10 die in Salt Lake plane collision

By LAURIE SULLIVAN
The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A commuter aircraft on final approach and a private plane collided over the Salt Lake Valley on Thursday, killing all 10 people aboard both planes and showering debris over a residential area, authorities said.

Falling wreckage from Skywest Airlines' twin-engine Fairchild Metroliner and the single-engine private plane damaged three houses, but there were no fires and apparently no one on the ground was hurt, said Salt Lake County Fire Marshal Frank Brown.

Dozens of police, sheriff's deputies and firefighters rushed to the snowy crash site about 15 miles southwest of downtown Salt Lake City and cordoned off six blocks around the main wreckage after the 12:56 p.m. collision.

By evening, more than 200 law enforcement and rescue workers from at least seven agencies had fanned out over the snow-swept neighborhood, covering an area within 3 miles of the main wreckage.

"They are picking up bodies here and there, whenever people call us to report them," Brown said.

There was initial confusion over the death toll as bodies were scattered through the neighborhood in the unincorporated community of Kearns. Late Thursday, Sheriff's Lt. John Malmberg said the remains of all ten victims had been recovered, "as far as we know." He said people still were calling to report finding remains.

Searchers also had found the commuter plane's black box, said Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward. The device was found 1/2 mile from a makeshift command post near the main wreckage.

The accident was the first U.S. commercial aviation disaster of the year. It came at a time of increasing concerns over air safety in the wake of a Aug. 31, 1986 collision in Carlsbad, Calif., of a private plane and a Aeromexico DC-9 jetliner that killed 82 people.

Skywest Flight 1834 was carrying six passengers and a crew of two from Pocatello, Idaho, to Salt Lake International Airport, said Ron Reber, a Skywest vice president. The turboprop aircraft can carry 18 passengers and two crew members.

The other plane, a blue-and-white Mooney M-20 possibly on a biannual training flight with a pilot and flight instructor aboard, had taken off 26 minutes before the collision from Airport No. 2, a small facility near the crash site.

The collision occurred at about 7,000 feet at 12:56 p.m. MST.

Ron Nelson, base operator at Airport No. 2, said the Mooney pilot, who he identified as Chester Baker, owned the plane and may have been undergoing a required flight review with instructor Paul Lietz.

However, he said the light plane should have been no higher than 5,400 feet, which is the smaller airport's radio control area.

"I shouldn't have happened because everybody on board (the Mooney) was an experienced pilot," said Nelson, who believes "neither pilot saw each other."

The Skywest plane was about to turn into its final approach to the larger airport when the accident occurred, he said.

KEARNS, Utah — Rebekah Whitecock stopped mopping her front room and headed for the bedroom to check on her kittens when she heard a crash following Thursday's fatal collision between a commuter airplane and a light plane.

"I was four steps away from opening the door when it hit," said Whitecock. "I opened up the door and saw a wing and these wheels sticking out of the ceiling."

The twin-engine Skywest Airlines commuter plane, on approach to

Salt Lake City International Airport from Pocatello, Idaho, collided with a single-engine Mooney just before 1 p.m., killing 10 people. The crash rained bodies and debris over a 3-mile-long area.

Police said there were no reports of people injured from the falling debris.

"My two kitties didn't make it," Whitecock said. "I feel like the Lord kind of watched over me. . . . I am very lucky to be alive."

The fuselage of Skywest's Fairchild Metroliner, containing four bodies, slammed into the middle of a residential street about two blocks from St. Francis Xavier Catholic school — and church — a makeshift morgue was set up in a large shed connected to the church.

The school's front windows were splattered with blood and pieces of flesh, more body parts littered the parking lot and searchers worked in the night to find the bodies.

Sheriff Pete Hayward said pathologists from the University of Utah were called in to assist with identification. Authorities, including the FBI, also were using scatterer personal effects to help with identification.

Flight from Twin Falls was landing

TWIN FALLS — At about the same time as a Skywest flight from Salt Lake crashed near the Salt Lake City airport, another Skywest flight from Twin Falls was landing there.

Both flights stopped in Pocatello on the way to Salt Lake City, and the Twin Falls flight was scheduled to land at 1:05 p.m., just 13 minutes after the fatal crash.

An estimated 1,600-1,800 passengers depart Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport each month, according to Airport Manager Harry Merrick. The bulk of the 25,000 out-bound passengers a year are flying to Salt Lake City on the seven flight days offered by SkyWest and Horizon, he said.

Merrick said those numbers are about the same as last year. But it is down severely from the heyday of Twin Falls air travel in 1977 and 1978, when government subsidies persuaded airlines like Republic to serve some of the 55,000 annual passengers, he said.

SkyWest began serving Twin Falls in 1983, the same year Republic pulled out after deregulation. SkyWest began serving Idaho Falls in 1982.

SkyWest and Horizon fly to Salt Lake City and Boise to serve many passengers who make connections with larger airlines for national travel, according to Merrick and local travel agents. SkyWest is affiliated with Western Airlines and Horizon is affiliated with United Airlines, and both larger airlines offer packages to encourage air travel, the agents said.

Simplify W-4, senator advises

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate's chief tax writer urged the Internal Revenue Service on Thursday to withdraw and simplify the new W-4 tax withholding form that reverses employee's required to file this year.

The new form is just one counting leg. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said in a letter to IRS Commissioner Lawrence Gibbs.

A tax return expert predicted meanwhile, that millions of people who follow the form to the letter are going to be disappointed a year from now, when they discover they no longer get a refund.

"I don't think it's realistic that the IRS is working under a mandate from Congress to devise a more accurate form, our goal will not be realized if workers are unable to decipher the form because of its complexity," Bentsen wrote Gibbs.

There was no immediate response from Gibbs. But IRS spokesman Rod Young said he knows of no plans to change the new form, about 300 million copies of which are already in the hands of employers.

The new form, an instructions and a worksheet fill four pages. The old package covered two pages. The IRS produced the new

Chief negotiators open new session over lunch

The Associated Press

GENEVA — The Soviet Union's new chief arms negotiator and his American counterpart broke with tradition Thursday and started a new round of talks with a get-acquainted session over lunch.

The two delegation leaders, Soviet Yuli Vorontsov and American Max Kampelman, met privately at Soviet request, instead of heading a meeting of all three top negotiators from each side, which normally marks the beginning of a round.

U.S. spokesman Terry Shroeder said he had no information on when the next session in the seventh round of arms talks would be. "I have nothing for the news media on this as yet," he said.

Asked about the results of Thursday's session, which was the two men's first meeting, he said, "It went fine." He declined further comment.

The luncheon lasted just over two hours.

In a separate development, the Soviet ambassador to Switzerland, Evgeny Makeyev, and the State Department in Washington announced that U.S.-Soviet talks on nuclear weapons testing would resume Jan. 22 in Geneva.

When Kampelman arrived at the Soviet mission, he and Vorontsov greeted each other warmly in front of reporters. They declined to say what they planned to discuss.

