Planes collide over suburban neighborhood

67 passengers killed; some on ground perish

By RICHARD HOLGUIN
The Associated Press

CERRITOS, Calif. — An Aeromexico jetliner and a light plane collided in clear skies Sunday, killing all 67 people on the planes and at least two people on the ground as flaming wreckage fell on a suburban neighborhood, authorities said.

We have a final time confirmed two to three victims in a house, said Los Angeles County Fire Department spokesman Rob Smith.

It was clear they were indeed residents of the home.

In addition, he said, there was a possibility that a family of seven had also perished in another home, but it was unconfirmed.

Four people on the ground, either residents or firefighters, suffered minor injuries, after the wreckage fell about noon and were being treated at a local hospital, where officials said they had been told to expect more injured.

The twin-engine McDonnell Douglas DC-9, bound for Los Angeles from Mexico City as Flight 498, was carrying 64 people and was making its final approach to Los Angeles International Airport when it collided with the single-engine Piper Archer with three people on board, said Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Mark Schultz.

California authorities said that there were two about 100 feet above the ground when the jetliner and the light plane collided.

Witnesses reported that the jetliner appeared to be flying normally when the light plane came from the small plane.

It looked like a model plane going down. Then there was a big fireball and a big ball of black smoke billowing up," said witness Kelli Downey, 31, of Norwalk.

One of the two cockpit voice recorders from the jetliner was recovered late Sunday and sent to Washington for analysis, said Smith.

Aeromexico had had notified about the passengers' relatives by late Sunday afternoon, said Rene Roberts, an Aeromexico agent at the Los Angeles airport. A passenger list will not be supplied until all the families had been contacted, she said.

People waiting for arriving Aeromexico passengers were in a meeting with airline officials, Ms. Roberts said.

"There are no survivors in the strainer," said Drew Basesy, another sheriff's deputy. "I'm not aware of any number of fatalities on the ground."

"They are still searching, but it looks pretty bad."

It was the worst air disaster in Los Angeles International Airport history, said airport spokesman Thomas Whitfrey.

An emergency room nurse at Pioneer Hospital said four victims were brought in for treatment but their injuries were described as minor.

"We've been told to expect more," said the nurse, who asked not to be identified.

State to lose funds over drinking age

By JENNIFER JOHNSTON
The Associated Press

One month before eight states and the District of Columbia must adopt a drinking age of 21 or lose some federal highway funds, only the nation's capital appears ready to meet the U.S. Department of Transportation deadline.

In some of the affected states, officials have urged resistance to the federal mandate.

"We should not allow ourselves to be backslid by the federal government," says Louisiana state Rep. Quentin Dastugue.

At stake is $74.1 million in highway support for Ohio, Colorado, Idaho, Louisiana, Montana, South Dakota, Wyoming, Tennessee and the District of Columbia.

The Transportation Department has said it will withhold 5 percent of the highway funds designated for jurisdictions that do not ban liquor sales to everyone under 21.

Ohio would lose the most at about $30 million; Louisiana, $18 million; Colorado, $9.1 million; Tennessee, $8 million; Montana, $5.6 million; Idaho, $4.3 million; Wyoming, $4.5 million; South Dakota, $4 million.

Those figures would increase the next fiscal year when the penalty doubles to 10 percent.

Half of the eight affected states have no plans to change their drinking law. Legislators in other four states are to consider the issue next year, and 17 states, officials say, they have assurances the funds will be reinstated once the drinking age is changed. Some of the states are challenging the law in court.

The Louisiana Legislature, with the spirit of Mardi Gras and Bourbon Street prevailing, turned back in June an attempt to increase the legal drinking age from 18 to 21.

"Ain't there no romance left in the world?" asked Louisiana state Sen. Armand Brinkhaus. "What ever happened to a jug 'or wine and 'n' beer?"

In Wyoming, legislators have said they plan to file a bill next session to raise the drinking age from 19 to 21, but Gov. Ed Herschler says he doesn't leave about the government's threat.

"I sure don't think the federal government knows more about our problems than we do. I just don't think it's proper for the feds to tell us what to do," he said.

Nineteen-year-olds have all the rights, responsibilities and duties of an adult, and to me that means they ought to have the opportunity of doing what they wish at that age," Herschler said.

Idaho's female suicide rate skyrockets

By MARILYN HAUK ESSEX
The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho was one of the nation's leaders in the number of female suicides per capita during the first half of the 1980s, but the money spent on mental health care remains one of the lowest.

The situation, underscored by the 63 percent rise in female suicides from 1980 to 1985, has some leaders in the field thinking there may be a link between the statistics.

"I believe there is a correlation," said Idaho Mental Health Association President Shirley Blood, although she conceded there has been no study confirming the link.

Some mental health experts say Idahoans tend to avoid treatment because they view it as a sign of weakness and let problems fester until they reach an explosive point.

James Antrim, who heads the state Bureau of Mental Health, agreed and also admitted it was difficult to establish appropriate cause and effect relationships without proper scientific studies.

In addition, he said, "We don't have the emergency response capability it takes to deal with suicide, especially youth suicide."

Janet Wick of the Bureau of Vital Statistics said state officials are considering addressing that issue in an upcoming study that deals with suicide rates among various occupations.

Idaho ranks sixth in the nation in the number of suicides per capita, but 47th in the total dollars spent on mental health care. Last year, Idaho reported 134 suicides, with a suicide rate of 13.3 per 100,000 people, compared to a national rate of 11.6, according to the Bureau of Vital Statistics.

KGB keeps American journalist in prison

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The KGB secret police held American reporter Nicholas Daniloff in Lefortovo Prison on Sunday as an accused spy, but Daniloff's wife said after visiting him that he was the victim of a bizarre frameup.

U.S. diplomats also visited Daniloff and said the new man, a reporter for U.S. News & World Report, could be held indefinitely during the investigation.

"Nick keeps repeating over and over again, 'I am not a spy. I am not gathering intelligence material,'" said Daniloff's wife, Ruth.

She said her husband was in good spirits despite four hours of intensive interrogation after his arrest Saturday.

"He is being well-treated in the sense that he is not being beaten or kicked," she said after she and U.S. Consul General Roger Daley met Daniloff for an hour at the prison.

She said Soviet officials kept trying to get the weekly magazine correspondent to say he was a spy.

"He seems to be very calm. He is just very isolated and wants to know what is going on outside," Daniloff said.

In the first official Soviet comment on the arrest, the KGB issued a statement Sunday saying Daniloff was an agent of espionage.

"The material confiscated from him fully expose the U.S. correspondent of being involved in intelligence activities," said the statement issued through the official Tass news agency. "An investigation is under way into Daniloff's case."

No formal charges were filed, but Daniloff said Soviet authorities would hold the reporter indefinitely without charges during investigation.

"The prosecution seems to be moving under no strict time requirements for completing the investigation," Daniloff said. "I will go to the prison, a forbidding, dun-colored building in a working-class neighborhood in eastern Moscow.

In response, Mortimer Zuckerman, chairman and publisher of the magazine, will go to the Soviet Union via London, arriving in Moscow on Monday. Zuckerman will press for Daniloff's release through diplomatic and private channels, the magazine said in a statement.

Indefinitely Daniloff, 32, is the first Western journalist held by Soviet authorities.

Mountain Home man, boy killed in small plane crash

BOISE (AP) — The crash of a small plane near the Valley-Custer county line on Saturday killed a man and boy from Mountain Home and injured the man's wife. The boy's parents, Valley County Coroner Marvin Heikkila said last Sunday. J. Lyn Jordan, mid-30s, and Jason Bernemolo, 3, died of massive head injuries in the accident. Heikkila said. Their plane crashed shortly after takeoff from a runway in the rugged Area of the Boise National Forest about 20 miles east of Warm Lake, a Valley County Sheriff's dispatcher said. A nursing supervisor said Toni Jordan, 34, was in serious condition at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise Sunday night with a broken arm, cuts and a mild head injury. Alan Bernemolo, 32, who was piloting the plane, and Elizabeth Bernemolo, 31, both were in fair condition at the hospital, the nursing supervisor said.

Rob Johnson of Boise Flight Service said the single-engine, four-seat Cessna 182 took off from Mountain Home without a flight plan. Steve McCreary, an air safety investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board in Seattle, said the accident occurred about 11 a.m. Saturday, shortly after the group took off from a stop at the Indian Peak Emergency Strip, about 84 miles northeast of Boise, on their way to the Chamberlain Bald in the Frank Church River of No Return Wilderness. McCreary said Bernemolo was in his initial climb after lifting off from the grass airstrip when the plane was hit by downward air. "He attempted to turn away from the ridge he was going to overfly. The aircraft collided with trees, and terrain shortly thereafter," McCreary said. Bernemolo walked away from the crash to get help.

He said people ran from their homes, looking like "a big fire." Control of the air route center at Palmdale at the time of the crash, Robert Buckhorn, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman in Washington, said about the jetliner. "It was just going straight down, no power at all," he said.

Fred Farrar, another FAA spokesman, said the collision occurred 15 miles east of the LA airport. Jeff Rich, spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board in Los Angeles, said the collision apparently occurred at between 6,200 and 7,000 feet but that it was premature to comment on whether either plane was properly or improperly in position. He said the small plane took off from Torrance Airport about 11 a.m. and was bound for Big Bear Lake. Positive identification of those on board was not immediately known. An NTSB investigative team was to go to the crash site, spokesman Ira Furman said. The CHP said the aircraft collided at 11:56 a.m. "The jetliner was on its back and dropping like a rock," said Tom Talk, editor and the Orange Coast Daily Pilot of Costa Mesa, who was driving on the Riverside Freeway in Buena Park when he saw the airliner falling two miles away. "It was just going straight down, no power at all," he said.

An entire area of the neighborhood of upper-middle-class homes was obliterated when rescuers arrived. The splintered fuselage of the jetliner could be seen by helicopter news reporters. "The whole corner of the neighborhood has been destroyed," airport reporter Bob Tur said on radio station KFWB. This neighborhood has just been devastated, just flattened," said Jo Karla Barbara, where President Reagan is vacationing at the ranch, spokesman Peter Roussel issued a statement. "The president and Mrs. Reagan are deeply saddened by this tragedy," the statement said. "Their thoughts and prayers are with all the families involved." Aeromexico is owned by the Mexican government, and Sunday's crash was the second involving a national airline in five months. On March 31, a Mexicana airlines Boeing 727 jet bound for Los Angeles, crashed into a mountain 59 miles northwest of Mexico City, killing all 167 people aboard. Nineteen Americans were among the dead in Mexico's worst aviation disaster. The last major crash involving the Los Angeles airport was Jan. 18, 1968, when a United Airlines jetliner plunged into the sea off Marina del Rey, killing 37 people, he said.

No one's complaining about flatter tax rate

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress' massive overhaul of the tax laws sounds the death knell for what has been known as the U.S. tax code — the stairs, every dollar earned with the rich are taxed at a steeply higher rate than the poor. Yet, no one seems upset.

first-written. The rich paid rates which started at 1 percent and rose to 7 percent for income above $500,000.

The top rate has fluctuated in the intervening decades, hitting a high of 92 percent in the mid-1950s. That meant, in theory at least, that for every dollar earned over $400,000 the level where the top rate started in 1952, the taxpayer kept 8 cents and Uncle Sam got 92 cents.

The top tax rate had dropped to 70 percent by the time Ronald Reagan took office in 1981 and later that year he persuaded Congress to reduce it to 50 percent.

But the tax law awaiting congressional approval scraps the system of graduated rates altogether. In place of the 14 tax rates beginning at 11 percent and rising to 50 percent, the new system has just two rates: 15 percent and 28 percent.

However, what amounts to a 5 percent surtax for couples earning over $71,900 raises their effective rate to 33 percent. For the very rich, however, the surtax phases out for couples, with taxable income of $149,250.

The top rate will be paid by millionaires and the middle class alike. For married couples, the top rate kicks in with incomes above $29,750. Thus a couple making $30,000 will face a top tax rate that is the same as a couple with an income of $3 million.

Instead of a loud outcry, the new tax proposal has been embraced by liberals and conservatives alike as a fairer and more progressive than the current system.

"It would be extremely incorrect to say that progressivity is dead — based on these changes," argued Alan Blinder, economics professor at Princeton University. "Progressivity depends on the average tax rates committee's estimates. This tiny paid, not the marginal tax rates."

The marginal tax rate is the rate paid on the last dollar of income while the average tax rate is the percentage of one's entire income paid in taxes.

According to calculations done by Congress' Joint Committee on Taxation, the percentage of taxes paid by the wealthy will change very little under the bill.

Under current law, persons making more than $200,000 annually are paying 22.5 percent of their incomes in taxes. That would be reduced only slightly to 22 percent in 1988, the committee's estimates. This tiny reduction is occurring even though the top tax rate is falling from 50 percent to 28 percent.

The average tax cut of 2.3 percent for the wealthiest Americans hides wide variations in the impact of the new law, however. Some wealthy Americans will pay considerably less by virtue of having their incomes taxed at a top rate of only 28 percent while others, who made extensive use of tax shelters and other loopholes, are facing substantial tax increases.

These tactics fostered a widespread belief that the current system was rigged in favor of the rich.

Affirmative action faces court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lingering questions over how and when minorities and women may get special treatment in the American workplace are confronting the Supreme Court in its new term.

Uncertainty remains despite three major affirmative action decisions announced before the court concluded its 1985-86 term in July, and the justices will explore the issues anew in two cases this fall.

The Reagan administration argues a challenging broad application of the job preferences, but on different grounds.

American businesses will be looking for further guidance although the court's recent rulings have allowed employers that voluntary plans can be permissible.

Jim Conway a spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers, said of the recent decisions: "Goals and timetables can be used in hiring and promotion. That's our policy. We see it as a pretty clear path that employers are supposed to take."

Both affirmative action cases on the court's 1986-87 agenda involve public agencies, and one presents the court with its first look at alleged sex discrimination against men.

No evidence pets carry AIDS

ATLANTA (AP) — Health researchers say thousands of AIDS patients could probably benefit from the love and companionship of a pet. If they're careful to avoid animal diseases which might attack their weakened immune systems.

There is no evidence that pets can carry the virus which causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome, said Dr. Pierre Bland, a veterinarian and epidemiologist with the state Department of Human Resources, Georgia AIDS Project.

"The only animals which have been shown to carry AIDS virus are some apes, he said, but dogs and cats can carry infections and illnesses which don't harm most people, but might be devastating to AIDS patients."

AIDS is a disease in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving the victim susceptible to a spectrum of infections and cancers.

"Any type of bacterial infection that their pets have, they could be at risk for it if they expose themselves to it," Bland said.

Those infections include toxoplasmosis, a parasitic infection sometimes found in cats, campylobacter, a bacteria which can cause diarrhea in puppies and kittens; and cryptosporidia, a parasite sometimes carried by puppies, said Dr. Craig Greene, an infectious disease specialist at the University of Georgia's College of Veterinary Medicine.

Millionaires ranked by state

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two rural states are at opposite ends of a scale measuring the ratio of millionaires to residents, with land-rich North Dakota leading and West Virginia trailing, the Census Bureau reports.

Nationally, the United States has 475.9 millionaires per 100,000 residents as defined by the net worth of individuals, the Bureau says in its new published State and Metropolitan Area Data Book.

People are judged to be millionaires on the basis of their property as well as their income, a measurement that boosts the status of many rural landowners. Thus, residents of a state such as North Dakota are judged millionaires because they own large farms, whether or not their cash income is high.

Incead, North Dakota ranked only 23rd in per capita income, according to a separate study.

But it was tops in the nation in millionaires, with 565.5 people in that category for every 100,000 residents.

