced him to open the safe, he told police, and turn over the approximately $400 in cash that it contained.

Woodruff said the two then left the mall area but he did not see any vehicles or a form of transportation. Both suspects were described as Hispanics, 18 to 20 years of age, under 6 ft. tall and wearing levis. Qualls said his department was continuing the investigation Tuesday afternoon.

Warning: Cancer Society jail reopens

TWIN FALLS — The American Cancer Society warns Twin Falls residents to watch out because society deputies are rounding up people for the annual Western Days Jail at the Lyrwood Shopping Center this week.

Individuals can land in jail in two ways:

First, those who are not wearing Western attire, a Western Days badge or an Optimists garb can be put away for non-participation. The arrested person must then either spend 15 minutes in jail or pay $2 ball to be released.

Second, if the cancer society receives a minimum $10 donation from individuals to arrest a certain person, the deputies will jail that individual for either a predetermined period of time or until he matches the demonation made by those who put out the warrant.

All proceeds from the jail go to the society in its fight against cancer, says organizer Cathy Williams.

But for those people who don't want to or can't participate, the cancer society does not force individuals into the jail against their will, says Williams.

Court upholds beating death decision

BOISE (AP) — A Twin Falls man convicted of voluntary manslaughter two years ago in the beating death of a deaf-mute woman has been denied a new trial in that case.

The Idaho Court of Appeals on Tuesday upheld the conviction handed down by a 5th District Court jury in 1983 against Jerry Pennell, 27, in the death of Carlene Gillespie, 27.

The woman died of a brain hemorrhage in a Boise hospital March 23, 1983, after being beaten in her Twin Falls home.

Pennell originally was charged with first-degree murder, with the prosecutor arguing that his actions constituted "torture and prolonged acts of brutality," according to court records.

However, the jury found Pennell guilty of the lesser offense of voluntary manslaughter. He appealed that decision on the grounds that Judge Thorne Ward erred in not instructing the jury to consider the option of "excusable homicide" under Idaho law.

Pennell argued that evidence was presented at his trial to show Ms. Gillespie's death was not intentional but instead was committed by "accident and misfortune, in the heat of passion."

The appellate court disagreed, citing the fact that Pennell was the only eyewitness to the crime.

"Although Pennell may have not intended to kill the victim, his intentional, continuous striking of her with his fists was not by 'accident or misfortune,'" the court said.

Pennell was sentenced in December 1983 to ten years in prison.

Measles outbreak under control in Minidoka

RUPERT (AP) — The measles outbreak in Minidoka County appears to be under control and winding down, county health officials say.

"We've had a total of 63 confirmed cases, but I think it's slowing down now," said Sandy Stoller, Minidoka County public health nurse. "There were not as many this week as in the previous two weeks.

Over 100 cases have been investigated since the outbreak occurred, but 41 of those were determined not to be measles, she said.

A special immunization clinic was opened last week at East Minidoka

Junior High School, where many of the measles cases have been concentrated. Nearly 150 shots were given about the same number given earlier this month at another special clinic in the health district's Rupert office.

Ms. Stoller said Washington Elementary in Rupert also had a high number of cases. A few were reported at Acquia Elementary and Minico High School.

She said a regular monthly immunization clinic probably will be established with the first one scheduled next month.

"Parents really need to check the records of their children," Ms. Stoller said. "We're finding that most have (received shots for) rubella and mumps but nothing for red measles."

city residents who responded to a J-U-B survey this spring said they wanted the population to grow 2 percent a year. The only way to expand the population is to provide jobs, Foreys said.

He is proposing industrial development be located south of the Rupert Pacific Railroad line and that the city establish a fund to attract new industry there.

The council also supported more private contracts to provide municipal services, if adequate services can be provided for less money. The city now contracts garbage collection and waste water treatment.

The city will continue doing surveys and will eliminate or improve services that the majority of residents rate poor, the council decided. There were no services rating with a rating of "poor" in the recent survey.

victed adults or with other juveniles. And if Morris the sheriff sends Morris to the state prison in Boise for two weeks, he would be unavailable to the Social Department of Health and Welfare for an evaluation, she said.

Meehl denied Power's request to release Morris to his parents for two weeks because Morris was not mature enough.

Yet, the judge granted the delay because he said Morris deserved special treatment due to his age. Had Morris been an adult, however, he would not have granted a delay, Meehl said.

Meehl also told Morris that he wouldn't expect to be placed on probation. Morris probably would be placed in custody for a long time where he would have the opportunity to "grow up."

Meehl said the alternatives at this time appear to be the programs at St. Anthony or Cottonwood or prison, unless Powers recommends other programs.

Morris was remanded to Munn for transportation to the prison.

After the hearing, Powers said he doesn't know how the health and welfare department would be able to evaluate his client because he was sent to Boise.

Powers said he just wanted to find sentencing alternatives for Morris.

Rupert man in jail on narcotics charges

RUPERT — A Rupert man, arrested Friday on a narcotics charge, remained in the Minidoka County Jail Tuesday night to a $25,000 bond. His wife was released on her own recognizance.

Both are awaiting preliminary hearings on felony charges involving alleged sales of marijuana and heroin.

Juan Quintillo, 55, of Rupert, who faces three counts of selling heroin and one of selling marijuana, was given a public defender services when he appeared for arraignment Tuesday before Fifth District Magistrate Donald Workman.

His wife, Rosemary Sanchez, 22, was released on her own recognizance and indicated she will hire an attorney. She is charged with conspiracy to sell illegal drugs. The court will set preliminary hearing dates within the required time frame.

Both were arrested as a result of a joint investigation by Minidoka and Cassia County officers and State Department of Law Enforcement agents. They were arrested at their home near Rupert and officers confiscated a quantity of heroin and marijuana at the same time. No further arrests had been made Tuesday, but officers said the investigation is continuing.

Voters OK school tax

POCATELLO (AP) — Voters in the Pocatello School District gave strong approval Tuesday night to a $766,824 supplemental levy.

Without the extra money for next year's budget, school officials said, the district might have had to cut out a number of programs and sports and drastically reduce maintenance, both during the regular school year and during summer.

The vote was 71.2 percent approval, with 4,299 school district patrons voting in favor of the extra tax out of 6,035 casting ballots.

Pocatello School Board members also were considering leaving the new Rulon M. Ellis Elementary School closed next year. It's named for the district's longtime superintendent.

School officials were considering a number of cuts in programs and activities including closing the high school baseball, cross country, golf, intramurals, tennis and Highland High School's famous Black Watch drill team. That would have saved $24,270.

The district was also considering reducing custodial substitutes by 38 percent, $11,000; eliminating health and science books for primary grades, $30,000; reducing summer maintenance and cleanup crews, $40,724 and eliminating six instructional aide positions, $33,000.

Cutting board, administration and teacher travel leave would have saved $25,000, officials said.

Governor names 4 to state boards

Evans chose Wendell Higgins of Boise as a new member of the state Board of Professional Engineers and Land Surveyors. Higgins, whose term runs until May 24, 1990, succeeds James Johnstone of Boise, whose term has expired.

Kent Meacham of Lapwai and John Driscoll of Troy were named to the Idaho Pea and Lentil Commission, both for terms running until June 30, 1988.

Housekeeping counselor

She once had a messy house herself

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Fifteen years ago, an unexpected visit from her mother could send Norma Anderson into hiding. Today, she not only has an orderly home, but she owns a cleaning and housekeeping counseling business.

Anderson recalls that for the first couple of years after leaving her parents' home, housekeeping did not interest her. When a visitor came by, she hurriedly tried to make the place acceptable.

"You're taking the dirty dishes, and you're shoving them in the oven, and then you turn around and go, 'Oh my gosh, it has a glass window in it!' So then you hang a towel over it to hide that," she says.

When she started her business almost five years ago, she knew her own house would have to be in order if she wanted to succeed. It had to be super clean.

Until that time, she would come home tired from work, turn on the television and let the dishes stack up for three or four days. Then she'd spend her entire day-of-cleaning, because she didn't do it during the week.

"I figured out I wasn't that bad a housekeeper," she says. "I was totally disorganized. Now, I have systemized myself. I know on Monday night I do this, and on Thursday night I do that."

"It's just a matter of 'Oh, I know I'm tired, but if I get up and do this for 15 minutes tonight, 15 minutes tomorrow and 15 minutes the next night, that means I've got an hour free by the end of the week.'"

Anderson found that other people also had trouble keeping an orderly home. For most of her clients, the solution boils down to getting rid of what they don't need, a place for everything and everything in its place, a cleaning schedule, and cooperation from family members.

After going through a home, she decides what can be done to help the homemaker write a program of action. "Some of them," she says, "want it from top to bottom, like the house is a complete disaster, and we need to go from the start, just like a spring cleaning and get it organized."

She advises taking a week or a month — whatever it takes — and tearing into the house from the walls out, removing and sorting everything in every closet and drawer.

"Once they have the initial heavy cleaning all done and get caught up, then they can incorporate the program I write up for them," she says.

Anderson says it is a matter of the housewife reprogramming herself and her family and sticking with it. For most households, it will take a couple of months before they are 100 percent caught up.

"After all, it's a hard old habit to break, because it's one we've all gotten used to — 'I can do that tomorrow' — and pretty soon you've accumulated two extra hours of work. If you'd just taken 15 minutes here and there and done it, you would have some family time free at the end of the week," she says.

When the problem is clutter, she advises sorting, boxing and labeling. And, to remember where everything

Anniversary tips for twice-wed mates

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure there are other couples with this problem, but no one we know has been able to comb up with the answer.

I was married six years ago at a big church wedding. After three years we decided it wasn't working, so we got a divorce. We both dated other people and had our flings for a year and a half, then we realized that we really loved each other and belonged together, so we got married by a justice of the peace in a five-minute ceremony.

Our question: Which wedding date should we celebrate as the official one?

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

Also, how should we figure our special anniversaries? Should we include the time we put in from our first wedding? Or do we have to start counting the years beginning with our second marriage? How about the year and a half we weren't married? Do we have to subtract that from the total of the two marriages? It gets rather complicated.

— TWICE WED, SAME GUY
DEAR TWICE: Celebrate your wedding anniversary on the date of your first marriage. Conveniently forget the year-and-a-half break in marital relations. Call that time off for bad behavior.

DEAR ABBY: I am 16 years old. I bought a motorcycle. It is not registered, is not insured, has no inspection and has my father's old plates from his motorcycle. I've been keeping it at a friend's house because my father wouldn't let me have a motorcycle. He said they're too much trouble. Well, I was riding it and hit a brand-new car, and I'm being sued for $3,000. I don't have enough money to pay it. If I tell my father, I will get into trouble. What should I do?

— ALL LOUSED UP
DEAR LOUSED: Tell your father, and the sooner the better. You're in trouble both ways, and since your father is responsible for you (you are a minor), there's no way you can keep it from him. Confess, take your lumps, and good luck.

Test scores rise as families shrink

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Children in small families have higher IQs and complete more years of schooling than do children of large families, even when family income is taken into account, scientists said Monday.

One researcher noted that the surprising nationwide upturn of SAT scores beginning in 1980 corresponds closely to the decrease in family size during the 1960s and 1970s, when children now taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test were born.

The researcher, Robert Zajonc of the University of Michigan, predicted scores would continue to climb until the year 2000, when the children of today's larger families will begin to show another decline in scores.

He was one of a panel of researchers who discussed their research at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Zajonc said his research shows that the greater the number of children in a family and the shorter the spacing between them, the less their intellectual maturity.

Zajonc cautioned, however, that it would be unwise to base family planning decisions on his research.

"I would not advocate any pattern of spacing or children because many other factors are completely unknown," he said.

The unknowns include the effect of family size on sociability, morality and coping ability, he said. Judith Blake of the University of California in Los Angeles used data on 54,000 children to show that the smaller the family, the more years of schooling the children will receive.

"The advantages of coming from a small family are gigantic — by that I mean two or three children," she said.

Her research clearly shows a difference between families of two or three children and families of six or eight children, she said, but it does not as clearly show, for example, whether having two children might be better than having three.

Ms. Blake said she had analyzed her data in a way that showed that differences in income between large and small families or the higher cost of educating more children were not important.

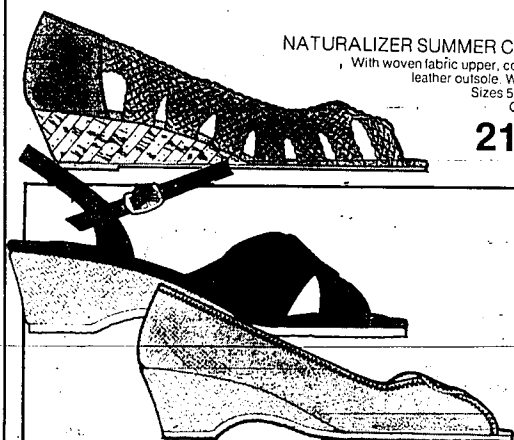

Furthermore, she said, the negative effect on children in large families occurs in grade school, not in high school and college when family resources might be more strained.

James Higgins of Michigan State University, disagreed somewhat with these findings, arguing that the parents of large families tend to have low IQs, and that therefore the children's IQs are merely a reflection of their parents' and are not related to the size of their families.

The researchers also disagreed over the prospects for children with no siblings. Blake found that an only child had an advantage over children in a two-child family. Zajonc found the opposite.

Arkansas favored to win NCAA track crown

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Arkansas Coach John McDonnell, with visions of the 1985 NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships still vivid in his memory, would like to see the results repeated in the outdoor championships.

The Razorbacks won the men's indoor title at Syracuse, N.Y., with 70 points — 41 more than their closest competitor, Tennessee.

McDonnell called it "a perfect" performance by the Razorbacks.

"I would like to have a rerun of it in this meet," McDonnell said as he favored Arkansas prepared to launch a bid for its first title in the 64-year history of the outdoor championships, which start in full today at the University of Texas Memorial Stadium.

"If we perform the way we did indoors, we'll win. Everything went just right for us then."

"But we have to go out and do our job. We can't worry about anybody else. We have to take care of business, just like we did indoors. Everyone makes us the favorite, but Washington State has some very good people and will be tough."

Still, with a team led by sprinter Michael Conley and freestyle swimmer Riddie Haley, a loss by the Razorbacks would be considered an upset. A win would give them a sweep of the 1984-85 collegiate track titles — they also won the NCAA Cross Country title last fall.

Texas-El Paso accomplished that trick crown three times — in 1979-80, 1980-81, and 1981-82. Villanova and Kansas have also won all three, but not in the same year.

"Joining a group like that would be quite an honor," said McDonnell.

"It's a pleasure to coach a team like this. They're the most 'Fun Bunch' I've had. They want to win even more than the coaches. When you have that kind of chemistry, it makes it easy. They're winners."

The biggest winner has been Conley.

