School funding dies; taxes studied

By QUANE KENYON AP Capitol Writer

BOISE — Two education funding bills have gone down to defeat in the Idaho House, and it appears it will be up to the Revenue and Taxation Committee to decide what happens next.

The House voted Friday 41-29 against a public school funding bill that many members argued was inadequate. And less than an hour later, a companion bill, appropriating $96.2 million for the colleges and universities, was killed by a 40-30 vote.

That left the Legislature's budget-setting committee without guidance. Cochairman Rep. Kathleen "Kitty" Gurnsey, R-Boise, said she planned to ask the legislative leadership what to do next, since the education bills usually determines the scope of the state budget.

IDAHO LEGISLATURE 1984

And Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, chairman of Revenue and Taxation, said he would bring up two new tax bills next week — but it's impossible to predict if they might pass. The Joint Finance Appropriations Committee earlier in the week passed four education funding bills containing only minimal increases over the current budget. The House defeated two of them on Friday.

The Senate hasn't taken up its bills yet. But Mrs. Gurnsey said the House vote was a "signal" that the budget couldn't be set this year without more state revenue.

The big battle has been over the sales tax. It's 4% percent now, but is scheduled to drop back to 3% percent on July 1. Gov. John Evans has been urging the Legislature to approve a sales tax increase, but so far the Republican majority has been reluctant.

Like Mrs. Gurnsey, Antone said it appeared that budget proposals will be defeated until there's a new source of revenue.

His 18-member panel has been tied at 9-9 on a half-cent and 1-cent increase in the sales tax. In the first vote, on public school funding, all 19 House Democrats voted against the bill, joined by 27 of the 51 House Republicans. Opponents argued that a vote against the bill was almost certainly a vote for higher taxes.

Rep. Mack Neibaur, R-Paul, urged the legislature to approve the budget. "We need to face up to what is fair," Neibaur said. "Under our current revenue projections, this is a 'fair' bill."

But several other speakers said the legislation was not fair to education, and would lead to a deterioration of public schools in the state.

Rep. Chris Hooper, R-Boise, argued that the bill might be smart politically, but would not be very honorable, because it might be committing future legislatures to tax increases.

Several House members argued that if state support for public schools is not enough, school districts might be tempted to use for operating expense money which is supposed to boost average teacher salaries.

Beirut accord hovers Cease-fire next

By STEPHEN K. HINDY The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon and Hafez Assad of Syria have agreed to a Syrian-guaranteed cease-fire. Lebanon's civil war, a senior Lebanese official said Friday.

Gemayel also is ready to call Lebanon's warring leaders to renewed reconciliation talks in Switzerland, probably next week, as a step toward including Lebanese opposition leaders in a coalition Cabinet, the official said.

The official, briefing reporters on Gemayel's talks with Assad in Damascus Wednesday and Thursday, denied that Gemayel had agreed to abrogate the May 17 Lebanese-Israeli agreement that called for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon. The official spoke on condition he not be identified.

It was Gemayel's first visit to Syria since he assumed power in September 1982. Syria backs the Shiite Muslims and Druse militias that have been fighting Gemayel's beleaguered government.

The cease-fire was to begin Friday evening, the official said. "However, fighting was reported after dark along the 'green line' dividing Western Beirut from the Christian east. Police said at least one civilian was killed and 20 wounded in fighting in downtown Beirut. Artillery exchanges also were reported in the mountains to the east late in the afternoon.

The senior Lebanese official said, "There is no decision to abrogate the (May 17) agreement."

But he said: "The May 17 agreement is at an impasse. The environment about the agreement has changed. It has not led to withdrawals or peace in Lebanon. Therefore we are looking for ways and means to reach the same objectives."

The official said Lebanon would be consulting with Israel and the United States, which sponsored the talks leading to the accord, and hoped to go beyond the May 17 agreement.

Founding a home

Congress attempts tough tax increase

By JIM LUTHER AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — For the second time in two years, Congress is on its way to doing what conventional wisdom says cannot be done: raising taxes in an election year.

This year's scattergun approach to higher taxes, like the $100.4 billion version enacted in 1982, won't go down as smoothly as bourbon — which would be taxed by as much more as $3.75 a gallon under the new plan. But by spreading the burden among investors, businesses, telephone users, and smokers, it probably won't harm too many people, either.

And just as important for the Reagan administration, neither the bill approved by the House Ways and Means Committee nor the one still being written by the Senate Finance Committee would tamper with the personal tax cuts that were approved in 1981 as the heart of President Reagan's economic program.

"This is a package I think the president will support," Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Finance Committee, said of his bill. Robert Leonard, tax counsel for the Ways and Means Committee said Friday, "There's nothing the committee has done here ... that Treasury has a major objection to."

Since efforts are under way in both houses to also produce a package of spending reductions, chances appear excellent that Congress and the president can agree this year on a $100-billion plan that would hold the deficits over the next three years to the $550 billion range.

Still to be determined is whether a majority of Congress considers it riskier to raise taxes or to let the deficits grow unabated until after the Nov. 6 elections.

The Ways and Means Committee finished work Thursday night on a bill that would bring in about $49.3 billion in new revenues over the next 3½ years — almost of all it in the three years that start next Oct. 1 — in which the deficit-cutting effort is focused.

The Finance Committee expects to finish work next week on a version that is likely to include about $50 billion in taxes and, when other Senate committees' efforts are counted, roughly the same amount of spending reductions.

The House bill would retain the 3 percent tax on telephone service for two years after the scheduled Dec. 31, 1985, expiration; drop the cigarette tax of 16 cents a pack to 12 cents on Oct. 1, 1985, rather than letting it fall to 9 cents as would occur without further action; raise the maximum liquor tax of $10.50 a gallon (it varies according to proof) by as much as $3.75 starting Oct. 1, 1985; repeal a

Dies in Senate

By QUANE KENYON AP Capitol Writer

BOISE — A new legislative redistricting bill, given sudden birth by the House Friday, met just as quick a death in the Senate when it was tabled by a 60-30 vote.

"That appeared to signal an end to the 1984 Legislature's effort to come up with a new districting plan to reflect population shifts for the past decade."

"AIM" it apparently means either state or federal courts will decide how the legislative districts will be drawn for the next election.

The House, moving quickly once bipartisan support was achieved, passed a new legislative plan Friday.

It went to the Senate. Senate Democrat Caucus Chairman John Peavey said Democrats decided they wanted to stall the bill until at least Monday, for more study.

But Republicans mustered a 20-9 majority, with six members missing, to table the bill.

Since it takes a two-thirds majority to reauthorize the bill, it almost certainly is dead.

That leaves Idaho with a court-approved plan for the next election. And it may mean a lot of new faces. Besides changing district boundary lines, the state court plan also provides for seven new districts, which would add seven senators and 14 representatives. Democrats voted to stall it until next week.

Still before the House is a Senate-passed resolution authorizing the Legislature to hire an attorney to go to federal court to challenge the court-approved plan.

Earlier, the new bill passed the House, despite objections by some members that they weren't being treated fairly.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Mel Hammond, D-Rexburg, called the measure a compromise, worked out in hours of negotiations this week.

"It is not a perfect bill. You can't please everyone when you do reapportionment," he said.

Rep. Lynn Gene Winchester, R-Kuna, complained that the new bill splits his district right down the middle, so his next-door neighbor is in another legislative district.

He said in the "tic-tac-toe" dividing of Ada County, Kuna was split between two districts.

Rep. Frank Findlay, R-Coolwater, complained that he was being disfranchised, since he'd have to run for future elections in a huge, multi-county district.

Rep. Dwight Horsch, D-Aberdeen, also attacked the new bill, because it throws Power County into a multi-district arrangement with Bannock County.

He said that meant residents of American Falls, population 3,400, would only get to vote for one slate of candidates in a joint district with Bannock County.

People in Dewey, population 586, would get to vote for three sets of candidates, he said.

The proposal is basically a bill drawn up earlier in the week by Rep. Patricia McDermott, but at the request of Republicans, several changes were made into Thursday and Friday.

Workers at Utah missile factory flee flash fire

By KEVIN McCULLEN The Associated Press

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah — A flash fire swept through a defense plant Friday where propellant for space shuttle motors was being poured, slightly injuring 13 workers who rushed out just ahead of the flames, officials said.

