113 arrested in anti-apartheid riots

By JAMES F. SMITH
The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police swooped on anti-apartheid activists Sunday, and reported arresting 113 people on the first day of a state of emergency aimed at ending 10 months of unrest among blacks.
In one of the few clashes reported, police headquarters said a police patrol shot and killed three blacks in a rambling crowd in Umahole, the black township at Parys 75 miles south of Johannesburg. Parys and Umahole are not among the 36 cities and towns covered by the emergency declaration.
The state of emergency, which gives authorities broad new powers, was the first proclaimed by the white-minority government in 25 years.
Police commandeered a bus carrying 60 mourners back to Johannesburg from a funeral and detained 21 passengers, friends of those aboard the bus said.

Police declined to release the names of those seized or give details of other actions taken under emergency powers, but said that altogether, 113 people had been arrested.
There were also reports of pre-dawn roadblocks and searches in Kwa-Thema township east of Johannesburg, but by midmorning reporters saw no sign of a police crackdown there.
Police headquarters in Pretoria said a black man was shot dead Saturday night when a mob stoned a police camp in a township of the eastern Cape Province.
In other riot-torn townships, the police presence appeared minimal. Youths played soccer and adults went to church as usual.

Comment by Sunday newspapers was largely restrained. The Johannesburg Sunday Star, often critical of the government, said the government must open a dialogue with black leaders. But the paper added: "It has become clear that the situation could not be allowed to go on, eroding law and order, bedeviling efforts to find solutions... Action had to be taken."
The Sowetan Sunday Mirror, a Johannesburg newspaper for blacks, joined anti-apartheid groups in saying the government should negotiate with black leaders, not jail them.
"The harsh surgical methods will be treating symptoms and not causes," the Mirror said.
President P.W. Botha declared the emergency Saturday in 36 riot-torn cities and towns, where most of the more than 450 deaths have occurred since last August. Botha said black radicals were carrying out acts of violence and thuggery... mainly directed at the property and person of law-abiding black people."

"This state of affairs can no longer be tolerated," he added.
The declaration empowers police to arrest without warrants, detain and interrogate suspects for 14 days without charge, impose curfews, seize control of property and limit or ban press coverage in affected areas.
The communities covered include Johannesburg and Port Elizabeth, two major population centers, as well as smaller towns.
A police spokesman, who demanded anonymity, said Gen. Johan Coetzee, commissioner of police, planned meetings Monday with editors to discuss limits on press coverage of actions taken under emergency powers.
Police refusal to release details of actions Sunday may foreshadow a curtailing of information.
City Press, another Johannesburg newspaper for blacks, left a blank space under a front-page editorial banner, saying restrictions under the emergency meant... See ARRESTS on Page A2

3 Idaho fires still burning

Payette fire is 65 percent contained
By The Associated Press

A two-week-old fire in the Payette National Forest was 65 percent contained, a forest spokeswoman said Sunday, but about 1,500 firefighters were kept busy there and at two other major fires in Idaho.
About 400 firefighters concentrated on the north and east sides of the fire in the Savage Creek area of the forest, but other crews were left unassigned, said fire information officer Pam Gardner.
"The rest of the fire perimeter is unmanned and basically considered out," she said. The perimeter of the 10,164-acre blaze on the south fork of the Salmon River, which was started by lightning July 5, was measured at 29.2 miles Sunday, Gardner said.
Elsewhere in the forest, she said 9,100 acres were involved in the French Creek fire 15 miles east of Riggins. About 500 firefighters were on the scene there.
The blaze was prevented from spreading east Saturday, and Gardner said firefighters' aimed to keep the flames from pushing into the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness.
Powered by north-northeast winds, the fire made some gains to the south and west Saturday, she said. Plans Sunday called for burning a fire break... See FIRES on Page A2

Israeli troops storm Lebanese villages

By JOHN EDLIN
The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli troops in helicopter gunships and armored personnel carriers stormed two villages in southern Lebanon Sunday, killing and capturing civilians suspected of supporting anti-Israeli Muslim militias, witnesses said.
Lebanon's state radio said Israeli troops descended by helicopter on the Shiite Muslim village of Qabriqha, and conducted a house-to-house search that left at least three villagers dead.
Qabriqha is on the fringe of an Israeli self-designated buffer zone in southern Lebanon, set up after Israel completed its troop pullout from Lebanon last month.
In Tel Aviv, military sources said one guerrilla was killed in a clash between Israeli troops and "a terrorist squad" at Qabriqha.
In a second attack, 11 miles northeast of Qabriqha, Israeli troops firing automatic weapons and backed by militiamen of the South Lebanon Army swept through Sejoud village in armored personnel carriers and jeeps mounted with machineguns, witnesses said.
Witness told state radio the troops and Israeli-backed militiamen torched a mosque, houses and stores and looted homes of money and jewelry. They said about 100 inhabitants fled to nearby hills, leaving a few elderly men behind.
No casualties were reported.

An army spokesman in Tel Aviv said he had no information about a second raid.
During a search of Qabriqha, the troops "identified a terrorist squad and in the ensuing firefight one terrorist was killed," said one source in Tel Aviv, who declined to be identified.
Tim Gossel, spokesman for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, or UNIFIL, said Israeli soldiers confronted five men before dawn and killed three of them.
The area is patrolled by U.N. peacekeepers from Ghana.
Israeli sources, who refused to be identified, said an Israeli patrol found rocket launchers near Qabriqha.

Reagan looks for a return to work

By TERENCE HUNT
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, after his first night at the White House since undergoing cancer surgery, spent a quiet day in the family living quarters Sunday and was quoted as saying, "It's sure nice to be back home."
Reagan, who returned Saturday after eight nights at Bethesda Naval Hospital, slept well and was up around 8 a.m., said a spokesman, Peter Rousset. After a breakfast of brown cereal, banana, toast and honey with his wife, Nancy, the president planned to catch up on paperwork.
"He's looking forward to resuming his schedule," Rousset said.
As he recuperates in the weeks ahead, the 74-year-old president will have a reduced work load, operating for the most part out of his East Wing quarters. Reagan probably will make a brief appearance sometime this week in the Oval Office, but the timing is not certain.
"He'll make that decision," said Rousset.
On Monday, Reagan's only appearance... See REAGAN on Page A2

Budget progress stalled

By CLIFF HAAS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite President Reagan's plans to re-enter the budget battle on Capitol Hill, two congressional leaders said Sunday it may be too late to rescue this year's deficit-reduction effort.
Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said there is "a likelihood" that Congress will not be able to agree on a budget for the coming fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.
Appearing Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press," Dole said, "I wouldn't want to indicate today that we're very optimistic. I think we're less than 50-50."
Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee, refined those pessimistic odds.
"I'd say our chances have moved from 50-50 to unfortunately 65-35 to have a budget at all," Gray said in an interview broadcast Sunday on the Mutual Radio Network.

Smeal edges Goldsmith to regain NOW spot

By DAVID ESPO
The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Eleanor Smeal defeated incumbent Judy Goldsmith on Sunday to win a third term as president of the National Organization for Women, and swiftly pledged to go "back out into the streets" in the struggle for feminist causes.
"I think it's time to put a lot more heat on the right wing and the reactionary policies of the (Reagan) administration," Smeal told reporters after her victory in an intense clash of styles with Goldsmith.
Smeal, 45, rolled up a margin of 839-703 in a delayed vote count to defeat Goldsmith, who won election three years ago with Smeal's support. Smeal previously had held the post for five years, but was barred from seeking a third consecutive term.
Write-in candidate Sonia Johnson won 11 votes in Sunday's balloting.
At a post-election news conference attended by her husband and two children, Smeal said she would press vigorously to safeguard abortion rights, extend anti-discrimination law and win approval for the Equal Rights Amendment.
The two women agreed on most issues, but Smeal said that under Goldsmith's leadership, NOW had not been aggressive or visible enough.
"You can't, in my opinion, just go on in a position of low-key lobbying," she told reporters.
"We've been good too long... It's time really to go back out into the streets. It's time to organize," she said, renewing her determination to stage a large public rally in Washington next March in favor of abortion rights.
Later, in a brief address to the convention, Smeal renewed her pledge, saying, "I intend to raise a little hell with you all."
Goldsmith telephoned Smeal to congratulate her, but left the convention hall before Smeal spoke. She made an upbeat remark to the convention, saying, "I am going out into the world, which I fully intend to take over."
Smeal's victory was announced at the closing session of the three-day NOW convention, more than 12 hours after the original timetable. The... Continued from Page A1 delay was caused by a violation of an erroneous sample ballot that officials feared might lead some voters to mark their ballots incorrectly.

Smeal, who became a well-known public figure during a failed campaign to ratify the ERA, will be taking over an organization at a crossroads. NOW's membership is declining and its fundraising is stalled as it faces difficult struggles over abortion, the ERA and other feminist issues.

NOW has about 170,000 members and about 10,000 supporters, compared with 381,000 and 41,500, respectively, when Goldsmith took office. Its budget this year is $5.4 million, compared with a 1984 budget of $10 million — its largest ever — during the final year of the unsuccessful ERA campaign.

NOW, founded in 1965, is an organization of men and women who support "full equality for women in truly equal partnership with men. It acts to end prejudice and discrimination against women and seeks to promote its views through research, litigation and political action."

Betty Friedan, author of the best-selling "The Feminine Mystique," was NOW's first president.

Countered Goldsmith, 46, in his speech to delegates Saturday night, Smeal proclaimed an assault against the "right wing," and said, "We have to convert their lies and distortions into a picture that paints them as the bigots that they are."

Countered Goldsmith, 46, in his speech to delegates Saturday night, "The challenge we face is not to speak louder but to communicate more effectively."

She claimed credit for strengthening the NOW organization and winning notable successes outside the nomination of Geraldine Ferraro as Democratic vice presidential candidate last year, she said, "We made history and changed the face of American politics forever."

The voting by more than 1,000 registered delegate-voters began Saturday night immediately after the two rivals spoke to the delegates, with NOW officials saying they expected results by midnight.

But after 505 votes had been cast, the Smeal campaign was found to have distributed incorrect sample ballots that officials decided might have led to errors in the real voting. With that discovery, voting was suspended, and the candidates negotiated a new plan.

Officials said the 505 votes would be invalidated, those delegates would be located and told to vote again, and the balloting would be held open until 6 a.m.

Budget

Senate, seeking to draft a compromise version of 1986 fiscal year budgets passed by each chamber, will try to revive their stalled talks this week.

But there is little indication of a solution to the problems that brought the bargaining to an acrimonious halt last week.

The budget talks broke down last Wednesday after Senate negotiators rejected a House compromise offer not providing enough serious domestic spending cuts. Senators also said the offer violated an agreement with the president on military spending.

House negotiators replied that the senators were consistently shifting their bargaining position and, perhaps, were not interested in having a budget at all.

The day after his return to the White House following abdominal cancer surgery, Reagan on Sunday began making a series of phone calls in an effort to pressure Congress to get moving on deficit reduction.

"The president this afternoon has initiated some calls to members of the Senate, asking them to allow a vote on the line-item veto," which faces the threat of a continued filibuster, White House spokesman Peter Rousell said.

Rousell added that Reagan "might make as many as half a dozen calls."

Ten minutes before he checked out of Bethesda Naval Hospital on Saturday, Reagan told the nation in his regular radio address "I'll tell you what I think of the House budget proposal so far, I hope it gets well soon."

Dole, meanwhile, said Senate Republicans now are counting on Reagan's help to resolve the budget impasse or finally bring the issue to a head.

"My view is that the president can sort of step into the breach now (that he is), home from the hospital and maybe put it together, if he does it very quickly," Dole said.

"We can use Ronald Reagan" to clarify a previous framework agreed to with congressional leaders and budget negotiators and press the House to agree to further domestic spending cuts, he said.

Dole said Senate Republicans will make "another serious, credible, counter-offer" to the House this week.

"If the president supports that effort, then I think we've sort of reached showdown time. This is it, or it's not it. And if it's not going to happen, we ought to say so and get on with our work," he said.

Dole added that time is running out for an agreement before Congress begins a month long recess on Aug. 2.

"It's time we lay aside all the differences and try to work out some agreement in the next two weeks," Dole said. "If we don't do it then I don't see much chance after the recess."

Even if agreement is reached on a budget, it is likely to include only a weak deficit-reduction package. "We're still going to have $20 billion (annual) deficits as far as the eye can see," Dole said.

The president and congressional leaders began the year with a goal of enacting a deficit-reduction package that would trim deficits to less than $100 billion by 1988.

Dole also indicated that Republican senators still are fuming about comments last week by Donald T. Regan, the White House chief of staff who publicly rebuked Congress in a post-lunch rumpling speech for failing to enact a deficit cutting plan. The president's top aide had said the budget deadlock on Capitol Hill was "ridiculous."

"He (Regan) needs a little more contact with people on the hill," Dole said. "If you want that job you have to find time for us, we're in this game, too."

area and other measures, partly to protect a private ranch in the Elk Horn Creek area.

A call went out during the weekend for 200 more workers to help fight Idaho fires, Gardner said.

On the north side of the Salmon River in the Nez Perce National Forest, 2,095 acres had been charred after flames raged past fire lines, brushing aside a Sunday night containment goal.

"It made another run last night and burned another 335 acres on the northwest. We couldn't drop the fire retardant yesterday afternoon because of poor visibility," said Nez Perce forest spokeswoman Mary Zabinski. Thick smoke, high temperatures, low humidity and canyon winds hampered the battle throughout the weekend.