He has an Olympic silver medal in the triple jump and has won seven NCAA titles in the long jump and triple jumps. He has a total of 12 Southwest Conference titles, eight in the long jump and four in the triple jump.

He will be shooting for four titles in this meet, which began Monday with the decathlon and heptathlon and ends Saturday with 20 finals. Wednesday's program will be qualifying in 16 events and the women's 10,000-meter final. Thursday, there will be qualifying in 20 events, and Friday, there will be 17 finals.

Conley is favored to defend his titles in the long jump and triple jump. He also runs the second leg on Arkansas' favored 400-meter relay team, and is expected to give defending champion and Olympic silver medalist Kirk Baptiste of Houston a strong run in the 200.

Haley, a 19-year-old who owns the fastest time in the world this year, 40.44 (44.67 seconds), will be matched against Olympic silver medalist Gabriel Tlaoh of the Ivory Coast and Washington State; Southern Illinois' Michael Franks, bronze medalist in the 1983 World Championships; Nigerian Sunday Uti of Missouri; fourth-place finisher in the 400 hurdles, Jake Jacoby of Boise State in the high jump, and American record holder Joe Dial of Oklahoma State in the pole vault.

and 1,600-meter relay teams.

Arkansas also counts heavily on Fred Cleary in the 110-meter hurdles, 400-meter intermediate hurdles, and both relays; Marty Kobza in the discus and shot put; Bill Jasinski in the high jump; Mark Klee in the pole vault; Paul Donovan in the 1,500 meters, and Joey Wells and Mike Davis in the long jump.

However, sprinter Wallace Spearmon has a right hamstring, and his status for the 100, 200 and 400-meter relay is uncertain.

Other defending champions include Ed Eyestone of Brigham Young in the 10,000, Olympic silver medalist Danny Harris of Iowa State in the 400 hurdles, Jake Jacoby of Boise State in the high jump, and American record holder Joe Dial of Oklahoma State in the pole vault.

Haley also will run on the 400-meter and 1,600-meter relay teams.

The women's meet is expected to be between Oregon and UCLA, the 1982 and 1983 champion.

Jackie Joyner of UCLA, Olympic silver medalist and two-time champion in the heptathlon, skipped that event to compete in the long jump, high hurdles and relays.

Oregon is led by Claudette Greenendaal, defending champion in the 1,500; Kathy Hayes, defending champion in the 10,000, and Leann Warren, the 1983 champion in the 1,500.

Other women's defending champions are Cathy Branta of Wisconsin in the 3,000, Olympic gold medalist Nawal El Moutawakil of Morocco and Iowa State in the 400 hurdles, Terri Turner of Texas in the triple jump, and Iris Gronfeldt of Alabama in the javelin.

Pirates find selling a losing team tough

PITTSBURGH (AP) — There's an old baseball saying that you can't buy a pennant. The Pittsburgh Pirates are finding out that it's just as difficult to sell a loser.

The Pirates, who haven't risen from last place in the National League East since mid-April 1984, have been for sale since Nov. 1, and club Treasurer Doug McCormick says there are no offers on the table.

The original March 1 sale deadline imposed by club President Dan Gairbreath has long since passed and McCormick now says the end of the season is a more realistic target.

"This is proving more difficult than we anticipated," McCormick said.

The Pirates were one of the baseball's strongest on-the-field franchises during the 1970s, although they never drew more than 1.7 million fans even in their most successful seasons.

A team filled with recognizable names such as Roberto Clemente, Willie Stargell, Dave Parker and John Candelaria won two World Series, two National League titles and six NL East titles between 1970 and 1979.

In the five seasons since, however, the Pirates have finished no better than second and have twice finished last in the NL East, including during the second half of the strike-shortened 1981 split season.

And if there has ever been a worse time to sell a team that is short on both victories and paying customers, it is now. For example:

—The Pirates were the only NL team failing to draw at least 1 million customers last season. They drew only 737,500, or an average of 10,100 per playing date — less than half the per-game average of 28,000 they drew on the road.

—Attendance is up only slightly this season. And the Pirates continue to draw less than half as many fans at home as they do on the road.

—The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette recently asked readers, "If the Pirates were to leave the city, would you care?" Of the 2,840 readers responding, 38 percent replied either "no" (20 percent) or "no strong feeling" (18 percent).

—The threat of a major league players strike looms over the Pirates. A 50-day walkout in 1981 seriously reduced attendance after games resumed in August.

—Population in the Pittsburgh metropolitan area, ravaged by heavy industry shutdowns and a decline in blue-collar jobs, is dropping, according to recent federal studies. The city now ranks as among the smallest in major league baseball and its unemployment is among the highest in the country.

—There are questions about the stability of the front office. Gairbreath, dismissed by the team's slow start, last week fired Executive Vice President and General Manager Harding "Pete" Peterson, the team's chief executive for nine years. Peterson was a 35-year Pirates' employee.

—The Pirates have one of baseball's most anemic offenses. They have hit only 16 homers in 41 games — fewer than any team in baseball — and recently endured a five-game stretch in which they didn't generate a single extra-base hit. And their pitching, the league's best in 1984, now ranks last in earned run average.

—A Pittsburgh federal grand jury's investigation of possible drug trafficking ties to major league players could be "bad for baseball," said Commissioner Peter Ueberroth. If some Pirates are implicated, it could further erode attendance by already disillusioned fans.

—A lease binds the Pirates to Three Rivers Stadium until 2011. Even if an out-of-town buyer is willing to pay the $25 million to $40 million asking price for the Pirates, he would almost certainly face litigation if he attempted to break the lease and move the club.

Two groups reportedly are involved in negotiations with McCormick, both of whom are said to be willing to keep the team in Pittsburgh — for now. But even McCormick acknowledges that the longer the sale drags on, the more likely it becomes that stockholders will permit a sale without assurances that the new owners will honor the stadium lease.

Philosophy leads Chicago to fire Kevin Loughery

CHICAGO (AP) — Kevin Loughery, who guided the Chicago Bulls to their first NBA playoff appearance in four years, was fired Tuesday by club vice president Jerry Krause over "philosophical" differences.

Loughery will be paid $265,000 for the remaining year of his three-year contract with the National Basketball Association team.

Also dismissed were assistant coaches Bill Blair and Fred Carter.

"It's not an easy thing. It's never an easy thing in this situation to let someone go," said Krause. "I hope I never have to do this again."

Krause said he made his decision this weekend after meeting with Loughery and new Bulls owner Jerry Reinsdorf. "Jerry agreed with me that it was best for the long-range goals of the franchise," said Krause.

Krause said he had not spoken with anyone about assuming Loughery's duties and there was no deadline to pick a new coach. He described his differences with Loughery as "philosophical ones," but declined to comment further.

"I won't say what I'm looking for," Krause said. "I don't want someone to come in and say what I expect to hear."

Krause said he talked to Loughery by telephone this morning and "he took it like a man with class."

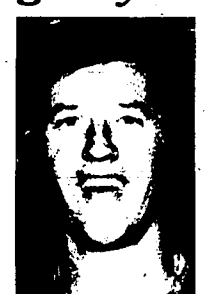

Loughery, 45, said from his home in Atlanta that he spoke with Krause early Tuesday.

"He said I was being fired because of a difference in philosophy," said Loughery. "I don't know what that means."

"This is the first time I've ever been fired. I'm sad about it, but I'm not going to blow my brains out," he said. "I came in with the team and the organization floundering and we made the playoffs and doubled the attendance. There was some definite progress made."

Krause said he waited until after the NBA playoffs to dismiss the coaches "so I could step back and not let emotion play a part in it."

In another NBA team move Tuesday, Philadelphia 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham quit after an eight-year tenure that included a world championship and two trips to the NBA finals. Last week, the 76ers lost the Eastern Conference championship to the Boston Celtics.

The Bulls finished the season at 38-44, losing in the first round of the playoffs to the Milwaukee Bucks. It was their first playoff appearance since the 1980-81 season.

Loughery began his NBA career as a player with the Detroit Pistons in 1962 after playing college ball at St. John's. He went on to play with the then-Baltimore Bullets before winding up with Philadelphia in 1972.

Before that season ended, Loughery was named head coach of the 76ers, but left the following year for the American Basketball Association and took the New York Nets to the league championship.

He returned to the NBA when the leagues merged, and took the Nets — who were shifted to New Jersey — to their first playoff berth in the 1978-79 season. After two more years with the Nets, he became head coach of the Atlanta Hawks.

Loughery, who has also worked as a CBS color commentator during the playoffs, has been discussed as a candidate for the coaching job with the Sacramento Kings, newly transferred from Kansas City.

'Ladies day' should be Muny's most protected, pro claims

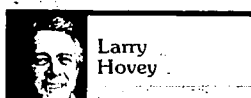

TWIN FALLS — The latest round of "rights" that has hit the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course is causing some distraction among the people this minor temple professes to champion.

The Twin Falls Ladies Golf Association began circulating petitions at the clubhouse over the weekend, soliciting support for a "ladies day" on Thursday morning.

The petition, if you haven't read it, concerns the Sunday morning four-hour "males-only" rule that has been in existence for the past millennium. A local woman, who was asked to wait for a tee time until after 11 a.m. on Sunday, has taken the case to the city council.

The women's association is seeking a status quo — which it won't get when one considers the nine black-belted sitting in Washington, D.C.

Because, you see, the threat is not greatest to the male of the golfing species. It is to the female. It is considered almost imperative that there be a "ladies day" if the number of women playing the game is to increase.

Larry Hovey

The one closest to the situation in this instance would be Professional Don Hamblin — and Hamblin is a little reluctant to discuss the situation right now.

"Last time I said something about it I was misquoted and the thing got so twisted that it made me look like a fool... like saying a woman can't concentrate as well as a man, things like that," he said.

But after some cajoling, Hamblin agreed to a little more discussion of the situation.

"It is imperative that we can reserve a ladies' day," Hamblin said. "A great many women take up the game because their husbands play it. Between the men and women's associations here we conduct a lot of co-sponsored events. We have the Sunday afternoon scotchball (men and women teams), there is a Chapman association within the state. We have the Fourth of July mixed scramble. We have excellent participation in all these things and it is reasonable to assume from the numbers that this idea of men hating to play golf with or around women is not universal."

"My feeling is the women have to learn to play somehow and that a ladies' day is the best. When I was quoted the last time as saying the 'men would run over the women,' I was referring to Thursday morning, not Sunday morning," Hamblin said.

"When these women come out to learn they are aware they are not going to hit the ball as far as men. In fact, we've had some very interested women decide to quit playing because they felt they were holding up other women playing with them or behind them. If men were allowed to play on Thursday morning, it would make our beginners feel even more uncomfortable. That is exactly the situation the 'ladies' day' is designed to combat."

"We've found over the years that a twosome of beginners may be the best. They have the feeling they are moving along with the rest, they are better able to concentrate because of that — and the fact they generally are hitting every other shot. There is nothing worse for concentration than having the feeling that the group behind you is waiting and pushing."

"Usually you'll find that women have heard the complaint about slow play so much they have found ways to overcome it. Overall, women's groups usually move more quickly down a fairway than men. But the fact that they don't hit the ball as far gives the impression that they are slower."

Hamblin refused any indication he or the men's association were against females on the golf course — even on Sunday morning.

"First, I've had very little discussion about the Sunday morning rule with any of our regular players. No one seems to mind it," he said. "Second, one of the main thrusts within the PGA and USGA is promoting golf. This course, along with just about every other one around here, has a long history of promoting junior and beginning women's golf clinics where the professional gives his time to provide as much instruction as possible. This course — and Magic Valley have been instrumental in establishing a very strong junior golf program in the state."

"Right now the women are in the process of rating all the courses in the state for their playing and handicap purposes. Jackie Gates (Twin Falls) is heading up an eight-woman committee to complete that this summer."

Hamblin quickly agrees that not all male golfers are of the long-suffering white knight variety. He knows if the Sunday rule is vacated, he'll be hearing some complaints.

"But the essential thing here is that we continue to have a ladies' day. I think that is the last thing we'd want to give up," he says.

Jays run win skein to club-record eight

By The Associated Press

Dave Stieb hurled a three-hitter and Ernie Whitt drove in two runs with a homer and two singles Tuesday night to lead the Toronto Blue Jays past the Chicago White Sox 6-1 for a club-record eighth straight victory.

It marked the first time in their nine-year history that the Blue Jays had won eight straight. The loss was the seventh in a row for the White Sox. Stieb, 33, posted his fourth successive triumph while boosting his lifetime record to 11-5 against Chicago.

Loser Richard Dotson, 23, held the Blue Jays hitless until Len Matuszek tripled to open the fifth inning and scored on a single by Whitt.

The Blue Jays scored another run in the sixth on George Bell's fielder's choice after Toronto loaded the bases on a single by Rance Mulliniks, a double by Lloyd Moseby and an intentional walk to Willie Upshaw.

Whitt's sixth homer triggered a four-run seventh in which pinch-hitter Garth Iorg singled in one run and Upshaw doubled home two more.

Stieb ran his string of scoreless innings to 19 before Chicago scored an unearned run in the sixth on Stieb's error. Stieb walked one and fanned five.

Rangers 6, Royals 1

Burt Hooton scattered seven hits and Texas rookie Oddie McMillen drove in a pair of runs as the Rangers edged Kansas City 6-1 to stop the Royals' six-game winning streak.

Hooton, 2-1, struck out four in posting his first complete game this season and his first ever in the American League.

In the third inning, McMillen bunted toward Royal second baseman Frank White after Wayne Tolleson had singled and stolen second. White tripped to scoop the ball to first baseman Steve Balboni, but it dribbled under his glove into short right field as Tolleson scored and McDowell slid into second with a double.

McDowell lofted a sacrifice fly to deep center in the fourth after the Rangers loaded the bases on consecutive singles by Larry Parrish, Don Slaught and Tolleson of Kansas City starter Mark Gubicin, 3-2.

Texas added a run in the eighth when Gary Ward doubled leading off, stole third and scored on a two-out single by Slaught.

Brewers 3, Indians 2

Moose Haas and Rolfe Fingers combined on a five-hitter, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Haas, 5-2, didn't give up a walk and had one strikeout before leaving with one out in the eighth. Fingers picked up his seventeenth.

The Brewers took a 1-0 lead on consecutive doubles by Paul Molitor and Charlie Moore off Neal Heaton, 3-4, to open the first inning.

Milwaukee added another run in the third when Moore was hit by a pitch, went to third on Cecil Cooper's double and scored on Robin Yount's sacrifice fly to right.

In the fourth, the Brewers went to 3-0 on Molitor's sacrifice fly after leading the bases on singles by Bobby Clark and Paul Householder, Ed Barrow's fielder's choice and a walk to Brian Giles.

The Indians, with the aid of two errors, chased Haas in the eighth inning.

George Vuckovich led off with a single and scored, then later on Tony Bernazard's double to the right-field corner. Right-fielder Householder misplayed the ball off the wall, allowing Bernazard to go to third and bringing on Fingers.

