Reagan's speech sternly criticizes Soviets

By MICHAEL POTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

UNITED NATIONS — President Reagan told the U.N. General Assembly on Monday "the ice of the negotiating stalemate could break" during the current round of Geneva arms talks with the Soviet Union.

Although Reagan said "the ball has been cast," U.S.-Soviet relations by the Nicholas Daniloff affair, he did not suggest the case would stand in the way of progress toward reducing both medium- and long-range nuclear weapons.

Referring to the FBI's arrest in August of a Soviet employee of the United Nations accused of spying for Moscow, Reagan said, "Misusing the United Nations for purposes of espionage does a grave disservice to this organization. The world expects better."

Reagan's speech used stern words to criticize the Soviets, not only for their treatment of Daniloff, the American journalist held captive in Moscow after the arrest of the Soviet physicist in New York, but also for their treatment of civilians in Soviet-occupied Afghanistan and their insistence on supporting Marxist-Leninist insurrections around the world.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze listened to Reagan's address, making notes without signaling any emotion, and sat quietly as representatives of other nations applauded as Reagan finished speaking.

An administration official, briefing reporters about the speech on condition he not be identified, said that after Reagan received a letter Friday from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, he asked that the speech be reviewed to "make sure the tone was not nasty."

But Reagan cited Daniloff's arrest by the Soviet KGB and his subsequent confinement to Moscow on espionage charges as "a particularly disturbing example of Soviet transgressions against human rights. The Soviet Union bears the responsibility for the consequences of its actions."

The president gave no clue as to what those consequences would be.

Soviets say speech creates 'negative attitude'

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

UNITED NATIONS — A Soviet official predicted that President Reagan's speech Monday to the U.N. general Assembly would create a "very negative attitude," but said the Soviets could free an American reporter soon if the administration took the right course.

Deputy Soviet Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovsky said U.S. News & World Report correspondent Nicholas S. Daniloff could be freed "very rapidly," but did not explain what the Soviets wanted the United States to do in order to liberate Daniloff.

Daniloff, 51, was arrested on Aug. 30 and has been charged with spying. He was released from a Soviet prison to the custody of the U.S. ambassador 13 days after his arrest. The same day Daniloff was released from jail, a Soviet-U.N. employee charged with espionage in New York was released to the custody of Soviet officials.

Petrovsky said a formal response to Reagan's U.N. speech would be given on Tuesday to the General Assembly by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze. But he made it clear Shevardnadze would be critical.

"I am disappointed at what I've heard today," he told reporters at the Soviet mission to the U.N.

Petrovsky said considering the "constructive" two-day meeting Shevardnadze held last week in Washington with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, "we were expecting a statement that reflected it."

Instead, the Soviet official said.

Evans supports water proposal

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Gov. John Evans said Monday he favors "a solution" backed by the forest industry on regulating water pollution from logging activities and other non-specific sources.

"The forest industry wants state water regulations to say that operators who follow 'best management practices' are in compliance."

"Best management practices" are supposed to prevent or reduce the amount of pollution from a non-specific source. An example of a best management practice is seeding or stabilizing exposed slopes.

"However, the Idaho Conservation League and the Wilderness Society say it is necessary to monitor streams to determine the impact of various man-made activities on water quality."

"BMPs are evaluative of logging practices, not of water quality," said Rick Johnson of the Idaho Conservation League.

"We don't want monitoring in the regulatory process because there is no way to do it (monitoring)," said Joe Hinson, executive director of the Intermountain Forest Industry Association.

Evans said monitoring will come.

Israeli troops mass along buffer zone

By MAX NASH
The Associated Press

NETULLA, Israel — Israeli troops by the hundreds massed along the border Monday, an official said they were ready to push into southern Lebanon to crush an offensive by Shiite Muslim guerrillas.

The Israeli preparations were aimed at bolstering the South Lebanon Army, a force of 7,000 Lebanese militiamen who patrol an Israeli-designated buffer zone in southern Lebanon stretching six to 10 miles north of the frontier.

The militia, Israeli-trained and Israeli-financed, has lost 16 men in recent weeks to attacks by pro-Iranian Shiites of the radical Hezbollah faction, which seeks to dislodge the remaining Israeli presence in Lebanon.

At the United Nations Monday, Israeli Ambassador Benjamin Netanyahu told the Security Council his country would not dismantle the buffer zone as demanded by the United Nations because abandonment would cause "the entire area along Israel's border (to) fill up" with Muslim and Palestinian extremists.

"A terrible violence would once again be unleashed," Netanyahu warned. "Israel will not lend its hand to this calamity. We will continue to do what is necessary to protect the lives and safety of our citizens."

Israel says the South Lebanon Army is needed to help thwart attacks on northern Israeli towns.

"An Israeli operation would be aimed at 'showing the Shiites on the fringes of the security belt that it doesn't pay to give shelter and support to Hezbollah,' the Israeli official told The Associated Press.

He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Hezbollah spiritual leader Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah told a mass rally in Beirut Sunday the guerrilla offensive was aimed to "destroy the theory behind the establishment of Israel's security zone."

Reporters in southern Lebanon said the Israeli army moved columns of tanks and armored personnel carriers up to the border and into the section of south Lebanon patrolled by the Irish battalion of the United Nations peacekeeping force.

Israel closed all the gates to the buffer zone Monday, halting access to the area both from Israel and from Lebanon itself.

Residents of this tiny border town said they had not seen so many troops along the border since Israel pulled the bulk of its forces from Lebanon in June 1985, leaving behind about 1,000 troops to back up the Lebanese militia.

Dag Leraand, a spokesman for the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), told reporters the Israelis had been bringing more equipment into south Lebanon since Thursday. He said U.N. headquarters had received reports

Families settle suit with Grace after alleging toxic waste deaths

By CAROL BAKER CALLAHAN
AP Staff Writer

BOSTON — Families who alleged that water from a toxic waste dump caused the deaths of their children have settled a lawsuit Monday, saying the pollution caused the children's deaths.

The settlement, which was expected to be announced last week, ended a lawsuit filed in federal court in Boston last year. The suit alleged that the pollution caused the deaths of three children in the town of Wrentham, Mass., in 1984.

The settlement was reached after a series of negotiations between the families and the state of Massachusetts. The settlement is expected to be announced in the next few days.

The families of the three children who died in Wrentham in 1984 are: Jay Skinner, 10; and two other children, whose names were not disclosed.

The settlement is expected to be announced in the next few days.

Security accord contains a principle that is vital to other arms discussions

By DAVID MASON
AP Chief European Correspondent

LONDON — The East-West security accord adopted in Stockholm is a significant breakthrough by itself, but it is more important because of its potential spillover effect on other more crucial arms negotiations.

The agreement, reached after more than 32 months of exchanges among 32 countries involved, establishes for the first time mandatory on-site inspection of troop movements in a broad swath of the Soviet Union, as well as in Western Central Europe. 18 years of Geneva negotiations for a global ban on chemical weapons, and the Geneva talks to cut back long- and medium-range nuclear missiles.

Western negotiators have often stressed that without on-site verification, arms accords could be subject to widespread cheating. Spy satellites provide some information, but not enough to satisfy the West.

The Stockholm pact does nothing to reduce opposing ground forces. But it requires signatory nations to give advance notice of military maneuvers involving 15,000 soldiers.

More or 300 tanks or more. If the Soviets involve 17,000 soldiers or more, two observers must be invited from other participants in the Stockholm conference.
These provisions reduce the risk of backing out of tough negotiations behind the cover of maneuvers — or any accident.
Most significantly, if one country suspects another of cheating, it can demand a surprise inspection of its airplanes or land vehicles.
The vision of Western military inspectors openly flying over the Soviet Union and Russians doing the same over Western Europe is a refreshing indication of a new era in East-West confidence building, the diplomats and arms experts stress.
Whether negotiating or signing, this principle is established it will set a precedent for other, more important negotiations," said a NATO country diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

One of these is the 10-nation Geneva conference working on a global ban on the production of chemical weapons and destruction of existing stockpiles. The conference has cleared a number of important hurdles, with one big exception: verification.
So far the Russians have balked at a U.S. proposal for on-site inspection. But under a British compromise, some similar and equally convincing procedure is to be established to avoid cheating.
Soviet experts meeting with British counterparts in London last week called the British proposal "positive" and suggested that an agreement in principle could come as early as the end of this year.
Tim Renton, British Foreign Office minister of state, said, "The veil of secrecy which has to be now cleared in military activity in part of our continent is slowly being lifted."

Referring to the verification measures of the Stockholm agreement, Renton said he hoped they would be relevant to the chemical weapons talks and be an "impetus for far-reaching steps in arms control and disarmament."
Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has said he would consider on-site inspection of nuclear weapons agreements, but he has not spelled out whether it would take the form of the Stockholm agreement.
Although much hard slogging lies ahead, the Stockholm agreement, as U.S. chief negotiator Robert L. Barry said, "shows East and West can say yes to each other for a change."

Speech

"I am not going to comment now, Everything's too delicate."
A senior U.S. official said Reagan had discussed "the importance of attaches to allied solidarity" in his talk to the NATO ministers and that he also told them that the Daniloff case was at the top of the agenda in U.S.-Soviet relations.
The official, who demanded anonymity, dismissed reports that a break in the case might be imminent. The official said, "I know of no new proposals. I am not aware of any new things around."
A Soviet official, reacting in a news conference to Reagan's speech, said he was disappointed, adding "what we heard is bound to create a very negative attitude."
Deputy Soviet Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovsky also said that Daniloff could be freed "very rapidly" and that the outcome was "in U.S. hands." But he did not explain what the Soviets wanted in exchange for the journalist's freedom.
On arms control, Reagan's tone was unusually conciliatory.
He said the Soviets, while unwilling to accept U.S. proposals for a 50-percent cut in intercontinental missiles, bombers and submarines, have "now embraced our idea of radical reductions in offensive systems."

The Soviets had rejected the initial U.S. demand because it would have forced abandonment of many of the heavy land-based missiles that are the core of their nuclear arsenal. Although their most recent offer of less drastic cuts wasn't acceptable, Reagan said, it appeared to be "a serious effort." Because of this, he said, the United States is "prepared to consider" more modest reductions as an interim step toward the eventual elimination of offensive nuclear weapons.
"So there has been movement," Reagan reported.

