Symms says winemaker's claims false

By The Associated Press

BOISE — Many Ste. Chapelle wines — including award winners — were labeled as Idaho wines but were made mostly from Washington grapes, said Bill Broch, former winemaker of the Canyon County winery.

Broch also said Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, whose family owns the winery, "was well aware of the mislabeling."

The senator "didn't give it his blessing. He didn't say to stop doing it," either, Broch said.

But Symms said in a statement Tuesday he has nothing to do with the management of the winery.

"In spite of clear, concise and ample information to the contrary, some elements of the Idaho media continue to report statements which totally misrepresent my involvement with Ste. Chapelle management," said Symms.

"The statement by a dismissed manager that I was well aware of any aspect of the Ste. Chapelle operations is totally false," Symms said.

He alleged that his Democratic election opponent, Gov. John Evans, is attempting to link him to the scandal.

"It's irresponsible journalism at best, and a prime example of John Evans' desperate political efforts to control public opinion at election time and divert attention away from his own record," Symms said.

It was revealed over the weekend that the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is investigating Ste. Chapelle for possible mislabeling. Federal regulations require that at least 75 percent of a wine's grapes be grown within a state for it to carry that state's name.

Broch, now an owner of the Spring Creek winery north of Boise, said about 100,000 cases of wine were mislabeled. Some of the mislabeled wines were made from Oregon grapes; others were California wines labeled as Idaho wines, he said.

Resling labeled as Idaho wine and shipped to Taiwan came from tankers right out of California to (the winery at) Sunny Slope, he said.

The extra income from mislabeling could have run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, Broch estimated, because the Idaho-labeled wine sold for at least $3 more per case.

"We are talking about defrauding the Idaho wine drinker. We have duped them," Broch said.

Dick Symms, Ste. Chapelle president, did not respond to messages seeking comment. However, Dick Symms said in an interview in August that he did not know if any Ste. Chapelle wines were mislabeled. Any problems were caused by faulty recordkeeping, he said, noting that the senator would not know anything about the mislabeling allegations.

Dennis Young, regional compliance supervisor for the BATF in Seattle, would not comment on the case in detail. But he said there had been no interference in the investigation from Sen. Symms.

The award-winning wine "that really got the media rolling" Broch said, was a 1982 Idaho Chardonnay made with about 75 percent Washington grapes and 25 percent Idaho grapes. The wine was sold in a private company, Wine Fair in Bristol, England.

He said another gold medal winner at the Bristol Wine Fair, a 1983 Idaho Chardonnay, was made entirely from Washington grapes.

"They are all bogus," he said.

Trade may suffer if allegation true

By DEAN MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Negotiations between the government of Taiwan and the United States to open up Taiwan's wine markets could be adversely affected if there is any truth to recent allegations that Idaho's Ste. Chapelle Winery mislabeled wine it sold to the Taiwanese.

Former Ste. Chapelle winemaker Bill Broch has alleged that the winery, owned by Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, and his family, shipped to Taiwan some Californian Riesling wine labeled as Idaho wine.

In spite of clear, concise and ample information to the contrary, some elements of the Idaho media continue to report statements which totally misrepresent my involvement with the Ste. Chapelle management," Symms told the Associated Press Tuesday.

He said Broch's statement that he was well aware of Ste. Chapelle operations is totally false.

His brother, Dick Symms, who is president of Symms Fruit Farms, said the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is acting on the family's request that the Bureau investigate possible violations of federal standards requiring 75 percent of the grapes in an Idaho-labeled wine to be grown in Idaho.

Trade negotiators in Washington said Tuesday that the U.S. and Taiwan are about to finish negotiating a deal to open Taiwan's once-resisted markets to American wines.

A delegation of Taiwanese negotiators is expected in Washington next week, said staff at the Coordinating Council for North American Affairs (CCNA), the private agency which look over embassy functions for Taiwan when the U.S. and Taiwan broke formal diplomatic relations.

The CCNA's U.S. counterpart, The American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) has joined the U.S. Department of Commerce and the office of the U.S. Trade Representative in the year-long talks.

Representatives of Taiwan initiated the talks in October of 1985, after hearing that the U.S. trade representative's office was considering bringing an unfair trade practices suit against the young nation, said Roger Bolton, a press aide to U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yetter.

Yetter, who recently toured Idaho to help Symms stump for re-election, could not be reached for comment Tuesday. Bolton said that the trade representative's office had begun to investigate unfair Taiwanese trade barriers a year ago at the behest of the wine industry and said there is no "special relationship" between Symms and Yetter.

Bolton said Symms has had no involvement in the trade talks that he knows of, and that even if he had encouraged Yetter to work on opening the Taiwanese market, there is nothing wrong with Yetter's office taking action against Taiwan for unfair trade practices.

Sand Kristof, Yetter's deputy assistant for the Pacific, said Tuesday that most of the

Ex-official contends warnings ignored before the bombing of Beirut barracks

By TIM AHERN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. military commanders ignored warnings which could have spared the lives of many killed in the 1983 attack on Marine headquarters in Beirut, the Pentagon's former top counter-terrorism official has charged.

"Instead of paying attention to the warnings of a five-member Special Forces team, which recommended ways to make the Marines safer, the report was swept under the rug," wrote Noel Koch.

The commanders were more worried about bureaucratic infighting, said Koch, who resigned earlier this year as principal deputy assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs. In that position, he oversaw the Pentagon's counter-terrorism efforts.

Koch's charges are contained in a letter sent to several members of Congress in support of proposals to unify the Pentagon's special forces within a single military structure, rather than keeping them scattered throughout the services. The letter was made available Tuesday to the Armed Services Committee and one of its sponsors of the legislation, said Koch's letter is "another indication that American military forces aren't prepared to deal with terrorism."

"There's a growing concern that we are least able to deal with the most likely form of terrorism," Cohen told a news conference at the Capitol.

Robert Sims, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, said Tuesday he was sure Koch's allegations would be reviewed by the Defense Department and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but said the former official seemed primarily interested in "influencing legislation on Capitol Hill."

Noel Koch's advocacy for the Special Operations Forces is well known, said Sims. "I suspect whatever he has written is aimed at gaining support for legislation."

Koch wrote that he had never before spoken about the Beirut bombing "because it could only cause more pain to people already suffering the unbearable pain of the loss of people they loved."

"Internally, I made my views known," wrote Koch. "But who would wish to say to someone that their loved ones died because those to whom their lives were entrusted placed a higher priority on other interests — personal interests, career interests — higher priority on other interests. Better to agree, as we generally do, that it was nobody's fault."

The attack came shortly after dawn on Oct. 23, 1983, when a suicide terrorist drove a bomb-laden truck into Marine headquarters near the Beirut airport, killing 241 U.S. military personnel.

Six months earlier, on April 18, 1983, a similar suicide car bomb attack destroyed the U.S. embassy in Beirut, killing 63 persons, including 17 Americans.

"After the embassy attack, Koch wrote, he headed a Pentagon team sent to Beirut to review

Growing up is hard to do, survey says

By LEE BYRD
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Three out of four American adults think the problems facing today's children are more severe than when they were growing up, and even more are willing to pay higher taxes for better schools, drug treatment, and other services for kids, according to a Louis Harris survey.

The comprehensive poll demonstrates that "the United States in the 1980s may be the first society in history in which children are distinctly worse off than adults," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., who joined Harris at a news conference Tuesday.

The survey, commissioned by the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co's Group W, found that less than half of the public believes that American children are basically happy (48 percent), or get a good education (40 percent), or live in a safe neighborhood (36 percent).

Other findings in the July 20-August 7 survey:

- Only 43 percent felt schools are doing a good job meeting their responsibilities to children.
- Forty percent said hunger is on the rise among children.
- Only 28 percent felt the federal government was doing a good job regarding children, while just 34 percent gave local governments a good rating.
- Barely half, 53 percent, believe that most children have loving parents.

Teen-agers are perceived as particularly at risk, with half of the public believing that most teen-agers have sex at least occasionally, 43 percent believing that most teen-agers use alcohol, and 21 percent believing that most use drugs regularly. And only 41 percent of those surveyed said American teen-agers read and write adequately.

—Among blacks, 64 percent felt that children's problems have grown worse.

—Majorities of adults said they would be willing to increase their taxes for programs to trace missing children (86 percent) — for drug

AMA fears doctors liable for actions of patients

By MALCOLM RITTER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Doctors who discover that their patients threaten public safety because of drug abuse or other problems should set aside doctor-patient confidentiality and tell authorities, the American Medical Association says.

A doctor otherwise could be held legally liable for any harm that results, B.J. Anderson, AMA associate general counsel, said Tuesday.

The Pittsburgh Press reported Sunday that at least 23 airline crew members, including a pilot near death from a cocaine overdose, had been treated at Pittsburgh hospitals for medical crises related to drug abuse. Hospital officials said confidentiality laws prevented them from reporting the drug abuse.

Anderson said Tuesday that while ethical abuse programs that get federal money are prohibited from revealing the names of participants, the legal ban does not extend to medical treatment outside such programs.

But Lou Gable, spokesman for the Hospital Association of Pennsylvania, said a 1972 state law forbids such disclosure even outside formal rehabilitation programs.

"That puts medical people in a difficult spot in cases like those of the airline workers, he said. If they don't disclose names, "there's a possibility for catastrophe. If they do tell somebody, they're liable to be sued or prosecuted," he said.

Some way should be found to let medical people report such cases "without it coming back and biting them," he said.

Normally, the AMA's Anderson said, doctors have an ethical obligation to keep medical information about their patients confidential.

But "physicians recognize the moral obligation under certain circumstances to report because of the overriding consideration for public safety," Anderson said.

Neither the issue nor the problem of drug abuse in positions crucial for public safety is new, she said.

The AMA's council on ethical and judicial affairs has stated, "The obligation to safeguard patient confidence is subject to certain exceptions, which are ethically and legally justified because of overriding social considerations."

Anderson said doctors who know about a patient problem "that could lead to injury on the part of large numbers of people, like people who fly in airplanes," could be held civilly liable for resulting harm if they don't tell authorities or the airline about it.

She cited a 1976 ruling by the

Shevardnadze accuses Reagan of 'evil' Star Wars intent

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said Tuesday that the United States is harboring "evil intentions" of first striking with the nuclear warhead that he said is being developed for a first strike against the Soviet Union.

Shevardnadze said the U.S. is "developing a first strike" with nuclear weapons, Shevardnadze said. "Evil designs are being passed for good intentions, and a sword for a shield," he added.

Before his speech, Shevardnadze had an unscheduled 45-minute meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz to discuss the cooperation of an American reporter, Nicholas S. Daniloff in Moscow on spy charges.

"This problem," Shevardnadze said, "is not resolved." Shevardnadze did not mention Daniloff in his speech, but the Soviets have been saying without elaboration that Daniloff, Moscow correspondent for U.S. News & World Report magazine, could be "brought very rapidly" if the U.S. administration took the right course.

Shevardnadze addressed the General Assembly on the second day of its so-called "general debate," an annual event that gives heads of state and government, foreign ministers and other officials of the 155-member world body a chance to deliver policy statements. Tuesday's speakers included British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and Japanese Foreign Minister Takashi Kuranari, both expected to speak for another superpower summit this year.

Shevardnadze urged Washington to follow up its words about reducing the threat of nuclear war with "practical deeds."

Highs in the 50s.

Temperatures as of 3 p.m. Tuesday were in the 60s and low 70s. The highest temperature in the state Tuesday was 73 degrees in Twin Falls and Boise, while the low of 17 degrees was recorded at Stanley.

Synopsis: The National Weather Service in Boise said a storm system moving southeastward from the Gulf of Alaska continued to spread clouds and showers inland Tuesday.

The extended outlook for southern Idaho, Friday through Sunday, shows scattered rain showers in the low valleys with snow showers over the mountains. Partly sunny Saturday. Partly sunny Sunday after morning fog and low clouds. Most highs will be in the 50s. Friday and Saturday, warming into the 60s Sunday. Lows in the 30s and 40s.

This system was pushing into the northwest coast and was expected to continue to move inland and spread over Idaho through Friday. Rain, gusty winds and cooler temperatures will dominate the weather today and continue unsettled through the remainder of the week.

High clouds began to spread over the state late Tuesday morning. The clouds were expected to lower and thicken Tuesday night with precipitation beginning in the north and spreading over the state during the night and today.

Southeasterly winds picked up during the week as the storm system moved closer to the region.

Tuesday morning lows ranged from 21 degrees at Fairfield to 45 at Lewiston. Most valley readings were in the upper 20s and 30s with areas of frost spread throughout the state.

Washington grape shipment numbers are being guarded

By S.J. GUFFEY
Associated Press Writer

SPOKANE, Wash. — State statisticians are guarding the numbers on Washington grapes shipped for wine-making in other states. Washington wine grape exports are "really tiny," but charges of illegally marked Idaho wines have seriously made those numbers significant.

Idaho's Ste. Chappelle Winery has produced a number of wines — including some award winners — that were labeled as Idaho wines but were actually made mainly from Washington grapes, according to Bill Brolich, former Ste. Chappelle winemaker.

Such mislabeling could mean a difference of hundreds of thousands of dollars for a winery's profits. Chappelle is owned by the family of Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, on Tuesday. Symms called Brolich's claims that the senator knew about the mislabeling "totally false."

With Symms facing a November re-election, revelation of the federal ban into Ste. Chappelle's labeling practices caused "quite a stir" in Idaho over the weekend.

Across the border in Washington, which produces the second or third largest grape crop in the country, each year, winery leaders were reluctant to talk about Ste. Chappelle's problems.

"I know that Ste. Chappelle has been a good customer of Washington grapes in the past," said Jeff Gordon of Gordon Brothers Winery in Pasco, who heads the Washington Wine Growers Association.

There are 54 producing wineries in Washington and about twice as many producers who raise wine grapes. Of the awards that went home to Idaho instead of Washington, Gordon said, "I think that's a tribute to Ste. Chappelle."

"We're talking about a few percent" of Washington grapes that ever get "out-of-state" wineries, said Lloyd Garrett, chief official for the Washington Crop and Livestock Reporting Service in Olympia.

"It's somewhere under 5 percent," Garrett said. In a telephone interview, "I don't even want to know the real number. I'm afraid I'd tell you."

To do so, he noted, could mean up to $10,000 in fines on 30 years in prison. The state-federal reporting service gathers information from agricultural producers by promising them confidentiality.

When there are three or fewer firms involved in an area and one firm has 60 percent or more of the total production, the numbers cannot be released, Garrett said.

He would say that Washington checks wineries in Oregon, Idaho and British Columbia to get the figures on how many Washington grapes are crushed each year.

Reagan timber plan attacked in the House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of a House subcommittee on Tuesday criticized a Reagan administration plan that projects the possibility of almost doubling commercial timber harvests in national forests by 2030.

"It is a political document," said Rep. James Weaver, D-Ore., charging that the plan was tailored to meet the administration's timber-cutting and other development goals at the expense of conservation and wildlife protection.

"This has got to have a devastating effect on wildlife," he said. "We are overcutting the national forests now. It is a travesty, what is going on out there."

He and other members of the Agriculture forests subcommittee focused their attack on the Agriculture Department's latest update of its long-range plans for managing the 191-million acres owned by the U.S. Forest Service.

The update, nearly two years overdue, proposes growth for most Forest Service programs, but commercial logging, timber grazing and minerals development would grow faster than recreation, conservation and wildlife protection activities.

Generating the most controversy is a projection that by 2030 commercial timber harvests would be between 15.6 billion board feet and 20 billion board feet a year, up from the current 11.4 billion.

The lower timber harvest would result from holding the line on Forest Service budgets through 1990, while the higher projection would require unlikely votes by Congress to greatly boost spending in tight budget times.

Weaver said the 20-billion target was ordered by then Assistant Agriculture Secretary John Crowell in a January 1985 memo to the Peterson, chief of the Forest Service.

The update was also criticized by Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., because it does not present an option for Congress and the Forest Service, only projections under low-budget and high-budget scenarios.

When they develop low and high options, they develop in options," Panetta said. "This document makes no decision about real policy planning. Anybody developing a budget for the Forest Service could find justification for any direction they want to take."

Peterson, countering environmental group arguments that more timbering will require for more roads, timber harvests, said the $1 billion board feet between the low and high cutting options is expected to be produced by more efficient harvesting and technology to grow more trees in a given area.

George Dunlop, Crowell's successor, said the update contained high and low budget options to give Congress "the flexibility to determine annual budget priorities in relation to overall national priorities."

Although the Forest Service plans which it issued every 10 years and updates every five, propose long-range goals for national forest management, the actual year-to-year policy is set by Congress through the appropriations process.

Exec faces obscenity charge

BOISE (AP) — A senior executive for First Interstate Bank of Idaho has been charged with 17 counts of telephone harassment by obscene conduct, involving calls he allegedly made from a bank office in downtown Boise.

Andy C. Doll, 50, senior vice president and controller of First Interstate Bank of Idaho, was charged in a complaint filed in Ada County Magistrate Court.

The complaint accuses Doll of harassing 17 women and children with obscene or indecent language in calls made between Aug. 28 and Sept. 10. Boise Police Sgt. Frank Richardson said the calls were believed to have been made from the bank.

According to the complaint, Doll is accused of representing himself in one of the calls as a school board member and in several others as a college professor doing a survey or taking a poll.

A Boise State University spokesman said its public relations office had received complaints for about 10 years from people saying they had been called by a professor conducting a dating and sex survey.

BSU periodically has released disclaimers to the media saying that no BSU professors had conducted explicit surveys over the phone, he said.

However, authorities said there was "no evidence to link past calls with the recent calls leading to the complaint against Doll."

Eleven of the 17 calls attributed to Doll in the complaint were made to boys and girls, and the rest were made to women. In several cases, the caller asked the victims about their involvement in masturbation, incest and other sexual practices, the complaint says.

Washington was second only to California in premium-wine production, said Simon Siegl, who heads the Washington Wine Institute in Seattle. This year's crush may better the 1983 record of 3,033,000 gallons, he said.

The 2,327,000 gallons of wine sold in Washington last year meant about $75 million in sales, Siegl said.

Few of the 84 wineries now producing in Washington would refuse to use other grapes in certain circumstances, said Gordon.

"If you tie yourself in 100 percent and, for one reason or another, have a crop failure or a low-quality year, you're in big trouble," he explained.

Beyond that, there are strict federal guidelines for what goes on a wine label.

To be labeled "1982 Idaho Chardonnay," for instance, a wine would have to have 95 percent of its Chardonnay grapes from Idaho. A "vineyard" designation means at least 85 percent of the wine's grapes came from a specific vineyard. "Estate-bottled" means at least 85 percent of the grapes were produced "right there," Gordon said.

Gordon himself sells 90 percent of his wine grapes to other wineries.

Despite its size, Washington's wine industry is so young that only in 1985 did the Washington Crop and Livestock Reporting Service make its first attempt at forecasting the size of the year's crop, Garrett said.

Of Ste. Chappelle, said Garrett, "you can't give all the credit to the state. I've heard it said it's about 50 percent due to the winner and what he does to it and 50 percent what God did to it."

"A great winemaker cannot make great wine out of poor grapes," said Siegl. "The most crucial thing you're dealing with is how good are the grapes."

Still, Siegl said he does not intend use any references to Ste. Chappelle awards in promoting Washington wine.

Andrus should know tax increase coming

Gubernatorial candidate Cecil Andrus, thinks state employees who have gone two years without a pay increase should get one this year.

He's entitled to his opinion, but he's playing coy with the numbers when he says the money source is not a tax increase.

If the federal tax overhaul goes through as anticipated, Idahoans will see their state income taxes go up substantially.

The state will be under enormous pressure, both from internal revenue demands like employee salaries, and from consistency, to follow the federal changes.

The bottom line will be something between $30 and $45-million—from our paychecks—into state coffers, plus whatever the change will mean in our federal taxes. And you thought this was tax reform?

Andrus makes the interesting argument that the windfall is not a tax increase, but a return of what was taken away in years past, since it restores part of the federal tax base exempted from 1981 to 1983.

Nonsense, Idaho income taxes stabilized in those years as the state tax structure was adjusted to conform to the Reagan income tax cuts of the same period. Is Andrus saying we should have left Idahoans paying the higher rates?

