Ferraro, Bush face off in debate

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Geraldine Ferraro said Thursday night the Soviet Union wouldn't get away with any attempt to push her around because she is a woman, declaring, "I will be a leader."

George Bush, responding in a debate of campaign understatements, said the Democrats offer only "weakness, despair, disrespect."

For 90 nationally televised minutes, Vice President Bush extolled President Reagan and aimed his sharpest lines past Ms. Ferraro at Walter F. Mondale. He taunted the former vice president, saying, "wine on, harvest moon," adding the Democratic presidential nominee has a one-idea candidacy — raise taxes for everybody.

Exchange pointed out supporting roles — A9

Bush said Reagan had delivered "optimism" and his economic program "brought America back."

But Ms. Ferraro said Reagan tax cuts "darned near destroyed this country" with record budget deficits. She cited lack of an arms control treaty with the Soviet Union as Reagan's biggest failure, and at one point scored Bush for a "patronizing attitude" toward her on foreign policy.

While she attacked Reagan and praised Mondale, Ms. Ferraro — the first woman named to a major party ticket — sought to portray herself as duly prepared to take on the responsibilities of the vice presidency, and the presidency if that should be necessary.

"For the principles we believe in, Walter Mondale and I have just begun to fight," she said, even though her ticket is well behind in the polls.

The vice presidential candidates argued economic policy, abortion and family finances in their debate — beginning and ending with a firm handshake at the center of a stage in the Philadelphia Civic Center.

"I have never felt this pool in my life," Bush said afterwards. "I am absolutely convinced we have turned this thing around," after Reagan's subpar debate performance against Mondale last Sunday night. "I believe President Reagan is going to blow Fritz Mondale away" in their second debate on Oct. 21.

Ferraro told a cheering post-debate audience, "Now that was fun," and in a reference to Mondale's strong showing on Sunday said "two out of two ain't bad." She repeated her closing comment from the debate — that she and Mondale have "just begun to fight."

Back on stage, the evening turned testy when the vice presidential candidates-pot around to foreign policy.

"Let me help you with the difference, Mrs. Ferraro," between the Iranian hostage crisis of 1980 and the recent bombing of the U.S. embassy in Beirut, Bush said when she criticized Reagan's Middle Eastern policy.

Retorted Ms. Ferraro, peering over her glasses, "I almost resent, Vice President Bush, your patronizing attitude that you have to teach me about foreign policy."

The question of Ms. Ferraro's ability to handle the Russians came in a question from panelist Robert Boyd of Knight Ridder. He

Immigration bill doomed by wrangling

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Weary but still-combative, members of the House and Senate struggling to adjourn for the fall election campaign sent the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill to the legislative graveyard Thursday night — another testimonial to the difficulty this Congress had in making decisions on major issues.

There was no up-or-down vote on the massive bill, which has been at the center of the Congressional agenda for months. Instead, it expired on procedural grounds when the conference committee working to reconcile differences in the House and Senate versions declared it could not reach agreement.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., chief sponsor of the proposed immigration reforms along with Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli, D-Ky., had announced at one point in the seemingly endless fight that he and Mazzoli would wash their hands of the problem if the bill died this year.

Thursday night, Simpson vowed to resurrect the bill when the new Congress reconvenes in January.

Yet the inability of the 98th Congress to break the protracted deadlocks and make a direct decision on proposals for dealing with a major national problem after months and years of study, revision and negotiation raises serious questions about the ability of the present House and Senate to function.

And the immigration bill is by no means an isolated case.

"Measured by volume of legislation or by the number of innovations in national policy, it probably didn't accomplish a great deal new," House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Tex., conceded in an interview on the record of the 98th Congress.

Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi, the second-ranking Republican in the House, was harsher: "I've been around here 16 years, and this is as bad as I've ever seen it, as far as not getting things done."

For House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., who says his mission as curbing the Reagan administration's defense buildup and social spending cuts, lack of action was the best possible outcome in many instances. "We have halted the meat-tax production of Ronald Reagan," O'Neill said.

Moreover, the 98th Congress completed some impressive achievements, particularly in 1983, its first year. Bipartisan efforts salvaged a Social Security system that seemed headed for bankruptcy and passed a recession-fighting bill aimed at creating up to 400,000 jobs.

Idaho wilderness negotiations fail as Congress adjourns

Decision back in USFS lap

By HAL BERTON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — With the failure of Congress to pass an Idaho wilderness bill, the task of deciding what Sawtooth Forest lands deserve permanent protection swings back to the U.S. Forest Service.

Sawtooth Forest Supervisor Roland Stoleson says it's a task he doesn't relish.

"It's real disappointing," Stoleson said Thursday after the negotiations had collapsed. "A bill would have made a lot of the decisions that now we will have to face."

In the congressional arena, the toughest decisions centered around what to do with the White Clouds-Boulder area and the Pioneers.

Senate and House conferees tentatively agreed to set aside the entire White Clouds-Boulder area for further study. But Stoleson says that the fate of the Pioneers was unclear.

McClure wanted the Pioneers to be put into a study area that would have allowed for the continued use of motor vehicles and minerals exploration.

Serberling said he was leaning towards designating the area as wilderness, but probably could have

WASHINGTON — Attempts to compromise on additional wilderness acreage in Idaho were pronounced dead for the year on Thursday.

That was the result as the state's all-Republican congressional delegation and Democratic leaders of the House Interior Committee remained far apart in their positions.

Sen. James McClure, the delegation's leader, blamed the impasse on the refusal of national environmental groups and "eastern lawmakers to heed the wishes of what he claimed was a vast majority of Idahoans who don't want any more wilderness."

"If Idaho is to have a balanced approach to the management of its public lands, there simply should not be massive additions to the state's wilderness system" already totaling nearly 1 million acres, McClure said as Congress moved toward its 1984 adjournment.

But the Idaho Wilderness Coalition, while expressing disappointment that no agreement was reached, hailed the demise of the delegation's plans, including their final compromise offer that the coalition said remained woefully inadequate in comparison to the 3.4-million-acre addition it was seeking.

"No bill is better than the one that was offered," said Ernie Day, an Idaho native and spokesman for the National Wilderness Society who disputed McClure's claims that Idahoans oppose additional wilderness.

"We've held them off for another year. That's all we can say," added Wendy Wilson, director of the Idaho Conservation League.

Serberling told the Times-News that he "really made an effort to bring about a compromise that would be acceptable to the (Idaho) delegation and acceptable to environmental groups. We came fairly close but there were some areas of disagreement that we just couldn't seem to surmount. With time running out there just wasn't any point in proceeding."

Serberling cited the MALARD-LARKIN area of northern Idaho and the Payette Crest area of central Idaho as two of the major stumbling blocks in the negotiations.

He said that McClure wanted to open too much acreage for logging in these areas.

Congressional failure to agree on how much land should be carved out for wilderness protection from more than 8 million acres under review may well have shifted the decision to the U.S. Forest Service, which under federal law is now required to issue long-range management plans for all its acreage including that under wilderness study.

Although the next Congress can take up the issue again, Congressman Larry Craig said simply, "I don't know that the 98th session of Congress will bear additional fruit on the issue of wilderness in Idaho unless we see significant movement from the environmental community."

He charged environmental interests with refusing to compromise, while those seeking multimillion-acre

Thatcher unhurt after explosion rips hotel

The Associated Press

BRIGHTON, England — A large explosion early today rocked the hotel where Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and many of her 22-member Cabinet were staying during the Conservative Party's annual conference.

Mrs. Thatcher was said to be unhurt, but many other people were reported injured. A stream of ambulances ferried guests to local hospitals.

The artist minister, Lord Gowrie, told The Associated Press that Mrs. Thatcher was safe and had been taken to the Brighton police station after the blast at the Grand Hotel in this seaside resort.

The British domestic news agency, Press Association, said there were reports that a bomb went off at 3 a.m. in the hotel's foyer. It said many of the guests at the hotel for the four-day Tory conference were believed to have been injured.

Sussex County police said they did not know how many people had been injured. A stream of ambulances ferried guests to local hospitals.

Police sealed off the town and stopped all vehicles leaving after the explosion.

Hesitant Congress delaying war on waste, Grace says

By BOB FRIJUND
Times-News writer

CALDWELL — The war on government waste has begun but a balking Congress stands in the way of saving hundreds of billions of dollars, the head of a presidential commission says.

J. Peter Grace, the industrialist who headed the President's Private Sector Commission on Cost Control said Thursday in Caldwell that he, columnist Jack Anderson and a citizens' committee are trying to amass 1 million signatures by January to force the Congress to stop wasteful spending.

The commission, which was nickednamed the Grace Commission, discovered 2,478 separate ways to cut back spending or to increase federal revenue during a two-year study. It instituted, the economics would save at least $424 billion during the next three years, he said.

The waste turned up government-wide and in many cases the federal bureaucracy simply doesn't know how many employees it has, where they are, or how much is being spent, Grace said.

Sixty percent of the government's 17,400 computer systems are obsolete. There are 332 incompatible accounting systems and no master lists of government offices, Grace said the commission found.

The Reagan administration has moved to cut $10.5 billion of the waste to date and in the 1985 budget. But billions still remain. The Congress must be pressured to stop listening to special interests instead of the American taxpayer, Grace said. The congressional subcommittees that consider spending are populated by representatives who cater to special interests, he said.

Appropriations bills are constructed with add-ons that pump money into unrelated projects. The president cannot kill wasteful parts, he must veto the whole bill and often that would eliminate beneficial programs, Grace said.

J. PETER GRACE Heads presidential panel

Anti-Soviet attack termed as 'stale'

By BARRY SCHWEID
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Gerard C. Smith, former U.S. arms control negotiator, accused President Reagan on Thursday of disseminating "largely stale" charges of Soviet treaty violations in a possible "step toward nullifying agreements with Moscow that limit nuclear weapons."

"How low they have stooped," Smith declared as he condemned a report by a presidential advisory panel that accused the Soviets of breaching agreements with the United States for nearly a quarter-century.

Smith said he doubted Reagan read the report before he transmitted it to Congress on Wednesday night.

"We are seeing a phenomenon which may be a precursor to getting out of the treaties themselves," Smith said at a news conference called by the Arms Control Association, a private group he serves as chairman.

The report's accusations against the Soviets ranged from illegal missile tests and forbidden radar deployments to putting the atmosphere with radioactive debris from underground nuclear weapons explosions.

According to the presidential panel, the Soviets have violated about half the agreements they entered, including the controversial 1972 and 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaties with the United States, known as SALT I and II.

Smith, who was chief U.S. negotiator for the 1972 accord, said "this lunge into the dark by private citizens, although they are appointed by the president, makes one wonder what the real motivation for this proposal is."

Herbert Scoville, a former deputy director of the CIA and president of the association, also was sharply critical of the report.

"There is nothing new in this particular report that hasn't been hashed over many times," he said. Scoville said some of the allegations were reported by Reagan to Congress last January. The additional accusations, he said, don't warrant "serious concern."

Instead of airing the charges in "a public debate," Scoville said, the administration should pursue them quietly with the Soviets in Geneva, Switzerland, under procedures established by the SALT treaties.

That is the approach to take, Scoville said. "If we are really serious about investigating and finding out about Soviet violations and getting those violations to stop."

Michael Krepon, an analyst for the Arms Control Association, said all questionable Soviet practices up to 1979 were either stopped or explained satisfactorily to the Nixon, Ford and Carter administrations.

Threat to embassies arises

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department said Thursday it has received a report that a group of terrorists has threatened to crash a small plane packed with explosives into American embassies in the Middle East, including the embassy in Nicosia, Cyprus.

"While officials said they don't know whether the reports are true, they are taking precautions. Secretary of State George P. Shultz said last week that all U.S. embassies in the Middle East have been on increased alert since the terrorist bombing at the U.S. Embassy annex in Beirut last month."

In Nicosia, Cyprus, government spokesman Andreas Christofides said the police increased security around the American embassy Wednesday after receiving information that "a terrorist attack" was to take place against the U.S. Embassy.

"But we don't know anything about a small aircraft being involved," Christofides added.

Senate OKs increase in benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate gave final congressional approval Thursday to legislation ensuring that Social Security beneficiaries are assured of a cost-of-living increase Jan. 1, no matter what the inflation rate is.

By voice vote, it passed legislation already approved by the House. The Senate previously had approved similar legislation, but there were technical differences between the two chambers' versions.

The legislation now goes to the White House for President Reagan's signature.

Reagan sought the measure in July, when it looked as though the 3 percent trigger on which current law bases a cost-of-living increase would not be met.

However, the latest Consumer Price Index figures indicate that if current trends continue, there will be a cost-of-living increase ranging between 3.3 percent and 3.6 percent even without the legislation, according to the House Ways and Means Committee.

The benefit increase is based on the rise in inflation measured by the "Consumer Price Index" for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers between the third quarter of 1983 and the third quarter of 1984. That figure is not due out until late in October, when Congress will have adjourned, and members will be busy campaigning for re-election.

The legislation provides a one-time waiver of the 3 percent trigger. Currently, the average monthly benefit for an individual is $430. It would go up by about $12 a month if the inflation increase is 3 percent. For a couple, the average of $740 would go up about $21.

Under current law, cost-of-living increases are financed by increasing the wage base on which taxes are calculated. That means that people paying 20% O.K.N workers' wages from 1982 to 1983. The current wage base — the maximum amount of a per Sonco's high Social Security taxes are levied — is $37,800. It would go to an estimated $39,300 under the legislation.

Rape suspect apprehended

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Police on Thursday arrested a 19-year-old man in connection with an incident in which a 15-year-old girl was forced into a high school restroom and raped before a crowd of youths, authorities said.

Jeffrey Lewis of Alexandria was arrested on a felony warrant from neighboring Fairfax County for abduction with intent to defile, said Alexandria police spokeswoman Lucy Crockett.

The girl was raped after a man, encouraged by a group of friends, abducted her from a school parking lot during a football game Oct. 3 at Fort Hunt High School in Fairfax County, according to county police Capt. Michael Young.

"He said she may have been raped by as many as two people after being stripped in a restroom stall. The incident occurred at night when school was not in session, he said.

Young said Lewis, who is not a student at the school, had eluded capture for almost a week.

Media pool will aid the public interest

The decision to establish a media pool which would accompany American armed forces on any future military expedition like the invasion of Grenada is a welcome recognition by the Pentagon of the key role the American press plays in American society.

But like other guidelines between press and government in a free society, the real test will be in how well the pool will work when the time comes.

Notice that we said "when," for it seems clear that such mop-up and muscle flexing is becoming a routine device of American foreign policy in the waning years of the 20th century.

Journalists complained loudly when the Pentagon excluded the press from any on-site coverage of the Grenada invasion until it was all but over. But the complaints unleashed a deluge of resentment among some Americans, who have long seen the press as a force for no good in American society.

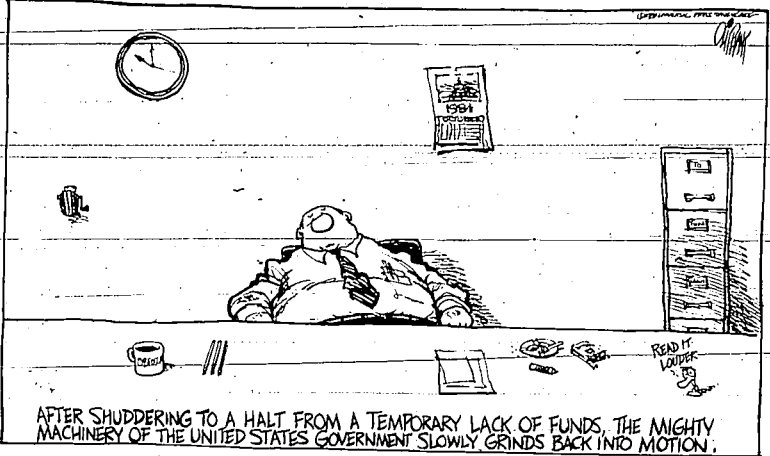

That view was adopted, at least in part by the administration, which saw the political advantage in thumping on the media. It was only later, when the issue had passed, that cooler heads prevailed.

