Empty chair will represent Carter

Sponsor of debates says it is policy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The League of Women Voters said Wednesday President Carter has rejected new debate proposals put forth by the Reagan campaign and the league is prepared to go ahead with two debaters and one empty chair Sept. 21.

"The impasse remains... I regret that very deeply," said league president Ruth Hinerfeld after 2 1/2 hours of negotiations with representatives of Carter, Ronald Reagan and Independent John Anderson. Reagan, in Cleveland, said he was "sorry and angry" about Carter's decision, and added:

"It is clear that there is a new Jimmy Carter these days, one who ducked debates with Ted Kennedy and one who seeks to duck legitimate debates... (who) would rather campaign in the safety and isolation of the Rose Garden instead of submitting himself and his record as president to the examination of the other candidates and the scrutiny of the American people."

But Carter was adamant.

"My position is clear and consistent and I do not intend to change it," Carter said in response to a question in the Oval Office.

But he added that, "We're still working on it (the possibility of a future debate)." Press secretary Jody Powell, asked what he thought the impact of the empty chair would be said "that will be the only non-Republican object" on the platform.

Mrs. Hinerfeld said she has changed her position of Tuesday, when she said there would not be an empty chair to represent Carter.

Asked about it Wednesday, Mrs. Hinerfeld said it has always been the league's policy to include an empty chair if an invited candidate fails to show up at the debate "for his own purposes," and "that will be the case" in Baltimore.

Reagan and Anderson aides "were forthcoming... and indicated their willingness" to consider all proposals, she said, but the Carter campaign rejected them.

Both Reagan and Anderson have indicated a willingness to take part in a first debate Sept. 21 in Baltimore even if Carter doesn't.

Asked if the league would sponsor a Carter-Reagan debate following the Reagan-Anderson debate, Mrs. Hinerfeld said "No."

She said the league would sponsor a Carter-Reagan debate only if the president shows up for the Sept. 21 event, adding the invitation to Carter is still open.

Carter's campaign manager Robert Strauss, meanwhile, said both Carter and Reagan have "selfish reasons" for their stands on including Anderson in the debates.

"We have our selfish reasons, Reagan has his selfish interests, Strauss said today. "We all have our selfish interests. Let's don't kid ourselves."

"We know that that (Anderson) candidacy... even though it is not a legitimate candidacy in terms of a chance to be president — takes a great many more votes from us than it does from Reagan. Reagan wants him on there for that very reason."

Anderson Tuesday predicted public anger would force Carter to join the debates and Reagan questioned whether Carter even wanted a one-on-one debate.

Energy plans blasted

By United Press International

President Carter and Ronald Reagan traded insults Wednesday in an exchange of the blame of sending the truth about the energy shortage.

Reagan was first, promising in a speech in Cleveland to free the United States from OPEC oil domination and charging Carter with misleading the public by claiming there is an acute shortage of energy resources, while "the truth is America has an abundance of energy."

"When Mr. Carter says we don't have enough energy at home, what he really means is his policies won't let Americans find and produce the energy they need," Reagan said.

Reagan in the White House, accused his Republican foe of making "false allegations" and demanded "one shred of evidence" that administration policies have discouraged discovery and production of energy in America.

"Governor Reagan is wrong," Carter said in a statement in the Oval Office. "Again he has made accusations without checking the facts."

"I do not intend to let my Republican opponent misrepresent facts about this administration," he declared.

Reagan said, "President Carter called for the moral equivalent of war and created the Department of Energy which is the bureaucratic equivalent of surrender."

He said conservation is necessary, but "any president can reduce our energy use. If, like Jimmy Carter, he deliberately puts 2 million people out of work."

Carter, who announced that Deputy Energy Secretary John Sawhill has been named chairman of the new Synthetic Fuel Corp., went on:

"It's ironic that on a day like this we have to respond to false allegations made by the Republican nominee for president, Mr. Reagan."

"Let me tell you the truth," he said in a separate, 15-minute speech for coal production, increased crude oil production for only the second time in a decade and predictions of another record yield next year.

That form of long-distance presidential debate apparently will have to substitute for the staged confrontations planned by the League of Women Voters.

The U.S. attorney's office announced Wednesday it has filed charges against a 35-year-old man who allegedly told an acquaintance he planned to kill Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan.

Frank Salandish, 39, of Milwaukee was charged with attempting to interfere or intimidate Reagan and of willfully making a threat against him.

Police said they got a telephone tip from an acquaintance of Salandish saying the suspect had made the threatening statement.

Each side takes a different view of canal sharing ruling

TWIN FALLS — Two starkly different views are emerging in the aftermath of the Idaho Supreme Court ruling Tuesday that could force Twin Falls Canal Co. to share its canals.

The ruling cleared the way for the Canyon View Irrigation Co. to use condemnation proceedings to gain a right of way in the canal company's High Line Canal. Canyon View wants to use the canal to transport water from Milner Dam to farmland west of Salmon Falls Creek on the Bruneau Plateau.

Hugo Mejer, Canyon View president, sees the court ruling as a starting point for negotiations between the two companies. The Canyon View project could benefit the entire state, he said, and it need not cause any problems for the canal company. "I hope we can get an agreement," he said.

"The Canyon View project would bring gravity-flow irrigation to farmland now using expensive high-lift pumping and allow additional land to be brought into production. It is similar to a project under study by the state Department of Water Resources, but some state officials believe shows more promise than any other plan for developing economical new farmland in the state.

Tom Olmstead, a long-time director of the canal company, sees things differently. Instead of looking at the court's decision as a starting place for negotiation, he calls it "unfair and a bad mistake."

"I know the canal system and I know the people who use it," he said. He wonders what will protect the canal company from other groups demanding the right to use part of the canal company's system.

Olmstead served on the canal company's board of directors for 20 years before retiring earlier this year. "I know the canal system and I know the people who use it," he said. The two companies may be able to reach

Governor's choice expected soon

Council nominates 4 to 5th District judgeship

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Judicial Council Wednesday announced four nominees to fill a vacant 5th District Court judgeship.

Magistrates Michael Redman and Daniel B. Meehl, both of Twin Falls, and Nathan W. Higer of Burley, and Twin Falls attorney Susan Roy have been nominated to fill the judge seat vacated by James M. Cunningham.

Gov. John Evans is expected to make a final selection from among the four this week, possibly as early as today, according to press secretary Don Watkins.

The nominations were made following interviews Saturday with all nine applicants.

The remaining five applicants included Charles Melvin Edwards, a Twin Falls magistrate; Robert M. McConnell, a Boise County lawyer; and Ray Keith Roark, Blaine County prosecuting attorney; Randy John Stoker and Robert Galley, both Twin Falls attorneys.

The nominations were made by Idaho Supreme Court Chief Justice Charles Donaldson, Boise attorney Joe McCollom, C.L. House of Eagle and Helen McKinney of Caldwell.

The nominees were selected on the basis of personal and professional background, response to interview questions and the results of questionnaires from members of the Bar and private citizens, said Don Burnett of Pocatello, executive director for the Idaho Judicial Council.

The council is responsible for nominating replacements to vacant district judge and Supreme Court seats.

Cunningham's seat is being temporarily filled by Phillip M. Becker, a Gooding County magistrate judge appointed by the Idaho Supreme Court.

To take heat off B-1 decision

Zumwalt says Carter ordered 'stealth' leak

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Retired Adm. Elmo Zumwalt charged Wednesday "there appears to be no doubt" President Carter himself decided to make the charges in a letter given to Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who held a news conference about it.

Zumwalt, former chief of naval operations, said he drew the conclusion after talking with White House and Pentagon sources.

He made the charges in a letter given to Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who held a news conference about it.

Zumwalt is a co-chairman of Americans for an Effective Presidency, one of several independent groups working to raise money for Republican Presidential candidate Ronald Reagan.

"There appears to be no doubt, based on my contacts with White House staff and Pentagon officials, that the decision was made by the president to disclose the existence of this technology; and that the method chosen was first to leak its existence and then be forced to confirm the leak," Zumwalt wrote.

Zumwalt said disclosing the existence of the new so-called "stealth" system was "unbelievably harmful to the national security." He said it gave the Russians a "five-year head start" to begin developing a counter technology.

"I have been told by my sources that the decision was a political one designed to defuse criticism of the president for his decision to cancel the B-1 strategic bomber," Zumwalt wrote.

"The political theory was to establish retroactively a justification for the earlier cancellation. I.e., it can now be asserted the B-1 was canceled in order to await the development of 'stealth' technology."

Zumwalt's charge represents the first time in the controversy that anyone has accused Carter or personally making the decision to disclose the program.

Lugar called on Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., who chairs the Senate Intelligence Committee, to hold closed hearings on the matter, and said Zumwalt would testify.

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Forces Committee, turned down Republican requests for hearings on the disclosure.

Elliot Trudeau wants a new constitution for Canada, complete with a Bill of Rights

O Canada

Trudeau faces battle for bill of rights

OTTAWA (UPI) — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's plan to include a bill of rights in Canada's constitution, ran into almost solid opposition Wednesday, including one provincial premier who cited the American Bill of Rights as an example to avoid.

Trudeau's appeal took place on the third day of a conference to rewrite Canada's constitution, attended by premiers from all of the nation's 10 provinces, many of whom are seeking stronger powers for their provinces at the expense of the Ottawa government.

Most of the rights Trudeau wants to include in the constitution are now protected by tradition instead of law, as in the British system.

The Canadian constitution, the British North America Act, was a British law establishing Canada and can officially be changed only by the British Parliament. Trudeau believes it as the last vestige of colonial status and must end.

Efforts to "patriate" or remove British control over the Canadian constitution have been stymied for 33 years because of standing differences between the provinces and the federal government have blocked an agreement on changes that would have to be made to the document.

Trudeau has said that if the provincial premiers do not reach agreement this time, he will set alone to bring home the constitution in time for Christmas.

The argument Wednesday centered over Trudeau's proposal for the bill of rights to provide constitutional protection to civil liberties which are presently protected by tradition rather than law.

Addressing the premiers, he said Canada has violated the rights of its citizens in the past and argued that constitutional guarantees were needed to make sure it does not happen again.

As examples of such violations, Trudeau cited stripping Japanese Canadians of citizenship in World War II and restricting rights to use French in one province and English in another.

"The list is not enormous but it can go on," Trudeau said. "And it does show that whether it be the bureaucracies or the boards, or the legislators themselves, we have infringed in the past some fundamental freedoms."

But Manitoba Premier Sterling Lyon, the most outspoken critic among the premiers that opposed the bill of rights, said elected legislators should determine the rights of citizens, not the constitution.

"We all know that the vilest dictatorship can pass the most elaborate bill of rights," Lyon said. "The real protection of rights lies in the commitment of people and governments to see them protected and enhanced as they have been protected and enhanced in Canada through our parliamentary form of government."

Lyon cited the Constitution of the United States as his bad example.

"The Americans' right to bear arms has inhibited governments in that country to legislate gun control," he said.

Lyon told reporters it would be "bordering on irresponsible" for Trudeau to ignore provincial objections. "We have a Canadian system, it's in place, it's working," he added. "Why should we tinker around with it?"

Trudeau insisted before the conference opened that the bill of rights was not negotiable and, if necessary, he would move without provincial approval to include it in a new constitution by the end of the year.

Federal officials believe Trudeau can not without the provinces to have the constitution, including a bill of rights, transferred to Canada from British control where it has been.

Court — God isn't a person

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (UPI) — The British Columbia Court of Appeal Wednesday ruled that God is not a person.

In a 2-1 decision, the court decided that, for the purposes of the Criminal Code of Canada, a person is "a human being having rights or duties recognized by law."

The question of God's status arose during an appeal of the 1979 acquittal of Morris Davie in Prince George County Court of charges he told two other people to set a forest fire.

In a police interrogation room, after Davie had apparently thought all officers had left, reportedly fell to his knees and prayed, "Oh, God, let me get away with it just this once."

The application was presented as evidence at Davie's trial, but the judge ruled it was a private conversation between two persons, which is privileged information and inadmissible.

Davie was acquitted, but the government appealed, asking the prayer be admitted as evidence in a new trial.

The appeals court Wednesday ordered a new trial, ruling that the words "Oh, God, let me get away with it" were a "private conversation" as defined by the Criminal Code, because God is not a person.

an agreement; but he said he doesn't think it will come quickly or easily. "I don't think the stockholders will go along with it. They'll need a long cooling off period," he said. "There will be a lot of bitterness."

The court ruling said Canyon View can force the canal company to share the cost and it pays for all "damages" suffered by the canal company. The court defined the damages as the cost of improvements needed for the system to carry an increased amount of water and any increased costs of operating the system.

However, the court decision specifically said the canal company would only be entitled to a token payment as compensation for losing exclusive control over its system.

Canyon View attorney John Hepworth said Canyon View would become, in effect, co-owners of the portion of the canal system they used.

"Overall," he said, the ruling gave Canyon View everything it could have hoped for.

Thomas Nelson, who argued the canal company's case before the Supreme Court, said he could not comment on the decision because he may ask the Supreme Court to reconsider the case. He said he wouldn't comment on the case in the media until the possibility remained that he might have to argue the case before the court again.

The court decision does not clear the way for the Canyon View project, it is only the latest chapter in a more than six-year-old quest by Canyon View to gain access to the canal system.

"That was just step two," Meyer said. "We still have step three and four to go. There is still a lot of homework to do."

