

Reagan ready to OK domestic CIA spying

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Soon after his return to Washington from a Thanksgiving vacation, President Reagan is expected to approve the most controversial of four proposals to strengthen the CIA and other intelligence agencies.

Reagan plans to sign an executive order loosening the restrictions Jimmy Carter placed on the CIA in 1978 to prevent it from committing domestic spying and invasion of privacy abuses conducted by a presidential commission and a Senate committee.

The order has gone through at least four drafts, and the leak of the third one sparked vigorous opposition from the Senate and House Intelligence Committees. It was denounced by both conservatives and liberals on the Senate panel and by the Democratic chairman of the House committee.

As a result of comments submitted by the Senate committee, the administration revised the proposal, apparently watering down the most provocative section — one allowing the CIA to spy on Americans in the United States and to infiltrate anti-influence domestic groups.

One Senate source said the re-order has not been signed until now is that Reagan has not been briefed on the final provisions by national security adviser Richard Allen, who has been tied up defending himself against allegations he improperly received gifts from Japanese journalists.

Besides allowing the CIA to engage in legal domestic spying for the first time and to infiltrate domestic groups, the third draft — which may have been seen or may yet be modified — allows the CIA to conduct certain operations in the United States instead of only abroad, open mail without a warrant and work with local law enforcement agencies.

These actions presumably could involve only Americans believed to be targets of foreign intelligence or international terrorist organizations, not any Americans at random.

• Authorize the CIA to collect and disseminate information on U.S. citizens who are not the subject of an investigation, and permit the agency to gain access to bank, medical and telephone records. These actions may require court orders or warrants.

• Give the CIA director an equal role with the FBI director in domestic intelligence, at least as far as counter-intelligence is concerned.

The CIA already has a say in the counter-intelligence activities of the FBI. The head of the CIA also is the director of central intelligence, with responsibility for oversight of the entire intelligence community. That includes FBI counter-intelligence activity.

Other parts of Reagan's intelligence package are bills to exempt intelligence agencies from the Freedom of Information Act and to make it a crime for anyone, including journalists, to reveal the name of an intelligence agent, even if it is available on the public record.

That restriction is aimed primarily at original publication, and penal sanctions would not be applied to a journalist who, for instance, picked up the name of an agent from one publication and used it in another.

Reagan also is considering another executive order, now under review by the Senate Intelligence Committee, to tighten the secrecy surrounding CIA documents.

It would lengthen the time in which

Thanksgiving feasts around the country

By United Press International

Thousands of Americans flocked to free Thanksgiving feasts and the company of others Thursday while millions of their countrymen remembered the nation's historic origins and braved the elements to view annual parades.

The holiday was made happier for those with no family and no money in dozens of cities around the country by merchants and restaurant owners who provided free meals and companionship.

Thanksgiving Day was "made wonderful for Jamie Cassel in Reno, Nev., when she retrieved her purse that had been stolen the day before. The purse contained the only photo of her 7-year-old son, who had been killed in a car crash.

After being told police couldn't get to the case until Monday, Ms. Cassel, with the aid of a witness who had seen the license plate of the suspected robber, went to the robber's apartment where he eventually produced the purse with the photo intact.

But struggling to retain her holiday spirit was the Keith Brown family of Escanaba, Mich., who faced tragedy for the second time in the past few weeks.

Last month teenage son Jay was killed in an auto accident in Oconto County, Wis. Then the family's house was destroyed on Thanksgiving Eve by a fire police said may have been deliberately set. The family was not home at the time of the fire.

Amid the splendor of holiday parades and the contentment that comes from a delicious turkey dinner, many Americans remembered how this country got its start.

In Maine, 1,000 members of the Mayflower Society gathered Thursday with families and friends on the day that has special meaning for them. The group traces its ancestry directly to the signers of the Mayflower Compact.

In Minneapolis, the president of the American Indian Movement declared Thanksgiving "a national day of mourning" for his people.

Clyde Bellecourt said Indians had little, for which to be thankful. They are afflicted by some of the nation's highest rates of suicide, unemployment, infant mortality and school dropout, he said.

About 250 homeless people crowded into The Lamb's, a church hall in Manhattan for an elegant dinner served to them by waiters in tuxedos. The Rev. Orville Jenkins said the Church of the Nazarene has provided meals for the poor at The Lamb's for years as a special treat.

A Salvation Army official estimated that 2,000 persons were given free turkey dinners at six army locations in New York. Hundreds more dined at other locations throughout the city.

In Texas, thousands of poor and elderly in San Antonio, Fort Worth and Tyler received free Thanksgiving dinners Thursday through the generosity of restaurateurs.

In Tyler, Jerry Loggins fed about 200 of the poor and elderly at his restaurant. In San Antonio, food products executive Raul Jimenez and city officials fed 3,000 people at the city convention center. Jimenez also opened the doors of his restaurant in Fort Worth and television station KXAS joined him to provide another 5,000 meals to residents in that city.

Two million line Broadway

NEW YORK (UPI) — Up to two million adults and children ignored freezing temperatures Thursday in favor of tradition and the thrill of the longest running show on Broadway — Macy's 55th annual Thanksgiving Day parade.

Deputy Police Chief Milton Schwartz said the crowd that turned out under bright, sunny skies was "one of the largest ever" in the history of the parade.

Bundled well against the cold, smiling children with their parents lined the two-mile route as 13 marching bands, 18 floats and nine giant balloons of such cartoon characters Kermit the Frog, Superman, and Snoopy led the arrival of Santa Claus.

Majorities with goose pimples bravely kept time to the music.

With the crowds 20 deep at some intersections, good vantage points were hard to find and a number of people took to the tops of phone booths, vans, and doorways to catch a view.

"I love it," said Wendy Churn, 28, one of the many clowns. "It's the start of the holiday season and the energy is there in the faces of the kids."

"It's a great day," Chief Schwartz said, adding "several million" people were on hand to usher in Thanksgiving. The police usually decline to give exact estimates, but other observers judged the crowd at up to two million.

"I like it a lot, especially the balloons and floats," said Peter Reed, 8, of Bronxville, N.Y.

With temperatures hovering around the 32-degree mark, Peter, like many children along the route, said he was "freezing" but that that did not make it any less fun.

"I love parades," said 3-year-old Peter Giambastiani, of Williston Park, N.Y. "Superman is my favorite," he added, speaking about the 104-foot balloon that is the biggest ever to appear in the parade.

Gobs and ams, mixed with cheers, filled Broadway as the balloons, floats, bands and celebrities such as Dony Osmond, Erik Estrada and New York Yankee Dave Winfield flew by.

Groundwork set for Watt contempt citation

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A House subcommittee has laid the groundwork for a congressional contempt citation against Interior Secretary James Watt.

The citation also would challenge President Reagan's first use of the claim of executive privilege.

The oversight and investigation subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee held two hearings before Thanksgiving on the legal implications of its confrontation with the White House and Watt.

Although more preparatory sessions could be held, a staffer said none is slated and the next step could be a contempt citation.

At issue is a provision of the Mineral Lands Act that bars public oil leasing to foreign countries or firms if the secretary of interior determines those countries discriminate against American investment on their territory.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of both the subcommittee and the full committee, wants Watt to make a determination in the case of Canada's new national energy policy, which U.S. oil firms find discriminatory.

Watt not only has postponed a decision, but also he has refused to give the panel 31 documents it subpoenaed as part of its review of his performance under the act.

At a subcommittee hearing a month ago, Watt countered with a letter from Reagan invoking for the first time his claim of executive privilege to protect the documents from congressional scrutiny.

Committee staffers are confident that, in the two hearings that followed, they have produced testimony from constitutional experts that indicates executive privilege cannot be extended to such documents.

"They predict a contempt citation could be issued when Congress returns after Thanksgiving.

A similar executive-congressional duel began Oct. 19 when Energy Secretary James Edwards refused to provide another subcommittee of Dingell's committee with requested documents dealing with the move to dismantle his energy agency.

Watt, 43, former chief legal officer of the Mountain States Legal Foundation, has been under fire from environmental groups for his efforts at opening up wilderness and offshore areas to commercial exploitation.

"These groups are after my hide," Watt said, listing the Sierra Club, Audubon Society, the National Wildlife Society and other national environmental clubs in a speech to the Forum Club of Houston on Tuesday.

"They have the assumption that we cannot combine environmental protection and development of our resources," he said. "They are wrong."

Best use for some energy-conserving products: Don't

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Home energy specialist John Rothchild says avoiding some energy conservation products can save a homeowner more money than using them.

John Rothchild once equipped his house with a new solar water heater that he thought would shave his fuel bill as the advertising blurb had promised.

It didn't. But the former household energy conservation specialist for the Energy Department parlayed his miscalculation — plus a lot of other research — into a book that will be a boon to other cost-conscious homeowners but no delight for the gadget makers.

The book, "Stop Burning Your Money" is a message of simple economics in energy conservation and household efficiency.

"To me, the only worthy energy conservation decision is one that pays off," writes the author. "You can save hundreds of dollars by simply avoiding a few products that don't deserve their fuel-bill-cutting reputation."

Summarily rejected are attic ventilators, those mushroom-shaped things that spin uselessly on rooftops; timers for electric water heaters, which don't do much to lower hot water bills; combustion air humidifiers, and storm doors, which are less cost effective than weather-stripping the existing doors.

"Go for the big rate-of-return things first," Rothchild told United Press International in an interview. "Do those things and then look at the fuel bill again. Don't just go ahead and spend $2,000."

The most effective cost-cutter is simply to turn down the thermostat and put on a sweater. "That gives a better return than the one on wall insulation," Rothchild said.

Although attic insulation rates high, it's effect can be sabotaged by what he calls "spoilers" that can destroy 30 percent of the insulating value. Some insulation, for example, can shrink inside wall cavities and a few subtle air leaks can also let the heat escape.

Several popular myths are savaged.

Fireplaces "are even worse than you think," he said. "In many places, the fireplace is a net loser. Sometimes, the best you can do is just brick it up."

And fireplace inserts don't reverse the heat loss equation as much as their makers claim.

With a cord of hardwood wood going for $110 in some places, Rothchild said, "a lot of people who have wood stoves manage to spend as much money as they did on the gas they burned before."

It may look chic to build a greenhouse on the side of the house. But for those who don't know just exactly what they hope to accomplish, the greenhouse can become a hot box in summer and a heat sink in winter.

Yet the wisdom of true energy conservation is inescapable.

It makes no sense, Rothchild observes, for someone to ponder over the right moment to buy a Treasury bill while he ignores an old furnace that wastes 40 percent of the oil he buys.

He encourages people to think of energy savings as tax-free dividends that appreciate in a mythical account because monthly fuel bills are paid in after-tax dollars.

The book provides tables of ballpark investment costs, risks, estimated fuel bill savings by percentage, and annual paybacks and returns for each conservation decision.

Rothchild analyzes all the common improvements that profitably can be made to the shell of the house, the oil or gas burner and the water heater.

Converting from oil to gas by switching burners, for example, would cost $600 and save 30 percent of the heating bill.

Allen's friend attended car talks

TOKYO (UPI) — A Japanese friend of National Security Advisor Richard Allen said Thursday he accompanied a leading Toyota executive to meet with Allen in the White House but denied that car imports were discussed.

Takase's wife was the interpreter in that interview and reportedly gave him a watch as a gift for helping to arrange the interview. Takase was interviewed Thursday by the Mainichi newspaper at Kyoto Industrial University where he holds a teaching post and the interview was published today.

and the United States on the auto exports issue. He said Toyota Corp. executive Shoichi Toyoda accompanied him in the meeting with Allen. "We also paid visits on Mr. William Brock (U.S. trade representative) and other officials but I can't understand why people seem to focus attention on the meeting with Mr. Allen," Takase was quoted as saying.

Friday briefing

U.S. rejects military deal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A senior U.S. official says the United States has decided to reject Israel's draft proposal on closer military cooperation because it goes beyond the limited relationship Washington has in mind.

The United States and Israel agreed on the basic concept of a new pact for "strategic cooperation" in August when Prime Minister Menachem Begin visited the United States and met with President Reagan.

Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon will return to Washington next week to discuss the draft "memos of understanding" exchanged by the two countries and help put them into final form.

Officials say there appears to be a wide divergence between the two countries on how far the cooperation should go. The United States sent its draft to Israel Tuesday in response to the Israeli draft received earlier in Washington.

Third party wins in England

CROSBY, England (UPI) — Social Democrat Shirley Williams, known as "our Shirl", won a special election that gave her more moderate party its first elected member of Parliament and shattered Britain's two-party system.

Turnout was unusually heavy in the by-election in the Crosby district north of Liverpool, where Mrs. Williams — Britain's most popular politician — was running against Conservative John Butcher and Labor's John Backhouse. There were also six other minor candidates.

The win by Mrs. Williams gave the 8-month-old SDP its first elected seat in the House of Commons. The 23 previous Social Democrat MP's were defectors formerly elected on Labor or Conservative tickets.

Mrs. Williams was elected with 49.1 percent of the vote in a constituency which has been a Conservative Party bastion since 1918. Her Conservative challenger won 39.8 percent of the vote.

Rose Kennedy leaves hospital

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Rose Kennedy went home from the hospital Thursday in time for Thanksgiving Day dinner in her Palm Beach oceanfront villa with her family.

Mrs. Kennedy, 91, mother of the Kennedy clan, was released from the coronary care unit of St. Mary's hospital at 11:30 a.m. after receiving a final examination by her cardiologist, Dr. Robert Gerard. She checked into the hospital Tuesday morning and was reported in stable condition after suffering an attack of angina.

Her only surviving son, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Iowa, flew from Washington, D.C. Tuesday night and said he would "slay by her side" until she recovered.