At a news conference later, Alexei Obukhov, deputy head of the Soviet delegation, said the two men planned to discuss substantive and procedural questions and to get to know each other during the lunch.

Vorontsov, a first secretary in the Foreign Ministry, holds a higher rank than his predecessor of the arms talks, Viktor Karpov.

The announcement of Vorontsov's appointment was made Tuesday, one day after President Reagan announced that Kampelman, in addition to continuing as chief U.S. arms-control negotiator, had been nominated for the post of State Department counselor, a job which required Senate confirmation.

Obukhov, responding to a question, said the higher ranks of the delegation heads "should help the negotiations, an impetus, should accelerate the negotiations to make the current round the breakthrough round."

Obukhov spoke at a press conference called to mark the first anniversary of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's proposal to eliminate nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

The Soviet news agency Tass on Thursday quoted Vorontsov as saying the Soviets see their principal task in Geneva as making progress in the talks.

He said the two sides should proceed from the tentative understandings reached at the U.S.-Soviet summit in October in Reykjavik, Iceland, the report from Moscow said.

Regional primary goes into deep freeze

The Associated Press

BOISE — Clinging practical and political problems, members of a House State Affairs Committee have reacted coolly to a proposal for a four-state Northwest regional presidential primary and indicated no action would be taken to adopt the plan.

"I don't want to speak gloom and doom about it, but I can take a hint," Deputy Secretary of State Ben Ysursa told the panel on Thursday.

Ysursa presented the proposition for a primary on the fourth Tuesday in March in presidential election years to fulfill a commitment his office made to its counterparts in Washington, Oregon and Montana. But he also told officials in those states that there was little chance Idaho lawmakers would accept the plan.

At the heart of objections to the proposal are its timing and potential expense. The state Legislature normally runs into late March, and establishing the statewide primary date at that time would make campaigning almost impossible, Ysursa said some lawmakers are still complaining about the time pressure caused by the current primary on the fourth Tuesday in May.

To hold two primaries, one in March for presidential nominees and a later one for state officials, Ysursa said, would probably add $400,000 to $500,000 in election costs to an already hard-pressed state budget.

"There's a movement in the country to hold regional primaries, and the Northwest wanted to be recognized and get some regional issues before the candidates," Ysursa said. "We all endorse the concept of getting more attention in our areas. But the practical and political consideration . . . will come to the forefront."

Committee members indicated they "might consider joining a regional primary around the date of the present state primary. But Ysursa said the counteroffer would be rejected by the other states.

Compounding Idaho's problem, Ysursa said, was the fact that the National Democratic Party will not recognize the outcome of the state's presidential primary balloting as binding for convention delegate selection because Idaho does not have party registration to qualify for primary participation.

He said, however, that officials of the state Republican and Democratic parties have discussed that issue and endorsed legislation that would change Idaho's current open primary system, in which any registered voter can vote in whatever party primary he desires, to a closed one that allows only registered party members to vote in that party's primary.

Winter storm warnings extended into Arizona and New Mexico where up to 5 inches of snow had fallen.

The 15 inches of snow at Colorado Springs was the most for a January storm, and several more inches were expected before the storm ends.

The storm was blamed for the death of a 35-year-old man whose vehicle ran off a snow-covered road in Golden, Colo., and rolled down an embankment.

The cold air and winds gusting up to 40 mph produced wind chills up to 50 degrees below zero from Wyoming and the Dakotas into Minnesota.

Travelers' advisories warned of snow and hazardous driving conditions for central and southern Wyoming, the Texas Panhandle, northwest Colorado and portions of central and northeast Nevada.

Elsewhere, a cold front helped trigger widespread showers from northern Florida and Georgia through the mid-Atlantic coast and southern New England.

Dick Meyer, a spokesman for the FAA Western Region in Seattle, said investigators would attempt to determine if the smaller of the two aircraft was in an Airport Radar Service Area, or ARSA, at the time of the collision.

A temporary morgue and command post were set up at St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church, where parts of bodies fell in the parking lot and on the steps of a nearby church-run school.

He said the pilot had been with Skywest three years. It was the first fatal accident in the nearly 15 years Skywest has operated, said Reber.

The accident did happen within the ARSA, that's an area in which the aircraft must be in radio contact with air traffic control.

SkyWest has been flying in the West for more than 14 years. It currently serves 35 cities in eight states. SkyWest's fleet has consisted of 19 passenger planes, but recently the company has begun upgrading to larger aircraft, able to carry 30 passengers.

Idaho Falls, Fossilito and Twin Falls lie in the northern sector of SkyWest's route system. The crashed plane's destination, Salt Lake City, is the airline's hub city in the Intermountain area. Planes from smaller cities converge there and then fly to the hub.

Last year SkyWest nurtured its expansion by forging marketing ties with Western Airlines, which also operates a hub at Salt Lake City. SkyWest began calling its flights "Western Express" to highlight the connection.

Investigators from the FAA and National Transportation Safety Board went to the scene. Reber, the Skywest official, said next-of-kin had been notified but he declined to identify the victims on advice of lawyers for the airline.

Sets of proposed state liability law changes don't coincide

BOISE (AP) — A spokesman for a coalition working on changes in Idaho's liability laws has proposed a set of changes in state laws to deal with the "crisis" in the industry.

But the Idaho Trial Lawyers Association has its own five-part program for change — and the two sets of proposals don't coincide.

Jim Weatherly, president of the Idaho Liability Reform Coalition said the House Business Committee on Thursday set a coalition with statewide support is proposing changes. "Many diverse groups have come together to support one piece of legislation," he said.

Business Committee Chairman Mike Strasson, R-Nampa, told committee members it was possible the committee would not be assigned the task of sorting out the conflicting legislation. But he said it would be a decision to be made by the whole House, and all members need to be advised of the options available.

In last year's liability insurance

"crisis," many companies and agencies complained they couldn't get insurance. State insurance officials said earlier in the week the availability problem apparently has eased, but the problem appears to be with price.

"Liability insurance is a cyclical problem," said Weatherly. He insurance companies say there have been several previous cycles.

Weatherly, who is executive director of the Association of Idaho Cities, said the coalition was not "a front for the insurance industry" but represented many groups interested in the problem.

The coalition proposes:

- Eliminating the "joint and several liability" provision in state law. It allows a claimant to get damages from defendant most able to pay, not the one most responsible for damages. "Payment for damages should be based on degree of fault, not ability to pay," he said.

- Reducing double recovery. Weatherly said a court should be allowed to know if a claimant has received full or partial compensation from other sources such as insurance. "The law shouldn't be established to enrich people, but to compensate them for damages," he said.

- Allowing damage awards over $100,000 to be paid over a period of time rather than all at once.

- Changing the interest on judgments, which now is 18 percent.
- Limiting damage awards for noneconomic factors such as pain and suffering and mental anguish.

- A limit on the individual liability of volunteers working for nonprofit organizations.
- Restricting a claimant's ability to seek punitive damages unless a judge holds a hearing before trial and determines there is clear and convincing evidence of wanton and outrageous conduct.