Now that Canyon View knows it can go ahead with the project whether the canal company wants to share its costs or not, Meyer said, "I can undertake studies to find out exactly how much the project will cost. From preliminary studies and work done by the state Department of Water Resources, it appears the cost will be high but the project feasible," he said.

Others on the other hand, said there are portions of the High Line Canal where expanding its capacity will be extremely expensive and dangerous. "I think when a final price tag is put on the project, it will be too expensive," he said.

Nuclear fuel sale rebuffed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite a last-minute State Department appeal, Congress Wednesday dealt a blow to the administration's controversial plan to sell India nuclear fuel when key House and Senate committees voted to block the sales.

Both houses must adopt resolutions of disapproval by the end of September to block the two export licenses — for 19 tons each — approved by President Carter over the opposition of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Before the vote, Secretary of State Edmund Muskie told a closed session of the Senate group the State Department had agreed to a proposal by French nuclear chief, Sen. Frank Church, to make only one of the sales now.

Unions support lizard god

PERTH, Australia (UPI) — Australian unions Wednesday decided to impose sanctions against companies that are drilling for oil on ground aborigines say is inhabited by their lizard god, the "Great Goanna."

The Australian Council of Trade Unions, during an executive meeting in Melbourne, said sanctions would include work stoppages directed against the firms which own the drilling rigs.

The tribesmen believe the exploration will harm their lizard god; Goanna, who they say lives beneath the drilling site.

Today's weather

Morning showers should start your day

Twin Falls, Burley, Rupert, and Gooding-Jerome areas:

Chance of a few morning showers, otherwise partly cloudy today. Fair tonight and Friday. Light winds today except gusts to near 35 mph in vicinity of thundershowers.

Low temperatures tonight from 45 to 50, highs both days in the mid 70s.

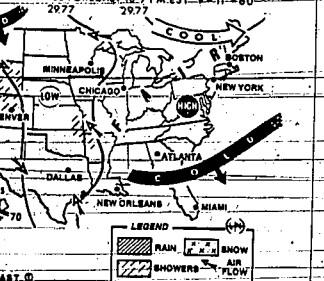

Halley, Camas Prairie, and Wood River Valley:

Cloudy this morning with scattered showers and a few thundershowers. Chance of isolated heavy thundershowers in the mountains with strong gusty winds. Decreasing clouds and showers this afternoon. Fair tonight and Friday. Lows tonight in the 30s, highs both days 65 to 75.

Synopsis:

Moist, stable air continued to blanket Idaho Wednesday as clouds and scattered showers dominated the southern half of the state. The low pressure center causing this is located in southern Nevada and moving eastward. Our southern air flow aloft continued to pump the moist air into the state.

Along with the shower activity throughout southern Idaho, a few funnel clouds were reported in the Burley area. These funnels did not touch the ground and no damage was reported. Precipitation amounts were spotty but locally heavy in some areas. A few imbedded thunderstorms were also present, mainly over the higher terrain.

Today should bring gradual drying with warming temperatures. In Idaho as the upper flow moves more westerly.

Temperatures remained cool because of the cloud cover. The lowest temperature reported Wednesday morning was 40 degrees at Porthill. Highest Wednesday was 80 at Mullan. Elsewhere in the nation Wednesday, Jackson, Miss., had a high of 103 degrees, while Bloomfield, Neb., reported a low of 24 degrees.

Traveling conditions in Magic Valley show winds from 10 to 15 mph today, stronger near showers. Pan evaporation is expected to be 23 of an inch today and 26 Friday.

Extended outlook for having, Saturday through Monday, calls for dry with temperatures near to slightly below normal for good curing conditions. Light to moderate morning dew.

'School' protests busing

ALEXANDRIA, La. (UPI) — Parents defying a desegregation order to close mostly white Forest Hill Elementary School in rural Rapides Parish broke into the building for a second day Wednesday and held makeshift classes for about 100 students.

School superintendent Allen Nichols took a wait-and-see attitude on the "rooster" school and planned no immediate action to have the parents and students removed. He notified federal Judge Nauman Scott about the protest, but decided against padlocking the building for safety reasons.

The school board is "helpless" to act against the protesters, said protest organizer Clyde Holloway, a Forest Hill businessman acting as school "principal."

"They are not in any position to do anything," he said. "They have no power. We are meeting peacefully. It's our building. As long as we're peaceful, I don't see how we are breaking any laws."

Attendance at the protest classes, which were taught by parents and retired teachers, was given as 180 — an increase of 14 from Tuesday, the first day of the busing plan.

Nichols had ordered the doors of Forest Hill Elementary locked after the parents entered the building through open doors Tuesday. But Wednesday morning the protesters surreptitiously obtained a key and got in again.

Nichols said he told Judge Scott "of the determination of the parents... to occupy this building." He said Scott thanked him for the information but otherwise did not comment.

About 3,100 of the 37,000 students in the central Louisiana district are being bused under Scott's order. The Forest Hill protest was the only major problem reported in the two days of desegregation.

At least one black attended Forest Hill Wednesday. Holloway said any blacks from Leocomple Elementary, where the Forest Hill students were supposed to be bused, could attend the Forest Hill protest school if they wished.

Black Alexandria attorney Louis Berry, who sought the desegregation order, said the protest amounted to "plain defiance and cannot be tolerated."

Klan jury sees its first videotapes

GREENSBORO, N.C. (UPI) — Prosecutors began Wednesday the tedious process of establishing a "chain of evidence" against six Ku Klux Klan members and Nazis charged with killing five members of the Communist Workers Party.

The prosecution spent much of Wednesday questioning law enforcement officers in an attempt to show evidence in the case had been handled properly by investigators.

Prosecutors showed two slow-motion videotapes of the incident to the jury Tuesday, and had been expected to show another Wednesday, but opted for the testimony concerning evidence instead. The third videotape will be shown later.

Slow-motion tapes of the Nov. 3, 1978, incident at a "Death to the Klan" rally organized by the Communist Workers Party were shown to the six-man, six-woman jury after the prosecution and defense reached an agreement on the issue.

In return for dropping objections to the tapes, the defense received assurances from prosecutors that FBI acoustical experts will be called to testify in the trial.

Defense lawyers maintain that studies by those experts of the original tapes will show without doubt that the communists fired the first shots and the Klan members and Nazis returned fire in self-defense.

FTC limits LaSalle Extension advertising

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Trade Commission Wednesday ordered a Chicago-based correspondence school to limit the kinds of advertising claims it makes to prospective students.

The agency said LaSalle Extension

Universally must say that taking its courses will not guarantee the student a job, if any of its future ads talk about jobs or earnings.

In addition if the school makes a claim about what the prospects are for its graduates, it must disclose information about how well its past students are doing.

The school is a subsidiary of Macmillan Inc., the New York publisher. It offers courses in such fields as interior decorating, computer programming and air conditioning service.

Bilingual School groups oppose burden of federal plan

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mrs. Susan B. Bieniasz, of New Carrollton, Md., had a word for U.S. Secretary of Education Shirley Huxstader's proposal Wednesday on federally mandated bilingual education — "protest."

The representative of the Prince George's County Board of Education outside Washington, D.C., explained why when she joined the parade of people from many states and ethnic groups testifying in New York at U.S. Department of Education hearings on the proposal.

"I am here not only to protest these specific guidelines but to protest the very dangerous precedent you are setting," said Mrs. Bieniasz.

She was speaking for the nation's 13th largest school system: 127,000 students, 216 schools, $288 million budget. Boys and girls in the system with limited-English proficiency represent 70 different languages. Some are from families in the Washington diplomatic corps.

"If you can dictate this educational program today, are you going to dictate how we are to teach math, or how we are to teach left-handed children to write tomorrow?" Cynthia C. Brown, U.S. Deputy Secretary for Education, Office of Civil Rights, said the idea of an inflexible blueprint handed down to the local school districts from Washington is a mistaken one.

She said one reason for the hearings is to get comments from the people who would be affected.

The federal proposal, through the Education Department's Office of Civil Rights, aims to get schools to do a better job of teaching the 3.5 million children whose main language is other than English.

Studies show the majority of these are apt to drop out — at rates up to six times greater than that of other students.

Mrs. Bieniasz said her school system is among the many already doing a good job in bilingual education and has a 13-year track record.

The program is ESOL — English for Speakers of Other Languages.

The Office of Civil Rights individually audited and evaluated 43 Prince George's County ESOL students and found students who performed well in the schools in their native country, performed as well in our schools, she said.

Robert Strauss has never been more prolific when he says all sides in the presidential debate controversy are promoting their own selfish interests... Upset of Javits poses perils for president

By United Press International

JACOB JAVITS said for Anderson

The upset of Sen. Jacob Javits in the New York GOP primary left the state's political picture in turmoil Wednesday, posing a major threat to President Carter's chances of carrying a state many believe he must win to be re-elected.

Though knocked off the GOP line for the first time since he entered politics 33 years ago, Javits still is running for Senate on the Liberal Party line.

John Anderson is also on that line, and the combination of the independent presidential candidate and a liberal senator who has always drawn heavily among Democratic voters could spell trouble for Carter.

In Washington, Javits predicted the voters will deny the "experts" and elect him to a fifth term.

"The people of New York know how to choose," Javits said. "They will defy all the nice calculations of the experts."

Javits, 76 and ailing, was upset by conservative Alfonse D'Amato, a little known town supervisor from Long Island. It was the first time the highly popular Javits had faced primary opposition in his almost quarter-of-a-century Senate career.

When Javits arrived in the Senate chamber, he received condolences from members on both sides of the aisle.

Assistant Senate Republican leader Ted Stevens of Alaska wistfully embraced Javits and put his head on the New York senator's shoulder.

Although Senate GOP leader Howard Baker adopted the party line without any hesitation, telling reporters he would back D'Amato, Javits indicated that other Republican senators might campaign for him.

"I don't think they will be asked to campaign against anyone," Javits said. "They will be asked to campaign for me. I believe that very likely it will happen, if it is attractive to me in my own candidacy."

Senators propose schemes to end primary 'anarchy'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Describing the present primary system as "sanctioned anarchy," a group of senators Wednesday urged drastic changes in the method used to choose presidential candidates.

Creation of a special commission to study the process and make recommendations for change was proposed by Sen. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill.

"If created now, it could formulate its recommendations well in advance of the 1984 presidential elections, thus sparing the nation the confusion recently experienced," he said in a written statement submitted to the Senate Rules Committee.

Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., suggested a single nationwide primary election in August of each presidential election year.

And Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., said five or 10 regional primaries should be held in place of the present scattered 38 primaries.

"The present system is no system, but is sanctioned anarchy," Weicker said.

Weicker, whose own presidential bid folded before the first primary this year, said the amount of money needed to run this gauntlet of primaries is staggering.

"I think for all of us there is a certain nagging feeling that democracy should not be as costly as it is," he said.

Weicker's plan would limit the time and money a candidate could put into a primary campaign.

Stevenson criticized the present system as one in which substance has little place, and said it not only has contributed to the decline of political parties but also "largely eliminated the need by candidates to fashion coalitions which strong presidents once wisely relied upon in governing the nation."

Stevenson said the system is "a great time to relax in Sun Valley. Warm autumn days, crisp mountain nights—perfect for the two of you to get away and enjoy our Sun Valley sports such as golf, tennis or horseback riding. Take advantage of the areas great shopping and restaurants without fighting the crowds."

FBI agent denies Jenrette 'trapped'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An undercover FBI agent who offered Rep. John Jenrette a $50,000 bribe to sponsor a bill for an Arab sheik testified Wednesday the congressman could have rejected the payoff and walked away at any time.

Defense lawyers questioning agent Anthony Amoroso at Jenrette's trial attempted to show that the FBI set up the South Carolina Democrat and preyed on his weakness for alcohol.

Kenneth Robinson, Jenrette's lawyer, asked Amoroso what he thought when Jenrette told him in a conversation that was being secretly videotaped: "I have larceny in my blood. I'll take it in a God damned minute but..."

"When he said it, didn't you say to yourself: 'Oh boy, that's a good one,'" the lawyer asked.

"I assumed he was stupid," Amoroso replied.

"At any time, he could have walked out," the agent said.

Jenrette and co-defendant John Stowe, a former Myrtle Beach, S.C. businessman, are on trial on charges they conspired to accept $100,000 from Amoroso, who posed as a representative of a fake Arab sheik in the Abscam undercover probe, in exchange for introducing a private immigration bill.

Jenrette also is charged with offering to arrange for Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., to introduce a similar bill in the Senate in exchange for $100,000. Thurmond was never actually contacted about the deal, the government says.

At one point, Robinson implied Amoroso went after congressmen who had alcohol problems.

"Do you agree, do you not, that alcohol is a method by which a person may be further induced to take a bribe?" Robinson asked.

Amoroso denied he would take advantage of someone's drinking problem as part of an investigation.

Jenrette, who was treated for alcohol problems last winter, was seen on videotapes drinking at three meetings at the Washington townhouse. The defense plans to focus on his alcohol problem to show he was victimized by the FBI.

Carter wins endorsements

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The leaders of almost every major U.S. environmental group endorsed President Carter's re-election bid Wednesday and denounced Ronald Reagan as an insensitive man who fails to grasp basic ecology issues.

Tom Kimball, president of the National Wildlife Federation, said the endorsements were made as individuals rather than on behalf of their organizations.

"On balance, we believe President Carter has been sensitive to environmental concerns and committed to conservation principles," he said.

Former Delaware Gov. Russell Peterson, president of the National Democratic Congressional Delegation, said, "I think he (Reagan) really doesn't understand the relationship between all forms of life."

