Chris and Judy Jones, who have a newborn daughter, Jada Marie, say that blindness is 'a characteristic, not a problem'

Guide dog stayed in hospital overnight

Jada takes family's new baby in stride

By KRISTIN TUCKER
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Before their baby was born, Judy and Chris Jones showed 3-year-old Jada the newly decorated nursery and talked with her about the upcoming birth, helping Jada to anticipate the arrival of the new family member.

Jada was present during most of the 20 hours Judy was in labor, and after the baby's birth, was allowed to stay overnight in the hospital room with mother and baby.

Jada is a yellow Labrador, a guide dog that has been Judy's nearly-constant companion for seven years. Judy and Chris are blind; each has a guide dog who makes it easier to function independently — and who has become part of their family.

The Twin Falls couple say getting a guide dog is similar to bringing home a new baby. It takes time for everyone to get acquainted and learn to live together, Judy explains.

"The baby learns you are the care-giver. The dog learns you and he are a team." Through the experience of a friend who is another guide-dog owner — the first-time parents realized the importance of preparing the dogs for the arrival of the baby.

The friend left the guide dog home when she went to the hospital for her baby's birth. When mother and child returned, the dog felt displaced and had its own behavior problems — not unlike those commonly shown by an older sibling.

"We have worked with the dogs similar to how you would work it with another sibling," Judy says. "She sees what is going on and feels a part of it."

Chris and Judy weren't as concerned about how Kent, Chris' 10-year-old guide dog, would react to the new family member. "Kent would get along with anything," says Chris. "Jada has more trouble adjusting. She's just that kind of personality."

So when the rest of the family headed for St. Benedict's Family Medical Center in Jerome for Marie's birth, Kent was left home.

White House labels SALT a 'dead letter'

By W. DALE NELSON
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House declared the SALT II treaty a dead letter Thursday, and President Reagan said, "We are going to try to replace it with a better deal."

"The SALT II treaty no longer exists," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters.

Reagan, told of Speakes' statement, said, "Yes, I think you can trust what Larry Speakes said."

At a nationally broadcast news conference Wednesday night, the president had noted that it will still be several months before a U.S. bomber buildup exceeds limits set in the 1979 accord.

Paul H. Nitze, a senior Reagan adviser on arms control, said the treaty no longer has any legal standing, although Reagan is keeping the United States in technical compliance with the pact.

"If I were the Soviets, I would take the point of view that if the United States feels free of the constraints, we do not have to observe them either," Nitze told reporters.

"There isn't any legal obligation, legality isn't involved," he said.

Another White House spokesman, Edward Djerejian, told reporters that despite abandonment of the treaty, efforts to restrain the arms race would continue.

"From the U.S. government's point of view, restraint is not dead," Djerejian said. "We hope that mutual restraint is not dead, and that depends a lot upon what the Soviet Union does."

Meanwhile, the House Foreign Affairs Committee voted 29-11 to approve a non-binding resolution asking Reagan to continue U.S. compliance with the numerical limits the treaty places on nuclear weapons.

The vote was largely along party lines in the Democratic-controlled committee, and came after a long day of wrangling among committee members as they tried to work out agreement on language for a resolution.

The resolution, which was sent to the floor of the Democratic-dominated House, is not binding on Reagan. Still pending is a separate bill proposed by Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., which would eliminate money for nuclear weapons that would breach the limits in the pact.

During his nationally broadcast news conference Wednesday night, Reagan was asked, "What's to replace SALT at this point, and why make this decision now?"

Alluding to the Soviet Union, he replied, "(I) didn't make it now. I said we've got several months here in which we're going to try to involve them in the things they, themselves, have been talking about and this is a definite arms reduction program."

Later, when asked what he was going to do about SALT, the president talked about plans to arm B-52s with cruise missiles later this year, and said, "Now we've got several months before we reach that point."

Speakes, asked about the president's statements, said he assumed Reagan was referring to a possible decision to withdraw some other missiles at that time, thus keeping the United States within the limits spelled out in the treaty.

In any event, Speakes said, "There is nothing confusing about what I said here this morning and these are

Idahoans help oil keep key tax break

By JIM LUTHER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate rushed Thursday to restore deductions for state and local sales taxes to its big tax-overhaul plan and began an effort to strip away a special break for the oil industry.

But on a 75-21 vote, senators adopted a non-binding resolution endorsing continued full deduction of sales taxes, leaving the final decision on that issue to the Senate-House conference committee that will write the compromise bill. The same device was used on Wednesday to settle a fight over deductible Individual Retirement Accounts.

Defeat of the sales-tax amendment by a voice vote bolstered the resolve of the bill's managers to guard it against any significant change. Then, in the latest chapter of an oil-tax battle that is almost as old as the income tax itself, senators voted 77-20 to retain the special provision for the industry.

Idaho Sens. James McClure and Steve Symms, both Republicans, were among the 42 Republicans who voted to table the amendment.

On this vote, a yes vote was to retain the oil benefit while a no vote was against the benefit.

"Tax shelters all over the lot would be closed out" by the bill —

"but not for oil and gas," complained Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn. "I ask for nothing more than is applied to everyone else," he added, urging the Senate to eliminate a special provision that would save the petroleum industry $1.5 billion over five years.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance Committee, said that when the panel was finishing work on the bill last month, the entire far-reaching measure was threatened unless the oil exception was included. "Are you going to risk the whole bill . . . on keeping . . . (the provision) out of the bill?" he asked. Once the provision was included, he noted, the bill passed 80-0.

"This industry is not only plagued by prejudice, it's plagued by hatred," shouted Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La. He called it the most depressing industry in the nation and said the tax bill would make investment in oil and gas far less attractive.

"If we start down this road now (trying to change the bill written by the Finance Committee) there'll be a lot of amendments" affecting other industries, Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., promised. He said the life insurance industry — a big one in Weicker's state — could be a

Toll from AIDS will soar to 54,000 in 1991

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More people will die of AIDS five years from now than were killed in traffic accidents last year, the Public Health Service predicted Thursday in calling for a national commission to guide America's response to the deadly illness.

The agency projected that 54,000 victims will die as a result of AIDS during 1991, most of them people who are infected now but do not know it. By comparison, auto accidents killed 45,700 people in 1985, according to the National Safety Council.

The health agency also predicted that 145,000 people will be sick with AIDS in 1991, and that treating them will cost between $8 billion and $16 billion during the year.

"The numbers . . . are staggering," said Dr. Donald Ian Macdonald, who heads the agency. "This is a major problem, probably bigger than the Public Health Service. . . . These numbers make it very clear that our work must be intensified."

Macdonald, acting assistant secretary for health in the Health and Human Services Department, made the comments as he released an update of the agency's master plan for controlling AIDS.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the Energy and Commerce health and environment subcommittee said, "The most remarkable thing about this plan is that the Reagan administration allowed it to be released at all."

"For years now, the scientists, including the administration's own experts, have been tell-

South Africa rounds up over 1,000 under emergency rules

By JAMES F. SMITH
The Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — The government imposed a nationwide emergency Thursday and rounded up at least 1,000 people in an attempt to quell black rioting, but critics predicted the action would incite greater rage.

Security forces arrived in the night, hours before the emergency was announced publicly, at the homes of anti-apartheid activists, clergymen, church workers, student and labor leaders of all races.

"South Africans will not allow themselves to be humiliated in order to prevent sanctions." President P.W. Botha said in a televised address to the nation. "If we have to depend on our Creator and our ability alone, then I say let it be."

Desmond Tutu, the black Anglican bishop of Johannesburg, said: "Only intervention by the outside world can avoid Armageddon. What is the world waiting for?"

Botha proclaimed the state of emergency from one minute after midnight (4:01 p.m. MDT Wednesday) in the entire nation, but did not announce it publicly until midday. A seven-month emergency lifted March 7 covered only half of South Africa.

The 70-year-old Afrikaner acted just before the 10th anniversary Monday of bloody protests in the huge Soweto township, an emotional event certain to rouse new anger in a black majority that has rioted against white domination for nearly two years. More than 1,600 people have been killed, nearly all of them black.

Armed police surrounded and raided the headquarters of the Rev. Beyers Naude, 71, an Afrikaner who has become a leading supporter of black rights and is president of the South African Council of Churches.

Naude said he knew of 1,200 people detained. The state-run radio put the total at 1,000 in the initial sweeps.

Hundreds of activists went underground and escaped immediate detention, including Henry Fazzie, Eastern Cape leader of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition.

Emergency regulations give police and troops sweeping powers of detention without trial and search without warrant. They prohibit television and photo coverage of riots, strikes and action by security forces, as in the previous emergency, but add the proviso that neither local nor foreign journalists may publish "subversive statements."

A broad definition said such statements include encouragement of civil disobedience and criticizing the military draft, but how the rule will be applied was not clear immediately.

On Thursday night, armed police arrived at a printing plant outside Johannesburg to seize Friday's edition of the Weekly Mail, a newspaper that has been critical of the government, said editor Anton Harber.

 The fact that "SALT no longer exists, and the only possible decision that could be made in the full context of the strategic issues on the part of the U.S. is to compensate in any way," Speaker said. "Do we take something else out of operation?"
 Speakers added that any decision to do so "will be based on what the Soviet Union and not on the SALT agreement."

Reagan, asked about his news conference during a brief open session of a meeting with a student group, told reporters, "All I was saying was why we will make the decision that the Soviets have never observed have been violating since that time comes but in the interim we are going to be dealing with the Soviet Union on their most recent proposal to us."

Asked Thursday whether he had made a decision, he replied, "One of the reasons I am not saying that is because we are going to do it at the moment to engage the Soviet Union in an arms reduction agreement, and anyone going into negotiations I think has a right to remain silent."

Regarding SALT II, he said, "The time has come to replace a treaty that was never ratified, that has now gone beyond the length of time for which it was designed, which we will make the decision that the Soviets have never observed have been violating since its inception, to replace that with a legitimate arms reduction treaty." Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., appearing on NBC-TV's "Today" program, said, however, he thought Reagan had backed off from an inclination to breach the treaty.

 "I thought he made it clear that, in his own mind, we were still complying, and I thought he made it clear that in his mind he was going to await developments over the next four or five months, not just Soviet non-compliance but also the question of progress in Geneva," said Nunn, senior Democrat on the Armed Services Committee.

Reagan campaigned against the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) in 1980.

 the administration that the AIDS epidemic is a growing disaster, and for years the administration has done nothing," Waxman said in a statement.

"I am pleased that someone has allowed the AIDS to go public with its fears, but I want to see their budget for AIDS activities before I believe that the administration is committed to increased AIDS work."

The Public Health Service plan was drafted during a three-day session in West Virginia last week at which 85 AIDS experts from throughout the nation met to compare notes and draft recommendations.

Clearly, a national, coordinated response is necessary," Macdonald says. "We are suggesting that a national commission representing public, private and voluntary sectors, as well as all levels of government, be set up to look at the needs and resource availability, and to make recommendations on how all sectors of our society can handle this major crisis."

The agency also said it stands by the overall goal it set last year: to reduce the spread of infection by 1987; to slow the increase in AIDS cases by 1990; and to eliminate the spread of the ailment by the year 2000.

But computer projections prepared by the Centers for Disease Control indicate the problem is going to get worse, much worse, before it gets better:
 • More than 270,000 people will be diagnosed with AIDS by the end of 1988, of whom 75,000 will have died.
 • About 74,000 people will be diagnosed during that year. And of the 145,000 people expected to be treated for AIDS in 1991, about 75 percent would be among the 1.5 million who carry the virus now but probably do not know it.

 target, for example.
 One of the central features of the bill is a tough crackdown on tax shelters, which are used by professionals and other wealthy investors to generate losses that shield their fees and wages from taxes. The provision would affect many industries, falling hardest on real estate.
 Oil-state members of the Finance Committee insisted that some oil and gas investments be exempted because of the industry's problems caused by the low petroleum prices. The exemption would apply only to "working interests," in which the investor's risks are unlimited.
 The oil industry has been at the center of the tax debate over the years because of the insistence of many liberals that the industry enjoys undue advantages in the tax law.
 One obstacle to quick passage of the tax bill was removed Thursday when two conservatives, after meeting with President Reagan, agreed to withdraw an amendment that would strip tax exemptions from hospitals and other non-profit organizations that perform or finance abortions.

 Sens. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said they would offer the amendment on a different bill later.

Standing in the way of final action on the bill — which is likely next week — were several other amendments, including those affecting farmers and business' certainty, and an effort to provide greater tax relief to middle-income Americans.
 Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., tried without success to restore to the bill a full deduction for state and local taxes paid.

Baby's heart beating normally
 LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — The transplanted heart that gave Baby Jesse a second chance to live was beating normally at 100 to 120 times a minute Thursday, and doctors said his recovery was progressing as expected.

"All the systems seem to be going and he seems to be making a satisfactory neurological recovery," chief surgeon Leonard Bailey said at an afternoon news conference at Loma Linda University Medical Center, about 36 hours after the infant received his new heart.

Bailey, acknowledging that Baby Jesse's case had generated unusual public controversy over the criteria used to determine transplant recipients and the donor procurement process, called on the Reagan administration to establish a computer network to match donors with people who need organ transplants.

House, Senate work on bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of would-be homeowners were still waiting for federally backed mortgages and many farmers were left waiting for government checks as House and Senate negotiators met Tuesday to craft a compromise bill on a multi-billion-dollar emergency spending bill.

Even federal courts were being affected by the money crunch. They needed an extra $3.8 billion to pay jurors in the 1,200 trials expected between now and Sept. 30, money that is not in dispute but is tied up by other disagreements over the bill. Civil jury trials were being postponed beginning Monday until the money comes through.

The initial session of talks to resolve those disputes was clouded by threats that President Reagan is likely to veto the bill if it contains any one of several provisions the administration opposes.

IBEW moves to accept offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bargaining council for 31,000 AT&T workers who are keeping 14 of the company's 25 factories open during a strike by a rival union voted Thursday to recommend accepting the company's offer of a new three-year contract.

The 194 vote by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers manufacturing council to accept the AT&T offer was a new blow to the Communications Workers of America, whose 155,000 member employees of the company went on strike June 1.

Puerto Rico blast claims 3

BARCELONETA, Puerto Rico (AP) — An explosion and fire inside a pharmaceutical plant early Thursday killed three people, injured five and caused $15 million in damage, police said.

Authorities said the dead and injured were among nine workers just finishing up the night shift when a huge chemical tank exploded. The blast was heard 10 miles away.
 The fire and explosion occurred at the Merck Sharp & Dohme Chemical Co., a manufacturer of veterinary medicinal supplies. The factory is located near the coastal town of Barceloneta, about 40 miles west of San Juan, the island's capital. The plant employs 650 people.

Right-to-Life group convenes

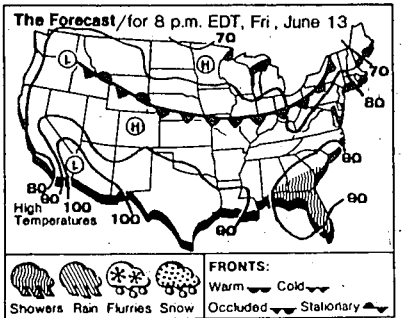

DENVER (AP) — With President Reagan pleading to help stop abortion here and abroad, the National Right to Life Committee opened its 14th annual convention Thursday, a few blocks from where the National Organization for Women will begin its own meeting a day later.

"This is the ultimate human rights issue," Reagan said in a videotaped message to the nearly 2,000 delegates at the start of a three-day meeting.

Thought of Lundy traveling with escapee shocks GOP

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Republicans are expressing disbelief that Margaret Lundy — once active in state politics — could be the traveling companion of escaped game-warden killer Claude Dallas.

Dallas continued to elude the FBI and other law enforcement agencies Thursday after the FBI narrowed its search for the 36-year-old self-styled mountain man to the San Francisco Bay area after Lundy, 36, was seen late this past week in Newark, Calif.

Lundy has worked for Republicans Sen. Steve Symms, U.S. Rep. Larry Craig and lieutenant gubernatorial candidate C.L. "Butch" Otter.

The FBI wanted to talk to Lundy because she quit her job two days before Dallas' prison break and has told people she is traveling with him, according to Richard Held, a spokesman for the San Francisco office of the FBI. Lundy is not wanted in connection with any crime, he said.

"I would be very shocked that someone with her integrity would do something like that," said Karmen Larson, an administrative assistant to Boise Mayor Dirk Kempthorne.

Larson, who was Lundy's supervisor at Craig's campaign headquarters in 1982, expressed doubt that Lundy was traveling with Dallas.

The FBI also said Lundy visited Dallas when he was in the Idaho State Penitentiary, from which he escaped March 30. Dallas was serving a 30-year sentence for manslaughter in the 1981 slayings of two Idaho Fish & Game Department wardens.

Ada County Sheriff Vaughan Killeen, who has led the search for Dallas, said this week's disclosure of the focus of the manhunt may have chased Dallas and Lundy out of the Bay area, speculating that the lead, one of the most productive in the 10½-week search, has now probably fizzled.

But some of Lundy's associates in Idaho GOP politics expressed shock and doubt at her possible connection with Dallas.

"I haven't been able to get it out of my mind today," Caldwell Mayor Pete Cowles said. "She was a very professional woman. It was a total surprise to me." Cowles said he knew Lundy because she was active in the Idaho Republican Party.

One of her earliest political jobs began in March 1973, when she went to work for then-Congressman Symms in his Washington, D.C., office.

Until leaving the job in December 1977, Lundy worked as a secretary and did case work and analyses for Symms, said Phil Heberger, Symms' chief of staff.

In 1980, Lundy went to work as a political analyst for Otter, an executive with the J.R. Simplot Co. and the son-in-law of the company's founder.

"She was very good at analyzing legislation and is just a very bright gal," he said.

Otter echoed Larson's doubts, saying, "It would surprise me if it (her traveling with Dallas) was true."

Lundy went to work as a secretary at Ray Chem Co. in Palo Alto, Calif., on Aug. 2, 1985, and left that job on March 28 — two days before Dallas escaped, according to a spokeswoman for Personnel Pool, an employment company in Palo Alto.

Historic Nez Perce route is retraced by stagecoach

LAPWAI (AP) — A 19th century stagecoach started its trip to Walla Walla, Wash., Thursday, recreating the trip settlers took on the Nez Perce Trail 150 years ago.

Members of the Walla Walla 50ers Club drove the stagecoach, which was drawn by four Palomino horses. Riders were to change horses every 10 miles, and planned to spend Thursday night camped at Pomeroy, Wash.

The driver and shotgun rider, who carried a real shotgun, were commemorating the mail run that went to the Whitman Mission, site of the 1847 Cayuse Indian attack that resulted in the deaths of the mission's founders.

The 5,000 letters, including four to President Reagan, carried on top of the coach, carried a "50ers Stagecoach Station, Lapwai, Idaho" cancellation mark. Some of the letters were being sent to England, Mexico, Egypt and Finland.

The 50ers hold the last official permit to carry U.S. mail by stagecoach.

The Wallatapu Massacre on Nov. 21, 1847 resulted in the deaths of Marcus and Narcissa Whitman and 11 others. Fifty other people were taken hostage, but were later released by the Cayuse after the Hudson's Bay Company paid a ransom of tobacco, weapons, ammunition and clothing.

Joe Kinzer, a 50er who organized the mail run, said the run probably will be conducted again in 1988, the centennial of Washington state. That celebration will include other commemorative events centering on Walla Walla, Kinzer said.

"Walla Walla was the site of the territorial capital and the territorial prison," he said. "Everything happened at Walla Walla."

The mail run was to continue until Saturday, when drivers arrive at the Whitman Mission, five miles southwest of Walla Walla.

The 50ers and the Whitman Sesquicentennial Committee were established to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the massacre.

Under the direction of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Marcus Whitman and his bride set out from New York with another missionary couple for the Oregon Trail in 1836.

The other couple, Henry and Eliza Spaulding, settled near Lapwai Creek. Mrs. Spaulding and Mrs. Whitman were the first white women to cross the continental United States.

As others whites traveled the Nez Perce Trail to Oregon, they brought with them a measles epidemic that killed half the Cayuse Tribe. When Whitman supplied white children with medicine that cured them, the Indians believed the tribe was being poisoned.

INEL conference discussion keys on 'Star Wars' project

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Providing sufficient power to defense plants in space is one of the keys to the success of President Reagan's "Star Wars" project, says a top administration official.

L. Gen. James Abrahamson, director of the Strategic Defense Initiative office, was a featured speaker here Wednesday at a conference on SDI and nuclear technology.

Safety must be a top consideration in development of nuclear systems to provide power in space, said James Vaughan, acting assistant energy secretary for nuclear power programs.

"The conference is sponsored by the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, which Abrahamson said has the capabilities to handle "Star Wars" research.

"There are ... facilities here that are important but more than the facilities, there are people with ideas and people with test capability," he said, at a news conference. "As it becomes the right time in the program, I think there will be many opportunities for this particular area to have people work on this project."

About 200 scientists and engineers are attending the conference, which continued Thursday. Troy Wade, INEL manager, organized the conference to show SDI program managers possible nuclear power applications.

"It is a very high priority," Abrahamson said. "Obviously, we are trading off between all types of power but we know for some of the advanced concepts, like lasers — which are aimed at shooting down missiles, not people — for those systems we're going to need huge amounts of power."

"The reason why we're re-examining and investigating nuclear power in partnership with the Department of Energy."

The effort to design nuclear reactors that can power space weapons must be done with safety as the overriding concern, said Vaughan.

The importance of this has been illustrated by the Challenger space shuttle explosion and the Soviets' Chernobyl nuclear accident.

"The basic message is that we must continue to pursue our designs and applications on a sound technical and management basis, and maintain the pre-eminence of safety in everything we do," Vaughan said. "This is not a new message but it has been starkly reinforced by these two dramatic events, which took their toll in human life, destroyed expensive technical machines and signaled significant, negative impacts for ongoing programs."

"We've done a tremendous amount of safety analysis and believe the probability of an accident is low and even in the event of an accident the probability of any harm to the public is very low," he said. "But we're going back as a result of that and re-examining if we have done enough tests, have we provided enough protection, and we will continue to do that."

'Hopper infestation reports mounting

MOUNTAIN HOME (AP) — Reports of relatively heavy grasshopper infestations were beginning to mount Thursday, officials said, as targeted buffer spraying continued on arid range in southwestern Idaho.

A lone crop duster flying out of Mountain Home doused another 1,622 acres of range adjacent to the Roy Ireland farm northwest of town in the early morning strike, bringing to about 3,300 acres the amount of land doused with the pesticide malathion since the 1966 aerial attacks on the marauding pests began this week.

Jerry Covino, who his helping to coordinate spraying in the state for USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said a 40-acre tract in Elmore County would be sprayed today in conjunction with more extensive, privately financed crop dusting.

Covino said spraying over larger tracts would resume this weekend with almost daily sorties over the most serious grasshopper concentrations after that.

But while the reports of grasshopper counts as high as 75 per square yard have begun picking up as the weather turns hotter and drier and the pests mature, Covino emphasized the drastic difference from a year ago when the worst grasshopper invasion in three decades saw some 6.5 million acres treated with pesticide at a cost of $12.5 million.

"It's a lot lighter than last year," he said. "The only places we're finding them are along fields and where we didn't spray last year. All the spraying we did last year really paid off."

Meanwhile, state Epidemiologist Charles Brokopp says there were no long-term adverse health effects from the chemicals being used in the spraying campaign.

But since exposure to the chemicals can result in short-term adverse health effects, Brokopp said doctors around the state have been notified of problems that can result from exposure and where spraying has been scheduled. The state's two toll-free telephone lines — one for emergency medical services and the other for drug information — were both prepared to handle pesticide questions, he said.

"Mixers, loaders and applicators of the chemicals will be at greatest risk of being exposed to a significant level of the pesticides," Brokopp said, with those in the path of the spray or downwind of it facing only minimal exposure risks.

"Physicians have been advised that in event of direct exposure to the chemicals, a person should remove all contaminated clothing and wash immediately with soap and water to minimize absorption of the chemical through the skin," he said.

Vault yields cocaine

BOISE (AP) — The Boise Police Department says it has seized nearly a pound of cocaine — with a street value of $94,000 — from a vault in a downtown office building.

One man has been arrested in connection with the seizure, and police are seeking a second man.

Police Chief Jim Montgomery said 14 ounces of pure cocaine and $4,500 in cash were seized May 29.

Two days later, police arrested Douglas F. Johnson, 27, Boise, on a warrant charging him with possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, according to Detective Rich Schnebly. Johnson was released on $100,000 bond, same offense has been issued for John Truman Allen, 30, Boise, Schnebly said.

Schnebly said the seizure and arrest were not made public until Wednesday because police were pursuing the case against Allen and hoped to arrest him.

The seizure was made in a vacant office in the Sonna Building after police received an anonymous tip, Montgomery said.

Dean search down to two

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho has narrowed the field to two in its search for a successor to former Agriculture School Dean Ray Miller.

The school announced Thursday that the finalists were Acting Dean Larry Brannen and Charles Pitts, chairman of the entomology department at Penn State University.

Officials said the pair will be interviewed in the next 2½ weeks by the 20-member search committee and University President Richard Gibb. The new dean is expected to be named by July 1.

Miller resigned after five years as dean at the end of 1985 to take over agriculture programs at the University of Maryland.

Going smokeless made one kid lifeless

BOSTON — If your son is looking for a pinup for his locker, offer him a picture of Sean Marsce. Better yet, offer him two photos of Sean. One picture is of a handsome 18-year-old athlete, the other is of a kid who had his face carved away in a desperate attempt to stop the cancer that killed him at 19.

Just to make the message clear, take the photos and paste them over an ad for smokeless tobacco, because that is what his doctor says killed Sean. The stuff called snuff. He first put this moist tobacco in his mouth when he was 13, right there between his gum and his cheek, just like the baseball players when they step up to bat.

Ellen Goodman

Sean's pictures won't make pretty viewing. But maybe these photos will be an effective counter to all the millions spent by the tobacco companies. It's the promotion of snuff, not of U.S. Tobacco Co. the largest profit margin in the Fortune 500 last year. It's the ads that have turned 12 million more Americans since 1970 into what are politely called "users." Addicts is another word, and three million are under age 21.

Louis Bantle, chairman of the board of U.S. Tobacco, once headed to a reporter: "In Texas today, a kid wouldn't dare go to school, even if he doesn't use the product, without a can in his Lewis."

Betty Ann Marsce wants to turn this around. "The horror photos are, after all, the last portraits of her son. Today the Oklahoma woman is suing U.S. Tobacco, the giant maker of Skoal and Copenhagen, for $147 million in damages.

In the fourth week of a courtroom trial in Oklahoma City, she is claiming that snuff is an "unreasonably dangerous" product, addictive, and cancer-causing.

The product came with no warning label. Indeed, her lawyers claim, the advertising, with endless endorsements by sports figures, implied that smokeless tobacco was harmless, even helpful, to an athlete.

Anything that moves in sports, U.S. Tobacco has either put a logo on it, paid it to appear in an ad, given it a scholarship or sponsored it," says Dr. Gregory Connolly, the director of dental health for Massachusetts and star crusader against smokeless tobacco. He has detailed the sports/tobacco connection and concluded, "Kids have been led to believe that smokeless tobacco and sport are synonymous."

The tobacco people, with breathtaking ease, deny everything. They deny that smokeless tobacco causes cancer, despite compelling research that proves the opposite. Snuff can have extraordinary levels of cancer-causing nitrosamine. There is as much nitrosamine in five cans of some brands as in a ton of bacon.