Recent polls suggest that outspoken anti-press resentment isn't shared as broadly as the zealots presume. One poll found 74 percent of Americans agree that "it's important for the public to have the press present when American military forces are sent to another country."

The new media pool is a broad-based one, consisting of reporters and photographers from major wire services, television networks and newsmagazines. Yet, it would be a small group of only 11 people, certainly not too many for a military operation to absorb.

Some logistic difficulties are perhaps inevitable in press coverage of war. After all, neither the media nor the military is used to things being neat and tidy.

Democracy depends on each understanding the other. They need not love one another, but no republican, free government can long survive without either a competent, citizen army, or a free press.

AFTER SHUDDERING TO A HALT FROM A TEMPORARY LACK OF FUNDS, THE MIGHTY MACHINERY OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT SLOWLY GRINDS BACK INTO MOTION.

Reagan less vibrant on stump in 1984

While the presidency may be a job one can map through, running for the presidency clearly is not. It appears the rigors of the 1984 campaign are beginning to take their toll on the incumbent commander in chief.

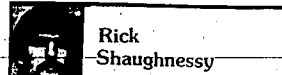

Concentrating on last Sunday's televised sparring match between Reagan and Mondale was difficult because the recent and rapid physical changes in the aging Reagan were too distracting. Reagan — without his normal hourly dose of the Greco Formula Extra Oily — seemed old and tired next to the younger, yet nearly all-grey Mondale. But Reagan's reduced dependence on the cosmetics of fleeting youth was probably less a factor in his sluggish showing than was his lack of the characteristic crispness in responding to questions and rebuttals that has earned him his "Great Communicator" title.

Either age has finally stowed the celluloid cowboy of yesteryear or he has grown weary of selling the snake oil that even his own confederates have found repulsive.

An offering in this week's mail bag supports the first theory:

Jean Komaiko of Durham, N.C., has founded an organization of wives whose husbands are 73 years of age or older. This women's organization is apparently hoping to influence voters in the same manner as the Packard Motor Car Co. attempted to influence motorists with their "ask the man who owns one" ad campaign.

But in the case of members of Komaiko's organization — the Committee to Retire the President — if you're thinking of electing a 73-year-old man to the presidency and want to

Rick Shaughnessy

"ask a woman who's married to one," they are emphatically saying "don't."

"I am married to a 73-year-old man who is my darling, charming and fun," writes Komaiko, the wife of a retired Chicago attorney.

"On the other hand, we spend a lot of our time searching for lost keys, misplaced lists and glasses," she adds.

Komaiko states that members of her committee "are women who seemingly have been married forever, have heard the same jokes 547 times, still smile and cherish their enduring relationships. But there isn't a woman among us who would willingly wish this kind of responsibility (the presidency) on her partner."

Trusting these women's lenient experience with post-73-year-old males lends credibility to the concept of a physical slowing in Reagan. But it doesn't totally refute the other avenue of explanation on his clumsy debate showing.

Reagan sold his brand of snake oil to voters on national television in 1980. He billed it as an end to deficits, high taxes and American military weakness through supply-side economics.

But in 1984, the truth of this concept — which was panned by Reagan's former chief economic adviser and has been labeled "voodoo" by his own vice president — may have finally trickled into the American consciousness.

Consequently, Reagan himself may be reluctant to try selling it again.

The first term of Reagan's presidency coincided with a cyclical upturn in the economy. The upturn would have occurred were Jimmy Carter at the helm.

But giving Reagan his due, the recovery under Carter would probably not have been nearly so robust. Reagan improved people's expectations. He passed out rose-colored glasses to American producers and consumers and welcomed them back to the golden age of American commercial enterprise.

But the two huge deficits in the process and despite the best of expectations among the country's economic players, those deficits are likely to make the next cyclical downturn as distressed as the 1980 if Americans were better off than they were in 1976.

In 1984, the question voters should ask is: will they be better off in 1988? And under whose administration will they be better off — Reagan's or Mondale's?

Reagan's anticipation of those questions may be what has caused him to look backward rather than forward when discussing economic policy and to be slow to push his supply-side product.

Regards whether it's his facilities or his ideas that are aging rapidly, one thing is for sure. Reagan's is a less-vibrant and less-confident personality on the stump in 1984.

Sophia Loren latest in ranks of mid-life beauty boosters

BOSTON — For those of you who missed it, Sophia Loren turned 50.

We are told that she celebrated her birthday publicly in a shopping mall in Atlanta. What glamorous brand had brought the Italian movie star to the mall? Had she run out of candles or pantyhoes?

No, Sophia Loren had joined the bustling ranks of certifiably older women promoting beauty. By now it appears that nearly all the women who are pumping and priming, selling their shapes and their books on the circuit, are more than halfway through the average life expectancy.

Only last year Joan Collins, 50, wrapped her body in nothing but boas for Playboy. Before that Jane Fonda, 46, began bumping and grunting on thousands of videotapes. Now we have Raquel Welch writing and posing as a 44-year-old yoga pinup queen and Sophia Loren hustling for Colgate and a book of beauty tips. Middle age is so popular that soon a younger woman may have to lie to get a publisher, or endorse a face cream.

Frankly, I don't begrudge Jane her biceps or Joan her pectorals or Sophia her everything. By all accounts, women like these are supposed to offer hope for the Ghost of my Christmas Future. But I'm not sure how I feel about their kind of middle age.

When I was a kid, the only older women who won prizes for their physical preserves were Gretta Garbo and Marlene Dietrich. Even they were looked upon with suspicion, as if there were pictures of Dorian Gray hung up somewhere in their closets. Most of us assumed that at some point past 30, you just quit. It was a vaguely unsettling but also reassuring idea.

After all, it was hard enough trying to look like a model in Seventeen when you were a teen-ager. How many of us suspected that we would be compared to Linda Evans at 40?

Indeed, think of the women who have spent the past decades being measured against Sophia Loren. Is it any wonder that they are fans of Elizabeth Taylor?

The central notion of the middle-aged, show-and-tell routine is that she can look that good at 50, so can you. Just follow the directions on the package or the book. This is a bit like saying that if Shirley Maerzline can dance at 50, you can dance at 41? Dear Diary: Can I look like Catherine Deneuve at 20?

The sales pitch of beautydom is generally accompanied by a charming disclaimer about youth. Ms. Loren, for example, writes in her new book, that "this mature approach to beauty... does not depend on possessing the... of a teen-ager." The secret in this advice is that Sophia Loren apparently had "dewy cheeks" as a teen-ager. The rest of us had zit. A few of us may have had muscles in youth; the rest had premature cellulite.

The new role models of mid-life assure us that they, too, were really awkward and unattractive in their youth. "I wasn't always considered beautiful," writes Loren. "When I was 13, my nickname was 'Tootpick.'"

Raquel Welch, by a bit further saying, "For the most part I see myself as a well-proportioned wimp."

But if you really think of Loren as a tootpick and of Welch as a wimp, then I have some books, a line or two of beauty products and an lot of exercising just waiting for you.

As far as I can tell, not one of the new breed of mid-life beauties is going to make their peers feel good about themselves. It's Rosemary Clooney in a muumuu who makes them feel good. What Loren, Fonda, Welch, etc., have done is to raise the threshold of self-hate faster than the age span.

We no longer look forward to letting go at 40. There is no thought of aging gracefully at 40. At 50, we are faced with the prospect of daily regimens to soften our skin and lighten our thighs. The end result of all this is that those of us who failed to look like Brooke Shields at 17 can now fall to look like Victoria Principal at 33 and like Linda Evans at 41 and like Sophia Loren at 50.

White Sen. McClure turned 50 this year, she updated her famous line at 40. She said, "This is what 50 looks like." With due apologies to the lot of mid-life beauty, allow me two words: "Not necessarily."

Ellen Goodman writes for The Boston Globe.

Peavey had the facts twice

I looked a few weeks back that a final decision stopped Idaho Power from charging all of us for what they spent getting ready to build the Pioneer coal plant eight years ago. Idaho was smarter than any other state in the west for not building that plant. Our power rates are still low and our skies are still clean.

I remember when it was proposed in 1974 just a few people spoke out against it. Over a few years they convinced most of us they were right — and they were.

One of those few was Sen. John Peavey. No one saw more quickly and clearly what that $1 billion white elephant would have caused Idaho farmers, businesses and homeowners.

Idaho Power spent thousands of dollars trying to beat him in the next election for the senate seat.

I think John Peavey deserves our votes for the state senate just for the money he saved us by fighting Pioneer. Now even Idaho Power admits John was right.

A lot of our farm leaders in the legislature were Pioneer. I am glad we listened to Sen. Peavey.

Today many of these people were as short-sighted about the future of the Snake River.

They are wrong again and even the new agreement reached by the Governor, Attorney General and Idaho Power proves this. Peavey had the facts again and I'm glad we listened to him again.

Leaders should be brightest

Professional educators and informed lay persons generally agree that standardized IQ tests do not constitute the be-all and end-all in measuring human intellectual capacity. Still, in the absence of a better tool, and considering that one must start from somewhere, consider: using the figure 100 as a departure point, a score of 89-90 will get an individual into military service, or into a lower-level civil service position; around 110 qualifies for Officer Candidate School; 120 or so, and a shot at pilot training is reasonable; while around 135 can give some thought to West Point or Annapolis. One hundred will get the average person past entrance exams at most state colleges; 120 would indicate the possibility of, perhaps, graduate school; while 130-140 indicates eligibility for MIT or Caltech.

One conceals that test scores are not the sole criteria for qualification for various fields of endeavor — we're talking basics here. But we're also talking about the fact that an applicant for a letter carrier job with the post office must demonstrate more proof of basic intelligence than a candidate for the U.S. Senate, or for that matter, the president.

Is it illogical to suggest that if we can ill afford not to put the best minds in the country in positions of leadership? The millions of dollars which are virtually wasted in political campaigns could be saved by the simple (addition) of competitive testing. We do not seek assistance at the packing plant when we need an itinerant pipe-mover for a plumbing problem. It is ludicrous to suggest that we should allow an individual access to a position of political leadership with absolutely no credentials — yet historically this has been the rule rather than the exception.

On the basis of native intelligence, Ian Von Linder and Nick Nicholson, to name only a couple of local candidates, are vastly superior to their opposition.

Von Linder, in particular, is a rarity — an aspiring politician recognized nationally for his expertise and a Yale Ph.D. It will be almost criminal if the votes in the west end of Magic Valley fail to support him; he is most assuredly one of the brightest lights ever produced in Idaho.

The same comparison might be made between Hansen and Stallings — party affiliation is meaningless in this case, but it's a safe bet that Stallings, as blond as he is, enjoys a 30-40 point edge in IQ.

Incidentally, for those staunch supporters of Steve Symms, one suggests a visit to the Caldwell area and a little informal conversation with people who have known him long and well. The impression is that they are delighted to have him in Washington; and out of Caldwell.

Curiously enough, there are areas where Cassius Clay would defeat Lucius Clay in an election, which says a lot more about the electorate than the candidates. It will be interesting to observe whether local voters once again opt for mediocre, selecting legislators, one not brighter than a certified moron; obviously it is a practical impossibility to fill modern legislative forums with latter-day counterparts of Plato, Socrates and Aristotle (or even Jefferson).

But, it would seem that local voters currently enjoy a rare opportunity to upgrade the quality of their representation.

As has been pointed out previously, if you can make a man believe he is thinking, he will love you; if you actually make him think, he will hate you for it.

Busch best man for Senate

It has recently seemed clear to me that our political process does not always serve us truthfully nor justly. It seems in many cases, the best candidate for the job is often the man/woman with the least money to spend campaigning.

Take, for instance, the McClure/Busch race. Sen. McClure has collected over a million dollars in campaign donations (95 percent from out-of-state special interest groups). The next few weeks Idaho will most likely see an expensive McClure television campaign never monetarily feasible to the fledgling Pete Busch campaign.

White Sen. McClure is an incumbent; he has voted against the interests of Idahoans. He is the man who proposed a measure for 300,000-acre wilderness bill for Idaho. McClure also is the one working so hard to bring the New Production Breeder Reactor, a huge nuclear weapons facility, to southeastern Idaho.

Sen. McClure has consistently voted to cut Medicare and social security benefits.

Sen. McClure recently voted against the Genocide Bill, a bill dedicated to assure that there will never again be another Jewish holocaust or anything like it in this country. The bill was incidentally supported by President Reagan.

And so Idaho, look at McClure's record. Don't be overimpressed with the senator's glossy television campaign to assure us.

In this case, Pete Busch, whom, in my opinion, be the best man for the job. He's well-educated, intelligent, well-informed in local and global issues.

His 22 years in the military have given him a solid background in foreign policy. Pete cares deeply about Idaho. He cares about the future of Idaho not just how much money can be made today. I've talked with Pete extensively and I give him not only full support but my friendship.

'This is really great,' exults first woman to walk in space

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Astronaut Kathy Sullivan, exulting "This is really great," on Thursday became the first American woman to walk and work in open space.

She helped test refueling techniques that may some day salvage satellites now abandoned as useless.

She and David Leestma spent more than three hours outside Challenger's cargo bay, often shouting with joy like kids at a playground. They seemed almost reluctant to come back in and had to be prodded several times by commander Robert Crippen.

"Good job, time to come in," he admonished at one point.

Ms. Sullivan acted as a plumber's assistant to Leestma as he attached a refueling line to a fitting on a tank half filled with volatile hydrazine, a fuel used by satellites to maintain their orbit and attitude toward Earth.

The procedure practiced by the astronauts will be used to double the life of satellites in low orbits, none of which was designed for refueling.

Tools, specially designed for the purpose, will use fittings and valves through which the satellites were fueled on Earth.

"Orbital repair strikes again!" said Ms. Sullivan as she and Leestma wrapped up their job.

Later, her body dangling over the side at a 90-degree angle to the spacecraft, Ms. Sullivan helped Leestma align a loose antenna, so that pins could be driven into two holes electrically from inside the cabin.

"We're pinned," Leestma shouted. "They are locked, they are locked."

"No sweat," said Ms. Sullivan. "They're solid."

That done, she floated to the other side of the spacecraft and did some troubleshooting on another antenna that has caused locking problems in the flight.

The antenna tasks had been added to the activity schedule in mid-flight. Before he came back into the cabin, Leestma performed another unscheduled job.

He retrieved a safety cap that had been on a depressurization valve on the ship's airlock, returning to the back of the cargo bay, where he had worked on the refueling experiment.

Bundled in bulky space suits costing $2.1 million each and restrained by tethers attached to the sides of the ship, Ms. Sullivan and Leestma had a wonderful time as they clipped wires, removed a dust cap, unscrewed a nut and attached a valve and hose to a tank filled with hydrazine.

LINWOOD BRILEY Likely to be executed

Court allows execution

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court refused on Thursday to stop today's execution of Linwood Briley, convicted of seven murders and leader of the largest death-row escape in the country's history.

The justices voted 7-2 to reject an emergency petition asking for time to prepare another appeal challenging Briley's conviction and death sentence for the 1979 robbery and slaying of a Richmond disc jockey.

"I know of no plans" for further appeals, William Allen, one of Briley's lawyers, said just minutes after the decision came down. "But I can't exactly say no other steps will be taken."

Briley's lawyers could seek a friendly lower federal or state court judge to grant a stay, which the state would certainly appeal back to the Supreme Court.

The justices split the same way Tuesday when they refused to hear an earlier appeal from Briley, who is scheduled to die at 11 p.m. today. The only sure votes for a stay were the two dissenters, Justices Thurgood Marshall and William Brennan, who oppose capital punishment in all circumstances.

"It's not looking its best," defense attorney Deborah Wyatt had said before Thursday's ruling.

The Supreme Court had refused three times before Thursday to hear Briley's case.