Carter also won the endorsement of the New York Democratic Congressional Delegation, and its members promised to "work very hard" for his re-election and to offset the Liberal Party endorsement of John Anderson.

And in a day of revolving-door endorsements the last to emerge was New York financier Felix Rohatyn, accompanied by campaign manager Robert Strauss.

Television evangelists of the "Moral Majority" are waging combat in the political arena this year, but one of their more famous colleagues wants no part of the fight. Billy Graham says he won't endorse a presidential candidate — despite pressure to do so — because "My candidate is Jesus Christ." Graham will be on the election line and will vote by absentee ballot, but says "The clergy ought to stay out of politics and let the laymen handle it."

A decade ago, rocker Grace Slick of the Jefferson Starship and Abbie Hoffman were thrown out of the White House for trying to drug the president. Now the Starship has requested from the chief of Roanym Carter's Secret Service guards for an autographed picture of the group. Businessman sues hostage for non-payment of $406

DOYLESTOWN, Pa. (UPI) — One of the 52 American hostages in Iran has filed suit by a suburban Philadelphia businessman because he allegedly failed to pay $406 for a check-writing machine bought by the American School in Tehran.

Orest Fedoronko, sales distributor in the suburban Philadelphia community of Warmminster, sued William F. Keough of Alexandria, Va., even though the machine has been returned.

The suit by Fedoronko was revealed Tuesday because a lawyer representing Keough asked Bucks County Court for an extension of time to appeal. Keough's name was originally deleted from the suit by Warmminster District Justice James Kelly because Keough was a hostage.

On Aug. 4, Kelly awarded Fedoronko the unpaid $406 in a small claims court action, plus the $20 in legal costs. The machine was returned recently to Paymaster Corp. of Philadelphia, but Fedoronko said he was not satisfied with the condition.

Paymaster Corp. refused comment on the case and referred all calls to Fedoronko. A member of Fedoronko's family said she did not believe he was aware he had filed suit against one of the hostages.

"He is not that kind of a person to do that to one of the hostages," she said. "He is really very nice."

Keough's attorney, Brian McCullough, Tuesday filed a petition in the higher court asking for the exten-

DEEP TROUBLE

Walter Matthau says he didn't want to disappoint all the reporters who showed up Friday for a Hollywood promotion of his new movie, "Hopscotch." But the Screen Actors Guild says he disappointed the striking members by showing up and now the union has him on the carpet. SAG spokeswoman Kim Felner says he broke union rules prohibiting promotional activity during the strike. Matthau, who's done his share of picket line duty, could lose his union card for the breach.

Bridge condemned at dedication

HOOPERS ISLAND, Md. (UPI) — Everyone at the dedication of a $3.5 million Chesapeake Bay bridge expected Dorchester County Commissioner Thomas Flowers to drone out the usual praise.

But when the speech began, shock quickly replaced boredom.

"We are gathered here to dedicate a bridge that is a monument to man's stupidity, a monument to man's waste, a monument to governmental interference and inefficiency," Flowers said.

"There is no need for such an elaborate structure as this is, which is so out of keeping in the peaceful and lovely environment" of south Dorchester.

Flowers concluded: "Our great Creator and Father, bless this bridge" and those "who will do this structure to meet their needs, knowing that wind and wave and tide are daily at work destroying that which has been built."

The invocation was delivered Saturday, but it was still the talk of the town this week. "It was totally started," said fellow commissioner Leonard Dayton.

Flowers said the $3.5 million could have been better spent on flood control, which has eaten away much of the island in his lifetime.

The bridge connects upper and lower Hoopers Island, one of three islands between the Chesapeake Bay and Hoope's River. The span is about one quarter mile long and rises 27 feet above the water.

Innocent man released after 5 months in jail

TOPEKA, Kan. (UPI) — Imprisoned for five months for a crime he didn't commit, Pleasant was set free Monday, thanks to some legal and detective work.

Pleasant, convicted by a jury of holding up a fast-food chicken restaurant, had been sentenced in May to a minimum of 35 years and a maximum of life in prison. But Tuesday he walked out of Shawnee County Jail, free again.

The 29-year-old had been vindicated by his attorney, Camille Nobe, and Topeka Detective Gerald Mills, who investigated an off-the-record confession, found suspects and obtained enough evidence to exonerate Pleasant.

Several suspects who have admitted their parts in the robbery are expected to be arrested later this week.

"I've heard a lot of people say they are victims of circumstance, but until then, I didn't know what they were talking about," said Pleasant, who hopes to get his old job back at Topeka

State Hospital, where he said he did "just about everything."

Pleasant was arrested 10 days after the May 22, 1979, restaurant robbery when his car was mistakenly identified as the getaway car. A restaurant manager later identified him as one of four robbers who wore mirrored sunglasses and parka hoods.

Unable to verify where he was the night of the robbery and afraid of going to jail, Pleasant arranged an alibi with a friend, who later was called a state's witness and testified the alibi was false. The jury voted guilty.

Because of an armed robbery conviction eight years ago, Pleasant was given a stiff sentence without parole for 15 years.

But Pleasant's luck changed when one of the actual robbers — who was in jail with Pleasant — wrote and signed "A solemn Confession." The author declined to confess "on the record" to police, but detective Mills searched out other persons thought to be involved. They collaborated the story and cleared Pleasant.

Retrial of alleged killer of reporter Bolles begins

TUCSON, Ariz. (UPI) — A smiling and confident John Harvey Adamson went on trial Wednesday for a killing to which he once confessed — the 1976 bombing death of reporter Don Bolles.

Potential jurors were told testimony may not begin until the fourth week of September.

Adamson, 36, faces reinstated first-degree murder charges. As a state witness in the murder trial of two other men, Adamson previously admitted planting the bomb that fatally injured the Arizona Republic reporter.

The trial opened under tight security that included deputies armed with shotguns, an air-type metal detector to screen everyone entering the courtroom and proceedings behind locked doors.

Adamson was a key state witness in the 1977 Phoenix trial of contractor — Max Dunlap — and plumber James Robinson, whose murder convictions in the Bolles' killing were overturned by the Arizona Supreme Court.

Adamson's refusal to testify in a retrial ordered for Dunlap and Robinson led to dismissal of charges against the men and a determination that Adamson broke a plea agreement that required him to turn state's evidence.

Walter Matthau faces actors union hearing

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Picketing actors circled MGM studios Wednesday as one of their most famous colleagues, Walter Matthau, prepared to face a trial committee on charges of "conduct unbecoming a member of the Screen Actors Guild."

Matthau, who has been an ardent supporter of the walkout, was ordered to appear before a SAG committee to explain a promotional appearance he made last week for the motion picture "Hopscotch."

It is the first known action taken against a performer in the 32-year nationwide strike by more than 67,000 actors. As a result, Matthau could have his SAG card lifted, be suspended from the union or be fined.

Matthau appeared at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel last Friday and met with two dozen entertainment reporters who were brought to town by Avco Embassy to promote the movie "Hopscotch," which opens this month.

"I think the actors would object to any promotional activity of 'business-as-usual,'" the actor told reporters at the promotional meeting, "but I didn't want to disappoint all the people who've come here."

SAG spokesman Kim Felner said an order issued shortly after the strike began July 21 said "that no promotional activity shall be allowed for struck employees."

"What he did is against the rules," Miss Felner said. "Somebody disobeys and members of our board are appointed to hear the situation."

Attorney General announces white collar crime priorities

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti Wednesday issued detailed priorities for the federal fight against white-collar crime.

His aides said the new focus will provide a scale for measuring law enforcement performance.

Other federal law enforcement agencies will now be taking better aim at the kinds of white-collar crime that threaten our health and our safety, our pocketbooks and the very integrity of public and private institutions, Civiletti told the Public Citizens Forum, a Ralph Nader group.

Based on an eight-month Justice Department study, Civiletti announced seven priorities in the fight against white-collar crime for all 85 U.S. attorney's offices, all inspectors general of federal agencies and the FBI.

The priorities, marking the first time the various agencies have reached accord on a general anti-white-collar crime program, include emphases on combating corruption among public officials at all levels of government as well as crimes:

- Against the government by private citizens, including tax fraud, procurement fraud, program fraud and counterfeiting.
- Against consumers, including defrauding of customers, anti-trust violations and energy pricing violations.
- Against investors, including stock and real estate fraud.
- Against employees, including life-endangering health and safety violations and corruption by union leaders.

The priorities also cover fraud against business, such as embezzlement, bank fraud, insurance fraud, bankruptcy fraud and labor racketeering, and hazardous waste dumping and other pollution threatening the public health.

Philip Heymann, chief of the department's criminal division, said in an interview the priorities for the first time spell out to the public "what we're doing in white-collar crime or non-violent, tricky crime."

Heymann said he is seeking to fine-tune the priorities much further on a regional basis, and that he hopes by the end of the year 25 of the 85 U.S. attorneys will have held meetings with area officials of federal agencies and local law enforcement officials to agree on local priorities.

He said the local priorities may not be made public, but the public will now be able to ascertain the number of prosecutions brought in the various categories.

Judge urges out-of-court settlement to resolve Oswald exhumation suit

FORT WORTH, Texas (UPI) — Attorneys for and against exhumation of Lee Harvey Oswald's grave are being urged to settle out of court to avoid years of controversy and litigation, lawyers said Wednesday.

Two lawyers representing Robert Oswald, brother of Lee Harvey Oswald, told UPI the judge urged all attorneys involved in the case.

Another source told UPI: "The judge wants it done out-of-court. Otherwise, he thinks it could go for years."

British author Michael Edgove obtained permission last month from Marina Oswald-Porter, Oswald's widow, to exhume the body for autopsy and identification.

Libya, Syria effect 'merger'

out of trouble?

DAMASCUS, Syria (UPI) — Libya and Syria, separated by 700 miles, proclaimed their merger into a single Arab nation Wednesday and hinted the new state will seek closer ties with the Soviet Union.

A joint communique, the Tripoli Declaration, announced establishment of "full political, military, economic and cultural union" between Syria and Libya "in all fields."

Details of the still unnamed merger were left to be worked out at a later date.

Some Western diplomatic observers did not take it very seriously. Egyptian President Anwar Sadat called it "childish," but Israel said it was worried about the added military capability the agreement could give to Syria.

Libyan strongman Col. Moammar Khadafy proposed the merger in characteristic fashion, announcing that if Syria did not accept, he would take up a rifle and go to northern Galilee to fight as a commando.

Syrian President Hafez Assad, who is reported to be in serious trouble at home and in need of political as well as military aid, agreed 24 hours later and flew to Tripoli for two days of talks.

The 13-point communique proclaiming a "united" state to oppose "Zionism and American imperialism" and to overthrow Sadat and "liberate Palestine," was announced minutes after Assad returned to Damascus.

It said the aim was to establish "one unified state in the two countries, with full sovereignty over both of them," to "achieve full political, military, economic and cultural union between the two countries" separated by 700 miles and by the enemies they are uniting to oppose — Egypt and Israel.

In an indication the union would take a pro-Soviet bent, the communique said the new state "is part of the popular liberation movement of the world and an ally to all socialist and liberation forces."

Damascus Radio said Khadafy and Assad will meet again within one month to work out the details of a "general pan-Arab congress and a single, one-executive authority."

That has been tried before. The closest it ever came to working was the association between Syria and Egypt in the United Arab Republic.

Rajai wins support of Iran parliament

By United Press International

Iran's Parliament gave Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai an overwhelming vote of confidence Wednesday but the hard-liner said he saw no early prospects of agreement with President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr on the formation of a full cabinet.

The infighting threatened to further postpone Parliament's debate on the fate of the 21 American hostages but Tehran Radio said the assembly would next meet on Sunday to consider a Foreign Relations Committee reply to a letter from U.S. congressmen seeking an end to the 512-day crisis.

The political clashes in Tehran paralleled reports of serious new fighting along the border with Iraq.

Tehran Radio reported that Iranian forces shot down two more Iraqi MIG fighter jets and two helicopters. That brought the number of Iraqi aircraft Iran claims it has downed in the latest fighting to four jets and three helicopters.

And in Iraq, the Baghdad regime said it intended to recapture territory it claims on the Iranian side of the border.

On the political front, a leading cleric, Ayatollah Golpaygani, sent a telegram to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini asking him to step in to "end the crisis" in the government because the political differences have reached a stage where they seriously threaten the revolution and the government," the radio reported.

Bani-Sadr, a moderate, has rejected seven of the 27 names Rajai submitted to make up his cabinet and the president later said even the 14 ministers he approved did not have his full support.

The radio, monitored by the BBC in London, said Parliament voted 169-14 with 10 abstentions to show support for Rajai.

Rajai thanked the assembly for its backing but indicated it would not end the government crisis.

He also presented a copy of the government program to the president but I see no possibility of reaching agreement with him in the near future because he has come to certain conclusions in an environment where certain sources were available to him," Rajai was quoted as saying.

Bani-Sadr Monday accused Rajai and other fundamentalist hard-liners of imposing a "despotic" government and Rajai apparently responded to that by saying "when I talk, a villager knows what it means to be a follower of the Imam (Khomeini)."

Ayatollah Mohammed Beheshti, head of the majority Islamic Republican Party, also attacked Bani-Sadr for accusing the fundamentalists of using fear to gain absolute power.

In an interview with Tehran Radio, Beheshti said Bani-Sadr's statements "create mistrust among the people."

