Union Carbide leak injures six

Toxic fumes send 125 to hospitals

By MARTHA BRYSON HODEL, The Associated Press

INSTITUTE, W.Va. — A chemical derived from methyl isocyanate leaked from a Union Carbide plant Sunday, injuring six employees, sending 125 nearby residents to hospitals and trapping thousands more indoors until the cloud of toxic fumes dissipated two hours later.

I saw that white cloud go up, disperse and spread out," said Crawford Willis, a custodian at nearby West Virginia State College. "I just locked the building, picked up my wife and took off."

Aldicarb oxime, the main ingredient in the pesticide Temik, leaked from the plant's MIC unit shortly before 10 a.m. when a storage tank containing about 500 gallons of the chemical is hospitals about 30 were admitted with mild to moderate injuries, and the rest were treated and released.

Company officials said they turned on a siren as soon as they knew of the leak. But some residents complained the chemical cloud had already sickened them before they heard a warning.

Mourners kill African soldier

By MAUREEN JOHNSON, The Associated Press

KING WILLIAM'S TOWN, South Africa — Angry black mourners stoned a soldier to death and burned his body Sunday after hearing funeral service speeches calling for the violent overthrow of the white-minority government.

near Pretoria. The burned body of another black man was reported found near Cradock, in eastern Cape Province.

another destination. The crowd pelted the truck with stones, breaking all the windows.

Reagan may be forced into sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The mood of Congress and American public opinion could force President Reagan to impose economic sanctions against South Africa even though he opposes them.

Speakes said McFarlane told Botha that economic sanctions that have passed the House and have wide support in the Senate are a "distinct possibility" and that South Africa should institute reforms before the measures are enacted.

Speakes repeated the administration's call for an end to the violence in South Africa, the lifting of a state of emergency and resumption of black-white dialogue in the country.

Shiites kidnap 65 Christians; guns rock city

By SAMIR F. GHATTAS, The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Shiite Muslim gunmen kidnaped 65 Christians at high noon Sunday on the airport highway.

It was the biggest mass kidnapping in months in Beirut, where the tree-lined campus overlooking scores of people are grabbed off the Mediterranean.

Police said dozens of other rounds hit nearby residential neighborhoods of mostly Muslim west Beirut in the heaviest sectarian fighting in the city since the 1975-76 civil war.

Shiite Muslims said the Christians were stopped at a hastily erected Shiite checkpoint on the airport highway in the Shiite-populated southern suburbs.

Official insists airways are safe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's air traffic control system is safe even though there are more flights and fewer experienced controllers monitoring takeoffs and landings, Federal Aviation Administrator Donald Engen said Sunday.

Appearing on the CBS show "Face the Nation," Engen acknowledged that "fewer air controllers are handling a record number of flights. But we have every controller we need at this time. If I had more controllers to do it, I literally couldn't use them."

Rep. Guy Molinari, R-N.Y., a member of the House aviation subcommittee, disagreed with Engen's assessment.

"We have approximately one half the amount of experienced control staff we had before the PATCO strike," he said, referring to the 1981 walkout by Professional Air Traffic Controllers. The Federal Aviation Administration fired hundreds of controllers during the illegal walkout.

In bad weather, Molinari said, "the controllers are so busy separating planes and recruiting them around weather, that they don't disseminate weather information to the pilots."

Citing increased air traffic and "unseasoned" air controllers, Molinari said it is time to overcome the experience gap among air controllers was to rehire the air traffic controllers fired in the 1981 strike.

"Numbers are not going to do the job unless you have experience to go along with it," said Molinari, who also appeared on the show.

John O'Brien, president of the Airline Pilot's Association said he considered the system safe, but expressed concern that fewer experienced controllers were monitoring more planes.

"What we are concerned with is the number of aircraft in the system, being handled by the number of controllers we have to do it," O'Brien said. "The overall experience level is lower, too, because many of these people are new hires. So more airplanes, fewer controllers, and lower experience level — yes, we're concerned."

O'Brien said his organization had made 17 recommendations to the FAA for improved traffic safety, including the hiring of more controllers.

But Engen said air controllers are not overworked.

The FAA reported a record 598 near mid-air collisions during 1984, but Engen attributed the figure to improved reporting procedures and record numbers of flights.

Lobbyists spent $10 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capitol Hill lobbyists say they spent $10.2 million trying to influence the new Congress in the first three months of 1985 — a 20 percent increase over their outlays at the start of the 96th Congress.

Continued spending at this rate through the end of the 99th Congress in December 1986 would push the price of persuasion to $107 million, the first quarter of 1985 was the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare.

The organization, comprised largely of senior citizens, said it spent $781,883 during the first three months of the year battling proposals to trim the budget deficit by halting or slowing cost-of-living increases for Social Security recipients.

The effort bore fruit earlier this month when Congress approved a fiscal 1986 spending plan that left Social Security benefits intact.

Bill Lessard, director of policy and research for the 1.2 million-member group, said that money poured into direct-mail, grassroots campaign registered in 1.8 million letters and telegrams being sent to the White House and members of Congress.

He said it also laid the groundwork for the arrival of six tons of petitions on July 9, the day the White House directed mail, grassroots campaign for a Senate Republican plan to eliminate cost-of-living increases scheduled for 1986.

"We believe that had a significant impact," Lessard said.

Reporting the second-largest outlay for the first quarter — $583,369 — was Common Cause, a self-described citizens lobby that always ranks high on the spending list because it attributes its entire budget to lobbying.

In third place with $423,409 was Gun Owners of America, Inc., which has been dropping support for a loosening of federal firearms control laws.

Two other anti-gun control groups were among the 17 lobbying organizations that reported spending more than $100,000 in the first quarter of this year. The National Rifle Association said it spent $181,614. The Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms reported $119,577.

The $718,600 spent by these three groups was nearly 10 times the principal gun control lobby, Handgun Control Inc.

The heavy spending by the pro-gun groups paid dividends early in July when the Senate voted 79-15 for a bill that would be the first revision of the Gun Control Act of 1968. Among other things, the measure would repeal the ban on interstate sales of handguns.

"Through the efforts of our lobbyists, we convinced many people it was a fair bill," said NRA spokesman Dave Warner. "Our lobbying efforts did pay off."

The gun-control fight — and the big bucks salvo that accompany it — isn't over.

Teens aid police in booze stings

BOSTON (AP) — Teen-agers with few dollars in their pockets have done what scores of uniformed police officers could not — nab liquor stores from selling alcohol to minors.

Youths working undercover for police have nabbed at least 50 stores this year for selling liquor to customers under the legal drinking age of 21, police say.

One 18-year-old bought liquor from every one of 14 liquor stores in Wareham she visited.

A 19-year-old scored in 18 of 20 Wellfleet stores. "The kid looked like a cherub," said Police Detective Arthur Parker in the Cape Cod town.

"When they get caught, they call them baby-faced goons, but when they don't, they commend us for doing a good job," James Meads, chief of police in nearby Provincetown, said in an interview last week.

Meads said he started a string of stings five years ago with an 18-year-old summer employee who is now a state trooper in Vermont.

"I had him go to every package store in Provincetown," he said. "I would say a lot of them were in violation, about 40 percent."

The stores got off with warnings then he said. "Some places actually commended me for pulling their help on notice. They thought it was an excellent idea, especially since I wasn't taking anybody to court."

Other stores haven't been so lucky.

Selectmen in the town of Wareham suspended the liquor licenses of two stores caught in a spring sting. The stores were among 14 in the town north of Cape Cod that allegedly sold beer, wine and hard liquor to 18-year-old "Geraldine" Bartlett. The other 12 stores were placed on probation.

Told that some store owners claimed she looked older, Miss Bartlett replied: "I still have acne."

She said she volunteered for the assignment after a friend died in a drunken-driving accident.

Weymouth authorities have begun prosecuting "store clerks on charges of selling liquor to high school students."

The Weymouth students had volunteered to work undercover for police in a sting operation started on Memorial Day by the Weymouth News & Gazette. Selectmen suspended the license of one store for three days.

At least five stores in neighboring Braintree face licensing hearings for allegedly selling liquor to minors in a sting organized by a sister newspaper.

The police chief was just amazed," said Louise Levin-Cutter, general manager of the Weymouth weekly newspaper. "Up until that first evening, he had said, 'Kids can't buy liquor.'"

She declined to identify any of the youths, saying they would face tough police pressure if their work became known. But she said several had been touched by personal tragedies caused by drunkenness. One, for example, had a friend who died in a drunken-driving accident.

Mrs. Levin-Cutter said she went along in part because the "rightly mislabeled" pretending to look over wine bottles while witnessing sales to the minors.

pesticide ingredient that leaked from a plant in Bhopal, India, last year, killing more than 2,000 people — but does not contain any MIC itself.

"At most there might be a few parts per billion because a few molecules didn't react fully, but that would be all," he said.

Officials said more than 100 people were treated at an emergency center set up at Shawnee Park about two miles away. Many were sent later to hospitals, which reported treating a total of 125, said David Seidler, vice-chief of emergency services at Charleston Area Medical Center.

About 30 residents were admitted with "mild to moderate injuries" caused by irritant gases, Seidler said. "We anticipate recovery will be very quick, a day or two at most."

He said the six injured plant workers had "severe eye irritations that required more extensive treatment." All six were reported in stable or satisfactory conditions.

Seidler said the medical center received calls from hospitals as far away as Gallipolis, Ohio, 60 miles to the west and Montgomery, 30 miles to the east, asking for information on treating patients exposed to the chemical while driving by the plant on Interstate 67.

The company statement said "an immediate investigation will be made" to determine why pressure in the storage tank built to the point that the valve failed. It said the tank contained "approximately 500 gallons of material at the maximum amount which could be released."

"However, much of the material was neutralized through venting to a scrubber and flare," it said.

Henderson insisted that "there never was a threat to the community," but Kanawha County officials declared an emergency when the leak was reported. They advised the 3,100 residents of Institute to stay indoors and told those outside to cover their eyes and mouths and seek shelter.

The emergency declaration was terminated shortly before noon.

"We activated our computer tracking and it showed most of material went back over the plant, southwesterly," Henderson said.

Burdette said the area of the plant where the leak occurred was flooded with water to contain fumes.

Paramedic supervisor Thurman Williams who helped treat people at the emergency center said residents were "very disturbed" — very. "I've heard is that the warning to the surrounding communities wasn't relayed as quickly as what they thought it should have been."

Henderson disagreed. He said the plant's emergency siren was sounded as soon as the leak occurred. "Most everyone stayed indoors and it's good to say that the system worked," he said.

Henderson said the company would not know how much material leaked until it could conduct a "materials balance" check of substances remaining in the plant's MIC reactor unit.

Aldicarb oxime is shipped from Institute to Union Carbide's plant in Woodbine, Ga., where it used in making Temik. After the Bhopal accident, Carbide consolidated the process for making aldicarb oxime at Institute, eliminating the need to transport the much more dangerous MIC to Woodbine.

The Institute plant was shut down after the Dec. 3 Bhopal leak because of fears about the safety of the MIC unit. It resumed production May 4 after installation of $5 million in new safety equipment that company spokesman Thad Epes said made "a safe unit safer."

Jury must decide: fraud or master spy?

HONOLULU (AP) — Ronald Rewald, a man with a taste for exotic cars and polo ponies, has gone on trial before a federal jury that must decide whether he was a con man who defrauded investors of millions of dollars or was a master spy "left out in the cold" by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Government prosecutors are calling witness after witness to the stand to tell how they lost money when Rewald's investment firm, Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham & Wong, went bankrupt in 1983. In all, the government contends 400 people invested $22 million in Bishop Baldwin when the time Rewald founded the firm in 1978 and it closed in 1983.

During that time, Rewald spent $5.5 million of the money to make payments on a $550,000 house, and for other personal expenses, such as exotic cars and polo ponies, the government claims.

The government has charged the 42-year-old native of Milwaukee with 43 counts of fraud, tax evasion and perjury.

The defense contends it was all part of Rewald's CIA cover story so he could get to know figures in the world of "international finance" — people like Philippine banker Enrique Zobel and the sultan of Brunei.

Rewald used the code name Winterdog, according to the defense. The trial, expected to last from two to three months, is scheduled to resume Tuesday. Rewald has said in an affidavit that his relationship with the CIA dates to the 1960s, when, as a student at the Milwaukee Institute of Technology, he was paid $20 a week to infiltrate student groups that were active in protests.

Rewald said he resumed the relationship when he came to Hawaii in 1977, a year after he pleaded no contest in Wisconsin to a charge of perjury. The charge stemmed from the alleged illegal sale of a franchise of Rewald's sporting goods business, College Athletic Inc.

Some investors have testified they felt secure placing their money with a firm with the name Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham & Wong because they associated Bishop, Baldwin and Dillingham with well-known Hawaii firms.

President Reagan waves to onlookers while leaving

Reagan flies to ranch for 3-week vacation

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan flew to his beloved mountain-top California ranch Sunday for three weeks of recuperation from cancer surgery, facing the never-absent possibility that world events might intrude on his desire to take it easy.

Reagan waved and shook hands with a small crowd of Navy base employees after their arrival at Point Mugu Naval Air Station aboard Air Force One.

The president and his wife, Nancy, then boarded a helicopter for the flight to their 608-acre spread in the Santa Ynez Mountains near Santa Barbara.

The vacation began Sunday morning with a Marine helicopter flight to Andrews Air Force Base. Crossing the White House lawn, smiling and waving to reporters, Reagan appeared to be limping when the president's spokesman after their arrival at Point Mugu Naval Air Station aboard Air Force One.

Reagan has expressed a desire to do some riding near the end of his 23-day sojourn. But because of last month's operation for removal of a cancerous tumor from his colon, he will be unable to perform his customary brush clearing or do any strenuous horseback riding.

In addition, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan would begin reviewing briefing materials for his November summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. And advisers with the president also were monitoring the effect that developments in South Africa might have on administration policies.

Robert C. McFarlane, Reagan's national security adviser, told South African officials last week that unless the government in Pretoria moves away from its apartheid racial policies, pressure will mount in Congress for economic sanctions against South Africa, Speakes confirmed.

Final action on a package of limited sanctions is expected in the Senate next month, Reagan has proposed such sanctions, but Speakes told reporters on Air Force One that the prospect of a veto "depends on what the mood of Congress and the public understanding is."

Bennett begins attack on parochial aid rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Education William J. Bennett said Sunday he is prepared to do battle in Congress and the courts to restore government aid to parochial schools.

Bennett, a product of parochial schools and a private college, has been critical of a July 1 Supreme Court ruling that New York City public school teachers cannot conduct remedial reading classes on parochial schools under a federally financed program.

"We are not trying to defy the decision but we are trying find a way to get these services to the schools," Bennett said during an appearance on the NBC's "Meet the Press."

school children... a check which they can redeem at a school of their choice."

Bennett said to limit federal involvement in the voucher program, the agency is proposing guidelines that would allow state and local agencies distribute the money to parents.

Bennett denied he was placing too much emphasis on restoring prayer to public schools and providing government aid to parochial schools.

Libertarian convention hits Phoenix

300 party members gather to converse

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — This week's national convention of the Libertarian Party will include seminars on such topics as "how to introduce Libertarianism to your friends without appearing to be a fool," the state chairman said.

About 300 party representatives, "a small but feisty bunch," as Arizona Chairman Ken Sturzenacker called them, will open their 10th convention on Wednesday.

The meeting will elect party officials and update platform and bylaws. Presidential candidates will come until 1987, Sturzenacker said in an interview.

The chairman said some of the planned discussions will be "the existence of moral rights," "a Libertarian philosophy of law," and "when a Libertarian falls in love, then what?"

Conrail officers' pay quietly raised

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top officers of Conrail — the government-owned freight railroad whose employees made three years of wage concessions to help keep the line operating — have been quietly awarded salary increases ranging from about 7 percent to about 21 percent.

Under the new salary schedule prepared by the compensation committee of the railroad's board of directors, raises were recommended for at least 15 officers to make their salaries more competitive with private railroad executives.

The recommendation was accepted last month by the board, according to a board member who was willing to speak about the raises only on condition he not be identified.

Most of the raises ranged from $9,000 to $25,000 a year, the schedule said. Many of the officers had earned $115,000 or more — well above the $85,200 paid to a member of the president's cabinet or the $97,900 paid to the president.