Zabinski said 675 firefighters were on duty Sunday, when they were unable again to get help from air-dropped retardant.

"We're going through so many crews because of steep terrain and heat. There's a real firefighter fatigue factor," she said.

Five minor injuries have been reported since the Nez Perce fire broke out Monday night.

A man accused of starting the blaze is scheduled for an appearance Monday before a federal magistrate in Boise.

Zabinski said four other fires, burning from 20 to 275 acres each, were being confined to wilderness areas on the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness on the Montana-Idaho border. Seven fires within five miles of Selway Lodge were being fought by smoke jumpers, parachuting firefighters who carry special equipment to the ground. Zabinski said the fires were burning in areas readily accessible only from the air.

In all, Zabinski said 40 to 50 fires had been reported in the Nez Perce forest, mostly spot fires.

She said private pilots were being advised to stay away from three forest service airstrips which had been closed due to low visibility and fire danger.

points are brief meetings with White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, Vice President George Bush and national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane, followed by a haircut.

Altogether, the staff meetings are to last a total of 30 minutes, but Rousell said they may run longer.

"No appointments are booked on Reagan's schedule beyond Tuesday, when he greets President Li Xianglan of China, making a state visit to Washington. The arrival ceremony and Reagan's participation in the state dinner that night will be abbreviated, and the president's meeting with the Chinese leader will be conducted in the mansion instead of the West Wing working office, aides said."

In planning Reagan's schedule after Tuesday, Rousell said, "We'll take it day at a time. You'll see him make 'another serious, credible, counter-offer' to the House this week."

"If the president supports that effort, then I think we've sort of reached showdown time. This is it, or it's not it. And if it's not going to happen, we ought to say so and get on with our work," he said.

Dole added that time is running out

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan lost less than five pounds during the hospital stay. During most of that time, he did not eat solid food.

Arrests

"you will never know what we had to say about it. This comment column is an indication of how press freedom has been restricted by the regulations."

A spokesman for the Detainees Parents' Support Committee said those arrested under emergency powers included at least four white activists as well as black members of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid alliance.

Among those held were Auret van Heerden, Toby Ratcliffe, Neil Coleman and Morris Smithers, well-known Johannesburg activists, said the spokesman, who demanded anonymity. Van Heerden, a former political detainee, unsuccessfully tried to sue the police for damages last year, alleging he was tortured in detention.

All 60 people aboard a boat that traveled through the night from the funeral for Matthew Goniwe, 36, and three other slain activists in the rural town of Cradock on Saturday were taken into custody upon arrival in Johannesburg Sunday morning, the spokesman said. All were questioned at police headquarters, with 22 detained and the rest fingerprinted and released, he said.

He said that others held included Cassim Coovadia, a Transvaal Indian Congress activist; Paul Maseko, a black leader from Durban; and Jabank from Alexandra, one of Johannesburg's troubled townships.

The last state of emergency was in 1980, when violence followed police killings of 69 black protesters in Sharpeville, south of Johannesburg. Police arrested 11,593 people during that 156-day emergency.

Woman dies, car rolls over in ditch

MOUNTAIN HOME — One person is dead after a driver lost control of her car on Loupe Creek Rd. north of the Fairfield cutoff in Elmore County. Elmore County Sheriff's were called to the scene at 4:22 p.m.

The driver lost control of her car on a curve and killed it in a borrow pit. The passenger was thrown from the car and crushed by the automobile as it rolled over.

The driver was taken to Elmore County Memorial Hospital in Mountain Home where she was treated and released. The passenger died at the scene of the accident. Names of both the victim and the driver were not available last night.

Utah help asked in health plan

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah officials have been asked to lend a hand in an effort to provide refurbished pacemakers to children in Central and South America.

In a meeting with Gov. Norm Bangert Saturday, Dr. John T. Wignall Jr. of Salt Lake City said the project could save young lives threatened by the semi-tropical Chagas disease.

Wignall said Salt Lake City, by establishing an "official" "sister state" relationship with the Mexican state of Jalisco, could serve as a transportation center for the used pacemakers.

The devices, which would be taken from dead pacemaker users, can help control the Chagas disease through electronic implants, said Wignall, chairman of the Utah affiliate of the American Heart Association.

Wignall, who also is president of Electra-Med International, which markets new medical products in Mexico, said the project would be a non-profit, humanitarian venture.

The U.S. government prohibits reuse of pacemakers in this country but they could be useful elsewhere, Wignall said.

The plan calls for the devices to be shipped from Salt Lake to Mexico, where they would be refurbished and sterilized, then taken to Central America.

Conference organizers hope for financial plus

BOISE (AP) — The National Governors' Conference planned for Boise next month will cost Idaho taxpayers and businesses $1.5 million for everything from extra police protection to food and new carpets.

In return, organizers hope people drawn to Idaho for the Aug. 3-6 conference will spend $1.25 million and endow the state with publicity that money can't buy.

"We've got our chance to show off (Idaho) to the country," said George Tway, overall state coordinator for the convention.

Roughly $300,000 in state funds and state employee labor is being devoted to the conference, and more than $500,000 in private donations and corporate-employee-time will go for entertainment and to host the event.

About one-fourth of the state's share is regarded by state officials as costs beyond the normal state budget. The outlay in that category amounts principally to $200,000 for extra police expenses.

State officials say that to keep costs down, they are reusing materials and combining preparations with projects that are needed anyway.

By the time the carpet is rolled up — literally — at the Morrison Center for the Performing Arts, where most of the conference will take place, states and territories will have met for three days with each other, seven Canadian provincial premiers and a cast of media representatives in the hundreds.

The governors will have floated the Payette River been fished at a barbecue in McCall, supper at the Old Penitentiary and dinner at Morrison Knudsen Co. headquarters.

The state is providing 200 employees to staff the conference. Figures provided by Tway put their labor and benefits at about $48,000. The employees mainly will take compensatory time off, not overtime, he said.

Idaho businesses have formed a host committee of some 60 executives and professionals to arrange for diversions for the governors and other visitors and to enhance their stay.

Researchers move studies

MOSCOW (AP) — Two researchers whose wildlife studies of the past 17 years have been done through the University of Idaho now are carrying out their efforts under a new, private institute at the school.

The Wildlife Research Institute is directed by Maurice Hornocker, an internationally known expert on wild cats. He is working with bird biologist Elwood Blizau, recognized for his efforts to establish a new flock of whooping cranes in the western Rocky Mountain area.

Until recently, the two worked with the cooperative wildlife research unit of the UI College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences. Hornocker said the new institute should bring more money for research.

"Politics and fiscal constraints often prevent public agencies from funding needed basic research," he said. "So, we have to go to the private sector in order to be able to do these things."

He said he wants to develop three or four "deep digging projects and staff them with the kind of people who want to change the world — people who love what they are doing. If you support them and fund them, they make you look great."

Hornocker said his job as director of the Wildlife Research Institute is funded by an endowment from a bequest designated for that purpose. Other expenses of the institute are financed by grants and contracts, with the university providing office space.

Groups prep for peace rally

BOISE (AP) — Several Idaho organizations plan to hold a peace rally and parade on Aug. 4, the first day of National Governors' Conference sessions in Boise.

"This is probably the first time so many diverse groups have been able to get together on the arms race (in Idaho)," said Claire Turner, spokeswoman for the March organizers.

Sponsors include the National Organization for Women, the Snake River Alliance, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Physicians for Social Responsibility, Service Employees Union Local 687, the Ecumenical Association of Churches in Idaho and the social work department at Boise State University.

During the 1983 National Governors' Conference in Portland, Maine, five groups scheduled rallies. Peace and jobs were among the topics.

Strangling probed

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Police over the weekend continued to probe the strangulation of an elderly woman whose body was found in her home Thursday.

A Salt Lake City police dispatcher said Sunday nothing new had turned up in the death of Druella Ovard. Mrs. Ovard's son found her nude body in the bathroom of her Logan Avenue home, her clothes in a pile next to her.

Robert Ovard told police he had gone to check up on his mother after she failed to telephone him Wednesday evening and Thursday morning, as she had agreed to do.

The family, apparently unaware the woman had been attacked, sent the body to Larkin Mortuary, where marks were found on her neck. The mortuary notified the state medical examiner's office, and it was determined that Mrs. Ovard had died of strangulation and had been beaten.

THE ODD COUPLE WINS!

Judged the perfect pair for heating and cooling.

You can't beat a high tech gas furnace.

- New high tech gas furnaces can save you 20% to 40% on heating costs compared to older furnaces. You'll get high efficiency heat that will pay you dividends every winter.
- Gas heating delivers 120 to 130 degree heat almost instantly. On a cold day a combination system like a heat pump delivers only 90 to 95 degree heat. Response time is much faster with gas.
- High tech gas furnaces have a life expectancy of 20 years or more and require very little maintenance.

You can't beat a high efficiency electric air conditioner.

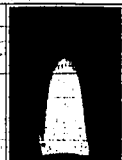

- High efficiency air conditioners can save you 10% to 40% on cooling costs over combination systems like heat pumps that must both heat and cool.

- Maintenance costs are lower for an electric air conditioner because it works only 3 to 4 months a year instead of 9 or 10 months compared to a heat pump.
- An electric air conditioner has a longer life expectancy than a combination system because it works fewer hours per year.

Finance both for no money down.

Intermountain Gas has arranged long term, low interest financing so that you can own the most efficient heating and cooling system for no money down! (Certain conditions apply.)

For complete information contact a heating and cooling dealer or call your gas company.

Line-veto proposal skirts real problem

Before Congress now is a proposal that is the legislative equivalent of the Veg-o-matic — you know, the gizmos advertised on late-night TV that chop onions and grate carrots and core apples, almost without your having to lift a finger. The legislative equivalent is being peddled now as the easy cure for the deficit, the national debt and ever-burgeoning spending. It is the line-item veto.

Imagine, proponents say: It could enable the president to cut wasteful spending with a stroke of the pen. And if you're not sure it'll work, they add, just give it a 365-day trial. But at this point you may have a few questions.

How is a president going to cut spending much through line-item vetoes when no recent president has proposed anything close to a balanced budget?

President Reagan might like you to think Congress has been spending wildly. But Congress has authorized and appropriated only marginal increases over his own budget.

If a president as economy-minded as Mr. Reagan dares not propose further cuts in his budget, why would he impose them through a line-item veto?

Another question: How would you stop Congress from doing what it does now — putting the spending the president doesn't like in the same line with items he dare not veto?

The bill introduced by Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga., would try to stop this congressional practice by commanding Senate and House clerks to enroll each individual "item" as a separate bill. But it won't take a very skilled parliamentarian to get around this requirement. Certainly Congress has a powerful institutional reason to try. Otherwise, the line-item veto would shift vast power from Congress to the White House and the Office of Management and Budget.

In the long run, there is no simple, fail-safe, automatic device to force a president and Congress to do what this president and Congress and their predecessors have refused to do: balance the budget.

The line-item veto, like the constitutional amendment purporting to require a balanced budget, is a political gimmick, certain in the short run to be mischievous and in the long run to be ineffective.

The president and Congress already have the constitutional power to balance the budget. What they need is not a line-item Veg-o-matic, but political will.

Arms-control accord appears unlikely

GENEVA, Switzerland — From Stockholm to Vienna to Geneva, East-West negotiation on arms-control and security questions are dead in the water, with only meager hopes that the planned November summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev might start the engines turning.

After two rounds of the new nuclear arms talks in Geneva, high-ranking American officials no longer see much realistic possibility of achieving any substantial agreement with the Soviet Union to limit nuclear weapons in the remaining lame-duck years of the Reagan administration. A senior State Department official who recently briefed the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Council in Brussels summarized the prospects:

"The Soviets are hardly interested in negotiating away their current advantage in strategic or intermediate-range missiles. So far they are not prepared to negotiate with us over the Strategic Defense Initiative pact at all. And it is highly probable that they will try to break out of the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty entirely when they feel they have a sufficiently advantageous mix in offensive and defensive strategic capabilities."

In the face of prolonged superpower deadlock in Geneva, is anything likely to happen in the other two arms-control negotiations? At best, there might be some marginal progress in pressing agreements in Stockholm, where 55 states that signed the Helsinki agreements are trying to negotiate a new accord on military confidence-building and security understandings to lessen the risk of surprise attack and war.

In Vienna, where the talks between 12 NATO and seven Warsaw Pact powers on reduction of conventional forces in Central Europe are now in their 12th year, one Western ambassador summarized the situation:

"This negotiation is like one of those hospital patients with a terminal illness, kept alive only by life-support systems that nobody can detach."

But as the buildup for the Reagan-Gorbachev summit gets under way, the deadlocks are not only hardening — the rhetoric is becoming more threatening. Not only has there been an unwelcome hard line in the nuclear talks in Geneva, Gorbachev himself has warned publicly that the Soviet Union might have to "re-evaluate" the talks if the deadlock continues. This implied threat, of course, is being echoed in the Soviet press, and by George Arbatov, the Soviet specialist on American affairs who was recently in Geneva to attend a private colloquy on East-West relations.

"If we conclude that the Geneva talks are a mere charade and a cover-up for the U.S. arms buildup," Arbatov said, "then it would be the duty of every honest man to walk out."

Echoing American officials who conclude that the Soviet Union is preparing to abandon the 1972 ABM treaty, Arbatov's mirror image comment was that the Reagan administration's stance on the unratified 1979 SALT-II treaty "is salami tactics to dismantle all U.S.-Soviet arms-control agreements."