Gov. Charles S. Robb, who has the power to commute the sentence, has said he has seen nothing in the hundreds of letters or legal papers or appeals for clemency, to cause him to intervene. Robb was out of the state Thursday and was not due back until late Friday afternoon.

Fabrication charged in libel case

NEW YORK (AP) — A CBS producer fabricated "a conspiracy that never occurred" in alleging Vietnam War commander William Westmoreland deliberately lied about enemy troop strength, the general's attorney said Thursday as trial began in a $120 million libel suit against the network.

More than 100 journalists, lawyers and spectators packed a federal courtroom and spilled into the corridor to hear opening arguments in the lawsuit filed by Westmoreland against the network for its 1982 broadcast, "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception."

An attorney for the defendants said they had "no incentive to lie" and that the broadcast was accurate.

The program discussed "a widely known intelligence debate which CBS converted into a conspiracy," contended Dan M. Burt, attorney for the now-retired general.

Burt charged that CBS failed to interview key figures, did not use some interviews that contradicted the show's thesis and used improper editing techniques in other interviews, thus "wrongly accusing Westmoreland of misleading President Lyndon Johnson and the Joint Chiefs of Staff about enemy strength."

Burt said Westmoreland was not warned what the subject would be when he was interviewed by Wallace for the program in 1981.

"CBS ambushed General Westmoreland," the attorney charged.

Big budget passed for intelligence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress passed and sent to President Reagan on Thursday what Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., described as the largest intelligence budget ever made available "... by any nation at any point in history."

The amount of the record intelligence authorization bill is secret, but Moynihan has taken the position that classification rules do not prevent general observations about its size in relation to others.

Moynihan, vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said intelligence budgets have grown steadily since fiscal year 1979, chiefly because of the acquisition of new technology, but the increase "has now about reached its logical limit."

The bill authorizes funds for intelligence functions of the CIA, Defense Department, Defense Intelligence Agency, National Security Agency, Army, Navy, Air Force, State Department, Treasury Department, Energy Department, FBI and Drug Enforcement Administration.

Report claims NATO losing in numbers, technologically

By ED BLANCHE
The Associated Press

LONDON — NATO has largely lost the technological edge it had over the Warsaw Pact while the Soviet bloc has boosted its numerical conventional weapons superiority, the International Institute for Strategic Studies reported today.

However, the London-based research center stressed in its 1984-85 Military-Balance report: "The conventional overall balance is still such as to make general military aggression a highly risky undertaking."

Asked about possible future trends, Institute director Robert O'Neill said: "A great deal depends on... how far the Soviets will be able, because of the economic stresses we've seen them coming under in future years, to continue to maintain the same level of defense expenditure."

"They may well find they have to change their force structure quite considerably also."

The International Institute for Strategic Studies, founded in 1958, is widely respected for its studies of international security issues. Its analysis comes from the United States, Europe and Asia.

The institute's report was issued on the same day that NATO defense secretaries opened their fall meeting in Stresa, Italy.

"The numerical balance — particularly in equipment — continues to move gradually in favor of the East," the report said in its analysis of the conventional weapons balance in Europe. "At the same time, the West has largely lost the technological edge in conventional equipment which allowed NATO to believe that quality could substitute for number."

The institute said the superpowers' nuclear missiles are becoming smaller, more accurate and more mobile. This, it said, "is a trend which will make it very difficult to negotiate verifiable constraints in future years."

O'Neill said both the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact have had economic problems that curbed defense spending. Global spending on arms was $700 billion last year, a $10 billion drop from the previous year.

The institute said NATO's target for an annual 3 percent increase in defense spending to upgrade conventional forces "is unlikely to be met. The economic recovery of the NATO allies has undoubtedly lagged behind that of the United States."

The report said NATO's strategy of building up conventional forces to counter a Soviet attack without having to resort to nuclear weapons is generally accepted. But it said there is disagreement about how to blunt a Soviet thrust — deep strikes to pinch off an offensive from the rear or bolstering forward defenses.

"Reservations are being expressed that forward defense may be weakened in favor of the deep-strike mission," the institute said.

It said the Warsaw Pact "enjoys numerical advantage in virtually all categories of weapons," including 50,500 battle tanks against NATO's 20,742, and has standardized hardware and tactics while NATO countries have different doctrines and weapons.

The institute also said the "rising Soviet inventory of modern fighter-bombers poses an increasingly long-range threat."

The Soviets now have 2,430 ground-attack planes, 745 more than last year. NATO's corresponding strength was given as 2,250, an increase of only 104.

The institute said the Soviets also have boosted anti-aircraft defenses — 4,500 interceptors, 7,487 guns and 3,457 missiles.

It noted: "While advanced electronic counter-measures could probably go some way to nullify these defenses, NATO air forces nevertheless face an increasingly formidable task in maintaining close air support for NATO ground forces on the European battlefield."

"Since NATO depends on its air forces to counter the apparent numerical superiority in pact ground force numbers, their ability to penetrate pact air defenses could be a critical factor."

USSR says violation claims 'groundless'

MOSCOW (AP) — A U.S. report claiming the Soviet Union has violated arms control agreements at least 17 times is "groundless" and aimed at worsening U.S.-Soviet relations, the official news agency Tass said Thursday.

The statement was in response to a report that President Reagan submitted to Congress on Wednesday. Reagan said in an accompanying letter that his administration "continues to be seriously concerned about Soviet behavior with regard to arms control obligations and commitments."

"In order to 'legalize' in the public eye the continuation of the unrestricted buildup of American weapons of mass annihilation, planned and paid long in advance, along channels banned by the SALT I and SALT II treaties, all Washington had to do was to 'prove' that it is the Soviet Union that 'violates' its pledges," Tass said.

"This task was assigned to an advisory commission on arms control, which comprises officials close to the president who are not experts on problems of international treaties, but know well what the White House wants from them," the news agency said.

Panama's boss vows respect for canal treaties

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Panama's new civilian president promised — in an inaugural speech Thursday — that his administration will "scrupulously" respect the U.S. canal treaties.

Nicolas Ardito Barletta, an American-educated economist, was sworn in for a five-year term at a ceremony in the capital's Altamira Convention Center. Secretary of State George Shultz headed the U.S. delegation to the inauguration.

A guest of honor was former President Carter, who in 1977 negotiated and signed the treaties in which the United States recognized Panamanian sovereignty over the Panama Canal, the strategic waterway connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Legislators claim serious budget problems menace state

By QUANE KENYON
The Associated Press

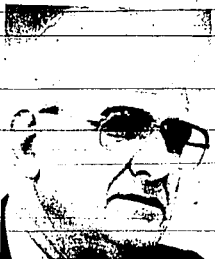

BOISE (AP) — Key state legislators paint a picture of serious budget problems facing the next session of the Legislature.

And Gov. John Evans says as far as he's concerned, the answer won't be higher sales taxes.

"We're going to be in a world of hurt if we take the sales tax off food," said Rep. Kathleen "Kitty" Gurnsey, R-Boise, in a Thursday speech to the 10th annual meeting of the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry.

"There's no way in the world we can balance the budget unless we decrease funding for education," she said. "There's no way we can continue to fund education as we have if we take the sales tax off food."

Mrs. Gurnsey, co-chairman of the Legislature's Joint Finance Appropriations Committee, and other legislators discussed the state's budget problems on a Thursday panel.

She predicted the state will be anywhere from $10 million to $60 million short next year of producing enough revenue to fund the state budget.

In a Wednesday night speech to the association, Evans estimated the shortage at $50 million. But he said he will not favor higher sales taxes to plug the gap.

The governor urged IACI, which he called "Idaho's most influential business organization" to provide "strong support" for "the entire educational system."

But that will take more revenue, the governor said. He urged support for higher user fees and charges, so the people and organizations who require services can help pay for them.

Evans also said he wants to eliminate tax credits and loopholes, although he didn't go into specifics.

John Mitchell, economist for U.S. Bancorp, told IACI members the continuing decline in the timber and wood products industry will slow Idaho's overall economic gains.

He said the state faces strong competition in its effort to lure "high tech" companies to the state, and it's important to maintain an economic climate that encourages such companies.

Mrs. Gurnsey said the Legislature is aware that "anti-business taxes" hurt the state's effort to lure new industry. "I don't see us increasing corporate income taxes for that reason," she said.

She said it appears an initiative drive will succeed in removing sales taxes from groceries, which will result in a net loss of about $15 million per year in state revenue.

Education gets three-fourths of general tax revenue, she said, which means cuts in that area.

"We need to take a good look at our tax structure; if changes are needed, we should do it," said Sen. Mark Ricks, R-Tetbury, Senate majority leader. "We may have to make some adjustments."

But he said it appears to be "traditional" with the Idaho Legislature that when there's a money shortage, the lawmakers raise taxes rather than cutting spending.

Ricks said the personal questions that a state the size of Idaho can afford four major colleges and universities.

Sen. Gali Bray, D-Boise, challenged IACI members to support long-range changes in the tax structure. In the past, she said, the state has "shored up" its tax structure without making major changes.

A tax system which worked well a decade ago no longer is adequate, she said, spurring citizen initiatives because the Legislature refuses to make changes.

It's in the "rational self-interest" of the industry organization to work for a stable tax structure.

Hansen campaign boost

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Idaho's 2nd Congressional District is about to get an advertising dose of Ronald Reagan, aides to Rep. George Hansen say.

Television spots incorporating still photos of the president are scheduled to appear next week on behalf of the incumbent Republican, and a possible last-minute visit by Vice President George Bush may also be in the works.

Hansen, who was convicted in April for felony failure to disclose his financial dealings, is battling for his political life against Democrat Richard Stallings of Rexburg.

Hansen aides said Thursday a large mailing of letters from President Reagan endorsing Hansen is planned by the Republican National Congressional Committee.

Bill Hansen, the congressman's son and campaign supervisor, also said an RNCC aide was in Idaho Thursday to coordinate a visit from Education Secretary Terrell Bell next week and talk about a possible visit from Bush sometime before the Nov. 6 election.

Last week the RNCC gave Hansen its maximum level of support, $34,000, with most of that earmarked for television, radio and mass mailings.

The GOP so far has given the Hansen campaign $4,500 of a maximum $5,000, Hansen said. The remaining $500 from the party will be provided through "in-kind" services, and one of those will be to help pay for Bell's trip to Idaho next week, aides said.

The Hansen campaign has prepared several television ads featuring the president and a voiceover by Hansen as a narrator.

The ads stress Hansen's longstanding support for the president, and the president's support for the embattled Republican from Idaho's 2nd District.

Policemen back union

CALDWELL (AP) — Almost all of the eligible employees of the Caldwell Police Department have voted to join a union, says a spokesman for the Idaho Service Employees Union.

John Moore, business agent, said 23 of the 25 eligible employees of the police department have joined the union. That includes officers below commander level.

Policemen said they were concerned about low pay and the quality of protection provided to Caldwell residents, Moore said.

Moore said new union members said they want to work for better protection for the public, fairness in personnel decisions, better management and higher pay.

Several new union members refused public comment on the move, saying they feared retribution from city officials.

Mistake in AP report

BOISE (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported that suspended state Corrections Board member Kent Remington said there was corruption on the board.

Remington is under investigation by the attorney general's office in connection with allegations that he used his position for personal gain through his connections with the state corrections system, which the board oversees.

Remington was quoted last week as saying that when the attorney general's investigative report is released, "It's going to break open a rat's cage. There is some graft to clean up and if I stay in there, I will clean it up."

Remington said that the remarks were not targeted at the board itself.

Firms face filing date

BOISE (AP) — Secretary of State Pete Conruss doesn't know why, but nearly 10,000 Idaho corporations haven't filed their annual reports this year, and face the loss of their state operating permits.

Corporations, even inactive ones, must file annual reports by Nov. 1 each year, Conruss said Thursday the number of tardy companies is unprecedented for this late in the year and he's been secretary of state for 17 years.

Convicted killers won't get new trial

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — A Second District Court judge has denied motions asking for new trials for two men convicted of first-degree murder in the beating deaths of a U.S. Marine captain and his wife.

Judge George Reinhardt ruled Wednesday that evidence did not show that — Lankford's younger brother, Bryan, was denied "reasonably competent assistance of counsel."

Both Lankfords were convicted in separate trials last spring in the deaths of Marine Capt. Robert Bravence and his wife, Cheryl. The couple had been on a camping vacation in Idaho.

Their wives were last seen June 21, 1983; their bodies were found in September. The Lankfords were arrested in Texas in October.

Bryan Lankford is to be sentenced today, while Mark Lankford is to be sentenced Monday.

Mark Lankford's attorney, Gregory FitzMaurice, has asked for a new trial because of statements made by Bryan to the Lewiston Morning Tribune. Bryan had called the paper in June and said he was solely responsible for the murders.

During his trial and Mark's, Bryan had contended that the elder Lankford committed the murders while he had merely been present.

Tribune City Editor John Killen testified Wednesday that Bryan told him he "wanted the truth to come out" and claimed that Mark had no part in the murders.

However, Bryan testified that he was "unsure and confused" when he made the call. He stuck to his original testimony Wednesday, saying his brother beat the Bravences.

Reinhardt ruled that there was not enough substantial evidence to justify a new trial for Mark Lankford.

Attorney Joan Fisher, Bryan's attorney, argued during a five-hour hearing on his motion that his former attorney did not take many steps he could have to better defend his client.

She contended, Wilfrid Longefeld did not try to establish duress or intoxication as defenses at the trial even though he was aware of the apparent control Mark Lankford has over his younger brother. Bryan has also admitted he was under the influence of marijuana at the time of the murders, she said.

But Reinhardt ruled that Longefeld had provided accurate representation and spent sufficient time determining facts relevant to the case.

Youth who killed father reported to be improving

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Richard Jahnke has made good progress during his 120 days in a Denver psychiatric hospital, according to his attorney and his mother.

The 18-year-old Cheyenne youth, convicted more than a year ago of fatally shooting his abusive father, has been undergoing treatment at Bethesda Psychiatric Hospital. Since his prison sentence was commuted by Gov. Ed Herschler, he is scheduled to be transferred Monday to the Wyoming Industrial Institute at Worland, where he will remain until his 21st birthday.

One of his attorneys, Louis Epps of Cheyenne, says reports from the hospital have been very favorable. "Richard has a come a long way in 120 days," Epps said in comments published Thursday. "It is safe to say that these reports show that the therapy and treatment were justified and required."

The attorney said he does not think any additional out-of-state treatment will be needed, and he expects Jahnke will take some college correspondence courses once he gets acclimated.

Jahnke's mother, Maria Jahnke, said she has been a frequent visitor to Denver to see Richard and his sister Deborah, who also is in a therapeutic program in Denver while her appeal is decided.

"He has responded to the therapy well; I'm proud of him," Mrs. Jahnke said, adding that her son is ready to go to Worland.

Matheson urges reaction against waste dump

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Gov. Scott Matheson said Thursday that an outpouring of public sentiment during a congressional hearing scheduled here today might be the only way to stop the Energy Department from storing radioactive waste next to Canyonlands National Park.

Utah residents cannot depend on "wishy-washy" candidates seeking his office, or on the state's all-Republican congressional delegation, to keep a nuclear waste repository out of Utah, Matheson said during a press briefing.

"I feel I have to draw a line in the sand now and go for the jugular again, I oppose it," Matheson said. "I want the public to get nervous about this issue." House Interior Committee Chairman Morris Udall, D-Ariz., will hold hearings here today on the Energy Department's consideration of the Gibson Dome salt deposits as one of nine possible sites for a high-level repository.

Matheson, adamantly opposed to having the facility in Utah, has accused the DOE of conducting an inadequate study of Gibson Dome, about 20 miles from Canyonlands, and failing to share its information with the state.

Matheson said he has battled the plan for five years over its consideration of the site. "We squeezed down on them for violating the rules, and made life difficult for them for awhile," Matheson said. "We may have been a little more aggressive and difficult than we should, I think."