In combination with his all-but-sealed promise to state employees to raise their salaries, it appears to us that Andrus is already making monetary commitments and spending the money he anticipates getting.

If the man wants to run for governor on such a platform, well, that's his business.

But for Andrus to say that he can do these things without a tax increase is, to put it mildly, a show of smoke and mirrors.

The bottom line is that, if the federal law changes, your Idaho income taxes are likely to take a jump. Call it what you like, Cecil. To us, that's tax increase.

Gooding hospital is an asset

The article "Residents Voice Gooding Hospital Concerns" had some information which was misleading. The article states that Gooding Hospital is a 49-bed facility yet it currently has only 25 inpatient beds and a nursery. I believe you have to count the Walker ACT Center to arrive at 49 beds and Walker Center wasn't included in the census information.

Second, the article said "neither family practitioner or staff is taking new obstetrics patients" yet I am on staff at Gooding County Memorial Hospital and currently have two patients planning to deliver there in the next few weeks and another early in 1987. I am the only physician currently doing deliveries at Gooding Hospital.

Former hospital care at St. Benedict's Family Medical Center in Jerome and Gooding Hospital in Gooding. I hope I can give my patients care at both hospitals for many years to come. Gooding County Memorial Hospital is an asset to the community.

Secure space shield is needed

One of the primary claims made against the President's Strategic Defense Initiative is that it won't work.

Well, an experiment conducted on Sept. 5th should put that argument to rest. In just 14 months, the following incredibly complex experiment was put together:

Three different tracking systems—a laser range finder, conventional radar, and an infrared sensor—accurately followed three different rockets or stages. Opponents have charged that accurate tracking is impossible. A total new computer program—with more than a million lines of software—performed flawlessly in controlling the various sensors. Opponents claimed that such complicated programs could not be written or worked.

Six aircraft, 34 radars, and 31 satellite communication links in various parts of the world were perfectly coordinated. Such close, intricate communications necessary for SDI to work. Opponents, again, claimed it was impossible. This experiment proves otherwise.

The point is that the Space Shield is not a pie-in-the-sky pipedream. The tremendous progress being made by scientists all over the country is rapidly making the President's vision of a world free of the threat of nuclear weapons a reality. It's time the opponents of SDI drop their false, workably charge. Our children deserve a safe, secure future.

'Exaggerated idea of individual freedom' threatens nation

In all of America's history, there has never been a time filled with as many different moral beliefs as in the '80s.

The United States is a country filled with numerous people from various backgrounds, races, and nationalities; because of this there are also millions of beliefs, opinions and values. The freedom in this great country grants each person the right to believe, speak out and act for their beliefs.

Freedom is what has made America great, but it is this same virtue that has the power to destroy her. Too often, morally corrupt Americans have used their freedom to push their degenerate beliefs on America until she has inevitably become tarnished by indecency. And because of this abused freedom, America is morally declining faster now than ever before in her history.

Although America's church attendance continues to be at 40 percent, for the past several years, more Christian leaders are running for political offices and more Christians are speaking out than have in a very long time.

America is in trouble. For a country that has more churches, denominations, and Christians than any other nation on earth, something is definitely wrong. America continues to plunge into a dark abyss, being pulled down by drugs, satanism, pornography, sodomy and the turning away from God.

Delmar Stone

Admittedly, the American government is finally cracking down on drug abuse. However, more drugs continue to pour across U.S. borders of such caliber as: LSD, heroin, cocaine and a new deadlier form of cocaine known as crack.

As they continue to come into America they are increasingly being consumed, by not just the "losers" of society, but by businessmen, professionals and the very foundation of any nation—their children.

Millions of American youth no longer look toward the honest, respectful leaders to pattern their lives after, such as dad, grandpa, the clergyman, or the president. Instead, they laugh at the very idea that they should respect these people, not realizing the fact that because of those men, they themselves are able to live in a free and prosperous land—the greatest nation on earth.

Substituting for these men, they look up to symbols of rebellion, self-pleasure and satanism, rock stars and bands such as Twisted Sister, Prince, AC/DC and Black Sabbath have become just such symbols. Lyrics promoting rape, sexual indecency, lust, murder and suicide are allowed to flow across the skies of America and into the minds of her future leaders.

Pornography, once a few pictures of nude women in a magazine to satisfy the lust of a small number of men, has become a multi-billion dollar industry, making x-rated movies with nude children, adults and animals committing undecipherable acts of sensuality. The demand for these movies grows daily and very little is done to stop it.

Has America's freedom become so slack as to let someone murder small children while pattern their sexual acts of sexuality in front of a camera, to satisfy a demand that could only originate from unbalanced and warped minds? Nevertheless, most Americans push the entire issue aside hoping that maybe, just maybe, this cancer will go away.

The United States' moral decline is also shown by her acceptance of sodomy. Homosexuality in America has become commonplace. In several states, homosexuals have almost the exact same rights as heterosexuals, the right to marry, adopt children, and teach their lifestyle.

The U.S. has seemed to have forgotten that God did not create man and man, but man and woman. America has been deceived into thinking that homosexuality was meant to be and that it is a perfectly correct way of living, when actually it is a life that breeds disease, lust, rape and suicide, a life so contrary to what is right, that it makes any God-fearing person sick to his stomach to think about it.

Most important of all, America's moral decline is because of her turning away from God. The United States' founding fathers never intended that America's children should not be allowed to pray in school, and to have the Holy Bible treated as merely a great work of literature, shelved away on the religious shelf of the school library.

All of the above-mentioned problems are a direct result of America's turning away from the God that all Americans once feared and respected. The only way that this decline will ever stop will be for America to once again realize that God is real and to fall upon her knees and ask for forgiveness from her gracious and loving God. The end of the road to moral decline is the eventual destruction of a civilization.

In short, America is morally declining faster now than ever before in her history. An unrealistic, romanticized, exaggerated idea of individual freedom and complacency has served to put an icy grip upon America's moral values. As her morals slowly decay, so do the foundations of democracy.

The United States must open her eyes and take a sobering look at what is taking place within her borders. Morality is what allows a democracy to work; immorality is what destroys it!

Vote 'yes' for common sense

The right to work for more. Your vote will be a "yes" if you want a better economic climate in Idaho.

Power hungry union leaders have been running for political offices and more Christians are speaking out than have in a very long time. America is in trouble. For a country that has more churches, denominations, and Christians than any other nation on earth, ride his veto.

You have heard it touted that right-to-work would lower wages and destroy unions. That has not been the case in three of our neighboring states with right-to-work laws as the annual pay is $2,000 more and a larger percentage of union members than Idaho.

Now it is time for the people of Idaho to use their common sense and vote "yes" to keep the right to work law in force at election time.

J. CLIFTON SMALLWOOD

forefathers fought for the right to equal living and equality among employer and employees.

Don't give up what we have fought for so many years. Stand tall, be proud and vote for equality of life and not for congress or anyone from any other states. I write this because I am one of the people working free grants against right to work and I am proud of it.

Working against proposal

To Sue Strobel:

I read your letter concerning the support of the people against Right to Work. You are wrong. The letters written, signs put up, people calling and information being given out is all done free grants.

It is done by the people who really do care about freedom of choice and about our great State of Idaho. The money used to support the effort against right to work is made by donations of union people who choose to donate to help our State. The union is free enterprise. It helps the working man, the man and woman supporting this country.

The right to work bill prohibits organized support of workers to lobby for better wages, benefits and working conditions. Our

The GOP and 'free riders'

Twin Falls County Republican Party chairperson Mark Stubbs just handed the opponents of Idaho's misnamed "Right-to-Work" law a pristine example of why the law is unfair.

Stubbs complained in the Times-News on Sunday (9/21) about the placement of Democratic Party signs on Five Points, a traditional bastion of Republican advertisements during election years. Said Stubbs, "We are disappointed that we did all the work, look all the time to build the sign, and now the Democrats want to come along for a 'free ride.'"

Isn't ironic Stubbs complains about "free riders" when the Republican Party is urging voters to approve of Right-to-Work? As the Sunday editorial by DiNoto so clearly pointed out, with Right-to-Work, "free riders" will enjoy the benefits of hard-earned gains won by their unions.

But, perhaps the final irony is achieved when one realizes that Stubbs and David LeRoy, Republican candidate for governor, are both attorneys. Before they could practice law in Idaho, they had to join the Idaho Bar Association. When are these two gentlemen going to take a courageous stand against the compulsion of attorneys to join the IBA?

Perhaps Stubbs will explain to the readers the apparent inconsistency of complaining about "free riders" using Five Points while he supports the Right-to-Work bill.

Then perhaps either Stubbs or LeRoy or both will tell the voters when they will combat the IBA's forced "unionism." As one who enjoys Idaho's political battles and one who respects both Stubbs and LeRoy, I await their replies.

Don't be fooled on issue

I see by reading the Times-News the right-to-work-for-less folks are trying harder than ever to convince the public to vote yes on Referendum 1. They claim the right-to-work-for-less law will make thousands of jobs in Idaho. But when we look at states that already have right-to-work laws on the books, the facts do not back up their claims. Right-to-work Texas' unemployment rate is up over 11 percent; right-to-work Louisiana's unemployment rate is up 13.9 percent and rising; Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, all these states I mention are right-to-work states. All of them have extremely high unemployment rates.

The right-to-work people will tell you that the oil glut alone is responsible for these states' economic woes, but I would remind them that California is also an oil-producing state and the oil glut did not throw their economy into chaos. In fact, California's economy is growing. As you know, California does not have a right-to-work law. Our east coast states' economies are growing. Like Massachusetts—this state's unemployment rate is 5.3 percent and dropping. Massachusetts does not have a right-to-work-for-less law either.

There was also a study done by the Harvard School of Public Health that shows 91 percent of the hunger counties in the United States are in right-to-work states. This simply means a lot of people are going hungry in right-to-work states.

So don't be fooled by the right-to-work-for-less committee. Vote no on Referendum 1.

Tax bill backers size up votes, predict Thursday passage

AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said a major tax-overhaul bill is about 40 votes short of the 217 needed to pass. O'Neill said supporters predicted most undecided lawmakers will vote for it when the roll is called Thursday.

"I think we're going to be fine," Rep. Barbara Kennedy, D-Conn., one Democratic vote-counter told reporters Tuesday as backers of the bill tried to whip up public support for it.

"I'm not worried right now," she said, quickly adding, however, that "this thing's been like a roller coaster...."

O'Neill, issuing a strong endorsement of the bill, called it "one of the great landmarks of all time." He added that "as you analyze this bill, a lot of people (members) get hurt at home" because it would produce losers as well as winners.

He said his constituents have found about 140 Democrats committed to the bill and added that about 40

Republicans appear ready to support it. At another point, he said backers were about 40 votes short of the 217 that would be required if all members vote.

"We're going to do the work on our side," he said. "We want the president to do the work" among Republicans.

President Reagan, meeting with business supporters of the measure in the White House, warned that "special interests have massed for a last-ditch effort to kill tax reform."

You know, tax reform has been declared dead so many times by the pundits that I'd be worrying if they weren't predicting trouble ahead."

However, the president said, "We can't afford to become complacent. This is the decisive battle and this is where all we've fought for finally will be won or lost."

He pledged that "in the days ahead we're going to give it a 100 percent effort, one final all-out push over that goal-line."

O'Neill's vote count, but pointed out that the speaker's tally included only those members who unequivocally have made up their minds.

An administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified, predicted passage of the measure. "The votes are still there but anytime the majority leader (Rep. Jim Wright, D-Texas) is against you, you want to make sure you act with an abundance of caution."

A House aide close to the Democratic leadership did not question O'Neill's vote count, but pointed out that the speaker's tally included only those members who unequivocally have made up their minds.

55 mph rollback doubtful this year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Tuesday to allow state legislators to raise the speed limit in rural portions of the interstate system to 65 mph, bowing to complaints from westerners that the current ceiling is unrealistic.

"If easterners don't want to drive in the West, they don't have to," Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, declared before the Senate first refused to kill the plan and then attached it to a $2.3 billion highway authorization bill.

The provision applies to rural portions of the interstate system throughout the country.

The Senate also rejected a move to extend the plan to rural primary and secondary roads, which under the measure approved by the lawmakers would remain at its current level.

Despite the Senate's action, prospects remained doubtful for final action to roll back the unpopular limit by the target date of Oct. 3 for congressional adjournment.

Numerous differences remain to be worked out between the Senate version of the highway program and that of the House, and one of them is the 55 mph speed limit.

A proposed five-year test period for a 65 mph speed limit on rural interstates fell short of approval 198-218 in the House on Aug. 8.

Proponents of the current 55 mph national maximum speed limit, which was enacted in 1974 as an energy-saving measure amid a gasoline shortage, said that raising it by even 10 mph was guaranteed to cost lives.

"If we do this, we will be, in effect, signing the death warrants of 500 men, women and children a year and, in effect, we will be accessories to the maiming of thousands of others," Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., declared.

The measures would enable state legislatures to increase the limit on rural interstate highways but would leave the top speed on other roads at its current level.

Symms said the 55 mph speed limit was unrealistic not only in the wide open spaces of the West but on expressways in the East. He and other supporters of the measure said it was commonly flouted across the nation but had given rise to special cynicism and impatience in western states.

"This is an example of easterners fostering a solution on the West that makes no sense in the West," Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said. He said he sees more cars driving six miles from his home to Capitol Hill than on the 145-mile auto-trip from Billings, Mont., to Miles City, Mont.

Proponents cited a National Safety Council statement that the 55 mph limit has saved lives. Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., cited an array of organizations supporting the limit ranging from Mothers Against Drunk Driving to the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

He acknowledged it was sometimes difficult to tie the speed limit directly to safety and health statistics but said that the American Public Health Association has cited a 60 percent reduction in paralyzing spinal cord injuries as a result of the 1974 law.

Stafford said a study by the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company that said life expectancy increased by 1.8 years between 1972 and 1976 and said that the 55 mph speed limit was the chief reason.

"That's what the issue is here," said Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., a critic of the proposal. "It's not states' rights. It's human lives."

Q. How come dairy cows will kick you catywampus; if you try to milk them from the left side?

A. Critters of habit. Long ago, they were trained from the right because most milkers were right handed. Once the pattern is set, boys don't like it messed up. You can say this about cows, sergeants, grandmothers, loan officers, printrunners, etc.

Recent generations of human beings have grown taller, but that has not been a pattern from the beginning. Cro-Magnon Man was taller than today's man.

EPIDEMIC

Q. How many cases of a disease must show up before it's an epidemic?

A. Depends. On what's average in the area. If the case count of a certain disease rises above average in a given area, it's an epidemic. If the disease is new to an area, the first case is an epidemic.

Video firm using would-be Woody pays real one $425,000

NEW YORK (AP) — A videocassette rental chain that used a would-be Woody Allen in magazine ads will pay the actual Allen $425,000 in an out-of-court settlement, his lawyer says.

WOODY ALLEN Sought $10 million in suit

PHIL BOROFF Barred from poeing as Allen

"We wanted to strike fear in the hearts of people who do this," said Allen, who had sought $10 million in damages. "Anyway, $425,000 is still a lot of money."

The suit was filed in 1984 after the estate Allen, Phil Boroff, appeared in a magazine ad for National Video, posing with videocassettes of Allen's films "Annie Hall" and "Bananas."

"We're gratified that Mr. Allen's rights were vindicated," said Jacob Lauer, attorney for the entertainer and filmmaker.

him. "It's hard for me to tell because I don't look at my face," he replied.

Kin make appearance at Kennedy hospital

HAWTHORNE, Calif. (AP) — Two daughters of slain Sen. Robert F. Kennedy appeared at a hospital named for their father to demonstrate their support for the fight against drug abuse.

slate. Courtney Kennedy Ruhe attended ceremonies at the hospital Monday along with Lawrence Jacobson, administrator of the facility's drug abuse program.

"The Kennedy name stands for compassion for those in need," Jacobson said. "This also is what the Robert F. Kennedy Medical Center and now Kennedy Recovery Program represent as well."

The program features increased family involvement in treating drug abuse cases and day-care for people who don't wish to be hospitalized full time. It has treated 3,700 people, 60 percent of whom lead productive lives outside, Jacobson said.

Bland brings the blues to New Orleans prison

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bluesman Bobby Bland brought his band behind bars to entertain roughly 500 inmates in the Orleans Parish Prison.

Bland, in town for an engagement at the Blue Room of the Fairmont Hotel, performed with his eight-piece band for about an hour Monday.

Bland, who was not paid for the appearance, strolled through the aisles during his performance, shaking hands and singing to individual inmates.

At one point, he leaned over to kiss a woman inmate seated in the second row. But the woman buried her head in her arms, spurning the singer's attempt.

Queen, Philip to get royal Chinese welcome

PEKING (AP) — Britain's Queen Elizabeth II can expect an impressive welcome when she makes her first visit to China next month, British Ambassador Sir Richard Evans said Tuesday.

12 and visit Shanghai, Xian, Kunming and Canton before leaving China on Oct. 18 for Hong Kong.

The Chinese "are pulling out all the stops" said one source involved in the visit. "They want the visit to be a success for their international image and for bilateral relations."

The visit has prompted a rush to finish major construction projects, headed by redoubled efforts to complete the rebuilding of the villa where the queen is to stay.

North Dakota official has surgery for pains

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Lt. Gov.

Ruth Meiers, who is suffering from inoperable lung and brain cancer, underwent gall bladder surgery Tuesday to relieve abdominal pains, a spokeswoman said.

The spokeswoman, Janice Cheney, said the lieutenant governor was suffering from gallstones that doctors said were unrelated to her cancer.

Mrs. Meiers checked into the Medcenter One hospital in Bismarck on Monday after she experienced the stomach pains, Ms. Cheney said.

Couple turned in by daughter pleads innocent

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A couple whose 13-year-old daughter turned them in for alleged cocaine abuse pleaded innocent Tuesday to charges of possession and sought placement in a narcotics education program.

Judith and Bobby Dale Young probably will qualify for the program, but charges will be dropped if they complete it, said Deputy District Attorney James Mulgrew.

On Aug. 13, after hearing a church lecture on the evils of drugs, the daughter, Deanna, went to Tustin police with a trash bag that police said contained $2,800 worth of cocaine plus marijuana, pills and assorted paraphernalia.

over to the Orange County Probation Department for a recommendation on whether the couple qualifies for the program.

Mulgrew said the couple appear to be "statutorily eligible" for the drug education and rehabilitation program that would last about a year.

"It's not a real heavy rehabilitation, live-in type" program, Mulgrew said. It's designed primarily for lightweight users, the prosecutor said.

He said the program is commonly used for first offenders who are charged with relatively minor drug offenses, have no serious criminal record and are judged likely candidates for rehabilitation.

Attorney Ronald Broder, standing for the couple's 13-year-old daughter, Gary Proctor, agreed. "This is not a program for heavy drug addicts. It can be as little as four meetings, where you go and they instruct you and expose you to materials on drug addiction."

After Deanna went to police, she was immediately taken from her parents and placed in a county home for neglected and abused youngsters.

Despite the separation and the charges filed against the Youngs, they and their only child sought to be reunited.

They were allowed back together late last month under the stipulation they not discuss the case since Miss Young is potentially the key witness against her parents.

Earlier this month, another judge dismissed a petition filed by the county Department of Social Services calling the Youngs until parents and child are reunited. It is the custody of Deanna's mother, who is in custody of the county. Publicly surrounding the case prompted at least 30 movie production companies to contact the Youngs' attorneys seeking rights to their story. Deanna's attorney, Susan O'Brien, has said the companies have included Lorimar, Dick Clark Productions, Columbia Pictures, Viacom and dozens of others.

"We have not been at home while that was going on," Mrs. Young said Tuesday of the movie offers.

"They're always talking to Gary Proctor."

She declined any further comment but said she may speak Nov. 6.

The family had previously refused to talk with reporters or representatives of the companies primarily because the family wanted to concentrate on regrouping, Ms. O'Brien said.

Challenger families plan science education center

WASHINGTON (AP) — The families of the astronauts who died in a sixth-grade classroom Tuesday to unveil plans for a national space science education center that will serve as a "living tribute" to their heroes.

Obviously, we all wish that things had gone differently. That's the way it went, and now the challenge is to make the best of it, said Steven McAuliffe, the widower of teacher Christa McAuliffe, one of seven astronauts killed when the space shuttle blew up Jan. 28.