The Idaho Trial Lawyers Association proposal has five parts:

- Authorizing judges to impose fees and costs against parties and their attorneys when claims are pursued or defended in bad faith, are not well-grounded in fact or law, or involve an improper purpose.
- Giving judges clear discretion to decrease, increase or eliminate excessive awards.
- Elimination of specific damage demands in civil law suits.
- A law giving businesses and government entities the right to attack excessive premiums and untimely cancellations.
- A law encouraging "good faith, prompt and fair settlements" where liability has become reasonably clear.

Accountant says many businesses see investment credit as a windfall

BOISE (AP) — Many small Idaho businesses look upon the investment tax credit as a windfall, not an incentive to invest in business expansion, a Boise accountant says.

Glenn Schumacher, a certified public accountant in Boise, told members of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee on Thursday that if he were advising clients, he would urge them to make investment decisions based on sound business practices, not whether they could save a few dollars in state taxes.

"They should make a decision on business economics, whether they can make a buck," he said.

Schumacher appeared before the Revenue and Taxation panel to discuss the impact of the new federal tax code on state tax laws.

That looms as a key issue in his budget message on Wednesday, Gov. Cecil Andrus said the state could receive more than $21 million per year in extra state income tax receipts by adopting the new tax laws as Idaho laws.

But if the investment tax credit is kept state, officials estimate that would wipe out two-thirds of the expected increase in revenue.

The new tax code wipes out some deductions. If Idaho adopts the new laws without lowering or changing tax rates, the net result would be more state tax income.

More than the discussion covered all the tax laws, most of the interest centered on the Idaho investment tax credit. The federal changes would allow businesses to take a special tax break if they invest in new equipment. The theory is that the incentive helps spur the creation of new jobs.

Schumacher said accountants generally favor adopting the federal tax laws. "There will be less complications for accountants, for the Tax Commission, and the taxpayers will benefit and all those who care about the costs of administration."

He said accountants have no opinion whether the tax laws should be used to generate more revenue.

Schumacher said one tax change should benefit Idaho farmers. It restricts tax breaks for "passive" farming operations, and is designed to get non-farmers out of farming.

But the overall impact of the tax code change is "a big unknown out there," he said.

Rep. Cyril Burt, R-St. Anthony, said there are more than 200 amendments to the federal tax laws pending in Congress. He said Idaho should wait a while before adopting the federal code to see what changes are made.

But Schumacher said change in the tax laws will be a continuing process, and there will be considerable confusion about state tax laws if the federal code is not adopted quickly, because some of the new laws apply retroactively.

"The changes will not be that substantial as they apply to the state of Idaho," he said.

Leaving scene of accident may be felony

BOISE (AP) — Ada County Prosecutor Greg Bower says a number of recent incidents in the county indicate there's a pressing need for a new law making it a felony to leave the scene of an accident involving an injury.

The House Judiciary and Rules Committee on Thursday gave preliminary approval to a bill prepared by Bower.

Rep. Patricia McDermott, D-Pocatello, objecting to giving the bill an emergency clause, putting it into effect in March instead of July when most new laws go on the books. But she lost a vote, and the bill was ordered printed with the emergency clause.

Bower said he wanted the law to go into effect as quickly as possible because there have been a number of cases in the county recently in which a felony charge could not be filed.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Idaho's congressional delegation, along with others from the Northwest, have asked the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to let Northwest Pipeline Corp. resume transporting low-cost natural gas to Idaho, Oregon and Washington.

In a letter sent Thursday to FERC Chairman Martha Hesse, Sens. James McClure and Steve Symms and Rep. Larry Craig said the region's industrial consumers have been unable to directly buy inexpensive natural gas since Northwest Pipeline stopped transporting it last August.

The Salt Lake City-based company stopped transporting gas because it believed FERC regulations could threaten its profitability.

Before the August shutdown, the Idaho Republicans said from 200 to 300 industrial customers in the Northwest could go directly to natural gas producers in Canada and the U.S. to buy the lowest-cost gas available. Northwest Pipeline, which owns the principal pipeline in the region, then transported the gas from the field.

"This largely is a question of economics, and the ability of industrial users to reduce their costs of doing business," the lawmakers said in a joint statement. "In turn, their lower overhead could very well lead to savings for consumers."

American workers without real pay increase for 20 years

Recently several articles have appeared in the press documenting a disturbing fact: Average real U.S. wages peaked in 1974, and currently are at about the level of the mid-1960s.

This means that for the first time in history typical American workers have gone more than two decades without any real increase in pay.

Most Americans certainly appear to be far better off than they were two decades ago. A $170 billion trade deficit cannot be just a statistical mirage. Someone must be purchasing all those Japanese cars, Korean video cassette recorders, Italian clothes and Brazilian shoes. How is it possible for real wages to have declined and most Americans to appear to be living better?

Obviously wages are not the only form of income. Many households receive transfer payments from the federal government such as Social Security. And these payments have increased dramatically in the last two decades. Thanks to the indexing of Social Security payments in the early '70s, the elderly are much better off than ever before. For 1983 the per-capita cash household income of those over 65 actually was greater than that of the population as a whole. And each year the elderly make up a larger proportion of the population.

Many of the rest of the population are more affluent for the simple reason that, while real wages have declined, the number of people employed per household has increased substantially. Between 1973 and 1985 the United States added 28 million new jobs, increasing the total number of Americans employed by one-third. A higher proportion of adult Americans are working than at any time in this century. A large number of these new entrants into the labor force are women whose husbands are working. Thus, many Americans are better off because they live in families receiving income from two people instead of one—even if, on average, each person's wage is less than it was a decade ago.

There is another reason many families are living better: They have fewer children. Since children are a major expense, the decline in the number of children per family automatically makes remaining family members more prosperous. (The feminization of poverty has less to do with the lower wages paid to women than with the fact that households with only one breadwinner and multiple dependent children frequently are headed by a woman.)

The increase in Social Security payments, the growth in the number of families in which both adults work and the decline in the number of children per household thus have effectively masked the erosion of real wages.

To appreciate the magnitude of the economy's deterioration in the last two decades, imagine what the living standards of the typical middle-class family would be like if it had as many wage earners—and as many children—as its parents had and also retained the inflation and medical bills.

There is nothing wrong with making the elderly (financially) self-sufficient, increasing the number of working women or having fewer children. Yet these developments are disturbing because the American public does not seem to have made the connection between these three factors and the serious decline in the competitive performance of U.S. industry.

It is one thing for women to work to increase the family's living standards, but quite another for them to have to work simply to sustain it. It is fine for couples to decide to have fewer children, but tragic for the reasons and the future of our society if the themselves is that they cannot afford them. Similarly, being more generous to the elderly is commendable, but not if we have to borrow from foreigners to finance our high federal deficits in order to do so.

Most Americans have yet to appreciate the full effects of the decreasing ability of U.S. companies to compete internationally. They continue to judge the nation's economic performance by the standards of the 1970s, a decade of extraordinary economic instability in which both unemployment and inflation reached double digits. In comparison, the performance of the economy in the 1920s appears to have improved. In reality, this improvement is illusory.