Evans called on the committee to work out a compromise after he reported House Bill 711 in the 1986 Legislature.
The bill, pushed by the forest industry, would have changed the definition of "serious injury" in state water quality standards.
Hixon said the definition needed changing to prevent a tighter short- and stop lawsuits from groups which said state water quality standards for serious injury were being violated.
The advisory committee, composed of representatives from various state agencies involved with water quality and forest issues, held hearings throughout "the state" including one in Twin Falls in July.
About 600 written comments were received and were "overwhelmingly in favor of protecting the high quality of water in Idaho," Evans said.

eventually, but the state needs 18 months to develop criteria. Disturbance of soils from logging and other human activities can result in water pollution by adding sediment to streams.
The forest industry has agreed to change BMPs where it can be shown they are not working. Evans said the state is monitoring BMPs. The governor conceded the state has not enough staff to see whether BMPs are being followed.
Evans said it is up to the forest industry to support increased funding in the Legislature for monitoring BMPs. Otherwise, it could lead to a situation which "will shut the forest products industry down."
If some compromise isn't worked out on this issue, Evans said, lawsuits could be filed. He didn't specify who would file them.

Another unanswered question is whether the U.S. Forest Service has enough personnel to monitor BMPs. The timber industry in Idaho is harvesting most of its timber on federal lands, according to state officials.
Asked about whether there would be sufficient federal personnel, Al Murrey, chief of the state Water Quality Bureau, said "The Forest Service is better staffed (than the state) to see BMPs are followed."
Murrey fashioned a compromise with Hinson after he objected to stream monitoring which was recommended by an advisory committee studying non-point pollution for months.

An Israeli official said the Iranian Revolutionary Guards have joined the Shiite offensive against the South Lebanese Army and UNIFIL. Five U.N. soldiers have been killed in the last six weeks.
Iranian negotiators have been training Lebanese Shiite militiamen since 1982. In recent months, the two sides have moved closer to Israel's border from their bases in the Syrian-occupied Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon.
The Revolutionary Guards are an Iranian paramilitary force charged with spreading the Islamic revolution that overthrew the shah in 1979. Guardsmen wear khaki uniforms but are separate from the Iranian army.

what we heard is bound to create a very negative attitude... both in tone and in substance."
Petrovsky, speaking through an interpreter, said Reagan's proposal for testing space-based defense systems was "a legitimization of the Star Wars program."

In his speech, Reagan said he was prepared to talk to the Soviets about the "ground rules" for shifting toward strategic defense systems, and confirmed that he offered Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev a plan for a sharing of research on "Star Wars," known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Petrovsky also brushed aside, as at least 5 years old Reagan's offer to submit 1974 and 1978 U.S.-Soviet treaties that limited underground nuclear tests: to the Senate for ratification if verification procedures were tightened.

Correction

TWIN FALLS — A listing of 5th District Court cases in the Sept. 20 edition of The Times-News incorrectly reported that Desiree Samson, 16, Twin Falls, recently entered a plea of not guilty to the crime of issuing an insufficient funds check.
The crime was actually committed last summer and the recent case was that of probation violator Samson, was found guilty of violating a probation requirement to personally contact her probation officer or fail to report monthly reports for the months of June and July of 1986.
Judge Daniel Mechl ordered the defendant to continue probation with more intensive supervision if necessary.
The Times-News regrets the error.

Idaho Falls firm listed as EEOC target

SEATTLE (AP) — Officials of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission filed lawsuits Monday against six firms in Washington, Oregon and Idaho, alleging sexual harassment, sex and race discrimination and retaliation.

Officials of the EEOC called a news conference as the suits were being filed in U.S. District Court in Seattle, saying they wanted to warn employers in the region that such incidences would not go unnoticed.

Most of the cases appeared to be 1 1/2 years old or older. In several cases, company officials said they were unaware the suits were being filed. One said he believed the suit involving his company had been settled. At least one company had changed hands, one was defunct for two years and another's manager was unavailable for comment.

The agency's law enforcement policy is designed to give a message to employers who we believe are discriminating against their employees," said A. Luis Lucero, regional EEOC attorney. "We will bring suits against employers in district court."

The agency's policy adopted by the commission two years ago calls for every case that has merit that cannot be resolved to be submitted to the commission for possible litigation.

In the cases filed, said Lucero, the agency is seeking back pay and to have people returned to their jobs, where appropriate. Three of the suits involve sexual harassment of employees. They are against Green Tree Acceptance Inc. of Federal Way, Wash.; Sunrise Resorts and Recreation Inc. of Seattle; and Deschutes Crossing Restaurant in Warm Springs, Ore.

Smith said the restaurant had changed hands last February, and the person the suit was directed against was no longer there. In a suit filed against Union Oyster Bar Restaurant in Salem, Ore., the EEOC alleged a female hostess was fired because she was pregnant. A woman contacted there said the manager was not available for comment.

A suit also was filed against Bestway Refrigerated Services Inc. of Seattle for allegedly retaliating against a casual laborer who had filed an employment discrimination charge against the firm.

Francis Palmer of the agency said 60 percent of the complaints are thrown out for lack of merit, 30 percent are resolved and 10 percent go to Lucero's office for litigation. Lucero acknowledged the Idaho case, alleging discrimination against males was not usual, but said, "The law prohibits sex discrimination."

Hill charges officials with possible 'fraud'

BOISE (AP) — Republican State Rep. Boyd Hill has accused top officials in the Idaho Department of Administration of grossly improper travel expenditures, some of them involving "in my opinion, possibly outright fraud."

But Department Director Glenn Nichols called Hill's Monday attack just another political witch-hunt orchestrated by outgoing House Speaker Tom Stivers, R-Twin Falls. Nichols expressed confidence that while not having reviewed in detail any of the allegations made in the report by Jim Wetherall, every one of the up to $27,000 in bills for 1984 and 1985 could be justified. He specifically pointed to the official audit of his department by Legislative Auditor Bruce Hill, laying the blame at the feet of Democratic Gov. John Evans, sent a letter to Evans asking for a full state investigation into travel expenditures of all state agencies.

Balderston, rejecting Hill's suggestion that he had tried to keep Wetherall's report from being made public, said he stood by the official audit of the agency released last spring.

"I don't feel that there is any basis for legitimate concern over the allegations leveled by Hill," said Balderston, who works directly for the Legislature. Wetherall's employment in Balderston's office was rejected by legislative budget writers last winter. But Stivers, who had proposed putting him on the auditor's staff, ordered Balderston to provide Wetherall with working space while the speaker has paid his salary out of the legislative account. Hill, laying the blame at the feet of Democratic Gov. John Evans, sent a letter to Evans asking for a full state investigation into travel expenditures of all state agencies.

Brief claims politics behind dump sites

BOISE (AP) — Claiming the Energy Department was politically motivated in suspending work on selection of an eastern site for nuclear waste, Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones has supported the efforts of Washington state to force resumption of that work.

In a brief filed with the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Jones argued that the May announcement by the Energy Department that it was suspending work on an eastern U.S. disposal site while continuing with western site selection was "unlawful."

The issue is critical, he said, because the Hanford site in eastern Washington is among the three finalists for the western waste repository. "If there is no eastern repository, essentially all commercial nuclear waste from the eastern two-thirds of the nation will pass through Idaho on the way to Hanford," the Idaho brief said. "It can be determined that the secretary must continue the second-round selection process. Idaho can be assured that a significant amount of nuclear waste will be stored on a regional basis, thus diminishing some of the transportation impacts."

The Washington challenge to Energy Secretary John Herrington's decision is similar to one filed by Jones on behalf of Idaho and to a number of other petitions from various groups concerned about the location of the waste dump.

Jones, contending that environmental assessment of Hanford as a potential repository was inadequate, has also asked the federal courts to allow the state to intervene in a court challenge of the department's decision. The Energy Department has agreed to select a repository site, but that request is still pending.

The attorney general, in a statement issued Monday, also jabbed at Democratic Gov. John Evans, who had challenged the way Jones was handling the state's involvement in the controversy.

Evans had said Jones' position was not that of his administration, and therefore of the state as a whole, and he told Jones to either modify his stance or face direct intervention in the case by the governor's office.

Jones said Evans has since backed away from that threat, but Pat Costello, an attorney for the governor's office, said that was not the case. Costello said the Evans administration would review Jones' legal brief to see if it corresponds to the governor's position and if not "appropriate legislation" would be introduced.

He discounted the claim by the Republican attorney general that Evans had decided he was originally on the wrong side of the issue.

"I don't see how he can conclude we're on the wrong side," Costello said. "The governor represents the state. ... It raises the question of what side he is on."

Utility faces losses over bankrupt plant

POCATELLO (AP) — Utah Power & Light Company stands to lose $3 million annually unless the Beker Industries phosphate-fertilizer plant near Soda Springs reopens, the utility says.

But Utah Power & Light spokesman John Ward said that while the potential loss of service to the idle plant would create a substantial reduction in revenues for the utility, it would not be as serious as such a situation could be for other utilities.

"Utah Power's in a fortunate position unlike some other utilities in the country," Ward said. "We don't have a single customer who accounts for more than a couple percent in revenues. When something like this happens, we can absorb it."

The plant was shut down earlier this year as Beker moved to reorganize under federal bankruptcy laws. A new company formed by a former Beker, vice president, has made an offer to take over the facility, and Gov. John Evans said last week that an agreement could be reached within two weeks.

Ward said utility revenues from Beker's operations were down 60 percent from a year ago, and he conceded that whenever a major customerlike Beker stops service, Utah Power & Light loses a substantial contribution to its fixed operating costs. "As an industry drops out, fixed costs have to be shared by everybody who remains on the system," Ward said.

Two weeks ago, UP&L argued before the Idaho Supreme Court in Pocatello that the Idaho Public Utilities Commission was wrong to allow the Department of Energy to name Idaho Power Co. as the sole electrical supplier for the Idaho-National Engineering Laboratory.