From April 1981 through June 1984, Conrail's unionized employees agreed to forgo some salary increases to help their employer keep rates down. The result was that their salaries ended up about 12 percent below those of their industry counterparts.

With the ratification by the United Transportation Union of a new contract last week, all of Conrail's 36,000 employees are now due to return to industry-level wages retroactive to July 1, 1984 — the day the concession agreement ended.

No agreement has been reached to compensate the workers for the wages they sacrificed. Conrail's managers say they allowed their own salaries to drop during the three years by a comparable percentage.

The employees' sacrifices will ultimately be recognized, Conrail said, although it won't guarantee that all the lost wages will be repaid. The unions refer to their sacrifices as wage "deferrals," but Conrail spokesman Saul Resnick calls them "contributions."

"The union people have made contributions and we have agreed to deduct last week all of Conrail's 36,000 employees are now due to return to industry-level wages retroactive to July 1, 1984 — the day the concession agreement ended.

12-year-old mayor's proposal voted down

CRABB, Texas (AP) — This farming community's 12-year-old mayor says he's going back to the drawing board now that voters have rejected his proposal to incorporate the town to keep it out of the clutches of larger cities.

With about 33 percent of the area's 1,911 registered voters turning out for Saturday's election, the incorporation proposal failed by a resounding 595-30.

Many of those voting against incorporating were residents of the 1,000-home Tara subdivision, which had been included with Crabb to bring the town's population up to the minimum for incorporation.

"That's not surprising, I was expecting that," Jay Foster, Tara Homeowners' Association president, said of the election results. "I'm surprised that 30 people voted for it."

Crabb's pro-teen mayor Brian Zimmerman, who won an unofficial election at his aunt's grocery store in September 1983, had said he would lead the town to a population of 200 fully eligible on the map to protect it from annexation efforts by nearby Richmond, Rosenberg and Houston.

"It's back to the drawing board," the dejected mayor said after hearing the final tally of the election.

Zimmerman said he wants to have another incorporation election on Nov. 4 "but leave Tara out."

"They (Tara) controlled the entire vote. There weren't enough people in Crabb to change anything," Zimmerman said.

Foster said he spoke to surrounding city governments and none had expressed an interest in annexing Tara or Crabb.

"We are just a bedroom community, we have no industry," he said. An incorporated Crabb including Tara would have boasted a population of about 3,500, Zimmerman said.

William Schroeder pauses briefly on his apartment porch

A 'fired up' Schroeder returns to apartment

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A "fired up" William Schroeder moved out of the hospital Sunday for the second time since his artificial heart implant and was driven to the specially equipped apartment where he hopes to stay until he can return to his Indiana home.

Schroeder, 53, was released from Humana Hospital Audubon, shortly before 11 a.m. EDT and was driven the quarter-of-a-mile to the apartment in the modified van "Heart and Spirit of Jasper," named for his home in Indiana. The van carries the equipment needed to drive the externally powered mechanical heart.

Schroeder, the world's second recipient of a permanent mechanical heart and the only one to live outside a hospital with the device, wore a green-and-white cap bearing his name and a red heart emblazoned with the numeral 2.

Dr. William DeVries, who has implanted four of the world's five permanent artificial hearts, including Schroeder's, stood inside the hospital's main entrance and watched as the family left.

Schroeder waved to about 50 reporters from the terrace of the apartment and, when asked if it was good to be getting out of the hospital, said only "Yeah."

Sunday was Schroeder's 260th day with the mechanical heart. He has survived longer than any other artificial heart recipient.

Schroeder, 53, was released from Humana Hospital Audubon, shortly before 11 a.m. EDT and was driven the quarter-of-a-mile to the apartment in the modified van "Heart and Spirit of Jasper," named for his home in Indiana. The van carries the equipment needed to drive the externally powered mechanical heart.

Two daughters-in-law and four grandchildren met him on the terrace. Sons Stan and Terry helped him up a wheelchair ramp, and he was accompanied by his wife, Margaret.

Mrs. Schroeder said she would keep her fingers crossed that the apartment stay this time will be helpful in getting her husband back in condition to return permanently to Jasper, Ind., which he visited briefly a week ago.

Meese's dope raid was worth trouble

When you see a picture of Attorney General Edwin Meese squinting at marijuana plants seized in a raid in the Ozark National Forest, you may be tempted to conclude, as one critic of the marijuana laws did, that Operation Delta-9 — last Monday's 50-state raid of which the Ozark operation was part — was "just good propaganda."

Certainly Mr. Meese understands that it is probably impossible to stamp out marijuana entirely. It is easily grown and in considerable demand. Possession and use of marijuana in small amounts is a minor offense now in most states.

Even so, we think Mr. Meese and his 2,200 federal state and local comrades were not engaged in a quixotic enterprise. For one thing, while this country asks its Latin neighbors to take politically costly steps to stamp out their drug business, it behooves Americans to do something visible and major about their own. And if marijuana use is common, there is good evidence — about as good as is possible, considering that the activity is illegal — that marijuana use is less common in the 15-25 age group than it was a few years ago, and it may very well be less common in older age groups as well.

So the predictions commonly made by marijuana advocates in the 1970s that the habit would become well-nigh universal have not come to pass. A dozen years ago you could not refute claims that marijuana smoking was harmless, and you had to concede that some of the claims made against it were exaggerated. But now, after a decade in which perhaps 30 million Americans have smoked marijuana, evidence of harm — harm on the order of that caused by tobacco and alcohol — is accumulating. It would not be surprising, then, in a nation where cigarette and liquor consumption is declining, if marijuana consumption were declining too.

In the 1970s it was said that marijuana, like alcohol, could not effectively be prohibited. But it was forgotten that, in the century up to repeal, alcohol use was vastly reduced in the United States, partly by legal prohibition, more by persuasion and the power of ideas.

Now it seems that the country has reached an equilibrium on marijuana. Americans know it's unhealthy and use it less often. And they insist, properly, on enforcing the law against commercial production and distribution.

Meese's raid in the Ozarks and Delta-9 serve a useful purpose not just in making the business of marijuana less secure but in underlining Americans' intention that this law should be enforced.

Soviets' new confidence is dangerous

Jerry F. Hough

Soviet-American relations have a peculiar quality. Rather unimportant conflicts such as Angola have assumed a disproportionate public significance, while potentially dangerous confrontations — Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war — have been handled very smoothly, but with no fanfare. In general, Soviet appearances have been far more central in the public perception than substance.

The recent meeting in Helsinki, Finland, provides another example. No progress at all is visible on arms control, and the official Soviet position remains totally unreasonable. Soviet aid to Nicaragua seems to be increasing. A particularly virulent anti-American has been appointed head of the propaganda department of the Central Committee, and has been a close adviser of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

And yet, because the new foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevardnadze, did not counterattack at the meeting, and because he called for an improvement of Soviet-American relations, and because Soviet spokesmen were extraordinarily open and relaxed with the Western media, the American press has treated the Helsinki meeting as a success.

I should not accuse the press of a pro-Soviet bias. Its interpretation followed the U.S. government interpretation. Moreover, Shevardnadze was just playing President Reagan's game. The president's top is unreasonable in his arms-control program. He is threatening in his military buildup and as vigorous as ever in funneling covert aid to rebels against Soviet allies. But because he has called for better Soviet-

MEANWHILE, IN SIBERIA, THE SOVIET HUMAN RIGHTS MONITORING GROUP MARKS THE TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE HELSINKI ACCORDS.

American relations and for arms control, the president has silenced all significant domestic opposition to his policies.

Why is symbolism without apparent substance so important? What are Shevardnadze and the new Soviet leadership up to with their new symbolism?

First, the press may be correct in suggesting that symbolism really is important. Second, the change in the way Shevardnadze handled himself has broader significance for the future. Both he and Reagan are playing for West European opinion, and the West Europeans want a reasonable tone.

The striking thing about the Leonid I. Brezhnev-Andrei A. Gromyko generation was its insecurity. It hungered for status and American recognition of its achievement of equality.

The Gorbachev-Shevardnadze generation seems very different. It seems far surer of itself and more disdainful of approval from the United States or agreement with it. Shevardnadze's attitude was signaled last year in the coverage given the Los Angeles Olympics in the newspaper of the Georgian Party Central Committee, where he was first secretary. It carried the basic Tass dispatches on the games, commenting favorably on the patriotic fervor and commercialism, but focusing mainly on the sports results. By contrast, the newspaper of the Ukraine, where this first secretary is a man of the older generation and older ideas, reported almost nothing about results of the games, but carried a series of defensive articles on troubles in Los Angeles and the superiority of the 1980 Moscow games. The matter-of-factness of Shevardnadze's Georgian party newspaper shows a self-confidence that the Ukrainian articles tried to demonstrate, but belied.

That self-confidence will have many consequences. The United States has much rethinking to do. It looks as if we can have a period of relatively low confrontation, but with no significant agreements and strong Soviet attacks on the American position.

But if the Soviet Union opens up to the West, and begins expanding economic relations as part of its economic reform, we will face fundamental decisions about our linkage policy. We can continue to demand linkage, knowing that the Soviet Union will not accommodate. Or we can begin looking at specific agreements and trade on their own merits.

The self-confidence that prevent the Soviet leadership from caring what we think about it, or whether we agree with it, means that the Soviet challenge is going to be serious. Paradoxically, that is very likely to make us more eager for meetings and agreements, in order to defend our interests in a more vigorous competition.

Let's explode the welfare/babies myth

Nancy Amidei

It has been 50 years since welfare became a matter of government policy, an acceptance of the notion that in some cases the government has responsibility for its members in crisis.

Ever since, statistics have been gathered on public assistance. We know the age, education, work experience and family circumstances of adults and children "on welfare," as well as how little they receive. And we have accumulated reams of analyses on the why of needing assistance.

Yet, every time the topic is raised in public discussion, one "fact" is presumed and given weight — too often even by legislators who should know better: that the generosity or availability of welfare encourages poor women to have children at a later age. If we receive a very dim view of half of the population to believe that women choose to bear children (and take on at least 18 years of responsibility for them) on a whim.

As my seatmate on a recent flight put it, "My wife and I had children when we could support them." So did many people now on welfare. The fact is that in about half of the cases, the reason for Aid to Families with Dependent Children for the first time, the youngest child is over the age of 3; in nearly one-fourth the youngest is over 6. Would someone have a baby to get welfare and then wait three (or six, or 11) years to apply?

More important, most poor families are not "on welfare" at all. They are on public assistance through their poor families' received AFDC or state-supported welfare. And that is not just a product of Reagan's policies. In 1980 the figure was only 36.5 percent. Welfare is not the central force in most people's lives — even poor peoples.

You would think that we would learn. The question of welfare's relationship to family size has been asked, and answered, many times. It was raised in the late 1960s, when welfare eligibility was being expanded by Congress and welfare-rights organizers were active. Government statistics showed that welfare families were smallest in states with more generous welfare payments, and large welfare families were more common in states with low welfare benefits. Either those parents could not count, or they had children for other reasons. In fact, states giving higher benefits tended to be the wealthier, more urban states in which families at all income levels were generally smaller, while states giving lower benefits tended to be the poorer, more rural states in which larger families were more common.

There is one other particularly compelling piece of evidence that welfare does not dictate childbearing. We know that in almost every year, whether benefits are being expanded or cut. Three-fourths of all families on welfare have only one or two children; the most common family size is one adult, one child. As a report issued in January by the Department of Health and Human Services pointed out, "This trend in numbers of children per family reflects the trend toward smaller families in the general population."

People on welfare and in poverty are part of the general population. Most had their children for many of the same reasons that middle-class people have children — because they had a boy and wanted a girl, or because their method of family planning failed, or to carry on the family name or to give their parents grandchildren.

People become poor or need help from welfare for equally diverse reasons because of divorce or death or illness or loss of a job. Events like that can occur to families at any stage, no matter how our welfare system is designed. The presence of a man is all that stands between a lot of women and welfare.

Very young mothers may be another matter. Although only one welfare mother in 13 is under the age of 20, children having children are a special case. Perhaps to them, even very small welfare payments seem like a lot of money. For instance, Texas just raised benefits to $49 per person, up from $36 about a year ago. Even with food stamps, welfare assistance leaves families well below the poverty line.

That doesn't mean that welfare "causes" teen pregnancy. U.S. teen-agers are more often pregnant than teen-agers in European countries where benefits are far more generous. (But welfare may influence whether teen-age mothers continue to live with their mothers after the baby is born.)

That doesn't mean that welfare in the American family structure are real and deserve the attention of our policy-makers. But, if the recurring interest in poverty is to have any positive results, we will need to bring more common sense and practical reality into the debate: to understand, for example, that poor women don't have babies to get welfare any more than middle-class women have babies to get tax deductions.

Productivity in Congress is stifled by one issue: the deficit

Denis P. Doyle
Terry W. Hartle

When Congress goes home, some political pundits claim that the nation's story is sealed — at least until Congress returns. Whether or not that is true, a congressional recess does provide a chance for taking stock of where things stand.

Before leaving town last week, Congress approved a budget resolution designed to reduce federal spending and cut the deficit. The budget resolution sets spending priorities. It's akin to a family sitting down to determine how much income it will have in the next year and how to divide it among rent, groceries, gasoline and other things.

A budget resolution is not indispensable. The federal government can exist without one. But, like the family that never sets its spending priorities, the lack of a budget plan makes it hard to keep spending in check. It's easy to run up charge accounts.

The resolution, then, is important as a statement of priorities. It is an indication of how much money the government expects to receive and spend, and it is an affirmation of the government's willingness to live within its means.

Reaching agreement on those issues was a protracted and bitter struggle this year. The media portrayed it as a political Armageddon. It left the various players bitter and bloodied, and pitted the Senate against the House, the Congress against the president, and, finally, Republican against Republican. But with such high stakes and so many entrenched positions, it is hardly surprising that things didn't go as well as hoped.

Three issues — Social Security, defense and taxes — were of primary importance. The Senate was more willing to reduce Social Security and less willing to cut defense spending than the House was. They were both prepared, reluctantly, to raise taxes, but President Reagan was not.

When the smoke cleared, Congress had passed a compromise that all sides could agree on, but that nobody really liked. "It's better than nothing," noted one weary senator. "Not by much." The plan's economic and savings assumptions are very optimistic. Even if all the promised spending cuts are made, some analysts believe that the 1988 deficit will be $160 billion, not the $112 billion that Congress promised.

Setting aside the inevitable disputes over numbers and whether the savings are real or imaginary, the controversy tells us much about the state of affairs in Washington. First, institutional paralysis has set in. Congress has been much less productive this year than in the past. Virtually all discussions in Washington start and end with the budget deficit. And in the Washington scandalous to have the town been so fixated on a single issue.

The unhappy reality in Washington is budgetary gridlock. The impasse is possible because the federal government is not required to balance the budget. The impasse occurs because many elected officials lack the political and institutional discipline to impose the necessary self-restraint. Some politicians were willing to make such tough choices, but others were not, and without a mechanism to force the issue, the forces of restraint were overwhelmed.

The controversy also says much about the quality of the nation's political leadership. Despite heroic efforts by some members of Congress, only President Reagan has the stature necessary to fashion a meaningful deficit-reduction package. But even since submitting his budget in February, the president has focused on other matters. In recent months he has merely indicated his acceptance of responsibility for whatever Congress has designed. The old adage, "Congress proposes and the president disposes," has been turned around. As time goes by, Reagan's lame-duck status and pending elections will reduce his flexibility further and the chances for substantial change will evaporate.

Two profound truths emerge: First, Reagan ran against Washington in seeking the presidency. He made no bones about it; he told us repeatedly that Washington is the problem. Well, he's finally right, and now he is a large part of it. His refusal to address the budget crisis with candor and resolve is leading the nation to the brink of bankruptcy.