They also deny, combatting common sense and evidence, that smokeless tobacco is marketed to kids. Greg Connolly, looking at a Skoal promotion for a free Swiss army knife, notes wryly: "I don't know any 40-year-old who's interested in a Swiss army knife, but I know a lot of 15-year-old boys who would give their eye teeth for one." In the courtroom this week, the Marsce lawyer even read an internal memo to the sales staff which casually pointed to very young customers.

The Marsce case may be the strongest argument against tobacco that has yet come to court. It has the potential for eventually gutting smokeless tobacco out of business. But win or unt, snuff is already on the defensive.

This year, Congress has passed laws banning electronic ads for snuff, legislating warnings on print ads and labels on packages. The industry, under pressure, no longer uses current sports figures for ads. For the first time since 1977, sales have gone down — a mere two percent, but down.

Even some athletes have come around. This winter Dr. Connolly made his pitch to the Kansas City Royals, and all but two snuff users quit dipping and spitting, especially on network television. Across the country, fewer coaches of college and high school teams allow snuff as a "safe" tobacco.

None of this will help Sean Marsce, whose life, his doctor believes, was eaten away from the spot between his gum and his cheek. When you put aside all the nice legalisms, all the civilized debate, and courtroom etiquette, you have to face the willingness of the tobacco industry to push an addictive and deadly product. One other thing: U.S. Tobacco also manufactures Zig-Zag papers, the ones often used for rolling marijuana joints. U.S. Tobacco simultaneously contributes to drug-abuse programs. In 1980, Bantle won the Governor's Award from the Connecticut Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. Four years later, Sean Marsce, a "user," was dead.

Teachers deserve appreciation, thanks

"Sometimes you have to shake things up to get some changes started." That, in a nutshell, is an apt self-description by Jana Roy, the feisty negotiator for the Twin Falls Education Association, who is leaving Twin Falls this year to teach in her native Wyoming.

Roy's self-assessment would be shared by many others, but there would be at least some disagreement over whether that shaking has been good for Twin Falls. Outgoing board member Bob Knighton, for example, obviously hasn't been in favor of what he calls Roy's "more militant unionist point of view."

And Roy's no-nonsense approach was probably reflected in the image of TFEA as having what the group's own self-assessment has concluded was "intransigent, negative and caustic" leadership.

Roy and other TFEA negotiators, including high school teacher Richard Chilcote, indeed have made life uncomfortable for the Twin Falls School Board these past few years. The bitterness of those exchanges is only now fading, what with Roy leaving and Knighton retiring from the Board. New blood and new leadership are probably necessary.

Still, no one person like Roy should be seen through a single activity. She is first and foremost a teacher, and by all accounts, an excellent one. "I don't want to do anything but teach," says Roy. "I can't remember a bad day at school. It's all the extra-curricular crap which wears you down."

Teaching is why she is leaving Twin Falls. In Big Piney, Wyo., she will begin a French program for kids who have not had anything like that before. Teaching, for its most dedicated professionals, has always involved those kinds of challenges.

This week, with another school year throughout the valley, it would be good for all of us to think about the good teachers, like Jana Roy, who have given a lot of themselves to educating our children.

Many, like Jana Roy, have brought spark and energy to our education system. That is what it ought to be about.

Teachers and students scatter this week for the summer. Some, like Jana Roy, will go to challenges elsewhere. Others will find plenty, right here.

All of them deserve our appreciation and thanks. If you doubt that, take a week next fall in a classroom.

Questionnaire was a right-wing smear

Robin Kinsey

The Idaho Pro-Life Political Action Committee mailed to legislative candidates a survey questionnaire. It asked for "Yes" or "No" answers to five items.

The first question item was: "I am opposed to abortion except to prevent the death of the mother." Yes or No.

The other four items were of a similar black or white nature. "Pro-Life" left no room for shades of gray. No room to make qualifications or exceptions except theirs: "To prevent the death of the mother."

In their opposition to abortion they allow one exception. Might there possibly be others? In cases of rape? Incest? A pregnant 7-year-old child? Or suppose a barren woman took a fertility drug and found herself pregnant with 10 or 20 fetuses? The possibilities are endless.

Sad and unusual things do happen, and the law ought not to prevent sensible solutions. This moral issue is important to me, but I do not pretend to have all the answers. To me abortions are reprehensible, but I recognize that in unusual cases they may be the least objectionable of possible alternatives.

I believe, strongly, that family members, church leaders and medical professionals all have a proper role to play in any decisions leading, perhaps, to an abortion.

It is a moral and emotional issue, and an intensely personal one. I think the issue is much too profound to be settled by the narrow approach of "Pro-Life." It should not be a legislative issue, or a campaign issue.

I studied the "Pro-Life" questionnaire, and there was no way that "Yes" or "No" could express my opinions or tell what I would do in the Legislature.

More pertinent, I tried to prevent emotional issues from interfering or diverting attention from the four most important legislative issues (1) develop Idaho's economy (2) improve Idaho's education system (3) move toward fairness in Idaho's taxation system, and (4) stop wasting the Legislature's time, and the taxpayer's money, with the farces and silliness in the Far Right's ideological crusades.

For these reasons, I did not return the "Pro-Life" questionnaire. They had a follow-up phone call, and again I declined to answer their narrow, bigoted and arbitrary questions.

A few days before the primary election, The Times-News printed a news story in which "Pro-Life" graded candidates "A" to "F" supposedly based on responses to the "Pro-Life" questionnaire. Fair enough, so far. Other candidates who sensibly refused to answer these amateurish and loaded questions were graded "D." But the group falsely reported that I had answered "No" to all their questions and I was graded "F."

I believe that I am every bit as pro-life as any number of this "Pro-Life" organization. My professional career is so dedicated. I work to extend life and improve the quality of life, not to end it. I want my friends and professional colleagues in the health care fields to know that the "Pro-Life" news release was false in so far as it referred to me. It was a lie. The lie was damaging to me personally, professionally and politically.

The Idaho Pro-Life Political Action Committee owes a public apology to me, to my family, to my church, to my professional colleagues, to my employer, and to the voters in Legislative District 35 in south Idaho.

My sense of fairness and decency suggests that "Pro-Life" ought to make an apology and distribute it as far as they distributed the falsehood, and also as far as the political smear which followed.

Robin Kinsey, Jerome, was a Republican candidate in the May 27 primary for aatorial seat in the Idaho Legislature.

Letters/Caswell traffic fines could pay for 2 additional police officers

Watch street more closely

We live on Caswell Ave. West, and have no access. We would like to trade, straight across, our good street for the worst polluted street in Twin Falls. It would really solve some serious problems for us.

On this street we have two great schools, Robert Stuart Jr. High and the new Perrine Elementary School. As yet no one has seen fit to have sidewalks for the young people. Consequently, the young people walk all over the street.

Also using this street are the people going to work, parents delivering their children to school, to baby sitters, and also joggers and walkers — all at the same time. Then comes the ones who do not know how to read the speed limit, nor to be obedient to all the traffic laws. There are those who have loud mufflers, who violate the stop signs, those who burn rubber, and then we have a stupid bunch who like to race toward Washington after school weaving in and out of the young people.

We honestly believe that two patrolmen could be added to the force and it wouldn't cost the city one penny. The fines that would be levied against the offenders would pay for the extra help. We are sure that our street is not alone when it comes to these problems. Something must be done.

It just might be a very interesting thing to watch the progress of the town of Jerome in regard to their statistics on the number of cars and the average speed during the hours of watch, and whether or not it is effective to have closer watch on streets near schools.

Our young people are our most precious commodity. Let us keep them alive and well. We would like some potholes to slow down the traffic, or maybe even some gentle speed bumps would do it.

With school out, foot and bicycle traffic will pick up, and so will the careless driver.

Keep downtown healthy

As former residents of Idaho, Hupert 21 years, Stanley 12 years, and now back to the state we love after a three year absence and residing in Twin Falls, I would like to comment you on the article about doing something downtown.

The malls are fun to go into, but I have always liked the downtown area with the trees and more relaxed pace. Off street parking would further enhance the feeling of a park-like area.

Most of us these days like exercise, and what better way to get it than walking the few blocks that take in the major stores. Often the traffic through there is rather hectic and with one-way streets on either side traffic could, surely, be re-routed. So many other cities do it now, why not one more.

I hope the merchants will take your article seriously and continue their efforts to keep the downtown area a lovely place to shop.

Moses wouldn't touch it

The promoters of the so-called "right-to-work" proposal (a defective law hiding behind the facade of an "oh-so-nice" sounding catch phrase) are even more foolish than I thought.

They certainly missed a golden opportunity in their costly TV ad campaign. Chariton Heston, just think — they could have had him attired in his Moses costume, complete with the tablets of stone, in an effort to further deceive the Idaho public into believing the "right-to-work" law comes directly from above instead of from the unholy alliance of the Virginia-based national right-to-work committee, certain movie star celebrities and other big business interests.

If the real-life Moses were to tread across the fields and hills of our fair state of Idaho today, he wouldn't touch the "right-to-work" law with a ten-foot staff. And I'd bet he wouldn't touch it with his right hand, even though for the "Gupper." After all, it was Moses' divine mandate to lead his people out of slavery.

BLM rolls over too easily

Conservationists have repeatedly warned that only formal wilderness designation by Congress will protect Idaho's natural areas against continuing development of dubious economic and social benefit. The saga of the proposed road between Kigin and Hamer just south of the St. Anthony Sand Dunes roadless area is witness to the veracity of that concern.

The federal agencies like to claim that they can protect roadless areas on their own, yet political pressure has now forced the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) to reverse itself and recommend that a road be built across public lands protected since 1978 in the Sands Habitat Management Plan.

This road has the potential to destroy the herd of over 2,000 elk from the Island Park-Yellowstone area that winter on this portion of the desert.

It doesn't seem to matter that this road would lose six times more money from lost hunter days than it would save in potato hauling costs each year.

It doesn't matter that the road would duplicate existing paved Interstate and state of Idaho roads with a gravel road.

It doesn't matter that the road would benefit a very small number of people and injure a great many.

It doesn't matter that the road would cross several counties and would create a law enforcement nightmare (ask the folks of Atlanta, Idaho about that).

If the BLM rolls over this easy, there is no way that it will have the fortitude to enforce a winter closure on the road, no matter how bad the effects on the elk herd. The prospects for the rest of the state are chilling. From winter the starving deer and antelope that wander off BLM lands into Twin Falls last winter?

The BLM has lost its credibility in Idaho. The message regarding wild lands is clear: Lock it up or lose it.

Flood Stallings with calls

Congress is preparing to vote on two important issues, aid to the Nicaragua Contras and liability insurance for nuclear facilities. It's time to contact our congressmen.

The Contra and vote will be next week. Congressional Stallings has a mixed record on this issue and needs to be flooded by phone calls urging him to vote against aid to the Contras. That means voting for the Hamilton substitute amendment. This amendment gives no military aid and instead gives up to $27 million in real humanitarian aid to victims of the conflict.

If the Hamilton amendment is defeated, then Stallings should vote for the McCurdy restrictive amendment which puts restrictions on the use of the president's requested $100 million.

Our tax dollars should not be spent to wage a war in Nicaragua. The Contra leaders are divided and widespread corruption, including drug trading, is reported among the Contras. Send a message to Stallings saying "No aid to Contras." His number is (202) 224-3121 in Washington or 1-734-6229 in Twin Falls.

The second important vote is on the renewal of the Price-Anderson Act. This law drastically limits the liability of both the nuclear industry and the federal government in case of an accident. If an accident were to occur at INEL, there would be only $500 million available for compensation. This money would come from the taxpayer even if gross negligence on the part of the contractor was shown to have caused the accident.

Senate Bill 1761 would make the changes needed to insure adequate compensation and to hold corporations liable.

Senate Bill 2072 assures full compensation for all DOE contractor accidents (applies to INEL). These two bills would work together to provide a comprehensive and balanced nuclear accident policy.

The vote on the Price-Anderson Act will come within a few weeks. Write or call Senators McClure and Symms urging them to support S. 2072 and S. 1761. Don't let their past record discourage you from writing. Tom James, McClure/Fin. Steve Symms, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20510. LIZ PAUL, Ketchum

Symms backs oil tax break

Idaho television has been filled recently with 30-second spots touting Sen. Steve Symms as a fighter for Idaho farmers and ranchers.

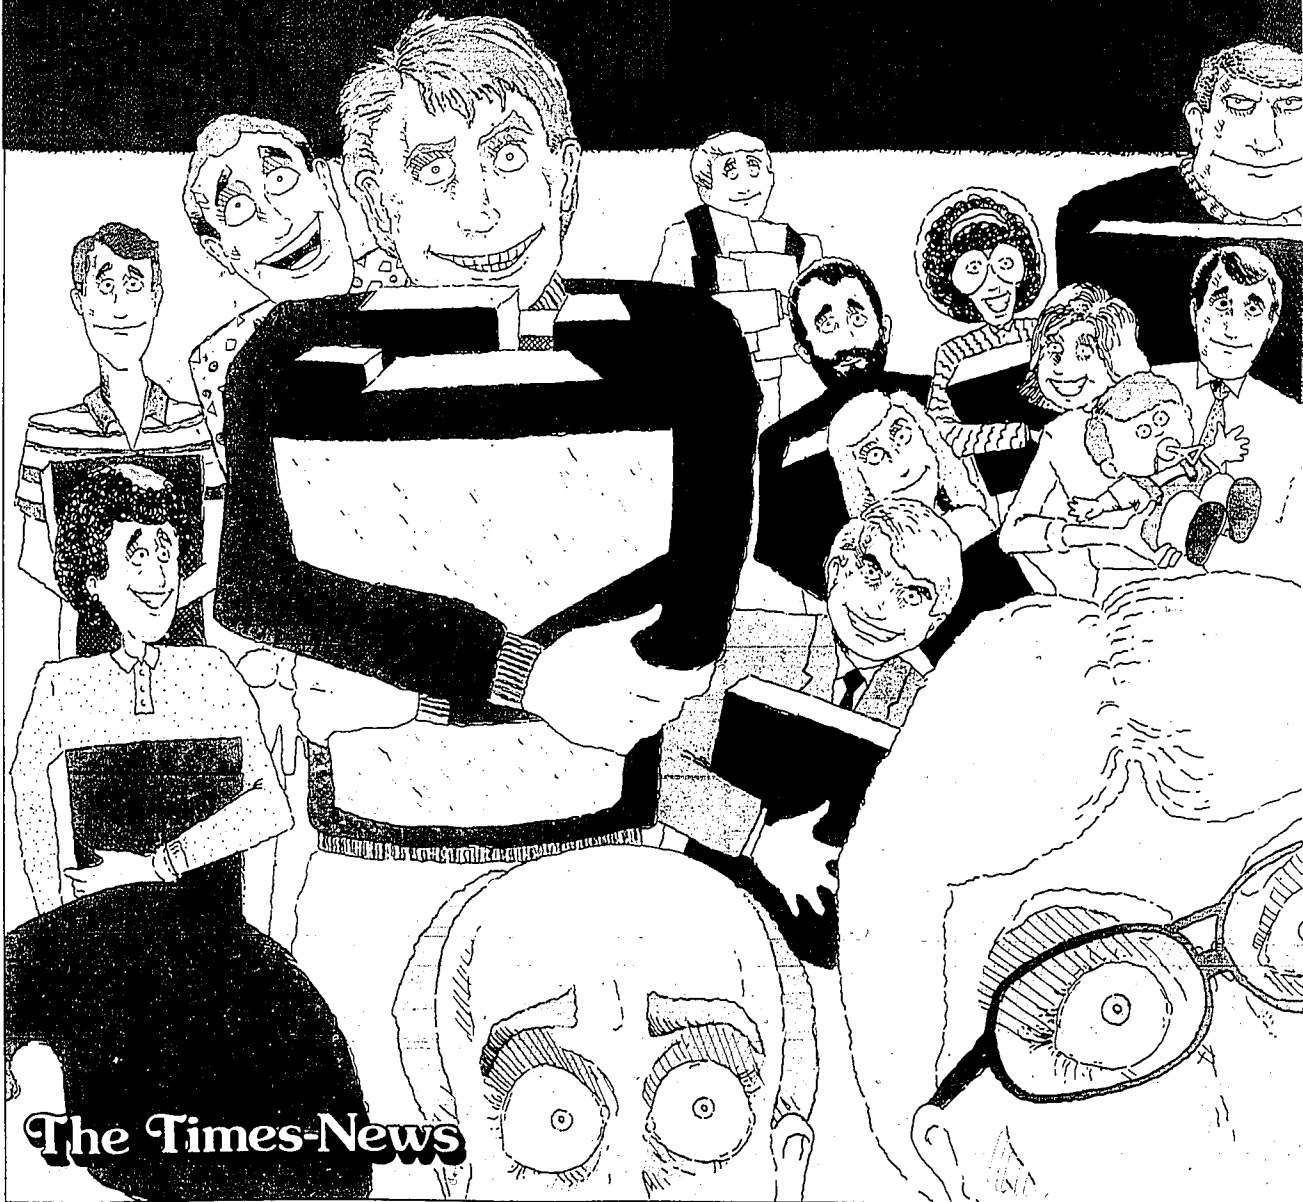

Let's remember these are commercials bought and paid for by Symms, who is running for re-election. I was wondering who bought and paid for the good senator, until I spotted an item in the Wall Street Journal issue of Friday, June 6.

It seems that while most of the United States Senate was trying to close tax loopholes for wealthy individuals and corporations, the People's Choice from Idaho was diligently trying to preserve a tax break for Unocal.

If he's going to fight for corporations, not people, the least he could do is work on behalf of an Idaho corporation — Unocal (The old Union Oil Company of California) is headquartered in Los Angeles. ROBERT W. BARTLETT II

President to issue directive to NASA

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is expected to direct NASA to implement the recommendations in the Rogers commission report on the Challenger accident and to report to him on how it intends to do that, senior administration officials said Thursday.

On Friday, speaking on condition not to be identified, a White House spokesman said the president's directive would be ready by Friday.

"It will simply say we want you to implement all these recommendations and get back to us in 30 days on how you plan to implement them," the source said.

The cost of such an order by the president has not been calculated, because the commission made no effort to price its recommendations. But space experts inside and outside the government have said that some recommendations could force NASA to delay resumption of shuttle flights beyond its target date of July, 1987.

The panel chaired by former secretary of state William P. Rogers recommended Monday that a booster rocket joint which caused the accident be redesigned and that the new design be tested with full-scale, 79-foot-long rockets fired vertically rather than horizontally as in the past. Building vertical test stands could take 15 months, a senior NASA engineer has said.

As the administration reviewed the commission's report, top NASA officials brought the House Science and Technology Committee up to date on their own review of the shuttle since the accident.

Discussing the flight schedule which the commission called too ambitious, NASA's Tom Holloway said that even if the accident had not occurred, "we may have arrived at a point where our capabilities could not meet our schedule."

Jack Lee, who like Holloway worked on NASA's post-accident review, said further tests of the shuttle's main engines are needed "to determine the margin (of safety) of some of the components."

In an interview, a second administration official said Reagan has confidence in the new NASA director, James C. Fletcher, but intends to keep some distance between the White House and the space agency. The commission said management and communications failures at NASA smothered evidence of the hardware problems that caused the Jan. 28 shuttle explosion.

Remarks questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Democratic congressmen took issue Thursday with President Reagan's assertion that ignorance of government assistance programs, not a scarcity of food, was the main reason for hunger in America.

"How can the president say he has trouble finding hungry or undernourished people?" asked Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on nutrition. "They can be found throughout this country, including right here in Washington, D.C."

During his nationally televised press conference Wednesday night, Reagan said: "It is difficult to believe that people are starving in this country because food isn't available. I think that in many instances the people just don't know... where or how to go about it. At the same time, I find it difficult also to find any cases of starvation and undernourishment."

Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, said: "Fortunately there is no starvation. However, medical studies of low-income children seen in emergency rooms clearly document undernutrition."

Contra report blasted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Thursday a congressional report alleging widespread misuse of U.S. aid to Nicaraguan rebels was a politically-motivated effort to discredit the administration's Central America policy.

"I think the track record on the funds we have had available is basically excellent," Shultz said, responding to a General Accounting Office report that millions of dollars in aid earmarked for the rebels has been diverted for other purposes.

After being informed of Shultz's allegations, Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of a House foreign affairs subcommittee, said, "It is not surprising that the administration has no defense against this report other than to try to discredit it."

The GAO, Congress' investigative arm, said in the report released Wednesday that much of the money was diverted to offshore bank accounts, the Honduran military and individuals in the United States.

Shultz said the report was "developed and sprung" by administration adversaries on Capitol Hill for the purpose of rallying opposition to the insurgents in advance of an expected House vote on additional aid later this month.

He said the report did not reflect a "careful investigation" because the State Department was refused an opportunity to see the report in advance or to make a contribution to the inquiry.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Barnes directed the GAO not to share its information with the administration.

Barnes said: "To suggest that this careful analysis by the non-partisan GAO is somehow a put-up job is simply ridiculous. The GAO mapped every transaction into and out of the subpoenaed bank accounts. The results speak for themselves."

"I hope the administration will not continue to try to cover this up but will accept my invitation to respond to the GAO's findings in public testimony before my subcommittee," he said.

Shultz said, "If somebody were really interested in digging into this thing and having our views, they wouldn't try to spring it as a kind of political surprise. Their methods, I think, disclose the nature of what's going on."

Shultz spoke to reporters after meeting at the State Department with the top leaders of the United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO), Adolfo Calero, Arturo Cruz and Alfonso Robelo.

Bill would create enterprise zones

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted 340-26 on Thursday to pass a $16.3 billion housing bill for the 1987 fiscal year that would sharply curtail new public housing construction and create the first federal enterprise zones.

The enterprise-zone provision, sponsored as an amendment by Reps. Robert Garcia, D-N.Y., and Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., would authorize the secretary of housing and urban development to declare 100 enterprise zones in cities and rural areas.

The amendment, passed on a 366-32 vote, was largely symbolic because it does not provide any federal tax incentives or money for the enterprise zones.

All was done for climbers

PORTLAND (AP) — A review of search and rescue efforts concludes little more could have been done to save the nine people who died on Mount Hood after their outing got lost in a freak blizzard, a sheriff's spokesman said.

"We did well with the things we had," Clackamas County Deputy Russ Williams said Wednesday.

The sheriff's department and Portland Mountain Rescue heard testimony June 4 on the massive three-day search, which began after 13 members of the Oregon Episcopal School climbing group became lost May 12.

The final critique, to be issued next week, will recommend preparing a "command post kit" for search and rescue operations that would include signs identifying the personnel involved, and notifying the Air Force Reserve's 30th Aerospace Rescue and Recovery Squadron to be on standby.

One of the four survivors of the climb remains hospitalized, and another is in a rehabilitation center. The other two made their way down the mountain the first day to seek help.

Leaks bring three dismissals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, admitting that some of its security procedures have been lax, on Thursday fired three employees of the Commerce Department following an investigation into improper leaks of sensitive economic data.

The three all worked in the department's Bureau of Economic Affairs, which is the government's main supplier of information tracking the economy.

The dismissals followed an investigation into the premature release last September of the gross national product, the closely watched measure of total economic growth.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said two of the employees had used the data for personal financial gain while the third individual had passed inside information to another person who had profited from it.

Baldrige said dismissal letters were being sent to the three government workers on Thursday but that they would remain on the payroll for at least 30 days during an appeal process. He refused to reveal their names.

He said no criminal charges would be filed because it was not illegal for government employees to profit from confidential economic data. However, he said the administration would ask Congress to make such action illegal in the future.

"This type of leak is very dangerous," Baldrige said at a news conference. "Individuals can make or lose a lot of money. Millions of dollars can change hands if someone has advance knowledge of certain data."

Baldrige said two of the fired employees had contacted brokers either directly or indirectly to buy bond futures, which are contracts for purchase of bonds at a future date.

The data that was leaked was the "flash" estimate of GNP growth for the July-September quarter, which came in at an annual rate of 2.8 percent, much lower than economists had been expecting.

The release of this information could be expected to spur a rally on the bond market since traders would believe that slower economic growth would lead to lower interest rates and thus higher bond prices. Someone with advance knowledge of the GNP report could make his purchases before bond prices went higher.

The inspector general's report said that one BEA employee made $300 by buying bond futures after learning in advance what the GNP figure would be. The report said he had admitted doing this "on more than one occasion."

The report said another BEA employee told a friend who made a $783 profit by buying bond futures and that the employee had initially admitted to receiving about $50 of the profit.

The dismissals marked the first time the administration has fired employees for leaking economic data, although the administration has been pursuing a variety of criminal prosecutions against people accused of selling national security information.

Expert flags down rules for Old Glory

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Keep the flag off the ground, never dip it for one, not even the president, and boys expect George F. Cahill and Iney Smith to warn the Stars and Stripes — especially this Saturday's Flag Day.

Cahill is president of the National Flag Foundation, a Pittsburgh-based non-profit group dedicated to keeping the American flag up the pole and encouraging everyone to salute it, or at least respect it.

Smith is a zoologist, or flag expert, who has written 19 books on the flag and has collected about 1,300 flags in his Winchester, Mass., home. There's a striking dynamism of a snapping in the breeze. It's just like watching a fire in a breeze," Smith said.

There are national flags, military, head-of-state flags, provincial, and municipal flags, flags of local parties, religious organizations, liberation movements and flag companies — literally tens of thousands of flags," Smith said.

Smith said, "The flag is a non-verbal communication that uses colors and shapes to convey everything humans express."

Flag Day in the United States commemorates the adoption by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777, of the traditional stars and stripes as the national flag.

They put in three words, the most important words they ever wrote. They said the stars represent a "new constellation." Cahill displayed among lesser flags. The rule, he said, is always to keep the American flag on its own, or stage, right. (To a bystander facing a row of flags, it would appear to be on the far left.)

"And it never, never gets dipped, not to anything or anybody," he said sternly.

Smith, 46, a former political science professor at Boston University, runs the Flag Research Center, which publishes a bi-monthly magazine, in part to keep flag wavers posted on the latest changes in the world's banners.

Flag uses too have changed over the years, notes Cahill. Individuals and organizations today often lower their flags to half-staff for anyone who dies, and courts have ruled that burning an American flag in public is an expression of the constitutional guarantee of free speech.

Cahill said his foundation has distributed more than 2 million pamphlets on flag etiquette to schools, veterans organizations and other flag-wavers around the world.

Pentagon blasts GAO report critical of bomb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department lashed back at the General Accounting Office on Thursday, describing a critical report on the new Bigeye chemical bomb as flawed and based on outdated information.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said two of the employees had used the data for personal financial gain while the third individual had passed inside information to another person who had profited from it.

Baldrige said dismissal letters were being sent to the three government workers on Thursday but that they would remain on the payroll for at least 30 days during an appeal process. He refused to reveal their names.

He said no criminal charges would be filed because it was not illegal for government employees to profit from confidential economic data. However, he said the administration would ask Congress to make such action illegal in the future.

"This type of leak is very dangerous," Baldrige said at a news conference. "Individuals can make or lose a lot of money. Millions of dollars can change hands if someone has advance knowledge of certain data."

Baldrige said two of the fired employees had contacted brokers either directly or indirectly to buy bond futures, which are contracts for purchase of bonds at a future date.

The data that was leaked was the "flash" estimate of GNP growth for the July-September quarter, which came in at an annual rate of 2.8 percent, much lower than economists had been expecting.

The release of this information could be expected to spur a rally on the bond market since traders would believe that slower economic growth would lead to lower interest rates and thus higher bond prices. Someone with advance knowledge of the GNP report could make his purchases before bond prices went higher.