Minnesota, another agricultural state, ranked second with 425.9 millionaires per 100,000, followed by 387.8 in Florida, where many thousands of Americans have retired with their life savings.

State wins custody of baby

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The state has won temporary custody of a 3-month-old baby born addicted to cocaine, and a prosecutor says he now may file child abuse charges against the girl's unmarried mother.

Virgie Kay Morgan said she will fight to get her 3-month-old baby back and leave Florida.

"I asked if she would care for the child, she said, 'If I can't have the baby, I can't care for it.'"

She announced her plans after Indian County Judge James Balsiger issued a 21-day shelter order Friday granting the state temporary custody of the baby girl.

River County Attorney Bruce Calton charged that the woman is a 33-year-old unmarried prostitute who has refused state offers of a drug rehabilitation program and medical training to care for her daughter.

New book rebuts accusations that Ike 'lost' Eastern Europe

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than 40 years after the end of World War II, Western historians are still debating the question, "Who Lost Eastern Europe to the Russians?"

A book by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's grandson rebuts accusations that Ike was too trusting and conceded that the commander of the Allied forces on the Western front was more concerned with ending the war against Nazi Germany than keeping the Red Army out of Berlin.

David Eisenhower wrote in his 577-page book, "Eisenhower at War: 1945-45," that in late 1944 U.S. and English armies were moving toward Germany from the west and the Russians were sweeping in from the East.

British Prime Minister Winston Churchill, chafing under Allied agreements countenancing a Soviet zone of influence in Eastern Europe, after the war, urged the Western armies to advance as quickly as possible.

But Ike demurred, even ordering one U.S. general to halt his advance 60 miles short of Berlin. He also stopped American armies — in Czechoslovakia, which like eastern Germany was occupied by the Russians and became a Soviet satellite.

Eisenhower argues that his grand-acting on the political will of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the general sentiment of the Allies in Allied forces on the Western front.

"Conceding those who as late as the fall of 1944 had predicted that the Russians would be too exhausted to overcome determined resistance beyond the prewar frontier, an estimated 450 divisions advanced 300 miles through western Poland, Bulgaria, western Romania, Budapest and northern Yugoslavia, spreading destruction and terror on a vast front," Eisenhower wrote.

"The spectacle aroused misgiving about Soviet domination of Eastern Europe and even misled pity for the Germans," the biographer wrote.

The grandson wrote the book as the opening of a three-volume biography of Ike's political life, devoting long sections to the Berlin controversy, calling it "the most enduring of his careers."

"I would argue that Eisenhower's actions ended the war more quickly, which was the task set for him, and this debate — still unresolved — is really about Allied aims and Eisenhower's fidelity to them," he wrote.

"The ensuing Cold War is often explained as an unforeseen tragedy attributable to Soviet deceit or Allied blunders or a lack of foresight in the part of America's wartime leadership, but the reality is more complex," he wrote.

"It is apparent that the Cold War had all along been deeply rooted in national and ideological differences with the Soviet Union that had been well defined before the war and that it almost, but not quite, made wartime cooperation impossible between the Allies and the Russians," he wrote.

Marine crash victims listed

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The Navy on Sunday identified most victims of the helicopter crash in the Chesapeake Sound that killed eight Marines and injured 13 others.

The two men whose bodies have been recovered were Lance Cpl. Trent A. Stover of Columbia, S.C., and Lance Cpl. Eric D. Bradford of Norfolk, the Navy said in a statement.

A search for six other Marines missing and presumed dead in the crash Friday was called off Saturday night.

The six were identified as Cpl. Arthur F. Bergquist of Brooklyn Center, Minn.; Capt. William D. Ellzey and Lance Cpl. Rory M. Fowler, both of Jacksonville, N.C.; Cpl. Carl F. Jones of Camp Lejeune, N.C.; Pvt. Daniel F. Rumpf III of Lake Luzerne, N.Y.; and Cpl. Thomas L. Schwichtenburg Jr. of Wopewoc, Wis.

The men were on a Marine CH-46 Sea Knight helicopter that crashed into the Atlantic Ocean on Saturday from the assault vessel USS Salpan while taking part in a NATO exercise, military officials said. The crash occurred about 60 miles off the coast of Norfolk.

The 17 Marine passengers, who were being ferried from the Salpan to the USS Nashville, were based at Camp Lejeune, N.C. The helicopter carried a crew of four.

The 11 injured were identified as Lance Cpls. John Albertine Jr. of Nassau, N.Y.; Kevin D. Black of New Britain, Conn.; Thomas W. Drummond of Indianapolis; Christopher A. Roper of Indiana; Pfc. Hector J. Lara of Harrisburg, Pa.; 1st Lt. Joseph A. Mauney of Gastonia, N.C.; Pfc. Joseph A. Smith of Weirton, W. Va.; Sgt. James E. Stover of Ellenton, Tenn.; Lance Cpl. Ricky L. Watkins of Rochester, N.Y.; Pfc. Jody P. Waterer of Gallon, Ohio; and Lance Cpl. Phillip A. Welsh of Sneads Ferry, N.C.

The wealthy hunt for loopholes in tax bill

The final wording of the tax bill that Congress will vote on next month is still being woven together by staff experts, but already the hunt has begun to find holes in its loops that will let the deserving rich keep more of what they've got.

Tax advisers are polishing their magnifying glasses, preparing to study the final bill with the same intensity that Sherlock Holmes gave to examining the scene of the crime.

Some loopholes, otherwise known as tax shelters, undoubtedly will be found, not necessarily because they were deliberately put in but because devising a tax code that is air-tight and tamper-proof has proved to be virtually beyond the wit of man.

The somewhat frantic search for tax dodges is under way even now. From what we read, the high-priced advice at the moment is to get into something called cattle-feeding shelters. Just what these involve isn't entirely clear, but apparently they have something to do with the fact that, like everyone else, cattle like to eat, and if you play your cards right you can take a tax loss by getting in on the ruminative action.

As we understand it, cattle-feeding shelters have been around for a long time, which probably says all that needs to be said about why tax reform is a good idea.

Contrary to everything that you may have read, real-estate tax shelters are also still being touted, but only — and here is the really revolutionary thing — if they have a chance to make money.

This is a switch on the old rule, which allowed someone who chucked $30,000 into a certain kind of real-estate shelter to claim a $2 million tax loss, thereby obtaining the wherewithal to buy a dairy herd whose surplus milk could be sold to the government for a nice profit. The spoilsports in Washington have decreed that there will be no more of that.

A major purpose of tax reform is, of course, to try to steer investment money away from ventures that get up to lose money and toward productive ends. But even with greatly reduced tax rates it appears that some people remain determined to dump their money into exotic if not bizarre enterprises, looking for losses to offset other gains.

Fears have already been expressed that the cattle-feeding shelter market is about to become saturated — after all, the beasts can eat only so much — forcing latecomers into a frantic search for the even more far out.

Somewhere in the 1,400 or so pages of the new tax code, we suspect, the really far out will be found. Somewhere, somehow, someone will come up with the gimmick that will go on making tax avoidance worthwhile.

Conservatives need noblesse oblige

At a Republican conference this year, Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee warned that while the GOP swept into office crusading against excessive government, the crusade in danger of becoming just another political obsession, divorced from the needs of the people.

Alexander stressed that in the South, Republican candidates will have to show that the party is willing to use government "at least as the catalyst, and often more than that" to answer bread-and-butter demands for jobs, law enforcement and for environmental quality.

Yet how can Republicans retain their conservative identity if they do so? How can they avoid the wrath of the neo-conservative intelligentsia, the ideologues, the strident advocates of laissez-faire?

In fact, there is a conservative tradition that not only permits, but actually insists, on government activity and opposes laissez-faire. It is a tradition of social stewardship that goes back to before the Social Darwinism that Mario Cuomo attacked in his speech at the 1980 Democratic convention, a tradition that also antedates the economics of Adam Smith.

It might even be a tradition that Ronald Reagan unconsciously responds to. Granted, he is beguiled by the folklore of laissez-faire, but could it be that he was drawn to Franklin Delano Roosevelt precisely because that leader epitomized a centuries-old conservative tradition of stewardship, a tradition which, in the judgment of James MacGregor Burns, put FDR "far closer to the conservative tradition than any other?"

But Burns pointed out, "true conservatism — that of Burke, and of John Adams and some of the other Federalists" — has been pushed aside by the dogma of laissez-faire.

This is a modern phenomenon. From the medieval period down to the time of the American Civil War, the essence of European, and later American, conservative thought was the doctrine of noblesse oblige, or social stewardship.

As Roland Stromberg observes in "European Collectivism: The Story of the 19th Century," the conservative tradition is at odds with our modern perceptions, being "an enemy of laissez-faire. Coleridge believed in government regulation of manufacturers, government aid to education, the duty of the state to temper the moral and intellectual capabilities of its citizens in all sorts of positive ways. ... The Coleridge tradition passed to such writers as John Ruskin, who described himself as a "violent Tory of the old school," and violently denounced the materialistic and unprincipled society of industrial England.

American conservative theories, from Alexander Hamilton to the founders of the Republican Party in the 1850s, were similarly ardent supporters of activist government.

In contrast to such conservatism, the doctrine of minimal government tends to be a shrill and absolutist faith that has been recently the fashion, most prominently with the economic theories of Adam Smith. He proposed an economic system wherein the "invisible hand" of the market maintains an automatic order without intervention by government, much as the deists believed that the "clockwork universe" could run automatically according to Newtonian laws without interference by God.

This "liberating" doctrine was echoed by such thinkers as Thomas Jefferson in statements such as "The government that governs best, governs least."

Another contrast with old-style conservatism is the doctrine arising later from the writings of Darwin, whose "survival of the fittest" was popularized as the basis for a new application of laissez-faire in the form of Social Darwinism. This was essentially the "Darwinism" that Cuomo referred to: the doctrine of government abstention from interference in the jungle law of survival.

This jungle-law, in the Victorian period, spawned the industrial world of seven-day work weeks, 12-hour work days and filthy factory conditions — which in turn triggered the counter-reaction of exposes and progressive reform in the early 20th century. Theodore Roosevelt, a searching reformer indeed, referred to laissez-faire as "a bit of outworn academic doctrine ... applied with profit, if anywhere at all, only in a primitive community."

But it became solidly enshrined as conservative doctrine, with an importance that only increased in the years after World War II among conservative academicians, journalists and political leaders, to the point where laissez-faire is now being touted as a pure conservative creed.

The combativeness — the sheer belligerence — of the minimal government polemics put forward in the early Reagan era may well endure as a 20th-century high-water mark in the history of laissez-faire.

But is this doctrine what Reagan supporters voted for? And will it win future elections for Republican?

Giving minimal government doctrine the credit for conservative victories ignores the importance of the backlash against the culture of 1970s liberalism. Voters weren't supporting minimal government as much as they were rebelling against excessive "understanding" for Third World terrorists or lenient sentences for murderers.

That liberal culture has dwindled as a boogyman. Republicans will find it less and less useful as a campaign device. They are also apt to find that a lot of their supporters — particularly blue-collar voters who once supported Democrats — are looking for more activist government.

There's no reason that conservatives can't give it their own and still be conservatives. Does it really make sense any longer for conservatives to put their minds the other way, whirling a presence of economic rot in the social fabric — a surety a drive through one of the festering districts of a major city should suffice — with the bitterly laughable notion that the market will come to the rescue? What thinking conservative should balk at the Job Corps, a program designed to shore up the basis for enterprise by giving business training and official work force, all the while reducing social misery and social chaos?

A nucleus of daring conservatives, notably George Will, are beginning to challenge the primacy of laissez-faire as a touchstone of Tory identity. It is time to hasten this process along with a manifesto demanding a rebirth of conservative noblesse oblige.

There are too many conservatives and moderates with no place to go in American politics because of the shrill insistence of certain conservative leaders on an intellectually tyrannical code of belief. It would be presumptuous to try to predict what a full-fledged movement for noblesse oblige with economic reform could accomplish in five years ahead.

But the current and egregious condition of conservative theory — its evasion of an alternate conservative heritage of activist government — is ripe for a political challenge.

Need to change marketing methods

I went to a meeting last Tuesday night at CSI called "Revitalizing Rural Idaho Communities" in which many people and politicians testified to the deterioration nationwide, but mainly Idaho, not only of agriculture, but all of rural America.

The politicians were very kind, sympathetic and attentive to those giving testimony and allowed anyone to speak who wished to do so.

As I left the meeting I felt somewhat let down as nothing specific was done or promised to alleviate the problem facing agriculture and all rural America, namely low commodity prices; and then I hit me that there really isn't anything we can do.

It also dawned on me that Congress will never give producers of raw farm products a return on our production that will allow us to pay our farm expenses, enjoy a decent living and retire farm debt. I think the $20 billion farm debt can attest to that.

As I drove home, I reread some of the testimony given, recalling one person stating that there were no markets out there, and I thought to myself that there just aren't really any there, we are just too apathetic to search them out.

I also remember in the past being told to produce, produce, produce with no thought being given to pricing our production that would reflect the high costs we pay to buy our production and return a profit that would have avoided exactly what's happening to agriculture and rural America today.

How foolish we are to expect our income to come from the U.S. Treasury instead of from the commodities we produce. The programs and the ways and means for farmers to profitably price their production have been in place for close to 20 years.

If we refuse to change from the old way of marketing (I call it the "what'll you gimme" market) and continue to look to Congress for our income, then rural America will continue its decline into oblivion. May the Lord have mercy on us, for the large grain cartel certainly will not.

Watch out for strange lights in the sky

Can anyone explain what that strange light was in the sky Aug. 18? Whatever it was, it must've been responsible for several things that have happened since then.

It might've been a meteor, as it appeared during the time of the Perseid meteor showers. If so, it was a big one.

I saw it while I was driving north on Highway 75, south of Shoshone. Out of the corner of my eye, I spotted a white streak across the sky to the northeast. As I watched, the streak turned light blue, then disappeared. It lasted a second or two. The sky was still fairly light at 9 p.m., so the display had to be bright to be noticed. Meteor showers generally aren't visible until the sky is black, and then it usually takes sharp eyes to see their fleeting passages across the heavens.

I phoned the office as soon as I reached Shoshone to have a reporter check it out. The last I saw something like that it turned out to be a Soviet satellite burning up as it entered the atmosphere over Upper Michigan. Surely, I thought, I wasn't the only one who'd seen the light in the sky. It was probably tracked on radar at Mountain Home Air Base.

My excited report was greeted with some skepticism at the office. "Is this a crank call?" I was asked by a doubting news editor. After assuring him I hadn't been drinking or otherwise hallucinating, I was told a reporter would look into it.

Forty-five minutes later I hit a deer. Now, in some 28 years of driving I've seen a lot of deer and I've come close to hitting one several times, but that night was the first — I nailed a squirrel on the grill at 55 mph and skidded for an entire

Mike Sullivan

I'd never even seen a deer on that stretch of road before.

That night must've had something to do with it. It could've sparked an eccentric migratory urge in the deer; the fawn had been headed in the direction of the light when it had the misfortune to stroll into my path.

A TV news report later that night revealed that a Soviet spy satellite was in trouble and expected to go out of orbit and enter the atmosphere. That was it, I concluded.

I was surprised when there was nothing in the paper the next day, or the day after that. Monday I learned that no other sightings had been reported by sheriff's deputies around the Magic Valley. Could I have been the only one? Was I hallucinating? No, it was too real. But the balky Ruskys satellite eventually came down two days later, so it wasn't that.

