Senate calls for 'Star Wars' limits

By LEE BYRD
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate, after a secret session over Soviet military advances in space, approved 61-28 on Tuesday night legislation requiring President Reagan to attempt "in good faith" to negotiate the strictest possible limitations on anti-satellite weapons.

Without that commitment, the administration would be barred from testing an American anti-satellite device against objects in space. The first such test is set for this fall.

Though the Senate measure represented a compromise between Reagan's supporters and critics who would have imposed strict arms control requirements, it was a serious rebuff to his policy on space weapons.

Reagan told Congress earlier this year that there is little point in seeking a treaty banning the testing or deployment of anti-satellite weapons because it would be virtually impossible to verify compliance.

Annual summit sessions proposed

WASHINGTON — Senate Minority Leader Frank Lautenberg (D-N.J.) today proposed annual summit sessions between the United States and the Soviet Union to discuss arms control and security issues.

Lautenberg said the sessions would be held in Washington and Moscow, alternating years. He said the sessions would be held in Washington and Moscow, alternating years. He said the sessions would be held in Washington and Moscow, alternating years.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., told Wallop that "if you're going to do that, we might as well assign a dollar amount to the defense bill and leave it to the president to spend it in accordance with national security interests. You're cutting Congress out of the process."

Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., and 49 others had pressed for an amendment to a $29 billion spending plan, for the Pentagon that would have asked Reagan to declare a moratorium and tests and to "immediately resume" talks for a "verifiable ban or strict limitations" on anti-satellite, or ASAT, weaponry.

Presser withdrew that language in favor of a "compromise" engineered by Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and others that dropped the word "ban" and demanded bargaining efforts instead for the "strictest possible limitations."

And it would allow Reagan to test the American ASAT only if he also certifies to Congress that such experiments are "necessary to avert clear and irrevocable harm to the national security."

Presser's original amendment triggered the secret session, lasting 2 hours, 45 minutes, and the first on the Senate floor since court aid to Nicaraguan rebels was discussed April 26, 1983.

The debate focused on the Soviet and U.S. weapons designed to blind each other's spy and communications satellites. Presser's original amendment also called for talks with Moscow on all space-based or space-directed weaponry, encompassing the futuristic defenses envisioned by Reagan.

Scores of teachers, House speaker at meeting

School board approves 'lean' budget

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls School Board approved a 1984-85 budget that is, at least on paper, 10 percent larger than this year's.

The action came at a session attended by House Speaker Tom Slivers and almost 50 teachers, who complained that the increased spending level still does not give them the raises earmarked for them by the Legislature.

Although the budget was approved before teachers had a chance to speak, board Chairman Robert Knighton said the board would consider amending the budget later. School Clerk Jenny Dougherty said the budget included $78,000 there is no chance the school will collect from property taxes.

Even with cutbacks in some budget areas, the district will have to dip into money appropriated by the Legislature for increasing teacher salaries to cover other salary costs.

Connie Hutchison, a Twin Falls teacher who will head the Idaho Education Association next year, said teachers realized that the budget would be tight in the coming year. But it had been tight in the last five years, she said.

She questioned a total of about $8,000 budgeted for the superintendent and one assistant superintendent's raises plus $11,000 to replace a budget officer with a second assistant superintendent.

Superintendent Gary Piller replied that, with painting expenses Hutchison also questioned, "you are talking about $20,000. That's not going to save the district. We have streamlined, been very strict."

Hutchison said the money budgeted for teacher salary increases looked slim, when compared with other schools in the area.

The district would be able to come closer to those estimates if the money had been divided among the districts according to how many teachers they employed, rather than by a funding unit that favors small schools, Piller said.

"If you look 180 degrees behind you, you'll see the real source of the problem," board member John McVee said, pointing at Slivers. "The state made that teacher appropriation, released it to the press and then underbudgeted the rest of the system."

Piller called the state appropriation not earmarked for teachers "ridiculous." "You can't operate a district that way."

The administrators should have brought their complaints to the Legislature during the session, not after it was over, Slivers said. Education did receive a good increase when the $20.3 million appropriation for teacher salaries and increases in benefits were limited, he said.

House wants proof of right to job in U.S.

Voting on immigration bill

By MIKE FEINSLBERG
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Amid arguments that it would be a burden on the federal government to accommodate every foreign-born worker, the House of Representatives Tuesday to require every U.S. employer of four or more workers to make certain that his employees have a legal right to be in the United States.

The House also voted to exempt employers of three or fewer workers from all provisions of the immigration control bill it has been debating.

That would mean, for example, that households that hire illegal aliens as maids or to care for children would not be subject to the criminal or civil penalties provided for in the measure.

But labor contractors who bring migrant workers into the country would still be covered, even if they hire three or fewer.

The proposal to exempt small employers was offered by Rep. Sam Hall, D-Texas, it carried by voice vote.

number telephone verification system. An employer could call the number to see if a job applicant's Social Security card was valid.

Opponents said that government computers to accommodate that system would cost $100 million and Rep. Donald Edwards, D-Calif., said the proposal was a step toward a national surveillance system under which authorities could keep track of the movements of job applicants.

The proposal was also offered by Hall.

The proposal to require employers of four or more workers to attest — under penalty of law — that their employees are eligible to work in this country was adopted by a 321-97 vote.

That one-sided vote was a preliminary indication that the House was likely to accept another proposal, making it illegal to hire aliens who enter the country without proper immigration papers. Hiring undocumented workers is not now against federal law.

The provision — carrying warnings, fines and even prison terms for employing undocumented workers — is the key to enforcement of a bill designed to keep millions of foreigners from crossing U.S. borders to find illegal jobs in American society.

It was likely the House would vote Wednesday on the question of penalizing employers of illegal aliens.

In another vote, the House rejected, 253-186, an amendment by Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., that would have softened the penalties for hiring illegal aliens.

Hawkins' proposal would have made such hiring a civil rather than a criminal offense, and would have given workers new means of seeking remedies if they believed they had suffered discrimination based on national origin.

The House also adopted, 404-9, an amendment proposed by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., to provide fines for employers who discriminate against workers authorized to be in the country on the basis of their nationality, to setting up a "roll-free"

Court deals setback to affirmative action

By RICHARD CARELLI
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Employers may not be forced to scrap seniority plans that favor white men to protect "affirmative action" gains by minorities and women when hard times hit, the Supreme Court said Tuesday.

The court, by a 5-4 vote, ruled that the Memphis Fire Department wrongly insulated blacks from possible layoffs or demotions when that Tennessee city faced an economic crisis in 1981.

In its most important affirmative action ruling of the 1980s, the court said special preferences to make up for past discrimination are available only to people who can prove they were discriminated by such bias — and not to a "class" of people such as all blacks in an employer's workforce.

Reaction, Miranda Rule weakened — A6

The decision was a major defeat for civil rights and feminist organizations, and a victory for the Reagan administration.

Government lawyers had urged the court to limit the scope of a civil rights law banning on-the-job bias based on sex or race when non-discriminatory seniority systems are involved.

Writing for the court, Justice Byron R. White said a court order protecting blacks from layoffs within the Memphis Fire Department violated Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 — a major anti-discrimination law.

In essence, the justices said the court order violated the rights of whites who had more seniority than the protected blacks.

White was joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Lewis F. Powell, William H. Rehnquist and Sandra Day O'Connor.

Justice John Paul Stevens, joined in the result by Justices Harry Blackmun, William J. Brennan and Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, dissented.

Led by Blackmun, the dissenters said the court should have dismissed the case as moot, or largely irrelevant, those involved, because all white firefighters who temporarily lost their jobs in Memphis were rehired a month after their layoffs.

Legal battles over the racial makeup of the Memphis Fire Department's police department used the city over alleged racial bias.

Although Memphis officials never admitted any discriminatory purpose in past hiring practices, the city and federal authorities settled the suit with a consent decree providing for interim hiring goals.

In 1977, Carl Stotts, a black fire captain, sued the department, charging that he and other blacks had been denied promotions because of their race. Stotts had eventually become a "class action" representative of all blacks in the fire department.

The suit was settled by a 1980 consent decree in which the city pledged itself to a hiring goal of 50 percent blacks and promised to promote qualified blacks into 20 percent of the department's vacancies.

Again, the city admitted no wrongdoing.

The 1980 agreement mentioned nothing about layoffs. But in the spring of 1981, Memphis proposed city-wide layoffs of public employees in the face of what one court called "an unanticipated economic crisis."

Stotts asked U.S. District Judge Robert McRae to insulate blacks from any possible layoffs or demotions by modifying the 1980 consent decree McRae had approved.

The judge did so, and his modification banning layoffs of blacks was upheld by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in 1982.

Tuesday's decision reversed the lower court ruling.

"As our cases have made clear, Title VII protects bona fide seniority systems, and it is inappropriate to deny an innocent employee the benefits of his seniority in order to provide a remedy in a pattern or practice suit such as this," White said.

The opinion relied heavily on a 1977 Supreme Court decision that requires that neutral seniority systems from civil rights lawsuits.

Church in conservative turn

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Charles Stanley, a conservative Alabama minister, easily defeated two opponents Tuesday to become president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Stanley won 7,892 of the 14,022 votes cast to out-distance runner-up Grady Cozzetta of Nashville, Tenn., who had 3,874 votes. The Rev. John Sullivan, the current first vice president of the convention, finished third with 3,174 votes.

Stanley's election at the Southern Baptist Convention's annual meeting was a victory for conservatives over moderates in the 14 million-member denomination.

Paul Pressler, a leader of the conservative movement, said Stanley's election clearly showed what Southern Baptists wanted.

400 guests flee hotel fire

KILL DEVIL HILLS, N.C. (AP) — A moldering fire in a linen closet filled a four-story Holiday Inn with smoke Tuesday night, forcing more than 400 guests to evacuate the building, authorities said.

No injuries were reported in the 7:30 p.m. MDT/evacuation, which was ordered, said Diane Moulthrop, assistant hotel manager.

Some guests checked out nearby hotels for the night, while others said they would wait in the parking lot or at a nearby inn. Firemen cleared the smoke from the building, she said.

Fire Chief Bill Guard said the damage to the hotel was minor and the blaze was contained in a linen closet.

Employment figures bullish

WASHINGTON (AP) — A half-dozen states recorded unemployment exceeding 10 percent in April, only one-fourth as many as there were the same month a year earlier, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Tuesday.

In its monthly survey of state labor markets across the country, the BLS found that only one state — Alaska — actually saw its unemployment rate rise from April 1983 through last April. In that state, where energy industries have been booming, unemployment stood at 11.8 percent in April, 9.3 percent higher than in April 1983.

West Virginia, with a 14.9 percent rate, had the highest unemployment rate in the country in April, although Puerto Rico, for which the BLS keeps labor force statistics, recorded an unemployment rate of 20.1 percent.

The other states with unemployment in double digits were Alaska, 11.8; Alabama and Michigan, 11.0; District of Columbia, 10.7; Washington state, 10.3; and Oregon, 10.0. The lowest rates were in Nebraska, 4.1 percent; Connecticut and Virginia, 4.3; and New Hampshire and South Dakota, 4.5.

Communist summit starts

MOSCOW (AP) — Leaders of 10 communist nations began their first economic summit conference in 13 years Tuesday, with some ally voicing concern about energy supplies, believed to be a crucial issue facing the Soviet bloc.

Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko opened the three-day summit of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, known as Comecon, behind closed doors in the Grand Kremlin Palace, the official news agency Tass reported.

True and other official news outlets maintained a virtual news blackout on the meeting, attended by the Communist leaders of all Comecon member nations except Cuba. There was no word on why Fidel Castro, who was represented by Cuban politician Manuel Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, missed the first Comecon summit to be held since 1971.

Iran-Iraq agreement wobbly

By The Associated Press

Iran and Iraq appeared to be observing their agreement Tuesday to cease attacks on civilians. But the Persian Gulf combatants traded warlike words and both sides suggested the agreement isn't likely to work for long.

The foreign ministers of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council gathered in Saudi Arabia to consider ways to safeguard oil tankers calling on gulf ports.

An Iraqi field commander said both his army and Iran's seemed to be abiding by the ban on shelling of civilian targets following a last-minute barrage on cities and towns just before the U.N.-brokered agreement took effect at 4 a.m. Tuesday (8 p.m. Monday EDT).

The foreign ministers of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and Oman — which make up the Gulf Cooperation Council — began discussions on tanker security in Taif, Saudi Arabia, on Tuesday.

Salvadorans break up unit

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The new Salvadoran government has disbanded a Treasury Police unit that was linked repeatedly by human rights groups to right-wing death squads, the commander of the security force said Tuesday.

The S-2 intelligence unit sent to Treasury Police was dissolved and its 100 agents sent to posts in the interior of the country, according to the report by Col. Rinaldo Golcher, the Treasury Police commander.

He said in a telephone interview that the unit was abolished earlier this week because of reports that some S-2 personnel were involved in illegal acts and also to improve the "image" of the Treasury Police.

Dissolution of S-2 was the biggest step taken so far to crack down on rightist violence by President Jose Napoleon Duarte, who was installed in office June 1.

Midwest tornadoes, floods chase hundreds from homes

By DAVID L. LANGFORD
The Associated Press

Thunderstorms produced more death-dealing tornadoes and flash floods that chased hundreds from their homes in the Midwest on Tuesday, while "Bad News" got a brief break from a heat wave that has killed at least 10 people.

An elderly couple was killed shortly after midnight in South Dakota as a twister destroyed their farm and ripped a path five miles long and three-fourths of a mile wide in the Rowena and Valley Springs area just east of Sioux Falls.

In Missouri, flooding along the Platte River routed about 400 people from their homes during the night — 225 in the Bean Lake area and 150 in the community of Tracy. A sheriff's office dispatcher said — an determined number of people — were evacuated from the Lewis and Clark Villages at Sugar Lake.

As the Platte's waters receded, an official said the evacuees would not be able to return home before Wednesday night.

A 16-year-old Platte City youth was rescued by a patrol boat after he became trapped in high water Monday afternoon, and a man who was swept away during the rescue had to be pulled out with ropes.

In Weston, W.Va., a county medical examiner said Tuesday he thinks the heat wave in the Northeast was at least partly to blame for the deaths of three patients in the past week at Weston State Hospital where 87 window air conditioning units were turned off to save money.

The warden of the West Virginia Penitentiary in Moundsville, a 121-year-old stone fortress where temperatures inside climbed into the 90s this week, said Tuesday he's trying to get truckloads of ice.

"I'm looking into getting ice to pass out tonight," said Warden Manfred Holland. "We hope to get a truck from some ice company to make a run once a day. Kind of help them make it through the night."

A reading of 88 degrees at Beckley, W.Va., eclipsed by one degree a record for the date set in 1976.

Meanwhile, the storms in the Midwest dropped up to 8 inches of rain from central Nebraska and southeastern South Dakota to Minnesota while temperatures were up to 20 degrees cooler over the past few days in parts of the Northeast which had suffered from five consecutive days of record or near-record heat and oppressive humidity.

Two dozen tornadoes touched down Monday in Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and South Dakota. Thunderstorms packing winds gusting to 90 mph and hail as big as baseballs assaulted parts of Nebraska.

An undisclosed number of people were injured Tuesday night when a tornado struck two farm homes near Bruning in south-central Nebraska.

"We have had personal injuries, and we have had damage to farmsteads," said Thayer County Civil Defense Director Chuck Hinz.

The tornado cut a trace 4 miles wide and 12 miles long, Hinz said. Roofs were ripped off farm buildings near Carleton before the twister continued toward Bruning, he added.

"There's a lot of power down and a lot of roads closed because of hot lines," Hinz said.

While it was 87 degrees at Richmond, Va., and 93 at Washington, D.C., on Tuesday afternoon, it was 79 in New York City and 77 in Boston.

But forecasters said it would be only a temporary respite. The mercury was expected to catapult back into the mid and upper 90s on Wednesday in the Northeast.

Hugh Crowther of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo., said, "This doesn't appear to be a real cooling trend."

Rivers were rising rapidly in central Nebraska, where 3 to 5 inches of rain fell overnight, with 7 to 8 inches reported in a band from St. Libory to Calro, where 4 inches fell in a couple of hours.

Several tornadoes touched down late Monday near St. Libory, 11 miles north of Grand Island, destroying several buildings, derailing five railroad cars, and leaving the town without power.

"We've got trees down all over and power lines down all over," said a spokeswoman for the Hall County sheriff's department.

In southeastern South Dakota, up to 5 inches of rain prompted flood warnings along the Big Sioux River and its tributaries.

The southern two-thirds of Minnesota and two dozen counties in central and northeast Nebraska were covered by a flood watch.

Also urged administrators to use every effort to get the source intended" the money earmarked for teacher pay raises, although he said that legislators did not want to come into the districts to say how the money was to be spent.

In the budget the board slashed administrative travel and supplies by $18,000 and Knigton says it may be cut further when amendments are made. No money was set aside for capital outlay and the fuel fund was increased by only $2,000. The budget includes raises of about 6 percent for administrators and teachers and a five cent raise an hour in addition to experience raises for other employees.

The board meeting continued at press time.

Court

In other decisions Tuesday, the court ruled, 8-1, in a West Virginia case that states may not impose wholesale sales taxes only on out-of-state companies selling products within their borders.

Used a Boston case to decide, again by an 8-1 vote, that federal courts lack the authority to halt union elections once they have begun.

Ruled unanimously in a Minnesota case that states may take over an abandoned railroad-track to restore rail service, even if the original railroad company could make more money by ripping up the line and using it elsewhere.

Plan to free Social Security

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A panel set up by Congress unveiled a blueprint Tuesday for making the beleaguered Social Security Administration an independent federal agency instead of a component of the giant Department of Health and Human Services.

Elmer B. Staats, the former comptroller general who chaired the Congressional Panel on Social Security, Organization, said strong steps were needed to give Social Security "a coherent operational mission" and to strengthen its management.

"Prior to the mid-1970s, Social Security was considered one of the premier federal administrative agencies for operating efficiency and quality of public service. Since then, for a number of reasons, (it) has lost its public reputation for administrative excellence," the panel said.

The panel decried the revolving door at the top of the $200 billion agency, which has had nine commissioners in the past dozen years — four of whom, including the incumbent, Martha McSweeney, were only acting commissioners.

The panel urged creating a new, stronger administrator's post to run the agency and jettisoning several of the welfare programs Social Security now runs. Those programs — Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Child Support Enforcement, Low Income Home Energy Assistance and Refugee Resettlement — would remain within HHS.

Social Security, by itself, would be left to run the old age, survivors and disability insurance programs and Supplemental Security Income, a welfare program for the aged, blind and disabled.

The panel said responsibility for running Medicare and Medicaid should be kept outside the Social Security Administration. The health programs now are run by the Health Care Financing Administration, another component of HHS.

States held a news conference that the public could expect better services at Social Security's 1,400 offices if its structure were overhauled.

Meanwhile, Rep. Edward R. Roybal, the chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging and other members of Congress introduced a bill that would make Social Security independent under the control of a five-member governing board nominated by the president.

The panel said Social Security during the past decade:

- Bore the brunt of a decline in public confidence resulting from the two major financial crises the program faced in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

- "Became inundated with appeals and tired in conflicts with the states and federal courts over the administration of congressionally-mandated (disability) reviews."
- Corrected erroneous benefit payment problems and cut delays in handling backlogs of earnings reports "only after such administrative failings had received widespread public attention and criticism."
- "Was unable for a prolonged period to take decisive and sustained action to upgrade its deteriorating computer system."
- Experienced serious difficulties starting Supplemental Security Income in 1974.

The panel recommended that the agency be headed by a single, strong administrator with high rank who would be appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate for a term of four years.

It also urged that a nine-member, bipartisan Social Security Advisory Board be established within the agency to oversee management and assess policy issues. Its members, who would serve six-year overlapping terms, would meet at least twice a month and advise the agency. Congress and the president.

Families seek settlement

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The families of four of eight teen-agers killed in a fire at an amusement park's Haunted Castle filed suit in federal court Tuesday seeking $500 million for each family.

The wrongful death suit alleged the owners of the Six Flags Great Escape park were "reckless, negligent and wanton" in designing, maintaining and running the Haunted Castle.

The castle was made up of a series of trailers that the owners said turned into 2,000-degree ovens during the May 11 fire at the park in Jackson Township.

In addition to the $500 million for each family, the suit seeks $200 million for the victims' pain and suffering right before their deaths, and another $200 million for alleged "willful misconduct" by the defendants.

Official accused of ethics violation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The special counsel of the Federal Merit Systems Protection Board on Tuesday accused a high-ranking official of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service of conduct "adversely affecting the confidence of the public in the integrity of the government."

K. William O'Connor, the special counsel, asked the merit systems board to take disciplinary action against Richard D. Williams, former deputy director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, the federal agency which mediates disputes between managers and employees in private business.

Two men arrested near Bush's home

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two men, one armed with a pellet gun, were arrested several hundred yards from Vice President George Bush's home Tuesday evening.

President Reagan was visiting there to help Bush celebrate his 60th birthday, the Secret Service said.

White House assistant press secretary Mark Weinberg said the incident did not appear to be related to Reagan's visit. "It looks like they were just in the wrong place at the wrong time," said Peter Teeley, press spokesman for Bush.