Kennedy and his sister, Patricia Kennedy Lawford, were with a smiling Mrs. Kennedy, dressed in a pink bathrobe, as she was wheeled from the hospital to a waiting car for the trip home for dinner with her family.

FAA quiet on altered scores

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Federal Aviation Administration officials in Washington have stonewalled a House committee investigating allegations the agency altered test scores of student air traffic controllers, a committee member charged Thursday.

"The committee has been a little dismayed with their (FAA officials) lack of candor in answering the committee's questions," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo. "Saying a little dismayed is being very charitable."

Schroeder, in a telephone interview, said she planned to travel to Oklahoma City next week to investigate charges that officials at the FAA's air traffic controller academy upgraded test scores in their hurry to replace 11,500 controllers fired after they went on strike in August.

"Their (the officials) approach has been, 'I don't want to talk about it,'" the congresswoman said.

CIA

Continued from Page 1 most agency documents were kept secret from the 200 members of the House Intelligence Committee for as long as required by internal security considerations, and would require all CIA documents to be classified unless there is reason to believe they would not cause harm if made public.

Administration officials have said restrictions placed on the CIA by the Carter administration were too severe, and conditions have changed since then, making it harder for the CIA to monitor terrorism and the use of U.S. citizens by foreign intelligence services.

White House: Allen's sale of firm causes no conflict

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A review of national security adviser Richard Allen's sale of his consulting firm, which provides him monthly payments, concluded that no conflict of interest is involved, a White House lawyer said Thursday.

Allen's financial disclosure form was amended this week for the second time, to list his earlier financial stake in the company, which was sold just before President Reagan's inauguration to Peter D. Hannaford, a former Reagan aide and speechwriter before the election.

Allen has been in the spotlight for the past two weeks after it was revealed he received an envelope containing $1,000 from a Japanese journalist for help in arranging an interview or photo session with Nancy Reagan.

The Reagan adviser said he put the envelope in an office safe and forgot about it until it was found in September. The Justice Department has until mid-December to decide whether to name a special prosecutor under the Ethics in Government Act to investigate further.

Earlier, Allen's disclosure form was amended to reflect the 1981 sale of his firm, Potomac International Corp. It had been listed as a 1978 transaction. The correction prompted the review of the form and the disclosure he had not listed the value of the firm on the form.

The Washington Post reported Thursday the deal "raises questions of whether a conflict of interest has arisen since inauguration. Day in Allen's regular contact with Hannaford, Hannaford's clients and a Japanese professor who had served Allen and now Hannaford as a conduit to some Japanese industrial leaders."

Richard Hauser, an assistant to White House counsel Fred Fielding, told United Press International in a telephone interview that after the sale date was revised he reviewed the transaction with Allen, and made the correction listing the firm's value, along with several minor corrections.

Hauser said after logging at details of the sale — which provide monthly checks for Allen — "it was clear it was outside the reporting period and didn't need to be put on the report."

He said the information on income from the sale will have to go on the next report, due no later than May 15, 1982.

The payments are to retire a debt of between $100,000 and $250,000.

Marathon battle moves to federal court today

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — The legal tug of war between Mobil Oil Corp. and U.S. Steel over the purchase of Marathon Oil Co. moves to federal court today.

A hearing was requested by Mobil for a preliminary injunction against U.S. Steel's offer to purchase the Findlay, Ohio, oil company, which is subject of a bidding war between the two giant corporations.

The hearing was originally set for Dec. 3. But U.S. Steel — which is hoping to win modification of a restraining order blocking its offer — was able to get the hearing moved up by six days.

Judge Joseph Kinneary issued the restraining order Tuesday after Mobil attorneys charged U.S. Steel's offer violated both federal securities laws and Ohio law.

In addition, Mobil challenged the legality of an agreement between Marathon and U.S. Steel which gave the steelmaker the exclusive option to purchase Marathon's interest in the rich Yates oil field in Texas for $2.8 billion if Marathon were taken over by a third party. The restraining order prohibits transfer of the Yates interest.

The bidding war for Marathon escalated Wednesday when Mobil boosted its offer for the nation's 16th largest oil company to $6.5 billion from $5.1 billion.

Mobil's revised package beats rival bidder U.S. Steel's offer by nearly a quarter of a billion dollars, according to estimates by securities analysts.

Mobil, the second largest U.S. oil company, sweetened its takeover bid by raising its cash offer for 51 percent of Marathon's 58 million shares to $126 a share, compared to U.S. Steel's cash offer of $125 a share.

Mobil's original offer called for paying $85 a share cash for up to two-thirds of Marathon stock. Mobil's plan to acquire the remaining shares by an exchange of securities was raised in value to $90 a share from $85.

By contrast, U.S. Steel's plan to acquire the remaining shares through an exchange of senior notes is appraised by one analyst at $83 a share.

Sanford Margoshes, oil industry analyst at Bache, Halsey Stuart Shields Inc., appraised Mobil's entire offer at an average $108 a share, or a total of $6.5 billion. The U.S. Steel bid, he estimated, is valued at about $104 a share, or a total of $6.24 billion.

Air controllers file under bankruptcy laws

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, facing millions of dollars in fines and with creditors knocking at the door, has filed for reorganization under bankruptcy laws, the union's lawyer said Thursday.

Richard Leighton said PATCO lawyers will meet Monday or Tuesday with major creditors to start working on a reorganization plan.

The reorganization paperwork, filed Wednesday in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Washington, is aimed at keeping PATCO in existence while it appeals an order removing it as bargaining agent for fired controllers and to keep creditors from forcing it into involuntary bankruptcy.

Last month's decertification order left PATCO, which had pre-strike assets of about $3.5 million, without income. The order denied PATCO the right to represent workers or collect dues.

"They're bad off," said Leighton. "They can't pay current debts, and if they don't reorganize they wouldn't exist."

Under the applicable statute, PATCO must file a plan for settling its debts within 120 days.

Leighton said the filing at least temporarily "holds off" government legal action on the millions in fines levied on PATCO after the Aug. 3 walkout that saw about 11,500 controllers fired for refusing President Reagan's demand that they return to work.

"Our filing holds off all that litigation. They can't even go forward.

Eventually they will. The question is whether they'll have to go to bankruptcy court to prove what they might have to prove elsewhere or prove it in another court," he said.

A federal judge in New York has ordered PATCO to pay airlines $4.5 million for violating a 1970 no-strike injunction, and Leighton said the Justice Department wants about $1 million in fines and a judgment unrelated to the strike of $800,000 is outstanding. He said all fines are being contested.

In addition, Leighton said, in another case airlines are seeking about $130 million for damages allegedly suffered in the first month of the strike.

He said PATCO's other debts, for items such as business services rendered the union, are not disputed.

So what's another $50 million or so?

The biggest portion of "turkey" this holiday season was dished up by Congress and the Reagan administration before Thanksgiving.

By failing to agree on a compromise budget, the American taxpayers had to pick up the tab for a wasted day in the federal bureaucracy, caused when the government technically ran out of money.

Essentially, we paid Uncle Sam an estimated $50 million for doing nothing last Monday.

Although the crisis was short-lived, it has not been overcome. The stopgap spending measure only extended the infighting and bickering until Dec. 15, when funding again will expire.

The affair gave both Reagan and the Congress a black eye.

Here we are in a recession, pessimism running high and the "boys" on the Hill are pouting and sticking out their tongues between backyard volleys of "Yes you will; no I won't."

The incident will add to the discontent among Americans. It also damages Reagan's standing. A poll released Wednesday indicated that for the first time since he was elected, a majority of Americans now disapprove of the president's handling of the economy.

Reagan may be justified for using the veto on a bill he termed "budget-busting." But the affair may have divided Congress even further.

The dispute also indicates the Reagan team has little depth when it comes to major skirmishes. The president did not inject himself personally into this one, and his team came away bruised.

By using the veto, Reagan may have taken the edge off his most effective weapon. After all, the only thing he accomplished was to continue government spending at current levels; the confrontation over reducing the budget simply has been put off to another day.

What Reagan and the Congress did was "agree to disagree."

We agree on one thing: Without corresponding cuts in government spending to match the tax cuts approved earlier, Uncle Sam's deficit will continue unabated, making economic recovery an elusive dream.

She took her back for granted

© The Boston Globe

BOSTON — I am writing this column lying down in the corner of the city room with a keyboard on my stomach. This is not an ordinary everyday event in my life or in the life of this city room.

It is, in fact, an admission of defeat: the defeat of mind by matter, will by body. I have been betrayed by anatomy, laid low and laid up.

In short, my back is wrecked.

How did this happen to a normally upright citizen? you may ask. The long answer is that, once upon a time, our primitive ancestors decided to do something for which they were not equipped. They decided to stand on two feet.

The short answer, however, is: Squash. The game, not the vegetable.

For the past half-dozen years, in the effort to keep fit, I have voluntarily entered a small white room several times a week.

I have gone there, armed only with a racquet and a small green ball, to battle age, infirmity and the bulge. There, with the aid of a partner, I usually hit the ball, occasionally hit the partner and from time to time hit the wall. Hitting the wall in squash, I hasten to tell you, is not like the hitting the wall in jogging.

One day, several weeks ago, I lunged to the right.

This particular lunge was different from all other lunges for only one reason. This time my back refused to follow me.

Until that moment, I had always made the decisions for both of us. It was an authoritarian relationship. I grant you, but one which I had never questioned. What I didn't know, of course, was that my back had been repressing rage, anger and stress for decades at the arbitrary way I had called the shots.

This time it simply refused to follow my lead. It deserted me.

During this painful period of our separation, I have discovered my own dependence. I have spent the better part of several weeks on my back, staring at the ceiling, obsessively going over the course of our relationship.

I remember now with a grimace how I once callously got up and down, how I bent over with abandon, slumped without a second thought. I am now ashamed at the way I had taken my back for granted.

I know I am not the only one who mistreated and lived to regret it. I have come into contact with the entire underground of fellow back sufferers. I have met dozens of other people whose lives have been ruptured, whose relationships have slipped, who have been temporarily divorced from their daily lives.

They were not all repentant. One simply refused to accept any fault. All he had done was reach over to pick up a pencil and his disc had dropped out. Another kept shifting the blame to the chair seat in front of him. A third predictably blamed everything on his mother's genes. And a fourth refuses, just refuses, to even admit that anything is wrong and give in to this back blackmail.

But I have decided to accept my 50 percent. With the aid of assorted therapists, my back and I are trying to learn once again how to communicate, to live in harmony and interdependence.

After admitting to decades of neglect, I finally understand why it was forced to take this extreme action before I would pay attention.

I am also learning to listen when it is trying to tell me something. To tune in early and often, long before it screams in pain.

My back in turn is learning that it must develop a much wider support system. The discs and I can't do it alone in this world. We must lean on other things around us.

No, it's not easy making the transition to a partnership of brain and muscle, sense and sinew, decisions and discs. There are occasions when I long for the old days when I was the boss.

But this has got to be better than having your back sore at you all the time.

Letters to the editor

What would happen if...

Editor, Times-News:
Every spring the word goes out: THERE'S WORK IN IDAHO; we need you in Idaho to work the fields; come on up. There's work in the sugar beets; hoeing, weeding. There's work in the beans; more hoeing. There's the potatoes; new potatoes, fall harvest potatoes. There's onions and onion seeds — your order of onion rings comin' right up. Hops — get me another Oly. Then there's the fruit: peaches, apples, plums, cherries, nectarines, cots.

There's also plenty of line to move: quarter-mile lines, half-mile lines; 40 feet to the line — watch it, it's heavy when it's got water in it. Every year the word goes out, the invitations are passed along.

The Chicano in Alamo gets his as he sips a brew on the porch. The Anglo from the Arkansas boonies gets his as he returns from the hunt. The Mexican in Sonora gets his while trimming the lamp. In New Mexico, the word comes to the Navajo as he watches his black-eyed child playing in the sun.

"But what would happen if, one time, one year, the workers didn't come? What would happen if Idaho gave a harvest and nobody showed?"

Who would work the beets, hoe the beans — in hot, endless rows under the Idaho sun? Who would bring in the potatoes, every day, twelve hours a day, on into the cold October nights, shivering with the chill, their backs and faces caked with dirt and sweat? Who would bend their backs all day to harvest the onions? What of the hops?

Who would climb tall ladders with buckets at their waists to gather the peaches, the plums, the apples, the cherries? Who would rise at 2 a.m. on a freezing night in January to feed the cows, to milk the cows? Who would feed cattle? Who would move line in the morning, lie around all day in a hot cinder-block barrack 30 miles from town, because the boss doesn't have any other work and there's no car, and then move line again in the evening, all for $2.50 an hour, less than minimum wage, every day, seven days a week?

"We would do all this hard work for just minimum wage, sometimes a little more, often less, and try to support a family? Who would live in what are called "camps" because they're not paid enough by their employers to afford decent housing?"

What would happen to the economy? What would markets do with food left on the shelf by the farmworkers who didn't show? What would merchants do? Who would buy all the trucks, cars, tires, gasoline, tools, guns, calchers mills, underwear, blue jeans, baby rattles, records and the thousand and one other things that farmworkers buy when they're up here? What would happen to the sales tax revenues? What would happen to the thousands that are collected each month by the managers of the "camps"?

What would happen to the crops?
What would happen to Idaho?

Move American embassy in Israel to Jerusalem

© The Washington Post Co.

WASHINGTON — Come to order, class; it is quiz time. Name the capitals of Delaware, Vermont, Israel. The first two are difficult. But almost everyone knows that Israel's capital is Jerusalem. So why is the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv? A timely question, that.