Some people believe that certain heavenly occurrences affect events on Earth, perhaps even foretell events to come. A fellow worker, for example, told me it would rain that Saturday because the moon was going to pass in front of Mars. Sure enough, the white clouds overhead were reported by me as being my first at the Fourth of July Lake in the Owen Counties. Since then, a series of strange, otherwise inexplicable events have occurred. Could they all have been somehow related to the mysterious light over the desert? For example:

• The Sun Valley and Ketchum city councils have let two weeks go by without attempting to annex the northern portion of Blaine County.

• No candidate for any political office in Southern Idaho accused an opponent of anything.

• My son, Brett, phoned home from vacation at Expo '86 in Vancouver to say he missed us.

• There were no major range fires, plagues of insects or any other agricultural disasters anywhere in Magic Valley.

• No one accused me of being a liberal.

• I saw a man driving a silver cowboy hat and driving a dusty pickup truck actually signal for a turn at least half a block before turning off 2nd Avenue East.

• I think I saw a late-model Volvo station wagon run a "Child On Board" sign in the back window with a red light and take a corner on two wheels on Blue Lakes Boulevard. Of course, I might've been hallucinating.

One of the worst things about something like this is the abuse one has to put up with from disbelievers — the bemused expressions and slow noddings of heads as I explained the sighting. "Let's humor him," they seem to be saying. "That was a long hard week. He'll get over it." It isn't the first time I've seen mysterious lights over the desert. The last time might well have been helicopters, however. Whatever they were, they disappeared before I could get close enough to figure them out.

It may not have been the last time something bright and strange catches my eye up there, but it's certainly the last time I'll mention it to anyone in the newsroom.

Solidarity marks its 6th anniversary

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Thousands of Solidarity supporters attended Roman Catholic Masses Sunday in low-key observances of the sixth anniversary of the creation of the Soviet bloc's first independent trade federation.

In the Baltic port city of Gdansk, the birthplace of the now-gathered union, hundreds of people gathered with Solidarity founder Lech Walesa for a Mass at St. Brygida's Church.

Church officials and Walesa urged the crowd to avoid street demonstrations like those that have occurred on Solidarity's previous anniversaries.

Walesa, winner of the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize, laid flowers at a monument to workers outside the main gate of Gdansk's Lenin Shipyard. He acted privately, before the Mass, to avoid attracting a crowd.

An agreement signed by Walesa at the shipyard on Aug. 31, 1980, between striking workers and the government, allowed independent trade unions to be formed. Sixteen months later, martial law was imposed and Solidarity was banned shortly after.

After the Mass, Walesa told reporters: "I wanted to avoid a demonstration and that is why I went to the monument before. We are peaceful and we want to avoid demonstrations."

In his sermon at St. Brygida's, the Rev. Henryk Jankowski called Aug. 31 "a special day for the entire nation" but twice urged worshippers not to demonstrate in the streets.

Communist authorities are expected to release more jailed Solidarity activists in coming weeks under a government amnesty.

"We are waiting for the rest of the people to be released," Tadeusz Mazowiecki, the government's chief negotiator, said after the Mass.

Police patrolled the streets outside the church and shipyard to prevent disturbances.

In Warsaw, more than 10,000 people attended a religious Mass at St. Stanislaw Kosciuszko Church. Among them were banner-waving Solidarity delegations from across the country.

"Solidarity does not belong to the past... Solidarity is the hope of millions of Polish people," the Rev.

Teofil Bogucki said in a sermon repeatedly interrupted by applause.

"Nobody should fear Solidarity; but they should restore its rights."

Hundreds of police, backed by water cannons and a helicopter-riding overhead, were deployed near the church.

Police detained scores of people heading for a pro-Solidarity Mass at a church in Wroclaw, a Solidarity source there said. Most of those detained were later released.

In the Krakow suburb of Nowa Huta, riot police detained dozens of people in dispersing a march to the town hall by about 1,000 Solidarity supporters, said opposition sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Gadhafi: U.S. moves strengthen Libya

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Col. Moammar Gadhafi told Libyans in a broadcast on Sunday that the U.S. military action has only fed the desert nation's revolutionary zeal.

In the face of celebrations of 17 years of his rule.

Later in the day, Gadhafi met Soviet Vice President Pyotr Demichev, who came to Tripoli to help Libya mark the anniversary of the Gadhafi-led coup. According to Libyan radio, Demichev toured Gadhafi's house, which was damaged in the U.S. bombing raid on April 15.

"Our visit comes at a time when U.S. imperialism is trying to exert forces. The western coalition with allegations by the U.S. administration of renewed evidence of Libyan support for terrorism.

(In Italy Sunday, the U.S. aircraft carrier Forrestal arrived for a port call in Naples after patrols north of Libya. The carrier completed joint exercises with Egypt last week).

On Saturday, Libya's second-in-command, Maj. Abdel Salem Jarrafat, pledged to prosecute terrorists and demanded that the United States back up its allegations with evidence.

Gadhafi's 3 1/2-hour speech was broadcast early morning on state-run television.

Savimba offers plan for peace

JAMBA, Angola (AP) — Guerrilla leader Jonas Savimba outlined a peace offer to Angola's Marxist government Sunday, calling for negotiations on withdrawal of all foreign troops and a national union government leading to elections.

"War is not good business. Our people want to go home and plow, go to their villages and cows," Savimba said in an interview in his hatched-off headquarters after making the announcement of the peace offer.

He said the "platform for peace" was developed at a six-day congress of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola — UNITA — Some 2,000 delegates from all 16 provinces in the embattled southern African country attended the congress, according to Savimba.

He said unofficial talks had taken place in London and Paris with representatives of President Eduardo dos Santos' government, but government authorities have denied any contacts with the rebels.

Both UNITA and dos Santos' Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) fought for independence from Portugal. They then fought a civil war in 1975 after the country gained independence and the MPLA won, with UNITA returning to guerrilla warfare.

Cuba has an estimated 30,000 soldier in Angola, helping fight the rebels, and there are Soviet advisers working with the army.

Savimba's peace plan called for deposition from MPLA that it is willing to negotiate, and we will start negotiations immediately... to deal with the problems of total withdrawal of foreign troops from our country. This will cease a calendar for withdrawal.

UNITA can declare a national fire between our forces and MPLA forces and all national forces will maintain the positions they have, leading to a government of national unity that will lead to peace in our country and finally to elections, so each will know the popularity of his.

Letter threatens hostages

PARIS (AP) — A message purporting to come from the Islamic Jihad on Sunday renewed threats against the lives of two Americans held hostage in Lebanon and appeared to shift the demands for their release.

The authenticity of the message could not be verified, however, and U.S. State Department spokesman Pete Martinez said in Washington, D.C., that the Reagan administration "would have no comment concerning the hostages."

The two-page letter, which was dropped in the The Associated Press mailbox here and was in passable but flawed French, differed in several respects from previous notes signed by the Islamic Jihad.

Unlike Sunday's message, most communications purportedly from the hostage-takers have come through Beirut, have been in Arabic, have begun with the Koranic phrase, "In the name of Allah, the merciful, the compassionate."

The wealthy hunt for loopholes in tax bill

The final wording of the tax bill that Congress will vote on next month is still being woven together by staff experts, but already the hunt has begun to find holes in its loops that will let the deserving rich keep more of what they've got.

Tax advisers are polishing their magnifying glasses, preparing to study the final bill with the same intensity that Sherlock Holmes gave to examining the scene of the crime.

Some loopholes, otherwise known as tax shelters, undoubtedly will be found, not necessarily because they were deliberately put in but because devising a tax code that is air-tight and tamper-proof has proved to be virtually beyond the wit of man.

The somewhat frantic search for tax dodges is under way even now. From what we read, the high-priced advice at the moment is to get into something called cattle-feeding shelters. Just what these involve isn't entirely clear, but apparently they have something to do with the fact that, like everyone else, cattle like to eat, and if you play your cards right you can take a tax loss by getting in on the ruminative action.

As we understand it, cattle-feeding shelters have been around for a long time, which probably says all that needs to be said about why tax reform is a good idea.

Contrary to everything that you may have read, real-estate tax shelters are also still being touted, but only — and here is the really revolutionary thing — if they have a chance to make money.

This is a switch on the old rule, which allowed someone who chucked $30,000 into a certain kind of real-estate shelter to claim a $2 million tax loss, thereby obtaining the wherewithal to buy a dairy herd whose surplus milk could be sold to the government for a nice profit. The spillovers in Washington have decreed that there will be no more of that.

A major purpose of tax reform is, of course, to try to steer investment money away from ventures set up to lose money and toward productive ends. But even with greatly reduced tax rates it appears that some people remain determined to dump their money into exotic if not bizarre enterprises, looking for losses to offset other gains.

Fears have already been expressed that the cattle-feeding shelter market is about to become saturated — after all, the beasts can eat only so much, forcing latecomers into a frantic search for the ever more far-out.

Somewhere in the 1,400 or so pages of the new tax code, we suspect, the really far-out will be found. Somewhere, somehow, someone will come up with the gimmick that will go on making tax avoidance worthwhile.

Conservatives need noblesse oblige

Richard Striner

At a Republican conference this year, Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee warned that while the GOP swept into office crusading against excessive government, the crusade is in danger of becoming just another political position, divorced from the needs of the people.

Alexander stressed that in the South, Republican candidates will have to show that the party is willing to use government "at least as the catalyst, and often more than that" to answer bread-and-butter demands for jobs, law enforcement and for environmental quality.

Yet how can Republicans retain their conservative identity if they do so? How can they avoid the wrath of the neo-conservative intelligentsia, the ideologues, the strident advocates of laissez-faire?

In fact, there is a conservative tradition that not only permits, but actually insists, on government action and opposes laissez-faire. It is a tradition of social stewardship that goes back to before the Social Darwinism that Mario Cuomo attacked in his speech at the 1984 Democratic convention, a tradition that also antedates the economic tenets of Adam Smith.

It might even be a tradition that Ronald Reagan unconsciously responds to. Granted, he is beguiled by the folklore of laissez-faire, but could it be that he was drawn to Franklin Delano Roosevelt precisely because that leader so epitomized a centuries-old conservative tradition of stewardship, a tradition which, in the judgment of James MacGregor Burns, put FDR "far closer to the conservative tradition than any other?"

But, Burns pointed out, "true conservatism — that of Burke, and of John Adams and some of the other Federalists" — has been pushed aside by the dogma of laissez-faire.

This is a modern phenomenon. From the medieval period down to the time of the American Civil War, the essence of European, and later, American, conservative theory was the doctrine of noblesse oblige, or social stewardship.

As Roland Stromberg observes in "European Intellectual History Since 1789," the conservative tradition is at odds with our modern perceptions, being "an legacy of laissez-faire. Coloridge believed in government regulation of manufacturers, government aid to education, the duty of the state to enhance the moral and intellectual capabilities of its citizens in all sorts of positive ways. The Coloridge tradition passed to such writers as John Ruskin, who described himself as a 'violent' Tory of the old school," and violently denounced the materialistic and unprincipled society of industrial England. American conservative theorists, from Alexander Hamilton to the founders of the Republican Party in the 1850s, were similarly ardent supporters of activist government.

In contrast to such conservatism, the doctrine of minimal government tends to be a shrill and absolutist faith that began as recently as the 18th century, most prominently with the economic theories of Adam Smith. He proposed an economic system wherein the "invisible hand" of the market maintains an automatic order without intervention by government, much as the deists believed that the "clockwork universe" could run automatically according to Newtonian laws without interference by God.

This "liberalizing" doctrine was echoed by such thinkers as Thomas Jefferson in statements such as "The government that governs best, governs least."

Another contrast with old-style conservatism is the doctrine arising later from the writings of Darwin, whose "survival of the fittest" was popularized as the basis for a new application of laissez-faire in the form of Social Darwinism. This was essentially the "Darwinism" that Cuomo referred to: the doctrine of government abstention from interference in the jungle law of survival.

The jungle law, in the Victorian period, spawned the industrial world of seven-day work weeks, 12-hour work days and filthy factory conditions — which in turn triggered the counter-reaction of expositors and progressive reform in the early 20th century. Theodore Roosevelt, a searching reformer indeed, referred to laissez-faire as "a bit of outworn academic doctrine... applied with profit, if anywhere at all, only in a primitive community."

But it became suddenly discredited as a conservative doctrine, with the significance that only increased in the years after World War II among conservative academicians, journalists and political leaders, to the point where laissez-faire is now being touted as a pure conservative creed. The combined forces of the shrill insistence of neo-minimal government polemics put forward in the early Reagan era may well endure as a 20th-century high-water mark in the history of laissez-faire. But is this doctrine what Reagan supporters voted for? And will it win future elections for Republicans?

Giving minimal government doctrine the credit for conservative victories ignores the importance of the backlash against the culture of 1970s liberalism. Voters weren't supporting minimal government as much as they were rebelling against excessive "understanding" for Third World terrorists or lenient sentences for murderers.

That liberal culture has dwindled as a bogeyman, Republicans will find it less and less useful as a campaign device. They are also apt to find that a lot of their supporters — particularly blue-collar voters who once supported Democrats — are looking for more activist government.

There's no reason that conservatives can't give it to them and still be conservatives.

Does it really make sense any longer for conservatives to put their minds over-whelmingly on economic reform in the social fabric — surely a drive through one of the festering districts of a major city would suffice — with the bitterly laughable notion that the market will come to the rescue? What thinking conservative should balk at the Job Corps, a program designed to shore up the basis for enterprise by giving to business a trained and efficient work force all the while reducing social misery and social chaos?

A nucleus of daring conservatives, notably George Will, are beginning to challenge the primacy of laissez-faire, a touchstone of Tory identity. It is time to hasten this process along with a manifesto demanding a rebirth of conservative noblesse oblige.

There are too many conservatives and moderates with no place to go in American politics because of the shrill insistence of certain conservative leaders on an intellectually tyrannical code of belief. It would be presumptuous to try to predict what a full-fledged movement for noblesse oblige with economic reform could achieve in the years ahead.

But the current condition of conservative theory — its evasion of an alternate conservative heritage of activist government — is ripe for a political challenge.

Need to change marketing methods

I went to a meeting last Tuesday night at CSI called "Revitalizing Rural Idaho Communities." Several of the politicians testified to the deterioration nationwide, but mainly Idaho, not only of agriculture, but all of rural America.

The politicians were very kind, sympathetic and attentive to those giving testimony and allowed anyone to speak who wished to do so.

As I left the meeting I left somewhat let down as nothing specific was done or promised to alleviate the problem facing agriculture and rural America. A family low commodity prices; and then it hit me that there really isn't anything the politicians can do.

It also dawned on me that Congress will never give producers of farm products a return on our production that will allow us to pay our farm expenses, enjoy a decent living and retire farm debt. I think the $220 billion farm debt can attest to that.

As I drove home, I rereashed some of the testimony given, recalling one person stating that there were no markets out there, and I thought to myself that the markets really are there, we are just too apathetic to search them out.

I also remember in the past being told to produce, produce, produce with no thought being given to pricing our production that would reflect the high costs we pay to buy our production and return a profit that would have avoided exactly what's happening to agriculture and rural America today.

How foolish we are to expect our income to come from the U.S. Treasury instead of from the commodities we produce. The programs and the ways and means for farmers to profitably price their production have been in place for close to 20 years.

If we refuse to change from the old way of marketing (I call it the "what 'll you gimme?" market) and continue to look to Congress for our income, then rural America will continue its decline into oblivion. May the Lord have mercy on us, for the large grain cartel certainly will not. LEROY LANCASTER Kimberly

Watch out for strange lights in the sky

Can anyone explain what that strange light was in the sky Aug. 15? Whatever it was, it must've been responsible for several things that have happened since then.

It might've been a meteor, as it appeared during the time of the Perseid meteor showers; if so, it was a big one.