Teeley said two men — ages 19 and 21 — were seen by a female member of the Secret Service uniformed division outside the fence surrounding the Bush compound in northwest Washington. She asked what they were carrying in a paper bag and when they refused to answer, she checked and found a pellet gun, said Mike Farr, an agent in the Secret Service's public affairs office. Teeley said the men also were carrying "a quantity of money" and "frankly it looks like they may have been involved in a robbery prior to their arrest."

Teeley said the pair were apprehended "quite a ways away, at least a couple hundred yards" from the vice president's mansion.

He said the incident was "totally unrelated to anything going on at the house... There was nothing to be concerned about because it was an unrelated incident."

The Secret Service said it anticipated at least one of the two would be charged with carrying a prohibited weapon.

Weinberg said Reagan was informed of the incident by his military aide, Lt. Col. Charles Brower IV.

District of Columbia police said the men were arrested near a gate of the U.S. Naval Observatory. Bush's mansion is located on the observatory's grounds. An officer, who did not want to be identified, said the men were taken to 2nd District police headquarters for processing.

Reagan's visit to Bush's home was not on the president's schedule and was arranged at the last minute. Accompanied by his wife, Nancy, the president arrived at the Bush's home at 3:32 p.m. MDT and was greeted by the vice president and his wife, Barbara. The president carried a large box wrapped in gold paper under his arm.

Congressional haggling over deficit continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders lobbed challenges to negotiate at each other Tuesday, adding to the partisan squabbling that has stalled efforts to resolve differences between House and Senate plans to trim enormous federal budget deficits.

The wrangling is raising doubts about whether Congress can do anything about the red ink this year.

"If we fail to get the job done, it's going to be damaging to the economy," said Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee.

"If the (deficit-reduction) action is not completed, I think both parties will suffer and suffer badly," Jones added.

In April, the Democrat-controlled House passed a $182.4 billion deficit-reduction plan. On May 18, the Republican-controlled Senate passed a $140.1 billion package supported by President Reagan.

Both plans combine tax increases with cuts on military and domestic spending in an effort to trim federal red ink, projected to total $600 billion over the next three years.

But only slight progress is being made in resolving some of the differences between relatively non-controversial items in the tax and spending portions of the deficit-reduction plans.

For example, House and Senate negotiators quickly agreed Tuesday on a $2.6 billion package of non-controversial measures designed to cut Medicare spending, but remained deadlocked on tougher Medicare items such as raising the premium beneficiaries pay for coverage of doctors' fees and freezing physician fees.

Items the conferees agreed on included setting up a fee schedule for outpatient diagnostic laboratory tests, expected to save $1.2 billion, and limiting Medicare coverage for treatment of a toenail condition, expected to save $37 million.

Despite differences, summit a success

The summit of the seven industrialized nations was a success this year as it has not always been in the past, reaffirming the unity of these nations, asserting a global economic responsibility and, perhaps most important, offering a more conciliatory approach to East-West relations than a year ago at Williamsburg, Va.

Economics are the raison d'être of this particular annual gathering, a subject easier to talk about this year than last year and the year before. The leaders had cause for encouragement as the American-driven recovery begins to have a widening effect. That improvement was recognized implicitly as vulnerable, however, as they affirmed the importance of trying to restrain inflation, interest rates and government budget deficits to assure a continuation and a proliferation of recovery. They paid particular attention to one of the industrial nations' greatest failures, the high rate of unemployment, and proposed vigorous programs to encourage job creation.

The global sense of responsibility was notable in two elements of the summit.

In a commitment to enlarged efforts to help the Third-World nations both with their debt crisis and with their lagging development, with an emphasis on expanding the role of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

In a new statement of determination to "pursue the search for extended political dialogue and long-term cooperation with the Soviet Union and her allies."

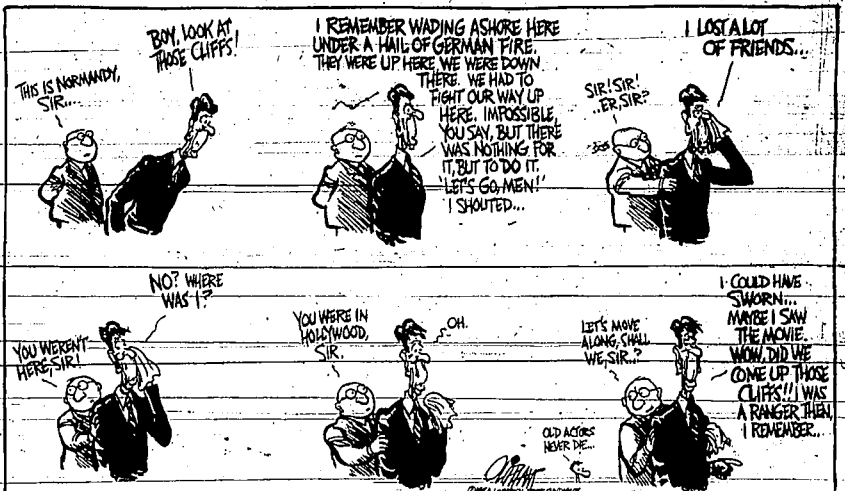

The more conciliatory approach to East-West relations reflects the rising impatience of citizens in the seven nations represented at the summit with the disappointments in efforts to control arms and reduce war-threatening tensions. The leaders, who only a year ago seemed more concerned about demonstrating a solidarity of toughness, joined together in declarations that invite a relevant response from Moscow, something more than the chill propaganda rejections that continued in the Kremlin on Monday.

There was always the risk that this summit might fall prey to the political pressures under which the heads of state met. Only Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau of Canada, just weeks away from retirement, was free of partisan domestic considerations. Those electoral factors may have encouraged some of the generalities, may have discouraged some of the efforts to deal more specifically with the biggest problem of all, the American deficit and the high interest rates in the United States. But summits are not likely to survive the pillorying of individual states. It is a forum for generalities.

So President Reagan escaped the specific criticism that many of the European allies feel about the American economic situation. And he in turn was swept along on proposals that he might otherwise have resisted, for example, supporting the strengthening of World Bank medium- and long-term lending to poor nations, something that he alone had obstructed earlier in the year.

Significantly, the summit did not dissolve into political posturing—its communicate- reflected the contributions of all, not just of the largest of the nations represented. And, most welcome, the unity of these nations evidently was cemented by their commitments to peaceful relations, to economic development shared with all nations.

Knowledge still weak on El Salvador

Barry Sussman

WASHINGTON — With all the attention being paid to El Salvador and Nicaragua today, you would think Americans might know a little more about U.S. policy toward those nations than they did a year or two ago. But that is not the case.

In fact, the most recent Washington Post-ABC News poll, conducted May 16 to May 22, shows that Americans' knowledge of these Central American policies has declined.

One question in the survey, in which 1,511 people were interviewed, asked people if they knew which side the United States was backing in El Salvador, the government or the rebels who are fighting the government.

Only 45 percent of those interviewed stated correctly that we were backing the government. This was down from both May 1983, when 55 percent were able to answer that question correctly, and April 1982, when 63 percent knew the answer.

As for Nicaragua, it is a greater mystery than El Salvador for most citizens.

Only 33 percent of those surveyed last month were able to answer correctly that the United States is backing the rebels who are trying to overthrow the Sandinista government; 25 percent thought we were backing the government.

In a sense, there has been some progress in knowledge about Nicaragua. In a January Post-ABC News poll, more people had believed that the United States was backing the Sandinistas (27 percent) than the rebels (25 percent).

But overall, only 21 percent of the people interviewed were able to answer both the Nicaragua and El Salvador questions correctly. Thirty-six percent could answer one or the other, and 43 percent could not get either right.

The portion getting both right was lower than it was the last time the two questions were asked in the same Post-ABC News poll.

Thirty percent of the men interviewed — but only 12 percent of the women — were able to get both questions right this time. So there is a gender gap, not only toward President Reagan personally but toward what his foreign policy is perceived as being as well.

Reagan has said that people who understand his policies toward the region tend to agree with them. But if knowledge of which side we are backing is any indication of understanding, the Post-ABC News poll suggests that the president is mistaken.

Take those who knew which side we are backing in both El Salvador and Nicaragua. Asked whether they approved or disapproved of the way Reagan is handling problems in Central America, 53 percent said they disapproved, while 43 percent said they approved; 4 percent expressed no opinion.

Among those who could answer one of the two questions, 51 percent disapproved and 42 percent approved, with 7 percent offering no opinion.

And among those who could not answer either question right, 50 percent nonetheless said they disapproved of Reagan's handling of Central American policy, while 31 percent approved and 19 offered no opinion.

The latest Washington Post-ABC News poll also contained some intriguing findings in the political realm.

One of the questions some political observers have been asking, for example, is whether the Democrats might end up selecting someone other than Walter F. Mondale, Gary Hart or Jesse L. Jackson at the party's July convention in San Francisco. Well, they won't if ordinary Democrats across the country have their way.

In the Post-ABC News survey, only 17 percent of the registered Democrats interviewed said the better idea for the Democrats would be to select a new candidate. Seventy-nine percent said the better idea would be to nominate one of the three now running; 4 percent expressed no opinion.

The poll also delved into another matter of concern to political observers: how concerned Americans are about the lack of stability in the presidency.

Noting that Americans have had four presidents in the past 10 years, the poll asked people if they felt that changing presidents that often has been bad for this country, good for the country, or had not made much difference one way or the other.

The result—41 percent said that it has been bad for the country, with 32 percent saying they feel strongly that way. Twenty percent said that it has been good for the country, and 25 percent said that it has not made much difference.

What will be the effect for Ronald Reagan in 1984? It could well be good. Of those who feel changing presidents so often has been bad for the country, 49 percent said that the problem will be a major factor in their vote this November.

Wage act would help teens locate jobs

Rep. Ron Packard

The Youth Employment Opportunity Wage Act of 1984 is the strongest attack to date on the lack of employment opportunities for our young people.

Despite a history of federal programs targeted to youth over the past two decades, youth unemployment has continued to increase. Yet critics of a summer wage for youth argue that we pursue more make-work programs rather than give the private sector a chance to help lower a teenage unemployment rate that is a national disgrace—19.4 percent for teen-agers overall and 44.8 percent for black youth.

Many young people are unemployed because they lack the skills to earn the $3.35-an-hour minimum wage. Government simply cannot afford to fund all the job training necessary for young people, but the private sector could if employers were permitted to pay (consistently) less than the minimum wage.

Certainly it would be better for teen-agers to receive $2.50 an hour than to have no job at all.

The first job is generally the most difficult to find, and it is the most important because the self-discipline and basic work skills that one learns are invaluable ingredients for a successful career.

Getting that first job is one of life's most exciting accomplishments. Almost every individual who is employed today remembers the first job that he or she held. We remember the lucky break that we received even though we were inexperienced, and we remember what the job taught us about the world of work.

Many young people are not getting the opportunity to find that crucial first job. They do not have the chance to learn the self-discipline, the ability to produce and the interpersonal skills essential to success almost anywhere in the world of work. The Youth Employment Opportunity Wage Act could give hundreds of thousands of young people those opportunities.

The idea of a lower wage to provide summer jobs for teen-agers has been debated for quite a while, and several potential problems have been raised. The Youth Employment Opportunity Wage Act is designed to solve these problems.

The proposal would allow a minimum $2.50-an-hour wage for those under 20 only between May 1 and Sept. 30; the current minimum wage would prevail for teen-agers hired before Feb. 1.

And employers would be prohibited from laying off workers in order to replace them with the lower-paid teens.

An employer who violated either of these prohibitions would be subject to civil and criminal penalties, including a $10,000 fine, six months in prison and payment of back wages. These are strong sanctions, and we would continue to look for additional ways to prevent any abuse of the program.

It also should be noted that the Youth

Employment Opportunity Wage Act would be a trial program. It would end in 1987, and the Department of Labor would be required to submit a report to Congress evaluating the program's success.

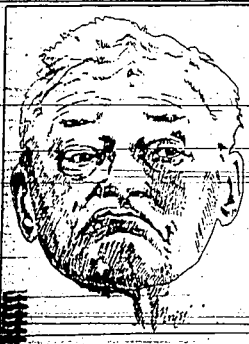

Those important protections may not impress some critics, but they have persuaded the National Conference of Black Mayors, the Opportunities Industrialization Centers, the National Federation of Independent Businesses and the Printing Industries of America.

Clearly, those groups disagree with those who charge that a summer youth wage actually is an attempt to benefit the fast-food industry, whose employees are primarily young people. Based on the industry distribution of current minimum-wage jobs, more than two-thirds of the new jobs would be created in companies other than eating and drinking establishments, such as grocery stores, service stations, hotels, motels, movie theaters and amusement parks.

The Youth Employment Opportunity Wage Act presents Congress with two choices: It can make our unemployed youth pawns of partisan politics and raise a smoke screen of confusing studies and statistics that purport to disprove the advantages of a summer wage for youth, or it can pass this bill and give our unemployed young people a fighting chance to get their first job.

Rep. Ron Packard, R-Calif., is the author of the House of the Youth Employment Opportunity Wage Act.

Curmudgeon Swisher reminds press to help set priorities

PERRY SWISHER Holding our feet to the fire

I hereby propose that we create in Idaho the position of state curmudgeon. I further propose that we give the job to Perry Swisher.

Let me explain what prompts this suggestion. This week, there was something of a gathering of eagles and a couple of eaglets in Boise. The occasion was the annual convention of newspapers that avail themselves of the services of The Associated Press in Idaho, Utah and Spokane, Wash.

If you happen to believe all the stereotypes about newspaper people, you may assume that the gathering of the practitioners would be unique. If not colorful. Allow me to lay that assumption to rest.

A convention of newspaper people is barely distinguishable from a similar soiree for accountants, or bankers or, God forbid, lawyers. In fact, if there is a lamentable trend in my craft in recent years, it is this: Newspaper people are starting to act like and talk like and dress like bankers and accountants and, God forbid, lawyers.

I suspect that trend is a reaction to some fourth economic times that have beset our business. We have been nicked by the folks that purvey their odd brand of drive over the air waves. The response, more so at some papers than others, is to come up with our own brand of drive.

My industry is trying to prove that it can be as exciting as the tube. The trendier practitioners of the craft tend to talk about topics like market penetration, new highs in fluff and how to package and present that fluff in living color.

That is not to say that trend has taken over, at least not at the good papers. But it is still enough of a trend to be in evidence, especially when newspaper folks gather to talk about what is just all the latest rage, as they did this week in Boise.

It was enough in evidence to become disturbing to me as I sat through the various panel discussions that dominated Monday's gathering. I kept wondering if these nattily attired gentlemen remembered the prime charge of a newspaper, which is, as my first publisher explained to me, to print the news and to raise hell.

Enter Perry Swisher. Swisher, now a politician, is nonetheless still welcome within the ranks of newspaper types. He once was one of our own, before he fell from grace and into the politics of the state Public Utilities Commission. He was the dinner speaker for the gathering Monday.

Perry, as you may know, is not your typical politician. Most of that ilk would loom upon a gathering of publishers and editors as a chance to carry a bit of favor. He took the opportunity to deliver a swift kick in the drawers to the assembled audience.

After dismissing broadcast journalism as "mindless TV line-filing excrement," he went on to chastise those present for being more interested in their Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club memberships than they are in the traditions of the business.

Because of that, newspapers are abandoning their responsibility to exercise a leadership role in the community and the body politic, he said.

"You are the heirs of the oldest tradition in the country," he said. "Just start saying 'this is our agenda.' Just start saying what you know from your own experience to be true. It's a waste not to hear from the press."

Swisher's message was one that needs to be heard in this business right now. The irony is that it came from someone who is on the other side of the fence.

The irony is that it came from a politician. Those are the folks who have done everything in their power to foster a lap-dog relationship with the reporters who cover them.

But I got the impression from listening to Swisher's speech, which was delivered with his usual bluntness, that he was not so much concerned with the inconvenience to reporting could cause him as a politician. I think he is more concerned with the inconvenience that the lack thereof can cause all of us as Americans.

In fact, it is more than an inconvenience. It is a threat to our way of life. Swisher's message was important. I am glad he is enough of a curmudgeon to deliver it when he did.

Court ruling pleases unions, angers feminists and blacks

By TIMOTHY HARPER
The Associated Press

Feminists and civil rights leaders reacted bitterly, but union leaders applauded Tuesday's U.S. Supreme Court ruling upholding "last hired, first fired" policies.

The ruling, which may affect a number of major American cities, struck down a Memphis, Tenn., Fire Department policy. That policy protected black firefighters hired under a department-affirmative action program from being laid off in the city's 1981 economic cutbacks.

"It's an unfortunate defeat for the civil rights movement," said Charles Carter, associate general counsel for the NAACP in New York. "We were very concerned about the issue, not only in Memphis but in a number of other cities."

I just have to express our disappointment that the court saw fit to make this kind of decision."

"Another nail in the coffin, another stab in the heart of civil rights," said Dr. Emmett Burns, regional NAACP director in Baltimore. "In practicality it means they're going to be firing black folks right and left."

"What you are saying to blacks and women is we'll be with you when times are good and there's something to share, but when times are bad, you're the people who have to pay and we're not going to share the hard times with you. You're going to pay with your jobs and your livelihood," said Eleanor Smeal, former president of the National Organization for Women.

Sgt. Willie Bell, president of an organization of black police officers in Detroit, said the high court should recognize not only the importance of equal employment, but also of the importance of having minority police officers in "the first line of public safety."

"Studies have clearly reflected we need blacks and minorities on police forces," he said. In Detroit, where 800 of the 1,100 police officers laid off in economic cutbacks were black, the NAACP and the black police officers' group are suing the city and the police union.

A police union spokesman, Thomas McPhail, said making layoffs according to seniority is the fairest system. He said in "cases where an officer has been harmed by past discrimination, that should be established and he should be made whole, but not at the expense of other officers."

Other union officials agreed. "The principle of seniority has long been one of the goals we strive for at the bargaining table," said Robert J. Kelley, president of the St. Louis Labor Council. "We see seniority as one of the pillars of union contracts."

William King, president of the International Union of Electrical Workers local at the General Electric plant in Tiffin, Ohio, said, "We certainly believe in affirmative action," King added, "but we don't believe it ought to take priority over negotiated contracts."

A woman labor leader, Margi Mayermik of the Pennsylvania Women Miners Support Team, said, "Seniority does count. I agree with the ruling even though it affects women."

John McMahon, lawyer for the firefighters union in Boston, said he was also pleased that the Supreme Court decision held that someone who is laid off must prove he or she was an actual and specific victim of discrimination before being awarded back pay or being reinstated.

Justices create Miranda rule exception

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court significantly expanding police powers, said Tuesday, a suspect may be questioned before he is warned of his rights if the inquiry is prompted by concern for public safety.

The decision, starting to civil libertarians, creates what could be called a sweeping exception to the so-called "Miranda" rule established 18 years ago as a deterrent to coercive police interrogations.

A more liberal Supreme Court in 1966 that police must alert suspects that they have a right to remain silent and to have a lawyer present before questioning them.

Generally, failure to give the warning normally disqualifies any evidence obtained as a result of the questioning.

But by a 6-3 vote Tuesday, the court said New York prosecutors may introduce as evidence a gun seized by police before they gave a suspect his Miranda warnings. "We do not believe that the doctrinal underpinnings of 'Miranda' require that it be applied in all its rigor to a situation in which police officers ask questions reasonably prompted by a concern for the public safety," said Justice William H. Rehnquist for the court.

The court's dissenters said the ruling would cause "chaos" by confusing the nation's law enforcement officers.

The ruling marks the second straight day in which the court curtailed the rights of criminal suspects. On Monday, the court said that unlawfully obtained evidence may be used if a judge decides that it inevitably would have been discovered by legal means.

Tuesday's decision opens the way for Queens County, N.Y., prosecutors to try Benjamin Quarles on charges of illegal possession of a weapon.

Quarles' attorney, Steven J. Hyman of New York City, said the high court's ruling is "one of the most frightening, imaginable to individual rights."

"It opens such a Pandora's box," he said. "It surprises me they would create such an exception." Tom McCarthy, a spokesman for Queens County District Attorney John J. Santucci, said the ruling "gives public safety priority" in writing arrests.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, writing for the three dissenters, said the ruling invites "police officers to coerce defendants into making incriminating admissions and then permitting prosecutors to introduce those statements at trial."

He added: "This case is illustrative of the chaos the public safety exception will unleash."

Quarles was arrested Sept. 11, 1980, after a woman approached two police officers on patrol and told them she had been raped at gunpoint.

Man charged in Flynt case

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Convicted murderer Joseph Paul Franklin was indicted by a county grand jury Tuesday on two counts of aggravated assault in the 1978 shooting that crippled Hustler magazine publisher Larry Flynt and injured Flynt's lawyer.

The indictment charged Franklin with the ambush shooting of Flynt's Salt Lake lawyer, Gene Reeves, here on March 6, 1978, during a lunch break in Flynt's highly publicized trial on charges of distributing obscene material.

Clayton County District Attorney Bryant Huff said he was ready to try the case but would defer to Madison, Wis., authorities who want to try Franklin this fall on two murder charges. Franklin also is scheduled to go on trial July 10 in Chattanooga, Tenn., on charges stemming from a synagogue bombing and a bank robbery.

Franklin, 34, an avowed white racist, is serving four life terms on state and federal convictions stemming from the sniper slayings of two black men in Salt Lake City.

Huff said he is "ready, willing and able to go forward with the case" which he described as a "piece of cake."