So as the summer break in all these negotiations begins and preparations for a summit meeting get under way, the real underlying trend in Geneva seems to be not so much a search for a basis of negotiation but maneuvering to fix the blame on the other side for continued deadlock or possibly even a rupture of the talks.

"I do not see the United States making concessions to the Soviet Union simply to get them to negotiate," a member of the U.S. delegation said. "If they want to negotiate, we are ready, but we are not going to make concessions in advance."

In the U.S.-Soviet nuclear talks during 1982-83,

the sole Soviet objective apparently was to block the deployment of American cruise and Pershing, break-off or some other form of Soviet rupture. When the missiles then began to arrive in December 1983, the talks were promptly broken off by the Soviets.

And now, once again, a Geneva negotiation is under the implied threat of a walkout, suspension, break-off or some other form of Soviet rupture. Once again, as in 1983, the Soviet aim, as evidenced so far in Geneva, is not to negotiate any agreement on limits on the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative but to block the program entirely.

However much the Soviet Union might be worried about the American high-technology edge — and the possibility of a major breakthrough in the SDI program that they would be hard put to match in the years ahead — this does not add up to any great immediate pressure on them to get down to cases and negotiate in Geneva. In particular, it does not lead them to want to make any deals involving simultaneous limits on their offensive capabilities while the United States pursues its "Star Wars" defense program.

It will not be the Reagan administration that achieves the major breakthrough on SDI or has to make the crucial decisions and vote the necessary funds to proceed from research to testing to deployment. That is for the 1990s at the earliest. Gorbachev will be around probably into the next century, but he can't wait for that.

Whether Gorbachev is wise to wait, whether the world will be any safer if the hiatus in arms-control efforts goes on and on, is another matter. But as the negotiators in Stockholm, Vienna and Geneva return home to relax and reassess the situation, about all they have to look forward to is the familiar sameness when they begin drifting back to the familiar conference rooms in September.

FCC decision effectively incites hatred

David M. Baron

In my mind there is a clear corollary between inciting to violence and a specific act of violence itself. Radical and extremist groups bent on terror are exhorted to violence by their leaders, and eventually the deed is done. Innocent people are brutally killed or maimed — and then we reel in disgust, helpless and unable to strike back in retaliation.

Perhaps we should strike at the cause rather than simply react to the deed, and perhaps that effort should begin not on the far-flung international airlines but on our own domestic airwaves.

I wish to deplore the Federal Communications Commission's recent decision to renew the license of KFTL, a radio station broadcasting out of Dodge City, Kan. The station aired derogatory remarks and threats of violence against Jews and others.

In 1982 and 1983 KFTL's "sermons" changed to KMSC-FM) aired "sermons" by ultraconservative ministers in which Jews were referred to as a "serpent race." Among other remarks, listeners were told, "If a Jew comes near you, run a sword through him."

Other speakers threatened violence against blacks, government officials, rabbis and other organization leaders.

While the five FCC commissioners expressed indignation over the remarks, they nevertheless ruled that all broadcast speech is protected under the First Amendment, no matter how offensive the viewpoint.

This outrageous and inflammatory abuse of our freedom of speech must not be sanctioned. It is a disgrace that the federal regulating body responsible for licensing has failed to perceive the intended violence of these hate mongers.

Some might contend that we must not limit free speech, yet earlier examination we all understand the need for inherent limitations to every form of freedom. My freedom to swing my fist ends at my neighbor's nose, and my freedom to speak out does not sanction crying "fire" in a crowded theater. When we speak of these limitations we are invoking the need to safeguard the health and welfare of an individual or group of citizens from acts of violence.

What should become worrisome to all of us is the fact that human nature can easily adjust to any act, and with the passage of time any act can become acceptable. We too often ignore a trend toward bigotry, dismissing it as a series of isolated incidents. The result is the emergence of a form of racism even more virulent than the earlier strains. That occurred in Germany in the 1930s, as this quote from anti-Nazi German Pastor Martin Niemöller illustrates:

"In Germany they came first for the communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time no one was left to speak up."

Can't afford to gloss over the kind of extremism that has resulted in armored-car robberies, shoot-outs with police and the cold-blooded killing of a popular black radio talk show host in Denver. This type of fanatical violence is regularly called for by ultra-right-wing survivalist groups. The FCC is a vital bulwark against the pernicious abuse of our radio and television broadcast, and the integrity and sensitivity of that body is essential.

As the rabbi of the Synagogue for the Performing Arts, I head a congregation of people in the entertainment and communication industries who are keenly aware of both the need for free expression and the danger of censorship. They are fully cognizant of just how powerful a force the mass media can be, both for the betterment of society and to its detriment. When confronted by the abuse of our media in the form of unrestrained bigotry that encourages acts of violence, we cannot remain silent. We must be able to turn to our federally sanctioned agencies to express our concern and to seek a remedy.

Separation of powers dual may focus on judicial pay hikes

BOISE — A District Judge told the Idaho Legislature last session that the worst system of justice is one in which judges' jobs pay and working conditions can be tampered with by lawmakers don't like a jurist's decisions.

It's possible that could happen in the next session. Leaders in the legal community say there's grumbling over recent court actions which may be reflected in an effort to trim the healthy raises granted Idaho's judges earlier this year.

But more importantly, legal insiders say there may be a showdown on the separation of powers — whether one branch of government can issue direct orders to another, and whether courts can, in effect, change state laws by adopting rules.

Next July 1, judicial salaries go up in Idaho, with Supreme Court justices moving to nearly $60,000. It's the second part of a two-year effort to improve salaries after legislators were advised last session that Idaho judges were the worst-paid in the nation.

Much of the boost in pay is being covered by an increase in court filing fees, but some of the cost comes from the state's general fund. There has been grumbling by legislative leaders the last 18 months over an order from the courts that it pay legal fees to two Coeur d'Alene attorneys in a lengthy dispute over reapportionment.

Attorney General Jim Jones says there have been reports that some lawmakers may take aim at the judicial salary increases next session, because of the reapportionment decisions and other unpopular rulings.

That could usher in the "worst possible" situation described by District Judge Douglas Kramer last session, with judges reluctant to make legally correct decisions because of political pressures.

But Jones is more concerned about a recent trend toward changing state laws through the adoption of court rules.

Under the "separation of powers" practiced by most government, the executive (Idaho's governor) runs the government, the legislative body (Idaho Legislature) makes laws, and the courts apply them.

There's been some blurring of those lines in recent years. The Idaho Legislature for years has complained about state agencies in the executive branch adopting rules and regulations which have the impact of law unless the Legislature repeals them.

The courts also have been muddying the distinction by adopting rules that have the effect of law, contends Idaho Solicitor General

Lynn Thomas. He argues most of the state's appeals before the Idaho Court of Appeals and Supreme Court.

As an example, Thomas said the Legislature passed a law forbidding the granting of bail in certain violent and capital crimes, once the defendant had been convicted.

He said a court ruling held that the granting of bail was a procedural matter, to be decided by a judge. "The rule now says anybody can get bail," Thomas said.

Recent court rulings also have attempted to decide who can appeal, he said. "That's a legislative matter," he said. "What you really have here is a head-on confrontation between the Legislature and the Supreme Court of Idaho."

Thomas feels that legislators don't really know how far recent court decisions have carried courts into making laws. "They're really going to be mad," he said.

"I don't think they have an inkling of it yet. They have not focused on that problem."

In essence, says Thomas, courts are trying to determine the limits of their own powers. "That runs directly contrary to constitutional principles" of separation of powers, he said. "That's creating chaos in some areas, in my view." "We have no idea what they're going to do in the next case."

Equally troublesome is the Nixon-Givens legal fees case, Thomas said. "The real issue is whether the courts order the Legislature to appropriate money for anything?" he said.

One of the players in that case, Ray Givens, called the confrontation between the powers of the courts and the Legislature "a constitutional crisis," comparable to the Watergate case, which tested the limits of the authority of the executive branch.

Lawmaker blasts response to S. Africa

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Stephen J. Solarz said Sunday the State Department had given an "adequate and inappropriate" response to South Africa's declaration of a state of emergency to counter unrest among blacks.

Solarz, D-N.Y., said Saturday's statement, which described U.S. officials as "deeply troubled" by growing unrest in South Africa, suggested Pretoria was justified in ordering the state of emergency in 36 riot-torn cities and towns.

"The situation has deteriorated to the point that the South African government felt compelled to institute new measures," the department said after President F.W. Botha declared the state of emergency.

Solarz said the State Department's statement failed to put blame for the unrest in the white-ruled country where it properly belongs.

"Like most of the State Department's comments on the situation in South Africa, I consider it inadequate and inappropriate," said Solarz, a member of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa.

"Instead of implicitly suggesting that there may be a justification for the establishment of a state of seige, they should have publicly condemned the government of South Africa for creating the kind of conditions that produce the social turmoil," he said.

"The solution to the problem in South Africa is to eliminate as rapidly as possible the cause of the conflict, which is the apartheid conflict itself," he said.

"There should have been an unequivocal denunciation of the South African government for being primarily responsible for the cause and creation of the turmoil," Solarz said.

The administration's policy of low-key diplomacy to bring about change in South Africa increasingly has come under attack, most recently in Congress where both chambers have passed measures that would impose economic sanctions against the white-ruled country.

The White House opposes sanctions. A Senate-passed bill would impose limited sanctions, banning the export of computer equipment that could be used to enforce the apartheid laws and halting bank loans and U.S. nuclear assistance to the South African government.

Eastern jet turns back after smoke appears

RENO, Nev. (AP) — An Eastern Airlines jet returned to the airport here Sunday only minutes after smoke was discovered in the plane's passenger cabin. There were no injuries.

Eastern Flight 334, bound for Las Vegas, Kansas City and Newark, took off shortly after 6:55 a.m. and was back on the ground in Reno by 7:03 a.m.

Rich Peacock, spokesman for the Reno Cannon International Airport, said the cause of the smoke wasn't confirmed, although he said an electrical short might be to blame.

Peacock added that no flames were observed.

Passengers noticed the smoke first. Flight attendants then notified the pilot, who immediately decided to return.

Passenger Fred Hinners of Reno said there was no panic when the smoke was discovered in the plane's midsection. "There was some alarm, but everybody remained basically calm," he added.

Once the airliner was back on the ground, Hinners said, passengers were hustled off the plane through the rear exit and returned to the terminal to await other connecting flights.

Alaskan faces impeachment

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Senators meeting Monday to consider impeaching Gov. Bill Sheffield for his role in negotiating a state office lease have one eye on the state constitution and the other on history.

No matter what they decide, the possibility of the governor's removal from office — which could only come on a two-thirds vote of the state House — sets a Senate decision approving articles of impeachment as a precedent for Alaska.

The state and Sheffield have hired lawyers with experience in the Watergate-inspired impeachment proceedings against former President Nixon to guide them through the hearings.

Sheffield, 57, a millionaire hotel chain owner, has defended himself, saying the lease was designed to save the state money. The first-term governor, a Democrat, has said he's looking forward to telling the Senate his side of the story.

The governor's lawyers said Friday that impeachment is too stiff a sanction.

Senate President Don Bennett said the Alaska Constitution is vague on the subject of impeachment, and he wants to be sure that any legal precedents emerging from the hearings are good ones.

"We're charged with a great responsibility to protect the rights of the people of Alaska as well as those of Mr. Sheffield," said Bennett, a Republican from Fairbanks. "In doing this, we're plowing a new field. There's no precedent for this in our state and few in the nation."

Legislative leaders called a special impeachment session after a grand jury recommended July 2 that they consider removing the governor from office.

The grand jury concluded that Sheffield "is unfit to fulfill the inherent duties of public office."

The 15-member panel returned no indictments in the case, acknowledging that no laws, regulations or codes were broken. But it criticized the governor for his testimony, which it said "reflects a lack of candor and a disrespect for the laws of this state."

The grand jury investigated whether Sheffield and John Shively, his former chief of staff, manipulated requirements so only one company could fulfill a state contract to provide 22,000 square feet of office space in Fairbanks.

That company, McBlirney and Associates, won the non-competitive, 10-year lease in February. One of the partners in the company is a Sheffield fund-raiser and political supporter.

The five-member Senate Rules Committee will conduct the initial hearings, expected to last from three weeks to a month.

Q. Word experts know we get "thug" from the name of a set of criminals in India. What crimes did they commit?

A. They strangled to rob. They headquartered in the city of Mirzapur on the Ganges about 175 years ago. Terrorists of a sort.

Q. How do you account for the fact that more people are killed by lightning in Florida than in any other state?

A. More people are outdoors more there year-round, that's all.

Daily Horoscope

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You will need today and tonight to be more aware of what is going on about you for you are apt to be so wrapped up in a plan of action, you require extra alertness for other interests.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Be sure to keep promises made in business and you get fine results. Important you agree with ideas of your mate also.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be alert to exactly what it is that others are saying or you could misinterpret their true meaning and get into trouble.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Make sure that you get duties handed and don't run off on any tangents. Avoid taking risks while out driving.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Steer clear of that friend who is in a bad humor otherwise you soon lose your "joie de vivre." Think constructively.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): You may feel that you are too tied down with family obligations, but handle them well just the same and all cases up.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Use wisdom in handling transportation matters today. Don't take up any moot points in correspondence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You feel you do not have enough wherewithal to keep out of the red, but by careful planning and analysis, you do all right.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You feel stymied in gaining your personal wishes today, so take it easy and await the morrow. Don't fuss and fume.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You feel depressed and should seek the company of cheerful individuals who can help brighten your spirit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): A new friend desires something you own and could give you a rough time, but don't give in. Be with cheerful persons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Be sure to hold your temper in the outside world otherwise you could get into serious trouble. Follow all rules.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): You want badly to get into new projects and interests, but first you have to keep any promises you have made.