UP&L has been paid $1.3 million a year for serving as INEL's backup power source but would lose that revenue if the PUC decision stands.

On the plus side, UP&L recently was granted authority to provide full service for one of Monsanto's three massive electric furnaces near Soda Springs. Previously, both Idaho Power and UP&L supplied electricity to the furnace for elemental phosphorus production. The two other furnaces fall under a separate contract.

Monsanto is Utah Power's single largest customer, but it accounts for only 2 percent to 3 percent of the utility's total sales. That compares to FMC's elemental phosphorus plant in Pocatello that consumes 15 percent of the electricity generated by Idaho Power.

For the past year, there has been a softness in UP&L's industrial sector. The loss of the Beker plant and Utah Southeastern Idaho's farm problems have also affected income for Utah Power because of reduced irrigation use.

"That causes some concern, but on the same token I don't want to be too gloom and doom," Ward said.

Rehnquist enemies acted disgracefully

WASHINGTON - So the monster Rehnquist at last has been confirmed, and if you would believe Sen. Howard Ohnious, D-Ohio, my grandchild-dren thus are doomed forever.

They will live in a world in which an iniquitous chief of justice will wipe out their civil liberties. Every civil liberty! Poor kids! Rehnquist alone will do them in.

Wednesday night's vote was 65-33. On CBS, disappointed commentators viewed the count with disparaging eyes. They let us know that more votes had been cast against Rehnquist than had been cast against any previous chief justice nominee in history. What a statistic! Of Rehnquist's 15 predecessors, only six were confirmed by roll-call votes: Ellsworth (51-31), Waite (63-0) and Burger (74-3) were shoe-ins.

What of the others? Taney won confirmation 29-15, with 66 percent of the vote. Fuller won 41-20 with 67 percent. Hughes won 54 with 66 percent. If you will run Rehnquist's 65-33 through your pocket calculator, you will understand why some of us believe that CBS is well biased.

The campaign waged against Rehnquist was disgraceful. No other word will suffice. One looks back on the past three months with a sense of disbelief. What would his enemies have us believe?

The monster was a drug addict. Suffering from a painful back ailment, Rehnquist had taken pharmaceutical drugs prescribed by his physician, and he had reacted badly to them. That was all there was to this story.

The monster was unethical. At the Department of Justice, 18 years ago, he had provided legal advice on a short-lived program of Army surveillance of civilians.

When a case that challenged the program reached the Supreme Court, Rehnquist declined behavior?

There was more, much more, but at bottom was one charge more grievous than all the rest: Rehnquist was - he really was - he was a CONSERVATIVE!

Not that the Washington Post announced up this falsehood of Rehnquist in a killing sentence.

Justice Rehnquist is a forthright proponent of legislative over judicial decision-making.

Did you ever hear of such a thing? It boggles the mind. Rehnquist's opinions, said the Post, consistently adhere to this wicked notion. Rehnquist actually believes that Congress should make decisions.

He will not bestir himself to rewrite federal statutes to the Post's desires. He "will not take advantage of the considerable discretion that the Constitution affords Supreme Court justices for precisely such occasions." Who could vote for so vile a creature?

Let us weep for The Washington Post, and let us grieve for Kennedy, Ohnious and Biden. They did their best to smear the reputation of a decent and honorable man who happens also to possess a keen intellect and a fine sense of jurisprudence.

Those of us who cover the Supreme Court closely have known Bill Rehnquist over the past 15 years as a workhorse, a fine writer, a charming human being who is genuinely liked even by fellow justices who dissent from his opinions.

Rehnquist probably will not take the keen interest in judicial administration that was evidenced by Taft and Burger. He may not prove a congenial bulidger in the fashion of Earl Warren, but he will do a superb job.

Madonna's pop star propaganda

BOSTON - Let me say right up front that anytime Madonna decides to have a baby, she can count on a pair of booties from me. I'll even throw in a year's supply of Pampers and a "Baby on Board" sticker just for kicks.

But no problem with a real-life pregnancy in the pop star, although I sort of hope she has a daughter instead of son. The male offspring of a mother named Madonna might have a bit of a problem at the schoolyard, let alone on the couch.

But Madonna is, after all, 27 years old, not to mention married. Furthermore, as your basic two-career couple, she and Sean Penn pull in enough of a weekly paycheck to keep any kid in strained peaches and diamond-studded diaper pins.

What gives me a touch of morning sickness is the mere and video maternity of Madonna: Every time her new hit single passes through my car radio or my cable-television screen, I find myself wishing her an advanced case of varicose veins, or perhaps two months taking care of triplets on a welfare check.

The song, as you may have already guessed or heard, features an unwed pregnant adolescent begging her father to bless her decision to keep her baby and marry his daddy. Madonna may be a matron, may have given up her lingerie and the black roots in her blonde hair, but in "Papa Don't Preach," she sings a girlish voice to a girlish audience about a girl in a pickle.

The video is one of those emotional slice-of-life vignettes that we see drilled into commercials.

The problem is that this is a commercial for teen-age pregnancy.

Madonna not only has a lover as sexy as James Dean, but she says, "You warned me all about" - but a father ultimately as understanding as Mr. Rogers. By the video end, she has won the love of both fathers.

The happily-ever-after image has about as much to do with the reality of adolescent motherhood as Madonna's figure has to do with her pregnancy.

It's artificially inseminated.

Ellen Goodman

with romance.

Madonna herself predicted that this is a "message song that everyone is going to take the wrong way. Immediately they're going to say I am advising every young girl to go out and get pregnant... This song is really about a girl who is making a decision in her life."

All of last year's Madonna Wannabes are not, I know, gonna wann be pregnant this year. But this is a message song that has no influence on teen-age behavior, I can tell you where to find a whole lot of used lace gloves.

If this is a song about "a girl making a decision in her life," part of her decision-making comes from the endless romantic messages like this one:

"I don't ask once I would like to hear a rock-and-roll song in which the leader sings huskily, 'No, no, no.'"

Indeed, if you want an antonym for romance in our multi-media show, try "realistic" or "responsible." Responsible romance is an oxymoron. True lovers are not planners; they are carried away. Just ask pregnant teen-agers, almost a million a year.

Adolescents are fed the pop image of a love that is ziplined and parenthood that comes without bliss or disaster. But even Madonna, 27, and a lady in control of her life, knows better.

Asked what she imagines as postscript to the happy-ending of her first roller coaster, she says, "Of course, who knows how it will end?" The realists among us do have a pretty good, or should I say, pretty bleak, statistic on this: almost a million a year.

Does that sound like a sermon? The song says, "Papa Don't Preach." Let's make a deal in front of the Pope and Mama will call off the preaching. If pop stars call off the propaganda.

Reagan embodies the spirit of consumerism

The American people rather like the current system of getting 31 in services for 90 cents in taxes," said Rep. Willis D. Gradison Jr., R-Ohio, a member of the House Budget Committee, at a hearing on the budget.

Americans are, after all, conditioned to buying on credit, presuming that future income will cover current consumption.

That may explain, in considerable part, the continuing popularity of President Reagan. On the threshold of his sixth fiscal year, the Reagan administration embodies the spirit of American consumerism.

Elected on a platform of thinking lean, it was unable to confront the reality that thinning the budget and reducing taxes was irreconcilable with a hearty appetite for defense spending.

When, in August 1981, Budget Director David A. Stockman projected $10 billion-plus annual deficits, the president, according to Stockman, replied: "We can't give up on the balanced budget. Deficit spending is how we got into the mess." But the president refused to take realistic action to balance the budget.

Until 1974, the White House, through the Office of Management and Budget, dominated the budgeting act, even though the Constitution places primary responsibility for taxing and spending in the House of Representatives. Then, in the wake of Vietnam and Watergate, Congress established its own budgeting capability, the Congressional Budget Office.

While that served to counterbalance OMB, it further complicated already complex procedures. After the president submits his budget in January, the CBO makes its own estimates. The House and Senate Budget Committees then establish the financial parameters for the upcoming fiscal year's programming. Thirteen authorizing committees - each with 15 subcommittees - reflecting the 13 authorizing committees - apply themselves to funding. If, as is frequently the case, there are discrepancies among the various committees, the budget is subject to a "reconciliation" measure, in-target for balancing the budget, gave the budget committee the right to add to advisory powers and provided for automatic sequestering of funds if targeted reductions weren't met. Although the U.S. Supreme Court held one clause - empowering the Comptroller General with sequestration powers - unconstitutional, the fallback program placing responsibility for sequestering on Congress itself was sustained. The president's budget is, in fact, an unconstitutional but Budget Committee refer to Gramm-Rudman as "the Anti-Incumbency Act of 1985."

But while Congress debates $100 million programmatic cuts or $1 billion tax preferences, these pale in significance to the budget-balance effect of small changes in economic activity or interest rates.

Economic projections are supposedly accurate within 3 percent. But 3 percent of a gross national product amounting to nearly $4 trillion constitutes more than $100 billion.

The transitory nature of projections is exemplified by the $21.5 billion increase in the estimated deficit since June, when Congress, over White House objections, pared the president's budget to a $12 billion deficit, $2 billion below the Gramm-Rudman mandate. The new increase confronts Congress and the president with a dilemma they must address within the next 10 days.

In accord with Gramm-Rudman, Congress should pass and the president sign a resolution sequestering $20 billion, half from defense and half from non-defense spending. (Defense spending is about twice as much as the non-defense spending to which Gramm-Rudman applies, so the cuts would be about 5 percent for defense and 10 percent for non-defense.) But such across-the-board reductions would be anathema to the White House and Congress alike, so both are looking for a face-saving way out. The only escape hatch available is to apply the one-time windfall of $11 billion from the tax-reform bill to reduce the deficit to $13 billion. They declare that this falls within the $10 billion margin of error permissible under Gramm-Rudman. To catch the $11 billion windfall, the tax bill will have to be enacted immediately. A further complicating factor lies in a pending $3 billion appropriations bill tended to align the numbers.