Rangers let buffalo alone

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Yellowstone National Park rangers say they will not try to remove an arrow from a buffalo shot last month near Bridge Bay in the park.

The arrow was shot into the animal's meaty hump, just above the spine, said Joan Anzelmo, park spokeswoman. The incident happened Sept. 20 and the arrow was still in the buffalo when it was last seen a week ago.

Rangers have determined that the animal was not seriously injured by the arrow, Ms. Anzelmo said.

Park officials have no suspects in the shooting and know of no motive, Ms. Anzelmo said. "It was someone with a sick mind and taking a potshot at an incredibly beautiful and wild animal," she said.

Udall agreed to hold the hearing last July after touring the Gibson Dome area with former Democratic Congressman Wayne Owens, now a candidate for governor.

Women pass physical for SLC's firefighters

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Flight women have become the first to pass demanding physical tests required for new recruits at the Salt Lake City Fire Department, and could become the city's first female firefighters.

Capt. Jim Kleine, the department's personnel officer, said the women must pass oral interviews before their names are placed on the department's hiring list.

But the physical part of the exam has proved the major stumbling block for women seeking to join the department in the past. Kleine said a few women have applied each time the test was offered, but "no woman has completed the physical capability test."

"Our only concern is finding people who are qualified to do the job," Kleine said. "If they are in the hiring zone, we're going to hire them."

He said chances are good that at least one of the women will be among the top 12 applicants whom the city intends to hire immediately. As many as 50 applicants could be hired in the near future, he said.

The physical test — recently revised to test specific firefighting abilities rather than general physical fitness — included dragging fire hoses, coupling hoses to hydrants, climbing stairs wearing heavy gear and raising a fire ladder.

Deputy Fire Chief Arvin Kimball said he expected "some resentment" among male firefighters if women join their ranks.

"We have some old-time chauvinists around. Fire departments have been something of a white male fraternity and that's hard to change," he said.

But he said the problems, including separating firehouse sleeping quarters, could be overcome.

Salt Lake County Fire Chief Shiri Maxfield said the county has hired two women in the past two years and had few adjustment problems. The women won the respect of their male co-workers on the job, he said.

Consumer group will probe death of infant

BOISE (AP) — The commissioner of the Consumer Product Safety Commission says the federal agency plans to investigate the recent death of an Idaho infant whose head got stuck in a collapsible gate.

Stuart Staller said seven other children have died after the past decade, and 17 have been seriously injured in similar baby gates.

The commission will decide whether to impose standards on the manufacturers of the accordion-style gates, or to remove them from the market, Staller said.

Last Thursday, 11-month-old James Moss died after his head became caught in one of the gates in a doorway of his Meridian home. Staller said an investigation of the child's death may prompt the commission to decide that the product's design is unsafe and to reject proposed standards.

"We may have to take direct governmental action on taking it off the market," he said.

The commission issued warnings last year urging consumers not to use either the accordion-style baby gates or the similarly styled circular enclosures.

Staller was in Boise as part of a Northwest trip to promote National Fire Prevention Week, which ends Saturday.

Defendant called con man

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A prosecutor says the man accused of forging the signature of entertainer Liberace in an alleged scheme to promote a golf tournament has a history of fraud.

Deputy District Attorney Michael Amador called Dick Summers a "con artist" who uses a "little boy look" to defraud others.

Amador said he had information that Summers has defrauded others, including Pomona, Calif., officials, and had also allegedly posed as a doctor in Las Vegas.

Amador leveled his charges during a preliminary hearing in Justice Court in Las Vegas Tuesday. The court hearing was continued for two days.

Summers, 41, is accused of using a letter with the forged signature of Liberace to try and secure investment money for what was supposed to be a Liberace celebrity golf tournament.

Summers, who says he is head of a film production company in Sherman Oaks, Calif., is charged with forgery and attempting to obtain money under false pretenses.

Amador said Summers has swindled or attempted to defraud at least eight other people. He charged Summers with bilking the Pomona City Council out of $30,000 in one promotion.

Pastor's body found in river

JACKSON Wyo. (AP) — The body of a Jackson pastor was found Wednesday by a passerby along the Hoback Junction Bridge, officials said.

Bernard Staake, 57, pastor of the Jackson Redeemer Lutheran Church, was found about 3 1/2 miles downstream from where he had last been seen fishing at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Brian Rose, 23, Jackson, said he was tossing rocks into the river as he and a companion strolled across the bridge.

Teton County Sheriff's Deputy Mark Skinner said he and a Wyoming Department of Fish and Game warden were coming upstream in a search craft at the time Rose found the body.

"We never would have seen the body from the river," Skinner said.

Undersheriff Terry Bart said Staake, who reportedly did not know how to swim, was wearing chest-high waders and carrying a heavy tackle box.

His family had reported Staake missing earlier in the day.

Idahoans' reaction follows party lines

By The Associated Press

Idaho Republicans, perhaps somewhat let down by President Reagan's performance in Sunday's debate with Democratic challenger Walter Mondale, found something to cheer about in Thursday night's vice presidential debate in Philadelphia.

"I thought the vice president was brilliant," Idaho Republican Party Chairman Dennis Olsen of Idaho Falls said of George Bush's performance against Democratic Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro.

"I think he was a very good advocate for the president. He did a very good job of pointing out that under the leadership of President Reagan, we have become an upbeat nation," Olsen said.

He said Bush's performance would steer the campaign away from the issues of Reagan's age and questions over Sunday's debate, and "back into focus on the real issues of the campaign and what the president has done."

But Democrats, still flying high from what many considered a victorious performance by Mondale on Sunday, understandably said Ms. Ferraro furthered the party's cause.

"I think she was the clear victor in displaying the concerns of her running mate for the American people and the future of the world," former Idaho governor and Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus said.

Andrus, co-chairman of the Mondale-Ferraro campaign in Idaho, said Bush was evasive and waffled on the Reagan administration's foreign policy and economic positions.

Ms. Ferraro, on the other hand, "has shown that contrary to what the Reagan administration and its standard-bearers are very well qualified to hold those offices. More than qualified," he said.

State Democratic Party Chairman Mel Morgan of Pocatello echoed those sentiments.

"I think she's one heck of a woman," Morgan said. "And I think she's dispelled the idea that a woman can't be the vice president of this country."

He said Ms. Ferraro's performance will enhance recent enthusiasm for the Democratic ticket. "I think what it does is support the Mondale-Ferraro ticket that excites Democrats and excites voters." The campaign has been dull up to now, but now we're in a new ball game."

Olsen, however, said Ms. Ferraro was anything but exciting.

"I thought she was falling asleep a couple of times," he said. "Just the monotone in her voice; she appeared very tired."

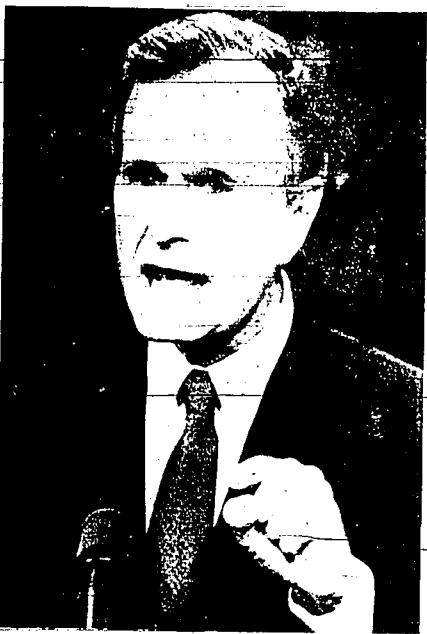

Bruce Loeb, a speech professor at Idaho State University in Pocatello who has watched every presidential debate since 1960, said Bush was the clear winner on debating points Thursday night, but conceded that conclusion may be slanted by his support for the Republican ticket.

"On the other hand, I was obviously more interested in Mr. Reagan doing well the other night, and I think Mr. Mondale beat him handily," Loeb said.

He said on five-point scales in the categories of analysis, organization, evidence, delivery, and reasoning, Bush earned a rating of 23 to Ms. Ferraro's 16.

Loeb said he thought Bush was particularly effective in delivery, where Ms. Ferraro's attempt to avoid being shrill may have backfired.

"I think she went too far. I think she was dull," he said. "Bush added really the only emotion to the debate."

Vice President George Bush gestures to emphasize a point.

Dutiful surrogates played their roles

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — For most of their 90-minute debate, the vice presidential candidates were dutiful surrogates, speaking on behalf of the men at the top of their tickets.

But sparks flew when Vice President George Bush tried to lecture Rep. Geraldine Ferraro on foreign policy.

The topic was terrorism in the Middle East and Ms. Ferraro had just sharply criticized the Reagan administration for its handling of security at U.S. installations in Lebanon.

She had noted that the Americans held hostage in Iran during the Carter administration all returned home alive while more than 240 U.S. Marines had died in Lebanon.

"Let me help you with the

difference Miss Ferraro, between Iran and the embassy in Lebanon," began Bush. "In Iran we were held by a foreign government, in Lebanon you had a wanton, terrorist action where the government opposed it."

Foreign policy remarks ignited fire from Geraldine Ferraro.

He defended the sending of the Marines to Lebanon and then said: "And for somebody to suggest as our two opponents have that these men died in shame, they'd better not tell the parents of those young Marines."

Ms. Ferraro bristled.

"Let me say, first of all that I almost resent, Vice President Bush, your patronizing attitude that you have to teach me about foreign policy," she said. "I have been a member of Congress for six years and I was there when the embassy was held hostage and I have been there and I have seen what has happened for the 17 months of your administration."

She added, "And please don't categorize my answers either. Leave the interpretation of my answers to the American people in this debate and let me say further, that no one has ever said that those young men who were killed through the negligence of this administration and others ever died in shame."

"No one who has child who's 19 or 20 years old, a son, would ever say that about the loss of anyone else's child."

With no obvious gaps by either candidate it was a debate in which the winner might well be determined by the impression left with millions of voters sitting in their living rooms. That's a scorecard hard to predict.

If the confrontation turns out to have been a wash in the minds of voters, both campaigns probably will be relieved.

Except for that moment of fire, the vice presidential candidates left no doubt they were the second bananas in this campaign.

Bush aimed his attacks at Mondale and particularly at the record of the Carter-Mondale administration. He repeatedly referred to the fact that interest rates reached 21 percent during Carter's final year in office.

Ms. Ferraro, who had been criticized by political friends and foes, for a tendency to be too aggressive at times, was deliberately low-key.

Debate

asked her whether she would be able to protect the nation and whether she thought the Soviets would be tempted to take advantage of her "simply because you're a woman."

"Are you saying I would have to live in a war to love peace?" she retorted.

"It's about as valid as saying you have to be black in order to despise racism, that you have to be female to be terribly offended by sexism. That's just not so."

"I will be a leader," she said, adding that if any enemy believes it can challenge the United States, they would be assured they would be met with swift, concise and certain retaliation.

"That's about as valid as Ms. Ferraro, asked how her six years in Congress stacks up to the Bush resume, cited her work as a teacher and prosecutor before election to Congress, and said, "I have enough experience to see the problems, address them. I can make the hard decisions."

Bush said there was little difference between himself and Reagan on most issues, and said "the president turned it (the nation) around and I've been with him every step of the way."

"I believe firmly in his leadership. He's really turned this country around," Bush said in a firm defense of the man whose own debate performance last Sunday worried his supporters and provided a boost for the Democrats.

"Ms. Ferraro said Bush had declared Reagan's economic program 'voodoo economics' during the campaign for the 1980 GOP presidential nomination. "It was and it is," she added.

own poll ratings that followed disclosure of his income tax returns several days ago.

Ms. Ferraro said she has asked the House Ethics Committee to move ahead on an investigation of her finances because "I would like it cleared up."

Asked about what the questioner said were omissions in her financial report, she repeated that she had given her tax information to a family accountant and let him do the returns.

"I have hired a marvelous accountant and he is doing to do my taxes the next eight years while I am in the White House," she said.

Bush said that unlike Ms. Ferraro he did not include state and local taxes when he reported how much he had paid. He said he had since looked them up and found that he paid about 42 percent of his gross income in total taxes. He said it was "cheap shot" for Mondale to complain about his taxes and to talk about him being driven by a chauffeur, since he is driven by the Secret Service.

Bush, asked why he claims a home in Matine for taxes and in Texas for voting, said he is entitled to and, if Ms. Ferraro is getting such a marvelous accountant, "I would like to get his name and phone number."

President denies he was 'brutalized'

'Too much homework,' Reagan says

By MIKE PUTZEL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Thursday he probably did too much homework for his debate with Walter F. Mondale last Sunday, but he rejected his campaign chairman's suggestion that he lost the encounter because he was brutalized by briefings and smothered with numbers.

Reagan said he told his campaign chairman and good friend, Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., "I had done a lot of homework myself... and probably too much of it without sitting back and relaxing enough."

But the president said he didn't blame his aides, as Laxalt seemed to.

Laxalt told a news conference that Reagan "had an off night... but it wasn't because of any physical or mental deficiency. He was brutalized by a briefing process that didn't make any sense."

"It was totally unfair of the campaign to impose upon him a process that would have been intolerable... for a 21-year-old," Laxalt said. "The man was smothered with numbers."

Laxalt, who also serves as general chairman of the Republican Party, said Reagan was "loaded with briefing books" and took part in six dress rehearsals, which he said was just too much for "a full-time president engaged in a full-time job."

SEN. PAUL LAXALT "Different" next time

"feeble and fumbling" against Mondale.

"I think the president demonstrated on Sunday night that perhaps he doesn't have the vigor or the vision to serve for four more years in the most demanding and the toughest job in the world," Manatt said at a news conference in New York.

Reagan answered reporters' questions briefly before sitting down to lunch with George Bush in the vice president's office before Bush left for Philadelphia to debate his Democratic opponent, Geraldine Ferraro.

The president said, "It doesn't seem to me as if an awful lot went wrong" Sunday night.

But he added, "I think the incumbent, unless he drops a bomb on the other fella, is going to be automatically tagged as not having done well because he didn't destroy somebody."

Asked if the incumbent always has that "disadvantage," Reagan said, "Sure, because he's always under attack. I look back now at the times in debates when I wasn't the incumbent and never realized how easy it was."

Reagan denied that he planned to do things differently in preparation for his next confrontation with Mondale, scheduled for Oct. 21 in Kansas City.

"Just gonna be talking about foreign affairs, instead of domestic affairs," he said.

But Laxalt made clear he intends for things to be different next time around.

He said there would be "far less than five" debate rehearsals before the foreign policy face-off and there will be "no more sweetness and light."

The senator said, will be "even more aggressive than he has been in the past... We are coming out of the ivory tower and onto the streets."

"Even though he lost that debate... Americans agree with Ronald Reagan on the issues," Laxalt said.

He said the first debate made aides realize they must allow "Reagan to be Reagan."

Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., said Laxalt's comments about Reagan's preparations for last Sunday's debate were "very damaging," and indicate that "the president is incapable of making decisions by himself."

A senior administration official said expectations for Reagan will be lower in the Oct. 21 debate because the president was perceived as the loser this time. "He'll be the underdog because he lost the first one," said the official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified.

The official also said that while Reagan has been virtually ignoring Mondale so far in the campaign, the president will start pointing out what he perceives to be Mondale's negatives. Reagan began that during a trip to Michigan on Monday.

Bush's press aide joins sniping at Ferraro

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Vice President George Bush's press secretary described Democratic rival Geraldine Ferraro as "bitchy" two days after Barbara Bush jokingly referred to Ms. Ferraro as something that "rhymes with rich."

"She's too bitchy," Bush spokesman Peter Teeley said of Ms. Ferraro, in a story published in Thursday editions of the Wall Street Journal. "She's very arrogant. Humility isn't one of her strong points, and I think that comes through."

Teley was asked about the remark Thursday as Bush and his entourage arrived here for the debate.