Since 1980 we have gone from being the world's largest creditor nation to being its biggest debtor, while our trade deficit has increased more than sixfold. While America remains the world's richest nation, since it has such a large population, its workers are no longer the world's best paid.

I hope that it will not take another major increase in unemployment or inflation to persuade the public that the capacity of American business to generate increased income for its citizenry has become seriously impaired. But before figuring out how to reverse this trend, we need to accept the fact that it has occurred.

BOSTON—Get out your notepads, your television cameras and your banks.

Here come the anecdotes: It is July, 1983, and President Reagan is talking on the radio about Little Ashley Balley from Texas, who needs an organ transplant. "Time is running out," he says. "I'm issuing a plea to the nation to find Ashley a donor."

It is May, 1986, and the First Lady is on the telephone calling the family of Alex Girard, a nine-month-old waiting in Massachusetts for a liver transplant. She offers sympathy and an Air Force jet to rush a donor organ to the hospital.

Now here come the notepads, cameras and banks. Here comes the publicity policy. It is January, 1987, and the budget submitted by the President is missing something. It's missing the $500,000 for the Office of Organ Transplantation, and missing the $1.2 million for the national computer network to match donors with the people who are waiting.

In Year Seven of the Reagan administration, we have grown used to these gaps between Reagan sentiments and actions. We have grown used to presidential sympathy for the victims of his own decisions.

We have grown used to the fact that some internal connection is broken, a synapse unmade, between the man and the policymakers. But for the hundreds of Americans waiting for livers, hearts, pancreases, this particular patch of ground between publicity and policy seems especially barren.

In recent years, the waiting room for those who need organ transplants has often looked like a wrestling ring where families compete for a scarce resource. We have seen people who use money and the media to jump to the top of the list. There have been organs wasted in one state while patients waited in another.

This is why Congress passed the National Organ Transplant Act in 1984, and passed it almost unanimously. The cornerstone of the bill was the network to match donors with recipients and to make sure organs were distributed on medical grounds and priorities.

The administration opposed this bill when it was in Congress, insisting that these programs should be privately financed. When the bill is finally signed by the President became law, they went on resisting it. The money for the network was withheld until the last possible legal moment, Sept. 30, 1986. Now, a mere four months later, they have axed the fledgling program out of the new budget.

As Sen. Alberg Gore, Jr. of Tennessee, who has watched this program, notes in frustration, this is not an administration bothered much by the laws of Congress: "They think they're above the law. It makes very little difference if the Congress passes a law; even if the margin is 369-8 in the House, and 100-0 in the Senate. If some willful, ideological bureaucrat thinks it's inconsistent with his philosophy, that's enough to countermand the whole system."

What is true in foreign policy is true at home. This transplant bill is a small ticket item. It adds up to less than $4 million in a $1 trillion budget. If the President refuses to put it back in, the Congress can—but it is a revealing miniature of an administration that comforts with one hand the people it strikes with the other.

Sen. Gore sent the President a polite and personal plea reminding him—in case he forgot—"both you and Mrs. Reagan have shown a great deal of personal interest on behalf of so many of these families. Your pledges to help have been a source of comfort for many of them." He has yet to hear back.

Without this national system for gathering and fairly distributing such a scarce human resource, we are back in the game of wait and waste. Desperate families will again compete for publicity. Their best hope will be to become the anecdote of the week.

Remember that when you read another next sympathy call from the White House.

High court shows confusion over scientific, moral issues

In a series of decisions concerning the rights of mentally disordered persons, the U.S. Supreme Court has demonstrated a quiet confusion of scientific and moral issues.

Although the court routinely questions the scientific status of psychiatry—in cases involving involuntary hospitalization and the rights of hospital patients, for example—it simultaneously grants unjustified power to mental-health professionals to influence and even to decide non-psychiatric questions involving fundamental liberty and dignity.

In the latest example, Ford vs. Wright, the court held that it is unconstitutional to execute a prisoner who had been fairly convicted of a capital crime and sentenced to death but had become insane at the time of execution.

While the court did not dictate the exact nature of the proceeding required to determine a prisoner's competence to be executed, it assumed that the question was largely one of psychiatric fact that required extensive psychiatric input for resolution. Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. suggested that the decision could be placed in the hands of psychiatric decision-makers rather than judges or other laypersons. But deciding who is competent to be executed, like deciding who is legally insane or who should be involuntarily committed, is not primarily a psychiatric or medical issue. Rather, it is a moral, social, political and ultimately a legal issue that should be recognized and decided as such. After all, concern for human dignity—the underlying rationale for not executing the insane—is clearly a moral and political value that long antedates modern psychiatry.

In a pluralistic and democratic society, judges and juries—the moral and social representatives of society—should decide these issues. Although mental-health professionals, educated and skilled as they are, could be consulted on the decision-making process, their views should not be the final word on a case.

Consider, too, the test for competence. Today the most common standard that states have adopted to decide if a prisoner is too insane to execute—a standard that the majority of the court seems to accept—is whether the condemned person understands the punishment that he or she is about to suffer, and why he or she is to suffer it. But deciding how much understanding is sufficient to execute is again a moral and political question, not a mental-health issue.

Disentangling psychiatric and non-psychiatric questions would encourage more rational legal decision-making. For example, misconceptions about medical and moral issues cause the court to confuse disputes about factual issues, such as what a defendant understood, with disputes about legal and moral issues.

Here, mental-health professionals should surely be encouraged to help us understand factually what a prisoner understands about his punishment.

Deciding who will be executed, held non-respondible for crime or locked up in a mental hospital involves moral and political issues of dignity, responsibility and liberty. Such decisions are far too important to be considered technical and delegated to experts. By obscuring the distinction between medical and moral issues, the law abdicates its responsibility to face hard issues squarely and reflects a magical belief that there are scientific or medical "answers" to non-scientific questions.

The Supreme Court, legislators and others should resist the ever-increasing tendency to adopt misguided scientific "fixes" by deferring moral decisions to experts, and should limit mental-health professionals to providing legally relevant, scientific and clinical information.

Letters/ Story offers hope that people in Twin Falls area will stand up for racial equality

Dark skin created bias

I want to share a story. The story is rather poignant, but one that is quite appropriate for these days in anticipation of Martin Luther King Day. I offer it with the hope that many people will respond positively to this unique holiday which gives each of us an opportunity to renew our commitment to the great ideals of racial equality, social and economic justice, and world peace.

It was about a week after the Arya Nation's cross burning and the "One Planet, One People" candlelight court-martial that I received a rather interesting phone call.

The caller, from Caldwell, had apparently been watching the events taking place in the Magic Valley with great interest. She told me how pleased she was to learn that there were people in Twin Falls who would take a stand against "the ignorance and prejudice so prevalent in this country."

Then her story came out. "Some 20 years ago I moved to Twin Falls hoping to make it my home," she said. "I loved the area and stayed there a couple years. Unfortunately, I had to leave."

"Why," I asked.