The process is supposed to be completed by Oct. 1, the beginning of the federal fiscal year. Often, however, party differences stall an appropriations bill. In order to keep the government running, Congress must then pass a "continuing resolution" to keep departments operating at the previous year's level. Reps. Robert A. Roe, D-N.J., and Al Swift, D-Wash., called it a budget process that is so complex it is incomprehensible to almost everyone. Most of the members do not understand it beyond a superficial level. The press does not understand it. The business community does not understand it. And, most important of all, the general public does not understand it.

This incomprehensibility, combined with the persuasive powers of an enormously popular president (who himself had difficulty grasping the complexities), helped bulldoze a reluctant Congress into passing the 1981 budget and tax bills born out of chaos and drawn with smoke and mirrors.

Using a hand calculator, Stockman committed an $80 billion error that resulted in a 10 percent annual increase in defense expenditures instead of the 5 percent promised by the president.

Let once committed, the miscalculation might as well have been written in stone. At the other end of the equation, the tax cut presaged a five-year loss of revenues totaling between $650 billion and $700 billion. Annual deficits averaging more than $200 billion since 1983 have been the result. But the true state of affairs, masked by surpluses in Social Security and smaller trust funds, is considerably worse. Outside the march-aligned trust funds, the federal government has been spending $3 for every $2 it takes in - in 1985 it was collecting only 63 cents for every $1 it paid out.

Abandoning hope that the president would act to solve the deficit, Congress last December resolved to strengthen its own budgeting procedure and insulate itself to some extent from White House pressure. The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act set a 1991 that would pierce the limit, regardless of creative accounting. And even a some kind of inflation-neutral patches things together this year, reducing the deficit to next year's goal of $108 billion appears beyond reach.

Despite presidential rhetoric about curbing the role of government and reducing taxes, the administration has continued the expansionary trend in federal spending - now accounting for nearly one out of every two dollars of GNP, a greater percentage than at any time since World War II.

Whether one likes it or not, the federal government is the engine driving the economy. But the bills run up on the credit cards are going to come due, eventually.

First, were the American economy operating in only a national setting, the fiscal policies of the past five years would have been impossible to sustain without generating significant inflation. As the excess of outlays over revenues grew, Americans money to splurge, military and consumer orders would have competed with each other. Supply would have been unable to keep up with demand. Wages and prices would have spiraled upward.

The United States has been spared such inflation because the military has occurred in the context of a peacetime global economy. Consumer spending, instead of creating internal pressure, has flowed out to Japan and other countries. In 1983, following a near-tripling of the federal deficit during the prior three years, the trade deficit began soaring toward its estimated $175 billion this year. It might even be argued that, far from practicing supply-side economics, the administration engaged in Keynesian pump-priming on an international scale, and that this is what pulled the world economy out of the early 1980s doldrums.

Second, under the general heading of returning power to local government, the administration embarked on a devolution of programming but without accompanying revenues, which were instead being poured into military expenditures. Measured in constant dollars, grants to state and local governments in such areas as education, hots-ing, labor, transportation and environmental protection have been reduced by a third since 1978. Theoretically, states and localities have the choice of maintaining these services at prior levels by taxing themselves. But since the combined burden of income and security taxes on individuals is now significantly higher than ever before, even enactment of local taxes would represent not a shift in taxes but an increase.

Third, and most important, is the effect of the administration miscalculation on the American government's freedom of action and the future of the American economy. Interest payments on the national debt, as reflected in constant dollars, have doubled since 1980. The increase, in fact, comes within $7 billion of equalling funds for national defense. The $6 billion that has been added to financing costs exceeds federal grants to state and local governments, outside of individual entitlements. It represents funds not available for reducing taxes or expanding services; quite the opposite. It is money extracted from the general economy and channeled to the more affluent sector, which has the resources to invest in the debt. The situation is not novel. Wherever in the world, past or present, national debt has grown unchecked, citizens have ultimately rebelled at taxation and become alienated from government.

An optimistic scenario holds that we have seen the worst of the problem, that economic expansion will increase revenues and attenuate the deficit. But a shortfall of such dimensions should never have occurred. Stockman knew better. OMB knew better.

CBO knew better. A large number of legislators from both parties knew better. Reagan apparently did not. And the losses that followed - when a president used his popularity as a way to stampee a government into a course fraught with peril - is a lesson we are still learning.

Robert Conot has spent 1986 studying the American legislative process for the Los Angeles Times.

AIDS hotline flooded with calls about promising new drug

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — Since disclosure of the first therapy to help AIDS sufferers, thousands have called hotlines to get more information, and researchers are meeting to plan additional studies involving the drug, health officials said Monday.

Friday, an experimental drug found to cut the death rate and improve quality of life of some AIDS patients would be made more widely available, they stressed, however, that the drug was not a cure, and that it could have serious side effects.

The National Institutes of Health said a special telephone hotline established to answer questions about the drug had received more than 3,500 calls between Friday and Monday.

The hotline, which operates between 8 a.m. and midnight (EDT) seven days a week, has been receiving an average of 50 calls per hour on 10 incoming lines from doctors and patients interested in being included in further studies of the drug. The special toll-free number is 1-800-843-9388.

Unlike other purported developments involving treatment of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, inquiries about zalcitabine, or AZT, have not been as frantic as in the past, say operators of the hotline.

A spokesman for the Whitman Walker Clinic, a Washington hospital for AIDS information, said the clinic has been receiving calls about AZT, but said these inquiries have not yet been as urgent as in the past.

Overall, people have been calm and not flooding the clinic with inquiries, partly because of the hotline established at NIH before the announcement, said Jason Whitdon, coordinator of medical services at the clinic.

People are keeping up hope, but they are cautious," Whitdon continued. "We're talking about people who are already reconciled to the fact that they might die and have had their hopes raised before."

AIDS, an incurable condition caused by a virus that results in destruction of the body's infection-fighting immune system, has been reported in 24,859 Americans to date, 15,688 of whom have died. Until now, there has been no effective treatment for the disease and no one is known to have survived it.

AZT proved so promising in a controlled human trial that its maker, Burroughs Wellcome Co. of Research Triangle Park, N.C., asked the government to end a trial early for ethical reasons. This would allow people who took part in the study, but who had been taking a dummy drug, or placebo, to begin to take AZT.

The AZT patients suffered fewer deaths and, beginning six weeks after starting the drug, also had noticeably fewer bouts with other infections and cancers associated with AIDS, researchers say.

The drug will be available to AIDS sufferers who, within the previous 90 days, had bouts with Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, a rare form of pneumonia that frequently springs up in AIDS patients.

Party is courting moderates on issues

DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — Democratic Party leaders, trying to recapture the political center, issued a report Monday on domestic and foreign policy that portrays the party as the defender of families, working people and small business and takes a tough stand against the Soviet Union.

Traditionally, Americans have looked to the Democratic Party as the party of leadership, the party that best understands change, that can turn change to advantage," said the Democratic Policy Commission.

The document accused Republicans of leaving the nation with a "Swiss cheese economy," and of mortgaging the future by incurring record budget deficits.

The Policy Commission was established by party chairman Paul Kirk Jr. in May 1985, when the party was still reeling from its second straight landslide defeat at the hands of President Reagan.

Kirk and many Democratic officeholders were convinced the Democrats had to set a more moderate tone if the party was ever to become competitive in future presidential elections.

After holding hearings in different regions of the country, the commission drafted its report for presentation to the Democratic National Committee.

The effort to set a new tone was clearest in the section on foreign policy. Since his 1980 campaign, Reagan has lambasted the Democrats as weak on defense.

The Policy Commission report said, "On matters of national security, the Democratic Party will not compromise."

It did not rule out military aid in conflicts where it said one side was "backed by radical forces supported by the Soviet Union, Cuba and others."

The Democrats chided the administration for trying to end adherence to the unratified SALT II treaty, but also said that "Soviet cheating undermines the confidence of the American people in arms control."

"Democrats harbor no illusions about the Soviet Union," said the report. "It is a totalitarian society that remains an empire in the classical sense."

The report went on to say, "We must be prepared to explore all openings toward a more peaceful coexistence with the Soviets just as we must be determined to resist their bluster and call their bluff when they seek to intimidate us."

Entitled "New Choices in a Changing America," the report focused on tax reform, helping families with two working parents, aid to small business and ways of combating the growing trade deficit.

"It is possible to get more favored tax treatment by raising a child," said the Democrats.

The report acknowledged the bipartisan support for tax reform, but said it was the Democrats who stand "squarely on the side of average middle-class families and working Americans."

Then it added that "it is rare for Republicans to temporarily put aside their historic partnership with corporate special interests to support the general interest."

Referring to continuing high unemployment among minority youth, the report said "The administration's priorities are: cut vocational education by 50 percent and summer employment for youth by 43 percent and to install a sub-minimum wage."

"That is unacceptable. There are alternatives."

It went on to cite programs pushed by Democratic governors, such as Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, to train and find jobs for workers.

"We need balanced leadership," said the report "where the federal government follows a family and pro-growth policies in collecting and spending the people's money."

News execs seek to free Daniloff in Moscow

By LEE BYRD
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Leading American news executives and trade associations sought Monday to send a delegation to Moscow to win the outright release of reporter Nicholas Daniloff and assurances that "nothing like this will ever happen again."

"Nick Daniloff's fate is not just a matter for state-to-state negotiators," said Richard F. Johnson, president of the Houston Chronicle. "For every American journalist now in Moscow, and for those who work there in the future, the stakes have suddenly soared.

"Where previously the worst fear for an enterprising reporter was expulsion, it is now arrest for a crime that is punishable by death, or at best, a long term in a Soviet prison," said Johnson, who also is past president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Michael G. Gardner, editor of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal and American Society of Newspaper Editors, said "this is the first time in my memory we've all come together like this. It shows the gravity of our concern."

The ANSE, representing the editors of more than 900 daily newspapers in the United States and Canada, was a key organizer of the effort, involving news executives and groups which reflect virtually the entire news business in America.

"This business of seizing Western journalists who are simply trying to do their jobs is a screaming halt," declared Johnson, who, as the ANPA delegate, represented 1,400 newspapers accounting for more than 90 percent of U.S. daily circulation and 80 percent of daily circulation in Canada.