The United States has undertaken to sell sophisticated weapons to Saudi Arabia, which is working to prevent the occurrence on Israel's eastern front of what has occurred on Israel's southern front: peace. So in the interests of evenhandedness, prudence and common sense it is time to bring diplomacy into conformity with reality and reason by moving the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem.

On Sept. 15, 1980, Ronald Reagan said of Jerusalem: "Its centrality to Jewish life is known to all. Jerusalem is now and will continue to be one city undivided, with continuing free access for all." Last week he again said that he favored a united Jerusalem under Israeli sovereignty.

But the bureaucracy's gears ground and out came an obfuscating "clarification" of the President's perfectly clear statement. It said "the future status of Jerusalem is to be determined through negotiations." However, it also said that Jerusalem "should remain undivided with free access to the holy sites."

Given that opposition to redividing the city, and given the certainty that Israel's government will be in Jerusalem as long as there is an Israel, U.S. policy must be that the only serious subjects for negotiations are codification of free access to, and perhaps some control of the holy sites by the relevant religious constituencies. Negotiations can hardly be impeded by the presence of the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. That presence would simply accord with an indisputable fact — Jerusalem is the capital — and a non-negotiable commitment: The United States does not favor, and no conceivable Israeli government would tolerate, redividing or "internationalizing" the city.

The relocation of the embassy should be done in conjunction with a formal ratification by the United States of those points that have been at least semi-endorsed by various administrations and could hardly be disavowed now.

First, the United States opposes creation of an independent Palestinian state between Jordan and Israel.

Second, the United States supports the right of Israel to secure borders, which can not be those of 1967, and which must be settled by direct negotiations between Israel and Jordan. The United States insists that this is the intent of the U.N. Resolution 242 and 338 correctly construed in light of its 1967 legislative history.

Third, the United States recognizes that Jerusalem is and ought forever to remain the capital of Israel.

The principal reason that will be given for not moving the U.S. Embassy is that Arab nations, and especially Saudi Arabia, would object. But that is one excellent reason for doing it. The Saudis, even more than the Israelis, need a demonstration that U.S. policy is not permanently hostage to Saudi preferences.

To facilitate the selling of AWACS, the U.S. government embraced the idea that the Saudi regime is moderate and statesmanlike. Since then, the U.S. government has managed to avoid noticing that the "moderate" Saudi peace plan is not only not noticeably new. Indeed, it is like the Holy Roman Empire, which was neither holy, nor Roman nor an empire.

The "Saudi peace plan" is hardly Saudi — it has PLO fingerprints all over it. It envisions not peace but the phased liquidation of Israel. And it is less a plan for negotiation than a set of demands that make negotiations difficult. It envisions a Palestinian state — which means a PLO state — with East Jerusalem as its capital. No wonder the Saudis say the Soviet Union, of which the PLO is a client, has an "important role" to play in the plan.

The plan calls for the contraction of Israel, geographically, to the 1967 borders. It also calls for the dissolution of Israel, philosophically and morally. That is, it demands the "right of return" for Palestinian Arabs. That would divest Israel of an essential attribute of sovereignty — control of immigration. That would mean abandonment of the idea of Israel as a Jewish state, and the overwhelming of Israel, demographically.

Surely the aim of U.S. policy now should be to bring the Saudi regime into conformity with the recent U.S. description of it as moderate and statesmanlike. The first step should be to bring the Saudi regime to its senses by demonstrating that we have come to ours. The most efficient way to do that quickly is by demonstrating, through relocation of the U.S. Embassy, that we consider some questions closed, including the status of Jerusalem as Israel's indivisible capital.

Mercenaries foiled in plot to overthrow African country

DURBAN, South Africa (UPI) — About 100 white mercenaries tried to overthrow the leftist Seychelles government Thursday.

The plot to invade the Indian Ocean island nation under heavy gunfire aboard a hijacked airliner and surrendered in South Africa.

Seventy-nine hostages aboard the Indian airliner were released in Durban while an undetermined number of the original band of hijackers remained at the Seychelles, where a dusk-to-dawn curfew was imposed.

South African newspapers reported that funding for the coup came from an "American source," but the source was not named and no further details were immediately available.

The soldiers of fortune, who fought a five-hour airport gunbattle when they were discovered entering the country, were mainly South Africans and Rhodesian army veterans and possibly included Americans, Britons, New Zealanders and Italians.

One commando died from wounds aboard the commandeered Air India Boeing 707. Two other mercenaries were seriously wounded in the botched coup attempt.

"We have destroyed the attackers. They have been either arrested, killed or are in hiding," a police spokesman said over Seychelles radio. "We ask the citizens of our country to remain calm."

The Seychelles Republic said about 100 men invaded and only 41 surrendered at Durban. Passengers aboard the Air India jet said five may have died in the Seychelles, leaving about 50 possibly captured or in hiding.

Passengers reported that gunfire ripped into the plane as the jetliner with 63 passengers and a 14-man crew lifted off from the Seychelles' main island of Mahe for the 1,000-mile get-away flight.

The one-party leftist Seychelles government of President France Albert Rene earlier said only that "some" mercenaries were captured as the coup was smashed in the strategic nation, in which there is a U.S. space tracking station.

Rene later broadcast a message urging the people to remain calm.

The 44 men were being held at a prison near Pretoria, Le Grange said. Most of the hijacked passengers flew to Johannesburg and caught other flights.

For their part in the attempted coup, each of the mercenaries was to receive $1,030 plus a $10,000 bonus if the coup succeed, South African newspapers said.

One security policeman was quoted as saying, "They were cheap. Sounds like bargain basement mercenaries to me."

"I asked one of them why we were going to South Africa," one passenger said. "He said, 'If you were South African and were involved in something like this in the Seychelles, where would you want to go?'"

The commandos were handcuffed together by South African police after the jet put down at Durban Airport. The commandos, described by the pilot as "marvelous fellows," were taken to Pretoria for questioning. The released passengers boarded a plane for Johannesburg to resume their journey to Bombay.

"There was a lot of good humor, everyone — mercenaries and passengers — were very relaxed," said David Benning, a British passenger.

The mercenaries unloaded the magazines from their AK47s and stashed their weapons. "We all had a few drinks and chatted."

A South African military spokesman would neither confirm or deny that South African nationals were involved in the coup attempt, but strongly denied official involvement.

Attack submarine Corpus Christi keeps name

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite strong protest from the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Navy will keep USS Corpus Christi the name of its newest nuclear-powered attack submarine, a Navy spokesman said Thursday.

The conference this week formally asked the Navy for a name change, stating the bishops found it offensive to a warship to bear the name of Corpus Christi because that is Latin for

"Body of Christ."

The bishops asked Navy Secretary John Lehman to find a new name for the submarine.

"The secretary of the Navy has not decided to rename the Corpus Christi as a result of the recent Conference of Catholic Bishops," the Navy spokesman said.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, — son and grandson of Methodist ministers — named the 360-foot submarine for the Texas city of Corpus Christi, the spokesman said. It was christened April 25 at the General Dynamics Electric Boat Division in Groton, Conn.

Corpus Christi, Texas, "has a long and proud naval tradition," he said. "The Navy intended only to honor the proud city as past submarines honored the cities of Los Angeles, San Jose and

Santa Barbara."

But the bishop of Corpus Christi, the Most Rev. Thomas Drury, has led the campaign to change the name of the boat.

The attack sub is the second U.S. Navy vessel to bear the name Corpus Christi, the Navy spokesman said. The first was a World War II patrol escort that was commissioned twice and decommissioned in 1946.

Officers out for ignoring rape victim

CHICAGO (UPI) — Police Supt. Richard Brzezec wants to fire two officers suspended for allegedly ignoring an injured rape victim's pleas, joking with her attackers and then letting them go.

The Cook County state's attorney's office and the police internal Affairs Division are investigating the two officers' actions in the aftermath of a North Side rape and beating early Sunday.

Brzezec Wednesday suspended for 30 days patrolmen Peimor R. Thompson, 36, a six-year police veteran, and his partner George Lyles, 39, a five-year veteran, and said he plans to seek the officers' dismissal by the Police Board. The 30-day suspension was the most severe action he could take on his own.

The officers are accused of joking with a pair of rape suspects and then letting them go despite the pleadings of the badly beaten victim. They are also accused of later finding the suspects and warning them to leave before other officers arrived.

"What happened is outrageous," Brzezec said. "It's an insult to every police officer in the department. It is in total opposition to the public trust. If people can't look to police officers for protection."

Police investigators say that one of the two suspects arrested in the case by other officers was a friend of Thompson's family.

Charged with rape, deviate sexual assault, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated battery, unlawful restraint and robbery were John Fitzgerald Moore and Thomas Brown, both 17. They were in Cook County jail Thursday in lieu of $60,000 bond.

The victim, an 18-year-old college student home on vacation, said she was walking home when a van pulled alongside her. Two men pulled her into the van, drove to a parking lot, beat her and raped her, she said. The victim's mother said the girl's eye was swollen shut, her other eye was discolored and her cheek was swollen.

The men then saw lights flashing outside the van and ordered her to stay inside while they went to investigate, she said. She escaped by crawling into the front seat.

"I got out and saw that the two of them were talking to two policemen," the victim said. "I ran up to one cop and grabbed him by the coat. I was hysterical. I was yelling something like, 'Look at me. Look at what they've done to me. They beat me. They beat me.'"

"The policemen wouldn't look at me. They told me to get in the back seat of the squad car and I did. They stood outside talking to these two guys even laughing with them — I heard laughter — and then they let them go."

"They never asked me my side of what happened. They weren't really interested."

She told the officers took her to a friend's home, despite her injuries. A neighbor called other officers and the suspects were later captured in their van at the rape scene, apparently trying to jump-start the vehicle.

Moonie wants out

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A New Zealand woman allegedly being held against her will by the Unification Church spoke with family members Thursday and assured them that she wanted to come home.

Wednesday, two "Moonie" leaders were ordered to stand trial on contempt-of-court charges when they failed to produce Mary Lee Hall, 22, of Taranki, New Zealand.

"Mary Lee did phone us and she said she wanted to come home," her sister, Anna-Lyn Hall, said Thursday from a San Bruno, Calif., home where she and her mother were spending the holiday weekend.

"She said she would talk about it (with church officials) today and get back to us tomorrow," she said.

Summit collapse stalls peace plan

FEZ, Morocco (UPI) — The collapse of the Arab League summit has left Saudi Arabia's Middle East peace plan in limbo and ended the inability of the Arabs to unite on making peace with Israel, the common enemy for 33 years.

The breakup of the conference on its first day Wednesday also left the Palestine Liberation Organization on the sidelines of the summit and no closer to its goal of statehood.

The Saudi plan tacitly recognized the existence of Israel and called for a Palestinian state and the summit collapsed because of fears that hardliners rejecting any acknowledgment of the " Zionist entity" would have split the Arab world if it came to a vote.

Delegate sources said at one stage in the summit Crown Prince Fahd, the author of the proposal, said he would withdraw his proposal if it were going to split the Arabs, but in the end it was decided to postpone the summit to an unspecified date.

Observers noted that Arab-world reservations took precedence over the praise the plan had won by the United States and Europe's Common Market as a possible beginning point for a final comprehensive peace between the Arabs and Israel.

Similar Arab world sentiments led to the ouster of Egypt from the Arab League after Anwar Sadat signed the first treaty ever between an Arab nation and Israel in 1979.

Arab analysts said Thursday Saudi Arabia now faced the decision of pressing ahead with its eight-point plan deepening the rift in Arab ranks or abandoning its initiative leaving the Arabs with no cohesive program for peace in the region.

The firm opposition to the plan was evidenced by Syrian President Hafez Assad's boycott of the summit. Eight other heads of state in the 21-member league also did not attend.

The collapse of the summit on its first day also pointed up a rift between the Saudis and Syria, which is still trying to regain occupied territory, the Golan Heights, from Israel.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam, who headed his country's delegation, threatened to leave because he felt he was not being treated as a "head of state."

The Syrian-Saudi rift leaves PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat caught between the Saudis who back, bankroll the PLO and Syria which helps the organization's presence in Lebanon and confrontation there, with Israel. The support of both nations is vital for the PLO.

Other Arab summits have ended with clear divisions on some issues. Last year's Amman summit was boycotted by six members because of the then-heated border confrontation between Syria and Jordan. But none of the conclaves have ended as precipitously.

Begin falls, breaks thigh

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin fell in his apartment Thursday and broke his left thigh, a spokeswoman for Hadassah hospital in Jerusalem said.

Begin, 68, was rushed to Hadassah hospital and was expected to spend the night in the hospital.

The spokeswoman said Begin fell in the apartment of his official residence Thursday evening and broke his left thigh. Further details of the accident were not immediately available.

Begin has frequently complained of pain in a knee from an old soccer injury but it was not known whether he had fallen because of the pain in his leg.

In the last four years, Begin has suffered a mild stroke, which temporarily affected his vision, and a mild heart attack. But he bounced back after both illnesses, taking on a full load of work.

Internal problems top Common Market meet

LONDON (UPI) — European Common Market leaders launched a two-day summit meeting Thursday aimed at reforming and pumping new life into the 10-nation Community.

But officials conceded prospects were poor.

British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington earlier told the House of Commons an affairs committee "It will be an exaggeration to say all is going to be plain sailing."

"I am not confident of reaching solutions. But I remain hopeful," he said.

The main object of the summit is to reform the Community budget, to which Britain and West Germany which they pay too large a share, and its Common Agricultural Policy which in the past created notorious "butter mountains" and "wine lakes."

But the 10 heads of government also were reviewing East-West relations in the wake of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's tough talking Bonn visit, prospects for the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms talks opening in Geneva Monday, the Middle East, Afghanistan and a joint West German-Italian plan for closer European unity.