"Well, I am of Russian descent but happen to have very dark skin, so most people simply look me up as a Negro. I couldn't find a job. No one would give me the time of day because of my skin color. It made me very sad. So, you see, I had to leave to survive. I moved to Caldwell where I finally did get a job. People here were really not much more friendly than those in Twin Falls, but I thank God for there were some who could see my humanness beyond my dark skin."

"So now you understand why it makes me happy to know that in the Twin Falls area there are people who care, people who will stand up for racial equality. Perhaps there's hope for us."

taking the exchange value produced by labor, productivity, and subtracting wages for labor. The closer these wages are to subsistence wage, the better it is for the capitalist. For his power productivity needs to be as high as possible with wages and worker benefits as low as possible. The more successful this technique is, the higher exploitation of labor will be. As productivity and exploitation increase, workers become less able to consume what they and their workers produce.

This situation, foreseeable, can lead to a crisis, a crisis of over production and under consumption. Workers may get laid off and people without an income cannot purchase and consume.

As you can see, this crisis can cause great turmoil in our economic system. It would put an end to our capitalist society.

Of course, this outcome is a bit far fetched but completely possible.

Through the years, capitalism devised its own preventions of this potential crisis, of which unionization proves to be the most useful.

The devices of prevention are as follows:

1. Unionization. 2. Welfare and subsidies. 3. Exporting of surplus. 4. Government regulations—minimum wage, price controls, etc. 5. Conscription—a military, bi-military, 6. Federal make-work programs. 7. Warfare—as an outlet for distribution of goods.

Union functions explained

In the response to the current passing of Referendum 1, I would like to try to express a concern for the future of our labor force, and economy, both in Idaho and the U.S. as a whole. To do this, I must try to explain the functions of the labor union in our capitalist society.

To start out, capitalism revolves around the concept of exchange value. With ours or any other economic system, the real value of something is reducible to the amount of labor that is put into producing that something.

The basis for capitalist exchange is buying in order to sell at a later time for an increased value, profit.

The goal of the capitalist is to maximize surplus value of his labor. This is done by

Give them the same raise

James Kilpatrick wants to increase Congress from $77,400 to $89,500, an increase of $12,100; and judges to $135,000 and the chief of justice to $135,000 is nuts. That would be a $12,100 raise for a congressman and $46,000 for a judge.

When a retired person drawing $518 a month would only get a $100.80 a year raise and $53.70 of that going for higher Medicare payments which leaves only $48 a year raise. As far as the judges go, any idiot can make better decisions unlearned than the supposedly learned judges.

They know what the salary is when they campaign for the job. If they want a raise, give them the same 1.3 the rest of us get. They are not any better than we are.

M-K head contends U.S. foreign policy hurting business

BOISE (AP) — Many politicians are whitewashing U.S. trade problems by blaming a lack of American competitiveness while the real problem is with the government's foreign policy, Morrison Knudsen Corp.'s chief executive said.

"I am going to invite myself into some very fine company and fight with (Idaho potato baron) Jack Simpson in refusing to be an apologist for our U.S. industries," William J. Deasy, head of the worldwide construction, shipbuilding and engineering company, said Wednesday.

"I do not believe our current economic condition has been created by an inherent deficient system or by unproductive labor or even overpaid, martin-drinking, monolingual management," he told several hundred people at a Boise Chamber of Commerce dinner.

Deasy said some of the trade problems and their subsequent damage to American industry stem from trade concessions made to achieve foreign policy objectives. The concessions also were used to help create a favorable export environment for allied countries, carrying "heavy debt burdens — many of which are held by large U.S. banks, he said.

U.S. trade deficits with other countries, notably Japan and Canada, hit record levels last year. Although Deasy said Congress is likely to remedy the problem, he questioned whether it is willing to threaten foreign relationships.

"In the past, I believe the U.S. government has espoused a free-trade theory largely for foreign policy purposes," he said.

"That policy has injured U.S. business, along with foreign government subsidies to business, cheap labor, product dumping and import restrictions, he said.

"Clearly this foreign trade deal isn't going too well for us," he said. "If it's so good, why are we losing whole industries, our jobs, our wealth and winding up with a devalued currency and a huge trade deficit?" he asked.

He said trade problems have injured M-K International Co., which now gets less than 10 percent of its revenues from international projects, compared with 50 percent to 50 percent during most of the past decade.

America's uphill trade battle also has hurt some of Idaho's largest employers. Idaho's lumber producers are suffering from soft-wood imports, which amounted to about one-third of the market in 1985. Silver imports are stifling domestic production, he said.

Idaho's agricultural exports have plunged from $531 million in 1981 to just over $300 million in 1985, Deasy said, and Idaho high-technology companies have been injured by foreign competition.

He said the most formidable competitors are on the Pacific Rim.

"To cope with this force, we will need a U.S. government foreign policy that is not predicated upon buying our allies with U.S. market share and U.S. jobs," Deasy said.

Field joins McClure's staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mike Field, state director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, has been appointed by Sen. James McClure as director of McClure's state office operations.

Field, 36, earlier served as field and district director. He will assume duties now held by Jim Goller, who was both McClure's chief of staff and state director. Goller was appointed earlier in the week by Gov. Cecil Andrus to the Pacific Northwest Power Planning Council.

Rod Neuschwander, administrative assistant to McClure, will be chief administrator for the McClure staff in Washington and Idaho.

McClure has six district offices in Idaho, in Boise, Coeur d'Alene, Lewiston, Twin Falls, Pocatello and Idaho Falls.

Gem potatoes to help tourism

BOISE (AP) — Idaho potatoes soon will chip in to help the state's tourism industry.

Starting Feb. 4, 5 cents from the sale of each bag of Idaho Russet potato chips will be donated to the Idaho Division of Tourism.

Country Crisp Foods of Salt Lake City, maker of the chips, won approval Wednesday from the Idaho Travel Council to use the state's travel logo in ads.

Country Crisp hopes to capitalize on Idaho's special spuds, company president Myron Walker said, while the Travel Council can expect added money for use in promotional efforts.

The company has ordered 180,000 bags with the Idaho logo. If all sell, the state would get $9,000 in extra income to boost tourism.

The new chips, made only from Idaho potatoes, will arrive in stores next month and will be sold in most of Idaho and Utah.

Assault suspect due in court

AMMON (AP) — Clifton Frank Jones, 36, Ammon, will be sent to district court to face charges of aggravated assault and kidnapping involving his ex-wife.

After a closed preliminary hearing Wednesday, Magistrate Linda Cook sent Jones to district court to face the charge, and continued bond at $100,000. He is scheduled to appear in district court on Monday.

Bonneville County Prosecutor Kimball Mason said the state seeks an enhancement penalty for using a deadly weapon in the commission of a felony. That means that if Jones is convicted of aggravated battery, the judge could add 15 years to the sentence. Jones also faces life imprisonment if convicted of kidnapping.

The charges resulted from an assault on Jones' ex-wife Dec. 30 in which she sustained a knife wound in the ribs. Investigating officers allege that Jones pulled a knife on Sandy Peterson, 23, outside an Idaho Falls bar and forced her to drive off with him at knifepoint.