"I should tell Bani-Sadr that this is not the way to brotherhood," Beheshti said. "We should solve our problems in unity and understanding and should not provide the enemy with ammunition."

Tehran Radio, reporting on the border clashes with Iraq, said Iranian fighter planes attacked a column of 20 Iraqi tanks, destroying most of them.

Al-Thawra, newspaper of Iraq's ruling Baath party, claimed Iraqi forces "liberated" 26.5 square miles of land captured by forces of the late Shah 10 years ago.

Mideast talks to open at the UN next month

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (UPI) — Israel and Egypt have agreed to resume their stalled Palestinian autonomy negotiations later this month in New York, President Anwar Sadat said Wednesday.

Emerging from an hour-long meeting with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Sadat said the two made "lots" of progress toward improving bilateral ties between their nations but he did not elaborate.

Sadat said "yes, at the United Nations" when asked specifically whether the autonomy negotiations will be resumed later this month.

But the question of Jerusalem was still a focal point of disagreement even as the two sides spoke to resuming their peace effort.

Begin told Israel Radio that if Sadat insists on separate Arab and Jewish rule of the disputed city then "there's no agreement on Jerusalem" and he added, "I will reject it with both hands without hesitation."

Sadat, however, said in an interview with the Israeli newspaper Yediot Ahronoth Tuesday that he did not "seek to resolve the city" but insisted Israel keep in mind the religious link of 800 million Moslems and a billion Christians to the city.

"As I told Begin recently I don't ask for 100 percent," Sadat said. "I ask only for 50-50."

China's parliament endorses power change, democracy

PEKING (UPI) — China's parliament, ending an historic 12-day session, formally installed Zhao Ziyang as premier Wednesday and passed a series of new laws bringing the nation of 1 billion people a step closer to democracy.

Zhao, 61, a master at economic reforms and one of strongman Deng Xiaoping's closest associates, replaced Hua Guofeng, whose political beliefs contradicted Deng's in many ways.

The election of Zhao, which was expected at the National People's Congress, China's parliament, consolidated Deng's power despite his own resignation and that of other vice-premiers from the state council, or cabinet.

For the present, both Deng and Zhao, who Communist Party chairman will retain their key party leadership posts.

Three new ministers, all aligned with Deng, were brought in to fill the vacant seats in a new 14-man cabinet, down from 18. The carefully orchestrated reshuffle is the biggest bloodless leadership change in 31 years of Communist rule and nearly all the new government leaders share Deng's vision of a modern, prosperous China through political and economic reforms and the renunciation of the nation's ideology-dominated past.

The new appointees are Foreign Minister Huang Hua, 67, who in 1975 replaced a predecessor allied with Deng's political enemies; Armed Forces Deputy Chief of Staff Zhang Aiping, 70, a specialist in the science of modern warfare; and Minister of Affairs Minister Yang Jingren, 62, a Moslem who has been a peace maker for decades among China's 55 minority groups.

The leadership change, described by congress Chairman Ye Jianying in his closing speech as "of great significance in our cause of modernization," was the climax of the 12-day congress attended by 3,221 delegates from across the country.

But the legislature also adopted a series of new laws and resolutions — with the government admitting publicly for the first time that some bills did not have unanimous support in the show of hands vote.

The action by the dissenters — no more than four on each bill who abstained and in one case voted against — was even praised by Ye who said "Everlasting your rights conscientiously, you deputies have spoken out freely and brought to the session the opinions and desires" of the electorate.

"We should strive to further unfold the democratic spirit of this session," he added.

The new measures gave Zhao and his streamlined cabinet bold new economic blueprints for the coming decade in the hope that he could repeat on a grander scale an "economic miracle" he performed in the mid-1970s, transforming bankrupt Sichuan province into an economic success.

The legislature passed the world's toughest marriage and birth control laws to try to curb the massive population growth which threatens to overwhelm — by sheer numbers — future plans in the nation of 1 billion people.

Parliament introduced tax laws for the first time and reaffirmed China's foreign policy of rapprochement with the West and opposition to the Soviet Union. It called yet once more for reunification with Taiwan.

All the legislations and resolutions put to the congress by the Communist Party and the government, including one that called for the revision of the nation's constitution in the coming year, were passed.

Expert says China closes weapons gap

PEKING (UPI) — America's chief weapons development expert said Wednesday China is making "substantial" progress in closing the gap with the superpowers in military technology.

He also said China wants to sell the United States "critical" metals such as titanium in exchange for more know-how.

William Perry, U.S. Undersecretary for Defense, said Chinese officials were eager to buy more American military technology despite massive cuts announced recently by China for both defense and industry.

Perry is spending two weeks in China to assess the country's capability to absorb American technology. After initial talks in Peking, he will tour test and research facilities throughout the country.

Perry said he would probably agree with the Chinese that they were a good 10 years behind in military technology development — a situation caused principally by the chaos of the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

"But I've been extremely impressed with the comeback and with the very substantial improvement that's been made here in the last few years," Perry said.

He said Washington was favorably considering the sale of a huge computer system for oil and gas exploration but which could also have military application.

Kimberly students to 'brown-bag it'

Until kitchen is complete

By LARRY SWISHER
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — They may howl about the loss of fresh-baked bread and hot dishes, but Kimberly students will have lunches available again at school beginning Monday.

Superintendent Vernon Exner said Wednesday cold sack lunches will be served on a temporary basis until construction of a new cafeteria is completed.

Lunch supervisor Edna Jacobs said she and her crew will prepare sandwiches, salads and other items in a storeroom-and-hallway converted for the purpose.

Exner said elementary students will return to their classrooms to eat and junior high and high school students can eat outside or in the building during bad weather.

"It's really something," Mrs. Jacobs said. "We'll see how it goes over."

The noon break has been lengthened by 15 minutes to allow older students to return home for lunch.

The school district had hoped to have the new cafeteria the first week in September, but masonry work on a new addition to the Kimberly Elementary School has had to be torn down and redone. The deadline for completion of the project is Jan. 31, 1981.

Students have been without school lunches since classes began Aug. 25.

"We've always baked our own bread every day for years," Mrs. Jacobs said. "Now we have to buy it. It costs twice as expensive."

"The kids will really howl about no cinnamon rolls," she said. "We used to make about 700. The boys would eat as many as you put out there."

Continuing work on the cafeteria in Kimberly has forced sixth grader Mike Murray and his cousin Greg Hansen to seek lunch elsewhere.

Students will not be able to get second helpings either, she said.

The sack lunches are also more expensive because disposable utensils, containers and other products must be purchased. The temporary kitchen has two convection ovens, two sinks and two refrigerators, but no dish washing facilities.

Mrs. Jacobs said the state reimburse school lunch programs at a flat rate.

"I hope we can stay self-supporting," she said. "We're going to try but I don't know how. We raised lunches a nickel this year. It compensates. I've

Exner said students who have brought sack lunches and eaten outside have been "real good" about not littering.

"I haven't had too many complaints," he said. "The parents probably be different though when the weather gets bad."

The cold lunch will be a "type A" school lunch, which meets the same nutritional requirements as a hot lunch. A dietitian from the State Department of Education visited the district last Friday. "It

Flood plains

Federal officials demand redefinition

GOODING — Federal officials maintained their stand Wednesday night that Gooding and Shoshone must revise their flood plain or lose the right to subsidize flood insurance.

Both towns have received a 90-day warning to meet federal requirements or be dropped from the federal program, a requirement for most Farmers Home Administration loans.

Carl Cook of the Federal Emergency Management Agency told about 50 Gooding and Lincoln county residents the order is needed to bring the two communities into compliance with a national standard. Insurance eligibility is based on flood plain projections for the worst possible flood in a 100-year period.

Under this worst-possible flood criteria, over 90 percent of both Gooding and Shoshone would be submerged.

Cook recommended the two communities leave for the large flood plain and have building inspectors enforce the construction codes, including higher foundations and sealed basements.

This ruling applies only to future construction.

Gooding resident Ralf Lucks said, "People here and in Shoshone are going to be penalized for something that will never happen. I was born and raised here and know how things are possible. What you are doing is jeopardizing our growth."

Ron Barrett of the Army Corps of Engineers responded, saying, "All I can guarantee is that we are using standard procedures."

"We're not coming up with hypothetical figures," Barrett said. "These floods do occur."

Cook explained that the 100-year flood criteria is used in all areas of the nation for establishing subsidized flood insurance rates.

Idaho Power applies for license to construct Wiley Dam

By LARRY SWISHER
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho Power Co. announced Wednesday it has applied for a federal license to build the A. J. Wiley Dam on the Snake River near Bliss.

The dam would make a 400-acre reservoir with 15 miles of shoreline and cover about eight miles of the Snake River in Hagerman Valley. Idaho Power is also seeking to build a similar dam, the Dike, farther downstream, but has not yet applied for a license.

Opponents of Wiley say it will destroy a unique natural area, a whitewater recreation and three possibly endangered or threatened species of animals.

Idaho Power estimated its costs for Wiley would total $125.7 million in 1980 dollars. The dam's 86-megawatt power plant would generate an average of 485.4 million kilowatt-hours of electricity annually, the company estimates.

Approval of a license by the Federal Energy Regulatory Agency is the only condition placed on a license granted by the Idaho Public Utilities Commission in 1978. IUPUC spokesman Deanna Kloefer said.

Idaho Power's projects are opposed by Dr. Peter Bowler, biologist at the University of California at Davis, and a Hagerman Valley citizens group, Friends of the Snake.

Bowler, who grew up in Hagerman Valley and owns land there, said Wiley would destroy the few remaining miles of rapid-flowing water on the middle Snake, a natural area that is the last of its kind and habitat for three animals he has nominated as threatened or endangered.

He said he will request to intervene with FERC and ask for hearings, including one in Idaho so residents can participate.

"The kinds of benefits from preserving the Wiley reach are far greater than the nominal and insubstantial contributions it would make to the hydropower grid," he said.

He said there are three dams already within 15 miles of Wiley.

In a press release, Idaho Power Co. said its proposed recreation, fish and wildlife program for the reservoir would provide "major overnight and day-use facilities for public recreation, create new wildlife habitat, and release rainbow and brown trout to establish a self-sustaining fishery in the project area."

The program's estimated cost of more than $500,000 is included in the project's costs, Bob Brown, Idaho Power public information officer said.

Brown said FERC will take the application under consideration. "Judge-it-on-its-merits-and-give-us-a-decision," he said. "The company has no idea how long it might take."

The program for recreation and wildlife was developed by EDAY Inc. of San Francisco, an independent consulting firm hired by Idaho Power to conduct an environmental study of the Wiley project, Brown said.

The reservoir would extend almost to the base of Lower Salmon Falls Dam near Hagerman.

Gomer Condit, vice president for powerplant construction, established Idaho Power's priority for the project while it undertook an environmental study and preliminary engineering.

Reports on these studies were submitted to FERC in the utility's three-volume application.

The IUPUC issued its license for the Wiley and Dike projects on Aug. 14, 1979, conditional upon a license from FERC. Spokeswoman Kloefer said the commission received a number of letters from residents expressing concern over possible environmental, esthetic and historical damage.

The IUPUC, however, ruled the complaints were premature in the absence of an environmental impact statement. The commission said it would review such information as it became available and would reopen the case if additional hearings were suggested.

Kloefer said at the present time the commissioners do not feel a reason exists to reopen the case based on the information received so far.

Idaho Power's plan for recreational facilities calls for development of six areas totaling more than 25 acres and designed to accommodate nearly 600 people.

Among these facilities would be a "major overnight and day-use facility in Twin Falls County near the existing Shoestring Road and a sizable day-use facility at the mouth of the Malad River."

Bowler commented, "Creating additional reservoir recreation simply gives more opportunity to those who already have the most." He said 70 percent of the Snake River Basin is flatwater. Snake River Expeditions of Jerome makes raft trips on the reach.

Former Jerome policeman files recall petitions for three councilmen

By RON ZELLAR
Times-News writer

JEROME — A former city police officer filed preliminary petitions Wednesday seeking to recall three Jerome councilmen.

The petitions charge that councilmen Glen Capps, Henry Pharris and Ralf Everheart acted contrary to the interests of Jerome residents by supporting Police Chief James McGowan and accepting the resignations of three veteran officers.

The petitions come on the heels of an attempt filed Friday to recall Mayor Marshall Everheart, who has twice attempted to secure McGowan's dismissal.

City Clerk Marilyn Bragg said she verified Wednesday afternoon that the latest petitions contain the required 30 valid signatures.

Former patrolman Harvey Hines attempted to file the petition earlier, Bragg said, but only four of the signers held current voter registrations. The others registered during the day, enabling certification of the petition.

Hines said in an interview that the three councilmen have used Everheart's attempts to dismiss McGowan to attack the mayor and seek his removal from office.

The petition also charges the three councilmen:

- Took actions at a July 1 meeting that were "contrary to and did not represent the interests of the majority of Jerome's residents."
- Showed "flagrant disregard for safety and security of the community in 'railroading' a vote supporting McGowan through a July 1 council meeting attended by more than 11 persons."
- Deprived the city of experienced police officers "in a vote that was incredible to say the least" by accepting the resignations of Capt. Ernest Coats, Det. Don Barkley and Patrolman Andy Hines.

Harvey Hines emphasized that — while he plans to circulate the petitions — neither he, the other former officers nor their relatives were among the 30 signers. Hines resigned from the department earlier in July, also citing disagreements with McGowan.