Grand jurors heard three hours of testimony and examined physical and documentary evidence in the case before issuing the indictment. Each of the aggravated assault charges would carry a maximum sentence of 20 years upon conviction.

Flynt and Reeves were walking back to the courthouse in Lawrenceville 25 miles northeast of Atlanta when a gunman opened fire. The shooting left Flynt crippled below the waist, and he remains confined in a wheelchair.

Franklin, a drifter from Mobile, Ala., is imprisoned at the federal penitentiary at Marion, Ill., on the earlier state and federal convictions. He maintained his innocence in the two Salt Lake City slayings, but he told reporters the men deserved to die for "race mixing."

Shultz scoffs at Nicaragua report

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz said Tuesday that a former CIA agent who claims Nicaragua is no longer a supplier of war materiel to guerrillas in El Salvador "must be living in some other world" because the evidence of Nicaraguan complicity is clear and convincing.

Answering reporters' questions on a variety of subjects, Shultz also cast doubt on the practicality and wisdom of a suggestion by two key Senate Republican leaders that the United States propose regular summit meetings with the leaders of the Soviet Union.

And asked about the impact on East-West relations if an Italian investigatory commission concludes that Bulgarian agents backed by the Soviet KGB were behind a plot to assassinate Pope John Paul II, he said there inevitably would be "linkage" between such a finding and overall relations.

"It is horrible to contemplate that a state could make a calculated effort to murder the pope," Shultz replied. But he quickly added that the findings are not yet in and said, "I'm not accusing anybody of anything."

In an appearance before Overseas

Writers, a group of reporters covering U.S. foreign policy, Shultz was asked about statements by former CIA analyst David MacMichael that Nicaragua is not now actively supplying guerrilla insurgents in El Salvador.

The Reagan administration has based its policy of supporting anti-Sandinista rebels in Nicaragua on the assertion that Nicaragua's leftist government is actively engaged in exporting its revolution to El Salvador and elsewhere through arms shipments, training and logistical support.

Bigger oil reserve asked

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's emergency oil reserve should be doubled and its fill rate increased 50 percent despite billions of dollars in additional costs to taxpayers, the nation's largest consumer group said Tuesday.

The Consumer Federation of America said doubling the size of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve from 739 million to 1.5 billion barrels would dramatically increase U.S. ability to hold off a spike in oil prices in the event of a disruption in supplies from the war-torn Persian Gulf.

In a 101-page study, the group called the Reagan administration's plan to slow the current fill rate of the reserve from 186,000 to 145,000 barrels per day next year "a case of being penny-wise and pound-foolish."

As of Monday, the reserve was up to 407.5 million barrels, equivalent to about 85 days of U.S. imports. The Reagan administration's current plan calls for filling the reserve to its 750 million-barrel capacity by 1990 at a cost of $26.5 billion.

Reagan to open disabled games

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will travel to Long Island, N.Y., on Sunday to open the 1984 International Games of the Disabled. White House spokesman Peter Rousell announced Tuesday.

He said the president would watch the opening events and address the games participants at the Olympic Track Field in Nassau County before returning to Washington that evening. Reagan is honorary chairman of the International Games of the Disabled, a competition for amputees, the blind and other handicapped athletes from 100 nations.

Mass murderer receives chance for parole

SOLEDAD, Calif. (AP) — Juan Corona, the former farm labor contractor who has spent 13 years behind bars for slaying 25 farm workers, gets a chance at freedom today when the state considers his fitness for parole.

Corona, 50, twice convicted in one of the nation's worst mass murder cases, is a "dangerous man" who should never go free, says Sutter County District Attorney Carl Adams. The state has received letters and petitions opposing Corona's release.

But Corona's court-appointed attorney says that if Corona is paroled from the state prison in Soledad, he has several job offers.

Corona was convicted of killing 25 itinerant farm workers whose hacked and stabbed bodies were unearthed in Sutter County orchards near the Feather River about 100 miles northeast of San Francisco.

Prison officials say Corona is a loner who lives in the same protective unit that houses Sirhan Sirhan, convicted assassin of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Soledad spokeswoman Ruth Younger says Corona spends half a day in school on high school level courses and watches television and listens to a radio.

Gay Sr. declared competent for trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Marvin Gay Sr. is mentally competent to stand trial for the shooting death of his son, soul singer Marvin Gaye, a judge ruled Tuesday after reviewing a psychiatric report.

Superior Court Judge Michael Pirosh ordered Gay, 70, to appear in Municipal Court on June 20, when a preliminary hearing will be scheduled.

Pirosh made the decision after reading a psychiatric report submitted by Dr. Ronald Markman, who concluded that Gay was competent.

Gay, a retired minister, was charged with killing his son, a Grammy Award-winning singer, on April 1 following a family argument at the elder Gay's home west of downtown Los Angeles.

During the court-ordered psychiatric examination, a walnut-sized tumor was discovered near Gay's pituitary gland. Brain surgeons successfully removed the tumor May 17.

Gay, who was present for Tuesday's hearing, is in custody and has been recovering from the surgery at County-USC Medical Center jail ward.

The younger Gaye, who was killed on the eve of his 45th birthday, added the "e" to his name when he started his career, which included hits such as "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" in 1968.

Gaye died as he was beginning a career comeback fueled by the success of his 1983 hit single, "Sexual Healing," which won two 1983 Grammy awards.

Gaye's "Midnight Love" album was nominated for a 1984 Grammy, and "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" was reprised for the movie "The Big Chill."

Woman charged for murder of boyfriend

OGDEN, UTAH (AP) — A 28-year-old Ogden woman was being held in the Weber County jail Tuesday charged with second-degree murder in the shooting death of her live-in boyfriend.

Police said Marguerite Madison told them she killed her sleeping boyfriend out of fear for herself and her children.

"I took the gun and loaded it and shot him in the head," she was quoted as telling officers.

Madison called police at 5:07 p.m. Monday and reported the slaying of Lewis Bias, 31, to the police dispatcher, Ogden police Detective Sgt. Richard Peterson said Tuesday.

When officers arrived, Madison led them to a shallow grave in the basement of her Ogden apartment where Bias was found partially buried. The body was covered with a yellow blanket and some dirt, the police report said.

Madison has five children, ranging in age from seven to 13. None of the children was aware of the slaying until just prior to the call Madison placed to Ogden police.

However, according to Madison's statements to police, it was an argument about the children that led to the slaying.

Madison told police she moved the body to the basement after the shooting. She also led police to the small caliber handgun she said she used to shoot Bias. It had been wrapped in a towel and hidden in a spare refrigerator kept in a bedroom.

During a court appearance Tuesday before Third District Judge Robert Phillips, Madison told officers the dispute started when she confronted Bias with reports he had made sexual advances to one of her children.

All five of Ms. Madison's children told police that Bias had held a gun on them in the past.

Fishermen remain missing

LAS ANIMAS, Colo. (AP) — Searchers criss-crossed the surface of John Martin Reservoir and hunted its shoreline on Tuesday for some trace of three fishermen missing since Sunday.

But late Tuesday afternoon a Bent County sheriff's dispatcher said there were no new clues into the disappearance of Bruce Hall, 32; Rex Hayes, 31, and Keith Springer, 31, all of Lamar.

The reservoir is located about 20 miles east of Las Animas.

They went fishing on the reservoir about 2 p.m. on Sunday, leaving their families in campers on the shore. When the men hadn't returned by 9 p.m., their wives notified the Corps of Engineers and the Bent County sheriff.

The first search was started Sunday night with the launching of two boats, but choppy waters made the search impossible, officers said. National Weather Service forecasters said thunderstorms were reported west of the reservoir on Sunday night, moving east.

A capsized fishing boat was found on the reservoir's north side on Monday and was identified by Hall's wife as the craft the three were using. Searchers also found two life jackets.

Steam jet hurts Rancho Seco workers

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Steam shot out of a boiler being repaired at the Rancho Seco nuclear power plant Tuesday, injuring two workers, one seriously, authorities said.

The 2:32 p.m. MDT accident occurred in a non-nuclear section of the plant, located about 25 miles southeast of Sacramento, and no radiation was released, said Jeff Marx, a spokesman for the power plant.

The victims were flown to the University Medical Center here.

One of the injured, Anthony Farrace of West Sacramento, was listed in serious condition with second-degree burns over 99 percent of his body.

No information was released on the other worker.

Rancho Seco is one of two operating nuclear power facilities in California.

Government to accept nuclear wastes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said Tuesday it has begun reviewing contracts with the nation's 80 nuclear power plants to begin taking highly radioactive wastes off their hands in 1996 even if government burial or storage facilities are not completed by then.

The department is obligated to begin receiving spent fuel in 1986, whether or not a repository is in place," Ben Rusche, the new director of the Energy Department's Civilian Radioactive Waste Management Office, told reporters.

"The wastes are being stored under water in 'swimming pools' at each reactor site while utilities are paying the government $600 million a year in order to build a $20 billion permanent underground repository.

The power companies and several members of Congress have expressed doubts that the 1996 deadline for completing the repository will be met.

Rusche said the 78 contracts that the Energy Department has signed with utilities and nuclear fuel vendors under enactment of the 1982 Nuclear Waste Policy Act are being revised to specify minimum amounts of waste that the government will begin accepting Jan. 31, 1986.

"We believe this approach is the best vehicle to ensure that utilities will be able to plan for future waste disposal with certainty," Ted Garrah, the Energy Department's general counsel, said in a letter to Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., the ranking minority member on the Senate Energy Committee.

Rusche also said he is re-thinking the department's commitment to build an above-ground "Monitored Retrievable Storage" waste facility only as a last resort. It becomes clear that the first permanent underground repository won't be completed by 1986.

"It may turn out that MRS may be a very desirable thing to have," regardless of when the underground facility is completed, he said, adding that he is hiring outside consultants to review the entire waste disposal program.

Michael Lawrence, Rusche's predecessor in the civilian waste management post, had resisted pressure from Johnston and the utility industry to proceed simultaneously with both a permanent underground dump and a temporary above-ground facility capable of storing the wastes for 50 to 100 years.

Environmental and anti-nuclear groups have strongly opposed monitored retrievable storage out of concern that the spent fuel could be retrieved and then reprocessed into plutonium for use in possible future breeder reactors.

Accused smuggler defends her acts

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A woman accused of conspiring to smuggle Mexican infants into the United States for adoptions said she was "saving these babies' lives" when asked if the operation was legal, a former client testified Tuesday.

Prosecutors rested their case Tuesday against Nelda Karen Colwell after calling eight witnesses to convince a federal judge that the 39-year-old Layton, Utah, woman was the leader of a baby-smuggling ring.

One witness, Julie Coleman of Brigham City, Utah, told U.S. District Judge George Kazen that she contacted Mrs. Colwell for help in adopting a Mexican baby in February 1983 but backed out of the proposed deal before it was completed.

Mrs. Coleman said she and her husband paid a fee of $1,600 they were told covered food and medical care for a destitute Mexican mother, lawyer's fees and expenses such as telephone charges and airfare involved in locating the children.

She said Mrs. Colwell told her the baby would be picked up in Mexico within a few days of birth.

"We asked about the legality of it, how you bring them (babies) over? I asked isn't this wrong isn't it against the law? Our religion tells us to follow the laws of the land," said Mrs. Coleman, who is a Mormon like the defendant and most of the Utah couples who adopted babies through Mrs. Colwell.

"Nelda told us, 'Well, abortion is a law of the land and you can't do it. But that's the law, the law and closely as we can but there are some laws we can't follow. We're saving these babies' lives.'"

Mrs. Colwell, who waived her right to a jury trial, was indicted on three counts of conspiring to transport undocumented infants into the United States. She was indicted April 10 with three Laredo women who pleaded guilty to reduced charges in exchange for their testimony.

The three women pleaded guilty to one count of transporting an alien.

One of the three, San Juana Martinez-Lopez, testified Monday she was the go-between finding impoverished Mexican mothers willing to give up their babies to American couples who contracted with Mrs. Colwell.

Juanita Melendez-Calderon, a Laredo midwife, also pleaded guilty to an additional charge of falsifying U.S. birth certificates for the babies. Celestina Rios-Rivera admitted transporting the undocumented babies across the border as part of the conspiracy.

Mrs. Coleman said that when she was learned she would have to pay the biological mother $1,000 cash at the time she picked up the baby, she told Mrs. Colwell, "This constitutes baby buying. We can't do this."

Mrs. Coleman said Mrs. Colwell replied, "Well, don't you think this woman should be compensated for her baby? Or is it because you hate brown babies?"

Under cross-examination by defense attorney George Handy, Mrs. Coleman acknowledged she was upset about losing $1,100 of the $1,600 price that Mrs. Colwell refused to refund.

Immigration and Naturalization Service investigators have said Mrs. Colwell was involved in at least 50 adoptions, up to half of which may have been illegal.

Indian tribes sue state over cigarette seizure

SPOKANE (AP) — Some $35,000 worth of unstamped cigarettes and the truck and trailer carrying them were confiscated illegally by state authorities, according to suits filed by members of two Indian tribes.

The suits ask for return of the cigarettes and truck to the Western Washington-Indian-tribe members who own the truck.

The suits also ask that future seizures be prohibited.

The suits were filed by Kenneth D. Baker of the Shoalwater Indian Tribe and Elizabeth Gord of the Puyallup Indian Tribe.

The 5,600 cartons of cigarettes and the truck and trailer were seized May 23 on Interstate 59 east of Spokane by state Department of Revenue officers who said the shipment violated the cigarette contraband smuggling act.

The truck driver and a passenger were arrested on charges of possessing cigarettes without tax stamps.

The suits say the cigarettes were being transferred in a sealed truck between Indian reservations and were to be offered for sale only to tribal members. Thus, the suits argue, state authorities had no jurisdiction in the matter.

Under state regulations, untaxed cigarettes can be sold only to tribal members, an official for the Department of Revenue has said.

The suits say Baker bought the cigarettes from the Flathead Indian Tribe in Montana for delivery to his wholesale cigarette business, Smokey's Wholesale, located on Indian trust property in Pierce County.

Baker sells on a wholesale basis only and never sells to non-Indians, the suits say.

According to the suits, the truck and trailer carrying the cigarettes were being transported by Mrs. Gord.

The plaintiffs seek return of the property or, if it has been sold, a judgment against the Department of Revenue to cover the loss plus other damages.

The suits also seek a court order prohibiting confiscation of cigarette shipments between Indian tribes.

Cadillac-selling feud gets hotter in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — A feud is heating up in Texas and it doesn't concern oil or football. This 15-year-old rivalry is between two clans of Cadillac dealers.

The two families are tussling over the relocation of a dealership in Dallas, the second-largest Cadillac market in the country.

The trouble was stirred up when Lee DeSanders sold his downtown location for Lone Star Cadillac to real estate developers and set out to move to a new site in lucrative north Dallas.

The new lot, however, is about 10 miles from Rodger Meier Cadillac.

"We're happy with the new site," DeSanders said. "We looked all over Dallas and considered 20 different sites."

But Rodger Meier was not happy. He filed a protest with the state Motor Vehicle Commission, "throwing the proposed move into limbo."

In 1969, when Meier was first setting up his dealership, DeSanders' father unsuccessfully protested the new entry.

"This has nothing to do with that," said Meier's son, Todd, who now is vice president and general manager of Rodger Meier Cadillac. "The protest in 1969 had nothing to do with Dad."

Said DeSanders, "At the time, my father felt the city of Dallas would not support a new dealership." Lone Star Cadillac was founded in 1934 by DeSanders' grandfather and is the oldest dealership in the city.

The Meiers and DeSanders do agree on one thing — Dallasites buy a lot of Cadillacs, and a good location can help sell even more.

DeSanders said picking another downtown site would not be feasible because of the price of land and zoning ordinances. The Cadillac division of General Motors had approved the new location.

But, acting on Meier's complaint, the motor vehicle commission has scheduled a July 17 hearing on the proposed move by Lone Star Cadillac.

The commission contacted all dealers near the proposed market and gave them 15 days to file a protest, said commission executive director Robert Harding.

Of the four dealers notified within the required 25-mile radius, only one — Meier — did so, Harding said.

Meier says the area is competitive enough, and the move is not in the public interest.

Harding said he will listen to arguments and then give a written recommendation to the nine-member commission, which will make its own decision. That could take two to three months, he said.

Sikh desertions reportedly controlled

NEW-DELHI, India (AP) — A military spokesman said a mutiny by Sikh soldiers infuriated by the army's assault on their sacred shrine in Amritsar has been quelled and there were no new desertions Tuesday.

The death toll from last week's battle at the Golden Temple compound rose to 1,220 and civilian and military sources said it was likely to reach 1,300. Soldiers were still removing bodies from the temple grounds and cremating them in mass funeral pyres.

Defense Ministry spokesman M.L. Juneja said the Sikh soldiers abandoned their army bases to join civilians in protest marches after being influenced by rumors that the Golden Temple was damaged in the army attack.

There were no desertions Tuesday and the situation was under control, Juneja said.

Military sources said at least 2,000 Sikh soldiers deserted their army bases in eastern, northern and western India last weekend and headed for Punjab and New Delhi to protest the army attack on the 17th century shrine.

At least 46 deserters were killed in gun battles with military and police pursuers, 600 were arrested and most of the others surrendered, said the sources who spoke on condition they not be identified.

About 1,200 Sikh deserters from Bihar state have surrendered. In neighboring Uttar Pradesh and given up their efforts to reach Punjab, said the United News of India quoting official sources.

UPI said two civilians were killed in skirmishes with the deserters and a large quantity of arms and ammunition was seized from those who surrendered.

All major groups of deserters have been accounted for, it said, although a few smaller groups were still at large.

Military sources said the desertions involved only 2,000 troops and should not be regarded as widespread insurrection among Sikh soldiers who represent about 10 percent of the 1.2 million Indian troops. India has the world's fourth largest military force.

Israelis repeat rejection

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir told U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar on Tuesday that the Israeli government categorically rejects a proposed international peace conference on the Middle East.

Avi Pazner, Shamir's spokesman, told reporters after a 90-minute meeting between Perez de Cuellar and Shamir that Israel feared such a conference would produce "what usually goes on at the United Nations, meaning that Israel would immediately come under attack."

Shamir resisted "our belief that all problems between us and the Arabs can be settled in direct negotiations," Pazner said.

About 40 employees of the Foreign Ministry demonstrated outside the office during the meeting. The employees began a three-day strike Monday in support of demands for pay increases.

The renewed Israeli objection to an international peace conference under U.N. auspices came a day after Jordan's King Hussein voiced strong support for the proposal. Hussein told The Associated Press that some form of multinational conference involving all the adversaries and the two superpowers offered "the only hope" for ending the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Perez de Cuellar arrived in Tel Aviv early Tuesday after meeting Monday night with the Jordanian king at the royal palace in Amman. Israel is the last stop on the U.N. leader's five-nation Middle East tour that took him to Egypt, Syria and Lebanon, where the conference proposal also has strong backing.

The U.N. leader was to return to New York on Wednesday.

Pazner said Shamir suggested that the United Nations "main goal" should be "to encourage Arab states to become and negotiate directly with Israel."

Parliament OKs coalition

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Parliament approved Prime Minister Rashid Karami's national coalition government on a 53-15 vote of confidence Tuesday after artillery attacks killed 84 people and wounded 210 in and around Beirut.

Three deputies abstained from voting in the climax of a week-long debate on the new government's program of political, military and economic reforms to divide power equally between Muslims and Christians and to end Lebanon's nine-year civil war.

Sniper fire cracked sporadically in the distance during the final stage of the debate at Parliament headquarters between Christian east and mostly Muslim west Beirut.

The coalition radio stations said that shortly after the Parliament session ended, a Lebanese army soldier was killed and two others were wounded in a firefight with Muslim militiamen in the mid-city Tayouneh neighborhood on the demarcation line.

Tornados hit Soviet Union

MOSCOW (AP) — Tornados with winds gusting to 125 mph caused widespread damage and some deaths in a wide region of the Soviet Union over the weekend, Soviet media said Tuesday.

The newspaper Sovetskaya Rossiya said tornados swept through the Yaroslavl region north of Moscow for the first time since weather records were started almost 100 years ago.