I saw it while I was driving north on Highway 75, south of Shoshone. Out of the corner of my eye, I spotted what I would describe as the light blue, and watched the stream of light blue, then disappeared. It lasted a second or two. The sky was still fairly light at 5 p.m., so the display had to be bright to be noticed. Meteors generally aren't visible until the sky is black, and then it usually takes sharp eyes to see their fleeting passages across the heavens.

I phoned the office as soon as I reached Shoshone to have a reporter check on it. The last time I saw something like that it turned out to be a Soviet satellite burning up as it entered the atmosphere over Upper Michigan. Surely, I thought, I wasn't the only one who'd seen the light in the sky. It was probably tracked on radar at Mountain Home Air Base.

My excited report was greeted with some skepticism at the office: "Is this a crank call?" was asked by a doubling news editor. After assuring him I hadn't been drinking or otherwise hallucinating, I was told a reporter would look into it.

Forty-five minutes later I hit a deer. Now, some 25 years of driving I've seen a lot of deer, but that night was the first — I knifed it squarely on the grill at 55 mph and skidded for an eternity. I'd never even seen a deer on that stretch of road before.

That night must've had something to do with it. It could've sparked an eccentric migratory urge in the deer. A fellow worker, for example, told me it would rain that Saturday night when I was on my way home.

A TV news reporter that night revealed that a Soviet spy satellite was in trouble and expected to go out of orbit and enter the atmosphere. That was it, I concluded.

I was surprised when there was nothing in the paper the next day, or the day after that. Monday I learned that no other sightings had been reported to sheriff's offices around the Magic Valley. Could I have been the only one? Was I hallucinating? It was too real, but the early Russian satellite eventually came down two days later, so it wasn't that.

Some people believe that certain heavenly occurrences affect events on Earth, perhaps even foretell events to come. A fellow worker, for example, told me it would rain that Saturday night because the moon was going to pass in front of Mars. Sure enough, the leaden clouds overhead unloaded just as I was pitching my tent at Fourth of July Lake in the White Cliffs. Since then, a series of strange events have been reported to me. Could they all have been somehow related to the mysterious light over the desert? For example:

• The Sun Valley and Ketchum city councils have let two weeks go by without attempting to annex the northern portion of Blaine County.

• No candidate for any political office in Southern Idaho accused an opponent of anything.

• My son, Brett, phoned home from vacationing at Expo '86 in Vancouver to say he missed us.

• There were no major range fires, plagues of insects or any other agricultural disasters anywhere in Magic Valley.

• No one accused me of being a liberal.

I saw a man wearing a straw cowboy hat and driving a dusty pickup truck actually signal for turn at least half a block before turning off 2nd Avenue East.

• I think I saw a late-model Volvo station wagon with a "Child On Board" sign in the back window run a red light and take a corner on two wheels on Blue Lakes Boulevard. Of course, I might've been hallucinating.

One of the worst things about something like this is the abuse one has to put up with from disbelievers — the bemused expressions and slow noddings of heads as I explained the sighting. "Let's humor him," I seem to be saying.

"That was a long, hard week. He'll get over it." It is the abuse one has to put up with from disbelievers — the bemused expressions and slow noddings of heads as I explained the sighting. "Let's humor him," I seem to be saying.

It may not have been the last time something bright and strange catches my eye up there, but it's certainly the last time I'll mention it to anyone in the newsroom. Mike Sullivan is city editor of The Times-News.

Solidarity marks its 6th anniversary

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Thousands of Solidarity supporters attended Roman Catholic Mass Sunday in low-key observances of the sixth anniversary of the creation of the Soviet-bloc's first independent trade federation.

In the Baltic port city of Gdansk, the birthplace of the now outlawed union, hundreds of people gathered with Solidarity founder Lech Walesa for a Mass at St. Brygida's Church.

Church officials and Walesa urged the crowd to avoid street demonstrations like those that have occurred on Solidarity's previous anniversaries.

Walesa, winner of the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize, laid flowers at a monument to workers outside the main gate of Gdansk's Lenin Shipyard. He acted privately, before the Mass, to avoid attracting a crowd.

An agreement signed by Walesa at the shipyard on Aug. 31, 1980, between striking workers and the government, allowed independent trade unions to be created. Sixteen months later, martial law was imposed and Solidarity was banned shortly after.

After the Mass, Walesa told reporters: "I wanted to avoid a demonstration, and that is why I went to the monument before we were peacefully gathered for our demonstrations."

In his sermon at St. Brygida's, the Rev. Henryk Jankowski called Aug. 31 "a special day for the entire nation" but twice urged worshippers not to demonstrate in the streets.

Communist authorities are expected to release more jailed Solidarity activists in coming weeks under a government amnesty.

"We are waiting for the rest of the people to be released," Tadeusz Mazowiecki, a senior adviser to Walesa, said after the Mass.

Police patrolled streets outside the church and shipyard to prevent disturbances.

In Warsaw, more than 10,000 people attended an outdoor Mass at St. Stanislaw-Kostka Church. Among them were banner-waving Solidarity delegations from across the country.

"Solidarity does not belong to the past... Solidarity is the hope of millions of Polish people," the Rev.

Teofil Bogucki said in a sermon repeatedly interrupted by applause. "Nobody should fear Solidarity, but they should restore its rights."

Hundreds of police, backed by water cannons and a helicopter circling overhead, were deployed near the church.

Police detained scores of people heading for a pro-Solidarity Mass at a church-in-Wroclaw, 400 Solidarity source there said. Most of those detained were later released.

In the Krakow suburb of Nowa Huta, riot police detained dozens of people in dispersing a march to the town hall by about 1,000 Solidarity supporters, said opposition sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Gadhafi: U.S. moves strengthen Libya

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Col. Moammar Gadhafi told Libyans in a broadcast on Sunday that U.S. military action has only fed the desert nation's revolutionary zeal. He spoke on the eve of celebrations of 17 years of his rule.

In the day, Gadhafi met Soviet Vice President Pyotr Demichev, who came to Tripoli to help Libya mark the anniversary of the Gadhafi-led coup. According to Libyan radio, Demichev toured Gadhafi's compound, which was damaged in the U.S. bombing raid on April 15.

"Our visit comes at a time when U.S. imperialism is trying to exert pressure and provocation on Libya's people by using all military, political and economic means," the official news agency JANA quoted Demichev as saying.

"The Libyan people will not be alone in this struggle. All socialist forces will stand side-by-side with Libya," he was quoted as saying.

Last week, U.S. forces completed joint maneuvers in the southern Mediterranean — with Egyptian forces. The exercises coincided with allegations by the U.S. administration of renewed evidence of Libyan support for terrorism.

In Italy Sunday, the U.S. aircraft carrier Forrestal arrived for a port call in Naples after patrols north of Libya. The carrier completed joint exercises with Egypt last week.

On Saturday, Libya's second-in-command — Maj Abdel Salem Jalloud, pledged to prosecute terrorists and demanded that the United States back up its allegations with evidence.

Gadhafi's 2½-hour speech was broadcast early morning on state-run television.

Savimba offers plan for peace

JAMBA, Angola (AP) — Guerrilla leader Jonas Savimbla outlined a peace offer to Angola's Marxist government Sunday, calling for negotiations on the withdrawal of all foreign troops and a national unity government leading to elections.

"War is not good business. Our people want to go home and plow, go to their villages and cows," Savimbla said in an interview at his "hatched-roof" headquarters after making the announcement of the peace offer.

He said the "platform for peace" was developed at a six-day congress of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola — UNITA. Some 2,000 delegates from all 16 provinces in the embattled southern African country attended the congress, according to Savimbla.

He said unofficial talks had taken place in London and Paris with representatives of President Eduardo dos Santos' government, but government authorities have denied any contacts with the rebels.

Both UNITA and dos Santos' Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) fought for independence from Portugal. They then fought a civil war in 1975, after the country gained independence and the MPLA won, with UNITA returning to guerrilla warfare.

Cuba has an estimated 30,000 soldiers in Angola helping light the war in 1975, and there are Soviet advisers working with the army.

Savimbla's peace plan called for: "An official and unequivocal deposition from MPLA that if it is willing to negotiate, and we will start negotiations immediately... to deal with the problems of total withdrawal of foreign troops from our country. This will lead to a cessation for withdrawal."

"Then we can declare a cease-fire between our forces and MPLA forces and all national forces will maintain the positions they have taken to a government of national unity that will lead to peace in our country and finally to elections, so each will know the popularity it has."

Letter threatens hostages

PARIS (AP) — A message purporting to come from the Islamic Jihad on Sunday renewed threats against the lives of two Americans held hostage in Lebanon and appeared to shift the demands for their release.

The authenticity of the message could not be verified, however, and U.S. State Department spokesman Pete Martinez said in Washington, D.C., that the Reagan administration "would have to comment concerning the hostages."

The two-page letter, which was dropped in the Associated Press mailbox here and was in passable but flawed French, differed in several respects from previous notes signed by the Islamic Jihad.

Unlike Sunday's message, most communications purportedly from the hostage-takers have come through Beirut, have been in Arabic and have begun with the Koranic phrase "In the name of Allah, the most merciful, the compassionate."

PG-13 Rating Introduced

A new rating category is in place as of July 1. This new category is inserted between the current PG and R ratings. It is designated as "PG-13." Parents are strongly cautioned to give special guidance for attendance of children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for young children.

The revised five-category system of the voluntary film industry rating program is now as follows:

G General Audiences, all ages admitted.

PG Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

PG-13 Parents are strongly cautioned to give special guidance for children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for young children.

R Restricted, under-17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

X No one under-17 admitted. All films rated after July 1 will be given ratings under the new five-category system.

What's what

In the Soviet Union, there's a street term for any young man who commits a violent crime while drunk. You'd recognize it if you heard it spoken in Russian. It's "hooligan."

Why has the sale of dental floss gone up 1600 percent in the last decade? That's what I asked. "Because," writes a client, "a lot of people have found out that no other thread so strongly holds on buttons."

No woman has ever murdered her husband while he was helping her do the dishes, the crime statistics suggest.

MONSTER

Q. Can we be absolutely certain there is no Loch Ness monster?
A. Believe so. Scientists in 1979 fitted out a pair of dolphins with underwater cameras and sent them down to search. They found no sign. If two dolphins can't find a monster in a lake, there's no monster. I'd stake your life on it.

Q. How come the musical scale of the western world only uses about 90 of the 11,000 musical tones the ear can distinguish?
A: It was based on the range of the human voice.

Q. Who's the nation's highest non-elective office-holder?
A: Depends on who's President. Sometimes the First Lady, sometimes the Chief Justice.

WOMEN

Were you aware that 38 percent of all the grown women in this country are over 50 years old? Client asks if most of these are married. Just barely most — 53 percent are. And 6 percent are divorced while 32 percent are widowed.

A change in only 1 percent of your genes could make quite a different critter of you, I gather. The genes of humans and chimpanzees are 99 percent identical.

A sports fisherman catches a salmon. So does a commercial fisherman. Both salmon contribute to the local economy. But the sport fish contributes 15 times more than the commercial.

Melon tracers say the honeydew originated in Russia. I read everything the melon tracers publish. There's not that much.

A government census taker, who interviews an escaped convict, is barred by regulation from turning in that felon.

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The day starts with your being able to envision some breadth of added scope to your present goals. You will be a far greater success for some time.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Use your finest talents so that you can get ahead much faster and be nearer gaining your goals.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Study your home and decide how to make it more charming. Get rid of whatever is obsolete.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Plan how to improve relationships with those you have been associated with for some time.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Study your property and know how best to improve it. Put your ideas in operation quickly.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Get in touch with intellectual persons soon and enjoy conversation. You can learn from them.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Go over your ideas intelligently and know how to proceed. Be with those you love tonight.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 23): Know what your aims are and how best to gain them. See your friends during the daytime. Be charming.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): You begin the week with fine ideas for making your activities more stable and life more interesting.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Some plans you made some time ago to take a trip should now be made a reality.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You have wanted your mate to do something for a long time. Change your tactics and get results.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Look to a reliable friend for assistance and later a more modern one will also be helpful.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Plan the activities you have in mind wisely and then put more energy into them so that you get results.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will comprehend how best to utilize standard modes of action and ideas to the present set-up, so give as fine an education as you can. Much success is possible upon reaching adulthood. Be sure to give encouragement and praise when needed.

Army not willing to let $1 lease at airport go

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Although it has purchased hammers that cost hundreds of dollars and other seats that cost thousands, the U.S. military knows a good deal when it finds one.

The U.S. Army says it has no intention of giving up 7 acres of Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport property, leased for 99 years for a single dollar, despite pleas from a U.S. congressman and the city.

The Regional Airport Board has had second thoughts about the lease, signed by a previous board in 1977 and good now for 30 more years, says airport Manager Harry Metrick.

Board members and City Council members agreed to the lease when airport economics were far more stable, he says. "Then they thought it would create more interest and activity at the airport," he says.

But since the city council signed the lease in 1977, jet traffic to the airport has stopped and Twin Falls County has cut its tax support to the airport.

In May, board member Gregory Kadlec

asked Rep. Richard Stallings for help in overturning the lease that board members called "obviously unfair, especially in these days and times of tough economy, both local and for our state."

If the contract was found to be entered into unreasonably, the city might be released from it, Kadlec told Stallings.

"Unfortunately, the city manager or City Council did not have the foresight to make a reasonable charge for the use of this prime property," Kadlec said. "As a result, the government was to have paid the city $1 for an indefinite lease. I am not certain whether the dollar was ever paid."

Stallings took the matter to the Army Congressional Liaison at the Pentagon, who turned it over to Roger E. Yankoupe, a district engineer for the Army in Seattle.

Yankoupe said that without a long-term, nominal lease, a Reserve Center would not have been built in Twin Falls.

"The city chose to lease the selected site for $1 for a 99-year term and the Reserve Center was subsequently constructed," he wrote in a letter to Stallings.

"We are sympathetic to the economic conditions in Twin Falls. However, they do not present a basis for renegotiation of this valid lease. The operation of the Reserve Center does provide some benefit to the area as the annual payroll, maintenance and utility costs are approximately $300,000."

The decision not to renegotiate the lease was also based on a 1942 decision by the comptroller general that valid leases must be enforced as written, Yankoupe said.

The Army has built an administration and a shop building on the airport land.

The lease is up in 2076.

2 accidents claim lives of 2 in Jerome

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

JEROME — Two traffic deaths in separate accidents in Jerome County, marred the Labor Day-Holiday weekend in Magic Valley by Sunday morning and state police said increased traffic today could create added hazards.

Idaho State Police in Twin Falls investigated the two accidents and identified the victims as Michael E. Nogler, 28, of Twin Falls, who died when his motorcycle crashed into the front of a motorhome, and Francisco Rodriguez, 38, of Caldwell. He died when the vehicle in which he was a passenger left Interstate 84 and rolled over just east of the Kimberly-Hansen exit at 3:16 a.m. Sunday.

ISP Cpl. Lamont Johnston said Nogler's motorcycle was southbound on U.S. Highway 93, about 1.5 miles north of the junction with I-84 on the road to Shoshone. Witnesses told officers the cycle was being operated at a high rate of speed and in an erratic manner just prior to the crash at about 11:30 p.m. Saturday.

It crossed the center line of the highway, Johnston said, and crashed head-on into the front of a motorhome being driven north by Arthur O. Kerner, 50, of Shoshone.

Johnston said the cycle crashed into the front of the motorhome on the passenger side, wiping out the front floorboards and side of the vehicle. Mrs. Kerner, who was riding in the passenger seat, suffered knee and leg injuries, but the driver was not seriously injured.

The cycle came to rest under the front end of the motorhome and caught fire. Officers were able to get the fire out almost immediately and free Nogler from under the vehicle. However, Johnston said, he apparently died instantly from the impact. Kerner told the investigating officers he saw the motorcycle moving into his lane of traffic as it approached. He pulled to the side of the highway as far as possible but could not avoid the collision.