"Despite what the Times-News and the Northside News say, a lot of people support the mayor and oppose Chief McGowan," Hines said.

He criticized Northside News editor Don Sparhawk for signing the Everheart petition, stating the paper cannot claim objectivity while its editor lends his name to the recall effort.

Sparhawk, contacted Monday night, declined comment on his reasons for signing the petition but said the Jerome weekly will not take a position on the effort to recall the mayor.

The three councilmen said Wednesday they will not resign unless recalled by the voters.

Peters said the four former officers "still do not understand a fundamental fact — that the ranch hands cannot run the farm."

He said the council majority has tried to work in harmony with the mayor, but Everheart instead has resorted to surprise maneuvers that seek to circumvent the council.

"He (Everheart) says the chief won't enforce all the laws, yet he has ignored the law that says you need due process before you can hire and fire," Pharris added.

Meanwhile, backers of the Everheart recall said they had gathered 235 signatures by Wednesday afternoon. All four petitions require 265 valid signatures, or 20 percent of voters registered prior to the last election.

To succeed in a special election, a recall question must receive a majority of the votes cast as well as a number larger than that originally cast for the officer being recalled.

Everheart received 506 votes in his 1977 mayoral race. Capps polled 727 votes, Peters received 407 and Pharris received 359.

New construction in Jackpot includes Elko County building

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

JACKPOT, Nev. — In addition to a new airport and its first bank, Jackpot is scheduled to get still another "improvement" this fall: two new jail cells.

Actually, the two rooms are more properly called "holding cells," according to Jackpot publicist Carl Hayden. They will be part of an $85,000 Elko County building to be built east of the first station.

The building will also contain a court for the town's justice of the Peace Jay Snyder, an office for the justice and his secretary and an office for the deputy sheriff and Idaho Highway Patrolmen.

Last year, Snyder asked the Elko County Commission for the holding cells, saying they are needed to reduce transportation costs involved in moving suspects to Elko to be jailed for the night and returned the next day.

Presently, Snyder works out of a Cactus Pete's warehouse and holds court in "various places" around town, according to Hayden. Law enforcement officials are housed in an airport building.

Nelson and Company Construction of Twin Falls will build the one-story, 1200-square-foot building. It will be equipped with recording equipment for proceedings in the justice of the peace court. Elko County is paying construction costs.

The road separating the new building and the fire station has been graded and gravelled by Idaho Sand and Gravel Co. of Nampa. The building is scheduled to be completed within four months.

Idaho Sand and Gravel is also progressing with the reconstruction of the Jackpot airport. The company has finished grading and graveling the airstrip, which has been lengthened from 5,300 to 6,180 feet. It will now apply a seal coat to the surface.

However, applying the final layer of asphalt may have to wait until spring if the weather turns cold. Hayden said laying asphalt requires temperatures of 40 degrees or more.

The asphalt layer is now presently scheduled to be laid in early October.

The Jackpot Branch of the Nevada National Bank must delay its opening until the airport is completed as the bank will rely on a daily air service to transport bank papers.

Chaparral Airlines plans to begin a five-day-a-week service between Jackpot and Reno.

This grader is working on the new airport runway project, one of many works going on in Jackpot.

Court makes OSHA warrants harder to get

BOISE (UPI) — Occupational Safety and Health Administration officials in Idaho must detail alleged infractions when seeking a warrant to search a business under a procedure being called in Idaho U.S. District Court.

Clerks for McNichols say the crux of the judge's decision means OSHA inspectors now must hand over information in court which has led them to believe a business may be in violation of the law.

judges nationwide have just assumed that a complaint reviewed by OSHA and compiled by OSHA would be sufficient. This decision tells me that is changing.

gives employers a "safeguard" because now it will be much more difficult for a disgruntled employee to sue against a company by calling in OSHA.

And while he is not required to give such information to judges in other states because McNichols' decision is not binding there, Coffin says he probably will keep the ruling in mind when OSHA asks him to seek warrants elsewhere.

McNichols, seeking a court order placing Widmark in contempt of court. But McNichols Monday refused to issue that contempt citation. Denied OSHA's request for another warrant and further dismissed the entire matter after hearing Coffin's arguments.

Lucrey Carter will pay dearly for turning down debates

BOISE (UPI) — President Carter will pay dearly for turning down a three-way debate in the presidential race, the running mate for independent presidential candidate John Anderson said Wednesday.

"If the President ignores the wishes of 71 percent of the American people who have said in a recent poll that they want a debate on the routine and they want Anderson included, he would pay a very serious price for that decision on Nov. 4," Lucrey said.

any reason the President might have for refusing to enter the three-way contest, Lucrey said he could "only suffer by comparison."

Judge blocks 'police expert'

MOSCOW (UPI) — Idaho 10th District Judge James Towles ruled Wednesday there could be no testimony by a police expert on the testimony of a newspaperman, Jay Shelly, who is the "police expert" source during the course of a libel lawsuit trial against Shelly and the Lewiston Morning Tribune.

The ruling came after the judge denied a defense motion that the jury be told that Shelly's source did not exist — a penalty against Shelly for withholding the name of the source for nearly seven years.

Shelly's financial last month revealed the source quoted in a 1973 article as Gene Lee, deputy state narcotics bureau chief who was killed in a motorcycle accident in 1975.

Bruins eye chance at five-year precedent

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News sports writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Bruins have a chance to set a five-year precedent when they travel to Pocatello to battle Highland High Friday.

Coach Bill Jones' Bruins have won two straight — after two years of losing — and a win Friday night would give them three in a row. Not since the last game of the 1975 season and first two of '76 has Twin Falls won three straight football outings.

The third win won't come easily. It will be against Highland and in the Mini-dome — and both can be devious. The Bruins meet Highland about 8:15 p.m. after Minico plays Pocatello in the gym at 6 p.m.

"We feel that we can play with Highland this year," Jones said. "But to do that we'll have to correct the mistakes we made the past two weeks and especially against Jerome."

"We are still trying to accomplish the early-season necessities which are blocking and tackling," Jones said with only a half-smile. "And we are going to have to play with some emotion and enthusiasm if we are going to be in the game against Highland."

"Our defense still remains quite a way ahead of our offense," the coach said. "Against Jerome I thought we were in the right defense although we didn't play it as aggressively as we might have. I thought our secondary coverage was pretty good and rotated well although Jerome didn't throw that much. Overall, I thought the defense was pretty much where it should be two games into the season."

Offensively, the coach said the game films indicated his first assessment had been correct. "We weren't setting up before throwing, our backs weren't running well and we just generally didn't have good timing," he said.

Twin Falls will be about as close to full strength as it's been all season for Highland. Return starter Dirk Gibson has received an okay to play after an early-summer broken collarbone. Junior scabbard Larry Hurt will be available at least for spot duty after straining a knee in the Bruins' final pre-season scrimmage. Senior David Routh returns to the defensive secondary, sitting out the last two weeks with an ankle sprain.

"We have been very pleased with the way the boys who have filled in for these have played, especially John Allison at safety," Jones said. "And we like having these other guys back at least for spot duty because it is very hard to play in the Mini-dome. Last week it was so degrees in there. It effects all your players very quickly. You can see teams starting to wind down as early as the second quarter."

The other problem with playing in the dome, according to players, is the dryness of the air which makes breathing painful.

"We may be fortunate in playing Highland early in the week they are getting adjusted to a new coach, a new system, and in fact, nearly an entirely new coaching staff," Jones said.

Sophomore Coach John Astorquia who scouted the team, said that Highland "looked a little tentative offensively. Not the polished, poised offense you're used to seeing, but that's understandable."

He added "defensively they seemed solid."

Although the Highland staff complains the Rams don't have good quickness, Astorquia said "that may be true but that's compared to Boise. Boise is an extremely quick team this year" both in the backfield and the line. Boise was able to run almost "it will against them but I doubt that we are as much quicker than Highland than Boise was. I think it is possible to play with Highland this year but there is little margin for error."

He added Highland has good size offensively with 230 and 260-pound tackles and said the defensive secondary is veteran and solid.

The sophomore teams of the two schools will meet at Bruin Stadium at 7 p.m. today; the first of just three home games for the 2-0 junior Bruins this season.

Bucs-Rams restage '79 match

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — The Tampa Bay Buccaneers meet the Los Angeles Rams tonight and the game could well be a repeat of last year's defensive struggle in the NFC title match in which the Rams won 9-0.

The Bucs' defensive unit, which led the NFL last year, appears ready to make a bid to repeat that performance after giving up only 123 total yards in Sunday's 17-12 opening victory at Cincinnati.

The Rams were less than impressive defensively Sunday in a 41-20 loss to Detroit but some of the personnel problems the club had going into the Lions' game appear to have been solved.

Three key members of the Rams' defensive unit were held out until the Tuesday prior to the opener. And when they returned, linebacker Bob Brudzinski left camp, returning only the day before the game.

Rams hope for win after first game embarrassment

Pro Bowl performers defensive tackle Larry Brooks, defensive end Jack Youngblood and linebacker Jim Youngblood played against the Lions and Bucs' Coach John McKay has wanted to see them play in far better shape to play this time.

The Bucs' 3-4 defense is anchored by NFL defensive player of the year Lee Roy Selmon and after appearing sluggish in Tuesday's game and hard-hitting against the Bengals.

Although the Rams' defensive personnel problems may have been solved, quarterback Vinny Testaverde muddled the water again by falling to show up for Monday's practice as he met with his attorney on contract talks.

Ferragamo found himself in the starting quarterback's role mid-way through the Lions game when Pat Haden broke a knuckle on his throwing hand.

Ferragamo, who came on last year in the backup and guided the Rams to the Super Bowl after Haden was injured, is in his option year and wants to renegotiate his contract.

Ferragamo returned to practice Tuesday, saying he had no obligation to the team and fans and will start Thursday night.

The biggest offensive play last week for the Rams was a 45-yard kickoff return by Drew Hill. The Rams rushed for only 86 yards and got their other touchdowns on one-yard plunges by Cullen Bryant and Elvis Peacock.

Tampa officials said they expect the Bengals come near the end of each half as the Bucs were given good field position, once when a drive stalled and the last on a fumbled punt snap.

The Rams' offense has been making a big reputation for making the big play despite an anemic passing percentage. It lit light end Jimmy Giles with touchdown passes of 32 and 15 yards.

Magic Valley grid teams set for conference battles

By LARRY HOVEY

MAGIC VALLEY — Conference football comes to Magic Valley this Friday this weekend.

The Canyon Conference offers a full slate while the Magic Valley Conference will have a bang-up meeting when Oakley meets Raft River in an all-Cassia County affair. And the plot thickens in the Snake River eight-man Conference where defending champion Castleford visits Richfield.

The first two weekends of the season indicate the Magic Valley Conference may be the best balanced league in the area. Raft River's whipping of Declo last week put the Trojans squarely in the little picture while the Oakley and Murtagh already are there. Hansen obviously hasn't dropped as much as the graduation

Alan Loveland, Orem, Utah, gives a sign of anger after his drive found the rough on the final hole for the second time in first round action of the Cactus Pete's Amateur

Cactus Pete's Bowden, Loveland, Peterson, Christensen take flight leads after rainy first round JACKPOT — The weatherman stole the spotlight in the opening round of the Cactus Pete's Amateur Wednesday.

By throwing an hour's worth of rain on the afternoon-squad, he may have decided pretty much who the winners are going to be in the opening phase of the four-day tournament.

Only the 12 and over handicap players participate in the first two days of the tournament and are playing for their share of $10,000 in guaranteed payback.

The morning squad, although it ran into some early mist, had the best of playing conditions and most of the first-day leaders came from that group. Not helping the outlook for the afternoon squad, which had to take cover from something more than a steady drizzle—but less than a heavy downpour, was the weatherman's prediction the threat of rain today would be greatest in the morning.

The two squads flip-flop starting times today.

The big shooter of the day was Idaho Falls' Harold Loveland who broke into the six for only the second time in his career, he reported. Loveland carded a two-over par 74. "Everything (putt) I hit rolled right in the hole," he smiled.

Coupled with a 15 handicap, he hammered the net lead down to 53. He was not alone at that figure.

Veteran Vic Peterson blazed around in an 83 to lead the fourth flight and similarly had a 59. But while Loveland had a big edge, Peterson could claim only two strokes over Robert Means in gross and two over Alan Loveland in net.

In the first flight, Bill Bowden and Bill Brake, Filer, were the contradictions to the weather rule. They played in the afternoon and took the gross lead at 74 and 76, respectively. Bowden held sway in net with a 62, two strokes ahead of Brake and four up on Mack Meredith and Jim Edwards.

Jackpot's Chris Christensen carded an 80 to lead the third flight, four strokes up on Robert Isakson and five ahead of Castleford Hank Gandaga.

Christensen wasn't too anxious to accept premature congratulations.

"I was leading after the first day two years ago and shot a 59 on the front side the second day," he smiled ruefully. "Then I finished with a 61."

Christensen also was the net leader with a 61, followed by Don McNeley at 63. A three-way jam developed at 64 among Ray Gunnell, Ron Elkins and Gandaga.

Loveland ended up with healthy margins in the second flight. His 76 gross gave him an eight-stroke edge on Frank Bowles while his net 59 was six better than Lowell Wills of Twin Falls, Russ Brackley and Ron Wetzel were next in net at 66.

The 12-over golfers wind up their portion of the amateur tournament today with the low 15 (gross-only) from each flight playing for special prizes Friday and Saturday. The 6-11 players will begin their competition Friday morning.