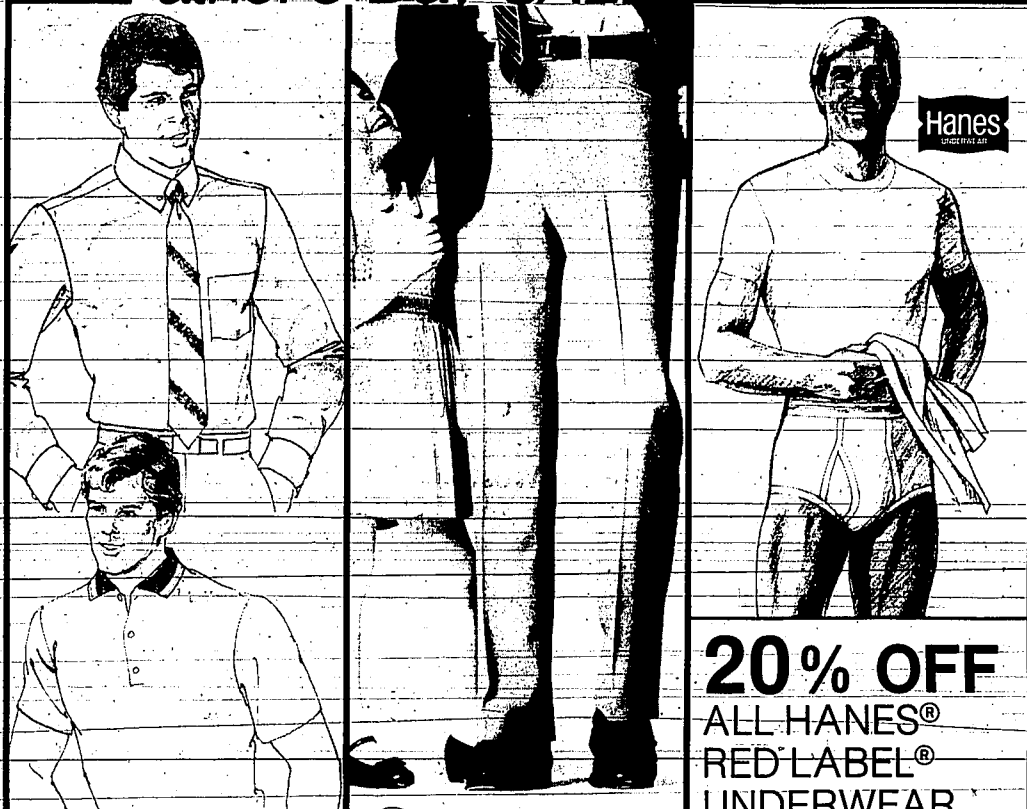

There were "human casualties" in the region, the newspaper said, but gave no further details. Soviet officials rarely mention deaths and almost never give specific casualty figures.

Overnight Monday there had been loss of life when the gales and tornados struck the Yaroslavl, Izhevsk, Gorky, Kostroma and Tver regions and the Chuvashia autonomous republic on the Volga River on Saturday. There were no details provided in that report.

What's what

There are crime historians who seriously believe that Jack the Ripper was the Duke of Clarence, grandson of Queen Victoria. They think Scotland Yard conspired with the Throne to conceal the murderer's identity. Scotland Yard then wielded this secret information, they aver, as an instrument of power over England's Royal Family. Conspiracy theorists, like anarchists, crop up anew with each generation, fed only by innate distrust. They need no leadership; they multiply spontaneously. And curiously, history suggests they're right about as often as they're wrong.

If you don't see at least five shooting stars an hour in a clear sky after any midnight, you're just not looking, I'm told.

That word "crummy" to mean something undesirable has been around for about 400 years.

SHAVING MACHINE

How come we never hear about George Flibbeton, the fellow who in 1833 invented the first shaving machine?

A. Because it didn't work. Historical footnotes indicate George wound up with numerous small scars on his face.

Q. What were the "stubborn child laws" of Colonial America?

A. Local short-lived laws which gave some parents the right to kill some disobedient children.

Q. The lamprey is a fish that looks like an eel. They suck the blood of victims. Do they ever fasten onto human swimmers?

A. Yes, but not for long. They can't stand warm blood. They go "plullll" or something like that and swim away.

MORE WILLS

Add to the list of curious Last Wills and Testaments the document left by the Fifth Earl of Pembroke. —To Lt. Gen. Cromwell. —It read, "I bequeath one of my words, the which me best want, seeing that he hath never kept any of his own."

Among other "firsts" credited to Christopher Columbus is the first mention — his voyage logs — of the sort of sea storm we now call a hurricane.

Twice as many men today — 7.5 million — live alone by choice as did so 15 years ago.

The one and only Emperor Nero of old Rome weighed 360 pounds.

Last residents leave as town vanishes

VALSETZ, Ore. (AP) — The last residents of this dying company town have packed everything they owned and moved out.

"They tear behind lifetimes of memories and a post office with a sign reading, 'Closed For Ever.'"

Dale Reckard and his family were the last of 60 families to move out Monday.

"You don't live in a place for 23 years and not miss it," said Reckard, standing on his front porch and looking at the weathered plywood treehouse his children built in the front yard.

Reckard, 49, was a millwright at the Boise Cascade Corp. veneer mill, which was closed by the company in February. The company town also is being closed and demolished.

"It was a small community," he said. "You knew everybody in town. Your kids can go off here and there, and you don't have to worry about them."

Most of the small, converted bunkhouses have been bulldozed into heaps of splintered rafters, abandoned belongings and broken glass.

Salvage crews removed scrap metals from the razed mill, a job expected to take another month at least, said Jim Charles, 28, a driver working for Boise Cascade.

The Valselt Post Office delivered its last batch of mail Friday, and crews removed most of the desks and other letter-processing equipment Monday. A sign on the front door read

Elsa Reckard helps family move from a Valselt, Ore., home

"Closed For Ever." A Boise Cascade security guard who asked not to be identified, said the biggest problem in town is with scavengers and souvenir hunters.

"Scavengers. That's all they're doing," he said. "You follow them from one end of town to the other."

Behind the town's now-closed grocery store, former store manager Duane Frank loaded cartons of canned goods into a small pickup truck. All the leftover food will go to a food bank, he said.

Frank, 57, ran the Valselt company store for 16 years. Although he met and knew more than 700 residents during that time, he did not want to talk about them Monday.

"How would you judge your neighbors? They were just about the same as everybody else — just regular, plain of ordinary people that worked in the plywood mill," he said.

Two blocks away, 59-year-old Judy

Yaroma was trying to salvage a fence around the house she moved out of on Saturday.

"Come to Valselt when I was 12," she said. "That's my house over there. We're tearin' hell out of it."

Reckard said Monday he is still somewhat resentful about being forced out of Valselt. His daughter Dana, 11, had spray-painted the message "Boise Cascade — Hope Your Proud" on the family's garage door.

"The thing of it is, we all know it's theirs (the company's). It's theirs to do with as they want," Reckard said. "I just don't believe this plant was losing money."

Reckard said his biggest worries now are finding a job — he has looked without success — and how his wife and two children will adapt to a larger community.

Reckard said seeing the town torn up by bulldozers saddened him. But he said he would return someday if the company allows visitors, regardless of whether any physical evidence of the town survives.

"Just for the memories, I guess," he said.

Prince William appears puzzled by numerous photographers

Prince shows off mastery of words

LONDON (AP) — Prince William held his first "press conference" Tuesday, showing his mastery of words including "ant" and "tractor" and even saying two complete sentences.

The toddler prince, who turns 2 next week, could only gurgle and coo when he last appeared for reporters six months ago. But on Tuesday, he stood just over 3 feet tall and asked,

"What's that?" and "Who's that?"

Because of his birthday June 21, Prince Charles and Princess Diana showed him off for photographers on the grounds of Kensington Palace, their London home.

William displayed his vocabulary, including "Daddy" and "ball." But the prince, second in line to the throne, seemed most interested in the cameras. An obliging cameraman let him peer through the lens.

"Who's that?" William asked, staring at photographers. Then he pointed to a piece of equipment and asked, "What's that?"

"That's called a microphone," his father explained. "It's a big sausage that picks up everything you say — and you are speaking early."

The night before, William's parents met filmmaker Steven Spielberg before seeing the London premiere of his latest movie, "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom."

'Bad peanut' pleads guilty to jail escape

OROVILLE, Calif. (AP) — William Carter Spann, the nephew of former President Jimmy Carter, pleaded guilty to a felony escape charge that could send him back to prison for three more years.

Spann, 37, who has been in and out of California jails since 1983, was arrested at his home in nearby Chico by his parole officer May 3 for "suspected use of amphetamines."

Spann, who has described himself as "the bad peanut" of the Carter family, had been on parole for a 1981 attempted burglary conviction.

Spann, who faced up to 12 additional months in custody for the alleged parole violation, escaped May 29 from a minimum-security kitchen crew at the Butte County Jail.

Spann called the jail later that night to apologize for escaping, and said he would return. He surrendered two days later.

Rock group member to pay hotel damages

SOUTHAMPTON, England (AP) — Billie Currie, keyboard player for the British rock group Ultravox, was ordered to pay $39,500 damages to a hotel Tuesday for ripping out a telephone during an argument over skinny-dipping in the hotel's pool.

Currie, 34, admitted causing the damage and a magistrate in this south coast resort suspended an additional fine provided he does not appear in court again for a year.

Prosecuting lawyer David Bailey told the court Currie was one of several group members — some of whom were naked — who went skinny-dipping after an all-night post-concert party.

Sakharov's relatives see film, fight tears

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — The mother-in-law of dissident Soviet scientist Andrei Sakharov fought tears as she watched a film depicting events in her life.

"Let's stop," said Ruth Grigorievna Bonner, 84, mother of Yelena Bonner, Sakharov's wife. "I'm afraid I will cry."

She and other members of the Sakharov family in exile in the Boston suburb of Newton saw a private screening of a television movie, "Sakharov," according to Monday's Patriot Ledger of Quincy.

When a Norwegian envoy appears at the Sakharov apartment armed with red roses to announce that the scientist — played by Jason Robards — has won a Nobel Peace Prize, Alexei Semyenov, 28, Sakharov's stepson, remarked, "Actually, the roses came in a vase."

Sakharov went on a hunger strike in 1982 to force authorities to permit Semyenov's wife, Liza, to leave the Soviet Union to join her husband in the United States. She attended the screening.

Sakharov, in exile in the city of Gorky, reportedly went on another hunger strike May 2 to force Soviet officials to let his wife go abroad for eye treatment. Unconfirmed reports have said he is dead.

"They are dying," Mrs. Bonner said Saturday in Russian of her daughter and son-in-law. "We don't know their whereabouts. They are on a hunger strike. It's very important for us to stay together."

"There is torture in the Soviet Union. Our only purpose is not to let them die."

Pilot claims flight record

LINDEN, N.J. (AP) — After an up-and-down, six-day flight from San Francisco, a pilot circled the Statue of Liberty on Tuesday and claimed a cross-country record for ultralight aircraft.

Lowell E. Richards said the statue in New York Harbor was "a welcome sight" from his 275-pound Pioneer Flight-Star, powered by a 35-horsepower snowmobile engine.

"It was terrific," said Richards, 46, after completing his journey and setting down at an airport in Linden.

"Bumpy in places, and we had some occasional problems, but nothing we weren't ready for."

A team of seven people followed Richards across the country, in a conventional airplane, a van and a car. They will forward a record of the flight to the National Aeronautic Association, which will submit it to the Federation Aeronautique Internationale in Paris for certification as a world record.

The previous record for an ultralight flight from San Francisco to New York was 17 1/2 days, set by Joseph Tong in July 1983, said Wanda Tyson, administrative assistant at the NAA office in Washington.

Population growth rate finally slows

By EDITH M. LEDERER
The Associated Press

LONDON — For the first time in modern history, the growth rate of the world's population has declined, a United Nations report said Wednesday.

In the last decade, the annual population growth rate declined from 2 percent to 1.7 percent, according to the report. But since there are 4.76 billion people, the number being added to the human race every year is a record 80 million to 90 million.

"What we are looking for is a relatively low rate of population growth," said Salas, executive director of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. The agency released the State of World Population 1984 report at a news conference in London.

Although the rate of increase in the decade has slowed, the world population still grew by nearly 800 million more than the size of India. "And we shall be adding about one Bangladesh (population 93 million) per annum between now and the year 2000," said Salas.

Statistically, he said, there has been a global decline in the average number of children born to a woman, from 4.5 to 3.6 from 1970-74 to 1980-83. But the decline in developing countries was only from 5.5 to 4.1 and there was no drop in Africa, where women still have an average of 6.43 children.

Death rates — the other major component of population growth — also declined from an annual average of 19.7 per 1,000 during 1950-55 to 10.6 per 1,000 during 1980-85.

While commending the overall slowdown in world population growth, the report said high growth rates in many developing countries "were undercutting economic progress, reducing incomes and diminishing the quality of life for many millions of people."

The per capita income of the richest country was nearly 220 times the per capita income of the poorest country in 1981 and the gap will widen unless population growth is slowed and economic development is spurred, the report said.

If all governments set specific population targets to help alleviate poverty and advance the quality of life, the current situation could be improved, the report said.

The report projects a continuing decline in population growth rates but a rise in world population to 6.1 billion in the year 2000 and 10.5 billion in 2055, "when the growth rate goes down to zero and the population stabilizes — at least that's the hope," Salas said.

Sakharov supporters abandon their fast

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A group of Soviet exiles and Western Europeans have abandoned their fast in support of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov after 22 days, a spokesman said Tuesday.

Joern Ziegler, a spokesman for the International Society for Human Rights, said the nine remaining participants ended their water and tea fast Friday on the banks of the Rhine River.

The fasters had vowed not to eat normally until Sakharov ended the hunger strike he reportedly began May 2 in the Soviet Union to win permission for his wife, Yelena Bonner, to go to the West for medical treatment.

Soviet officials have denied the 63-year-old Sakharov is on a hunger strike and say the couple is healthy.

A statement issued by the International Society for Human Rights, a Frankfurt-based human rights watchdog group, said a total of 68 people joined the Bonn fast for three to 19 days, quitting for "health and professional reasons."

Ziegler said 10 Soviet exiles and a Polish emigrant joined the fast, along with participants from France, Austria, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Denmark. Another seven people staged a four-day fast in Berlin, he said.

Pope defends authority

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Tuesday opened his six-day visit to Switzerland with a ringing defense of papal authority in a country where the papacy remains a bitter point of disagreement between Roman Catholics and Protestants.

Speaking to the World Council of Churches, an organization representing 400 million Christians — but not Roman Catholics worldwide, the pontiff also acknowledged "frequent differences" between Catholics and Protestants.

"From the beginning of my ministry as bishop of Rome, I have insisted that the engagement of the Catholic church in the ecumenical movement is irreversible and that the search for unity is one of its major priorities," said the pontiff, looking tired midway through a day that began with his 7:20 a.m. departure from Rome.

Switzerland was one of the cradles of the Protestant Reformation, but the spiritual leader of the world's 790 million Roman Catholics took a hard line on the question of papal authority. "To be in 'communion' with the bishop of Rome (the pope) is to give visible evidence that one is in communion with all who confess that same faith," the pontiff said of Christianity. "That is our Catholic conviction and our fidelity to Christ forbids us to go back on it."

The pontiff, delivering his address in French, called the papacy the "visible point and guarantee of unity" of the Christian tradition.

He acknowledged there have been "moral afflictions which have marked the life of the (church's) members and even of its leaders in the course of history."

John Paul also emphasized the need to work for social justice and peace, cautioning, however:

"At the same time, it (the Roman Catholic Church) judges that it is not its role to intervene in the forms of government which people choose for their temporal affairs nor to preach violence or order to change them."

The World Council of Churches, which includes more than 300 churches in 100 countries, has been criticized by some churches for being too politically active in the Third World.

Vatican denounces allegation

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican on Tuesday denounced as "absurd fantasies" a new book which claims Pope John Paul I, who reigned for 33 days in 1978, was murdered.

A number of press sources are drawing attention to the book "In God's Name" by David Yallop, publishing extracts and comments. It is shocking and deplorable that anyone could so much as think let alone publish theories of this kind," the Vatican press office said in a communique.

"Those who know the facts and the individuals involved would regard such theories as absurd fantasies," the communique added.

It was the first Vatican reaction to the book, in which the British author says a conspiracy in the Vatican was poisoned. The book is to be published Thursday.

The Vatican's report on the death of the pontiff Sept. 29, 1978, said he was found in his bed by his private secretary at 5:30 a.m. and had suffered a heart attack around 11 p.m. the previous evening in accordance with Vatican practice, no autopsy was performed on the 65-year-old pope.

Yallop's book alleges the pope was killed because he was preparing to act decisively in several areas including liberalizing the church's rules on birth control, an inquiry into the Vatican's finances and the removal of several high church officials.

Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank, was liquidated by the Italian government in August 1982 after a financial scandal that touched on investments by the Vatican bank.

Advisory board defends airport's service

By DAVID MOFFAT
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Even though it is not being served by a major jet carrier, the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport has never provided better service at lower cost, members of the airport's citizens advisory board believe.

At a regular meeting Tuesday they discussed how travelers need to be "educated" about the economics of joint fares, the advantages of flexible scheduling and the safety of twin-prop Metroliners used for all commercial flights from the airport.

Afterwards, board chairman Dick Shotwell said the board believes a spirit of "negativism" toward the airport has pervaded since the departure of Republic Airlines, the last carrier to serve it with jets.

He said that attitude typically takes the form of the comment, "when are you going to get an airline in there?"

"My answer is we have two very fine airlines," he said.

The commuter carriers, Sky West Airlines and Horizon Air, offer "better service in the number of flights than we have ever had," he said.

But it is their joint fares that most people would do well to learn about, he says. Joint fares make it more economical to fly to Salt Lake City and Boise than to drive to either city when traveling beyond it, he says.

"Airport manager Harry Merrick says the apparent 'underuse' of these fares is ironic, considering high fares were one factor that turned people away from the airport several years ago.

And Shotwell says increased use of the airport is in everybody's interest in the long run.

The greater the number of boardings, the more flights that will be scheduled and the more likely fares will fall and the airport, a tax-supported entity, will become self-supporting, he says.

Board member John Doerr says he found it costs $500 to fly to Anchorage from Seattle, $550 from Boise and $560 from Twin Falls.

"This is something people should become aware of. You can't drive to Boise for $10," he says.

Spokespersons for Sky West and Horizon say the joint fare is a way for a major airline and a commuter airline to share the cost of getting people to "hub" airports.

The major airline saves in a variety of ways, such as not having to handle the passenger at the hub airport check-in counter, says Sky West Vice President for Marketing Ron Reber. In return, the commuter airline can offer lower fares because part of what it costs to fly a passenger to the hub airport is paid by the major airline, he says.

Reber says contracts are negotiated airline by airline.

For example, the joint fare offered by Sky West and Republic Airlines to Minneapolis lowers the one-way cost of the Twin Falls to Salt Lake City flight to $17.59, he says.

The normal Sky West one-way fare to or from Twin Falls is $45, and the round-trip $72, he says.

For United Airlines and Western Airlines, the additional cost to fly Sky West to Twin Falls is only $2.15 on a one-way no-discount coach ticket. It costs $1 to fly Sky West to Twin Falls on any United first-class fare, he says.

A round-trip excursion fare anywhere United flies is increased $65.74 if the flights to and from Twin Falls are added on, he says.

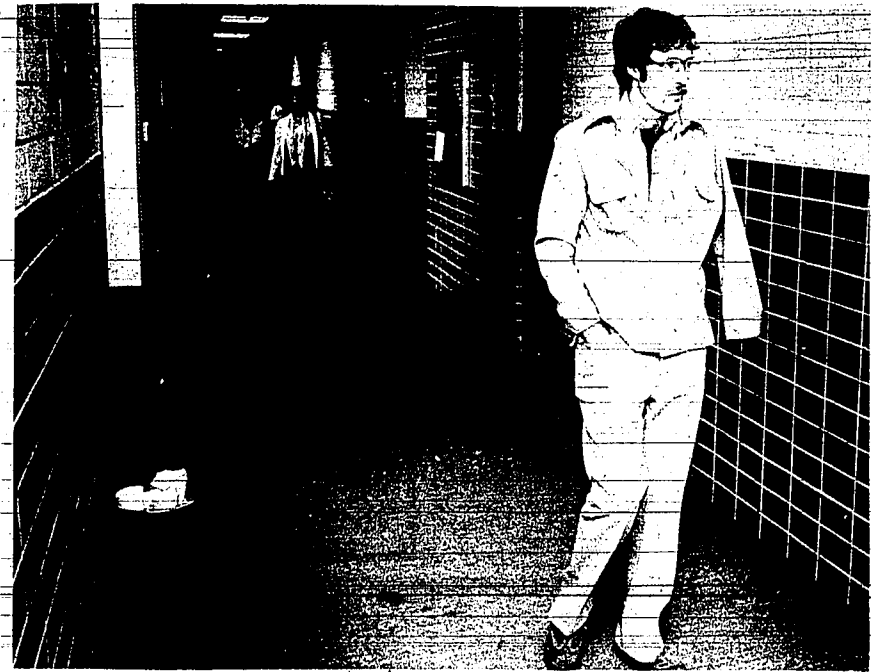

Similar reductions are available on Horizon, says Director of Corporate Affairs Jan Redding.

In general, when flying on United out of Salt Lake City, it will cost a passenger only $25 more to add the Twin Falls leg on Horizon, she says.

On an excursion-rate discount ticket it will cost only $71 more for the Twin Falls addition, she says.

When flying United or Western the flight to Boise on Horizon will cost only $15 if added to a one-way, no-discount coach ticket, and $0 round-trip if added to an excursion-rate ticket, she says.

These are only average rates, she says. Special fares are available in certain instances which can reduce the cost of the commuter flight to $5 or even no charge, she says.

Opening statements in trial today

TWIN FALLS — The double murder trial of Keith Max Rosencrantz enters its third day today with opening statements by the prosecution and defense.

After the statements, the prosecution will begin its case against the 31-year-old Castleford man. It took a day and a half before Twin Falls County Deputy Prosecutor Dennis Voorhees and defense attorney Jeff Stoker approved a jury to hear the evidence.

The four women and eight men and one alternate finally were sworn in Tuesday afternoon. Soon after, the two attorneys spent about 45 minutes in the chambers of Fifth District Judge Daniel Hurlbutt discussing a defense motion about evidence.

Hurlbutt then recessed the hearing and released the jury until 9 a.m. today. The judge warned the jurors not to discuss the case with anyone and refrain from watching or reading any news accounts of the trial.