The inspector general's report said that one BEA employee made $300 by buying bond futures after learning in advance what the GNP figure would be. The report said he had admitted doing this "on more than one occasion."

The report said another BEA employee told a friend who made a $783 profit by buying bond futures and that the employee had initially admitted to receiving about $50 of the profit.

The dismissals marked the first time the administration has fired employees for leaking economic data, although the administration has been pursuing a variety of criminal prosecutions against people accused of selling national security information.

"And it (the Bigeye) will demonstrate satisfactory operational effectiveness before it goes into full-rate production. That's the system," said Krings.

"In summary, we are confident the Bigeye is a good weapon, particularly at this point of its development," added Welch.

The GAO report, released Tuesday, was immediately embraced by congressional leaders opposed to the production of chemical weapons. After five years of debate, Congress authorized the production of new chemical weapons last year to counter what the Reagan administration says has been a non-stop stockpiling of chemical munitions by the Soviet Union.

repute the GAO findings. Both men repeatedly noted the GAO report was based on the results of early development tests conducted prior to April 1985 and that the congressional watchdog agency had not reviewed the results of recently completed operational tests.

The initial results from those operational tests indicated the Bigeye has reached a point to justify the construction of a production facility and production of a few hundred bombs for further testing, Welch said.

In the interim, the Pentagon officials said, a new, more rigorous round of operational tests will begin this summer.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Witnesses at a Capitol Hill forum, contending the government has misled them about radiation dangers at weapons facilities, called Thursday for temporary shutdowns and independent health studies.

"We are here to vent the truth just as radiation is vented at the Nevada test site," said David Cortright, executive director of SANE, a nuclear arms control group that cosponsored the "citizens hearing" along with four House members.

Cortright and others accused the Department of Energy of issuing health reassurances to people living near its nuclear reactors and weapons facilities while at the same time contaminating land, water and air with huge amounts of radiation.

Cancer rates near the department's Hanford, Wash. reactor are abnormally high, while workers at the Rocky Flats weapons production plant near Denver are dying of brain tumors at a rate 400 percent higher than normal, Cortright contended.

"People — and especially children — are being damaged and killed by weapons tests and weapons production," said Dr. Benjamin Spock, the famed pediatrician. "Yet our government arrogantly refuses to accept any responsibility or even to allow any independent investigation."

Energy Department spokeswoman Gail Bradshaw said a state health department study found normal cancer rates near Hanford. She said a Los Alamos study of Rocky Flats workers found normal cancer rates but 16 fatal brain tumors compared to a normal expectation of four. However, she said no correlation to radiation exposure was found and a more intensive study of possible chemical causes is planned.

The Energy Department runs five plutonium production reactors — one at Hanford and four at Savannah River near Aiken, S.C. — that are not monitored by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. The department also operates weapons development laboratories at Berkeley and Los Alamos; tests weapons in Nevada; and oversees uranium mining, processing and components production at various facilities.

Students charged with arson attempt

SEATTLE (AP) — Two University of Washington students accused of placing a bomb in a campus shantytown erected to protest South African apartheid have been charged with attempted arson.

David Allan Kadumacher, 19, and Daniel Todd Shelton, 19, were charged Wednesday in King County Superior Court with second-degree attempted arson.

In an affidavit supporting the charges, prosecutors accused the two of placing a can of gasoline with a timing device set to ignite it inside the plywood shack.

Carbide accepts conditions

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — The Union Carbide Corp. agreed Thursday to accept the conditions laid down by a federal judge in order to have lawsuits over the Bhopal chemical disaster moved from American courts to India.

The decision, which had been expected, was announced by company spokesman Ed Vandamee at Carbide headquarters.

"We are pleased that the court is sending the case to India where it belongs," Vandamee said. "This is good for Union Carbide."

Lawyers for victims of the December 1984 gas leak, which killed an estimated 2,000 people and injured 200,000, had fought to keep the case in American courts. So did the Indian government, which itself sued Carbide in New York.

But on May 12 U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan ruled that India is the appropriate site for the case because that is where the accident occurred, the victims live and most of the relevant witnesses and documents can be found.

The accident happened when methyl isocyanate gas leaked from a pesticide plant and drifted through a crowded slum in the middle of the night, catching residents unprepared.

Doves of American lawyers flocked to Bhopal, an impoverished city in central India, to sign up clients after the accident. More than 100 suits eventually were filed in the county's courts, all of which were consolidated in the case before Keenan.

But internal squabbling between the Indian government and the private U.S. lawyers over who really represented the accident victims' interests made an agreement impossible.

Reports on Panamanian raise concern

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Thursday he was concerned about reports linking Panama's military leader to drug trafficking, passage of secrets to Cuba, gun-running and money laundering.

"And his spokesman, Bernard Kalb, said "an examination of these allegations would appear to be a matter for consideration by the government of Panama."

GEN. MANUEL A. NORIEGA
Gun running among charges

"The New York Times and NBC, quoting U.S. sources, reported that Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, head of Panama's armed forces, was linked to illegal activities, including the murder of a critic of the Central American nation's military.

"Activities of that kind are obviously of importance and concern to us," Shultz said in response to reporters' questions in the State Department lobby.

"There was no immediate response at the State Department to whether the allegations were discussed with the general, who is visiting Washington this week.

Noriega is widely viewed as the country's strongman, controlling the civilian leadership. As the site of the Panama Canal and vital installations, Panama holds a key strategic position in U.S. security arrangements in the Western hemisphere.

by intelligence officials at recent closed-door congressional subcommittee hearings.

"I'm not able to give much light on that here in public but suffice it to say that the charges are serious... and they certainly do have implications for both regional and U.S. security," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.

On Capitol Hill, a House committee announced hearings on the allegations. Ranking committee members from both parties said if the charges are true, the United States should reassess its relationship with the government of Panama.

Rep. Charles B. Rangel, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, announced that the committee would hold hearings at a date to be announced after witnesses are confirmed.

Rangel said the committee has asked for an intelligence briefing by the CIA, the State Department, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Customs Service, the Defense Department and the National Security Agency.

He asked President Reagan to "recall the U.S. ambassador to Panama immediately to review these allegations, and if they prove true, to begin a complete reevaluation of our current relationship with Panama."

"We cannot allow diplomatic concerns to override our efforts to control drug trafficking and abuse which also poses a grave threat to our national security," Rangel said.

Rep. Benjamin A. Gilman of New York, the ranking Republican on the committee, said the allegations "... are serious charges that require a complete investigation by the Congress and the intelligence community. If these charges are true, then we must reassess our entire relationship with the government of Panama."

American winners join prime minister for tea

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher served cucumber sandwiches to 30 Americans at a 10 Downing St. tea party Thursday for some of the winners of free flights to London.

Filipinos celebrate freedom

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino joined tens of thousands of Filipinos Thursday in a fiesta of songs, fireworks and parades celebrating freedom from colonial powers and from 20 years of rule by Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Cabinet ministers marched with government employees and youths in tribal costume danced to drum beats as more than 150,000 people watched an Independence Day parade through the capital.

"The road ahead is long and strewn with sacrifices, but it is full of hope," Mrs. Aquino said in a brief speech from the grandstand in Rizal Park. The festivities commemorated the Philippines' declaration of independence from Spain on June 12, 1898. But Mrs. Aquino said the island nation had to win its freedom two more times — from the United States in 1946 and from Marcos in February's military-civilian revolt that catapulted her to power.

"What is sad is that this time we regained our freedom from the hands of another Filipino," she said.

Marcos, who celebrated the holiday last year with a parade of tanks, warplanes and guns, telephoned a message to his supporters from exile in Hawaii. The private radio station BZME broadcast the message several times.

Marcos referred to "yours truly" as the legitimate president, and accused Mrs. Aquino of colluding with communists. He predicted that her 107-day-old government will not last long.

Moslems seek end to chaos

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Lebanese factions battled in the Syrian-occupied Bekaa Valley on Thursday, the fight for Beirut's refugee camps raged on and Moslem religious leaders sought Syria's help in ending the chaos.

Police said at least nine people were killed, 10 wounded and 17 kidnapped in gunbattles between pro-Syrian Shiite Moslem zealots of the Hezbollah (Party of God) and the Syrian-backed Syrian Social Nationalist Party in the western Bekaa town of Mashgari.

They said Hezbollah fundamentalists and leftist militiamen of the secular SSNP had been vying for control of Mashgari, 25 miles southeast of Beirut, since Israel pulled its occupation troops back from most of south Lebanon a year ago.

The town's population of 17,000 is roughly half Christian and half Shiite. Both Christians and Moslems belong to the SSNP, which advocates creation of a Greater Syria encompassing several Middle East nations.

France to freeze Duvalier accounts

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The French government has agreed to freeze deposits held by Jean Claude Duvalier's bank accounts and let Haiti repossess a castle he owns near Paris, a Justice Ministry official said Thursday.

Col. Fritz Antoine, secretary of state for the Justice Ministry, said Haiti should recover about $17 million the Duvaliers had deposited in French banks and at least $3 million for the castle and other undisclosed properties.

The Swiss government, breaking with tradition, froze Duvalier's accounts a month ago. Banks in United States also moved to freeze the former dictator's family assets there.

Panama is also an active U.S. listening-post in Central America and the Caribbean at a time when the Reagan administration is trying to contain what it says are aggressive campaigns by Cuba and Nicaragua to disrupt the region.

Commonwealth group vows push for S. African sanctions

LONDON (AP) — The Commonwealth group that studied and reported on the South African crisis said Thursday it will press the United States, Britain and West Germany for tough economic sanctions against South Africa.

If sanctions are not imposed to force change, the delegation's leaders said, black radicals eventually will take over the white-run country and demolish all Western business interests.

They told a news conference they concluded during the five-month mission that President P.W. Botha's government was unwilling to negotiate in good faith.

Co-chairmen Malcolm Fraser, former prime minister of Australia, and Olusegun Obasanjo, former military leader of Nigeria, said they met with French, West German and Dutch officials last weekend and would visit the United States next month in their campaign for sanctions.

Shortly before a scheduled meeting with Fraser and Obasanjo on Thursday, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher rejected opposition calls in Parliament for a commitment to sanctions, saying: "We must not close the door on future negotiations."

France and the Netherlands are factors in foreign investment in South Africa, but the bulk of it comes from Britain, the United States and West Germany. All three have resisted severe sanctions.

Fraser said Western countries should act within a few weeks, not just for moral reasons but out of self-interest. He contended that the black majority will decide peaceful change is impossible if the government is not punished economically.

He predicted that a black government will take over within 12 years if the West does not act, adding: "It would be radical, it would owe allegiance to the source of its arms and it would certainly nationalize the totality of Western economic interests in South Africa. And in those circumstances, the commercial interests of Britain would be destroyed absolutely." If he were Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Fraser said, "I would be hoping that America, Britain and Germany do nothing, and southern Africa will fall into my lap sometime in the next 15 years."

He named agricultural products, coal, steel and uranium as commodities that could be withheld from South Africa without damaging Western interests. Such measures under discussion as suspending air links and halting further investment would have little effect, he said.

Britain, which has a huge investment in South Africa, says sanctions would cost an estimated 120,000 British jobs.

Mrs. Thatcher's government remained adamant about sanctions at a Commonwealth meeting last October, against overwhelming majority sentiment, and the study group was a compromise, South Africa quit the association of Britain and its former colonies years ago.

Social Democrats hope to make gains in Sunday election

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The opposition Social Democrats are counting on anti-nuclear backlash from the Chernobyl accident and Chancellor Helmut Kohl's image problem to give them a victory in a crucial state election Sunday.

If the Social Democrats win in the state of Lower Saxony, they will also gain control of the national Parliament's upper house, which is made up of representatives of the state governments and currently is controlled by Kohl's Christian Democrats.

A victory by the Social Democrats in Lower Saxony also could reopen questions about Kohl's leadership ability and set the mood for next January's elections for the lower house of the federal Parliament. The lower house currently is controlled by a coalition of Christian Democrats and Free Democrats.

State of emergency may backfire, S. African business leaders predict

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Anti-apartheid and business leaders said the nationwide state of emergency imposed Thursday could backfire by provoking more violence and endangering the economy.

"No country can afford to impose law and order at any cost," said J.R. Wilson, president of the Federated Chamber of Industries, South Africa's largest association of manufacturers.

However, one far-right politician said the action should have come sooner.

"It is unfortunate it was not done earlier due to fear of foreign reaction," said Jaap Marais, leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party (Reformed National Party). "What is expected of the government now is not to act half-heartedly but to crack down on rioters and tyrants without regard to foreign reaction."

methods of resolving South Africa's political problems."

Wilson said his industrial group strongly disapproves of the declaration and the detention of at least 1,000 anti-apartheid activists.

"The total security clampdown now adopted will inevitably project South Africa into black-white confrontation, destroy moderate opinion within the country and increase South Africa's international isolation," Wilson said. "Such an approach must seriously endanger the economic and political strength of the country."

The emergency was widely viewed as an attempt to curtail plans for nationwide commemorations on Monday of the 10th anniversary of fierce rioting in the black township of Soweto outside Johannesburg.

The government already had banned any public gatherings linked to the anniversary of the riots, which triggered months of violent protest nationwide and marked a new phase of militant defiance in the struggle for black rights. Under apartheid, 5 million whites dominate 24 million voteless blacks.

The Rev. Allan Boesak, a prominent anti-apartheid leader and president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, said Thursday he would lead commemorative church services even if it meant his arrest.

The Azanian Students Movement, a black consciousness organization, also said blacks should proceed with plans to commemorate the 1976 riots.

Test should precede parenthood, drug fighter maintains

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Bruce Weitz, better known as Detective Mick Belker on television's "Hill Street Blues," says parents are often at the root of their children's drug problems.

"I spoke in Iowa, and they booed me when I said this, but I'm going to say it again," Weitz says in Sunday's Parade magazine. "Sometimes I think there ought to be a test that prospective parents could take, and if they can't pass it, they can't have kids."

Weitz, 43, is not a parent, but is honorary chairman of the National PTA's Drug and Alcohol Abuse Prevention Project. He said he got his opinion on parents and drugs from 10,000 letters he got from teen-agers about drug abuse.

Recently, Weitz had lunch with first lady Nancy Reagan, who has made fighting drug abuse her No. 1 cause. "She asked me when I was going to get married," he said. "She always asks me when I'm going to get married."

Extravaganza planned

singer-composer Stevie Wonder is tuning up here for his first U.S. tour in four years, with three days of rehearsals for the 18-week, 65-city computerized, quadrasonic sound extravaganza. The show, entitled "Wonder In Square Circle," is staged in the round, with a revolving stage, four giant video screens, quadrasonic sound, enough lights to illuminate a football field, and six keyboards for Wonder to play.

Bill Reeves, production manager, said a permanent crew of 45 technicians, video and sound engineers and roadies would travel the tour, with local union hires in each city bringing the total work force to more than 90.

Workers pack the ensemble into six semitrailers and head for Seattle Saturday, returning to Portland the next day and then embarking on the 18-week tour, said Mark Smith, Wonder's sound engineer.

Skaggs shaken by news of gun at performance

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Ricky Skaggs said he was shaken to learn that a 38-year-old Frenchman had been arrested carrying a loaded pistol near the stage where he was performing at a picnic.

Jean-Pierre Antona of Corsica was scheduled for a hearing Friday on a charge of possession of a weapon. He was arrested Wednesday and held without bond, said Skaggs' publicist Kathy Gangwisch.

"I feel sorry for the guy," Skaggs said after the concert. Antona told authorities through an interpreter that he works for a radio station in Ajaccio, Corsica, police said.

Skaggs, the Country Music Association's 1985 entertainer of the year, threw the picnic for Fan Fair, a week-long festival that allows fans of country music to mix with their favorite stars.

Firestone Asher fined after plea on charges

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The ex-wife of three-magnate Harvey Firestone has been fined $1,250 and sentenced to five years probation after pleading guilty to six felony drug charges and one misdemeanor.

Mary Alice Firestone Asher, 50, who divorced Firestone in 1966, also was ordered Wednesday to seek treatment if necessary for drug, alcohol and psychiatric problems. Mrs. Asher was arrested last summer after police found more than a pound of marijuana, 10 ounces of cocaine, amphetamines, barbiturates and two 3-foot-tall marijuana plants in her home.

Her son, Mark Firestone, 24, and her husband, industrialist John Asher, 62, are scheduled for trial Aug. 4 on related drug charges.

Finder of Cooper money allowed to keep $3,000

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Celebrated skyjacker "D.B. Cooper" has lost nearly $6,000 of his ransom money to the 14-year-old boy who found it on a beach and the insurance company that paid it.

Brian Ingram of El Reno, Okla., picked out $3,000 worth of lattered $20 bills Wednesday from the $6,000 he found nearly six years ago on a plane at a Vancouver, Wash., beach.

The money, in FBI custody ever since, was split under federal court order with Globe Indemnity Co., which insured Northwest Orient Airlines. Cooper, who was never caught, jumped from a Northwest Orient jet on Thanksgiving eve 1971 with a $200,000 ransom.

Brian said he planned to sell the bills to people who want a souvenir of the nation's most celebrated skyjacking, and expects the opening bid for one of the frayed bills would be $1,000.

Stephen P. Rickles, an attorney for Globe Indemnity, said the company also would sell its share of the money as souvenirs. The FBI is keeping 14 bills in case it ever prosecutes the case.

Girl who received friend's heart hospitalized after minor rejection

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Donna Ashlock, a shy teen-ager who received a heart transplant from a high school admirer, will be hospitalized for eight to 12 days for a minor episode of organ rejection, her doctor said.

The 15-year-old high school freshman was admitted Monday after tests showed an increase in the number of inflammatory cells in the heart muscle, an index of rejection, said Andrew Fryer, her pediatric cardiologist.

Donna received the transplant Jan. 3 from Felipe Garza, a 15-year-old classmate who died after telling his parents he wanted her to have his heart.

The freckle-faced girl from Paterson, 75 miles southeast of San Francisco, was admitted to Pacific Presbyterian Hospital in San Francisco for a week in March after an initial case of rejection, and she was re-admitted this week due to a relapse, Fryer said.

"She is in good condition," hospital spokeswoman Gail Ferrari said Thursday. "She's just being treated for mild rejection."

Fryer described the new hospitalization as "a little out of the realm of routine." "Ninety percent or so of these patients have some episode of rejection within the first three to four months. For her to have this rejection and then a little bit of a relapse is not all that unusual," he said. "She is clinically doing quite well, and we expect her to respond nicely."

Donna feels healthy, Fryer said. Her admission was based on a microscopic analysis of a heart tissue sample taken June 5.

"She has some headaches now and then that could be attributed to some of the medication she's taking," Fryer said. "There's nothing truly disabling, nothing that's really holding her back."

Donna was taking daily medication before she was admitted. Her hospital treatment involves more intensive medical therapy: changing drugs and increasing dosages to reduce inflammation, he said. She has had a low-grade inflammation since the transplant surgery.

Her heart donor, Felipe, died of a brain hemorrhage.

Parrot's slurs bring harassment complaint

SEATTLE (AP) — A black woman said Thursday she has filed a harassment complaint against a white neighbor who has trained a parrot to squawk a racial slur.

Charlene Tymony said her neighbor got the parrot and trained it to speak the offensive word because of a dispute that began when she refused to trim her trees to improve the neighbor's view.

the city's harassment law covers animals.

Tymony said she filed the complaint Wednesday after the bird squawked the word over and over for a half hour starting early in the morning. She said it happens three or four times a week and has been going on about two years.

"It wore my nerves to a frazzle," she said. "It's been driving me to where it made me sick at my stomach they could do that."

She said the dispute began when the neighbors wanted her to cut her trees to improve their view of Lake Washington. She refused because she doesn't want to lose the shade in her yard.

She said she has complained to the neighbors about the bird, but they refuse to speak to her.

The complaint named Tymony's next-door neighbor, Sue Kautman. A message left on her answering machine seeking comment was not returned.

Five communities to receive block grants

The Times-News and The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS — Five Magic Valley communities will receive a portion of $5.6 million in community development block grants awarded by the state Thursday, but the city of Twin Falls is not among them.

Winning grants are Wendell, Glens Ferry, Declo, Camas County and Lincoln County. The city of Jerome is on a standby list and will receive funds if other projects fall through.

Twin Falls had hoped for $350,000 to continue development of the Chamber of Commerce Industrial Park. Planned work included drilling a second well, adding booster pumps to the water system, providing additional power, building a railroad spur, completing construction of Eldorado Avenue, paving Eastland Drive South.

The proposal failed to meet federal requirements that 51 percent of jobs created by the industrial park expansion and improvement would go to low- and moderate-income people, said Donna Batch, a state community development specialist.

The city received a three-year community development grant in 1983 for the initial development of the park, but since then program rules regarding incomes have changed, Batch said.

Twin Falls will not give up plans for continuing development of the park, said city Community Development Director LaMar Orton. The city will try to win Economic Development Association funding for the project. Federal money from that program will require matching local money, while the community development block grant would not have.

"We are not too far along, but we are looking at the program," Orton said.

Wendell received one of the two largest community development block grants awarded in the Magic Valley. The city will receive $200,000 for water and sewer system improvements. Grant funds will be matched by a $210,750 Department of Health and Welfare grant and $60,000 in local funds.

The Wendell City Council put an emergency moratorium on new construction in March to prohibit all new water and sewer hook-ups. Municipal sewer lagoons overflowed this winter, causing imminent peril to public health, said City Attorney Lynn Nelson.

The city had asked the state for $350,000 in grants. Of top priority is $70,000 for sewer repair work. They also requested $180,000 to install a larger water storage tank and $60,000 for a booster pump at the tank.

City officials said, however, that they would accept any money the state made available for sewer and water service improvements.

Glens Ferry also received a $200,000 loan to Magic West Inc., a potato-processing plant, for working capital. The plant began operating again this spring after a 10-month closure. Magic West had been renting the plant to Red-Spuds of America, Inc. before Red-Spuds declared bankruptcy.

The firm processes potato flakes and frozen shredded hash browns. In full operation the plant will put at least 65 people back to work, developers said.

West will eventually pay the $200,000 back, and the community will be able to use it for a revolving loan fund to help other businesses create new jobs.

Declo was awarded $165,000 to replace its well and build a water storage tank. The city had "magnesium slime" that turned the

Chairs are still stacked on tables, but a number of applicants are interested in reopening the airport restaurant

Restaurant grounded

No coffee, tea or milk — or food — available at airport

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Travelers stopping at the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport can no longer get a drink or even a cup of coffee there, but the Airport Board is hoping to have the restaurant and bar flying again soon.

The bar and restaurant closed at the beginning of the month when lease-holder Phyllis Sinclair was no longer able to pay insurance and rental bills, says Airport Manager Harry Merrick. She had operated the restaurant for 9½ years but was unable to pay rent for the last two months, he says.

Despite a record of management turnover every few years, members of the Airport Board said at a meeting earlier this week that they thought the right person would be able to make money with the operation.

The board will be accepting applications to lease the two facilities until 5 p.m. Monday. Prospective operators are asked to submit a bid for monthly rent, a financial statement, operating plan, action, menu and proposed hours of operation.

The board has received plenty of interest in the restaurant and bar, says board Chairman Richard Shotwell. The difficulty will be deciding which applicant has the best chance of running a successful business, he says.

An operator will need to open the business with enough capital to tide the service through slow months until the ski season, but overall, the business should be profitable, Merrick says.

The board has been charging $685 a month in rent. That's a bargain, Merrick says. The rent includes stoves, refrigerators and all the equipment needed for the business except dishes, pans and a cash register. The airport is also responsible for repairs, painting and substantial power and utility bills, he says.

"If operators can't make it paying that, they can't make it anywhere," Merrick says. "I think if you would promote it, you would make some money."

The airport takes in little revenue by charging $685 a month after power and utility bills are paid, but the cafe is still important to airport operations, Merrick says.

"Travelers expect to get a cup of coffee and a doughnut when they get off the plane," he says. "Turnover in the restaurant business is not unusual, board members say. In fact, it may be beneficial."

"If every two or three years we need some new interest in the restaurant, so be it," Shotwell says.

Murtaugh voters pass school levy

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

MURTAUGH — Voters of the Murtaugh School District authorized a $100,000 supplemental tax levy in a special election Thursday by a 53.3 percent vote.

Sam Saxon, Murtaugh's school superintendent, said the small district had a turnout of 215 voters, with 119 voting for the levy and 96 against it.

"We are elated," Saxon said. "It is especially gratifying that in this hard economic time for the farmers — and Murtaugh's district is nearly all farmers — the citizens have seen fit to make the sacrifice by voting to tax themselves further for education."

This is the first time in seven years that it has been necessary to ask for a supplemental levy to maintain the schools. The money will go for maintenance of buildings and for other major tax increases. The supplemental operations, Saxon said, because teacher salaries represent a part of regular operations of the district, some of the money will be used to meet salary costs, he added.

However, he said, there were no salary increases given this year. Budget cuts have also been made to keep operation expenses at a minimum.

Saxon had said prior to the election that if approved, the $100,000 would allow the district to maintain sports programs at the senior and junior high schools, band classes, Future Farmers of America and foreign languages, all part of an improved curriculum at Murtaugh.

Some much-needed building repairs will also now be possible.

Last month, Murtaugh voters turned down a consolidation proposal with the Hansen School District. Many residents said they feared consolidation would mean bond issues for new school buildings, and major tax increases. The supplemental levy proved more acceptable to the taxpayers.

Child-care project tried after school as an experiment

By CLAUDINE CHAMBERLAIN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The latest United Way community project is an after-school child-care program in Twin Falls. The program has been run by the Magic Valley YFCA, with a $2,833 venture grant from the United Way.

The child-care project is currently in experimental form, operating at Harrison and Perrine Elementary schools in cooperation with the Twin Falls School District. The program has been in effect at the two schools for the past five weeks, with fewer than 20 students involved. It ended this week.

The project allows children to stay at their elementary schools after school, where they can be cared for. People to watch the children are hired by the YFCA. The students receive a snack each afternoon and participate in such activities as group games, arts and crafts, and field trips.

The most important activity for the children is the release of physical energy, says John Eschenburg, general director of the Magic Valley YFCA. "They need to get a whole day of school out of their systems," he says. Possible field trips include excursions to KMYT and Herrett Museum.

The YFCA hopes to introduce the program to all six elementary schools next fall, says Eschenburg. "Right now, we just want to test if they'll work," he says.

The pilot program was designed in the interest of "latch-key" kids, who need care from 3:10 p.m., or until their parents return from work. Any elementary school student in afternoon kindergarten through the fourth grade is eligible for the program.

The program follows the national YMCA guidelines for after-school child care. These guidelines deal with aspects of child care such as nutritious snacking, staff requirements, and activity schedules that are appropriate for children at that age.

Research for the development of such a program in Twin Falls was done by VISTA volunteer Laura Harrison, who has been studying the local demand for after-school child care at Harrison and Perrine over the past seven to eight months, says United Way Executive Director Sandy Thomas. Recommendations from her study served as the basis for organizing the program.

Other local organizations involved in the project are the Salvation Army and the Early Childhood Learning Center.

Though most of the funding for this program is provided by the venture grant, parents will be charged a fee each month, based on a sliding scale of the parents' income. "We will not refuse anyone for lack of funds. We are willing to work with people who can't afford it," says Eschenburg.

Each individual school's office will take requests from parents interested in the program.

Paul City Council signs anti-Nazi resolution

By CLAUDINE CHAMBERLAIN
Times-News correspondent

PAUL — Paul City Council members Wednesday agreed to sign a resolution stating their disapproval of the actions of such groups as Aryan Nations and the Order.