The early morning fire caused extensive damage to the aluminum, wood and steel building at the sprawling Morton-Thiokol missile and rocket manufacturing complex 20 miles west of here, said company spokesman Jim Brown.

Scott Rackham said he and three other employees rushed out of the building and down a hill before feeling a couple of shock waves that "lifted us off the ground and threw us."

Rackham, who regained his feet and kept running, said it was "like the end of the world."

Employee Matt Lesley said he was about 12 blocks away when he and others felt a small "boom" and were warned to "hit the bunker."

Once in the bunker, he said, a shock wave "just sort of knocked everybody down, knocked the doors of the bunker" back.

"It was very bright, a mighty force," Lesley said. "The whole place just glowed ... To look at it we thought people were killed. We thought our buddies, our partners were in there."

Brown said the fire, which started in a casting pit in the building, apparently was ignited while rocket fuel — in a liquid form "like cake batter" — is poured into casings in rocket engines. The fuel later hardens, becoming "like a rubber heel shoe," Brown said.

The motor of a machine used in the casting process may have malfunctioned, loosing off the blaze, he said, but an official determination of the cause would have to await an investigation by Air Force and company officials.

The fire occurred in a pit casting a stage of the motors for the space shuttle, said Phil Dykstra, assistant general manager of the complex.

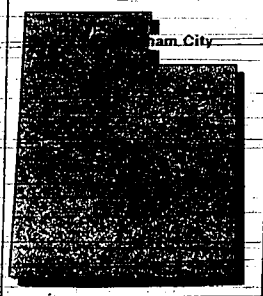

A team from National Aeronautics and Space Administration would begin an investigation of the fire Saturday, he said.

All 13 workers were treated for smoke and chemical inhalation, spokesman at three area hospitals said. Twelve were released and one employee, suffering "minor breathing difficulties from smoke inhalation," was kept for observation, Brown said.

Between 20 and 25 employees were at work in the building, which is 300 yards long and 200 yards wide, when the fire broke out and the operator in charge ordered an evacuation.

"They (the employees) were following safety procedures exactly. Once that (warning) switch hit, people knew they've got to get out of there right away. They went exactly according to the plan," Brown said.

Morton-Thiokol's 20,000-acre Wasatch Division complex, which employs about 5,000 people, is located some 70 miles northwest of Salt Lake City in northern Utah. The complex handles numerous government contracts for solid-fuel missile rockets, including those for the MX, Minuteman and Trident nuclear missiles. It also is the sole supplier of solid-fuel booster motors for the space shuttle.

Iraq claims major victory in fierce fight with Iranians

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq's defense minister claimed Friday his nation won the "decisive" battle of its war with Iran and killed thousands of Iranians attacking in an offensive east of Basra.

Iraq's offensive on Thursday "was crushed in a battle unprecedented in its ferocity since the outset of the war," Gen. Ali Khamenei told the official Iraqi news agency.

Describing the offensive east of the port of Basra, Iraq's second-largest city, Iraq claimed it inflicted heavy casualties on the Iraqis as it repulsed more than five counterattacks.

Since Western reporters rarely are allowed to visit the battlefield, the conflicting claims could not be verified.

Iraq invaded Iran in September 1980 in a dispute over Iraq's only waterway leading to the Persian Gulf. The war has raised fears that Iran might try to close the Strait of Hormuz and block oil tankers entering and leaving the Persian Gulf.

At the United Nations on Friday, Iraq claimed that the U.S. Navy was interfering with Iranian aviation and ship movements inside its territorial waters. It also complained that the Federal Aviation Administration was illegally claiming U.S. sovereignty over the Arabian Sea and adjacent gulfs.

Iraq's foreign minister, Ali Akbar Velayati, claimed that the United States had been expanding its naval presence in the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman for some time.

The president of Iran, Ali Khamenei, said on Friday his nation was fully prepared to block the transport of oil through the strait, according to the official Islamic Republic News Agency. Closing the strait would hurt Iran's enemies more than it would Iran, he said, according to the report.

Khamenei's speech came a day after Iraq reported sinking eight Iranian vessels in the Persian Gulf.

In London, Iranian sources confirmed that an Iraqi raid damaged two Iranian merchant vessels, according to the newspaper of Lloyd's of London.

Crews restore El Salvador power

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Repair crews restored part of the capital's sabotaged electric power Sunday. Friday, a civilian source reported heavy fighting with leftist guerrillas in northern El Salvador.

A Defense Ministry communique said 10 soldiers and seven guerrillas were killed in the fighting. A civilian also was reported killed and an unspecified number of soldiers were wounded.

Witnesses and military sources in the field said one large rebel force seized a 17-mile stretch of highway leading to the strategic town of Suchitoto, and a second attacked power lines in the east.

Two dams on the huge artificial lake at Suchitoto supply about half of El Salvador's electricity.

The military sources said rebel units seized the villages of El Milingo, Tecomanatepe and Ichanguzo on the El Salvador's northern highway and launched repeated attacks on Suchitoto, 27 miles north of the capital but did not take it. The sources said not to be identified for security reasons.

In San Salvador, guerrillas destroyed three gasoline stations with incendiary bombs, firefighters said. There were no reports of injuries.

Army sources have predicted more guerrilla activities in the weeks preceding March 25 presidential elections. The sources, who also requested anonymity, said the rebels want to create fear and chaos during the voting.

Mondale heads south

By The Associated Press

Walter F. Mondale told Maine voters Friday that "I haven't made a promise I can't keep" and headed south for an Atlanta faceoff with Sen. Gary Hart, who is pressing his assertion that people are more interested in "new ideas" than Mondale's endorsements.

While Mondale and Hart were touching political bases in New England, Sen. John Glenn and the Rev. Jesse Jackson concentrated their efforts in South, where the four Democratic presidential candidates are fighting for co-convention delegate seats at stake March 13 in the Florida, Georgia and Alabama primaries.

The fifth candidate, George McGovern, remained behind in Massachusetts hoping to place first or second in yet another "Super Tuesday" primary, but saying that anything less would force him out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Mondale, Hart and Glenn — and perhaps Jackson — were due at a Georgia Democratic Party fundraiser Friday night in Atlanta, but they weren't getting to make speeches.

Mondale started his day with a news conference and reception in Augusta, Maine, attended by Gov. Joseph E. Brennan, his top supporter in the state, and other prominent Democrats.

The former vice president criticized Hart for backing the so-called "build-down" alternative to an outright nuclear freeze, believing in "textbook theories" about the economy and supporting a proposed tax on imported oil.

Mondale also disputed any suggestion that he has promised programs the government cannot afford.

Mondale said he would return to Maine Saturday night and visit three caucuses on Sunday when the state selects its delegates to the national convention.

Hart, whose aides have acknowledged that he lacks a solid organization in Maine, did not plan to visit the state before the caucuses.

Lamm slaps Nevada women

DENVER (AP) — Angry Nevada officials said Friday the governor of Colorado should go to Las Vegas and find out that he was all wet when he asserted that one in every eight women under 45 in that gambling mecca is a prostitute.

In Carson City, Nev., Nevada Gov. Dick Bryan said he called Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm and "unloaded." "His comments are totally without foundation in fact, and an insult to every Nevada woman," Bryan said. "And in my judgment he owes an apology to the state of Nevada and women in particular for what I believe to be an insensitive, unfounded and intemperate comment."

"He said he was sorry," Las Vegas Mayor Pro Tem Ron

Laurie said Lamm should go to Nevada and see for himself. "We're a community of 500,000 people with many churches and many fine residential areas," he said. "A statement like that to me is the most unprofessional thing I can imagine."

Lamm, however, said he has been to Las Vegas several times, as recently as last November.

"I am aware of the fine churches and homes, but I'm also aware of the casinos and the activities they attract," he said.

Speaking to a group of high school journalists on Thursday, Lamm said organized crime is attracted to areas where casino gambling is legal, such as Nevada.

"One in eight women under 45 in Las Vegas is a prostitute," he added.