Rosencrantz has been charged with two counts of first-degree murder in connection with the deaths of Cathy Alica Gittel, 39, of Buhl and Michael Wayne Lee, 28, of Twin Falls at her residence on June 18.

The two died at the scene of shotgun wounds to the chest area.

The trial is expected to last throughout the week.

Waste control efforts OK'd

By The Times-News and The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS — Amalgamated Sugar Co. officials have agreed to new efforts to control odor, dust and water pollution at the sugar company's Rupert processing plant.

The new efforts were requested by state Department of Environment officials in a meeting last week with Amalgamated Sugar officials.

Mike McMasters, a Twin Falls-based state health official, said the meeting was in response to a May petition submitted to the federal Environmental Protection Agency by 51 Rupert residents. The residents complained of dust problems triggered by blowing waste lime and water wells contaminated with excess iron and manganese. They also complained of odors from fields sprinkled with plant waste waters and from lagoons.

McMasters said Amalgamated officials have agreed to use chemicals to help control dust and to limit waste-water field irrigations to try and prevent groundwater contamination. Chemicals will also be added to the lagoon-to-help-control-odor problems and eventually the company plans to install aeration equipment to aid the lagoon's treatment process.

Pollution controversy is not new to the Paul plant. More than 100 Paul residents who live near the plant filed a suit against Amalgamated in late 1981 charging well contamination.

The suit was settled out of court with Amalgamated agreeing to pay damages to Rupert residents whose wells and property were damaged by the plant's pollution, according to Shirley Corbett, a Rupert homeowner.

Since the suit was resolved, Corbett said Amalgamated has dug two new wells on her property to replace wells contaminated by the processing plant's waste waters. "As far as the water goes we don't have any more complaints," she says.

Cogeneration pact disclaimer allowed

By The Times-News and The Associated Press

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Power Co. has gained PUC approval for a controversial disclaimer in cogeneration contracts signed with two firms building small hydro plants in the Twin Falls area.

The two contracts include a clause stating that the price paid for cogeneration power is "too high," and therefore "not in the public interest."

The clause indicates that Idaho Power Co. is agreeing to the two contracts only because they are being forced to by state Public Utilities Commission orders.

PUC spokeswoman Dana Howard said Tuesday that her agency originally declined to approve the disclaimer clause in the two contracts, fearing Idaho Power would seize upon the clause at a later date to invalidate the contracts.

The contracts — signed with Cogeneration Inc. and Bonneville Pacific — cover electricity generated through small hydroelectric projects that use irrigation canals.

After the initial contract language was rejected, Idaho Power revised the contracts to include new language assuring cogenerators that Idaho Power would not seek to change the ## Organization gets grant to aid dying patients

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A $25,000 grant is putting Hospice for South Central Idaho on its way to making dying a normal part of living for terminally ill patients.

The money donated by the Idaho Cancer Control Program will be used to hire a part-time director for the new group and begin to find nurses, ministers, counselors and others willing to care for patients who choose to die in their own home.

But the key to the non-profit organization is volunteers, say members of the coordinating committee. The grant will help with costs of extensive training for 30 volunteers.

They will not replace medical professionals. Just help make sure that the final days of life are filled with love and concern instead of pain and loneliness, committee members say.

"In a hospital, even the staff stays away from the dying person," says Rosemary Laufenberg, chairman of the Hospice board and social worker at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. "It becomes a horrible event, isolated from the community."

That's largely due to the tendency on the part of the staff, the family and even the patient to deny the coming death, Laufenberg says.

But a patient who comes home to die makes the end-of-life difficult to ignore. Both the patient and the family are more likely to face the death and use the final days fully. Instead of lying in the sterile, clinical environment of a hospital, the patient can take some control of his final days, Laufenberg says.

Former Sen. Frank Church is a good example, she says. He returned to his home to die this spring, reading as many letters from friends and supporters as he could each day and talking with his family.

But bringing home a terminally ill family member who needs care around the clock is not easy, Laufenberg says. The family may need a volunteer to babysit, pick-up groceries or just sit with the patient so that the family is able to cope with the physical problems and stress of caring for the patient, says committee member Judy Driscoll.

The volunteers are also needed to offer emotional support to the family and the patient, often just by listening to them talk about their feelings.

"The hospice is accepting and screening volunteers now," Laufenberg says. Anyone interested in becoming a volunteer or wanting more information can call Driscoll at 733-4499 or Irma Shropshire at 423-5044.

Sellers arraigned on murder charge

By JEROME

Cory Dee Sellers, 17, of Hazelton chose to remain silent Tuesday morning during a Fifth District Court arraignment on first-degree murder charges. A plea of innocent was entered by the court.

Judge Phillip Becker said he would set a trial date within the next several weeks, but would select a late enough date to give both attorneys time to prepare their cases. Jim Meservey, attorney for the defendant, asked for between 30 and 60 days to give him time to obtain necessary expert witnesses and make other preparations.

Sellers is charged with the May 24, 1983, beating death of Faye Jane Ostler, his 67-year-old neighbor, whose body was found in her burning home shortly after she had been killed.

Sellers, who will reach his 18th birthday on Friday, is being tried as an adult and remains in the Jerome County jail without bond. If convicted of first-degree murder, Sellers could face the death penalty.

He was bound over to district court last week for trial following a three-day preliminary hearing that was closed to the public.

Dairy chief stresses stabilization

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

Milk consumers need a stable dairy market as much as milk producers, the chairman of the Idaho Dairymen's Association says. "It may not be the (government) price support program, but we need something to stabilize the market," says Lewis Eilers, who milks a herd of 100 cows at his Kim-View Farm south of Kimberly.

Eilers heads the 2,300-member milk producers organization and is co-chairman of its parent body, United Dairymen of Idaho. He talked about dairy industry issues recently in an interview.

Dairy producers agree that their output of milk must be cut, Eilers says. And, "It's going to take a reduction in cow numbers," he says. But the question of how to make the cuts remains a problem. The 1984 milk diversion program — which pays dairy farmers for cutting back production — is the fifth attempt since 1981 at trimming dairy surpluses, according to USDA economists. The voluntary response was less than the government had hoped and will eliminate 42 percent of the 1983 surplus at most.

Consumers are seeing their tax dollars spent to buy up that excess in an effort to hold milk prices paid to farmers at an average of $12.60 for each 100 pounds. Last year, the government spent $2.5 billion to support dairy prices.

But that spending also is giving the consumer a break in the long run, Eilers says.

"If you took off the support price right today, the price of milk is going to go down," he admits. But, within a few months, the market would change again, he says. "At that point, the price of milk is going to go up because there have been a lot of dairymen go out (of business)."

If you drop the price supports... you're going to have some 50 percent of the dairy farmers in the United States going out of business."

The loss of their production could make the milk market unpredictable and could eliminate the necessary reserves that allow milk products to be readily available in stores, Eilers says.

A congressional decision on the future of the dairy industry may be only a year away, when the milk diversion program expires. Cuts in the government price paid for milk already seem unavoidable, because they are scheduled by law if certain production cuts are not met, he says.

An important question mark is what farmers will do in the last days of the program in early 1985. If they start to build up their herds to increase production, the surpluses could grow, he says. The industry is worried that lawmakers would react by dropping price supports drastically or eliminating the program altogether.

As it is, Idaho dairy producers already are surviving on slim profits, Eilers says.

"It's to the point now where the profit margin is so slim, you can't put anything back in capital in-

Jerome man released

JEROME — Robert Cahala, 38, of Jerome was released on his own recognizance Monday following a bond reduction hearing in connection with charges of lewd conduct with a minor child.

Cahala was being held under $25,000 bond following an arraignment in Fifth District Magistrate Court Thursday.

Magistrate Roger Burdick allowed his release with several stipulations. He ordered Cahala to have no contact with the alleged victim and said that at all times when the minors of his own family are in the home with him, there must be additional adult supervision.

The charges of lewd conduct involved an 11-year-old girl and acts that allegedly occurred in 1982.

Volunteers receive awards

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls group and a Burley woman received awards Tuesday for their volunteer work.

They won People Helping People in the Northwest Awards sponsored by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services in response to President Reagan's interest in more national reliance on volunteers.

The Twin Falls County Builders' Club for teen-aged Four-H members received a group award for the children's camp they have sponsored for the last 12 years.

About 600 children who might not have otherwise had a chance to go camping because their families have social or financial problems or because they are recent immigrants were helped over the years.

Dorothy Kuntz of Burley also won an award for her service in the Cassia County American Red Cross since World War I. Her volunteer work began when she had many friends and relatives in the war and wanted to help, she says.

Most recently the 83-year-old woman had helped with blood drawings and preparing for possible flooding.

Drowned man's body recovered

BURLEY — The body of a man who drowned June 2 was recovered Monday about 300 yards from the Burley-Paul bridge, where he was last seen.

The circumstances surrounding the death of H. Reed Bowen, 68, of Burley are still under investigation, however, said Undersheriff Bill Crystal of the Cassia County sheriff's office.

Bowen's body was found about 10:30 a.m. by two volunteers who were searching the south side of the river, Crystal said.

An autopsy was performed Tuesday. No results were available late in the day.

Crystal said there are no signs of foul play in the death.

Probation in lewd conduct case

JEROME — A four-year probation was ordered in Fifth District Court here Tuesday morning for a 50-year-old Hazelton man who pleaded guilty to lewd conduct with a minor.

District Judge Phillip Becker sentenced Orville Eugene Sammons, 50, to an indeterminate sentence of up to 10 years. He then withheld the sentence in favor of a four-year probation. The judge also ordered Sammons to obtain counseling and to repay Jerome County for the public defender services rendered during court proceedings.

Sammons was charged with lewd conduct with a 15-year-old girl on Oct. 30, 1982.

Bible school classes coming

Children entering must be 5 years old by Oct. 15.

For further information or to register, come to the church office or phone 324-2904.

Times-News staffers lauded

BOISE — Members of the The Twin Falls "Times-News" reporting staff received the coveted first-place awards Monday night at the Utah-Idaho-Spokane Associated Press Association banquet.

The Times-News also picked up two second-place mentions and a third-place award. All citations came in the under-50,000 circulation category. The entries were judged by editors at The Salt Lake Tribune.

All entries were written between March 15, 1983, and the same date in 1984.

Hal Berton, Dave Lewis and Rick Shaughnessy shared first place in the investigative reporting category for their articles concerning Bull trout farmer Ken Ellis.

Shaughnessy also won first place in the "light feature" category.

Managing Editor Stephen Hartgen, who took second place behind Shaughnessy in light features, garnered first- and third-place awards for editorial writing.

Two other staff members were recognized for column writing: Dick Manning, city editor, collected top honors in the general column category.

Additionally, Chris Haft, sports writer and night wire editor, took first place for his sports columns. His three entries were pieces on a Bud Light television commercial, basketball shoes and football player Steve Young's $40 million salary.

Photographer Skye Savason captured a first-place prize in the spot news photo category.

The Times-News staff also won second place for spot news reporting.

But she is continuing to monitor the water quality in the new well to make sure that it remains free of contamination.

McMaster said the minerals from waste-water—contaminant—caused more of an "aesthetic problem with standing" than an actual health hazard.

McMaster said the contaminated current water pollution problems have been aggravated by improperly sealed lagoon dikes that have released waste waters and sediment.

McMaster said Amalgamated would repair broken dikes to try to halt the water-pollution problem and disperse the sediment more evenly.

The Paul plant was the cause of a January flood triggered by the collapse of a settling pond dike that released flood waters onto eight acres of adjacent property. The floodwaters washed out railroad tracks and endangered potatoes at a storage barn.

In voting Tuesday to approve the contracts, commissioners Conley Ward, Jr. and Perry Swisher noted that the contract language still is "offensive" and "fuzzy" but say that generators are protected, they won't allow the problem to delay the cogenerating projects any longer.

Commissioner Richard High disented, saying the new contract language is "destructive to the cogeneration and small power program."

"I know of nothing in statute or tradition that makes Idaho Power Co. the arbiter of the public interest," said High.

Larry Taylor, an Idaho Power spokesman, said Tuesday, "Our concern has been that some future commission down the road, perhaps responding to a ratepayer complaint, would say that those are dumb contracts and the price is too high."

Cogeneration, Inc. is developing a 1,825-kilowatt hydroelectric project on the Lateral 10 Canal near Plover.

Groups want reactor study

By The Associated Press and The Times-News

BOISE — Two environmental groups say the Department of Energy already has spent or committed more than $20 million to studies on the proposed New Production Reactor, without formally launching an environmental impact study.

The anti-nuclear Snake River Alliance and the Natural Resources Defense Council, Washington, D.C., on Tuesday delivered a demand to Energy Secretary Donald Hodel to formally open the environmental study process.

At a Boise news conference, Janice Berndt, spokeswoman for the Snake River Alliance, said her group has obtained information indicating that DOE already has spent $8.7 million on contracts related to NPR, and is spending $17.5 million more this fiscal year.

Several agencies have proposed building the New Production Reactor, to produce weapons-grade plutonium for nuclear weapons. Hodel last year recommended locating the nuclear weapons plant at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory in eastern Idaho.

Last August, Hodel announced to congressional committees that within 18 months, he planned to recommend to the president whether to proceed with the project and where it should be located.

Besides INEL, other sites under consideration are in South Carolina and at the Hanford facility near Richland, Wash.

INEL official Pete Dirkmant said earlier this year that the environmental study had not been formally launched because of congressional opposition to the scope of the study.

This opposition is headed by Rep. Melvin Price, D-Ill., the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, which turned down NPR study funds requested last fall by the Energy Department.

Price told Hodel that the Energy Department should first decide where the facility should be built, and what type of reactor should be used. After those decisions have been made, Price said his committee would consider funding for the study.

Lacking the formal go-ahead from Congress, INEL officials have begun preliminary reports that they hope will speed up the environmental study, once it is funded, according to Dirkmant.

But environmentalists say by proceeding with environmental studies without starting the formal process, DOE is effectively preventing the public and federal and state agencies from taking part.

S. Jacob Scherr, staff attorney for the Washington organization, said there was no immediate response from DOE when the demand was delivered by messenger Tuesday morning.

"We are hopeful that DOE will recognize that they clearly have a legal obligation to initiate the EIS process," said Scherr, in a telephone interview.

If not, he said, the environmental groups will prepare legal action to force DOE to move. It will be filed with U.S. District Court in Washington.

Scherr said "necessary technical studies" are under way, even though DOE has not formally launched the EIS process.

"This is an extremely important project, with enormous environmental impact," he said, and the public should be allowed input.

Other environmental groups joining in the demand to Hodel include the Energy Research Foundation, based in South Carolina, and the Hanford Oversight Committee, located in the state of Washington.

Berndt said Snake River Alliances has obtained federal documents under the Freedom of Information Act, which indicate "a substantial amount of resources" already has been committed to NPR.

"There is no justification for any further delay in initiating the environmental impact statement process," she said. "The 18-month deadline is rapidly approaching, reducing the likelihood of significant participation."

She said public participation in the planning process is guaranteed by the National Environmental Policy Act.

The groups said several Idaho-related contracts already have been granted by DOE for NPR studies.

They included a $98,840 study on the "socio-economic data base" for southeastern Idaho; a $250,078 study on "major eastern Snake River Plain faults" and other volcanic information; a $9,500 grant to list all the archeological and paleontological sites at INEL and a $5,700 study on what might happen if Mackay Reservoir Dam fails.

Western Electric Corp. has received a number of contracts for preliminary design studies and preparation of cost estimates, Ms. Berndt said.

Teacher leads Evans office

BOISE (AP) — Elaine Hofman, a vocal music teacher for the Pocatello School District, will serve as eastern Idaho field representative for Gov. John Evans.

The governor's office announced Tuesday Evans will open an eastern Idaho field office at Pocatello in August. Steve Scanlin, Moscow, will staff a northern Idaho office at Moscow.

Mrs. Hofman is married to Cornelius Hofman, chairman of the Department of Economics at Idaho State University. The couple has four children. The family was named Southeastern Idaho Family of the Year in 1980.

Suit threatens youth center

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The threat of a lawsuit still hangs over the state-operated Youth Services Center following unsuccessful negotiations with a youth advocacy group, an official says.

Lindy High of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare said representatives of the state and the Youth Law Center failed to reach an out-of-court settlement of their disagreement over the youth center when they met in San Francisco last week.

The law center has publicly charged the youth center uses harsh discipline methods, provides inadequate facilities and educational programs and violates students' rights.

Attorneys for the advocacy group say they will seek legal remedies in U.S. District Court unless the problems can be resolved by mutual agreement.

"It's not over yet," said High, who termed last week's meeting "fairly amicable." DHW Director Rose Bowman, however, had few comments on it, High said.

She said no other meetings have been scheduled.

The San Francisco meeting came after several weeks of correspondence between DHW and the Youth Law Center.

An agreement would have to be approved by the Idaho Board of Health and Welfare, High said.

Commission seeks disaster aid

RIGBY (AP) — The Jefferson County Commission voted to declare a state of emergency on Tuesday because of possible flooding at Mud Lake.

Officials said water in the lake was within inches of the top of dikes, posing the threat of flooding that could damage 15,000 acres of surrounding farmland. The threatening conditions they reported on Monday had changed little in the ensuing 24 hours, the officials said.

County Commission Chairman Bob Hurley said water flowing into the lake was measured at 1,000 cubic feet per second, while outflow was limited to 700 cfs.

Water lapped at the top of some of the 70 miles of dikes around the lake Monday afternoon, but sandbagging prevented much water from spilling over the top. Sandbagging had ceased on Tuesday after it was determined crews had done everything possible with the bags.

A disaster declaration from Jefferson County clears the way for expenditure of local funds and is a step toward seeking state assistance.

"It's time to declare an emergency," said Archie Browning, area field officer for the Idaho Bureau of Disaster Services.

There were fears a warming trend expected on Tuesday would trigger higher stream flows in a couple of days, officials said.

Jefferson County Deputy Labor Sumners said there was about six inches between the water level and the top of the dikes in most areas, but just a few inches in other places.

"The water level in Mud Lake has been going up about one inch per day. Cooler temperatures on Monday slowed the increase to about a half-inch, Sumners said.

Attorney: Law slights child abuse cases

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Idaho's laws and legal system fall short when it comes to dealing with the state's child abuse caseload, an Idaho Falls attorney says.

"The more prevalent cases are within the family," said Chris Burdick, a board member for Help Inc., a group dedicated to preventing child abuse. "Some family members don't want the family torn apart."

"Whether the courts should be expected to solve all problems in sexual abuse of children is one point in a highly emotional debate. Everyone is frustrated with the present system, and parents of victims often feel cheated, she said.

"Police frequently can't get the convictions they work for and wonder if arresting alleged child molesters is even worth the effort," Ms. Burdick said.

"They (police) see the worst of it"

Ms. Burdick said. "I share their frustration with the legal system. Unfortunately, the prosecutors are hampered by restrictions of the system itself. The case has to be just right to take it through the legal system."

But the legal system does not have all the answers to the problem, she said. Help Inc. would like to see new preventive options outside the legal system.

School district, teachers ask for mediator

SANDPOINT (AP) — The Bonner County School District and the union representing teachers have called for a federal mediator after failing to reach a contract agreement. Assistant Superintendent Leonard Parenteau said Tuesday.

Parenteau said talks broke off Monday night and mediation was tentatively scheduled for mid-August. The Bonner County Education Association declared an impasse in talks last month, but negotiations continued.

"Andy Fields, president of the union, had predicted the two sides weren't far from settlement. But Parenteau said the school board negotiators refused to raise a proposed $10 monthly increase in fringe benefits to $20. The refusal prompted the decision for mediation, he said.

Fields was out of town Tuesday and unavailable for comment.

Teachers recently rejected the offer of a $13,050 annual base salary and the $10 monthly fringe benefit increase.

Idahoan faces arraignment

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — An Idaho man faces arraignment on five counts of negligent homicide stemming from an accident in mid-May that killed five people, a court clerk said Tuesday.

A 5th Circuit Court clerk said William Wells, 67, of Pingree, will be arraigned on the charges on June 14 before Judge Maurice Jones.

Wells was driving a cattle truck that struck a compact car on Interstate 15 near north Salt Lake City on May 19. The compact was crushed and burst into flames.

Killed in the crash were twin sisters Danette and Amette Ricks, both 21, of Gooding, Idaho; 18-year-old Douglas Fisk of Gooding; Nancy Watson, 18, of Star, Idaho; and Yvonne Jorgensen, 20, of Redmond, Wash.

Wells was unhurt in the accident, which closed northbound lanes of I-15 closed at the Beck Street overpass for several hours.

High school goes geothermal

BOISE (AP) — Boise High School will convert to geothermal heating in January, joining 19 other downtown buildings linked to the city's natural system of underground hot springs.

The Boise School Board approved the project on Monday.

Funds for the estimated $65,000 to $75,000 project will come from the district's bond building fund.

Larry E. Standley, a geothermal engineering consultant to the city of Boise, estimated that it costs $45,800 a year to heat the main building at Boise High with natural gas, compared to $26,800 annually for heating with geothermal water.

At that rate, the geothermal project will pay for itself in less than four years, he said.

Violence-board appointee

BOISE (AP) — Pat Day Harwell of Idaho Falls has been appointed to the Idaho Commission on Domestic Violence.