McAuliffe, a 38-year-old lawyer from Ft. Concor, N.H., and other astronaut relatives spoke to about 20 Stevens Elementary School children, some of whom watched the shuttle explode on the television screen early last year.

The appearance at the inner city school marked the first time relatives of four Challenger astronauts have publicly since President Reagan attended a memorial service in Houston three days after the disaster.

The center will provide a hands-on learning environment for students and will operate educational programs in the sciences, perhaps in conjunction with the Smithsonian Institution's Air and Space Museum.

in a 15-minute question-and-answer session. Mrs. Scobee said the center will allow a youngster to act "just like you are an astronaut" and will probably have a flight deck to reflect her husband's love of flying.

Marcia Jarvis, 41, of Hermosa Beach, Calif., the widow of payload specialist Gregory Jarvis, said the education center would properly honor her husband and reflect the ideals of a man who was "always questing for knowledge."

Also attending was Charles Resnik, 33, the brother of astronaut Judith Resnik.

Mrs. Scobee said Jane Smith, Cheryl McNair, and Lorna Onizuka, the widows of three other astronauts, could not make the event at Stevens because of airline schedules.

But they planned to attend a reception at Vice President George Bush's house later and to serve on the board of the Challenger Foundation.

a non-profit group formed by the families, she said. The foundation's aim is to raise $5 million for the start-up of the space science center.

None of the relatives would comment on either an administrative claim that Mrs. Smith, the widow of Michael J. Smith, filed against the government, or a lawsuit that Mrs. McNair, widow of Ronald McNair, has instituted against Morton Thiokol, the manufacturer of the booster rocket that failed.

The astronaut relatives said they wanted to focus on the foundation, and their efforts to secure private and government donations.

Sens. Jack Garn, R-Utah, and John Glenn, D-Ohio, both of whom have flown in space, have introduced a congressional resolution calling for federal money for the education center.

The families have already raised some money, much of it in-kind contributions such as airline tickets.

Reagan's ag policy assaulted by Demos

By JIM DRINKARD
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A group of congressional Democrats launched an election-season assault Tuesday on Reagan administration farm policy, proposing a radically different approach that would shift subsidy costs directly to consumers.

"Reaganomics and the Reagan farm program have been a disaster for farmers and a disaster for America," said Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., a possible presidential contender for 1988. "Today, Democrats are launching a counterattack against Ronald Reagan's policies of neglect."

"A dozen House and Senate Democrats lined up before television cameras to list what they call the failures of current farm law, enacted just nine months ago: the continued slump in U.S. farm exports, the $4.5-billion cost this year and a continued farm economic depression.

Gephardt and Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, introduced a proposal that would constitute an about-face for farm programs, slipping strict controls on production and marketing in order to drive prices up.

The current law is aimed at allowing commodity prices to drop low enough to become competitive on world markets, while paying farmers high subsidies to shield them from the effects of the lower prices. The lawmakers say that farmers are united as never before in favor of such a supply-control approach, citing a list of farm organizations that have backed the bill. The list includes, for the most part, traditionally liberal organizations like the American Agriculture Movement and the National Farmers Union.

Other groups, like the American Farm Bureau Federation, oppose the idea, which was defeated several times last year during congressional consideration of the farm law. There is little chance that Congress with its crowded and election-shortened schedule, will have time to address any massive rewrite of farm law this year.

"But Democrats are hoping that problems with the farm economy, and the unevenness of the nation's economic recovery during the Reagan era, will turn into a potent issue between now and the Nov. 4 elections, enhancing anticipated Democratic gains.

"It is important that we get this out before the elections, so voters can ask their candidates where they stand," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis.

Senate Republicans, meanwhile, are taking a different tack in pursuit of rural votes. Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., has proposed boosting subsidies to wheat, corn and soybean farmers to enable them to sell their commodities overseas at lower prices.

The proposal would cost some $5.5 billion on top of already record farm-program spending this year, however, and Dole has said he is looking for other places to save that amount before going ahead with the idea.

The Democratic proposal calls for grain farmers and dairy producers, beginning in 1989, to vote on whether to institute national limits on how much of a crop each farmer may market. If approved by a majority, price-support levels would be raised dramatically and farmers would have to cut their planted acreage by up to 35 percent. The prices would be set at least at 70 percent of parity, a traditional measure of farm buying power.

The amount of commodity a farmer could produce on the remaining acreage would be further controlled through marketing quotas based on anticipated domestic consumption, export demand and reserve requirements. The effect would be to shrink supply, driving up domestic prices.

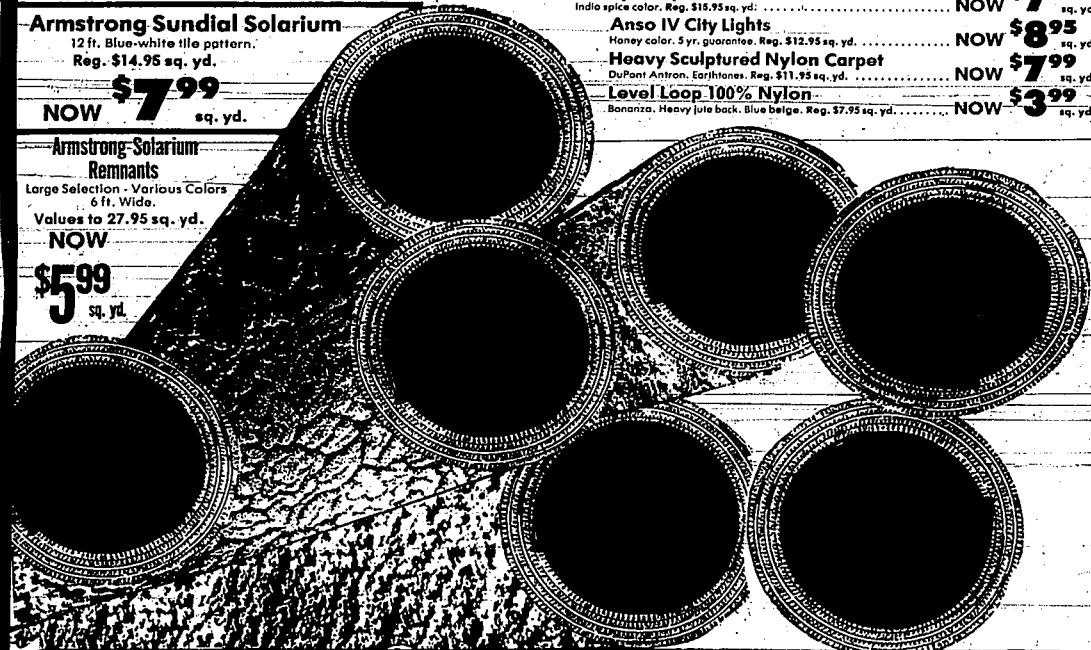

Harkin said the impact on grocery shoppers would be about a 3 to 5 percent increase in their food bills.

Nation's sheep producers pushing for more promotion

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The nation's sheep producers once again have reared their war chest in the battle for America's dinner plates. In a narrow vote recently, they agreed to ante up more money for promotion of lamb and wool.

However, the nationwide referendum did not settle an internal squabble over how best to boost the industry. That controversy now seems headed for the October convention of the American Sheep Producers Council in Denver, leaders say.

The Idaho Wool Growers Association is a primary player in the dispute, having fought the ballot viciously for months.

In the August referendum, sheep raisers throughout the country approved a 50-percent hike in promotional fees. To approve the fees, the U.S. Department of Agriculture required a two-thirds vote of either the producers themselves, or their numbers of sheep in their flocks.

About 62.2 percent of the sheep farmers and ranchers approved, but those individual votes fell short of the two-thirds needed.

Instead, the ballot passed on the strength of the sheep in their flocks. Owners of 68.7 percent of the sheep favored the increase. The vote gave the ASPC as much as 6 cents for each pound of wool marketed or 30 cents for each 100 pounds of unshorn lambs marketed. The fees are deducted automatically from government price support payments for wool.

Next to Alaska — where one sheep farmer voted his 65 head in opposition — Idaho downed the ballot most aggressively. Only 24 percent of the 569 producers voted "aye" and, when the Idaho sheep were counted, the approval slipped to 22.8 percent. Twenty-four other states also were split two-thirds in the sheep count.

However, producers in the remaining 24 states supported the higher fees with their sheep, and some of the margins were large. In Colorado, where the ASPC is located, the vote was 91 percent "yes"; in California, home of ASPC President Tim Indart, it was 89.4

percent. In New Mexico it was 88.7 percent. All are major lamb and wool producing states, as is Idaho. Stan Boyd, executive director of the Idaho Wool Growers Association, said the numbers show that lamb feeders, who fatten sheep for slaughter, controlled the election.

"These lamb feeders are tens of thousands of sheep, and they can vote those sheep," he says. "The ASPC got to a handful of people that had a hell of a vote."

ASPC Executive Director Roger Wesson agrees that the lamb feeders' votes were pivotal. "That's an encouraging support because oftentimes, those are the people that are very involved in the lamb market every day and are in a position to see at very close hand the impact of lamb promotion," he says. The lamb feeders also must pay the fees on their marketings, he notes.

The ballot involved fees for promoting products from sheep. However, it also became a rallying point for factions in the industry. Idaho's wool growers group and those in a few other Western ranching states, such as Utah, had backed the vote. They feared it would cut into voluntary membership fees for the National Association of Wool Growers, which conducts legislative lobbying on federal issues such as public lands and foreign trade.

The ASPC deduction is mandatory. The organization will spend $5.1 million this year, all of it from the "checkoff" fee.

The opponents also questioned the effectiveness of ASPC promotions in boosting lamb and wool consumption. The referendum gained some intrigue when an anonymous leaflet urging defeat was sent to sheep raisers across the country, apparently from the Midwest.

But, in the end, the vote may have swung mostly on pocketbook issues. Wesson said sheep producers in states along both coasts, where the economy has recovered more rapidly, backed higher fees. Many Midwestern farmers, who were expected to back the referendum because of their smaller flocks and smaller costs, turned against the referendum.

Stallings defends his voting record in response to critics

By DEAN MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — U.S. Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, Tuesday defended his record of voting to support the Economic Development Administration, saying that the program that agency put a potato processing plant in Glenns Ferry back to work and restarted a sawmill in Salmon.

Stallings, who is running for re-election, responded to a critic from his Republican opponent that the Republican's criticism of the program is "as legitimate as subsidies for air travel, aid to decrease deficits and has voted to increase taxes."

"I have never voted for a tax increase," Stallings said. His vote for a higher maximum personal income tax rate than what is now in the tax reform bill in Congress was for a 38-percent maximum rate, while the current maximum rate is 50 percent, said Stallings.

Richardson also criticized Stallings for voting to protect the EDA. Stallings said EDA projects have helped Idaho communities such as Glenns Ferry and Salmon. "I just can't imagine where he's coming from," said Stallings.

Richardson criticized a number of Stallings' votes Monday, during a press conference. Among them were Stallings' votes in support of the EDA, Amtrak, Legal Services, and congressional mail privileges.

Reacting to some of the remarks made in the press conference, Idaho Legal Services staff members said there is no duplication of their services, as Richardson said, and the director of the Idaho State Bar backed them up.

Richardson said Stallings opposed legislation to limit congressional mail. Stallings said the did vote against the bill, but offered another that would make congressmen accountable for whatever they spend. He said his bill would not cut the congressional budget for mailing from its current level, but would assign a limit to each congressman.

The bill would require congressmen who use more than their limit to repay the government. Under the current system and the bill he voted against, any excess use would go unrecorded and the postal system would have to ask Congress for a supplemental appropriation, Stallings said.

Stallings said he has sent out two district-wide mailings, while congressional mailings are sent out only once a year. Richardson's criticism of his vote to support Amtrak funding does not bother him. "I don't apologize for that. I think these rural communities need some kind of transportation," he said. Support for Amtrak shows the same services could be delivered more cheaply by other agencies, but the available phone call did not come before his first press conference.

Idaho State Bar Director Dennis Harwick said Tuesday that the Bar has traditionally supported Legal Services and in 1981 passed a resolution in support of legislation to continue support for the program. "They are the only legal aid service program in Idaho," he said.

"I have the idea what he's talking about and I think he summed it up himself when he said he didn't know," said Ernesto Sanchez, the director of Idaho Legal Services.

Sanchez said Richardson's criticism of the agency for "radical" cases, such as a custody case for a lesbian mother, was "outrageous."

He said he knew of no such case in Idaho that Legal Services has handled. Most cases are Social Security or welfare entitlement claims, landlord and tenant cases, and spouse or child-abuse cases, said Sanchez.

Elmore voters approve tax district

By PAT MARGANTONIO
Times-News writer

GLENN'S FERRY — Elmore County residents voted by a margin of more than three to one to approve formation of a hospital tax district for Elmore Memorial Hospital.

With 2,154 residents casting ballots, the final vote was 1,660 for the district and 494 against.

In the Glenns Ferry precinct, support was slightly greater. There, 212 voted for the district and 58 opposed it. The Hammett precinct overwhelmingly supported the proposal with a vote of 49 to 8, and the King Hill precinct voted 24 for and 10 against.

Hospital Administrator Jan Cox says the hospital was taken off tax rolls in 1976 and the passage of the One Percent Initiative in 1978, the possibility of any additional tax revenues was eliminated.

The additional funding from the new district is needed for the maintenance and repair of the building and equipment and the purchase of new equipment, he says.

"We need to continue to pass the state fire-life safety inspections for licensing," Cox said before the vote. "Without that licensing, we would lose our Medicare-Medicaid certification, and that would be a tremendous blow."

The County Commission will now appoint a Hospital District Board. The new board will be responsible for setting a levy.

Idaho law limits the board to a maximum levy of 4 mills. That would mean that the maximum levy on property with a tax assessment of $50,000 would be about $40 a year.

Cox said before the election that if the district was not approved, the condition of the building and equipment would continue to deteriorate. That could have placed the hospital's licensing in jeopardy or forced a cut in services, he said.

Wanted: Applicants for judgeship

HAILEY — Applications to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of 5th District Judge Douglas D. Kramer of Hailey are now being accepted by the Idaho Judicial Council.

Kramer has submitted his resignation effective Nov. 1. After undergoing brain surgery last year after a sudden illness, Kramer has been serving on a part-time basis since March. In announcing his decision to retire, earlier this month, Kramer said he is recovering, he feels the people of Blaine County need a full-time judge.

The Council's executive director, Brian Hamlin of Boise, said applications will be accepted through Oct. 10, and should be submitted to his office at P.O. Box 1535, Boise 83707.

The district court may obtain application forms from the clerks of the district court in each county or from Hamlin's office.

Hamlin said the procedure for selecting a judge then involves interviews by the Judicial Council with each applicant, who will be notified of a time for the interview. Questionnaires are then sent to members of the Bar Association and will be available to the general public afterwards to indicate the qualifications of the applicants.

The position carries an annual salary of $56,000 and requires that the appointee reside in or take up residency in Blaine County.

Brian Ballard of Ketchum, who now serves as president of the 5th Judicial District Bar Association, said the Bar, particularly members in Blaine County, are very concerned about the appointment.

"We only have one judge in this area, and we are very fortunate who will be dealing out justice in our cases," Ballard said. "Judge Kramer has done such an outstanding job, and it will be important that his successor be well qualified."

Kramer has served as district judge in the Blaine County area since 1975 and as administrative judge for the 5th Judicial District for the past 10 years.

Ballard said he knows of no candidates who are actively seeking the position. When the applications are all in and the recommendations of the Idaho Judicial Council are complete, the association may want to adopt a resolution in support of a favorite candidate, he said.

Hamlin said that once the applications are all in and prospective candidates have been interviewed, the council will select the names of from two to four well-qualified persons. These names will be submitted to Gov. John Evans, who will make the appointment.

Qualifications for a district judge include a minimum age of 30 years, citizenship in the U.S., and admission by the state bar association to practice in the local judicial district for at least one year.

County jail

Inmate numbers, costs went down

By PAT MARGANTONIO

TWIN FALLS — About $12,530 was spent by Twin Falls County to transport and board inmates in other jails during August.

The county has yet to pay a $50-plus bill for the boarding of juveniles during August in a youth detention center in Ada County, Sheriff Jim Munn said.

Despite the outstanding bill, the total for August will be less than the more than $14,000 spent by the county to transport and board its inmates during July, Munn said.

The county transports inmates almost daily to comply with a 30-inmate cap on the population of its 75-year-old jail, located in the Twin Falls County Courthouse. The cap was part of an agreement county officials signed Feb. 11 in a settlement reached in a lawsuit filed over the jail.

Munn reported that the jail's daily average population was 44 inmates during August, compared with 51 the previous month. The county transported an average of 19 inmates a day during August, compared with 23 in July.

The county is charged $20-$24 a day per inmate. The decrease in the jail count during August was a welcome surprise, Munn said. The release of several inmates serving long-term sentences was probably one of the factors.

The decreased-population trend was continuing in September. But it might be the quiet before the storm, because October is traditionally a high-population month, Munn said.

The sheriff also reported that Twin Falls County wouldn't be using the Ada County center for a while, because of remodeling there. In the meantime, juveniles would be held in Minidoka County Jail.

Inmates were used in radiation tests

By JOHN K. WILEY
The Associated Press

RICHLAND, Wash. — Radiation experiments funded by a federal agency were conducted on more than 400 prison volunteers in Washington and Oregon during the 1950s and early 1970s, according to newly released documents.

"Effects of Radiation on the Human Testes" describes experiments in which the volunteers' testes were irradiated by X-rays to study the effects of radiation on reproductive function.

Mike Lawrence, operations manager of the U.S. Department of Energy's Hanford nuclear reservation, released the summaries of Atomic Energy Commission projects Monday to the Hanford Health Effects Panel, set up by the national Centers for Disease Control.

The experiments were funded by the Atomic Energy Commission, forerunner of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the Energy Research and Development Administration, according to the documents.

An employee of Battelle's Pacific Northwest Laboratories conducted the test on 67 prisoners at the Oregon State Prison between August 1952 and May 1971. A University of Washington researcher conducted similar tests on 64 Washington State Penitentiary inmates between June 1963 and February 1973.

The Washington state vascetomies were performed before the end of the study "to eliminate the possibility of defective offspring," the summary noted. Although only men desiring a vasectomy were accepted for the study, several of them changed their minds and did not want the surgery, it said.

The tests were carried out to study ways of protecting radiation workers, for medical treatments and to study health effects, said Paula Clark, a Hanford program administrator.

Protocol for the experiments was approved at hospitals before the tests were conducted, she said.

"We're not talking about human experiments in terms of Nazi Germany in World War II," Lawrence told reporters. Hanford no longer is involved in human experimentation.

The information was presented during the first day of testimony before the health effects panel, set up in part because of people seeking compensation for diseases they believe are linked to Hanford's operations.

The Energy Department maintains there are "no observable health impacts" from Hanford operations.

The chairman of the panel said people seeking to prove such a link may be disappointed.

"The biggest problem is the over-expectation that we will be able to complete the study and 'analyze' the health effects caused by Hanford operations," said Dr. Glyn Caldwell.

But Caldwell, assistant director of the Arizona Department of Health Services and a cancer epidemiologist, said the panel will make recommendations after its week-long study that will point the way for others.

Lack of data and a transient population are barriers to completing a credible epidemiological study, he said. In addition, he noted that one in four people can expect to get cancer without radioactive contamination.

The panel heard testimony Monday by a number of federal and state agencies charged with monitoring radioactive and chemical releases from the 570-square-mile reservation.

And U.S. Rep. Jim Weaver, D-Ore., asked the panel by letter to recommend an investigation of the effects of radiation on soldiers stationed at Camp Hanford during the 1950s.

Weaver said more than 2,700 soldiers were stationed at Camp Hanford in the 1950s to guard Nike missile emplacements and that some had been contaminated.

Richard Mecklenberg of Brookings, Ore., told the panel he was stationed there in 1954 when a massive release "turned the grass black" and caused his hair to fall out.

Soldiers were told to take showers and burn their clothing, but nothing more was done, he said.

Mecklenberg and others now have tumors and other health problems and are seeking payments from the Veterans Administration for service-related illnesses.