Butch Benson followed with a fly to left, and Bernazard tagged up to score. Outfielder Robin Yount's one-bounce throw to the plate beat the runner, but catcher Moore dropped the ball.

Heaton scattered seven hits, walked two and had four strikeouts.

Pirates nip Astros 4-3 in 12 innings

By The Associated Press

Junior Ortiz singled with the bases loaded in the top of the 12th inning Tuesday night, sending the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-3 victory over the Houston Astros.

Ortiz had entered the game as a pinch-runner—in the fourth inning—when starting catcher Tony Pena sprained his ankle.

Cecilio Guante, 1-0, the fourth Pirates pitcher, worked the final three innings for the victory.

National

Cards 9, Braves 3

Tito Landrum hit a two-run homer that triggered a seven-run fourth and a single that capped the inning as the St. Louis Cardinals hammered the Atlanta Braves 9-3 with a 19-hit attack.

Landrum's first homer of the season came just after Jack Clark started the inning with a broken-bat single and stole before the game was delayed by rain for 24 minutes.

The Cards resumed the assault on Zane Smith, 2-4, after the shower. Terry Pendleton doubled and moved to third on Ozzie Smith's high chop to the mound.

Tom Niles scored Pendleton with a squeeze bunt and was again pinched Smith was charged with obstructing the base path.

Bob Forsch followed with a single, Vince Coleman had an RBI double, Willie McGee a two-run double and Clark a run-scoring single, giving St. Louis a 7-0 lead.

Forsch, 4-2, held the Braves hitless until Dave Murphy opened the fifth with his 12th homer. Forsch allowed six hits before leaving in the seventh. Charlie Moore pitched three innings for his third save.

Reds 13, Cubs 11

Tony Perez hit a three-run homer and keyed a tie-breaking two-run seventh inning with a run-scoring double, anchoring a relentless Cincinnati comeback that swept the Reds to a wild 13-11 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The Cubs belted 19 hits but wasted leads of 5-0 and 10-5 in the slugfest. The Reds countering with five runs in the fourth and six in the sixth.

After Chris Speier's first homer of the season tied it 1-1 in the top of the seventh, Gary Redus led off the bottom of the inning with an infield single against Larry Sorensen, 1-1, stole second and raced home on Concepcion's single. Concepcion stole second and scored on Perez's double. Perez had three of Cincinnati's 15 hits.

Jabbar admits to rough handling but denies any age factor

BOSTON (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, while admitting he was outplayed and outshined by Boston center Robert Parish in Los Angeles' 34-point Game 1 defeat in the NBA finals, said Tuesday that age was not the reason for his poor performance.

"People have questioned whether I was too old since I was 33 and I've done pretty well since then," said Abdul-Jabbar, who at age 33 is the oldest player in the National Basketball Association. "I'm in a unique situation being the only player around born in 1947, but I'm not ready to start doubting myself yet. I'm not that much older than I was last week in the Denver series."

Abdul-Jabbar, who was the all-NBA center last year and made second-team all-league behind Moses Malone this season, was held to 12 points and three rebounds by the Celtics Monday as the Lakers lost 114-114 in the opener of the best-of-seven championship series.

Boston set records for total points, points at halftime, largest halftime lead, field goals and field-goal percentage while handing the Lakers their worst playoff defeat ever.

"I guess I was sleepwalking out there," Abdul-Jabbar said. "I wasn't in the game the way I had to be to help the team. I didn't run the court well and I didn't deal with the double-teaming the way I can."

"We had a half-court by a lot of players, and I was principal among them."

He said most of the Lakers will have to improve if they

Bird, Johnson head all-star voting

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics and Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers, who led their respective teams into the National Basketball Association championship series, head the official All-NBA First team announced Tuesday.

Bird, with 156 points, was named to the first team by all 17 members of the media panel voting for the All-NBA teams — three from each franchise city and nine representatives of the national media. He is the first unanimous choice since 1982, when he also was named on all ballots.

Johnson finished second in the voting with 146 points

based on two points for each of the 69 First Team votes and one for each of the nine Second Team votes.

Completing the All-NBA First Team were guard Isiah Thomas of the Detroit Pistons, with 41 first team votes and 112 points overall; center Moses Malone of the Philadelphia 76ers, 40 and 110; and forward Bernard King of the New York Knicks, 40 and 107.

The closest race was at the center position, where Malone, the NBA rebounding champion for the fifth straight season, edged Kareem Abdul-Jabbar by just three points.

are to win the second game at Boston Garden Thursday night.

"It's not all on my shoulders to turn it around, but I have to play better, get better shot selection and get up and down the court quicker," Abdul-Jabbar said. "It was like we had our feet nailed to the ground on Monday."

When the Lakers won Game 1 of last year's final against the Celtics, Abdul-Jabbar scored 32 points despite a migraine headache, a problem he's had on several occasions during his career. Two years ago, he improved his season's scoring average after his house burned down.

"Maybe I need some personal problems to play well," said Abdul-Jabbar. "But I don't like having my house burn or have headgear in order to play good basketball."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley said his team's 63-43 rebounding deficit Monday must be narrowed if Los Angeles is to get its running game going, and Abdul-Jabbar, at 7-foot-2, is a key player on the boards.

"Although he's the leading scorer of all time and one of the greatest basketball players ever," Kareem always has been criticized for his rebounding," Riley said. "It's his responsibility to go to the boards. Rebounding is hard work. It's the free enterprise system under there and he has to go get it."

Boston Coach K.C. Jones said Parish, who was not speaking to reporters Tuesday, had a strong performance against Abdul-Jabbar. "But there's no one in the world that can stop Kareem by himself."

Parish had 18 points and eight rebounds in Game 1. "You put two people on Kareem and your're still not going to stop him, but you can slow him up a little bit," Jones said. "Robert had a lot of help in there. He just tries to hold him up until someone gets there to help. We try to double-team Kareem and make him throw the ball back outside."

Jones said Boston's goal against Abdul-Jabbar is to make him hurry his shots or make him think of passing the ball.

"He's not going to get his favorite shots against us," Jones said. "He's still going to score, but he doesn't have enough room to operate."

But Abdul-Jabbar said if the Lakers get their offense running correctly, it will open more opportunities for everybody.

"I was surprised at how poorly we played," he said. "We have only ourselves to blame. I don't think their defense was that great."

Drug indictments due Friday

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal grand jury which has questioned major league baseball players in its investigation of illegal drug sales in the Pittsburgh area is expected to hand up indictments on Friday, according to a published report.

The New York Times, quoting a source familiar with the investigation in its Wednesday edition, said that even though about a dozen players had testified, it did not appear that any would be indicted.

The source, however, said a final decision has not been made on whether any of the players would be named as indicted co-conspirators.

Several of the players who testified, and perhaps all of them, have been granted immunity from prosecution. But that would not preclude them from being named as indicted co-conspirators or being named in the grand jury report.

Jerry Johnson, the U.S. Attorney for the Western

District of Pennsylvania, has steadfastly refused comment on the matter, and has not even confirmed that an investigation is in progress.

Law enforcement officials have previously indicated that drug dealers were the targets of the investigation. The officials have said investigations may be conducted in other cities once the Pittsburgh grand jury is finished. Atlanta and St. Louis have been mentioned as other cities where investigations may occur.

Players who have testified before the grand jury in Pittsburgh are Lee Mazzilli, Rod Scurry and Al Holland of Pittsburgh; Dave Parker of Cincinnati; Dale Berra of the New York Yankees; Jeff Leonard of San Francisco; Enos Cabell of Houston; Tim Lincecum of Montreal; Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets; Lee Lacy of Baltimore and Lonnie Smith of Kansas City.

SEC framing recruiting code

DESTIN, Fla. (AP) — Southeastern Conference officials are meeting here this week to discuss league matters that include growing concern over recruiting practices of the 10 member schools.

Tuesday offered a day of relaxation for athletic directors, coaches and other administrators who convened Sunday to begin the annual five-day spring meeting at a resort hotel.

Business resumes Wednesday, when the University of Tennessee is expected to air its opposition to an executive committee decision that let the University of Florida keep its first-ever SEC football crown despite NCAA probation.

The league barred Florida from participating in a post-season game last season after the NCAA announced the Gators were headed for probation. The executive committee voted this spring to allow the team to keep the title, saying the Gators had already suffered enough.

Tennessee President Ed Bolling said last week that he would challenge that decision when the league presidents meet as a group here.

Athletic Directors, faculty chairmen and the executive committee are also scheduled to meet Wednesday. The first of two league business meetings will follow the group discussions.

Officials huddled Monday to discuss an "ethics code" that would help the conference monitor recruiting practices of member institutions. The executive committee could take action on the proposal Wednesday or Thursday.

"We believe this is a positive move by the conference to bring about a better feeling within the conference and toward each other," said Vanderbilt athletic director Roy Kramer.

"The purpose is to set up guidelines, and to make sure the coaches know those guidelines," Kramer continued, adding that an ethics code would "clarify procedures" with regard to "accusations or alleged violations."

The idea behind the legislation is to recognize potential problems and correct them before matters get out of hand.

Both the Florida and Georgia football programs have been placed on

"We feel as a conference we have done these things in the past," he added. "But we need to standardize."

The next step for the proposals is consideration by athletic directors.

Oilers within one win of title

Edmonton, Alberta (AP) — Wayne Gretzky continued his playoff heroics with a pair of power-play goals Tuesday night to lift the Edmonton Oilers within one victory of their second straight Stanley Cup with a 5-3 triumph over the Philadelphia Flyers.

If the Oilers, leading the series 3-1, can win here Thursday night, they will annex their second consecutive National Hockey League championship in five games. The Flyers, who passed Edmonton late in the regular season to win the overall points title, must capture three in a row — Thursday, then Sunday and next Tuesday in Philadelphia.

The Oilers have won 15 straight home-playoff contests.

Philadelphia held a 3-1 edge in the first period, but fell victim to Edmonton's revitalized power play. The Oilers were 1-for-14 with a man advantage in this series, but connected four times in six tries Tuesday night.

One of those goals was by Peter Coffey, giving him 10 for the entire playoffs, a record for defensemen. And Gretzky got one in the second period to boost the Oilers ahead for the first time, then clinched the victory with another in the third.

Gretzky, who scored three goals in Game 3, pounced on a loose puck in the slot at 12:53 of the middle session after Coffey's long shot had been blocked. Gretzky put a backhander past goalie Pelle Lindbergh to the far side to make it 4-3.

At 3:42 of the final period, Mark Messier, who scored three goals in Game 3, sent a backhand pass to Gretzky, who fired a wrist shot over the glove of goalie Bob Froese, who replaced Lindbergh to start the third period. It was the 16th goal of the playoffs for Gretzky, who has already broken his own playoff points record with 43.

The furiously paced first period had just about everything a hockey game can offer. Just as in Game 3, play was wide open, with frequent breakaways and 2-on-1s for both teams.

The Flyers struck first 46 seconds in as Rich Sutter got his first goal of the playoffs. Fuhr made a superb pad save on a Derrick Smith shot and also blocked Ron Sutter on the rebound. The puck skidded behind the net, where Rich Sutter grabbed it and sent a backhand in front which bounced in off the skate of Oilers defenseman Charlie Huddy.

Edmonton tied it at 4:22 when Coffey established his record with a 50-foot slapshot on a power play. But the Oilers' Pat Hughes and Mark Messier were penalized within 42 seconds, handing the Flyers' a two-man advantage.

They cashed in for only their second power-play goal in 20 tries when Bergen blasted a 40-footer past Fuhr's glove.

At 6:32, referee Kerry Fraser — who was substituting for Andy Van Heilmond, out with a bad back — whistled Flyers defenseman Doug Crossman for holding. When Crossman complained, he was given an additional two minutes for unsportsmanlike conduct.

But the Oilers were virtually helpless early in the power play and Ron Sutter broke free when he knocked the puck away from Coffey. He never got off the shot as Messier hooked him to the ice and Fraser awarded Sutter a penalty shot.

It was only the third penalty shot ever in the finals and the third which failed. Sutter, who also missed a penalty shot against the New York Islanders during the season, attempted to put a wrist shot between Fuhr's legs but the goalie got his right leg pad on the puck.

Muzzio repeats as decathlon champion

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Rob Muzzio of George Mason, with a gutsy performance in the 1,500 meters, won the decathlon event in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships for the second straight year, edging Gary Kinder of New Mexico by five points.

Muzzio, the first to win two consecutive NCAA decathlon titles, since the event became part of the meet in 1970, finished with 7,964 points, compared with 7,959 for the frustrated Kinder.

Two other athletes, both from Brigham Young, have won more than one NCAA decathlon title, but not in consecutive years. Ralmo Pihl of BYU won in 1973 and 1975 and Tito Steiner won the NCAA decathlon champion in 1977, 1979 and 1981.

Going into the 1,500, the final event, Muzzio was in second place, 175 points behind Kinder. But in the grueling event, Muzzio finished third in the 14-man field in 4 minutes, 23.64 seconds for a total of 787 points.

The tired Kinder wound up last in 3:52.01 and collected only 607 points — a swing of 189 points.

Amazingly, Muzzio, a 6-foot-2, 193-pound junior from Fairfax, Va., took the 1,500-meter high hurdles and in the 110-meter high hurdles and in the 1,500 — and that was enough.

Last year, when he set the meet record with 8,227 points, Muzzio was first in the shot put and the discus throw, but never worse than fourth in any event.

Muzzio began the final day in first place with a total of 4,066 points, while Kinder was tied for fifth with 3,946. But Kinder vaulted into a five-point lead after Tuesday's second event, the discus, by placing first with a heave of 162-6 to Muzzio's 142-9, good for only seventh.

The advantage remained the same after the pole vault, as both cleared 15-9, but Kinder widened the lead by finishing second in the javelin with a toss of 222-9, good for second, to Muzzio's 198-7, for fifth.

That paved the way for the stirring finish in the 1,500.

Perkins survives big trouble to win title

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Ed Perkins was in trouble. Big trouble.

"Very big trouble," Perkins said, shaking his head Monday as he wondered how he managed to beat Sun Valley's Mark Scribner and win the men's open division of the Southwest Idaho Open Tennis Tournament.

Perkins beat Scribner 6-4, 3-6, 7-6 (4-6) as about 100 sun-baked spectators lounged on the grass and patio in the backyard of the Boise Racquet and Swim Club, where Perkins is a teaching professional.

In the women's open division, a field of six saw whitellid Kelley top-seeded Tracy Carpenter defeated unseeded Liz Trutanich 6-1, 6-4. Only two of the six entrants were seeded.

The Perkins-Scribner score tells how close the match was. What it doesn't tell is how many times Perkins was given up for dead against Scribner, a serve-and-smash artist who has been on the pro tour recently.