U of I boiler on line soon

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho's $3.3 million, wood-fired boiler should be operating by the middle of February, the director of the physical plant said Thursday.

There have been a number of minor details that have put completion of the plant behind by a month, and workers are fine-tuning the plant, said Ken Hall.

Hall didn't elaborate on the minor details, but a major detail that had to be adjusted stemmed from rejection of the university's license to operate the boiler in November due to high release of particulates into the air.

Craig supports development plan

BOISE (AP) — Republican Congressman Larry Craig, declaring the time has come to begin looking at the demand side of the economy, has urged Idaho lawmakers to back Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus' economic development program.

"It is critical that this state launch itself in competition with the other states around the nation for up to now we have not been willing to compete," Craig said on Thursday during addresses to both the Senate and the House.

"I hope you'll work with" the governor, he said, citing the continuing problems of farm surpluses despite multi-billion-dollar federal programs to curtail production. Craig said farm policy has for too long been focused on managing supply when it should have shifted in recent years toward managing demand.

"We have a 21st Century agriculture and a 50-year-old farm policy," Craig said. "It's time for agriculture to look on the demand side."

Andrus, in his budget message on Wednesday, called for an immediate $400,000 infusion of cash for the Commerce Department to underwrite the formulation of an economic expansion strategy and then he called for a $1.8 million allocation for the year that begins July 1 to begin carrying out that plan of attack.

He conceded that Idaho could never compete "dollar for dollar" with its neighboring states, which have been spending multimillion-dollar amounts on economic development for years. But he said the state had to begin making some kind of commitment if it was ever to breathe life back into a flagging economy.

Craig did not go so far as to endorse the specific details of the Andrus plan. But he said, "What I'm endorsing is an aggressive approach to economic development."

"I don't know what the governor has proposed other than that he has appointed a top-notch man as director of the Department of Commerce and is willing to fund it," he said.

As Sen. Albert Gore, Jr. of Tennessee, who has watched this program, notes in frustration, this is not an administration bothered much by the laws of Congress: "They think they're above the law. It makes very little difference if the Congress passes a law, even if the margin is 366-6 in the House, and 100-0 in the Senate. If some willful, ideological bureaucrat thinks it's inconsistent with his philosophy, that's enough to countermand the whole system." What is true in theory may be true at home.

This transplant bill is a small ticket item. It adds up to less than $4 million in a $1 trillion budget. If the President refuses to put it back in, the Congress can—but it is a revealing miniature of an administration that comforts with one hand and the people it strikes with the other.

Sen. Gore sent the President a polite and personal plea reminding him — in case he forgot — "both you and Mrs. Reagan have shown a great deal of personal interest on behalf of so many of these families. Your pledges to help have been a source of comfort for many of them." He has yet to hear back.

Without this national system for gathering and fairly distributing such a scarce human resource, we are back in the game of wait and waste. Desperate families will again compete for publicity. Their best hope will be to become the anecdote of the week. Remember that when you read about the next sympathy call from the White House.

High court shows confusion over scientific, moral issues

In a series of decisions concerning the rights of mentally disordered persons, the U.S. Supreme Court has demonstrated a disquieting confusion of scientific and moral issues.

Although the court routinely questions the scientific status of psychiatry. In cases involving involuntary hospitalization and the rights of hospital patients, for example, it simultaneously grants unjustified power to mental-health professionals to influence and even to decide non-psychiatric questions involving fundamental liberties and dignity.

In its latest example, Elliott v. Wainwright, the court held that it is unconstitutional to execute a prisoner who had been fairly convicted of a capital crime and sentenced to death but had become insane at the time of execution.

While the court did not dispute the exact nature of the psychiatric evidence to determine if a prisoner's competence to be executed, it assumed that the question was largely one of psychiatric fact that required extensive psychiatric input for resolution.

Stephen J. Morse

psychiatric decision-makers rather than judges or other laypersons.

But deciding who is competent to be executed, like deciding who is legally insane or who should be involuntarily committed, is not primarily a psychiatric or medical issue. Rather, it is a moral, social, political and ultimately a legal issue that should be recognized and decided as such. After all, concern for human dignity—the underlying rationale for not executing the insane—is clearly a moral and political value that long antedates modern psychiatry.

In a pluralistic and democratic society, judges and juries—the moral and social representatives of society—should decide such issues. Although mental-health professionals, educated and skilled as they are, could be consulted on the decision-making process, their views should not be the final word on a case.

Consider, too, the test for competence. Today the most common standard that states have adopted to decide if a prisoner is too insane to execute—a standard that the majority of the court seems to accept—is whether the condemned person understands the punishment that he or she is about to suffer, and why he or she is to suffer it. But deciding how much understanding is sufficient to execute is again a moral and political question, not a mental-health issue.

Disentangling psychiatric and non-psychiatric questions would encourage more rational legal decision-making. For example, misconceptions about medical and moral issues cause the court to confuse disputes about factual issues, such as what a defendant understood, with disputes about legal and moral issues.

Here, mental-health professionals should surely be encouraged to help us understand factually what a prisoner understands about his punishment.

Deciding who will be executed, held non-responding for crime or locked up in a mental hospital involves moral and political issues of dignity, responsibility and liberty. Such decisions are far too important to be considered technical and delegated to experts. By obscuring the distinction between medical and moral issues, the law abdicates its responsibility to face hard issues squarely and reflects a magical belief that there are scientific or medical "answers" to non-scientific questions.

The Supreme Court, legislators and others should resist the ever-increasing tendency to adopt misguided scientific "fixes" by deferring moral decisions to experts, and should limit mental-health professionals to providing legally relevant, scientific and clinical information.

Letters/ Story offers hope that people in Twin Falls area will stand up for racial equality

Dark skin created bias

I want to share a story. The story is rather poignant, but one that is quite appropriate for these days in anticipation of Martin Luther King Day. I offer it with the hope that many people will respond positively to this unique holiday which gives each of us an opportunity to renew our commitment to the great ideals of racial equality, social and economic justice, and world peace.

It was about a week after the Aryan Nation's cross burning and the "One Planet, One People" candlelight concert—both that I received a rather interesting letter. It had been watching the events taking place in the Magic Valley with great interest. She told me how pleased she was to learn that there were people in Twin Falls who would take a stand against "the ignorance and prejudice so prevalent in this country."

The next story came out. "Some 20 years ago I moved to Twin Falls hoping to make it my home," she said. "I loved the area and stayed there a couple years. Unfortunately, I had to leave."

"Why?" I asked. "I am of Russian descent but happen to have very dark skin; so most people simply took me for a Negro. I couldn't find a job. No one would give me the time of day because of my skin color. It made me very sad. So, you see, I had to leave to survive. I moved to Caldwell where I finally did get a job. People here were really not much more than those in Twin Falls, but I thank God that there were some who could see my humanness beyond my dark skin."

"So now you see why it makes me happy to know that in the Twin Falls area there are people who care, people who will stand up for racial equality. Perhaps there's hope for us."