The governor's office announced the appointment on Tuesday. Ms. Harwell, a 1976 graduate from Central Washington University, replaces Elaine Kearnes Groth on the council.

She resigned because travel commitments will prevent her from attending commission meetings.

The governor's office also announced two re-appointments to the council. They are Natalie B. Steffler, Blackfoot, and Nancy Mjelde, Coeur d'Alene. Both will serve terms running until July 1, 1987.

Ms. Harwell served for nearly five years as a paralegal with an Idaho Falls law firm.

Court rules on misconduct

BOISE (AP) — When a deputy entered a woman's home uninvited in the middle of the night, that justified his firing for misconduct, the Idaho Supreme Court has ruled.

The Supreme Court on Tuesday agreed with the Industrial Commission that former Kootenai County deputy sheriff Donald Cornwell was not entitled to jobless benefits. Cornwell was fired in 1981 for conduct unbecoming an officer.

The Supreme Court ruled that the former deputy deliberately disregarded standards of behavior which the employer had a right to expect of its employees. Cornwell contended he entered the woman's home to advise her he had found her garage door open and the lights on while patrolling.

French champ Lendl upended in London

LONDON (AP) — Just 48 hours after winning his first Grand Slam title at the French Open, Ivan Lendl was ousted Tuesday from the Queen's Club grass court championships by American left-hander Shyras.

Lendl, who looked so strong on the French clay, appeared out of sorts on the grass in this south England resort and was ground down to a 7-5, 6-3 finish by the big serve-and-volley game of Shyras, 24, from Milwaukee.

On the second day of play in this $20,000 Wimbledon tuneup, two other seeds were upended — 1983 French Open champion Yannick Noah, seeded fourth here, who gave up on an injured right leg and withdrew from his match with Robert Van't Hoff, and Frenchman Henri Leconte, who bowed to Lloyd Bourne of the United States 6-4, 1-6, 11-9.

John McEnroe, the top seed, advanced by beating countryman Marty Davis.

Third seed Jimmy Connors, the defending title, subdued South African Bernie Milton 6-3, 4-6, 6-3 after a nearly two-hour struggle.

Lendl, seeded second here, didn't appear to have made the transition from clay to grass. On several occasions, he was seen tapping his shoes with his racket, as if to shake out the clay.

The 24-year-old Czechoslovak broke his opponent's serve to lead 4-3 in the first set. But Shyras broke back at love against Lendl's service in the next game — and from there, Shyras was in command.

"I only had two hours practice on grass, and I admit I didn't play very well," Lendl said afterward. "But to come from Paris and to play at the same level here when I finished at Wimbledon last year would make me a genius."

Lendl added that the defeat "is definitely not going to send me into a corner crying."

Shyras pronounced his victory "my greatest moment as a tennis player."

"I knew, after his win in Paris, he would either blow me off the court or not really be tuned in at all. So I had an open mind on the match."

Noah, meanwhile, played his first set against Van't Hoff, from Dallas, with his right thigh strapped. He had injured it in the Hall of Open a month ago. He got to 1-1 in the final set before he gave up.

"I am determined to play at Wimbledon," said Noah, who hasn't played in England for three years. "I didn't want to do any further damage."

Humberger ends Cowboy losing streak

NAMPA — Shawn Humberger promised to throw strikes and got the starting nod from Twin Falls Legion Coach Mike Tremayne Tuesday night.

The sophomore-to-be at the College of Southern Idaho stopped Nampa 8-5 on a two-hitter as the Cowboys broke a three-game losing slide in the second game of a double-header. Nampa topped the Cowboys 12-2 in five innings earlier.

Nampa jumped on starter Kirk Slater and reliever Scott Mallock both in the second inning, in the first game. Nampa scored two runs in the first three innings to decide that one early.

The teams had offsetting three-run rallies in the second inning of the nightcap. But the Cowboys put together four hits to take the lead for keeps in the third. Rob Ellis led off with a double and Tim Crossman, Matt Hare and Chris Pratt followed with singles.

An inning later, Scott Morgan and Humberger opened with singles, moved up on Crossman's sacrifice and scored on Hare's second hit of the game.

American Legion

Caldwell 11-9, Twin Falls 10-8
CALDWELL — The Twin Falls Cowboys dropped two close games to the Caldwell Silver Streaks in American Legion play Monday.

The Streaks scored three runs in the bottom of the seventh to defeat the Cowboys 11-9 in the first game, and in similar fashion scored twice in the bottom of the seventh of the second game for a 9-4 victory.

Coach Mike Tremayne started right-hander Darren Stuart in the first game, and Stuart pitched three scoreless innings but was tired in the fourth, and gave up four hits, five walks, and hit one batter.

The Cowboys came back with three runs in the sixth for a 10-9 lead, but after two walks in the seventh, Caldwell's Mike Lehman hit the deciding three-run homer.

In the second game, Tremayne pulled starter Nathan Burke for a pinch hitter in the seventh-inning trailing 7-5. The Cowboys promptly took the lead on a walk and base hits by Shawn Humberger and Kirk Slater.

Reliever Matt Hare walked the first two batters in the bottom of the seventh and was replaced by Slater who also walked the first two he faced to give up the tying run. A bloop hit then ended the game.

Jerome 8, Minico 6
Jerome scored three runs in the fifth inning Tuesday night to defeat the Minico Sage 8-6 in American Legion baseball action.

Minico took a 4-0 lead in the first inning when Gabe Fuentes and Marty Carter singled and both players scored on Greg Schow's base hit. After Tony Busch walked, Tim Pethel singled scoring both Schow and Busch.

In the second Todd Amundson led off with a walk and scored on Clyde Stevens double. After Brad Sommerset walked, Mark Boer smacked a double scoring both Stevens and Sommerset.

Minico came back in the seventh scoring a run and had two men on base, but Boer forced the last batter to pop out securing the win.

and Tom Vaughn, W - Black, L - Carter.

The Sage battled back, increasing their lead to 5-3. But Jerome scored pair of runs in the fifth to tie the game. Darren Weeks and Brett Koepnick singled and Jim Mitchell knocked in both runners with a double.

Jerome put the game away in the fifth, when Koepnick walked and scored on Amundsen's double. After a pair of walks to Mitchell and Shawn Black, Boer singled scoring two runs and Jerome led 6-5.

"Idaho Power favors subordination?"
To existing water users, yes!

Lost among all the debate and argument about Swan Falls and water rights and subordination is a very important point. Namely, that Idaho Power has maintained — ever since the subordination issue came up back in 1982 — that in return for protection from possible ratepayer legal action, it would subordinate its water rights on the Snake River to those of existing irrigators.

We have worked to do this in each of the last two legislatures. And we have signed a contract to this effect which even now sits in Governor Evans' office waiting for his signature.

The one thing we will never do is voluntarily forfeit the remaining water rights to future land developers without due compensation for our ratepayers. This would place a tremendous and unfair financial burden upon our customers, especially existing irrigators. A burden the Idaho Public Utilities Commission estimates at an additional $54 million per year above normal rate increases.

Of course, subordinating our water rights to those of existing water users is only the first step in solving the complex questions concerning Idaho's water. But it will free thousands of existing irrigators from costly litigation.

And as a first step, it's long overdue.

Catfish reigns in town

By JANE E. ALLEN
Associated Press writer

BE LZONI, Miss. (AP) — You know you've made the right turn off Mississippi 49 for the World Catfish Festival when the smell of cooking oil begins to fill the air.

There's enough oil to fry about 6,000 pounds of catfish pieces, including several pounds each for the entrants to Belzoni's famed catfish-eating contest.

Cotton may be king in the South, but in Belzoni he bows to catfish, who's crowned anew each year.

Belzoni, population 2,500, is the seat of Humphreys County, and "Catfish Capital of the World," as any T-shirt sold on festival day reminds you. Of the 61,000 acres of catfish ponds in Mississippi, 30,000 are in Humphreys County, Mayor Tom Turner says. And he also says that there are only 10,000 more acres in the whole world where catfish are farm-raised.

Turner, who has spent his life in Belzoni, grows cotton, soybeans and rice — not catfish, although he spends a great deal of time promoting the whiskered, freshwater creatures.

The town Turner heads is so small you can pass it by in a flash. But when you finally come upon the patriotically festooned Humphreys County Courthouse, you've found the right place.

The sand-colored brick building is covered in banners of red, white and blue stars and stripes, and a white lattice-work fence surrounds the master of ceremonies' podium. The outdoor fountain gurgles around a central bronze sculpture of the whiskered catfish. And on this day, children watch as feather-light balsawood catfish bob on the water from the ends of their toy fishing poles.

Placed all around the courthouse grounds are poles bearing banners, with each one topped by a blue-painted wood catfish.

All little ways off are the black metal vats where the bearded catfish is fried to a crispy, golden brown. The cooks use large scoopers, which look as if they had been made from someone's porch screens, to remove the fried fish and hushpuppies from the oil and transfer them to paper plates.

The eaters each face 2 pounds of fish, with another 1-pound plate waiting for them in the wings. The record for the contest is putting away 3 pounds in 8 minutes and 55 seconds.

The eaters take their positions. Some dip to one knee, as if proposing marriage to the formidable plate of fish staring back at them, while others stand with their faces slightly bent, hunched over the plate.

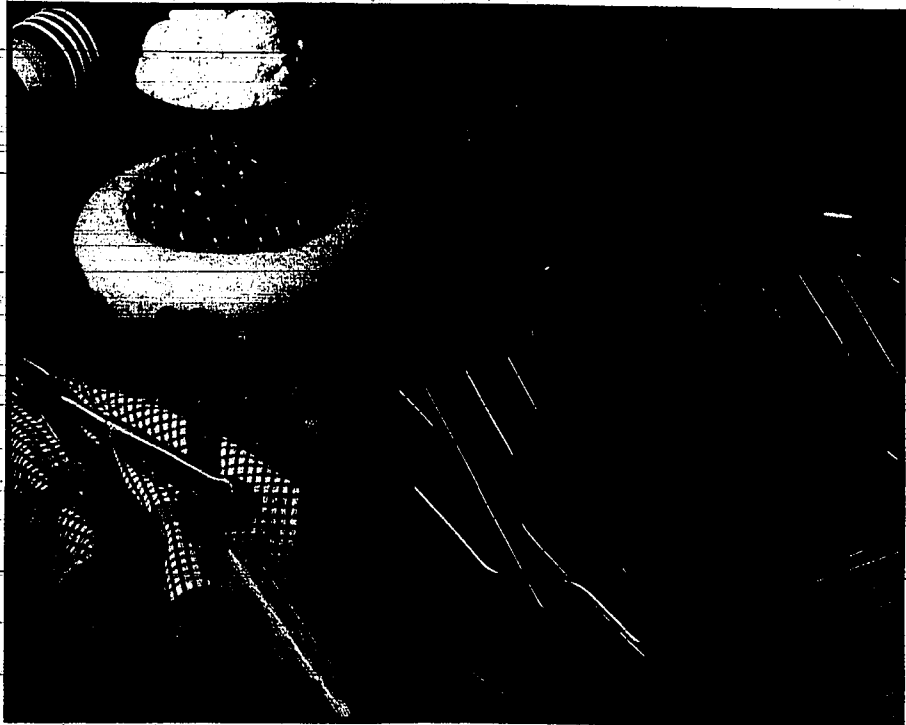

"Remember the hundred dollars. Let's eat a little faster," the judges say as the minutes are called out. The contestants' fingers are busily breaking up the fish and stuffing it into already full mouths before the big swallows. Some contestants are chatting between gulps, others go at it with single-minded solitude.

At the 5-minute mark, the eaters have reached half time.

"It ought to be good now, so let's go ahead and get it down," the caller yells over the loudspeakers.

At 10 minutes, it's hands off the plates and time for the weighing-in of the uneaten remains.

Robert Lee Carver of Belzoni has put away 2 pounds, 5 ounces. Larry Cole of Brandon has chomped on 2 pounds, 1/2 ounces, and Don Delvecki, of Vicksburg, a biologist with the state Department of Wildlife and Conservation Service, is the winner at 2 pounds 8 ounces.

To treat your father like a king on his 'day' serve the foods he loves best — beef from the grill and succulent fresh fruit

Dust off the grill for Father's Day

Sunday is Father's Day — and time to dust off the outdoor cooker or grill and plan an extra special meal to show Dad how much you care. Treat Dad like a king serve the foods he loves best — beef from the grill and fresh fruit. Make it a real family affair and invite grandfathers, uncles, cousins and brothers for an outdoor cookout. Serving a large crew is easier when you cook a beef tip roast in a covered barbecue kettle. Roasts cooked by this method turn out tender and moist.

For dessert, try Jeweled Grape Rum Ring. Turn an ordinary cake ring into a special dessert by soaking it in rum syrup and garnishing with an assortment of various-colored grapes. Serve with ice cream.

BEEF TIP ROAST
4 to 5-pound beef tip roast.

1 tablespoon Italian seasoning
1 teaspoon garlic salt
1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper
Combine Italian seasoning, garlic salt and cayenne pepper; rub evenly over roast. Insert meat thermometer so bulb is centered in thickest part. Make certain bulb does not rest in fat. When coals are ready, set covered, set drip pan in place in center of the lower grill. Position roast, fat side up, on top grill directly above the drip pan. Cover kettle (leaving all vents wide open) and cook roast until meat thermometer registers 140 degrees F. for rare; 160 degrees for medium. Allow 15 to 20 minutes per pound. For easier carving, allow roast to set in a warm place 15 to 20 minutes after removal from kettle. Since roast usually continues to cook after removal from kettle, it is best to remove it about 5 degrees F. below temperature desired. Makes 16 to 20 three-ounce servings.

JEWELLED GRAPE RUM RING
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup milk
1 tablespoon margarine
Rum syrup
4 1/2 cups red, green or blue/black grapes, seeded in necessary.
Vanilla ice cream or whipped cream
Beat sugar and eggs 2 minutes at medium speed with mixer. Combine flour, baking powder and salt; gradually beat into egg mixture. Heat milk and margarine over low heat until melted. Add to egg mixture; beat only until blended. Pour into well buttered and floured 9-inch savarin ring mold or 9-inch square cake pan. Bake at 350 degrees F. 25 minutes or until cake springs back when lightly touched. With long-handled fork, prick cake while still in mold; unmold and prick other side. Spoon 1/2 cups rum syrup over cake. Pour remaining syrup over grapes; let both cake and grapes stand at least one hour. Drain grapes; place in center of cake ring. Serve with ice cream. Makes 12 to 16 servings.

Rum Syrup: In sauce pan, combine 2 cups sugar, 1 cup water, 1 1/2 teaspoons grated lemon peel and dash salt. Bring to boil and simmer over medium heat 6 minutes; remove from heat and add 1/2 cup rum. Strain. Makes 2 1/2 cups.

Irish potato pancakes rank as distinctive dish

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press writer

Irish potato pancakes, called Boxty, are different from those I've come across in other cuisines. The difference lies in the addition of both cooked-mashed potato and shredded raw potato to the batter. They are interesting and delicious.

You may enjoy serving them, as I do, for breakfast with eggs and bacon. Have lots of good strong hot tea on hand, the way the Irish would make it. These pancakes are also delicious for a light lunch or with meat, poultry or fish for dinner.

IRISH PANCAKES
1 cup all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 pound potatoes

2 large eggs, slightly beaten
1/4 cup butter, melted
4 tablespoons (about) milk
Extra butter
Stir together flour, baking powder, and salt.
Peel 1/2 pound of the potatoes and steam or boil until tender; mash fine — there should be 1 firmly packed cup.

Peel the remaining potatoes and finely shred; press out liquid — there should be 1 1/2 firmly packed cups. Add mashed potatoes, shredded potatoes, and eggs-to-flour mixture; mix well; stir in butter. Gradually stir in enough milk to make a soft batter. Melt a generous amount of extra butter in a large heavy skillet; add heating 1 1/2 tablespoons of the butter well apart; fry over moderate heat turning as necessary, until cooked through and browned on both sides. Keep warm in a low oven. Fry remaining batter the same way. Serve hot with butter. Makes 14.

A good many modern cooks have changed the way they serve old-time chicken salad. Now an inventive cook has teamed chicken salad with papaya. That delectable fruit sets off the chicken combination and it may be mounded in the cavities of papaya halves.

The following recipe for chicken salad with papaya benefits from homemade curry mayonnaise, and we are giving you the recipe for that dressing. It's quickly whirled together in an electric blender.

CHICKEN SALAD WITH PAPAYA

3 cups diced (1/4-inch) cooked chicken
1 cup thinly sliced celery
1/2 cup thinly sliced scallion
2/3 cup Curry Mayonnaise, recipe follows
2 papayas (each about 1 pound) — 2 tablespoons toasted sesame seeds, if desired
Watercress sprigs

In a large bowl thoroughly toss together the chicken, celery, scallion and 2-3 cups cur mayonnaise; cover and chill. At serving time halve papayas lengthwise and remove the seeds. Cut away peel from each papaya half, if you like. Place each half on an individual salad or luncheon plate; mound chicken salad in papaya cavities. Sprinkle with the sesame seeds. Garnish with the watercress. Serve at once. Makes 4 servings.

CURRY MAYONNAISE
1 large egg
2 1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 1/2 teaspoons curry powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon cayenne
1 cup vegetable oil

In an electric blender whirl together just until blended the egg, lemon juice, curry powder, salt and cayenne. With the motor running, pour in the oil in a thin steady stream; whirl just until oil is incorporated. Turn into a jar, cover tightly and refrigerate. Makes about 1 1/2 cups. Use the amount called for in the Chicken Salad with Papaya recipe and keep the remainder stored in the refrigerator for use with other salads or in sandwich spreads.

Quality can hinge on thinning

Root and leaf vegetables usually require thinning to produce the best quality. Sweet corn ears will be larger, too, if given the proper amount of space to grow.

Most thinning is easy to determine by the amount of space a mature plant needs for proper growth. For root vegetables, the root diameter is the key. Radishes need an inch or two between plants. Carrots require two to three inches. Beets and turnips should be spaced three to four inches apart.

Often thin leaf vegetables like lettuce and spinach in two stages. While they are small, I leave two to three inches between plants. By the time they begin to crowd each other again, they are big enough to eat. The second thinning becomes the first harvest. Final thinning on leaf lettuce and spinach is about six inches. Head lettuce requires 10 to 12 inches. Cabbage and broccoli need a similar amount of space, or even more.

I used to thin beans and peas until I discovered that the harvest was about the same anyway. Most other fruiting vegetables are planted in hills or from transplants. It does not seem to make a lot of difference whether one or more cucumber, squash or melon plants grows in each hill. Tomato and pepper plants often produce larger fruits if given plenty of space.

Sweet corn yield and quality is definitely improved by thinning. Ideal spacing for sweet corn is 10 to 12 inches between plants and two to three feet between rows. Many people plant in hills to achieve this spacing but it is better if thinned to one or two plants per hill. If corn is allowed to grow too thickly, some plants will produce no ears and those ears which are produced will often be smaller than normal.

Thinning produces another desirable result. It gets the gardener down close enough to the plants to notice other problems. When I thinned my lettuce last week, I found some slugs which I would not have noticed otherwise.

Yellow leaves may indicate that the plants need fertilizer. Weeding can also be done at the same time as thinning.

Delectable dishes for Dad can be prepared with ease

An easy-to-prepare Father's Day menu gives you ample time to spend with your guest of honor. Start with broiled sirloin steak. Cook directly over coals in a covered barbecue kettle with Herbed Vegetable Kabobs. Once the food is on the grill you'll spend little time tending it.

Grape Pasta Salad makes mealtime even easier. Simply toss sweet red grapes into a cold pasta salad the night before. A perfectly grilled beef steak and luscious salad are a treat way to say "Thanks Dad."

BROILED SIRLOIN STEAK
1 beef sirloin steak, cut 1-inch thick (about 8 pounds)
Salt and pepper
Herbed Vegetable Kabobs

Place steak on grill directly over ash-covered coals. Cover kettle, leaving all vents open, and cook. When first side is brown, turn and season with salt and pepper and finish cooking second side. Turn and season. Steak requires 5 to 7 minutes total cooking for rare; 8 to 10 for medium. Makes 4 servings.

HERBED VEGETABLE KABOBS
1/4 cup butter
1 tablespoon snipped parsley
1/2 teaspoon each, dried basil, dried oregano and salt
1/4 teaspoon black pepper
1 medium zucchini, cut into 8 slices
8 large mushrooms
8 large cherry tomatoes
Cook butter, parsley, basil, oregano, salt and pepper in small sauce pan over low heat 2 to 3 minutes; Thread two slices of zucchini crosswise (through rind) and two mushrooms on each of four 12-inch skewers. Brush both sides of vegetables with seasoned butter. Place kabobs on grill directly over ash-covered coals; cover kettle and cook 8 to 12 minutes. Turn and brush kabobs with seasoned butter occasionally. Place two cherry tomatoes on end of each skewer during last 3 minutes of cooking time. Makes 4 servings.

GRAPE PASTA SALAD
6 ounces rotini or shell macaroni
Boned salted water
1 1/4 cups halved red grapes, seeded if necessary
1 cup sliced mushrooms
1/2 cup each chopped green pepper and sliced green onion
Vinaigrette dressing

Cook pasta in boiling salted water as directed on package. Drain. Add grapes, mushrooms, green pepper, green onion and Vinaigrette dressing; toss well. Cover and refrigerate several hours or overnight to blend flavors. See STEAK on Page C4

People growing wise to sun exposure

By JEANNE MAGLATY
The Hartford Courant

Several years ago, a major suntan lotion manufacturer encouraged women to strive for a deep, dark tan. Recently, its ads boldly announced "The Ultra Block" for "when you've had enough of a good thing." Those protected by the sunscreen cream are able to stay in the sun 15 times longer than the unprotected before their skin systems slightly, according to the company claims.