Community officials said no new major initiatives were planned and that the Common Market's own internal problems would take up much of the two days.

The 10 leaders began the summit talks at London's Lancaster House under chairmanship for the first time of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Britain and West Germany also wanted reform of the Common Agricultural Policy whose chief beneficiaries are French farmers and Italian citrus and wine growers. But

PLO sets explosions in Israel

HAIFA, Israel (UPI) — A chain of explosions set off by the PLO in a munitions dump northwest of the port of Haifa Thursday killed one person, wounded two others and forced hundreds of others from factories and apartments into bomb shelters.

The blasts propelled mortar shells in a large radius around the compound, sandwiched between the Haifa suburb of Kiryat Ham and an industrial park.

In Beirut, a military spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization claimed that PLO guerrillas set the explosions, although the Israeli military command had earlier reported that blasts were triggered accidentally.

Police and military sources said the accidental explosion of a smoke grenade set off a munitions dump at the army installation on fire, triggering the explosions. The Israelis ruled out the possibility of Palestinian sabotage.

"Our unit succeeded in planting several strong explosive charges in the following targets: a factory for heavy armor, a nearby barracks for paratroopers, an ammunition dump, an air force academy building and shipbuilding facility," the spokesman told UPI.

The guerrillas returned safely to base inside the "occupied territories," he reported.

Residents and workmen in the area emerged from bomb shelters shortly before sundown, but police warned the public against handling any dud explosives that may have landed in the streets.

Firemen succeeded in entering the compound only two hours after the explosions started. Firefighting planes earlier were forced to turn back, witnesses said.

The dead person was identified as a 17-year-old Arab garage mechanic from Jenin. Two other people were reported injured.

"Thousands of bombs in the storerooms went off on time, setting the targets on fire and inflicting heavy losses in men and equipment," the PLO spokesman said in Beirut.

He said some of the army buildings and stocks worth millions of dollars were completely destroyed in the explosions.

Israel prepares for Sinai meet

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Sumit stepped Thursday from an emergency meeting preparing for urgent talks in Washington.

He said there was "no room for flexibility" in Israel's terms for European participation in a Sinai peacekeeping force.

Shamir met with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and other top Israeli officials before what was expected to be a tough day of talks today with Secretary of State Alexander Haig in Washington.

"There is no room for flexibility on the question of European participation," Shamir told reporters. "Their conditions cannot be acceptable."

But in London, a spokesman for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said, "There are no conditions attached by the four states participating in the Sinai force."

Britain, France, Italy and the Netherlands said this week they would participate in the Sinai force but indicated that in return they expected Israel to soften its attitude and begin negotiations with the Palestinians as the European Common Market has been urging for two years.

In Washington, a senior official said the United States had decided to reject Israel's earlier proposal for closer U.S.-Israeli military cooperation because it went beyond the two countries' limited relationship

Martin plays a rat in latest film role

By JOAN HANAUER
United Press International

YOU DIRTY RAT...

Steve Martin won't play a wild, crazy guy in his latest film, "Pennies From Heaven." Instead he'll play a rat, he confided to the folks on "Line at Five," the local news show broadcast by WNBC-TV, NBC's owned and operated station in New York. "The public will have to accept me that way," Martin said. "Or else I'll just have to blow up the World Trade Center." That's pretty wild and crazy.

NEW FORD TRUSTEE

Donald F. McHenry, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, has been elected to the Ford Foundation Board of Trustees. McHenry currently teaches diplomacy and international affairs at Washington's Georgetown University and heads a New York and Washington based consulting firm. He also is a governor of the American Stock Exchange, a director of the First National Boston Corp., Coca Cola, International Paper, and member of the Council on Foreign Relations.

ELECTRIFYING TURN

Jazz fans in Tokyo were recently treated to an electrifying performance by the group Spizz Gypsy. The stage was ablaze with twinkling lights, and dry ice gave off a mood-setting mist. Keyboardist Tom Schuman strutted toward his fans when he was accidentally hit with 100 volts of electricity. Eyes bulging and curls straightening, Schuman told the aghast audience, "This is truly a moment of inspiration."

TEDDY REVISITED

The English have turned bullish on bears and toy teddies are hard to find. The reason: the currently playing television dramatization of Evelyn Waugh's "Brideshead Revisited," in which one of the leading characters keeps as a constant companion a teddy named Aloysius. The Granada TV-WNET series stars Jeremy Irons, Anthony Andrews and Diana Quirk, with special guest stars Laurence Olivier, Claire Bloom and John Gielgud. For U.S. audiences it airs on the PBS "Great Performances" series beginning Jan. 18.

"LITTLE PRINCE"

Rehearsals began this week for a musical based on Antoine de St. Exupery's fable, "The Little Prince," starring Michael York. The show opens Dec. 29. What makes this "Prince" different from other Broadway shows is its funding. It was financed through a Wall Street stock offering, instead of being backed by Broadway "angels." Stockholders have a forthcoming television series to look forward to, as well as recordings and other possible revenue sources.

TV SUBTITLES

Subtitles on a television sitcom — what will they think of next. The show is "Baker's Dozen," starring Ron Silver and Cindy Weintraub, scheduled to go on CBS during the winter TV season. In one episode, now being shot in New York, Silver looks into an alleged gambling operation in Chinatown. All dialogue is in Chinese, with English subtitles. But that didn't bother Silver — he has a master's degree in Chinese studies.

The Goodyear blimp Enterprise flies by the Coast Guard cutter Cape Gull during an experimental tour for the 92-foot airship

Blimp experiment works for Coast Guard

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — The Goodyear blimp Enterprise, participating in a recent experimental three-day tour to help the Coast Guard, helped find a 35-foot boat adrift in the Atlantic Ocean with two men aboard.

The boat was first sighted 30 miles off Fort Lauderdale by a private plane, which reported the two men aboard were waving their arms frantically. The Enterprise and the Coast Guard cutter Cape Gull were dispatched to find it.

Nearly three hours later, the 92-foot blimp spotted a flash of light that turned out to be a mirror the men were using as a signal. The Enterprise directed the Cape Gull to the distressed boat, which had a disabled engine and a malfunctioning rudder.

Ron Bell, a spokesman for Goodyear, said the Enterprise was being used by the Coast Guard to help with search and rescue and drug interdiction efforts. The current three days of experimenting wind up Friday, but Bell said there probably would be more testing early next year.

"Blimps played a role with the Navy in World War II, and the Coast Guard is looking at the possibility of using them again because, among other things, they are so fuel efficient," Bell said.

The Enterprise is based during the fall and winter at Pompano Beach. During the summer, it tours the midwestern United States.

Coast Guard Lt. Gil Fonger said the stranded 35-foot boat was spotted about 35 miles east of Deerfield Beach, Fla., and was being towed by the Cape Gull to the Fort Lauderdale Coast Guard station.

Police fear drug pushers put their dog on hit list

DILLSBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Police believe drug dealers want to kill Misty, a 4-year-old German shepherd who is very good at sniffing out drugs.

"Right after we got her we received information from informants that there was a standing contract on the dog," William Castle, Carroll-Franklin Township police chief said. Misty was bought for $6,000 raised by community groups.

"We've never been able to prove anything," he said, "but we received information on an occasion where there was going to be an attempt (on her life) and we took steps to curtail that attempt."

Castle heard of a plot to sprinkle the disorienting drug "angel dust" near a demonstration by the dog and the fire department hosed down the area. Castle protects Misty by moving her between secret locations.

"There's good reason for dope dealers to be nervous.

"The dog is approaching a half-million dollars in narcotic finds in her three years here and she is definitely hurting some people," Castle said. Misty's services are in demand by state, local and Philadelphia lawmen. She has 25 to 30 arrests to her credit.

"She's more than a one-dog dog," Castle said. He said Misty can locate marijuana, hashish, morphine, cocaine and heroin. "She has found everything from three marijuana seeds to half pounds of cocaine and 25-pound bales of marijuana."

Misty once sniffed out $5,000 worth of drugs that strike force officers had missed in a raid near Dillsburg.

Another time, when police stopped a man for drunk driving, Misty led officers to a half-pound of marijuana in the man's truck, Castle said. The driver, who allegedly tried to run down a policeman, saw the dog and became calm.

At the request of 14 schools in York, Perry, Cumberland and Dauphin counties, Misty conducts periodic searches of lockers, cars, classrooms and places where narcotic use has been occurring, and some arrests have resulted.

Five premature sextuplets survive

HILDESHEIM, West Germany (UPI) — A 28-year-old West German woman gave birth to sextuplets two months prematurely Thursday.

One of the babies, a boy, died shortly after, a lawyer for the family said.

The surviving children, two boys and three girls, were in satisfactory condition considering their premature birth, the lawyer said. All five were in intensive care units in Hildesheim and nearby Hanover, doctors said.

The heaviest child, one of the boys, weighed 2 pounds, 5 ounces, the lawyer said.

He said mother Elisabeth Notzon, wife of a 31-year-old butcher, was in good condition at the St. Bernhard hospital in Hildesheim, where she had spent the last three weeks under close observation by a team of 30 doctors, nurses and gynecologists.

Mrs. Notzon, who previously had no children, had known for some months there would be a multiple birth, the lawyer said. She had been taking fertility drugs.

The dead child, a boy weighing one pound, 14 ounces, died immediately after birth, the lawyer said.

Two of the surviving children were taken to different children's clinics in Hanover, and a third to another Hildesheim hospital, doctors said.

The two others remained in the intensive care unit of the hospital where they were born.

Dear Abby

Mom's gripes reflect her future self

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: You frequently fill your column with a lot of sanctimonious garbage about how much we owe our mothers, and how we ought to write, telephone or visit them as often as possible.

In my case, my mother is 88, mentally alert and in reasonably good health, but she is more than I can take, except in very small doses. For the last six years she has lived in a nursing home 600 miles away.

She hasn't traveled more than 10 miles from her home in the last 35 years. The last time I visited her (last summer) she talked steadily for 45 minutes about how I had never heard of, when she wasn't talking about people I didn't know, she was complaining about the other people in the home, the food, the care, her aches and pains, and the high cost of everything. (She lacks for nothing, and the home she's in is one of the most expensive.)

What really makes me want to run screaming from her room is the way she always dredges up some incident from my childhood that she thinks is "amusing." It's invariably something that was painful, degrading, and humiliating to me. She loves to talk about it, but it's like a knife in my gut!

I write to her often so I won't feel guilty about visiting her so seldom. Thanks for letting me get this off my chest. No name, please. I don't want to start any family wars.

— INFREQUENT VISITOR

DEAR VISITOR: The next time you feel like running from your mother's room, pause a moment and take a long, hard look at her. You may see your future self.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter, 24, will be getting married within the next six months. She wants a formal church wedding.

Of course, we will send engraved invitations, but we have a question. Our daughter's given name as it appears on her birth certificate is "Agatha Suzanne," but she has never been called anything but "Happy" from the time she was a year old. Very few people even know her real name.

How should it appear on the wedding invitations? We want everything to be strictly according to Hoyle (P.S. And by the way, who was "Hoyle" anyway?)

— PLANNING A WEDDING

DEAR PLANNING: Use Happy's given name on the wedding invitation. P.S. "Hoyle" was Edmond Hoyle. He was born in 1671 in London and was the first technical writer on card games. His rules on whist gave rise to the common phrase, "according to Hoyle" — meaning the ultimate authority.

DEAR ABBY: A lot of women enjoy talking on the telephone, but I don't happen to be one of them. I am busy with gardening, canning, sewing and other productive activities, and I consider talking on the telephone a waste of time. Besides, it makes me

I have changed my telephone number three times in the last two years. It costs $25 every time you change your telephone number here, but it was worth it to me because each time I got rid of one bad pest.

I kept my number secret for 10 months from one particularly persistent, long-winded pest by telling her I had my phone disconnected, but she got my number from a mutual friend and now I'm trapped.

When she calls me, I say, "I hear someone at my door, so I have to hang up," but she says, "Go ahead and see who it is. I'll wait."

Abby, this boring, talkative woman is driving me crazy! How can I discourage her calls? There is no cutting her off once she gets me on the phone.

— TRAPPED IN TAHUA, WASH.

DEAR TRAPPED: What's wrong with the truth? Simply tell her that you dislike talking on the telephone; it makes you nervous. Just recite your speech and hang up.

University computer assists food service

MOSCOW — Preparing a Thanksgiving meal for 1,700 students could be a cook's nightmare — just think of all the hot turkey and ham, baked potatoes, pumpkin pie, fresh salad and cranberry sauce to fix.

But the University of Idaho has a qualified food service staff and some extra help — a computer.

No, the computer doesn't peel potatoes or wash dishes, nor does it select the menu or sweat over a hot stove, but the Vail-Dine Series IV system does keep track of who is eating and who isn't and that assistance has made the food operation more efficient, according to Ann Goff, assistant director of UI's Food Service.

A Thanksgiving meal was served to 1,700 students at the Wallace Residence complex Nov. 22 prior to the Thanksgiving holiday because most students go home for their regular turkey dinner.

As on other days, the computer kept track of the number of meals served so that food service personnel could calculate how much more they needed to prepare.

From her office Goff can hear the staccato clicking of the computer's printer in the next room. All day long, seven days a week, it counts and records the eating activities of 1,700 students, registering meals eaten and meals remaining under the six separate university meal plans. Upon command, it spits out clean and coordinated charts and graphs, totals and percentages — the raw materials for identifying patterns or potential problems in the food service. The most direct benefit to students, she said, was found in the Wallace cafeteria where "the most wide-open meal ticket system in the country" is being used this fall.