Heavy rain relieves the Sudan

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Heavy rains have ended the drought in southwestern Sudan and Sudanese are harvesting corn and groundnuts and planting seeds for new crops, a Western aid source in Khartoum said Sunday.

A few weeks ago, the rains seriously disrupted the transportation of grain food to about 500,000 malnourished Sudanese in the southwestern lakes district, and to at least 1.5 million refugees from neighboring Ethiopia, Chad, Zaïre and Uganda in camps in eastern and western Sudan.

"The famine has broken in the lakes district as they have started to harvest maize (corn) and groundnuts," said the source, who insisted on not being further identified for diplomatic reasons. He was reached from Cairo.

"Everyone is now planting like mad, and the south would need to be over the worst," he said. "I expect a super harvest. If rains continue through August."

The source said southern Sudanese, affected by the drought and the civil war in the south, had been in desperate need of relief grain.

"Wau has good rains, so has south Kordofan," said the source. Wau is in the southern Bahr el-Ghazal region. Kordofan is the region just north of it.

"Rains seem to be general, even in Khartoum (the Sudan capital)," he said. "I am not able to comment on refugees in the east and west as I have not been there." The source said Sudan, Africa's largest country, covering 967,494 square miles, has been severely affected by the drought that has ravaged huge areas of the continent's northeast—for the past three years.

Sudanese policy has been to give other African drought victims refuge, although Sudan has also been affected and is struggling to feed its own 22 million people.

The Western aid source said rebel forces have besieged about 500 government troops for more than a month in Yriol, 650 miles south of Khartoum.

He said the government soldiers have "no food and few ammunition." The source said despite an unannounced Sudanese army decision to break its unilateral cease-fire and take the offensive against the rebels, the army was unable to break the siege because of the rebels' strength in the area.

British rescue Soviet pilot after crash

LONDON (AP) — A British destroyer tracking the huge Soviet fleet conducting war games rescued a Soviet pilot Sunday from the Norwegian Sea after his Forger vertical-takeoff plane crashed, the Defense Ministry announced.

A ministry statement said crewmen from the Royal Navy destroyer Newcastle launched a small boat and went to the aid of the pilot who had ejected from his plane and suffered minor injuries. It said they helped him remove the parachute harness and then took him to the destroyer.

"The pilot had taken off from the aircraft carrier Kiev, and the statement said a Soviet Helix helicopter from the Kiev flew to Newcastle, lowered a strap and winched the pilot aboard."

It said the Forger crashed 80 miles southwest of the Sofoten Islands on the Norwegian coast. The Defense Ministry did not suggest any reason for the plane going down.

A ministry spokeswoman said the Newcastle reported that a small boat from the Kiev, the largest ship in the Soviet fleet, arrived later at the crash site to retrieve pieces of floating wreckage.

The Newcastle is one of 17 British ships and submarines among Western vessels monitoring the naval exercise that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization says is the largest ever mounted by the Soviets.

The exercise, which began last week, is taking place in the North Atlantic, Norwegian and North Seas and involves more than 100 warships, naval auxiliary craft and submarines from three of the Soviet's four fleets, according to NATO officials.

Striking steelworkers stand on picket line in front of Wheeling-Pittsburgh Sunday

Pay cuts prompt steel strike

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Approximately 5,200 United Steelworkers members, unwilling to take 18 percent pay cuts without negotiations, struck Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. on Sunday, a move management said may force liquidation of the nation's seventh-largest steel producer.

It was the industry's first major strike since a 116-day nationwide walkout in 1969.

The leading issue is the size of wage and benefit concessions the union should grant to help Wheeling-Pittsburgh overcome longstanding operating deficits and emerge from Chapter 11 as a profitable company.

"I've heard this propaganda about liquidation until it nauseates me," said Paul Ruesen, chief USW negotiator for the strikers and approximately 10,000 company retirees. "There may be a liquidation (filing) of the executives of this company ... not the jobs of our people."

Wheeling-Pittsburgh, with annual sales of about $1 billion, has been in reorganization under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy laws since April 18.

During Saturday's last-ditch talks to avert a strike, company vice president Joseph Scallise Jr. warned repeatedly that a strike could force Wheeling-Pittsburgh to liquidate its assets.

Picketing started at 12:01 a.m. Sunday at Wheeling-Pittsburgh's nine plants in the Ohio and Monongahela river valleys of western Pennsylvania, northern West Virginia and southeastern Ohio.

The strike halted production. Shipments and sales will stop whenever stockpiles of finished material are exhausted, which union members say might not happen for a month.

Federal mediator Robert Housholder, who called the bargainers "pretty hard-nosed," said he and mediator Carmon Newell might call the two sides together if neither requested a resumption of talks within several days.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Warren W. Bentz on Wednesday authorized the company to dissolve its union contract, which was to run for another 12 months, as a cost-saving move.

The company immediately voided the agreement and said it would impose an 18 percent wage and benefit cut and alter work rules beginning at 12:01 a.m. Sunday.

The company said its plan would cut base wages from the current average of $11.12 an hour to $9.10 an hour. Union officials, however, claimed the base pay figure would fall under $8 an hour.

The union went on strike rather than accept the changes, which union bargainers said were unfair and unnecessary.

Ruesen said the banks and other creditors to whom Wheeling-Pittsburgh owes nearly $300 million would step in and pressure management to settle with the union before it became necessary to liquidate the company.

Police suspect French in bombing

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — Three New Zealand detectives flew to New Caledonia on Sunday to pursue this nation's probe of a possible French connection with the bombing that sank the Greenpeace vessel Rainbow Warrior.

Investigators said the detectives went to interview three Frenchmen in the French western Pacific territory who were on a yacht at Auckland harbor when the Rainbow Warrior blew up July 11, killing a crewman.

"We're still interested in the crew of that yacht," said Detective Superintendent Allan Galbraith. Investigations also center on a French-speaking couple arrested in New Zealand last week with false passports. The pair, who claim to be Swiss, are to appear in a New Zealand court Thursday on immigration charges.

The Rainbow Warrior, a converted Scottish trawler, was the flagship of the London-based Greenpeace environmental group. It sailed to New Zealand to take on supplies and was to have led a flotilla to French Polynesia to protest French nuclear testing at Mururoa atoll.

Police earlier interviewed the crew of the French-registered yacht Ouvea and cleared them.

The French Embassy in Wellington has issued a statement disavowing any involvement in the explosion, which killed a Portuguese, Fernando Ferreira.

China will open vast areas to oil projects

PEKING (AP) — China will open vast areas of the western interior to oil exploration by foreign firms, the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily reported Sunday.

It quoted General Manager Song Zhenming of the China Oil Development Corp. as saying 19 companies—not identified—from the United States, Britain, France, Italy, West Germany, the Netherlands and Romania have been invited to survey oil resources in Xinjiang, Shaanxi, Gansu, Ningxia and Sichuan provinces.

In March, the energy-hungry Chinese said they would allow foreign firms to explore for oil in 10 southern provinces.

China began allowing foreign firms to explore for offshore oil in 1983, but this has failed to produce the large quantities China expected.

2 men killed in 8-story fire

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A fire that raged through an eight-story building of the national radio and television station killed two men, officials said Sunday.

Director General Subrata of the radio and television network said the cause of Saturday night's fire was under investigation.

Subrata said a reporter and a network driver perished in the blaze, which began on the ground floor and took five hours to be brought under control.

Senior center move delayed

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Senior Citizens Center's move to the old KMVT studios will most likely be delayed until 1986.

The old studio was supposed to be vacant in August, but KMVT General Manager Lee Wagner says the business will continue to use the building until November or December. KMVT is donating the building to the city on the condition it be used to house the senior citizen's program.

The television station will only begin renovating its new building on Blue Lakes Boulevard North, the former Sierra Life Building, in August, Wagner says.

"It just takes time to get all the design work done," he says.

Renovation on the old KMVT building will be needed after the business moves out and before the senior citizens can move in. Building restrooms, knocking out some office walls and installing a kitchen will be done with a $41,412 federal block grant and senior citizen funds.

Just what will be completed before the building is usable and how long the work will take has not yet been determined, says City Manager Tom Courtney.

Wayne Pea, the architect who heads the city's building inspection program, will be doing design work for the new center, Courtney says.

Pea's first priority now is working on the new club house for the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course, but "as soon as we can get them (KMVT) out, we will begin work on the (seniors) project," Courtney says.

The city has wanted to move senior citizens from a deteriorating and potentially unsafe building on Fourth Avenue West since 1983. Then, when plans were being made for a kitchen expansion, a preliminary investigation found part of the floor in a back section of the building rotted away.

Further investigation revealed missing truss members, rotted joists and studs, relocated load-bearing walls and a host of other potentially dangerous irregularities.

Much of the building was closed off then, causing the senior's trust fund to be shut down and a pool table put in storage.

In April, a concrete floor built over wood on the east end of the center collapsed. That pulled in the surrounding walls, including the facer of the building, which pulled away from the brick. The area, which had been used for storage with restricted personnel access, was also closed off then.

Race not targeted — yet, says GOP

By DEANS MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Though a National Republican Congressional Committee fieldman last week met with potential candidates for the 2nd Congressional District seat now held by Democratic Rep. Richard Stallings, the southern Idaho seat is not yet a targeted race, the fieldman says.

In a telephone interview Friday, Mike Smith, one of three field workers for the NRCC's western region, said the purpose of his visit to the district was to meet new Republican Sen. C. Herman Blaine Hall of Idaho Falls and to meet with some, but not all, of the possible candidates for the race. "We don't have any targets at this point," he said.

Smith, who declined to say which candidates and potential candidates he met with, says he was not able to meet with all the possible candidates, but will return to Idaho this summer to meet with the remaining contenders.

"At this point, we don't have target races and that's not a decision I would make," Smith said.

He said the only time the committee would commit funds to a primary election campaign would be for an incumbent. "Our first priority here is to recruit all our incumbents," he said. "The committee is an arm of the Republican Caucus of the U.S. House of Representatives and functions separately from the National Republican Committee," Smith said.

Republicans hold 184 seats in the House and stand to gain one more this summer in a special election to fill a Texas seat, he said.

The times, they are a-changin'

So says BID chief, pushing downtown

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — There was a time when Earl Faulkner, owner of The Paris and chairman of the downtown Business Improvement District, said he would never stay open on Sundays.

But those times have changed, he concedes now. Downtown is going to have to change, too, with dozens of new stores expected to open in the planned Magic Valley Mall in just over a year, he says.

Since taking office in January, he has pushed for a change to a validated parking system and for better lighting downtown. A decision on validated parking is now close at hand, and 10 new lights have been installed on the downtown mall, with plans for additional lighting being studied.

The BID's next steps should be to establish longer hours for downtown stores and a push to fill vacant buildings, he says.

"The lifestyle here has changed a lot," Faulkner says. "In 75 to 80 percent of the families, both spouses work. It's changing the market. If we're going to survive, we will have to get out the bandwagon."

Now, in such families, both spouses come home after work, eat dinner, then go out to do any shopping, Faulkner says.

The BID does not have the authority to tell downtown stores they must stay open late to compete with malls for that trade, however.

"It may take some 'bouncing,'" Faulkner says, to convince downtown store owners to stay open some evenings and Sundays.

"We're going to have to do it through education and discussion," says BID vice chairman Dave Cooper.

Already, The Bon, Penney's and Sears have added Sunday hours. If The Paris and some of the other large stores downtown, such as Cain's, take the lead, other stores may follow, Faulkner says.

It's happened in the past, he says. Once he started having the sidewalk in front of his store cleaned each morning, other businesses started sweeping the sidewalk, too, he says.

On the subject of filling vacant stores, Faulkner says the BID needs

Art in Park draws fans but no rain

By KENNETH A. BROWN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Artists and craftsmen kept City Park full this weekend with arts and crafts buyers in the 26th Annual Art in the Park show, sponsored by the Art Guild of Magic Valley.

Artisans from all over the Northwest attended the event, with everything from exotic South American butterflies to handmade quilts for sale.

While rain clouds gathered over the city late Sunday afternoon, threatening a repeat of last year's rainstorm, visitors stayed dry as they browsed through the works of more than 30 craftsmen.

A substantial number of painters and photographers exhibited their works at the sale. Many of the works, such as photographs of Shoshone Falls and paintings of the Sawtooths, were familiar sights for local residents.

One of the more unique exhibitors was Rex Rathbun of Twin Falls. Dressed in Lederhosen and a Swiss cap, he worked on adding to his army of hand-painted, cast-metal soldiers.

The soldiers are made from a mixture of silver, tin and lead, and cast in molds crafted by Rathbun.

Rathbun, who comes from a Swiss family that has been making clocks and music boxes for more than 500 years, said he first became interested in the craft after his grandchildren discovered a box of tin lead soldiers he had played with as a child.

From the original molds of revolutionary war soldiers, Rathbun has expanded to make soldiers from the Napoleonic Wars, the Civil War, British palace guards in high black fur caps, cowboys and Indians, the U.S. Cavalry, and even knights in armor.

Rathbun said he has a variety of visitors — everyone from young children to fathers — who remember playing with lead soldiers of their own.

Utilities, companies say they can't use the power

Editor's note: This is the second of a three-part series of articles on a proposed coal-fired electricity project being planned for Northern Nevada, not far from Jackpot. Today's article examines where the electricity would be sold in a time of energy surplus. Tuesday's article will examine the project's potential effect on ratepayers.