A letter was sent to the council by the Kootenai County Task Force, which urged city council members all over the Northwest to express their disapproval of the neo-Nazi groups. Mayor Gene Hansen read the letter to the council, which, after a brief discussion, agreed to sign the letter.

Norman Gissel, a member of the Kootenai County Task Force, told The Times-News Thursday that the letter was formulated to help raise consciousness around the Northwest. "These people want to form their own nation of white supremacy here in the Northwest. Some people don't realize that it's really serious," he said.

The Task Force has been receiving an "excellent" response from the 700 cities and 300 counties to which it sent letters, Gissel said. He added that the members of white supremacy groups are not pleased with the positive response.

"They're really mad. They misapprehended the beliefs of the Northwest people. They think that just because we're predominately white and predominantly conservative that they can get away with it," he said.

Gissel also believes that the Northwest is misunderstood nationwide.

He thinks that positive support for the resolution will show the country how people really stand.

The main goal of the resolution is to discourage the efforts of the neo-Nazis. "We want to convince them that their attempts at creating a separate nation in the Northwest have no value," he said.

Supreme Court upholds Ketchum's subdivision rejection

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

BOISE — Rejection by the city of Ketchum of plat applications for the proposed Skyline Subdivision was upheld last week by the Idaho Supreme Court.

Carl Curtis of Halley, doing business as Skyline Development Co., had appealed a 5th District Court decision on his claim against the city. The focus: a 30-acre parcel of undeveloped property on the southwest side of Dome Mountain, known as the Skyline Subdivision.

For more than 15 years, people had attempted unsuccessfully to develop the property. After Curtis acquired the land in 1978, he filed in district court a lawsuit naming the city, members of City Council and the Zoning Commission, the city planner and other officials, according to a case history. His demands included $3 million in damages and an order compelling the city to supply the necessary permits and approvals for his subdivision.

About a year later, the city adopted an ordinance prohibiting construction on hillsides with a slope exceeding 25 percent. As then designed, about 22 percent of Skyline Subdivision could not be developed because the hillside slope exceeded that amount.

While the lawsuit was pending, Curtis attempted in 1981 and 1982 to gain approval of the subdivision plat. He was rejected largely because the plan failed to comply with the slope requirements.

In 1981 Curtis filed an amended complaint, dismissing the 14 individually named defendants and adding more allegations, including protests of the city's 1981 denial of his subdivision plat.

The District Court allowed the amended complaint on the condition that Curtis pay the city $10,000 in attorney fees for the defense of the city officials named in the first complaint.

After another amended complaint in 1984, which challenged the city's 1982 denial of his subdivision plat, the case went to trial.

The District Court found, among other items, that Curtis could seek damages or dispute the city's rejection in 1981 and 1982 of his plat because he didn't meet the required time periods for filing the challenges.

The court also ruled that the city's ordinances and actions in the proceedings were valid.

Curtis appealed. His questions included whether the District Court abused its discretion in ordering the attorney fees; and whether the city's application of zoning ordinances amounted to inverse condemnation, or the taking of value, of his property. He contended that the slope requirement deprived him of developing about one-fourth of his property.

In its June 2 opinion, the Idaho Supreme Court wrote that court rules allow the imposition of conditions on the filing of complaints. The city incurred considerable expense in defense of officials named in the first complaint, but later dropped in subsequent actions.

"Clearly these individuals were prejudiced by the bringing of an admittedly groundless action against them in their individual, rather than representative, capacities," stated the decision.

On Curtis' challenge of city's application of zoning ordinances, the higher court wrote, "Appellant's (Curtis') arguments are nothing more than a challenge of the City Council's quasi-judicial action denying his subdivision application."

The justices also upheld the lower court's award of attorney fees to the city, as the city was the prevailing party.

Curtis and his attorney, E. Lee Schlander of Ketchum, couldn't be reached for comment Thursday.

Eden mourns loss of Mayor Hammond

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

EDEN — City officials and community residents were mourning the loss Thursday of the city's mayor, Owen D. Hammond.

Hammond, 70, died at his home Thursday morning after a long battle with cancer. He had continued in office but had been unable to attend city meetings since March, according to City Clerk Edith Utt.

"He was an excellent mayor. Before he was elected mayor he worked for the city as our maintenance man. He knew every water line, sewer pipe and other (installations) in town," Utt said.

Power plant issues topic of meetings

WELLS, Nev. — Meetings to discuss the scope of issues to be addressed in an environmental impact statement on a proposed power plant in Elko County will be held the week of June 23 in Wells, Elko and Reno.

Meetings to brief the public on the proposal and to discuss issues and alternatives to be analyzed in the environmental impact statement will be held June 24 in the Wells High School Auditorium and June 25 at the Elko Convention Center. Both meetings will begin at 7 p.m.

An open house designed to answer questions on the proposal is scheduled for June 23 at the Holiday Inn on Sixth Street in Reno, from 6 to 8:30 p.m.

Sierra Pacific Resources is making the proposal to construct a coal-fired steam/electric power generating plant on public and private lands in northeastern Nevada.

Ed Spang, Nevada state director for the Bureau of Land Management, says the plant is expected to be composed of eight 250-megawatt units to be constructed over a 20-year period. The Tonopah District of the Thousand Springs Valley in Elko County has been identified by Sierra Pacific Resources as best suited for the project, through a statewide study. This study was conducted to locate potential plant sites.

Coal would be supplied from existing mines in Wyoming and Utah. The proposed plant site is located in an area where existing air quality is good.

"Whenever there was a problem of anything needed fixing, he was right there to help. Our mayor doesn't get any salary, and his work time was offered voluntarily," the clerk added.

Melvin Rife, a member of the Eden City Council, was appointed acting mayor in March when Hammond's illness prohibited him from continuing to play an active part in city government.

"We sure will miss him. He was an awfully good man," Rife said Thursday. "I just hope I can do nearly that well. He had worked with us in Eden for 26 years and helped out everyone."

Hammond was born in Arkansas and moved to Eden in 1953. He worked for the North Side Canal Co. for 13 years and then served 14 years as the town's maintenance man and the city police officer.

When he retired from that position it was only natural that he was asked to serve as mayor, Utt said. He was elected in 1980 and again two years ago.

Hammond was also active in the Eden Quick Response Unit.

In his free time, he performed on the harmonica for senior citizen programs and centers. He is known by his fellow citizens of Eden as having supported nearly every worthwhile community project and effort. He and his wife Minerva were married in Eden 31 years ago Thursday and spent their entire married life in the community.

The funeral for Mayor Hammond will be conducted at 2 p.m. Tuesday in the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Twin Falls.

Postmaster asks residents to take 'bite' out of summer

TWIN FALLS — With the arrival of warmer weather, Twin Falls Postmaster Lorenzo Palagi has asked dog owners to help protect letter carriers, utility workers and other citizens from the danger of dog bites.

Nationally, more than 5,000 letter carriers were bitten by dogs last year, Palagi said, noting that those statistics included injuries to two Twin Falls letter carriers.

The Twin Falls Post Office has had two letter carriers bitten in the last couple of months and numerous attacks by unrestrained animals, Palagi said. On June 7, a Twin Falls Police Department officer shot an unrestrained dog that attacked a mail carrier and the officer, he said.

Palagi said the Postal Service protects its carriers from dog-bite hazards. Among remedies in situations when a pet owner fails to restrain a dog is interruption of home delivery to the residence or, in some cases, to entire neighborhoods. The Postal Service will also seek to recover Workmen's Compensation damages and will provide counseling to carriers who have been bitten and who wish to seek legal action against the dog owners.

"We suggest that pets be kept away from the mailbox and areas the letter carrier uses for access to the property," he said. "If the pet cannot be kept behind a secure fence, the owner should restrain it with a secure leash or tether, or at least keep the pet inside the house during the usual hours carriers are making their rounds."

Grants

water in its system dark, said Joseph Herring, the Region IV Development Association director.

Camas County will receive $107,000 to loan for the construction of a 15-unit motel on U.S. Highway 20 in Fairfield. The motel is planned to serve the Soldier Mountain Ski Area and the growing tourism industry in the county.

Eugene Sullivan and his wife will pay the money back over 15 years. The returned money will be available for more loans to private businesses in the area. This is the first time Camas County has had such funds available, Herring said.

Sullivan is a state legislative candidate, a school teacher and with his wife owns Sullivan's Country Kitchen. Lincoln County will receive $28,500 to rehabilitate the old hotel building now being used for a senior citizen center in Shoshone. The building now has safety hazards that will be corrected with the grant and matching funds from the seniors, Herring said.

The federal money requires that the state set aside money for senior citizen centers. The Lincoln County grant is part of about $200,000 in grants distributed around the state to more senior citizen facilities.

Jerome is one of five sites selected by the state to receive money if other projects fail.

Jerome would then receive $150,000 to loan to Con Paulos Chevrolet for working capital and fixed-asset financing to stabilize the current operation and for an expansion project. Another $90,000 would come from the revolving loan fund of the Jerome Development Corp., and the car dealership should eventually have to pay the $200,000 back to the revolving fund.

The state administers money from the federal government in the community development block grant program, Batch said. The federal government requires that the money be spent to provide jobs or services such as sewer and water to low-to-moderate-income people. Money may also be spent to alleviate slum and blight and for emergency projects, she said.

Short list disrupts planning

TWIN FALLS — Pre-registration for Twin Falls kindergarten students is down this year, throwing school officials into a mild planning lizzy, said Larry Watson, director of auxiliary services for Twin Falls School District.

Watson said that until parents register their children, the district has no way of knowing how many teachers to staff or how many books to order.

"It's a real problem," he said.

Watson encouraged parents to pre-register their children. To pre-register, parents must bring the child's birth certificate and immunization records.

And beginning Monday, the district is offering a free screening program for children who will begin kindergarten this fall.

The program tests children for speech, hearing, language, vision, emotional-social and intellectual skills. The screening process takes about 20 minutes, Watson said.

The screening program is to help the school district and parents become aware of the child's development and readiness for kindergarten, Watson said.

The screening program will be held at Bickel on Monday, Harrison on Tuesday, Lincoln on Wednesday, Monday on Thursday, Perrine on Friday and Sawtooth on the following Monday, June 23.

Screening will be from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at each school, but parents need to call the schools to find out when their child can be screened on that day.

Watson said children should be screened and preregistered at the school they will be attending in the fall.

Families in '80s alive, but altered

NEW YORK (AP) — Reports of the death of the American family are greatly exaggerated, though the family with the working father and stay-at-home mother is a thing of the past, according to a new survey released Wednesday.

"The idea of family appears to be unbroken and unassailable. It is the most important element in our lives, but what people mean by family has not remained constant," said C. Frederic John, senior vice president of Research & Forecasting Inc., which conducted the poll.

John said 89 percent of those surveyed said their families were among the most important things in their lives, and 52 percent said it has the most important element. But the figures were similar across the board — for traditional, dual-career and single-parent households.

The emergence of a various kinds of households is seen "as a symptom of decay, when in fact that was merely a matter of opinion," John said.

More than 70 percent of each type of household say their families are very close, and 84 percent put premium value on time spent with their families.

The telephone poll of 2,000 people was conducted last fall, and was commissioned by Ethel Allen Inc., the furniture company.

The findings are bullish on the American family. Eighty-six percent said they and their families shared at least one meal a day. About half said they see their extended families whenever possible. 64 percent said they did it because they enjoyed it, and only 6 percent said it was an obligation.

Seventy-three percent said they were very satisfied with their relationships with their children, and 70 percent said with their relationships with their spouse or intimate companion.

The main causes of problems within the families was interpersonal conflicts, followed by money, John said.

John said many people "harbor reservations" about how much of the lives should be devoted to family. A third disagreed with the proposition that parents should sacrifice to give their children the best, and 64 percent said parents should have their own lives and interests, even if it meant that they spent less time with their children.

Spokane woman originated Dad's Day

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — William Jackson Smart was a nurturing father before nurturing fathers were in vogue. When his wife died in 1898, he single-handedly raised six children, one of whom founded Father's Day in his honor.

Smart's only daughter, Sonora Smart Dodd, originated Father's Day in Spokane on June 5, 1910, by persuading the Spokane Ministerial Alliance and the city's YMCA to join forces and establish a day to acknowledge fathers.

The idea blossomed, as William Jennings Bryan and presidents Woodrow Wilson and Calvin Coolidge endorsed the holiday.

Congress endorsed the day in 1914. Another congressional endorsement and a presidential proclamation by President Richard Nixon in 1971, firmly established the holiday's permanence.

Father's Day is observed on the third Sunday — of June, — the month Mrs. Dodd's father was born.

Mrs. Dodd, who died at age 96 in 1985, said she established Father's Day to honor her father, who brought his wife and children from Arkansas in 1887 to Washington Territory, where they settled as farmers.

"It is not difficult to recall the twilight of an early March day at the turn of the century, when bereavement came to us at the loss of our mother," she said in 1964. "Father assumed the father-mother role in the rearing of his six children. This role he performed with courage and selflessness until we were all in homes of our own."

Mothers already were honored early in the century with a holiday, and Mrs. Dodd said it was unfair that fathers had no day of their own.

Her daughter-in-law, Helen Dodd of Whitefish, Mont., says Father's Day may not exist had it not been for Mrs. Dodd's perserverance.

"She worked very, very hard to honor her father and all fathers because she felt her own father sacrificed a lot to raise the kids," Helen Dodd says. "He never remarried. She worked so hard on Father's Day, pushed for it because she felt so strongly about it."

Sonora Dodd had a romantic vision of what Father's Day should mean. "With the object of establishing a reciprocity between God and man, the sacredness of the home, chumpan life twist father and son, and the golden rule between man and man, the time was expedient for the emancipation of father," she said.

She may have been surprised at the amount of emancipation fathers gained. In some states, laws now mandated maternity leave for fathers. And the National Organization for Men opposed the holiday by demonstrating in New York City against gender bias and divorce laws.

Allan Boudreau, secretary of NOM, based in New York City, says the organization plans another demonstration this year.

"We believe there's unfairness in divorce law when it comes to visitation rights," Boudreau says. "Many fathers are treated unfairly because they're not allowed access to their children. Many fathers are denied the enjoyment and pleasures that go with that."

Teen-ager's sudden rebellion leads parents to suspect drugs involved

DEAR ABBY: We have a beautiful 16 1/2-year-old daughter who is leaving her father and me toward a nervous breakdown. She has done a complete turnabout in regards to everything and everyone who has ever meant anything to her.

She finishes her 11th grade this month, then she wants to quit school, find a full-time job and get her own apartment! She has no training or job experience, but she's "sure" she can support herself.

She has forsaken all her old friends, her ideals, even her religion. Discussing anything with her is like talking to the wall. She knows it all, and that's that!

Her new friends are in trouble at school, and I'm sure they smoke pot on weekends.

Abigail VanBuren Dear Abby to quit school, get a job and move out as long as she's a minor.

DEAR ABBY: I am 12 1/2 and want more than anything else in the world to become a nun. Some of my friends view it as a joke, and my mother doesn't like the idea because she wants me to go to college (which I don't want to do).

I haven't told anyone else about this, and I'm too embarrassed to discuss it with my priest. What should I do?

DEAR CONFLICTING THOUGHTS: Don't be embarrassed to talk to your priest. He is the ideal person to advise you in this matter. You are too young to make a decision that will hold you to a lifelong commitment, but you need doctors explained to you with all the wisdom and understanding of your spiritual leader.

DEAR ABBY: Our neighbor's young son is learning to play the trumpet. She sends him outside on the porch to practice.

Does your son think they should have a little more consideration for the neighbors? We can take only so much. My husband is fit to be tied.

The noise is so disturbing, the kid really ought to be practiced inside with all the windows closed.

We have always gotten along well with our neighbors, but this is getting us down. How should we handle this?

— DISGUSTED IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR DISGUSTED: Pay them a call and let them know that their young music student is disturbing your peace. (It's not what you say, it's the way you say it.) And be grateful the kid isn't learning to play the drums, OR the horses.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Exposed" Father's Day which was hurt by comments by friends about having "his own" baby soon after having adopted one. We have just adopted our second baby, and here are a few comments that I wish I hadn't heard:

"How much did you pay for him?" (Nothing. It is illegal to buy a child.)

"Is he an illegal black market baby?" (No. Private, non-agency adoption is legal in our state.)

"Is he white?" (No. He's green.)

"Doesn't the birth mother have six months to change her mind and take the baby back?" (Yes. And a pregnancy has nine months to change its mind and miscarry.)

"Don't you want to have your own children?" (We're tired of waiting, and besides, these ARE our own children.)

— SUSAN, ADOPTIVE MOM

DEAR MOTHER: Writing to me may help you, but it won't help your daughter. Consider this: The sudden "turnabout" in your daughter's behavior might be the result of drugs. The national line for drug abuse is 1-800-COCAINE.

You need professional family counseling with or without your daughter. Find the Families Anonymous group in your area and meet with it. (The people there have been through this scene and can be reasonably helpful.)

Let your daughter know that you love her, but you're not allowing her

Donations pour in for children hurt in Cokeville school siege

COKEVILLE, Wyo. (AP)—From a quarter taped to the inside of an envelope to $5,000 given by a fraternal organization, donations of at least $18,000 have been sent to this tiny rural town to help the children, according to the town clerk.

The money has been earmarked to cover medical expenses for all the families of Cokeville Elementary School students injured after a 2½-hour hostage siege last month left 78 people, most of them children, with second-degree burns on their arms, hands, and faces.

And officials say the money doesn't include donations sent directly to families of the most severely hurt children like the Hutchinsens. Billie Jo Hutchinson, 7, was only recently released from the University of Utah's Intermountain Burn Unit at Salt Lake City.

Parents of this predominantly Mormon community have depended on the fund to defray costs insurance policies do not cover, including traveling and living expenses for children who are required to have therapy in Utah or Idaho, across the southwestern Wyoming town's borders.

"People have been very generous," said NaDene Dana, adding that over 100 cards and letters, some accompanied by donations, have been sent to the town hall. She added that there is no final amount on the Cokeville Children's Fund since letters and donations arrive daily.

"They've come from various states," the town clerk said, "a lot of them from Florida, California, Utah and Idaho."

On May 16, the town of 550 people waited in terror as a couple held 150 of the elementary school children and teachers hostage for $300 million ransom.

The standoff ended when Doris Young, 47, accidentally detonated a gasoline bomb that exploded. Her accomplice and husband, David Young, is believed to have shot her to death before killing himself.

Although area psychologists are on standby to counsel traumatized children, Mrs. Dana, whose twin girls were held hostage, said the town is back on its feet.

"We're recovering very well," she said. "We're about back to normal, I hope."

Social-club attorney may appeal judge's $1 discrimination ruling

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—An attorney for a prestigious, men-only social club said Thursday he hopes to appeal a judge's ruling that the club discriminated against a woman, even though she was awarded only $1 in damages.

"I do believe under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution... you have the right of free association," said Glenn Hamel, attorney for the 103-year-old Alta Club in downtown Salt Lake City.

Third District Judge Dean Condon, in a partial judgement issued Feb. 4, said the club illegally discriminated against Megan Marie Peters by not allowing her to apply for membership.

His final ruling on Thursday awarded Peters the $1 she had sought and opened the way for appeals by other side, said attorney Brian Barnard.

"My 33 percent share (of the award) will not push me into another income tax bracket," Barnard said. "But we did not file this suit to get rich... The law has ruled that the Utah civil rights statute does apply to the Alta Club, and their foolishness regarding discrimination has been exposed to the public. That was her intention in bringing the lawsuit."

Condon's decision said the Alta Club was subject to anti-discrimination provisions of the Utah Civil Rights Act because it served beer and was regulated by the state.

However, Peters, a 21-year-old Salt Lake City woman, still did not get an opportunity to apply for membership because the club's board of directors decided to stop selling beer containing 3.2 percent alcohol.

The club, which has a state liquor license, continues to serve stronger beers and hard liquor, but Barnard said there were questions surrounding whether the act applied under those circumstances.

Neither Hamel nor Barnard could say what their clients' plans were regarding appeals. But Hamel said he hoped the club's board of directors and executive committee would seek to overturn Condon's ruling.

"I feel very strongly that Judge Condon was wrong," he said. "I have a fundamental belief that when you have a strictly private club, then that is an extension of your home. In your home you have a right to invite who you want to."

He also said Peters did not meet the club's membership requirements, which in addition to allowing only men, say applicants must be sponsored by two members and must have demonstrated success in business or a profession.

Alta Club President Joseph Bennett referred to the $1 award as "a technically as far as we're concerned. We were expecting it."

He said the club's board and executive committee would decide whether they would appeal the decision within a month.

Power-plant dispute over; contractor wins

SPOKANE (AP)—A dispute going back to the early days of construction of the Washington Public Power Supply System's No. 2 nuclear power plant has been settled in favor of the contractor.

A U.S. District Court jury decided Wednesday night that the interpretation of Pittsburgh-Des Moines Corp., of Pittsburgh, was correct.

WPPSS had alleged that the contractor failed to live up to contract provisions in building the steel containment vessel at the nuclear plant.

A second phase of the trial, which would determine damages, is in doubt at this time.

The supply system had claimed quality control procedures were not followed, resulting in delays and excess contract expenses.

Pittsburgh-Des Moines, however, contended that the contract was approved in 1976 and WPPSS agreed to all the succeeding changes, including a 1981 modification.

In the suit, WPPSS sought $80 million in damages. U.S. District Judge Justin L. Quackenbush had earlier ruled that the section dealing with warranty work was ambiguous.

The two sides disagreed on how to interpret when the work was subject to a warranty.

WPPSS claimed the work had to meet specifications as each act was completed, while the company said the warranty could only be applied when various systems were finished.

Clean-up of wreck to begin

MORGAN, Utah (AP)—Haulers for Union Pacific Railroad were expected Friday to begin removing piles of steel and wheels from freight cars demolished in a derailment last weekend.

"The accident scene is expected to be pretty well cleaned up by the middle of next week," said Dick Tinker, a UP spokesman in Salt Lake City.

Railroad managers, insurers and shippers were attempting to assess damage to the rail cars, freight and

Coeur Mine reports record

OSBURN (AP) — The Coeur mine at Osburn had a record year in 1985, producing a record 151,221 tons of ore that yielded more than 2.6 million ounces of silver.

The mine is one of the largest silver producers in the United States, ranking in the top five. It remains profitable, despite depressed silver prices, according to the annual report of Coeur d'Alene Mines Corp., owner of the mine.

The 1985 production from the Coeur was the highest in the mine's history.

Besides the silver output, production from the mine last year included nearly 2.4 million pounds of copper, and 324 ounces of gold.

In 1984, the mine produced 144,253 tons of ore, which yielded nearly 2.5 million ounces of silver, more than 2.4 million pounds of copper and 309 ounces of gold.

Two programs up for honors

TWIN FALLS — Two programs funded by the South-Central Private Industry Council have been nominated for national awards.

The National Alliance of Business has asked to consider the College of Southern Idaho's Summer Youth Program and Word Processing Specialist Program for Distinguished Performance Awards.

The Summer Youth Program offers four hours of classroom training and four hours of paid work experience to youth 14 to 21 years of age. It is the only summer program in Idaho which offers educational opportunity in conjunction with work experience. It has been recognized by the Region X Department of Labor as an exemplary youth program.

The Word Processing Specialist Program is an example of federal funding working in conjunction with private business to create new jobs. Students receive secretarial/computer skills training in a classroom setting. Each student then takes his or her computer and software into a local business which is not currently using a computer. For the next six weeks, the student works for the business applying what has been learned in the classroom. The students are then placed into unsubsidized employment. The program has experienced an employment success rate of more than 90 percent.

Award winners will be announced later this month and formally recognized in Chicago during the Alliance's annual conference in September.

Deposits rise 4.1 percent

BOISE (AP) — Total deposits as of March 31 for Idaho institutions that are members of the Federal Home Loan Bank were 4.1 percent greater than they were last year.

Idaho deposits totaled $1.21 billion, up from $1.17 billion on March 31, 1985, the bank said.

Total lending by Idaho institutions was $36.23 million as of March, while mortgage lending stood at $22.38 million, a 37.7 percent gain from the $13.33 million loaned last year.

Deposits for member institutions in the eight states and one territory served by the Seattle FHLB were $34.9 billion, a 7.7 percent increase over the balance in March 1985.

Total lending by district institutions was $916.71 million during March. Mortgage lending increased by 11 percent from March 1985 to $761.44 million.

Bank to close three branches

BOISE (AP) — Idaho First National Bank, the state's largest, has decided to close down three southeastern Idaho branches of the failed First Bank and Trust of Idaho after taking over that bank a month ago.

"This configuration of branches will enable us to serve the greatest number of customers in the area while maintaining profitability and safety for customers' deposits," Idaho First National President Fred Humphreys said in a statement issued Wednesday.

On July 11, the bank will close First Bank and Trust branches in Bancroft, Lava Hot Springs and Soda Springs and consolidate their accounts in its Soda Springs branch. The former headquarters for First Bank and Trust along with its other two branches in Preston and Grace will continue to operate as branches of Idaho First National. Humphreys said, although Grace branch loans will be serviced from Soda Springs.

"We are sure that the interests of the community will be well served by an efficient and sound banking network," he said.

Idaho First National notified customers by mail of its decision to close the three branches, a move that will affect about 20 current employees.

The bank took over First Bank and Trust on May 12, three days after federal and state officials declared the institution insolvent and ordered it closed. It was the first bank failure in the state in two decades, brought on mainly by the bank's heavy portfolio of troubled agricultural loans. All deposits in the bank were protected.

Humphreys said it would bring in its own managers to run the three branches in Preston and Malad City.

Insurance crisis hits day care centers

An El Paso day care center paid $6,000 for a liability insurance coverage policy. The insurer then decided not to renew.

A second company did issue a policy for $12,000 but canceled it midway. The center finally found a third company, but this company wanted $20,000 for a one-year policy, a 120 percent increase. At that point, the Texas legislature stepped in.

Another center, this one in Ohio, was hit by a premium increase from $3,300 to $9,000. Passing along the cost to parents worked out to $114 for each family. While that may not sound like much, these parents couldn't afford it. The solution: The center absorbed the cost. The inevitable result: a sacrifice in the quality of care. This particular center had a 25-year history; it had never filed a claim.

Finding adequate day care, an already too-scarce resource, is becoming tougher and tougher. Now threatening the availability and affordability of the resource even more are new problems: soaring liability insurance rates and random cancellation of policies.

A full 70 percent of day care centers responding to a national survey late in 1985 revealed cancellation of insurance premiums. In mid-term, or an exorbitant hike in charges. Some centers reported hikes of 300 percent in insurance costs (when they could get the insurance). Horror stories of non-renewals, cancellations and huge increases in insurance rates are reported across the nation.

"The crisis in liability insurance coverage is absolutely affecting the availability and quality of day care," says Dana Friedman at the Conference Board in New York. "And it couldn't happen at a worse time, when the need is so great and interest has been so high."

Not only are centers becoming more expensive, but some have been forced to close. Organizations interested in establishing day care centers, or making day care available to members and employees, either can't, or won't, do so.

And the need for good, safe day care grows inexorably.

When asked why they are canceling policies and jacking up rates, insurers point to newspaper headlines and say that day care centers are poor risks. Well-publicized cases of child abuse and other criminal offenses have focused the nation's attention on day care centers. But the issue is confused. Child abuse and molestation are crimes and, as such, specifically excluded as insurance risks.

Yet insurers remain shy of the risk and worry that shrewd lawyers will find loopholes in order to collect on a policy. For example, a lawsuit may claim that the center was at fault owing to lax hiring practices or poor supervision. If successful, a claimant could then collect from the center's insurance policy.