Johnson said "we will do all we can to press for Mr. Daniloff's unconditional release... and for an agreement that nothing like this will ever happen again."

Johnson and Gardner were among the executives of trade organizations as well as individual newspaper magazines and broadcast outlets who met in a room at the National Press Club to express their unity in behalf of Daniloff, the U.S. News & World Report correspondent who was arrested in Moscow a month ago.

The group said they have asked for the News Advisory Board of United Press International, the National Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, the former ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin, and Alexander Yakovlev, who, like Dobrynin, is a secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee.

'Careless' on returns, Claiborne claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — Judge Harry E. Claiborne, fighting to survive a Senate impeachment trial and his place on the federal bench, said Monday he was "careless" about filing income tax forms, but vehemently denied that he was motivated by "sheer greed."

Returning to the witness stand in his own defense, the 62-year-old jurist, imprisoned on a federal tax evasion conviction but still drawing his salary, swore under oath that he "never filed out my own return."

Claiborne blamed his accountant for under-reporting income on his 1979 tax form.

"Claiborne portrayed himself as so lax on tax matters that he paid no attention to his home thousands of dollars in cash and that he never kept records of the payments as required by the Internal Revenue Service."

But Claiborne, under cross examination, also said that he had an "adequate" knowledge of the U.S. tax code as a trial lawyer, and that he knew the difference between capital gains and ordinary income.

"Insisting that he turned away business as a private attorney, if the client had a tax problem, the imprisoned Las Vegas judge nevertheless testified that he provided the correct information on his 1979 income to his longtime accountant, Joseph Wright.

But Claiborne also admitted that at different times, he listed four different amounts for 1979 income from legal fees — earnings which figured prominently in his criminal conviction for income tax evasion and his subsequent impeachment by the House.

And several times, the attorney for House prosecutors appeared to leave Claiborne somewhat shaken Monday. On one occasion, for instance, the lawyer pointed out the accountant's diary indicated that he was on vacation at a time the judge insisted he was in Wright's office.

From the moment senators convened the sixth day of the first impeachment trial in 50 years, Claiborne — drawing his $78,700 salary while a federal prisoner — was under hostile cross-examination.

The gray-haired judge sparred repeatedly with Nicholas Chabreja, attorney for House prosecutors, arguing with him repeatedly and sometimes jabbing his finger at him. An impeachment panel of 12 senators appeared to listen to every word of the judge's testimony, although the full Senate will later act as the jury and decide whether Claiborne should be removed from his lifetime job.

Chabreja portrayed Claiborne as a judge who was familiar enough with tax cases to preside over them, and as a perceptive and skillful criminal defense lawyer who had enough overall legal ability to gross $375,000 in 1977 — his last year in private practice.

"Did you think you had a good comprehension of ordinary tax concepts?" Chabreja asked.

Claiborne replied, "No, I would not say that. I never filled out my own return, nor for a single client in my whole life. I never gave anyone who walked into my office with a tax problem any advice. I always sent them to someone else."

In crucial testimony, Claiborne admitted that on "different occasions, he listed different amounts for his 1979 income from legal fees,

'Victim, 9, identifies brothers held in Florida kidnapping

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Two brothers arrested in a $1.5 million kidnapping were identified in a photo lineup by the 9-year-old victim, who spent more than a decade in a Florida detention facility Monday.

U.S. Magistrate Harvey Schlesinger ordered Peter Farrell, 37, of Naples, and his brother Paul, 22, a second-class seaman who was AWOL from the USS Saratoga near Jacksonville, held until a detention hearing Wednesday.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Alan Ceballos said he would urge at that hearing that the men be held without bond. "A million dollars wouldn't be enough," he said.

The 15-year-old boy gave an account of orchestrating the Sept. 16 abduction of Amanda Mueller, the great-great-granddaughter of C. Frederick Mueller, who founded the C.F. Mueller Co. pasta business in 1868. She was found Saturday.

"Peter Farrell and Glavin said Amanda positively identified the brothers from a series of photographs. He said she identified Peter Farrell as the man who picked her up at her school and who took Polaroid pictures of her to send to her father," said Paul Farrell stayed with her in a condominium for three days and later placed her in the box.

Glavin also said Amanda identified the condominium and said she had written her name on the walls in several places. He said Paul Farrell, who was arrested Saturday night at his home in Naples, got the key to the condominium from his father for use on his honeymoon.

The agent testified that Edward O'Brien, 38, of Naples, another defendant in the case, had given state police implicating the brothers in the planning and execution of the kidnapping.

O'Brien and a fourth defendant, Richard Sais, 29, of Bonita Springs, appeared for their first hearing Monday in Miami before U.S. Magistrate Samuel Smargon. Smargon had set bail for $750 for the men Saturday, but revoked that at the government's request and scheduled another hearing Thursday.

All four were being held under the federal Hobbs Act on charges of extortion and conspiracy. The charges stem from the fact that the ransom demand "induced Amanda's father to gather funds from his business in intermingling with interstate commerce," said FBI agent William Wells.

However, Collier County Sheriff Aubrey Rogers said he expects all four men will be charged under state law with kidnapping, which carries a maximum term of life in prison, and a federal charge of extortion, which carries a maximum term of 25 years in prison and a $20,000 fine.

During the last 28 hours before Amanda was found, the FBI said, she was kept in an unrefrigerated refrigerator box left in the woods east of Naples. She suffered "ant-and-mosquito-bites, but otherwise was reported in good condition.

Her abductors left her sandwiches, sodas, a pillow and a blanket, the FBI said. She insisted on being along schoolbooks and told authorities she worked on her homework.

Peter Farrell, a real estate developer, blamed Amanda's father, John Mueller, who owns Mueller Co. Realtors in Naples with his wife Barbara, when he lost a considerable sum of money last spring on a real estate deal, said Wells, declining to provide details.

Authorities said Amanda was taken from her private school by one of the Farrell brothers, who identified himself as her father's security guard and said he was to take her to a party approximately 10 miles away. Within minutes, Mueller received a call telling him to go to a bank near home, where he found a note demanding $1.5 million.

On Friday, Mueller received instructions to put the money in two pieces of luggage and leave them at the Southwest Florida Regional Airport at Fort Myers.

Reservists aren't ready, general says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army Reserve and National Guard units that would be needed to bring active-duty divisions up to combat strength are not ready to fight, and the Army is determined to argue that otherwise, a top general says. "Indeed, unless training is improved throughout the service, "our Army will never have a satisfactory fighting capability," he said. A standard is enforced to bring combat formations up to a uniform level of readiness," Maj. Gen. Robert E. Wagner wrote in a recent memo.

Reserve components are not combat-ready, particularly National Guard combat units.

The issue of Reserve and National Guard readiness is a long-standing problem prompted by congressional and Defense Department decisions to cap the strength of the active-duty Army. Wagner's assessment, however, is unusual both because of his position and the bluntness with which he expressed his views.

Wagner's memo, first reported last week by the Baltimore Sun, resulted from a no-holds-bar conference of high-ranking officers within the Training and Doctrine Command, or TRADOC, on Aug. 2. Vuono urged the officers to express their personal opinions on the most pressing problems facing the Army in the 1990s.

Study ties trailers to rare form of cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A rare throat-cancer appears to have a "significant association" with long-time occupancy of mobile homes, according to research conducted by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The cancer is nasopharyngeal cancer, a cancer of the part of the throat leading to the nose. Although rare, it is frequently fatal soon after diagnosis.

Researchers who discovered the association are not yet ready to say that their chief suspect in the atmosphere of mobile homes, formaldehyde, causes the cancer. Their report advised "extreme caution" in interpretation.

The chief mobile home trade organization, which says 140,000 mobile homes have been reduced by up to 90 percent from what they were a few years ago, said it was surprised and baffled by the finding.

"One study by itself is just a suggestion. You need two or three studies, preferably in different geographical areas," cautioned Thomas L. Vaughan, assistant professor of epidemiology at the University of Washington in Seattle and staff member of the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle.

Vaughan, leader of the center's research team, under contract to EPA, said in an interview last week he was surprised that "this finding popped out like this."

Although statistical tests conducted to be the result of chance, "the more experience you get in this field the more you realize these are small numbers," he said.

Bruce Butterfield, vice president for public relations of the Manufactured Housing Institute, said, "We're baffled. We're left twisting in the wind."

Butterfield speculated that people in the study might have been exposed to wood dust in Washington state's lumber industry. However, Vaughan said wood dust was known to be associated with nasal cancers, not cancers of the nasopharynx.

Butterfield, like Vaughan, said further studies are needed.

Formaldehyde, one of the most widely used industrial chemicals, is used in making pressed wood products such as particleboard.

Six dead in Soviet chase, airport shoot-out

MOSCOW (AP) — Two gunmen killed two policemen, seized a Soviet airliner and killed two passengers before they were gunned down by KGB troops and police who stormed the plane in a Ural Mountains city, according to a Tass news agency.

Tass, the official news agency, said the hijacking attempt was on Saturday in the city of Ufa, capital of the Bashkir republic and about 700 miles east of Moscow. It was the first report of a hijacking in the Soviet Union since December.

Tass identified the would-be hijackers as N.R. Mantsev and S.V. Yagmurzi, and said they were "drug addicts."

They grabbed a taxi in the city center and forced the driver to head to the airport. The hijackers gave chase, and the gunmen killed two militia sergeants, Z.N. Akhlyamov and A.G. Galeev.

It wasn't clear from the Tass account if the gunmen had intended to hijack the plane or headed for the airport to slude their pursuers. Tass also did not say whether the seizure of the cab triggered the chase or if police had already been pursuing the two men.

Drug addicts' blamed by Tass for bloodshed

It said that when they reached the airport, the two added a "third" airplane with 78 passengers aboard that was en route from the Ukrainian capital of Kiev to the Siberian city of Irkutsk.

Instead of a quick victory, Hussein ignited a conflict that has become a lethal stalemate. The losses have been fearsome. Neither side has admitted what its casualties are, and each country has tended to overstate the number of casualties. It conflicts on the other side.

Estimates of the dead from foreign military analysts range from 1 million, with 700,000 of them Iranian, down to 350,000.