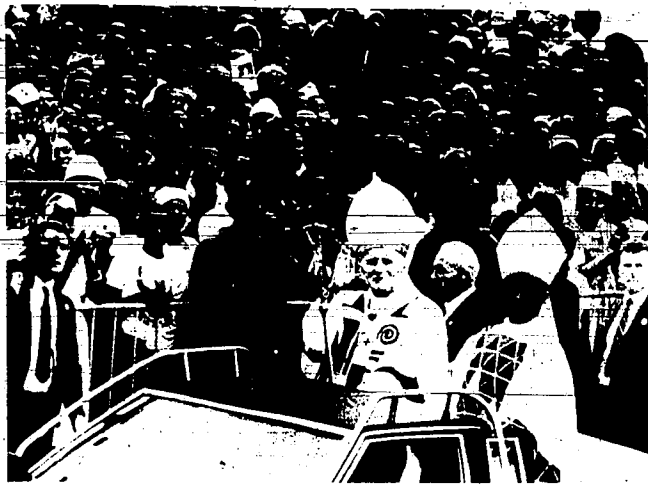

Second, Reagan's persona, his sense of command and the ease with which he checks the obligations of office, is so sure that public confidence in the federal government has increased steadily on his watch. He has dispelled the image of a hand-wringing president, overwhelmed by the burdens and demands of office, that was often associated with Jimmy Carter. Ultimately, however, failure to get government spending in order will undermine public confidence. We are, for better or worse, unlikely to ever see again the blind faith in our leaders that existed a generation ago. Still, a modicum of trust that our elected officials have their fiscal wits about them makes it easier to govern. Most citizens seek through the mindless budget behavior: Families usually live within their means; why can't Washington?

Despite the lavish attention given to the budget resolution, the battle is just another skirmish in a long war. While a key step in setting priorities, the resolution accomplishes nothing. The federal government still faces tough choices, some of which might cause the budget to unravel. Some substantive legislation, such as the farm bill, that has been on hold in recent weeks might well be budgeted. Individual appropriations bills that actually provide money for each government agency have to be approved. And there will be the usual raft of supplemental appropriations bills later.

In short, reducing the deficit in a meaningful way won't come from a single budget resolution or any other decision. It's a long fight that will require continued fiscal restraint and discipline.

Pope John Paul II waves to wellwishers during the first papal trip ever taken to Cameroon

Pope denounces apartheid

'Unjust situation' blamed for provoking revolt

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Pope John Paul II departed from his prepared text after Mass on Sunday to deplore the racial bloodletting in South Africa and pray for an end without delay to all discrimination.

Earlier, he released a statement blaming the "unjust situation" kept in place by South Africa's white-minority government for provoking black revolt.

During his noon blessing on the fourth day of his 12-day tour of black Africa, John Paul said: "New and bloody clashes... cause concern over the whole of Africa as well as over the world."

"May God take all these victims into his peace, may he inspire wisdom, just behavior, respect for human dignity and a desire for peace to put an end without delay to all discrimination which is not worthy of man," he said in French.

The statement followed four days of riots in black and Indian townships of Durban, South Africa, which killed a reported 62 people and injured 500.

It was the worst violence since riots began last August against the country's system of racial segregation known as apartheid. An estimated 600 blacks have perished in the past year, about half killed by police and the rest killed by other blacks who viewed them as collaborating with the government.

John Paul celebrated Mass before a crowd estimated at more than 100,000 and ordained 16 priests in Yaounde's central square. President Paul Biya and his wife Jeanne-Irene, both Roman Catholics, led a throng of dignitaries attending in his honor, delivered in French, the pope urged priests to stay out of politics and "other temporal pursuits."

A statement released earlier by Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said John Paul "profoundly deplores that the unjust situation is fanning the different communities into bloody confrontation almost every day."

"Without the fundamental rights of man... there is no dignity at all," the statement said.

The Polish-born pope appealed for an end to "every kind of discrimination" and for political freedom for all.

Navarro had said the pontiff would comment on South Africa on Monday evening when he addresses the diplomats, but the deteriorating situation prompted the pope's statements a day early.

EDITOR'S NOTE — The following story was submitted to the Israeli military censor, who ordered deletions.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Thousands of Ethiopian Jews left behind by a secret airlift that brought 8,000 of their number to Israel are starving to death in the famine-stricken African country, an immigrant leader said Sunday.

Israel conducted the airlift, called Operation Moses, between November 1984 and January. Officials said it ended Jan. 4 because of publicity about the sensitive operation.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres said in a speech Saturday night before the World Union of Jewish Students that Israel would work to bring the remaining Ethiopians here at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Maariv daily newspaper estimated the number of Jews left in Ethiopia in the thousands. Foreign news reports have estimated 6,000 to 8,000 are in Ethiopia and another 4,000 are stranded in refugee camps.

Yafsa Hadana, wife of an Ethiopian Jewish leader, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that her husband, Rabbi Yosef Hadana, recently received many letters pleading for help.

She said her brother, Yelahan Kalef in Gundar province, wrote in recent weeks that "all the Jews here are in difficult circumstances. They are languishing in hunger, going to die."

Many Ethiopians who arrived in Israel left relatives behind. Some were delayed by young children, elderly and sick parents, Mrs. Hadana said.

"My brother... waited for my mother, who cannot see well and is sick. He also has small children. He had planned to come here and has gotten stuck," Mrs. Hadana said.

The Hadanas were among the first Ethiopian immigrants to arrive nine years ago.

Peres said Saturday that Israel has "never forgotten that another part, though a small part of the Jewish community, is still in Ethiopia, and we shall try whatever we can to bring them back home on the earliest possible opportunity."

2nd peace group visits Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A second group of American peace activists plans to hold a week of prayer vigils in parts of Nicaragua where the government has been fighting U.S.-backed insurgents.

Last week, 29 Witness for Peace members were traveling on San Juan River when they said rebels stopped their boat and held them captive for a day before freeing them unharmed. The group was returning to San Jose, 125 miles south of Managua, after holding a prayer vigil at a rebel camp. Most of the group remained in San Jose on Sunday.

Witness for Peace spokeswoman Inana Lefevre told The Associated Press that the second group, all Californians, arrived Saturday for a 15-day visit. She said they would travel by land Tuesday to San Juan del Rio Coco, a river valley in Nueva Segovia province, and stay for a week in local communities.

She said news reports quoting Ed Griffin-Nolan, of Albuquerque, N.M., as telling a news conference Sat-day that the Californians would visit the Coco River, deep in the jungle near the Honduran border, were erroneous. Griffin-Nolan was a member of the first group, and returned to Managua late Friday.

33 villagers reported killed

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — The official Mozambique radio said Sunday that guerrillas killed 33 villagers attending a funeral near this southeast African country's border with Malawi.

The radio, quoting military sources, said the attack took place Tuesday in a cemetery in Intaque village in Tete province. No details were available.

Guerrillas of the Mozambique National Resistance are conducting a campaign of sabotage and assault in many areas trying to undermine the Marxist government of President Samora Machel. The guerrillas are supported by conservative Portuguese and Mozambican exiles.

South Africa promised last year to stop supporting the guerrillas in return for a Mozambican pledge to bar militants of the African National Congress, which seeks to end white-minority rule in South Africa.

Irish journalists strike to protest 'censorship'

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Striking broadcast journalists left the Irish Republic without news reports Sunday in a protest against a management decision to cancel interviews with American IRA sympathizer Martin Galvin.

The strike at state-funded Radio Telefis Eireann, or RTE, began 6:30 p.m. Saturday, with a midnight Sunday ending. The two radio stations played music during periods scheduled for news. The two television stations filled the gaps with cartoons and other substitute material.

In the British province of Northern Ireland, an estimated 10,000 supporters of the Irish Republican Army, including more than 100 Americans, paraded illegally but peacefully through Belfast to commemorate the 14th anniversary of internment without trial.

Galvin, who had entered the province in defiance of a British ban, did not attend the rally. Police said a few bottles were thrown at police as the parade broke up, but reported no other violence.

The Irish broadcast job action followed a 24-hour radio and television news blackout in Britain Wednesday to protest the British Broadcasting Corp.'s ban on a television documentary about two Northern Ireland extremists.

Ireland's National Union of Journalists said it called the strike because RTE executives canceled plans for two radio interviews with Galvin, publicity director of the New York-based Irish Northern Aid Committee, called Noraid.

The union called the cancellation "a clear example of self-imposed censorship."

RTE's news director, Wesley Boyd, said his decision to cancel the interviews was "entirely an editorial judgment."

"Censorship does not arise," he said. "We've interviewed Mr. Galvin and other members of his organization in the past and if he has anything newsworthy to say we would interview him again."

He added, "Galvin's views are well-known. He had been heavily exposed on the media over the past few days, including on RTE. We had a duty not to bore... our audience."

Government press secretary Peter Prendergast said there was no official pressure to cancel the interviews.

RTE spokesmen insisted the interviews were not banned under Section 21 of the Broadcasting Act, which forbids broadcasting interviews with the outlawed IRA or its legal political wing, Sinn Fein.

A U.S. court and the British and Irish governments have identified Noraid as a fund-raiser for the mostly-Irish Catholic IRA, which is conducting guerrilla warfare to drive the British from the Protestant-dominated province. Noraid says it raises money for victims of sectarian strife in Northern Ireland.

Japanese used allied troops in germ tests, program says

LONDON (AP) — Survivors will describe how the Japanese conducted deadly germ warfare experiments on hundreds of American prisoners during World War II in a television documentary to be shown this week, newspapers reported Sunday.

The documentary says the Japanese experimenters escaped U.S. prosecution by sharing their data, the reports said.

The program is to be shown in Britain on Tuesday. Newspapers on Sunday published details of the hour-long documentary by TVS, a regional arm of Independent Television, Britain's independent commercial network.

The tests were carried out on American, British and Australian soldiers at a secret Japanese prisoner-of-war camp at Mukden in northeast China, former soldiers who said they survived such tests were quoted as telling TVS.

The war veterans were not named in any of the accounts.

The purpose victims were quoted as saying the tests were performed by a secret branch of the Japanese Imperial Army known as Unit 731, and that the tests included injecting U.S., British and Australian prisoners with deadly germs and then charting their illnesses before they died.

The documentary apparently offered the first descriptions from witnesses of the alleged experiments.

An Oct. 1981 article in The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, a U.S. publication, first suggested that the Japanese carried out experiments on American prisoners in northern China.

The article quoted a 1956 Federal Bureau of Investigation memorandum to substantiate the charges, and said U.S. authorities chose not to try the Japanese involved, accepting their test data instead.

No survivor of the alleged experiments ever surfaced. It was not clear why witnesses would have waited until now to appear.

What's what.

The first Americans crossed the Bering Sea during the Ice Age. It's believed. And they said then what so many say now: "How I wish we lived in the Sun Belt!" Or words to that effect. They, too, went south. By the time the Europeans showed up, the Americans south of the Rio Grande outnumbered the Americans north of the Rio Grande by about 14 to one.

Q. Before every major league baseball game, the umpires smear rubbing mud on all the balls. Why?

A. It cuts the gloss, the slickness on the balls, so pitchers can grip them. It's clear, not mud colored, incidentally.

Q. How many jumps can you get out of a good parachute?

A. About 10, typically.

Q. During World War II, some male American marines wore skirts. I've read. Who?

A. A battalion of Samoans.

The simple facts about AIDS should be known by everyone

DEAR READERS: If you have no interest in AIDS, what it is, how people get it, how widespread it is, and how to protect yourself from becoming a victim, skip this column.

In an effort to get the facts, I consulted Dr. Michael Gottlieb, the eminent UCLA immunologist who discovered the AIDS syndrome in 1981. The information in this column was confirmed by an information officer at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

What is AIDS? It is the name for Acquired Immunity Deficiency Syndrome, a virus that attacks and destroys the immune system, leaving its victims vulnerable to infections and innumerable diseases, including types of cancer.

How widespread is AIDS? The epidemic is almost worldwide. Since 1981, over 12,000 cases have been diagnosed in the United States alone, of which nearly half have died from it. It is epidemic in Central Africa and Haiti, and has also spread to Europe and Australia. It is estimated that 500,000 to 1 million people have already been exposed to the virus.

All individuals exposed do not necessarily succumb to AIDS, but they do have an increased risk of developing it. There can be an incubation period of several years between exposure to the virus and the development of AIDS, but the exact period of time is not known.

How is AIDS transmitted? The most significant route is by anal sex, oral sex and "old-fashioned" sexual intercourse with a person who has been infected by the AIDS-virus. While most cases have occurred among homosexual or bisexual men who have had multiple partners, AIDS is not exclusively a homosexual disease.

An increasing number of cases is being found among heterosexual (straight) men and women. All sexually active men and women, gay or straight, should be concerned.

The virus is also spread by shared contaminated needles among drug abusers. Also through blood products used by hemophiliacs and other recipients of blood. Some good news: Transmission through blood is expected to decrease since the screening of blood donors to detect the AIDS virus began in early 1985.

How AIDS is not spread—There is absolutely no evidence that AIDS is spread by casual contact with infected individuals. It cannot be spread by sharing towels, food or eating utensils with a person who has AIDS. Neither can it be spread by touching, hugging or body contact other than sexual intimacy.

What can be done about AIDS? A massive national program of public education as well as continuing research for a vaccine is now under way.

All sexually active people should avoid sex with multiple partners. They should also avoid contact with semen. (Condoms—for example—may offer some protection.)

It is important for all of us in the human family to show compassion and understanding to the victims of AIDS. They should not be avoided or ignored. I repeat, AIDS cannot be "caught" by touching or contact other than sexual. And although about 70 percent of the AIDS victims are homosexual men, it is NOT strictly a homosexual disease.

AIDS victims should be visited by their friends and relatives. There is no danger to anyone who visits or cares for a person who has AIDS. I repeat, AIDS is transmitted by sexual interaction with a person who has it. Hugging, caressing, holding, shaking hands or being in close contact with a victim will not put one at risk of being contaminated.

Don't assume that every person who has AIDS is sexually promiscuous. One contact (even years ago) with someone who had it is sufficient to infect a person. A wife can get it innocently from a bisexual husband who had been infected years ago by an AIDS victim.

How can one obtain more information about AIDS? A national hotline with an informative recording can be reached by calling (800) 345-AIDS. Many cities have a local AIDS information hotline. Your telephone operator can advise you.

Now, you know as much about AIDS as I. And if you know someone who can use this information, please pass it along.

TANNING TOASTERS

Contraptions compete with Ol' Sol's variable rays

By KRISTIN TUCKER
Times-News correspondent

Indoor sunbathes — and tans. That's what tanning booths offer: scientifically controlled tanning rays in a comfortable, private, indoor atmosphere. Available year-round, morning, noon and night, rain or shine.

Professional tanning studios are giving the sun a bad reputation. Just 15 minutes beneath a tanning bulb will have the same effect as spending two or three hours in the sun.

"It's safer than sunlight and more convenient," says Kathy Harris of Kathy's SunSpot, Twin Falls. About 60 percent of a tanning booth's rays are ultraviolet-B rays, which are less damaging than the sun's rays. The sun's rays are only 10 percent UV-B rays.

Top-of-the-line tanning units are UL approved and medically rated, and will have a higher percentage of UV-B rays. Certain tanning units are specially built for fair people, and face plates are available which will tan your face faster.

But Twin Falls dermatologist Dr. Dan Scholes says that any tanning rays have a negative effect. "UVA changes may not be apparent but they're there," he says. "I'm convinced that people who frequent sun tanning booths are greatly increasing their chances for developing skin cancer," he says. "I attribute almost all of those to years of exposure to the sun."

Tanning salons are busiest from January to May, when people are preparing for summer vacations and trying to regain a healthy "summer" look, says Shirley Daniels of the Sunshine Beach, Twin Falls.

By building up a base tan in a controlled environment, a person can minimize the dangers of sudden exposure to the sun.

But many "tan fans" use tanning salons year-round to achieve that "Back from Bermuda" glow.

Another plus to using a tanning salon is that expensive tanning oils or creams aren't necessary. "The cleaner the skin, the better the tan," says Daniels. Besides oils run in the machines.

But don't throw out your moisturizers. "UV rays are UV rays," says Pam Grant of Escape, Twin Falls. They will always cause collagen breakdown. But tanning machines are much more controlled than the sun."

Quick takes

Curries can help you be cool

NEW YORK (AP) — No other country beats the United States in preparing iced drinks and desserts in trying to stay cool in hot weather. However, most other countries know the worst thing to do to stay cool is to eat cold foods, according to Feeling Great magazine.

In fact, whether they drink hot tea in India, eat curries in Sri Lanka, or nibble jalapeno peppers in Mexico, people beat the heat by eating hot foods. Hot foods cause you to perspire, which helps to maintain control over body temperature through evaporation.