In addition to the CDC panel, the Washington Nuclear Waste Board's historical document review committee also is studying the environmental effects of more than 40 years of nuclear weapon materials production, said Dr. Rayton Filly of the Washington State University Nuclear Radiation Center and the committee's chairman.

Warden says work approved by higher official

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The Washington State Penitentiary warden in charge when inmates underwent radiation experiments 23 years ago says "somebody in Olympia" approved the work.

"It was just given instructions that the experiments had been approved," said Bobby Rhay, prison warden from 1967 to 1977. He was also told that the work was important for the U.S. space program because researchers wanted to learn the effects of space travel on astronauts, said Rhay.

"They told us that they (astronauts) were exposed to so much radiation during a flight that they wanted to test them (inmates)," he said from his home in Walla Walla as Centers for Disease Control scientists convened a special study panel in Richland on the health effects of 40 years of work at the Hanford nuclear reservation.

Documents released by the Department of Energy on Monday, at the study panel's request, revealed the use of Washington and Oregon inmates for studies of X-rays in tests.

Rhay said the experiments started in 1963 and did not go on very long. The DOE report said the inmates were examined for as long as six years after exposure for changes in their sperm and chromosomes.

The inmates volunteered for the experiments and gave informed consent, Rhay said. The former warden said he could not remember if the inmates were paid to participate, but he believes that was the case.

A University of Washington doctor named Dr. Paulson conducted the experiments on 64 inmates, whose names were not included in the report. Rhay could not remember Paulson's first name, but said, "I was really impressed with Dr. Paulson. He was quite professional."

The inmates were given doses of radiation to their testicles and agreed beforehand to undergo vasectomies later in order to prevent conception of damaged children.

Some of the inmates in the tests changed their minds as the experiment progressed and did not get vasectomies, the report said.

"Many of them were lifers who volunteered," said Rhay on Monday. "There was a very complete briefing. They explained everything. It satisfied me."

"It was done according to the book as far as I was concerned."

This was the type of thing we saw and condemned under Hitler," said Dr. Wayne Atwood of Spokane, local president of Physicians for Social Responsibility.

"The whole concept of human experimentation has been viewed with concern, and considered unacceptable," Atwood said. "This has been done in the past, but it has been condemned by the medical community."

Greyhound losses termed larger in wake of alleged leasing swindle

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — An attorney for the Greyhound Corp., which filed a lawsuit in an attempt to recover $66 million lost in an alleged swindle, has told a federal judge that the company's losses actually may be much larger than that.

Robert Ehrenbard, who represents Greyhound in the lawsuit filed in August 1985 in an attempt to recover the money lost by a subsidiary of the Phoenix-based company, said Monday that allegations turned out to be "the tip of the iceberg."

"I think the case is taking a very different turn," he said, indicating that additional individuals and companies have been implicated in the fraud.

Greyhound claimed in the lawsuit that companies in Arizona, Utah and Colorado and eight individuals were involved in fake leasing agreements with Greyhound Leasing and Finance Corp.

Greyhound Leasing lent money to customers who claimed they would buy oil-field equipment, but the customers' leasing agreements with other companies turned out to be fake, according to the lawsuit.

To date, the company says it has recovered at least $48 million of the $66 million lost in the alleged scheme, which the suit said was led by former Utah businessman Sheldon Player, 36, now of Mesa.

Ehrenbard told U.S. District Judge Robert Broomfield during a hearing in Phoenix on Monday that before elaborating on the new allegations in public, the company is negotiating privately with some in July of perjury and transporting individuals and companies involved in hopes of settling out of court.

"We've run into real roadblocks, your honor, in trying to figure out what happened to our client's money," Ehrenbard said. "The breadth, the length and the depth of the fraud here is greater than we ever imagined."

Broomfield set a Nov. 4 deadline for Greyhound to revise the lawsuit to include additional defendants and allegations, telling Ehrenbard that "your iceberg is coming out of the water a little too slowly."

Ehrenbard would not comment after the hearing.

Player is awaiting sentencing, while Sayed A. Hasan, 58, is serving a 15-year prison sentence.

Player, who pleaded guilty and testified against Hasan, faces up to 10 years in prison on convictions of mail fraud and interstate transportation of money obtained by fraud.

Hasan was convicted by a jury in negotiating privately with some in July of perjury and transporting money obtained by fraud.

Wilberg Mine fire findings due out

CASTLE DALE, Utah (AP) — Investigators from the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration, the FBI and three state and local agencies will make public Friday preliminary findings in their investigation of the 1984 Wilberg Mine disaster.

Katherine Snyder, spokeswoman for the federal agency officials, have scheduled a news conference at the Emery County sheriff's office here at 11 a.m.

MSHA has been investigating the cause of a Dec. 18, 1984, fire which trapped 27 miners and supervisors more than a mile inside the central Utah coal mine.

"It won't be the final report," Ms. Snyder said, but she added authorities would reveal some details of their findings to date.

Representatives of the FBI, the Utah Industrial Commission, the Utah fire marshals office and the Emery County sheriff's office also will attend the news conference.

The FBI and local authorities were included in the investigation because of the possibility, never ruled out, that arson may have been a cause of the blaze.

Another possible cause is a faulty compressor.

Northwest film set to open

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — "Shadow Play," a movie filmed entirely in Oregon and Washington, opens Friday at theaters in Portland, Seattle and four other cities.

The movie is the first feature-length film, financed entirely by Oregon investors, that's to be distributed worldwide, according to Millennium Pictures Inc. of Portland.

Described as a romantic mystery, the movie stars Dee Wallace Stone and Cloris Leachman. It tells the story of a Manhattan playwright obsessed by the tragic death of his fiance seven years earlier.

The B-rated movie was written and directed by Susan Shadburne of Portland, and co-produced by Mr. Shadburne, Dan Biggs and Will Vinton, a Portland animator best known for the "Claymation" technique he developed. It's being released by New World Pictures of Los Angeles.

Shadow Play also will open Friday in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver and Salt Lake City, and will continue to open elsewhere nationally in the coming months.

Its invitation-only premiere will be held Thursday in Portland.

Utahn to wage write-in vote after just missing in primary

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrat Terry Williams, the only black to serve in the Utah Legislature, said Tuesday he would wage a write-in campaign in the U.S. Senate after narrowly losing the Democratic primary.

Williams, 35, will oppose Republican Sen. Jake Garn, who is heavily favored to win the Senate seat. Also running is Democrat Craig Oliver, who defeated Williams in the August primary by a 275-vote margin.

Williams said he accepted Oliver as the Democratic nominee but called him "inexperienced" and "not equipped to mount a serious campaign." He said he had no chance of winning.

"The Utah constituency needs a hard-hitting, no-nonsense voice to attack the inconsistent and careless Sen. Garn," Williams said.

Utahns feel are most important are not being debated or championed in the campaign rhetoric," Williams said.

He criticized Garn for ignoring American Indians and farmers and for supporting nuclear testing and the "Star Wars" nuclear defense system.

Oliver, a Murray real estate salesman, responded to Williams' announcement Tuesday afternoon, calling it "nothing more than a futile attempt by a sore loser to keep his name in the press for another few weeks."

"Democrats in Utah have elected their candidate for the U.S. Senate in a fairly fought primary election. Oliver said, "It is now imperative that we unite our efforts in the tremendous challenge of unseating Sen. Garn."

He said Williams' latest effort would gain him only "mimicry" votes. However, Oliver said he was used to the effort because he and Williams had pledged during the primary to support the eventual nominee.

"Over the course of the primary there must have been 10 different occasions where Terry and I swore our support and allegiance to whoever came out of that thing. I was sincere in my pledge. He obviously was not," Oliver said.

Williams said he was more concerned with bringing up issues that have not been mentioned than he was with dividing the Democratic Party.

Magistrate court

License suspended 180 days.

Woman dies in accident

KETCHUM — A young Ketchum woman died Monday evening of injuries suffered in a traffic accident in Blaine County a short time earlier.

Leigh Lardner Robinson, 24, was the driver of a vehicle that failed to negotiate a curve on state Highway 75 at the south edge of Ketchum. The accident was reported at 7:47 p.m. and Robinson was pronounced dead about an hour later at Magi Valley Community Hospital in Sun Valley.

Investigating officer Brian McNary of the Blaine County Sheriff's Office said that Robinson's car left the highway on the curve and dropped down a six-foot embankment, overturning. She was wearing a seat belt and was partially ejected from the vehicle.

McNary said she suffered multiple injuries and was taken to the hospital by ambulance.

"She moved to Pennsylvania about 12 years ago from her parents and made her home with an uncle, Henry Taylor.

There were no other vehicles involved and no passengers with Robinson.

Inmates were used in radiation tests

By JOHN K. WILEY
The Associated Press

RICHLAND, Wash. — Radiation experiments funded by a federal agency were conducted on more than 100 prison volunteers in Washington and Oregon during the 1950s and early 1970s, according to newly released documents.

"Effects of Radiation on the Human Testes" describes experiments in which the volunteers' testicles were irradiated by X-rays to study the effects of radiation on reproductive function.

Mike Lawrence, operations manager of the U.S. Department of Energy's Hanford nuclear reservation, released the summaries of Atomic Energy Commission Monday to the Hanford Health-Effects Panel, set-up by the National Centers for Disease Control.

The experiments were funded by the Atomic Energy Commission, forerunner of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the Energy Research and Development Administration, according to the documents.

An employee of Battelle's Pacific Northwest Laboratories conducted the test on 67 prisoners at the Oregon State Prison between August 1963 and May 1971. A University of Washington researcher conducted similar tests on 64 Washington State Penitentiary inmates between June 1963 and February 1973.

In the Washington study, vasectomies were performed before the end of the study "to eliminate the possibility of defective offspring," the summary noted. Although only men desiring a vasectomy were accepted for the study, several of them changed their minds and did not want the surgery, it said.

The tests were carried out to study ways of protecting radiation workers, for medical treatments and to study health effects, said Paul Stark, a Hanford program administrator.

Protocol for the experiments was approved at hospitals before the tests were conducted, she said.

"We're not talking about human experiments in terms of Nazi Germany in World War II," Lawrence told reporters. Hanford no longer is involved in human experimentation.

The information was presented during the first day of testimony before the health effects panel, set up in part because of people seeking compensation for diseases they believe are linked to Hanford's operations.

"The Energy Department maintains there are 'no observable health impacts' from Hanford operations."

The chairman of the panel said people seeking to prove such a link may be disappointed.

"The biggest problem is the over-expectation that we will be able to complete the study and analysis" of health effects caused by Hanford operations, said Dr. Glyn Caldwell.

But Caldwell, assistant director of the Arizona Department of Health Services and a cancer epidemiologist, said the panel will make recommendations after its week-long study that will point the way for others.

Lack of data and a transient population are barriers... to completing a credible epidemiological study, he said. In addition, he noted that one in four people can expect to get cancer without radioactive contamination.

The panel heard testimony Monday by a number of federal and state agencies charged with monitoring radioactive and chemical releases from the 270-square-mile reservation.

And U.S. Rep. Jim Weaver, D-Ore., asked the panel by letter to recommend an investigation of the effects of radiation on soldiers stationed at Camp Hanford during the 1950s.

Weaver said more than 3,700 soldiers were stationed at Camp Hanford in the 1950s to guard Nike missile emplacements and that some had been contaminated.

Richard Mecklenberg of Brookings, Ore., told the panel he was stationed there in 1954 when a massive release "turned the grass black" and caused his hair to fall out.

Soldiers were told to take showers and burn their clothing, but nothing more was done, he said.

Mecklenberg and others now have tumors and other health problems and are seeking payments from the Veterans Administration for service-related illnesses.

In addition to the DOE panel, the Washington Nuclear Waste Board's historical document review committee also is studying the environmental effects of more than 40 years of nuclear weapon materials production, said Dr. Royston Filby of the Washington State University Nuclear Radiation Center and the committee's chairman.

Warden says work approved by higher official

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The Washington State Penitentiary warden in charge when inmates underwent radiation experiments 23 years ago says "somebody in Olympia" approved the work.

"I was just given instructions that the experiments had been approved," said Bobby Rhay, prison warden from 1957 to 1977. He was also told that the work was important for the space program.

"They told us that they (astronauts) were exposed to so much radiation during a flight that they wanted to test them (inmates)," he said from his home in Walla Walla.

Documents released by the Department of Energy on Monday, at the study panel's request, revealed the use of Washington and Oregon inmates for studies of X-rays on testicles.

Rhay said the experiments started in 1963 and did not go on very long. The DOE report said the inmates were examined for as long as six years after exposure for changes in their sperm and chromosomes.

The inmates volunteered for the experiments and were told of the consequences, Rhay said. The former warden said he could not remember if the inmates were paid to participate, but he believes that was the case.

A University of Washington doctor named "Dr. Paulson" conducted the experiments on 64 inmates, whose names were not included in the report, Rhay said, but he really impressed with Dr. Paulson. He was quite professional.

The inmates were given doses of radiation to their testicles and agreed beforehand to undergo vasectomies later in order to prevent conception of damaged children.

"Some of the inmates in the tests changed their minds as the experiment progressed and did not get vasectomies, the report said.

"Many of them were liars who volunteered," said Rhay on Monday. "There was a very complete briefing. They explained everything. It was done according to the book as far as I was concerned."

"This was the type of thing we saw and condemned under Hitler," said Dr. Wayne Attwood of Spokane, local president of Physicians for Social Responsibility.

The whole concept of human experimentation has been viewed with concern, and considered unacceptable," Attwood said. "This has been done in the past, but it has been condemned by the medical community."

Greyhound losses termed larger in wake of alleged leasing swindle

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — An attorney for the Greyhound Corp., which filed a lawsuit in an attempt to recover $60 million lost in an alleged swindle, said a federal judge that the company's losses actually may be much larger than that.

Robert Ehrenhard, who represents Greyhound in the lawsuit, filed in August an attempt to recover the money lost by a subsidiary of the Phoenix-based company, said Monday that allegations contained in the suit were "the tip of the iceberg."

"I think the case is taking a very different turn," he said, indicating that additional individuals and companies have been implicated in the fraud.

Greyhound claimed in the lawsuit that companies in Arizona, Utah and Colorado and eight individuals were involved in fake leasing agreements with Greyhound Leasing and Financial Corp.

Greyhound Leasing lent money to customers who claimed they would buy oil-field equipment, but the customers' leasing agreements with other companies turned out to be fake, according to the lawsuit.

To date, the company says it has recovered at least $48 million of the $60 million lost in the alleged scheme, which the suit said was led by former Utah businessman Sheldon Player, now of Mesa.

Ehrenhard told U.S. District Judge Robert Broomfield during a hearing in Phoenix on Monday that before elaborating on the new allegations in public, the company is negotiating privately with some individuals and companies involved in hopes of settling out of court.

"We've run into real roadblocks, your honor, in trying to figure out what happened to our client's money," Ehrenhard said. "The breadth, the length and the depth of the fraud here is greater than we ever imagined."

Broomfield set a Nov. 3 deadline for Greyhound to revise its lawsuit to include additional defendants and allegations, telling Ehrenhard that "your iceberg is coming out of the water a little too slowly."

Ehrenhard would not comment after the hearing.

Player is awaiting sentencing, while Sayed A. Hasan, 58, is serving a 15-year prison sentence.

Player, who pleaded guilty and testified against Hasan, faces up to 10 years in prison on convictions of mail fraud and interstate transportation of money obtained by fraud.

Hasan was convicted by a jury in July of perjury and transporting money obtained by fraud.

Wilberg Mine fire findings due out

CASTLE DALE, Utah (AP) — Investigators from the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration, the FBI and three state and local agencies will make public Friday preliminary findings in their investigation of the 1984 Wilberg Mine disaster.

Katherine Snyder, spokeswoman for the federal agency, said officials have 300 documents at the Emery County sheriff's office here at 11 a.m.

MSHA has been investigating the cause of a Dec. 19, 1984, fire which trapped 27 miners and supervisors more than a mile inside the central Utah coal mine.

"It won't be the final report," Ms. Snyder said, but she added authorities would reveal some details of their findings to date.

Representatives of the FBI, the Utah Industrial Commission, the Utah fire marshals' office and the Emery County sheriff's office also will attend the news conference.

The FBI and local authorities were included in the investigation because of the possibility the fire was caused by arson or may have been a cause of the blaze.

Another possible cause is a faulty compressor.

Northwest film set to open

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — "Shadow Play," a movie filmed entirely in Oregon and Washington, opens Friday at theaters in Portland, Seattle and four other cities.

The movie is the first feature-length film, financed entirely by Oregon investors, that's to be distributed worldwide, according to Millennium Pictures Inc. of Portland.

Described as a romantic mystery, the movie stars Dee Wallace Stone and Cloris Leachman. It tells the story of a Manhattan playwright whose invitation-only premiere will be observed by the tragic death of her husband Thursday in Portland.

finace seven years earlier.

The R-rated movie was written and directed by Susan Shadburne of Portland, and co-produced by Ms. Shadburne, Dan Biggs and Will Vinton, a Portland animal best known for the "Claymation" technique he developed. It's being released by New World Pictures of Los Angeles.

Shadow Play also will open Friday in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver and Salt Lake City, and will continue to open elsewhere nationally in the coming months. Its invitation-only premiere will be held Thursday in Portland.

Fugitive eludes Midwestern dragnet, wanted in 2 murders

WRIGHT CITY, Mo. (AP) — A fugitive with no regard for human life" who allegedly killed two people and abducted several others during a Midwest rampage eluded a dragnet Tuesday, while some residents of this small town kept their doors locked and windows boarded.

Authorities said more than 100 heavily armed officers using dogs and helicopters were involved in the hunt for Michael W. Jackson, 41, of Indianapolis.

Jackson had vowed not to be taken alive, the Indianapolis Star said. He was believed to be armed with a sawed-off shotgun and a pistol.

Missouri Highway Patrol Capt. John Ford said there had been few leads. But he said authorities suspected Jackson was still in the area because there had been no reports of stolen vehicles and Jackson apparently hid on foot after a gun battle with a local police officer.

"We've got nothing, but everyone is still out and that will continue until he's caught or it's determined that he's out of the area," Ford said.

Officers carrying automatic weapons stopped cars and searched passing freight trains. A man with an appearance similar to Jackson's was picked up hitchhiking in the area, but later was cleared and released. Some residents of this community of 1,200 people heeded warnings to stay home.

"I'll guarantee you I had all the doors locked, all the lights on and all the guns loaded," said Brenda Luecke, 38, a mother of two small children.

"It's also been very noisy for such a small, quiet town, with helicopters buzzing over you and police cars roaring by."

Orville Scarbrough said he and his wife were not taking any chances.

"I'm not too afraid for myself personally, but she's pretty scared," he said. "I do admit I slept with my gun next to my head all last night."

Authorities said Jackson, who has a history of mental problems and a lengthy criminal record, shot and killed a federal probation officer and a store clerk in Indianapolis early Monday. He later made his way across Indiana and Illinois and into eastern Missouri by commandeering cars and trucks.

Police said he abducted six people along the way, robbed a woman in suburban St. Louis and wounded a Wright City police officer during a gun battle before escaping on foot in the wooded, rolling hills about 45 miles west of St. Louis.

"He's got no regard for human life," said Roland Clemonds, 31, the wounded officer. "He shoots at will at anybody he wants to shoot at. He doesn't care. The thing is just try to stay out of his path."

Clemonds returned fire but it was not known if the suspect was hit, said Highway Patrol Sgt. Ron Wiedemann.

Jackson was convicted in September 1985 on a federal charge of possessing illegal firearms and sentenced to one year in prison and three years' probation.

5 air traffic controllers on leave due to drugs

OLATHE, Kan. (AP) — Five air traffic controllers at the Kansas City Air Traffic Control Center were found to have used illegal drugs and have been removed from active duty, the Federal Aviation Administration said Tuesday.

The five were among 36 controllers investigated for off-duty marijuana and cocaine use, said Evelyn Siro, an FAA spokeswoman.

The 36 controllers were removed from duty and placed on administrative leave. Investigations have since cleared 28 controllers and they were returned to duty. Investigations continue against three others.

Five controllers were placed on administrative leave when the investigation began Sept. 15. The other controllers were put on leave between Sept. 17 and Sept. 19.

The safety and the efficiency of the air traffic control system has not been affected, said Felton Lancaster, manager of the Kansas City center.