Three open dates leave Devine apprehensive

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI) — Notre Dame Coach Dan Devine is not a fan of having an open date once the football season begins, and the prospect of having three of them in one year has him apprehensive.

The schedule being set by Irish successfully opened Devine's last season as Notre Dame coach by romping past Purdue 31-20. The game was originally scheduled for Sept. 27 but was moved up three weeks to accommodate national television.

"Of course, we were glad to get the television revenues," Devine said. "But it does present us with three open dates this season."

Devine said he was glad to get before his originally scheduled opener Sept. 20 at home against Michigan.

The following weekend Notre Dame is off because of the Purdue switch.

The Irish will also have the weekend off in late November before traveling to Southern California.

That means a long season for Notre Dame, which will have games stretching from Sept. 6 until Dec. 6.

Normally, most colleges in Division I end this Saturday and conclude by Nov. 22.

Devine said he would have preferred to carry the momentum from the win over the Boilermakers into an actual game situation this Saturday.

"I'm not used to open dates. There have been years we have had one open date, but never three," Devine said.

"Of course, you want to keep playing and improving. I don't like the same practice against yourself. But you play the schedule the way it is."

Devine added he did not think it would be to Notre Dame's advantage to have an extra week to prepare for 10th-ranked Michigan, which opens its season Saturday at home against Northwestern.

"You don't want to over-prepare your team; that would be a mistake. You've got to keep the state clean, just like for Purdue, and start over again," Devine said.

... haven't reported a game at Elksmore Castle for some time. Here we find Hamlet in three notrump after the fair Ophelia raised him from one to two.

Pontoux opened the hour of hearts... Læraets played the Jack and Hamlet might have stopped to soliloquize something like, "Who duck or not to duck, that is the question. And if I do not duck whether 'tis better with the ace to false-card or with the king to make the simple play—Aye, there's the rubber, will it be ours and then to bed."

Hamlet knew better than to waste time at this point. He simply won the trick with the king and went after clubs.

Læraets got in with the ace and after considerable thought led diamonds.

Hamlet, no longer the melancholy Dane, rattled off four notrump. He might well have made five; but Læraets hung on to all his diamonds.

A poor player than Hamlet would have won the first heart trick with the ace. In that case when Læraets got in with the club he would have known where the king of hearts was located and would probably have shifted to a spade to defeat the contract.

Computer slows primary results

Utah's first experience a fiasco

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Salt Lake County's first experience with computerized voting turned into a night-long fiasco Tuesday.

The electronic device refused to provide a printout of primary election results — making it impossible to determine the outcomes of races for Utah attorney general and U.S. Senate nominations.

Candidates in the two important statewide contests were left in the lurch when the computer broke down before counting 80 percent of Salt Lake County's votes. The county contains one-third of Utah's electorate.

When technicians were unable to repair the computer, election officials finally threw up their arms about 3:30 a.m., and told reporters, candidates and campaigners that final results would not be available until after 8 a.m.

The machines were intended to revolutionize the normally slow process of hand counting ballots from the county's 694 precincts. Voters used a stylus to punch computer cards, the cards were translated onto a long tape, and the tape was fed into the computer to obtain a printout of results.

But the computer at Utah Elected Service headquarters repeatedly refused to accept the tape. By the early morning hours Wednesday only 10 percent of the county votes had been processed. Then the device in Salt Lake City shut down completely and UES officials said even some of those early county returns were in error.

The computer's failure was especially grueling for Republican attorney general candidates David Wilkinson and Robert Hansen, and for Democratic senatorial hopefuls Stephen Dirks and Dan Berman. Wilkinson and incumbent Hansen were locked in a dead heat with 68 percent of the vote — tabulated statewide. Wilkinson had a slim 394-vote lead, winning 31,283 ballots compared to Hansen's 30,989.

Dirks, mayor of Ogden, Utah, jumped out to a substantial 61 to 39 percent margin early in the night. But most of that gain came from Democratic loyalists in his home territory of Weber County. The gap closed sharply when early returns from Salt Lake County showed voters there preferred lawyer Berman by an almost 3:2 edge.

With 1,224 of Utah's 1,790 precincts reporting, Dirks had 56 percent of the vote to Berman's 44 percent. Vote totals gave Dirks 22,769 ballots and Berman 17,428. And Berman was outpolling Dirks in the six counties reporting incomplete results.

State Sen. Moroni Jensen, D-Salt Lake, appeared successful in his fight for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant-governor. Jensen's lead scarcely wavered all night, with 57 percent of the voters preferring him to Weber County Commissioner Douglas Hunt. Jensen received 22,177 votes to Hunt's 16,712 with more than 500 precincts uncounted.

Investigators search for bombing clues

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Federal investigators Wednesday questioned airport workers for clues in a bomb explosion that injured two cargo handlers unloading a United Airlines 727 jetliner at Sacramento Metropolitan Airport.

Robert Days, 41, and Allan Wright, 45, told FBI agents that the bomb was in a small cardboard box that they were unloading Tuesday morning from the belly of the plane.

The jetliner had landed minutes earlier from Seattle and Portland and most of the 40 passengers were in the terminal when the bomb went off. The blast knocked Days and Wright off their feet but they escaped serious injury.

There was no advance warning, and no one claimed responsibility for placing the bomb on the aircraft. The only evidence consisted of pieces of plastic sheeting and damaged luggage.

The FBI refused to say whether the bomb was intended to explode in flight and if it had a time-activated detonator.

"We're not discussing the makeup of the device," said FBI special agent Dick Kohler. "But this was a device specifically designed to explode."

He said investigators in Seattle, Portland and Sacramento were trying to trace the box, "examining evidence, interviewing individuals who may have some responsibility for things that go on board airplanes." Passenger Barbara Hollingsworth of Glenview, Ill., said FBI agents also asked passengers if they had "any special insurance."

FBI agent Tom Griffin said: "Our best guess is that the box came from Seattle. But it was pretty well destroyed, and until we're able to piece all parts together we can't really tell."

Apparently none of the baggage loaded into the plane's cargo holds in Seattle and Portland was screened. United Airlines spokesman Adrian Delfino said passenger baggage carried in the cargo hold is not routinely examined.

Because the cargo doors were open, it was difficult to determine the force of the blast and there was only slight damage to the aircraft, which was later flown to UAL's maintenance center near San Francisco.

At the airport, officials could only guess about what might have happened had the bomb exploded in flight.

"In my opinion, no, I do not think it would have caused failure of flight," said Sacramento County Airports Director George McLaughlin. "It probably would have scared a few people though."

But airline employee Frank Besso said after examining the plane, "If they'd been in flight when it went off, it would have been all over."

Kennecott settles

Said to copper ore rolling as strikers return

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — The first ore rolled out of Kennecott's open pit copper mine near Salt Lake City in the early-morning darkness Wednesday as hundreds of workers went back to their jobs following a 71-day strike.

Kennecott Minerals Co. spokesman Bob Alkire said 80 to 85 percent of the idled workers were back at work Wednesday afternoon, with a full labor force expected to be in place by Thursday.

The strike, the longest Kennecott walkout in 13 years, ended Tuesday when union machines in Utah accepted a contract offer. Workers in Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico, Maryland and Utah had stayed on strike until all local unions accepted contracts.

United Steel Workers of America spokesman Cass Alvin said the Kennecott settlement "puts pressure on other firms to settle with us." The steel workers union is the principle bargaining unit for all talks with copper producers.

Union officials said the new pact runs through June 30, 1983, and provides across-the-board wage increases and improvements in pension and insurance benefits. Under the new agreement, the average Kennecott employee will receive an hourly wage of about $14.20 in 1983. That represents a $3-per-hour increase over the average wage paid prior to the walkout.

Alkire said although Kennecott began calling worker back immediately, actual copper production from the furnaces is still several days away.

Spokane entrepreneurs find way to sell DMSO legally

SPOKANE (UPI) — A pair of Wenatchee, Wash., men are selling the drug DMSO on the streets, advertising it as solvent-degreaser.

Jim DeLancy and his partner Mike Mastaglio had sold about 20 small plastic bottles of dimethyl sulfoxide for $2.50 each since setting up business out of the trunk of their car Monday, which is a solvent degreaser, is better known as a valuable treatment for chronic pain sufferers.

Arthritis patients and persons with sprains have sworn by the stuff, which has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for that purpose.

Sales are legal in Oregon for medicinal purposes, but not in Washington. FDA official Terry Conder said if the couple continued to sell the drug as a degreaser, there "isn't much we can do about it."

He cautioned the public against using DMSO as a drug because evidence is in on its safety.

Weddings

Totorica-Rebich

GLENNIS FERRY — Josephine Totorica of Mountain Home and Larry Rebich, formerly of Glens Ferry, exchanged wedding vows Aug. 22.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leandro Totorica of Mountain Home and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Rebich of Poaetle, formerly of Glens Ferry.

The double ring ceremony was held in the Mountain Home Our Lady of Good Counsel Catholic Church.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a long sleeve nylon gown accented with seed pearls. She carried a bridal corsage of roses, carnations, stephanotis, ivy and baby's breath.

Carmen Griggs, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, Joanna Totorica, Cindy Wolfe and Carol Jamison were bridesmaids. Carmen Knox was flower girl. Thomas Totorica, brother of the bride, was ringbearer.

James Beard was best man. Brett Delamore, Lynn Knudson and Mike Raub were groomsmen.

Noreen Hawley provided the organ music accompanied by Ted Totorica, cousin of the bride, and Kelly Pitt. Scripture verses were read by Ben Berriochoa.

A reception at the Good Council Hall followed the ceremony.

The cake was made and decorated by Nina Killeen and served by Teresa Carrie and Dawn Hiller. Rita Aguirre was in charge of serving the refreshments.

Rosa Mari Totorica was guest book attendant. Marcel Kopp was in charge of the gifts.

The bride is a graduate of Mountain Home High School, and is a senior at Boise State University. The bridegroom, a graduate of Glens Ferry High School, works at Sawtooth Lumber Co. in Mountain Home.

Shelf lining as substitute

Scraps of self-adhering shelf lining can be substituted for masking tape when you run out of the tape in the middle of a painting job. After cutting it into strips, position the material where it's wanted and use a sheet of newspaper under a portion of it away from the edge to be painted, making it easy to remove the "masking tape" later.

MR. AND MRS. RUSSELL W. SKEEN

MR. AND MRS. KEVIN WHITEHEAD

Abernathy-Skeen

TWIN FALLS — Carrie Lynn Abernathy and Russell W. Skeen, both of Twin Falls, exchanged wedding vows June 29.

The double ring ceremony was held in the Twin Falls Christian Center with Rev. Sheldon Stigel officiating.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joyce Abernathy and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne D. Skeen, all of Twin Falls.

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a white satin gown with long tapered bell sleeves and chapel train. She wore a camelot headpiece of chantilly lace holding a fingertip veil. She carried a cascade bouquet of roses, baby's breath and baby's breath.

Rusan Galley was maid of honor. June Abernathy was bridesmaid. Crystal Skeen, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl.

Gary Mueller was best man. Chuck Plumb was groomsmen. Micheal

Skeen, brother of the bridegroom, and John McClure, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, were ushers. Jeff Skeen, nephew of the bridegroom, was ringbearer.

Mary Jo Skeen was guest book attendant at the reception which followed.

Helenita Skeen and Paige Pruell were in charge of the gifts with the assistance of Michael Slarry and Vern Skeen.

Shirley Slarry and Patty Pruell cut and served the three-tiered wedding cake. Sheryl Doughty served coffee and punch.

The bride is a 1980 graduate of Twin Falls High School and the bridegroom is a 1978 graduate of Twin Falls High School.

Following a wedding trip to California, the couple resides in Twin Falls where she is employed at Ann's Hallmark, and he is employed at Albertson's.

Stoker-Whitehead

BUIHL — Shari Lynn Stoker, formerly of Buhl, and Kevin Jay Whitehead of Ogden, Utah, exchanged wedding vows Aug. 21.

The ceremony was held in the Ogden LDS Temple.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Stoker of Buhl and the bridegroom is the son of Mrs. and Mrs. J. D. Whitehead of Ogden.

The bride wore a gown of chiffon with a cape collar, cumberbund waist and a full skirt. Her bridal hat with veil was designed and made by her sister. She carried a bouquet of silk flowers.

Karen Stoker, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Ellen Dibble, Laurie O'Brian, Kim Jones and Susan Morris; sister of the bridegroom.

Murray Whitehead, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Randy Stoker, brother of the bride, was groomsmen. Craig Whitehead, brother of the bridegroom, was usher.

A garden open house was held at the home of the bridegroom's parents Aug. 21. Lori Tosman, sister of the bridegroom, attended the guest book.

A reception was held at the Buhl LDS Church on Aug. 22.

Dorothy and Lynn Montgomery, Lorraine Baggett and Joanne Stubbs served refreshments and the cake. Assisting were Carrie and Sandra Baggett and Stacy Morlan.

Summer Morris; niece of the bridegroom, and Angie Wade carried gifts. Gifts were opened by Carol Stoker and Laura James, sisters of the bride.

Karen Stoker, sister of the bride, and Becky Ashby made the table decorations. Guitar music was provided by Kevin Price.

Participating in the program were Karen Stoker and Ellen Dibble who sang. Laura James who read a poem and Becky Ash, who gave a reading.

Special guests were the grandparents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Stoker and Freda Kester.