In addition, many of the spices and roots used in preparing hot dishes contain potassium and sodium traces along with other elements which the body uses to replenish chemicals lost through heavy perspiration.

Cure for type of arthritis found

ATLANTA (AP) — The cure for Lyme disease is one of the newest success stories in arthritis research, says the Arthritis Foundation.

This inflammatory type of arthritis was linked to the bite of a certain kind of tick, and recently it was found to be caused by a particular type of bacteria carried by the tick.

Sportswomen build better bones

BOSTON (AP) — A study at Harvard shows that women who played sports while in their 20s may have stronger bones later in life than women non-athletes when they are 30 or younger. When the women are in their 50s or older, the athlete's bones are harder and denser, and less likely to break.

Tooth computer chip IDs kids

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — A microscopic computer chip that can be bonded to a tooth is helping police identify abducted children and providing doctors with emergency medical information, reports Pediatric News.

The micro-information disk — thinner than a cigarette package cellophane wrapper and about as big as the capital "O" on a typewriter — is bonded to the child's first upper permanent molar with a liquid resin that encases it.

The information includes the child's name, birthdate, address, telephone, medical alert information and whom to notify in case of emergency.

Water your muscles to prevent cramping

By KRISTIN TUCKER
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The best way to avoid muscle cramps during exercise is to drink water before and after you work out, says a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Dehydration is the most common cause of these muscle cramps, says the article, not low blood levels of sodium, potassium, calcium or other minerals.

In fact, experts say that salt tablets and other mineral supplements may actually increase muscle cramps by requiring body fluids to dilute them, leaving a short supply of water to be used for sweat.

While encouraging exercisers to drink more fluids, the article cautions them that not all beverages are equally effective in minimizing muscle cramps. The sugar added to many beverages slows down the rate they can be absorbed, and most sugared beverages (including powdered soft drinks and "sports beverages") contain at least 10 percent sugar.

"The most sugar that a beverage can contain and still be absorbed rapidly is 2.5 percent," says the JAMA article.

Looking good

Save 'face' in battle with heat

By SUSAN BLANKMAN
Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Summer heat and humidity can destroy your makeup. If your eyeliner, blusher, eyeshadow, and lipstick seem to disappear each time there's a heat wave, here's how to preserve a pretty face:

- DO.
- Switch to a lighter version of your regular oil-base foundation, or change to a water-base formula. Better yet, mix a little foundation in a dab of moisturizer for the sheerest base.
  - Wear an eye shadow base to give shadows more staying power.
  - Select powder shadows, blushes, and pencils.
  - Wear waterproof mascara.
  - Powder your lip line, outline with a pencil, and then color in lips with lipstick. This eliminates running and "bleeding."
  - Carry oil-blotting or astringent pads for quick refreshers.

Esprit sends out young fashions for real people

By KIM MARCUM
Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS — They sprint across the pages in vibrant, whimsical clothes during customers-to-try them on. These are real people. Real people who have their own set of lumps and bumps like the rest of us, but who still manage to look chic regardless.

They are the living, breathing personifications of Esprit, a San Francisco-based clothing company that is the largest, privately held garment business in the world. Much of the clothing's cachet rests on this attainable appeal projected in their advertising.

"Women say, 'Hey, I can relate to that. Just think, I'd like to wear it, I can wear it and look good, too,'" says Lee Rosenberg, vice president of sales and marketing for Esprit.

"The next step in our advertising campaign is to photograph customers in our stores," continues Rosenberg. "Real people who are really buying the goods. We'll go out with Polaroid cameras and take pictures and send them back to San Francisco."

Rosenberg attributes Esprit's success — wholesale sales tally up to between $675 and $850 million annually — to several factors. A big plus is that it is fashion on a budget — most items are priced from $40 to $75 — but with good design.

The design team, headed by owners Susie and Doug Tomkins, travels half the year looking at what is happening in the fashion around the globe. "This traveling brings us fresh new attitudes and ideas," Rosenberg says. "We're not waiting to see what Paris is showing or what Kenzo and Yves Saint Laurent are going to do. We can do our own thing. Susie's a great people-watcher and she can just sit there and see what's happening.

"What makes us successful is that we're doing our research and development. Susie goes into mills in Milan and sees yarns and colors and she can work on textures of knitting, combinations of stitches in knitting, something new. She can play it like a piano, almost."

For fall '85, the Esprit team has penned its signature comfy shapes and textures, but with added layers: a blue ice rain jacket tops a cabled peach pullover and butter-colored leggings. For the office, there is a long and loose butter-colored cardigan over a tweedy, salt-and-pepper vest, a pajama-striped shirt and plaid-plaid skirt.

Humor still has its place, especially in the oversized eagle-print shirts that poke fun at L.L. Bean regulars. To complete the Esprit look are Esprit accessories — aviator boots lined in buffalo checks, wide enamel cuff bracelets splashed with black confetti and cactus-studded western belts.

Founded in 1968, Esprit De Corp was the umbrella company for several lesser-known clothing lines among them Sweet Baby Jane, Rosehips and Jasmine Teas. Five years ago, the lines were consolidated into simply Esprit. That is when things really took off.

"We've doubled our business consistently in the last three years," Rosenberg says. "All I know is that the first year I was with Esprit we had a $5 million season and that is a bad Thursday afternoon's mail right now. We hope in the very near future to hit a billion dollars."

Different collections are used, Rosenberg says. "What is right for the European customer is not necessarily correct for the American customer, so there are variances in the collections."

Put away your adult temper tantrums

Jo Ann Larsen

Do you have wild, ferocious moments in which you just lose your anger? Along with the paperwork, the nearest dish or hairbrush you're holding? And when you explode, do you scream, strike blows, say unforgettable and unrepeatable things?

If so, you may be suffering from adult temper tantrums. You have all the symptoms.

"OH NO, NOT ME!" Why not you? You're not alone. Not many adults survive their stressed lives without having an occasional temper tantrum. The problem comes, of course, when tantrums occur frequently and begin wearing on relationships and damaging people.

It's natural to get angry. Anger is a physiological state of readiness that prepares you to act when you're threatened or hurt. Nothing more.

Once you experience anger, however, you have choices as to how you express it. If you erupt whenever you're frustrated, you're not deciding how to behave. You become automatic. Your habits take control of you. You hurt other people.

GAINING SELF-CONTROL. The most common excuse adults use for tantrums is "I just can't control myself." But it's not that adults can't control their behavior—it's that sometimes they don't. The assumption adults make, that they are driven by feelings they can't control is convenient—but not accurate. Adults are totally responsible for their anger-outbursts and can—if they choose—change the way they express anger.

One reason adult tantrum-takers often don't think about changing themselves is that they typically blame others for their tantrums: "You annoyed me," "You got on my nerves," "You made me lose my cool."

The assumption adults make that they are driven by feelings they can't control is convenient—but not accurate.

The truth is, however, that no one can make you explode—you alone are responsible for that decision. To reflect the fact you're in charge, then, you need to explain your loss of control in reference to yourself: "I let your behavior annoy me," "I let you get on my nerves," "I made me lose my cool."

The fact that anger is a choice—and that you are in charge—is actually good news because having a choice paves the way for bringing anger-expressions under control.

HOW DO I CHANGE? The first step is to face yourself squarely. Do you want to change? Do you want to take full control of your life? Are you willing to spend the energy required to stay ahead of your anger? And, finally, are you willing to change the negative outcome of encounters with others?

When people have anger explosions, their unwitting goal is usually to hurt or humiliate others, to make them feel guilty, or to retaliate. To successfully change your anger pattern, then, you have to commit to working through the problem and leaving the encounter without resentment—no easy task if your aim in the past has been to punish.

If you're ready to commit to a change program, here are steps you can take:

• Start paying attention to physiological signals that warn you're getting angry. Maybe your face flushes, your body gets light or your muscles clench when you get close to exploding. These signals indicate your mood is about to get out of control.

• Keep a daily anger diary and record each time you become angry. Do an "anger autopsy" to discover the situations and events that trigger your anger. You will find patterns and you can then plan ahead to handle your anger differently.

• Record in your diary what you say to yourself when you're angry. You feed your anger with your own self-statements. Who does he think he is? "He can't do this because he is." "I'm going to show him," are all examples of "hot thoughts" that inflame anger.

Labeling other people ("You jerk!") or their actions ("That was rude!") is a form of "hot thoughts" that will fire up your anger. Identify specific behaviors of others that hurt you—and avoid gross generalizations that stereotype others and feed your fury.

• Practice exchanging "hot thoughts" for "cool thoughts"—thoughts that cool you down rather than heat you up. For example: "I need to keep my cool, or this situation could really get out of hand—I can cope. Take deep breaths. That's right. That feels better."

• Avoid "hot thoughts" in which you invent negative motives that "explain" the behavior of others: "She's unfair," "He's just like that," "She's stupid."

Instead, concentrate on "cool thoughts" sympathetic to the other person's position: "He must be very hurt by something I've done to insult me like that."

• Notice your self-statements. If they read "red-hot," delay—any response until you've cooled down.

• Use a key word like "Stop!" or "Think!" when you realize your physiological warning signals are flashing or your self-statements are "red-hot."

Type As: Undefined link with heart disease

By MICHAEL UNGER
Newsday

In the decade since two heart specialists revealed a link between a special behavior pattern and the risk of heart disease, the label "Type A" has become almost a household phrase to describe almost any driven, stress-related workaholic who can barely contain their underlying hostility.

The concept has led to a wealth of new behavioral research—and with it, some controversial and contradictory results. For example: —Recent research suggests that certain Type A behaviors, especially hostility, may be more important in causing heart disease than others. Not all hard-driving, competitive achievers will get heart disease. And some people with the more relaxed and less competitive Type-B personality will have fatal heart attacks.

Some controversial new research—in fact—fails to show any link between behavior and heart disease. The general thinking in the field is that while there may be some misgivings about particular aspects of the Type A theory, the basic concept is valid. The whole field is beginning to recognize that it's not quite as simple as just Type A, Type B, said psychologist Aron W. Siegman of the University of Maryland at Baltimore, who is among those studying aspects of Type A behavior. "Some researchers have jumped to the conclusion that Type A was a mistake. I don't agree with that."

Siegman and other scientists believe that the newer studies, rather than undercutting the Type A theory, are leading to a better understanding of how Type A behavior may contribute to heart disease, and to ways it can be treated.

Since the best seller "Type A Behavior and Your Heart" by cardiologists Dr. Meyer Friedman and Dr. Ray H. Rosenman appeared in 1974, numerous doctors and federal health authorities have come to treat Type A behavior as a separate and equally important risk factor for heart disease.

The concept of Type A personality emerged in the late 1950s from Rosenman and Friedman's controlled studies of thousands of people they observed for up to 12 years. The most important of these involved 3,500 healthy men who were given 16-minute interviews about their work, eating, talking, thinking and reading habits. They were classified as Type A according to a constellation of characteristics. By the time this study was complete, the researchers found that 178 of the 257 men who had subsequent heart attacks were those assessed initially as Type A personalities.

Consider options when investing in a bike

By JOHN LEHRER
Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Maybe you'd like to treat yourself to a new bike this year, but you don't know where to start.

If you haven't ridden a bike since you were a kid, you're in for a big surprise because the bicycles that are widely available today are better machines—and better values—than ever. And there are so many more of them.

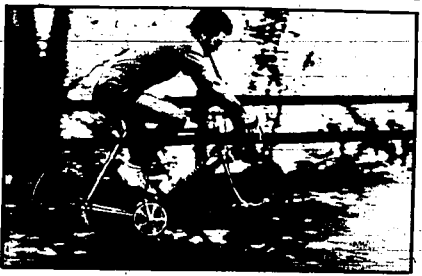

There are three kinds of bikes you ought to consider. All are lightweight and have 10 to 18 speeds, alloy components, drop handlebars and narrow, high-pressure tires.

Racing bicycles are not just for racing. Of the three, they are the lightest and most responsive. Performance-oriented, with a slightly harsh ride, they are the Porsche of the two-wheeled set. Price range: $500 to $2,000.

Touring bicycles are designed for comfort and stability. They have a wide range of gears and heavy-duty wheels and tires; they're made to carry heavy loads for long distances over varied terrain. Price range: $300 to $1,000.

Sport/recreational bicycles are hybrids, a compromise in design between touring and racing bikes. They're more comfortable than racing bicycles but not as nimble; they're lighter than touring bikes and more responsive. For most recreational riding (and many triathlons), they're the best choice. Price range: $200 to $1,000.

You can use a sport/recreational bike for occasional touring, so unless you plan to do long-distance touring, you probably don't need a touring bike. If you plan to use a bicycle to train or simply like the feel of a really responsive machine under you, you might like a racing bike—but, although I own three (and don't race), I'm a little hesitant to recommend it as an only bike, especially to a person who hasn't ridden at all in a long while. Racing bikes are a little less comfortable, a little less forgiving than sport/recreational bikes. For most people, a better choice for a new bicycle is probably a high-quality sport/recreational bike that emphasizes the features found on racing bikes: lightweight wheels, tires and components.

A quality bicycle should last 10 to 20 years with care

Ten years ago most quality bicycles were made in Europe. Today, most come from Japan and Taiwan—but don't overlook those bicycles made by American manufacturers, such as Schwinn, Specialized, Trek and Cannondale. A good bike should last anywhere from 10 to 20 years. Individual components, however, may periodically need to be replaced.

The more you intend to ride, the more you should be willing to spend on a bike. My experience with bicycles has taught me that you pretty much get what you pay for. In general, more expensive bicycles perform better and last longer than cheaper bicycles. You can get a perfectly good bicycle for $300; an excellent bicycle for $800. The functional differences between a bike that costs $600 and one that costs $1,000 are far less than the differences between a bike that costs $300 and one that costs $500.

When you've decided what type of bike you want to buy and picked out the shop where you'll probably buy it, you'll need to know what to look for. Here are the most important features:

FRAME: The frame is the heart and soul of a bicycle and will largely determine a bicycle's responsiveness and handling qualities. Look for "batted chromoly tubing" in the frame you buy. This means that you'll be getting the best steel (chrome-molybdenum) and that the tubes will be lighter in the middle and thicker at the ends (tapered), where there's greater stress. Of course, not all bicycle frames are made of steel. You should also consider an aluminum-frame bicycle, such as Vitus, Cannondale, Kettler or Klein. They're worth a look and a test ride because they're just as good as steel bikes even though they ride differently.

WHEELS: If you spend $300 or more on a bicycle, it will have good hubs and light alloy rims, which are stronger than steel rims. Light wheels really make a difference in the way the bike rides, so if you're trying to decide between two bikes that you like a lot, get the one with the stronger, lighter wheels and tires. You'll be better off with clincher "wired-on" tires than with sew-on racing tires. Get one- or one-and-one-eighth-inch tires. If the streets you ride on are in really bad condition or have a lot of debris on them, use the latter, with a Kevlar or mesh-steel belt for better protection.

The same is true for components, the brakes, pedals, derailleurs, seat post, chainwheel, handlebars and so on that your new bike comes equipped with. My advice is: don't worry about them. Today any bicycle that costs more than $200 will have perfectly good components on it. Some are prettier and have a smoother, more polished finish than others, and top-of-the-line components will last longer, but any of the component groups on the bikes you'll be considering will give years of trouble-free service.

The most common brand names in components are Shimano and SunTour. The Japanese giants, you'll also find Campagnolo, Mavic, Galli, Modolo, Simplex and a host of other brands. The sales person you deal with can give you a good idea of whether it's worth it to buy slightly more expensive components.

The same components are used throughout the industry on all different brands of bicycles. (The brand name refers only to the frame.) Trust your bike dealer; if you've picked a good shop, it will have three or four good brands available.

Just as important as a bicycle's features is its fit. Make sure you get a frame that fits you.

Take drugs wisely

ATLANTA (AP) — Surveys show that 50 percent of all prescription medications are taken incorrectly.

According to the Arthritis Foundation, here are five simple questions to ask when a drug is prescribed for you:

- What is the name of the drug, and what is it supposed to do?
- How and when do I take it, and when do I stop using it?
- What food, drinks, other drugs or activities should I avoid while taking the drug?
- What are the side effects, and what should I do if they occur?
- Is there any written information available about the drug?