Dr. Lamb

Popping aspirin terrible for nausea

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — I went to the doctor and the did blood tests. The only thing he found was that I am anemic, not enough iron in the blood.

I went because I am always nauseated but I don't vomit. I hate the idea of vomiting — it scares me. I have been eating up aspirin and Alka Seltzer. I mean actually eating them — just pop them in my mouth and chew them up. It seems to help a lot.

I know that is probably the worst thing in the world to do but I have been doing it for quite some time now. I would like to stop and never have to do this anymore. Can you tell me what to do?

DEAR READER — You are right, it is about the worst thing in the world you could do.

Salicylates decrease the normal blood clotting mechanism. That is the reason that aspirin is sometimes used to help prevent recurrences of heart attacks and strokes in men (it has not proved to be useful in women).

Also salicylates may increase the irritation of the lining of the stomach. And you are anemic, which may be from oozing blood from your stomach lining. Or you may have an ulcer that isn't faring at all well with your horrible treatment.

Go back to your doctor at once and stop your aspirin and Alka Seltzer immediately. I do not know why you are nauseated but you need to find out. Meanwhile if you do have indigestion, as a temporary measure, take an antacid.

Antacids can be abused, too. I am sending you the Health Letter No. 10-4, Use and Abuse of Antacids, so you will use them properly. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 1551, Radio City

Station, New York, N. Y. 10019.

Anyone who has persistent digestive problems must be under a doctor's care. An occasional antacid for a temporary problem is not a disaster, but persistent symptoms suggest a more serious problem needing medical attention.

And if a person needs antacids regularly, as prescribed by his doctor, it is important to get enough, sufficiently often, to promote healing. That usually means that a liquid preparation should be used as opposed to the convenience of a tablet.

DEAR DR. LAMB — All we hear anymore is to eat whole grain foods. Just what are whole grain foods?

What do they include? Also, is whole bread all bad for a person? Should we eat all whole wheat breads? I can eat them for a few days, then I crave to go back to my white bread. I buy my bread in a good bakery and not a grocery store. It has a lot more body to it.

DEAR READER — It means what it is called — foods made from whole grain products, such as wheat, rather than a refined product.

The main difference is that the refined product has lost part or all of the husk or bran. White flour is a good example of a refined product. The main loss is the bulk that the bran provides.

This is not all bad either. The bran does decrease the absorption of some minerals that your body needs. While bread does contain about the same amount of vitamins because it is enriched.

An example of a whole grain cereal would be shredded wheat made from whole grain wheat. If you get enough bulk from other sources, you can use white bread. For example, use a whole grain cereal for breakfast and eat plenty of salads, fresh fruits and vegetables. Then whole-wheat bread becomes less important as a source of bulk.

At Wit's End

She has her price and $5 not enough

By ERMMA BOMBCEK
© 1981 Field Enterprises

A manufacturer of foods came out with a full-page ad last week bannered, "Let's get cooking again, America."

It was a pitch to start women cooking at home. The gist of the ad was if you sent in labels from all the products listed, they would send you $5 in cash.

You don't suppose you could make it $10, could you?

Like four out of five families in America, I too have succumbed to the roar of the crowds and the smell of the grease.

In fact, the last time the light on my stove was on was when I inadvertently set a bucket of chicken on it. I don't know how to get families back into the kitchen again, but I do know what killed the family meal.

Apathy. You can lead a kid to asparagus, but you can't make him swallow it. I serve more meals to a squawking ovation than I care to remember. One wouldn't eat onions, one got nauseous at the sight of white sauce, one had a calcium deficiency, and the other lived by bread alone.

The I-had-it-for-lunch chant sent home cooks running out of the kitchen in packs. You could serve Chicken Necks Wellington and you could count on half of the family having it for lunch that day and the other half still sick from having it yesterday.

Getting the family together for a meal became as impossible as everyone coming down with measles on the same day. Besides, the family that ate together began to hate together. Life at the dinner table wasn't the ward, shared feast everyone thought it would be. Past sins were matched out, punishments assigned, and in general food was thrown ... not eaten.

When economies forced a lot of women into the labor market, they saw their chance for escape and took it. And left in the wake are shelves of staples that no longer have meaning. Take baking soda. No one uses it for baking, anymore — they bathe in it.

As for the $5 bonus for cooking at home, I have my price.

This year's most important of all Employer gave free trips

By FRANK ROSSI
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA — Consider this a Christmas story AND a Thanksgiving story.

It is about a man who owns a business and the people who work for him and how their exchange of gifts perhaps helped save a company. Which gave both sides reason to give thanks.

It started two decades ago with Leonard and Helen Evelev. Helen wanted to see the world. Leonard didn't. Helen persisted. How about Mexico? "You don't have to go there," Leonard said. "They're plenty of restaurants here."

In the end, Helen won, and Leonard got hooked on traveling. The more exotic the better. Four times to South America. See Leonard and Helen paddling a dugout down the Amazon. See the Jivaro Indians checking out Leonard and Helen's hat sizes. Ten times to Mexico, a few trips to Burma and India and Nepal.

Keystone Electrical Engineering Co. was started in 1920 by Yale Evelev. Leonard Evelev's father, Yale Evelev emigrated from Russia in 1905. When he stepped off the boat, he couldn't speak a word of English; by 1918, Yale Evelev had a degree from MIT. He paid for it by selling newspapers on a corner.

He was a new capitalist, but he clung to tradition. His philosophy was uncomplicated: Always do right. On that, Keystone Engineering survived a depression and grew. In 1948 Leonard Evelev came into his father's business and by 1955, after his father's heart attack, was undisputed big boss of the company.

Leonard Evelev tried to do right. He thought of Keystone Engineering not as MY company but OUr company, taking into account the few hundred people who worked for him.

By the mid-1960s two things of importance had happened to Leonard Evelev: His business boomed, and he became hooked on traveling. Half the fun was planning. For months he would be up to his elbows in travel folders.

When business continued to be good, he thought he should spread the joy of traveling. Share it with his top employees.

So he took 44 people on a trip to Mexico, and picked up the tab. Many would never have done it on their own. With money, they probably would have paid off a bill. Turkeys they could buy for themselves. Mexico was something different. Leonard Evelev went with them. That's when he found out the fun of giving a trip.

Evelev brought his employees on other vacations: Bermuda, Nassau, Jamaica, six in all over 10 years. Each time, Evelev invited more employees, until more than 100 people were making the trips regularly. The company always picked up the tab.

Evelev got pleasure from giving the trips. He doesn't think much about whether the company benefited from the good will. "I just have this feeling," says Evelev. "It's just a plus. It's not anything you can weigh. All other things being equal, the employees will say: 'I'd rather be here than there.'"

The year 1981 for Keystone Engineering turned out to be miserable. The company finished three major contracts, but payment for the work came in so slowly that for a while it looked as though Keystone would be wiped out.

It is an oddity of electrical contracting that you don't need much money to start up because you don't need to spend big bucks on inventory. But if you don't pay the people who supply you, if you don't pay your employees, you disappear fast. Very fast.

At one point, during the three big jobs, Evelev had to pay almost 500 employees. His salaries and expenses were running a few million dollars a month. Two or three months without money and Keystone Engineering could have gone bankrupt.

The creditors and the banks had confidence. They didn't squeeze Keystone.

The employees had confidence. They didn't bail out. Some people figure that Keystone survived because it had this edge: a boss who cares for his people and people who care for their boss. In hard times, people such as Jim Wallace, a job estimator, stood with him.

"Nobody is going to put their hand in their pocket and say, 'Here, we're going on a trip.' It was a big surprise in the beginning, but knowing Leonard then afterward, no, it doesn't surprise me. He's a very generous person. I would think the trips were good for company loyalty."

This year, 110 employees will make a one-day trip to New York for lunch and a Broadway show. It won't be Mexico or the Bahamas, but in a way it will be the most important trip of all.

BPA's power contracts draw lawsuit

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Bonneville Power Administration's "best customers," including the Idaho Power Co., have gone to court to challenge the power-sales arrangements of the BPA, a federal power-marketing agency.

The suit, filed Wednesday in the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, seeks to clarify technical language in the long-term power supply and power-exchange contracts that the BPA enacts with its customers.

These types of exchanges were authorized by the provisions of the federal 1980 Pacific Northwest Electric Power Planning and Conservation Act.

Earlier this month, on Dec. 13, Idaho Power entered into such an agreement with the BPA. That agreement will result in an approximately 13-percent reduction in electrical rates to Idaho Power's residential customers in this state. The reduced rates are scheduled to take effect this Wednesday, Dec. 2.

Idaho Power also is in the process of seeking to sign a similar agreement with the BPA that would affect its 600 customers in north-central Nevada, including the Jackpot area.

The law gave persons who disagree with portions of the contracts 90 days, from when they were first offered by the BPA — Aug. 28 — to challenge them in court before losing that opportunity.

"The petition was filed solely as a precautionary move to protect our rights under the Northwest regional power act," said Brett Wilcox, the executive director of the Industrial Customers of the BPA.

David Sprayberry, an attorney for the Public Power Council, which is a coalition of the region's publicly and cooperatively owned utilities, said the filing is the "minimum complaint" possible. He said it is aimed at ensuring that these utilities do not give up their right to challenge the contracts in the future.

Pacific Power & Light Co. said the firm was concerned that the contract language "might be interpreted in such a way that unnecessary costs might be imposed on its customers in a manner not permitted by the regional act."

PHL said it hoped the BPA would clarify the contract language outside of court.

Negotiators for the 16 industrial customers, mainly aluminum companies, the utilities and the BPA are trying to resolve final disputes over provisions of the contracts.

Others represented in the lawsuit include Portland General Electric Co., Puget Sound Power & Light Co., Montana Power Co., Utah Power & Light Co. and C.P. National Corp.

An 'excellent mother' faces 41 charges of welfare fraud

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — An "excellent mother," reportedly worth more than $1 million, has pleaded innocent to charges that she and her husband bilked California out of $377,000 in welfare aid for dozens of fictitious children.

Dorothy Woods, 39, was ordered held in lieu of $250,000 bail Wednesday after her arraignment on 41 felony counts of welfare fraud, perjury and forgery.

Her husband, John, 50, pleaded innocent to 24 counts and was released after posting $25,000 bail.

He reportedly was loaned part of the money by a friend, then put up his Cadillac as collateral for the rest.

The couple is accused of opening 12 separate welfare cases from 1971-80 and collecting illegal aid for 49 children — six of them their own. At one point they reportedly took in $5,000 a month in welfare payments.

Authorities said the couple owned a collection of fancy cars, including a

Holds Royce and a Mercedes Benz, and property, including a luxury home near the Pasadena Rose Bowl, with a cumulative worth of between $1.5-$2.5 million.

Mrs. Woods was arrested last week at the Miami airport after a flight from Jamaica. She was returned to California hours before her arraignment.

Her attorney, Allan Feldman, sought unsuccessfully to have her bail reduced on the grounds that she had not fled the country to escape prosecution, but because she and her children had received death threats.

He also insisted that she was "an excellent mother" and "a religious person."

Municipal Court Judge Sam Mayerson, who also refused a request to release the woman's husband on his own recognizance, ordered both defendants to return to court for a preliminary hearing Jan. 20.

Seattle newspaper 'merger' faces challenge

By CARRICK LEAVITT
United Press International

SEATTLE — Despite publishing in a "vibrant" city, the century-old Seattle Post-Intelligencer is a falling newspaper, desperately in need of help from its afternoon rival, a federal examiner has been told.

The morning Post-Intelligencer and the afternoon Seattle Times are seeking permission to combine all but their news and editorial departments. They ended three-and-a-half weeks of testimony Wednesday before administrative law Judge Daniel Hanscom.

If the request is granted, Seattle will become the 25th city in the nation with newspapers operating under a joint operating arrangement.

Hanscom took under advisement volumes of testimony for and against the plan. He has until Dec. 18 to make a written recommendation to U.S. Attorney General William French Smith.

When the attorney general receives Hanscom's recommendation, there will be an additional 45 days for public comment, and then Smith will make a final decision.

"Although Seattle is a vibrant and growing area, the P-I is not in a position to take advantage of the situation," attorney Jonathan Thackeray told the judge.

The P-I expects to lose $2.6 million this year, and its editorial voice will disappear forever unless the newspaper combines with the Times, he said.

Thackeray, summing up the case for the Hearst Corp., the owner of the P-I, reiterated that the newspaper, which has chronicled events in the Pacific Northwest since 1881, has been losing money for more than half a century.

The P-I must show that it is a falling newspaper in order to qualify for a joint operating arrangement under terms of the Newspaper Preservation Act of 1970.

But attorney William Dwyer, representing a coalition of P-I employees, smaller newspapers and other people opposed to the joint operation, said the Post-Intelligencer is on now on the verge of becoming profitable.

Advertising and circulation is growing, and the newspaper could "turn the corner" if it wasn't "grossly mismanaged by its corporate owners," Dwyer said.

Pointing to the testimony of a newspaper accountant who predicted that the P-I could make a profit by 1984, Dwyer said new leadership and strong financial backing would boost the P-I into contention with the Times.

"The P-I had all the money it needed from the Hearst Corp.," countered Thackeray, who said that improvements in the circulation and production departments were made in the late 1970s. A new format was launched last year.

But since 1921, when the newspaper came into Hearst ownership, it has lost $8.6 million.

"That is a terrible return for 60 years of effort," he said.

Theft causes Hawaiian students to eat macaroni for Thanksgiving

HONOLULU (UPI) — The theft of 14 turkeys from the Wai'anae Elementary School caused an abrupt change in the traditional Thanksgiving lunch fare — to baked macaroni.