Jerome County Coroner Gerald Ostler said Nogler died of extensive internal injuries and Rodriguez sustained massive head injuries. Both died at the accident scenes, Ostler said.

The Kerner's were taken by ambulance to St. Bonifort's Family Medical Center where they were treated for injuries and released.

ISP Dispatcher Dee Silver said the accident report indicated Rodriguez was a passenger in a 1977 pickup truck driven by Jesus R. Valenzuela, 30, also of Caldwell.

Another passenger, Miguel Rof, 32, of California, and Rodriguez were both thrown from the truck as it rolled after leaving the highway. Investigating officer Trooper Jay Jensen said the vehicle went off the pavement and into the median. The driver overcorrected, causing the vehicle to roll. Rof was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center where he remained in serious condition in the intensive care unit Sunday night.

Silver said officers were still investigating the accident circumstances Sunday, and no charges had been filed.

Damage in the earlier accident was estimated at $15,000 to the Shoshone couple's motorhome; the cycle was totaled.

When the accident occurred Twin Falls police were in pursuit of what was reported to be a stolen motorcycle. At first it was believed that machine was involved in the accident but the operator of the pursuit vehicle was found later in Jerome, police said.

'Moe,' a 1,170-pound Hereford steer, will be the latest in a long line of steers raised by the Williams family to be judged at the Twin Falls County Fair. Tara Williams stands beside her 4H project while her father, Rex, left, and grandfather, Bill, behind, looked on.

Fair entries a tradition in Williams family

By CATHERINE ARNOLD
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — When 8-year-old Tara Williams shows Moe, her Hereford steer, at the Twin Falls County Fair this week she will represent the third generation of her family to exhibit at the fair.

And it would be the fourth generation, if there had been a fair back in 1909 when her great-grandfather, W. T. "Bill" Williams, first lived in the Magic Valley.

W. T. Williams was 21 in 1909 when he filed on a homestead that is still part of the W. P. Williams ranch which now supports the families of his five grandsons.

"Remembering those early days, Williams said, "There wasn't much of a town here then. I remember a livery stable and not much else. I had to go to the U.S. Land Office in Halley to claim my land."

He isn't exactly sure when the fair first began, but he knows that his boys Billy and Tom proudly showed their special steers in the first years of the fair.

The Williams family gained a reputation for the quality of their Hereford cattle.

Even in the years that there have been no Williams children with 4H and FFA exhibits, their stock has been well represented at the fair. Carla Williams, Tara's mother said, "We have a lot of people that buy stock from us to show in the fair."

This is Tara's first year as an exhibitor. She has been preparing Moe since April. She has been responsible for feeding him and grooming him.

The hardest part was trimming him with electric clippers. Seventy-eight pound Tara has trained her 1,170 pound steer to walk on a team and stand like a gentleman for the judges. She has worked with him once a day all summer.

"When he acts bad, we get the show stick up to his nose and he stops," Tara said. "He's knocked me down twice and sometimes he has trouble holding still. I tell him to stop and he usually does."

Tara's sisters, Rachel, 6, and Michelle, 4, have helped by getting Moe accustomed to performing with a noisy and active audience, Tara commented.

"Rachel really wishes that she was taking one. Yesterday my dad let her help me wash him. (Moe) cause she was so excited."

The Williams family, including Tara's father, Rex, will spend most of their week at the fair.

It is a very special time of year for them as Carla explains. "For farmers and ranchers, you work so hard all summer long and the fair is a family project. We don't get to take vacations like most people do, say take two weeks and go to Disneyland. So it is a recreational thing. The whole family's down there, and you work together."

Neighbors here are two or three miles away. You might get together once or twice for a neighborhood picnic but mostly everyone is busy all summer. The fair is a time to get together with all your neighbors and everybody talks and gets the news.

"Tara knows that she is a lucky girl. She said, "I feel real good that I can take him because not a lot of people can do that."

New teachers get ready for their own, students' first day

By JANE HOBBSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When the bells ring Tuesday to start a new school year, Lila Atkins will greet first-graders with a big smile on her face and a secret wish in her heart.

"I just hope none of them starts crying," said Atkins, one of Perrine school last week to prepare for Elementary's new first-grade teachers, as a slight touch of fear crept into her voice. "I don't know what I'll do if they start crying."

The first day of school for first-graders is an awesome, radical occasion. But so is the first day of school for new teachers.

Twin Falls teachers returned to work last week to prepare for another year. At Perrine Elementary last Thursday, the staff busied about the building, hanging a new painting of the school's mascot, painting soccer lines on the field, praying that all the new books and materials arrive on time.

But for new teachers such as Atkins and her neighbor, Patsy Brunkow, preparations began earlier. For the last three weeks, they have been preparing for the big day and the first-year by decorating their rooms, fine-tuning lesson plans they've worked on all summer and reworking themselves to welcome a roomful of squiggly, squirmy, frightened children.

"It's a traumatic experience for kids to start school for the first time," said Brunkow, who also begins teaching for the first time on Tuesday. "You're their mother for the first week or so."

Brunkow is accustomed to mothering. The 38-year-old redhead has two teen-age children currently enrolled in Twin Falls High School. "As a parent, she understands the importance of nurturing, and as a former Mountain Bell employee undergoing a career change, she understands the importance of education."

Brunkow went right from Twin Falls High School 20 years ago to work part-time as a Mountain Bell employee. She worked her way into management with AT&T, but she also worked to complete her college degree through Idaho State University in 1983.

After Mountain Bell closed its Phone Center Store in Twin Falls last year, she decided the timing was right to finally pursue a career in teaching. As teachers across the county talk about leaving the profession for better paying jobs in business, Brunkow took a two-thirds cut in pay to switch to teaching. She finds that slightly ironic.

"I didn't have to have any education to become a manager at AT&T," she said. "Here, you have to have four years of college and a certificate, plus you have to continuously go back to school, yet you make less money."

"I definitely didn't get into this for the money," she said shaking her head. "I trained adults with Mountain Bell, and I just enjoy working with kids."

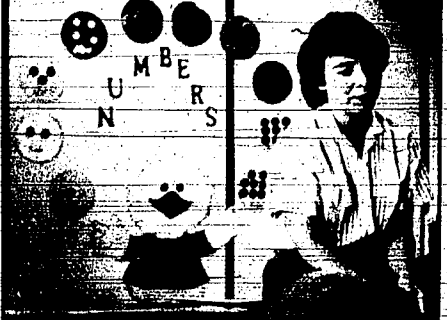

Because of her work in business, Brunkow said she will expect a lot from kids.

"Kids used to come from high school to order a phone, and they couldn't fill out the form," she said. "It didn't happen a lot, but it happened more than it should."

To help children get a good start in school, both Brunkow and Atkins said they will work hard to make a student's first year a happy and successful one.

Brunkow says first grade is important in determining whether children learn to like or dislike school.

Lila Atkins says children need to experience success.

Driver held, passenger hurt in crash

TWIN FALLS — One man was hospitalized and another in custody at the Twin Falls County Jail Sunday night after what officers said was a spectacular accident in a residential area of the city.

Gregory Dale Dutt, 21, of Twin Falls, was charged with failure to register annually, reckless driving, driving while suspended and driving while intoxicated.

His passenger, James Jeff Kent, 24, of Twin Falls, was hospitalized with lacerations and concussion.

Officers said Dutt's 1965 pickup truck went out of control at a high speed on Sherry Drive at 8:38 p.m. Sunday. The vehicle became airborne as it went through a dip at the Del-Mar Drive intersection, traveled 75 to 80 feet before landing and striking the curb on Sherry Circle. It then rolled over and came to rest at 2129 Sherry Circle. Officers said it took out a fence, shrubs and mailbox at the residence before colliding with a rock in the yard and coming to rest on its hood.

Alvin F. 'Al' Nelson
TWIN FALLS — Alvin F. "Al" Nelson, 78, retired, Twin Falls businessman and former city official, died at his home Saturday after a long illness.

He was born March 15, 1908, in Murray Township, Minn. He came to Idaho from North Dakota in 1927 and moved to Twin Falls in 1938 from Payette. He graduated from the South Dakota State University as a pharmacist.

He served on the Twin Falls City Council for several years and held the office of mayor from 1954 through 1955. He owned and operated the Sav-Mor Drug Store from 1945 to 1974 when he sold the store to his son, David Nelson, and continued to work as a pharmacist until retiring last year.

He married Mildred Knapp in 1937 and she died in 1942. He married Martha Knapp Dec. 6, 1948. He was a member of Our Savior Lutheran Church in Twin Falls and taught Sunday school there. He also served as president of the congregation at one time and as a member of the church council. He was a past chairman of the local American Red Cross board of directors and a charter member of the Twin Falls Church Housing League. He was a past member of the Twin Falls Lions Club and past president of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce, a member of Toastmasters, the Twin Falls Golf Association, W.P.O.E. Lodge No. 1183 and member of the Idaho Pharmaceutical Association.

Surviving are his wife of Twin Falls, three sons, Scott Nelson of Boise, David Nelson of Twin Falls and Andrew Nelson of Glenaille, Calif.; three daughters, Nancy White and Laurie Tanner, both of Twin Falls, and Mary Kay Hanson of Wendell; one brother, Warner Nelson of New Sharon, Iowa, and seven grandchildren. He was preceded in death by a daughter and two sisters.

The funeral will be conducted at 2 p.m. Wednesday in Our Savior Lutheran Church with the Rev. John Becker of-

Reeder's '32 Harley rides off with prize

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — In the 1930s Charles Reeder of Twin Falls rode his 1932 Harley-Davidson motorcycle to Missouri and Mexico, among other places.

Now he has a slightly newer machine, and while he isn't planning any more nationwide motorcycle ventures, he is taking him into new territory.

Sunday the shiny, newly restored 1932 Harley-Davidson 45 won him the trophy for best antique entry in the 10th annual Idaho Vintage Motorcycle Club's show in the Twin Falls City Park.

It's taken Reeder a while to complete the complicated restoration of the bike. He said Sunday he had it for 14 years before he found the time to begin rebuilding it.

With some freedom from his pioneer Twin Falls flying service, thanks to his two sons taking on the business operation, Reeder began restoring the machine four years ago. His son, David Reeder, said it was finished about 4 p.m. Saturday and in the park at 11 a.m. Sunday for his show debut.

Reeder said it was stolen from his backyard once during the nearly 20 years he had it. But it was found by police some time later during a drug show. There was a Greeves-cycle, not as old as the Harley, but one of only 24 ever imported to the United States, from England. Frank Batten, owner, says it is one of just two of those that have survived.

Oldest machine in the show was the all-original 1912 Excelsior owned by Dean Ricketts of Jerome. It was originally purchased by his uncle in Colorado and Ricketts waited years for his uncle to be willing to part with the cycle.

Libert said about 35 machines, representing an unusual variety of old motorcycles, were displayed in the park.

In addition to the trophy for the unique class, an award went to Cayne Higley of Shoshone for a Velocette, believed to be of 1951 vintage although no one is sure of its year of manufacture. Higley won the trophy for the most unique entry. It is one of very few of that style and vintage ever to be imported from England, Libert said.

Other trophy winners were Wally Wright of Twin Falls with a 1966 Suzuki that won the classic "divisitor" and Jack Chapman of Twin Falls, whose 1950 Sunbeam was awarded the best in the post World War II class.

The Idaho cycle club members participated in a tour Saturday afternoon and a banquet at George R's restaurant Saturday night.

Dangling from the ceiling in Atkins' room are paperclips attached with strings, which in a few days will hold the artwork of her new students.

On the walls are a menagerie of smiling, friendly animals with letters and numbers and colors all around. She made all of them herself.

The first day of school involves learning, but learning the practical aspects of life, such as where the bathroom is, how to go through a business, the playground is and what the rules are in school, said Atkins.

The classes are Basic Medical Terminology, which meets from 7 to 10 p.m. Mondays through Dec. 15; Business Typing Applications, meeting from 7 to 10 p.m. Wednesdays through the semester; and Brush-Up Grammar and Letter Writing, which meets from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesdays to Oct. 1.

For more information call 735-8534, ext. 384, or preregister in the Taylor Administration Building.

"In the morning you find out someone else's remarks." Whether they're going to walk home or take the bus, and show them around," Atkins said. On Wednesday, they will get down to the probably take off," Atkins said.

On the first day they both plan projects so the students will have something to take home and mom and dad. But mostly, it will show the student he or she can succeed in kindergarten and will have teacher's comments. Atkins said she does not want to know how they did in kindergarten, at least for a while.

"I think it's very important that everybody be equal when they walk through the door," she said. "You don't want to pre-judge them from make it special for them."

Meyerhoeffer grabs Magic Valley golf lead

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — So far nothing spectacular has happened to keep Steve Meyerhoeffer of Twin Falls the leader in the Magic Valley Amateur Golf Tournament.

For instance, he had two birdies and two bogles for a rather routine par 5 Sunday.

If the spectacular is going to show up in the event, Meyerhoeffer is hoping it will be on his side. But he's more than willing to settle for an unimpaired closing round that would give him the victory before he leaves for school at Boise State Tuesday.

Meyerhoeffer will have a stroke to spare over Perry Hanchey, Twin Falls, going into the final round today at Twin Falls. Hanchey and Ogden are tied at 141 with Carig, Falso and Ketchum and Jim Packard, Twin Falls, at 142.

Meyerhoeffer is hoping to get a "either," he said of the round.

Meanwhile, Hanchey threatened to make a splash when he opened the day with four straight threes to go three under. But then his putter turned on him.

"On the first nine I couldn't miss a putt. On the second nine I couldn't buy one," Hanchey grumbled although he did birdie the last hole to pull to within a stroke.

Hulzing had the best round of the tournament thus far — a 65 — and confirmed that good rounds always hold out of chance for more.

"Realistically, it could have been two or three and maybe even four strokes better if the little putts had fallen. But they didn't," he said.

The championship fight will begin leaving the tee about 1:40 p.m. today. The public is invited to spectate.

Scribners have chance to dominate Idaho tennis singles

By Scott Tudehope
Times-News writer

ELKHORN — Mark Scribner will take on Mark Fought of Utah for the singles championship of the Idaho Open Tennis tournament this morning at Warm Springs Club.

His wife will meet Boise high school student Tracy Binder at 9 a.m. to determine who'll be the new women's champ.

Scribner dealt Seattle's Brian Monson a 6-4, 6-3 semi-final lesson before a crowd of about 40.

"Dropping his characteristic red, white and blue warm-up top, Scribner finished the first set on straight points, including two aces."

Monson looked as if he would reciprocate, when in the top of the second set he aces the Sun Valley player. But nine points later he was broken, which was to prove something of a pattern, with neither holding until Scribner's service in the fourth game.

Monson held the next game, the longest of the match at 12 points, but Scribner's lightning signature serve proved to be too much, winning 6-3.

In the other men's semi, Fought, a Salt Lake City pro and former BYU top seed, had little trouble with Ogden's John Bennett, winning 6-2, 6-4, thanks in large part to his consistent topspin.

Suele Fought, playing Cindy Hill in her semi, had two baseline players testing themselves on Warm Springs court number one.

Fought raced to a 4-0 start in the first set, taking it 6-1 on the Sun Valley job on that occasion when Hill charged the net.

As the match progressed, Hill's heavy topspin-groundstroking improved, which turned the game into a topspin versus the understroke volley. Fought's English pad off, and she took the set and match at 6-2.

Barah High senior Tracy Binder, runner up in this year's Idaho high school Class A singles finals, faced a familiar opponent in her semi-final victory.

Lion teammate Sarah Shin advanced to the final four, but succumbed to Binder's move-around power game.