Hypoglycemia test confuses

DEAR DR. LAMB: I have read that hypoglycemia is a symptom of other disorders rather than a condition in itself. But my doctor isn't checking for anything else. I was diagnosed as having hypoglycemia over a year ago. I am on a sugar-free, high-protein diet to control the symptoms (headaches, leg pains, weakness, tiredness and anxiety). I am on no medication for the condition.

I do not understand how one two-hour glucose tolerance test could be high, up to 200 with 2-plus urine, and another low, under 50.

DEAR READER: The real test of whether you have hypoglycemia or not is if you have a low blood glucose level at the same time you have symptoms. If you have symptoms and your blood glucose is normal, or if you have a low blood glucose level and do not have symptoms, you cannot make a diagnosis of hypoglycemia.

The usual response to glucose loading is a sharp rise in the blood glucose level, and then a return to near normal within two hours. I would consider it unusual to have a normal fasting blood glucose level and have a low level below 50 at two hours. That would be a good reason to repeat the test.

Monet beset by cataracts

Los Angeles Times Syndicate
 "Today I am almost blind," Impressionist painter Claude Monet wrote in May 1922, "and I have to renounce work completely."
 Six months later, he would undergo a cataract operation in an effort to restore his vision. But the artist continued to suffer spells of despair, largely because of his difficulty adjusting to changes in vision that followed the operation.
 "The letters, recently acquired by the French Ophthalmologic Society, are discussed by Dr. James G. Ravin in the Journal of the American Medical Association."
 The vision problems, Ravin writes, contributed to the lack of detail and color subtlety in Monet's later works.
 "It is to my great chagrin that I regret having had this fatal operation," Monet wrote to Dr. Charles Couleau when, six months after the surgery, it turned out he would need a second operation. "Pardon me for speaking so frankly, and let me tell you that it is criminal to have put me in this situation."

Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

If your fasting blood glucose level is low, and associated with symptoms, it says a lot about the cause of hypoglycemia and deserves further study to see if you have an underlying medical problem that is causing low levels.

In reactive hypoglycemia it is common to have a high blood glucose level, followed by an abnormally low level, which causes symptoms. This form of hypoglycemia is always triggered by eating something that causes a sharp rise in blood glucose, even when the fasting glucose level is normal.

It is a bit unusual to just study a two-hour glucose-tolerance-test-for-hypoglycemia, unless the patient develops symptoms and a low level that early in the test. The usual test is a five-hour test.

Incidentally, many normal people have very low blood glucose levels and no symptoms. Values below 35 have been observed in healthy people without hypoglycemia.

DEAR DR. LAMB: I am writing to ask about a real problem—alcohol. When drinking the stuff, can it affect a male so that he cannot father children? Can it lower his sperm count so if you get pregnant you will only carry the baby about three months and have a miscarriage? I've been checked by my gynecologist and my body is fine. It's my husband I'm worried about.

DEAR READER: Alcohol will decrease a man's sexual performance, but to my knowledge there are no studies that show that a man's use of alcohol will result in a miscarriage of a pregnancy. It could decrease the sperm count, as alcohol does decrease the level of testosterone in the body.

Occasionally, a reasonable amount of alcohol may calm an anxious male and give him the courage to improve his performance. But the real effect of alcohol was well stated in Shakespeare's Macbeth, wherein Porter says, "Lechery, it provokes, and provokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance." Some men "think" their performance is improved but often they are like the drunk who thinks his driving has improved after drinking.

Exercise and pregnancy can mix

By KATHIE DAVIS

goals and your routines to accommodate your changing body.

Rest. Be careful. Take care of yourself — these are the warnings society has traditionally given the mother-to-be, treating her as though she were an invalid. No wonder it's easy for a pregnant woman to find her fitness level deteriorating just when she most needs extra strength for motherhood.

Maternal fitness programs offer the pregnant woman the opportunity to take care of herself and maintain her present level of fitness. They also provide the emotional and psychological support most women value during this special time in their lives. In a pregnancy exercise class, the beautiful body is a pear-shaped one.

If you are an avid dance exerciser, you may be thinking, "I don't need a special program, I'll just stay in my regular class." That's possible, if you and your instructor are willing to adjust your exercise

As a pregnant exerciser, you're not just a regular student with extra weight around the middle. During pregnancy, your blood volume increases, your ligaments soften to prepare for the birth process, your pelvis becomes flexible and your posture and balance change as the fetus grows. All of these changes have a direct influence on the kind of exercises you can and should be doing.

Pregnancy is not a time to lose weight, to begin training for an aerobics competition or to try to match the person next to you in class leg lift for leg lift. Pregnancy is a time to listen to your body, keep yourself fit, reduce pregnancy-related discomforts and strengthen the muscles you will need while carrying and giving birth to your child. While it's possible to accomplish these goals in a regular class, it's easier to do so within the supportive environment of a prenatal/postpartum program.

Coping with minor outdoor injuries

By SPORTS FIELD
A Hearst Magazine

Backpackers, hunters and fishermen often survive for years in their wilderness sports without a life-threatening injury — but they are plagued by sprains, upset stomachs and infections.

Wilderness medical texts depict ways to handle dramatic accidents involving fractures and concussions but, according to an article in the August issue of Sports Field, most outdoor injuries are more inconvenient than dangerous and involve sprains and strains of feet, legs and lower back.

The National Outdoor Leadership School in Lander, Wyo., which has put thousands of students through the backcountry of the Rockies, Baja and Alaska, estimates that more than 50 percent of their total injuries were sprains, sprains and tendonitis of the lower extremities and back.

These injuries were followed in frequency by diarrhea and other gastrointestinal disorders, then by soft tissue injuries such as cuts and by infections caused by poor hygiene following injury. Fractures made up less than 13 percent of the school's injuries.

Rocky Mountain, Grand Teton and

The National Outdoor Leadership School... estimates that more than 50 percent of their total injuries were sprains, sprains and tendonitis of the lower extremities and back.

Glacier National Parks reported that by far the most frequent injuries were to the lower extremities — twists, strains and sprains. Next came cuts, lacerations and puncture wounds that go with spills on the trail.

Two other categories of injury that can make life miserable for hikers are blisters and sore backs and necks caused by carrying packs.

The way to avoid these twin troubles is through conditioning. Wear hiking boots for short periods during the week before taking them into the outdoors. Carry a pack on short training jaunts, gradually increasing the load.

Put adhesive tape and/or mofeogum on your heels before starting a long hike. If you feel painful rubbing on the trail, stop at once before the "damage" becomes irreparable.

If a blister is small, it can be cushioned by a piece of mofeogum with a hole the size of the blister cut out in the center. Bigger blisters must be popped. Clean the blister with betadine-soaked sterile gauze, puncture or lance it at its bottom edge with a sterilized needle or scalpel, squeeze out the fluid and dress it, using extra cushioning to prevent further injury. Achilles tendonitis, an inflammation of the tendon sheath at the back of the ankle, can be eased by one-eighth to one-half-inch padding of the heel to decrease the stretch in the tendon.

Muscle strains respond to heat. Sprains should be treated with elevation and application of cold for the first two days, then heat thereafter. If the sprain occurs away from camp, a combination of cold — dunking a sprained ankle in a mountain stream — and immobilizing with an elastic bandage or adhesive tape can patch you up so you can get back to camp.

Knee sprains can be more serious than ankle sprains, and can be relieved somewhat by a figure-eight bandage. But Ted Kerasote warns in Sports Field that knee sprains may require splinting and a crutch or litter evacuation.

'Deet' repellent warning sounded

By DON COLBURN
The Washington Post

Prolonged or excessive use of high-concentration insect repellents should be avoided because it can cause allergic and toxic reactions. The Medical Letter reports.

The most effective insect repellent applied to the skin is the chemical N,N-diethyl-m-toluamide (DEET).

But medical journals report a growing number of serious human reactions to deet, which is absord through the skin. Even in low concentrations, it can cause hives and skin rashes.

The Medical Letter, a newsletter covering the pharmaceutical industry, cited two reports of more serious effects: A woman went into anaphylactic shock after applying deet to her face, and a child applied a 52 percent solution of deet repellent, and an 8-year-old girl developed a rash and altered behavior after a few days' use of 15 percent deet and then had a grand mal seizure within hours of her test. In another report, a child containing almost 100 percent deet, the newsletter says, are still unknown.

Some widely available liquid repellents, including Jungle Plus; Muskol and Ben's 100 — contain 100 percent deet.

In the early days of its use, before the 1970s, deet caused toxic and allergic reactions mainly after excessive or prolonged use by children. But with the growing availability of high-concentration repellents, warns the Letter, "hazard exposure to smaller amounts has caused serious reactions in children and adults."

The newsletter's conclusion: Repellents with lower concentrations of deet may have to be applied more often, but are usually less oily and cosmetically more acceptable, and they may be safer.

Cigarette sales continue to fall

By Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Per capita cigarette consumption in the United States has been declining gradually since 1973, the Federal Trade Commission reports. Now, total sales of cigarettes — which continued to rise until 1982 — are edging down, too.

Sales peaked at 636 billion cigarettes in 1981, slipped to 622 billion in 1982 and fell nearly 8 percent to 584 billion in the 1983, the last year for which complete sales data are available.

Advertising for cigarettes — banned on television since 1971 — continues to increase in other media. Tobacco companies, which lead all other national advertisers in newspaper ad buying, spent $2.7 billion on cigarette ads in 1983, an increase of 36 percent over the year before.

A small but growing number of newspapers have banned advertising of tobacco products in their pages, reports the newsletter Consumer Newsweekly. The group now totals 16 newspapers.

7.5% tax hike needed, city analysis says

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A 7.5 percent increase in property taxes is necessary to balance the Twin Falls city budget of $11,527,884 in 1985-86, an analysis of the budget shows.

A public hearing on the proposed 1985-86 budget will be held at 7 p.m. today in council chambers at City Hall.

Besides the property tax increase, city officials are planning to cut positions and contract more services to cover a 3-percent increase in operating costs and a one-time, non-recurring wage increase. The budget also anticipates a decrease in state money.

State figures for 1985 are not yet complete, but Twin Falls is expecting about $414,000 next year from state sales taxes, about $1,000 less than this year.

Liquor-tax revenue will be about $85,000, about the same as this year but $29,000 less than 1984. And highway user and gas tax revenues are expected to fall by about $21,000.

The light budget is nothing new. In the last four years, inflation has exceeded operating revenue increases. City Manager Tom Courtney says.

Property taxes are scheduled to be increased the usual 5 percent allowed under state law. But city officials say they are also having to increase them 2.5 percent to cover costs exempt from the tax ceiling.

Most of the exempt levy will cover the increased costs of liability insurance that Twin Falls and most cities across the nation are facing.

While the city would be increasing wages an average of 3 percent, personnel-related costs would increase by less than one-half percent.

Much of that is because of the city's move toward contracting more services to private enterprise rather than paying city employees for them. Next year, the work of 23 city employees will be contracted out. The budget is adopted as is.

That includes employees who worked at the city sewer plant before the city contracted services to Operations Management International in May. Most of those employees were rehired by OMI.

The success of that venture has led the City Council planning to contract street sweeping services, surveying and project inspections to private firms.

The city also wants to turn electrical inspection over to the state. The state would give 10 percent of fees collected in Twin Falls to the city.

TOM COURTNEY
Tight budget nothing new ly. Now the city is paying an Inspector $25,000 but only taking in $10,000 in fees.

Four more positions would be cut as the result of consolidation of police and fire services. The positions have been vacant for much of the current year, with cross-trained officers covering the vacancies.

Some of the other changes proposed for city government funds in the coming year are as follows:

- Airport Fund. The city will have to compensate for a reduced operating budget at the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport, following an announcement by Twin Falls County Commissioners that the county is reducing its support from about $75,000 to $25,000.

- The county has since announced that more aggressive collection of fines levied in Fifth District Court for offenses committed in city limits should mean increased revenue for the city.

- The City Council has considered charging a boarding fee, but that appears to be impractical.

- Other money-saving measures being considered include cutting maintenance, security and janitorial services. Increases in fees are also being considered.

- Capital Improvement Fund. The coming year should be the final one that an annual payment of $400,000 is to the City Council planning to fund a street sweeping program. Consequently, the city plans to concentrate on street projects and replacing equipment that may not be affordable in future years.

- The city would keep $500,000 in a fund.

Dig deep, Glass tells crowd as crusade winds up its run

Bill Glass, a well-known evangelist, told a crowd of about 1,000 people at the Bill Glass Crusade for Christ that the crusade was not just a religious event, but a spiritual battle.

Glass said that the crusade was a battle against the forces of Satan, and that the only way to win was through faith in Jesus Christ. He urged the crowd to dig deep for their own hearts and to seek forgiveness for their sins.

The crusade, which was held in the Twin Falls area, was the largest of its kind in the region. It was organized by the Bill Glass Crusade for Christ, a national organization.

Glenns Ferry trustees consider building buy

By DIANA HOOLEY
Times-News correspondent

GLENN'S FERRY — Glenns Ferry School District Trustees are investigating the possibility of purchasing the special education building behind the school to gain needed classroom and office space.

The federally-owned building must be purchased within specific guidelines, said Superintendent Jim Garrett. "I just hate to see classroom space the school needs and the best classroom space be used for offices," Jucker said.

Jucker said the recent bond levy that failed was proposed because the school needed more classroom space for the Junior high students. He said he didn't see any justification in taking classroom space to make offices, especially when there has been no increase in office staff.

students. Also, the administrative offices of the school are in the center of the building, surrounded by personnel, teachers and students, he said, and management of the district could be greatly enhanced in another location.

School patrons Jim and Judy Jucker told trustees they objected to the special education building being used for anything other than classrooms. ## Railroad closures might be for good

UP doesn't expect agencies to reopen

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The Union Pacific Railroad expects the closures of 18 railroad agencies in Idaho to become permanent after a one-year trial period allowed by state officials last week, a railroad spokesman says.

"Almost all previous closings have had a trial period. I don't know of one that we've had to reopen based on customer demand," said Dick Tischer, regional director of public relations.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission allowed the closures Friday after more than 1½ years of consideration. In its order, the commission said it will decide in one year whether the stations can be shut permanently. It ordered eight others to remain open.

Union Pacific will start closing stations as quickly as possible, Tischer said. "I would guess that within the next 10 days or two weeks, we'll have most of them closed," he said. Stations marked for closure are:

- Magic Valley — Buhl, Burley, Jerome-Wendell and Mindock, Shoshone-Gooding, Twin Falls and Rupert would remain open.

- Southeast Idaho — American Falls, Blackfoot, Arco, Shelley and Rexburg. Union Pacific also will close two of three stations at St. Anthony, Ashton or Newdale, Idaho Falls and Pocatello would remain open.

- Southwest Idaho — Glenns Ferry-Mountain Home, Caldwell, Payette, Parma and Cascade, Boise, Weiser, Emmett and Nampa would remain open.

- Panhandle — Coeur d'Alene and Orofino-Camas Prairie Railroad. Sandpoint-Bonners Ferry remain open on shared-time basis. Kellogg, Moscow, Lewiston and Spokane, Wash., which serves part of Idaho, would remain open.

In five hearings, the Union Pacific had argued that maintaining an agent-in-the-town is wasteful because they do little more than pick up the phone and call a centralized service center. The railroad is substituting toll-free phone service for the agents. It will save close to $1 million a year from the shut-downs, he said.

The agents involved are members of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks. At hearings, union representatives said the agents check track conditions, locate misplaced cars and negotiate bills of lading in addition to passing on freight orders to the computerized centers.

A spokesman for the union could not be located late last week. Tischer said most of the agents have seniority and will be able to retire or to obtain jobs at other stations.

Although they agreed with Friday's action, commissioners Conley Ward and Perry Swisher filed statements objecting to what they consider withdrawal of the railroad from rural areas.

John Duke, PUC director of regulated carriers, said that during the one-year trial, the commission could reopen or order permanent closings of any of the stations.

Utah gets ready for more 'hoppers'

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Even as Utah's 1984 war against grasshoppers wanes, state agriculture officials are marshalling their forces for another assault on the crop-crunching insects next year.

Some 1.3 million acres of crop and rangeland have been sprayed this summer, but farm officials estimate that one-tenth of the Utah's annual crop production was lost to grasshoppers and crickets.