By KENNETH A. BROWN
and DOUG WRIGHT
Times-News writers

TWIN FALLS — While the Pacific Northwest and California are the planned targets for the Sierra Pacific's Thousand Springs-Energy Park, both utility commission and companies say they have no need for additional generating capacity for at least a decade and perhaps into the next century.

"We had heard about the Thousand Springs project," said Jeff King with the Northwest Power Planning Council, "but we didn't even bother to do an inventory of it."

"It got to the point where we had so many potential resources that we just didn't feel like going out and scavenging for more," King said. As part of its planning and monitoring activities, the council keeps track of power resources coming on line or planned for the region.

In Idaho, the situation is no brighter for marketing energy power. Don Barclay, Idaho Power's Senior Vice-President for Planning and Resources, said his company doesn't see any need for additional resources until the late 1990s.

"I don't know where their market is," said Perry Swisher, chairman of the Idaho Public Utility Commission. The glut of power has made a number of people obsolete, according to Swisher, particularly the engineers involved in power plant construction. "The whole thing smells like make-work," Swisher said. Ralph Cavanaugh, a specialist in energy issues with the Natural Resources Defense Council in San Francisco, was even more direct.

"The idea of building energy systems since 1980, and the way they are being built, is pumped out that has over our entire 'grid,'" Cavanaugh said of Sierra Pacific's Thousand Springs project. "That includes the BPA's plans to build five nuclear power plants at once."

But utility planners outside the company are teaching a different lesson. Sierra Pacific and its investor group say their project has a need for additional power in the region in the 1990s. Given the current economic and energy climate, Sierra Pacific says too many companies are shy away from new plant construction. That, the company believes, will open a market for new power in the 1990s — 1980 when the plants begin to come on line.

Many western utilities, however, are already making their way or another. In construction, coal-fired plants of the 1980s are being built.

Coal plants under construction or waiting for a new owner, demand before construction already total more than 27,000 megawatts, excluding Sierra Pacific's plans for 2,500 megawatts of additional coal power.

Here, too, the 2,500 megawatt figure does not include the more than 2,500 megawatts of coal power that has already been cut from the planning tables because of excess supply.

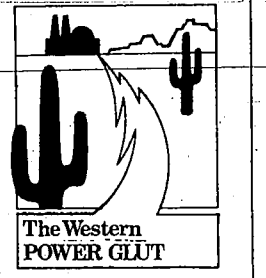

Most of these plants currently under contract were cancelled in the 1970s, when fuel prices were predicting an almost unlimited demand for power.

Other sources coming on line or planned for development bring even more power on the market.

Too much power: Western power plants are selling excess or being delayed

NUCLEAR POWER
6000 megawatts coming on line or planned
— Palo Verde — 3800 megawatts — one unit on line
— WNP-1 — 1250 megawatts — deferred
— WNP-3 — 1240 megawatts — deferred

Nuclear power plants planned or under construction in the West could dump more than 6,000 megawatts of power on the region. Most, of course, have been put on hold indefinitely because of low power demands and their high cost.

Other sources of energy, like cogeneration power and conservation, are also readily available throughout the region.

These "softer" energy sources are already beginning to make substantial contributions to regional energy supplies, and their input makes the supply picture look even dimmer for new coal-fired plants like those planned by Sierra Pacific.

According to figures from the analyst with the California Public Utilities Commission, California already has more than 10,000 megawatts of cogeneration power with signed contracts going through their regulatory processes. In addition they are "actively discussing" contracts for almost 7,000 megawatts of additional power from cogenerators.

In total, California has a potential of some 18,000 megawatts of additional cogeneration power available — more than nine times the power available from the Thousand Springs project — more power, in fact, than is currently used by the entire Pacific-Northwest, according to Cavanaugh.

Because of the explosion in cogeneration power, California has suspended its longterm contracts with cogenerators — and put a moratorium on new contracts, according to Mark Zering, a policy analyst with the California Public Utilities Commission.

While California was perceived as everyone's market for excess power in the 1970s, times have changed. "No one," Zering said, "should think of California as a sink for surplus power."

All told, there are 1,200 cogeneration sources available in California, according to Cavanaugh with the NRDC. In the northwest, small hydro projects alone account for an inventory of 600 available cogeneration projects, according to Terry Morland of the Northwest Power Planning Council.

The "best" use of resources available to the region has left many experts wondering where Sierra Pacific plans to sell its power. For new coal-fired power plants, the problem is not just the glut of power on the market, but price. Not only is the glut driving prices down, but "alternative energy sources" like cogeneration power and conservation, can deliver power at a fraction of the cost of new coal plants. "Anyone who thinks they can build eight 250 megawatt power plants and make a profit in inviting investors to take a bath," said Cavanaugh. "Investors, he added, "would do better to put their money into Delaware sports cars."

Power

According to figures from the California Energy Commission, a "generic" coal-fired power plant, like those planned by Sierra Pacific, would have to sell power at 7 1/2 to 8 cents per kilowatt hour to pay for itself.

By contrast, California buys natural gas for gas-fired plants at 3 cents per kWh — less than half the price a new coal plant would need to break even, according to Cavanaugh.

Hydropower is even less expensive, available in some cases for as little as 1/4 cent per kWh. Cavanaugh said California has been "stoutly resisting power from the Pacific Northwest selling at the robust prices of 2 cents per kWh because it is too expensive."

Perry Swisher, of the Idaho PUC, said models from the NWPCC show that new gas plants are the cheapest form of energy, with avoided costs running at 1 cent to 2 1/2 cents per kWh.

With cheaper sources and an overabundant supply, no one buying power in Sierra Pacific's target region seems particularly interested in expensive coal power.

Besides Sierra Pacific and its fellow investors, only the Department of Energy seems to see a bright future for new power plants.

The DOE's belief is that construction on new coal and nuclear plants will have to move ahead at full speed to meet the country's energy needs in the next two decades.

Secretary of Energy John Herrington said in a recent speech that even if one assumes conservation takes care of half of the new energy demands, the U.S. will still need every power plant currently under construction.

Herrington's view closely follows those of a predecessor, current Secretary of the Interior Don Hodel, who stressed the need for continued construction to replace aging plants.

Before his tenure as the Secretary of Energy, Hodel headed the Bonneville Power Administration, from 1973 to 1977.

During his tenure as administrator, the BPA aggressively pushed for the development of the Washington Public Power Supply System's nuclear units 4 and 5 — to meet rising demand the agency had predicted in the Pacific Northwest. Those two plants recently deflated on $2.25 billion in bonds after a lack of demand and cost overruns forced their cancellation.

Downtown

to form a committee to meet with owners of vacant buildings to see how the organization can help them find an occupant for the building or convert it to another use, such as a parking lot.

The possibility of hiring a downtown-developer-is also being considered.

The developer would deal with national chains interested in opening stores in downtown Twin Falls and could help set up local partnerships to fill vacancies, drawing on the financial resources already here, Faulkner says.

Curtis T. Eaton, chief executive officer of the Twin Falls Bank and Trust Co., says he has volunteered to find a possible developer who could provide a broad overview from an outsider's point of view.

He says the move is not "necessarily instigated by the new mall coming, but to maintain the integrity of downtown."

It is not a major problem in the downtown area now, BID officials say. About 195 downtown businesses are currently contributing taxes to the "BID" membership, mandatory for all businesses operating in the downtown area, is about 200, says BID coordinator Chris Valencia.

If downtown businesses do continue to hold a large share of the retail trade in Magic Valley in the face of increasing competition from malls, it will be in the best interest of the valley, BID officials say.

Profit from retail-dollars that are spent in malls and stores owned by out-of-state interests ends up going out-of-state, Cooper says. But dollars earned by the owners of retail businesses are spent in the community, he says. Local businesses are also far more likely than chain stores to make civic donations, he says.

On the agenda

Here's a list of governmental meetings that are scheduled to take place this week in the Magic Valley. This list is compiled from advance schedules. The Times-News suggests that you confirm the information by calling the appropriate clerk's office before attending one of these meetings.

Artwork becomes salvation for a former Vietnam POW

By JUANITA RODRIGUEZ
 Idaho State Journal

POCATELLO — When former POW Ted Gostas came home from Vietnam in 1973, he wanted only to forget he'd been targeted for death by the Viet Cong.

Gostas, an Army counterespionage officer, wore prison garb with "a target of death" sewn over his heart for the last three years of his solitary confinement as a prisoner of war. It was to be death by firing squad, and Gostas faced a number of mock executions at the hands of his captors.

Two and a half years after his release, Gostas' Army career was over, his marriage had ended in divorce and he imposed a death sentence upon himself.

Discharged from the military on a medical disability as a result of head injuries suffered in Vietnam, he went out and bought a gun with which to end his life.

"I couldn't shake the bogeyman," said Gostas, 46. "The ravages of the war had taken their toll and I decided I'd kill myself."

But the former Army major turned instead to art as a way of expressing his anger, frustration, loneliness and pain. He creeps pencil and ink with saving his life.

"I started to doodle and eventually my desire to reach for a pen was stronger than my desire to reach for the gun," Gostas said. "My artwork became my salvation, my suicide avoidance, my link to life."

Gostas, who was born in Montana and raised in Cheyenne, Wyo., spent a few days in Pocatello recently participating in dedication and grand opening activities at The Vet Center, a counseling facility for Vietnam era veterans and their families.

An exhibition of 71 of the former POW's paintings detailing his wartime experiences were displayed at the opening.

Gostas has made more than 200 sketches in black and white and colored inks since 1973, as well as more than 165 acrylic paintings.

His paintings, with titles such as "GI Madonna," "Dead War Gods," and "Pass in Review for Death," are haunting, dark and foreboding. But they require little interpretation for vets who experienced the horror of a guerrilla war in the rice paddies and jungles of Vietnam.

"There is no mystery to my art through some might find it mysterious," Gostas said. "I am a war artist and if there's a mystery in war, it is only perceived as such by those who have not lived with war."

"In the pain of war, some objects and images may change form, but they are never out of focus," he said.

Gostas was captured at Hue during the 1968 Tet Offensive. For the next five years he had no communication with the outside world.

He was in solitary confinement for all but six months of that time, spending virtually every minute in a small one-room hut furnished only with a rattan mat and "toilet bucket."

Gostas lost nearly 70 pounds during his imprisonment, receiving minimal rations of water for cleaning, less twice a day and rice with pumpkin mash.

The experience is always fresh in his mind, but Gostas says displaying his art serves as a balm, dulling if not excising the pain.

He says his dream is establishment of a national museum of military art to display the work of veterans of all wars.

"If we can't stand the ugliness of war," Gostas said, "then we can never appreciate the beauty of life."

Evans and the Twin Falls Elks Lodge officiating. Burial will be in Sunset Memorial Park. Friends may call at the mortuary until the time of services at the mortuary.

No hearing due to lack of legal notice

JEROME — Jerome County officials cancelled a public hearing scheduled July 19 on the zoning of a cheese plant because of defects in the required legal notices.

The Jerome County Commissioners had planned to hear public views on the proposal by Mountain Empire Dairyman's Association, a milk marketing cooperative, to build a cheddar cheese factory on 1,560 acres of land southeast of the city of Jerome.

A new hearing date has not yet been determined, but it is likely to take place in the first part of August, said Al Hepworth, county planning and zoning administrator.

The hearing was delayed because a land description was omitted in the original notice announcing the hearing. A second announcement corrected the problem, but it was published too late to allow the required 15 days notice to the public, he said.

TWIN FALLS — The funeral for Neil Ralph Turner, 46, who died Friday at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center will be conducted at 3 p.m. today in the White Mortuary Chapel with James E. Evans and the Twin Falls Elks Lodge officiating. Burial will be in Sunset Memorial Park. Friends may call at the mortuary until the time of services at the mortuary.

TWIN FALLS — The funeral for Belinda A. Sweet, 81, of Twin Falls, who died Friday at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center will be conducted at 3 p.m. today in the White Mortuary Chapel with Pastor Arthur J. Crossmer officiating. Burial will be in Sunset Memorial Park. Friends may call at the mortuary until the time of services at the mortuary.

Bodies recovered near Redfish Lake

STANLEY (AP) — The bodies of two mountain-climbers who fell 300 feet to their deaths in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area have been recovered by helicopter from rugged terrain in central Idaho.

The bodies of Robert Dortch Baskerville IV, 20, of Boulder, Colo., and Patrick Silvey, 16, of Lakewood, Colo., were removed on Saturday. They were reported missing on Friday after they tried to climb Elephant's Perch, two miles southeast of Redfish Lake.

The Custer County Sheriff's Department attributed the falls to errors by the climbers.

TWIN FALLS — The funeral for Freda Lorenz Robinson, 65, of Chubbuck, and formerly of Twin Falls, who died Friday at a Pocatello hospital, will be conducted today at 10 a.m. at Demaray's Gooding Chapel, 241 North Garfield in Pocatello, with Rev. Paul Herff of the First Baptist Church officiating. Interment will be in the Rexburg Cemetery following the service.

ARCO — The funeral for Ruth Lewis, 79, of Arco, and formerly of the Magic Valley, who died Thursday at Lost River Hospital in Arco of an extended illness, will be held at 10 a.m. Tuesday at Marvel Memorial Chapel in Arco.

Friends may call at the chapel one hour prior to the time of the service on Tuesday. Burial will be at 2 p.m. in the West End Cemetery in Buhl with the Rev. Richard Rash of the Buhl Methodist Church officiating.