The Iraqis, who outnumber the Iraqis 3-1, have fought fiercely, burning poorly trained and badly armed teen-agers through minefields into the Iraqi artillery and machine guns.

In Iraq, nearly every family is estimated to have lost a son or father in the war.

"During their capture of the plane, the criminals opened fire and killed two passengers," Tass said. "It did not say if the gunmen made any demands or wanted to be flown to a particular destination. The aircraft apparently never left the ground."

Tass said the two were killed "as a result of resolute measures taken by state security (the KGB) and militia personnel who displayed great personal valor."

The agency gave no other details, but its phrasing conveyed the impression that security agents stormed the plane.

In August 1984, Tass reported that four Georgians, including a former clergyman and a movie actor, were executed and a student was sentenced to 14 years in prison for the hijacking. It was not known what happened to the other two people who reportedly took part in seizing the plane.

War, entering 7th year, shows no signs of ending

By ED BLANCHE
The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran and Iraq are preparing for another big battle as they enter the seventh year of the Persian Gulf war, in which casualties have been estimated at 1 million people.

Iran has vowed to launch another major offensive, and the Iraqis are expecting a new Iranian assault all along the 730-mile-long front that stretches from the Kurdish mountains in the north to the Persian Gulf in the south.

A victory for Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Iran would mean a dramatic swing in the balance of military and economic power in the Gulf, where one-sixth of the non-war communist world's oil reserves are located.

Some analysts believe that if the Baghdad regime appeared in danger of losing the United States backed by Arab states would intervene to prevent an Iranian victory. Intelligence estimates say Iran has massed about 650,000 men for what Hashem Rafsanjani, a key aide of Khomeini, has called "a fateful offensive."

Iraqi commanders have unleashed their air force, one of Baghdad's most potent weapons, against Iran's oil installations, power plants, factories and transportation system to thwart the buildup.

As the new battle shapes up, few analysts believe that an end in sight despite the human losses on each side and the billions of dollars in economic costs for each country.

The Iraqis say the war began Sept. 4, 1980, with skirmishes along the disputed border. But the Iraqis and most military historians date the conflict from Sept. 22 when President Saddam Hussein of Iraq sent his armored columns across the frontier into southern Iran.

Hussein hoped to exploit the chaos and confusion in Iran following the Khomeini revolution and the ouster of the shah in 1979 and to seize oil-rich Khuzistan province.

A large share of Iran's Arab population lives in the province. Although Iran is predominantly Shiite Muslims, it is not an Arab country and the major language is Persian.

Instead of a quick victory, Hussein ignited a conflict that has become a lethal stalemate. The losses have been fearsome. Neither side has admitted what its casualties are, and each country has tended to overstate the number of casualties. It conflicts on the other side.

Estimates of the dead from foreign military analysts range from 1 million, with 700,000 of them Iranian, down to 350,000.

The Iraqis, who outnumber the Iraqis 3-1, have fought fiercely, burning poorly trained and badly armed teen-agers through minefields into the Iraqi artillery and machine guns.

In Iraq, nearly every family is estimated to have lost a son or father in the war.

The International Red Cross says Iran has captured more than 70,000 Iraqis, while the Iraqis hold as many as 15,000 Iraqis.

The Iraqis finally pushed the Iraqis back across the border in 1982. Khomeini vowed to topple Hussein and to claim $50 billion in war reparations from Baghdad and its allies.

Khomeini, who is 86, has called 1988 "the decisive year" and claimed that victory is near. But Rafsanjani has sought to lessen public expectations that one last push will end the war quickly.

Pact cited as aid to improved relations

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A 35-nation conference Monday formally adopted the first East-West security agreement since SALT II, and diplomats said it could be a step toward improved superpower relations.

The conference did not deal with actual disarmament of nuclear weapons. Its goal was to reduce the risk of a military surprise attack at conventional war breaking out by misunderstanding in Europe.

Delegates toasted the agreement with champagne, ending 22 months of prolonged deliberations among the United States, Canada, the Soviet Union and all European countries except Albania.

The accord is politically binding and when it goes into effect in 1989, it will be the first agreement reached since SALT II, when Soviet and U.S. negotiators compromised on arrangements for notification, observation and on-site inspection of military maneuvers.

It was the first East-West security agreement this decade, the first during Ronald Reagan's presidency, and the first since the still unrattled U.S.-Soviet strategic arms limitations accord in 1979.

The 35 countries are to review the results of the Stockholm conference and other offshoots of the 1975 Helsinki Accords at a follow-up meeting in Vienna, starting Nov. 4.

During the final session Monday morning, the conference clock remained at 10:58 p.m. The time was stopped last Friday, Sept. 19, Friday midnight was the original deadline for the conference. Delegates had to "freeze" time because issues remained unresolved.

"We have taken an important step toward reducing the risk of military confrontation," Robert L. Barry, chief U.S. negotiator at the talks, said in a statement.

Oleg Grinevsky, Barry's Soviet counterpart, also praised the agreement. "It does much work still had to be done in reducing war risks."

"We have left behind us and are now in purgatory. But we are still far from heaven," Grinevsky said.

The pact also agreed upon allow NATO, the Warsaw Pact and neutral countries to closely monitor each other's troop movements; thus increasing mutual confidence and lessening suspicion between the blocs, delegates said.

The agreement expanded on similar measures included at Helsinki in 1975.

Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger expressed reservations Monday in Washington as to whether Moscow will live up to the pact.

He told broadcast reporters "They've violated many agreements in the past ... It's very possible that they will violate this too ... That's why verification is so enormously important to the other agreements which would cover actual arms reduction as opposed to merely notifying managers."

Many national leaders and diplomats, however, held out the hope that the Monday agreement might help U.S.-Soviet relations, which have chilled over the case of Moscow-based American journalist Nicholas Daniloff, whom the Soviets have accused of espionage.

Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said "This agreement will improve the negotiations atmosphere at other conferences and superpower meetings."

After the service, they continued to race around a field near the No. 2 shaft of Kirovsa gold mine until officials, from the National Union of Mineworkers calmed them down.

A fire in the shaft last Tuesday killed 172 black and 5 white miners, and injured 235, mostly blacks.

Regional union organizer Tshidiso Mophusi said the union would hold its own memorial Wednesday at nearby Secunda.

In Johannesburg, the United Democratic Front, South Africa's main multiracial anti-apartheid alliance, said in a statement it joined trade unions in holding the mine owners "fully responsible for this tragic loss of 177 precious lives, lives that have made possible the millions in riches that the mining bosses have today."

In Pretoria, President P.W. Botha said foreign government and mining industries were welcome to send their own representatives to the South African mines to check the safety standards.

Botha said in a message to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels that his demand for independent commission of inquiry into the disaster was based on ignorance and, reprehensible, cynical and insensitive attempt to ignore the tragedy.

Blacks disrupt service, vow to hold own rites

EVANDER, South Africa (AP) — About 200 black miners, shouting union slogans and tribal chants, disrupted a company-sponsored memorial service Monday for 177 men killed in a mine fire last week.

"We're not going to pray with whites today. We've never been allowed to pray with whites. We'll have our own rites," miners shouted.

Holding clubs and steel rods over their heads, they ran through the outdoor service 10 times, drowning out sermons by white and black preachers. Hundreds of other workers who came for the service poured out of bleachers and chairs to join the dissidents.

After the service, they continued to race around a field near the No. 2 shaft of Kirovsa gold mine until officials, from the National Union of Mineworkers calmed them down.

A fire in the shaft last Tuesday killed 172 black and 5 white miners, and injured 235, mostly blacks.

East, West trade groups open talks aimed toward closer European ties

GENEVA (AP) — Europe's two main trading groups, the Common Market and the Soviet-led COMECON, on Monday opened talks aimed at increasing cooperation. It was the resumption of a dialogue broken off 5 1/2 years ago.

The new negotiations were seen by officials of the Common Market, formally called the European Economic Community, as part of a campaign by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to expand his country's economic ties with the outside world.

The three-day "exploratory contacts" among technical experts from the two blocs are being held at the International Labor Organization building.

The closed-door meeting is not expected to produce substantial agreements.

But it could lead later this year to a joint declaration establishing formal relations and pledging closer cooperation between the blocs, Common Market delegation head John Maslen said in an interview last week in Brussels.

Maslen is chief of Common Market relations with the state-controlled economies of Eastern Europe.

The spokesman for the Soviet U.N. mission in Geneva, Vladimir Yevdokimov, said he was not authorized to release information about the meeting, including the name of the Soviet delegation head. But he did say each side had about four representatives at the talks.

City council discusses defense costs for Beringham

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES and PAT M.CANTONIO Times-News writers

BOISE — The Twin Falls City Council discussed in closed session Monday whether or not the city should pay the legal defense costs of a city police officer charged with making false statements on an expense voucher.

The council did not make a decision on the matter Monday, said Mayor Doug Vollmer. Records in the U.S. District Court Clerk's office in Boise Monday showed the trial date for Beringham has been scheduled before U.S. District Judge Harold L. Ryan. Beringham entered a plea of innocent last week when arraigned in federal court. He is completing a 30-day suspension. Ryan's pay was ordered by Twin Falls city officials after the expense irregularities were reported last spring.

The case was brought back into court by the U.S. Attorney's Office when Beringham and another officer, Don Waiden, were called back after completing only half of the suspension time, although several months had elapsed. They were asked by Public Safety Director Tim Qualls, with the approval of City Manager Tom Courtney, to return to work after they, other Twin Falls officers suffered injuries at a peak vacation time. Beringham and Waiden were called back at the time the two men still owed two weeks under the terms of the suspension. With some of the injured men now back on full duty, the suspension has been resumed, he said.

Beringham is represented by attorney Tom McCabe of Boise. U.S. Attorney Dana Blech is representing the government. Because the expenses involved were the result of trips to testify in a U.S. Court and therefore a federal offense, a felony charge has been filed. Following a closed session of the City Council Monday afternoon, Vollmer said the city was considering its "legal options" on the fees.