Chernenko gives national address

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko on Friday accused the United States of creating obstacles to peace and said the Americans must take "real actions" to back up their assurances of good intentions.

Chernenko made his new offer aimed at improving ties with the United States, but stressed the Soviet Union's commitment to detente and to measures to control nuclear weapons.

He repeated the Kremlin position that if the United States agrees to a nuclear freeze and renounces first use of nuclear weapons, there might be a chance for a disarmament accord.

But on several points he used rigid anti-American rhetoric of his predecessor, Yuri V. Andropov.

At one point, shuffling through his papers, he lost his place for 30 seconds.

The 72-year-old leader wore eyeglasses to read his text and spoke some of the passages haltingly. Chernenko, who was believed to have been ill for a prolonged period last year, occasionally took a hunkerbrot from his pocket to wipe his mouth, sip tea, and coughed several times. His breathing seemed slightly labored.

Chernenko, who became Communist Party Chief Feb. 13 after the death of Andropov, is the official candidate of the Khibyevskiy district of northeastern Moscow in Sunday's elections for 1,500 parliamentary deputies.

His 45-minute address, an election speech televised nationwide, was his first speech since Andropov's Red Square funeral Feb. 14. As general secretary of the Communist Party, Chernenko was the last of the 12 members of the ruling Politburo to deliver his address.

Chernenko devoted most of his speech to domestic, primarily economic issues and said he would continue Andropov's campaign to increase efficiency and eliminate corruption.

U.S. defends Soviet affront

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. decision to deny a visa to the Soviet Union's advance man to the Summer Olympics does not signal that Soviet athletes will also be denied entry into the United States, the State Department said Friday.

Oleg Verbitskiy, told Thursday to stay out of the United States, had been identified earlier as an agent of the Soviet secret police, a department official said in explaining the denial.

But department spokesman John Hughes said the action, which he refused to discuss in detail, does not preclude additional visa problems for Soviets participating in the Olympics.

Crossings called dangerous

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Over 26 school crossings have been identified as potentially hazardous in a survey of school principals and Parent-Teacher Organization members — but some safety measures may be beyond the city's budget.

The school district's survey was done by a safety committee appointed by the Twin Falls school board. It was formed this fall following the death of two school children in pedestrian accidents and a subsequent petition from parents of students at Sawtooth Elementary School asking for street improvements.

Nancy Faline, a committee member and parent, says painted crosswalks, stoplights or school crossing guards may be needed to make the identified intersections safer.

But city manager Tom Courtney warns that safety measures other than painted crosswalks and bigger signs may be beyond the city's budget. A blinking yellow light costs $5,000, say city staff members. And crossing guards would have to be volunteers, Courtney says.

City engineer Gary Young says the city cannot afford to improve the safety of every street a student crosses now. The school district needs to develop a system of school routes the children should use, so those crossings could be made safer, he says.

In October, the city requested the school district draw up such a series of school pedestrian routes. The city also targeted 15 school crossings as needing safety features, such as signs or painted crosswalks at that time.

The city had to cancel most of that work until summer because of early snowfalls, Courtney says. But he plans to have improvements completed by the start of the next school year.

As for the school's part, board members will take action on the district committee's report at the Tuesday board meeting. Of key concern is liability of the school for safety at the identified crossings, says board member Gary Fay.

If the board approves the report, the next step will be joint city and school meetings to discuss specific improvements and timing.

Findings of the school district committee include:

- Hickory Elementary: Blue Lakes Boulevard with Second, Third and Fourth Avenues. East Intersections: Second Avenue East with Sixth and Seventh Streets East Intersections; and East Five Points were identified as potentially dangerous intersections.
- School officials also noted that a barrier keeping cars away from the school "homestead" needed to give students a place to walk other than the street.
- Lincroft Elementary: Hazardous Intersections include Second Avenue North with Addison Avenue; Seventh Street and Sixth Street; Second Avenue West with Sixth and Seventh Streets; and Washington Street with Addison Avenue and streets intersecting from the west such as Wiseman Street.
- Morningside Elementary: The intersection of Elizabeth Boulevard and Eastland Drive needs work, the report says.
- Harrison Elementary: Potentially hazardous intersections include Harrison Street with Wirsching Street and Polk Street; Filer Avenue with Polk Street, Harrison Street and Washington Street; and Falls Avenue with Rosemont Street.
- Sawtooth Elementary: Problem areas include intersections at Filer Avenue East with Locust Street, Madrona Street and Mountain View Drive; and Eastland Drive with Rancho Vista Drive. School officials and parents also requested that bike paths be considered.
- Robert Stuart Junior High: Students should not have to walk in the street along Caswell street, parents say.
- O'Leary Junior High: Intersections on Eastland Drive with Elizabeth Boulevard and Addison Avenue East; and Locust Street with Stadium Boulevard were identified.
- Parents and school officials were also concerned about the lack of sidewalks along Elizabeth and Eastland Boulevards.

Idaho wildlife gets millions

By HAL BERTON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — State Department of Fish and Game coffers have been enriched by a $2.1 million contribution from two federal government programs that raise funds by taxing the manufacturers of hunting and fishing equipment.

The federal funds make up about 10 percent of the Fish and Game's current budget, and foot the bill for about 75 percent of basic research programs involving fish and game animals, says Steve Barton, a budget officer in the agency's Boise office.

In the Magic Valley area, the federal funds support research efforts involving different strains of rainbow trout, sage grouse and anelopes, says Bill Webb, director of the agency's Jerome office.

The money also helps pay the cost of maintaining state preserves such as the Hagerman Wildlife Management area, Webb adds.

"These funds are very important to our department. Except for a few private grants, they're all we really have to provide the majority of our research funding," Webb says.

In other parts of the state, Barton says, the federal money helps fund surveys, census work, animal transplants and steelhead and salmon restoration programs.

The federal funds are the result of two congressional initiatives — known as the Dingell-Johnson and Pittman-Robertson acts — that impose excise taxes on the manufacturers of sporting arms, ammunition, handguns, archery equipment, fishing rods, creels, artificial lures, baits and flies.

The manufacturers pay the tax before shipping the products on to retailers, with the consumer paying the tax indirectly through higher retail sales prices.

The federal money, which totalled $119.9 million nationally in fiscal year 1984, is returned to the states based on a formula that includes the number of fishing and hunting licenses sold in each state and the amount of land and water areas in that state.

This year's Idaho funding represents an 8 percent reduction over last year's fishery programs, and about an 18.6 percent reduction in the wildlife management programs, Barton said.

On a national level, the funds have also dropped slightly over 1983 levels, John Sayre, a spokesman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said the reduction reflects a decline in manufacturers' sales.

Second candidate runs for prosecutor

TWIN FALLS — Frank Dykas of Buhl has become the second Twin Falls County attorney to say he definitely plans to seek the Republican nomination for county prosecutor.

Dykas, 37, said Friday he has the experience for the job, and would serve the county well by seeking a high conviction rate and making sure major criminal cases are pushed through to trial.

Dykas says the 1982 change in state law, replacing the two-year prosecutor term with a four-year term, will take much of the politics out of the job.

"I have no further ambitions other than to be a career prosecutor in Twin Falls County," he says. He is committed to devoting his full-time to the job.

Dykas is presently a partner in the Buhl firm of Weaver and Dykas, came to Idaho 15 years ago from Connecticut as a Naval officer at the Idaho National Engineering Labora-

Big Wood River should be tame

By DAVE LEWIS
Times-News writer

HAILEY — Any fears of flooding this spring in the Big Wood River drainage should be alleviated, says Gale Roberts, Hailey Soil Conservation Service office manager.

The snowpack in the central Idaho mountains remains near normal, and since March is expected to be drier than normal, little snow depth should be added for the rest of the 1984 snow season.

But what happens will depend on moisture in March and April, he adds.

"The potential is there for high water, but nowhere near where it was last year," says Roberts.

On March 1, 1983, the water content in the snow pack above the Big Wood River was 81-122 percent of normal.

The Service's measurements on March 1 this year showed the water content at 96 percent of normal, Roberts says.

And the potential for heavy precipitation in the next two months is unlikely, says the National Weather Service in Boise.

Forecaster Mike Conger says the snow fall in March should be below normal with little snow accumulation after March.