Jays run win skein to club-record eight

By The Associated Press

Dave Stieb hurled a three-hitter and Ernie Whitliff drove in two runs with a homer and two singles Tuesday night to lead the Toronto Blue Jays past the Chicago White Sox 6-1 for a club-record eighth straight victory.

It marked the first time in their nine-year history that the Blue Jays had won eight straight. The loss was the seventh in a row for the White Sox.

Stieb, 35, posted his fourth successive triumph while boosting his lifetime record to 11-3 against Chicago.

Losser Richard Dotson, 32, held the Blue Jays hitless until Len Matusek tripped to open the fifth inning and scored on a single by Whitliff.

The Blue Jays scored another run in the sixth on George Bell's fielder's choice after Toronto loaded the bases on a single by Rene Mulliniks, a double by Lloyd Moseby and an intentional walk to Willie Upshaw.

Whitliff's sixth homer triggered a four-run seventh in which pinch-hitter Garth Risher singled in one run and Upshaw doubled home two more.

Stieb ran his string of scoreless innings to 19 before Chicago scored an unearned run in the sixth on Stieb's error. Stieb walked one and fanned five.

Rangers 6, Royals 1

Burt Hooton scattered seven hits and Texas rookie Oddie McDowell drove in a pair of runs as the Rangers edged Kansas City 6-1 to stop the Royals' six-game winning streak.

Hooton, 21, struck out four in posting his first complete game this season and his first ever in the American League.

In the third inning, McDowell bunted toward Royal second baseman Frank White after Wayne Tolleson had singled and stolen second. White tried to scoop the ball to first baseman Steve Balboni, but it dribbled under his glove into short right field as Tolleson scored and McDowell slid into second with a double.

McDowell lofted a sacrifice fly to deep center in the fourth after the Rangers loaded the bases on consecutive singles by Larry Parrish, Don Slaught and Tolleson off Kansas City starter Mark Cuban, 1-3.

Texas added a run in the eighth when Gary Ward doubled leading off, stole third and scored on a two-out single by Slaught.

Brewers 3, Indians 2

Moore Hidas and Rolfe Fingers combined on a five-hitter, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Haas, 5-2, didn't give up a walk and had one strikeout before leaving with one out in the eighth. Fingers picked up his seventh save.

The Brewers took a 1-0 lead on consecutive doubles by Paul Molitor and Charlie Moore off Neal Heaton, 3-4, to open the first inning.

Milwaukee added another run in the third when Moore was hit by a pitch, went to third on Cecil Cooper's double and scored on Robin Yount's sacrifice fly to right.

In the fourth, the Brewers went up 3-0 on Molitor's sacrifice fly after leading the bases on singles by Bobby Clark and Paul Hulseholder, Ed Romero's fielder's choice and a walk to Brian Giles.

The Indians, with the aid of two errors, chased Haas in the eighth inning.

George Vuckovich led off with a single and scored one out later on Tony Bernazard's double to the right-field corner. Right-fielder Hulseholder misplayed the ball off the wall, allowing Bernazard to go to third and bringing on Fingers.

Butch Benton followed with a fly to left, and Bernazard tagged up to score. Outfielder Robin Yount's one-bounce throw to the plate beat the runner, but catcher Moore dropped the ball.

Heaton scattered seven hits, walked two and had four strikeouts.

while Big O Tires, getting homers from Lonn Theale and Ken Peterson, fanned All's Fires/Danley's 12-3.

In B action, The Pocket/Petersen Construction trimmed Okay Paving 11-5 and Ground Round handled Jim's Signs/Kentucky Fried Chicken 13-1. # Pirates nip Astros 4-3 in 12 innings

By The Associated Press

Junior Ortiz singled with the bases loaded in the top of the 12th inning Tuesday night, sending the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-3 victory over the Houston Astros.

Ortiz had entered the game as a pinch-runner in the fourth inning, when starting catcher Tony Pena sprained his ankle.

Cecilio Guzman, 1-0, the fourth Pirates pitcher, worked the final three innings for the victory.

Cards 9, Braves 3

Tito Landrum hit a two-run homer that triggered a seven-run fourth and a single that capped the inning as the St. Louis Cardinals hammered the Atlanta Braves 9-3 with a 19-hit attack.

Landrum's first homer of the season came just after Jack Clark started the inning with a broken-bat single and just before the game was delayed by rain for 24 minutes.

The Cards resumed the assault on Zane Smith, 2-4, after the shower. Terry Pendleton doubled and moved to third on Ozzie Smith's high chop to the mound.

Tom Nieto scored Pendleton with a squeeze bunt and was safe when pitcher Smith was charged with obstructing the base path.

Bob Forsch followed with a single, Vince Coleman had an RBI double, Willie McGee a two-run double and Clark a run-scoring single, giving St. Louis a 7-0 lead.

Forsch, 4-2, held the Braves hitless until Dale Murphy opened the fifth with his 12th homer. Forsch allowed six hits before leaving in the seventh. Jeff Lahti pitched three innings for his third save.

Reds 13, Cubs 11

Tony Perez hit a three-run homer and keyed a tie-breaking two-run seventh inning with a run-scoring double, anchoring a relentless Cincinnati comeback that swept the Reds to a wild 13-11 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The Cubs belted 19 hits but wasted leads of 6-0 and 10-6 in the slugfest; the Reds countering with five runs in the fourth and six in the sixth.

After Chris Speier's first homer of the season led off the top of the seventh, Gary Redus led off the bottom of the inning with an infield single against Larry Sorensen, 1-1, stole second and raced home on Concepcion's single. Concepcion stole second and scored on Perez's double. Perez had three of Cincinnati's 15 hits.

Jabbar admits to rough handling but denies any age factor

BOSTON (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, while admitting he was outplayed and outshined by Boston center Robert Parish in Los Angeles' 114-107 Game 1 defeat in the NBA Finals, said Tuesday that age was not the reason for his poor performance.

"People have questioned whether I was too old since I was 33 and I've done pretty well since then," said Abdul-Jabbar, who at age 38 is the oldest player in the National Basketball Association. "I'm in a unique situation being the only player around born in 1947, but I'm not ready to start doubting myself yet. I'm not that much older than I was last week in the Denver series."

Abdul-Jabbar, who was the all-NBA center last year and made second-team all-league behind Moses Malone this season, was held to 17 points and seven rebounds by the Celtics Monday as the Lakers lost 114-114 in the opener of the best-of-seven championship series.

Boston set records for total points, points at halftime, largest halftime lead, field goals and field-goal percentage while handling the Lakers their worst playoff defeat ever.

"I guess I was sleepingwalked out there," Abdul-Jabbar said. "I wasn't in the game the way I had to be to help the team. I didn't run the court well and I didn't deal with the double-teaming the way I can."

"We had a bad off by a lot of players, and I was principally among them."

He said most of the Lakers will have to improve if they

Bird, Johnson head all-star voting

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics and Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers, who led their respective teams into the National Basketball Association championship series, head the official All-NBA First team announced Tuesday.

Bird, with 156 points, was named to the first team by all 16 members of the media panel voting for the All-NBA teams — three from each franchise city and nine representatives of the national media. He is the first unanimous choice since 1982, when he also was named on all ballots.

Johnson finished second in the voting with 146 points

based on two points for each of the 69 First Team votes and one for each of the nine Second Team votes.

Completing the All-NBA First Team were guard Isiah Thomas of the Detroit Pistons, with 41 first team votes and 112 points overall, center Moses Malone of the Philadelphia 76ers, 40 and 118, and forward Bernard King of the New York Knicks, 39 and 107.

The closest race was at the center position, where Malone, the NBA rebounding champion for the fifth straight season, edged Kareem Abdul-Jabbar by just three points.

season's scoring average after his house burned down.

"Maybe I need some personal problems to play well," he said. "But I don't like having my house burn or have headaches in order to play good basketball."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley said his team's 63-41 rebounding deficit Monday must be narrowed if Los Angeles is to get its running game going, and Abdul-Jabbar, at 7-foot-2, is a key player on the boards.

"Although he's the leading scorer of all time and one of the greatest basketball players ever, Kareem always has been criticized for his rebounding," Riley said. "It's his responsibility to go to the boards. Rebounding is hard work. It's the free enterprise system under there and he has to go get it."

Boston Coach K.C. Jones said Parish, who was not speaking to reporters Tuesday, had a strong performance against Abdul-Jabbar, "but there's no one in the world that can stop Kareem by himself."

Parish had 18 points and eight rebounds in Game 1. "You put two people on Kareem and you're still not going to stop him, but you can slow him up a little bit," Jones said. "Robert had a lot of help in there. He just tries to hold him up until someone gets there to help. We try to double-team Kareem and make him throw the ball back outside."

Jones said Boston's goal against Abdul-Jabbar is to make him hurry his shots or make him think of passing the ball.

"He's not going to get his favorite shots against us," Jones said. "He's still going to score, but he doesn't have enough room to operate."

But Abdul-Jabbar said if the Lakers get their offense running correctly, it will open more opportunities for everybody.

"I was surprised at how poorly we played," he said. "We have only ourselves to blame. I don't think their defense was that great."

Drug indictments due Friday

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal grand jury which has questioned major league baseball players in its investigation of illegal drugs sales in the Pittsburgh area is expected to hand up indictments on Friday, according to a published report.

The New York Times, quoting a source familiar with the investigation in its Wednesday edition, said that even though about a dozen players had testified, it did not appear that any would be indicted.

The source, however, said a final decision has not been made on whether any of the players would be named as indicted co-conspirators.

Several of the players who testified, and perhaps all of them, have been granted immunity from prosecution. But that would not preclude them from being named as indicted co-conspirators or being named in the grand jury report.

Jerry Johnson, the U.S. Attorney for the Western

District of Pennsylvania, has steadfastly refused comment on the matter, and has not even confirmed that an investigation is in progress.

Law enforcement officials have previously indicated that drug dealers were the targets of the investigation. The officials have said investigations may be conducted in other cities once the Pittsburgh grand jury is finished. Atlanta and St. Louis have been mentioned as other cities where investigations may occur.

Players who have testified before the grand jury in Pittsburgh are Lee Mazzilli, Rod Scurry and Al Holland of Pittsburgh, Dave Parker of Cincinnati, Dale Berra of the New York Yankees, Jeff Leonard of San Francisco, Enos Cabell of Houston, Tim Lincecum of Montreal, Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets, Lee Lacy of Baltimore and Lonnie Smith of Kansas City.

SEC framing recruiting code

DESTIN, Fla. (AP) — Southeastern Conference officials are meeting here this week to discuss ethics matters that include growing concern over recruiting practices of the 10 member schools.

Tuesday offered a day of relaxation for athletic directors, coaches and other administrators who convened Sunday to begin the annual five-day spring meeting at the resort.

Business resumes Wednesday, when the University of Tennessee is expected to air its opposition to an executive committee decision that let the University of Florida keep its first-ever SEC football crown despite NCAA probation.

The league barred Florida from participating in a post-season game last season after the NCAA announced the Gators were headed for probation. The executive committee voted this spring to allow the team to keep the title, saying the Gators had already suffered enough.

Tennessee President Ed Bolling said last week that he would challenge that decision when the league presidents meet as a group here.

Athletic Directors, faculty chairmen and the executive committee are also scheduled to meet Wednesday. The first of two league business meetings will follow the group discussions.

Officials huddled Monday to discuss an "ethics code" that would help the conference monitor recruiting practices of member institutions. The executive committee could take action on the proposal Wednesday or Thursday.

"We believe this is a positive move by the conference to bring about a better feeling within the conference and toward each other," said Vanderbilt athletic director Roy Kramer.

The purpose is to set up guidelines, and to make sure the coaches know those guidelines," Kramer continued, adding that an ethics code would "clarify procedures" with regard to "accusations or alleged violations."

The idea behind the legislation is to recognize potential problems and correct them before matters get out of hand.

Both the Florida and Georgia football programs have been placed on NCAA probation within the past six months, while the Georgia basketball program was slapped with probation just last week.

Kramer, who is also chairman of the SEC athletic directors' group, said the legislation has been in the works for some time and wasn't necessarily sparked by the Florida and Georgia cases.

"I don't think it came out of any particular thing," Kramer said. "I think it came out of the general tone of the time, where there is more discussion out in the open."

"We feel as a conference we have done these things in the past," he added. "But we need to standardize."

The next step for the proposals is consideration by athletic directors.

Oilers within one win of title

Edmonton, Alberta (AP) — Wayne Gretzky continued his playoff heroics with a pair of power-play goals Tuesday night to lift the Edmonton Oilers within one victory of their second straight Stanley Cup with a 3-3 triumph over the Philadelphia Flyers.

If the Oilers, leading the series 3-1, can win here Thursday night, they will annex their second consecutive National Hockey League championship in five games. The Flyers, who passed Edmonton late in the regular season to win the overall points title, must capture three in a row — Thursday, then Sunday and next Tuesday in Philadelphia.

The Oilers have won 15 straight home playoff contests.

Philadelphia held a 3-1 edge in the first period, but fell victim to Edmonton's revitalized power play. The Oilers were 1-for-14 with a man advantage in this series, but connected four times in six tries Tuesday night.

One of those goals was by Paul Coffey, giving him 10 for the entire playoffs, a record for defenseman. And Coffey got in on the second period to boost the Oilers ahead for the first time, then clinched the victory with another in the third.

Gretzky, who scored three goals in Game 3, pounced on a loose puck in his slot at 12:53 of the middle session. Dale Berra of the Oilers' long shot had been blocked. Gretzky put a backhander past goalie Pete Lindbergh to the far side to make it 4-3.

At 3:42 of the final period, Mark Messier skated into the Flyers' zone and sent a backhand pass to Gretzky, who fired a wrist shot over the glove of goalie Bob Froese, who replaced Lindbergh to start the third period. It was the 16th goal of the playoffs for Gretzky, who has already broken his own playoff points record with 43.

The furiously paced first period had just about everything a hockey game can offer. Just as in Game 3, play was wide open, with frequent breakaways and 2-on-1s for both teams.

The Flyers struck first 46 seconds in as Rich Sutter got his first goal of the playoffs. Fuhr made a superb pad save on a Derrek Smith slapshot and also blocked Ron Sutter on the rebound. The puck skidded behind the net, where Rich Sutter grabbed it and sent a backhander in front which bounced in off the skate of Oilers defenseman Charlie Huddy.

Edmonton tied it at 4:22 when Coffey established his record with a 50-foot slapshot on a power play. But the Oilers' Pat Hughes and Mark Messier were penalized within 42 seconds, handing the Flyers' a two-man advantage.

They cashed in for only their second power-play goal in 20 tries when Bergen blasted a 40-foot past Fuhr's glove.

At 8:32, referee Kerry Fraser — who was substituting for Andy Van Helemond, out with a bad back — whistled Flyers defenseman Doug Crossman for holding. When Crossman complained, he was given an additional two minutes for unsportsmanlike conduct.