Essentially a baseline player, Binder went up 3-0 in the first, breaking Shin in the fifth game on a series of unforced errors. In the seventh and deciding game of the set, Schultsmeier went up forty love, but Binder went up four straight points to win the set 6-1.

In the second set, Shin started advancing to the net off her credible consistent backhand, but the hay trouble finding the inside of the baseline.

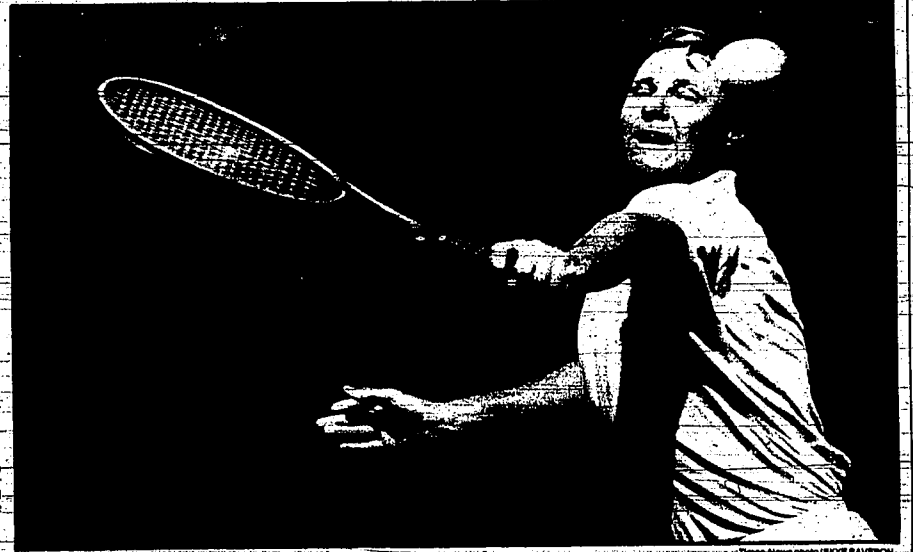

Binder was broken in the seventh game of the second set, and Shin had a chance to even it up at four all, but with some of the longest volleys in the match, she folded at break point.

At double match point and serving, Binder put it away with a service winner.

"I haven't really had a chance to see her play," Binder said just after the win. "I do know that I play well against people who have good pace on the ball."

Mary Ann Robbins is Twin Falls' last hope to take home a first place as she and her partner, Bobbi Kirshenmann, ranked first in women's open doubles, made it to the final four.

Defending men's doubles champ Scribner and his partner Chris Langdon, also are in the men's doubles finals. Langdon, however, broke an index finger in his semi-finals doubles match. Doubles play begins at noon.

Connors tops list of upset victims in U.S. tennis Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Jimmy Connors certainly wasn't impressed by Tom Nystrom.

"He didn't do anything today," Connors said Sunday after the sixth-ranked Nystrom eliminated the U.S. Open's five-time champion 6-2, 6-4, 7-5. "All he did was keep a few balls in play."

"I think even at the end he was doing his best to give it to me. But I was doing my best to take it."

And the sixth-seeded Connors didn't take it ending his streak of semi-final appearances in America's premier tennis event at 12.

"Several years ago, guys in my position never would feel they could beat Connors," Wilkerson said. "But the way he's getting older and the guys realize he's beatable, that we have a chance."

Connors followed another seed to the sidelines in the third round earlier Sunday, when Donnelly, 21, upset the world, upset 13th-seeded Anders Jarryd of Sweden 6-3, 5-7, 6-1, 6-3.

But Wimbledon champion Boris

Becker of West Germany, the No. 3 seed, was also victimized, as were No. 2 Mats Wilander of Sweden, No. 7 Joakim Nystrom of Sweden and No. 16 Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia.

Wilder — in a near-upset match — defeated Spain's Chris van Rensburg 5-7, 6-3, 6-4, 6-4.

Witsken will next face Milan Sreber, who advanced with a 3-6, 6-1, 6-4, 6-2 victory over Peru's Jaime Yzaga. Donnelly's surprising victory over the upset bid of Becker, who defeated Spain's Sergio Casal 7-5, 6-4, 6-2.

Mecir crushed Eddie Edwards of South Africa 6-9, 6-2.

Nystrom, who has been behind to stop the upset bid of West Germany's Eric Jelen 5-7, 4-6, 6-3, 6-0, 6-2.

In women's play, Lloyd brushed back Mary Joe Fernandez 6-4, 6-2; Mandlikova defeated South Africa's Lisa Bender 6-2, 6-0; Malavea downed Camille Benjamin 7-6, 6-3; Garrison ousted Melissa Gurney 6-3, 6-2; and Lindqvist defeated the mark's Tine Scheuer-Larsen 3-6, 6-2, in the first game.

Bul Jarryd, playing in his first appearance since Wimbledon, evened the match with a service-break in the fourth game, then took the lead when he broke Donnelly's service in the 12th game at 4-0.

"I thought I was getting pretty tired," Donnelly said of his condition following the second set. "I was hoping it wasn't going to give five sets."

"I was kind of surprised he didn't work harder for the third set. He kind of gave it to me pretty easy. It wasn't a long set; it probably was a 25-minute set or something, and I got my second wind."

Following a second-round loss at Wimbledon, Jarryd underwent arthroscopic surgery on his left knee, then took an early lead in the second set, breaking his Swedish opponent where they lost to Nystrom and Mats Wilander. He was runner-up with Australia's Paul McNamee in the doubles at Fort Myers, Fla., and reached the semi-finals at Auckland, New Zealand, with Kelly Evernden of New Zealand.

The right-hander from Scottsdale, Ariz., says his success in doubles has somewhat hurt him in the singles.

"I couldn't get to the qualifying in because I would be in the quarters of the doubles," he said. "It was a big hindrance."

But, you know, the doubles has certainly helped me—I believe in myself."

Donnelly's victory guarantees seven Americans in the fourth round, the same as in 1984. Last year, only five Americans reached the fourth round, while in 1979, the second-year of the U.S. Open was staged at the National Tennis Center, there were 11 Americans still left in the men's singles after three rounds of play.

Becker lost his service at love in the sixth game of the opening set and fall behind his Spanish opponent. It was the only time he appeared to be in trouble as he immediately broke back.

By the time Casal could pull off another service break, Becker had a 5-0 lead in the third set.

"I woke up when he broke me and I started hitting hard and playing good," Becker said.

Lloyd-Fernandez match paired one of the oldest players in the tournament against one of the youngest. Fernandez was two weeks old when Lloyd first played the U.S. Open—in 1971, reaching the semi-finals.

Since then, Lloyd has never failed to reach at least the semi-finals of the U.S. Open, winning the title six times.

The two battled evenly through the first six games, each posting a service break. But after that, it was all Lloyd as the veteran right-hander raced out to a 4-0 lead in the second set as he easily qualified for the fourth round.

Hulbert felt victory coming

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Mike Hulbert said he had a feeling that it might be his time to win on the Professional Golfers' Association Tour.

"I was out with a 9-iron and a wedge for eagles earlier in the week, you begin to think this will be my week," Hulbert said Sunday after sinking a one-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole to win the Federal Express St. Jude Classic by one stroke.

Hulbert, one of four golfers led by the lead-entering Sunday's play—shot a 3-under par 69 Sunday for a 72-hole total of 229 over the 7,282-yard Colonial Country Club course.

He had an eagle during Thursday's first round and sunk a 125-yard wedge to eagle the par-4, 403-yard No. 9 on Saturday.

Hulbert set up his winning putt with a 125-yard wedge shot from the short rough on the right.

"I've been pretty confident of my short iron game this week," he said.

Until Hulbert's approach shot, it appeared that he and his boyhood friend, Joey Sindelar, would be headed for a sudden-death playoff in the $60,000 tournament.

"It was nice and short," Hulbert, who had four birdies and two bogeys Sunday, said of the putt that brought him the $405,912 first prize.

"It felt like I was on top of the world and he was happy as a lark," he said. "I still can't believe it."

Sindelar, who started the final round two strokes behind the leaders, had a 68 and led the tournament at seven under until Hulbert birdied the 16th hole to tie for the lead.

On the par-5 16th, as Sindelar walked near the green for what appeared to be a playoff, Hulbert hit his second shot into the rough on the right side of the fairway, about 125 yards from the pin.

His third shot hit the green and rolled to about 12 inches.

"When it's your turn to win, I guess it's your turn to win," Hulbert said after winning his first PGA Tour event.

The 29-year-old Orlando, Fla., golfer grew up with Sindelar in Horseheads, N.Y., and they have been playing golf together since the age of 10.

The two roomed together this week during the tournament.

Cram stuns Coe in 1500 finals

STUTTGART, West Germany (AP) — Steve Cram of Britain beat arch-rival Sebastian Coe in capturing the gold medal in the 1,500 meters on the final day of the European Track and Field Championships Sunday.

With some 300 meters to go, Cram sprinted to the front and went on to avenge his defeat by Coe in the 800 meters. Cram was timed in a slow 3 minutes, 41.09 seconds.

Coe, the two-time Olympic 1,500 champion, tried to catch Cram but lacked the speed to overtake his countryman and wound up second in 3:41.67.

Han Kulker of The Netherlands was third in 3:42.11.

"I was very determined to win today after the disappointment in the 800," Cram said.

"Maybe this proves that Seb is best in the 600 and that I am really a 1,500-meter runner, but I didn't want to go home without a win," he added.

Ravliya Agletdinova of the Soviet Union won the women's 1,500 in 4:01:19, edging countrywoman Te tyana Salomenclo, the runner-up in 4:02.36.

Doima Melinte of Romania, who holds the fastest time this year over the distance of 3:56.7, placed third in 4:02.44.

Britain's Zola Budd finished far back in ninth place in 4:05.32.

The world record holder Igor Paklin of the Soviet Union won the men's high jump, clearing 7 feet, 8 inches, in 4:05.32.

Paklin, whose world record is 7-10 3/4, failed in three attempts to clear 7-9 1/2. His victory was the 10th gold medal for the Soviet Union.

Another Soviet, Sergel Malchenko, won the silver medal, clearing 7.7. Carlo Thraenhart of West Germany also jumped 7.7, but wound up third on more misses.

East Germany won the women's 400-meter relay in 4:18.4, the best time in the world this year. However, the team of Silke Gladisch, Sabine Günther-Rieger, Ingrid Auerswald and Marlies Göhr was short of its world record of 4:13.7.

Would-be fathers wear boxer shorts

DEAR ABBY: I just read an article in the Los Angeles Times stating that men who wear tight underwear greatly decrease their chances for fathering children. It rang a bell with me—I'm sure you wrote a whole column about this about five years ago. Please run it again. It was great.

H.S. IN L.A.

DEAR H.S.: I did. And here it is. DEAR ABBY: I read with interest the letter from "Childless Couple," who were considering artificial insemination. This may help:

For four years my wife and I tried without success to have a child. We were both tested. She was fine, but the doctor said that because my sperm count was so low, my chances for fathering a child were slim. That's when we considered artificial insemination.

I saw a fertility specialist. He asked me what kind of shorts I wore. I told him I had worn jockey shorts for boxer shorts. He loosed a fitting kind, instead of the snugly fitting jockey type.

When he explained why, I thought he was crazy, but I took his suggestion, and four months later my wife conceived! Our baby is due in March. I'm signing my real name, but

please don't use it. Just sign me... PUTTING FATHER

DEAR FUTURE: When I read your letter, I laughed and threw it into my wastebasket. But I quit laughing (and quickly retrieved your letter) after reading several more bearing the same incredible message.

Read on for a short story that may help some for whom pregnancy is inconceivable.

DEAR ABBY: I just hung up on a long-distance call that I must share with you. When I answered my phone, the fellow on the other end said, "Dick, I'm calling to thank you. My wife is pregnant!"

I realized instantly what he meant. Early in February, while I was interviewing him for a story, I had asked routinely if he had any children.

"No," he replied, "but my wife and I have been trying for a long time." So I quipped, "You have got to quit wearing jockey shorts."

That broke him up, of course, and after admitting that he did wear jockey shorts, he asked what his shorts had to do with it.

I said he had obviously missed the Dear Abby column in The Cleveland Plain Dealer in which you stated that jockey shorts reduced a man's sperm count.

I promised to send him a clip of your column, and he said that while it sounded a bit crazy, he and his wife were desperate enough to try almost anything.

In his call today, he said that when his wife learned she was pregnant, they counted back and found that she conceived a month after he switched to boxer shorts! He also said if they have a baby girl, they may name her "Abby."

DICK ELLERS, REPORTER

DEAR ABBY: I recently read an article in a medical journal stating that if men continue to wear jockey shorts and tight jeans, the need for artificial insemination will increase drastically!

The male anatomy was created so that the testicles draw close to the body in cold weather and drop in hot weather. It is a natural thermostat at work. Interference with this causes a serious drop in sperm.

The article indicated that American men have increasingly lower sperm counts, and the problem is compounded by the wearing of tight clothing. For population control throughout the world, wouldn't it be a great idea to export tight jeans?

B. MCG. IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR ABBY: May I comment on your men's underwear debate? We, in our brief type Fruit-of-the-Looms remain fruitless, while our brothers in their boxer shorts remain "their conditioned."

ROBERT W. IN WALTERBORO

DEAR ABBY: The fact that tight jeans may cause male sterility is nothing new. I wrote this little jingle back in 1970:

If your jeans are too tight in the crotch
Your parental potential is bad.
Better let out your seams just a notch
If you hope to be somebody's dad!

Americans getting more and more fat

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS A Monthly Magazine

Americans are fat and getting fatter. According to the Better Homes and Gardens Eating Healthy One Day at a Time, national Health and Nutrition Survey (HANES) indicates that 50 more American male weights four pounds more than his counterpart 25 years before, and the average woman a pound more. The survey also carried 250 more than 100 million Americans are obese. The average woman is 125. Depending on which standard is used, one-fourth and one-third of Americans weigh too much.

In the 20th century, obesity likes to be fat, but it may be able to be a matter of one's own choice. Obesity is a matter of one's own choice. Obesity is a matter of one's own choice. Obesity is a matter of one's own choice.

major American health problem — some physicians would say the "American health problem."

Obesity is closely linked to the most serious chronic diseases of contemporary society — heart disease, hypertension, diabetes, stroke and perhaps some forms of cancer as well. Obese people have more osteoarthritis because of the overload of weight on their joints. They have more accidents and injuries because they are less agile about getting out of the way. They have more respiratory problems and more digestive difficulties. They also have more trouble sleeping and they snore more.

How do we define obesity? It's not simply a matter of being overweight as defined according to the height-weight chart. Anyone who has ever watched a professional football team know that a punter being cut carries a prodigious number of pounds and, yet, is scarcely labeled obese.

THE ACES

BOBBY WOLFF

"Great blunders are often made like large rocks of a multitude of moves."
Victor Hugo.

Toddy's hand got off a blunder alert! Study how the play went to see if you can spot at what point South could have saved his game.

South ruffed the second diamond and played his trumping top card. West ducked and South continued with another trump. This time, West took his ace and led a third round of trumps, leaving only one trump in dummy. South should have ruffed off a club loser, the defender.

Look for tricks and the game fell one short. Where did South go wrong?

It was reasonable for South to play the first round of trumps, but he should have ruffed off a second round. After the first trump is ruffed, South should cash his high clubs and ruff a club in dummy. He enters his hand via the spade king and ruffs his club, and then he leads a trump. West takes this, of course, but he now has no effective options.

West pounces South with another diamond, but South ruffs comfortably. After the last trump and South leads 10 tricks.

Drawing trumps is generally a matter of high priority, but don't over-draw more rounds of trump than you can afford.