There is no indication of a storm approaching in the near future and it will probably be in the latter parts of the month before a storm hits, Conger says.

"I'd say that if there is any more snow (in March), it will come in one storm," he says. That snow may leave 10 to 12 inches of snow in the Sun Valley area.

April showers will bring little more than mixed rain and snow with little accumulation, Conger says.

Temperatures also are likely to be above normal in the Sun Valley area through March and April, he says.

Other drainage in the Mountains north of the Magic Valley area are below normal, according to the Soil Conservation Service.

Homesteading not just part of past

By JANENE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — Homesteading that unique part of western America, has been a way of life for the Russell Kelleys of north Shoshone for some 43 years.

Russell brought his wife, Marjorie Ziegler, and their five small children to the wind-swept lava and sagebrush "homestead" 40 miles northwest of Shoshone in the spring of 1941.

They have spent 43 of their 50-year marriage on the same 160 acres, carving a home from virgin Idaho soil.

The Kelleys were married March 10, 1934, in Pocatello and will celebrate their golden anniversary with family and friends next Saturday.

Marjorie proudly shows the new living-dining-bar-husband-gave-her as an anniversary gift.

"The other one wore out," she says simply.

But living on a southern Idaho homestead has not worn out the Kelleys' devotion to each other, their family or the land.

"I got here in the middle of the night with a plywood trailer and a truckload of 45 cattle," Russell recalls. "I had to dig post holes and string wire before we could unload the cattle. There was nothing here."

Kelley bought the land for $1.50 an acre, plus approximately $40 per water share.

"The land was opened to homestead for veterans after the war and then offered to the public. I had my pick of several units," he said.

"I've been on my own since I was 15, and I worked as a cowboy for $7.50 per month, plus board and room."

The 76-year-old Kelley says proudly that he broke his last horse when he was 70.

He says he took up a homestead "because it was the only way I could get a place of my own," but he hastened to add "it's been a real tough row."

Marjorie and the children joined Russell on the homestead; they lived in the plywood trailer and a one-room home he had built.

"The first summer, the three boys slept in the car," Marjorie said.

The second winter, Russell added another room to the little house and the family lived in the two-room structure until 1957.

"It took the boys wanting to argue or fuss, they had to go outside," Marjorie said.

In 1957, Russell and his brother, with some help from neighbors, built a new house with modern plumbing. The couple still lives in the home.

"It was a good year; I built a new house and bought a new car. I was quite prosperous," Russell says, without pretense.

"My dear, I thought I was in heaven," Marjorie adds.

The Kelleys had to break up the sagebrush, plant windbreaks, build a home, irrigate and build barns and other outbuildings, all in the space of five years in order to "prove up" the homestead.

Then, Russell says, in order to make a living, he did custom farm work, drove a truck and delivered coal. Marjorie also waited tables at a Shoshone restaurant.

In the course of their 43 years on the farm, the family has experienced heavy snow, winds, flood and drought.

"We couldn't have made it without nice neighbors," Marjorie said, and tells how "for their first few months" in Shoshone, they ate potatoes three times a day. That Thanksgiving, a neighbor brought them one of his fattest hogs.

"It was the best meat we've ever eaten," Marjorie said.

Russell says he would have "given the land back a couple of times. But we were too poor to move," he says.

Area legislators unsuccessfully back slim hike for schools

By RICK SHUAUGHNESSY
Times-News Capitol Bureau

BOISE — Magic Valley area legislators displayed strong support for two education budgets that were foiled on Friday by House members who argued the proposals weren't high enough.

Only Rep. Lawrence Knigge of Filer strayed from the company of fellow south-central Idaho Republicans by voting against a bill to increase public school support by 2.8 percent.

Knigge was joined by Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, in opposing the second budget, for college and universities support — one that would have provided a 6.2 percent increase in state general fund spending for those higher education programs in the fiscal year that begins July 1.

"There is support in this House for a 4 percent sales tax," Knigge said following the vote. He was referring to a proposal to retain 1 percent of the temporary 1.5 percent portion of the state's sales tax that is scheduled to expire July 1.

But Rep. Donna Scott disagrees.

"We're at a Mexican standoff," the Twin Falls Republican said. She said none of the nine members of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee, who have consistently blocked attempts to retain part of the sales tax, are willing to back down.

And the House's top Republican leader, Speaker Tom Silvers of Twin Falls, says he's not ready to back down either.

"I don't see a tax increase yet," Silvers said Friday. He called the two failed budgets "a trial run." He said legislators haven't yet made up their minds how to resolve the stalemate.

"We were here 95 days last year. I'm prepared to be here all summer if that's what it takes to get the job done," he said.

Two area representatives who serve on the tax committee and who have opposed proposals to retain portions of the temporary sales tax are Reps. Roy Brackett, R-Twin Falls, and Gordon Hallfield, R-Jerome. Both say they won't relent in their opposition.

"I really don't know what it means," Hallfield said of the significance of the House rejection of the two budgets. But he added that it's "very doubtful" a proposal to retain a portion of the temporary sales tax will be allowed out of the tax committee. The committee has been tied 9-9 on several proposals to retain a portion of the 1.5 percent of the state sales tax that is scheduled to expire July 1.

The state's 4.3 percent sales tax is scheduled to revert to its previous level of 3 percent on July 1 if it is not otherwise changed by the Legislature and the governor.

One member of the tax panel who has opposed the tax increases, Rep. Rich Orme, R-Sioux Falls, told the Times-News Friday he may change his vote to support retaining a portion of the tax. Orme said he needs to know more specifically what the revenue requirements of state government will be for the next fiscal year before he supports any such proposal. But he won't rule out his support.

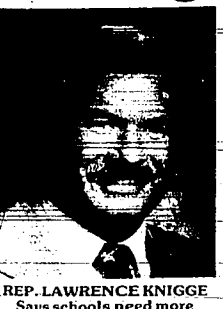

An education reform bill, carrying with it a $20.3 million price tag, has yet to be acted on by the Senate committee where it was assigned.

Orme cited that bill and its uncertain status as one of the variables that needs to be resolved before he can support retaining a portion of the sales tax.

Rep. Mack Nelbauer, R-Paul, sponsor of the failed public school appropriation bill, said afterward he wasn't sure the action signals the inevitability of retaining a portion of the sales tax.

"It would indicate the likelihood is better than yesterday," he said.

Rep. Vard Chantburn, R-Albion, says he doesn't think Friday's action means that a bill to retain some of the temporary portion of the tax would necessarily pass if it were voted on by the House. He says some of the opposition to the budgets proposed Friday came from lawmakers who thought the proposals too generous.

Drive-in church takes compacts to Cadillacs

By RUTH ANN RAGLAND
The Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — When the Rev. Lawrence Green looks at his congregation each Sunday morning he sees Chevrolts, Hondas, Cadillacs and pickup trucks.

"I can always tell by the car if they're regular attenders," said Green, who conducts a drive-in worship service every Sunday on the parking lot of the Albuquerque Community Church and neighboring businesses.

"We get people from all crossroads of life," he said. "We get the wealthy and we get the poor. We get the middle class and we have everything from little Japanese cars to Cadillacs."

Green, 63, who has been a pastor for 40 years, said the drive-in church service meets the needs of many people who won't attend a traditional church.

"We discovered in doing contact work in our community there were lots of people who didn't want to become involved in church," he said. "There were people who just didn't want to come inside."

It appeals to the elderly, the ill and the handicapped, he said. "We've had people through the years who were terminally ill who spent their church life here at the drive-in."

Green said the drive-in church also attracts people who want "a certain privacy," such as those "with domestic problems who don't want to go to regular church but come to the drive-in."

And for many, it's convenience.

"One man with five children in their pajamas came to church," Green said. "That's not the kind of thing you'd see in a church."

Some even bring their dogs, "and we've even had a monkey come with one of the families," he said.

He noted, however, that most drive-in churchgoers tend not to be so casual — many dress as if they were going to walk-in church services.

Louis Bessen, who is in his 60s, has just about completed his 500th Sunday," said Green's wife, Nina. "He has worshiped at a single Sunday" since he began attending drive-in church. He now is drive-in manager, responsible for getting facilities ready for services.