TWIN FALLS — A graveside service for Johnelle Gardner, 71, of Twin Falls, who died Friday at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center will be conducted at 11 a.m. Tuesday in the Twin Falls Cemetery. Friends may call today at Reynolds Funeral Chapel.

Graduation invitations seem little more than bids for gifts

DEAR ABBY: Will you please, please discourage high school and college graduates from sending graduation invitations to every distant relative they and their parents ever heard of?

We all know that sending "invitations" to people we hardly know is a flagrant, shameless bid for a gift. And if, in a moment of weakness, one does send a gift, a barrage of birth announcements and invitations to weddings, showers and more graduations is sure to follow.

I am a 75-year-old widow, living on Social Security and very little else. I just received a high school graduation invitation from the granddaughter of a third cousin whom I have not seen in

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

so long I wouldn't even recognize her. (I have never even MET her, granddaughter.)

I have many relatives in this town, but I never hear from them unless they are celebrating something that requires a gift. I have no car, yet they "invite" me to every imaginable event: "knowing" well I can't possibly attend. This is just shameless begging.

I am not cheap. I just sent a generous graduation gift to a neighbor girl who used to stop by every day to bring in my mail newspaper, and ask if I needed any errands run.

Don't suggest that I send "a nice card" to the relatives who send me invitations to events they know I can't attend. We both know a card is not what these spongers want.

—SICK OF THEM IN IOWA CITY

DEAR SICK: Judging from my June mail, you speak for many. Don't blame the graduates. In most cases, their parents send those "invitations."

DEAR ABBY: My aunt is coming to visit my parents for a week. Seven years ago, my husband and I visited this aunt for two days, and while we were there she provided us with lovely home-cooked meals. After we got home, we sent her a nice gift and wrote to thank her for her hospitality.

This aunt will stay with my parents, but we want to entertain her. My husband and I both work, and there would be a lot of pressure on me if I had to get the house all fixed up and prepare a company dinner for her (I'm not the greatest cook), so we thought we'd take her sightseeing one afternoon and then to a good restaurant for dinner.

My mother is totally disapproving of this. She says I have to entertain in my home with a home-cooked meal. Do I have to? —TIT FOR TAT (?)

DEAR T. FOR T.: No. Carry out your plan. You do not need your mother's approval to entertain the way you find more comfortable.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were fishing from a boat with some friends. My husband can't swim, but refused to wear a life jacket. You guessed it. He was clowning around, the boat tipped over, and he went under.

I was able to get to him and pull him into the boat, or he would have drowned for sure.

Luckily all he lost were his glasses, a wallet with $400 and a few fishing rods. You had better believe he will never get into a boat without a life jacket again.

I hope to see this in print. It may save a life.

Sex education curriculum changes at high school after pregnancy rise

By TOM GORMAN
The Los Angeles Times

SAN MARCOS, Calif. — Sex education has come a long way since the picture of the human body's reproductive system first appeared in high school science books. Uncensored teachers went through their "organ recital," as instructors called it, and students giggled nervously.

For years, kids learned about sex, but not about their sexuality. They learned how babies are made, but not how to deal with passion and peer pressure when confronted with sex in the first place. They learned about baby care, but not the consequences of being a teen-age parent. But today, slowly, sex education curriculums are changing around the country. Almost overnight, for example, a renewed interest in sex education was displayed in this quiet, unpretentious San Diego County community.

Little wonder. One of the counselors at the town's only high school reported that 50 percent of the school's girls admitted to her that they were pregnant during the 1983-84 school year. A disproportionately large number were freshmen.

The startled school board swiftly ordered principals to change their sex ed programs. Something had to be done, they said.

At the junior high school, a committee was formed of parents, teachers and clergymen. Among the issues they have yet to resolve is whether contraceptives should be explained to eighth-grade boys and girls.

In the neighboring town of Vista, the school board in May decided that contraceptives should be included in the seventh-grade sex education curriculum, despite a petition signed by 1,000 persons opposed to the course outline.

And the National Center for Health Statistics reports that in 1981 — the most recent year for such figures — the pregnancy rate for women aged 15 to 19 was 110.3 per 1,000. Of those, the center estimated that there were 66.8 abortions for every 100 live births.

The price of material used in haute couture — some embroidered lace for evening wear costs $1,100 a yard — creative and labor costs, plus the cost of premises for the presentation all mount up to more than $80,000 per collection.

Is it worth it? More than 20 designers, who come back every season, must think so, even though they are the first to admit that their haute couture business loses money. (Not many consumers can afford $25,000 for a made-to-measure suit or $25,000 for an evening gown.)

Paris poises for fall fashion preview

PARIS (AFP) — As Paris backs under sunshine, the fashion world is poised for the presentation of the fall-winter haute couture collections, which kick off Sunday evening.

Twenty-three collections will be shown over five days on the Terrasse Martini, off the Champs Elysees.

This year, Japanese designer Hanae Mori will lead the way down the catwalk. She has been somewhat left out in recent years because her collection has been shown at the end of the program, and most foreign journalists head for home after they have seen Yves St. Laurent's offering.

She will be followed this year by Torrente and Nina Ricci.

One fashion "heavyweight" who will not be showing this season is Andre Courreges, who is said to be at odds over some points with one of his Japanese partners. But he will not be missing out entirely: On Saturday night he will present his first collection of haute couture jewelry.

More than 100 models converge on the French capital for the collections, and their services cost each couturier about $1,100 per appearance.

Scot captures British Open with par

By BOB GREEN
The Associated Press

SANDWICH, England — With the other contenders collapsing around him, Sandy Lyle scrambled to a round of par 70 and won the 114th British Open Golf Championship Sunday.

Lyle's one-stroke triumph made him the first Scot to claim this title since Tommy Armour in 1931 and the first British subject to win this national championship since Tony Jacklin in 1969.

Lyle, 27, who twice has led the British Order of Merit but has played without particular distinction in brief appearances on the American tour the last couple of years, won this one with a 282 total, 2-over-par on the windswept Royal St. George's links.

Payne Stewart, a casual, easy-going American, was second alone at 283. Stewart, playing about an hour in front of the other contenders, made par on the last two holes — an extremely difficult task this windy day

SANDY LYLE
Survivor

— to finish off a round of 68, 2-under-par.

"I'll just sit back and see what happens," he said.

And it was with a certain fascination that he watched player after player come to the finishing holes with one of the world's great titles on the line, play their best shots and walk away with expressions of strained frustration.

Even Lyle was not exempt. On the 18th, when it appeared that he needed a par to avoid a playoff, Lyle missed the green to the left with his second shot and then stubbed his chip, moving the ball only a few feet. He dropped to his knees, buried his face in the grass and weeps.

But he got to his feet, missed the long putt for par and took a bogey.

That got him in at 2-over-par and eliminated Stewart.

But David Graham, an Australian now living in the United States, and Masters champion Bernhard Langer of West Germany, the third round leaders and playing in the last group on the course, still were very much in it.

Each had a chance — a very longshot chance — to tie. They went to the 18th, a 458-yard par-5 playing into the wind, needing a birdie to catch Lyle.

But Langer, who had a horrible day, missed the green with his approach and Graham was bunkered. Instead of birdie, each made a bogey.

That dropped them back into a tie for third with American Mark O'Meara, Christy O'Connor Jr. of Ireland, and Jose Rivero of Spain.

O'Meara, once within one stroke of the lead, had no chance after a bogey on the 17th and shot 72.

Rivero played the front in 31 and closed up with a 68.

O'Connor, who simply could not make a putt — the miss accompanied by sounds of Irish angling rolling over the sand dunes — despite outstanding tee-to-green play. He, too, once was within a single stroke of the lead but, like the others, fell victim to the finishing holes and came in with a 72 a few moments after a streaker flashed across the 18th green.

Tom Kite, still seeking the one major-tournament title he needs to confirm his place in the game, once led by two strokes.

But Kite chipped up the 10th hole, one-putting for a double bogey, played the back in 40 and dropped out of contention with a 72.

He tied at 285 with American D.A. Weir and Anders Forsbrand of Sweden.

Pens-brand-matched par-70 and Weir shot 71.

Defending champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain shot 73-292. Tom Watson, a five-time winner of this title, struggled to a 77 and a 294 total.

PGA titleholder Lee Trevino was 71-293. Some other leading American scores: Fuzzy Zoeller 71-298, Peter Jacobsen 72-286, Gary Koch 69-296.

Ben Crenshaw 73-291, Andy Bean 74-291.

Graham and Langer, three shots clear of the field and apparently poised for a two-man struggle when the day's play began, opened the gates to the multiple-man scramble when each played the first five holes 3-over-par.

But about that time, birdied the par-3 third and fifth with 5-foot putts and 9-putted for birdie-4 on the seventh.

But Kite missed the green with his second shot on the 10th, and the ball kicked down a slope and ran far from the green.

His chip didn't quite make it up the slope, lost momentum, and trickled back into a bunker. He blew the sand shot across the green, chipped back and made a 6-footer for double bogey, then had some words with marshals concerning the scrambling, scurrying photographers.

He really wasn't in contention again.

Idaho Falls wins B District Legion

BURLEY — Idaho Falls pushed four runs across in the first inning and never looked back as the Russets downed the Jerome Tigers 11-6 here Sunday to win the Southern District "B" American Legion baseball title. Despite the walk, the teams will head to the state tournament to be held in St. Maries next weekend.

The Tigers were without four players Sunday, most of them at a football camp in Pocatello, so Jerome Coach Curt Bartholomew elected to go with relief ace Tom Fleming as his starter.

Fleming had his troubles in the first inning walking three Russets and at one point, he threw 10 straight pitches that were out of the strike zone.

With Russets on second and third base and a 1-0 lead, Idaho Falls catcher Ryan Ted struck a 1-and-1 pitch over the left field fence for a 4-0 advantage.

Meanwhile Russets starter Mike Bennett cruised through the first two

Error-free round wins Canyon Springs Am title for Purves

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A steady grinding of par for 27 holes — punctuated by a couple of closing birdies on the back nine — carried Jim Purves of Twin Falls to the Canyon Springs Amateur Golf Championship Sunday.

Purves, trailing Jason Meyerhoefer through most of the day, took the lead with a birdie on the 14th hole and led it when he parred the over-the-water 17th and Meyerhoefer bogied.

After that it was a simple matter of not misplaying the par-5 18th and Purves didn't.

"I don't win many tournaments and I'm getting older," Purves said with a smile. "But I told these kids at least now they can hear the thunder in the distance from us old guys."

It was a milestone in Purves' career in that while he has long been one of Magic Valley's better players, he has never won on what he considers the home course — along with Blue Lakes Country Club. He immediately showed some affection for the title because of that, putting it among his career highlights when the Magic Valley Amateur he won two years ago at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course.

"The Magic Valley tournament I won was the last one my dad (Ed Purves) was able to watch me play in," Purves said. "I loved that. If I ever won another title, I would dedicate that tournament to dad because golf was always a major part of our family life."

It was another frustration for Meyerhoefer who has been within inches on a dozen occasions but never quite brought it off.

The recent high school graduate looked in good shape in the early going as he went two-under par on the first nine while first-day leader Gordon Barry was struggling at four over.

Meyerhoefer, of Twin Falls, extended his lead to two strokes over the staid Purves on the 10th hole but gave both of those shots back with bogies on 12 and 13. Purves took the lead for keeps when he birdied the long par-5 15th hole.

"That hole was good to me in this tournament," Purves said, "three birdies and an eagle."

Still, Purves, playing a game ahead of Meyerhoefer and the leading foursome after the first day, didn't know exactly how things stood until Barry Espil came up to me just before my second shot on 18 and told me I had a shot lead on Jason — although he still had 17 and 18 to play."

So Purves was back on the par grid and made it, not knowing that Meyerhoefer had bogied the 17th.

Meyerhoefer's second shot was giving him a chance for a chip-in for an eagle and tie. But the ball died short of the hole.

There was one brief moment of highlight on the 17th, where a new car from Latham Motor rode on the possibility of a hole-in-one. David Rasmussen, playing in the last group, What's this? No big fullback at Nevada-Reno?

By BOB BLACK
The Associated Press

SUN VALLEY — Nevada-Reno football Coach Chris Ault has no doubt that his team will have a winning season this year.

"What he doesn't know is whether UNR has enough muscle on defense and a strong enough fullback to win the conference title.

Ault, beginning his 10th season this fall with the Wolf Pack, never has had a losing season. His teams have finished second or higher in three of the six years UNR has been in the Big Sky.

Last year the Wolf Pack finished with a 5-2 conference record, 7-4 overall, and lost the conference crown in a four-overtime loss to Montana State, the eventual NCAA Division I-AA national champion.

One reason the Wolf Pack failed to repeat as conference champion last year was inconsistency on defense, Ault said Sunday at the Big Sky coaches' meeting here.

"If we don't play more consistent defense, I'm going to be very disappointed," Ault said. "Somewhere along the line they lost their consistency."

The biggest problem last year was the front seven defensive linemen, he said.

"Our front seven was pathetic," he said. "We were very poor. We want to improve drastically in our outside positions. Our outside people are very critical for us."

Ault said the problem with the defense, which gave up an average of 27.1 points a game last year, was as much with the coaches as it was with the players.

This year, he said, he is working to give his players confidence and a winning attitude.

"I don't know how good we're going to be, but I'm going to find 11 guys who will get around the ball and if somebody catches it, we're going to sting him," he said.

The defense gave up an average of 37.4 yards per game in total offense last year. Nevada-Reno was last in the conference in passing defense, giving up 270 yards a game.