House picks rose as national flower to end debate that started in 1800s

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House, bristling aside the claims of marigolds and dogwood blossoms, corn cobs and columbines, ended decades of indecision Tuesday and crowned the rose, that thorny beauty, America's national flower.

The voice-vote decision completed congressional action on the rose resolution, ending a debate over an appropriate "national floral emblem" for the United States that had flickered on and on since the late 19th century.

The Senate nodded approval to the rose as national flower a year ago and the bill now goes to President Reagan's desk.

"The rose is widely viewed as a symbol of love, peace, friendship, courage and devotion," said Rep. Robert Garcia, D-N.Y., in the moments before the House acted. "Different variations are grown in every section of the country. Interest in this legislation has markedly increased and polls show an overwhelming support of the rose as the national flower."

"The rose is easily recognized, attractive and a native American flower," said Rep. James V. Hansen, R-Ore.

state and has become a part of many official ceremonies.

"The White House rose garden is just one tribute to the flower's enduring popularity," the committee said.

More than 70 bills have been introduced over the decades to promote the cause of one flower or another as an official national symbol.

These have included the dogwood blossom, corn tassel, mountain laurel, columbine, among others.

But the triumph of the rose recalls the eloquent congressional campaign mounted by the late Senate Majority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen, R-Ill., who year after year sought to convince his colleagues of the merits of the marigold.

"I never saw it as a contest between the rose and the marigold," Mrs. Johnston said. "I love the marigold, too, and have them in my garden as well. But I just don't believe it has the beauty and grace to be the symbol for our country."

Nonetheless, the memory of Dirksen's honey-coated voice raised in praise of the marigold lingers in the history of Senate oratory.

Here he was on April 17, 1967, campaigning for a flower he said was as truly symbolic of America as the stars and stripes and the American eagle.

"It is as sprightly as the daffodil, as colorful as the rose, as resolute as the zinnia, as delicate as the carnation, as haughty as the chrysanthemum, as aggressive as the petunia, as ubiquitous as the violet, and as stately as the snapdragon. It bequeats the senses and ennobles the spirit of man."

On Jan. 11, 1960, Dirksen told the Senate: "I am not insensible to the fact that selection of a flower as our national floral emblem has been a matter of high controversy."

The rose resolution was sponsored in the Senate by Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., whose wife Mary lobbied for its passage.

"I'm elated; this is a historic moment for our country," Mrs. Johnston said after the House vote. "I think the rose is a perfect symbol for us because of its beauty, history, poetry and grace."

The bill was reported out of the House Committee Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which noted that the rose grows in every

Waldheim signed anti-Jewish propoganda, group charges

By JERRY SCHWARTZ
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — An extortion to "kill the Jews" was among a packet of anti-Semitic propoganda initiated by Kurt Waldheim while he served in the German army during World War II, World Jewish Congress officials said Tuesday.

The German pamphlets, discovered by WJC investigators in the U.S. National Archives, were turned-over to the Justice Department as part of the congress-campaign to have the Austrian president banned from entering the United States.

"Cursed be the Jews who sit over the necks of our relatives ... and suck their blood," said one of the leaflets, prepared to be dropped behind Soviet lines to encourage Red Army soldiers to desert.

Another concluded: "Enough of the Jewish war, kill the Jews, come over."

Waldheim, the former United Nations secretary-general, was elected president of Austria earlier this year despite allegations by the WJC and others that he had been less than candid about his Nazi involvement.

Stan Steinberg, WJC executive director, said the documents were important because they represent "another shocking thing that he's (Waldheim's) involved in."

Previously, he said, Waldheim's propoganda role was not known.

"This is precisely the kind of activity that should place Waldheim on the 'watch list' that would prevent him from entering the United States," Steinberg said. Under federal law, the list includes people who assist in religious persecution.

"If we had no other documents, this alone would be sufficient," he said.

Steinberg acknowledged that Waldheim was unlikely to come to the United States, and that his placement on the list would not prevent him from going to the United Nations. But he said Waldheim should be barred nonetheless as "a moral expression of American outrage."

The presidential office in Austria was closed when The Associated Press tried to reach Waldheim for comment on the allegations.

Waldheim has denied WJC charges that he was aware of Nazi atrocities and attacks against Jews and others. But he has admitted that he was deputy to the chief intelligence officer of his army unit in the Balkans.

The WJC said it was in that capacity that Waldheim initiated the leaflets and a title index and cover report on Nov. 22, 1944.

The congress said Waldheim's uni-als were located in a box printed on both the title index and the cover report that was set aside for "03," the designation for deputy to the chief intelligence officer, the position that Waldheim admits he held.

The leaflets were prepared by a German army propoganda company and sent to Waldheim at high command headquarters.

The congress said another document indicates Waldheim's unit had major propoganda responsibilities, with the company that printed the leaflets reporting directly to Waldheim's section.

President stung by Jackson on policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson on Tuesday accused President Reagan of a "racist-conscienceless policy toward Africans and African-Americans" and of ignoring South Africa when he addressed the United Nations.

The civil rights leader, delivering a sharp criticism of Reagan at a news conference, said the president's policies have had racist effects but stopped short of using that term to describe the president.

"I don't know what's in his heart," Jackson said. "I've not been able to deal with-intellectually-the effect-is racist."

Jackson added: "I don't know whether he's a congenital racist or not; I can only deal with his policies, and they are race-conscious policies that have had damaging impact on people of color."

White House spokesman Pete Rousset did not immediately return a reporter's phone call Tuesday seeking comment on Jackson's remarks.

Jackson also pointed to what he said was a pattern of opposition to his efforts to civil rights and voting rights laws.

He cited a recent incident in which a black congressman, Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., was prevented from entering a White House meeting on the drug problem.

"The locking Mr. Rangel out is racist behavior," Jackson said. "And (being) unwilling to meet with the black press leaders is racist policy. Not criticizing South Africa before the United Nations while cutting aid to Zimbabwe and Tanzania is a racist policy."

The White House said Saturday that Reagan had rejected an invitation from Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda to meet in Africa with leaders of the countries.

Deputy press secretary Albert R. Brashear said Reagan had schedule problems and "just didn't have the time" for such a trip, but that Secretary of State George Schultz might meet with them when he visits southern Africa next month.

Red lemur rediscovered

NEW YORK (AP) — A bamboo-eating lemur with rusty-red fur and golden cheeks that was thought to have become extinct has been rediscovered in the mountainous rain forests of Madagascar, scientists announced Tuesday.

The greater bamboo lemur is a large, stocky, wall-climbing creature, the size of a large cat, with a raucous, crow-like call, said Patricia Wright, the Duke University primatologist who found it during a summer expedition to Madagascar.

"This is the most significant primatological discovery of the decade," said Russell Mittermeier, director of the primate program of the World Wildlife Fund-U.S.

"It's a major species, and it's so distinct that it may be in its own genus," he said. "In terms of its ecology, it's a highly specialized species, and that degree of specialization is unusual in primates," he said. "It seems to be eating just a certain kind of bamboo."

Wright found that the lemur prefers giant bamboo, which reaches heights of 65 feet and produces stalks three inches in diameter at their base.

Like all lemurs, it is a primate, as are monkeys, apes and humans. True lemurs are found only in Madagascar, an island nation in the Indian Ocean that is half again as big as California and has perhaps the most diverse collection of plants and animals of any region on earth, Mittermeier said.

The rediscovery of the lemur fills a critical need for scientists trying to trace the evolution of primates in Madagascar, Wright said, because it is the only survivor among 20 species of lemurs known from fossils to have lived in Madagascar 1,000 years ago.

Prior to Wright's discovery, the last confirmed sightings of the lemur were in 1972, when two Frenchmen captured a pair of them and brought them to zoos, where they soon died, Wright said in a telephone interview.

Israeli jets pound guerilla bases in Lebanon

By FAROUK NASSAR
The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli jets bombed Palestinian guerilla bases in the hills east of Beirut Tuesday, setting at least four targets ablaze, police said.

The raid came one day after Israel massed troops along the border with Lebanon in an apparent warning to Shiite Moslem guerillas to cease their attacks in south Lebanon, near Israel. The border situation was quiet Tuesday.

President Hafez Assad was quoted as threatening a "stunning retaliation" if Israel invades Lebanon.

Police said huge clouds of smoke billowed from the bluffs of Bybassour, Keyroun, Elit and Shlman, 12 miles east of Beirut, after Beirut sustained considerable damage in the strikes that began at 5:30 p.m. It was the air raid.

The Abu Moussa guerrilla faction and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The Abu Moussa Fatah-Uprising, which broke away from PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's Fatah, said in a communique in Beirut that its bases east and southeast of Beirut sustained considerable damage in the strikes.

The Abu Moussa group said no Palestinians were killed or injured. Police said two militants from Druse warrior Walid Jumblat's Progressive Socialist Party, which controls Lebanon's central mountains, were wounded.

The party is allied with Palestinian guerilla groups backed by Syria.

The Israeli planes made at least four bombing runs in 40 minutes, with eight jets taking part in each sortie, police said. The pilots released red balloons that distracted the guerillas' shoulder-fired, heat-seeking SA-7 missiles.

Beirut International Airport was closed for 30 minutes during the attacks, with one commercial flight diverted to Cyprus and four other flights delayed, aviation officials said.

The threat raised fears of a new military collision between U.S.-supplied Israeli and Soviet-equipped Syria on Lebanese soil for the second time in four years.

"If it (Israel) attempts a new invasion, the retaliation will be stunning. It will be a surprise to all," Assad was quoted as saying by the leftist Beirut newspaper Al-Hakika.

French bombings fan anti-Arab feeling

By MORT ROSENBLUM
The Associated Press

TOULON, France — The backlash against terrorism is fanning anti-Arab prejudices that have been smoldering in France since the Algerian war ended 25 years ago.

Bitterness wells up in this port, in Marseilles and elsewhere on the Mediterranean coast where former combatants — both French and Arab — have been settling since Algeria gained independence from France in 1962.

It also extends to northern cities where outraged, frightened people link terrorist bombings with all Arabs. Five bombings in Paris beginning Sept. 5 killed nine people and injured more than 150, and Middle Eastern groups have claimed responsibility.

In Paris, a Moroccan who owns a small business and asked not to be named, echoed remarks made by other businessmen.

"You can see it coming. Nobody stops to think that terrorism comes from a small group of people in the Middle East. There is going to be open season on Arabs."

North Africans complain mostly of insults, police harassment and growing uneasiness. But there is also violence.

In Toulon last month, even before the most recent bombings in the capital, four members of the right-wing SOS-France were blown up while transporting explosives that investigators said would have been used against North African immigrants.

At their funeral, attended by the mayor of the industrial satellite community of La Seyne, a police officer eulogized: "What you took to be your duty you carried out to the end."

One mourner sobbed: "They died for France."

Since spring, 10 bombs have shattered bars and halls in Toulon where immigrants gather, severely injuring several North Africans.

"The Algerian war has never ended here," said Ahmed Touati, Toulon chairman of the nationwide organization SOS-Racism, formed to combat racial discrimination. Touati moved to Paris after his life was threatened.

He blames Toulon Mayor Francois Trucy and other authorities for making public links between North African immigrants and problems facing France — terrorism, unemployment and rising crime.

"It's almost a call to attack," he said.

"Toulon is full of paramilitary thugs waiting to be motivated to act as in the past. If incited with false pretenses, they will kill innocent people."

Touati said he worked hard to calm militants who want to fight back. "They feel isolated, alone, and authorities encourage conditions for attacks against them," he said.

"Immigrant" is a misleading label, he added. He is French, for example, born in Toulon where he is joining the navy. His father settled here in 1945 after fighting in the French army that liberated the city from the Germans.

For many, however, Arab means immigrant.

"There are too many here, way too many, and they have to be sent back," said Paul Lopez, vice president of the Maison du Para, a gathering place for the extremists.

The newly formed organization includes retired paratroopers, other veterans, sympathizers and a number of young sons of members who take part in sporting events.

Its bar, under a parachute pinned to the ceiling, is decorated by memorabilia from Vietnam and Algeria. On a typical afternoon, uniformed police reminisce with retired Foreign Legionnaires and members of the secret Army Organization, which tried to block independence by terrorizing Algerians in France.

The Maison du Para, inaugurated earlier this year by Mayor Trucy, is in the downtown ward where the extreme right-wing National Front of Jean-Marie Le Pen scored 33 percent in last March's elections. The National Front polled 10 percent nationwide.

At the other extreme, 8,000 North Africans live in a separate downtown neighborhood in an atmosphere reminiscent of the old Casbah in Algiers.

Young men drink somberly in bars, suspiciously eyeing European newcomers. An American correspondent, introduced by a familiar local journalist, received mainly one-word answers to his questions.

1910. Fujio also said Japanese war atrocities in China were an acceptable part of warfare.

China, South Korea and other Asian countries strongly criticized Fujio's comments, and part of the reason for Nakasone's visit to South Korea last weekend was to mend relations by expressing his regret over the incident.

Japan's ties with its Asian neighbors also were damaged in June when several countries protested the Japanese government's approval of a high school textbook which they said whitewashed Japan's military actions in World War II.

Aides say Nakasone was misquoted on remarks

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese newspaper aides Tuesday quoted Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone as saying that the U.S. intelligence level is lower than Japan's because of the blacks, Puerto Ricans and Mexicans in the United States.

But spokesmen for Nakasone's Liberal Democratic Party and the Foreign Ministry said the prime minister was quoted out of context.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Yoshio Hatano issued a statement Tuesday saying that the newspapers "are quoting the prime minister completely out of context."

The prime minister said in effect that the United States was a multiracial society and had been making great progress as a democracy overcoming educational, racial and other issues associated with such a background. In no sense has he even implied that the level of intelligence is low in the United States," Hatano said.

Several Japanese newspapers, including Tokyo Shimbun and the nationally circulated Yomiuri Shimbun, reported that Nakasone told a study session of his Liberal Democratic Party that the Japanese people want policies that bravely face the country's problems because Japan is "an information-oriented and highly educated society."

The newspapers said Nakasone referred to the high intelligence level of the Japanese before he said that, in contrast, "The level in the United States is lower because of a considerable number of blacks, Puerto Ricans and Mexicans." An official from Nakasone's Liberal Democratic Party, Fukuzo Okada, said the prime minister was actually referring to the U.S. literacy level.

Okada quoted Nakasone as saying that there are many blacks, Puerto Ricans and Mexicans in the United States who are not able to write English.

About 1,000 young members of the Liberal Democrats are attending the three-day study session, which opened Monday in Kannami, southwest of Tokyo.

In Washington, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, when asked about

Nakasone's remarks, said: "I haven't seen any confirmation of that, so I won't comment on it until I confirm it."

There was little immediate reaction in Japan to Nakasone's comments, despite the fact that the government recently had to contend with a diplomatic flurry over other controversial remarks by a Cabinet minister.

Some of Japan's national newspapers did not carry Nakasone's remarks Tuesday morning, while those that did buried it on an inside page.

The Japanese Communist Party's newspaper, Red Flag, said Nakasone's comments showed his "true feelings" and resulted from his "increased arrogance" due to his party's landslide victory in parliamentary elections in July.

On Sept. 8, Nakasone dismissed Education Minister Masayuki Fujio, who had said in a magazine interview that Korea was partly responsible for its annexation by Japan in

3 arrested in ambush of Chile's Pinochet

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Security agents have arrested three people for questioning in the attempted assassination of President Augusto Pinochet that claimed the lives of five of his bodyguards, a prosecutor announced Tuesday.

Joaquin Eribbaum, the military prosecutor handling the case, made the announcement but did not identify the suspects, who he said were awaiting information from the security services on the type of participation the prisoners were suspected of having in the attack.

They were the first arrests reported in connection with the Sept. 7 ambush of Pinochet's motorcade. The 70-year-old president, who is the army commander and the leader of the military junta that rules Chile, suffered minor cuts on his left hand in the attack.

Anti-tank rockets, grenades and automatic rifles were used in the ambush that was sprung in Mapo Canyon, 18 miles from Santiago, as Pinochet was returning to the capital after a weekend at his country residence.

The Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front, a leftist guerilla group that the government calls the armed hand of the outlawed Communist Party, claimed responsibility for the attack.

Meanwhile, hundreds of soldiers sealed off three slum neighborhoods in northern Santiago while police and security agents entered in mass raids that the government says are conducted to find terrorists and common criminals.

It was the fourth such raid in Santiago since the government declared a nationwide state of siege within hours after the attempt on Pinochet's life. At least 20 had been carried out earlier this year.

WALKING THE TRAIL TO GOOD HEALTH

Brizees prepare yuletide goodies

Baking done early for family reunion

 Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Christmas is not that far off, so Donna Brizee has begun to stock her freezer with casseroles and goodies. She says she and her husband, Dick, are hoping all five of their children will be able to make home for the holidays, and the make-aheads will allow more time to visit.

"I've done some quick breads with zucchini, and that type of thing from the garden," she says, "and when the peaches were on, I did some pie fillings."

"I put them in Saran wrap and froze them, so I can just slip them into a crust. It's for whenever, but basically for drop-in company or Christmas."

To do this, she puts plastic wrap into the pie tin, spoons the filling in and places it in the freezer. After it is frozen, she takes the filling out of the tin and covers it with plastic wrap and foil. Because the filling is frozen, she extends the baking time.

Having gone from a large family to just two people, the Brizees now generally eat a simpler, leaner cuisine. But, she says, the coming reunion has inspired her to dig in and cook again.

At one time Brizee was a home economics teacher, and she says she still enjoys "cooking something kind of different—I'm not opposed to trying new recipes, but I don't on a daily basis, because there are just two of us here eating."

She says while raising a family "there are things this one doesn't like and things another one doesn't like, and you cook kind of basically over the growing-up years."

"What we've done here is just have really good nutritious home meals. I've caught that they should have their fair share of vegetables and salads—a well-balanced diet."

Now that the children are all grown, she says she misses their cooking. This has been replaced by a friendly but busy household.

"When the last two went to college, the children decided I'd be lonely," so for Mother's Day that year, they had a shelle to have company, so he's now my company," she says.

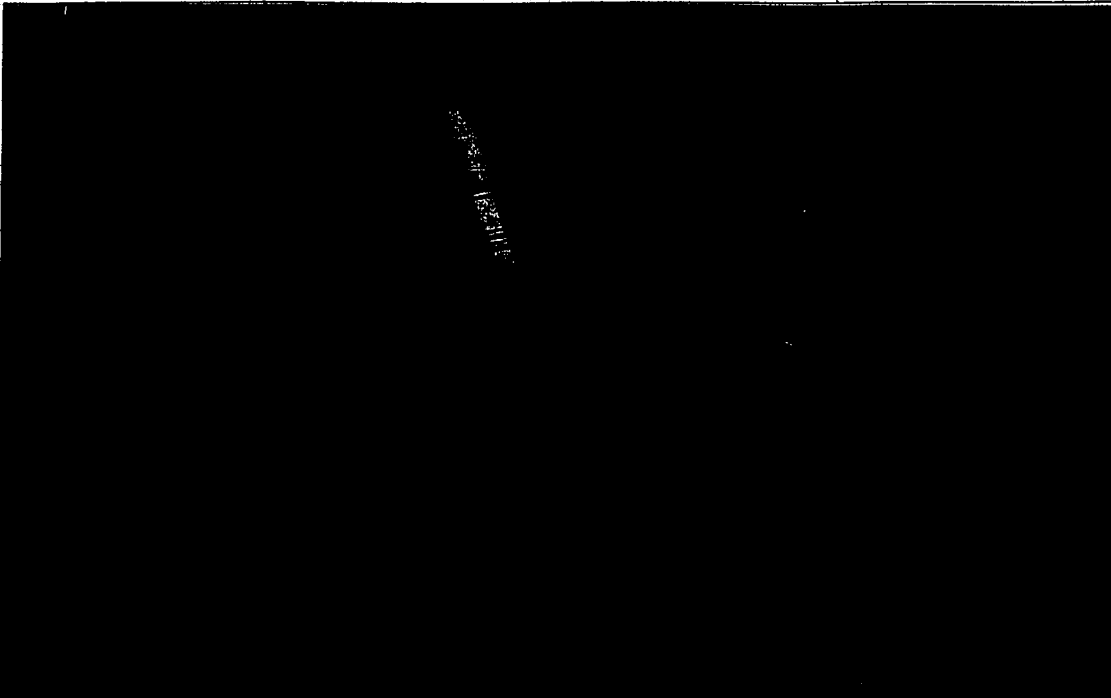

The shelle is a shelled sheep dog, which resembles a miniature collie. Acquired about 1970, meaning five D's, because the children's names all begin with D.