But the Oilers were virtually helpless early in the power play and Ron Sutter broke free when he knocked the puck away from Coffey. He never got off a shot as Messier hooked him to the ice and Fraser awarded Sutter a penalty shot.

It was only the third penalty shot ever in the finals and the third which failed. Sutter, who also missed a penalty shot against the New York Islanders during the season, attempted to put a wrist shot between Fuhr's legs but the goalie got his right leg pad on the puck.

Perkins survives big trouble to win title

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Ed Perkins was in trouble. Big trouble.

"Very big trouble," Perkins said, shaking his head Monday as he wondered how he managed to beat Sun Valley's Mark Scribner and win the men's open division of the Southwest Idaho Open Tennis Tournament.

Perkins beat Scribner 6-0, 3-6, 7-6 (6-4) as about 100 sun-baked spectators lounged on the grass and patios in the backyard of the Boise Racquet and Swim Club, where Perkins is a teaching professional.

In the women's open division, a field of six was whittled to one when top-seeded Tracy Carpenter defeated unseeded Liz Trutanich 6-1, 6-4. Only two of the six entrants seeded.

The Perkins-Scribner score tells how close the match was. What it doesn't tell is how many times Perkins was given up for dead against Scribner, a serve-and-smash artist who has been on the pro tour recently.

Wendell cage camp set

Gwartney said clinicians have not been established yet but noted last year's teachers were Steve Hays of the SuperSonics and Jim Harlick, coach at Pepperdine. "Similarly talented people will provide instruction if not these same ones," Gwartney said.

Cost is $89.95 for the five-day sessions plus optional $10 for hot lunches.

Further information may be obtained by calling Wendell High School.

Brisbane seeks Olympics

LONDON (AP) — The new mayor of Brisbane, Sallyanne Atkinson, Tuesday probed a "terrorist-free" Olympics with a mixture of government funding and private money if the Australian city is granted the 1992 summer games.

Atkinson and representatives from six other candidates plan this week to lobby delegates of the International Olympic Committee at its annual session in East Berlin. The IOC will make the 1992 venue at its meeting in October, 1986. Barcelona, Paris, Belgrade, Rotterdam-Amsterdam, New Delhi and London all have expressed in staging the games.

Red Wings release Sittler

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Red Wings have purchased the remainder of a two-year contract with center Darryl Sittler in order to release him from the National Hockey League club, Red Wings General Manager Jimmy Devellano says.

The buyout allows Sittler, 34, to become a free agent July 1. He was traded to the Red Wings by the Philadelphia Flyers at the start of the 1984-85 season for Murray Craven, 20, and Joe Paterson, 24.

Sittler had signed a two-year, no-trade contract with the Red Wings last season. Devellano said Monday that the buyout was part of the club's youth movement.

"We're trying to make our team a little younger, a little quicker," Devellano said. "Basically, I want (center) Claude Lusselle to go into the lineup. We may pick up a young center elsewhere."

Hayes in good condition

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Former Ohio State University football coach Woody Hayes was listed in good condition Tuesday at University Hospitals, where he was being treated for a stroke he suffered last week.

"He is making progress, but still has considerable weakness and lack of coordination on his right side," University Hospitals spokeswoman Nancy Grover said. "He is expected to remain in the hospital from two to four weeks for intensive physical and occupational therapy for his right side."

Hayes suffered a stroke last Wednesday while in Canada.

"He's alert, and he's moving his right side but it's very very weak," Mrs. Grover said. "There are no visitors and no interviews or phone calls or anything. That's his and his family's wishes."

Asked if Hayes was having trouble speaking, Mrs. Grover said, "That's still being evaluated. His whole right side is affected."

Duquesne cagers exonerated

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Three Duquesne University basketball players were acquitted Tuesday of charges in the rape of a 19-year-old woman in a campus dormitory last year.

Gregory Harrison, 20, of Lynn, Mass.; Eric Compton, 19, of Long Beach, N.Y.; and Ronald Stevenson, 20, of Pittsburgh, were acquitted after 35 minutes of deliberation by a Common Pleas Court jury of seven men and five women.

A fourth player, Emmett Sellers, 20, of Newark, N.J., is scheduled to go on trial on the same charges next week.

The woman who had accused the players sobbed when the verdicts were read by the jury foreman in Judge Robert E. Dauer's courtroom.

Swimming star has cancer

SIREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Damon McCoy of the University of Texas, a record-setting swimmer since he was 9 years old, has bone cancer in a thighbone, his parents said.

His knee bothered him throughout this year at Texas, and when he returned home to Sireveport a couple of weeks ago, an X-ray revealed a tumor on the femur.

On Friday, during a visit to specialists in Houston, McCoy and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O.K. McCoy, learned of the disease.

"It doesn't look good at all," said Butch Jordan, McCoy's coach here. "But the preliminary report was that they think he has an 80 percent chance for survival, and they think they can save the leg."

Griffin joins Buckeye staff

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Two-time Heisman Trophy winner Archie Griffin, recently retired from professional football, was named today as a special assistant to Ohio State University Athletic Director Rick Bay, the university said today.

Bay said Griffin, acting assistant director of employment at the university for the past year, would be used primarily to help university fund-raising and public relations.

"We are extremely pleased and very proud that Archie will be joining our staff," Bay said. "No one is more well known or well respected when it comes to Ohio State athletics."

USFL plans new law suit

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Football League has scheduled a news conference Thursday to announce new antitrust charges in its $1.32 billion suit against the National Football League.

The news conference will be at New York's Plaza Hotel, starting at 11 a.m. EDT.

The USFL filed the suit against the NFL last fall. It charged that the NFL's contracts with the three major television networks prevented the USFL from getting a TV contract for next season, when it plans to switch to a fall schedule.

NL honors Jeff Reardon

NEW YORK (AP) — Jeff Reardon of the Montreal Expos, who appeared in four games and saved all of them, has been selected the National League's Player of the Week for the period ending Sunday, May 26.

Reardon pitched a total of seven innings, allowed only one hit, no runs, walked none and struck out four. The 23-year-old Reardon is a first-time winner of Player of the Week honors and joins teammate Andre Dawson as the second Expo to win the award this season.

Other players nominated this past week were Willie McGee of St. Louis, who hit .423 with 10 RBI, two home runs, three triples and six stolen bases; Davey Lopes of Chicago, .462 with seven RBI, two home runs and five stolen bases; Greg Bruck of Los Angeles, four homers and nine RBI; and Glenn Wilson of Philadelphia, who hit .455.

AL cites Texas' Ward

NEW YORK (AP) — Power-hitting outfielder Gary Ward of the Texas Rangers has been named the American League's Player of the Week for the period May 20-26 after batting .444 with six extra-base hits.

Ward's production included two home runs, a triple and three doubles among his 12 hits and a slugging percentage of .852. He drove in eight runs and scored seven himself while nosing out first baseman Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees.

Mattingly hit .440 with 10 runs batted in, three extra-base hits and four runs scored.

Other AL players who received consideration for Player of the Week were Kansas City's George Brett, who hit .333 with four extra-base hits; starting pitcher Bud Black with a 2-0 record and 1.06 earned run average in 17 innings last week; and reliever Dan Quisenberry, who collected three saves, six strikeouts without giving up a run, and Ron Guldry of the New York Yankees, 2-3 with a 1.13 ERA and Detroit's Jack Morris, whose only win was a complete-game shutout.

No-show rookie irks Steelers' Noll

PITTSBURGH (AP) — First-round draft choice Darryl Sims is missing from the Pittsburgh Steelers' mini-camp this week — and Coach Chuck Noll is fuming.

Sims, a defensive end from Wisconsin, had previously told the Steelers he would report with other rookies and free agents on Sunday. Sims changed his mind when his agent couldn't work out a compensation agreement with the team in case he suffered an injury before signing a contract.

"I've said all along I don't want to hurt Darryl, but I don't want to hurt Darryl," Noll said. "I have to do what is right for my client," said Ray Galindo, Sims' agent. "We can play hardball, too."

Noll said the Steelers consider the mini-camp very valuable and that any player missing will be behind when he reports to training camp in July.

"Obviously, the agent doesn't understand what it takes to be a member of a winning football team," Noll told The Pittsburgh Press. "I would have to think he will be substantially behind now. I feel sorry for the kid because of what he is missing."

"This week is a costly operation for the club; we obviously feel it's important. And it's all tuned into the players," Noll said. "I know the stuff we're presenting. I don't need it and the coaching staff doesn't need it. It's beneficial to the players, not us."

Noll added, "Life is a series of opportunities. Those who take advantage of them are ahead of the game. Those who don't ultimately end up looking back and are sorry for it. There's a case of 'should have been' — the three saddest words in the English language."

The Steelers do not discuss contract negotiations, but the team is reportedly offering Sims a package similar to what 1983 first-round choice Gabriel Rivera agreed to: a $400,000 signing bonus and a four-year contract worth from $140,000 in his rookie season to $210,000 in his fourth season.

The Steelers' No. 1 choice in 1984, wide receiver Louis Ligt, got a $665,000 signing bonus as part of his four-year contract and a salary that ranges from $175,000 to $250,000, according to figures compiled by the National Football League Players Association.

Galindo plans to meet again next week with Steelers' negotiator Jim Boston, but said the two sides are "far apart."

"Darryl is eager to play football," Galindo said.

The Steelers' fourth-round draft choice, center Dan Turk of Wisconsin, is in camp although he has not agreed to a contract. Complications have developed with the preliminary agreement Turk had with John Bessett, owner of the Tampa Bay Bandits of the United States Football League, and he now hopes to play for the Steelers.

Bessett, Sims, the only draft choice not in camp is No. 6 pick Gregg Carr, who is completing final exams at Auburn.

Crosby moved to North Carolina

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Kathryn Crosby announced Tuesday that her charity golf classic started by her husband Bing 44 years ago will return next year to North Carolina.

Mrs. Crosby said that the Bermuda Run Country Club in North Carolina will be the permanent home for the Bing Crosby National Championship, which will be held again in June 1986.

"There has been an overwhelming concern that Bing's golf tournament is a national tradition which must be preserved," said Ben Langella, a family friend. "Kathryn Crosby has received thousands of offers of assistance. After considering them all, she finally announced that 'The Old Clambake' will be returned next year."

In April, Mrs. Crosby cut the family's ties to the tournament, known since 1937 as the Bing Crosby Pro-Am, saying that Crosby would never have agreed to "attempts to commercialize" his Old Clambake.

Twins may bench Hrbek in effort to find new spark for club

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kent Hrbek is the leader of the Minnesota Twins, physically, emotionally and monetarily. Nevertheless, Twins Manager Billy Gardner is thinking of benching the big first baseman, who has not been hitting with authority as the Twins have lost six straight games.

Minnesota's Tuesday night game at Boston was rained out and will be made up Thursday, which had been scheduled as an off-day. Gardner said Tuesday afternoon that he planned to decide shortly before game time whether to bench the left-handed Hrbek against Boston lefty Bob Ojeda.

But the rainout moved Ojeda's start back to Thursday. Righty Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd is scheduled to start Wednesday, but Gardner still might rest Hrbek, who is mired in his second batting slump of the young season.

"I'm thinking of playing (Roy) Smalley at first base and giving Hrbek the day off," Gardner said. But he quickly added that the demotion would be temporary. "Hrbek is still the guy," Gardner said. "When he starts hitting, we'll be all right."

In the last nine games, Hrbek averaged .143 with two RBI to drop his season average to .243. As the No. 3 hitter, he has killed several rallies with double-play strikeouts. In his first three seasons, Hrbek's average year was a .301 average with 22 home runs and 94 RBI. Earlier this season, Minnesota lost nine straight games and Hrbek struggled to get his average above .100. At the time, his teammates said their success was directly proportional to that of Hrbek. But Hrbek scoffed at the idea, saying: "I hope they don't sit around and wait for me. I'm not the only guy on this ballclub."

Gardner has again pointed to Hrbek's responsibility as the Twins' top offensive weapon and, at more than $1 million a year, their highest paid player. "I know he doesn't want that responsibility, but he has to step forward and take it," Gardner said. "It's been that way since Babe Ruth played. There's one guy on every club the players look to to win the game for them. And he's the guy on our club."

This time, Hrbek agreed with his manager. "I accept that responsibility," he said. "I know I have to get going. It's my turn to pick up the slack. When I beat, it might be good to have a day off where I can sit back and think."

But now Tom's struggling, too." Brunansky, among the league leaders in a dozen categories, is 3-for-11 in the last three games and has driven in just two runs in the last seven contests. "I've never had a slump like this," Hrbek said after his 9-for-9 performance in Monday's 9-2 Minnesota loss. "I could have had 70 RBI if I was hitting the ball like I can. I've had a ton of chances. Billy's got to go with the nine guys that are playing the game. I might be good to have a day off where I can sit back and think."

Spend a Buck stiffes Belmont in favor of vacation until July

NEW YORK (AP) — Spend a Buck, the Kentucky Derby winner who earned $2.6 million with a Jersey Derby victory that left him cut and bruised, will skip the Belmont Stakes and rest until late July, his owner and trainer said Tuesday.

"Now we've got an opportunity to rest him and I'm sure he'll come back better than ever," trainer Cam Gambolati said Tuesday at Garden State Park.

Gambolati and owner Dennis Diaz said the colt will be shipped to Monmouth Park from Garden State sometime next week and pointed for the Haskell Invitational at Monmouth on July 27.

Skipping the June 8 Belmont Stakes means that the Kentucky Derby winner will have participated in only one-third of the Triple Crown. Spend a Buck, who won the third fastest Kentucky Derby by 5 1/2 lengths on May 4, passed up the May 16 Preakness to run in the Jersey Derby where he was eligible for a $2 million bonus.

There was no doubt that Spend a Buck was tired at the end of the Jersey Derby. "It was a tough race and he didn't have the easiest of trips," Diaz said of the colt's punishing run in the Jersey Derby. "There's no question he showed the heart of a champion."

"He came through the race with nicks and cuts and bruises. He got bumped around pretty good," Diaz said. Diaz said the horse has some bleeding from the mouth, but the cause has not been determined and it could possibly be gum problems.

Diaz's decision to skip the Preakness drew criticism from racing traditionalists. But the decision paid off handsomely Monday when Spend a Buck earned $600,000 from a $1 million purse plus the bonus for sweeping the Cherry Hill Mile, Garden State Stakes, Kentucky Derby and Jersey Derby. But while the colt's fourth straight victory was the richest in racing history, it was anything but easy as he was challenged most of the way.

"You can count on one hand the number of horses who finish six furlongs in 1:09 and went on to win a mile and a quarter after they had been challenged early and late," Gambolati said.

Huddle Up ran with Spend a Buck through a mile in 1:35 and then dropped back as Creme Fraiche and El Basso moved to challenge. Creme Fraiche actually got in front briefly leading at the quarter-pole, but Spend a Buck won the stretch duel, although his final quarter time was a slow 27 3/5 seconds. That made his final time 2:02 3/5, which was 2 1/2 seconds slower than his time in the Kentucky Derby.