Food services manager Milsue Hanabusa said the stolen 20-pound turkeys couldn't be replaced in time for lunch Wednesday, so she improvised and served the school's 1,000 students baked creole macaroni, col-leslaw, mixed fruit, French bread and milk.

"It makes me angry, especially when something like this happens, and little children have been looking forward to it," Hanabusa said.

She said there were offers from private citizens and businesses to supply free turkeys, but they were turned down by school officials because defrosting and preparation would take too long.

"We really appreciate the concern of the people and the community," she said.

A dairy company did donate ice cream that was added to Wednesday's menu, she said.

Another turkey lunch with all the trimmings is planned for December, she said, and "hopefully, nothing like this will happen again."

Six states cooperate on nuclear dump site

CARSON CITY, Nev. (UPI) — An agreement between six Western states in which Colorado would open a low-level nuclear dump is near completion, Nevada's human resources director said Wednesday.

Ace Martelle said that he expects the agreement to be in final form by the end of the year and ready for presentation of the various legislatures.

Martelle met earlier this week in Denver with representatives of other states to finalize the language of the agreement, which provides that Colorado would open a nuclear burial grounds, probably by about 1987. Other states would then ship their radioactive waste there.

This would allow Nevada to close its burial grounds in Beatty, which has been open since the early 1960s and has accepted shipments from throughout the nation.

Martelle and representatives of other governors have been working for several months on the agreement. He said after it is completed, it must be presented to all the state legislatures involved.

Under the plan, each state would take a turn at hosting a nuclear dump where the other states could bury their low-level nuclear waste. The agreement, Martelle says, exempts Nevada, which already has performed its duty.

A specific site in Colorado still would have to be picked, he said. But that burial grounds could be used for 30 to 50 years.

Reagan investigators finding all sorts of waste to root out

By JEROME CAHILL
New York Daily News

WASHINGTON — Federal investigators operating under President Reagan's mandate to root out waste in government have found that $15 million to $18 million in federal payments to victims of black lung disease have gone to dead persons in the past four years.

They have also uncovered a nursing home operator who had government money to purchase oil paintings, an agency that managed to "lose" $50,000 worth of sophisticated environmental testing equipment, and a federal worker who had 15 new sets of tires installed on his government-owned car while rolling up only 32,000 miles on the odometer.

Not to mention one out of four travel vouchers of federal workers for which they are not reimbursed.

newspapers that will total $100 million this year. Edwin L. Harper, deputy director of the White House Office of Management and Budget, cited these examples Wednesday as he briefed a group of reporters on the government's progress in carrying out President Reagan's campaign against fraud, abuse and waste in government — an effort that he says could save taxpayers some $7.5 billion this year.

Harper disclosed that the greatest progress achieved by the waste and fraud hawkshaws, working under 15 inspectors general throughout the government, has been in reducing the backlog of unresolved audit claims lodged by the government against contractors, suppliers and other recipients of government cash.

In nine months, he said, the number of such audits has been trimmed from 10,000 totaling some $1.7 billion to 2,500 amounting to $200 million.

During the same period, Harper said, the administration stepped up efforts to collect delinquent loans and taxes from the citizenry — a sum currently estimated at $34 billion, or enough money to cut the present federal budget deficit in half.

Harper said that despite the hiring freeze that has been applied to most federal agencies, the Internal Revenue Service has been given 1,600 extra agents to pursue tax delinquencies totaling $19 billion.

Another 99 temporary jobs have been assigned to the Small Business Administration, where 6,000 disaster loans are in default. Recipients of those loans have never been prosecuted, but Harper said flatly, "That policy is going to change."

Harper, the No. 2 man at the budget agency who has assumed an increasingly public role since Budget Director David Stockman got himself in the presidential doghouse with disclosure of his doubts over "Reaganomics," said a $1 billion saving was achieved in reducing delinquent loans made by the Farmers Home Administration. Currently such loans total $1.7 billion.

But the biggest collection headache for Uncle Sam, aside from tax delinquents, centers on the college loan program.

Almost $3 billion of such loans are now in default, an increase of more than $700 million since 1979.

The Department of Education recently hired private debt collectors on an experimental basis to pursue the loanees and achieved "considerable success," according to a Budget Office spokesman.

Congress is considering legislation to let other agencies employ the same collection methods common in private business, including salary garnishes and the like.

Harper said the inspectors general and other administration officials involved in the campaign will meet for two days next week to compare notes on their work and draft plans for the New Year. Appropriately enough for the investigators, they will be meeting at the FBI Academy at Quantico, Va., about 60 miles south of Washington.

Heart drug wins OK from FDA

By JUDITH RANDAL
New York Daily News

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration announced Wednesday that it had approved the use of timolol, a drug already used in eye-drops for treating glaucoma, for the prevention of recurrent heart attacks.

The drug, which will be sold under the brand name "Blocadren" by Merck, Sharp & Dohme, will be available by prescription, beginning about Dec. 9.

FDA approval is based on the results of a Norwegian study of several thousand patients in which timolol was started seven to 28 days after an initial heart attack and found to reduce the expected rate of repeat attacks by about one-third.

Dr. Arthur Hull Hayes Jr., FDA commissioner, told a press conference that timolol and similar drugs — known as "beta blockers" — are expected to prolong the lives of many of the 350,000 Americans who each year survive heart attacks. As many as 50,000 of these people die from a recurrence within two years, he said.

Timolol is the second drug recently found to be helpful in preventing repeat heart attacks. Earlier this month, the National Heart Lungs and Blood Institute announced that a U.S.-Canadian study had shown a similar protective effect for propranolol, sold by the Ayerst Corp. under the brand name "Inderal."

Inderal has been on the market in this country for the treatment of high blood pressure for over 10 years. Like timolol, it is a beta blocker, a substance that acts as a natural antagonist of the "beta adrenergic receptors" important in regulating heart muscle behavior.

Ayerst has announced that although physicians may already prescribe Inderal, it is seeking specific approval of the drug's use for the prevention of repeat heart attacks.

Meanwhile, three other beta blocker drugs are already available in the U.S. They are metoprolol, nadolol, and atenol — all long prescribed for the control of high blood pressure.

Despite their benefits, beta blockers are not without side-effects. Dr. Hayes said they should not generally be used by patients with bronchial asthma; in addition, they may cause weakness, nausea, dizziness and, in some patients, more serious complications.

U.N. told: keep out of Puerto Rico

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The United States told the U.N. General Assembly Wednesday the United Nations had no business meddling in Puerto Rican affairs.

U.S. Ambassador William Sherman said the people of Puerto Rico had their own institutions for expressing their opinion about the future political status of the Caribbean island, which is a commonwealth of the United States.

Sherman strongly rejected to a resolution adopted in August by the 24-member U.N. Decolonization Committee which treats Puerto Rico as an American colony and demands "self-determination and independence" for its people.

That resolution, he said, violates the U.N. Charter and "constitutes interference in the internal affairs of Puerto Rico and the United States."

Australian delegate Ian Hutchens supported the U.S. position.

The Assembly did not include the Puerto Rican question on its agenda, but it was brought up during the discussion of the committee's annual report which contains the resolution.

The United States and other Western delegations have cautioned against across-the-board approval of the report which would mean indirect acceptance of the committee's Puerto Rico resolution.

But Sherman made clear the United States would not interpret an approval of the report as passing the resolution on Puerto Rico. The resolution recommends a full Assembly debate on Puerto Rico next year.

How to survive your own retirement.

Open an Individual Retirement Account at Equitable Savings.

How to qualify for an I.R.A.

Your retirement could be the best years of your life. Or the worst. Because unless you plan for it now, you may find yourself in a battle zone later on, just struggling to make ends meet. There's Social Security, of course, but if you've been reading the papers lately, you know it may not be of much help in the years ahead.

That's why you need to start planning for your retirement now. And Equitable Savings can help. With an Individual Retirement Account (I.R.A.). It's a personal retirement plan that lets you set aside part of your current earnings for your retirement.

And you won't have to pay any taxes on that money, or on the interest it earns, until you withdraw it when you retire. By that time, your tax liability ought to be a lot less than it is today because you'll be in a lower tax bracket.

How much will you earn?

When you work out the figures, the amounts are staggering. Especially considering the tax break you receive.

Let's say, for example, that you put the maximum amount allowed of $2,000 in your Equitable Savings I.R.A. plan each year. The

Years	Balance at age 65	Annual Amount withdrawn beginning at age 65	Total amount withdrawn over 10 year period
5	$ 15,618	$ 3,141	$ 31,419
10	47,378	9,530	95,308
15	111,959	22,522	225,222
20	243,281	48,939	489,393
25	510,313	102,656	1,026,564

following chart shows how much you would earn at 14% interest over the years. This chart should be used only as an example. For an income projection based on your specific circumstances, see our retirement planning specialists.

All wage earners up to the age of 70½ can open an I.R.A., even if they are already covered by a pension plan, profit-sharing plan, Keogh plan, or are participating in a local, state or federal government plan.

Your Equitable Savings I.R.A. account is a voluntary plan. So you can put money in whenever you want.

Age of computer-on-a-chip celebrates 10th birthday

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — It hardly seems that long ago, but this month the revolutionary computer-on-a-chip became 10 years old.

It appeared about the time President Nixon made his first trip to China, Charles Manson was convicted of murder and "The French Connection" won an Oscar.

In the November 1971 issue of Electronic News the first advertisement for a microprocessor, Intel's 4004, announced "a new era of integrated electronics." The ad was placed only after an argument within the then-lin company.

Intel's marketing specialists figured the market was worth only a few thousand units a year, so why bother. The board of directors went ahead anyway.

Ten years later, annual worldwide production of 200 million microprocessors requires 250,000 employees and sales hit billions. For computers-on-a-chip, that's still only the beginning.

"When we first introduced the microprocessor, I could imagine maybe a dozen applications around the home," Intel Chairman Gordon Moore said. "None of them has yet come true."

"On the other hand, many different applications I would never have thought of have come to be. You just can't predict."

In the late 1950s, invention of the integrated circuit replaced transistors with tiny slices of etched silicon. Those silicon chips eventually contained the equivalent of thousands of transistors.

Up to the early 1970s, the miniaturized chips were the prime product of the semiconductor industry. Each was custom designed and together they made possible huge shrinkings of the room-sized computers of the '50s and '60s.

The new microprocessor was a central processing chip containing a simple core of logic that served as the brain-when hooked to memory chips to form larger systems. These were a combination of a preprogrammed memory called ROM and a blank memory called RAM.

While previous logic chips were highly specialized, the central processor was simple enough to be general purpose. Its uses could be widely modified by the memories attached.

The microprocessor also incorporated memory and other functions along with the central processing facility into one computer-on-a-chip — a silicon piece the size of a child's fingernail.

The concept of a simple all-purpose processor was born as an Intel employee, Ted Hoff, worked on a family of circuit designs for a Japanese maker of desktop calculators. He realized a complex combination of specialized processors was too cumbersome.

Quickly, similar microprocessors emerged from National Semiconductor, RCA, Texas Instruments and others.

Intel's first microprocessor contained the equivalent of 2,300 transistors. Its latest, the IAPX 432, is a three-chip system equal to 225,000 transistors. Together they have more computing power than the largest IBM computer of two decades ago.

In 1971, the designers did not fully understand that the microprocessor would be more than the engineering breakthrough of miniaturizing a computer's functions to a single integrated circuit chip.

It provided a device that could be inserted into a variety of machines, large and small, that was endless. In each — a home computer, for example — the intelligent core is nothing more than a single microprocessor.

And so with other items — electronic games, digital watches, stereos and now the latest models of every major home appliance.

Denver Symphony fights coughs

DENVER (UPI) — The tranquility of the moment during Denver Symphony concerts won't be disturbed this flu season by wheezing, sniffing and hacking patrons.

Realizing that one person's bark inevitably leads to another's answer until the audience sounds as if it were imitating the tympanic crescendo of the 1812 Overture, symphony officials think they've found a solution to the distracting problem.

Joy Olenski, symphony spokeswoman, said a leading cough drop company was contacted and had agreed to provide free samples to concertgoers in the main lobby of Boettcher Concert Hall before each performance.

She said the idea had been successfully tested by symphonies in Minnesota, Boston and Baltimore with positive results.

Ms. Olenski said the decision to use cough drops was based on a project by James Pennebaker, a social psychologist at the University of Virginia, who found that people are most likely to cough when they are in a large group or when they hear the coughs of others nearby.

"Pennebaker's conclusions were based on a 'coughogram' he developed which charted the number and locations of coughs in an audience," Ms. Olenski said.

She said the psychologist found that the larger the group, the larger the percentage of coughs. And, as importantly, he found that the cough was contagious. "The closer a cougher is to you, the more likely you will be to pay attention to your own 'cough-related sensations' and, hence, to cough yourself," she said Pennebaker learned.

Legal issues surround 'surrogate baby'

DETROIT (UPI) — A baby girl born this week to a "surrogate mother" went home from the hospital with her father for Thanksgiving but legal issues surrounding her birth remained unresolved.

George Syrkowski of Dearborn Heights, whose wife Sheila is unable to bear children, paid Corinne Appleyard $10,000 plus medical expenses to have his baby through artificial insemination.

The baby was born Monday in Sinal Hospital and Mrs. Appleyard, 29, turned her over to the Syrkowskis on Thursday, said Herb Brail, law clerk for Noel Keane, Syrkowski's attorney.

The Syrkowskis will be able to keep the baby for at least six months under a power of attorney agreement allowed under the Michigan Probate Code, Brail said.

But until the legal issues are resolved, Mrs. Appleyard will be named as the child's mother on the birth certificate and the father's name will be left blank. A first name has been picked, but the family is keeping it a secret.