There has been, as yet, no thorough claims history to support or refute the notion that insuring day care centers is inherently risky. James Strickland, executive director of Child Inc. in Austin, Texas, told my research associate, Ellen Hermanson.

Strickland worked on last year's national survey in his capacity as chairman of the Child Care Liability Task Force.

Responses to that survey — admittedly from a self-selected group — revealed that only 12 percent had ever filed an insurance claim of any kind.

Strenuous efforts to resolve this crisis are under way, but more than ever, parents must become involved with the centers where they drop their children off each morning, learn about the issue and agitate for help.

Becoming involved and understanding the aspects of this insurance crisis are the first vital steps to keeping day care available for the growing numbers of families that need it.

Tway battles elements for early Open lead

Wind and rain keep par inviolate

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Patience and solid putting enabled Bob Tway to survive rain, wind and cold while Jack Nicklaus' Grand Slam dreams all but evaporated Thursday in some of the most extreme weather conditions of all the U.S. Open Golf Championships.

Tway, a two-time winner on the PGA Tour this season, scrambled to a round of par 70 that set the pace Thursday in the weather-plagued first round of the American national championship.

Play was halted at 7:53 p.m. EDT, with 18 members of the 156-man field stranded on the golf course by darkness.

It marked the first time since the 1974 U.S. Open at Winged Foot that a score of par was good enough to lead the tournament that ranks with the Masters, British Open and PGA as golf's Big Four events.

Nicklaus, 46, who captured the imagination of the golfing world with his dramatic triumph in the Masters, all but self-destructed in his bid to become the only man to make a one-year sweep of the game's major titles.

The holder of a record 18 major professional titles, Nicklaus tied a ball, scored three double bogeys and played the back in 41 on the way to a 77, seven over par on the 6,912-yard Shinnecock Hills Golf Club course.

Nicklaus was not alone in his misery, however. For example, there was Sandy Lyle, the British Open champion, playing in conditions common to autumn in his native Scotland. He struggled to a 76 and fled the course without comment.

The defending American national champion, Andy North, was one shot higher at 79.

Andy Bean, a two-time winner and twice a runner-up on the Tour this year, had a hard-earned 76.

The scores ranged into the ridiculous, 83s for George Burns and Danny Edwards, an 85 for Jack Renner. Others were even higher.

It was the weather — in concert with the historic golf course that sits like a bit of Scotland on the other edge of the Atlantic — that did it.

The winds gusted to 30 mph or more, pushing scudding gray clouds in front of them. Rains ranged from drizzle to squalls, one of which was severe enough to cause a brief delay in play. Temperatures were in the high 50s.

"The conditions were the most difficult I've seen in the American championship," Nicklaus said. "I'd have been happy with a 76."

"Miserable," said Tway. "A day of survival."

"I love it," said Tom Watson, a notorious foul-weather player, who held out a bunker shot for a birdie in his round of 72.

"It's my favorite kind of weather," Watson said of the blustery conditions that were as bad or worse than any he encountered in winning five British Opens.

Australian Greg Norman, the "Great White Shark," who has been on a tear around the American tour was second when play was suspended at 71, one over par.

"I think 71 was like shooting a 67 or 68 under good conditions. There were some par-4s where 5 was a good score today," said Norman, who has scored two victories and two seconds in his last five starts.

With Watson at 72 were South Africans Denis Watson and David Frost, Tommy Nakajima of Japan, Rick Fehr and Kenny Knox, an upset winner in Florida earlier this season.

Gary Koch and Jodie Mudd were at 73. Lee Trevino, Tom Kite, Lanny Wadkins and West German star Bernhard Langer were in a large group at 74.

The starry gathering at 75 included PGA champion Hubert Green, Fuzzy Zoeller, Hal Sutton, and Seve Ballesteros of Spain.

Tway said patience was a key factor in weather conditions such as these.

"You know things weren't going to turn out good so you just had to be patient and keep on trying," he said.

Tway matched four birdies against as many bogeys, but made his day with a half-dozen saves of par, including three putts from the 10-foot range. One of those was on the final hole.

"You know you're going to make some bogeys, so you try to be patient, off-set them with some birdies," he said.

And he did, scoring three times from the 20-25 foot range.

Nicklaus drove the ball right, lost his ball in berry bushes and took a double bogey on the 10th.

On the 11th, he was short in two, chipped on and 3-putted. On the final hole, he went from rough to rough, took four to reach the green and 2-putted.

"I had a 74 (opening round) at Augusta, and this puts me in about the same position," Nicklaus said.

"If I play the next three rounds like I played the last three at Augusta, I'll probably find myself in the same position."

"I need to play two decent rounds and one really good one," he said.

Of the 18 players who will return to complete first round play early Friday morning, none appeared to have a chance to move among the leaders.

Of that group, Mark Calcavecchia was the leader at three over par with two holes to play.

Jack Nicklaus joins the gallery in searching for a lost ball on No. 10

Memorable pro debut for Verplank

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Scott Verplank's professional debut in the 66th U.S. Open on Thursday, included a near hole-in-one and a struggling 5-over-par 75 on the wind-swept, rain-soaked dunes of Shinnecock Hills.

"It was a two-spike, two-sandwich day," said Verplank, the most heralded player to come out of amateur golf since Jack Nicklaus.

Verplank held up a wet golf shoe that had two spikes missing out of it.

A diabetic, he has to constantly munch on food to keep his blood sugar level constant.

"This was the toughest day I've ever played golf on," said Verplank, who recently won the NCAA title as a member of the Oklahoma State team. "I'm not happy with my round but I'm not upset either. I'd probably been satisfied if I hadn't bogeyed the last hole."

Verplank's near ace came on the 172nd Par 3 No. 17. His 7-iron shot flew straight at the flag and the ball just missed bouncing in the hole. He then rolled in an 8-footer for his first birdie of the day.

"I really didn't think about being a pro out there until that hole," Verplank laughed. "Some guy yelled from the crowd that that's your first bird as a pro. I told him 'your right!'"

Verplank, the winner of the 1985 Western Open, decided in May to turn professional in this tournament. He has an exemption on the PGA Tour through 1987.

Asked how it felt to be a pro, Verplank, the 1984 U.S. Amateur champion, said, "It was just another round of golf in which I was trying to survive. I guess shooting 75 today was just about like shooting par."

Winds gusting to 30 miles an hour, rain squalls off the Atlantic Ocean, and numbing cold made a good putting touch difficult.

"There's no telling how many 8-footers I missed," he said. "And it seemed every time I missed the fairway I got a bad lie. All you could do was take your medicine and pitch the ball back to the fairway."

Verplank went out in 2-over-par 37 and came back in 3-over 38.

"I just wasn't sharp around the greens," said Verplank, who played in the same threesome with Calvin Peete and Bernhard Langer. Peete shot 77 and Langer had 74.

Verplank said, "It was the type of day where I'll certainly never forget my pro debut. Now that was an antique, and hundreds of spectators to blow out every direction. It was very, very difficult."

Nicklaus gives USGA part of blame

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Masters champion Jack Nicklaus said his lost ball on the 10th hole of the opening round of the U.S. Open Thursday could have been avoided with better communication from the USGA.

Nicklaus, who finished the round with a 7-over-par 77 and took a double-bogey 6 on the 10th, hit a wild tee shot 40 yards to the right of the fairway and into a berry bush when he teed off to start the back nine.

Nicklaus, his caddy and son Jackie, and hundreds of spectators searched fruitlessly for the ball.

"I never saw the ball and nobody had a clue where it went," Nicklaus said.

A golfer has five minutes to find a lost ball or he is penalized stroke and distance.

"No USGA guy was there when I walked (into the brush) and finally I thought my five minutes was up," Nicklaus said. "I was about halfway back to the tee to hit another drive when somebody said they had found the ball."

"I never got an answer about the five minutes so I hit another tee shot."

When he reached the scoring tent after the round, a USGA official told him he still had 30 seconds remaining on the clock.

"I can't understand why they (the USGA) didn't speak up," Nicklaus said. "Jackie said I could have played the ball. He said I would have had a swing."

Nicklaus added "Who knows, I probably would have made 6 anyway."

Nicklaus said it was the first lost ball he could remember in a major championship since he lost one in the 1959 British Open.

Cubs can manager two years after winning division title

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Frey, who two years ago guided Chicago to their first title since 1915, was dismissed Thursday as manager of the Cubs.

"I think he did everything in his power to help the players and the organization get back on the winning track. Unfortunately, in my opinion whatever he was doing at this stage of the game was getting the job done," club President Dallas Green said at a Wrigley Field news conference.

"It's something I'm very disheartened by," Frey said. "I wanted to stay here a long time. I wanted to stay here and win."

The decision to release Frey followed a disastrous road trip — seven losses in 10 games.

"For the good of the baseball team and for the good of the fans, we had to make a change," Green said.

"The baseball players know how I feel about this change — I'm not very happy about it. And I told them in no uncertain terms how I feel they contributed to it," Green said.

Green said he was looking for a permanent replacement and had several possibilities in mind, but declined to identify any of them.

He said first base coach John Vukovich will handle the managerial duties Friday, when the Cubs open a home stand against the St. Louis Cardinals, but would not say whether Vukovich would stay on the job beyond that.

"I don't like the word interim. I'd prefer to call him my manager. I told you he's managing tomorrow and that's good enough," Green said.

The Cubs also released third-base coach Don Zimmer, a close friend of Frey's.

Green said he will never forget that Frey did for the Cubs in leading them to the National League East pennant in 1984 "and I don't think anybody in Chicago should forget it."

For his leadership, Frey was named 1984 Manager of the Year by The Associated Press.

Frey, 55, said he had no inkling he would be fired until he was called in to Green's office Thursday.

Green "didn't really give any reason other than the performance of the team and I don't think you really need any reason other than that, our performance has been disappointing and he decided to let me go, in hopes they could improve the team," Frey told WBBM-AM radio.

The team was 23-37 this year, in fifth place, 19 1/2 games behind the division-leading New York Mets.

Green hired Frey on Oct. 6, 1983, to replace interim manager Charlie Fox.

In Frey's first season with the team, the Cubs won the NL East title with a 96-65 record but lost the pennant to the San Diego Padres in five games, after leading 2-0.

The club slumped to a 77-84 record last season after a devastating series of injuries that knocked all five starting pitchers out of the rotation.

Frey is tied with Stan Hack for 12th on the Cubs' all-time victory list with 196 wins.

Before joining the Cubs, Frey managed the Kansas City Royals in 1980 and part of 1981. He coached the Royals to the 1980 American League pennant, with a 97-65 record, but they lost the Series in six games to the Philadelphia Phillies, then managed by Green.

Frey spent 15 years playing in the Baltimore Orioles organization after 14 years in the minor leagues, and then went on to the Kansas City job.

Zimmer, 55, was in his third season as third base coach. He joined the Cubs at the start of the 1984 season, after a stint with the New York Yankees.

Zimmer, who played for the Cubs in 1960-61, previously was manager with San Diego, Boston and Texas.

He and Frey played baseball together as high school boys in Cincinnati. Both began their pro careers in the Brooklyn Dodgers system in 1949.

In USFL's antitrust trial

CBS admits feeling NFL's heat

NEW YORK (AP) — A CBS executive acknowledged Thursday that the NFL's tactics in negotiating its $2.1 billion television contracts left his network with the choice of meeting the league's demands for more than $700 million or losing the NFL games.

Neal Pilson, executive vice-president of the CBS Broadcast Group and the former head of CBS Sports, testified at the USFL's $1.5 billion antitrust suit against the NFL that he and his network were unwilling to meet the league's opening demand for $700 million. That fee would have covered the 1982-86 regular seasons, two Super Bowls and five NFC championship games.

The issue of NFL pressure on the networks has been central in the trial. A major USFL contention is that the NFL pressured the networks not to give the USFL a contract for full play.

One of its demands has been to have the NFL ordered off one of the three major networks. Pilson's testimony did not involve the USFL directly but it did demonstrate how the NFL used pressure in contract negotiations.

Pilson said that as the 1982 negotiations continued, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle told him that he had agreements with NBC and ABC — ABC to take over a schedule of Sunday games and NBC to take over CBS's schedule.

"Mr. Rozelle said that if he was unable to make a deal with CBS, we would run the risk of losing our franchise," said Pilson, who said the network eventually agreed to pay $736 million for the NFL rights.

"Didn't that NFL pressure put you in an extremely disadvantageous negotiating position?" Pilson was asked by USFL lawyer Harvey Myerson.

"It put us in a difficult negotiating position, yes," Pilson replied.

"Didn't he (Rozelle) say he would take the NFL off CBS," Myerson asked.

"I'm not sure he said it, but that was the impression," Pilson said. "We were facing the loss of our package. But that's not an unusual occurrence. At times with other suppliers, they've said they might go somewhere else."

The 1982 negotiations with CBS have come up before in the previous five weeks of the trial.

Rozelle, asked about it during his testimony, acknowledged some of the facts and described it as typical of financial negotiations. The same description was applied to it by Roone Arledge, the former head of ABC Sports, who acknowledged that he had agreed with Rozelle to take Sunday afternoon games if either CBS or NBC failed to reach an agreement with the NFL.

Earlier, Pilson said that CBS had considered in the spring of 1984 televising USFL games if the league decided — as it eventually did — to switch to a fall schedule.

However, he said that after a financial study of the possibility of USFL telecasts, "I didn't think we would have enough money left to meet the USFL demands."

Myerson, who had the study introduced into evidence, tried to get Pilson to acknowledge that if CBS did not televise the NFL, the network might have $50 million available for USFL games. But Pilson said that there were too many other factors involved.

"I can't answer what you appears to be a simple question," Pilson finally said.

Arledge, who was elevated two months ago to a group presidency at the network, was back on the witness stand Thursday under cross-examination by NFL lawyer Frank Rothman.

He testified that the USFL's "deteriorating image" and a glut of college football on television were the principal reasons behind his network's decision not to give the spring league a television contract for its switch to the fall.

Arledge, who was questioned Wednesday by Myerson, said he was pleased with ABC's telecasts of USFL in its first two spring seasons, 1983 and 1984, when the network made more than $25 million. But he said franchise shifts and rumors that the league would move to the fall hurt severely in 1985, when the network lost more than $5 million on its USFL games.

"All of these things were having a negative effect with advertisers," he said. "The most devastating of all was talk of moving to the fall."

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots rewarded Coach Ray Berry for his success during the 1985 season with a five-year contract Thursday.

The financial terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Berry, 53, led the Patriots to the American Football Conference championship and the Super Bowl, where they lost to the Chicago Bears 46-10.

Berry replaced Ron Meyer at the midway point of the 1984 season and posted a 4-4 record, the Patriots finishing 9-7 overall.

In 1985, the Patriots were 11-5, then won three playoff games on the road to reach the Super Bowl, a first in the NFL.

"This contract recognizes what Raymond has accomplished in New England," General Manager Patrick Sullivan said. "We also feel it provides the necessary stability for the team to remain at the level it's at now."

Berry said while he never believed in long contracts, "I think it's a statement of commitment."

Petty hits new plateau

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — NASCAR driver Richard Petty will reach a milestone Sunday when he starts the 1,000th race of his 28-year career, but he says he would feel happier if he was racing better.

"I've never really thought much about the number," Petty said before leaving for the Miller 400 race at Michigan International Speedway. "It just means we've been there a bunch of times, that's all."

"Sure, I will be a race I will remember," he said. "But what would make it more memorable would be if I won. And right now, we need to win bad."

Petty hasn't won on the Winston Cup circuit since July 4, 1984, when he posted his 200th career victory, in the Firecracker 400 at Daytona.

Distance ace transferred

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Distance runner Kathy Ormsby, who was paralyzed after jumping from a bridge, will be transferred from Wishard Memorial Hospital to Duke University Hospital on Friday, a Wishard spokeswoman said Thursday.

Ormsby, 21, a student at North Carolina State, suffered spinal damage and permanent paralysis of her legs in a jump from a 50-foot bridge during last week's NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships. Police listed the incident as a suicide attempt.

Ormsby's condition had stabilized sufficiently by Thursday to allow the transfer to her home state, Wishard spokeswoman Karen Wilczewski said.

Pacers reject Parish

NEW YORK (AP) — The Indiana Pacers have rejected the Boston Celtics offer of center Robert Parish and his new, four-year $6-million NBA contract for their No. 4 pick in next Tuesday's college draft and a player to be named later, according to Thursday's New York Daily News.

The Pacers declined because of Parish's age, the News said. He will be 33 in August.

Imposter invades Open

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — A 29-year-old man claiming to be a professional golfer was arrested for trespassing at the U.S. Open, a police official said Thursday.

Southampton Police Chief Conrad Teller said John DiMatti, who lived in Suffolk County-sponsored housing for the indigent, showed up at the Shinnecock Hills course Sunday, as golfers gathered for practice rounds, and maintained that he was going to tee off with Jack Nicklaus on Monday.

DiMatti was escorted off the course Sunday, and sent back to county housing in the Coram-Selden area, but returned Tuesday and was arrested, Teller said.

The U.S. Open began Thursday.

Teller said DiMatti had borrowed golf shoes from someone in the clubhouse.

"He's just an unfortunate soul," Teller said. "He was trying to teach people up on the green how to putt. He just didn't belong there."

Teller said DiMatti claimed that "he teaches golf, that he is a much better shot and a better player than all these people" competing in the Open.

NBA popularity jumps

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS-TV's coverage of the six-team National Basketball Association championship series between Boston and Houston drew an average national Nielsen rating of 14.1, the highest-rated series in the history of the league, the NBA announced Thursday.

It was a four percent boost over last year's 13.5 average and surpassed the previous high of 13.7 for the Boston-Buffalo Bulls series.

Boston's clinching victory in last Sunday's Game 6 drew a 14.2 rating, beating the 12.9 recorded in last year's sixth game between the Celtics and Los Angeles Lakers. It was the highest-rated sports show of the weekend.

McEnroe snubs Wimbledon

LONDON (AP) — John McEnroe of the United States confirmed to Wimbledon officials Thursday that he would not be participating in this year's All-England Championships.

McEnroe became a father last month when his girlfriend, actress Tatum O'Neal, gave birth to a boy.

McEnroe, a three-time Wimbledon champion between 1981-84, gained direct entry into the championships because of his international ranking.

However, he has not played competitive tennis since a 1985 round defeat in the Masters at New York in January, and his decision not to compete at Wimbledon was expected.

John goes on disabled list

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees have placed 19-year-old left-hander Tommy John on the 15-day disabled list because of a strained left Achilles' tendon, the club said Thursday.

To take John's spot on the roster the Yankees purchased the contract of 29-year-old left-hander Alfonso Pulido from Class AAA Columbus of the International League.

At Columbus, Pulido had a 3-4 record with a 2.96 earned run average. Pulido was expected to start Thursday night in Baltimore.

In eight games this season John has a record of 3-1 with a 3.62 earned run average.

Morris cops plea, goes free

MIAMI (AP) — Former Miami Dolphins' running back Eugene "Mercury" Morris, who played in three Super Bowls, pleaded no contest to a cocaine conspiracy charge Thursday in exchange for freedom from prison.

Morris, 39, had served three years in the Dade Correctional institution after being sentenced to 29 years following his 1982 conviction on four drug-related charges.

He was awaiting a new trial, which the state Supreme Court granted in March, when he entered the no contest plea to one count of conspiracy to traffic in cocaine. As part of the plea bargain, prosecutors dropped three other charges.

"I would not give in," a jubilant Morris, flanked by his wife Bobbie and 4-year-old daughter, Tiffany, said following the 10-minute hearing. "I believed the consistency of the truth would win out."

Dade Circuit Judge Ellen Morphos sentenced Morris to 4 1/2 years on the conspiracy charge, giving him credit for the time he served before the new trial was ordered. She also awarded him 1 1/2 years credit for good behavior since he entered prison in 1983.

Before Morris left the courtroom, Morphos praised his recent television work to educate the public against the risks of drug use.

"I've seen the TV ads and they're great," she said. "You've done a whole lot of good."

By entering a no contest plea, Morris neither admitted guilt nor claimed innocence but only agreed not to challenge the state's case, said his attorney, Phil Glazier.

Morris, who pleaded innocent in his first trial, had argued that he was entrapped by police and Fred

Donaldson, a friend who said he was angry that Morris did not pay him for gardening work.

The state's high court ruled 5-1 that Morris' unfairity was prohibited from presenting testimony by Eugene Goltbaum, who said in an affidavit that he heard Donaldson say he planned to set up Morris in some type of drug deal. The trial court called the testimony hearsay.

Morris, who helped the Dolphins compile a 17-0 record in the 1972 National Football League season, now gives anti-drug speeches at churches, schools and conventions.

Morris said he would get reacquainted with his family, finish a book on his life and travel around the country lecturing NFL players against drug abuse.

"You're not going to see the end of this problem in drugs until you stop idolizing the drugs," Morris said.

back to earth by poor pitching.

"Fifty percent of the people we were counting on have failed to this point and that hurts," he said.

The other 50 percent — Frank Viola, Bert Blyleven and Mike Smithson — has a combined ERA of 4.55.

Therefore, the Twins are again relying on home runs.

With Kent Hrbek, Tom Brunansky and Gary Gaetti, the Twins were expected to pack some punch. But Minnesota's attack has also been juleped up from some unexpected sources — notably center fielder Kirby Puckett.

After hitting four homers in his first two seasons covering 1,238 at bats, Puckett led the majors in homers for the first month of this season. On an April 29-May 4 road trip, the leadoff hitter hit two homers in a three-game series with first-pitch homers.

"I'm not trying to hit homers," insists Puckett, who is now tied for third in the AL with 15. "I've just been real comfortable at the plate and teams have pitched me inside — especially early in the season. I had 10 show pitchers that if they want to give me the homers, I'm ready to take them."

Like the '61 Yankees, who had six players with at least 20 homers, the Twins are not a one-man slugging unit either.

Gaetti, who has had 25, 21- and 20-homer seasons, is off to his best start with 14. Brunansky has 13 and Hrbek, who is hot since using a new, exaggeratedly open stance, has 12. Ray Smalley, the fifth Twin in double figures, has 10.

Minnesota's power display has been credited to its home stadium, the Metrodome, which has been nicknamed the Homerdome.

But 42 of Minnesota's homers, or 47.7 percent have come on the road. In fact, since moving into the Metrodome in 1982, the Twins have hit only two more homers in that stadium (317) than they have in the other 13 parks (315).

"It's a misnomer that they call this place the Homerdome, especially since they put that 23-foot wall up in right field," Miller said. "If you hit one over that wall now, it'd be out of any park in baseball."

Said Brunansky: "It doesn't matter where we hit. We just have guys who can hit home runs. Now, if we could just get the rest of our game going, we could really make some noise."

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When Ray Miller took over as Minnesota Twins manager a year ago, he said he wanted to de-emphasize the Twins' reputation as a power-hitting team.

He planned to stress pitching, defense and speed for a well-rounded attack that could lead the Twins to an American League West title.

One year later, however, they are the same old Twins.

Minnesota has hit 88 homers in 59 games, or 1.49 per game, which computes to 217 over 162 games.

The 1961 New York Yankees, led by Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris, hit 240. The Twins' high came in 1963, when Harmon Killebrew & Co. had 225 homers.

"We just wanted to get away from thinking about hitting home runs each time up and we've done that extremely well," Miller said. "We're hitting .273 as a club, and during the course of doing that, the power has been spread around. The power has always been here but the amount of homers we've hit this year has come from preparing the team for who's pitching today. So, instead of swinging with all their might, they're going up there with a purpose."

While the Twins obviously have not suffered a power outage, Miller's plan to accentuate other facets of the game has apparently failed.

Minnesota's pitching staff has a career-run average of 5.00, the worst in baseball. The Twins' fielding percentage of .577 ranks ninth in the 14-team AL and they have stolen 26 bases, 12th in the league.

So, despite the homers, Minnesota is in sixth place in the AL West, 10 1/2 games behind the first-place Texas Rangers.

Miller is satisfied with Minnesota's defense but admits that the team's lofty goals have been brought

Montana recovering from surgery

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — Joe Montana, the quarterback who has led the San Francisco 49ers to two Super Bowl titles, underwent shoulder surgery two weeks ago, it was learned Thursday.

"He's rehabilitating well and everything is right on schedule," Dr. Mitch F. Dillingham told the San Mateo Times. "We think he should be ready to throw in two or three weeks, but nothing is 100 percent."

Montana passed for 3,653 yards and 27 touchdowns last season, and his career totals through seven seasons include 19,262 yards and 133 touchdowns in regular-season games. He was the most valuable player in the Super Bowls following the 1981 and 1984 seasons.

The surgery was performed at a Redwood City hospital and Montana has been doing rehabilitation work at a sports medicine clinic in the area, the doctor said. The team has made no announcement on the subject.

Bill Walsh, the 49ers' head coach and president, and General Manager John McVay are on vacation this week and not in the area.

Dillingham, a physician for the National Football League team, said he performed arthroscopic surgery on Montana soon after the quarterback participated in a 49ers mini-camp.

"He had persistent pain in the shoulder when he was throwing," Dillingham said. "We scoped his (right) shoulder and cleaned out a small piece of cartilage. We think he will be ready for the season but there's no way of knowing for certain."

PENALTIES; PROVIDING FOR PUBLICATION; THAT THE FULL TEXT OF THE ORDINANCE AND MAPS ARE AVAILABLE AT CITY HALL; AND PROVIDING AN EFFECTIVE DATE AND DURATION OF THIS ORDINANCE.
 WHEREAS, the Local Planning Act of 1975, the same being Chapter 65, Title 67, Idaho Code (the "Local Planning Act") requires each city within the State of Idaho to exercise the powers conferred by that chapter, which powers include the adoption of a comprehensive plan, enactment of a zoning ordinance and identification, in conjunction with the county, of an area of city impact within the unincorporated area of the county; and
 WHEREAS, pursuant to the Local Planning Act, the Mayor and Council of the City of Twin Falls (the "City"), following public notice and hearing, by the enactment of Ordinance No. 1981 and March 3, 1980, adopted a comprehensive plan for the City; and
 WHEREAS, on July 8, 1981, the City, by passage of Ordinance No. 2012, adopted a comprehensive zoning ordinance for the city, as required by the Local Planning Act, which ordinance has been periodically amended by the City and which ordinance has been adopted as the City's zoning ordinance since its adoption; and

 WHEREAS, pursuant to Section 67-6526, Idaho Code, the same being a part of the Local Planning Act, the City and Twin Falls County (the "County") (jointly an area of city impact within the unincorporated area of the County and agreed that the City's comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance would apply within the area of city impact; and

WHEREAS, by Memorandum Decision entered May 23, 1988, and by judgments entered on May 29, 1988, in Cases No. 35794 and 38250 of the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District of the State of Idaho, in and for the County of Twin Falls, said District Court held the aforementioned ordinances of the City and County to be invalid and of no force and effect by reason of asserted procedural errors in their enactment and publication, the effect of which judgment is to leave the city without enforceable zoning ordinances either within the City or within the area of city impact; and
 WHEREAS, Section 67-6523, Idaho Code, a part of the Local Planning Act, provides that, if a governing board finds that an imminent peril to the public health, safety, or welfare requires adoption of ordinances, it shall state in writing its reasons for that finding and may then proceed without recommendation of a commission, upon any abbreviated notice of hearing that it finds practical, to adopt the ordinance, which ordinance may be effective for a period of not longer than 120 days.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT ORDAINED BY THE MAYOR AND COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF TWIN FALLS, IDAHO, AS FOLLOWS:

SECTION 1. The Mayor and Council hereby make the following findings and declarations:

A. The foregoing recitations are hereby incorporated into this ordinance as though fully set forth at this point herein.

B. By reason of the foregoing, an imminent peril to the public health, safety, and welfare of the City, its inhabitants and property, and the inhabitants and property within the area of city impact exists as a consequence of the district court judgments, which peril includes, but is not limited to:

1. Detriment to the protection of property and property values.

2. Detriment to the protection and enhancement of the environment of the City and to the development of land in an orderly manner.