At home with radon: Gas risk is widespread

By TRUDY S. TARIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Prospective home buyers may be adding another item to their list of considerations, such as number of bedrooms, type of heating, taxes and the neighborhood. They might want to know a house's radon level.

Two weeks ago, the Environmental Protection Agency released the results of a nationwide survey that found one out of eight American homes may be contaminated with radon, a radioactive gas that can cause cancer.

Radon — colorless, odorless and tasteless — is produced by the radioactive decay of radium, which in turn is a radioactive by-product of uranium breakdown.

The EPA reports that 12 percent of U.S. homes have radon levels exceeding its contamination guideline of 4 picocuries per liter of air (pCi/l), an equivalent in health risk to smoking a half pack of cigarettes daily.

Radon exposure is second only to tobacco use as the most common cause of lung cancer. Outdoors, radon leaking from soil and rocks dissipates in the atmosphere. But indoors, its concentration builds as the gas seeps from the soil through a building's foundation, or leaks through cracks in floors, sewer pipes, sump pits, floor drains and hollow-block basements walls.

where they continue to irradiate the lungs — over a lifetime. Radon concentrations typically have a 20-year latency period.

Robert Funderburg, manager of the Idaho Division of Environment's Radiation Control Section, said state health and environmental officials have been studying radon since mid-1982, when the Bonneville Power Administration located several homes in Idaho with elevated levels.

Idaho's district health departments more than 400 homes, 71 percent of which were found below the 4 pCi/l guideline. Fifteen percent were between 4.8 pCi/l and 14 percent were above 8 pCi/l.

Blaine, Kootenai, Ada and Elmore counties were identified as having potentially elevated concentrations, warranting further study. The Blaine County average was 8.8 pCi/l.

"Residents have called in wanting to have their homes tested for radon. For $12, we supply them with a charcoal canister which the University of Pittsburgh analyzes," he said. "We've done limited studies in Twin Falls, maybe 15 homes, and two or three have had elevated readings."

Funderburg said the Idaho Cancer Coordinating Committee gave the Department of Health and Welfare a grant two weeks ago to fund a sample testing of regions III and V within the next two months, which he estimated would cost $5,000 to $6,000.

The survey will include all five counties — In-Region — V, Blaine, Bannock, Cassia, Jerome and Twin Falls, and will depend on voluntary testing.

"In mid-September, we'll go to the district (health department) to coordinate a press release asking for volunteers," Funderburg said. "We plan to do low levels as well as high levels to get a good statistical average."

Because the highest concentrations of radon are found in extremely localized veins, a house on one lot may have relatively high levels of radon, while its next-door neighbor may not.

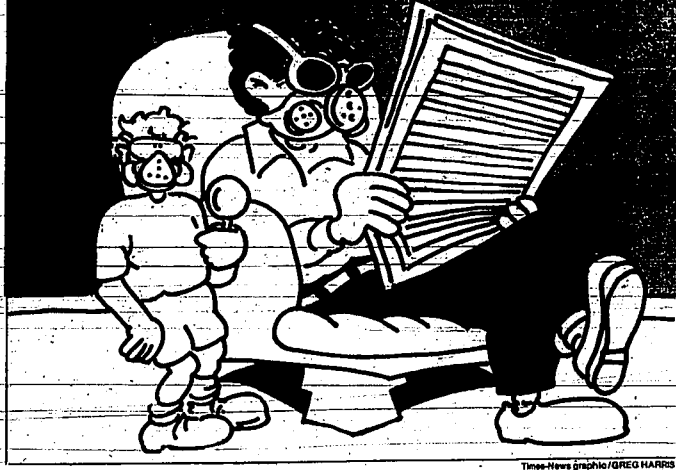

The state doesn't screen companies supplying radon readings. "No companies have been approved to come into your home," he warned. "The state's had some inquiries from companies who'd like to get into the business, but you have to beware of fly-by-nighters."

Types of monitors available, in addition to the canister, include an alpha track detector, a five-minute air sampler, a Radon Froggy Integrated Sampling Unit and continuous radon and radon-decay product monitors.

Once an elevated reading has been found, there are a number of steps homeowners can take to reduce the concentrations, such as forced ventilation, covering exposed earth and sealing cracks and spaces. Most radon-remedies require the services of a professional contractor who is skilled in radon-reduction procedures.

The EPA has just released two free booklets, one for the general public, "A Citizen's Guide to Radon: What It Is and What to Do About It," and another intended for homeowners who have decided to take action to reduce radon levels. "Radon Reduction Methods: A Homeowner's Guide."

To order them, write to Radiation Control Section, Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, Boise, ID 83720 or contact the local district health department.

Breast cancer outlook best in late 40s

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
The Associated Press

BOSTON — Women who get breast cancer in their late 40s have the best chance of surviving the disease, while the prospects are considerably dimmer for those in their 20s or the elderly, new research concludes.

Traditionally, doctors have assumed that breast cancer has a more favorable course in young women than in older patients. But the new evidence suggests that the pattern is more complicated than this.

Besides helping doctors assess patients' long-term outlooks, the research may provide clues to the complex effects of female sex hormones on the growth of breast tumors.

Two studies published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine reach similar conclusions: Women age 45 to 49 with a diagnosis of breast cancer have the best chance of survival.

One of the studies was a review of 57,068 women with breast cancer in Sweden. It included about 98 percent of all cases of the disease in that country between 1950 and 1978. The other was a study of the five-year survival of 1,599 breast cancer victims in the San Francisco area.

The Swedish study found that breast cancer survival declines markedly after age 49, and the oldest women, those over 75, have the worst. The annual death rate due to breast cancer over the course of the study was 10.2 percent for women who got the disease before menopause. But it exceeded 5 percent throughout the follow-up period in the oldest group.

The study, directed by Dr. Hans-Olov Adami of University Hospital in Uppsala, calculated the relative survival of cancer victims in various age groups. This is a comparison of the patient's survival with that of the average for women the same age.

For instance, the researchers found that in the 45-to-49 age group, the cancer patients' chances of surviving an additional five years were 78 percent that of the average woman. For those under 30, the relative survival at five years was 63 percent. For women between 55 and 59, it was 64 percent, while for those over 80, it was 58 percent.

At 15 years, it was 59 percent for those in their late 40s, compared with 51 percent for women under 30 and 31 percent for those over 80.

The California study, directed by Janet Moina, a team of Stanford University concludes that some of the confusion about links between age and survival result from a lack of consensus about what "young" means. Some studies have defined young women as anyone under 50, while others limit this category to those under 30.

The subject published over the past 20 years. They found that all but one of them showed that patients between 45 and 49 have the best prognosis. Their own research concluded this advantage could not be explained by how far the patients' health risks advanced when they were discovered.

Experts believe that the growth of breast tumors are often influenced by natural female hormones, such as estrogen. Their bodies' production of these hormones declines after menopause.

The Stanford researcher noted that those in their late 40s are likely to undergo menopause about the time their breast cancer is diagnosed.

They said young women could be at a disadvantage because hormonal secretions during pregnancy may spur the growth of their cancers.

However, the Swedish researchers said that because breast cancer victims do relatively poorly in old age, when perception of sex hormones are low, some other biological mechanism must be at work.

Doctors cautious about surgery for myopia

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An experimental new form of eye surgery is restoring normal vision to farsighted and extremely nearsighted people, but experts warn complications could make vision worse or even cause blindness.

"It's difficult to recommend a procedure that can be complicated by decreased sight and, in some cases, serious complications such as blindness, when there are satisfactory alternatives such as glasses or contact lenses," said Dr. Walter Stark, of the Johns Hopkins-Wilmer Eye Institute in Baltimore.

Since it was introduced in the United States in 1979, about 2,000 Americans have undergone the operation, called keratotomy.

The 30- to 40-minute operation is performed by about 15 doctors in the United States, said Dr. Lee Nordan, an ophthalmologist in La Jolla who performs the surgery. It costs about $3,500 per eye and is done on an outpatient basis under local anesthesia.

Nordan, who has performed about 1,000 of the 2,000 American keratotomy operations, called it "probably the single most difficult operation" performed on the eyes.

A superthin slice of the patient's cornea (the eye's outer lens) is removed, frozen, reshaped with a special-lathe, thawed and then reattached to the eye to become a "living" contact lens. The patient's eyelids are lightly sutured together for two days to prevent irritation by blinking. The operation is performed only on one eye at a time.

The surgery is said to pick up where radial keratotomy leaves off. That highly publicized and controversial operation involves cutting the cornea with a starburst-shaped series of microscopic incisions to flatten it and bring the nearsighted eye back to normal vision. It cannot correct farsightedness nor extreme nearsightedness.

While many eye surgeons now perform radial keratotomy, others are critical of it because of the same concerns as with keratomileusts surgery.

Reagan gets credit for reviving cuff links

By MITCHELL ZUCKOFF
The Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Every time President Reagan appears on television waving from the door of Air Force One, the glint of metal from his shirt cuff makes the jewelry industry giddy.

Once a staple of a man's wardrobe, cuff links had largely gone the way of wide ties and Nehru jackets, exiled by the fashion world to the role of anachronistic novelties.

But around Providence, and southeastern Massachusetts, where the costume jewelry industry is king, executives say the Reagan link has solved the case of the "missing link."

The word is that more and more men are wearing cuff links on a regular basis. "Absolutely. It's President Reagan's doing," said Irving Greene, senior vice president of Swank Inc. of Attleboro, Mass. "He has always worn cuff links. People associate this with elegance and leadership."

Swank produces about 80 percent of the nation's costume, or "non-gold," jewelry for men. Since 1979, about 10 percent of Swank's $25 million in jewelry sales last year was in cuff links, made under such names as Pierre-Cardin and Colours by Alexander Julian.

That was a five-fold increase in cuff-link sales by Swank since 1979, when sweater sweaters were still "rejoicing at President Carter's love of cardigans."

But the current numbers still don't match the late 1960s, when 60 percent of Swank's products made sure men's cuffs didn't flap.

Not everyone is convinced that a major fashion trend is brewing of that Reagan is the reason.

"I don't think it's that big and I don't think it has anything to do with our president, although he is a great one for bringing back things from the 1940s, be they political, conceptual or fashionable," said designer John Weitz.

"There is a small resurgence of cuff links which has tied itself into the yuppie movement," he added in a telephone interview.

There is one catch for jewelry makers — wearing cuff links requires a shirt with French cuffs.

"It's an area we think there may be some growth potential in, and we're going to try to maximize it," said department head Groebel, president of the Manhattan Shirt Co. "It's part of things becoming a little more elegant."

Groebel said French cuffs remain less than 5 percent of his company's business, with most sales beyond Christmas. But he plans to start pushing them earlier than usual.

The C.F. Hathaway Shirt Co. also is launching a big season for French-cuff shirts, which make up about 15 percent of the company's current sales, compared to about 5 percent only two years ago.

"In our fall line and especially in our holiday line, the entire thing is French cuffs," said Mary Alice Kelly, Hathaway merchandise manager for dress shirts. "It's really a fashion statement."

Quick takes

Casual contact with AIDS safe

Another study, this one of African patients with AIDS, suggests that casual household contact with AIDS sufferers does not increase risk of contracting the virus.

The study, published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, tested 204 household contacts of 46 patients with AIDS and 155 household contacts in a matched control group. Except for spouses, AIDS cases did not differ significantly between case and control households, the researchers said. In fact, the number of cases was identical to that predicted for each particular age and sex.

'Upfront' targets breast cancer

The stories are similar. They are about waking up to the horror of cancer, to the medical demands of it, and to learning to celebrate life despite it. A new magazine, "Upfront," discusses the issues and problems as they specifically relate to breast cancer.

Publisher Joan Perry and editor Joyce Norman, started "Upfront" to provide specialized help for those suffering from breast cancer.

"So many people think that when you talk about cancer, that you have to be morbid," said Perry. "Joyce Norman said, 'The magazine, which usually is about 16 pages, is available by subscription from Upfront, Inc., 4417 Little River Road, Birmingham, Al. 35213.'

Shortening label may mislead

Just because the label brags "made with 100 percent vegetable shortening," does not mean the food is necessarily low in saturated fat.

Some kinds of vegetable oil are more saturated than animal fat has been trained to dislodge. And so the claim, "made with 100 percent vegetable shortening," does not necessarily mean the oil is heart healthy. A "vegetable oil" claim may represent soybean, cottonseed, palm, palm kernel and/or coconut oil. In fact, palm oil is more saturated than lard. And coconut and palm kernel oils are even more saturated. The problem: These oils are rich in the fatty acids that are potent boosters of blood cholesterol.

Dietary studies at a Veterans Administration hospital have shown that the average blood cholesterol level is 17 percent higher on a diet rich in palm oil than on a diet containing equivalent amounts of a highly unsaturated safflower oil, according to Nutrition Action Healthletter, a publication of Center for Science in the Public Interest.

New method relieves sciatica

Early trials of a technique to relieve pain-causing nerve pressure in the back without surgery have been successful, doctors in Texas report.

The technique is used to treat a condition known as sciatica, in which pain shoots down the leg. Sciatica occurs when the jelly-like filling of a spinal disk leaks out, or herniates, and presses on the sciatic nerve. If other therapy fails, the disk can sometimes be surgically removed in a procedure called a laminectomy.

The new technique, called "percutaneous lumbar discectomy with aspiration probe," uses a hollow needle to remove part of the disk with suction.

Contraceptive implant effective

A long-term contraceptive implant was 100 percent effective in preventing pregnancy in a study of almost 400 women, but a significant number complained of problems with menstruation or headaches and dizziness.

The contraceptive capsules, which slowly release a synthetic hormone similar to progesterone into the bloodstream, are placed under the skin of the arm or shoulder.

The study of 389 women in Colombia, published in the journal Obstetrics and Gynecology, tested one brand of contraceptive implant, the Norplant, made by a Finnish firm.

Dealing with unruly kids doesn't mean you have to blow up

If you're like other parents, some days you feel like you're going to blow all your circuits just trying to deal with kids who:

- Leave their feet on a mess.
 - Refuse to do their chores.
 - Moan and groan when asked to do anything.
 - Bully and hit other children.
 - Fight or have tantrums.
 - Resist going to bed and getting up.
 - Argue or backtalk.
 - (And the list goes on and on.)
- Your mother never told you how hard it would be to get children to behave. Or how irrational they can be. Or how easy it would be to lose your cool and end up ranting and raving at children and not solving a thing.
- So what is a parent to do to get kids to be respectful, responsible and responsive? Read on for tips that can help.
- CHOOSE A MISBEHAVIOR YOU WANT CHANGED AND TALK TO YOUR CHILD PRIVATELY ABOUT IT. Be brief and speak in a pleasant tone of voice.
- Describe the behavior. Say, for example: "When I ask you to do something, you often argue and come back with things like, 'You don't ever ask David to do anything' or 'I'm always the one who has to do the dishes.'"

Jo Ann Larsen

Tell your child why you're upset by the misbehavior: "I get frustrated when you challenge my reasons for asking you things. I don't have time for that. And I don't like having problems with you. I want us to have good feelings toward each other."

Describe the behavior you want: "When I tell you to do something, I want you to say, 'Okay' and then do what you've been asked to do."

Stay on the subject. If necessary, gently but firmly repeat what you need several times. Get agreement from your child that he or she will try out the new behavior.

ENCOURAGE THE POSITIVE BEHAVIOR. Use rewards, like food, small gifts or tokens that can be exchanged to increase kids' desirable behavior. For example, carry M&M's in your pocket for a week and give your child one every time she says "yes" instead of argu-

Use rewards, like food, small gifts or tokens that can be 'cashed in' for something to increase kids' desirable behavior... carry M&M's...

ing. Also give a bonus for consistent performance. For instance, give your child a bonus point each day. She says, "Yes" five times without arguing. When she earns five bonus points, take her to lunch.