Several herds of cattle have been sold due to a lack of feed, and the rest of feeding the remainder is rising. Some cattle ranchers plan to move their herds out of summer pasture early and ship the animals off to winter ranges in the western Utah desert, which also have been decimated by grasshoppers.

"Our biggest worry right now is that the winter ranges won't be adequate," said Booth Wallentine, executive vice president of the Utah Farm Bureau.

Direct losses to farmers have been estimated at $55 million, a figure five times greater than in 1984, when an emergency appropriation was necessary to fight the insects.

This year, spraying began in mid-June. Officials are scrambling for federal funding, and almost immediately, the project was beset by problems. The grasshopper infestation came a month earlier than expected, government regulations kept many acres out of the program. World War II vintage aircraft used for spraying kept breaking down and there was a shortage of pesticides.

Wallentine credited the program with keeping the worst grasshopper infestation in the state's history from reaching disastrous proportions. He believes that next year's problem will be reduced because of this year's action.

"We have to credit those people in the Utah Department of Agriculture and Tom Crowe in the (federal) Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service with doing a marvelous job with their limited resources," Wallentine said.

"Farm Bureau believes the program went well in the areas that were sprayed, but only a small proportion of the state was sprayed," he said.

Officials now are concentrating on several fronts for next year's war.

The state will be asked to appropriate $60,000 to replace money used this year from a $1 million eradication program approved by the 1984 Utah Legislature.

And the Farm Bureau plans to act quickly to organize farmers in cooperative spraying projects.

will also have to consider cutting the book budget by as much as a third, he says.

Sewer and water fund. Residents would see a monthly drop of $1.05 from their city bill, although that would be offset by a new street-sweeping fee.

City officials estimated that at current rates, a surplus of $29,000 would be generated. The surplus is due to savings generated by contracting waste water treatment to OMI and the expiration of the 1985 water bond.

State law prohibits the city from using surpluses from sewer and water fees to be transferred to other areas of the budget.

Hopeful seeks equal-time waiver

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — McIlduff, an Idaho Falls radio executive who is considering running for a seat in Congress, says he will ask other candidates to sign a waiver of the equal-time law so he can be a candidate.

"If the other Republican candidates will sign this waiver, I would be able to continue carrying a living while running for the congressional seat," Richardson said in a news release.

The Federal Communications Commission makes it possible to obtain waivers through Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act, which states that a radio or television station can be required to give equal time to all qualified candidates.

Such a requirement is discriminatory, said Richardson, who does sports broadcasting and commercials for a local radio station. "It means that a broadcaster has to give up his job or give equal time to qualified opponents," Richardson said he hoped GOP candidates would sign the waiver, since Republican candidates maintain they favor getting the government out of people's lives.

"Perhaps, someday, broadcasters will achieve full First Amendment rights, equal to all others," he said. "In the meantime, I can hope for a favorable response from my fellow congressional candidates."

Richardson said that if he runs for Congress he will leave the air from all newscasts; editorials, interviews and opinion shows.

Man arrested for DUI after injury-accident

BLAINE — A Jerome man has been arrested for driving while under the influence of intoxicants after a Saturday morning accident south of Berger.

Police said Dan Ford, 21, of Jerome, was traveling northbound on U.S. 99 Saturday about 10:15 a.m. when his 1974 Ford Bronco hit a 1966 four-door Ford, which was jacked up off the edge of the road where its owner, 70-year-old Clarence Eldredge of Elko was fixing a flat right-rear tire.

Passengers from both vehicles were treated and released at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center emergency room, the nursing supervisor said.

The site of the accident "was milepost 30 about five miles south of Berger, near the gravel pit, police said.

Eldredge also had been traveling northbound before the tire went flat. Police said Ford's Bronco appeared to side-swipe the Eldredge vehicle, went out of control of the east side of the road and through a barbed wire fence before it rolled, police said.

Eldredge's passenger, 77-year-old Mary Eldredge, was thrown from the car and transported to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, Ford, Clarence Eldredge, and Ford's car, police said. Eldredge's vehicle suffered $1,000 damage to the left rear end and Ford's Bronco suffered $3,000 damage to the right front end.

No seatbelts were worn in either car, police said.

A year of travail

From drought to 'hoppers' to fires, Idaho farmers have been hard hit

By QUANE KENYON
The Associated Press

BOISE — A lot of Idaho farmers are probably turning their eyes to the skies these days and asking, "What's next?"

"It was a long year for farmers in a state where agriculture is the mainstay of the economy. Weather that early in the year promised to help farmers cope with serious financial problems instead helped hatch a record-setting crop of grasshoppers that threatened to wipe out many growers.

And a wet, early spring, followed by weeks of warm, dry temperatures set the stage for what's turning out to be a very bad range and forest fire season.

In the southern Idaho farm belt, generous moisture from the skies has run dry, producing near-drought conditions.

In some individual cases, the grasshopper problems could very well be the final straw for farmers.

— Richard Rush

"In some individual cases, the grasshopper problems could very well be the final straw for farmers," says State Agriculture Director Richard Rush. Even before the natural problems, a survey showed up to one-third of Idaho farmers had approximately 25,000 farmers were in severe financial trouble.

"Many farmers spent $30,000 to $40,000 spraying their own fields against grasshoppers, and the money just really wasn't available in addition to their regular costs," he said.

Rush and others say the unexpected costs of battling grasshoppers may be enough to push some under. "It was only 18 months ago, but farmers in some of the same areas were battling hordes of jackrabbits to save their crops. Rabbit populations in some areas reached 10-year peaks and caused at least $10 million damage to crops.

Last summer, grasshoppers started to build up, but went essentially untreated until late August. By then, the federal effort was in full swing. Less than $1 million was made available to spray huge grasshopper infestations on federal lands adjoining private farms and ranches.

Most farm experts knew there would be a grasshopper problem this year from age-old last summer weather conditions were almost perfect for grasshoppers in spring. In fact, they're so good that grasshoppers became a problem in northern Idaho, which is rarely hit.

"The federal machinery geared up in late spring for a spraying project that eventually covered 8.3 million acres in Idaho alone. Congress wound up putting $55 million into spraying federal land in Western Idaho. That effort included more than $12 million in Idaho alone.

But even spraying large tracts of land in Idaho wasn't without problems. For one, when large areas are sprayed for grasshoppers, other insects fall victim. That included bees, used in southern Idaho both to produce honey and to pollinate crops.

"The loss to the honey and bee industries, although not significant to the total loss, is a big one. The bee industry is a small one, and it was hard-hit," Rush said.

Mort Krain, a Twin Falls beekeeper, said he kept his bee colonies on the move for nearly six weeks in a futile effort to dodge the "swarm" of public and private spray planes.

"I've never seen a crop this year. I'm not sure what we're going to do," he said.

Marsing beekeeper Golden Millet faces similar problems. He said he lost 1,200 bee colonies on a single clover field south of Mountain Home. And he says he may be sued by the field owner for $200,000 in crop losses because he failed to fulfill his contract to pollinate the crop.

There was more than one publicly expressed hope that history would repeat itself in the southern Idaho farm belt, an area that is heavily Mormon. Shortly after Mormon pioneers entered the Salt Lake Valley in 1847 and started farming, the first crops were threatened by an invasion of crickets similar to this year's grasshopper hordes.

that dwarfed that requirement. When the bugs were swarming, some farmers say they counted up to 300 per square yard. Wheat harvesters reported as many hoppers per bushel as wheat.

"It was more like 30 to 50 per square yard in the worst areas," said Rush. "But we found they do like grain such as wheat, and they were very active in alfalfa fields," he said. They didn't much like bean plants, but loved hay.

And when the hoppers hit city areas such as Pocatello and Boise, homeowners found grasshoppers would chew up almost anything green and moist.

In late June, a string of near-record hot days dried vegetation, and suddenly forest and range fires became a problem.

The two natural calamities in some areas erased each other. More than 20,000 acres of range in Blaine County, southeast of Boise, were lost to grasshoppers, was left untreated because range fires produced a natural solution.

Officials say the summer range and forest fires are likely to continue through the end of September, when normally cooler temperatures and precipitation end the problem.

But there's no question it has been a long summer. In Idaho as elsewhere in the West, the Boise Interagency Fire Center, which coordinates federal firefighting activities, said through last week nearly 70,000 fires had been reported across the country this year, with 2,256,925 acres burned.

"It's probably the most severe fire season we have had since 1932," said the center's director, Arnold Hartigan. "BIFC had 17,000 to 18,000 firefighters battling major blazes in California, Idaho, Montana and Oregon in early July. It's probably the largest mobilization we've ever had over the shortest time and over the largest geographical area in our history," said Hartigan.

We have no honey crop this year. I'm not sure what we're going to do.

— Mort Krain

So far this summer, the Intermountain Region of the U.S. Forest Service, which covers Utah, Idaho, Nevada and western Wyoming, has reported 67,000 acres of forest fires. The five-year average is 39,000 acres.

So far, the fire estimates are in the millions to tens of millions of acres. Information officials at the U.S. Forest Service said it is pretty difficult to estimate such an area, and wildfire losses are not known.

The Intermountain region has spent more than $2 million battling fires. Each time a forest fire breaks out, the Forest Service estimates the suppressed acreage is 10 times the area of the fire.

In the northern region, headwaters of the Missouri, Mont. the fire bill has hit $1.5 million, said Hartigan. Other areas are also burning.

It's probably the most severe fire season we've had in the past 25 to 30 years.

— Arnold Hartigan

This year, he said, burned acreage is higher than usual. In some wilderness areas, federal agencies are letting fires burn themselves out if no resources are threatened and the terrain would benefit from a burnoff.

Although it's been a severe fire season, it isn't the worst on record in the mountain area of 1978. More acres of timber were burned in the Intermountain Region. That year, the Mortar Creek blaze in central Idaho burned for weeks and ravaged 65,000 acres an area larger than the state of New Hampshire.

Rush said all the economic loss from grasshoppers won't be known for months — after farmers harvest what's left of their crops.

"Every county in Idaho is in a difficult position. They will have to walk through a complete, and compare the yields with average yields," he said.

Despite the afflictions, farmers haven't lost their sense of humor. "Usually, a feature of the Monticello County fair is a fat stock auction, in which young farmers offer off cattle.

This year they held a fat grasshopper sale, with spirited bidding for the biggest and fattest grasshoppers that could be found. There were plenty to choose from.

Earth First! radicals plan park protests

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — The radical Earth First! organization is calling for "satellite" protests in the area around Yellowstone National Park.

The organization sent a letter dated Aug. 2 to Wyoming and Montana Earth Firsters, asking members to participate in a "range of tasks" from local protesting perhaps to civil disobedience "in early to mid August."

The letter claims development projects, which are not specified, will further degrade the wild quality of the Yellowstone area and endanger the lives of grizzly bears and other irreplaceable members of the Yellowstone ecosystem.

"We're going to make this a major issue for us," Foreman said. "Some of the actions will be legal, some illegal." Foreman said his group is willing to use any tool in defense of wildlife.

Montana receives bearish responses to grizzly proposal

GREAT FALLS, Mont. (AP) — The prospect of inviting a bunch of grizzlies to take up residence is more than most Western states can bear, Montana has learned.

The state's Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks wrote to 16 states, three Canadian provinces and two territories asking if they would be willing to accept up to 25 grizzly bears a year to be reintroduced to former bear habitat.

All but two of the replies were a flat "no" or "no comment" or "humorous." "No," with the response essentially saying they simply did not have enough space for both people and the big predators.

Only Alberta and British Columbia said they might be willing to accept grizzlies on a case-by-case basis.

"We might reconsider our stand in this matter if Montana were willing to consider a trade of Alaskan wolves for Montana bears," wrote the director of the Kansas Fish and Game Commission said the state had 160 grizzly bears, "but we call them state legislators.

"They are unpredictable, can suggest an occasionally 'short-sighted, make terrible pets, but are generally not too destructive on our environment if handled carefully. State law forbids us from feeding, trapping or transplanting them."

Colorado based its reply on a 1982 resolution of the Colorado Wildlife Commission opposing so much as a suggestion of reintroducing either the gray (timber) wolf or the grizzly bear as free-roaming populations within the state of Colorado.

Utah regents seek college capital

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Faced with skyrocketing enrollments at Utah's nine colleges and universities, the Board of Regents has agreed to seek more than $101 million for capital developments and improvements.

The special meeting Saturday that followed a two-day retreat here, the regents decided to recommend that the Utah Legislature approve some $92 million in funding for construction, renovation or completion of 18 development projects and $3.7 million for capital improvements.

The regents postponed until next month discussion on how to approach lawmakers and Gov. Norm Bangerter with funding requests and whether to ask for the money in a lump sum or in yearly increments.

A list of 34 capital improvement projects, including 18 considered to have highest priority, would be sent to the State Building Board, said C. Gail Norris, associate commissioner of higher education.

The high-priority lists includes a 1,000-space parking lot, a business building and renovations at Utah Technical College at Salt Lake City, a storm drain system, storage building, and language and communications building at the University of Utah, a physical education building at Weber State College, a science building addition at Dixie College, a land purchase for parking and a computer and business building at Southern Utah State College and a science and technology building at Utah Technical College at Provo-Orem.

The list also includes education and agricultural education buildings at Utah State University and a renovation of the Old Main, a career center and institute building at Snow College, an industrial technology building at SJSU and a computer-technology building at the College of Eastern Utah.

In other action, the regents approved a bond resolution allowing the University of Utah to sell $27.5 million in revenue bonds. The board also gave approval for initial offerings for revenue bonds at Utah State University, Weber State College and Utah Technical College at Salt Lake.

Cache Valley grain yields dry up slightly

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — While irrigated crop yields in Cache Valley are expected to be as good or better than average this year, agricultural leaders say dry land operations have suffered from a lack of spring moisture and a hot, dry summer.

wheat and barley yields had dropped year to an average of 30 to 35 bushels per acre, compared to 55 to 60 bushels per acre during the past three years, said Stewart Butters, manager of widespread interest in the federal Western Grain Growers of Cache Valley, said his total crop volume will be down 25 percent from last

THE ACES BOBBY WOLFF
"Stone thrown at the right time is better than gold given at the wrong time."
When is the right time to draw trumps? "As soon as practicable" is a much better answer than
"as soon as possible."
South can make his diamond king and his club - down one.
Had East taken trump early, South would have had no problems scoring a club ruff.
The defense could then manage to lead a second round of trumps, and dummy would still have a trump left for a club ruff.
South can make his king against any defense by not playing until after he has played clubs.
Starting at trick two, he plays three rounds of clubs, West winning the third round. The defenders can draw only two trumps and South loses his losses to only a heart, a club and the ace of trumps.

Cowboys meet Lewiston in state semifinals

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

POCATELLO — Kasey Barthelemy, the hero of the Twin Falls Cowboys' 21-7 rout of Coeur d'Alene Saturday in the State American Legion Baseball Tournament, hadn't touched bat to ball all day when he came to the plate in the ninth inning Sunday against Moscow.

So, Moscow, relief pitcher Mark Bensen threw him a fast ball.

When they finally ran it down, the Cowboys were leading 12-6 and on the way to the tournament semifinals.

Bartholomew's two-run triple was typical of what Twin Falls was hitting again Sunday — everything.

The Cowboys' 14 hits, which gave them 96 in the two games they've played in the tournament, propelled them into an 8 p.m. meeting here today against eternal Legim-power Lewiston, a 6-3 winner over the Boise Gems in Sunday's other quarter-final.

It also guaranteed Twin Falls would finish no worse than third in a tournament for which it has not qualified since 1978.

"We're a good-hitting team but that's because we've worked on it a lot," said Cowboy coach Mike Tremayne. "I've thrown so much batting practice that my arm is about to fall off."

"Twin Falls is a good-hitting team and Lewiston is a great offensive team," said Moscow Coach Ron Goble, who has seen the Twins play frequently this season. "I think Lewiston's pitching is a little weaker this year, but you know they have that great winning tradition."

The winner of tonight's game will advance into Tuesday night's state championship game, while the loser must play the survivor of the consolation bracket earlier Tuesday.

"That could be anyone of five teams, depending on the outcome of Sunday's late Idaho Falls-Pocatello game that was in progress at press days."