"We said to everybody before the race that we would consider the Belmont if he had an easy race," Diaz said. "He did not have an easy race. He had to go to the well, as all great horses do."

"We just don't want to go to the well too often. That's when horses get injured," Diaz said of the 1 1/2-mile Belmont.

Asked how Belmont Park officials reacted to his decision, Gambolati said, "Horsemen are horsemen, whether they are racing secretaries or whatever. They understand what you have to do in the best interest of the horse."

Gambolati said that the colt would have three weeks of very light training and then get ready for the Haskell. The Haskell would precede a major Gambolati-Diaz goal, that being the Travers Aug. 17 at Saratoga. "That (the Haskell) would set him up perfect," he said.

The Haskell also is the second race of a bonus series which would pay $1 million to any colt sweeping the Jersey Derby, the Haskell and the Sept. 26 Pegasus at the Meadowlands.

Gambolati said Spend a Buck was X-rayed Tuesday and that the pictures showed everything was fine. He said the X-rays would be shipped to Dr. Wayne McIlwraith, a veterinarian at Colorado State University who performed arthroscopic surgery on the colt in November to remove a bone chip from his right knee.

Plane fight leads to coach ouster

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona Outlaws officials gave few details Tuesday about a scuffle aboard an airliner after Sunday's loss to Houston that led to the firing of defensive line coach John Teerlinck.

Teerlinck, 33, was fired after meeting Monday with head coach Frank Kush and Bill Tatham Jr., president of the United States Football League team, Outlaws spokesman Steve Des Georges said. "The only comment we have today is that John Teerlinck is no longer with the team," Des Georges said.

Teerlinck and Don Hickman, the starting left offensive tackle, began fighting on the plane ride back to Phoenix from Sunday's game, which the Outlaws lost 41-20 to the Houston Gamblers.

The two men sprayed across several seats of the plane and the scuffle apparently broke the eyeglasses of one passenger who was not among the Outlaws' 60-person traveling party.

Hickman, 29, is 6-foot-3 and weighs 275 pounds while Teerlinck is 6-5, 255 pounds. "It was awful scary with huge people rolling around and bouncing off the walls," said Connie Dreistadt of Phoenix, one of 136 passengers aboard the Continental Airlines commercial flight who added that the fight began near her seat. "I've never been so upset in my life."

Tatham said he planned to call the airline to apologize for the incident. "I guarantee this sort of thing won't happen again," Tatham said. "It's very embarrassing for everybody working for the franchise and the fans in the area we represent. It's important we conduct ourselves in a professional manner and anything other than that will be detrimental with accordingly."

Des Georges would not say whether any action against Hickman was planned and Kush said if there was, "I wouldn't tell you. It's against club policy."

Kush said the incident was "unfortunate. Other than that, I have no comment. It's against club policy to discuss these things."

Teerlinck also declined comment on the altercation. Sunday's loss dropped the Outlaws' record to 5-9 and Kush told reporters Monday the team has "got our foot in the grave" in terms of qualifying for the playoffs. It was also Arizona's seventh loss in the last eight games.

The whole problem is losing," said Outlaws defensive end Kit Lathrop. "I hate to see it come down to this."

Young wins heptathlon in 800-meter finale

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Lauri Young of Louisiana rolled from fourth place on the final event and won the women's heptathlon event Tuesday in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships at the University of Texas.

The 21-year-old senior, from DeRidder, La., had the third-fastest time in the last of the seven events, the 800 meters, with a clocking of 2 minutes, 18.40 seconds.

That performance was worth 845 points and gave Young a total of 5,723 points, a personal best.

Young finished 74 points ahead of 1984 champion Sheila Tarr of Nevada-Las Vegas, who amassed 5,649 points.

Conny Eckl of Washington State was third with 5,537 points, also a career high, and Maryse Ewanje-Epee of Arizona, the leader going into the 800, wound up fourth with 5,607 points, another personal best.

Epee, a 20-year-old freshman from Potters, France, and the fourth-place finisher in the high jump in the 1984 Olympics, missed her opportunity for the heptathlon title when she clocked only 2:31.72, for 671 points, in the 800.

Young's previous best heptathlon performance was a wind-aided 5,675 this year.

In this meet, her best effort came in Monday's high jump, where she tied for first with Ewanje-Epee and Camille Harding of Arizona at 6 feet, 1/2-inch.

In the other events, she had the fifth-best performance in the 100-meter high hurdles, was ninth in the shot put, fourth in the 200 meters, sixth in the long jump, and seventh in the javelin.

Lana Zimmerman of Louisiana State posted the fastest time in the 800 (2:10.77), while the other best performances in Tuesday's events were registered by Ewanje-Epee in the long jump (19-9 1/4) and Tarr in the javelin (144-1).

Fifteen athletes began the heptathlon competition and 11 completed. The dropouts were Harding, who left after six events, and Heidi Mann of Florida, who stopped after four.

Jackie Joyner of UCLA, the 1982 and 1983 NCAA heptathlon champion finished in the 1984 Olympics, also skipped the event to concentrate on competing in the long jump, triple jump, high hurdles, intermediate hurdles and two relays.

Indy winner back to old grind

NEW YORK (AP) — Fame can come and go as quickly as Danny Sullivan's car.

He has barely begun decelerating from his victory in the Indianapolis 500 and already he's gearing up for Sunday's Miller American 200 in Milwaukee.

"You've got to be careful. You've got to keep your mind on your work and not get wrapped up in the parlaying and everything that can lead to. You can get caught up in that very easily," Sullivan said Tuesday in a post-Indy promotional stop to begin the buildup for the June 30 U.S. Grand Prix at the Meadowlands.

"Everybody talks about the jet-set life we lead. They see us rushing around in private jets. That's just because we have to get from point A to point B in a hurry and we can't always depend on the commercial airlines."

"But some of the places we go and some of the things we have to do can bring you back to reality."

He said the reality of his victory over Mario Andretti in last Sunday's Indy 500 still hasn't sunk in. "Rick Mears (Sullivan's Porsche teammate who won the race a year ago) told me it took him the better part of a month before it really hit him that he'd won." He did acknowledge, though, that as he stood in the shower Tuesday morning, "I remember I got this little crazy smile and said something like, 'Oh, wow! I did it.'"

And then there's the matter of Milwaukee. "I feel great right now," Sullivan said, "but I would imagine the first practice session, when everybody's smokin' me, I'm going to be shocked back into reality real fast."

"This is one of the goals you go for," he said of his victory at Indy.

Danny Sullivan waves to fans from a New York taxi

"But you always have to have another goal. You always want to have another win and with Milwaukee coming up, I think I'm still as hungry as ever. I just want to keep winning races."

Sullivan, who chased and finally caught Andretti at Indy, will be chasing him around the parking lots at the Meadowlands June 30, trying to add a Grand Prix trophy to his collection — if he doesn't get it June 16 in the Strak's 300 at Portland International Raceway.

At the Meadowlands' temporary 1.6-mile course, Sullivan will be whipping his racing machine left and right, alternately downshifting and flooring it. Andretti beat Sullivan to the finish line there a year ago, just as he did in the Long Beach Grand Prix.

It's a far different type of racing than at Indy, where the first rule is: Never turn right. Drivers generally just stand on the pedal on Indy's 2.5-mile oval as their cars hurtle in circles.

"About the only time I shifted when I came out of 350," Sullivan said with a smile as he reflected on his hair-raising spin, "I reflected on his hair-raising spin of 200 laps."

In French Open

Noah-led favorites advance

PARIS (AP) — Returning to the scene of his greatest triumph, Yannick Noah again thrilled the crowd at Roland Garros Stadium on Tuesday as he led a phalanx of favorites to victory in the French Open tennis championships.

It was on the slow, red-clay courts here two years ago that Noah became the first Frenchman in 37 years to capture the men's singles title. And with the capacity crowd cheering him on, Noah came from behind Tuesday to defeat Libor Pimek — of Czechoslovakia 6-1, 7-5, 6-4.

Posting even easier victories were John McEnroe, Ivan Lendl and Jimmy Connors — the top three seeds in the men's singles — and Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded first and second, respectively, in the women's field.

McEnroe, who reached the final here last year, only to lose to Lendl, ousted Ronald Agener of Haiti 6-0, 6-2, 7-5. Lendl stopped South African Edie Edwards 6-1, 6-3, 6-1. Connors battled his way past Wolfgang Popp of West Germany 6-4, 6-1, 7-5, and Lloyd eliminated Australia's Janine Thompson 6-2, 6-1 in first-round matches. Navratilova was the first player to reach the third round when she defeated veteran Virginia Wade of Britain 6-3, 6-0 to win her second victory in as many days.

But three seeded players were ousted on the second day of this two-week Grand Slam tournament.

Roberto Saad of Argentina, who had to fight his way through qualifying to reach the 128-man main draw, upset 16th-seeded Jimmy Arias of the United States 6-1, 6-4, 7-5, while American Debbie Spence surprised the women's ninth seed, Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden, 7-5, 6-2, and Denmark's Tine Scheuer-Larsen eliminated No. 12 Barbara Potter of Woodbury, Conn. 6-3, 6-1.

The 6-foot-4 Noah outlasted the 6-5 Pimek in a three-hour, 20-minute battle.

"I am absolutely thrilled to be back playing this kind of tennis here at Roland Garros," Noah said after his victory.

"It is especially good because when I was out of action for six months, I wondered whether I was going to play tennis again."

A combination of leg and stomach muscle injuries sidelined the 25-year-old Noah, who failed to win another singles title after the 1983 French Open until two weeks ago when he was victorious at the Italian Open.

"Today I had a great time on court," said Noah, who showed no signs of the leg-muscle tear that affected him during the Italian tournament. "I was nervous, but I expected to be nervous. In fact, I was a little worried because I didn't begin to feel the pressure until last night, which was a little late for me."

Noah explained that he had decided not to defend the doubles title he won with countryman Henri Leconte last year because he wanted to avoid the added physical strain.

While Noah was "having a great time" on the packed center court,

Arias, considered one of America's top clay-court players, was "being thoroughly beaten on an outside court."

"I didn't feel as if I had been in a match," Arias said. "Clay is one of my favorite surfaces. I'm really disappointed."

Arias, 20, won the Italian Open on clay and the U.S. Clay Championships two years ago.

Saad, who began taking tennis seriously when he started to beat the leading college players in the United States five years ago, said he since had lost two years of his career through injury.

"I'm 23 now, and I should have been doing this at 21," he said.

Following his straight-set victory, McEnroe expressed surprise that he will have to play another singles match on Wednesday. Normally, the top players get a day off between singles matches.

"I really don't quite understand it. I don't know what to say," the talented left-hander from New York said. "But it certainly opens 'help.'"

Other seeds advancing were three Swedes — No. 6 Anders Jarryd, No. 7 Joakim Nyström and No. 14 Stefan Edberg.

In the women's singles, other seeds gaining the next round included No. 4 Manuela Meloeva of Bulgaria, No. 5 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, No. 7 Klavdia Koldan-Kisch of West Germany, No. 10 Bonnie Gadushek of the United States, No. 11 Steffi Graf of West Germany and No. 13 Kathy Rinaldi of the United States.

Skiers seek 1989 meet sites

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The world governing body of alpine, nordic and freestyle skiing has started its conference to select the sites for the 1989 world championships.

The Federation Internationale de Ski is meeting in Canada for the first time and discussion in closed committee meetings includes rule changes, scheduling, finances and election of members to the FIS council.

Thunder Bay, Ont., is competing against Lahiti, Finland; Autrans, France and Val di Fiemme, Italy in the nordic bidding. Vail, Colo.; Borovetz, Bulgaria; Jasná, Czechoslovakia; and Krasnaya Gora, Yugoslavia, are candidates for the alpine world championships.

The competing sites will make their official presentations Friday night before delegates decide their voting preferences Saturday.

Six cities bidding for the 1992 Winter Olympic Games with the International Olympic Committee also have set up display areas in the host hotel and will be trying to win friends and goodwill in the last FIS congress before the IOC makes its decision.

The lobbyists are Sofia, Bulgaria; Savole, France; Lillehammer, Norway; Berchtesgaden, West Germany; Cortina d'Ampezzo, Italy; and Falun, Sweden.

Technical committee meetings are scheduled throughout the week.

An alpine technical committee also discussed recommendations for the men's downhill course at Mount Allan, a developing ski resort in Alberta's Kananaskis region which will be used for alpine events at the 1988 Olympics. The mountain has been criticized for being too flat for a world-class men's downhill course and is said to lack sufficient snow cover.

Bernhard Russel of Switzerland, two-time world and Olympic champion and head of the FIS inspection team for Mount Allan, said a test competition — probably the Canadian championships in February — must be run at Mount Allan next season before the site is given certification.

Ancient fare made modern

Greek cuisine

From the shores of the Mediterranean comes one of the world's great cuisines: Greek cookery. This richly varied cuisine is an intriguing blend of mellow flavors and textures.

Presented here are contemporary menus featuring foods typical of this ancient region which bring the essence of traditional Greek cooking to you. The distinctive style of these Greek menus is attributed to the three foods they highlight—fresh California artichokes, reaching their peak in the spring, delicately flavored leg of lamb, a staple of Greek menus, and nutty, flavorful green pistachios, which impart a natural Mediterranean flavor accent.

Set the stage for a traditional Greek party with Athenian Rosemary Lamb. Tender and juicy leg of lamb is basted with seasonings and slowly roasted for this entree. Fresh, tender artichokes rubbed with tangy lemon juice are enhanced with olive oil and aromatic herbs in Artichoke Saute.

To finish, serve a marvelously rich pastry—Pistachio Baklava—a traditional sweet from the classic world.

ATHENIAN ROSEMARY LAMB
4 to 6 pound boneless lamb leg
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 teaspoon minced garlic
1/2 teaspoon crushed rosemary leaves, divided
1 1/2 teaspoons salt, divided
Freshly ground pepper
Remove string from roast. Place lamb, boned side up, on flat surface. Combine lemon juice, olive oil, garlic, 1 teaspoon rosemary, 1 teaspoon salt and 1/2 teaspoon pepper. Spread lemon juice mixture over boned-out surface of leg. Roll and tie securely. Place leg, fat side up, on rack in open roasting pan. Do not add water. Do not cover. Insert roast meat thermometer so bulb is centered in thickest part, but not in fat.

Roast in slow oven (325 degrees F.) until meat thermometer registers 140 F., allowing 25 to 30 minutes per pound. Remove from oven and let stand 10 minutes. Remove foil from lamb leg. Combine 1/2 teaspoon rosemary, 1/2 teaspoon salt and 1/2 teaspoon pepper; sprinkle over surface of roast. Replace roast in oven and continue roasting until meat thermometer registers 155 F. Allow roast to stand in a warm place 15 to 20 minutes after removal from oven. Simmer, roasts continue to cook during this time they usually rise approximately 5 degrees in internal temperature, reaching 160 F. for medium.