Why the change? The sun is still the culprit. What is different is down here on our planet Earth, where a species called homo sapiens has begun to recognize and do something about the star's overexposure to the sun.

Dermatologists long have been aware of the increased likelihood of skin cancer and the accelerated skin damage that results from June-to-September sun worshiping. The Civil War-era ladies who hid behind parasols had the right idea. Unfortunately, it didn't last.

In the 1920s, Gabrielle "Coco" Chanel, the famous Parisian designer, shocked the Western world when she took up the racy practice of sunbathing. Women loved the "liberating" idea and flocked to sun-drenched beaches and backyards. A toasty tan became a status symbol, a sign of good health and wealth.

Now, the same women who were once compelled to bask in the sun every summer are the ones most aware of the being effect it has had on their skin, said Dr. Jeffrey Shonick, assistant professor of dermatology at the University of Connecticut School of Medicine in Farmington. Damage produced by the sun's ultra-violet radiation is cumulative and irreversible.

"Skin cancer is another serious threat. It is the most common type of cancer. It is estimated there will be 400,000 cases of it in the United States this year. Most will be caused by frequent over-exposure to direct sunlight.

More than 90 percent of skin cancer cases involve basal or squamous cell cancers, which are highly curable. Basal and squamous cell skin cancers often take the form of pale, waxlike, pearly nodules, or red, scaly, sharply outlined patches. The are not fatal.

Basal cell cancer occurs more frequently, but grows more slowly. Although it rarely spreads, left untreated it can extend to underlying bone. Squamous cell cancer is less common, but it is a greater danger because it spreads rapidly.

Any unusual skin condition, especially a change in the size or color of a mole or other darkly pigmented growth or spot, could be a sign of skin cancer.

"Knowing the effect of repeated overexposure will help you decide whether the careless pursuit of a tan today is worth tomorrow's damaged skin, or the threat of skin cancer."

People of Celtic origin who tend to be light-haired and fair-skinned are most susceptible to sun-related problems. Natives of Mediterranean areas and their descendants are next. Increased melanin (pigment) in the skin helps protect them from the damage caused by ultraviolet rays.

Asians and blacks have less of a problem. The incidence of skin cancer is negligible among blacks because their skin has sufficient melanin to protect their skin from ultraviolet rays.

The American Cancer Society makes three suggestions for guarding against skin cancer:

- Avoid repeated overexposure to the sun — especially between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.
- Wear protective clothing such as long-sleeved shirts and wide-brimmed hats.

• Use one of the growing number of sunscreen preparations, especially those containing ingredients such as PABA (para-aminobenzoic acid). They come in varying strengths, ranging from those that permit gradual tanning to those allowing practically no tanning at all.

Shonick pointed out that shade cuts out only 50 percent of the UV radiation. Half is reflected from the atmosphere and environment. Contrary to what many people believe, water doesn't help protect the skin. Swimmers — especially those in clear pool water — can damage their feet as seriously as parts of their body outside the water.

Yet, Shonick does not suggest people shun the sun. "I'm very reluctant to prescribe sun exposure," he said. Instead, he suggests people use a product with a sun-protection (or SPF) factor of 15.

"Our culture is prone to fads and excesses," he said. "I think that moderation is the key. The moderation (in the sun) is different for different people."

The SPF factor is the recognized unit of sunscreen effectiveness. It represents a multiple of time required by the sun to produce any given effect on the wearer's skin.

Four years ago, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration advised manufacturers of "sun-care products to number their lotions according to the quantity of sunblock ingredients they contain. Most products have SPF factors ranging from two to 15 or 20. Usually, the level of the chemical PABA determines the protection factor.

Since the FDA advisory was issued, companies that used to make just one or a few suntanning products have begun producing many to fill the slots in the "tanning system." They have recognized the potential for customers buying many products instead of just one.

New Jersey woman 'bags' top prize

By MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

The "First All-American Paper Grocery Bag Pack-Off" was held recently at an A&P supermarket in Manhattan, N.Y.

The competition, conducted by the Kraft & Packaging Papers Division of the American Paper Institute, pitted 24 finalists, selected from a field of 3,000 A&P baggers, to find out who was the fastest, slickest and smartest grocery packer.

At stake were hundreds of dollars in prize money and the glory of winning this checkout counter Olympics.

Now, before you start laughing at the idea of a grocery bagging competition, you should know that this was more than a test of speed. Sure, anyone can throw boxes, bottles and cans in an open grocery bag — and haven't we fumed when some bagger did just that! But, one of the purposes of the competition was to emphasize that good bagging, the kind that allows our purchases to arrive home safe and sound, requires skill.

Judging the skill of each bagger involved a five-part, 35-point scoring system. No one likes to stand waiting in a slow checkout line, so speed was important, but the speediest checkers received only 10 points.

Bag-building technique was equally important and represented another 10 points. Five points were used to judge evenly weighted bags. (Have you ever walked out of the supermarket with a bag in each arm and one weighed 10 pounds and the other weighed 30?) Efficient bag-usage counted for 5 additional points, and last but not least, attitude and style were worth 5 points.

At 10 a.m., the whistle blew and the first four baggers were off and packing. Each had an identical 39 items, including tea bags, potato chips, cereal and jelly, as well as milk, eggs and French bread. Seventy seconds later the first competitor rang a bell to signify that she had completed her packing.

Each competitor's bags were weighed to determine how evenly they were balanced. If the bags showed more than a 2 pound difference in weight, points were deducted. Then, each competitor watched as the judges took scissors and cut open their bags to observe their bag-building techniques. The judges looked to see whether cans had been placed in the bottom of the bag to build a firm foundation. Then, they looked at the second level of items to see whether cereal and other cardboard boxes had been placed around the sides of the bag to create a protected hollow space into which bottles and other fragile items could be placed.

By the time the four finalists were at their checkout counter positions ready for the championship round, the crowd in the A&P was cheering their favorites to the theme from "Rocky," which was piped in over the store's loudspeaker system. The whistle blew, and in what seemed like a second each bagger had set up two bags on the counter and began filling them simultaneously. Their hands moved swiftly, picking up items and placing them in the bags.

The winner: Cheryl King, of Jersey City, N.J., in 53 seconds.

Perhaps the most amazing thing about the entire competition was that not one egg was broken, or package crushed. That's a record every bagger should shoot for!

Gardeners must focus on near future, not dwell on losses

By HENRY MITCHELL
The Washington Post

Thank God for the first nice hot morning of the year in the garden. I cleared out the kitchen door and brought (for such is the dour legacy of Scotland to her sons) how many plants had been dreamed of and planned for and come to naught.

Gardeners generally seem obliged to preface any tantrum of joy with a recital of all that has gone wrong and all that probably will in the future.

Still, I have never seen "Mrs. Anthony Waterer" in such a passion of being verging to purple — a grand old rose apparently immune to all known maladies of pug, blight or nematode.

And beyond her, just past that tall pagoda yew (which has grown so tremendously well in recent years, once she was freed and dignified, as it were, after a snow spread her in all directions) is "Sarah Van Fleet," a small pink rose that makes a great rounded bush up to 8 or 10 feet.

And there in flower and well perfumed, and like Mrs. W. a tough, tough girl:

The peonies, which were rather opulent till a storm flattened most of them, have now gone.

There is no time in the garden to mourn such things. The claims of the immediate future (never the claims of the immediate present) require all our attention and occupy all our hopes. At the moment, the endless flower stalks, still in bud but very promising, of the daylilies are up to knee height. How beautiful they will be in mid-June, when they begin to flower, and how glorious about July 4 when they approach their peak of bloom.

You may think with justice I am obsessed with water temperatures since I mentioned once before the water in my pools, and nothing since Christmas has worried me more, but now all is dandy. The recent cool spell caused the temperature to drop to 59, which is outrageous for this time of year, but now it is up to 78 and more, which is good indeed.

Naturally the tropical water lilies (which require a minimum of 70) arrived during the cold period. I kept them in one of those metal enamel hydrators from the ice box — outside the ice box, needless to say — with transfusions of hot water from time to time. Now they are all safe in the warm pools.

Even more maddening was the great Nymphaea gigantea, which is the most beautiful of all the water lilies I have myself seen, because this year its large tubers did not survive the winter indoors. I had to make do with seed, which fortunately I had saved and started in an aquarium some weeks ago.

No sooner had I planted the very small plants in the pool than the temperature dropped into the 50s, and this tropical beauty requires 75 degrees, not merely 70. Gardeners are strong silent types, and I said nothing, though I was fit to be tied for four days. The plants were so small they did not even reach the surface, and then the terrible cold came, which as a rule will throw this tropical creature into dormancy from which it recovers only in July, too late to make a great flowering-size plant before fall.

What joy, then, with the return of quite warm water, to see three tiny leaves from N. gigantea finally reach the surface. Like the sheep that was lost and is found.

A word should be said about the rather small flowers of some clematis of the Villicella section. One of them, 'Etoile Violette' came to me some years ago in place of one I ordered. (Nurses are fond of sending the wrong thing.) The flowers are rich purple with yellow stamens in the middle, and are only 2-2 1/2 inches or so in diameter, not at all like huge bouncing beauties of the Henryi type.

All the same, I have the violet stars on a post of the front porch. The plant is cut back severely every winter and shoots up to 10 or 15 feet and flowers in May or early June. It is lost. If given a dark background I have it against a white column and white wall, so it is visible to me, at least.

Last year I pointed it out to a fellow yew. It was in full bloom and he said, "Nice. And when does it bloom?" So do not count on knocking anybody's eyes out.

When the afternoon sun hits it, it is rich. I think many gardeners would like these clematis that are not so huge, though I now believe mine would look better growing up through a pink rose than against a white wall. Like so many other things, you realize about five years too late what would have been the best way to treat a plant.

I have no complaints about most of the roses. In particular I salute 'Celeste,' an old pink fragrant Alba rose that had to be moved in full growth a year ago. It was good of her not to die. It was very good of her to take the horrendous pruning given at the time of transplanting, and it is positively glorious of her to be smothered with clusters of soft pink flowers against the blue-green-gray leaves this spring. This rose has never been seen, if I may say so modestly, in more superb form than with me this spring. No doubt this is the signal for her to kick up her heels about July.

Philly home offers rare example of efficient living

By BELLICOTT MINOR
Associated Press writer

PHILADELPHIA — A century-old brick row home that fell into disrepair after housing a corner grocery and a candy shop has a new coat of paint and a new role as a showcase for energy conservation.

The two-bedroom Germantown home is a working display on how to save energy and money, yet live comfortably during winter-cold and summer heat.

Known as the Energy House, the old home was selected for the conservation project because it is similar to 78 percent of the housing in Philadelphia, a city with over 370,000 row houses, according to Hap Haven, founder of the project.

Each Saturday, people tour the house — to learn about insulation, weatherstripping, and other energy saving measures, such as furnace vent dampers and window quilts that can be lowered like shades. A slide show demonstrates the step-by-step process of making the house more energy efficient.

"A lot of people will discuss problems they are having in their own homes and we try to suggest solutions," says Linda Knapp, a volunteer.

The tours teach people how to take advantage of the natural orientation of their houses to get the most from sunshine, shade and breezes and give them a better understanding of the heating and structural systems of their homes.

"When people learn how they can save 20 to 30 percent on energy bills, you're giving them more disposable income," said Haven, who said he had purposely picked a run-down house in a poor neighborhood so the disadvantaged could get exposure to energy conservation.

Despite its location — the Energy House is designed to appeal to all income groups and demonstrates such minor, and low-cost, modifications as low-flow shower heads and foam draft sealers around electrical outlets.

"The low-flow shower head uses half as much water and that means you only heat half as much water," said Haven, estimating savings of 600 a year for a typical family of four.

Haven and a group of volunteers spent three years modifying the house, which opened to the public in December 1982. They removed several walls and installed a "oleostory" — a fancy skylight — in the roof along with other alterations.

windows on the second floor to demonstrate how sunlight can be used for heating at minimal cost.

This "sun room" contains water-filled plastic milk bottles painted flat black to absorb heat. The bottles, stacked in one corner, soak up heat from the sun and provide warmth when the room is in the shade.

On the roof, reflective panels focus the sun's rays on a black 30-gallon tank that's hooked up to the home's hot water system. The sun's heat warms water in the tank before it reaches the hot water heater in the basement.

Haven says the system serves as a supplemental water heater in the winter, but meets all the home's hot water needs in the summer.

Theater no longer possesses attraction

I started to cut down on the number of movies I saw a few years ago when it was no longer a religious experience to sit in a dark theatre and listen to someone chew lice in my ear and drip chill sauce down my back.

When the children started coming by and bringing their friends, every five or ten minutes the phone would ring for one of them and we'd miss some of the dialogue. But when we explained this, they'd take the call on another phone in the kitchen.

[Movies had become an audience participation show, rather than an observing experience. A food orgy for nocturnal people. The last movie I saw in a theatre was almost a cry ago when I went to see "Never Cry Wolf." The woman behind me had a three-year-old on her lap named Wesley to whom she had to read the entire foreword. The rest of the movie was spent explaining why the fish didn't look like Mickey and Minnie and why big boys didn't push their little feet between the seats, forcing the people in front of them to be airborne during most of the film.]

We decided to buy a video adapter and rent our own films. It was wonderful. After dinner, my husband and I would sit in soft chairs and in the comfort of our living room watch in silence while the story unfolded before our eyes. Occasionally my husband would clear his throat, but I would forgive him for it with a smile. I'm that kind of person.

Later, a few of our friends would drop in and we would offer hospitality to include a beverage and perhaps a tray of cheese.

come late or who had to leave early, but no one complained about that.

When I suggested to a young girl whom I didn't know that she use the phone in the kitchen, she said she didn't want to screw up her call to Honolulu. Someone spilled ice all over the sofa and an announcement was made by a shadow in front of the set that a car with license plates 2ND WTB was blocking traffic in the driveway.

I may grow up never knowing who Glenn Close and Debra Winger are. It's a chance I've got to take.

How to prove to roses you love them

HASLETT, Mich. (AP) — Red roses mean "I love you," and their deep color symbolizes respect and courage, according to Roses Inc. here, the association of American rose growers.

To make the magic last, take a few moments to give your roses the care they need to prolong their beauty, advise association experts, who offer these suggestions:

If your roses arrive from the florist already arranged in sponge-like foam, immediately add enough barely warm water to soak the foam. Add fresh water every day to keep the foam soaked.

If your roses are delivered loose in box or wrapper, keep them in a cool, dark place until you can arrange them properly. Your refrigerator — not your freezer — is an ideal spot.

When you are ready to arrange your roses, fill your vase or container with barely warm water, and add a floral preservative. (This may come with your roses; if not, most florists sell small packages of the inexpensive preservative.)

One rose at a time, remove the leaves that will be below the water line of the container. Hold the stem end under running water or in a pan filled with water and, using a sharp knife or scissors, trim about an inch off the stem, cutting at an angle.

Immediately place the rose in your vase, without letting the stem dry out. Remember to remove enough stem so that the rose is about one-third to half times as tall as your vase. Then, arrange the roses at different heights to achieve a staggered effect.

Proper care will help your roses stay fresher longer. If one begins to droop, remove it from the vase, hold the stem end under water and cut about an inch off the bottom. Lay it flat in a pan of barely warm water, and gently straighten the stem. Leave it in the water for an hour or two, then return it to your arrangement. The stem should be strong enough to hold the bloom straight.

Sheds can be complex

When you decide on the need for a prefabricated outdoor shed on your property, there's more to it than just purchasing it.

- ### On-the House
- Detailed advice on how to choose the best shed for your needs is given in the book, "Outdoor Storage," published by Ortho-Books. The following hints are included in the information:
    - Expect to spend between $100 and $700, with wood sheds costing a bit more than metal ones. Site preparation and foundation materials are specifically included in the kit, such as anchors for metal sheds, will be extra.
    - A metal shed is particularly vulnerable to strong winds, heavy snows and salt air. Choose aluminum rather than steel for a seaside location. Pick a "natural" design suitable for the location.
    - Metal sheds are easier to put up than wood and are fairly standardized in form. The main differences are in size, roof style and features such as door-closing systems and protective finishes.
    - Wood shed kits come with pre-cut, naturally preservative materials. Wood sheds require some carpentry skills, but are easier to customize than those of metal.

- Depending on your local building codes, you have several choices for a foundation. They include a layer of patio bricks, a pier foundation or pressure-treated lumber.
- Consider whether the things to be stored can be put in and taken out easily. For example, you don't want to have to turn sharp corners to maneuver in a lawn tractor. Think about access in bad weather, too. If you must use the shed regularly despite precipitation, put it close to the house so you won't get drenched each time.
- The shed's orientation to the sun will affect how much heat and light it takes in. Having a long side facing south gives the most moderate interior temperatures. Think also about where the shadows from the shed will fall. You don't want the shed to block the sun from your tomatoes or roses.
- A shed will affect how you use the rest of the yard. What routes are people likely to take when they go to the shed from various parts of the house and grounds? Will you be creating traffic paths where you don't want them? Will a shed in that spot displace other important activities?
- Consider how the shed's location will contribute to the appearance you want for your yard. Will the shed dominate the landscape or be a minor feature? Will you see the shed instead of the apple tree whenever you peer through the dining room window and does that matter? What about the neighbor who will have? Will it still be pleasant?
- Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Reports," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

This may be the age of specialized tasting

By NATHAN CHROMAN
The Los Angeles Times

Hundreds of thousands of bottles of wine are released annually throughout the world. The numbers alone sorely test my palate and spirit to the point of taste-numbing exhaustion and on occasion, a bit of confusion.

For the buying public who readily rely on wine critics' evaluations, a review can be all important. But is someone else's palate to be trusted? Should the consumer wait for the latest opinion to spend $5 or more in the belief that the wine will be as good as some wine writer finds it to be? Needless to say, the best wine purchasing insurance is a trained, seasoned ability to taste.

Can it be that the age of tasting specialization has arrived? Experienced wine critics may better survive taste errors by limiting evaluations to a specific wine type, origin or style. Is young versus old, American vs. European, sparkling vs. still, expensive vs. modest, specialization conceivably might make for greater accuracy. It is a tricky question.

This was all brought home to me recently at a tasting of 1961 Grand Cru Classe Bordeaux. Sampled were such notable chateaux as Lascombes, Beycheville, Brane-Cantenac, Dubouche, Pichay, Baron, Lynch-Bages and Cuvée de la Laffite. I tasted all 10 wines and gave a different score to each.

Note, I did not list 10 chateaux here, for that turned out to be my undoing, in that four of the bottles were Lynch-Bages and for each I gave, wouldn't you know, a different score. Same wine, same year, yet a different critique-opinion. It is enough to make you want to turn in your corkscrew, wine societies' honors and gold and silver Tastevin cups.

How could I have made such an error? Would it not be like the drama critic seeing the same play four consecutive nights and publishing a quartet of different reviews? Friends have tried to console with the traditional notion of bottle variation, and of course, that is a distinct possibility. Nonetheless, a sharp palate should have been able to zero in on style sufficiently. It was an ego-deflating experience.

New consumers, as well as seasoned ones, should take note — and comfort — as the palate can be as deceiving as it can be informing. The trick is to determine when the palate is at its informing best. For me, it is early in the morning, shortly after dawn, without social intrusion, in a stark, no-nonsense, spit-out-the-wine, sober-judgment environment. Wine buyers for larger caliber acquisitions need, too, to follow such a Spartan tasting regimen. Indeed, it would be fascinating to make buying evaluations based on a.m. versus p.m. judgment.

The tasting of the '61s, or more honestly the drinking of them, was at a luncheon with several of chief Roy Yamaguchi's culinary delights. Maybe I can find solace in that I truly enjoyed '61 claret as did my co-imbibers, yet all of us were eager to express reasoned opinions. In some cases publish them, notwithstanding judgment clouded by the joys of the table. Next time I shall taste and spit — all before submitting the first morsel of a taste thought. It is a lesson all wine lovers, critics or not, should contemplate.

As if on cue, the '61s performed well, like a good thoroughbred, but without breaking any records. Some members of my group, including me, felt the '61s' two-decade title of "best of class" since '63 may be lingering a bit. Some of the wines exhibited a thinning character, that is, a loss of fruit, intensity and concentration that have been the acknowledged hallmark of the '61s.

Particularly, it was in structure and length that this set of '61s seemed to falter. It is time to rethink the '61s, not necessarily as having passed their prime, but at the very least, as being best planned for earlier consumption, while a new claret champion is considered?

Vintage '61 devotees will no doubt be crushed at the prospect and threaten liberal litigation. I can understand how they feel, for I have long been a strong supporter and would not want to participate in lowering '61s from their lofty perch as Bordeaux's best of today's drinking models. Are there possible successors in the wings? Yes — look to the 1966s and the 1970s.

The next day at a luncheon at a new restaurant, I marveled over several 1970s. At long last, they are truly coming into their own, and while not originally as good as the '61s, they are showing a seductively generous flavor with lush fruit and complex maturity. In general, the flavors seemed more appealing than the '61s of the day before.