Meridian became the first team eliminated, losing 8-7 to Coeur d'Alene. The Lumbermen will play Thursday.

The Gems This morning at 10 in a loser-out contest while the Idaho Falls-Pocatello morning is to square off against Moscow at 1 p.m.

The winners of those two games play at 5 p.m. to determine which advances into Tuesday.

For the Cowboys, who have scored 33 runs in this tournament and averaged 14 runs their last six games, meeting Lewiston tonight didn't seem unthinkable after Sunday's win.

"The kids sure want to go after that," said Tremayne. "I hope we don't choke it up but, hey, look at Sunday's late Idaho Falls-Pocatello what happened in the past two days."

"The kid has got a good curve ball," said Tremayne. "I was a little worried about that because we haven't hit against that many left-handers this year."

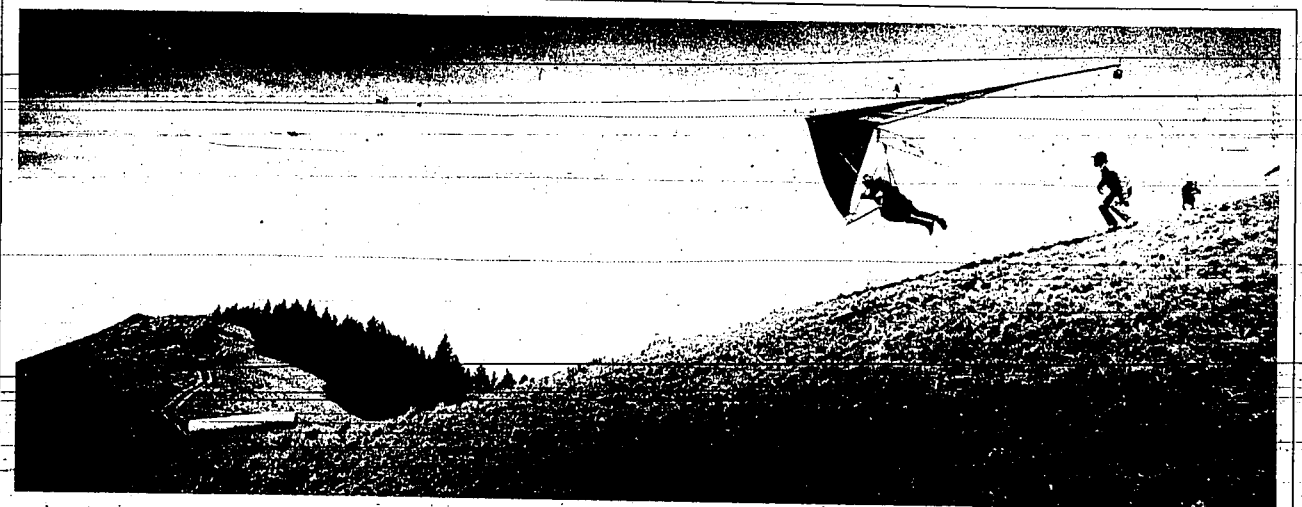

Tremayne also got a complete game from righthander Kevin Ames, bolstering the Cowboys' pitching prospects for the rest of the tournament.

"I was all over him during the first game," Tremayne said. "See Cowboys on Page D2."

Joining the birds in leaving gravity behind, a hang glider launches into space during the U.S. Hang Gliders' Association meet near Bellevue

Fans say hang gliding now one of America's safest sports

By DAVE LEWIS
Times-News correspondent

BELLEVUE — As a group, hang gliders are in search of respect — respect in the form of a good public image.

They admit that in its emerging years, the sport was dangerous because of poor equipment and few experienced pilots to teach beginners.

"Now, say competitors in the 'Sun Valley Spectacular' — a United States Hang Gliders Association meet this weekend in Blaine County — with improved knowledge and equipment the sport is safer. They say it is ready for acceptance from the general public, not just a few daring individuals willing to risk their lives for a quick thrill.

"They have improved these (gliders) so much that they are as safe as airplanes. Safer than motorcycles," said Frank Gillette of Burley while preparing his equipment for Saturday's competition that started on Bell Mountain, southeast of Bellevue.

Gillette was one of the sport's early fliers 15 years ago at Beaver Mountain, Utah, when gliders were first used by skiers to gain "big air" on the ski runs.

Gillette said he liked the sport so well that he virtually gave up skiing to stay with his new interest.

He pioneered hang gliding on Mount Harrison, which includes the Pomerelle Ski Area, and turned his hang-gliding avocation into a vocation for motorized, ultra-light aircraft: Magic Valley Sky Sales in Burley.

Although his business centers around the ultralights, Gillette said he always returns to the non-motorized version whenever possible.

"I still go back to this," he said. "It's true flying, just as the birds do. Just us the winds and hot air."

At 57, Gillette is the oldest of 19 competitors in the Sun Valley Spectacular, the fourth of four meets held this year in the USHGA's Region 5, which includes Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, South Dakota and North Dakota.

After the field was "blown out" Wednesday and Thursday because of high winds brought in with a frontal system passing through Idaho earlier this week, Gillette tied for fifth in Friday's competition by completing about 15 of the 37 miles to the pilots' "goal" three miles south of Galena Lodge in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area.

Gillette was disappointed in the distance, which is palmed beside the 30- and 45-mile distances he said he has gotten from Mount Harrison.

Because of the poor conditions created by wind and seasonally cold air, only one competitor, Howard Osterlund, made the goal.

Osterlund, the defending champion of the Sun Valley event, says the "thermals" — upward drafts of warm wind the gliders ride — normally reach 14,000 feet above sea level in Blaine County. On Saturday, however, they reached only about 11,000 feet, according to the 29-year-old machinist from San Jose, Calif.

Compared to Gillette, Osterlund is a newcomer to the sport.

Although he said his interest in the sport began about 1972, it wasn't until 1980 that he made his first flight. He has no regrets about the wait, however.

"(The wait) was actually to my benefit because the glider weren't exactly safe," he said.

Osterlund's successful run to the goal took two hours, 21 minutes and was made possible because he took off late in the competition and caught better winds than many of the competitors. The weather hasn't been the best for the event, however.

What looked like near-perfect conditions for an excellent meet was spoiled when the weather changed abruptly on Wednesday, the day the competition was to begin.

"Only the day before, Cindy Drozda of Boulder, Colo., made a 42-mile trip from Bell Mountain to Smiley Creek Lodge north of Galena Summit."

"It was really lucky that day," said the 27-year-old cabinetmaker, one of only a few women in the competition. "I was the only one (of five) that went that day that went anywhere."

After the two-day break because of the weather, Drozda said she did poorly in Friday's competition.

Like Osterlund, Drozda began hang gliding on the California coast five years ago. Osterlund is in his fifth year of competition, however, and Drozda only in her third.

"It was 22 when I started flying, just old enough to know what I was doing," she said.

"Few women compete as hang gliders," Drozda said. Although she said one reason is the macho image associated with the sport, she also blamed the "sport-death image" created by media coverage of early accidents and deaths in the sport for the women's reluctance to take it up.

She believes, however, more women will take up the sport as its image improves because of its better safety record.

Green turns back late Trevino bid for PGA championship

DENVER (AP) — Hubert Green counters-punched his way out of potential trouble and then won the PGA national championship Sunday when Lee Trevino, suffered self-inflicted putting damage.

"The thing that won it for me last year let me down this time," Trevino said of a $30 putter he purchased from a Dutch widow last year and used to win the 1984 PGA title.

"That heavy putter was perfect for the rain-softened greens at Shoal Creek a year ago.

"But it was too heavy for the hard, fast, slick surfaces of Cherry Hills and, as a result Trevino said, "I got defensive with the putter."

And it cost him the title.

He 3-putted four times in the final round.

The last time, on the 15th hole, dropped him out of a tie and gave Green the lead alone. In his head-to-head, 2-man struggle down the stretch.

Two holes later Trevino failed on a 6-footer for par.

That gave Green a 2-shot lead with one to play and he brought it home in a driving rainstorm, completing a comeback and ending what he called "a long dry spell."

"I think I'll favor this one more than the U.S. Open (which he won in 1977) — I was at the top of my golf game then. This time, folks thought I was down and out. And I was down and out."

Green was only 135th on the PGA's money winnings list last year.

"It's fun to come back up on top, and have other players slap you on the back and say 'well done' Green said. "It's good to hear those words again."

Trevino was the first to utter them, when Green finished with a hard-won round of 72, one over par but two ahead of the pack.

Green, 39, won this one with a 278 total, six shots under par.

Trevino scored an eagle-3 and four birdies and twice appeared to have Green on the run. But Trevino then suffered his putting miseries and Green was able to scramble out of trouble.

Green, 45, had a closing round of par 71 that left him two strokes short of a seventh major-tournament triumph. He finished, in a driving rain-storm with thunder rolling in the background, with a 280 total.

After the ninth hole, it was me and Lee," Hubert said. "Walking down three 10th fairway, he said, 'let's play some match play and have some fun.'"

They did.

No one else got into it.

Tze-Ming Chen of Taiwan and Andy Bean came on to tie for third at 281.

Bean shot a 68 in the mild, breezy weather that turned to threatening clouds and then a thunderstorm just as the leaders finished.

Chen, 32, is the older brother of Tze-Chung (T.C.) Chen, the little man who led through three rounds of the U.S. Open.

Tze-Ming, who hopes to join the U.S. tour soon, advanced with a 66 — a last-round 66 that lifted him to a 287 total.

Nick Price of South Africa, who once got to within a single shot of the lead, ended with a round of par 71 and 282.

Of all the challengers, however, only Price got into little contention. But after he bogeyed the ninth hole, it was a two-man race, match play, a head-to-head confrontation between two of the most accomplished shotmakers in the game today.

Green, who slumped to 135th in winnings last year after being one of the game's elite players, led alone on three occasions.

Trevino, the beneficiary of a three-shot swing on the fourth hole, once was a clear leader. And it was tied two other times.

In the end, it was Trevino's putter — that $30 stick he purchased in The Netherlands last year and which brought him to the PGA title — that proved to be the difference.

He dropped out of a tie for the lead when he 3-putted from the fringe, missing a 4-foot second putt, on the 15th.

And Trevino, after driving into the rough, missed a 6-foot par putt on the 17th. That gave Hubert a 2-shot lead with one hole to play.

The hollow-eyed veteran, in a slump for several seasons, brought it home.

With rain pounding down and thunder rolling, he saved par from a bunker on the 18th with a spectacular shot which hit the hole and stopped one foot away, while Trevino fumbled on an 18-20 foot birdie putt.

Streaking Mets trim Cubs for seventh consecutive victory

By The Associated Press

Gary Carter hit a pair of two-run homers to power Ed Lynch to a 6-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs Sunday, giving the New York Mets their seventh straight victory.

Lynch, 30-5, won his sixth consecutive start, limiting the Cubs to two three-inning runs on seven hits. Lynch struck out one and walked one in his sixth complete game of the season. The Cubs have lost seven in a row.

Carter, who now has 16 homers, hit a two-out shot on a 1-0 delivery from right-hander Derek Botelho, 20-1, during the first inning. Len Dykstra had walked to lead off the inning.

National Phils 4, Cards 1

Shane Rawley, a six-hitter, beat St. Louis for the second time in seven days and Ozzie Virgil and Mike Schmidt hit solo home runs as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 4-1.

Rawley, 30-6, struck out six and walked one in ending the Cardinals' four-game winning streak. They had won all four post-strike games since losing to Ray.

Expos 6, Pirates 5

Andre Dawson belted a three-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning to lift the Montreal Expos to a 6-5 victory over the Pittsburgh

Pirates. Scott Thompson led off the ninth with a single against rafter-catcher Ceciliano Guante, 4-3. One out later, Vance Law doubled to center field, sending Thompson to third, and Dawson drilled a 1-0 pitch over the left field wall for his 14th home run of the season.

Dodgers 4, Reds 0

Jerry Reuss tossed a four-hit shutout and Enos Cabell drove in two runs and scored another as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated the Cincinnati Reds 4-0.

The win gave Los Angeles a seven-game lead over the Reds and the San Diego Padres in the National League West.

Reuss, 30-7, posted his third shutout of the year and the 37th of his career as he scattered six singles. Reuss struck out five and walked one for his fourth complete game as he faced only 31 batters. It was the Dodgers' 17th shutout of the season.

Braves 7, Giants 4

Pinch-hitter Rick Cerone broke a tie with a sacrifice fly and triggered a three-run eighth inning rally that gave the Atlanta Braves a 7-4 victory over the San Francisco Giants on Sunday.

Glenn Hubbard walked on one out in the eighth and went to third on Paul Hunge's bloop single to right off loser Frank Williams, 2-1. Mike Jefferon replaced Williams and Cerone hit his sacrifice fly for center. Pinch-hitter Paul Zuvella followed.

with a double and the Braves capped the winning rally with successive run-scoring singles by Mill Thompson and Rafael Ramirez.

Astros 7, Padres 2

Mark Bailey and Bill Doran both homered in an eighth inning to power the Houston Astros past the San Diego Padres 7-2.

The home runs came off San Diego starter Andy Hawkins, 14-4. Bailey led off the eighth with his eighth home run. Bob Knepper, 10-9, followed with a single to right and Doran then cracked his 11th home run deep into the right field seats.

NCAA begins new financing curb

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — National Collegiate Athletic Association member colleges and universities will participate for the first time in a program to ensure compliance with financial aid rules.

The affidavit forms requiring information on the financial assistance available to student-athletes were mailed to chief executive officers of member institutions Aug. 1 in accordance with a resolution adopted during a special association convention in June, the NCAA said in a news release Saturday.

The affidavits are aimed at providing head coaches and student-athletes the opportunity to affirm they fully understand and are in compliance with NCAA legislation, the association said. The documents require disclosure of all financial aid or extra benefits received from the institution, coaches and outside individuals or organizations, either currently provided or promised.

The chief executive officer of an institution is required to sign on a separate form that the affidavits have been distributed and properly executed. Any NCAA rules violations disclosed on the affidavits as well as what steps have been taken to correct them also must be listed.

The affidavits must be accompanied by a list of all student-athletes and coaches who completed the affidavits and another list of those who did not, the NCAA said.

"If an institution fails to administer the affidavits, it will be declared ineligible for all NCAA championships and for postseason football contests and Minnesota area will enhance his during the 1985-86 academic year. A team will lose its eligibility if its head coach fails to complete the paperwork to indicate that he is ready documents. Student-athletes will lose their eligibility if they fail to complete the affidavits, the NCAA said.

four innings," Tremayne said. "He's the kind of kid who can usually settle down if he gets through the rough spots."

It couldn't have started much rougher for Ames, who gave up hits in the first four batters he faced and was trailing 3-0 before the first out. But he got the next three in order and pitched himself out of trouble again in the second and fourth innings.

It was Ames who ignited what proved to be the game-winning rally by leading off the fifth inning with a double down the leftfield line, scoring on Kevin Sandau's single to tie it at all. Tim Crossman followed with the single that scored Sandau when the ball got away from the Moscow fielder.

Crossman stole third and scored on Kirk Slater's booming triple to left. Slater in turn scored on Rob Ellis' opposite field double and the Cowboys led 7-1.

Tim Crossman made it 8-4 in the sixth and downer doubles by Matt Harr and Sandau.

Moscow ran itself out of a big inning in the seventh after Tom Barrett hit a lead-off single and, with one out, Byers followed suit. Mike Oeller singled to left, driving in both runs, but was thrown out trying to take the extra base. Ames potted out the inning on a fly ball.

The Cowboys picked up an unearned run in the eighth and then scored three more in the ninth to put the game away.

Tremayne said he would start the rotation with Harr, who stretched his record to 10-1 with a victory over Coeur d'Alene against Lewiston tonight. Harr has eight innings of tournament pitching left, and Tremayne said, he would relieve him with Slater.

Crossman is expected to lead right-hander Greg Rodgers to the mound to oppose him.

Jerome rodeo gets underway tonight

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

JEROME — It will be a good time for name dropping at the Jerome County Rodeo this week. There will be a lot of names to drop.

Mekey Young, the hometown bareback riding specialist and rodeo pro, has invited a few friends over.

"We'll have about 200 contestants, and a good percentage of them are either ranked in the top 15 in their various events right now by the PRCA or have been ranked in the last year," says rodeo secretary Lori Young.