CHEER SIGNS OF PROGRESS. Good behavior that gets no attention may not be repeated so let your child know several times a day that you're pleased with improved performance. Occasionally give "super" praise by telling another adult in your child's presence how pleased you are with his or her progress.

ANALYZE YOUR PARENTING STYLE. While you're changing specific misbehaviors, you may want to modify some aspects of your parenting approach. Consider these possibilities:

- If you're constantly nagging and scolding your child, give up the negative responses and start creating happy times in your relationship. Touch, hug and play with your child there are problems, ease the strain with humor.
- Reduce punishment to the bare bones and find innovative ways of dealing with misbehavior that don't cause hurt, anger and resentment.
- Handle differences by negotiating.
- Use time-out to deal with persistent misbehavior.
- Refrain from personalizing your child's misbehavior by thinking "if he loved me, he'd do what I want" which probably leads to your getting hurt and angry.
- Instead, view children as generally just going about the business of being children - doing what they want when they want. And keep in mind that children have limited awareness of the impact of their behavior on you.
- Stay out of corners: When you find yourself at loggerheads with your child, "You'll do what I say, no matter what!"
- Leave the situation until you've regrouped and discuss calmly. Then come back and press your frustration that things have gone so badly, and suggest you both start over.

Apologize for your part in the misbehavior. Give your child a chance to do the same. Allow the child to save face.

Try this approach for two reasons. First, children are not rational beings from an adult's point of view and will often take in rational positions and tenaciously defend them when they feel cornered, no matter what strong-armed tactics a parent uses to dissuade them.

Actually, parents often tenaciously defend their positions, too, even when they can't win. So parents need to take responsibility for getting themselves and kids out of the corners they inadvertently get into.

Second, parents often cause their own problems with children because they approach them with threats, orders, lectures, criticism and other negative responses. Though a parent's responses in any altercation are often as negative as a child's, the parent often expects the child to do all the changing.

Next week: When should you get outside help?

Survey reports 6% of psychiatrists have sex with patients

BOSTON (AP) — Six percent of psychiatrists in the United States admitted having sex with their patients and many contend the affairs benefit those they treat, according to a new survey.

Sexual contact between psychotherapists and their patients is widely considered to be unethical. It is condemned by the American Psychiatric Association and forbidden by the Hippocratic oath.

But of those surveyed by doctors from Harvard-affiliated hospitals, 7 percent of male psychiatrists and 3 percent of female psychiatrists acknowledged having sex with their patients. A third of these doctors said they had done it with more than one patient.

There seems to be a group of offenders who are abusing a series of patients and are at potentially great risk to patients and are not being apprehended in any way, it's quite disturbing," said the study's director, Dr. Nannette Gartrell of Boston's Beth Israel Hospital.

The study, published in the September issue of the American Journal of Psychiatry, is the first nationwide survey conducted on sexual relations between psychiatrists and their patients.

The researchers sent questionnaires to 5,574 psychiatrists randomly selected from the files of the American Medical Association. They were promised their answers would be kept confidential.

One-quarter of them, or 1,442 doctors, returned the questionnaires. Included in these were 19 who didn't fill them out but wrote obscenities or other hostile comments on them.

"The big problem with the survey is that they are dealing with a very small return, so it's difficult to know how much reliability it has," said Dr. William L. Webb Jr., chairman of the psychiatric association's Ethics Committee. "I think we have to be careful in the conclusions we draw from this."

He added: "If the magnitude is as they report it, we clearly have a problem. But my impression is that the vast majority of psychiatrists practice in an ethical manner."

However, Gartrell said the findings probably underestimate the problem, since many offenders are probably reluctant to admit to sexual affairs. And she said the results were similar to smaller surveys of psychiatrists as well as nationwide surveys of psychologists.

She said the majority of the offenders, in answers not mutually exclusive, seemed to think the affairs were good for their patients. Of the 84 doctors who admitted sexual contact, 50 described the liaisons as carrying 29 as helpful and nine as therapeutic. By contrast, 11 said they were exploitive, eight harmful and five inappropriate.

"That's what's so sad about the whole thing," said Webb. "It's just pathetic that people who are professionally trained and who are supposed to know better can fool themselves."

Other studies have concluded that sexual contact with psychotherapists is bad for patients. They frequently suffer depression and distrust other therapists.

About two-thirds of the affairs began soon after patients stopped seeing their doctors for regular treatment sessions, but Gartrell said this is just as unethical as having sex during therapy.

"We believe that once a person is a patient, that person is always a patient," she said. "That person should always have the option of returning to a psychiatrist for further assistance if he or she runs into difficulty down the line."

The survey also found:

- 25 percent of the offenders said they were pleased to have had the sexual contact, 35 percent had mixed feelings and 40 percent regretted it. Forty-one percent sought consultation because of their sexual involvement with patients.
- 88 percent of the sexual contacts were between male psychiatrists and female patients.
- 16 percent of the offenders said they had used sex as a "therapeutic intervention" during treatment sessions.
- 32 percent said their most recent sexual encounter was initiated by the patient.

Minkman, Heavyhead extend fitness gadgetry

By JEAN FAINE
Los Angeles Times

In the affluent '80s, it seems that fitness fads and exercise equipment can be as extravagant as the most expensive. The $200 running shoes with velcro straps (instead of shoelaces) have become prestigious. Hanging upside down in a basket in the shower has added a new dimension to hipness.

Just when it seems that the fitness industry has pressed its eager consumers to the point where they can't stomach another expensive gadget, along comes another product that everyone desperately needs.

Though the exercise boom is firming muscles, it sometimes seems to be softening the minds of consumers.

Here I propose four fitness tools that I hope never make it to the marketplace.

In the beginning, status was a Walkman, a stereo headset radio especially designed to meet the needs of joggers and walkers. Then there was the cassette/radio combination with sleeker, lighter earphones.

My entry for the next in line is the Minkman. Minkman would be a portable, hand-held, first-aid kit. It would be a device to reduce chafing caused by wearing those uncomfortable, synthetic earphones. Minkman earphone covers would be available in dark- and light-colored for winter and summer wear, respectively.

Because Heavyheads made such a big hit and "heavyties" (tie weights) have always been popular, I suggest a tie could be marketed as the ultimate piece of fitness equipment. Unlike Heavyhands, Heavyhead—a helmet mounted with a light barbell—could be worn during any sport, including tennis and sailing. Besides increasing aerobic capacity and calorie-burning ability, exercising with Heavyhead would make it easier to keep your chin up through tough times by making you headstrong.

Peteraboles (no, I didn't make this one up) is a concept that is quickly gaining popularity. How to keep your pet fit aerobically is the subject of national magazine articles and a new book.

Once petaboles fully catches on, I suggest The Bow-Wow Mini-trampoline would be the fitness tool as vital to a pet's existence as the flea collar. The advertisement might sound like this: Does your pet seem listless and unhappy tied up in the backyard all day? Perk up your pet with The Bow-Wow Mini-trampoline.

PuJo can exercise all day by jumping on this small trampoline, especially designed for that special four-legged friend.

Glow-in-the-dark doggie jogging outfit; stereo Walkdog headsets and Minkdogs might be the next rage.

Though she has already created exercise books, videos and records, Jane Fonda must have at least one more fitness gold mine in mind. If she doesn't offer the Jane Fonda Earobic Workout, Fonda would remain in the exercise forefront by tackling the unspeakable fitness problem: ears. Her program would probably include tips on how to lighten up sagging earlobes and tone down elephant ears.

Imagine the matching aerobic fitness fashions.

Agency postpones regulations restricting tobacco advertising

WASHINGTON (AP) — Country music star Charlie Daniels, former Dallas Cowboys football star Wall Garrison and Chicago White Sox baseball idol Carlton Fisk joined the Marlboro Man in television ads Wednesday.

Their celebrity endorsements for snuff and chewing tobacco, along with all other broadcast advertising for such products, were ordered off the nation's airwaves as of midnight as threats to public health.

The action came as the Federal Trade Commission continued to work on final regulations putting restrictions on containers, promotions and print advertising, including new warning labels, that tout smokeless tobacco.

The FTC originally planned to issue its final regulations on Wednesday, but was forced to postpone the final rule because of heavy public comment on its first draft, released in July.

"I got a large number of comments on the last day of the comment period," said Dee Ellison, an FTC spokeswoman. "The staff is busily evaluating those comments now, and they'll be making a recommendation to the commission absolutely as soon as they can."

Among the comments were angry protests from both the House and Senate sponsors of the smokeless tobacco bill in Congress, who complained that the FTC's draft regulations, if not drastically changed, would undercut efforts by Congress to warn youngsters of the health risks of smokeless tobacco.

"Clearly, it is not the intent of Congress for the smokeless tobacco warning labels to be smaller, less noticeable and less readable than those currently on cigarettes," said Sens. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Richard Lugar, R-Ind., in their protest to the commission.

The senators complained that the FTC's draft regulations "violate the intent of Congress and of the letter of the law."

In a similar vein, Reps. Mike

Synar, D-Okla., and Henry Waxman, D-Calif., the House sponsors, said the proposed regulations "reflect a fundamental misunderstanding" of the smokeless tobacco law.

"It appears the draft regulations are primarily concerned with minimizing the impact of the new warnings on the continued sale and advertising of—of smokeless—tobacco products," the congressmen said.

The dispute over the FTC regulations does not affect the broadcast advertising section, however.

Television and radio advertising of smokeless tobacco products was ordered off the air six months after the bill's enactment, and President Reagan signed it into law on Feb. 27.

The bill was enacted by Congress because of mounting evidence that youngsters were turning to snuff and chewing tobacco as alternatives to cigarettes.

Studies of young people showed that many took up smokeless tobacco in the mistaken belief that the lack of advertising restrictions and warning labels meant snuff and chewing tobacco were not dangerous to health.

Besides banning broadcast advertising, the law requires print advertising pouches, tins and other promotional material to carry one of three rotating warning labels, citing an increased risk of mouth cancer, gum disease and tooth loss.

Free diabetes screening at fair

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Lions and Lionses clubs will offer 500 free diabetes tests at the Twin Falls County Fair Tuesday through Saturday at their fair booth.

The screening test will indicate the need for further testing by the individual's own physician. The test will be given on a first-come, first-served basis. For more information, call Mike Gibson, 733-1722, or Jim Jensen, 734-9178.

MVRMC slates diabetes classes

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Regional Medical Center will hold Community Diabetes Classes on four consecutive Monday nights — Sept. 8, 15, 22 and 29 — from 7 to 9 p.m. in the 5th Floor Conference Room.

The classes will cover such topics as causes, symptoms and control of diabetes, instruction on administering medications and dietary planning will also be given. Individuals requiring specific instruction on one topic may receive private instruction.

The cost of the classes is $40. One support person is allowed to attend free of charge. Pre-registration is required, and early registration is recommended. Call Educational Services at 737-2000 Monday-Friday between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. for more information and to pre-register.

Women's growth weekend set

SMILEY-CREEK — A weekend retreat on dynamic growth processes for women is scheduled Sept. 12-14 at the Nelson-Eagle's cabin at Smiley Creek in the Stanley Basin.

The theme of the workshop is "Releasing the Past — Hope and Healing for the Future." The workshop will provide women facing transition the opportunity to heal the child within by releasing the past and sharing with other women. The workshop will include: ritual, guided sensory imagery, movement, ceremony and play to create the journey.

Presenting the workshop will be Nelson-Eagle, a former Twin Falls resident who has a private practice in transpersonal psychology in the San Francisco Bay area. She worked with numerous women's groups in Twin Falls for 19 years and has presented the "Return to the Goddess" workshops.

Co-facilitators are Joan Dalton-Boyd and Judy McAllister, therapists at the Relationship Place in Twin Falls.

The workshop will begin at 6:30 p.m. Sept. 12 and conclude Sept. 14 in the early afternoon. Registration is limited to 20 women; cost is $120.

For more information, call Evelyn Mallee, 734-6753.

Bike tour goes to City of Rocks

TWIN FALLS — The City of Rocks Bicycle Tour will be held Sept. 13-14. The tour will leave from the Twin Falls YFCA at 7:30 a.m. Sept. 13, follow Highway 30 through Hansen, Murtaugh, south of Burley to Highway 77, south to Albion; then through Elba, Almo and on to Twin Sisters camping area at the City of Rocks for overnight camping. Reverse route will be completed Sept. 14. The roads are all paved except for a seven-mile stretch of hard-packed dirt between Almo and the campsite. One way is 80 miles; round trip is 160 miles. Snacks, water and meals will be provided, along with transportation for camping gear.

Registration with the Magic Valley Rim Runners is required by today. Cost is $20 per person. Cancellation is fully refunded until Sept. 5. If the tour is cancelled due to weather, cash or an equivalent amount of food will be refunded.

For more information, call David Webster at 543-4416, 9 to 9:30 p.m.

Arthritis Self-Help Course slated

JEROME — An Arthritis Self-Help Course will be given at St. Benedict's Women's Center. This is a 15-hour course which will be given one evening each week for six weeks starting on Sept. 16 at 7 p.m.

The course is designed for anyone who has arthritis. An interested family member may also attend. The course will explore the disease and how to cope with the problems it causes; how to receive the most benefit from arthritis medications; how to have an effective exercise program; and how to protect joints.

The cost is $25 for the participant and $10 for a friend or relative if one should wish to attend. The course is co-sponsored by the Idaho Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation and St. Benedict's Family Medical Center.

Pre-registration is required. For an application, call Carol Bell at The Jerome Orthopedic Center, 324-5882, or Dagmar Smith at 324-4901, ext. 232.

Keep the spine long and the chest lifted in this exercise to help lengthen the hip muscles

Poor hip flexibility stresses back, stiffens movements

By KATHY COREY and ROBERT REID
Los Angeles Times

Hip flexibility helps you achieve suppleness in the pelvis, leg and back muscles. This suppleness is necessary for maintaining balance in movement since all our weight-bearing muscles come together through the hips and pelvis. Rigid, tight muscles in this area can cause stress to the back and affect the fluidity of movements, especially in the lower torso.

This exercise stretches the leg muscles and increases the flexibility of the hips. It is an excellent warm-up exercise to help open the hips and lengthen the connecting muscles.

Sit on the floor with your legs extended comfortably to your sides in a V position from your hips. Care should be taken not to over-extend the legs and create tension into the connective tissue. Tighten your abdominal and buttocks muscles and lengthen your torso upward. Bend one knee as you roll your hip forward. Keep your upper body lifted allowing your body to turn with the hip roll. Roll your hip and leg back to the starting position stretching the muscles from the hip to the knee. Repeat the exercise four times increasing the hip opening with each repetition. Change sides and repeat. Work slowly with long controlled movements. Work up to four sets on each side.

Kathy Corey and Robert Reid are Southern California exercise consultants.

Case of hospital AIDS spread reported

BOSTON (AP) — Another case of a hospital worker being infected with AIDS has been reported by French doctors.

The infection occurred in a nurse who received a superficial needlestick injury in her finger when she reported a needle that had been used to withdraw fluid from a patient with AIDS symptoms.

The accident was described by Dr. Eric Oksenhender and colleagues from Saint-Louis Hospital in Paris in a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"This type of contamination emphasizes the need for strict precautions regarding the handling of needles and of any body fluids from patients infected with HIV," the doctors wrote.

HIV is one of the names used for the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the fatal, incurable disease that destroys the body's ability to fight infections.

Needlesticks are common in hospitals but experts believe that workers to blood and other body fluids from AIDS patients. They found that two of them went on to develop AIDS virus infections, but only one clearly got it from a hospital accident.

Last April, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control investigated 983 ac-