When Dan, Debbie, Dana, Dedra and Diana lived at home, meatloaf was a big favorite.

"It was always kind of funny," she says. "If it was a birthday or something, I'd ask, 'What would you like for dinner? You get to choose tonight.' And she'd usually say, 'meatloaf, baked potatoes, a vegetable and salad—a traditional meal.'"

She says she has already put a couple of meatloaf pies in the freezer. "So when I don't want to cook, I'll pop one of those out and let it thaw out."

A healthy habit: packing up the old kit bag with treats to take along on sunny autumn walks, including Granola Fruit Bars and Camp-Out Snack Mix

The next time someone tells you to "Go take a hike," consider it good advice. Most exercise experts now agree that walking is one of the very best ways to exercise for people of all ages.

Hiking can be as simple as a walk through a field or around the neighborhood, or as strenuous as a trek up a mountainside. The only equipment you'll need is a good pair of shoes, a beverage and a snack.

A walk is not only good physical exercise, but also a mental break. Families can spend some quality time together by enjoying the warm summer or fall weather and natural scenery of the outdoors; individuals can take a nice quiet walk for time to think and to release stress.

To keep your energy up on a long walk, take along an easy-to-prepare, portable snack or trail mix. A peanut butter and raisin variation of the classic Marshmallow Treats recipe might be just the snack to keep you going at your peak. Camp-Out Snack Mix is a simple, no-cook mixture of dried fruits, peanuts, seeds or nuts and Crispix cereal. Four-grain Just Right cereal along with mixed dried fruit and sesame seeds are combined to make Granola Fruit Bars, another energy-rich, nutritious addition to backpack. Pack your snack securely in zipper-top storage bags to fit easily into backpacks or pockets.

To help you get the most from your next hike, here are a few basic tips to keep in mind. Happy trails!

Light snacks, easy to fix and to carry, are neat items for walking excursions

- Wear comfortable, loose-fitting clothing. Long sleeves and long pants protect arms and legs from tree and brush branches, burning sun rays and pesky insects.
- Pack a wet washcloth for wiping sticky hands and tired brows. A plastic plastic storage bag protects the washcloth from drying out or wetting other pack items.
- Travel light, but with energy. Pack snacks that are energy-boosters and easy to eat on the trail. Choose foods that don't bruise or melt in warm weather. Trail mixes and snack bars are lightweight—pick-me-ups. Carry snacks in zipper-top storage bags that can be conveniently and securely resealed.
- Make sure that shoes are comfortable and broken-in; blisters may easily form when you walk a good deal. Wool or all-cotton socks keep feet dry as your hike progresses.
- Pace yourself. Warm weather, high altitudes and steep trails can overtire muscles, especially if this is your first exercise in a while. Walk at a comfortable pace, breathing evenly.
- Be prepared for any minor accidents. Scrapes, insect bites and blisters may occur, despite preventive measures. A plastic resealable storage bag containing insect repellent, sunscreen and bandages is lightweight and may come in handy.
- Stop frequently along the way for rests. Rest stops provide ample opportunity to enjoy scenery, to relax your muscles and to take photographs.
- A cool drink is always welcome, so remember to take along a vacuum bottle or canteen. Small cans or cartons of juice are also lightweight. Put in zipper-top storage bags to protect other items from moisture when packing. Chill beverages well before packing.

Press mixture evenly into buttered 9x9x2-inch pan. Cool. Cut into 1 1/2x2-inch bars. Store in zipper-top storage bags.
 Yield: 24 bars.

RAISIN-PEANUT-BUTTER MARSHMALLOW TREATS

1/2 cup margarine or butter
 1 package (10 ounces, about 40) regular marshmallows or 4 cups miniature marshmallows
 1/2 cup peanut butter
 6 cups Rice Krispies cereal
 1 cup seedless raisins

Melt margarine in large saucepan over low heat. Add marshmallows and stir until completely melted. Remove from heat. Stir in peanut butter.
 Add cereal and raisins. Stir until well coated.

Using buttered spatula or waxed paper, press mixture evenly into buttered 13x9x2-inch pan. Cut into 2-inch squares when cool. Store in zipper-top storage bags.
 Yield: 24 squares, 2x2 inches.

CAMP-OUT SNACK MIX

4 cups Crispix cereal
 1/2 cup seedless raisins
 1/2 cup peanuts
 1/2 cup sunflower nuts or seeds
 1/2 cup diced dates or prunes

Combine all ingredients. Store individual portions in Ziploc storage bags.
 Yield: about 5 1/2 cups.

GRANOLA-FRUIT BARS

1/2 cup corn syrup
 1/4 cup firmly packed brown sugar
 1 tablespoon margarine or butter
 4 cups Just Right cereal
 1/2 cup finely cut, mixed dried fruit
 2 tablespoons sesame seeds

In medium-size saucepan, combine corn syrup, sugar and margarine. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture comes to a boil. Boil 1 minute. Remove from heat. Add remaining ingredients; mixing until well combined.

Soul food pit stops an important ritual for nostalgic man

By BEA LEWIS
 Newsday

NEW YORK — Charles Winfield and his fiancée, Lois Wadas, take a weekly drive to Harlem for emotional refueling. Sunday mornings after church, the Elmhurst, Queens, couple heads for Wilson's Bakery and Restaurant, where they have fried fish and grits, homemade buttery biscuits and peach cobbler.

It's an important ritual for Winfield. "The more successful I become in life, the more important it is for me to connect with my roots. My mama would be pleased to know I'm still eating the way she cooked, not every day, but once a week," said Winfield, a senior Wall Street analyst for Depository Trust Co.

Ed Lucas drives from Queens to Brooklyn to reconnect to his roots. The Manhattan-based architect heads for McDonald's Dining Room in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section on Sunday mornings to do what he has done for decades. In the area where he grew up, Lucas stands in line, waiting his turn to fill up on such dishes as salmon cakes and grits, pancakes and fried chicken, fried white and homemade buttermilk biscuits. Since 1948, the honey restaurant on the corner of a tree-lined row of brownstones also has been serving up sautéed chicken livers, collard greens and lima beans, smothered fried chicken doused with gravy, and sweet-potato pie.

"It's home cooking; it's cooked the way I remember it as a child. No matter that I'm blessed with good fortune today," Lucas said, "eating those foods helps me remember where I came from."

For Wadas, Winfield, Lucas and many others, this food, this soul food, provides a connection to their past. "It anchors me to get back to the foods of my childhood to have a soul-food breakfast after church," said Wadas, who works with disabled teens at St. Vincent's Group.

Homecoming parade sidetrip yields some delicious apples

Youngest daughter said she needed a dress for the homecoming dance. Usually this brings a sigh in anticipation of the long hours of looking and a big hole in her bank account — Dad or Mom's wallet.

This year it was absolutely painless and fun. You see, our high school (Milico) is celebrating its 50th birthday, as the big consolidated school and has assigned years to each of the classes. Daughter is senior, and the years her class was to decorate and to find memorabilia for were those between 1938 and 1966.

Nancy Joy Jones
 Valley cooking

These were years we knew something about. Her dad had been a graduate of that first class, and I vividly remembered the styles. I remembered them clearly but not with longing nostalgia as those dumb pointy-toe high heels have left an indelible mark on my feet (like those Chinese ladies who have bound feet when they are young and can hardly walk ever after).

I also remember ironing the miles and miles of hem lines on crinolines, the circle felt skirts and the intimidation which included people crassly looking at your sweater labels.

I really think now is better with the freedom and choices of what to wear. Also this daughter falls into one of those up-to-date, independent dress categories and did most of her pre-school shopping at the DI (Deseret Industries).

Back to the dress. She went to an antique peddler's gathering and for a mere fourth of what a usual prom dress costs bought two — both right out of the '50s, net skirts and all. For an extra few dollars we picked up the finisings like elbow-length, white gloves and earrings, and Grandma provided the correct footwear.

She was excited and pleased. My checkbook was pleased and Grandma was gracious enough to do the alterations.

It was really a reunion weekend with my college class holding its 25th at the U of I homecoming. After the parade, I got separated from the group and found a sidewalk produce market down a side street. By the time friend husband had caught up, I had bought four different quarts of wildflower honey, two bags of elephant garlic, some interesting-looking seed pods for my wildflower garden and a big box of apples. I was really glad to see him by then as they didn't have grocery carts.

So I've been eating lots of apples and I've been trying some recipes you might like. There really isn't a problem getting rid of apples in our family, but here is one sort of different recipe.

It makes 2 to 3 servings but doubles or triples easily. Use a wok or a large frying pan.

STIR-FRY APPLE AND PORK
 1/2 pound lean pork strips, cut into 2x1/2x1/4 inch pieces
 1 tablespoon Worcester'shire sauce
 1 teaspoon paprika
 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
 1/2 cup sliced pea pods (or frozen)
 1 cup fresh fresh mushrooms (or canned)

Soul

Home in Brooklyn. "I don't think I could get through the week without it."

"Put customers connecting with their roots in the soul food people jamming soul-food restaurants on Sunday mornings. As the rage of regional cuisines has swept the country, southern favorites, such as corn bread, black-eyed peas and okra gumbo have been caught up in the trend. "Black cookery is part of that regional comeback," said Jonell Nash, food editor of Essence magazine. "I think it's the backbone, but I'm very partial. Even non-blacks today tend to flock to black cookery (or southern-style) restaurants because of the earthiness of the foods and the well-defined flavors."

Order soul food and expect smothered pork chops, collard greens, cornbread, fried chicken, corn bread, candied yams and black-eyed peas—the foods of the black South, or more accurately, the foods of the poor South. After the war, everyone was eating the same way.

"Out of necessity, southern cooks became ingenious at using the foods available to them: okra, greens, corn, rice or sweet potatoes, catfish, molasses, beans and every part of the pig. Pig's feet were pickled or boiled. Chitterlings or pig's ears were boiled or fried. Pork spareribs showed up in a variety of sauces: in Mississippi spiked with honey, tomatoes and mustard; in the Carolinas spread with brown sugar, vinegar and hot pepper. Some cooks might add peach preserves.

Princess Pamela, a longtime Manhattan soul-food restaurateur, shared a number of recipes with me. "Princess Pamela's Soul Food Cookbook": "Soul food, black food cooking—is compassion food. Greens from the root, and meat near the veins and the marrow. Culinary genius applied to overlooked odds and ends and to leftovers. Eating still close enough to honest-to-God hunger, to impart food a savor deep enough for soul."

"The lines separating soul, black and southern food are hazy. Most food experts agree that 'soul food' is a recent designation, an invention of the 1960s. It was a marketing ploy when they were trying to find identification with their southern roots. "I never heard of soul food, growing up in Harlem," said Tom McCullough, now of Patchoque, N.Y.

"I guess like the name—Black Power, 'soul food' came into popularity. If I had pork chops in white gravy when I was eight years old, it's still pork chops in white gravy now that I'm 52," said McCullough, who opened Southwinds, a southern-style, Creole food restaurant in Patchoque, two months ago.

"I think the words 'soul food' describe the poor black mother's cooking," said Charles Hays, owner of The Pink Tea Cup in Greenwich Village, N.Y. "Like when she only had something like pig's feet, she could put her heart and soul into her cooking and wind up with something like pheasant under glass."

Some might call his food regional American, but McCullough says the Creole specialties he serves at his restaurant have their roots in black cookery. "If you spoke to black people growing up in certain parts of Florida, Mississippi or Louisiana, they could have grown up on Creole foods," he said.

Howard Mitchell concurs in his new book, "Creole Gumbo and All That Jazz" (Addison-Wesley, $10.95, trade paperback). "It wouldn't be true to say that Creole cookery as we know it today is simply glorified 'soul food' with a French accent. Much of the cuisine was developed by black cooks, slaves in private homes and plantations. To the French herbs and spices in the pot they added a dash of love, or what is known today as 'soul.'"

Meanwhile, health-conscious black men wrong to say that Creole, Essence and Charlotte Lyons of Ebony, are revamping traditional recipes to meet the newest dietary guidelines. "For example, leafy greens—mustard, collards and turnips as well as cabbage—are very nutritious, but we're trying to show people how to use smoked turkey, sausage and herbs instead of pork fatback or ham hocks to cut back on salt and fat," Nash said.

Using less salt is particularly important—because hypertension is widespread. James Atkins, nutrition professor at Howard University in Washington, D.C., "We know that blacks traditionally use a lot of salt in the cookery, we try to show how lemon might be used instead," he said.

"I feel that the food traditions should be kept alive, but we need to eat less of the salty foods and those high in saturated fat. Pickled pig's foot, with onions and hot pepper was one of my favored foods growing up in Hanover, Virginia. Now I eat it just on the holidays," said Atkins.

In the past, gravy, salt and sugar were used to cover up inferior products, Nash said, but people with educated palates are turning to better quality, fresh ingredients.

"When I first started working here a year ago, I was bombarded with letters about salt and fat from people worried about high blood pressure," Lyons said. In response, she suggests seasoning collard greens with lots of garlic, onion, green pepper and celery instead of ham hocks. By adding thyme and sage when cooking green beans, it almost takes as if pork is in the pot," Lyons said.

The first two recipes, developed by Lyons, illustrate reduced-calorie versions of traditional southern fare:

MIXED GREENS
2 pounds collard greens
2 pounds mustard greens
6 to 7 cups water
1 cup chopped celery
1 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup chopped green pepper
1 tablespoon sugar
2 large cloves garlic, minced
1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon crushed red pepper

With a sharp knife, trim away any bruised or striped spots on the greens and strip the leaves from the stems. Wash the leaves in several changes of cold running water to remove all traces of dirt or sand. Cut up and combine the greens in a Dutch oven with water, celery, onion, green pepper, sugar, minced garlic and crushed red pepper. Cover and bring to a boil. Reduce heat and cook for 50 to 60 minutes or until tender. Makes 8 servings.

Place cubed potatoes in glass or plastic bowl. Mix oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper; pour over potatoes. Cover and refrigerate at least 4 hours. Stir in celery, green pepper and onion. Garnish with parsley. Makes 6 servings.

BLACK-EYED PEAS
(from The Pink Tea Cup)
4 ham hocks
1 cup dried black-eyed peas
black pepper to taste

Place ham hocks in a large pot, cover with water and bring to a boil. Lower heat, cover and simmer for about 30 minutes. Add dried peas to pot and continue cooking, covered, for 1 hour longer. Add black pepper to taste. Can be served with liquid (often referred to as "pot likker") or liquid can be discarded. Makes 4 servings.

Meatloaf

The following is her family's favorite meatloaf recipe.

BEST-EVER MEATLOAF
2 eggs
1/2 cup milk
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
3 slices bread, crumbled
1 onion, sliced
1/2 cup shredded raw carrot
1 cup shredded cheddar cheese
1 1/2 pounds lean ground beef
Put the eggs, milk, salt, pepper, bread, onion and carrot in the food processor or blender, and blend. Mix it into the ground beef, along with the cheese. Put into a 9x5-inch loaf pan, and spread the following sauce over the surface.

For the sauce combine:
1/4 cup brown sugar
1/4 cup ketchup
1 1/2 tablespoons prepared mustard
Bake the meatloaf at 350 degrees for one hour. Let rest for 10 minutes, and then slice it. Or, let it cool, and use for sandwiches or sliced cold meat.

"This really is an excellent recipe. With the cheese and the carrots in it, it really is great," she says. Brizee's daughter, Debra, sent her the next recipe, and she says it is one of her favorites.

1 can garbanzo beans, the 15-ounce size
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 bay leaf
1/2 can of tomatoes
1/4 cup butter
1 cup white wine
2 teaspoons garlic
1 teaspoon basil
1 cup Monterey Jack cheese
1 cup mozzarella cheese
1 cup half and half

Combine all ingredients, except cheese and cream, in a 3-quart saucepan and cook for one hour. Add cheese and cream, and heat until warm through, about 10 minutes. Serves 8 to 10.

She says she is going to try freezing this hearty soup—all but the cheese and cream, because the zucchini, tomatoes and onions are in the garden now.

"You could thaw it, warm it and add the cheese and the half and half. I think that would work," she says.

A traditional Christmas favorite is a recipe Brizee received from Zella (died in 1967), about 20 years ago. She makes enough of it every other year, so that on alternate years, it comes out of the freezer making it even more favorite.

and let it melt through. As soon as it is melted, remove from oven. While it is melting, take 1 1/2 pounds rendered cherries, 1 1/2 pounds green candied cherries and 1 pound white candied pineapple, either 2 pounds of white raisins or dates, and 2 pounds walnuts. Sift over the fruit and nut mixture 8 cups all-purpose flour. Mix thoroughly with hands or rubber spatula—so all the fruit is well coated. Beat 12 eggs together and pour over the fruit and flour mixture. Then pour over the sugar and butter mixture, and cook in 3-quart lemon extract. Line seven small loaf pans (7 1/2 x 3 1/2 x 2 1/2 inches) or 3 standard large loaf pans with well-greased, heavy brown paper (grocery bag or butcher paper).

Bake at 300 degrees for about 1 1/2 hours. This will have to be watched. It should not turn brown. When a toothpick comes out clean, it is done. The fruit cake will not change size in the pan. How full the pans are filled is just about the size the cake will be. Pans should be filled to within 3/4 to 1 inch from the top.

Take some old sheeting or tea shirt material and wrap the cakes in it; after it's been dipped in apple, orange or any kind of juice, rum or brandy. Put Saran wrap around the wet cloth, and then wrap with foil. Put in the refrigerator and let marinate for a month or longer.

"It is rich. It's wonderful. It's very pretty. It's all white except for your fruit that just kind of sparkles," she says.

ITALIAN OVEN CHOWDER
1/2 pound sliced zucchini (about two 6- or 7-inch long)
2 chopped onions

WHITE FRUIT CAKE
Set oven at 200 degrees. Put 4 cups sugar into a large flat pan (a dishpan or very large stainless steel bowl is best to use, because of the huge quantity of ingredients). Put 2 pounds of butter on top of the sugar,

Apples

1/2 cup each diagonally sliced celery and green onions
2 tablespoons water
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1 large delicious apple, cored and sliced
1/2 teaspoon salt
dash pepper

Combine pork with Worcestershire sauce and paprika and let stand 20 minutes. Heat oil to 400 degrees in pork and stir fry pork for 24 minutes or until lightly browned. Add vegetables and continue to stir fry 2 minutes or until crisp tender. Add apple and seasonings and heat thoroughly. Combine cornstarch and water and add to mixture and cook for another minute until sauce thickens.

"This is easy and quick and can be prepared well ahead of time and just cooked at the last minute. You can serve it over rice or try it on top of a baked potato.

If your pumpkins are ready, here is a way of using them with apples.

APPLE-PUMPKIN STICKS
1 1/2 cups flour
1/4 cup sugar
1/4 cup cornstarch
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon baking powder
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1/2 cup mashed cooked pumpkin or canned pumpkin
1 1/2 cups finely sliced peeled apples
1/2 cup deep frying oil

Sift together flour, sugar, cornstarch and baking powder. Cut in butter. Add pumpkin and apples and mix well. Knead mixture on a lightly floured surface and roll 1/4 inch thick and cut into rectangles about 2 1/2 x 1 inches. Deep-fry at 375 degrees until golden. Drain and roll in cinnamon sugar. Makes a couple dozen.

Another good recipe if you have your deep-fryer out, is to make these apple beignets.

APPLE BEIGNETS
2 eggs
1/2 cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
1/4 cup unsifted flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup milk
4 apples, Delicious varieties are good powdered sugar

Beat eggs in a bowl and add sugar, lemon rind, flour, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and milk. Beat with wire whisk, blender or mixer until smooth and then cover and let stand one hour.

Pare and core apples and cut into wedges. Dip in batter and fry several at a time in hot oil at 375 degrees. Fry until brown on both sides. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve.

Enjoy!