There are some "implications" because the city had called the officer back to work, he said. City policy states that if a person is convicted of a felony that he or she be terminated from city employment, Vollmer said. It does not address whether or not the city pays for an employee's defense. Courtney and City Attorney Shane Bengochea referred questions about the issue to Vollmer, who declined to release further details.

Evans claims Symms not respected by Senate colleagues

By JANE ROBISON Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Gov. John Evans raised the issue of ethics on Monday in his campaign to unseat Republican incumbent Sen. Steve Symms for the U.S. Senate. "You have to have ethics in government and the respect of your peers" to work effectively in the Senate, and Symms is not respected by his peers, Evans charged. "One political journal said Symms did a slipshod work and had oddball ideas," Evans said. "McCure doesn't have that kind of reputation. He's got all the respect and honor in the U.S. Senate." Evans said a recent investigation into the family-owned Symms winery by the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is a "gross violation of Symms' attitude of 'proletariat'." "I think we've seen this attitude toward profiteering before," Evans said. "He spends time away from his job in the Senate to deal in the silver market, and he made a profit on it. Here, he's using Washington grapes for his own profit." Evans' Spokesman Review and Chronicle reported Saturday that Symms winery was being investigated for possible violations of federal standards requiring 95 percent of the grapes that go into Idaho-labeled wines be grown in the state. Evans said he did not believe Symms was personally involved in the management of the winery. But he did say that Symms "has the same attitude" that his family has. Symms campaign manager and chief of staff Phil Reberger countered that Evans was "stooping to exasperation politics." "I think that's evident by the total lack of knowledge and false statements when he talks about profits," Reberger said. Reberger said Symms was not involved in the activities of the Ste. Chapelle Winery and the company "has yet to turn a profit." Reberger said Evans' remarks were "typical of his attitude in Idaho and his disdain for profitability." Evans also blasted Symms for wanting to change financial disclosure rules for congressmen.

Symms said in Twin Falls earlier this month that he supported eliminating the requirement that congressmen reveal their investments, because it deterred qualified people from running for Congress. "He doesn't want to be aboveboard in reporting," Evans said. "I don't think he realizes how disturbing that is to people. It's a matter of trust." Reberger said Symms stood by his statement that investment reporting deters qualified people.

Gooding Hospital trustees resign

By JANENE BUCKWAY Times-News correspondent

GOODING — The board of trustees for the financially troubled Gooding County Memorial Hospital has submitted a letter of resignation to make way for a new hospital taxing district. The letter, dated Sept. 18, the seven-member board asked to be relieved of the hospital operations effective Oct. 1. The letter, signed by Chairman Doyle Pugmire, and board members Monty Baker, Henry Westendorff, M.V. Klingler, Darwin Yoder, Ron Fager and Rod Spackman said, in part, that the board feels it is necessary to turn operations of the hospital over to the commission "in light of our inability to further resolve the financial problems that have been plaguing the hospital for several years." The letter cited changes in government Medicare reimbursement regulations, a declining patient load and failure to attract patients as reasons for the growing financial problems. "We feel we must take this action to safeguard the citizens of Gooding County from further added liabilities due to continual losses being incurred," the board members said in the letter. Spackman also asked that the letter include a paragraph saying that Gooding County residents' growing lack of confidence in the board also makes it necessary to change leadership now. Board members also pointed out that they agreed to support the county's efforts to get the hospital taxing district functioning. The letter was delivered to Gooding County Board of Commissioners by Chairman Robert Thackeray at the hospital board's regular meeting Thursday. The board voted in August to take this action, and turn the hospital operations over to the County Commission, which in turn will negotiate to transfer hospital operations to a hospital taxing district approved by Gooding County voters in May. Transfer of the hospital has been delayed by legal snags, license agreements. Thackeray told the hospital board that the commission may ask members to remain in place until Nov. 1 to ensure a smooth transition, since the county has only recently received legal guidelines from the state attorney general's office. "Everything we asked to do can be done, but it will take some time to work through this," he said. The commission will not act on the board's resignation until the regular commission meeting Oct. 13, he said. "There has to be a deadline set or this thing will just drag on. We've got to start handling the issues," Pugmire said in presenting the letter of resignation. "But neither board will let the business go into the red. We would close the hospital first," Pugmire said. The future of the hospital district and the hospital continue in doubt, he said. See GOODING on Page A10

Stallings attacked over funding votes

By JANE ROBISON Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Republican congressional candidate, Mel Stalling, was attacked by several local Republicans Monday for his support of federal programs and his failure to attract new funding. Stalling has not yet received any federal funding. He has received a number of federal grants for various projects, but he has not received any federal funding for his own projects. ## Leroy calls Idaho jobs a 'moral issue,' pledges to unveil 10-point growth plan

By DEAN MILLER Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Creation of new jobs in Idaho is a moral issue, Republican gubernatorial candidate David Leroy told the Twin Falls Republican Women Monday. Appearing with his running mate, Butch Otter, Leroy said they will unveil a 10-point plan later this week for economic growth that will include over 100 detailed suggestions, that he said will create jobs and economic growth. "Jobs is a moral issue. It's impossible to create a positive, moral society without jobs," Leroy said, adding that strong families depend on a job. Leroy also repeated a charge he made last week that his Democratic opponent Cecil Andrus' pledge to raise state employee salaries is a promise Andrus can't keep. "Until the economy turns around, public employees and the private sector must work together," Leroy said. "Given the economic climate, it is highly unlikely you will see a pay raise," Leroy called Andrus' promise a "fairly tale." Leroy also reiterated his pledge to ignore politics in appointing state bureaucrats, if he is elected. He said he will look for expertise in department heads and said Gov. John Evans' appointees sometimes lack enthusiasm and ability. In an off-the-cuff remark across the podium to Leroy, Otter suggested the two consider pushing for boycotts on products from drug-producing countries. Otter said the idea had just come to him and Leroy said he thought it sounded good. In his speech to the group, Otter said the Idaho Legislature "... spent 82 days last winter trying to figure out how not to raise taxes to meet the needs of the state." He said recent tax increases can be laid at the feet of state leaders who lack creativity. After his speech, Otter said he was not referring to the Republican-dominated Legislature. He said they tried every way possible to avoid a tax increase. Otter said that if Idaho continues to rely on increasing taxes to pay for state programs, more and more people will leave the state. "If we had a 10-percent increase in the economic velocity of this state, it would yield $63 million," Otter said. He said the upcoming election is a chance for Idahoans to choose between "ever-increasing taxes" or an increase in the size of government. The Leroy-Otter ticket comprises a balance of the private sector and administrative sector. "Not just another bureaucrat looking to move up through the system," Otter said. Otter, a former state representative, is president of Simplot International Inc., the overseas arm of the J.R. Simplot Co. Leroy, an attorney, is lieutenant governor, former Ada County prosecutor, and former Idaho attorney general. Their Democratic opponents are Andrus, a business consultant, former state senator and governor and former secretary of the U.S. Department of Interior, and former newspaper publisher and 20-year-veteran state Treasurer Marjorie Ruth Moon.

No foul play found in Buhl deaths; more tests due

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES Times-News writer

BUHL — Investigation into the deaths of a Bull couple Friday at their home has so far shown no indications of foul play, and officers say they are waiting for additional tests that may tell them whether both deaths were suicides or if one was a homicide. Buhl Police Chief Les Cochran said Monday that both Jack Zearfoss, 70, and his wife Fay, 57, died of gunshot wounds to the head sometime between 10:30 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. Friday. The two bodies were discovered Friday after noon in the family room of the couple's home. Twin Falls County Coroner Jerry Kurz said autopsies confirmed that both died of gunshot wounds to their heads. Tests are being made to determine if both only one had fired a gun. The gun was found in the hand of Mrs. Zearfoss, Kurz said. Autopsies were performed Monday and a full report is expected from the pathologist today. Cochran said another incident points to suicide. Zearfoss called his daughter, Norma Langbeck in Twin Falls, Thursday evening and told her his wife, who was hospitalized for exploratory surgery, might have to undergo additional surgery. He reportedly told his daughter he planned to bring Mrs. Zearfoss home and said he did not want to see her suffer further operations and that he would bring her home so she could "die with dignity," and that he would go with her. Cochran said the daughter was sufficiently alarmed by the report that she alerted other family members, but apparently the two died before the family could make contact with the pair. Cochran said ballistic tests are being made by the Twin Falls Police Department and powder residue tests by the Federal Bureau of In-

Son's "gifts" were never lost or stolen

DEAR ABBY: I read those letters in your column about all the stealing that goes on in nursing homes. So many said they finally gave up and not bringing gifts because they were stolen immediately.

While my father was in a nursing home, the gifts I gave him could not be "lost" or stolen. They were something he cannot be bought or sold. More than anything else. What were they? My visits!

Every day I would come and bathe him, shave him, feed him, and see that his toenails, fingernails were clipped. Then I'd sit and visit with him a while.

Material gifts were not wanted or needed. They only would have gotten in the way.

problem that has taken on global dimensions.

But I, along with you, am not comfortable with children burning in their parents. There must be a better way for children to show their parents how much they love them.

DEAR ABBY: I went to the new Presbyterian minister in town for counseling about my homosexuality. (He's about my age.) I gave him a paper I had written about Oscar Wilde. I was very proud of it because it railed an "A" in Victorian literature.

The minister called my father, repeated our conversation, and told him that I had given him "gifts" to read!

I am devastated and embarrassed. Why would the minister betray me this way?

Naturally, I feel vindictive, but there was nothing I could do about it. I simply left that church and changed to the Lutheran church. What is your reaction?

BETRAYED IN ARKANSAS

DEAR BETRAYED: The minister's betrayal of your confidentiality is shocking. It is appalling that someone so lacking in integrity and intelligence could be a spiritual leader.

Write a letter of complaint to the regional synod or presbytery (the address can be provided by any Presbyterian church in your area) and describe what happened. You would be performing a community service.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter, Megan, was born on Dec. 28. How do you suggest we make her birthday "special" and not get lost in the shuffle of Christmas?

MOM AND DAD: Celebrate Megan's birthday on June 28, and call it her "half birthday." I'm not kidding. Others who have had birthdays during the Christmas week have done it, and it's worked for them.