3. Detriment to the protection of life and property in areas subject to natural hazard.

4. Detriment to the other purposes, goals, and requirements of the Local Planning Act and of the ordinances and public policies of the City.

C. The further effect of said District Court judgments is to leave the City in violation of the mandatory provisions of Section 67-6503, Idaho Code.

D. Enactment of ordinances adopting a comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance under the procedures required by Sections 67-6508, 67-6509, and 67-6511, Idaho Code, would require a period of not less than several weeks, due to the notice, hearing, and recommendation requirements of said statutes, which would leave the City without land use regulations during said period, all to the further resulting detriment to the City, its inhabitants, and the orderly development of the City, and to the public health, safety, and welfare.

E. Enactment of an ordinance adopting an emergency comprehensive plan and rezoning ordinance for the City, without a recommendation of the Planning and Zoning Commission and upon abbreviated notice of hearing, is proper and reasonable.

SECTION 4. The penalties for violation of this ordinance are permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order and such other civil relief as the City deems appropriate and/or imprisonment of a term not to exceed ninety (90) days, a fine not to exceed Three Hundred Dollars ($300) or by both fine and imprisonment pursuant to Twin Falls City Code Section 10-1-11.

SECTION 5. This ordinance, or a summary thereof in compliance with Section 50-901A, Idaho Code, shall be published in one issue of the official newspaper of the City.

SECTION 6. That the full text of the ordinances and maps are available at City Hall.

THE ACES®

"The Aces are always wanting to do something." — Vauvenargues.

East didn't think a second high heart would survive, but he led it anyway. He was too lazy to think out a more effective play.

East won his heart king and continued with his ace, South ruffing. Trumps were drawn in two rounds and the spade solo was led to dummy's Jack so that dummy's third heart could be ruffed. The ace of spades was cashed, a third round of spades was led to dummy's king, and a low club to South's 10 went to West's Jack. West was out of safe leads—either black suit lead would provide South with his game-going trick. Where did East go wrong?

South's bidding and West's opening lead provide the answer. Had South held Q-P-J of hearts, he probably would have investigated a no-trump game instead of opting for an 11-trick effort. Clearly West's lead of the deuce was from the Q-5-2.

With no future in leading either major suit at trick two, East has no reasonable alternative but to lead a club, and that proves to be the winning move. South is forced to commit himself early and when both club finesses lose to West, the game falls one trick short.

'Music Man' plays small town's song

By TERRY RICH HARTLEY
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — The Northside Playhouse is bringing River City's troubles right here, my friends, to the Jerome High School stage for presentations of "The Music Man," at 8:15 p.m. tonight, Saturday and Monday, and again June 19 and 21. A matinee will be held Sunday at 2:15 p.m.

The play is produced by Greg J. Fuller and directed by Mike Winterholler, both of Jerome. Venessa Ryall of Twin Falls is musical director, while Kelli Turner, Twin Falls, is choreographer.

"The Music Man," book, music and lyrics by Meredith Willson, is a musical comedy based on Willson's memories of his childhood in Iowa. His protagonist, Harold Hill, is a slick, conniving salesman of musical instruments and hand costumes.

He travels across the Midwest promising townspeople he will deliver these instruments and provide free music lessons if they will pay him in advance.

One small problem: Hill doesn't know the slightest thing about the instruments and couldn't give legitimate lessons even if that were his intent. He simply takes the money and absconds.

However, when he reaches River City, Iowa, in 1912, the con man is foiled by two unforeseen developments. He falls in love with the local librarian-piano teacher, Marian Paroo — the only one who really knows he is a crook but is willing to ignore this unsavory fact because she loves him.

The other development is the contagious spirit generated in the town for song and dance that infects even our charlatan.

The author got many of his ideas for the musical from his own background since he spent his early years in that type of environment.

Going on from these small town beginnings to make his own mark in musical circles, Willson played flute and piccolo in John Phillip Sousa's band and continued by writing books, songs and, of course, musicals.

"The Music Man" brought Willson his greatest acclaim with Tony and Grammy awards. The author died June 16, 1984.

Winterholler calls the musical "a wonderful family show. It has great music and there are no qualms about bringing children to it," he adds.

Now directing his fourth Northside Playhouse production, Winterholler says it has been a real challenge steering the cast of 62, but that the group has forged itself into "a big family." He explains that, "One of my goals has been to give people an opportunity to meet new people. The energy level is twice as high if those on the cast are close."

"Everybody's working together for the same goal. There will be a tremendous energy level. The audience will pick it up and return energy back to the stage," he says.

Winterholler points out that the musical is fast-paced with a lot of comedy, and that it runs two hours and 20 minutes, including intermission.

The role of Professor Hill will be filled by Jerome's Dan Mink, while Diane Stauffer of Jerome will be his heartthrob, Marian Paroo. Her mother is played by Carol Bounous, Twin Falls.

The chorus of "The Music Man" includes singers from throughout the Magic Valley. From Jerome are Helene Fairbanks, Alicia Fort, Ann Mink, Glenda Lattin, Ann Edger, MaryGrace Cox, Adam Lee, John Wurst, Tim Klaus, Raymond Robinson, Shawn Gibbons, James Gibbons, Paul Gibbons, Benji Tolman, Darel Rowland and Tracy McDonald.

Representing Twin Falls are Lori Miller, Charm Peterson, Susan Stanley, Chuck Brockway, Niquey Zakolyk, Jennifer Carey, Krista Fairchild, Dana Baird, Stacy Clough, Stacy Brunyer, Stacy Stanley, Michael Fuller, Josh Houser, Angela Hutchings, Redd Silvers, Amy Fuller, Alyson Jodi Man, Angie Peterson and Amy Peterson.

Filling out the chorus are Cheryl Schwab, Ambrose, Calli Craner, Gary Craner and Casey Craner of Lullis; Lisa Lalliss and Lynette Lalliss of Shoshone; Scott Roberts of Filer; Jayna Depew of Hazelton; and Debbie Denney of Hansen.

Artists inspired at benefit concert

By ROBERT HILBURN
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — The best thing you could once say about benefit concerts was that they are tax-deductible.

Aside from such historic moments as the Concert for Bangladesh, benefits were little more than amateur nights: poor sound, self-indulgent speeches and almost total lack of musical ambition. The artists seemed to think that it was enough simply to have donated their services. You want a heartfelt performance, too?

Amnesty International's nearly six-hour "A Conspiracy of Hope" concert last Friday night at the sold-out 10,000-seat Forum in the Los Angeles suburb of Inglewood was a dramatic demonstration of how benefits have changed. Lighting and sound were state of the art; the pacifists were more inspiring than they are at their own paid concerts.

The concert, the second stop on a six-city tour designed to raise public awareness of the human-rights organization, was headlined by U2 and Sting, and brightened by surprise guest appearances from Bob Dylan, Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers, Live Aid organizer Bob Geldof, Eurhythmic's guitarist Dave Stewart and Bonnie Raitt. Among others joining in sing-along was Dylan's "I Shall Be Released" during the finale: Don Henley, Joni Mitchell and Maria McKee.

There was some unnecessary Hollywood razzle-dazzle (Macann, Sean Penn and Rosanna Arquette were among the celebs who introduced the acts), and at times the affair seemed to be more a series of individual acts rather than a cohesive package.

Still, the key performances — especially Dylan, Peter Gabriel, Sting and U2 — were inspiring in a way that becomes even more prized as you think back on the Bill Graham-produced evening.

It was fitting that the first artist to sport a widespread emotional rush Friday was Dylan, the man who introduced social consciousness to rock in the '60s. Coming on stage after brief sets by the Neville Brothers, Joan Baez, Lou Reed and

Hemingway book is no 'Papa Dearest' Photography exhibit displays tattoos as art

KETCHUM — The Hemingway mystique has entertained the world's imagination for six decades. Bold and lusty, it summons images of life taken to its human limits whether it be battle or daily life.

Twenty-five years after the death of the man who lived it, the mystique endures through the lasting popularity of Ernest Hemingway's work and the public lives of his granddaughters, Margaux and Mariel, who have forged visible careers as actresses and models.

The latest written version of the Hemingway lifestyle comes from the author's oldest son and his granddaughters' father, Jack, in "The Misadventures of a Fly Fisherman: My Life With and Without Papa."

Jack Hemingway will appear at Judi's Bookstore in Twin Falls from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday to autograph copies of his book.

To compare Jack Hemingway to his father is a mistake. Jack is a big, two-hearted man — quick with a story, a hearty laugh and a follow-up joke — whose character seems as simple and straight-forward as the critics have found his father's to be complex and obscure.

To compare his writing to his father's is another mistake. Jack is a flyfisherman and outdoorsman who has spun a witty yarn around a life in search of a good fishing hole no matter where he is or what he is doing. There is no subtle meaning here, unless it lies on a trout stream.

Enamored with fishing at an early age, Jack made the sport a lifelong obsession. It follows him wherever he goes: the Rocky Mountains, early visits to Idaho with his father, the East Coast and overseas. Parachuting behind German lines in the south of France during World War II, Jack tied his rod to his pack, telling superiors it was a disguised radio antenna. Later, testing a stream during a break from aiding the French Resistance, a German patrol happened upon the preoccupied fisherman. Fortunately, he was taken for a local villager. Some years later, Jack managed to turn his honeymoon into a fishing trip, again to the south of France.

This is more than a fish story, however. Jack has lived his life of love, women, war and water (the

Photography exhibit displays tattoos as art

CHICAGO (AP) — Since boyhood, photographer Jeff Crisman has been fascinated by tattoos, and uses his camera to capture striking images of the people and designs that are walking works of art.

"I just remember seeing, when I was about 12, this guy who had these huge cobweb tattoos on the elbows," said Crisman, 33, a teaching associate in the photography department at the University of Illinois' Chicago campus.

"People are either attracted to tattoos or repelled by them," he said.

"What's appealing to me is the fact that it's sort of visceral. I like the fact that they affect people really deeply," said Crisman, who has 20 of his pictures of tattooed people on display in a city gallery.

There's a picture of a man with a tattoo on the inside of his upper lip, another whose entire body is covered with intricate designs.

One photograph shows a man posed nude in front of a mirror; his tattoos trace the shape of a suit that extends at his wrists, ankles and neck.

Still another depicts a tattooist, his fingers and fingernails covered with stars and other shapes, tattooing eyeliner on a woman's eyelids.

Over the past five years, Crisman has photographed dozens of tattooed bodies in the United States and Canada.

Two vie in fiddling contest

WEISER — To date, two young Twin Falls fiddlers have signed up with others from across the country to compete in the National Oldtime Fiddlers Contest, June 16-21 in Weiser.

Any Stukenholtz, 15, will compete in the Junior Division, while Gayla Tanaka, 10, is registered for Jr. Jr. competition. Stukenholtz is the daughter of Dale and Joyce Stukenholtz and Tanaka is the daughter of Clarence and Jyoko Tanaka.

In all, seven divisions will be played off, with contestants ranging in age from four to 94. A spokesman for the Weiser Chamber of Commerce says 320 entrants have signed up as of June 12.

The 320 entrants have signed up for competition as follows: Small Fry, 43; Jr. Jr., 70; Junior, 45; Senior, 65; Mens, 35; Ladies, 33; and Grand Champion, 29.

The annual event promises much in the way of arts and craft booths in the downtown area, impromptu jamming in the fiddlers campground and the downtown area, and a parade June 23.

Considered one of Idaho's largest parades, it will be followed in the park by a Jaycee barbecue with fiddlers offering entertainment.

Downtown merchants will hold sidewalk sales during the week and concessions by the Lions Club will be set up on the high school grounds during the contest.

A hospitality center will open downtown with refreshments and fiddlers playing for dancing. The center is scheduled to open at 10 a.m. and close whenever the fiddlers decide to quit.

Geldof: a hard day's knight

Irish rock star Bob Geldof honored for his work to raise money for the starving people of Africa

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II on Tuesday awarded Irish rock star Bob Geldof an honorary knighthood in recognition of his work for the starving people of Africa, the Foreign Office announced.

Because he is not a British citizen, Geldof will not be Sir Bob Geldof, but Bob Geldof, KBE — which stands for Knight Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire.

The award was made on the recommendation of Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe because of the work Geldof has done in organizing Band Aid, the "Aids" and last month's Sport Aid, rallying worldwide support and contributions of millions of dollars to help the drought-stricken countries of Africa.

The absence of Geldof's name from the queen's regular list of knighthoods and other honors at New Year's brought sharp public criticism of the government, which selects the people to be honored by the queen.

Geldof, contacted by telephone in Los Angeles, Calif., where he is visiting, said, "I am delighted and deeply honored, and would like to thank her majesty very much. I hope to be the first knight in the charts."

The Foreign Office said Geldof would be awarded the KBE medal, most likely by Howe, when a date can be arranged. The queen does not present the honorary awards herself.

Jackson Browne, Dylan appeared more confident and animated than he has on stage in years.

He and the Heartbreakers performed three numbers (including his recent "Band of the Hand" and Faye Adams' "50s gospel-R&B hit, "Shake a Hand") in a blistering down 'n' dirty rock fashion that made their U.S. tour (it began Monday night at the San Diego Sports Arena) shape up as something special indeed.

Following a brief intermission, Peter Gabriel and his new band put on a dazzling display of sophisticated, synthesizer-based musical textures that brought out both the playfulness of a new song like "Sledgehammer" and the dark, disheartening undercurrents of "Biko," a tribute to Steve Biko, the black South African leader who died in prison in 1977.

Sling followed an acoustic Geldof-Stewart teaming on some activist Bob Marley material and Bryan Adams' set of catchy, if less than gripping rock anthems. Still operating in the jazz-accented rock style of his solo tour last year, Sling and his band played with captivating energy and spunk, perhaps best summarizing the message of the evening with an especially warm version of "If You Love Somebody, Set Them Free."

Though some pop observers questioned the sincerity of Sling's social themes on his solo LP, there seemed little question Friday of his dedication and purpose. His was a show-stopping performance.

Even so, U2, the Irish rock band, found a way to extend the momentum. The quartet is at its best live; lead singer Bono Hewson becomes a man possessed as he tries to establish a special bond with the audience.

This band doesn't just want to be good each show, but unforgettable. While the musicians played with driving rock insistence and grace on the opening songs, including "Pride," a song dedicated to the courage and accomplishments of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Hewson was somewhat reserved, much like a prize fighter looking for an opening.

He found it during an odd dark, rockabilly-tinged cupping of Dylan's "Maggie's Farm," a personal declaration of independence, and the children's song tune about Old MacDonald's farm. Gazing at the crowd, Hewson asked a fan to hand him the shirt that the fan was waving. Hewson tied it around his head as a blindfold. As the band kept playing, he walked hesitantly to a bank of speakers.

Atop the speakers, Hewson walked the five or six feet to the edge, much like a prisoner going to the firing squad. When he reached the edge of the speaker, Hewson took off the blindfold — a free man again.

By using the blindfold, Hewson reminded us how vulnerable we are; the way we take our sight — and our freedom — for granted. It was a powerful dramatization of Amnesty International's crusade to aid people who have been jailed and tortured because of their political or social beliefs. Many concert-goers don't take the time to read the Amnesty pamphlets that were distributed in the lobby, but the image of that blindfolded figure will be hard to shake.

Born in Toronto, Canada, and spending his early years in France while his father was a struggling, expatriate writer, Hemingway lived among the literary artists who styled modern American literature. After his parents' divorce, he traveled between European, American and Caribbean settings to spend time with both. As a soldier, he was wounded, captured by the Germans, escaped and recaptured. Following the war and after his marriage to a Twin Falls widow, Byra "Puck" Whittlock, he returned to the Army intelligence corps and spent several years in West Germany and Berlin at the peak of the Cold War.

Returning to the United States and leaving the Army after a decade of service, Jack entered the business world. He readily admits he was unsuitable for the task and unable to make as much money as he believed necessary to support his growing family. Besides, there were better things to do, like fishing for rainbows, steinhound and salmon on the streams of western Oregon.

Frustrated and depressed, Jack visited his father in Cuba and received a promise of one-half his estate. With that, Jack was able to return to his family and work believing in his family's security and the lifestyle he longed for were taken care of. He would later find out differently.

"Misadventures" is no "Papa Dearat." Jack Hemingway refuses to exploit the private lives of his famous relatives. He is obviously a loyal son respectful of his father; he is a proud and protective father. Ernest Hemingway only enters the story as Jack encounters him; he writes of those encounters without judgment or criticism of his father's celebrated lifestyle. He mentions his daughters only in passing.

Jack is also kind to almost everyone he meets, whether famous or unknown. Any criticism of others is brief and unmalicious. Although he often disagrees with the critics of his father, he does so with an understanding of their positions. He is especially kind to the fish he loves to catch and release to save for another day's cast. There is an exception to Jack's kindness, however.

He has no love for his last stepmother, Mary Welsh Hemingway. Jack accuses her of isolating him and his two half-brothers from their father and absconding with their promised inheritance after taking advantage of their frail, aging father.

Mary is the only one of his stepmothers Jack says he never loved. After all, why should he? He believes she tricked his father into giving her the money with which he intended to support his flyfishing habit.

This book's place in literary history will have to be dated by the scholars and the masters of the dry fly. For Idahoans, it is a tribute. A man who literally had the world to choose from picked their state for its beauty and the quality of its outdoor experience to call home. His light-hearted nature reflects well from the calm waters of Silver Creek.

Metheny, Coleman teaming stretches limits

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Pat Metheny's admiration of Ornette Coleman has been no secret: His live performances have increasingly featured Coleman compositions and even his original tunes have taken on elements of the free-form "harmonies" the saxophonist tried without success to popularize more than 25 years ago.

However, it was not idolatry that drew Metheny, 31, and Coleman, 56, together. Rather, it was their shared determination to push music beyond orthodoxy.

Despite their apparent kinship, though, the two musicians were never on the verge of a collaboration and even a humble Metheny — who considers Coleman among the greatest living artists — balked. To bring the two together took the persistent prodding of bassist Charlie Haden, who played with Coleman throughout the 1960s and '70s and who, for the past six years, has been a frequent member of Metheny's bands.

"Charlie kept saying, 'You should really play with Ornette Coleman,'" the guitarist said in an interview. "I kept saying, 'Yeah, but come on, man, I can't do that. It's Ornette.'"

In December 1985, after a trial live performance and three weeks of rehearsal, the duo finally recorded an album, "Song X." It was released April 14 and, besides Coleman and Metheny, it features bassist Haden and two drummers: seasoned jazzman Jack DeJohnette and Coleman's 30-year-old son, Denardo. The group went on a two-week, 14-city "Song X Tour" in which Metheny presented some of the most complex and brilliant music of his career.

The tour, which began in Providence, R.I., and terminated last month in East Lansing, Mich., also brought the visionary music of Coleman, who has labored through more than 70 recordings in virtual public anonymity, to a wide and accepting audience.

Even audiences accustomed to Metheny's more melodic work have welcomed the effort. It takes to understand and appreciate the duo's burning, Coleman-influenced improvisation.

When Coleman first tried in 1959 to introduce his unusual sound to New York audiences, he was verbally and, sometimes, physically tormented. Almost three decades later, Coleman still has had virtually no commercial success, little critical acclaim but has won wide respect from musicians for his ideas.

"I'm like the guy in the wilderness telling people who don't know he's there what life's all about," he said in a recent interview.

Art Lange, the editor of the music magazine, "downbeat," said, "It could be that it's taken 26 or 27 years for Coleman's music to catch on, which really wouldn't be surprising. But Metheny is now involved, and his performing with Ornette helps because his listeners are probably open-minded enough to feel that if Metheny's interested in it, it must be worth listening to."

In concert, the band blends Coleman's intricate rhythms with some of Metheny's more accessible melodies into a mix of sometimes frantic, sometimes soothing, compositional improvisation. Coleman plays saxophone, trumpet and violin; Haden plays acoustic, stand-up bass; DeJohnette plays a conventional drum set, while Metheny and Denardo Coleman experiment with a wide array of electronics that cut what Metheny refers to as the "edge" of the music.

"We find where our reference points are and focus on those," Metheny said of the melding of the group's vastly different musical concepts and instrumental styles. He explains it in terms of conversation.

"The feeling of playing a ballad isn't any different from playing the faster things," he said. "Each person can talk about different subjects. You can talk about your brother or a cat that died when you were 2. It's not incompatible if you have the same bond and everybody in the band has the same kind of commitment. You find yourself as a group telling a lot of different and more interesting stories."

Following the tour, Coleman returned to his band, Prime Time, while Metheny rejoined long-time composing and performing partner, Lyle Mays. Metheny and Mays, who also just completed a solo album, plan to write some new tunes for an upcoming record and tour. The new work undoubtedly will be influenced by their eight months apart.

"The fact is that I've now been around maybe one of the greatest players of the past 100 years," Metheny said. "It's raised my standards of what I expect from myself and of what I want the tunes to do."

For Coleman, Metheny's willingness to accept unconventional melodies and to push it even further is refreshing.

"What made me feel really good is his sincerity to grasp the things that I've found out a musician can do, to be more or less himself," Coleman said. "The excitement I had in 1959 when I first came to New York, that same excitement is in Pat's playing."

Teens get the beat, but miss message

Los Angeles Times

FULLERTON, Calif. — The good news for parents is that some lyrics about sex, drugs, violence and Satanism have little impact on the vast majority of teen-agers.

The bad news for educators is that most teen-agers cannot accurately describe their favorite songs, suggesting that they are seriously lacking in literary skills to understand and interpret metaphors and symbolism.

Those are the conclusions reached by two California State University, Fullerton, researchers who surveyed nearly 300 Southern California junior high and high school students.

Preliminary results from a 40-page questionnaire administered last winter in four Southern California public and private schools are contained in a paper titled "Sex, Violence and Rock 'n' Roll: Youth's Perceptions of Popular Music."

"One thing that struck us with all the hearings in Congress and media attention on lyrics is that nobody asked teen-agers what they think," said Lorraine Prinsky, a Cal State professor who conducted the study with Jill Rosenbaum, an assistant professor of criminal justice.

Furthermore, Rosenbaum said, she had been asked by an Orange County Probation Department officer for research linking heavy metal and punk rock with juvenile delinquency, but they found that no such research exists.

In the questionnaire, teens were asked to name three favorite songs and give a brief description of what each is about.

Of 612 songs students listed as their favorites, only 7 percent were perceived by those students as being about sex, violence, drugs or Satanism.

The most popular single topic was love — at 26 percent — while the "other" category, which included songs about politics, growing up, life's struggles and other subjects, accounted for 34 percent of the songs described.

Students were unable to explain 37 percent of the songs they named as their favorites.

"Even with the songs they are exposed to the most and listen to the most, they do not automatically pick up on all the messages," Rosenbaum said in a recent interview on the Fullerton campus.

Led Zeppelin's "Stairway to Heaven," for instance, was often interpreted literally as being about "climbing stairs on the way to heaven." Those who named Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the U.S.A." as one of their favorite songs offered interpretations ranging from "It's about life in the U.S.A." to the belief that it refers to "the town Bruce Springsteen lives in."

Some even listed instrumental movie themes among their favorite songs and wrote descriptions of the film's plot.

"What we found is that specific lyrics seem to be of little consequence to most kids," Prinsky said.

Instead, the study concludes, "the musical beat or overall sound of a recording is of greater interest to teen-agers."

That conclusion is disputed by the Parents Music Resource Center, the organization whose campaign against controversial lyrics resulted last fall in an agreement with the record industry for a voluntary record labeling plan.

Although the Virginia-based group has not received a copy of the Cal State study, its administrative assistant, Jennifer Norwood, said, "It's ridiculous to say that music does not have an effect on human behavior."

"In 'Eat Me Alive,' a Judas Priest song, that title is repeated 10 times in three minutes. In Kiss' 'Lick It Up,' that phrase is repeated 30 times in four minutes. I can't believe it's not getting through. It's getting into the subconscious, even if they can't recite the lyrics."

But Prinsky rejected the idea that lyrics reach the listener on a subliminal level, saying, "Good data on the subconscious indicate that it just doesn't work that way."

Students were also asked to rate 25 heavy metal, punk, R&B and mainstream rock performers on whether their songs involved sex, violence, drugs, the devil, love/feelings or other subjects. Most students answered that they did not know which category the various groups' songs belonged in.

Based on the responses, Prinsky estimated that "in our sample maybe 2 percent or 3 percent" of all teen-agers devote their full attention to lyrics when listening to music. Most simply use rock 'n' roll as "background noise."

As a specialist in juvenile delinquency, Rosenbaum said, "My big concern is that parents aren't spending much time with their kids. They are entertained by TV and live in a different world, even from the one we lived in. That has a lot more to do with their lives than lyrics of songs. But parents don't want to take that responsibility. It's a lot easier to blame lyrics."

"The media have played up the negative aspects of rock music. We're hoping this will bring more balance to the picture," Prinsky added.

Horno marks Earth Fair's coming

By BARBARA NEIBERT
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — The horno, a classic earthen oven which has become the trademark of the yearly Wood River Earth Fair, has been a point of interest to many at past fairs. Today, the public will have an opportunity to learn to build the horno for themselves.

In preparation for the third annual Earth Fair, Suzanne Nielsen will begin construction of the earthen oven tonight at 7 p.m. at the Hailey City Park. Free instruction will be given for those interested in the art. Finishing touches and final mud plastering will take place on Saturday morning to allow a week for curing and drying time before the fair opens June 21.

The horno has been used since mankind first baked bread and is still used in many parts of the world today, says fair organizer Janet Oerowley. The simple, basic design of the mud oven allows for fuel efficiency, holds heat for many hours and "turns out some of the best and tastiest foods anywhere," Oerowley says.

As a practical addition to a backyard or patio, the horno can turn out oven-baked roasts or fowl as well as Indian breads. To assure a place in the class, call Oerowley at 788-2837.

The Earth Fair runs June 21-22 at the Hailey City Park from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, and is free of charge to the public.

The Earth Fair focuses on artists who have developed or continued crafts and arts which utilize natural resources. A variety of displays, demonstrations, food booths and entertainment will be available.

Among the artists at this year's fair will be a jeweler, a rock and gem specialist, a wood carver, a wooden toy maker, a willow furniture craftsman, weavers, a candlemaker, a quilter and a natural soapmaker.

Other artists with special talents will be on hand to demonstrate techniques and arts. There will be a puppet show, a belly dance demonstration and instruction, and a nature walk to identify birds and plants. Dr. Joe Baldassaro of Boise State University will perform on his collection of 15th and 16th century stringed instruments shortly after lunchtime on June 21.

DC Comics is overhauling Superman into Man of Steel

Dallas Times Herald

With that blue-black forelock and bulging body stock, the Man of Steel hardly looks his age — nearly 80. Yet, DC Comics is scrapping its senior superhero this summer to make way for the first new Superman since the perpetually 29-year-old Kryptonian made his comic-book debut in 1938.

DC has suspended publication this summer of the three comics in which Superman appears — Action Comics, Superman and DC Presents — to release a six-issue, bi-weekly series called The Man of Steel, available in stores this month.

In the series, Superman gets a new history, which will not affect the superhero's appearance, not the basic story — that a child sent from the doomed planet Krypton gains extraordinary powers on Earth.