Union functions explained

In the response to the current passing of Referendum 1, I would like to try to express a concern for the future of our labor force and economy, both in Idaho and the U.S. as a whole. To do this, I must try to explain the functions of the labor union in our capitalist society.

To start out, capitalism revolves around the concept of exchange value. With ours or any other economic system, the real value of something is reducible to the amount of labor that is put into producing that something.

The basis for capitalist exchange is buying in order to sell at a later time for an increased value, profit.

The goal of the capitalist is to maximize surplus value of his labor. This is done by taking the exchange value produced by labor, productivity, and subtracting wages for labor. The closer these wages are to subsistence wage, the better it is for the capitalist. For him productivity needs to be as high as possible with wages and worker benefits as low as possible. The more successful this technique is, the higher exploitation of labor will be. As productivity and exploitation increase, workers become less able to consume what they and other workers produce.

This situation, forseeable, can lead to a crisis, a crisis of over production and under consumption. Workers may get laid off and people without an income cannot purchase and consume.

As you can see, this crisis can cause great turmoil in our economic system. It would put an end to our capitalist society.

Of course, this outcome is a bit far fetched but completely possible.

Through the years, capitalism devised its own preventions of this potential crisis, of which unionization proves to be the most useful.

The devices of prevention are as follows: 1. Unionization, 2. Welfare and subsidies, 3. Exporting of surplus, 4. Government regulations—minimum wage, price controls, etc., 5. Conscriptio—military, bi non-military, 6. Federal make-work programs, 7. Warfare—as an outlet for distribution of goods.

Give them the same raise

James Kilpatrick wants to increase Congress from $77,400 to $89,500, an increase of $12,100; and judges to $135,000 and the chief of justice to $135,000 is nuts. That would be a $12,100 raise for a congressman and $46,000 for a judge.

When a retired person drawing $518 a month would only get a $100.80 a year raise and $53.70 that of going for higher Medicare payments which leaves only $48 a year raise. As far as the judges goes, any idiot can make better decisions unlearned than the supposedly learned judges.

M-K head contends U.S. foreign policy hurting business

BOISE (AP) — Many politicians are whitewashing U.S. trade problems by blaming a lack of American competitiveness while the real problem is with the government's foreign policy, Morrison Knudsen Corp. chief executive said.

"I am going to invite myself into some very fine company and join with (Idaho potato baron) Jack Simplot in refusing to be an apologist for our U.S. industries," William J. Deasy, head of the worldwide construction, shipbuilding and engineering group, said Wednesday.

"I do not believe our current economic condition has been created by an inherent deficient system or by unproductive labor or even overpaid, martin-drinking, mood-lingual management," he told several hundred people at a Boise Chamber of Commerce dinner.

Deasy said some of the trade problems and their subsequent damage to American industry stem from trade concessions made to achieve foreign policy objectives. The concessions also were used to help create a favorable export environment for allied countries, carrying heavy debt burdens — many of which are held by large U.S. banks, he said.

U.S. trade deficits with other countries, notably Japan and Canada, hit record levels last year. Although Deasy said Congress is determined to remedy the problem, he questioned whether it is willing to threaten foreign relationships.

"In the past, I believe the U.S. government has espoused a free-trade theory largely for foreign policy purposes," he said.

"That policy has injured U.S. business, along with foreign government subsidies to business, cheap labor, product dumping and import restrictions, he said.

"Clearly this foreign trade deal isn't going too well for us," he said. "If it's so good, why are we losing whole industries, our jobs, our wealth and winding up with a devalued currency and a huge trade deficit?" he asked.

He said trade problems have injured M.K. International Co., which now gets less than 10 percent of its revenues from international projects, compared with 30 percent to 50 percent during much of the past decade.

America's uphill trade battle also has hurt some of Idaho's largest employers. Idaho's lumber producers are suffering from soft-wood imports, which amounted to about one-third of the market in 1985. Silver imports are stifling domestic production, he said.

Idaho's agricultural exports have plunged from $391 million in 1981 to just over $300 million in 1985. Deasy said, and Idaho high-technology companies have been injured by foreign competition.

He said the most formidable competitors are on the Pacific Rim.

"To cope with this force, we will need a U.S. government foreign policy that is not predicated upon buying our allies with U.S. market share and U.S. jobs," Deasy said.

Field joins McClure's staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mike Field, state director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, has been appointed by Sen. James McClure as director of McClure's state office operations.

Field, 36, earlier served as field and district director. He will assume duties now held by Jim Goller, who was both McClure's chief of staff and state director. Goller was appointed earlier in the week by Gov. Cecil Andrus to the Pacific-Northwest-Power Planning Council.

Tod Neuschwander, administrative assistant to McClure, will be chief administrator for the McClure staff in Washington and Idaho.

McClure has six district offices in Idaho, in Boise, Coeur d'Alene, Lewiston, Twin Falls, Pocatello and Idaho Falls.

Assault suspect due in court

AMMON (AP) — Clifton Frank Jones, 38, Ammon, will be sent to district court to face charges of aggravated assault and kidnapping involving his ex-wife.

After a closed preliminary hearing Wednesday, Magistrate Linda Cook sent Jones to district court on a $100,000 bond, and continued bond on Monday.

Jones is scheduled to appear in district court on Monday.

Bonneville County Prosecutor Kimball Mason said the state seeks an enhancement penalty for using a deadly weapon in the commission of a felony. That means that if Jones is convicted of aggravated battery, the judge could add 15 years to the sentence. Jones also faces life imprisonment if convicted of kidnapping.

The charges resulted from an assault on Jones' ex-wife Dec. 30 in which she sustained a knife wound in the ribs. Investigating officers allege that Jones pulled a knife on Sandy Peterson, 24, outside an Idaho Falls bar and forced her to drive off with him at knifepoint.

U of I boiler on line soon

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho's $3.3 million, wood-fired boiler should be operating by the middle of February, the director of the physical plant said Thursday.

There have been a number of minor details that have put completion of the plant behind by a month, and workers are fine-tuning the plant, said Ken Hall.

Hall didn't elaborate on the minor details, but a major detail that had to be adjusted stemmed from rejection of the university's license to operate the boiler in November due to high release of particulates into the air.

Craig supports development plan

BOISE (AP) — Republican Congressman Len Craig declaring the time has come to begin looking at the demand side of the economy, has urged Idaho lawmakers to back Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus' economic development program.

"It is critical that this state launch itself in competition with the other states around the nation for up to now we have not been willing to compete," Craig said on Thursday during addresses to both the Senate and the House.

"I hope you'll work with" the governor, he said, citing the continued problems of farm surpluses despite multimillion-dollar federal programs to curtail production. Craig said farm policy has for too long been focused on managing supply when it should have shifted in recent years toward managing demand.

"We have a 21st Century agriculture and a 50-year-old farm policy," Craig said. "It's time for agriculture to look on the demand side."