Mrs. Appleyard and her husband Roger agree that Syrkowski is the biological father and do not challenge custody of the infant. But Keane filed a "friendly" lawsuit, seeking a definitive declaration of Syrkowski as the legal father.

The life of a standup comedian

*It's not all gags for Hank Garcia;
just a job he really loves to do*

JACKPOT, Nev. — "I don't go around putting lampshades on my head," said stand-up comedian Hank Garcia, eyeing the nearest light fixture.

Backstage at Cactus Pete's Gala Room, before the night's first show, Garcia muses over how strangers expect him to be cracking jokes every chance he gets.

For someone who must scintillate for his supper, off-stage Garcia seems like a serious kind of guy. He wasn't the class clown in high school; he isn't the life of the party; he's not the guy dying to tell you the latest joke.

"I'm a little different from most of your Jewish comedians," Garcia tells his Cactus Pete's Casino audience. "I'm Mexican."

"It doesn't mean I'm better; it just means I work cheaper."

"It's hard finding a job as a Mexican comedian. I don't do many barmitzvas; I emcee cock fights and Chevy dealer openings."

Garcia, who appeared in Jackpot last week, is a regular on the Las Vegas circuit. He was featured in the movie, "Fun With Dick and Jane," starring George Segal and Jane Fonda. Although not a household word, he's making a comfortable living doing what many of us die in the attempt trying: telling jokes to a crowd.

Garcia's "schtick," or routines, combine ethnic humor with mass appeal lines. He draws his jokes from his experiences, his family, his army days and the headlines. When he gets a new idea, he tries to write it down immediately, so the elusive bird of creativity doesn't splat and fly away.

But he can't practice a new joke in front of the mirror; he has to try it out on an audience. That's the trouble with humor — there's no way to know how funny something is until it's exposed to the cold, cruel world of the crowd.

There are a few sure laughs, Garcia says. Throw in a four-letter word; people laugh in shock. "They laugh and then say, 'That's the dirtiest comedian'; they hate themselves for laughing," he says. It was, oddly enough, Lennie Bruce's mother who convinced him, "You don't have to be dirty. You have to be funny."

Gay jokes usually get a chuckle. Some time ago, it was cocaine jokes; before that marijuana jokes; before that, drunk jokes.

"So many books have been written (on humor).

Hundreds and hundreds," Garcia says. But put those authors in a room together and say, "Show us what you wrote. Be funny." They can't do it.

"W.C. Fields once said comedians can't be experts. They make people laugh, they don't know why they make people laugh."

Garcia prods his too-polite Cactus Pete's crowd with stories of his hard life: "Sometimes I'm so frustrated I Scotch Tape bread crumbs to the window to drive the pigeons out of their mind."

Garcia tape records nearly every performance to later gauge his delivery and audience reaction. Sometimes it's hard to tell onstage how a joke went over, although usually with the first few lines, he gets a feel for an audience.

To a comedian, the audience is his instrument; he plays it like a violinist plays his violin, Garcia says. He's always amazed at what seems like mass hypnosis; a group of people acting like one person. One night it/they howl, the next night it/they merely titter.

When asked about the importance of "timing" in humor, Garcia resorts to an old comedians' joke. "Ask me, 'What's timing?' Ask me."

Before you can get the "what's" out, he replies, "That's timing."

Although Garcia played George Segal's streetwise Mexican friend in his film debut, he did not grow up in a Mexican barrio. He speaks without a trace of an accent — unless he wants one.

"My family's used to the spotlight. Shining down on them from a helicopter when they're crossing the border."

"My family goes back a long way. Every time they're caught, they go back."

His grandmother used to tell him Mexican Bible stories: He never could figure out how Noah got all those animals into a 1956 Chevy.

Sweet starts to glisten on Garcia's brow. "It's so hot up here, I feel like I'm picking fruit."

Glancing at his watch, "I got to hurry, I'm due back in the kitchen."

There's a fine line between ethnic humor and ethnic slurs, Garcia says he does the same jokes for Hispanic audiences. "They love it."

'French Lieutenant's Woman' one of year's best movies

By RICHARD FREEDMAN
Newhouse News Service

NEW YORK — When John Fowles' "The French Lieutenant's Woman" was published nearly a dozen years ago, it became that rarest of rare novels — a best seller that was also serious literature.

Both a passionate romantic love story and a sophisticated modern meditation on the Victorian era in which it takes place, it defied transfer to the screen — other Fowles novels, "The Collector" and "The Magus," were movie disasters — until now.

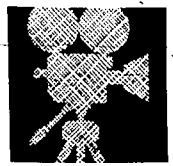

The film of "The French Lieutenant's Woman," starring Meryl Streep as the ambiguous heroine Sarah, and Jeremy Irons as her rich, slightly callow, lover Charles, is the most complex and sensuous movie of the year — and surely one of the best. Much of the credit must go to English playwright Harold Pinter, who wrote the script, and to Kare Reisz (pronounced "rice"), who directed it. With his shiny bald head, his horn-rimmed glasses and his air of pixyish intelligence, Reisz could easily be mistaken for a Cambridge don, and, in fact, he attended the university. But he only came to England from his native Czechoslovakia in 1959, when he was 12. His parents, remaining at home, were killed in the ensuing Holocaust.

Among his English film triumphs were "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," which introduced Albert Finney to the screen, and "Moran," the hilarious movie debut of Vanessa Redgrave. Three years ago he made the best of all Vietnam movies, "Who'll Stop the Rain," a victim of mishandling by United Artists, which was then in a state of corporate turmoil.

"They've had three generations of executives since then," Reisz was saying here recently. "Even Steve Bach, who gave the go-ahead on 'French Lieutenant's Woman,' is gone now."

"Originally Warner's was supposed to make the movie. They loved the script, but decided it would be too expensive for what it was.

you see in some $9 million films these days. I think we got our money's worth."

Although Lyme Regis on the Dorset coast, where much of the film's mysterious action takes place, had been the wettest summer since records began being kept 150 years ago, Reisz says only nine days were lost because of weather.

"In fact, one advantage was that it gave us just the storm we needed for the first scene between Sarah and Charles. John Fowles said we'd have to wait for November to get a proper storm, which we couldn't do because Meryl Streep had other commitments."

Far richer in scope than her award-winning "Kramer vs. Kramer," "The French Lieutenant's Woman" provides Streep with an opportunity to give the finest performance of her career.

"The wonderful thing about Meryl," her director says, "is that she's able to bring an internal life with her. Is Sarah a liar? A romantic? A feminist before her time, or just a matron?" Meryl has enough strings to her bow to carry all these possibilities.

"When John Fowles approved our approach, he said, 'Do your own thing, but don't explain Sarah. Don't you dare give a clear modern analysis of her.' Meryl was perfect for sustaining the ambiguity he wanted."

The device hit on by Reisz and Pinter to replace the ruminative little essays on Victorian life that give the novel its peculiar flavor, but were impossible to put on film, also met with the novelist's slightly skeptical approval.

It consists of a story within a story, concerning the making of the film itself, in which Streep and Irons play Anna and Mike, the stars, who are having an adulterous love affair while the movie is being shot. "All Fowles said was, 'I hope you can bring it off,' and I think we did. I hope the modern story has the distancing effect Fowles achieved with his essays, but at the same time doesn't get in the way of what I think of as a pure love story, exhilarating and beautiful."

"It merely counterpoints Victorian ideas of love against our own, and provides a puzzle, a game, an element of fun for audiences. After all, what you're getting is two stories for the price of one."

Once Pinter and Reisz had agreed that this was "the 20th century comment we needed to get the novel's irony and asynchrony, after five earlier attempts ignored the problem completely," Pinter set about writing the script, which was shown to Fowles. He only corrected some speech cadences he felt weren't authentically Victorian.

"Pinter has a reputation for being an ogre, and he is indeed very protective of his artistic liberty. He has it written into his contracts that no other writer may come in on the project unless he dies.

"But he's also very willing to collaborate with the director, and never balked at making little changes that became necessary along the way. As for Fowles, his attitude is, 'I control who makes the movie, not how they make it.' He was helpful, but kept out of our way."

"Unlike 'Who'll Stop the Rain, which I think failed partly because it was so pessimistic, 'The French Lieutenant's Woman' is very affirmative."

"It shows two people scrambling out of their oppressive circumstances to fall in love. Charles goes through a sentimental education and comes to recognize that he's capable of feeling.

HOLD THE LINE

Q. I reach for the ringing telephone to hear some secretary say, "Hold the line—Mr. So-and-So is calling." And I hang there waiting, until Mr. So-and-So comes on. Isn't that an insult?

A. Certainly it's an insult, if handled that way. It implies your caller is too important to hold the phone but you are not. It's the ploy of an executive who either doesn't know any better, doesn't care, or intentionally uses it as a put-down. Whichever, it's bush. But can it be done without offending? You bet. If the secretary says: "Mr. So-and-So is hoping to reach you. It would be convenient for you to talk with him how?"

GERMAN SHEPHERDS

Am asked if German Shepherds can be trained to track, the way bloodhounds can be. They may be good trackers, all right. Trainers think they're even better for certain jobs. In hot weather, for instance, scents rise. The German Shepherds work with their heads high, so catch some scents mixed by the nose-to-the-ground dogs.

If you get a sprained ankle, remember the first-aid acronym of the athlete: R.I.C.E. It stands for Rest, Compression, Elevation. Then think they're even better for certain jobs. In 1945, President Harry Truman named Gen. George Marshall special representative to China.

In 1956, President Dwight D. Eisenhower denied that differences over the Suez Canal had weakened American-British-French accord in the western alliance.

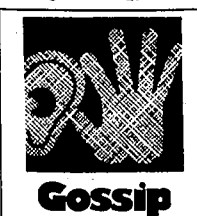

In 1970, a man attempted to knife Pope Paul at the Manila Airport.

Belushi tops the breadwinners from 'Saturday Night Live' gang

By ROBIN ADAMSLOAN
King Features Syndicate

Q. Who of the old "Saturday Night Live" gang is doing the best? — D.G. A. Financially, John Belushi is probably the group's biggest draw, raking in $1 million plus for his role in "Neighbors" (co-star Dan Aykroyd's paycheck wasn't far behind). But don't feel too sorry for his old comedy cohorts. Glenda Radner is co-starring with Gene Wilder in "Hanky Panky"; Bill Murray has a blockbuster with "Stripes"; and Chevy Chase's new picture may be titled "Modern Problems," but Chevy had no problem getting a nice fee for starring. Besides that, they now have their Saturday nights free.

Q. I can't believe that Bo Derek is now saying that she wants to have a baby. Won't that ruin her career since it's so heavily dependent on her perfect "10" form? — X.L.

Gossip

A. Bo is telling associates she'd like to have a baby, but the feeling is that she wants one "some day" — not necessarily next year. She and husband John like to kid the press about their alleged Svengali-Trilby relationship. Nonetheless, John calls the shots, and he says the idea of having a child is fine — once some bills are paid. To do that, he and Bo are planning two more movies, an adventure movie titled "Pirate Annie" and another based on the Adam and Eve story.

Q. Doesn't Lauren Bacall lead an unusually luxurious life even for a stage and screen star? — O.P. A. Lauren's renowned in Broadway circles for being an exceedingly demanding star, one who doesn't take kindly to not being entered to. Producers figure she's more than worth the expense since she's big at the box office. Word among Broadway insiders is that as star of the hit musical "Woman of the Year," Bacall is getting unusually high-cost fringes over and above her huge salary and profit percentages. One such prerequisite reportedly costs nearly $2,500 each week just to provide a chauffeur to drive Lauren to and from the theater.

Q. Is there anything to the talk that Paul Newman and Sally Field will engage in some post-nuptial love-making in their new movie "Absence of Malice"? Sounds like an exciting screen duo. — O.N. A. Agreed. The movie, a serious study of journalistic responsibility directed by Sidney Pollack, does present the stars a romantic relationship. But it's actually strait-laced by today's standards and a byproduct of the action — not the action itself. The producers of this movie, shot on location in Miami, are aiming for a PG rating and a Christmas release.

Rooney's writing matches TV work

By SYLVIA... Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Andy Rooney's OK with me. I admit it.

I don't know why, but I don't turn the channel to "60 Minutes" before Rooney comes on with his spiel on soap suds or mustaches or the price of eggs in Belgium. Beneath the banality of it all, the man could write a Psychology 101 textbook on human behavior.

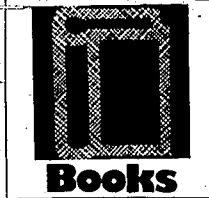

Admitting this weakness, I confess further that "A Few Minutes with Andy Rooney" (Atheneum, $12.95) was as enjoyable as a "60 Minutes" with only Harry Reasoner or Morley Safer segments. The book is a compilation of Rooney's broadcasts for "60 Minutes," including some longer essays he did for CBS such as "Mr. Rooney Goes to Dinner," and "Mr. Rooney Goes to Washington."

Rooney worries in the preface that these words that were meant to be spoken — broadcast — will lose something — a name they're put down in ink on paper. His fears are unfounded. Even if you've only heard him once, you can hear his voice in the back of your mind reading each essay aloud to you.

Some samples:

On "Chairs": "Theoretically the royal chair is never sat in by anyone but a fictioneer writing about it. It's hard to believe that a few of the cleaning ladies and some of the kids around the castle don't test it out once in a while. I can imagine the guards in a state prison flogging around in the electric chair, too. Hey, Joe. Look at me.

On scoring presidential debates: "ERA, ABORTION, GUN CONTROL. This is just one category here because they're the same thing. Everyone who is against one is against the other, and vice versa." (It's true. Think about it.)