While the concept of drive-in church is not traditional, the services are, said Green, who wears a robe when he preaches.

"He said the interdenominational church is stirred and Bible-centered." The congregation and the choir sing as the organist and pianist play and the ushers collect the offering.

But "the people can't clap and applaud like they do in a church," he said. "So, when something comes along they particularly like, people tout their horns."

He said one guest musician commented it was gratifying to "play for the ears and have them all look at you."

The Albuquerque Community Church began holding services at a local drive-in theater in 1971 as an "outreach mission," said Green.

Daily Horoscope

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Although there is a chance to work out conditions where both men and women are concerned in the daytime, the evening brings a considerable amount of confusion.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Be more concerned with those around you and gain their cooperation. A good day for getting fundamental affairs in good order.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Look to good friends for the impetus you need just at this time. Be sure you know what it is you want personally.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You can handle those outside affairs that are difficult to handle during the busy work days. Slide step higher-ups.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Handle those affairs that will help you to work on a more lofty level in the future. Stick to the tried and true.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) A good day to wind up whichever responsibilities that have been difficult to handle in the past. Please your mate in the evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Fine day on carrying on with you associates. Enjoy the company of your family and friends. Be cheerful.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A good day to study your surroundings and get them fixed up, a little better so they suit your good tastes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Some delay in a trip or other activity gives you an opportunity to do something more important. Show great devotion.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 22) are busy taking up your name so that it is more as you would like it to be - show devotion to kin.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You are inclined to get into deep matters and this is wise since you can comprehend them. The evening is best spent alone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You have a myriad of small tasks to do, so get at them early. Any repairs you can do yourself will be wise.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Go after your personal aims quietly and gain them easily. Your friends can be very helpful to you.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY, he or she will be one who can see things in an enlarged way but then is capable of whittling them down to a practical size and make them work properly. Teach to be objective since there is a considerable amount of sensitivity.

Meese's notes counter his testimony

WASHINGTON (AP)—Edwin Meese was confronted during hearings Friday on his nomination as attorney general with his hand-written notes which appeared to show he knew more about a deal to sell his home than he admitted under oath the day before.

The document raising the issue was brought to light in a surprise move in the Senate Judiciary Committee by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who is investigating whether some Californians helped Meese financially and, in return, won appointment to government posts.

Meese made no immediate effort to explain the apparent contradiction. But in a short exchange later in the day, the presidential counselor told the senator, "There's no discrepancy whatsoever."

Testifying under oath Thursday about the sale of his La Mesa, Calif., home in 1982, Meese had said, "I do not know the amount of the Howard loan since he took that out totally separate from any knowledge on my part."

Metzenbaum read those words back to Meese on Friday after the senator had introduced notes which Meese identified as his own hand-written description. In 1982 of a telephone conversation about the house sale.

The notes were dated Aug. 18, 1982, half a month before the sale to Howard, and listed Howard as the buyer of the home for $200,000 with a $50,000 down payment and a $240,000 loan.

"It would appear you were very much aware of the whole transaction," Metzenbaum told Meese.

Meese, President Reagan's longtime adviser and friend, replied, "It was absolutely a legitimate business deal" but did not immediately answer Metzenbaum's charge that the earlier testimony contradicted his own memo.

Metzenbaum got Meese to acknowledge that the telephone conversation described in the notes was between Meese and Thomas J. Barrack, a California developer, whom Metzenbaum charges arranged the Howard purchase in order to alleviate Meese's financial burden.

During parts of 1982, Meese had nearly $480,000 in mortgages and a salary around $60,000 and little other income.

Howard purchased the California home for $207,500 and later sold it at a loss for $275,000. Metzenbaum has said that at the time Howard owned the home he also received a $250,000 loan from Barrack.

Barrack became a deputy secretary at the Interior Department in early 1983, but Meese testified earlier that he had no role in Barrack's appointment.

Both Meese and Barrack have denied any connection between the appointment and the financial assistance given Meese.

Reagan criticizes political opponents

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan criticized his political opponents Friday as members of a "sourpuss set" who are determined to "run down America and seek to punish success."

In a prepared dinner speech for an audience of conservatives, who long have formed the bedrock of his political support, Reagan trumpeted the economic recovery as a vindication of his conservative philosophy.

Without citing the Democrats by name, the president honed his attack against "the spendthrifts who mangled America" and "the nightmare of double-digit inflation, record interest rates, unfair tax increases, too much regulation, credit controls, farm embargoes, gas lines, no growth at home, weakness abroad and phony excuses about malaise are the last people who should be giving sermons about fairness and compassion."

Reagan spoke before a conservative political action conference sponsored by Young Americans for Freedom and the American Conservative Union at a downtown Washington hotel.

Responding to Democrats' charges that his policies have unfairly penalized the poor and rewarded the rich, Reagan said:

"The spendthrifts who mangled America with the nightmare of double-digit inflation, record interest rates, unfair tax increases, too much regulation, credit controls, farm embargoes, gas lines, no growth at home, weakness abroad and phony excuses about malaise are the last people who should be giving sermons about fairness and compassion."

Food prices take biggest jump in three years

By The Associated Press

Grocery prices took their biggest jump in February in more than three years, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey, which shows supermarket bills have more than doubled since 1973.

The AP survey, now 11 years old, covers 14 food and non-food items, selected at random, and priced in one supermarket in each of 11 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month. The results are not seasonally adjusted. Nor are they weighted to show what proportion of its budget a family might actually spend on each item each week.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill went up last month at the checklist store in 11 cities, rising an average of 2.9 percent. The bill went down in two cities, dropping an average of 2.1 percent. Overall, there was a rise of 2.1 percent in the marketbasket bills at the checklist stores during February.

The increase was the steepest since a November 1980 boost of 2.4 percent. Like the earlier rise, it was caused by bad weather: "A severe drought in the summer of 1980 pushed up food prices temporarily."

Bartender had 'bad feeling' about rape victim

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP)—A bartender testified Friday he had a "bad impression" of a woman who came into Big Dan's tavern last March, and he considered having police throw her out when she started talking and laughing with male customers.

In his third day on the stand, Carlos Machado repeated earlier testimony that the woman cried and screamed minutes later when she was dragged to the barroom pool table and raped. Machado was charged with aggravated rape after the woman said she went to the bar to buy cigarettes, but instead was stripped and raped while onlookers cheered.

Machado told defense attorney Kenneth Sullivan on Friday that he suspected trouble when the women came into the New Bedford bar on the night of March 6, 1983.

"I had a bad impression of the girl," Carlos Machado said. "She was laughing and talking with the boys, and I wanted to call the police and get her out."

Sullivan asked why Machado wanted the woman out of the bar.

"A group of guys around a girl in such a tight crowd," Machado, a

Portuguese immigrant, said through an interpreter.

"That was so unusual that you thought she should be ejected?" asked Sullivan.

"Yes," said Machado.

In later cross-examination, defense attorney Edward Harrington asked what bothered Machado about the woman.

Nuke plant shuts self down

PORT CLINTON, Ohio (AP)—The Davis-Besse nuclear plant automatically shut Friday after a steam relief valve stuck open. Officials said no radiation had been released and the reactor was being cooled down.

An unusual event, the lowest of four emergency status classifications, was declared at 12:40 p.m., according to Jan Strasma, a spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Chicago.

Sue Gagner, a spokeswoman in the NRC's Washington office, said the plant, located about 30 miles east of Toledo, was "in stable condition."

"All other safety systems are operating. At this point I would say this is an operational problem and not a significant safety problem," said Strasma. "But because this is an off-normal and unusual situation, it increases the potential for something else to go wrong."

Judge limits Hansen's prosecutors

WASHINGTON (AP) - A federal judge ruled Friday that government prosecutors cannot subpoena House officials to testify in the criminal trial of Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, who is charged with filing false financial statements.

U.S. District Court Judge Joyce Hans Green also said the government cannot subpoena documents being held by Benjamin J. Guthrie, House Clerk, and John M. Swanner, staff director of the House ethics committee, for the trial scheduled to begin March 19.