"They were last because of our front seven," Ault said. "They did not do the job. Period."

Ault will have a proven quarterback in Eric Beavers, a 5-11 175-pound junior who threw for 2,370 yards and 18 touchdowns last year.

Beavers was forced to pass the ball too much last year, Ault said. He prefers to rely more on the run than the pass, but to do that he needs a fullback.

"The intent of our offense is if our fullback does not gain 1,000 yards a season, it's not adequate," Ault said. Last year, no one rushed for more than 900 yards at UNR. At fullback, he has Lucky Floyd, a 155-pound sophomore from Las Vegas, Nev. used sparingly last year, and Lucky

Big Sky football teams rush to diversify their offenses

"We'll throw the ball 35 or 40 times a game this year."

Nevada-Reno Coach Chris Ault

"We run the football pretty darn well. Our philosophy is that if we can't throw the ball, we'll run it. I think we surprised some teams last year with how well we did it."

— Idaho Coach Dennis Erickson

SUN VALLEY — If you follow Big Sky Conference football at all, you know the two preceding statements are roughly the equivalent of Yasser Arafat declaring he'd like to retire in Israel or Jerry Falwell proclaiming he'll hold a telephone for the Americans for Democratic Action.

Erickson's teams have passed for 89 miles in three years at Idaho. Ault's have run a good percentage of that distance.

Erickson has no qualms about going with a no-back offense if the situation dictates.

Ault's flanker two years ago was his third-leading rusher.

But times are changing in the Big Sky, the league of LaVell Edwards' disciples.

"You have to have a balance to win in college football," says Boise State Coach Lyle Stenclich. "Teams that throw all the time and don't have a running game aren't going to be successful consistently; neither are teams that run all the time and can't throw."

Five years ago, Edwards' offensive line coach, Dave Kragg/Dorpe, was hired to rebuild a miserable Idaho State program and won a national championship by air express in two seasons. In 1982, Erickson — an assistant to pass coordinator Jack Elway at San Jose State — came to Idaho and very nearly did the same. Last season, Montana State won the NCAA Division I-AA championship by throwing the ball 51 times a game.

That's Montana State — you know, where they used to grow fullbacks.

There were, to be sure, holdouts. Ault, the 10-year veteran at Nevada-Reno, favored big tailbacks and bigger fullbacks, hulking offensive linemen and quarterbacks who could take one step backward, pivot and hand the ball off. Ault won the league title in 1983 with just that combination — along with an outstanding pass defense. At BSU, Stenclich and his predecessor, Jim Criner, never took a taste for a good, old-fashioned trap play — although they played the passing game with five different quarterbacks in the four seasons.

Trouble is, both the 60-pass-or-bust offense and the ball-bogging offense have lost almost as many games as they've won in the Big Sky.

On the other hand, the lack of a passing game cost Nevada-Reno the league championship in 1982 and quite possibly a shot at the national title a year later.

At Idaho, Erickson is planning to use his huge offensive line to buy some time for his two new running backs, Steve Jackson and Freddie Lloyd. Erickson got 578 yards rushing last year out of his fullback, Marlon Barrow, and 521 from his fullback, Mike Skellin.

NL: Cardinals cling to 1st place in East

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steve Braun hitting only 1st and without a home run since 1965, slugged a two-run pinch homer in the top of the 10th inning to give the St. Louis Cardinals a 4-2 victory Sunday over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"We're in first place, and if we're going to stay there we're going to have to use all my guys," said Braun, who was only 3-for-11 as a pinch hitter before delivering his first game-winning RBI of 1965.

"I want to stay on this ball team and I want to keep winning," Braun said. "We lost three in a row; we're fighting to stay in first place. It was a good time to hit one."

The 10th-inning victory enabled St. Louis to retain its half-game lead over the New York Mets in the National League East.

Braun's blast for winning pitcher Jim Lohr, 1-0, followed a leadoff double by Terry Bradburn, St. Louis' pinch hitter. Tom Niedzier, 4-3, took the loss for the Dodgers.

Lohr was the fourth Cardinal pitcher. Bob Forsch, the sixth St. Louis pitcher, got the final out for his second save as the Dodgers loaded the bases with two out, but were unable to score.

The Dodgers tied the score 2-2 in the eighth on successive singles by pinch hitters Terry Whitfield and Enos Cabell and a run-scoring single by Steve Sax.

Tunnel, 1-6, ended a personal 11 game losing streak as he went six innings to win for the first time since June 2, 1964.

AL: Slumping Detroit falls to Rangers again

DETROIT (AP) — Texas second baseman Wayne Tolleson surprised everybody by hitting himself — and himself — with a two-run homer that lifted the Rangers to a 7-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers Sunday.

The ninth-inning spot off reliever Aurelio Lopez was the switch-hitting Tolleson's first homer since Aug. 17, 1963, and his first ever batting left-handed.

"He hung a slider," Tolleson said. "I saw him shake two pitches off, so I figured that it wasn't going to be a fastball. I didn't know what he'd throw, but I was ready to adapt to an off-speed pitch."

"It was certainly unlikely. I don't even remember my last home run."

Many of his teammates were giving Tolleson a good-natured ribbing about the homer. Manager Bobby Valentine even got in on the fun.

"Was I surprised? I was surprised that it went into the upper deck," Valentine said with a grin. "But when he slid into second, I figured Wayne was surprised, too."

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING
RULE-MAKING AND NOTICE OF INTENDED REGULATORY ACTION
In compliance with Sections 67-5203(b) and 67-5204(2), Idaho Code, notice is hereby given that the Department of Health and Welfare, State of Idaho, has undertaken emergency procedures for rule-making. The action being proposed to be taken is described in Department Order Number 0310-8501 E, involves the promulgation of rules governing Public Health Administration, Title 3, Chapter 10, Rules and Regulations of the Department of Health and Welfare. The action has been taken under the authority granted in Sections 67-5203 and 67-5204 of the Idaho Code, for the purposes of implementing the provisions of House Bill 229, effective April 1, 1965.

Emergency rule-making is necessary because of the emergency nature of House Bill 229, which was adopted at this session of the Idaho Legislature on March 23, 1965, and the Department does not have legal methodology of reimbursing nursing homes for property costs and therefor, it would be unable to pay for necessary nursing home care of its eligible Idaho residents.

The rules, which were promulgated by Department Order Number 0310-8501 E, are effective on the 30th day of May, 1965, and filed by the undersigned on the 27th day of May, 1965, became effective on the 7th day of June, 1965, and will expire at the end of one hundred and twenty (120) days on the 4th day of October, 1965.

In addition, notice is also given that the Department of Health and Welfare, has also initiated emergency rule-making under Docket Number 0310-8501, prior to adoption of these emergency rules as permanent rules.

The following is a descriptive summary of the substance, emergency and intended permanent action and of the principal issues involved.

Effective April 1, 1965, as a result of legislation, free-standing nursing home facilities will no longer be reimbursed directly for property depreciation and amortization; instead, they will be paid a property rental tax and insurance are not included in the property rental rate and will be reimbursed separately.

The property rental will be the higher of the facility's per-participant property cost as of January 1, 1965 (a "grandfathered" rate), or a "rental rate" based on the exact description of the quantities, specifications and conditions may be obtained from the School Administration Building, 201 Main Avenue West, Twin Falls, Idaho 83430.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING
RULE-MAKING AND NOTICE OF INTENDED REGULATORY ACTION
In compliance with Sections 67-5203(b) and 67-5204(2), Idaho Code, notice is hereby given that the Department of Health and Welfare, State of Idaho, has undertaken emergency procedures for rule-making. The action being proposed to be taken is described in Department Order Number 0310-8501 E, involves the promulgation of rules governing Public Health Administration, Title 3, Chapter 10, Rules and Regulations of the Department of Health and Welfare. The action has been taken under the authority granted in Sections 67-5203 and 67-5204 of the Idaho Code, for the purposes of implementing the provisions of House Bill 229, effective April 1, 1965.

Emergency rule-making is necessary because of the emergency nature of House Bill 229, which was adopted at this session of the Idaho Legislature on March 23, 1965, and the Department does not have legal methodology of reimbursing nursing homes for property costs and therefor, it would be unable to pay for necessary nursing home care of its eligible Idaho residents.

The rules, which were promulgated by Department Order Number 0310-8501 E, are effective on the 30th day of May, 1965, and filed by the undersigned on the 27th day of May, 1965, became effective on the 7th day of June, 1965, and will expire at the end of one hundred and twenty (120) days on the 4th day of October, 1965.

In addition, notice is also given that the Department of Health and Welfare, has also initiated emergency rule-making under Docket Number 0310-8501, prior to adoption of these emergency rules as permanent rules.

Shape your brows to complement eyes

By ADRIEN ARPEL with
RONNIE SUE EBENSTEIN
Los Angeles Times

If you could banish your heavy brows or long nose, you'd look terrific? Probably, but don't overlook those changes that take little commitment and less effort. Like an eyebrow re-do. Brows not only frame your eyes, they set off your whole face.

POORFOOL "EYE SPACING" TEST. Before you begin making corrections it helps to know if your eyes are too widely spaced (rare), or too close together. Take this so-simple test: Measure the length of one eye. Measure the space between your eyes (over the bridge of the nose). If the eye-length is the same as the actual eye length, your eyes are perfectly spaced. If the length between is smaller, your eyes are too close together.

SKINNY EYEBROWS. You may love the skinny-brow look, but you still love it tomorrow? Narrow brows go in and out of fashion. If you overwee your brows for a long period of time they may not grow back, and your look will be dated. Remember, a crepey throat isn't the only sign of aging. If you stick to an old-fashioned design you'll not only look out of date, but also older.

BROW SHAPE. The classic two-pencil test is a quick way to determine how close to your nose to start your brows and how far apart the arch should be to your pupil. Align one pencil alongside of nose past inner corner of the eye. Line up the other from the side of the nose to the outer corner of the eye. If your brows end where the pencils begin, you're in good brow shape.

AVOIDING COMMON BROW SHAPE BLUNDERS. If your brows are right, you don't even notice them. When they're wrong, the ensuing brow blunders can throw off the symmetry of your whole face.

Your brow should be almost the same width all the way across, not thick to the arch and skinny the rest of the way.

For a subtle arch, place the lift on a line even with the outer edge of your iris.

To shorten a long face, forget the arch altogether; a straight brow will

ADRIEN ARPEL
Beauty expert, author.

"cut" the length of the face.

To elongate a too-round face, make the arch slightly more pronounced.

If you have a short upper eyelid (your brows have room for one color of shadow, let alone three!) tweeze an extra row (one hair at a time) from the bottom to open up your lid area a bit.

WHEN TO TWEETZE. After your bath or shower (the pores will be open from the heat) and before bedtime are best. No matter how careful you are, your skin will be somewhat red and irritated, so you wouldn't want to tweeze before going out, when you're in a hurry to put on makeup. Tweeze before you put on your brows with alcohol-dampened cotton to clean and distract them. Dip the tweezers in alcohol, too.

TAKE THE "OUCH" OUT OF TWEETZING.

Stick an ice cube wrapped in a handkerchief over the area.

Numb the brow areas with a baby's teething pain preparation.

Make brow hairs come out faster by softening them with shaving cream.

Put a hot washcloth over your brows for a few minutes.

BEFORE YOU TWEETZE. Once you've combed your brows sufficiently, find your brows' core. Close your eyes, stroke your fingers over your brows and locate the brow prominence. Open your eyes and keep rubbing so you see exactly where the ridge is located. Strays that fall below this bony ridge should be weeded out. Follow the natural shape and width of your brow.

HOW TO TWEETZE. With a brow brush or an old, stiff child's toothbrush, sweep brow straight upward to remove debris; then brush them back into place.

Pluck one hair at a time in the direction of brow growth. Pull with a quick motion.

First remove strays between the brows. If your eyes are closed, pluck a few extra (don't overdo) to give a wider-eyed look.

Next, weed out the underbrow areas. Brush your brows straight up so you can see at what point the strays begin.

Never tweeze along the top line of your brows.

After you do a little tweezing, brush the brows back into shape so you can see how you're doing. Shape midway checks help prevent over-tweezing.

TO SHARPEN-DUL-TWEETZE. Just rub sandpaper back and forth across the tips.

SALON BROW SERVICES. Besides lash dyeing and brow bleaching, you can also have your brows tweezed in the salon. If you're not sure of your best brow look, a one-time styling can be worth it. It's inexpensive, and you'll have a line to follow to keep your brows in shape. Following the pro plucking, tweeze the strays as they start to reappear, and you'll keep the best shape without further help.

Some women like to have their eyebrows waxed. As with leg waxing, the very warm (not hot) wax is applied and left to harden. When it's peeled off, the stray hairs come off with it. This should eliminate tweezing for about six weeks. Caution: don't do it yourself. You don't want to run the health risk of having hot wax drip into your eyes, or the beauty risk of removing too many hairs. Seek out a competent professional.

THE DAILY BROW BRUSH. Brushing your brows is as important as brushing your teeth or hair. Once a day, brush them against their growth, then straight up with an old toothbrush to stimulate them and get rid of any old makeup or debris lodged there. Leave them standing straight up for a high fashion look, or brush them back into place. If you have a small upper lid or eye, the up-brushed brow will open up your eye area. If the straight-up brow is too available-garde for you, try brushing the hairs near the bridge of your nose straight up, the rest of the eyebrows in the usual manner. It's a good eye-opening look.