ARTICHOKE SAUTE
2 medium California artichokes
1/2 lemon or lime
1/4 cup olive oil, divided
1/4 cup water
1 cup sliced green onion
1/2 cup chopped parsley
1 teaspoon crushed oregano
Dash each: salt and hot pepper sauce

Bend back outer petals of artichokes until they snap off easily near base. Edible portion of petals should remain on artichoke hearts. Continue to snap off and discard thick petals until central core of pale green petals is reached. Cut off top 2 inches of artichokes; discard. Cut off stems; reserve. Trim off outer dark green layer from artichoke bottoms and stems; rub all surfaces with cut lemon to prevent discoloration.

This Greek feast highlights artichokes, lamb, and Pistachio Baklava

Quarter artichokes lengthwise. Remove small, prickly-tipped petals and fuzzy choke; rub again with lemon. Cut artichokes and stems into very thin lengthwise slices; saute in 2 tablespoons oil 1 minute. Add water; cook, covered, over medium heat about 5 minutes. Remove cover and cook until water has evaporated and artichokes are tender. Add remaining 2 tablespoons of oil; increase heat. Add green onion, parsley, oregano, salt and hot pepper sauce; cook and stir 1 or 2 minutes or until green onion is thoroughly heated. Squeeze remaining juice from cut lemon over artichoke mixture. Makes 4 servings.

PISTACHIO BAKLAVA
2 cups finely chopped shelled pistachios
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 cup clarified butter
1 cup oil
1 package (16 oz) phyllo pastry sheets at room temperature
Honey syrup
Combine pistachios, sugar and cinnamon. Combine butter and oil; keep warm. Brush bottom of 13 by 9

Dim Sum is a tasty, trendy Asian treat

What do you say to a lady in a sarong? Usually I don't have a problem striking up a conversation with almost anyone, but I had wondered just what would I have in common with one of those exotic women from India.

I finally found out. She was a lovely lady with a filmy silk sari threaded with real gold, a red dot on her forehead and a deep, throaty chuckle to her voice. Her name was Rajee.

Rajee had been a Hindu temple dancer and told me her marriage had been forced when she was 12 by a fortune teller. Now she was a matron with children.

Of course, you know what we talked about—first the joys and problems of teen-aged children, and then we exchanged recipes! Let's see: She was with her husband, and the four of us were dining in a revolving restaurant high above Singapore. The city was sparkling beneath us like a storybook city, the food was exquisite and the conversation so engrossing that at the stroke of midnight, we all looked up surprised that we were the only patrons left in the restaurant. I still remember the line of 75 waiters, each with a towel over his arm, patiently waiting for us to leave so they could.

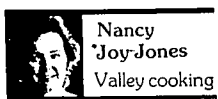

It was a special trip. For one thing, it was my introduction to the vast array of appetizers collectively known as dim sum.

Some of these are fried while others are steamed as a sort of filled dumpling. They are not only used as an appetizer, but a selection of them can be used as a luncheon entree or as a special treat at an afternoon tea.

They are really gaining in popularity in this country, and with the "ready-made" packages of wonton skins and egg roll wrappers, they're really a snap for you to try.

Most of the ones I'm going to give you today have the added bonus of freezing well, so they are a super "on-hand" treat.

If you are going to try to make some of these, you might plan on doing several different ones at the same time.

Nancy Joy Jones
Valley cooking

Once you get all the unusual ingredients out and together, you might as well use everything you open. For example, a can of water chestnuts usually contains enough for two separate recipes, so plan ahead and don't waste ingredients.

First, make a sweet and sour sauce that you can use as a dip or drizzle over the top of some of the dumplings.

SWEET AND SOUR SAUCE

1/2 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup cider vinegar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 1/2 cups pineapple juice (or 3/4 cup juice and 1 cup crushed pineapple)
2 tablespoons soy sauce
4 tablespoons catsup (optional)
Whisk the sugar, vinegar and cornstarch together in a saucepan. Add the rest of the ingredients and mix well. Stir over medium high heat until it thickens. You can vary the ingredients a bit, depending if you like it more sour or more sweet.

Get a package of wonton skins at your supermarket. If they are frozen, make sure you have pre-thawed them to room temperature before starting.

FRIED WONTON

1/2 pound fresh pork, ground
1/2 pound fresh shrimp or prawns, shelled, deveined and minced
4 dried oriental mushrooms, presoaked in warm water for 4 hours, then minced
8 whole water chestnuts, chopped very fine
2 green onions, chopped fine, stems too
2 eggs, beaten
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 teaspoon salt (or substitute soy sauce, try 1/2 teaspoon for starters)
Mix all the ingredients together us-

'Saucy Enchiladas' help busy mother

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — When little Brent joined his family seven weeks ago, Susan Loosli became the mother of three sons under six years of age. Well seasoned in her job, she takes her new responsibility in stride.

"It's like adding another cup of water to the soup. After you've got it, it's one more," she says.

She has no complaints about life as a stay-at-home mother. "I enjoy being home," she says. "I felt like if I couldn't be home with my kids while they were small, then it wasn't worth having kids."

"I think it's important that they have somebody here with them. I don't want my kids to grow up and be latchkey kids and raised by a day care center."

Colony never has not been a problem for Loosli, because she gets together occasionally with friends who also have young children. At other times, she picks up the telephone for a visit.

Brian, 6, and Kevin, 2 1/2, think it is great to have a new baby brother. "They're real happy with him," she says.

When Brent is a little older, he will join the rest of the family for bike rides. The Looslis have a trailer for the children that hooks on to one of their 10-speeds.

"The boys enjoy it. We just see how long we can go before the kids get tired, and how late it gets," she says.

"We just ride around town, because it is hard to go any length with kids."

When Loosli cooks for her family, she doesn't use prepared foods. "I think maybe it's a little cheaper to go ahead and cook from scratch, rather than pre-mixed foods. In fact, it tastes better," she says.

"Really tasty" is how she describes the following recipe.

Rocky Mountain chocolatier

He wants to top the chocolate market

By JIM CARRIER
The Denver Post

DURANGO, Colo. — The day Frank Crail opened his first chocolate store, people waited in line to buy. Unaware that he had forgotten the candy at home, his cook never had made fudge at 6,500 feet, and no one knew how to run the cash register.

He said $225 worth anyway. The day Frank opened his second store, six months later at Breckenridge, Colo., Christmas skiers waited in line to buy, unaware that the cook hadn't made fudge at 10,000 feet, someone had to climb a utility pole to illegally plug in the stove, and the first four batches, all 120 pounds, were disasters.

He sold 48,000 worth of chocolate in four days. In Aspen, Colo., he didn't even have shelves or a sign for his store. He sold $900 the first day. In Boulder, Colo., it was $2,600.

"You might say the Rocky Mountain Chocolate Factory was on a roll," says Crail. Despite a start that seemed at times like a Keystone Kops comedy, the makings of a phenomenal success story were cooking in a chocolate vat in Durango.

In four years, the Rocky Mountain Chocolate Factory has become a $4 million business with 38 stores in Colorado, New York, California and Texas; a factory capable of producing 2 million pounds of candy a year; and an ambition to become the largest candy company in the United States.

Thirty more stores may open this year, including five or six in the Denver area — franchises that sell for $125,000 plus 5 percent of the gross. The Aurora Mall store grossed $225,000 its first year. Albuquerque, N.M., peddled $385,000 in chocolate.

Not bad for a guy who claimed he wanted to move to Colorado to semi-retire.

Crail, 43, is an entrepreneur. His heroes are the late Ray Kroc of McDonald's, Lee Iacocca of Chrysler, and Mo Siegel, who built the Boulder-based Celestial Seasonings into a multimillion-dollar business before selling it last year to Kraft Inc.

Perfectionists, success fanatics, gamblers, men worried about failure. When he describes them, Crail describes himself.

"I've never done it for the money," he says. "It is the challenge of taking something from nothing and seeing it succeed."

"Everyone in town thinks I'm wealthy. I make less money than I ever have. I take no salary. The money goes back into the business."

The candy business, Crail says, was ripe for "something to happen" — a new approach, something with class and modern merchandising that grabs the impulse buyer and sends him out the door with $20 bags of truffles, turtles and hand-dipped caramels.

Chocolate Factory stores are designed to radiate the look of Victorian brass and wood. Most have a marble table and copper cookpot for public fudge-making. And they are small — down to kiosk size at one shopping center although a California prototype sells croissants and gifts and has an atmosphere that Crail says "makes you feel good when you walk in."

But the Chocolate Factory's success is not rooted in aesthetics alone. Good chocolate, good locations, and good help: those are the keys, Crail says.

"What we created can be done by anyone in any town," Crail told a Silverton, Colo., economic conference recently. "If you have a good product at a fair price, you can't lose, regardless of the product." Candy making is already established on Colorado's western slope: Russell Stover has a major factory in Montrose and Enstrom's, a family operation, ships worldwide from Grand Junction.

Crail's embrace of chocolate came after years of work in computers, with the CIA, McDonald-Douglas Corp. and his own firm. But the qualities that made him succeed were established elsewhere.

In the Army, he lived off his gambling. Later, he took karate and learned self-confidence. His drive was evident in his sports, his embrace of tennis, where he met his wife, circuit pro Brian Smith, and in running, which became a 75-mile-a-week obsession.

Smart shoppers learn to complain well

By MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

Dear Martin — I have been a home economics teacher for 30 years and have tried to teach my students that no one will protect them when products perform poorly unless they are smart enough to stand up for themselves.

Last year, we had occasion to put this lesson to the test. In my adult-living course, we made lasagna and covered it with Reynolds Wrap. Intending to reheat it the following day. When we uncovered the lasagna, it had become strangely discolored in the areas in which it had been in contact with the aluminum wrap.

We decided not to eat the lasagna, and my students and I wrote a letter to write to the company and let them know about the problem. My students had a hard time believing that I would actually take the time to do this, and we were convinced that we would not receive a reply from the company.

They were duly impressed when a letter from Reynolds did arrive, and Nikki P. Martin, a Reynolds consumer-response representative, explained how the discoloration might have occurred. Reynolds also enclosed two coupons, each good for a free box of Reynolds Wrap.

When my students turned in their written assignments of the class at the end of the school year, a lawyer's son wrote that the most important thing he learned was that it does pay to let the manufacturer know when something is not right. That, for me, was a highlight of the class! — Joyce Harvey, Waverly, Tenn.

Dear Joyce — Whether we call it standing up for your rights, or making sure you get your money's worth, knowing how to communicate with companies about product problems is an important part of adult living. You taught this lesson by example, and I know of no better way to teach it.

Dear Martin — One of our local supermarkets put a "super coupon" in its newspaper advertisement. It offered a 20-cent coupon good on any 20-cent coupon. Retailer "super coupons" have become common in many parts of the country, and they are just another way for supermarkets to attract your attention and bring you into the store.

The minimum purchase requirement helps the store make up for any loss it may sustain from the low-price offer contained in the super coupon. Super Coupon Tip: If the terms printed on a Super Coupon don't prohibit it, be sure to also use a manufacturer coupon for added savings when you make your purchase.

ing only one of the eggs. Put a wonton square in front of you. Place a teaspoon of the filling in the center of the square. Put a little of the beaten egg on each side of the wonton and fold diagonally so you now have a triangle. You can fry like that or go one step further and fold the longer legs of the triangle over each other and seal with egg.

Deep fry at about 360 degrees for about 2 minutes. They will turn golden. Turn them once while cooking. Drain them on paper towels. Unless you're going to freeze them, serve them hot.

A couple of variations on the above would be to substitute turkey for the pork or just double the shrimp and forget the meat entirely.

If you freeze them, reheat by just placing the frozen wontons on a cookie sheet and heat for 12-15 minutes in a preheated 350 degree oven.

Another favorite dim sum is the steamed bun kind. You can make a dough from scratch, but you can also use the frozen bread dough or one of the packaged hot roll mixes.

I know that the "real" thing is often superior, but sometimes when you are not sure your family is going to be crazy about trying something new, you can opt for the easy way out. Use the mix or whatever, and if your audience wants more, then you can take your time and make the authentic

When he and Ruan decided to raise a family, they wanted to move out of Southern California. A friend suggested Durango, and they fell in love with the town.

Crail wanted to open a store, to become part of the community, so he walked the streets, asking opinions. A friend suggested a car wash. One man said candy. All warned that winters were slow.

As he pondered the ideas, Crail realized that candy's biggest sales come during winter and at holidays — Christmas, Valentine's, Easter and Mother's Day. Candy began to make sense — to him.

"Oh, it's dumb," Ruan told him when he first proposed it. "All I thought of was Woolworth's."

With two partners, a $50,000 bank loan, most of which went to the seven-year, $30,000 lease for 384 square feet two doors from the narrow-gauge train station, Crail prepared to open Memorial Day 1981. The day before, the store was empty and the shelves still were being built. Working until midnight to finish the store, Crail and his partners decided to get up at 6 a.m., four hours before the grand opening at 10.

The alarm didn't go off until 9:15, they forgot the candy in his basement they forgot change, and couldn't get into the cash register anyway. The instructions were inside.

A partner who never had made more than six pounds of fudge, and only at sea level, frantically threw together 30 pounds and began cooking. The fudge set at 9:59, the doors opened, and money began flowing in.

"Do you mail order?" someone asked.

"Do we mail order?" Of course we don't mail order," said Crail.

"Do you have cappuccino fudge?" "Of course. Jim, you have it, don't you?" "Whatever they wanted we gave them," says Crail. They worked until 8 or 9 p.m., and couldn't believe the receipts. Beginner's luck, they thought. Everyone in town has enough chocolate for the summer.

But they sold 3875 the second day, and sales kept up through the tourist season.

Three months later, Crail says, "I was really bored. I said this is too easy. Let's do another one."

Crail eventually bought out his partners, began selling franchises, and building the base for a run at the nation's market.

Rhubarb Pineapple Jam: sought-after summer treat

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
The Associated Press

DEAR CECILY: Last summer I bought a jar of "homemade" Rhubarb-Pineapple Jam at a farmer's market. This year I like to make a batch of the jam in my kitchen. Have you a recipe for it? — PRESERVER.