At a pre-trial hearing, recently, the government said it wanted to ask Guthrie and Swanner general questions regarding House procedures, instructions and authority and no specific information concerning Hansen or the ethics committee investigation of his financial disclosure forms.

Hansen's attorneys said, however, they might want to ask them specific questions while House counsel argued that any testimony concerning staff activities, intra-staff communication or official interaction between the House clerk and committee staff members is protected by the speech and debate clause of the Constitution.

Efforts rise to honor Church

BOISE (AP) - Efforts to honor former Idaho Sen. Frank Church, suffering from a pancreatic tumor, are mounting in his home state and in Washington.

Boise State University is starting a drive to increase its Frank Church endowment fund by $500,000.

And in Washington, the Senate has endorsed a bill renaming the River of No Return Wilderness in honor of Church, who sponsored the legislation that set aside the Idaho area in 1980.

The measure to rename the 2.2-million-acre area the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness was sponsored by Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho. The bill now goes to the House.

At BSU, interest earned on the proposed endowment increase would be used to fund visiting professors and two people to organize a collection of papers, documents and memorabilia Church has donated to the university.

Symposia would continue to be financed with proceeds of the fund, which now has $100,000.

The announcement of the fundraising drive and Church's donation of his papers came at a BSU news conference Thursday.

Church and his family were represented by Garry Wenske, an attorney with the former senator's

Washington, D.C., law firm.

Wenske said Church is in "reasonably good health" at his Bethesda, Md., home. He is recovering from surgery and undergoing chemotherapy for a pancreatic tumor.

Church has been writing an article for the Washington Post on the United States' foreign policy in Latin America, Wenske said.

BSU President John Keiser said the collection of public papers, estimated at 3,000 linear feet, spans Church's 24-year senate career and is one of the largest ever compiled by a U.S. senator.

Gooding downs Filer

Tourney into sudden death

By CHRIS HAFT
Times-News writer

WENDELL.—The saga continues—Easing an early 14-point deficit with careful offense and attentive defense, the Gooding Senators defeated the Filer Wildcats 55-49 Friday night in the first extra championship game in the Fourth District A-3 tournament.

The loss was the first in the tourney for the Wildcats, who began their successful string by outlasting Gooding 50-46 in overtime last Wednesday.

And it initially appeared the Wildcats, 13-8, would take the rematch and win the district title by jumping to a 24-0 second-quarter lead. But Filer couldn't withstand Gooding's subsequent balanced effort, which is why they'll meet again tonight at 8 in Wendell High School's gymnasium.

After a halfless four-for-19 shooting in the first period, the Senators, who improved to 14-11, began working for higher-percentage middle-distance shots and looking more for 6-7 Sven Swanson, who scored a game-high 13 points.

"We really started penetrating with the basketball better," Gooding Coach Don Fowler said. "Early in the game we just weren't looking inside—we were going back to old habits."

Gooding displayed sound habits from the free-throw line, hitting 13 of 16 charities after information to supplement its performance. Sophomore guard Todd Sims displayed his characteristic cool, sinking five of six from the line in the final period.

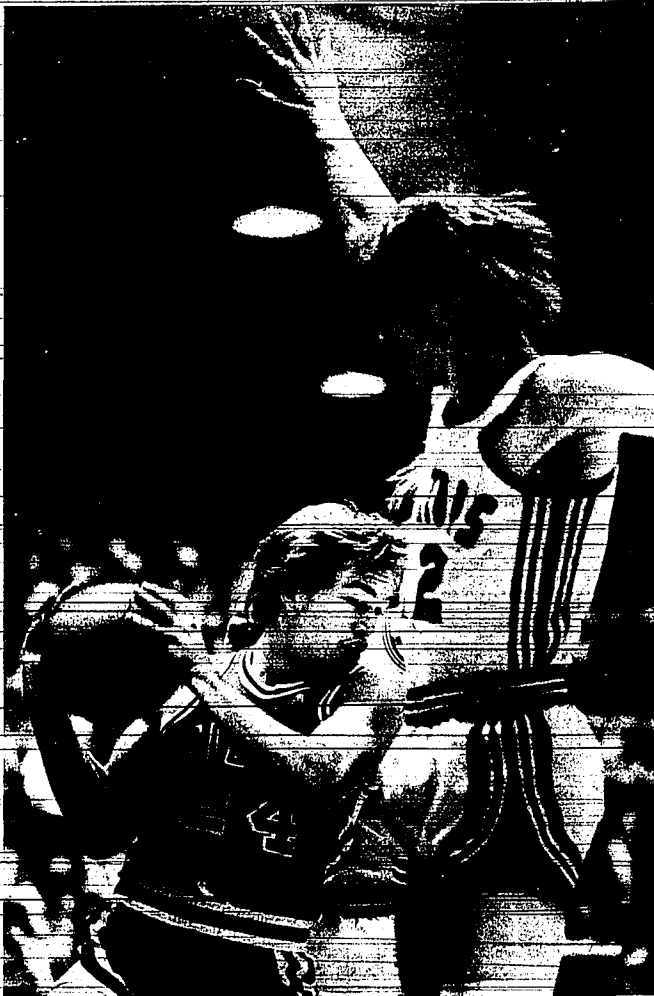

Defensively, the Senators were quite thorough. They limited Greg Jarolimek and Elmer Peters, who embody Filer's strength inside, to four points each in the half-time. "Our big guys didn't leave their feet on, and that was really a key," pointed out Fowler, who had the Senators employ both a 2-3 zone and a man-to-man.

On the perimeter, Gooding prevented Scott Turner, a dangerous outside shooter, from growing incendiary, holding him to six points. "Everytime Turner got the ball he had somebody in his face," Elmer Coach Loyd Gary said. Moreover, the Senators were just as neat as they were ubiquitous, keeping Filer from the free-throw line the entire second half.

Fowler also noted that Gooding suffered at the outset from the age-old problem of resting on its laurels. "Until about four minutes were left in the second quarter, our intensity level was zero," he said. "We were still enjoying the fact that we had qualified for state the night before (by defeating Glenns Ferry, 53-38)."

"Then the Senators returned to earth. A 12-0 Filer streak coincided with a four-minute scoreless drought for Gooding, creating that 24-10 Wildcat bulge. Gooding responded by tallying 13 of the next 14 points, reserve guard David Metzger contributing six.

Meanwhile, Filer went without a bucket for a full seven-and-a-half minutes. Ben Sackett's three-point shot was the only one to break the drought. "See GOODING on Page B3."

Soaring Frosty Moody of Gooding applies defensive pressure to Filer's Greg Jarolimek.

Kuhn eyeing 3rd extension

Ueberroth predicted new leader

NEW YORK (AP)—Bowie Kuhn agreed Friday night to a third extension of his contract as commissioner of baseball to give Peter V. Ueberroth time to fulfill his Olympic commitments before taking over the sport's highest office, the New York Times reported.

Kuhn, whose second contract extension ended Thursday, will serve until Ueberroth can succeed him or Sept. 30, whichever comes first—a source close to baseball's Executive Council told the Times. The 1984 Olympics end Aug. 12.

The newspaper in Saturday's editions quoted a source who said Kuhn had agreed to the extension despite saying earlier that he absolutely would not serve past March 1. "It's a real delicate thing," the source said.

In Tampa, Fla., where the club owners will meet Saturday to formally pick a new commissioner, a spokesman for Kuhn declined comment on the newspaper's report.

"That's a matter for the search committee," said Chuck Adams of the commissioner's office. "The switchboard at the hotel where the meeting is to take place said Kuhn was registered, but 'he is not taking any calls.'"

Ueberroth, who was reported earlier this week to be the pick of baseball's Selection Committee, said Friday he would not accept the job unless changes were made in the current structure of the office.

"It's not properly structured to be an effective position," Ueberroth said at a news conference here, adding that he had not been formally offered the job as Bowie Kuhn's successor. Asked if he would accept it under present conditions, he said:

"If it was offered, I would say no. Under other conditions, maybe." Ueberroth didn't specify his objection other than noting he has "a simple and lengthy list" of suggested changes.

A spokesman for the Baseball Commissioner's Office confirmed Friday that all 28 owners are scheduled to meet in Tampa, Fla., at 10 a.m. EST Saturday. They are expected to formally appoint Ueberroth to the job.