"Dee Pickett (the defending Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association all-around champion) and several other former champions will be here."

How come Jerome has gotten interested this year?

"Part of it's timing and part of it's money," Lori Young explains. "The timing of this rodeo is good because it's summer — right between Caldwell and Burley, and the location means that competitors can stop on their way. But up until this year, it's been a $300 (added money) rodeo. And now the major component is going to waste his time on a $300 rodeo."

"This year they've made it $500," she says. "You'd be surprised how much difference that makes. They'll have a cowboy a day early now."

Performances are scheduled for tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Jerome County Fairgrounds, starting at 8 p.m.

The timed events will have the largest prize money draw in steer wrestling, six-time world champion Tom Ferguson of Aubrey, Texas, will compete, along with the current leader in the PRCA standings, Marty Melvin of Holabird, S.D., and last year's PRCA steer-wrestling champion — John W. Jones of Morrow Bay, Calif.

Buhl's Rob Junker, currently ranked 10th in the PRCA steer-wrestling standings, will also take part, along with Ollie Smith of Del Rio, Texas, ranked ninth at the moment, and Paul Tierney of Rapid City, S.D., who finished ninth last year.

In calf roping and team roping, Caldwell's "Pickett" and his partner, Al Beckers of Rufus, Ore., will participate, as will 1982 PRCA calf roping champ Chris Lybbert of Argyle, Texas. Others scheduled to take part include Jim Cooper of Monument, N.M., who finished fourth in the PRCA calf roping standings last year, and Ray Hollibaugh of Stamford, Texas, currently ranked seventh by the PRCA.

Kent Cooper of Malta, now seventh in the PRCA in saddle bronc riding, will be part of the Jerome rodeo, along with Butch Small of Dubois, now ranked 11th in the association's saddle-bronc standings. Danny Brady of Henderson, Nev., runner-up last year in the PRCA bareback championship, will compete, joining him in his specialty will be Dar — Haskins of Maybell, Colo., currently 10th in the PRCA bareback standings; Joe Talburt of Oakland, Ore., ranked 14th; and Ron Parrish of Redmond, Ore., currently 15th.

Many of the big-name cowboys will lend their pens to an autograph booth that will be set up on the fairgrounds today, Tuesday and Wednesday. Rodeo tickets are $4 for adults and $2 for children.

Gooding cowboys keep titles at home

By FLYNN McROBERTS
Times-News writer

GOODING — In an event that featured cowboys from virtually all across the western U.S. and States, local rodeo fans can be especially proud after watching Gooding 'broke' lasso the team-roping, saddle-bronc and all-around titles at the Gooding County Rodeo Saturday night.

Don Gill led the local onslaught in front of an estimated 1,500 spectators by capturing the team-roping crown, with partner Benny Stevens, and thus the all-around of this three-day, PRCA event.

Heading into the team competition Saturday night, Gill was among 12 cowboys in the running for overall honors and had to beat 97 seconds to grab the all-around top spot. Gill and Stevens shattered that mark, coming in an 8:1, and took the team-roping title from the 8-2 score of Troy Eldridge and Evan Tripp — a Wells, Nev., crew.

The all-around victory gave Gill one of two silver belt buckles, awarded by Coors of Magic Valley during the event. Karen Arave of Caldwell snagged the other buckle with her first-place finish at 17:18 in the saddle-bronc competition.

Also hauling in a laurel for the local crowd were Zane Wines and Mark Lee, a pair of Gooding boys who finished second and third, respectively, in the main rodeo.

In a sideline of the main rodeo, contracted by Growney Bros., Rodeo Company of Red Bluff, Calif., Shelley Pender of Jerome was crowned rodeo queen, while Rupert's Laura Gunnison finished first runner-up.

Other highlights aside from the rodeo competition included the White Malheur Mule Race, which Will Melakid of Gooding and Ron Jless of Jerome won, and the annual Nutton Bustin' contest for kids, which saw Gooding's Larry Pender score 74 on his winning ride. Young Clint Jacobson of Gooding took the clown competition.

Meanwhile, Mamma's-Bruce Frans held on with his impressive Thursday ride of 77 to snag the bareback title, ahead of Wes Hoskins of Blackfoot at 74 points.

In calf-roping action, neither Brent Miles from Pocatello nor Gill had his Friday rides challenged; Miles took first by tying his best in 11 seconds, while Gill shot again with a 11.7-second finish. Ray Sparks from Twin Falls wound up fourth in that event at 13.8.

In addition, Ogden's Jack Hannum shot to a 4.6-second time to capture the steer wrestling crown, followed by the 4.8 mark of Murray, Utah's, Mark Parker. Rob Junker of Buhl came in third at 5.3.

Pocatello's Rod Speelman scored a tough 76 points to buck his way into a bull-riding crown. Renny of Gooding pulled right behind in second at 75, ahead of Buhl's John Zamora and his 73-point mark.

Bareback: 1. Bruce Frans, Mamma's, 77; 2. Wes Hoskins, Blackfoot, 74; 3. Rolly Wilson, Caldwell, 71; 4. Steve Johnson, Blackfoot, 68.

Steer-wrestling — 1. Rod Speelman, Ogden, 4.6; 2. Mark Parker, Murray, Utah, 4.8; 3. Rob Junker, Buhl, 5.3; 4. Bill Arlet, Pocatello, 5.9.

Team roping — 1. Don Gill and Benny Stevens, Gooding, 8:1.1; 2. Troy Eldridge and Evan Tripp, Wells, Nev., 8:2.1; 3. Mark Johnson (Caldwell) and Bill Parker (Blackfoot), 8:3.1; 4. John Feldt (Lee) and John Britton (Wells), 8:4.1.

Barrel racing — 1. Karen Arave, Idaho Falls, 17.1; 2. Mary Agnes Arlet, Pocatello, 17.2; 3. (tie) Jill Parker, Murray, Utah, and Lisa Davis, Blackfoot, 5:15; 4. Bob Taylor, Caldwell, and Jennifer Clark, Wilson, Wyo.

Bull-riding — 1. Rod Speelman, Pocatello, 76.2; 2. Renny Pender, Gooding, 75; 3. John Zamora, Buhl, 73; 4. (tie), Doug James, Gooding, and Brett Fischer, Rupert, 71.

Kingman happy climb to 400 is over

SEATTLE (AP) — After 51 at-bats without a home run, Oakland's Dave Kingman finally got the big one — and now says he's just glad to be done with it.

"It's more of a relief to get it over with than a feeling of excitement. Now I can get back to enjoying the game," a smiling Kingman said Saturday night after he slugged his 400th career homer — only the 21st major-league player to reach that plateau.

The two-run hit came in the first inning of the A's 11-5 victory over the Seattle Mariners, when the 14-year veteran slammed a 1-2 pitch by Matt Young — into the left-field stands.

The Oakland bench erupted, but Kingman gave no hint of his feelings as he circled the bases.

"We show more emotions than Kingman, but I think he is probably pretty happy," said Oakland A's Manager Jackie Moore.

"I'm a private person," Kingman said afterward, although he offered: "It's the greatest day of my life."

The homer allowed Kingman to pass Al Kaline on the all-time home run list. Standing in front of him is Brooklyn Dodger great Duke Snider, who knocked 407 homers. Both Kaline and Snider are in the Hall of fame.

The homer was Kingman's third since July 7. He connected for No. 399 and 400, but he had the gap between 399 and 400 was much larger than just a single big hit. "I never thought it would be that hard," he said.

The struggle became a torment, ending only after 51 at-bats without his $700,000 salary.

But the slump seemed to be over after Kingman added a pair of hits Sunday in a 9-5 loss.

Kingman was born in Pendleton, Ore., on Dec. 21, 1948, and broke into the major leagues with the San Francisco Giants in 1971. In 14 seasons, Kingman has been traded six times.

"There are always things I could have done better, just as there is in any career, but I've learned a lot from my career," Kingman reflected.

"I haven't had a high average and I probably haven't had the run production I might have."

The numbers show the A's designated hitter owns a career .238 batting average, and has 1,089 RBI to go with his 400 homers.

His best season came in 1979 with the Chicago Cubs, when he belted 48 homers and knocked in 115 runs, while compiling his highest batting average, .288.

In 1980 he was bothered by a shoulder injury and, slumped to 18 homers.

He found himself playing for the Mets in 1981 for the second time, and gave the team a club-high 37 homers, but hit just .204 in 1982.

The next year, Kingman batted .261 and contributed just 10 home runs. "Without them I never would have had a shot at 400," said Kingman.

"It would have been nice to hit it in Oakland. The fans have been so good to me," he said.

Having reached the 400 mark, Kingman says his career goals are finished.

"That's the last one I'll ever have to worry about," he said. "My number goals are over."

He responded by slugging 35 homers and earning Gameback Player of the Year honors in 1984.

"Most of all I want to thank Mr. (Walter) Haas (the A's vice president) and Sandy Alderson (vice president of baseball operations). Without them I never would have had a shot at 400," said Kingman.

"It would have been nice to hit it in Oakland. The fans have been so good to me," he said.

Having reached the 400 mark, Kingman says his career goals are finished.

"That's the last one I'll ever have to worry about," he said. "My number goals are over."

Jerome Bud Light rallies past Gem Linen for district C title

By FLYNN McROBERTS
Times-News writer

TWIN-FALLS — Only someone inclined to expect the unexpected could have predicted the finish of Sunday's final in the women's C District softball tournament.

After dominating for nearly the entire game, Gem Linen of Twin Falls faltered in the final moments, dropping a 10-9 battle to Jerome's Bud Light for the crown.

Gem was resting with a comfortable lead, 9-5, heading into the bottom of the final inning when Bud left fielder Connie O'Toole hammered a three-run, in-park homer down the left-field fence to kick off a victorious rally.

A single from Karen Larson, followed by a walk and Gem error, loaded the bases and placed the tying score on third base — all that with no outs. At that point, Patty Bark smacked a line drive between first and second base to drive in Larson and Carroll Leytham, the winning run.

The late-game surge by Bud, who entered the game undefeated, quashed any Gem hopes of avenging a Saturday night loss and pushing the championship series Sunday to an extra game.

Finishing behind Bud and Gem was Rangen Inc./Northside Farms from Buhl. Cindy Kenner from Falconhurst Dairy of Rupert and Gem's Bonnie Molyneux grabbed the tournament's leading hitter honors; Kenner pelted .600, while Molyneux batted .471.

Gem came into the title bout after topping a string of loser-bracket triumphs Sunday with a 5-4 victory over Hangers's Bud had knocked Hangers's into that defeat by defeating the Buhl crew 9-7 earlier in the day.

In the championship round, Gem took the upper hand quickly when one RBI singles from Lori DiMaggio, Suzy Carney and Sharon Stephens gave their squad a 3-0 advantage in the top of the second inning.

A triple from Bud Light's Judy Lewis resulted in one score for the Jerome team in the bottom of the second, but Gem batters shot back in the third — with a little help from their friends. Gem scored five runs off virtually no hits in that inning as Bud walked four runners and committed three errors, giving the Twin Falls squad an imposing 8-1 mark.

Bud Light didn't recover offensively until the bottom of the fourth, when "Back to Back" singles from Leytham and Lewis combined in two runners. That effort cut Gem's lead to 8-3.

One Gem run in the fifth was answered by two Bud scores during the sixth; with bases loaded thanks to three walks, Bud's Cheryl Sturgeon peppered a two-run single over third base.

Blank innings from Gem in both the sixth and seventh set up a fitting atmosphere for Bud's final-inning show of force.

Lopez shatters LPGA mark

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Nancy Lopez, who entered the tournament on her husband's advice, smashed the LPGA record for 72 holes Sunday by posting a 20-under-par 268 and scoring a 10-shot victory over Val Skinner in the Henredon Classic tournament.

Lopez knocked three strokes off the record set by Hollis Stacy in the 1977 Hall Charly Classic and shattered the Henredon Classic record of 272 set in 1983 by Patty Sheehan. Lopez was four shots shy of the biggest margin of victory ever recorded on the LPGA tour.

"I just played the golf course and took whatever it would give me," Lopez said. "It just happened that I shot 20 under."

Lopez, taking her fourth victory, the 33rd of her career, birdied three of her first five holes on the Willow Creek Golf Club course and went out with a 3-under-par 33.

Keeping up the pace, Lopez birdied the 10th and 12th holes, then tacked on a birdie put at 17 to seal the record and give her a 6-under-par 66 for the final round. All this came after her husband, New York Mets infielder Ray Knight, had to convince her to enter the tournament.

"I signed up at the last minute because Ray told me to go ahead and enter," she said. "He said if (the baseball players) strike, I can watch you play. It didn't take much to talk me into playing because when you play well, you like playing."

The baseball strike ended before the first round began, and Knight only saw his wife play three holes.

"I told him I wanted to shoot for 72 under since his number is 22," Lopez said. "I thought I might be able to make it — I was just short."

Lopez became the LPGA's top money winner in capturing the $31,500 top prize and raising her winnings to more than $32,000. Alice Miller, who led that list prior to this week's tournament, had to withdraw on the back nine of Sunday's round when she was overcome by the heat as temperatures approached the low 90s.

Skinner said Saturday that she would not attempt to chase Lopez around the 6,191-yard, par 72 course. But Skinner said she was happy with her best outing ever, which netted her $13,425.

"I really tried to stay in my own frame of mind and just keep my act together so that I could have my best finish," Skinner said. "In order to challenge that lead, you would have to become unbelievable. I don't know that I wanted to play for second, but at the time, that time had probably come."

High jump record broken

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet high jumper Rudolf Povarnitsin leaped from obscurity to a world record on Sunday, setting a new mark of 7 feet, 10 1/2 inches that bettered his previous best by 5 1/2 inches and surpassed the old standard of 7-10 established June 1984 by China's Zhu Jianhua in West Germany.

The official news agency Tass said the 23-year-old Povarnitsin succeeded on his third attempt during semi-final competitions for the Soviet National Cup at the Ukrainian city of Donetsk.

Povarnitsin, whose previous best was 7-5 and third place at a Moscow track and field meet earlier this season, was quoted as saying he was happy to get the world record for his country.

Povarnitsin, who uses the "flop" technique pioneered by American Dick Fosbury, said he and his trainer, former high jumper Vladimir Kiba, had aimed for 7-7 1/2 in Sunday's meet. But when Povarnitsin bettered the record for the Soviet Republic of the Ukraine with a leap of 7-10 1/2, he immediately ordered the bar raised to 7-10 1/2, Tass said.

In a brief biography of Povarnitsin, Tass said he was born in the Ljuzimirskaia autonomous republic east of the Volga River at Kazan and began athletic training at the age of 12.

Povarnitsin originally wanted to be a basketball player, Tass said, but switched to high jumping in 1976 when he was only 5-foot-7 and could leap only 4-5.

Vladimir Reut, then his trainer, showed the teen-ager the Fosbury Flop and Povarnitsin immediately improved his jump by 5 1/2 inches, Tass said.

Povarnitsin moved to Kiev in 1980, Tass said. But the high jumper, now standing 6-7, could not jump better than 7-3 and considered abandoning the sport altogether before his result earlier this season in Moscow, Tass said.

Tass did not say whether Povarnitsin was celebrating his world record on Sunday night.

Cowboys still want Tony Dorsett

DALLAS (AP) — Did holdout running back Tony Dorsett burn his bridges behind him by calling the Dallas Cowboys' contract "double-crosses?"

"No," said club President Tex Schramm. "We're still hopeful of working things out with Tony."

Dorsett is on a seven-year contract which calls for $450,000 this year.

Schramm didn't meet with Dorsett over the weekend, although the absent running back is home in Dallas.

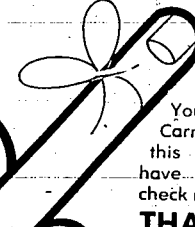

The Cowboys flew back to Thousand Oaks, Calif., Sunday afternoon after their 27-3 National Football League exhibition victory over Green Bay Saturday night.

Dorsett has threatened to retire or asked to be traded if the Cowboys don't restructure his contract. He's hired agent Howard Slusher to represent him.

"Maybe something will happen next week," said Schramm. "It's hard to tell. We'll just have to wait and see."

Just a Reminder.