DEAR PRESERVER: This recipe for Rhubarb Pineapple Jam, newly revised from an old one, should help you out. The jam is good to serve with toast, biscuits and a variety of muffins. I have also used it as a delicious filling for sandwiching it between two vanilla-flavored cake layers. — C

RHUBARB AND PINEAPPLE JAM
2 1/2 pounds (about) rhubarb minus leaves
7 cups sugar
1 cup light corn syrup
Two 8-ounce cans unsweetened crushed pineapple

1/4 cup water
1 1/2-ounce package powdered fruit pectin
Rinse rhubarb and cut in 1/4-inch slices; measure 7 cups. In an 8-quart stainless steel or enamel saucepot stir together rhubarb, 1 cup of the sugar and the corn syrup. Cover; let stand at room temperature for 1 hour to start juices flowing. Stir in pineapple and water. Stirring constantly, bring to a boil over medium heat. Reduce heat; cover and boil very gently for 2 minutes or until rhubarb is soft. Stir in pectin. Stirring constantly, bring to a full boil. Stir in remaining sugar. Stirring constantly, bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute. Remove from heat; with a metal spoon, skim off foam. Immediately ladle jam into clean hot 1/2-pint jars leaving 1/4-inch headspace. Wipe top edge with damp towel. Seal according to jar manufacturer's directions. Process in a boiling water bath for 5 minutes. Cool on a wire rack or a folded towel. Makes about ten 1/2-pint jars.

by 2-inch baking pan with butter mixture. Cut phyllo sheets to fit pan. Cover with waxed paper and damp tea towel to keep from drying out.

Line pan with 10 sheets phyllo, brushing each with butter mixture.

Sprinkle with 1/2 cup pistachio mixture. Place 2 sheets phyllo on top of nuts, brushing each with butter mixture. Sprinkle with 1/2 cup nut mixture. Repeat, layering 2 sheets phyllo, brushing each with butter mixture and sprinkling with 1/2 cup pistachio mixture until all nut mixture is used.

Top with remaining phyllo sheets, brushing each with butter. With sharp knife, carefully cut through all layers into small diamond-shaped pieces. Bake at 325 degrees F. 45 minutes; reduce heat to 275 F and bake 20 minutes longer. Remove from oven; while still hot, carefully spoon cool Honey Syrup over baklava. Makes about 40 pieces.

HONEY SYRUP: Combine 1 1/4 cups water, 1/4 cup honey, 1/2 teaspoon each; grated lime or lemon peel and orange peel, 4 whole cloves and 1/2 stick (about 2 inches) cinnamon. Bring to a boil; simmer 20 minutes. Add 1 tablespoon each: lime or lemon juice and orange juice; simmer 5 minutes longer. Remove from heat and cook. Makes about 12 cups.

Tip: For optimum flavor, allow Pistachio Baklava to stand several hours after adding syrup. Baklava can be frozen wrapped in foil. Thaw at room temperature.

"To Clarify Butter: Melt 1 1/2 cups butter over low heat. Remove from heat and let stand a few minutes, allowing milk solids to settle. Skim foam from the top and carefully pour off clear yellow liquid leaving sediment in pan. Makes 1 cup.

Dead branches on trees, shrubs ready for pruning

Because of the very low temperatures last winter, many trees and shrubs were damaged or killed. Many evergreens are brown, especially on the wind-exposed to the wind. Deciduous trees and shrubs should all have leaves now. Those branches which don't are probably dead.

If you are not sure whether a branch or plant is dead, you can check by scratching the bark with a fingernail or knife. If the area just under the bark is green and moist, it is alive. If brown and dry, it is dead. Sometimes a branch is alive, but all the buds have been killed. Occasionally a latent bud will develop later. More often, buds lower in the plant will grow in an effort to replace the dead portion.

The brown needles of evergreens such as pines and junipers will sometimes fall off and be replaced by green ones if the branch has not been severely damaged. If the area under the bark is green, you may want to wait a while before pruning evergreens. However, if the branch is dry and brittle when bent, it might as well be pruned off. Sometimes only the end of the branch needs to be pruned if it is alive further down.

If the top of an evergreen has been killed, it will usually develop two or three upright growing branches below the killed area later in the summer. If this happens, pick the straightest one and prune the others to develop a tree with a single top.

In pruning a deciduous tree or shrub, cuts should be made just above a side branch or newly developing bud. If there is no live growth on a branch, then it should be pruned at its origin without leaving a stub. Other live branches may need to be shortened to achieve a balanced shape.

If the main leader or trunk has been killed, deciduous trees also often develop several upright growing tops. About mid to late June all but the straightest one of these can be shortened. The unpurged one will then become dominant.

Plants which are killed almost to the ground will need more than one pruning. In addition to removing the dead top, some of the new branches will need training later. For trees all but the straightest trunk branch should be removed. For shrubs, some of the stronger branches will need to be shortened in order to shape the plant.

Plants which are normally hardy in our area have been killed during the last two winters. If you must replace a dead plant, you may want to select one which is more hardy. Most of the Magic Valley is USDA hardiness zone 5. Colder areas are zone 4 and some of the higher elevations are zone 3. An experienced nurseryman can usually tell you the hardiness rating of a particular plant. To estimate its relative hardiness in your area.

Pheromones will help to control bugs

By EARL ARONSON
The Associated Press

There is much discussion these days about pheromones and sex attractants to control the explosion of insects harmful to humans and gardens.

So while visiting the Johnson Wax Ruid Entomology Center recently at Wind Point, Wis., we got answers to many questions.

The center, half a dozen buildings on 15 acres, was established to rear and test insects under ideal laboratory conditions. The research team includes 28 entomologists, biologists and technicians working to solve insect control. At times, the facility houses its million bugs of 30 different species.

Dr. Richard E. Keyel summed up chemical communication — which is widespread and vital to animals. He explained:

Chemicals used for communication within the body of an individual animal are called hormones. Chemicals used in communication between individuals within a species are called pheromones. Pheromones are used for a number of communication purposes.

Sex pheromones can be used to attract members of the opposite sex over long or short distances or used as aphrodisiacs to stimulate courtship or copulation.

Aggregation pheromones bring individuals together — for mating, hibernation, or group exploitation of the environment, such as feeding. Aggregation of insects can occur in species that would not generally be considered "social" in the sense of ants and bees. Cockroaches, sawflies and wood-infesting beetles are examples.

"Social insects have a number of pheromones that cause individuals to come together. Queen pheromones cause the queen to be surrounded with workers and serve to inhibit worker egg production. Recruitment pheromones bring workers to a place where work is required. Trail pheromones mark the direction to such places and may include components that increase activity or orientation of workers.

Alarm pheromones stimulate defense behavior and may contain separate components to excite individuals and mark the target area.

Pheromones may be used as repellents, territory markers or to stimulate movement. They all tend to spread insects apart or tend to prevent other insects from entering an area, searching an area already searched or laying eggs where eggs already have been laid.

Pheromones are also involved in identification. Individuals can be recognized as belonging to the same colony (useful in social insects) or to the same species (useful for mating). There also are chemicals that indicate an individual is dead and should be removed from the nest.

A more recent development is an insect growth regulator. The newest Johnson Wax is Flea Killer Plus, which evoked the comment, "Get rid of adults and that helps take care of the rest."

"We are manipulating, exploiting, insects," said Dr. Roger H. Grothaus, entomology research manager. "This is a major area of management. Pheromones are used to our will — to control movement of insects."

Water hyacinths: pretty, worldly pests

By HENRY MITCHELL
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The water hyacinth is a flower of such texture and general elegance that it is hard to believe it is one of the world's great pests.

I was aware the St. Johns River in Florida had these lovely flowers in such mats and masses as to impede traffic, but only after I ran into Dr. Norbert Vietmeier, a member of the Academy of Sciences did I learn other wonderful things about this outrageous plant.

It comes from Brazil, he believes, but evidently behaved itself in former times or else stayed back in the Amazon jungle where gardeners rarely penetrated, since it is not mentioned until 1824, when the German botanist Karl von Martius mentioned it following an expedition to that country.

In our own country the plant had a marvelous boost in 1884 when it was given as a souvenir to a lot of visitors attending the Cotton States Exposition in New Orleans.

In no time it was appearing in the warm, wild waters of the South as an escape. By 1895 it could be found 600 miles to the east in the St. Johns River, where it extended 200 feet from the shore on each side of the stream, in patches (not solid) running 100 miles.

A gale in 1906 blew the water hyacinth up the river, blocking it for 25 miles and wrecking an important local lumber industry when logs could no longer be floated down to market.

By the turn of the century the plant was in India. In the 1950s it was to be found in more than one African river, and it appeared in Australia and Central America in the 1960s.

Today it is well established in all kinds of rivers, including the Nile, the Mississippi, the Ganges, the Zambezi, the Congo and the Mekong, to say nothing of the Amazon.

One year in my former garden I set one plant out in my lily pool the end of May, and by July it was using a spading fork to lift out the surplus.

A single plant, Vietmeier reports, can spread prodigiously. In a Louisiana sample it was found that two plants increased to 300 within 23 days. Ten plants can cover an acre of water in 10 months.

I am not the only gardener to consider this one of the loveliest of all flowers. The king of Siam's wife introduced it to the palace gardens in Bangkok in 1901, and there it grew admirably until a flood washed some of them into the canals, where it has run wild.

Art and furniture combining in new showroom galleries

By BARBARA MAYER
The Associated Press

Once, you bought your furniture in a retail store and your art in a gallery. Nowadays, the departments of art and decoration seem to be moving closer together.

Just how close may be seen with the opening of an art gallery that sells home furnishings. What is believed to be one of the first examples of this type of marketing approach is the Gallery of Applied Arts, which opened recently in New York City.

According to Frances Nelson, director, the gallery's primary stock consists of one-of-a-kind and limited-edition pieces of furniture, rugs, lamps and lighting fixtures, and ceramic and glass objects. Many have been designed by architects or made by artists and craftsmen.

The gallery also recently had its first exhibition of art work, a show of folding screens made by artists. The screens were an appropriate choice, according to Virginia Fabbri Butera, the curator of the show, since they can have both artistic meaning and practical utility.

Regarding its "message," a screen is a decorative home furnishings accessory that can block drafts, create temporary privacy, hide an unsightly area for a while and divide a large space so it is cooler, says Mrs. Butera, noting however that some examples in the show do none of these things.

Some readers may associate folding screens with overstuffed Victorian parlors and with actresses' dressing rooms in old-time movies. The invention of the screen actually dates back to ancient China, according to Mrs. Butera.

Her discovery that screens have been used at various times by artists as a means of self-expression occurred fortuitously, she said. While at the Philadelphia Museum of Art in a curatorial position, she learned that the photographer Ansel Adams made 13 screens. Shortly after this, she saw a screen made by artist Thomas Hart Benton.

"This odd," she recalls saying. Now on the lookout for screens executed by artists, she has turned up examples by painters including Whistler, Bonnard, Vuillard and Picasso as well as by Spanish architect Gaudi and the Philadelphia artist, Man Ray, among others.

Her suggestion for an exhibition of screens by artists was taken up by the National Gallery of Art and Yale University Art Gallery and an exhibition at these institutions of American and European screens created between 1870 and 1970 was held in 1984. The current show at the Gallery of Applied Arts covers screens made recently by living American artists.

Screens have appeared in many guises and materials since their invention. The early Chinese screens were cumbersome and bulky structures that were employed for the same basic reasons that screens are used today, she noted.

She traced the folding screen next to Japan in the 7th century, where it had changed considerably. It was now a lightweight structure made of seven layers of paper. The Japanese developed a new use for screens in the sliding Shoji panels which are still a feature of Japanese homes. These sliding screens form movable walls and doors behind which possessions are stored on shelves.

In most cultures, including our own, the three-panel screen is most common, but the Japanese never use an odd number of panels, she discovered.

In the Western world, the heyday for the folding screen was during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. After that they appeared to fade from the scene, although they were periodically revived by home furnishings manufacturers.

Today, however, she discerns a revival among artists who are reinterpreting and reinventing the screen as both a convenience and functional art object. "Today's screens are as different from one another as they are from the past," she said. Among the materials employed in the screens on view at the gallery are handmade paper, carved wood, painted canvas, cut aluminum and lacquered screens. She has found as many as 200 artists making screens currently.

Their interest in this medium is part of the trend toward the merging of art and craft. "Screens, whose decorative appeal lies in their surface treatment, plainly fit in today's renewed interest in surface pattern in art," she added.

Prices for most of the screens on view at the gallery range from about $2,000 to $5,000 and are near to Joe Duke, one of the gallery's owners.

Duke says screens are a perfect example of the marriage between art and home furnishings. The gallery itself "grew out of the resurgence of a broken tradition in home furnishings and decorative arts of the fine craftsman making objects that delight the senses in addition to being useful."

Check list of common house flaws

By POPULAR MECHANICS

Most houses are structurally sound — but they have a lot of other problems.

Whether you are buying a new home or upgrading your old one, checking out the common problems listed by engineer and columnist Norman Becker in the June issue of Popular Mechanics will mean a smarter home shopping and safer, more comfortable living.

• Damaged exterior paths and steps, found in 90 percent of homes. Becker has inspected over 14 years. This requires re-grouting, cracks, settling and uneven sections and correcting the heaving walkway caused by growing tree roots.

• Inadequate attic insulation and ventilation, found in 60 percent of homes inspected. In an unfinished attic, insulation belongs between the floor joists, not between the roof rafters. Check finished or partially finished attics for insulation on the unfinished side of partition walls. Attics can be ventilated by gable, soffit and roof-ridge vents.

• Inadequate crawl space insulation and ventilation, found in 55 percent of homes with crawl spaces.

Water seepage also can be a problem. Dirt floors in crawl spaces should be covered with polyethylene plastic sheeting.

• Wet basement, found in 50 percent of homes with basements. Water seepage can be caused by faulty gutters and downspouts, poor grading of adjacent ground, leaking basement walls and/or high ground water.

• Electrical problems, found in 48 percent of homes inspected. Some homes built between 1965 and 1973 have aluminum wiring, labeled a fire hazard by the Consumer Product Safety Commission. It should be replaced.

• Heating system problems, found in 42 percent of homes. Check for malfunctioning or missing boiler or furnace controls such as low-water cutoff, high pressure or temperature limit switch, fan control, relief valve, oil burner, gas valve, zone valves, or circulating pumps.

• Deteriorated roof shingles, found in 40 percent of homes. As a roof covering ages, it may be necessary to replace shingles. It usually is not necessary to re-roof a structure because of missing or defective shingles.

• Missing or damaged gutters and downspouts, found in 34 percent of homes. The lower section of the downspout must be set outside the upper section so that water will not leak through the joint, and bases must always be extended so water flows away from the structure.

• Fire safety hazards, found in 30 percent of homes. All homes should have a smoke detector in the hallway by the bedrooms. Cover exposed wood framing members that are near the heating system boiler or furnace, using fire-rated gypsum board.

• Deteriorated or improperly vented plumbing, found in 28 percent of homes. Problems involve coupling when iron pipes are replaced with copper, dissolving of the iron in brass pipes, and S-type drain traps that lose their seal.

• Termites, found in 23 percent of homes. You can often tell if a house has been chemically treated for termites by the patched holes in the foundation wall.

• Hazardous steps and stairs, found in 21 percent of homes. A handrail is recommended for steps with more than two risers.

• Hot water heater, missing controls and improper installation, in 21 percent of homes. When hot water is supplied through the heating system, a temperature and pressure sensitive relief valve adds safety.