Following a wedding trip to Seattle and Canada, the couple resides in Logan, where he will be going to school to obtain an electrical engineering degree. She is employed at ZCMI.

Pruett-Case

GLENNIS FERRY — Janet Pruell and Franklin Case exchanged wedding vows Aug. 18.

The ceremony was held in the Glens Ferry United Methodist Church with Rev. Robert Bryant officiating.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pruell and the bridegroom is the son of Lee Case and Mrs. Cora Phillips.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a white gown of nylon organza with long sleeves. She wore a Juliet cap attached to a floor length veil. Her corsage was white daisies and pink roses.

Laurie Grey was maid of honor. Mrs. Jack Lister and Mrs. Daniel Campbell, sisters of the bride, were other attendants. Karl Trull, cousin of the bride, was flower girl.

David Case, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Paul Korn and Edward Titus were ushers, and Clay Lister, nephew of the bride, was ringbearer.

Lori Trull, cousin of the bride, was candlelighter and Mrs. Paul Shrum was organist, accompanying Joanne Viner, who was soloist.

A reception and buffet supper were held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Trull, grandparents of the bride.

The cake was made and decorated by the mother of the bride. Serving at the bridal table were Mrs. Max Clark and Mrs. William Trull, aunts of the bride.

Angie Anderson was guest book attendant. Mrs. Jeon Brooks and Mrs. Walter Trull, aunts of the bride, arranged the gifts.

Following a wedding trip to the Featherhills area, the couple will reside in Coeur d'Alene, where he is employed. The bride is a graduate of Glens Ferry High School, will attend North Idaho College.

- 1 loaf French bread or sour dough bread, unsliced
- 1 cube butter or margarine, softened
- 1 package dry onion soup mix
- Split bread lengthwise in even halves.

In small bowl mix together soup mix and butter. Spread this mixture on each half of bread, thinly covering each half completely. Place halves together and slice into 8-10 pieces. Keeping loaf together, wrap in foil and bake in preheated 475 degree oven for 20 minutes then serve. May be reheated.

Standouts

Arnold L. Fairchild, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Fairchild of Twin Falls, has been awarded a Zeigler Education Foundation scholarship at the University of Idaho. Fairchild is a senior metallurgical engineering major.

Divorce, often phony, soaring in Soviet Union

By DUSKO DODER
©The Washington Post

MOSCOW — The idea that the Soviet Union is an exceptionally conservative society, in which changes take place at a snail's pace if at all, is one to which most experts tend to subscribe.

The conservatism of the place, its authoritarian quality, and apparently venerable symbols of Kremlin power all seem to produce a melancholy notion of time standing still.

World War II is still the subject of daily radio and television shows, and of films and books. It is presented as one of the watersheds — sometimes the only watershed — of human history, as though nothing has happened since.

Yet the current public debate on the institution of marriage and the role of women reveals not only a generational change but also deeper social and economic problems of this increasingly complex society.

The fact that one in every three marriages in the Soviet Union is ending in divorce within a year suggests something new and unanticipated about Soviet women in contrast to their parents who had that began with Adam.

Another equally interesting statistical detail shows that at least one in five of all divorces in this country is phony with partners seeking to obtain economic or other benefits while continuing to live together.

Such manipulation of marriage, once the source of stability in Russian life, reflects growing consumer expectations and pressures in a centralized economy that somehow defies great natural forces. It is incapable of satisfying the needs of the population.

The soaring divorce rate among the newlyweds is a cause of considerable official concern. With the population growth almost down to zero, the family is needed not only as a basic unit in a stable society but also to care for children.

But there is a beginning here of a feminist mood, despite the fact that the country's political and social life remains male-dominated. The new Soviet woman is far better educated and far more career-conscious than her mother. She is far less willing to put up with the strong tradition of male chauvinism in Russian life.

The Russian male, in turn, has entered public polemics about the subject with letters and articles that dispute the enduring assumption of male superiority which lingers in folk sayings such as, "A wife is not a jug — she won't crack if you whack her," or, "A dog is wiser than a woman — he won't bark at his master."

One Moscow newspaper printed an article recently written by V. Petrovski. He had come to the conclusion, he said, that divorce is "economically advantageous" for women.

They keep their children and receive about 50 rubles ($68) a month alimony from the state for each child. "By disposing of the husband," he added, "she has less domestic chores to do."

Another writer explained his divorce in terms of his wife having "turned my home into an office, constantly writing or reading or conducting business over the telephone — she had no time to cook and shop."

Yet another writer added this clincher to a similar argument: "I came to the point where my son had to do the shopping."

It is a part of Russian tradition that housework is regarded as demeaning to their male partners and bring up their children.

There have been no passionate feminist responses to these and similar statements. Officially, women enjoy full equality here. In practice they have to maintain the household, mind the children, wait in lines to buy food — and hold a job. The latter has become essential to maintaining living standards.

The phony divorces involve both younger and older couples. One newspaper recently cited the following example: A couple married for more than 30 years were told that their home would be razed to make way for urban development. They were offered a small two-room apartment. Their daughter was to be given an efficiency apartment.

The couple immediately filed for divorce. Once the marriage was legally dissolved, each was eligible for separate accommodations. After some complex maneuverings and exchanges of apartments, they wound up a happy family again — in a large apartment.

The phony divorce is a device to obtain apartments or to gain residence permits — a student from Siberia; for example, after completing his or her education in Moscow, must leave the city unless he or she has residence papers. The easiest and quickest way is to find a colleague, get married, obtain residence papers and get divorced — as if nothing had happened.

But in most cases, the device is used to improve the couple's economic lot. The husband and wife claim irreconcilable differences; have their marriage dissolved, then continue to live normal lives and bring up their children.

One of the main reasons for divorces, apart from increasing assertiveness of women, is the problem of drinking that is widespread among the males. Ads in the lonely-hearts style almost invariably refer to the issue. "Interesting brunette, engineer, physician, wants to meet a person willing to start a family. Anyone given to drink should not bother to make contact," reads a typical ad. A man who described himself as having "solid character, non-drinker" wants to meet his future wife, "no children, not older than 27." The lonely-hearts columns in themselves are an innovation that reflects the increased problem of loneliness and family stability.

Longtime boat builder making final one, but he'll keep fishing

HARKERS ISLAND, N.C. (UPI) — The early spring sun hung low above the sound, harshly illuminating the tent where 71-year-old Earl Rose is building his 1,000th — and last — boat.

After a 52-year career constructing everything from 14-foot skiffs to 65-foot yachts, Rose's finale is in the form of a 39-foot commercial fishing vessel.

But Rose doesn't plan on retiring once he finishes the "Eloise" (named for a granddaughter) this summer. He said he will use the boat as a commercial fisherman, and stay in that job until he dies.

"I hope when I pass on and go over I'll be aboard that boat," he said with a laugh. "I've never looked forward to retirement ... I don't want no easy life. I only deserve what I work for."

The son of a whaler, Rose grew up on now-deserted Cape Lookout and on Harkers Island. He never attended school past the fourth grade and never had electricity in his home until he was in his 30s.

By the time he was 15, Rose was laboring on a tugboat in Chesapeake Bay. But then the Depression hit, forcing him to return to Harkers Island and build boats for $1 a day.

During World War II he ran crews at Portsmouth, Va., sometimes working around the clock to repair crippled ships.

Rose said those years gave him a toughness that he claims isn't in people who grew up since World War II.

"The younger class of men is actually too lazy to earn a living," he said. "They've had too much of a gravy train. Before World War II, you take a boy like me. If I wanted something I had to work to get it."

"But since World War II the world turned over, changed. And now young men, young girls, they want automobiles. Their parents furnish them. They just have a ball. So the young men that you hire this day and time, they ain't worth nothin'. They don't know nothin' and they won't try to learn nothin'."

Rose started his own boat-building firm in 1946, working with a younger brother who stayed with him until he died last year. During those years he built all types of boats, including one that cost $450,000.

Rose never advertised, but he said he never lacked for work because people from as far away as Michigan, Massachusetts and Missouri came asking him to build boats.

"Each boat was its own advertisement," he said. He said he especially liked to design boats, coming up with variations on the Harkers Island boat design that is well-known along the Atlantic Seaboard.

He draws blueprints when a customer demands them, but for his "Eloise" the drawings are in his head. Rose said he will turn the business over to one of his two sons when he dies, although he wonders how long they'll be able to stand the work.

Rose said there will be no fanfare, no champagne broken across the bow when the last boat, his "Eloise," is finished.

"If there was champagne I'd probably drink it," he said.

Earl Rose, 71, is building his 1,000th — and last — boat.

Druggist

Georgetown is older than Washington, really. The capital swallowed it more than a century ago. The old Georgetown custom house is now a post office. The area always has been the home of the local gentry.

In Jim Crow days — much of it became a black ghetto. Now that Washington is mostly a black-populated city, Georgetown is something of a white ghetto. Its inhabitants now include such as Atwill Harriman, Henry Kissinger, senators and congressmen; judges and the diplomats and reporters. And Doc is here, Druggist.

He is in short sleeves and a white shirt with brown stripes and trousers only an establishment figure — a duke, a successful revolutionary on a corner druggist — would wear in such rumpled fashion.

Doc's voice is loud. He complains in Wagnerian tones about his assistants. They, the most junior of being, been there two decades, judge his heart and not his voice and hold his roaring to be purring.

"Doc's got the same customers since he opened. And he's got us and we've got him," said Wally Barron behind the cash register. "He thinks he's a tiger, he's a kitty."

Doc also is a host. To suit his customers, he dally stocks out-of-town, even out-of-country newspapers. For Sunday morning newspaper buyers he sets out a pot, then an urn of coffee. Then some rolls. Then buttermilk cheese, and brie, and carmelent, buns, lox and sauerkraut.

His customers always have included such as Myra Loy, Gene Tierney, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, Herb Luback, the cartoonist and such. And the evening began making Sunday morning at Doc's on a par with the evening Georgetown cocktail parties so detected by Richard Nixon, H. R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman.

And Sunday morning at Doc's went on until recently. "One Sunday Art Buchwald and (Washington Post Editor) Ben Bradlee got me in a corner and gave me hell.

Dear Abby

By clearing up her past, wife has clouded her present

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
© Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: For years I followed your advice. You told me not to tell my husband about the affairs I had before we were married unless I was absolutely sure he wouldn't hurt me or throw it up to me.

Well, he kept begging and begging, promising it wouldn't make any difference, no matter how many or who they were, so I told him. There were only three; he guessed one, and the other two were surprises. He knew all of them, and now he is calling me terrible names. It's just about wrecked our marriage.

It wasn't like I was cheating on him, Abby. I wasn't his girlfriend when I went with these guys. It was a long time ago, they're all married, and I couldn't care less about them.

Now I am confused: What is a woman with a past supposed to do? She's damned if she tells, and damned if she doesn't.

—SORRY: WAS HONEST

DEAR SORRY: A woman should be accepted by her husband as she is. Her past is none of his business just as his past is none of her business. If they have the kind of relationship in which both want to let it all hang out, fine. But when one keeps begging for confessions, complete with the names and numbers of all the players, while silence is golden, it's not necessarily still.

DEAR ABBY: I was invited to a pool party by a friend who had been invited to bring a friend. I did not know the host.

The afternoon was spent swimming and drinking around the pool. Then we dressed in our casual wear for dinner, to be served on tables around the pool. As I sat down I accidentally knocked over a champagne glass and it broke. The host told me where the glassware had been purchased so that I could replace it. That seemed reasonable to me, although I would not have made that suggestion to a guest of mine. (Accidents will happen.)

Well, I phoned the store the following day and learned that a single crystal champagne goblet cost $155. No way can I afford that 8999% modest income. I might add, I was not drunk and the table was a glass-top type with no tablecloth to buffer a fallen goblet.

I usually don't mind paying for my mistakes, but I consider it totally inappropriate to place such costly glassware on the table for a casual swimming party. I plan to send a note of apology and enclose a check for $25 to help toward replacing said glass.

What do you say?
—J.

DEAR J.: Your note and check for $25 seem reasonable to me. Find out if you are insured against such breakage. And is your host? (Many are, and don't realize it.)

DEAR ABBY: Having played in a dance band myself in the early '20s, I sure got a kick out of the letter from the orchestra leader asking for additional suggestions for songs to dedicate to couples celebrating their wedding anniversaries.

Here are a few you might want to add to his list:

For the 40th anniversary: "Why Don't We Do This More Often?"

For the 50th: "Once in a While."
For the 60th: "I Can Dream, Can't I?"

By the way, the wife and I just celebrated our 59th wedding anniversary—Big news!

Dr. Lamb

Pancreas tumor serious

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.
© Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would like some information on the pancreas. Could you tell me what its functions are? My sister has a malignant tumor of the pancreas. She has had surgery for it but the doctors didn't remove the tumor or the pancreas. They have been giving her chemotherapy treatments which have made her very ill and they are now giving her radiation treatments. Will they help her to live longer? When they did her surgery they made a bypass of the tumor and clamped it off.

What could cause a tumor of the pancreas? She seemed in good health until about six weeks ago when she became very nauseated and couldn't keep her food down. Prior to that she had had a complete physical. The doctors found nothing wrong then and she had the tests of the upper and lower digestive system and it didn't show up. They finally made a stomach scan which showed a tumor in her side.

DEAR READER — I'm sorry to hear of your sister's problem. It's a very serious illness as you realize.