In September, Action Comics and Superman will return; a new comic, The Adventures of Superman, will join them.

Too many characters. Too many parallel worlds. Too much power for Superman. Those are the reasons DC gives for a housecleaning that began January 1985 with the 12-issue "Crisis on Infinite Earths" series.

"We tried to have as coherent a universe as possible, but it wasn't working. It was too confusing," said DC editor Bob Greenberger in an interview about the changes at DC. "A cleanup" allows the writers more freedom — not to have to spend pages explaining how to get from one dimension to another — and who the characters are.

To pave the way for the Man of Steel series, DC killed off Supergirl and Krypto the dog, cleaned out the Phantom Zone (where Krypton harbors its criminals), blew up the Bizarro world (home of imperfect duplicates of Earthbound characters) and erased all but one planet — Earth (there were three).

John Byrne, an artist-writer formerly with Marvel Comics, then began modifying characters, motivations and mythology to create the new Superman story.

Some of the changes, according to press reports, fan reports and DC itself:

—Superman won't have any powers when he arrives on Earth: They will develop slowly as he grows up. In his early teens, he will discover his invulnerability; by his late teens, he will find out that he can fly.

—Superman now will be the sole survivor of Krypton, which will be depicted as a cold, forbidding planet that creates no longings for home in the adult Superman.

—Ma and Pa Kent, Superman's adoptive earth parents, will not die while Clark is in high school, as they did in the old series.

—Clark Kent, who most recently worked as a TV anchorman, will return to journalism as a feature reporter.

—As a high school student, Clark Kent will be more popular and involved in more activities, including athletics. The adult Clark won't be as wimpy as the old one.

—The romance between Lois Lane and Superman will be off. Byrne has said that "romance is impractical" with someone who can change the course of rivers and bend steel, but sparks may fly between Clark and Lois.

—The new Lois is based on the tough, but feminine Rosalind Russell character in the 1940 movie "His Girl Friday." In addition to her newspaper work, she will write mystery novels.

"What DC is trying to do," says comics expert Dr. Donald Palumbo, an administrator at Lorain County (Ohio) Community College, "is to inject greater realism into its characters, to place the comic in a more real world than it's been in."

Dismissing something familiar (i.e., putting an unreal character like Superman in the real world and investing him with human frailties) is the key to the appeal of fantasy, Palumbo says.

"We like to be reassured that the unknown is just a disguised variation of the familiar," he explains. "If you strip off the disguise, it's not unknown at all, and there's nothing to fear."

DC also is responding to the market, Palumbo says. In Superman's heyday, in the 1940s, DC sold millions of Superman comics every month. In the 1960s, Marvel Comics and its all-too-human superheroes overtook DC. Today, Marvel's X-Men is the country's best-selling comic book, says Lone Star Comics manager Will Frazier, with monthly sales of nearly 500,000. Superman sells fewer than 100,000 a month.

In recent years, innovations at DC have helped revitalize the company. The Teen Titans and a special Batman "Dark Knight" series are big sellers. And now, with the conclusion of the old Superman story and the inception of a new legend, Superman is enjoying a boost in sales.

Says Lois Lane's Frazier: "We sold out of the historic last issue in four hours. We don't usually sell out of S perman, though we should. Superman should be the best-selling comic."

Naive femme fatale is silent film star's best role, set in 1929 classic

Los Angeles Times

The following are reviews of recent releases of videocassettes of special interest.

Ratings: 4 stars — Excellent, 3 stars — Good, 2 stars — Fair, 1 star — Poor

"Pandora's Box." Embassy, $29.95. Vivacious, intelligent and unfathomable, Louise Brooks looms as an even more intriguing actress of the late silent era than Garbo for some film enthusiasts. In this 1929 G.W. Pabst-directed German classic, Brooks' femme fatale — the most notable role in her too-brief career — is a twist on the vamps of the time: She naively inspires evil. The often quite silly story (Lulu's men include Jack the Ripper!), the sexual tension, remarkable tableaux of stunningly framed shots and the one-of-a-kind star performance are retained in a very good if not pristine print, nicely scored. (3 1/2 stars) — FERRY ATKINSON

"Girlschool Play Dirty Live." Sony, $29.95. These once extremely promising, self-billed "bad girls of rock" lost a charismatic front-woman and distinctive edge when singer-guitarist Kelly Johnson left in 1984. She summarized the band's early appeal, which rested in its intriguing blend of the heavy-metal aggression of AC/DC and the good-natured bit of the Go-Go's. Johnson projected a freshness that made the band seem like it was having fun with all the macho stereotypes of the heavy-metal world. Without her,

Girlschool succumbs to those stereotypes and ends up simply plodding. (1 star) — ROBERT HILBUHN

"WrestleMania 2." Coliseum, $39.95. See your favorites in the second annual mat-drama. See the Refrigerator get his door slammed in the 20-man over-the-top-rope contest as Andre the Giant tries to prove one heart is better than two. See the British Bulldogs beefe for the tag-team title as Brutus Beefcake and Greg Valentine take a header. See the terrible Funk Brothers try to corral Junkyard Dog and Tito Santana in a wild match. See champ Hulk Hogan in the steel cage, "bloodying" the brow of challenger King Kong Bundy. (4 stars) — VIC JOHNSON

Women jazz players battle sexism

By LEONARD FEATHER
Los Angeles Times

A few weeks ago in West Hollywood, Ann Patterson's Maiden Voyage orchestra played to a crowd of enthusiastic roomful of music lovers. The ensemble spirit, the compositions and the soloists all represented big-band jazz at its highest contemporary level.

What the audience didn't know was that none of the members can make a living simply out of working in this exceptional ensemble. Acclaimed by viewers and reviewers at the Monterey, Playbox and Concord jazz festivals, playing every kind of job from a shopping mall opening to a Korean variety show, Maiden Voyage is still not a regularly working band. Sometimes they do not perform as a unit for weeks on end.

In fact, what has happened to the 18-woman orchestra, and particularly to the leader, during the six years since Patterson assumed leadership, symbolizes both the problems that face women musicians and the advances that they have finally made.

"The Texas-born Patterson, who has mastered a dozen instruments — saxophones, clarinets, flutes, oboe, English horn — and is qualified to play them in the most demanding of settings, feels that the perennial discrimination against women is breaking down. Sexism still exists, of course, but less rampantly.

"I'm certainly getting more and better work than I was five or six years ago," she says. "Last winter, I played about seven woodwind instruments for three months in a show . . . (in Los Angeles). It was an avant-garde musical and we improvised a lot — very stimulating. I still do a fair amount of studio work, though that's certainly no living in players' either. Then there are what we call casuals — weddings, bar mitzvahs, dinner dances, fundraisers: I get to play a lot of those. Even Maiden Voyage itself does some."

In a horn-by-horn rundown of the other members' activities, Patterson pointed up how varied are the opportunities and achievements:

"The trumpets — well, Louise Baranger, our lead trumpeter, works mainly with the Harry James band and freelances around Los Angeles. Marissa Pasquale, who's a recent graduate of USC, works quite a bit with groups at Disneyland, where for a long time they hired no women musicians; she also has a day job. So does Stacy Rowles, but Stacy is now working with the all-female group Alive! and plays jobs fairly often with her father (pianist Jimmy Rowles); in fact, next month they're doing the North Sea Jazz Festival in Holland and then the Hollywood Bowl with Woody Herman. Joni Gladstone does casuals, teaches music in a private school and plays in a Latin band. Ann King manages to play music for a living; she's worked with Roger Neumann and some of the other good bands around L.A.

"The trombones: Betty O'Hara is now very active in TV — she works in the orchestra for 'Hill Street Blues.' The A-Team" and other shows.

UCSB professor examines Zola

"Zola" by Phillip Walker (Routledge & Kegan Paul; $16.75; 257 pp.). Ambitious yet public-spirited, Emile Zola (1850-1902) was passionately determined to become what he in fact became: one of the central prophetic figures of his century. The brutal realism of such novels as "Therese Raquin," "L'Assommoir," "Nana," "Germinal," "La Terre" and "Le Debacle" shocked the French reading public, outraged critics and assured his place in literary history. His pivotal role in making possible the gross miscarriage of justice in the Alfred Dreyfus affair remains one of history's shining examples of the power of the pen.

Phillip Walker, a professor of French at the University of California, Santa Barbara, brings an invigorating freshness to a subject that has been examined by many, including novelist Angus Wilson, scholar F.W.J. Hemmings, biographer Joanna Richardson and Walker himself, who published a biography of Zola in 1968. This new biography emphasizes Zola's works rather than his life, although placing his novels and other writings in the chronological — indeed, the biological — context of his life: youth, prime, maturity and age. The chief strengths of Walker's approach lie not in the ingenuity of his insights but in the enthusiasm and scope of his appreciation.

Airplay marks square dancing

TWIN FALLS — Radio stations KTFL and KART will help kick off the nationwide celebration of square dancing's golden anniversary Saturday by premiering the anniversary theme song, "Square Dancing's Calling Me," says Magic Squares dancer Lucille Deagle. The song was written by Kelly Bryarly and Patrick Dowling of Mr. Bolynges Recording Studios in Colorado. "Colorado is the most appropriate state to provide the anniversary song because it was in Colorado Springs the Cheyenne Mountain Dancers had their debut in 1936," says Deagle. "From there the teen-aged dancers spread the old-time recreation to audiences from coast to coast. Everywhere they performed square dance clubs formed in their wake." For more information about Magic Squares, call Deagle at 733-4286.

Show evokes Brazilian images

BURLEY — "Impressions of Brazil," a one-man show for Burley artist John Horejs, is on display at the Lightworks Gallery. Horejs, who returned in April from a six-week Rotary International sponsored visit to Brazil, will also hold a three-day workshop, June 19-21, at the gallery. Featured paintings include "Aracauria Trees," a landscape of exotic pine trees shaped like umbrellas; "Lamplight," a rainy night scene in the city of Ouro Preto; and "Iguazu Falls," a three-panel painting of one of the seven wonders of the world. The exhibit will run through June 21 at the gallery, 1222 Oakley Ave. Workshop registration deadline is June 11, and interested persons should call the gallery, 678-4140, for information.

Arts commission sets meeting

The June 21 session, to be held at the Ketchum City Hall, will include committee reports, and grants-in-education review, apprenticeship/fellowship review, and artists review. A brief wrap-up session will be held in the evening, June 22, at the Cloverly Ranch. The ICA was established 20 years ago as a state agency to develop, improve and preserve Idaho's unique artistic resources. The governor appoints 13 members to four-year terms to the commission's board of directors which meets three times a year to set commission policy. All sessions are open to the public.

Vizzutti plans brass workshop

TWIN FALLS — A brass workshop for instructors and advanced students is slated for June 25 as a special feature of Music Fest '86 at the College of Southern Idaho. Allen Vizzutti, an award-winning trumpet artist, composer and arranger of classical and jazz music, will be the instructor. Boise pen-and-ink artists to exhibit at Herrett

TWIN FALLS — "Wilke/Wilde," an exhibition of pen-and-ink drawings by Boise artists Martin Wilke and Stephanie Wilde, will be on display at the Herrett Museum Art Gallery on the College of Southern Idaho campus from June 24 to July 29.

The public is invited to attend an opening reception for the artists from 7 to 9 p.m., June 24, at the museum. The artists will be present. "Wilde is a self-taught artist who began working with pen-and-ink when she was 17. Her interest in pen-and-ink has led her to illustrate limited edition books, her latest being a children's book by Lane Stewart Bane, which will be published this summer. The book will feature a cover design plus an illustrated sequence of etchings by Wilde. She studied the etching process for six months at Brigham Young University in order to pursue this latest project.

Concerning her own work, Wilde says, "There is a feeling projected upon people that they should be told how to appreciate art. The appreciation of art is a very personal and special response to creative work. It is felt by one's soul and spirit. My work has no regard for rules. It is visualized and conceived." Wilde travels extensively in the western U.S. in search of subjects for his drawings, which feature fences and gates built by farmers and ranchers to keep animals in or out of their property. Study finds few high school students read for pleasure

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Recent studies show high school students in the United States spend less than 1 percent of their time reading, and the president-elect of the International Reading Association calls that a "national disgrace." Pat Koppan, a former teacher and administrator in San Diego, spoke Thursday at a Utah State University workshop for teachers, administrators and parents.

she said. "When parents take an interest in what their children are learning, it sends a message to the child that he or she is important." Besides reading, children should be learning verbal communication, Koppan said. "Youngsters may be losing the ability to tell stories and relate their experiences because they are not encouraged to develop oral communication skills," she said.

Wilke travels extensively in the western U.S. in search of subjects for his drawings, which feature fences and gates built by farmers and ranchers to keep animals in or out of their property. His interest in these real fence and gate constructions has led him to create whimsical wood sculptures from his memory and imagination. "My work often consists of little more than presenting usual items in unusual ways with the emphasis on abstract composition," Wilke says, adding, "Many people think of a drawing as an intermediate step in the production of a painting or a print. I have always felt that a carefully conceived and executed drawing can stand by itself."

"We've been so busy worrying about if the child can read, that we've neglected to make sure he does read," she said. Koppan said unless a skill is used regularly — like reading, playing tennis or solving a math problem — it becomes dormant. "The home is where enrichment and encouraging of learning begins, and involvement must come early."

Judith Krantz writes, talks herself all the way to bank

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A limousine glided to a halt before the Bel-Air Hotel, and out stepped Judith Krantz, talking. Krantz talks so much you wonder how she finds time to write her dynamite best sellers: "Scraples," "Princess Daisy," "Mistral's Daughter" and now "I'll Take Manhattan."

"My mother once said to me, 'Jud, you talk too much,'" she said. "I didn't know that one day that would be an asset."

What's what

There were no closets in White House bedrooms before Harry Truman took office. I don't mean there weren't any closets anywhere there. The record shows Warren Harding got cozy with a girlfriend in one of same. Just no closets in the bedrooms.

Further your ambitions quite well during the day, but tonight could prove disappointing.

FERTILITY

Q. At what weather temperature is human fertility at its highest?
A. 61 degrees F.

Where chicken is served in the United States, it's usually the white meat that's preferred. Where it's served in France, the dark meat gets preference.

Q. Where can you throw snowballs year-round from one hemisphere to another?
A. On a glacier atop Cayambe, an inactive volcano in Ecuador.

PETS

Postlers checked out 100 top executives to learn 94 of them as children owned cats or dogs. Said postlers concluded the childhood experience with pets promotes later success. Maybe. How many of those 100 top executives had chicken pox? Does chicken pox promote later success?

Dime novelists of old fairly well established this distinction — a "gunman" was an outlaw, a "gunfighter" was a lawman.

Broderick keeps 'Bueller's Day Off' turned on

Dallas Times Herald

Faking illness to fling a day off all of his ad-libbing may have been in "a little childish and stupid," planned, says the little teenager in John Hughes' funny new comedy, "Ferris Bueller's Day Off." But, adds for Hughes, he did the same thing with "Sixteen Candles" and "The Breakfast Club." Like those the irresistibly irrepressible Mat-movies, "Ferris Bueller" is a new Broderick, in facing the can-manic microcosm of harmless, in-era and addressing the audience, toxicating juvenile delinquency. In and he has just hoodwinked his parents several ways, it works — and into keeping him home from school, stumbles — as the flip side of "The Breakfast Club." The tangled web of his alleged "Breakfast Club," the last big hit sickness? Clammy hands. They Hughes wrote and directed. In that never fail. Neither, apparently picture, Hughes looked at five. does Bueller. He leads a charmed teenagers from varied life as a popular student and his backgrounds. Incarcerated in school's most accomplished truancy, detention hall for a whole day. In On this particular day off, Ferris "Ferris Bueller," Hughes gives his alleviates the boredom of phone young cast slack enough to wander calls and TV reruns by convincing the outside world.

At the same time, he hands his film plenty of rope to hang itself. And sometimes it comes close to "Sixteen Candles" and "The Breakfast Club." "Ferris Bueller" tends to drag during the awkward, self-conscious scenes when Cameron, an insecure rich kid, announces that he plans to "take a stand" against his father. This sappy lapse appears in much the same place as the main flaw in the structurally identical "The Breakfast Club" — when it stops to make its "important statement." There is nothing graceful or seamless about the way Hughes pulls his crisis from nowhere. And the traumatic parental rift in "Ferris Bueller," like those in "The Breakfast Club," is so overromanticized it becomes embarrassing. A couple of increasingly annoying Hughes stereotypes — naive parents and ineffective teachers — are also pushed to the limit.

Yet perhaps the most disappointing thing about the climax is that Hughes feels compelled to lend some serious purpose to Ferris' hooky playing. While the relationship between Ferris and Cameron is believably written and portrayed, the story's charm lies in its spontaneity of its premise and its idiosyncratic hero's free-lancing image. The movie is at its best when focusing on Ferris and the agitated chase he inspires just by following his own whims.

Early on, the adventure turns into a predictable race against the clock that will culminate in a showdown between Ferris and his two envious enemies — the school principal, Ed Rooney (the always delightful Jeffrey Jones), and Ferris' sister, Jenne (Jennifer Grey).

Matthew Broderick stars in the latest John Hughes pean to high-school days, 'Ferris Bueller's Day Off'

Overall viewers will probably react to "Ferris Bueller" in much the same way they did to "The Breakfast Club." Hughes scores his film with inventive little gimmicks and comical musical touches, and Broderick's sallies during the film's opening 20 minutes are as funny as anything in recent memory. Of course, the primary boast of "Ferris Bueller" is Broderick, who gives his best film performance in a star role that is akin in temperament and attitude to the sympathetically sneaky character he has played onstage in Neil Simon's "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Biloxi Blues."

Broderick also gives the film its cartoon intensity. His character is very much a human Bugs Bunny being chased by an Elmer Fudd-like authoritarian.

THE CARE BEARS MOVIE

'Short Circuit' connects laughs to erratic robot

Movie reviews

SHORT CIRCUIT (PG). Derivative, heavy-handed comedy, involving some broadsides against the military-industrial complex, about an endearing runaway robot, who comes alive when struck by lightning. With Ally Sheedy, Steve Guttenberg, Fisher Stevens, Austin Pendleton.

OUT OF AFRICA (PG). Because we are in a well-defined, faintly magical, perfectly appointed past in this film, what is its problem? Casting, mostly, and a sense of place: Meryl Streep, as Isak Dinesen, may convince us utterly that she is in love with Africa, but that she is in love with Africa, to really feel the place. And Robert Redford's Denis Finch Hutton is a real cipher. Streep can pretty nearly do anything in the film — except that she cannot provide all the heat in a love affair when Redford is not giving much to his role.

POLTERGEIST II (PG-13). Despite the fact that they've moved into a new home with no TV, the family from "Poltergeist" is bedeviled once again by a parade of spooks, beasties and ectoplasmic pranksters (though the two most important — Steven Spielberg and Tobe Hooper — are absent). The new crew tries for a certain self-aware humor, but, unfortunately, they can't top the built-in joke of sequels: No matter where these people go, the same movie keeps happening to them! Except this time it doesn't work. TOP GUN (PG). The biggest, glitziest, flashiest, loudest Navy recruiting ad you'll ever see, full of MIG-Tomcat dogfights, jocular male-bonding, streaming jets and so much techno-pop pounding in your ears the whole thing begins to seem like disco war. The movie is an empty-headed technological marvel: the trappings are flabbergasting — and the camerawork and editing a knockout — but the story is a sleazy rehash of "Call of Duty" and "An Officer and a Gentleman" drowned in bedecked and macho bathos.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Tom Cruise roused Sylvester Stallone in a box office coup during a surprising summer battle for power at the nation's theaters.

The Navy flyboys of Paramount's "Top Gun" grossed $2.2 million while appearing on 1,531 screens during the weekend, up from 1,037 last weekend. Cruise's increased availability was enough to knock Stallone and Cannon's "Cobra" out of first place when it collected only $5 million at the box office. "Cobra" fell to third.

Turner sells MGM, film deal in works

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Ted Turner, the would-be movie mogul, is down but not out of the film-making community.

Turner sold all but the film-library assets of his recently released and sorely undercapitalized MGM Entertainment Co. June 5, acknowledging "a great deal of sadness" about relinquishing the movie studio.

But the Atlanta-based media entrepreneur said that he is arranging a deal with a major film studio to release up to three films a year produced by his Turner Broadcasting Systems.

"The theatrical motion picture business is not really a sound financial business," he told a gathering of television critics shortly before making the MGM sale. "It's like baseball or basketball. They're hobby businesses. We can't play that game anymore."

For "Top Gun," it was a return to the top rung where it had debuted in May. But Cruise's film fell when "Cobra" was released.

Arnold Schwarzenegger muscled in between them in "Raw Deal," which showed on 1,731 screens and garnered $2 million.

Early summer movie business is lagging well behind last year. The top 10 pictures this weekend grossed $33.7 million, while a year ago, the figure stood at $41.8 million. That's a drop of 19 percent.

"Poltergeist II" grabbed the No. 4 spot over the weekend with $4.2 million. The comedy "Short Circuit" proved its staying power by grossing $3.3 million in its fifth weekend, for a total of $26 million.

Spacecraft adventures of teen-age astronauts began in the sixth spot with $2.8 million in ticket sales. Another premiere, "Invaders from Mars," a remake of the 1950 film of the same name, was close behind with $2 million.

Eighth place went to Universal's sorely undercapitalized MGM Entertainment Co. June 5, acknowledging "a great deal of sadness" about relinquishing the movie studio.

Carl Rowe, former artistic director of Idaho Dance Ensemble, to perform solo for first time

Five not-so-easy pieces to show modern dancer's moves in concert

KETCHUM — Carl Rowe, co-founder and artistic director of the Idaho Dance Ensemble, will present a solo modern dance concert in the Hemingway School gymnasium June 20 and 21 at 8 p.m. each evening. This, Rowe's first solo effort, is described by him as a "big change" from his customary role with the IDE, which gave its final performance in 1985 after five successful years.

"I haven't performed solo, yet, but at rehearsal it's lonely. It's a challenge. But, that's one of the reasons I decided to do a solo. It takes a great deal of self-discipline," he says.

A professional dancer for 11 years and choreographer of 35 dances, Rowe will showcase five works during his performances. A special feature will be a dance created by guest choreographer Lynette Kessler of San Francisco. Kessler, who has worked in both Europe and the U.S., has created a piece entitled, "And Then She Began To Worry," to a narration from the film, "Paris, Texas."

pieces as I can," Rowe explains. The other four pieces are choreographed by Rowe. "Now and Then," accompanied by piano music composed by Modest Mussorgsky, strives for subtle delicacy, dignity and humor while Rowe's "Walker" is set to African thumb piano music by Collin Walcott. Two premieres highlight the program: "Whirlywacker" and "Brothers."

The 40-year-old Rowe says, "I've been working hard for the last six months. Physically, this is one of the hardest things I've done."

Monkees sought

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Remember "The Monkees," the Beatles-like singing group created for the NBC television series in the mid-1960s? Get set for "The New Monkees." Columbia Pictures Television is launching a nationwide talent search in July and August for four young actors for a new version of the series.

The original Monkees were David Jones, Peter Tork, Mickey Dolenz and Mike Nesmith.

The four actors selected will star in a new series for first-run syndication.

Hutchings produces book on watercolors

TWIN FALLS — Former Twin Falls artist LaVere Hutchings, now of Jamestown, Calif., has recently published a feature article in The Artist's Magazine and has released his new watercolor book, "Make Your Watercolors Sing," a Northlight publication.

In the May issue of The Artist's Magazine, Hutchings' article, entitled "Making Your Colors Work," deals with an underpainting of related hues and how an artist can give his works a fresh, overall color unity.

His book, also released in May, has 128 pages — 124 in full color, and four in black and white.

"While working on this book," he says, "I discovered that it consisted of conceiving, developing and giving birth to an idea. However, my first attempt was not accepted by Northlight. It was a combined book on design and watercolor which I started in 1982 and submitted in 1983."

Hutchings explains that Fritz Henning, the editor, was excited by the watercolors, but lukewarm about a companion book. Hutchings, therefore, started this new book, all watercolor, in 1983, and signed the contract for its publication by Northlight in 1984.

The artist was educated in Idaho and Nevada schools, then attended Utah State University, Brigham Young University and graduated from Idaho State College. His wife, the former Anne Kirkman, is a Twin Falls native and he has two children residing in Twin Falls — Robert D. Hutchings and Jeanne Hundhausen.

Over 3,000 Hutchings paintings hang in public and private collections, including the Las Vegas Museum, Fashion Institute of California, Idaho Falls Art Association Gallery and Brigham Young University. He and his wife have been giving watercolor workshops along the West Coast for the last 15 years.

"Make Your Watercolors Sing" sells for $22.95 and is available through some art supply stores as well as the Northlight Book Club. Hutchings offers to autograph and return a copy for that amount plus postage and tax. He can be reached at Hutchings Gallery, P.O. Box 249, Jamestown, CA 95327.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rich Little, who can do impressions on just about anyone, sometimes gets stuck.

There are five celebrities who give him a little trouble: Robert Redford, Bruce Springsteen, Frank Sinatra, Vice President Bush and Bob Hope.

On the cover 'Main Street' episode on teen sex looks at attitudes, peer pressure

By ANDY NOBLE

With rerun season upon us, most episode TV can be dismissed — unless there's an episode of your favorite show that you may have missed.

One exception to this rule is a rebroadcast of "Main Street," NBC's afternoon TV news magazine geared for teens: It gets a special airing in prime time on Monday.

The one-hour broadcast repeats the only "Main Street" episode devoted to one subject: sex and the American teen-ager. "That program was the highlight of the season for us," says executive producer Herb Dudnick. "We welcome the chance to reach a larger audience with the story of this enormous problem facing young Americans today.

MAUI, Hawaii — The NBC love feast for representatives of its 207 affiliate station representatives was barely under way here Monday morning when soon-to-depart Chairman Grant Tinker delivered major news: Brandon Tartikoff, Tinker's chief lieutenant in fashioning the network's No. 1 ratings success, will be staying with NBC.

"NBC and Brandon Tartikoff have worked out a multiyear arrangement to keep Brandon doing the job he's doing," Tinker told the 1,200 gathered at the Hyatt Regency at the start of the three days of meetings here.

That news was as much music to the broadcasters' ears as the familiar NBC chime they heard repeatedly during a video recap of NBC's 60-year history or the greeting President Reagan delivered via videotape. Reagan said that "for 60 years, NBC has been a positive force in American society."

As recently as last week, Tartikoff, 37, president of NBC Entertainment, was rumored to be in high-level meetings with Columbia Pictures about taking over the reins of that film-TV studio.

COVER PHOTO: Bryant Gumbel is the host of the "Main Street" episode on teen-age sex, which will be rebroadcast in prime time Monday at 7 p.m. on KTVB, KIFI and KUTV. The show's executive producer, Herb Dudnick, says the episode was the highlight of the afternoon TV news magazine's season.

explicit material," says Dudnick, "but rather will show the emotional effect on the teen-agers involved."

In one of the segments, correspondent Bill Schechner traveled to Georgia and Minnesota to examine the lives of two young mothers — one black and one white — who are trying to raise babies. The ubiquitous Dr. Ruth Westeimer also makes an appearance. In a studio interview with the show's host, Bryant Gumbel, and 12 youngsters, Dr. Ruth answers questions and deals with the sexual attitudes and peer pressure children face in today's society.

In other segments on the program, "Main Street" looks at a teen-age father who's trying to live up to his responsibilities as the parent of a 17-month-old child and examines impressions teen-agers get about sex from newspapers, magazines, radio, TV, movies, records and videos.

"We hope, that by approaching the program in this manner, the young people will watch and learn, and adults will gain a better understanding of where young people are coming from," says Dudnick.