Originally, it was reported that Sandy Hadden, secretary treasurer and general counsel to baseball, would serve as interim commissioner until Ueberroth fulfills his obligation to the Olympics, which end Aug. 12.

Ueberroth is reportedly the choice of baseball's search committee, headed by Bud Selig, owner of the Milwaukee Brewers. The owners have reportedly agreed to ratify the search committee's selection.

Selig has been unavailable for comment. But a source close to the situation said the owners were swayed to Ueberroth's favor when he received the backing of Peter Ueberroth's Los Angeles Dodgers, a Kuhn supporter.

Kuhn failed to gain reelection to a third seven-year term on Nov. 1, 1982, when five of the 12 National League owners opposed him. But Kuhn, whose term expired Aug. 15, 1983, agreed to remain in office if his successor could be found. Thursday was Kuhn's last day as commissioner.

NCAA investigates Bengal basketball

FOGATELLO (AP)—The National Collegiate Athletic Association is investigating the basketball program at Idaho State University, Athletic Director Steve Caccia has confirmed.

Caccia said an NCAA representative was on campus last week interviewing coaches and players.

He said the NCAA did not say who initiated the inquiry, which could result in sanctions if violations of NCAA rules are found.

Former ISU player Willis Thomas, who quit the team last year after disagreements with Coach Wayne Ballard, told the Idaho State Journal last summer he was requesting an NCAA investigation.

Thomas, a 6-7 junior recruited from Barton County Community College in Great Bend, Kan., was a reserve on the 1982-83 Bengal team and logged considerable playing time in the first part of the season.

He left the team once, complaining about being forced by Ballard to run extra laps, but then rejoined the squad. He quit again at mid-season.

Ballard was with the basketball team in Boise for Saturday's final regular-season game with Boise State and could not be reached for comment Friday.

Caccia said the NCAA investigator was on campus Wednesday, Thursday and Friday last week.

"They haven't told us if we're in violation of anything," he said. "If any charges result, then we have a chance to answer them."

The NCAA is required to inform institutions within six months of the findings of any investigation.

Grove City ruling may spell demise for women's athletics

I had an editor at another newspaper who had an idea about how to cut the cost of covering sports.

"Why do you guys cover girls' basketball?" he wondered. "How many people do they have at these games?"

"A few dozen," I replied. "At district and state tournaments, maybe a few hundred."

"Who cares?" he asked. "Forget about them."

I remember that one of my arguments to the contrary of the time was that Title IX, a federal law passed in 1972, mandated that schools afford the same athletic opportunities to girls as they do to boys. In the same spirit, I said, we had a moral responsibility to cover girls' sports, even if they played before only the janitor and the principal.

Last fall I was talking with a Magic Valley secondary school administrator about the financial problems that his district faced in continuing its sports program. "You want to know why we're in trouble?" he asked. "Title IX. If we didn't have to fund girls' basketball, girls' volleyball, girls' track, this program would be financially self-sufficient."

Those two conversations came back to me earlier this week after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the federal Department of Education cannot cut off all funds to a college that discriminates against women in its athletic program, in a case arising from a suit filed by a small college in Pennsylvania, the high court said that only federal funds going into the athletic program could be cut in such a case.

The practical effect, of course, was to pull the teeth from Title IX—college athletic departments receive very few federal funds.

Collegiate and high school sports programs for women flourished in Idaho after the passage of Title IX, and Grove City College's bureaucratic hassles with the Department of Education would seem to pose little threat to them.

Not so. Most of the nation's 16,000 school districts receive some federal funds through programs for the handicapped, disadvantaged students, impact aid and other sources, and as a result of The Trustees of Grove City College vs. Huftstader that aid can no longer be withheld by the federal government if a school board elects, for example, to drop girls' basketball and retain boys' basketball.

The current Secretary of Education, Terrell Bell, has said that his department will not go after a school district that offers, for example, football, basketball and track for boys and cheerleading for girls. He will take action, he says, against a school that discriminates by refusing to run a girls' athletic program or tries to discourage girls from participating in interscholastic sports.

In the wake of this week's Supreme Court ruling, that is not a threat many school trustees or administrators will take seriously.

Which brings us back to the editor and the educator. Until last Tuesday, they weren't the people who would decide the future of girls' athletics in their communities. Now they are. At the moment, collegiate and high school women's athletic exist by the good graces of legislators and alumni, school board members and administrators. In the absence of track-and-field, basketball, volleyball, women's sports must now compete with teachers' salaries, 200 new seats for the gym and new tires for the school buses.

In an era of tight budgets, that's tough competition. Too tough.

At least for a decent interval, no school district or college is going to be caught dropping its sports programs for women. It wouldn't look right. But if the Grove City decision stands, wait a year or two.

The day may come again when cheerleading may be the most to which a female athlete can aspire.

NFL owners won't interfere with proposed move of Colts

PETE ROZELLE
PENALTY A BIG FACTOR

By JIM LITKE
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — National Football League owners, facing a $49 million penalty for trying to block the Raiders from moving from Oakland to Los Angeles, decided Friday not to interfere with Baltimore Colts owner Robert Irsay's desire to move his franchise, Commissioner Pete Rozelle said.

At a news conference after a morning meeting with representatives of the 28 NFL clubs, Rozelle said, "With that judgment against them now, they decided it would not be prudent to take any action should he (Irsay) decide to move."

Rozelle said Irsay indicated he had discussed moving the Colts to several cities. Irsay acknowledged in-depth discussions with officials in Indianapolis, although he insisted there was no firm commitment, but Rozelle said Irsay indicated he was considering several other cities as well. Only New York had been ruled out by Irsay, said Rozelle.

During Super Bowl week, there were reports Irsay was planning to move the team to Phoenix, Ariz., but nothing ever came of them.

Rozelle said Irsay planned to inform league owners of any move around the owners' scheduled March 18 annual meetings in Hawaii, or shortly thereafter. The commissioner said the league needed notification by April 1 in order to make scheduling commitments.

Rozelle reiterated his claim, made after one of the earlier stages in the court fight against the Raiders, that "NFL franchise free agency" has the NFL in essence reached a situation of "franchise free agency" had been created. "It is possible for an owner basically to hold an auction with cities and states interested in acquiring one (a team)."

He conceded it was unlikely the owners would attempt to block a franchise shift in most cases, but added, "We will review each one separately. As of today, it's obviously prudent not to try and block this move. But if the owners wish to face the possibility of a greater liability, they might do so."

Irsay, who avoided newsmen at the meetings, was not present when the other owners or their representatives discussed the prospective move of the Colts.

Similarly, Al Davis, managing general partner of the Raiders, remained out of the privileged session while his fellow owners discussed the implications of Wednesday's federal appeals court decision in San Francisco upholding by a 2-1 vote the Raiders' move from Oakland.

Rozelle said league attorneys were confident the dissenting opinion in the Raiders' case would be upheld on appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

He said he met privately last week and again Friday morning with Baltimore Mayor William Schaefer. Irsay also told Schaefer earlier Friday that no action would be taken immediately on moving the franchise from Baltimore, which apparently is a move that will take serious, but unannounced, 111-hour effort with each incapacity to convince Irsay to stay.

But Schaefer said Thursday he believed the offer has come too late even though it was made by "a reliable group this time, somebody I know." The mayor would not identify any members of the group, but he stated that it wasn't from local bankers. "It's an amazing thing," he said. "I haven't heard from any of the banks in Baltimore."

One subject which did not come up for discussion was U.S. District Judge Laughlin Waters' decision in Los Angeles last Tuesday which held that the United States Football League's rule barring college underclassmen constitutes a "group boycott" in violation of antitrust law. The USFL rule on underclassmen is almost identical to one used by the NFL, which was not a party to the suit.

J.C. Snead blasts out of a sand trap

Snead retains Honda golf lead

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — J.C. Snead holed two shots from on the green on the way to a 71 that enabled him to retain a one-stroke lead Friday in the second round of the $500,000 Honda Golf Classic.

J.C., a 42-year-old nephew of the legendary Sam Snead, found the hole with a 75-foot bunker shot on the seventh, clipped in for another birdie from about 40-50 feet on the 14th and left still another one hanging on the lip of the cup. He also recorded a chip-in birdie during his opening round of 68 on Thursday.