OVERNIGHT BROW CONDITIONER. Put a thick coat of your night cream over your brows at bedtime to keep them from getting brittle.

OVERNIGHT BROW TRAINING. Before going to bed, apply a thick coat of petroleum jelly to brows. Then brush (using a brow brush or a clean old toothbrush) in the direction you wish they grow. After a few weeks, you should have improved daytime brow management.

DAYTIME BROW BETS. It's all well and good to train your brows while you sleep but if they're still recalcitrant in the morning, deal with dabbling on a bit of hairspray, or a dab of hair gel, or a dab of hair cream. Alternative: Lightly pump hair spray onto a cotton ball (never directly near your eyes) and slick the cotton across your brows.

If a few brow hairs are curly, cut them so they lie flat, in the right direction.

BROOKIE SHIELDS STAND-UP BROWS: THREE WAYS. Buy moustache wax in a neutral shade or in a color close to your brows. Apply it thickly with an old toothbrush or the applicator that comes with the wax. You can also use petroleum jelly. Or, dampen a brow brush, run it over glycerine soap and brush it on your eyebrows.

Jealousy's power builds on insecurities

Jealousy. Most people have experienced it at one time or another; sometimes in their lives — the feelings of fear, anger, hate, mistrust, insecurity, betrayal — somehow all mixed up with love.

Jo Ann Larsen

"It possesses you, controls you, fills you with such intense hate you want to do terrible things to other people," says one jealous woman. "And you can't get away from it. The pain just lingers on."

In the range of human emotions, jealousy is the destroyer of marriages, love affairs and friendships; the parasite that feeds on love. "Jealousy is the crucible of the grave," laments the Song of Solomon.

Though jealousy is a volatile emotion, with hard work it can be controlled. A prelude to managing jealousy is understanding its causes:

"I'm nobody without you." Jealousy is often a signal that people do not feel good about themselves. The more insecure people feel, in fact, the more likely they are to be jealous.

Take Janet, who suffers from irrational jealousy. Despite the fact her husband Ken is innocent of giving her undue attention to any woman, Janet engages in jealous tantrums whenever they're in the presence of other couples, usually insisting they leave social events prematurely. She monitors her husband's every move, calling him at work to make sure he isn't questioning him about his appointments and constantly asking about the women he meets. Janet and Ken frequently fight over whether he finds certain women attractive or whether he did indeed focus his attention on a particular woman who came within eyesight.

Ken experiences only Janet's suspiciousness and rage. Obscured by his feelings, however, are feelings of helplessness, rejection and despair that neither Janet nor Ken understand. Janet has these feelings because she's made the ultimate mistake: she defines her own worth by whether or not Ken finds her attractive, lovable and important.

As long as Ken is paying attention to Janet, she feels good about herself. Whenever she is not the object of his focus, however, she begins to doubt herself. "I'm not worth much," "I'm unattractive," "I'm nothing" are the thoughts that consume Janet as she imagines him paying attention to other women in her absence.

Janet is doomed to perpetual self-doubt and jealousy unless she learns how to validate her own self-worth and to feel good about herself even in the absence of love and approval from important people in her life.

"You're mine, all mine!" Although jealousy is commonly assumed to stem from feelings of love, this assumption does not necessarily hold. Jealousy can also emanate from people unwillingly defining their partners as property.

Rob was disgusted with his wife and just about to terminate his marriage when he learned his wife had been seeing another man. He then became extremely upset and depressed. The reason? His territory had been invaded by another person. To Rob, his property was in danger — a part of himself was being torn away — and this was a threat to his self-esteem. Rob's self-worth at that point hinged on his regaining the possession he had lost.

Jealousy of this kind is fed by the illusion popularly held among couples that when they marry, they "belong to each other" and thus own their partners — mind, body and soul.

Doomed to self-doubt and jealousy unless she learns how to validate her own self-worth . . .

"What you don't know, won't hurt you." Jealousy can also fester when one or both partners are deceitful. Lies and secrets are the foundation for mistrust and paranoia.

The shadow of mistrust continually hung over Dave and Kim's marriage because Dave was vague about his movements and activities. He often came home late from work, but had no satisfactory explanation of where he had been. Neither did he have clear explanations for certain credit card charges. Or for where he went with his buddies on the night-out.

Over the first two years of their marriage, Kim became increasingly consumed by jealousy. The more vague Dave was about his comings and goings, the more determined Kim became to learn where he'd been and what he'd been doing. She began monitoring Dave's moves, sometimes cross-examining his friends or secretly following him.

And what did Kim find? That her husband was not having an affair. But it took hours of sleuthing and six months to get this information — a waste of time and human spirit. And Dave realized Kim had been playing detective, the couple had hours of fights over taking a swipe at time.

As it turned out, Dave's vagueness was an effort to protect himself from Kim's criticism, for he thought she wouldn't approve of his substantial drinking and his liberal spending habits.

Had Dave initially been candid with Kim, whose jealousy thrived on the uncertainty he created, the entire problem could have been averted. Couples who want their relationships to grow must do more than not tell lies. They must openly share their feelings and issues with each other.

Japan fashion industry consolidates shows

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese fashion designers are working hard, if somewhat belatedly to boost overseas sales of often-innovative Japanese lines by making things easier here for foreign buyers.

Japan is the second biggest fashion market in the United States and designers, led by Issey Miyake, aim at protecting the designers' interests in the lucrative ready-to-wear industry.

The Council of Fashion Designers of Tokyo will have the key job of hosting a comprehensive ready-to-wear collection to be shown, over a short period of time, in a restricted area of this congested city.

Foreign fashion pros who flock here each season to size up potential buys have complained about the expense and trouble involved in seeing more than 50 shows held over two months and scattered at locations throughout the city.

Tokyo designers — who mapped out an entirely new direction in world fashion with their extensive use of the color black and the shapeless, sacklike look — have never hosted an organized collection by themselves, although a "first" Tokyo collection was held in April by a media enterprise here.

But the council is moving swiftly to change the situation.

Miyake, who chairs the council board, said the group would host a spring-summer Tokyo collection Nov. 15-16 at one main site with two sub-locations in the city's fashion district.

"We are seeking solidarity and understanding from the world's other fashion capitals, and we would like to achieve the role of Asia's fashion center," Miyake said.

Other prominent council members include Kansai Yamamoto, Rei Kawakubo of Comme Des Garçons, Hanae Mori and Yohji Yamamoto of Y's.

The Tokyo collection comes 20 years after designers like Madeline Soré first took their works to Paris.

To further promote Tokyo fashions, the council will also "host symposiums and studies on fashion-related subjects and promote exchanges of views and information within the group and with overseas pros," a council official said.

Government and garment industry officials, meanwhile, are keenly aware of Japanese high-fashion's brisk business potential overseas. Tokyo's fashion market is second in size only to the United States. The total market here in 1983 was estimated at more than $10 billion, with women's wear accounting for more than 70 percent.

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry and the fabric industry think that the survival of the Tokyo market depends on high-fashion because nations like China, South Korea and Taiwan are strong competitors for cheaper products.

Government and business leaders are working on plans to build a multi-use Tokyo fashion center, with conference rooms and exhibition halls suited for fashion show lodging facilities and a fashion library.

The aim of the center, expected to cost about $40 million and to draw 30,000 foreign buyers a year, is to "make Tokyo a transmission center of Japanese fashion to the world," a ministry spokesman said.

Health risk appraisal: a tool for building a healthier you

By SALLY SQUIRES
The Washington Post

Measuring an individual's health status is part science, part art. In the past decade, many health professionals have adopted the health risk appraisal as a tool to help people gauge their health status, recognize their risks and suggest ways to reduce specific risk factors. Health risk appraisals can't give absolute answers, but they can pinpoint areas where a few life-style changes can help improve the odds against disease.

The following Washington Post Health Risk Appraisal has been written with assistance from one of the pioneers in such tests, Dr. Ronald Blankenbaker, vice president for medical affairs at St. Vincent's Hospital and Health Care Center in Indianapolis. It is meant as a guide for improving health habits—not as an absolute measure of your health.

Take the test, target a few changes and then try repeating the test in about six months to check your progress. Answer all questions that apply to you. The number of points for each answer appears in parentheses.

Nutrition

1. Do you maintain ideal weight for your height and age? (See Metropolitan Life charts below.)

Add up your totals and compare them to the chart above. If your scores are excellent, congratulations! You're doing your best to lead a healthy life.

If your scores are good or fair, you are doing some things right, but could probably improve your health risks. Choose the category in which your score was lowest as a place to start. Here are some guidelines to help. Also, consult your doctor for advice.

Nutrition
Nutrition and diet are very important factors in whether you develop cancer and cardiovascular disease. The National Institutes of Health and the American Heart Association both recommend limiting intake of fat and cholesterol.

In addition, the following food guidelines are also suggested:
— Eat three to five servings of high-fiber foods per day.

— Consume cruciferous vegetables at least three times a week.

— Have at least one helping of citrus fruit a day.

— Increase the amount of complex carbohydrates in the diet — and keep a light rein on fat and protein — by eating more whole grain bread, pasta, rice and beans.

— And especially for women, dietary calcium is important. Excess calcium loss is related to osteoporosis, a degenerative bone disease that afflicts many elderly people (predominately women) in their later years, but seems preventable by adequate calcium intake.

Too much salt in the diet is related to high blood pressure for some people, which is related to a higher incidence of stroke. Too much sugar can help cause tooth decay and extra pounds.

Finally, diet and nutrition are crucial for both men and women in maintaining recommended body weight. Being overweight is associated with an increased risk of heart disease and cancer.

Exercise
Exercise not only helps control stress but also reduces the risk of developing heart disease, by both helping to control weight and by increasing blood levels of HDL — high density lipoprotein — a cholesterol fragment that seems to help protect against heart disease. Load-bearing exercise also helps women build up bone mass, which decreases their risk of developing osteoporosis. Regular physical activity helps "keep emotions on a steady, stable course."

Smoking
Tobacco is responsible for the number one preventable disease in the United States today: lung cancer. But cigarettes also play a major role in heart disease and emphysema. Women who smoke during pregnancy raise the risk of having a miscarriage or a low-birth-weight baby. Use of pipes, cigars and chewing tobacco increase the risk of developing cancer of the mouth, throat and esophagus.

In recent years, studies have pointed to passive smoke as a health risk. Thus, people who work or live with smokers may run an increased chance of also suffering health consequences from smoke in their environment.

Alcohol and Drugs
Alcoholism afflicts an estimated 10 million Americans. Drug abuse is another major health problem. Both drug and alcohol abuse are associated with an increased risk of accidents, absenteeism from work and school, and with violence, particularly in the home.

Women who drink while pregnant risk giving birth to a baby with fetal alcohol syndrome, a set of symptoms including small brain and head, reduced intelligence and slow growth. If the mother uses certain drugs, such as methadone and heroin, the child can be born addicted.

Safety
Accidents are still the number one cause of death in the United States for people under age 35. Yet some fairly simple steps — wearing a seat belt, not drinking and driving, wearing a protective helmet on a motorcycle or moped — can help cut some of the accident risks. So can other measures, such as learning how to swim, and wearing appropriate reflective safety clothing when riding a bicycle or walking at night.

Family History
The best guarantee for good health, the saying goes, is to pick the right parents. Since no one can do that, health experts recommend that people become aware of risks that run in their families. It may not be possible to avoid developing the high blood pressure that afflicts your father, uncle and sister, but if you know they have it, it might be possible to help control a tendency toward high blood pressure with diet, exercise, weight control and relaxation therapy.

Behavior
Type A behavior is associated with a significantly increased risk of heart attack. Stress management and learning how to modify Type A behavior can help reduce some of the health risks associated with this personality. There is also growing scientific evidence that it may be the anger and hostility components of Type A behavior that are so damaging to the health.

Personal Health
Prevention is one of the keys to long-term good health, experts say, but it takes some planning. Among the check-ups recommended are:

- Regular visits to the dentist.
- For women, regular pap smears and breast exams both at home and in the doctor's office.
- For men, regular testicular and prostate exams.
- For those over 40, regular tests for blood in stools.
- Regular eye exams and tests for glaucoma.
- It's also important to know and monitor blood pressure and keep track of serum levels of cholesterol, triglycerides and — less frequently — fasting blood sugar. Immunizations need to be kept up at various intervals throughout adulthood. It is advised, for instance, that adults get booster shots of tetanus and diphtheria every 10 years.

Clerics win in executive race

By JOHN C. SHELTON
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — The executive who slaps every back and enlivens every party won't be laughing at one of life's little jokes: That dull droid at the next desk may be coming right over his back on the way up.

"We found something suspicious about some of these people who get a big bang out of life. In many cases, their careers aren't in such good shape," said David C. Clark, a psychologist at Rush Medical College who headed a study of 88 executives at various corporate levels of Fortune 500 companies.

The serious workers — the ones who don't seem to appreciate the latest joke or to know which magazines published the Madonna nude pix — appear to have executive qualities lacking in their more gregarious colleagues, according to Clark's study. "People who have what you might call a 'big diet' of pleasure can deal with setbacks and focus on the qualities that help them get ahead," Clark said in an interview Friday.

"The person who says, 'I'm the life of every party,' frequently turns out not to be doing as well in their career as the quiet guy who doesn't seem to stand out at all," he said. In some cases, Clark suggested, the "hail fellow well met" may be covering up stress involving work-related problems.

Executives who took part in the study were given mental health examinations and written tests, and many of their spouses were interviewed.

Clark said the survey attempted to measure the executives' satisfaction in 36 pleasurable activities and weigh that against their professional standing.