"I agree with Congressman (Tony) Coelho that she's got to avoid coming across as bitchy," he said.

On Tuesday, Coelho, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, said, "Geraldine has to look knowledgeable and she has to look presidential. She needs to avoid looking bitchy. She can't be stiff. She has to come across as a leader."

Teley confirmed he was quoted accurately by the Wall Street Journal.

Explaining his remark, Teley said, "On television she appears bitchy. Her negative numbers in polls are going up because she comes across that way."

Asked if he planned to apologize for his comment, Teley said, "No. No reason to."

Ferraro's campaign manager, John Sasso, said Teley's remark shows "very poor taste and poor judgment" and he called on Bush to apologize.

"I would say it shows very poor taste on the part of Mr. Bush's campaign and is an insult to every woman in this country for Mr. Teley to have made such comments," Sasso

On Monday, Mrs. Bush apologized to Ms. Ferraro after news reports quoted her as saying she and her husband are comfortable with their lifestyle and don't pretend to be poor "like that $4 million — I can't say it but it rhymes with rich."

Mrs. Bush said she didn't intend to call Ms. Ferraro names. The next day she sought to suggest her unspoken word was "witch" when she told reporters she would never call Ms. Ferraro a witch.

Closure of Oregon mill slated

BOISE (AP) — Boise Cascade Corp. will close its Clatskanie, Ore., sawmill in about two weeks as part of its previously announced plan to consolidate its Western wood-products operations, company officials say.

The mill shutdown will affect about 40 employees, Boise Cascade spokeswoman Linda Alden said. Two-thirds of the employees have been on indefinite layoff since Sept. 26.

The mill, one of the principal employers in the Columbia River town of 1,100, was targeted for closure because of "high log costs and overhead costs at that facility," Ms. Alden said.

The mill produces specialty timbers and dimension timber, primarily from Douglas fir, which has been drawing low prices on the marketplace.

UP drops cabooses on some runs

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The Union Pacific System has announced that it has begun eliminating cabooses on some freight trains running between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City.

The action Thursday was made possible by a ruling issued by a federal labor arbitrator.

"This represents a substantial cost savings," said W.P. Barrett, executive vice president of sales and marketing for the Omaha-based Union Pacific System.

Four states — Nebraska, Oregon, Montana and Virginia — are the only ones that still require the use of cabooses.

A Union Pacific press release said the award allowing the Union Pacific Railroad to remove cabooses follows guidelines agreed upon in October 1982 by the United Transportation

Union and the nation's railroads following recommendations made by a presidential emergency board.

The national guidelines provided for the removal of cabooses from 25 percent of through trains, and all local and switching movements.

The board had concluded it would be safe to eliminate the use of cabooses and estimated U.S. railroads would save $400 million.

The ends of the Union Pacific System through freight trains will be monitored by a portable electronic device. The monitors, called "Trainlink," are built by Pulse Electronics Inc. of Rockville, Md.

The Union Pacific System has ordered 95 Trainlinks — 30 for Union Pacific Railroad and 65 for its Missouri Pacific Railroad, the press release said.

Union Pacific Railroad will expand its operation of trains without cabooses as more monitors are acquired, it said.

The Union Pacific System's Missouri Pacific Railroad also will begin removal of cabooses after its Trainlink monitors are delivered.

Trainlinks cost about $4,000 each for the portable unit on the back of the train and the receiver in the locomotive.

AT HOME. A Times-News special section

What are the lifestyles of Magic Valley people at home?

That's the question Times-News reporters and correspondents have been asking as they've peeked into the homes of area residents this past month.

And you can find what they learned when you read the AT Home section in Sunday's paper.

Featured will be homes ranging from a fancy log cabin in Hailey to a converted granary near Glens Ferry.

You'll be able to read about a couple who turned their home into a Polynesian paradise... about converting older homes for modern-day living... what it's like to live on the canyon above the Snake River... the benefits of living in a solar home... and even a home that looks a bit like a flying saucer.

One Times-News bachelor reporter tells about living in a home that was here before Twin Falls was, and a reporter new to Twin Falls will tell you all about furnishing a home from thrift stores.

School's use considered

Parishioners view possibility of re-opening St. Edwards

By DEAN S. MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Local Catholic parishioners are exploring the possibility of re-opening the St. Edwards Elementary School.

So far, a steering committee headed by Katy Touchette has had only general discussions and is reviewing the results of a survey taken at mass last weekend.

Touchette said the results of the survey were "really nice, even those without school age kids said they would support it."

The Rev. Perry Dodds says the discussion to date has been "strictly exploratory," and progress will depend on permission from the bishop, the Rev. Sylvester Treinen of Boise.

"There are major obstacles, but obviously we feel there is a possibility or we wouldn't be this far," Dodds says.

Dodds says he is "basically pro-Catholic school, I think it's regrettable it ever closed."

St. Edwards school closed in May of 1971 after the teaching sisters of the Order of the Immaculate Heart of Mary were recalled to East Coast schools nearer their mother-house in Scranton, Pa.

Touchette says the committee is considering a limited beginning in the fall of 1985 with kindergarten through third grade.

Dodds and Touchette both say $50,000 is the figure that has been discussed for the preparation of the school building for full-time use. The figure is based on a review of the building's condition a few years ago, Touchette says.

Dodds says the bishop has insisted "you can't maintain a Catholic school without adequate financial support. Church officials will not be

"all that eager to see a large amount of money flowing from the parish for the support of the school."

Support for the school, says Dodds, is "going to have to come in large measure from those sending their kids to the school."

Instructional salaries would be a major expense, Dodds says. Another teaching order of nuns would be a boon to the proposed school budget, but Dodds says the church would have to be prepared to pay lay teachers. Lay teachers can be as good and better than non-lay teachers, Dodds says.

Although Dodds and Touchette agree tuition will most likely be charged if the school opens, they hope to avoid elitism by limiting tuition as far as possible.

Touchette says she hopes fundraising will add enough revenue to bring tuition within the reach of most families. Yet, at the $100 a month tuition same Catholic schools charge, Touchette says she may be setting up a school she won't be able to send all three of her children to. "I put that out of my mind," Touchette says.

The bishop has stipulated there has to be solid hope for continuity, Dodds says. In addition, Dodds says the bishop will require that religious education programs in place at the church not be jeopardized by the school.

Dodds says the Lutheran and Baptist schools in town remind parishioners. "Here we sit with a building, tradition and experience with private education."

"We are not registering dissatisfaction with the public schools," Dodds says. Catholic schools are an option, or supplement a lot of Catholic parents would like, Dodds says.

Board allows bibles

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

HAZELTON — The Valley School Board will allow Gideon Bibles to be distributed to fifth graders, despite the fact that Jerome County's other school district lost a lawsuit after distributing them last year.

"We just felt it wasn't right to deprive the children of this," said Valley Trustee Irene Johnson.

"We can't keep looking back over our shoulder at what's happened before," said Superintendent Arlyn Bodily, referring to the Jerome district suit.

Local members of Gideons International discussed distributing their Bibles at a Monday night board meeting.

All the board members were in favor of distributing the Bibles, but there was some discussion about how that should be done, Bodily said.

Although board members considered attempting to protect the school by having the children cross the street to pick them up, they decided to have the Bibles left on the desks of fifth grade teachers as they have been in the past. There would be "no pressure that way" on the students to take a Bible, said Principal Bryce Sorenson.

Board members said the school had never had any complaints or problems after at least a decade of distributing the Bibles and did not expect them now.

In Jerome, however, there had never been any complaints either until a lawsuit was filed there 10 months ago. The Bibles, available in hallways during recess, violated the civil rights of fifth-grader Magdalena Ripplinger, a federal court judge ruled.

The school was prohibited from allowing further distribution of religious literature on school property, but did not have to pay the $10,000 in damages that Ripplinger's father had requested. The suit cost the Jerome district at least $1,500 in legal costs, although insurance covered some of that.

Charles Fawcett, a Boise attorney who worked with the American Civil Liberties Union to represent Ripplinger, says the Jerome district has no direct effect on the Valley School District.

"But it does set a precedent that indicates that if the Valley district is sued it would 'quite likely lose,'" Fawcett said.

Most school officials in the Magic Valley who were contacted by The Times-News shortly after the court ruled on the Jerome case said they doubted Bibles would be distributed in their schools this fall. Some said the Gideon members would have to find new ways to distribute their Bibles in the Magic Valley.

Ketchum police chief won't back county sheriff

By DAVE LEWIS
Times-News writer

KETCHUM — Ketchum Police Chief Cal Nevland is vigorously opposing the re-election of Blaine County Sheriff Dennis Haynes for what he says is a lack of professional and personal integrity.

Nevland made his opposition public this week and after the Sept. 6 loss of his wife from Haynes' office, where she was a special investigator.

Although Nevland admits that some of his ill feelings toward Haynes have to do with his wife's working relationship with the sheriff, he also says that his opposition to the Republican incumbent goes far beyond his personal feelings.

Nevland is giving his support to Democratic challenger Orville Drexler.

Wood River Valley

However, he says his opposition to Haynes is independent of Drexler's campaign.

"Without any sour grapes in mind, Orville Drexler is a far better man, a more compassionate man and a better administrator," Nevland says.

To the contrary, Haynes says that Nevland's opposition is sour grapes and is a result of what Nevland being dropped from the sheriff's department. He says he does not believe Nevland's dislike for him goes back any further.

"If it does, I'm not aware of it. Our departments have had a good working relationship," says Haynes.

Nevland is making a number of charges against Haynes professionally, and personally as it relates to his performance as sheriff.

He says the sheriff's office lacks professionalism, has low morale and lacks leadership. He says he has heard reports about poor public conduct among Haynes' deputies.

Nevland also charges that Haynes has poorly administered the prisoner trustee program and played favorites during in-house investigations of missing money.

"I do feel that the sheriff's office has been run very poorly in the last four years," Nevland says. "I feel primarily that's the administration's fault."

Nevland says he is speaking out because he wants to see a more professional sheriff's office and to get a sheriff elected who cares about people.

However, Haynes says the office is more professional now than when he took over, and he is always trying to upgrade it.

He also says he has not heard about any public misconduct of his deputies and denies that morale is low.

However, Nevland is steadfast in his opposition.

"I've worked for both men and believe me I know who is the best man," he says.

Nevland worked a short stint for Drexler in the mid-'70s when Drexler was sheriff.

Benefits to cover portion of bills

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County Board of Commissioners learned Wednesday that Social Security benefits will cover part of the large hospitalization costs for a 47-year-old woman who left a legacy of more than $180,000 in medical bills.

Susan Eckles, the Twin Falls County welfare director, said she did not know, however, how much of the remaining costs could be billed to the county.

The woman who was the subject of the claim died Sept. 29 at the University of Utah Health Sciences Center in Salt Lake City, Eckles said. She had been hospitalized since Aug. 7. After giving birth, the woman had become critically ill and was treated in the center's intensive care unit.

Last month the Utah hospital handed the county a $118,000 bill for treatment of the woman. Later, the woman died.

Eckles said she received the final bill from the Utah hospital this week. It amounted to $180,871.

She did, however, say she also received good news from state Department of Health and Welfare. Welfare officials reported that the woman's Social Security benefits will cover 30 days of hospitalization costs. The coverage became effective Aug. 11.

Commissioner Judy Felton said it was "good news for Twin Falls County."

The county already has denied the $118,000 claim from the hospital. Attorney Lloyd Webb, who is representing the county, said the claim was rejected because it failed to provide proof of indigency, need for the medical care and "reasonableness" of the medical procedures.

The hospital already has appealed the denial.

Teachers still picketing

By TUCK SHAUGHNESSY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — School teachers dressed in black conducted informational picketing during their lunch hours Thursday to demonstrate solidarity and unity in the ongoing contract negotiations.

"Teachers negotiator Jana Roy said "the item we are furthest apart on is salary," at a Thursday afternoon press conference.

Roy said teachers were concerned a story in Thursday's Times-News indicated teachers and the board were getting close to settlement. Roy said Wednesday night, the teams were "very close to agreement on everything but salary."

Roy called the Wednesday night talks an "aborted" session and said "the board proposal on the table is the same proposal presented in July."

Roy said the teachers are anxious to get back to the table, but bargaining negotiators have declined to set a date for the next bargaining session.

"We, in order to work with their figures, need certain documents," Roy said. A printed page circulated at the press conference encourages community residents to ask board members: "Why is the board withholding public information from the TFEA, challenging TFEA to go to court to get the documents."

Roy said there is no talk of a teacher strike among union officials, but that "there are teachers that would strike right now."

Teachers at Lincoln elementary school may picket again today, Roy said.

Republicans hear tax complaint

Discussion focuses on taxing of groceries but not luxuries

By TUCK SHAUGHNESSY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls homeowner who favors a proposed initiative to exempt the sales of groceries from the state's sales tax told county Republicans Wednesday that it is unfair to tax necessities when no sales tax is similarly collected on luxuries.

But in response to her contention, veteran Republican lawmaker Roy Brackett said providing an exemption from the sales tax for retail sales of food would probably not help those targeted for the ensuing tax relief.

During a discussion of ballot measures conducted in conjunction with the party's organization's annual monthly meeting, Utahwiti, a member of the activist Idaho Neighbors Network admonished opponents of the measure, saying: "Food is taxed but going to the beauty parlor to get your nails done is not. Food is taxed but sales of gold bullion are not."

She added that "poor people have to spend a much higher percentage of their income on food" than do people in other categories of income. But her point was refuted by John Alexander, a precinct committeeman who countered, "poor people should pay some kind of tax. All they do is suck off the economy."

Utahwiti told Twin Falls attorney Lloyd Webb that some of the Initiative's $15 million to $16 million impact on state tax revenues could be made up by taxing legal and other services.

Brackett, a five-term member of the Idaho House of Representatives, used most of his allotted time to read from the Assessor Taxpayers of Idaho statement against the measure. He said passage of the initiative would short both state and local government tax coffers and would require either a reduction in government services or an increase in government spending.

He added that if the initiative passes "it is less likely that government services would be reduced and more likely that other forms of tax would be increased."

Brackett said that if the sales tax is removed on groceries, grocery

Highland boys, Borah girls race to cross country titles

TWIN FALLS — Highland's boys substantiated their claim to being the No. 1 Class A cross country team in the state but the Borah girls put a dent in the Rams' claim in that division.

The Highland boys, paced by the one-two finish of Marty Stroschein and Rob Rene, won the Twin Falls Invitational with 53 points while Borah, thanks to a better sixth man finish, was given the runner-up trophy over Idaho Falls after those two had tied at 83 apiece.

Borah's girls, with Shaun Sintay pacing all individuals, topped Highland 30-40 but no one was willing to say that was enough to make either one the odds-on favorite for the state finals, which are slated for Idaho Falls in two weeks.

But between them, those two teams monopolized the top seven individual places. Borah had four in the top seven with its fifth runner in 15th place. Highland went two-three-five but its next best finish was an 11th by Jenny Nye. Nye was expected to do better and on that spot alone, the difference between the two could be considerably less in the next meeting.

"We feel pretty good about the win," admitted Highland Coach Conley, who wouldn't accept the favorite's role for state. "The one-two finish was very pleasing but it was awfully close and it could change the next time," he added, referring to the race with Boise's Willy Beebe. Stroschein won in 16:51, one second ahead of Beebe, while Rene got his chest just ahead in the final two steps and both were given the same time at 16:52.

"I felt that Marty had a chance to win it and that Rob could do it if he had a good day. But you never know about the next time. Beebe may have the better day next time. It was too close to convince anyone."

Conley added that Highland was without fifth man, Bob Musser, who might be out for the season with knee problems, "but the other boys came through well today and maybe we won't miss him as much as we feared."

Meanwhile, Malad, a Class B invitational, showed well by taking fourth place with 110 points and placing two men in the top 10.

"Perhaps the biggest surprise was Idaho Falls coming within an eyelash of second."