"Main Street" debuted in September 1985 and airs eight times a year. Its subjects have ranged from teens with AIDS to homeless people to teen-age suicide. "All the story subjects are for or about young people, as seen through their eyes," says Dudnick. "It is essential that the stories be told through the voices of the young, what they think and feel about things, with no preaching or teaching on our part. We don't need to give answers but merely expose. Most of the time adults don't even appear in the stories except in cases in which they are essential."

Gumbel, co-anchor of NBC's "Today" show, says: "We feel it's not our job to tell kids what's right or what's wrong. We think that's their job — to find out for themselves. Our job is to let the kids meet some of the young people involved and hear what they've experienced and what they've learned."

Princess Diana appears different

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN

Q. I collect pictures of Princess Diana and it seems to me she looks slightly different than she did when she first met Prince Charles. Is this possible? — E.W.

A. It's quite possible and for two reasons, one a fact and one a rumor. In the early days, DI was very camera shy and the photos always showed her with her head bowed, looking up. Now she's much more assured when the paparazzi show up. There also has been talk that the beautiful princess had a tiny bit of surgery on her nose to make it more photogenic.

FEAR OF FAILURE: Record company insiders are wondering whether pop star Michael Jackson's long-awaited new album will ever come out. Jackson originally delayed the release until this month and now has postponed it once again until September. Rumors are that Jackson is petrified that the new one won't be as good as his smash album "Thriller."

Q. I saw that funny "After Hours" film and now I'm madly in love with Linda Fiorentino. Can you what she'll be in next? — P.L.

A. Happy to oblige. The beautiful Linda, who did indeed make audiences sit up and take notice in "After Hours," will have them standing up and cheering after she's seen

Soap Opera Scene

Being bad was good for Wilson; Meadows follows Hollywood call

By JOHN N. GOUDAS

Cheryl-Ann Wilson was so good at being evil as Megan Hathaway in "Days of Our Lives" that there was nowhere to go but down for the count. Megan's nefarious deeds finally prompted the writers to do away with her altogether. However, Cheryl was not upset by the experience. She actually liked the thought that she had played her evil character with such conviction that the only solution, plotwise, was for Megan to be electrocuted in the bathtub.

The soap offers came in fast and furious after word got out that Cheryl was available, but the actress wasn't sure she wanted to do another soap. However, "Capitol" producer John Conboy was very persuasive and Cheryl-Ann became intrigued once again with the prospect of playing the part of a Broadway actress-singer named Katherine Wells. Katherine has only been on "Capitol" a short time but she already has thrown the inhabitants of the rich Clegg household into turmoil.

Cheryl-Ann was born in Omaha, Neb., but lived in many Midwest cities before her family moved to the San Francisco Bay area where she went to high school. Whenever anyone would ask her what she wanted to be, she emphatically replied "an actress!" Some of her friends would look at her funny but that never mattered.

Her parents didn't believe she would pursue a career as an actress either. When the time came for her to go to college, her parents knew she meant it when she enrolled at the University of California at Santa Barbara and became one of the most active members of the drama department.

Cheryl-Ann recalls some of her classmates watching soaps in between classes but she never actually thought she would be on one, one day. It took two years for Cheryl-Ann to land a job on the soap after graduation. She worked in public relations and advertising and did some modelling but she knew that acting was going to be her lifetime's work.

Cheryl-Ann is very fond of telling the story of how she landed the role of Megan in "Days of Our Lives."

"I was doing a play in Los Angeles and it was during the run of that play that I met an actor who had a sister who was a masseuse. The masseuse had a client who happened to be the head writer on "Days of Our Lives" and he told her about the difficulty they were having finding the right actress to play the part of Megan. The masseuse told him about a friend of her brother's who was an actress and it all fell into place."

In addition to her healthy good looks, Cheryl-Ann projects a nice combination of earthiness, directness and confidence. She also looks you right in the eye when she speaks and her strong gaze never wavers. This is a woman who sets her sights on what she wants (which she admits is everything life has to offer) and then goes after it.

CHANNEL CHATTER:

For the second time in three years, Kristin Meadows is leaving her role of Mimi King on "One Life to Live" to pursue the acting mecca of Hollywood. Meadows left for Hollywood once before and after nothing but guest shots on shows such as "The A-Team" and "Riptide" and a small role on the short-lived series "Glitter," she returned to New York and "One Life to Live." While her character and storyline grew at first, things have petered out in recent months. The pretty Ms. Meadows is the type of actress who really wants to sink her teeth into a significant role so, regretfully, she is departing once again, hoping for better luck in Hollywood. In addition to Kristin Meadows, Grant Goodfave, who plays Woody (and was involved in the same storyline), is also leaving the show.

Two important people in the world of soaps have died recently, and their passing should be duly noted. Don MacLaughlin, who put in an amazing 30-year run as Chris Hughes on "As the World Turns," died after a brief illness at age 79. In a more untimely death, the nation's leading soap opera critic/columnist Jon-Michael Reed died at age 39 of liver failure. Reed was a pioneer in the field of reporting on soap operas and in many ways was responsible for making soaps a more legitimate and acceptable art form.

In her next, "Wildfire," according to producer Jerry Tokofsky. The new film, budgeted at $7½-million, will star Linda, being described as another Ava Gardner in looks and style, and will be directed by Zalman King from his own script.

Q. As proud Southerners we were particularly pleased at scenes of the small North Carolina town where so much of Alan Alda's new movie, "Sweet Liberty," takes place. It all appears so familiar; where is it geographically? — P.K.

A. Sorry to disappoint you, but Alda and producer Martin Bergman decided to film in Sag Harbor, Long Island, and surrounding fishing villages, because those locales conveyed just the right flavor for the plot. Realistic 18th century Revolutionary battle scenes were staged in Sag Harbor's Main Street and in an open field outside town; while the heart of Sag Harbor doubles as the fictional, contemporary college town of Sayeville, N.C., in the movie-within-a-movie. All this was strictly a product of Alda's historical research and imagination.

Q. I've heard that actor Robert De Niro, for all his fiery presence in the movies, is really a wimpy guy who can't make up his mind about anything. — V.L.

A. De Niro is not a wimp, but he is indecisive. It takes him forever to make up his mind about even the slightest thing — such as going out to lunch. I know because Jeremy Irons, the fine British actor who co-stars with De Niro in his latest movie, "The Mission" — told me so. The actor is superstitious about whatever he does, and only makes up his mind at the last minute. Judging by the results of De Niro's work, his indecisiveness may be annoying but it works.

Q. Is it true the young actor Tom Cruise is about to marry Cher? — L.M.

A. I've been hearing reports of a supposedly torrid thing between the 24-year-old Cruise and 40-year-old Cher. I finally asked Tom directly about the reported romance. Not true, he told me. He and Cher are good friends, but they've never dated. The star of "Risky Business" and the new "Top Gun" also hasn't made time with actress Kelly McGillis, as has also been rumored. Cruise, recently co-starred with Paul Newman in the yet unreleased movie "The Color of Money," is dating a young woman — supposedly actress Mimi Rogers — but he isn't keen on talking about the relationship. I'll keep you posted as romantic developments warrant.

'Just friends' with Cher

Q. Can it possibly be true that Charlotte Rampling is making a movie in which she falls in love with a monkey? — V.H.

A. It's true, seriously. Rampling's latest flick, "May My Love," was shown recently in France at the Cannes Film Festival. In it the 41-year-old English actress stars as the wife of a British diplomat in Paris — and she does fall in love with and is shown embracing a chimpanzee. The movie, which is supposed to be a mildly scandalous comedy, is much less titillating than it sounds. The critics found it pretty dull going for, all its monkeyshines.

SMART MONEY: Sylvester Stallone, still nursing the financial wounds he received from his divorce (ex-wife Sasha got $33 million), has had his new wife sign a pre-nuptial agreement. Brigitte agreed not to claim community property, which would be half of everything Stallone earned during the marriage. Sly agreed to support their children handsomely if they have any. Meanwhile, Brigitte is getting $7,000 a week for spending money, not household expenses.

Q. I keep seeing photos of Woody Allen and Mia Farrow with all her children, but I can't picture Woody as a father-figure. Does he really enjoy having kids around? — M.K.

A. Judge from this. Personnel at Manhattan's famed Russian Tea Room, where Woody and Mia are very regular customers, en famille, say they see a warm, wonderful side of Allen when they wait on them. Woody does amazing sleight of hand tricks and keeps Mia's eight youngsters entranced with games, chatter and amusing jokes.

Tartikoff

* Continued from Page 2

"After considerable soul-searching, I realized the most gratifying job for me was the one I already had," Tartikoff said.

Business decisions aside: this is a triple-play celebration, with normally business-suited executives running around in shorts and sandals.

In addition to NBC's 60th anniversary, this has both "The Championship Season" for the network, as the Wilco stated in deafening applause. Too, as Tinker noted, Monday was the day that the merger between NBC parent company RCA and General Electric became effective.

RCA Chairman Thornton Bradshaw noted that the change of hands is not as big a change, historically speaking, as some might think. The NBC chime is made up of the notes G-E-C — standing for General Electric Corp.; Bradshaw said. Sixty years ago, he added, RCA was controlled by General Electric, and the boards of both companies shared a chairman, Owen D. Young.

Tinker and Bradshaw assured the affiliates that GE Chairman and Chief Executive Officer John F. Welch Jr. would continue the same positive relationship with the network as had Bradshaw and RCA.

Welch, in fact, had approved the new Tartikoff deal, Tinker said. That announcement ended months of speculation that Tartikoff, the one-time whiz-kid programmer who became president of NBC Entertainment in 1981, would be leaving the company at the end of next season.

KMVT weather anchor leaves for King station in Spokane

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

Colford this week joined KREM-TV, the CBS affiliate in Spokane, as weather anchor under the terms of a new, two-year contract.

He is being replaced by Dan Hartman, a 1985 graduate of Brigham Young University in meteorology. News Director Doug Maughan said. Hartman, 28, currently is working on a master's degree in climatology at BYU.

Colford, 31, took the on-air job at Spokane after being recruited by the station. KREM is a subsidiary of King Broadcasting Co. of Seattle, which also owns King Videocable Co. of Twin Falls.

The move lifts Colford into one of the nation's top 100 television markets. Twin Falls ranks as one of the smallest in the country. Educated in theater arts — he holds a master's degree — Colford blended acting with his hobby, meteorology. He was "discovered" in 1982 while working as a waiter in a restaurant frequented by New York television executives. The station manager of WCBS, the CBS network's flagship station, auditioned him after a meal by asking the weather forecast for the July 4 weekend, Colford said.

The off-the-cuff forecast won him an interview for WCBS' weekend weather slot.

However, after buttonholing television executives and taking a course in announcing at a New York school, Colford sent out audition tapes to stations throughout the country. He came to KMVT in October 1984.

Hartman has worked as a weatherman for campus station KBYU. He also has been a weather producer at Salt Lake City station KTVX and a weather consultant, Maughan said.

Respected British actor takes on Churchill in PBS monodrama

By HARRIET VAN HORNE
Newsday

Any one-man show imposes a triple challenge. It tests the mettle of the performer, his material and the audience. The familiar conventions of drama are missing. There are no arrivals and departures, no dialogue with subsidiary characters. Everything depends on the charm, the skill, the vocal projection of one actor. No amateur is up to the mark. Only a virtuoso performance will do.

In recent years, some fine actors have toured the country doing solo turns as Mark Twain, Charles Dickens, Abraham Lincoln, Harry Truman, John F. Kennedy, Richard Nixon and George Bernard Shaw. Not one of these monodramas has carried quite the risk implicit in this week's "Winston Churchill," coming Wednesday night at 8:30 p.m. on PBS station KAID. The noted British actor, Robert Hardy, is the star and he is definitely up to the mark as a performer. But he hasn't avoided all the snares and booby traps.

One of the greatest of Britain's prime ministers, Churchill was a complex man of many gifts. His writings will endure as superb examples of English prose. He was a moving orator, a crafty politician, a brave soldier and a better-than-average Sunday painter. He was also an irreverent wit and a clever raconteur.

Winston Churchill was not, however, a stand-up comic. The lectures he delivered to respectful American audiences in 1946 — of which this TV session is supposed to be an example — were not, in the trade term, luff-riots. But here we have a great and noble-minded statesman doing what often seems to be a comic vaudeville turn, one zinger after another. The laughter — sounding suspiciously like the laugh track from an old sitcom — is just too rich to be true. The howls, roars, giggles, gasps and titters are too loud, and they rumble on too long.

What you will see Wednesday night is an amalgam of three performances, taped before a studio audience in Toronto. Even the smallest jest drew a guffaw. You will hear laughter even when laughter is inappropriate, e.g., after such lines as "My fortunes were again at a low ebb."

Writer James Humes has apparently gone through the Churchill

'Winston Churchill' is the dramatization of an informal address delivered by the English statesman before an American audience in 1946

canon with a fine-toothed comb. This is right and proper, and his script is lively and amusing. Wisely, he begins with Winston, the bright, unhappy boy and carries on through the finest hours of World War II.

That war had just ended, and a British public that history has called ungrateful had just turned Churchill, their wartime prime minister, out of office.

"I have come running to America as a child runs to his mother for comfort," Churchill tells his audience. "Why shouldn't I love Yanks? My father married one. My maternal ancestors fought in Washington's army."

Born in 1874 ("in my grandfather's palace"), Churchill adored his mother, Jenny Jerome. "She shone like the evening star . . . though one of her admirers likened her to a panther.

"As a boy, I was a disappointment to my father," Churchill continues. And there you have a classic case of "the wound and the bow." Lord Randolph Churchill regarded his son as stupid, a conclusion he reached after watching the boy's absorption in his toy soldiers. "In the course of my life I had but five conversations with my father," the son recalls. Years later his dear friend, Violet Bonham-Carter, wrote, "The icy detachment and indifference of Lord Randolph failed to destroy the proud and passionate allegiance of his son. . . . Until the end he worshipped at the altar of his Unknown Father."

Churchill

A virtue of this 90-minute biography is that we see how desperately young Winston needed that father figure in his life. "I tried to look like my father," he confides. "wore his bow ties, I tried to grow a moustache. . . . My father was a brilliant orator. I went to an oral surgeon to try to cure my lisp."

Interestingly, Robert Hardy worked on that lisp, too. "I had a very clever Norwegian dentist," he told an interviewer. "He went into a great deal of research to discover what was wrong with Churchill's mouth that could account for the 'schsch' of his S's." The dentist cast plates for Hardy to wear during his performance but the actor found them impractical. He decided to "diminish the impediments, the lisp and the stammer, just suggest them."

Hardy also developed a style, a Churchill persona that he insists was not an impersonation. "I don't think I'm capable of an impersonation," he has said. But he listened to 20 hours of Churchill's recorded speeches. He caught, he believes, "little nuances of feeling, attitude and background" that show what sort of person Churchill was, and the social milieu from which he came.

Wisely, writer Humes has worked biography, history and family matters into an almost seamless narrative. Audiences will discover Churchill's early fascination with war. He was a cavalry officer in India and he was a correspondent in the Boer War. He was taken prisoner and — naturally — escaped and sent home colorful dispatches. "There is nothing more exhilarating than being shot at — without results," he tells lecture audiences.

Still emulating his father, young Winston served in Parliament, moving from the Conservative to the Liberal Party in response to the persuasion of Lloyd George.

By a curious coincidence, the outbreak of both World War I and II found Churchill as First Lord of the Admiralty. In 1910, he had written the Foreign Office a memorandum that predicted a German invasion of Belgium and a war that would last five years. It was that 1914 war that brought Churchill his first serious fall from grace. He had urged the Dardanelles campaign on an unwilling government and it was a disaster.

Coverage of Liberty celebration raises network exclusivity issue

By CLARKE TAYLOR
Special to the Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — The Cable News Network plans to provide full coverage of the Statue of Liberty centennial celebration, despite ABC-TV's claims to exclusive coverage, a senior CNN official announced June 4.

ABC paid David Wolper, producer of the event, $10 million last fall for broadcast rights to the July 3-6 celebration. The network recently announced detailed plans for 17½ hours of coverage of the celebration, known as Liberty Weekend. Much of the coverage is exclusive.

"The entire event belongs to the American people, and not to any one network or to David Wolper," said CNN Executive Vice President Ed Turner. "As a newsman, I find the idea of 'exclusivity' outrageous, and we are not going to tolerate it."

Wolper, producer of the opening and closing ceremonies of the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles, was commissioned last year by the private Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation to produce the centennial celebration with a television sale in mind as a means of partially financing the $30 million event.

Wolper said through a spokesman Wednesday that any changes in plans for television coverage now "are up to ABC," but that he "envisions no such changes." ABC officials could not be reached for comment.

The issue being raised by CNN, and to a lesser extent by NBC, involves the degree to which Liberty Weekend has become a news event, open to all news media, rather than an entertainment event to which exclusive television rights can be sold, like a football game or the recent Vladimir Horowitz concert in Moscow.

Turner said that the major source of contention is the July 3 opening night ceremonies involving President Reagan, Chief Justice Warren Burger and the presentation of a new Medal of Liberty, conceived by Wolper for the telecast, to 12 naturalized U.S. citizens. There is no strong objection to ABC's exclusive coverage of purely entertainment events, such as a star-studded closing event scheduled for July 6 at a New Jersey stadium, he said.

ABC has promised to provide other news operations with pool coverage of the president's rededication and relighting of the 100-year-old statue, and of the induction of 20,000 new U.S. citizens by Burger. Turner said that this promise came only after strong protests from other news operations, including CNN.

However, ABC claims exclusive rights to the remainder of the evening's ceremonies, including the Medal of Liberty presentations by the president.

"The notion that 'exclusivity' can be claimed for such an event is absurd," Turner said Wednesday, terming the notion of selling the TV rights to such an event as one of "unmitigated gall."

A spokesman for CBS-TV, which did not bid for broadcast rights to the centennial celebration, said the network plans to honor ABC's exclusivity. CBS plans to broadcast the pool coverage of the July 3 events, plus its own coverage of the non-exclusive Liberty Weekend events, such as a fireworks display and a parade of tall ships.

Turner expressed the view that most news operations until recently have been too distracted by coverage of world events to pay attention to plans for Liberty Weekend as they have unfolded.

He said that CNN officials initially expressed concern to Wolper in a letter about a month ago, when Turner and others at the cable network realized "we and other networks were going to be presented with plans for television coverage as a fait accompli."

CNN received "a pleasant brush off" in response to its letter, he said, but since has continued to try to negotiate with Wolper and ABC for added access to the upcoming celebration.

"Whatever the outcome (of the negotiations), we're going to cover what we want to cover, even if we have to do it with a long lens," said Turner. "We'll do whatever's necessary."

Wolper said through his spokesman that "the rules and regulations regarding exclusivity were made known when bidding among the three major networks took place last year, and that is when any complaints should have been made."

"You don't bid on news and public events like the one this one has become," Turner said in response.

Cousteau chronicles ecological disasters

By DAVID CROOK
Los Angeles Times

ISLA DANZANTE, Mexico — First, there was a faint dot in the sky above the blue water and the stark, lunar land. It was Capt. Jacques-Yves Cousteau's seaplane.

As the single-engine craft drew closer, those at the camp could make out the silhouetted heads of the pilot and his famous passenger. Finally, the plane eased from the sky. Its pontoons skipped along the calm water, coming to a bobbling halt. When it was at least 100 yards from shore, those on land spotted instantly the lanky figure that stood firmly on one of the pilot's pontoons.

"This is a dream come true for me," a newspaper photographer on the shore commented to a member of the Cousteau team.

Few of us ever have the chance to meet a legend.

In an era when mere celebrity too often passes for accomplishment, Jacques Cousteau, the film maker, author, inventor, environmentalist, TV and movie star, adventurer, entrepreneur, scholar, self-described "impresario of science" qualifies as a genuine hero to a generation that has traveled around the world with him on TV for 32 years.

His public self, carefully created through more than 80 films and TV shows.

HBO chairman: Future of cable lies in original programming

By MORGAN GENDEL
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — The chairman of HBO, Michael Fuchs, has his visions of the cable business, and they revolve around new, original programming.

"Movies don't carry the top spin in cable that they used to," he said in an interview before a question-and-answer session with TV critics at the Beverly Hilton in Beverly Hills, Calif.

Fuchs is adamant that cable subscribers gain little from costly exclusivity deals with movie studios, such as the one he signed with Warner Bros. earlier this week.

"There's no doubt that the Warners deal to us is defensive," he said. The defense is against competitor Showtime-The Movie Channel, which might have gotten the exclusive on Warners films — considered "the plum" of all recent movie lists, Fuchs said — had HBO not made a pre-emptive move.

Showtime Saturday is expected to announce yet another exclusivity deal with a movie distributor, following up similar deals this year that will make it the only pay-cable service showing new films from Cannon, Touchstone and Atlantic.

Fuchs believes the total that HBO and Showtime have spent on these deals — an estimated $600 million to $800 million — would have been better spent on original movies and series.

The image he wants HBO to have is as the purveyor of "departure programming" — shows that won't be seen on the three networks. If sitcoms are in vogue now, he said, "that's reason to go the other way."

Examples of coming HBO original fare includes "Half a Lifetime," about four friends (played by Keith Carradine, Nick Mancuso, Gary Busey and Saul Rubinek) examining their lives in the course of a poker game; "The Pursuit of Happiness," a documentary directed by Louis Malle about America's new wave of immigrants, and limited series such as "Training Camp," a follow-up to last season's reality-cum-comedy football show, "First and Ten."

Showtime, meanwhile, is steering ever-more-strongly into the comedy series domain.

Scheduled to be announced Saturday are a new summer comedy series, "The Frantics," a sort of MTV-meets-"Laugh-In." Already announced for the fall are the new series "Hard Knox," "The Garry Shandling Show" and new episodes of the long-running "Brothers."

Also in the comedy area: a special production of the National Lampoon's off-Broadway revue, "Class of '80"; a Penn & Teller special to be taped in the fall and a Mr. Bill "Comedy Spotlight" special.

Showtime also is announcing "Hoover," a film starring Treat Williams as FBI director J. Edgar Hoover, which begins production Friday, and "Motown" on Showtime, an hourlong series featuring performances and interviews with Motown stars, including the Temptations, the Four Tops and Michael Jackson. Three episodes will air in 1987 and three in 1988.

Elsewhere on cable TV:

Arts & Entertainment — This basic channel is getting more of an "American voice," a spokesman said, in response to criticism that so many of its entertainment and cultural shows are of British origin. New U.S.-produced programs include "Living Dangerously," profiles of adventurers, premiering in November; a one-hour documentary on the Amish, and a series of opera presentations with comedian Robert Klein as host.

(Those and other selections, A&E executives sadly noted, were the selections of programming vice president and culture connoisseur Curtis Davis, who died May 31 after a brief illness.)

The Disney Channel — Disney is looking at sitcoms too. Writers Gil Grant and Arnie Kogan are developing two new, as-yet-unnamed series.

The channel also will telecast Paul McCartney's "Rupert the Bear" feature, on which the former Beatle served as screenwriter, music scorer, executive producer and voice of the leading animated character. Original movies for the fall include Mike the Dog from "Down and Out in Beverly Hills" fame in "Spot Marks the X," and Bruce Boxleitner in the Louis L'Amour Western, "Down the Long Hills."

Cousteau

specials, has taken on the proportions of a 20th-Century myth, full of action and contemplation, Life and Death, Good and Evil, Love and Despair.

His private self? That's his business, but he does give visitors a few clues.

Now making what could be his last series of specials, Cousteau, who turned 76 on Wednesday, has risen from the ocean floor to chronicle the murder of the Earth. His new five-year, 20-hour series, with its typically grandiose title of "The Rediscovery of the World," examines some of the ecological disasters that humans have wrought and that, Cousteau believes, signal the beginning of the end for life on this planet.

"This series has little to do with the behavior of animals," Cousteau said in an interview, "and everything to do with the behavior of people."

The scene: A rare opportunity for a few reporters to spend a weekend on location with the crew of Aleyone, the Cousteau Society's new wind-assisted research ship plying the waters this summer of the Sea of Cortez. The captain flew in from Paris just for the occasion.

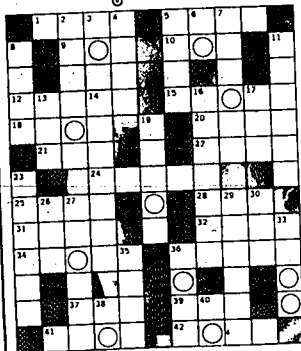

The purpose: public relations; good press for Cousteau's "Rediscovery" series bankrolled to the tune of $15 million by television magnate Ted Turner. The series' first program, "Haiti: Waters of Sorrow," debuted on Turner's WTBS Atlanta superstation during the Memorial Day weekend. This one won't be seen until 1987.

Following Cousteau's recent pattern — established in his studies of the Amazon and Mississippi River basins — less than a third of the "Haiti" program was comprised of his once-standard undersea shots punctuated by mock heroism in the face of the unknown dangers of the deep. Cousteau, instead, attempts to link the religious, social and economic pressures of Haiti with its overwhelming ecological problems of deforestation, water pollution and overfishing.

True to form, however, Cousteau himself is the camera's focus. His presence on the screen and in the narration elevates the often mundane

Daytime fixture 'Price is Right' to go to prime time this summer

By FRED ROTHENBERG
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — CBS announced that "The Price Is Right" will have a six-week summer run at night, making it the first game show on a major network in prime time in five years, according to network officials.

The audience-participation program, which has been a fixture on CBS' daytime schedule since 1972, will broadcast all-new hourlong specials at 8 p.m. EDT on Thursdays, beginning Aug. 14.

According to officials at each of the networks and Tim Brooks, a TV historian who wrote "The Complete Directory to Prime Time Network TV Shows," the last game show series on any network was Dick Clark's "The Krypton Factor," which ran on ABC for five weeks in the summer of 1981.

ABC's last game shows during the regular season were "Let's Make A Deal" and "The Newlywed Game," which both went off the air in 1971.

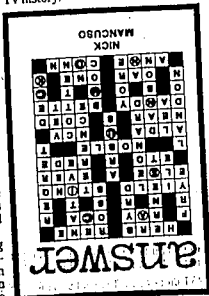

NBC said its last prime-time game show series was "Whodunit?," a mystery game show that lasted a month in the spring of 1979. "Whodunit?" had Ed McMahon as its host and attorneys F. Lee Bailey and Melvin Belli as regular panelists.

CBS said its last nighttime game shows were "What's My Line?" and "I've Got a Secret" in 1967.

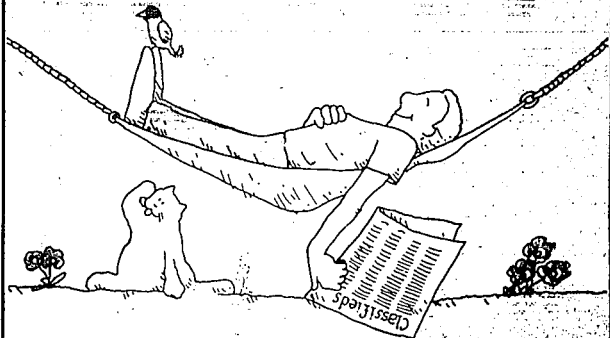

"The Price Is Right" was in prime time, first on NBC and then on ABC from 1958-64. In 1972, it joined CBS' daytime lineup, where it has become a top-rated program. Bob Barker is the host of both the daytime and nighttime editions.

Syndicated shows, including another "Price Is Right" from 1972-79, have been broadcast at night on local stations for years, but not on ABC, CBS or NBC. Currently, "The