(P.S. My own son was born Dec. 22, and he didn't speak to me for almost a year!)

DEAR EUGENE: Thanks for driving home a valuable message. The best gift cannot be bought or sold. It's giving a part of oneself.

DEAR ABBY: I have never written to you before, and do so now only because of recent developments in volving children turning in their parents to the authorities over drug abuse.

In general, the media applauded this action, yet I am having a terrible time justifying such action on the part of the children. It seems such a short-time ago that the media brought to our attention a similar action by Chinese children. I recall thinking how terrible it would be to have our children violate the sanctity of the family.

I realize that drug abuse must be stopped, that this subject is somewhat taboo, and wonder if anyone else has addressed this subject. How do you feel about it?

Gift catalog suggests $1,400 spotted kittens

DALLAS (AP) — The guide-to seasonal shopping club in Texas, the Neiman-Marcus Christmas catalog, is offering His-Hers gifts this year that are simply feline.

Billed as a "leopard for your living room," the catalog suggests giving a couple a pair of specially bred spotted kittens that carry a price tag of $1,400 each.

The catalog, famous for lavish gifts sprinkled among more conventional Christmas gift items, also offers a "purr" session with pop artist Andy Warhol's studio for the rich who want to be famous.

For $35,000, the recipient will be flown to New York to be painted in Warhol's studio. But there's a limit, only three people can buy that gift.

"A wonderful part is that later you receive 900 reproductions for Christmas cards for $68," said Pat Morgan, Neiman's vice president of mail-order merchandising. "This is not like anything we've had in the past."

Ms. Morgan said the search for a unique Christmas gift is carried out all year.

"It never stops. The buyers present the merchandise to us in April and May, but it's sort of a year-round process," she said.

The spotted cats, developed by Paul Casey of Los Angeles, come in a variety of colors.

Neiman's officials concede the California-Spangled cat is not a recognized breed, but say that's in keeping with the Neiman tradition of offering exotic His-Hers gifts each year.

Ms. Morgan said the cats are as unique as the Chinese Shar-pei puppies that were offered several years ago at $3,000.

What's what

Trade in African slaves was a highly-competitive-business for 100 years. The Portuguese started it. The Spaniards beat them out. The Dutch took over. Then the French won it. And the British whipped France to take control. Black bodies were like yesterday's tin or today's oil, a natural resource. Eyes in those bodies squeezed out real tears, always. But in world trade, tears mean nothing, and there never has been a moral standard.

Wisconsin men have thinner noses than men in other states, generally. But Tennessee men have longer noses.

Says here music is "pattered sound." Dance is "pattered movement." And scholars call them "the two oldest forms of organized symbolic behavior in the human repertoire." I didn't realize that. Still don't.

BALD HORSE

Q. Ever see a bald horse?
A. Have indeed. Bald means white, too. Ergo "bald eagle," which has feathers aplenty atop its head.

Q. What's the practical reason, if any, that condemned prisoners traditionally are executed at dawn?
A. That's when most other prisoners are still asleep, so less likely to make trouble.

Q. I've read the widow's walks on tops of New England's houses were built up there so women could watch the sea from on high while waiting for their husbands to come home, True?
A. Not true, admits our Love and War man, sadly. They were built there so the sweeps could get to the chimneys.

INNARDS

I don't talk much about intestines, but maybe just this once: Swedish pathologists saw fit routinely to measure the length of cadaver intestines. Soon became clear, intestines in thin bodies were short, in fat bodies long. Worked out the "length" was in direct proportion to body weight.

Q. Was Thomas Blanket so named because he made blankets in Bristol, England, in 1340? Or was the blanket so called because Thomas Blanket made them?
A. A blanket was a blanket before he made same. Whether he was a Blanket before he made same I do not know.

Rhode Island is getting smaller. Even.

Cosby joins drug fight, wants more responsibility

CHICAGO (AP) — Blacks must take responsibility for drug problems in their communities and work to solve them, entertainer Bill Cosby said as he joined the Rev. Jesse Jackson in launching an anti-drug campaign.

"We should not have to waste our time being concerned about young black athletes doing drugs," Cosby said at a weekend meeting of Jackson's Operation PUSH.

"The 'losers' have been blaming other people. In order to clean up the drug problem, we've got to re-evaluate ourselves," Cosby said.

Jackson proposed a plan including mandatory drug testing for professional and college athletes, as well as jobs that affect public health and safety.

Trooper weightlifters, clad in garb, prove winning award wasn't fluke

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — A woman was left looking puzzled after four muscle-shirted state troopers jumped from their cruiser and fought her overturned camping trailer on a Pennsylvania highway.

The four belonged to a six-man West Virginia State Police team that took top honors in a weightlifting competition last week at the National Troopers Conference in Northern Pennsylvania.

Trooper Gary Bain of South Charleston said the accident had just occurred. The camper had broken loose from a pickup truck carrying two women.

"One of the women, who was from West Virginia, asked the men what Mountain State troopers were doing in Pennsylvania."

"We told her that anywhere West Virginians are in trouble, we were there to help," Pritchard said. "Of course she eventually knew we were kidding."

Pritchard said the four went to work at lifting the 15-foot trailer, which was in the middle of the interstate, when a crowd gathered.

"We lifted and at first nothing happened," said Pritchard. "But we couldn't quit. We didn't dare with all

A custom wheelchair stolen at hockey game

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A $1,600 custom wheelchair was stolen from the Civic Arena while its owner, a spine bifida victim, was watching a hockey game on his 10th birthday.

"If it were a bike, something anyone could use, but a wheelchair?" said Susan Campolo. "I still can't imagine it. I just can't imagine it."

Her son Derrick, who is paralyzed from the waist down by the spinal birth defect, was treated to Saturday night's exhibition match between the Montreal Canadiens and the Pittsburgh Penguins.

The family helped Derrick to his seat and folded his wheelchair and propped it against a wall behind them. After the second period, the wheelchair was gone.

"This whole thing has him flabbergasted," said Derrick's father, Richard.

"It was comfortable. It moved around easily," Derrick said. "I felt sort of disappointed."

What's what

Trade in African slaves was a highly competitive business for 100 years. The Portuguese started it. The Spaniards beat them out. The Dutch took over. Then the French won it. And the British whipped France to take control. Black bodies were like yesterday's tin or today's oil, a natural resource. Eyes in those bodies squeezed out real tears, always. But in world trade, tears mean nothing, and there never has been a moral standard.

Wisconsin men have thinner noses than men in other states, generally. But Tennessee men have longer noses.

Says here music is "pattered sound." Dance is "pattered movement." And scholars call them "the two oldest forms of organized symbolic behavior in the human repertoire." I didn't realize that. Still don't.

BALD HORSE

Q: Ever see a bald horse?
A: Have indeed. Bald means white, too. Ergo "bald eagle," which has feathers aplenty atop its head.

Q: What's the practical reason, if any, that condemned prisoners traditionally are executed at dawn?
A: That's when most other prisoners are still asleep, so less likely to make trouble.

Q: I've read the widow walks on tops of New England's houses were built up there so women could watch the sea from on high while waiting for their husbands to come home. True?
A: Not true, admits our Love and War man, sadly. They were built up there so the sweeps could get to the chimneys.

INNARDS

I don't talk much about intestines, but maybe just this once: Swedish pathologists—saw—it—routinely—to measure the length of cadaver intestines. Soon became clear: intestines in thin bodies were short, in fat bodies long. Worked out: the length was in direct proportion to body weight.

Q: Was Thomas Blanket so named because he made blankets in Bristol, England, in 1340? Or was the blanket so called because Thomas Blanket made them?
A: A blanket was a blanket before he made same. Whether he was a Blanket before he made same I do not know.

Rhode Island is getting smaller. Even.

Cosby joins drug fight, wants more responsibility

CHICAGO (AP) — Blacks must take "responsibility" for drug problems in their communities and work to solve them, entertainer Bill Cosby said as he joined the Rev. Jesse Jackson in launching an anti-drug campaign.

"We should not have to waste our time being concerned about young black athletes doing drugs," Cosby said at a weekend meeting of Jackson's Operation PUSH.

"Too long have we been blaming other people in order to clean up the drug problem, we've got to re-evaluate ourselves," Cosby said.

Jackson proposed a plan including mandatory drug testing for professional and college athletes, as well as jobs that affect public health and safety.

Utahn captures Idaho Open in OT

BOISE (AP) — For the second time in less than a month, Bob Campbell has lost a golf tournament in a sudden death playoff. The latest loss came Sunday in the Idaho Open golf tournament at Crane Creek Country Club.

Campbell lost on the second hole of sudden death to Layton, Utah's Jim Blair. Blair parred the hole and Campbell bogeyed.

Earlier this month, Campbell lost in a playoff at the Rocky Mountain Sectional in Jackson Hole, Wyo., to Hillcrest Country Club's Jerry Breax.

But this loss may have been harder to swallow.

Both players shot 2-under-par 69s Sunday for a three-day total of 207. However, Campbell missed a 2 1/2-foot putt on the 18th that would have given him the title.

Blair and Campbell each parred the first playoff hole and Campbell seemed to be in great shape on the second hole. Both players missed the green, but Campbell was off to the side of the green in two and Blair lay three.

Campbell chipped 10 feet past the hole but Blair faced an even more difficult chip.

The Utah pro rapped the ball which sped across the green, gaining speed as it went. But it hit the back of the hole and bounced in for an unbelievable par.

Campbell, still in shock, missed his comeback attempt.

The victory was worth $2,000 to Blair while Campbell, an assistant professional at Crane Creek, was second and Don Hamblin third, pocketed $1,500.

Third place — and $1,250 — went to Fish Haven's Bob Betty, who finished second in the Idaho Golf Angels Open earlier this summer. Betty finished five strokes back at 212.

Boise's Jeff Thomsen was tied for third with Bruce Summerhays of Midway, Utah. Both finished at 214 and earned $925.

The top amateur in the 100-man field was Payette's Scott Masingill, who finished at 217.

In the seniors champions, Don Johnson of Draper, Utah, shot a 224 and earned $300. Tommy Williams was second and Don Hamblin third.