"They could be the team of the future," said Twin Falls Coach Jerry Kleinkopf. "I think they showed the might challenge Highland next year."

Kleinkopf said he was pleased with the eight-place showing of Brian Rod Grube, noting he had beaten some of the people he lost to in last week's conference finals.

He and girls Coach Duane Stands also were pleased with the 10th-place finish of freshman Jenny Hannah.

"We think she's just going to get better," Kleinkopf said.

Stands expressed satisfaction with Twin Falls' finishing third ahead of Idaho Falls in the girls division, noting "that's one goal we've accomplished. We've been chasing Idaho Falls all fall and finally caught them today."

In the girls junior varsity race, Jessie McNeves of Borah was the individual winner in 23:02, leading the Lions to a 24-40 victory over runner-up Twin Falls. They were the only complete teams participating.

In the boys javave division, Steve Fogarty of Idaho Falls was the individual winner in 16:52 but Highland took the team title at 37, followed by Twin Falls 77, Borah 90, Minico 145, Capital 150, Pocatello 150 and Boise 214.

Series resumes tonight

Even with title, Tigers won't stay on pat lineup

DETROIT (AP) — At least two — and possibly more — new faces will be on the Detroit roster next year, regardless of whether the Tigers win the World Series.

The Tigers host the San Diego Padres in Game Three at 8:35 p.m. EDT Friday with the series tied at one game apiece.

Bill Lajoie, the Tiger general manager and architect of the 1984 American League champions, said the only way to keep a team on top is through a steady infusion of new blood.

What's different about Lajoie's operation is the fact that he likes to build from within, rather than deal heavily in the free-agent market.

"If you can add quality to your front line, then you have to consider trading promising young ballplayers," Lajoie said Thursday as he watched the Padres take their first workout in Tiger Stadium. "You have to change to keep things moving within your (minor league) system."

"This year, for example, we added Howard Johnson and Barbara Garbey to the roster. We hope to have two more young men up here next year — from within the system."

Lajoie, who was named general manager at the end of the 1983 season when Jim Campbell moved up to president, served for many years as the head of the Tigers' fruitful minor league system.

As a result, he knows the young players who are in the pipeline perhaps better than any other executive in the Detroit organization.

Lajoie, who was almost totally responsible for the signing and development of Tiger stars such as Lou Whitaker, Alan Trammell, Lance Parrish, Jack Morris and Dan Petry.

"It was a plan that happened to work," Lajoie said. "The scouting department did a fantastic job and then you have to go out and train them and hope everything works out."

"Whitaker, for example, has tremendous baseball instincts and when you really get to know him you learn that he is totally dedicated to the game. We were lucky that we got players that were as strong inside as they were outside."

There were many team years during the mid-1970s when the Tigers found it hard to stand by at one of their young prospects. It was a time when other clubs were spending megabucks in the free agent market, hoping to buy an instant contender.

"There were times when he was very difficult not to trade our kids," Lajoie recalled. "We weren't strong enough though. We had to be patient. Ralph Houk was the manager then, and he showed great courage in sticking with the kids and letting them play. Houk was terrific."

Now — that — the Tigers have blossomed into one of the best teams in the major leagues, Lajoie admits that the club may not be that patient ever again.

"We have some things to do before next year," Lajoie said. "We'd still like some left-handed pitching. We'd also like some more power at the plate."

Already, Lajoie has shown himself to be as shrewd in his duties as general manager as he was as a scout. It was Lajoie who stayed on the trail and finally signed free agent Darrell Evans.

Detroit returns to first-game lineup for latest San Diego lefty

DETROIT (AP) — The San Diego Padres kept getting out of jams largely because of a bullpen that knows how to handoff hitters.

And the Detroit Tigers are happy to get out of California.

The Padres, who tied the World Series at one game apiece, worked out at Tiger Stadium Thursday, an off day, in preparation for Friday night's Game Three (8:35 p.m. EDT). Right-hander Bill Wilcox of the Tigers will face left-hander Tim Lincecum of the Padres.

"The Tigers took the day off Thursday," Sparky Anderson, the Tigers manager, said that with Lollar pitching for San Diego Friday night, he will revert to the lineup he used in Game One when Detroit also faced a left-hander. Mark Thurmond, Darrell Evans will switch back to first base from third base, and Marty Castillo will play third. Also, Barbara Garbey again will be the designated hitter, replacing Johnny Grubb, the DH in Wednesday night's game.

Games Four and Five will be held here Saturday and Sunday and necessary, the final two games of the best-of-seven Series would return to San Diego Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Kurt Bevacqua, whose baserunning blunder may have cost the Padres a win in Game One, had the game-winning hit Wednesday night, a three-run homer in the fifth inning that erased a 3-2 Detroit lead.

"We jumped out to an early lead, but they showed a lot of character," said Kirk Gibson, MVP of Detroit's three-game sweep of Kansas City in the American League playoffs. "They've come back throughout the postseason play, and they just did it again. But we've got a good feeling about coming home 1-1."

Evans said he was not satisfied with the split in San Diego, "but we've played well in Detroit all season long."

"It'll be good to go home and get back in front of our fans, but this is a World Series, and regardless of what city you are in, it's a special feeling every time you take the field. You can't get the home crowd will pump us up," he said.

But knowing how to come back is nothing new for the Padres.

They trailed Chicago 0-2 in the best-of-five National League playoffs before rallying with three straight victories in an unprecedented comeback to win their first pennant.

They trailed in each game of the NL playoffs, and they lost the first game of the World Series to highly favored Detroit before coming back to win Game Two Wednesday night 5-3 thanks largely to their middle relievers. San Diego had to rally from a 3-4 disadvantage before winning that game.

"I look at that as kind of a positive sign because this bullpen always plays well when it's behind," said Steve Garvey, the most valuable player of the playoffs. "The whole season is kind of like a long prize fight. You get into a lot of jams along the way, but you have to keep counter-punching."

But it really was the heroics of the San Diego bullpen that dominated Game Two. Andy Hawkins relieved starter Ed Whelan with two outs and three runs across in the first inning, and he pitched 5 1/3 scoreless innings, giving up just one hit.

Hawkins did not give up a hit until Gibson led off the sixth inning with a blow single. Going back to the sixth inning of Game One, Hawkins had allowed — Detroit batters without facing a hit.

Craig Lefferts pitched the final three innings, allowing just one more hit and striking out five as San Diego's bullpen put together a string of 21 consecutive scoreless innings dating back to Game Four of the playoffs. That included 12 1/3 scoreless innings in the World Series.

"We've gotten some nice attention for middle relievers the last few games, and I think it's deserved, too," said Padres left-hander Dave Dravecky, who worked 1 1/3 hitless innings in Game One.

Senate action restricts Title IX to Supreme Court's ruling

TWIN FALLS — The defeat in the U.S. Senate last week of a bill that would have reversed last spring's U.S. Supreme Court decision sharply restricting the bite of Title IX makes it a lot more likely that the impact of the in-court ruling will soon filter down to girls' sports programs in school districts such as those in the Magic Valley.

The bill would have restored the requirement that the U.S. Department of Education cut off all federal aid to colleges and school districts that fail to comply with federal guidelines for participation and funding in activities such as women's athletics. The Supreme Court said earlier this year that such a requirement, which was contained in the 1972 IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, violated the Constitution, although the court implicitly invited Congress to rewrite the rules.

The decision in Grave City College vs. Hustler has not yet had any direct effect on Idaho school districts and colleges. But appellate courts across the country are already full of lawsuits against school boards by parents of girls who have denied equal access to athletics under the terms of Title IX.

Lower courts are bound by the precedent set by the Supreme Court, so unless the high court reverses itself or Congress acts to the contrary, some judge is bound to rule that a school district that chooses not to fund girls' sports can't be punished financially for that decision.

The Magic Valley and Idaho — indeed the whole country — have many districts that would just as soon square their meager budgets by eliminating girls' sports. What has held them back to this point is the threat of action by the federal government. That threat now seems remote.

Idaho's four publicly funded four-year colleges and its two junior colleges get much more direct federal aid than do local schools, principally through student loans. But even at those institutions, the possibility of federal intervention on Title IX issues seems unlikely. Essentially, they are free to do pretty much as they wish with women's athletics.

The Grave City decision didn't say as much — it simply stated that cutting off all aid to a college for violations in one area was an excessively broad interpretation of the law. But a threat by the Department of Education to cut off aid to a school's athletic program would be very credible. Few, if any, college athletic programs get federal aid.

Few school districts or colleges are likely to drop their girls' athletic programs summarily; to do so would be to invite a recall of the trustees. It's much more likely to happen this way.

Six district A has a shortfall of $25,000 for the next school year. What happens to be about what it costs to run its girls' athletic program. The trustees might get together and decide that in order to make up the difference, they will suspend all sports programs for a year that are not self-supporting — that is, all sports that don't generate enough revenue through gate receipts and booster support to pay for themselves. The bill list would doubtfully include all girls' sports, which generally draw sparse crowds. When financial conditions warrant, those sports may or may not be reinstated. Or the school board may simply decide to call cheerleading girls' sport.

On the college level, the impact would be more subtle. College athletic programs in Idaho operate at a subsistence level anyway, so that any short fall in the recreational budget — such as the loss of TV revenue occasioned by the Supreme Court's ruling last summer voiding the networks' football contracts with the NCAA — can and does cause marginal programs to be cut. When the women's volleyball team draws 25 fans per game to an otherwise empty gym and the men's wrestling team brings in a few dollars a year from a couple of tournaments, it's not hard to predict which will be expendable.

The only remaining safety nets for girls' and women's sports is public pressure and the pool will of the administrators and trustees who administer those programs. Fairness may be a poor argument in the face of a budget deficit, but it is the best argument in a non-sports world.

The hard fact is that the younger sisters of the girls and women playing high school and collegiate sports today may simply not have the same opportunities. That's too bad.

It's also wrong.

Public's response turns race into positive event

NEW YORK (AP) — Gabriele Andersen-Schless, whose courageous finish in the women's Olympic marathon became an inspiration for many runners, said Thursday that one of the biggest things she learned from that harrowing experience was "to be careful in a marathon when it gets hot and humid."

The 39-year-old native of Switzerland who now lives in Sun Valley, Idaho, was at her first major press conference since the Los Angeles Summer Games, announcing her entry into the Oct. 28 New York City Marathon.

The nationally televised, 26-mile, 385-yard race will be her first test at that distance since her gritty performance at the Games, where she lunched across the finish after nearly collapsing several times during the final 400 meters in the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum.

"I almost felt embarrassed," the soft-spoken distance runner said about her celebrated Olympic effort that captivated millions of people around the world. "I felt the whole world was watching when I was fighting and having a hard time."

"No one likes to be so public when you have a moment of weakness. But, I feel that it is an honor that people now use me as an inspiration. I hope I can live up to it."

"I expect people will be watching me more, because I am more than a running figure," she added.

Andersen-Schless said she has received "hundreds of letters" since her controversial and heroic effort, in which she staggered around the final lap in nearly five minutes. The outpouring has been mostly positive, she said, "and has helped me get over that. It turned a negative experience around."

She admitted that she has been "overwhelmed" by the response from "people who don't know me and people that I don't know who have sat down and written letters that were so emotional. Not only women, but grown men. They said they cried when they saw me on TV."

She said the only regret she had about the Olympics was that her performance — a 37th-place finish —

"was disappointing in such a big race."

"Had it not been the Olympics, would she have tried to finish in her bad physical state?"

"I don't think so," she said. "But then, I think it was just a natural thing to try and finish the race. I'm stubborn. I like to finish what I start."

"I had quite a bit of pain," recalled Andersen-Schless. "It was very hot. I felt like I was on fire."

"Your mind knows what you have to do, but you have no control over your legs and arms."

After the historic race, the first marathon for women in the Olympics, there was much controversy over whether Andersen-Schless, who was suffering from heat prostration, should have been removed from the track when she began having trouble, as a precaution against possible brain damage.

But she pointed out that the medical treatment she received was excellent. "In less than two hours, I was able to walk out of the emergency clinic, and the next day I was able to run again," she remembered.

Since the games, Andersen-Schless has won a 10-kilometer (6.2-mile) race in Sun Valley, placed second in a 10K event in the Cayman Islands and finished fourth in a race of the same distance in Denver.

The race in the Cayman Islands was the first "major" race after the games, and Andersen-Schless conceded "I was a little leary."

"It was hot and humid, and it's very tropical here," she said. "I ran conservatively. But it gave me confidence."

Looking ahead to the New York race, in which she will face Olympic silver medalist Grete Waitz of Norway and former Boston Marathon winner Charlotte Teske of West Germany, Andersen-Schless said, "It will be an experience getting back (into marathoning). But I have confidence, and it should work out well, unless it gets real hot."

"I know I will have to fight that the rest of my life. But if (the weather) conditions are normal, I don't think I'll have to worry too much."

Wood River ends Twin Falls' mastery

TWIN FALLS — The last time Wood River beat Twin Falls was back in 1980 and now you can add 1984 to the list.

The Wolverines took two straight from the Bruins 16-14, 15-13 Thursday night.

Twin Falls led throughout the first game, but blew the lead and let Wood River back into the game.

In the second game it was all Wood River. The Wolverines took a 10-5 lead before the Bruins battled back to within three points.

The game saw the rest of the way with Twin Falls moving to within one at 12-11. Then the spiking of Shelley Robely moved the Wolverines out of reach.

"It was one of our better games of the season," said Wood River Coach Dave Neumann. "We saw they lost to our rivals (Madison and Preston) and we just felt we had to win."

Twin Falls Coach Kathy Anderson said the Bruins let Wood River take advantage late in the first game.

"We lost our momentum in the first match and momentum means so much."

District is next for both teams. Twin Falls will host Minico in its first match on Tuesday.

The Bruins won the preliminary contest 15-6, 15-12.

Senators wound up the regular season with a 15-2, 15-10 decision over Glens Ferry.

The Senators also claimed the preliminary.

Hagerman takes pair — FAIRFIELD — The Hagerman Pirates topped Raft River and Murtaugh in a season-ending Magic Valley Conference triangular Thursday night.

Hagerman dropped Raft River 15-10, 15-4 and Murtaugh 15-7, 15-6. Raft River downed Murtaugh 13-15, 15-12, 15-10 in the other game.

All three teams will participate in the district tournament opening Monday at Hansen.

Musbers gain split — THE CAMAS COUNTY — Musbers split a home double dual Thursday night, bowing to Rimrock 10-15, 15-13, 15-9 and coming back to beat Gooding State 15-4, 15-4.

The Musbers won the preliminary 6-15, 15-11, 15-13 over Rimrock.

Shoshone clinches title — HAZELTON — The Shoshone Indians, both varsity and jayvees, completed their Magic Valley Conference schedules in undefeated style Thursday night.

The varsity topped Valley 15-8, 15-3 while the jayvees claimed a 15-11, 17-15 decision.

Both will be top seeds in the district A-3 tournament which opens in Wendell Monday.

Buhl JV beats Castleford

BUHL — The Buhl Jayvees got excellent serving from Holly Juker, Heidi Brenden and Gayla Smutny to defeat Castleford 15-13, 15-8.

Buhl's varsity is now pointed toward the district A-2 tournament Tuesday. The Indians will host Jerome at 6:30 p.m. while Burley travels to Wood River. Jayvees will play in conjunction with the varsities.

Ketchum stuns Dietrich

DITRICH — The Ketchum Cutthroats ended Dietrich's hopes for an undefeated season but a triangular at the Blue Devil gymnasium Thursday night left everyone at 1-1.

Ketchum opened the night by beating the Devils 15-11, 10-15, 15-8 but then bowed to Bliss in the second match 9-15, 15-7, 15-13. Dietrich made it complete by whipping Bliss 15-5, 15-0.

"I talked to the girls after it was over and asked 'well, how do you feel,'" Coach Ben Stroud said. "They all said 'relieved.' I told them, 'you know what? I'm glad I'm here referring to taking an undefeated record into the district tournament, which opens Saturday at Gooding State."