On "Jeans": "Most designers put their names on the back of the jeans somewhere. Gloria Vanderbilt or Calvin Klein are status symbols used to be. I wouldn't want Gloria's name on my tail, and I'm surprised she'd want it there either."

On "Political Parties": "Democrats leave the dishes in the drying rack on the sink overnight. Republicans put the dishes away every night. In the summer, Democrats drink beer. Republicans drink gin and tonic. In the winter, they drink Scotch and soda. Democrats drink beer. A lot of Republicans are more like Democrats used to be, and a lot of Democrats are more like Republicans used to be. If you're still not sure what you are, you're probably a Democrat." And so on.

Two of the essays, "D-Day," and "An Essay on War," are out of place and break the mood of the book, but not enough to keep from reading it.

I liked "A Few Minutes with Andy Rooney."

What can I say?

Latest Nader book on chemicals hard-hitting

By United Press International

Workers at a plant producing the pesticide Kepone would be hit by spasms of uncontrollable body tremors and jakes about getting the "Kepone-bakes."

Residents in a middle-class section of Niagara Falls, N.Y., would venture into their basements and see black gook oozing through drainage outlets — only to later discover their children had played atop the "Love Canal" chemical dump.

Farmers in Michigan, who took meticulous care of their cattle, would watch their herds waste away — and fall victim themselves to a baffling variety of ailments.

These are some of the legacies of the chemical age — an era that brought an ever-increasing prosperity to America but also spawned unwanted tragedies that introduced such acronyms as PCBs, PBB and DDT to the 20th century lexicon.

"Who's Poisoning America? Corporate Polluters and Their Victims in the Chemical Age" (Edited by Ralph Nader, Ronald Brownstein and John Richard, Sierra Club Books, $12.95) takes a close-up look in separately written accounts at seven environmental disaster cases — all the book says, exacerbated by cover-ups or misrepresentation. In the process, the book presents some rather scary facts to consider.

As this book points out, the post World War II years saw a rapid increase and proliferation of chemicals. And because of the relentless production of chemicals (many whose side-effects were unknown at the time of their development), dangerous substances have fouled the air and water and ruined the health of thousands.

And in some of the worst environmental disasters, cover-ups or misrepresentation by the offending manufacturer made the dangers more widespread.

For example, Kepone, an insecticide produced for 26 years until its general manufacture was banned, caused tremor-producing nervous system disorders in exposed workers.

It's not light reading. And although the seven accounts all highlight the very human tragedies each disaster wreaked, a few get bogged down with too much legalese and statistics.

Henry Fonda biography

'My Life' revealing

By KATHLEEN CARROLL
New York Daily News

His health is now so fragile that one treasures every moment spent with Henry Fonda. We can soon have the pleasure of seeing him in the movie "On Golden Pond" as Norman Thayer, a crusty 80-year-old who snarls a lot just to ward off the fears of old age.

Then there is Howard Teichman's juicy "Fonda: My Life" (NAL Books, $15.95), which reveals that Henry, like the cranky Norman, had some difficulty communicating with his children.

As everyone who has ever seen him in performance knows, Henry Fonda was always able to express just the right emotion in front of a movie camera or a theater audience. But when the camera stopped rolling and the applause died down and Henry Fonda was forced to play his least favorite role — just plain Henry Fonda — it turns out that he was the type of bashful person who rushed for the nearest exit at the very hint of an emotional outburst.

"A Fonda can cry at a good steak," contends the quiet-spoken man from Omaha, Neb. That may be true of his daughter, Jane, whose hot-headed response to the Vietnam war was so well publicized that her father was subjected to an FBI grilling about her activities. And son Peter, who as a rebellious youngster of 16 accidentally plugged himself full of bullet holes, bringing an abrupt end to his father's third honeymoon, is even less likely to conceal his feelings.

But the family patriarch, possibly because of his early training as a Christian Scientist, became a confirmed stoic who built a defensive wall around himself over the years.

To put it plainly, Henry Fonda is — or at least was — a cold fish. That may well explain why his marital record, of which he is understandably ashamed, compares with that of Hollywood's most notorious swingers.

Biographer Teichman's tantalizing portrait of this one-time Eagle Scout is full of frank, if not titillating, revelations about his honeymoons. There were five to be exact. The first, which led to a stormy four months with actress Margaret Sullivan, barely counted, but it left definite scars, with Fonda recalling in one of his taped conversations with Teichman how he stood outside his former apartment building, knowing that Sullivan was there with a newly acquired lover, producer Jed Harris.

Fonda's second marriage to socialite Frances Seymour Brokaw had a far more tragic ending. With her children, Jane and Peter, safely in the hands of nurses, Brokaw directed herself into the job of managing the family finances.

But, as she reached her 40s, she slowly began to withdraw into herself, spending increasingly long periods in fancy sanatoriums. It was in one such place that she managed to "cut her razor blade she had hidden away. The day of the brief funeral service, Fonda gave his usual stellar performance in the title role of the Broadway hit, "Mr. Roberts." "I'm going on," he told his pals, producer Elia Kazan and director Elia Kazan. "It's the only way I can get through the evening."

Not long afterward, Fonda married another blonde, Susan Blanchard, the vibrant young stepdaughter of Oscar Hammerstein II. That marriage fell apart in Rome, where Fonda was concentrating all his energies on playing Peter in Dino de Laurentis' production of "War and Peace."

In Rome, too, Fonda was soon captivated by yet another blonde, Aldera Franchetti, who, after their marriage, turned Fonda's East Side townhouse into a haven for his jet set. When the party that is the marriage, was over, an exhausted Fonda vowed that only English would be spoken in his house from that point on.

"I don't really like myself," insists Fonda in the book's most revealing statement. "Never did. People mix me up with the characters I play. I'm not a great guy like Doug Roberts. I'd like to be but I'm not."

Yet, at 76, Fonda appears to be more at ease with his loved ones and more willing to expose his true feelings.

"I think there's a scream inside Hank that's never been screamed," claims his third wife. "And there's a laugh that's never been laughed." As Teichman makes so poignantly clear in this absorbing book, Fonda's worst mistake was to store up all those emotions and to use them only for those who admired his acting instead of those who loved him for himself.

NBC has a solid winner in 'McClain's Law'

By LEB WINFREY
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

After fumbling around unsuccessfully for almost a month, the television networks have finally come up with a good new crime series to ornament the fall schedule.

"McClain's Law," starring James Arness, has debuted on Fridays on NBC. The two-hour premiere showed that Arness, who played Marshal Matt Dillon on "Gunsmoke" for 20 years, is still a strong performer with the capacity to carry a series.

After watching the feeble first flights of such turkeys as "Shannon" and "Strike Force," I was beginning to wonder if the networks had forgotten how to put a workable new crime series together. MGM and NBC finally found the formula, though, with the towering Arness as the principal ingredient.

Arness is cast here as Jim McClain, a detective sergeant who retired from the police department in San Pedro, Calif., in 1966 with a disability pension for a leg wound. He's spent the last 15 years running a fishing boat with Sid Lammon, who was formerly his crime-fighting partner.

As Friday night's premiere began, McClain and Sid have sold their boat. Sid is carrying around $10,000 from the boat sale when he is robbed and murdered.

McClain, a rough-hewn and pragmatic man, is unimpressed with the slow-moving investigation of Sid's death. He rejoins the police force so he can bring the slayer to justice.

About the only obstacle Arness has to overcome as he embarks on this new venture is that McClain is described as 52 years old. With his gray hair and his face a map of wrinkles, Arness looks like his real age, which is 58. But he is still persuasive in his application of force. He hung up his hat as Marshal Matt in 1975, but he can still put up his fists and sling lead.

McClain's police partner is Harry Gates, who at age 30 represents a younger generation. Gates is played by Marshall Colt, as handsome-and clean-cut as Jack Armstrong, the All-American Boy. Colt is extremely likeable, well-cast as a sidekick for Arness.

In recent years, it has become routine crime-series for the hero to labor under a boss who is abrasive and, often, antagonistic to the hero. That pattern is followed on "McClain's Law." The spear in McClain's side is Lt. Edward DeNisco, played by George DiCenzo. Prepare to hiss, perhaps even curse, as DeNisco does everything he can to make McClain's working life a trial.

The multiplicity of mean bosses on TV leads one toward the conclusion that the networks have decided that most viewers, in their real lives, hate their superiors in their work place.

Since McClain is single and lives on a houseboat, a spot must be found elsewhere for a female member of the regular cast. So at a dockside restaurant called the Flatfish Cafe tols a distaff friend of his, a waitress named Vangie Crute. That fine character actress, Conchata Ferrell, plays Vangie with her usual verve.

With a good script from Eric Easton, the creator and producer of the series, "McClain's Law" gets off to a promising start.

But agency loves 'FBI Today' program

FBI angry over Seberg story on recent '60 Minutes' show

By KENNETH R. CLARK
UPI TV Reporter

NEW YORK — No institution can hang around for long without getting its nose bloodied — not even the FBI — but Roger Young does wish people would let the bleeding stop now.

In fact, Young — an assistant FBI director in Washington — contends the bureau didn't deserve a punch in the nose over Jean Seberg in the first place.

Last week, the bureau got punched again when CBS's Mike Wallace broadcast a tender profile of the tragic actress who killed herself in 1979, allegedly because the FBI some years earlier had planted the lie that she was pregnant by a prominent member of the Black Panthers.

Nowhere in the piece did Wallace say the bureau concocted, then leaked, the lie to the press in a bid to discredit her for supporting the Panthers, and he did not, as erroneously reported here, say it in an interview. But the profile, backed by FBI memos obtained under the Freedom of Information Act and fleshed with rare interview footage with her parents, fairly screamed the indictment.

Young was not happy when it was over. When it comes to television, he much prefers the new ABC series "Today's FBI," starring another Mike named Connors.

The one named Wallace ranked him. "He really laid it very much at the feet of the FBI and I found that to be really a very unfair assumption," Young said in a telephone interview. "Unfortunately, there is no way I can prove the negative."

The FBI, which found itself wearing an uncustomed black hat after "Contelpro" — the counterintelligence program it launched in the 1970s against radical activist groups — was being tried to expunge the stain of the Seberg affair ever since.

"There has been nothing to indicate that the story was leaked by the FBI," Young said. "There isn't a shred of evidence that we did that. In fact, both the Los Angeles Times and Newsweek, which broke it, clearly indicated their sources were not FBI sources."

Still, there remains a damning memo from the bureau's Los Angeles office suggesting just that, and an answer from Washington suggesting a two-month wait so that Miss Seberg's pregnancy would be more evident.

"In order to explain that, we have to go back into a different period of time — not only in the bureau's history, but in the country's history — and I'm not sure I really want to do that because it's really a nasty situation for us," said Young.

"It's extremely difficult for me to go back and explain it without having it sound like I'm trying to justify that which we were accused of doing, even though we never did it."

Nonetheless, he tried. "Things were happening back in those days which prompted Contelpro... aimed against a number of people and organizations including the Klan and the Nazis," he said.

"We were simply doing things in those days that we do not do now... The activities back in those days were not just parlor games... We were investigating the Black Panthers and it dealt with terrorist activities."

"It was a life and death game insofar as the Panthers were concerned. As they were portrayed on Mike's show, all was calm and all was cool. People tend to forget... but all you need to do is check your newspaper morgue as to the atmosphere that existed in those days and that will give you a pretty good setting for why we were into that sort of thing in the first place."

"It wasn't because of politics. It was because laws were being violated and people were being killed. The effort with Seberg was to counter her support. She was financially supporting the Panthers."

What happened after that, I think, was the prebarral buzz saw. We touched on something — it didn't become a tragedy, it had already been a tragedy — and it became worse and worse after that... but there certainly was never any intention of bringing about the kind of tragedy that occurred in Jean Seberg's life."

Young much preferred to talk about "Today's FBI" — the new ABC series produced by David Gerber who Young said "came into this with superb credentials."

He said in developing the show, Gerber has worked closely with the bureau to present what Wallace himself called "a dead honest organization now."

"We're not doing this in terms of comparison," Young said, "but it's not implying that today we're this and yesterday we were that. We're strictly talking about what's going on in the FBI today." With that, he suddenly sounded like a network executive facing the Nielsens.

"Last Sunday we had a segment on the Klan, but we're up against 'Mary Poppins' on CBS and a Bob Hope special on NBC," he said. "I sure hope that didn't hurt us."

Television may be the ideal medium in which to polish up an image, but too shiny an image may have hurt the agency in the past more than it helped.

"For many years we carried that aura of infallibility, but it was not deserved then and it's not deserved now," Young said. "We're human. We've got families. We've got problems like anyone else."

"Perhaps that's why, when we did run into problems a decade or so ago, the media came down so hard on us."

'Female' Western story a first for Disney studios

HOLLYWOOD (KNT) — The Walt Disney studio, which has glorified many males in TV Westerns, spotlights a heroine in "The Cherokee Trail" on CBS at 8 p.m. EST Saturday, Nov. 28.

Cindy Pickett stars as Mary Brydon, a young widow who heads West in the mid-1860s with her 10-year-old daughter to fill her dead husband's assignment as manager of a Colorado stage coach depot.

The hour-long program, written by Louis L'Amour, 73, author of more than 50 best-selling Westerns, is the pilot for a prospective series.

Past Disney series, and mini-series have explored such real and fictional heroes as Davy Crockett, Elifeo Baca, Texas John Slaughter, Andy Barnett, Zorro and Francis Marion, alias "The Swamp Fox." As part of its CBS pact this year after lengthy associations with first ABC and then NBC, the Disney studio will be making several pilots.

Among those planned are video versions of such Disney movies as "Pollyanna," "Huckle, The Love Bug" and "Escape to Witch Mountain."