"That's three in two days. I haven't done that since I've been on tour," said Snead, now in his 17th season.

"I don't know what's going on. But every time I hit a chip, it looked like it was going in."

Snead, who has won only once since 1976, finished two trips over the new Tournament Players' Club at Eagle Trace in 139, five shots under par.

A single stroke back at the half-way point of the chase for a $90,000 first prize were Greg Powers and dangerous Andy Bean tied at 140. Bean had an erratic 71 — three birdies, three bogeys, three pars on the front — while Powers birdied three holes in a row on the way to a 69.

Curtis Strange had a 69 in the mid-, sunny weather — a sharp change from the cold, windy conditions that hampered 118th-round play — and was tied with Tommy Nakajima and Jim Colbert at 141. Nakajima had a 71 and Colbert 68.

The group at 142, two under par and only three off the pace were Bruce Lietzke, Donnie Hammond and Phil Hancock. Hancock had another 71. Lietzke shot a 70. Hammond had a 68.

Jack Nicklaus improved seven shots to a 70 and comfortably qualified for the final two rounds at 147. South African Gary Player and Masters champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain also made it at 148. Player had a second round 71. Ballesteros 70. U.S. Open champion Larry Nelson was 70-144.

Some of the game's leading lights were not so fortunate, however. Johnny Miller, who won this title last year when the tournament was played at the Inverrary Country Club, had a 71 but it wasn't enough to recover from an opening 80. At 151, he failed to qualify for the final two rounds.

Cal Peete, who has won six tournaments in the last two seasons and the leading scorer on the Tour this year, failed to sign his card after shooting a fat 79 and was disqualified.

USFL OKs Dupree pact amid turmoil

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Marcus Dupree will sign a contract Saturday with the New Orleans Breakers of the United States Football League, Ken Fairley, advisor and confidant of the former Oklahoma running back said Friday night.

"We met with Breaker officials today and agreed to terms," Fairley told the Hattiesburg American newspaper.

The time and place of the contract signing were not immediately determined, Fairley said.

It seemed almost certain that Dupree would sign after USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons earlier Friday had indicated the Breakers could proceed with their attempts to get him even though Dupree still had college eligibility remaining.

"At this point, there has been no resolution of these discussions," Simmons said in a prepared statement. "In the event the parties arrive at an agreement, it will become subject to my review and approval."

It was the first time the league had acknowledged that Dupree could be signed. Previously, the league held that it would stand by its regulation barring the signing of underclassmen.

Simmons noted that the rule had been deemed a violation of antitrust laws by Federal Judge Laughlin E. Waters on Wednesday in Los Angeles.

After the apparent go-ahead from Simmons, the only things missing were confirmation from the Breakers and from Dupree.

So where was Marcus Dupree? — Between 5:30 and 6 p.m., he was in a pizza restaurant in Picaune, Miss., talking with Breakers owner Joseph

Marcus Dupree dropped out of two colleges in the past year

Canizaro, according to the Picaune item, a newspaper.

"We're just talking," Dupree told the newspaper.

"We are reactivating our negotiations. We're optimistic," Canizaro told the newspaper.

Canizaro said the two chose Picaune to talk because it was "sort of midway in between" New Orleans and Hattiesburg, Dupree's hometown.

Another man at the table in Mar-

Gall's Pizza, who identified himself only as a friend of Canizaro's, said "He'll be signed by tomorrow."

Back in New Orleans, Breakers Coach Dick Courty told television station WWL that the unexpected delay arose from a rival USFL franchise talking contract with Dupree.

"As I understand it ... the commissioner is checking to see if there was some tampering being done, in talking to Marcus' agent and the kid without permission," Courty said.

According to WWL-TV, the rival offer came from the Los Angeles Express, but team officials refused to confirm or deny it.

If Courty was right, then that last-minute snafu would be the final impediment to a Breakers contract for Dupree.

Even if Dupree did sign immediately with the Breakers, USFL spokesman Jim Byrne said Dupree could not be cleared in time for Sunday's game at the Oakland Invaders.

Asked if Dupree could play in the following week — the team's home opener in the Superdome against the Memphis Showboos — Byrne replied: "That's up to the coach."

In a statement issued by Commissioner Chet Simmons, the league openly acknowledged for the first time the negotiations between the Breakers and Dupree, who is reportedly set to sign a $5 million, 5-year deal.

Simmons' statement was the league's first official reaction to a Federal court ruling Wednesday holding that its rule against signing college underclassmen violated antitrust laws.

Dupree, who has dropped out of both the Universities of Oklahoma and Southern Mississippi in the past year and is a sophomore in eligibility, has been negotiating with the Breakers for the past week. The league meanwhile, had continued to maintain that its teams were barred from even talking to players whose college eligibility hadn't expired.

Rozier to get chance to prove self on dry turf

By The Associated Press

Mike Rozier spent his pro football debut slipping and sliding his way to a disappointing 27 yards in the rain in Oklahoma. There'll be no such atmospheric problems for the Pittsburgh Maulers' Heisman Trophy winner in Michigan.

Saturday night's game against the Panthers will be played indoors, on the carpet of the Silverdome. Earlier Saturday, the Oullaws, who made a successful debut as a United States Football League expansion team by beating the Maulers 7-3, take on the visiting Denver Gold.

On Sunday it's Chicago at Memphis, Philadelphia at Washington, New Jersey at Jacksonville, Birmingham at Los Angeles and New Orleans at Oakland. Monday night's game is Houston at San Antonio.

On Friday night, Tampa Bay visited the Wranglers in Arizona.

Despite his (and Pittsburgh's) low numbers, Rozier said he was "pleased with the way I played and with the way the team played. We know what we did right and what we did wrong. I'm not real concerned about statistics. I'm just concerned about winning."

"Rozier is going to be good," Michigan Coach Jim Stanley said, "but for him, this is a new world."

Stanley said he expects the Maulers' offense to be similar to one employed by Philadelphia, beaten by the Panthers last year in the USFL title game. Joe Pendry, now the Maulers' head coach, was an assistant with the Stars in 1983.

"They run the I-formation and will use Mike Rozier a lot like the Stars used Kelvin Bryant," Stanley said. "I think they'll do a lot of motion-type stuff — throw to the backs a lot out of the backfield and probably go to three or four receiver type offenses."

The Panthers are coming off a last-second 20-18 victory over Chicago in their season opener. Bobby Hebert, the quarterback who missed most of Michigan's training camp while a contract dispute was resolved, completed 20 of 34 passes for 296 yards and two touchdowns.

Doug Williams' USFL debut as quarterback of the Oullaws was hardly more auspicious than Rozier's — completions on nine of 22 passes for 62 yards — but he did throw a 12-yard pass to running back Derek Hughes for the winning touchdown in the downpour.

"Doug did an excellent job of controlling the game under such poor weather conditions," said Oullaw Coach Woody Widenhofer. "I always expect the offense to be a little behind the defense this early. I've always felt our defense would be good."

Expos owner clears air with expensive catcher

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — An early February private meeting between owner Charles Bronfman of the Montreal Expos and his highly paid catcher, Gary Carter, apparently has cleared the air between them.

The meeting was the first between the two men since the last day of the 1983 season, when Bronfman suggested the team had erred badly in signing the all-star catcher to a $15 million, seven-year contract.

"I knew we were wrong two months before we signed him, and the day we signed him — and I'll know it until my dying days," said Bronfman during the final game of the season.

Bronfman said he had invited Carter to his home here for a "general discussion on the team."

In answer to questions, Bronfman said he did not regret making the statement and did not apologize to Carter.

Although surprised Bronfman had mentioned the meeting because "he wanted it confidential," Carter filled in a few details.

"He wants to win every bit as much as all of us do," said Carter.

"I'm sure his peers, his businessmen friends get after him — he's trying to find the right combination — maybe that's why they traded Al Oliver," said Carter.

Bronfman suggested Carter should cut down on his outside interests this year and concentrate on baseball — and when I told him I wasn't going to spend as much time with the media this year, he said 'ah that's good.'"