Wines tasted were chateaux Mouton, Margaux, Haut-Brion, Cheval Blanc, Palmer and Leoville-Poyferre. Best of the bunch were Margaux and Palmer, especially the latter with its superb intense flavor, heaps of violets, follow-through finish and length. Margaux surprisingly showed delicate touches of fruit, supple texture and a lingering taste.

Mouton and Cheval Blanc are beginning to come around nicely with more subtleties in the latter and a lovely eucalyptus flavor in Mouton, though finish complexity has not as yet arrived. Firm structure was seen in the Leoville with a lovely bouquet that beginning to show nuance and refinement, while the Haut-Brion is advancing with silkiness and several developing flavors.

Most informing was the general feeling that the '70s have at long last achieved early promise fulfillment.

Does this mean a new claret king is at hand? A comparison of 20 or so bottles does not necessarily make for long-lasting vintage prognostication, though it is hard not to be persuaded by the two-day tasting.

Now if that weren't enough of a palate shock, this past week brought yet another. I returned from Vancouver, British Columbia, after helping to organize a new wine competition for "B.C." wines under the auspices of the century-old Pacific National Exhibition, a fair that annually attracts more than a million visitors. The fair board believed it was time to take a hard look at the province's Okanagan Valley wines, an area slowly rising to wine respectability, even though limited to 2,200 acres of vineyard. More is being planted, especially with soil-appropriate French hybrids and viniferas, the world's respected grapes that struggle hard to survive the region's rainy, cold climate and too-short growing season.

In attempting to accurately perceive the wines, much must be understood, such as growing region peculiarities, wine-making problems and above all, the grape varieties with which California-bred wine buffs (like myself) may not be very familiar, such as Chelois, De Champo, Pinot Auxerrois and Chancellor. Some are hybrids created through cross-pollination between varieties drawn from more than one species.

After tasting a number of bottles, it was clear to me that I would have to "hybridize" my palate. To conscientiously evaluate the wine, experienced familiarity is a must. For me, it was as though I were embarking on my first day of palate education, another ego-shattering moment.

The "B.C." wine makers are making a determined effort to alert the world to their wines. Judging will be limited to "B.C." grape-grown wines only, for in recent years to create a profitable wine market, some of the wineries have blended "B.C." wines with those of California and Washington, while some have imported grapes like Zinfandel, French Colombard, Sauvignon Blanc, Cabernet and Pinot Noir. The pendulum is now swinging to "B.C." purity as wine makers grow bolder and wiser.

It has been a rough time. New wines, old wines, a new region: all serving to confuse both mind and palate and confirming once again, the most telling point of all: There is no such thing as an infallible critic. Understanding wine is an unyielding, ongoing struggle with no light at the end of the tunnel. All neophyte and potential wine-lovers should take heart and not be intimidated by the grape — it may be most humbling, even for a hard-bitten, vintage-soaked palate like mine.

Collectors coveting handmade glass

By BARBARA MAYER
The Associated Press

Quietly, but with growing certainty that they are on to something important, a small group of collectors and aficionados of handmade contemporary art glass has been helping art studios glass an important art collectible.

Recently, the group showed its strength at the annual meeting of the Glass Art Society in Corning, N.Y. The society was founded in 1971 as a forum for communication among glass artists, collectors, scholars and others. More than 500 members came from the Corning Glass Center for the four-day meeting. The turnout was the largest ever for a G.A.S. meeting, according to William Warmus, conference coordinator and associate curator of 20th-century glass at the Corning Museum of Glass.

The group heard more than 70 speakers and also viewed some of the art nouveau glass masterpieces of Emile Galle, assembled as its major 1984 exhibition by the museum.

One speaker noted that although handmade art glass represents only about $17 million in wholesale sales — a tiny percentage of the total $2.6 billion glass market — it is recording increased sales each year.

Efrem Zimbalist III, chairman of Correlia Art Glass in Los Angeles, said art glass sales had been growing at a rate of 12 percent a year recently.

That's quite an achievement for a movement that virtually did not exist in 1963 and was largely developed only after a demonstration in 1962 that molten glass could be worked in an artist's studio, he noted.

Another speaker pointed out that at an exhibition assembled at the Corning Museum in 1969, 95 percent of the pieces shown were factory-made and only 5 percent were handmade. By 1979, the percentages were exactly reversed in another museum exhibition — 95 percent of the pieces had been made by hand by artist-craftsmen.

Harvey Littleton and Dominick Labino demonstrated in 1962 that glassmaking could be taken out of the factory and into the artist's studio.

Furthermore, according to Paul Hollister, a writer on glass and other craft-media-arts, Americans have been leaders in sharing information on glass techniques.

Once an arcane craft in which secrets were hidden or "kept in the family," glassmaking has emerged as a medium in which artists exchange information on how to achieve new effects. Popular speakers at the meeting were artists who talked about their work and explained in detail how they created their unique pieces.

"There are more collectors, more publicity and more artists today," said Zimbalist, who added that sales of art glass should continue to increase at a rate of about 12 percent a year.

Besides traditional crafts outlets such as fairs and shops, several speakers noted that newer avenues of distribution for art glass include art galleries, department stores, with crafts and fine arts departments, gift shops and decorator showrooms in wholesale furniture buildings.

Method assists big-city planters

By EARL ARONSON
Associated Press writer

Tar and concrete rooftops in New York City are turning green with tomato, zucchini, bean and other vegetable gardens using a technique called "tuboponics."

The project, which brings inexpensive vegetables, pleasure and fruitful activity to many elderly folk and children and less less danger from vandals, was undertaken by the Brooklyn Union Gas Co., and the Brooklyn Botanic Garden. Assisting are the American-Israel Friendship League and Consumer Action Now.

Alan Smith, Brooklyn Union assistant vice president, made a film about Israeli agriculture in 1976, including hydroponics. As economic conditions worsened, Smith wondered in 1980 whether the greenhouse process could be adapted for an urban environment.

Why would a gas utility get involved? "A great part of the cost of food is the transportation cost," Smith related. "If we reduce that cost by growing food locally, we save an enormous cost. And rooftop greenery converts to pure oxygen some of the air's carbon dioxide produced by burning fuel."

Smith noted that nearly 40 percent of his company's customers receive some sort of "fixed government" income, making them increasingly vulnerable to food and energy price increases.

Brooklyn Union, which has a history of community involvement, has one of five pilot projects on its roof. Smith explained the process:

Basically, for each square foot of floor space, five layers of plants can be grown in an upright tube. These tubes, or columns, are usually white polyvinyl chloride, 6 inches in diameter and 5 feet tall, readily available in plumbing supply stores. Ideally, 8 tubes are attached to a rigid frame to keep them upright and spaced.

Twenty-one holes are drilled in each tube in rows of 4, rows one foot apart. Tubes are filled with 4 parts perlite to one part peat moss, a lightweight, sterile mix fed by a slow-release fertilizer added to it. Plants are started from seeds in cubes placed in a nutrient solution, then transplanted — or plugged into — the one-inch holes in the tubes.

Tubes may be watered by hand or by an overhead drip system with hose or plastic tubing fitted with an Israeli-designed dripper.

Smith estimates an 8-tube garden can be built for $300 for "tar beach gardeners" to produce fresh vegetables all summer. He says the yield can be many times higher than in traditional soil gardens.

Other test sites are at a senior citizens' center, a daycare center, the Magnolia Tree Earth Center — an environmental education center — and at the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, open for public viewing.

At the Northside Senior Citizens' Center, Smith related, "the tubes are vertical, and the need for stooping was eliminated. And growing vegetables without soil eliminates the drudgery of constant weeding." The food produced there is part of the 150 lunches served daily.

Each project is monitored by a horticulturist from the Brooklyn Botanic Garden who answers the amateur gardener's questions.

Urban gardening yielded 259 percent nationally last year. Smith notes that the entire tuboponics system is reusable every year. Only seeds and fertilizer need replacement for a new season.

Panel says steel imports hit U.S. industry

By JILL LAWRENCE
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. International Trade Commission ruled Tuesday that nearly three-fourths of steel imports have caused major damage to U.S. producers and should be limited, but rejected a request for comprehensive trade protection for all steel products.

The commission, an independent fact-finding government agency, concluded by a 5-2 vote that imports are a principal cause of serious injury in five major product categories — plates, sheet and strip, wire and wire plate, semi-finished steel and structural shapes.

At the same time, the panel denied protection to wire rod, railway products, bars and pipe and tube on the ground that imports are not the primary cause of problems in those industries.

The steel products in line for protection accounted for $4.3 billion or 70 percent of 1983 imports, and are used primarily in construction, auto manufacturing and other heavy industries.

The commission will hold hearings later this month on whether quotas, tariffs or a combination of both should be recommended to President Reagan. He must accept, reject or modify the commission's proposed remedies by Sept. 24.

Bethlehem Steel Corp. and the United Steelworkers of America, which filed the ITC petition, seek a worldwide quota limiting all steel imports to 15 percent of American consumption for five years.

Imports accounted for 20.5 percent of the American market last year, and 23.2 percent of domestic consumption in the first four months of 1984, up from 18.3 percent in the same period last year.

"The facts are clear-cut," said ITC chairman Alfred Eckstein, who voted to protect six product categories. "The domestic steel industry is seriously injured... and increased imports are a substantial cause of that injury."

Paula Stern, the only commissioner who voted against protection in all nine categories, said shrinking demand, high wages, bad investment policies and other factors played a more important role in the steel industry's problems.

"Imports were definitely not close to being the most important cause of injury," she said. "Imports are important, but this industry faces other, more critical problems which cannot be ignored."

The industry lost $6 billion in 1982 and 1983, an estimated 90,000 steelworkers are jobless due to layoffs and plant shutdowns. More than 170 facilities have closed in the last two years.

Bethlehem chairman Donald Trautlein said the commission ruling will give steel companies access to enough capital to modernize.

"Realistically, there will be some (worker) callbacks, not a significant number," he said. "What we're talking about is stopping the liquidation of the steel industry. We're talking about saving jobs, not creating jobs."

Crop may still be fourth largest Wheat harvest off slightly

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON — The winter wheat harvest now edging through the nation's bread basket is expected to produce 1.97 billion bushels.

That is down 1 percent from the 1983 harvest of 1.99 billion bushels, the Agriculture Department said.

Even so, if the harvest turns out as predicted, it will be the fourth largest in U.S. history and will mean a buildup in total wheat stocks, along with further downward pressure on prices paid to farmers.

Winter wheat is planted in the fall and harvested the following summer. It makes up about three-fourths of total U.S. wheat production.

As of June 1, the crop was rated in "general fair to good" condition, the report said. Harvest progress was "behind average across most of the South" as of the first of the month.

Production in Kansas, the usual leader, was indicated at 399.0 million bushels, down 11 percent from 446.2 million bushels in 1983.

The nation's crop reporting board said the average yield, based on indications as of June 1, was estimated at 38.2 bushels per acre, second only to last year's record of 41.8 bushels per harvested acre.

A month ago the yield was also put at 38.2 bushels per acre, but a decline in area for harvest reduced the production outlook slightly, from 1.98 billion bushels indicated as of May 1.

Now, the report said, farmers are estimated to have 51.6 million acres for harvest, compared with 51.8 million indicated in May. The 1983 winter wheat harvest was from 47.7 million acres, and the 1982 harvest from 58.5 million acres.

Winter wheat plantings were reduced sharply for the 1983 crop under the government's PIK program which provided a "payment-in-kind" of free surplus grain in return for idling part of their cropland.

No 1984 production estimates for spring wheat, corn and many other spring-planted crops will be released by USDA until later in the growing season.

The record total wheat harvest was 2.81 billion bushels in 1982, a slight increase from the 1981 harvest of just under 2.8 billion bushels. The 1983 crop was 2.43 billion bushels — the third-largest harvest on record.

Production dropped last year as a result of the government's PIK program to give farmers a "payment-in-kind" for reducing acreages of certain crops, including wheat. In return, farmers got $9.7 billion worth of free surplus wheat, corn, sorghum, rice and cotton to use or sell as they chose.

Although wheat farmers were offered a PIK program for 1984, producers of other commodities were not offered those benefits because most of those surpluses have been reduced sharply.

The wheat stockpile, on the other hand, declined only slightly. Now, with another big winter wheat harvest on the way, the stockpile is growing again.

Department officials say wheat farmers signed up to take about 20.8 million acres from production this year under the 1984 program, compared with 28.2 million acres idled in 1983.

According to a USDA analysis following last month's forecast, the 1984 wheat crop could total about 2.55 billion bushels, which would be up from last year's 2.43 billion bushels.

In that analysis, wheat prices at the farm in the new marketing year that began on June 1 were projected at $3.20 to $3.50 per bushel, compared with $3.50 and $3.55 the past two seasons, respectively.

Further, the last month's report indicated wheat supplies would increase by the end of the 1984-85 marketing year, compared with to a slightly decline last season.

Indicated production of winter wheat and average yields in 1984 by major producing states, based on June 1 projections, included these new estimates:

Arkansas, 60,000,000 bushels and an average yield of 40 bushels per acre; California, 56,880,000 and 74; Colorado, 89,900,000 and 29; Georgia, 35,000,000 and 35; Idaho, 57,270,000 and 69; Illinois, 67,320,000 and 44.

Indiana, 47,940,000 and 47; Kansas, 399,500,000 and 38; Kentucky, 17,500,000 and 35; Michigan, 45,000,000 and 50; Mississippi, 20,185,000 and 35; Missouri, 91,120,000 and 35; Montana, 74,400,000 and 30; Nebraska, 78,200,000 and 34.

Steel merger wins approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department on Tuesday approved the purchase of half of National Steel Corp. for $22 million by Japan's No. 2 steelmaker.

Assistant Attorney General J. Paul McGrath, head of the department's antitrust division, said the government will advise the companies that the deal presents no competitive problems and there will be no government challenge to it in court under the Clayton Act.

Section 7 of the act prohibits corporate acquisitions which may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

In April, Nippon Kokan Kabushiki Kaisha, known as NKK, proposed to buy a half interest in National Intergrupp Inc.'s wholly owned subsidiary, National Steel. National Steel is the seventh-ranked U.S. steelmaker.

Court upholds phone access charges

By NORMAN MACNICOLL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal appeals court Tuesday upheld the Federal Communications Commission's plan to require payment of "access charges" by all telephone customers.

The decision, unless successfully appealed to the Supreme Court or overturned by Congress, provides the FCC a clear field to proceed with its plans to impose a $2-a-month telephone access charge on residential customers next year.

The agency has already ordered most of the nation's businesses — those with more than one phone line — to begin paying a monthly access charge of up to $8 per line. Those fees became effective May 25.

The decision by a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, anticipated for months, was unanimous. The 110-page opinion, written jointly by Judges Malcolm Richard Wilkey, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and George E. MacKinnon, consolidates and then squarely rejects 13 lawsuits challenging the FCC's plan. The opinion concludes "the decisions at issue are within the commission's authority and... are rationally grounded and sufficiently supported by evidence."

"Confronting rapid and fundamental changes in the telephone industry as a result of competition and fast-moving technology, the FCC acted for the most part with flexibility and care," the panel wrote. "The commission's work fell short of the ideal at several turns, but our review does not and cannot require perfection."

"It's safe to say we're disappointed that the court didn't see things our way," said Charles D. Gray, the assistant general counsel of the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, a group that represents state utility regulators and which filed one of the appeals. "But it will take some further consideration before we know if a further appeal to the Supreme Court is advisable."

"The finding that access charges are not a threat to universal local service is disappointing," added Samuel Simon, the executive director of the Telecommunications Research and Action Center, a Washington consumer group. "This obviously makes our fight in Congress even more important. Our group had never challenged the commission's authority to do this, but we continue to believe the policy choices it is making are wrong."

Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colorado, the chairman of the House communications subcommittee and a leader of an unsuccessful fight in Congress to block the FCC's plan, declined immediate comment.

The court's decision involves a long-running effort by the FCC to restructure the telephone industry. Driving the agency's deliberations, as the court noted, is a belief that local customers must bear more of the expense of operating their local phone network.

Historically, the long-distance rates of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. have been set at artificially high levels to produce extra revenue to hold down local rates. The FCC would eventually like to shift much of that burden of generating those funds — almost $11 billion in 1984 dollars — from long-distance callers to all local customers.

"That is where access charges come into play. The FCC wants all customers to pay a flat, monthly fee to their local phone company to replace the long-distance subsidy. That, in turn, would allow long-distance rates to fall; would allow the agency to place AT&T on an equal footing with its long-distance competitors."

Stores, brokerages, even a 'blue book' available

New enterprises offer used computer bargains

SEATTLE (AP) — Occasional hackers and spread sheet geniuses are finding bargains in a new industry that deals in discarded data processing equipment.

Used-computer stores, used-computer brokerages, and even a used-computer blue book have been developed to help people who want to buy and sell used computers.

Dealers point out that most machines on the used market are less than 3 years old and still have plenty of life left in them. Prices on used computers vary from 10 percent to 90 percent of their original cost.

"What one person considers obsolete, another can find a use for," said Scott Hirsch, the editor of the Used Computer Guide, a blue book for used computers published by Hansen Publishing Co. of Twin Falls, Idaho.

Hirsch said the used-computer market has been a real boon for parents whose kids are clamoring for a home computer, a novice looking for a cheap starter model or a savvy computer pro who wants to get more equipment for the money.

"A lot of people are feeling pressure to computerize or become computer knowledgeable," he said. "A way to do that is to buy an inexpensive computer that someone else doesn't want."

Hirsch advises first-time computer purchasers to use the same technique as buying a used car, carefully comparing different brands and prices.

Although there are risks involved in buying a used computer, a major concern is the availability of software for machines that contain outmoded technology or are out of production, he said.

Hirsch said he got the idea for a guide to the used-computer marketplace while fielding questions in his job as a used-computer dealer. Last year, he began printing the Used Computer Guide and has distributed 3,000 copies of the quarterly publication to bookstores, computer dealers and individuals.

At the Computer Exchange a used-computer brokerage run by Sherry and Donald Pfaff of Burien, sellors pay a fee ranging from $10 to $200 to list a piece of computer equipment in the system. Buyers can call or write the Exchange free of charge and find out what's currently available for sale. The listing is also accessible by computer.

The Computer Exchange carries about 80 listings and contains information about the computer, such as description, price and extras. When a purchaser needs help in choosing a particular brand, Pfaff will try to assist or refer them to others in the computer business.

"We don't really like to recommend too much because there are so many hundreds of brands out there that it's really impossible to know everything," Pfaff said. "If we can help, we will."

Although most of the Computer Exchange's business is in Washington, Pfaff has put together deals with people in Alaska and Virginia and has handled everything from home computers to $32,000 office systems.

Hecla keeps mine open

WALLACE (AP) — Hecla Mining Co. announced Tuesday that it will not close its Knob Hill gold and silver mine in northeast Washington as planned this year because additional ore reserves have been discovered.

The company had announced last November that it would close the Republic, Wash., mine in mid-1984 because the end-of-known-ore reserves was in sight.

The mine had been only marginally profitable for about 18 months before the November announcement, Hecla spokesman Elmer Blerly had said.

But the discovery of additional reserves means mining can continue for about two years, if prices hold steady, the company said.

Regulators prefer banking loopholes

By DAVID GOELLER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bill to close the loopholes that allows banks to get into such businesses as discount stock brokering was given a cool reception Tuesday by federal officials who regulate financial institutions.

Frank J. Conover, assistant to the director in the limitations it puts on banks," C.T. Conover, controller of the currency, told the House Banking Committee, whose chairman and ranking Republican member are among the bill's chief advocates.

"It represents an attempt to turn back the clock in a way that would weaken the banking industry and be detrimental to consumers," testified Conover, whose opinion was seconded by William Isaac, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

These officials plus Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker and Edwin Gray, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, urged the committee to get together with its Senate counterpart to fashion legislation for broad reform of banking laws instead of just the single issue of so-called non-bank banks.

St Germain said the non-bank bill was neither pro- nor anti-consumers, rather "for safety and stability in the (banking) system" because it would prevent banks and savings and loans from risking depositors' money in speculative ventures.

Conover and Isaac sharply disagreed. Saying that "political" concerns are behind the bill, they testified they see no danger in banks using holding companies to bank discount securities, real estate and insurance.

Conover said he can "think of no recent developments in the financial services marketplace" that have benefited consumers more than the advent of discount (securities) brokerage.

"It poses little risk to banks, provides a source of fee income and allows them to offer attractive products to consumers such as asset-management accounts," he said.

"I can't imagine why anyone would be opposed to this development except securities firms, who just don't want the competition," testified Conover, who said "comprehensive" legislation is needed to deal with banking activities.

Citing such companies as General Motors, Prudential Insurance, American Express and Sears Roebuck, he said that "all these firms are engaged in the business of banking, but none has a banking charter."

Conover said that if the non-bank legislation becomes law, "consumers will be able to obtain the full range of financial services only through such non-bank providers. That means banks will permanently lose customers. And such an occurrence threatens the long-term viability of the banking system."

Those are institutions that offer more bank services but refrain from one key in order to escape federal definitions of a bank and thereby escape federal prohibitions against interstate banking.

However, prospects for an omnibus banking bill in the election year appear dim. House Banking Committee Chairman Fernand J. St Germain, D-R.I., has spoken against broad action, and reform proposals have yet to be considered by the Senate Banking Committee.