As conference and district defending champions, Dietrich will have an opening round by Saturday. First-round action includes 1 p.m., Bliss vs. Richfield; 2 p.m., Gooding State vs. Camas County; 3 p.m., Carey vs. Ketchum, and 4 p.m., Dietrich vs. the winner of Bliss-Richfield.

The tournament will resume at 4 p.m. Monday.

Kimberly trims Wendell

KIMBERLY — The Kimberly Bulldogs nailed down one of the top three spots in the Canyon Conference by defeating Wendell 12-15, 15-3, 15-12.

Kimberly also took the preliminary 15-9, 9-15, 15-5.

Both teams will participate in the district A-3 tournament in Wendell Monday.

Other new officers are Mary Roberts, vice president; Gladys Hartluft, tournament chairman and secretary, and Janet Cummins, treasurer.

The group will conduct its fall banquet at 6:30 p.m. Oct. 29 at the Elks Lodge. Chloe Davis (734-9241) and America Brodeen (733-4248) should be called for reservations.

Charlotte Brunell will send the golfers of the year tournament to wind up things on the links.

Niekro begins third decade

ATLANTA (AP) — Knuckelballeer Phil Niekro said he will start his third decade in the major leagues next spring, pitching his second season for the New York Yankees.

"They renewed my contract, picked up my option year," Niekro, 36, said. "I signed a two-year contract, this being my option year," he said. "It wasn't written in stone that I was coming back. They had an option. I got a telegram today confirming that."

A story in the New York Times said Niekro, who will be 46 a week before the start of the 1985 season, said his contract called for $500,000 this year and $550,000 next year because of a $50,000 bonus for making more than 25 starts this year.

Niekro, who now has 284 career victories could be the 17th pitcher in major-league history to reach the 300-victory plateau, refused to confirm or deny that, saying, "I don't even get into those numbers."

Ferguson to start Sunday

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Quarterback Joe Ferguson, sidelined with a severely sprained right ankle for almost three weeks, probably will start for the Buffalo Bills against the Seahawks in Seattle Sunday. Bills Coach Kay Stephenson said Thursday.

Ferguson, his ankle heavily taped, worked out with the National Football League team Wednesday for the first time.

Afterwards, Stephenson said, "He looked pretty good. He actually looked a little better than we expected. I think he should be fine to go this weekend."

NCAA probes S. Mississippi

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (AP) — The NCAA is investigating the University of Southern Mississippi but neither the organization nor the school will say why.

The investigation was announced in a two-sentence statement by Athletic Director Roland Dale, who declined to elaborate, amid reports the NCAA was interested in the case of prep star Don Palmer of Brandon, Miss.

The NCAA does not comment on enforcement matters and will not confirm or deny whether an investigation is planned or in progress.

"The University of Southern Mississippi was notified by the NCAA on Oct. 10, 1984, that it was under an official inquiry," Dale said. "The university will have no further comment on this matter until it is resolved."

Two Packers cited in case

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Authorities say they are investigating an 18-year-old tavern dancer's claim that two members of the Green Bay Packers raped her.

Police told the Milwaukee Sentinel that two investigators were sent to Green Bay Wednesday after the woman reported being assaulted the night before by the two men in a dressing room at the tavern where she worked. She allegedly told police that the two players forced her to perform oral sex on one of them.

The Sentinel quoted a source in Thursday's newspaper as saying that one of the players told police he was "an innocent bystander" to the alleged assault. The other player declined comment to police.

Benirschke has operation

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Place-kicker Rolf Benirschke of the San Diego Chargers was listed in good condition Thursday at UC San Diego Medical Center, where he underwent surgery for removal of a kidney stone, officials said.

Benirschke, who has a history of medical problems, was operated on Wednesday by Dr. Joseph Schmidt, head of the hospital's urology department.

Charger Coach Don Coryell said Benirschke would likely be lost to the National Football League team for at least two weeks.

1985 fish regulations to be aired in Jerome

JEROME — The Idaho Department of Fish and Game will hold a public hearing to discuss 1985 fishing regulations at the Jerome Regional office, 868 east Main Street in Jerome, at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

Several changes are being considered which would affect Region 4 waters.

One proposal would change Magic, Fish Creek and Little Wood reservoirs to year-around fishing. These waters already are open over nine months of the year and the extension would provide additional fishing opportunity in early spring, notes Stu Murrell, regional conservation educator.

The change also should help alleviate Memorial weekend crowding.

Another recommendation is to open Big Wood River and its tributaries from Magic Reservoir upstream to fishing except for the months of April and May. It would be closed those two months to protect spawning trout.

Because of abuse of the regulation concerning the number of hooks allowed on a fisherman's line, a proposed change would recommend a total of five hooks per line.

It was found the July 1 opening on the West ponds and Anderson ponds at the Hagerman Wildlife Management Area did help protect nesting waterfowl until hatching was completed in 1984. This regulation will be retained for 1985.

Another recommendation would involve changing a water having "no motors" regulation to also prohibit electric motors. A number of new electric motors as powerful as some of the lesser-sized gasoline motors are now available and could cause a similar problem of disturbance this regulation is attempting to prevent, Murrell said.

Heathcote released from hospital

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Michigan State basketball Coach Jud Heathcote, who suffered a heart attack last month, has been released from the hospital and is resting at home, a university spokesman said Thursday.

Heathcote, 57, was released Wednesday from Lansing's St. Lawrence Hospital, said Sports Information Director Nick Vista.

The coach will begin a cardiac rehabilitation and supervised exercise program Friday at Ingham Medical Center, Vista said.

"The outlook for the future is excellent," Vista quoted Dr. David Hough, director of sports medicine at the university, as saying. "But they (doctors) will have to see how well he does in this program to determine when he can return to work."

Czech takes Nobel Prize for literature

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Czechoslovak poet Jaroslav Seifert, whose lyric lines of love and hope were long censored by his country's Communist government, was awarded the 1984 Nobel Prize in literature Thursday.

The ailing, 63-year-old poet is the first writer working in the East bloc to win the literature award since the Soviet dissident Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn in 1970.

The Swedish Academy of Letters, announcing the prize, said Seifert's fresh, sensual poetry "provides a liberating image of the indomitable spirit and versatility of man." The news agency of the Czechoslovak government, which recently has made its peace with Seifert, lauded his positive attitude to man's struggle for social justice. "Writer friends praised him simply as a literary 'king' whose poetry 'sings'."

In Prague, the Swedish ambassador called on Seifert in his hospital room to inform him of the prize.

"He was overjoyed ... I don't think he was expecting it," said the diplomat, Olof Skoglund.

Seifert, suffering from a heart ailment and diabetes, is not expected to attend the prize ceremony Dec. 10 in Stockholm. Skoglund said a family member would probably take his place.

Seifert's was the first of the six annual Nobel prizes to be announced. Each carries a cash stipend equivalent to $193,000. The peace prize and four science prizes will be announced next week. The award series was established in the will of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite who died in 1896. The literature winner last year was British novelist William Golding.

"The Czech-language poet, who was born in a working-class district of Prague and published his first verse in 1920, was a Communist Party member as a youth. But he quit the party in 1929, calling it "anti-intellectual."

During the Nazi occupation of Czechoslovakia in World War II, Seifert's nationalistic poems "were a great encouragement to the Czech nation," the Prague news agency CTK said in its report Thursday on the award.

But the CTK dispatch listed only Seifert's works up to 1968, when he joined the Czechoslovak liberalization movement that was eventually crushed by Soviet invasion troops.

The 18-member Swedish academy, in its citation, noted that the Communist takeover in Czechoslovakia in 1948 had bitterly disappointed Seifert. The poet criticized Communist cultural policy at a writers' congress in 1956, and by the 1960s his poetry was no longer being issued by the state-controlled publishing houses, the academy said.

During a period of liberalization, he was president of the national writers' union, but the union was dissolved in the "normalization" campaign that followed the August 1968 Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia. He later was among the signers of the Charter 77 human rights manifesto issued by Czechoslovak dissidents.

During this period, his works were circulated underground or were published abroad, both in Czech and in translation. In the past few years, the government again has allowed publication of Seifert's collections.

Zdena Skvorecky, a Czech exile who has priviledged Seifert's poetry in Canada, told a reporter in Toronto: "He's not a dissident poet. He's not a fighter. But he doesn't hide his sympathy for the dissidents. The award should make the Czechoslovak government 'very uncomfortable,' she said.

Band rocks, rolls in Hebrew language

By DAVID IVANOVICH
The Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — Rocking and rolling in the ancient language of the Bible, a Hebrew rock band called Beehive makes audiences sing, clap and dance when they perform.

An estimated crowd of 250,000 recently jammed an outdoor amphitheater to hear Beehive demonstrate Hebrew rock music's immense popularity.

"The Israeli music scene is very much like what the (United) States was in the '60s," said Danny Sanderson, 33, Beehive guitarist and now a popular solo performer.

"With the war, the economy, no government, the country at the moment is split down the middle," Sanderson said. "When people are in agreement, there's less to argue about and the art is less poignant. As things become more polarized, it becomes more expressive."

Because of these pressures, Sanderson said, Israelis are turning more and more to music for relaxation and entertainment.

Israel's most popular rock band is a three-man group called Benzene. The group's music, while similar to current American rock, has a distinct Mediterranean flavor. Along with the familiar electric guitar, key board and drums, Benzene adds a bouzouki, said manager and lyricist Jarov Gilad.

Benzene's biggest hit, "Friday Night," is a fast, upbeat song about a working class man whose mundane life during the week is brightened only by his expectations of Friday night fun.

The group's first LP sold more than 40,000 copies, which in Israel is considered platinum, or double gold.

Yehuda Poliker, lead singer and composer for the band, knows about the lives of the workers. He and the other members grew up together in a working class neighborhood in Haifa, a northern port city that has a reputation like Liverpool in England for producing rock bands.

Their families are all Sephardic Jews who emigrated to Israel from Arab and Mediterranean countries.

The Sephardi standard of living is well below that of the Ashkenazi Jews, who emigrated to Israel from Europe and North America. The unrest resulting from this economic disparity is one of Israel's major social problems.

Many Sephardi performers cannot afford to pay up to $20,000 to record an album through one of the major recording studios. Instead, many Sephardi performers make their own cassette recordings, which are then sold on the streets.

Elkhorn to host festival

SUN VALLEY — Elkhorn Resort is holding its first annual Oktoberfest, a three-day celebration of German music, brew and food Oct. 19-21.

Recently purchased by Mill Knutt, president of Horizon Airlines, the resort is adding a seafood buffet to the celebration according to sales manager Mike Thompson.

"Because of our connections to Horizon all the seafood will be flown in fresh from Alaska," Thompson says.

Expecting a great turnout, Thompson says that Friday will feature German beer and wine in the Clubhouse Restaurant along with authentic German food by Sun Valley chef, Fred Pender.

The Horizon Ball Room will be transformed into an authentic German beer hall, according to the sales manager, and live Bavarian music will be played by the Edelweiss Club of Boise from 2 p.m. Saturday until midnight, and again from noon until 5 p.m. Sunday. Between performances, polka, costume and yodeling contests are planned.

The Idaho Falls Opera is slated for benefit performances at 7:30 and 9 p.m. Saturday with proceeds to go to themselves and the Wood River Advisory Council For The Arts. They will appear in the saloon nightclub.

Thompson says lodging at the hotel will be $19.50 based on double occupancy. Included is daily admission to the beer hall. Opera tickets are $5, which includes two days' admission to the beer hall. Seafood buffet fare is $14.95 per person and standard beer hall admission is $2.

The French-Canadian folk group, 'La Bottine Souriante'

Canadian band to offer folk music

By TERRY RICH HARTLEY
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — "La Bottine Souriante" — "The Smiling Boot" in French — will perform Wednesday at 8 p.m. at the Renaissance Academy of the Arts.

The traditional folk group from the province of Quebec, Canada, combines numerous instruments, voices and traditional foot tapping into a combination of music in French, Irish, Scottish and English traditions.

Creating a musical mosaic, their songs originate from the Lanaudiere region north of Montreal, where the dance music is borrowed from fiddlers and accordion players across the province.

Having toured Canada and Europe several times, the group has produced many long-playing records and are regulars at folk festivals.

Their desire is to make people sing, dance and participate in a show for the ear as well as create a family gathering atmosphere.

Group member Yves Lambert, who began his career playing the mouth organ in bars and nightclubs, also plays the accordion, harmonica, Jew's harp and provides voice to the group's repertoire.

Martin Itacine says he enjoys "scratching" the mandolin, but primarily adds violin and voice to the group.

Bernard Sinard, who describes himself as "a happy traveler, singer and guitarist," also adds foot tapping.

Mouth organ, spoons and voice are the specialty of Mario Forest, who was a charter member of the group when it formed in 1976.

And late-comer Daniel Roy adds whistle, dulcimer, bones, "Indian drum and voice" to the group.

Suggested donations are $5 for adults and $3 for senior citizens and students.

Dinner concert Saturday

SUN VALLEY — The first of three fall dinner concerts will be held Saturday in the Sun Valley Lodge Dining Room.

The Autumn Candlelight Concerts are sponsored by the Sun Valley Center for the Arts and Humanities and the Sun Valley Co. Other concerts are scheduled for Oct. 27 and Nov. 10.

Dinner will be served at 7 p.m. and the performance will begin at 9:15 p.m. Tickets, $30 for reserved tables and $50 for patron tables, are available at the Sun Valley Center Gallery, 622-4111, or Sun Valley Company 726-9491.

Martin shows wild talent in his latest

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Even without the bunny ears, white suit and phony arrow through his head, Steve Martin still is a wild and crazy guy.

He also is a great physical comedian as he proves in his latest film, "All of Me."

Martin plays Roger Cobb, a harried and unhappy lawyer. He loves being a part-time jazz musician, but can't decide whether to marry the boss' daughter or make something of his dismal law career in the firm where he's more or less a well-paid office boy.

His first chance at a big case is less than challenging. He is assigned to handle the legal affairs of Edwina Cutwater (Lily Tomlin), who is rich and dying and insufferable. Edwina plans to take her money with her by using the services of a Tibetan holy man to transfer her soul into the lavishly furnished body of the daughter of her stableman.

Roger is a disbeliever of all the mumbo jumbo until Edwina's soul is accidentally zapped in his bewildered body.

The result is an internal battle of the sexes because Edwina's essence now has taken residence in half of Roger's body.

Of course, there's the usual and predictable predicaments one expects such as Roger attempting to use the bathroom and make love to the mislaid target of Edwina's soul, while having to control the headstrong spirit of the dead woman.

Martin, however, hilariously takes command of the predictable and makes comedy.

His body is a masterful elastic tool as he interprets Roger under the influence of Edwina. Especially expert is Martin's courtroom scene as he plays Edwina's warped version of a macho man.

Tomlin, on the other hand, gives a restrained performance as the restrained Edwina. She is almost straight man to Martin's vigor. Her usual low key style is perfect as a woman who's had everything but enjoyed nothing.

The remaining cast is sound with a special credit going to Richard Libertini as the childlike Tibetan monk.

The film is directed by Carl Reiner, who also teamed with Martin for that little gem of a film called "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid."

"All of Me" is far from being the funniest film of the fall season. It is frequently droopy, strained here and there and muddled where it needs to be sharp.

But Martin's performance is an electric shock that goes right to the funny bone of the brain. He is severely center stage.

Love Martin. Love this film.

'Places,' 'Karate Kid' are excellent moviegoing fare

The Los Angeles Times

To assist parents in evaluating movies for family viewing, the Los Angeles Times lists current movies and indicates areas of content (theme, language, sex, violence) that may be inappropriate for the very young or impressionable. MPAA or The Times' ratings are in parentheses.

Movies

FAMILY

"The Bear" (PG), minor gridiron violence.

"The Karate Kid" (PG), a few strong words; exceptional family entertainment.