I sometimes call the pancreas the enzyme organ because one of its main functions is to form pancreatic juice that drains into the small intestine at the same point the bile drains from your liver. It contains enzymes that are important in the digestive process of breaking down carbohydrates of all kinds, fats, and proteins. If a person is not producing sufficient amounts of these enzymes and can't break down these basic food elements, he will lose much of the undigested food through the colon.

Seeded throughout the pancreas are the little tiny endocrine glands called the islets of Langerhans. These produce insulin to maintain your normal blood glucose level. Defective islets can lead to diabetes.

I'm sending you "The Health Letter" number 114, "The Pancreas—Your Enzyme Organ." It will give you more details about the pancreas and its function and various diseases that can affect it. Other readers who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 151, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

When a tumor is in the body of the pancreas so that it doesn't press on any other structure, it can be silent for a long time, not producing any symptoms. That enables it to get fairly advanced before trouble is spotted. If the tumor happens to be in the head of the pancreas that's wrapped around the bile duct, it can obstruct the bile duct and cause sudden painless jaundice.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Would you explain "abnormal ECG due to hypokalemia?" I am overweight and I do not understand this. I have an irregular heartbeat real bad at times.

—DEAR READER — That means that the doctor who read your electrocardiogram saw characteristics in it that we attribute to a low potassium level. Incidentally you can develop a low potassium if you're on some of the drastic reducing diets.

I mention this because of your comment about being overweight. Also a low potassium level can contribute to irregularities of the heart. Some of the diuretics used to wash out water not only wash out sodium salt and water but also wash out potassium. This includes some of the medicines used in the treatment of high blood pressure.

Oldsters must make votes count

By LOU COTTIN
©Newspaper Enterprise Association

The fall campaigns for the White House and Congress plus state and local offices in many areas are now under way. It's vital for us seniors to pick our candidates and to pick them carefully.

The platform planks on the aging may be the most significant documents to have come out of the political conventions. They make important reading for all senior citizens, and for those who will join our ranks during the next four years.

Call or visit local offices of the Republican and Democratic parties to request copies of these planks on the elderly. If the office doesn't have the material, ask where you can get it.

This is a key notice to both parties that we intend to vote in our own best interests, as do other sectors of the American electorate.

No matter what else we read about the candidates and the issues, the party planks on the aged should be studied with care.

In fact, activists among us should gather local seniors together to discuss and analyze what both political parties propose for us. What we learn should guide our hands when we vote.

Leaders of these meetings should not invite representatives of either party to attend.

Certainly there will be some senior citizens at these sessions who consider themselves Republicans. Others will think of themselves as Democrats. A third group will declare themselves independents.

Our aim will not be to change their party affiliations. What we will try to do is to arm brother and sister seniors to go out into the world and ask questions.

The politicos of all persuasions will hold meetings in our communities at which they will extol their parties and their platforms. It will be up to us to attend these meetings and raise the issues that concern us.

Our implication will be, "We'll vote for your candidate if your program and your candidate are in line with our needs as senior citizens."

Our demands will begin with an end to all forms of age discrimination against seniors.

We may ask for an end to all mandatory retirement.

We may insist that our Social Security income remain free from taxation and continue to be increased to keep pace with inflation.

We should demand that home health care be expanded and that nursing homes and adult homes be more effectively regulated.

We should challenge both parties on inequities against women, such as the penalties now paid by two-worker families in the Social Security system.

We should ask for adequate funding of energy assistance to the elderly.

We should demand solutions to the sub-standard housing of low-income seniors. We should seek protection from condominium converters for moderate and high-income seniors.

In short, we seniors must try to write our own ticket. We need to say to the parties and their candidates, "You vote for our needs and we'll vote for you."

Counting current and soon-to-be seniors, about 35 million votes are at stake. Let's make all of them count!

More data is ordered about drugs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government Wednesday ordered the makers of 10 drugs, including such widely prescribed brands as Valium, Librium and Darvon, to begin giving consumers printed advisories about their use and dangers.

Pharmacists, starting in mid-1981, will be required to hand out the leaflets whenever a prescription for one of the drugs is filled for the first time. The information also will be available in hospitals and nursing homes, and also will be printed in Spanish.

Wednesday's order is scaled down from an original proposal that would have required patient package leaflets for more than 300 drugs.

But Patricia Harris, secretary of Health and Human Services, told a news conference the 10 drugs selected for a three-year trial program are still significant because they represent 16 percent of all drugs prescribed.

The drugs involved are ampicillins; benzodiazepines (tranquilizers such as Valium, Librium and Tranexene); cimetidine, an ulcer treatment; clofibrate, used to treat elevated blood fat levels; digoxin, a heart drug; methoxsalen, for skin color problems; thiazides, diuretics for people with high blood pressure; phenytoin, for epilepsy; propoxyphene, the pain reliever most commonly sold as Darvon; and warfarin, an anti-coagulant used to prevent blood clots.

Darvon, a pain-killer that has been the object of considerable criticism and government scrutiny, will be accompanied by a leaflet warning about dependence and the danger of death from use with alcohol or other drugs. The final wording of all the leaflets remains to be worked out.

81-year-old radio operator called collector of countries

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — He is the grand old ham of amateur radio. For the past quarter of a century, 81-year-old Don Wallace, better known as "W6AM," has been champion "collector of countries" among worldwide DXers (long distance amateur radio operators). "It's like being a world champion golfer for 25 years or the world's top runner for that long," the octogenarian said proudly. "Wallace has talked to people in more countries since 1955 than any other ham radio operator: 365 places classified as nations by just one of the American Radio Relay League. "I have been able to talk to more countries than any other radio operator because of my antennas." The sprightly old-timer, who has been on the air 71 years, got interested in amateur radio as a 10-year-old in Long Beach, Calif., in 1909. His 24-acre estate on the top of the Palos Verdes Peninsula, called the Wallace Radio Ranch, is dotted with 61 poles, each 75 to 100 feet high and strung with 1,000-foot-long lateral antennas. Despite his age, Wallace climbs the towers to do the necessary maintenance. The grand old ham is on the air talking to other amateur radio operators in the far-flung corners of the earth seven days a week. One day he was heard talking to KOMUS, Melurdo Sound in Antarctica; ZZAP, Saudi Arabia; UDE6KW, Azerbaijan, Soviet Union and two amateur stations in New Zealand. The conversations were about radio sets. "Why didn't you ask that Russian how the Afghanistan invasion is progressing?" Wallace was asked. He replied: "Amateur radio operators have a code of ethics. We never talk politics or religion." He was 20 when President Woodrow Wilson named him chief radio operator for the Versailles Peace Treaty after World War I, dispatching daily presidential messages from France. When Herbert Hoover was U.S. secretary of commerce, he presented Wallace with a silver cup for operating "the best all-around amateur radio station in 1923." When Hoover became president, his son Herbert Jr. elicited his Morse code key every Tuesday from the White House to Wallace's radio station in Southern California.

Wallace's home is full of trophies, plaques and citations honoring him for his achievements in amateur radio. One trophy salutes him for talking to a record 850 different amateur radio station operators in one 24-hour period. He is a wireless operator and ship's radio officer for several summers beginning at age 14. During World War I, Wallace was a radio man on a submarine. He has traveled to 80 nations to transmit radio messages and visit with ham operators. "Clicking the key and talking to radio hams everywhere in the world is just as exciting to me today as it was when I was a kid," he said. "The world is really our cup of tea."

Restrictions hit

NEW YORK (UPI) — A spokesman for the lead industry claims that proposed government restrictions on the use of lead in gasoline would force the United States to import $730 million worth more of foreign oil in order to maintain present levels of gasoline production. Werner T. Meyer, president of the Lead Industries Association, claims that the United States could reduce its crude oil consumption by some 25 million barrels a year if current limits on the use of lead in gasoline were eliminated since it takes more crude oil to make a gallon of unleaded gas than to make a gallon of leaded gas.

Holding club record, member Tom Worthington stands outside clubhouse in Maryland.

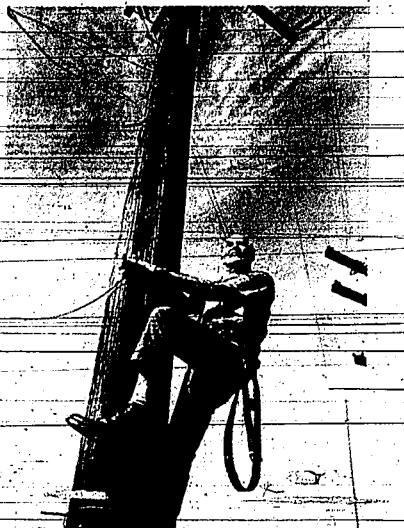

Time stands still for this club

By STEPHANIE MANSFIELD
Washington Post

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Time stands still four times a year for the gentlemen of the Ancient South River Club. That's when the members, average age 70, meet at their one-room club porch clubhouse 10 miles south of here to pitch quoits, drink their secret punch, feast on country ham and blackball prospective members much the same way their ancestors did nearly 300 years ago. What has kept the oldest operating social organization in the Western Hemisphere going? "We're not allowed to talk about religion or politics," said Tom Worthington, Annapolis real estate broker and club member since 1968. That, club members said, is the only rule. The society, whose tiny clubhouse resembles a grown-up tree house perched on a lush country hill 10 miles south of here, is open only to men over 21 years of age. Members fit Southern Maryland. Membership is limited to 25 men—mainly because that's how many can squeeze into the clubhouse which is surrounded by tall oak trees, hollyhock bushes and the ghost of members past. "Welcome to the 17th century," Worthington said, ushering a guest into the "new" clubhouse. The old clubhouse burned in 1740, destroying the club's records. Nevertheless, the membership claims the organization, founded by Maryland tobacco farmers, dates to around 1680. "We're just a little country club," said Worthington, noting the lack of golf course, swimming pool or bar and grill. "There's horsehair plaster on the ceiling, worn pine floors, a long walnut table and faded portraits hanging on the yellow walls." "This is," said Worthington, chairman of the grounds committee, "an oasis of tranquility in a rather turbulent world." There's no electricity, no indoor plumbing and no running water. There is also, members say, no reason for the club's existence. "We don't espouse any cause or person," Worthington said. "I suppose the only thing we get out of it is pleasure." Four times a year — on the third Thursday of May, the Fourth of July, the third Thursday of September and the Thursday before Thanksgiving — the members meet. The purpose of these gatherings is to feast on a lavish meal, which members take turns servicing. Two staples of these afternoon repasts are a 15-pound Maryland country ham and a potent punch, brewed two months in advance. The punch recipe is a closely guarded secret, but as club members' wives will attest, the main ingredient is Maryland rye whiskey. The steward of the day, as the host member is referred to, must also supply club members with clean clay pipes and tobacco, although these days the men prefer cigars. The meetings are open only to members, but the steward of the day is permitted to bring five guests. Over the years such notables as baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, former secretary of the Navy J. William Mendenhall and former acting governor of Maryland Blair Lee have tasted the secret South River Club punch as guests. Along with the meal, the members indulge in local gossip, trade jokes and pitch quoits — bronze rings much like horseshoes — on the one-half-acre manicured lawn. Outsiders might call the Ancient South River Club snobbish, even discriminatory. But Tom Worthington, pointing to the dilapidated toilet facility hidden behind the tall bushes, said, "How can we be snooty with an outhouse like this?"

Birth control pills with low doses of estrogen claimed safest

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Health Editor

NEW YORK — Scientists say the safest birth control pills contain low doses of estrogen and progestogen, but most of the 10 million American women who use the pill are prescribed the types that contain higher hormone doses.

Preliminary evidence, presented Tuesday at a symposium for medical and science writers, shows that birth control pills with a low hormone dose appear to help women avoid side effects that may lead to possible strokes or heart attacks.

The symposium was sponsored by Mead-Johnson Pharmaceutical Division of Evansville, Ind., which makes a birth control pill with the lowest combination of hormones — Ovcon-35.

The panel moderator, Dr. Martin L. Stone, immediate past president of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, said two other brands contain the preferred low-dose combination of hormones — Brevicon and Modicon.

Stone said about 20 percent of birth control pills sold contain the lowest doses possible, 60 percent contain high doses, and 20 percent great concentrations.

The birth control pill market runs over $300 million a year but many would-be users opt for other methods rather than risk possible side effects, including liver tumors.

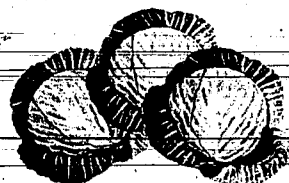

The increased safety record of low-dose pills is becoming so strong that there is a movement to have the Food and Drug Administration ban birth control pills with higher combinations of the hormones, participating scientists said.

Preliminary reports of small-scale research released at the meeting showed the pills with low-dose hormones provide contraceptive effects without causing changes in the arteries.

POLISH WORKERS DEMAND SWENSEN'S MARKETS

It's no secret that Polish workers are unhappy about conditions in Communist Poland, but it is not generally known that one of the most important demands of the Polish Workers is for the establishment of Swensen's Markets in Poland with Swensen's friendly, courteous service, well-stocked stores and especially Swensen's low, cabbage price. Cabbage has been a mainstay of the Polish diet for many years and when the Poles heard how cheap you can buy cabbage at Swensen's without even standing in line, the establishment of Swensen's Polish Markets soon became the biggest unresolved issue in the Polish dispute. Unfortunately for the Polish workers (not to be confused with the employees at Swensen's Markets) Mr. Swensen (formerly Ladislaw Swensenowski) has refused to go back, but continues to sell cabbages at old world, pre-revolution prices.