Nation has more supermarkets, but fewer belong to chains

By MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

Dear Martin — Is it my imagination, or are there fewer supermarkets popping up in these days? — Clyde Rainey, Detroit

Dear Clyde — By the end of last year, there were 280 more supermarkets than there had been the year before. This represented the opening of 610 new supermarkets by independent operators, while the number of chain supermarkets declined by 330.

The number of chain supermarkets declined primarily because the chains closed a greater number of smaller stores in order to open larger warehouse stores, superstores and the huge new hypermarkets.

According to the Food Marketing Institute (FMI), the supermarket industry trade organization, there are approximately 30,500 retail food stores in the United States that meet the definition of a supermarket. (FMI defines them as full-line food stores with sales of $2 million or more a year.)

I probably won't surprise you to hear that the majority of supermarkets are owned by large chains, but it is not a large majority as you might think.

Actually, 13,285 of the supermarkets around the country, a little less than half, are independently owned. (Supermarkets are considered independent if their owners operate 10 or fewer supermarkets.)

In addition to supermarkets, there are almost 125,000 other food outlets, most of which are smaller grocery and convenience stores.

One out of every five dollars that consumers spent at retail stores in 1985 was spent at food stores. Together, all food retailers rang up $300 billion in sales last year.

The average shopper goes to the supermarket 2.1 times each week. Shoppers with full-time jobs prefer to shop evenings and weekends and spend an average of 46 minutes in the supermarket. Shoppers who do not work or who have part-time jobs prefer to shop during the week and spend an average of 34 minutes in the supermarket.

Refunding Announcement: Whoppers milked milk candy is running its second "Big Bucks Back" promotion. For only two proofs of purchase from 8-ounce bags or 12-ounce cartons, consumers can receive over $15 worth of coupons on a variety of popular household and back-to-school items. In addition to 50-cent Whoppers coupons, the booklet contains cents-off coupons for Helene Curtiss Shampoo, Kraft Le Creme and Macaroni and Cheese Dinners, Keebler, Prezels, Ralston-Purina Pet Foods and Rubbermaid containers, to name just a few. Mail-in forms are found printed on the 13-ounce Whopper carton, and on pads attached to supermarket displays.

Homemade apple desserts are easy to make

With the changing season comes the abundance of apples. Crisp, crunchy, red, green or yellow, this seasonal bounty is a boon for dessert makers.

Busy cooks have long known that great-tasting, homemade apple desserts can be a breeze to prepare.

The familiar homey aroma of apples and cinnamon will fill the air temptingly, as Apple Upside-Down Cake bakes. Super-moist and rich, it meets the definition of a supermarket filling/topping lightly sweetened with marshmallow creme. Serve this versatile cake as a harvest dinner finale or a special weekend breakfast treat.

A "spirited" dessert with sophisticated flavor, Brandied Apple Bars showcase the season's apple crop. The crispy, golden, oatmeal crust holds a filling of apples, cheesecake filling made with cream cheese, marshmallow creme, apples and a splash of brandy. Serve the bars warm from the oven or chilled, for make-ahead convenience.

APPLE UPSIDE-DOWN CAKE

- 1/2 cup margarine
- 1 cup sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 2 cups flour
- 1 teaspoon baking powder
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1 cup sour cream
- 17-ounce jar marshmallow creme
- 1 1/2 teaspoons lemon juice
- 1 1/2 teaspoons cinnamon
- 2 cups peeled apple slices
- 2 cup chopped nuts

Beat margarine and sugar until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, mixing well after each addition. Blend in vanilla. Add combined flour, baking powder and baking soda alternately with sour cream, mixing well after each addition. Combine marshmallow creme, juice and cinnamon, mixing with electric mixer until well blended. Layer half of apples, nuts, marshmallow creme mixture and batter in well-greased 10-inch tub pan; repeat. Bake at 350 for 1 hour. Immediately loosen cake from rim of pan; invert onto serving plate. Serves 10 to 12.

BRANDIED APPLE BARS

- 1 1/2 cups flour
  - 1 cup old fashioned or quick oats, uncooked
  - 1/2 cup packed brown sugar
  - 1/2 cup margarine
  - 1/2 cup chopped nuts
  - 1 8-ounce package cream cheese, softened
  - 17-ounce jar marshmallow creme
  - 2 tablespoons brandy
  - 3 cups apple slices
- Combine flour, oats and sugar; cut in margarine until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Stir in nuts. Reserve 1 cup crumb mixture; press remaining mixture onto bottom of greased 9x13-inch baking pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes.
- Combine cream cheese, marshmallow creme and brandy, mixing at medium speed on electric mixer until well blended. Stir in apples. Spoon over crust; sprinkle with reserved crumb mixture. Bake at 350 degrees for 45 minutes. Cut into bars. Serve warm or chilled.

Cheesecake is favorite of readers

This splendidous... cheesecake recipe first appeared on the cover of Better Homes and Gardens in 1978. Since then, readers have requested it again and again. The pecan-praline flavor combined with rich creamy cheesecake is irresistible. As you mix the cheesecake, beat the cream cheese and eggs just until blended. Overbeating causes the cheesecake to rise high, then fall, making a less attractive top.

PRALINE CHEESECAKE

- 1 1/2 cups crushed graham crackers about 17 crackers
- 1/4 cup granulated sugar
- 1/4 cup finely chopped pecans, toasted
- 1/2 cup butter or margarine, melted
- Three 8-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
- 1 cup brown sugar
- One 1 1/2-ounce can (2-3/4s cup) evaporated milk
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla
- 2 eggs
- 1/2 cup pecan halves, toasted

- 1 cup dark corn syrup
  - 1/4 cup cornstarch
  - 2 tablespoons brown sugar
  - 1 teaspoon vanilla
- Combine cracker crumbs, granulated sugar and chopped pecans. Stir in butter; press mixture over the bottom and 1/4 inches up the sides of a 9-inch spring-form pan. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 10 minutes.
- Meanwhile, in a large mixer bowl beat together cream cheese and the 1 cup brown sugar until well combined. Add milk, flour and the 1/2 teaspoon vanilla; beat well. Add eggs; beat just until blended. Pour into baked crust. Bake in 350-degree oven 50 minutes or until set. Cool in pan 30 minutes; loosen sides and remove rim from pan. Cool completely. Arrange nut halves over cheesecake.
- To serve, combine corn syrup, cornstarch and remaining brown sugar in saucepan. Cook and stir until

Pinehurst P-Patch looking for a home

SEATTLE (AP) — The Pinehurst P-Patch, recently judged the best small community garden in America, is struggling to forestall its expected transformation into a subdivision.

The national award, in a contest sponsored by the American Community Gardening Association, may provide more ammunition for the 11 north Seattle gardeners and their supporters in a battle against residential development on three acres that includes the 100-foot-by-100-foot garden.

So far, they've petitioned Mayor Charles Royer and City Council members for help in preserving the green belt, which has contributed thousands of pounds of vegetables to local food banks in the past decade.

Sylvia Jones, one of the gardeners, says the patch is on land originally owned by her in-laws but condemned and bought by the Seattle School District for a planned playground across from a school.

Ms. Jones says the city's P-Patch Program leased the plot from the school, district and neighborhood residents began gardening in 1976.

But the playground plans fell through. Pinehurst Elementary School was closed and several developers acquired most of the three acres. City officials said ownership is not clear because some of the property is still in the hands of a trust being owned by the district.

Ms. Jones said the gardeners were told by one of the developers that the P-Patch could remain until his plans for a subdivision were completed. "We've been waiting three years to see what will happen," she said. "One section of the land has been developed and a second proposed development would require an access road that would separate the northern portion of the garden.

While detailed plans have not been announced, Ms. Jones said development of a third and final section of homes would require plowing up the garden. Barbara Donnette, co-manager of the P-Patch program, said she sympathizes with the gardeners, not only because their garden provides lots of food for the food banks, but because "there is very little open space left in the neighborhood."

Plant hyacinths now

By HENRY MITCHELL
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Hyacinths may be planted about now. Medium-sized bulbs do best for the garden — no need to buy the more costly exhibition size.

The blues and whites are best, to my taste, but you can also find them in red and yellow. The blues all have a lavender cast, by the way. Sometimes there is space for hyacinths against a house wall between window wells, or some such neglected spot.

There they bloom early and persist; with smaller flowers, for some years. I have a few, planted 12 years ago, that still send up flowers in March.

Among the most wonderful bulbs are crown imperials, the big waist-high nodding bells of Fritillaria imperialis. The individual bells, bigger than a demitasse, used to be picked off singly and stuck in ladies' bosoms. I have read, a curious thing as they smell like fox or distant skunk.

They come in clear yellow, fulvous red and orange. The bulbs are large and cost 2 bucks each, or thereabouts, and half of them rot without sprouting despite your best efforts.

The ones that survive will gradually form clumps. They should be planted as early as possible. It is agreeable when they bloom to turn the bells up, to see the six drops of nectar that look like pearls.

Among scillas that are commonly sold in garden shops here there are three dandy ones. The goulard-blue Scilla sibirica blooms about March 12, with such early daffodils as "February Gold," and even a dozen are delighted to see, as this color is rare in flowers, if space and wallet permit, they look fine planted by the hundred.

Scilla tubergeniana blooms even earlier, sometimes starting in February. Gold, and even a dozen are delighted to see, as this color is rare in flowers, if space and wallet permit, they look fine planted by the hundred.

ruary, with vaguely blue or blue-white bells on a stem that eventually reaches 10 inches.

At first they are right on the ground — it is a modest flower, and I have only a little clump of a dozen bulbs, which I look forward to every winter.

The third common sort is Scilla campanulata, the Spanish squill, which is as large as a hyacinth after its third year; that is, not as large as a hyacinth you get after hyacinths have been in the ground a few years.

The scilla has nodding bells, hyacinth-sized, in pure white or rose, but best (to my mind) in lavender blue. The best one of a dozen or so named varieties that I once grew was "Excelsior," which is taller and more robust than the other blues. Also striking is "White Triumphator."

But if you find them sold only as mixed colors do not worry; they will all be agreeable. If a single bulb is planted it will form a good clump in about four years. These scillas last for decades on end. They bloom as the Kurume azaleas are passing and the tall garden lilies begin to flower, say the end of April and early May.

Any gardener will be enchanted with the bulbs of wild tulips; some of them the size of chestnuts, others the size of cocktail onions. The tulips are variable and wonderful, some of them lined with fur that sticks out the top. Most of them grow readily in plain earth in full sun.

Water trees well now to prevent winter damage

One of the best ways to help protect trees from winter damage is to water deeply about the time the leaves begin to fall.

Winter damage to plants is primarily desiccation or drying. Even damage caused by freezing can be the result of water being drawn from cells so that they collapse.

Plants which have plenty of water in their tissues going into winter are less likely to be damaged by cold and frost.

Rainfall at this time of year is usually not enough to wet soil two to three feet deep where most tree roots are. In a sandy soil it requires about three inches of water to reach this depth. Clay soils can absorb almost twice as much water. To apply that much water with a sprinkler requires running it for several hours. Although it is time consuming, the most effective way to deep water trees is hand watering. Another good method is to use a soaker hose or sprinkler hose turned upside down. Most of the water-absorbing roots of trees are located underneath the outer spread of the branches. A hose without a sprinkler can be placed in this area and turned on slowly. It can be moved around the circle at intervals while you are outside doing something else in the garden. Or a sprinkler hose or soaker hose can be placed in a circular pattern around the tree and allowed to run for several hours.

Allen Wilson Intermountain gardening

Another good practice to protect young trees from winter injury is to insulate the graft union with soil. Most shade and fruit trees are grafted onto a separate rootstock. This union is one of the most susceptible areas to cold damage. There is usually a bulge or slight bend at the graft union.

I recommend planting trees deeply so that this union is below the soil line. However, if the graft union is above the soil line, it can be temporarily covered with soil in the fall.

After a tree becomes about 8-10 years old, the bark is usually thick enough to provide adequate insulation.

Shrubs, lawns and perennial flowers should also go into the winter with moist soil. However, their roots are more shallow and normal watering is usually adequate.

Choosing a TV is no longer an uncomplicated decision

By Better Homes and Gardens

Not long ago, buying a TV was a simple decision.

You chose between black-and-white and color, picked from basic sizes and decided on portable or console. Today's choices — and television — aren't so straightforward.

According to Better Homes and Gardens magazine, if your television is more than eight years old, it's well on its way toward obsolescence. Sure, you can pull in a picture, but you aren't getting the benefits of the video revolution, especially an improved picture and the ability to receive cable, other super-high-band programs, and stereo broadcasts.

You may get your first urge for a new TV when you see that one of your favorite programs is broadcast in stereo and all you can hear is plain old mono.

The easiest (and possibly most expensive) way to get stereo is to buy a new "stereo ready" set (from around $500). Each comes equipped with multichannel television sound (MTS) terminals, an amplifier, and speakers. Less expensive are "stereo capable" sets, which can become stereo with the addition of an MTS decoder box. Some such sets have speakers and amplifiers built in; if not, you connect the television to an audio hi-fi to get stereo sound.

Most aged sets can be brought up to speed with the attachment of either a stereo VCR with a built-in MTS decoder or a stereo decoder from Radio Shack or Recoton (about $150).

Another new development destined to one day make your trusty old TV seem antediluvian is digital television. Costing from $1,000, digital technology allows you to manipulate the television screen as never before. The most immediate advantage is that you can watch more than one program at a time on a split screen. Typically, one show is displayed on a full screen while a second is contained in a small square in a corner. With a digital TV you can also freeze an image on the screen or enlarge a portion of the main picture.

components selected, you can pay from $800 to more than $4,000. When you purchase a TV today, you're likely to get:

- Cable-ready tuning for receiving-cable channels.
- Electronic tuning to eliminate channel drift.
- Wireless remote control.
- Clocks and timers.
- Direct connection terminals for computers or VCRs.

Seat belts would prevent head injuries

NEW YORK (AP) — More Americans under age 34 die from head injuries than from all other causes combined.

Rehabilitating a survivor of a serious head injury can cost as much as $9 million over a lifetime, and some 70,000 survivors suffer physical and intellectual disabilities that can prevent their return to the workforce.

More than 50 percent of such injuries are sustained in automobile crashes.

"Most head injuries could be prevented if Americans would form the habit of buckling their safety belts," the foundation says.

Head injuries require 3.5 million days of hospitalization annually and take up 35,000 man-hours of working ability each year, according to the National Head Injury Foundation.

Man applauds plastic surgery advice

DEAR ABBY: Because I am a man of some prominence in this community, I have put off writing for years for fear of being recognized, but I shall wait no longer. Two years ago you told a young man to seek medical help for his enlarged breasts, even if it means hooking the family-car. Thank-you-for-that-expert advice. In some males the problem is only temporary, during puberty, but I urge any young man who still has enlarged breasts at the age of 15 to do something about it.

I speak as a 72-year-old man who has been humiliated by large breasts since the age of 14. I loved to swim, until the tops disappeared from my early 20s. I have not been swimming since.

As a teen-ager, I used to bind myself with wide adhesive tape. I had to quit because of constant skin rashes.

I even bought a bra once (by mail order), but realized that most bras are to emphasize, not to hide.

Abigail VanBuren Dear Abby

Anyhow, I found that I wore a 46-C. When I needed help 50 years ago, cosmetic surgery was in his infancy. I purposely avoided it, and I am overweight so my problem would be less conspicuous, but in more recent years I have learned to live with it.

A young man not so afflicted cannot imagine the suffering I endure. People are terribly cruel to those who are different, especially when the difference provokes dirty remarks and innuendoes.

And so, Dear Abby, continue to let young men know that this problem will get worse through the years, and can warp one's life.

I, for example, could not to consider marriage, for I could not have appeared bare-chested even to a wife.

— ANONYMOUS, OF COURSE
DEAR ANONYMOUS: Your letter was long, but well worth the space. Even though a problem afflicts a relatively few, the pain is not diminished to those afflicted.

Thank you for telling your story. Perhaps somewhere, a young man will identify with it and learn that he need not endure a lifetime of suffering as you did.

DEAR ABBY: What does a man do when he approaches 60, has a beautiful wife and fine children, but still feels the need for more excitement?

I decided to renew acquaintances with a woman with whom I had had a very romantic encounter many years ago. I reminded her of the things we had done and in a minute at all we were reliving those days with renewed passion. The effect on me was phenomenal, but the effect on the woman was even more amazing. She had never loved.

You see, the woman I renewed acquaintances with was my wife!

This might serve as a useful suggestion to some bored husbands and wives of any age.

My wife does not know I'm writing this, but she'll recognize old Romeo as her born-again lover when she sees it.

— LIVING AND LOVING
DEAR LIVING: There's a lesson to be learned here. It was well stated in the lyrics of a song that was popular in the '50s: "You'll find your happiness lies, right under your eyes, back in your own backyard."

CONFIDENTIAL TO STUCK IN YUM: A good rule to follow: "If you don't know a person well enough to borrow money from him, don't lend him any."

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped, (32 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38823, Hollywood, Calif. 90033.)

Valley happenings

It will be held at the First United Methodist Church, 360 Shoshone St. E. The support group, which teaches self help concepts to parents of adolescents, meets every Monday at the church. All parents are welcome, and there is no charge. For more information call 734-5702 or 733-6030.

Local parents of deaf meet

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley Parents of the Deaf meet at 7 p.m. Monday at the home of Lorna Irwin, 221 12th Ave. E., Jerome. All family, teachers and friends of deaf or hearing-impaired children are welcome. For more information call 324-7545.

Food session set for Monday

TWIN FALLS — A workshop on "Countable Meals — Sensible Eating" will be held at 10:30 a.m. Monday at the Twin Falls County Extension office, 634 Addison Ave. W., Twin Falls. Lelann Keddie, regional consumer affairs coordinator for the Reynolds division, will present the short course, sponsored by the University of Idaho Cooperative Extension Service. Tips will be given on preparing meals low in calories, sodium and fat that can be presented with a gourmet touch.

Family advocacy program launched

TWIN FALLS — A new program to improve parenting techniques and help prevent child neglect and abuse has been launched in the Magic Valley by the South Central Community Action Agency.

It is known as the Family Advocacy Program and directed by Penni Janes, who previously was family service coordinator for Head Start here. Its purpose is to increase parents' self esteem and thereby lessen their involvement with Child Protective Services, she says.

"We believe that although parents in the program have some aspect of neglect, they are seeking ways to improve their lives, their thoughts about themselves and their skills at raising their children," Janes says.

Parents who voluntarily participate in the Family Advocacy program are in need of help, not condemnation, she stressed.

Parents select areas to work on — from the parent training resource library developed by the area Head Start program. Material is available on child development, parenting, continuing education, job skills, money management, nutrition, wellness, communication, self concept and organizing one's time. Other topics range from home canning, to child sexual abuse, to marital relationships.

The program serves all eight Magic Valley counties with 25 families each participating from the North Side and Mini-Cassia areas and Twin Falls county, Janes says.

It is funded by a discretionary grant from the Department of Health and Welfare with the Community Action Agency as the grantee. The concept and organizing one's time. Other topics range from home canning, to child sexual abuse, to marital relationships.

The director says the federal Department of Health and Human Services is placing major emphasis on strengthening families and in helping keep them together and she feels this is the reason the Magic Valley advocacy program was selected for funding from hundreds of applications.

The goal-setting process and working on parents' areas of interest has proven effective with Head Start families here so the approach of the Family Advocacy program to use parents' strengths to solve family problems "seems to be an idea whose time has come," Janes says.

Eleven part-time parent aid family advocates are employed in the program, with 16 more in the process of being hired, Janes said. These family advocates are selected for their understanding of family problems, their skill and experience working with families and their compassion and empathy.

Referring agencies are the Adult/Child Development Center, South Central Health District, Center for New Directions, Department of Health and Welfare's Child Protective Services and the Family Health Services Clinic. Other agencies may refer families into the advocacy program, the director says.

Agencies and individuals helping develop the advocacy program include the regional office of state Child Protective Services; Rita Larum, director of the Center for New Directions at CSI; Paul Burnett, mental health consultant for the Head Start program; and staff and families of the Head Start program.

Anniversary

The Chojnackys

JEROME — Lee and Mildred Chojnacky were joined on their 40th wedding anniversary with a wedding mass, and family reunion Aug. 17 at St. Benedict's Hospital park.