"Places in the Heart" (PG), scenes of violence too intense for very young children. Outstanding family fare.

MATURE

"C.H.U.D." (R), special effects too grisly for small children.

"Evil That Men Do" (R), graphically grisly.

"Purple Rain" (R), sex, nudity, language.

"Until September" (R), nudity, sex.

"The Wild Life" (R), considerable nudity and drug use.

CAPSULE REVIEWS

The following capsule reviews reflect the opinions of Los Angeles Times film critics.

"All of Me" (PG), fitfully funny but somewhat to the left of whoopee. Steve Martin plays a lawyer forced to share half his body with a selfish, prudish and very wealthy client (Lily Tomlin). This lighthearted caper only occasionally lives up to the promise of its premise — usually on those occasions when Martin either is yanked about by the lady within or publicly squabbles with his unwanted distaff half.

"The Bear" (PG), the film biography of legendary college football coach Paul (Bear) Bryant is a tedious — chronological march through Bryant's career, with supporting characters who are water-thin and arbitrarily appear only to quickly disappear. Director Richard Sarafian and screenwriter Michael Kane barely give Gary Busey as Bryant a fighting chance, which makes his accomplishment all the more impressive. He gives "The Bear" its only life.

"C.H.U.D." (R), routine horror picture about Manhattan's derelicts turning into ghouls through contact with nuclear waste. With John Heard, Daniel Stern.

"The Evil That Men Do" (R), this could have been more than your basic Charles Bronson blood bath, set as it is against the backdrop of today's headlines about kidnappings and killings by various repressive Latin American governments. But it takes the easy way out. The David Lee Henley-John Crowther script merely uses the headlines as an excuse to slay away for an hour and 37 minutes on the premise that the end justifies the means, at least at the box office.

"The Karate Kid" (PG), irresistible entertainment, beautifully directed by John G. Avildsen from Robert Mark Kamen's outstanding script, about a high school boy (Ralph Macchio) taught — not only how to defend himself but also spiritual values, by a whimsical handyman — Noriyuki (Pat Morita) in the role of a lifetime.

"Places in the Heart" (PG), a work of love in which writer-director Robert Benton wants us to understand the character of a small Texas town where he grew up and the character of Americans at a time when their lives were most severely tried — mid-depression 1935. The film is extraordinary, restorative and deeply American, constructed with the intricacy of a fugue. The look of the film and its every technical detail is magnificent, and Benton's cast (which includes Sally Field, Ed Harris, Lindsay Crouse and John Malkovich) is the cream of young American performers.

"Purple Rain" (R+N) Prince works supremely well in this hot, jagged, garish film that uses an old story, works it over with a blowtorch, and succeeds even beyond its own audacious dreams. The film is at its sharpest not in its writhing, overplayed melodrama but when it's funky-funny, and in its evocation of the backstage lives of musicians.

"Until September" (R), this is movie-making as though common sense had been outlawed. An American landscape gardener (Karen Allen) falls for a married French banker (Thierry Lhermitte) who decides they are not an until-September fling but the real thing. The production seems to have provided a lovely relaxation for everyone involved, but paid vacations are not yet reason to make movies.

'Teachers' opens to top box-office figures

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite the Columbus Day holiday, business was down last weekend for most films, with the notable exception of "Teachers" and "Places in the Heart."

"Teachers," a black comedy starring Nick Nolte as a disillusioned educator, got the highest marks by scoring $7 million in its Friday-through-Monday debut.

MGM-UA marketing and distribution president Irv Ivers says "Teachers" apparently got a boost from a rock soundtrack that includes the "Teacher, Teacher" single and video by 36 Special. Sixty percent of the weekend audience was under 25, Ivers said.

"All of Me" fell to second with $4.5 million for the four days — 14 percent less than its earnings over three days the previous weekend.

"Places in the Heart" in which Sally Field plays a beleaguered Depression-era farm woman, grabbed third place for Tri-Star by reaping $4.1 million in its first week in wide release.

After two weeks on top, Universal's Steve Martin-Lily Tomlin comedy

CBS breezes to TV ratings lead

LOS ANGELES — CBS, with its continuing cliffhangers on "Dallas," "Knots Landing" and "Falcon Crest," easily won the ratings race, while ABC's special baseball broadcasts and NBC's regular comedies placed them in a virtual second place for the second week of the regular season.

In figures released by the A.C. Nielsen Co. Tuesday, CBS was first with a network average of 18.5. ABC was second with 16.0 and NBC was third with 15.9. The networks say this means that in a given prime-time minute 18.5 percent of the nation's 84.9 million TV homes were tuned to CBS.

CBS not only ran off with the ratings for the second straight week, but had seven of the Top 10 entertainment programs. NBC had the other three. With its entertainment programs faltering for the second straight week, ABC's strong weekend baseball telecasts kept it from finishing third again.

ABC's best performance for the week ending Oct. 7 was the prime-time spillover of Sunday's final game of the National League playoffs. Late last week, after its worst premiere week since 1962, the network pulled three shows off the air and rearranged its Tuesday and Thursday night schedules.

NBC's good news was that its Thursday night comedy held its lead. "Foley Tillis" and "Cheers" tied for 13th. But NBC also had the three lowest-rated series, "Silver Spoons," "Hot Pursuit" and "Hunter."

Sunday's presidential debate, broadcast live by the three commercial networks, was not listed in the ratings.

'Live at the Met' performance to feature Verdi's epic melodrama

When television audiences tune in Oct. 31 to the "Live From The Met" telecast of Giuseppe Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" with English subtitles, they will see an epic crammed soldiers, sinners, peasants and priests.

For Verdi's "Forza" is a sprawling melodrama spiked by glorious melody, comedy, and a Shakespearean grasp of the human condition.

"Like 'Il Trovatore,' Verdi's 'Forza' presents passionate characters grappling unsuccessfully with fate. In two dramas linked with ironic twists, parents meet gruesome ends, and their children find love only through death.

The theme was a natural one for Verdi, whose wife and two children died tragically of tuberculosis while he composed a comic opera. Drawing on life's tragedies, he composed a darkly kaleidoscopic drama.

Francesco Piave, the wordsmith for "Ermani," "Macbeth," "Rigoletto," and "La Traviata," forged the "Forza" libretto. Piave propelled Verdi's ill-fated lovers through palaces, taverns, battle field sand dunes.

He flashed out the plot with cloaks and daggers, bloody oaths, religious rites, and comic-hi-jinks. Verdi seved the creaky plot together with musical energy, high passion, and a rich abundance of melodic invention, musical development and orchestration.

Like the Bard of Avon, Verdi skilfully fills his stage with a diverse group of "players," Trabucco, the feisty hawk, sleeps in the stable "with my mules who know nothing of Latin, who have no education."

Preziosilla is an eighteenth century poster girl, promising promotions and glory to naive army recruits. This budding Carmen penetrates Don Carlo's disguise, and later she whips up war fever with the rousing "Ritaplan."

Fra Mellone is a warmup for Falstaff, Verdi's witty knight. The burly priest entertains us with Arclie bunksisms: partying soldiers are "Turkish infidels" who prefer battles to battles, while beggars demanding undeserving free loaders.

"Make us show charity to those who make a living of it?" asks the disgusted Mellone. Verdi brilliantly caricatures the professional cleric who chooses pettiness over pity.

Paire Guardalano, in contrast, is a spiritual leader who actively practices tolerance and compassion. He offers shelter to two fugitives, Leonora and Alvaro, and pointedly reminds Mellone that "to give charity is to fulfill a duty that might make an angel proud."

Verdi reserves magical moments for his "star-crossed lovers, Alvaro and Leonora. Although separated throughout most of "Forza," the couple sat the opera's pace with a breathless opening duct, throwing caution to the winds, and much later they reunite for a poignant and brief farewell. Searching for his lover, Alvaro plays both soldier and priest.

Humbled like, he pours out yearning and infidelity in "Oh tu che in seno agli angeli."

Hiding in the monastery at Hornachuelos, Leonora sings some of Verdi's most exquisitely spiritual music, including "Madre, pietosa Vergine" and "Pace, pace mio Dio." Failing to shut out reality, the couple loses everything — honor, friendship, love.

In the original version, Leonora died and Alvaro leaped off a cliff. Critics labeled this "Forza" "gloomy," and even Verdi agreed that "there are too many bodies onstage."

Daily Horoscope

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You will need to step up your pace today if you want to get much of value put in motion, for you will feel you are deprived of certain luxuries.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) It's fine to plan to gain more holdings, but be sure you do not neglect those you have at present.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Morning is fine for going to your favorite barber or beauty shop and improving your appearance.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You will need to assist you either in business or personal matters now.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) A good day to plan either a change of address or an improvement or addition to your residence, but act quickly.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You get many fine ideas for future activities, so make notations of them or you could forget them later.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Know what it is that your mate wants out of life and try to be of assistance. This brings greater happiness between you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) String along with associates today since the planets are most favorable to them.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Be very cooperative with those who work with you and step up production considerably.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Make arrangements early for having the good time you desire and later in the day it can be yours.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) The ideas of kin are better than yours for the next few days, so listen carefully to what they have to suggest.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20) A fine day to plan with allies how to be more productive. Any problematical affairs can be straightened out.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY, he or she will, early in life, want to be prosperous and can do so since there is an early understanding of what path to take in order to be successful. Therefore, it is necessary that a good education be provided in order to make the most of the potential here.

Cheever's daughter gives insight

"HOME BEFORE DARK" by Susan Cheever, (Houghton Mifflin, 243 pp., $15.)

By DAN CRYER
Newsday

In this extraordinary memoir, John Cheever's daughter has struck a delicate balance between revelation and appreciation.

"Home Before Dark" candidly describes the writer's struggles with alcoholism, homosexuality, depression and marital discord.

Even so, it is a moving, elegant portrait that can only deepen our respect for the man. For while Cheever battled these demons, he managed to create fiction that will take an honored and permanent place in our literature.

John Cheever (1912-1982) may not rank as our Chekhov, as some critics have suggested, but "Home Before Dark" reveals a complexity that belies any perception of him as smug chronicler of upper-crust suburbia.

Books

"Life for my father was either unbearable or transcendent," Susan Cheever writes. Clearly, there is no place in that world view, nor in the fiction that emerged from it, for complacency or superficiality.

Part of the problem in getting a fix on Cheever's work, his daughter implies, stemmed from the subtle image-making her father indulged in. Through mischievous, not to say deceitful, handling of interviewers, he came to be seen as a self-assured country squire who handled martinis and literary success with equal ease. None of it was so, even from the start. True enough, she writes, John Cheever's father had been "a gentleman sailor who owned a prosperous shoe factory" in Lynn, Mass. But that was before he sold the business and invested in stocks that left him penniless after the Great Crash of 1929.

Thereafter, the family was supported largely by John's mother, who ran a gift shop and tea room. In 1933 their home was repossessed. Frederick and Mary Cheever fought, separated, reunited, but bitterness rather than love was the glue that kept them together.

Contrary to the fictional account in his first published story ("Expelled," which appeared in The New Republic in 1930 when he was 18), John Cheever had to leave Thayer Academy because his parents could no longer afford to send him there; elder brother Fred was forced to drop out of Dartmouth.

One-piece swimming suits plentiful

DEAR READERS: "Mad in Madison" wrote: "If you know where a woman can buy a modest one-piece bathing suit, please let me know. I am a senior citizen whose doctor has recommended swimming as a healthful exercise, but I am no Venus in a bathing suit," etc.

I told "Mad" I would have to search far. Hundreds of readers sent pages from the catalogs of Sears-Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, J.C. Penney and National, all featuring beautifully styled, modest bathing suits such as I have not seen in many years.

There were — one-piece (some skirted), not-too-revealing swimsuits, available in all sizes for women of all ages. And the prices were right, too.

Another surprise: The Lane Bryant stores, known for dressing the larger woman, carry stylish, conservative bathing suits from size 14 and up.

Many readers suggested shopping at medical supply shops. They said the bathing suits designed especially for women who have had mastectomies are good-looking, have built-in bras, and were purchased by many women who have not had mastectomies. (Look under "Prosthetic Appliances" in the Yellow Pages of your telephone directory.)

All maternity shops feature modest, non-revealing swimwear, some with matching cover-up jackets, suitable for non-pregnant women.

Another idea: Leotards, now popular for exercise and dancing classes, can double for swimwear. They're comfortable, good-looking, modest and reasonably priced.

And last but not least, make your own. Stretch-and-sew fabrics and patterns are available in shops and department stores.

So, women, we need not be slaves to fashion. The abbreviated bikini is only for the lean, the young, the hairless and the brave. But fortunately, we do have some choices — when we know where to look.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I were going to take our grandchildren, ages 8 and 10, to the movies last Saturday, and we ended up having ice cream and going home without seeing a movie.

Do you know why? I will tell you. There were nine movies playing, and not one was a family movie. They were all rated PG, PG-13 and R.

Abby, the movies used to be a family pleasure. Why doesn't the movie industry make family entertainment anymore? We have to see reruns of "Snow White" and "Bambi" until we have them memorized.

We need some good, funny, clean, old-fashioned movies. Abby, whatever happened to Laurel and Hardy?

GRANDPA IN APPLE VALLEY, CALIF.
DEAR GRANDPA: The same thing. (That happened to Abbott and Costello. They died.)

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

Movie moguls, are you listening?

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I want to start a family. Twelve years ago, when I was 17, I had an abortion in the early stages of pregnancy. There were no complications.

I do not want in my medical record. My husband does not know about it, and if he were to find out, the consequences could be devastating.

Can my gynecologist tell if I've had an abortion?

DEAR ABBY: I would like your opinion as to whether I should do anything about this matter or just keep quiet. My son recently announced his engagement. I have met his fiancée and they seem very much in love.

My son has lived away from home for the last 10 years, but when he lived at home I learned that he was a transvestite. I have no idea whether he has pursued this activity or not.

Should something be said to his fiancée regarding this, or should the entire matter be forgotten on my part? I am also wondering if this characteristic is inherited, as they have already stated that they want a family soon.

I do not want anything to come between them, so hurry your advice and sign me.

DEAR WONDERING MOM: If your son is an active transvestite and he hasn't told his fiancée, he should. In any case, you stay out of it, Mom.

As for "compulsive cross-dressing and impersonating the opposite sex," which is the definition of transvestism, Dr. Paul Walker of San Francisco, an authority on the subject, informs me that it is not an inherited characteristic.

DEAR ABBY: If a strange man knocked on your door, the very first thing he would do is identify himself. If a stranger wrote you a letter, he would introduce himself with some opening remarks.

Why, oh why, then, is there such rudeness on the telephone? When I answer my telephone, most adults immediately ask, "Who is this?" They do not tell you who they are. If I am not the person to whom they want to speak, they demand to know, "Is So-and-So there?" If I inform the caller that So-and-So is not here, I am further questioned with, "Where did she go?" And, "When do you think she'll be back?" (All of this from a stranger who has not even identified himself.)

If this is the new etiquette, I think it stinks.

I am a graduate of Princeton, and also a physician if that matters. Sign me...

—RALPH OF LONG ISLAND
DEAR RALPH: This is not the "new etiquette." It's the old rudeness. The sure cure for that, Doctor, is to ask the caller, "May I ask who's calling, please?" Immediately after this caller asks, "Who is this?" — and most certainly before you identify yourself.

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorced mother of four young children. Five months ago I met a very nice man. He loves children and treats mine like his own. He makes a very good living (he's a truck driver) and says he wants to spend the rest of his life taking care of us. I know he loves us very much, and I love him. I've never loved or been loved like this before.

The problem is I'm 30 and he's 49 — looks 40 and enjoys life like a 25-year-old. Abby, he's older than my parents! He wants to be married and so do I, but what do I tell my family? I know it's my decision, but it's important to me to have my family's approval.

Abby, what would you do if your daughter came to you with this kind of news?

—WONDERING IN ARIZONA
DEAR WONDERING: I would say: "Congratulations. What kind of wedding do you want?"