Chojnacky and Mildred Nutsch were married Aug. 20, 1945, at St. Jerome's Catholic Church. They have farmed near Jerome ever since.

The renewal of vows ceremony was conducted by Fr. Bill Taylor, with music — Chojnacky recited scriptures and musical selections by Sister Angela, Marge Nutsch and Christina Nutsch. A picnic lunch was served to 70 relatives.

The couple has nine children, Carolyn Chojnacky, Jerome; Ronald Chojnacky, Glenrock, Wyo.; David Chojnacky, Ogden; Michael Chojnacky, Jerome; Mary Winn and Steven Chojnacky, both Boise; six grandchildren.

Oakley drops from atop A-4 ratings

By The Associated Press

For the first time since Sept. 4, 1985, somebody besides Oakley High School sits atop The Associated Press Class A-4 high school football ratings.

Mullan, the team from which the Hornets took the top spot early last season and held it ever since, supplanted Oakley as the No. 1 team in this week's poll of sportswriters and broadcasters.

The Tigers, 4-0 and coming off a 38-0 victory over Plummer last weekend, received only one of the 17 first-place votes cast but got 71 of a possible 85 points to take the No. 1 ranking from the Hornets by a single point. Oakley, which had to struggle for its fourth victory of the season last weekend before beating Mackay, 15-8, got nine first-place votes and 70 points.

Meridian, Wallace, Homedale and Richfield maintained their top ratings in the other divisions.

In A-1, the 4-0 Warriors received nine of 17 first-place votes and 76 of a possible 85 points to hold its first-place lead over Coeur d'Alene, 3-0. Highland of Pocatello, 4-0, and Boise, 3-1, maintained the third and fourth spots. But Mountain Home, 4-0, got the fifth position and Boise's Borah High School fell from the ratings following a 54-20 loss to Highland.

In A-2, Wallace (3-0) kept the lead although the Miners were idle last weekend. Boise's Bishop Kelly High, 2-1, remained in second place, followed by Lakeland of Raftuh, 3-1, and Kuna, also 3-1. Vallivue of Caldwell, which was tied with Kuna for the fourth spot last week, fell from the ratings after losing 9-0 to B-K last Friday. The Falcons were replaced in the No. 5 position by St. Anthony's South Fremont High School, which has a 3-0-1 record.

In A-3, Homedale (3-0), which was also idle last week, maintained its No. 1 ranking, followed by Challis, 4-0, and Ashton's North Fremont High, 4-0. Malad, 4-0, made its first appearance of the season in the ratings in the No. 4 position, supplanting Aberdeen, 3-1, which suffered its first loss of the year last weekend to Preston. The Tigers slipped to No. 5, displacing Fruitland, which suffered its second loss in four games last Friday.

In A-4, Kendrick, 3-0, kept the third position, followed by Wilder, 3-0, maintaining the spots they established last week.

For the second week in a row, Richfield (4-0) was a unanimous choice in the eight-man ratings, followed in order by Garden Valley, 4-0; Salmon River of Riggin, 3-1; and Camas County of Fairfield, 3-0. Council, 1-1, supplanted Idle North Gem of Bancroft in the No. 5 spot.

Panel eyes reform in NCAA rules

By MARK ASHER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A 10-man ad hoc committee that includes the top administrators of some of college sports' major powers is expected to ask the NCAA President's Commission next week to propose rules changes that would substantially alter big-time college sports.

UCLA Chancellor Charles Young, chairman of the ad hoc committee, said Monday his group's comprehensive reform package would:

- Push back the start of the basketball season by a month and likely reduce the number of games allowed.
  - Eliminate spring football practices.
  - Reduce over a three-year period the total number of scholarships from 95 in football and from 45 to 12 in basketball.
  - Reduce the number of full-time assistant coaches from nine to seven in football and from two to one in basketball.
  - Eliminate baseball's fall season and reduce the maximum number of games from 80 to 60.
  - Effectively eliminate high school all-star games — for graduating seniors and summer basketball camps and leagues for rising seniors by ruling ineligible anyone who participates in those activities.
- The committee also will ask the President's Commission to support an NCAA Council proposal to cut the off-campus recruiting period in half in both football and basketball, reduce the number of contacts a school may make with a prospect and eliminate boosters from recruiting.

HOUSTON — Rookie left-hander Jim Deshaies set a modern major league record by striking out eight batters to start the game Tuesday night, and finished with a two-hitter and 10 strikeouts to lead the Houston Astros to a 4-0 shutout of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

More baseball — D3

The victory, coupled with Cincinnati's 6-5 victory over San Francisco, reduced Houston's magical number to two for clinching the National League West. The Astros opened the season with San Francisco also on Wednesday night, and Houston victory and Cincinnati loss against Atlanta would give the Astros their first division title since 1980.

Steve Sax got the first hit of Deshaies, a single to start the fourth, extending his hitting streak to 21 games, the longest in the major leagues. The only other Los Angeles hit was a single by Eric Cabell in the seventh.

Pinch-hitter Larry Lee popped out to second baseman Bill Doran in the third to end Deshaies' streakout string. Deshaies, who walked once, was credited with his first major league shutout and complete game.

Deshaies, 10-5, fanned Dave Anderson to start the third, tying the record of seven strikeouts to start a game set by Chicago White Sox pitcher Steve Carlton in 1969.

Idaho St. tries to regroup for Broncos after big loss at MSU

By The Associated Press

Montana State's on-again, off-again love affair with quarterback Kelly Bradley is definitely on again.

The senior led the Bobcats to a stunning 50-7 victory over Idaho State on Saturday in both teams' Big Sky Conference opener. It was a big turnaround for MSU after losing its first two games of the season by a combined score of 78-4.

Bradley was the Big Sky's most valuable player in 1984 as the Bobcats streaked to a NCAA Division I-AA title, but was sidelined for much of last season with an injury as MSU notched a disappointing 2-9 record.

On Saturday, he threw a school-record five scoring passes and completed 26 of 38 passes for 383 yards. It was enough to make even the most staid coach a happy man, and

Dave Arnold is not a staid coach. "That is the Kelly Bradley of old," Arnold said. "He executes as good as anyone."

Idaho State Coach Jim Koeller, after watching the Bengals fall to 1-2 with their second loss in a row, said individual mistakes helped MSU turn a close first-half game into a rout with 23 third-quarter points.

Star tailback Merrill Hoge, managed only 47 yards on 16 carries, and other Bengal runners fared even worse as the Bobcats held them to 29 yards net rushing.

"Montana State got the momentum in the second half and a lot of confidence. They kept getting better and we kept getting worse," Koeller said. "Right now we just don't go out and work hard every play."

In other Big Sky Conference action, Idaho came from behind to beat Cal State Fullerton, 25-17. Nevada-Reno won its third game without a loss, trouncing Montana 51-17 in the Grizzlies' season opener, and Northern Arizona shredded the Division I-AA's top-rated offense in a 45-24 victory over Weber State.

Next weekend, Idaho State will host Boise State, Northern Arizona will be at Montana and Montana State will host Nevada-Reno in non-conference action. Idaho will visit Eastern Washington and Weber State will play at Portland State.

Idaho advanced its record to 2-1 with a tense victory over the Division IA Titans of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association. But it wasn't easy. The Vandals' heralded passing attack was relatively flat in the first half, and quarterback Scott Linehan used a 71-yard bootleg for an insurance touchdown in the fourth quarter.

"For a long time, they had six defensive backs on the field," said Linehan, who was held to an uncharacteristic 140 yards through the air. But after some halftime adjustments to stop a persistent blitz, "the line did a good job and there wasn't near as much pressure in the second half. That was the key."

Trailing 17-15 heading into the final period and thinking of the previous week's loss to Central Michigan, Idaho finally began to wear down Fullerton and got what proved to be the winning points from the leg of Brian Decker.

"It's such an emotional high," Linehan said. "Any win like this instills confidence."

But the injury-riddled Titans, after a second loss in three games against Big Sky teams this season, had a somewhat different perspective.

"It's kind of frustrating," coach Gene Murphy said. "We'll go on and be a better football team. If we have players to play with."

In Flagstaff, Northern Arizona was proving it could be a better football team than its 1-2 record would suggest. Freshman Greg Wyalit's 312 yard passing made him the first quarterback in Lumberjack history to pass for more than 300 yards in three straight games, and junior Allen Rose became the first NAU player in 14 games to rush for more than 100 yards. He got 158.

But it was the six touchdowns at the end of all that yardage that beat Weber State, and Coach Larry Kentera was more concerned with how his team executed the fundamentals.

"The great thing about this game is that we only had two turnovers," Kentera said. "We had 55 turnovers last year."

For the Wildcats, it was a rude welcome to the Big Sky season after a laughier against an NAIA opponent the week before. They managed about half the 659 yards they racked up in the season opener.

"We couldn't execute our offense. We couldn't catch the ball. We couldn't throw the ball. We couldn't block," Coach Mike Price lamented.

Minico's hopes of hosting regional dim

By SCOTT TUDEHOPE
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Pocatello moved into contention for the right to host next month's Region III Class A-1 prep volleyball tournament by beating Minico here Tuesday night as part of a Gem State Conference tri-meet.

The Indians' 13-15, 16-14, 15-6 victory left Poky with a 2-1 record against Region III teams, while Minico dropped to 3-3 in regional matches and 8-6 for the season. Twin Falls leads the region's teams with a 4-0 mark.

Pocatello, which lost to Twin Falls in a match at home two weeks ago, will play the Bruins in Burley as part of a triangular on Oct. 4. The Spartans, meanwhile, saw their chances to host the regional tournament almost evaporate with the loss. Minico has just two matches remaining against Region III foes: Twin Falls in Twin Falls on Oct. 7 and Highland here on Oct. 9.

Minico and Pocatello both lost to Bonneville in the other matches Tuesday. The Spartans fell 15-10, 14-16, 15-11 and the Bees defeated Pocatello 8-15, 15-9, 16-12.

Minico and Pocatello battled until after 11 p.m. before the Indians managed to decide the match.

"We went three games with them before," said Coach Debbie Bridges before the match, referring to the Spartans' loss the the Indians in Pocatello on Sept. 9.

That it happened again was no surprise because both teams were tired.

The first game went in streaks with Minico going up 10-0. Then Pocatello got back into the match by taking the next six points, gave up a point, then took seven more. Finally Minico replacement Kathy Raehle connected on a spike for a point and tied the Indians on-bergs.

"It's wonderful because she's so inexperienced," said Bridges, "she even missed a year."

Raehle provided more energy in the second game, but even that wasn't enough to overcome an aggressive Pocatello front line anchored by spikers Jenny Peterson and Debbie Massak.

Minico went up 8-4, but saw the scored knocked at 11 after Pocatello's Jan McCarthy hit a service winner.

Two key defensive mistakes at 14-14 cost the Spartans the game.

In the final game, Minico once more pulled again. Up 2-0, the Spartans seemed to control until a series of backcourt errors added up to four straight points for the Indians.

At that point, Pocatello's Staci Draper started serving and managed to take the Indians to eight straight points, sealing the outcome.

Bruin netters suffer first loss of season

By The Times-News

IDAHO FALLS — The Idaho Falls Tigers ended Twin Falls' undefeated volleyball streak Tuesday night, dropping the Bruins 15-13, 15-7 to climb into a share of the Gem State Conference lead.

The defeat dropped Twin Falls' record to 10-1 as the Bruins followed up by downing Rigby 15-7, 15-3 to complete their triangular obligations.

"We didn't play very well and Idaho Falls has a strong team," said Coach Jerry Sivulich. "I guess the only team that's beaten them has been Highland."

Sivulich said he and his crew would be looking forward to meeting Idaho Falls again in a triangular meet in the Bruin gym on Oct. 7.

"They're coming to our place for the last match of the season and it might all boil down to that. We feel we can beat them because we've beaten Highland and Highland beat Idaho Falls."

Veronica Borri served 14 winners to lead Twin Falls while Dana Cowan paced all hitters with 10.

AL: Sox, Angels frustrated once again

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Rick Manning hit a three-run homer and Paul Molitor went 3-for-4 with two RBI to boost the Milwaukee Brewers to an 8-4 victory Tuesday night over the American League East-leading Boston Red Sox.

Boston's magic number to clinch its first division title in 11 years remained at three because New York and Toronto, tied for second place, both won.

King Learny, 10-12, gave up eight hits and four runs in 4 1/2 innings for his first win since Aug. 12.

Boston's Wade Boggs, in a race for the American League batting title with New York's Don Mattingly, went 4-for-5 to raise his average to .3502. Mattingly went 1-for-5 in the Yankees game at Baltimore to drop to .3496.

Baseball

Only one of the runs was earned, and Boyd stayed on to begin the fifth inning. But he gave up the three-run homer to Manning after Glenn Braggs' broken-bat single and Deere's double, making the score 7-3 in favor of the Brewers. Molitor's RBI single later in the inning gave the Brewers an 8-2 lead.

Don Baylor hit a two-run homer in the sixth, his 31st of the season, to cut the Brewers' lead to 8-4.

Brian Downing and Doug DeCinces singled in the fourth, then George Hendrick bounced into a force play to score Downing and make it 11-0.

Downing retired 11 of the final 19 batters following DeCinces' hit.

Blanked on two hits through five innings, the Indians broke through in the sixth when Brett Butler tripled and scored on Joe Carter's double.

Chris Bando doubled with one-out in the seventh and pinch-runner Otis Nixon scored on Butler's two-out single to tie it.

Rich Bordi, 5-4, entered the game in the 10th for Baltimore and gave up Winfield's leadoff home run. When the Yankees sent left-handed hitter Claudeell Washington to the plate to pinch-hit for Henry Cotto, the Orioles lifted Bordi in favor of the southpaw Havens. Washington advanced Winfield to third with a single and Winfield scored on the wild pitch while Havens was pitching to Mike Pagliaro.

Wayne Tolleson knocked in an insurance run with a single.

Righetti came on in the bottom of the ninth after Willie Randolph's RBI single in the top of the inning had given New York a 3-2 lead. Cal Ripken hit Righetti's first pitch into the left field stands for a 3-3 tie.

Rookie starters pitched well for both clubs. Baltimore's Eric Bell, making only his second big league start, scattered five hits over the first eight innings before giving way to Eddie Elmhorn and Jerry Reinsdorf.

To pass, the sale would have to have been approved by 10 of the

AL owners veto Texas' sale, decide to bar TV companies

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The 14 American League baseball team owners voted Tuesday to reject the transfer of ownership of the Texas Rangers to a broadcasting company. AL President Dr. Bobby Brown said.

The owners also voted to adopt a rule stating that no television company could purchase a major-league baseball team in the future, Brown said.

Rangers majority owner Eddie Chiles had sought to transfer two-thirds of the shares in the Texas team to Gaylord Broadcasting Co. The television company already owns one-third of the team and the club's broadcasting rights, which it purchased two years ago from Chiles.

In 1981, a group led by Bill Veck was unsuccessful in a bid to buy the Chicago White Sox, which subsequently was bought by Eddie Elmhorn and Jerry Reinsdorf.

To pass, the sale would have to have been approved by 10 of the 14 AL club owners, and a majority of the National League team owners.

"The American League has taken a very definite stand about television companies' owning franchises. That combination is just not going to be acceptable to them."

The vote was taken by the AL team owners during a two-hour meeting at the Four Seasons Hotel in this Los Angeles-area beach community.

"Old Can" Boyd failed in his attempt to become a 18-game winner for the first time in his career, giving up eight runs on eight hits in 4-2-3 innings. He had a wild pitch and gave up a home run.

Boyd, 18-10, had a 2-0 lead entering the bottom of the fourth.

But the Brewers took a 4-2 lead in the inning, taking advantage of Boyd's center and errors, by second baseman Marty Barrett and center fielder Tony Armas.

Manning's RBI double was bootied by Barrett, leading the bases.

Four straight balls by Boyd sent Schroeder to first and brought home Cooper from third. Jim Gardner's sacrifice fly scored Deer and tied the game, and runners advanced when Tony Armas throw went to the catcher.

Another run scored on Rick Cerone's sacrifice fly. Molitor's bloop single drove in Schroeder and made the score 4-2.

Cleveland 5 California 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Pat Tabler doubled home the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and scored on Brock Jacoby's single as the Cleveland Indians defeated the California Angels 5-2 Tuesday night behind rookie left-hander Greg Swindell's four-hitter.

Pending the results of Tuesday's late Texas-Seattle game, the Angels' number of clinching the American League West pennant remained at four.

With the game tied 2-2, Mel Hall singled off Jose Mike Witt, 18-9, and scored when Tabler doubled into the left-field corner. Jacoby singled to score Tabler. Joe Carter added a run-scoring double in the ninth.

Swindell, 4-1, walked two and struck out five in his first major-league complete game. The University of Texas All-American has won four straight games since losing his debut game on Aug. 22 to Boston 2-5.

DETROIT (AP) — A home run by Jesse Barfield and a two-run double by Tony Fernandez sparked a four-run Toronto ninth inning Tuesday night as the Blue Jays earned a 6-3 comeback victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Mark Eichhorn, 13-5, pitched 1-3 innings of two-hit relief, striking out six and walking one. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his 34th save.

Willie Hernandez, 5-7, the fourth of five Detroit pitchers, was the loser.

Toronto had just four hits and trailed 3-2 when Barfield hit his 34th homer off Eric King, a solo shot into the upper deck in left-center. Hernandez came on and gave up a single to Ernie Whit and an infield single to Damaso Garcia. Garth Jorg hit a two-out double to left, driving in Whit with the go-ahead run, and Fernandez doubled home Garcia and Jorg.

Durrell Evans's 29th home run, a pinch-hit off reliever Mark Eichhorn, broke a 2-2 tie to lead off the Detroit seventh.

MINNESOTA 9 Kansas City 2

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Gary Gaetti hit his 32nd and 33rd home runs and drove in a career-high six runs Tuesday night to lead the Minnesota Twins to a 9-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals, who have lost six of their last seven games.

Oakland 4 Chicago 3

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Mark McGwire hit a two-run single in the sixth and Oakland took advantage of three Chicago errors for another run in the inning Wednesday, leading the A's to their third straight victory, a 4-3 triumph over the Chicago White Sox.

NL: Mets won't let up on East

NEW YORK (AP) — When Lee Mazzilli was signed by the New York Mets to a minor league contract last month, general manager Frank Cashen said he was supposed to help the club next year.

But a week after his Aug. 1 signing he was with the major league club and now next year has become this year.

When Kevin Mitchell came to the ballpark Tuesday with a virus, Mazzilli filled in driving in three runs with a single and a double leading the Mets to a 9-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Mets' lead over second-place Philadelphia in the National League East this year expanded to 10 games, a week after the Mets clinched the division title.

"Six months ago I thought I might be with the Mets because of all the talk going on in spring training," explained Mazzilli, who started his major league career with New York and is hitting .250 since returning.

"Four months ago I would have said there was no way I would be here. When the (Pittsburgh) Pirates released me, I jumped at the opportunity to sign with the New York organization once again. I was willing to take my chances at getting back."

That opportunity came when the Mets released George Postler.

"I spent the first two weeks jumping up and down because I was so happy," continued Mazzilli. "That's done with. Now my goal is to be ready for the playoffs and know what I have to do to punch him [Carter] out of the bench, or even be a starter."

"It's an opportunity I never expected, but as I said, I want to make a contribution. Today I did and this has to help me get ready for Houston. I'm fortunate that I was able to come back home."

Ray Knight, Keith Hernandez and Darrel Stuber were honored for New York. Bob Ojeda and Jesse Orosco combined on a four-hitter giving the Mets their 99 victory, the second most in their history and breaking the club's 100-year record. New York's best record was the 1969 world championship club with a 100-62 mark.

"Steve Lake hit his second homer of the season with one out in the third for the Cardinals' only run.

Ojeda, 17-5 after his fifth victory in six decisions, allowed three hits, struck out five and pitched over six innings. Orosco got his 19th save with three innings of one-hit relief.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Kurt Stillwell's two-out single in the seventh inning scored Ron Oester with the tie-breaking run Tuesday night to lead the Cincinnati Reds to a 6-5 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

The Reds' victory left the clubs in a tie for second place in the National League West.

Stillwell had scored the tying run in an inning earlier when he was hit by a pitch by starter Kelly Downs and