Andrus, in his budget message on Wednesday, called for an immediate $400,000 infusion of cash for the Commerce Department to underwrite the formulation of a economic expansion strategy and then he called for a $1.8 million allocation for the year that begins July 1 to begin carrying out that plan of attack.

Craig did not go so far as to endorse the specific details of the Andrus plan. But he said, "What I'm endorsing is an aggressive approach to economic development."

"I don't know what the governor has proposed other than that he has appointed a top-notch man as director of the Department of Commerce and is willing to fund it," he said.

Gem potatoes to help tourism

BOISE (AP) — Idaho potatoes soon will chip in to help the state's tourism industry.

Starting Feb. 4, 5 cents from the sale of each bag of Idaho Russet potato chips sold will be donated to the Idaho Division of Salt-Lake City, maker of the chips, won approval Wednesday from the Idaho Travel Council to use the state's travel logo in ads.

Country Crisp hopes to capitalize on Idaho's special spuds, company president Myron Walker said, while the Travel Council can expect added money for use in promotional efforts.

The company has ordered 180,000 bags with the Idaho logo. If all sell, the state would get $9,000 in extra income to boost tourism.

The new chips, made only from Idaho potatoes, will arrive in stores next month and will be sold in most of Idaho and Utah.

King remembered for his inspiration

By The Associated Press

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was remembered on the anniversary of his birth Thursday in cities around the country as an inspiring leader whose non-violent campaigns helped free not only blacks, but whites, from a legacy of racism.

"He never reached his 40th birthday and then spoke at ceremonies day, yet during his short life span he touched the lives of every American and helped dismantle the legal vestiges of discrimination and television address made available to schools nationwide.

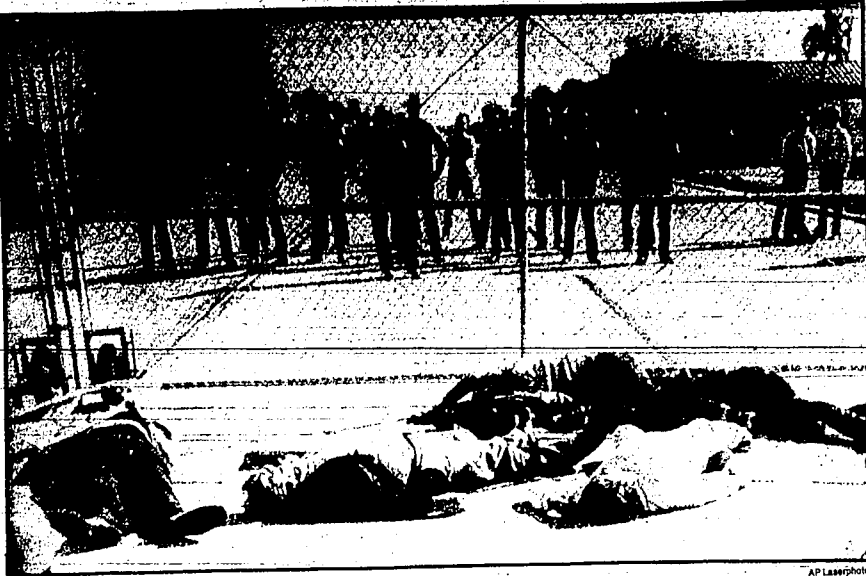

King, leader of the civil rights movement of the late 1950s and early '60s, was assassinated in April, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn., at the age of 39. For his leadership in the movement, he was awarded the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize.

Although King's birthday was Thursday, the federal holiday and many state holidays in his honor will be observed Monday. It is the second year for the federal observance, which was marked in cities around the nation with speeches praising King and calling for continuation of his work, with showings of films about the civil rights movement, with prayer gatherings.

A plaza at the city-county office complex in Omaha, Neb., was dedicated to King; members of the Tennessee Senate observed a day of music, prayer and speeches in day King's memory was scheduled at a Columbus, Ohio, church; and in Buffalo, N.Y., elementary school students sang "Happy Birthday" to King's contributions to see that every child receives an education.

In his speech, Reagan said King's memory was scheduled at a Columbus, Ohio, church; and in Buffalo, N.Y., elementary school students sang "Happy Birthday" to King's contributions to see that every child receives an education.

Sprawling protesters feign death at the main gate of Cape Canaveral following launch of first Trident 2 missile

Navy calls Trident test flight successful

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A Trident 2 missile roared off a land launch pad Thursday in a successful maiden test flight of a submarine weapon said to be powerful and accurate enough to destroy nuclear-hardened missile silos and command centers.

About 25 anti-nuclear protesters who had vowed to stop the test walked, beat their heads and fell to the ground as the 44-foot missile blasted off at 10:25 a.m. and hurled a dummy warhead to an Atlantic Ocean target several thousand miles to the southeast.

Nineteen people were arrested in protests, and one demonstrator suffered a seizure that may have been a heart attack, authorities said.

A Navy spokesman, Lt. Cmdr. Bob Prichard, said the missile scored "a complete success. It operated as advertised."

Security was extremely tight because of the protesters, many of whom had pledged to reach the launch area and halt the countdown. Sixty-six have been arrested for trespassing and other violations in the last week, including the 19 Thursday.

Although the launch was not announced in advance, about 75 demonstrators gathered at the main Cape Canaveral gate Thursday morning, and some tried to block traffic by linking arms in the middle of the road. The Air Force closed the gate and diverted workers to an entrance at nearby Kennedy Space Center.

When antenna and computer problems delayed the launch more than two hours, many of the protesters drifted back to their camp grounds, where several hundred are gathering for a Saturday demonstration against Trident 2.

Protest spokeswoman Judy Freiwrth said she was disappointed that the test was carried out but said: "Our real goals were to educate the public. We have surfaced the Trident 2 in the public debate, in the public consciousness, which is what we set out to do."

The demonstrator who suffered a seizure, identified by companions as retired Rockwell International engineer Tom Selmer, was taken to Cape Canaveral Hospital, where he was reported in stable condition.

The test Thursday was the first of 20 scheduled from a land pad, with one planned about every 40 days. That series of tests will be followed by 10 submarine-launched tests before the missile becomes operational in 1989.

The Trident 2, or D-5, is an intercontinental-range missile capable of striking targets up to 6,900 miles away. It is much more accurate than its undersea predecessors, Polaris, Poseidon and Trident 1. The Navy says it can match the targeting ability of land-based missiles even though it is launched from a submerged, moving submarine.

Critics say the Reagan administration's decision to pursue development of the Trident 2 will turn the nation's missile submarines into "first-strike" weapons, undermining the deterrent balance with the Soviet Union.

Pentagon officials like Assistant Defense Secretary Richard Perle dismiss such charges, saying it is the Soviet Union which possesses the largest arsenal of first-strike weapons — missiles accurate enough to blast targets hardened against nuclear attack.

The Trident 2 can carry up to 10 independent targetable nuclear warheads, two more than the earlier Trident 1. Each Trident submarine carries 24 missiles.

Although accuracy figures for all nuclear missiles are classified, published reports have indicated a Trident 2 warhead can be expected to fall within 400 feet of its target, compared to 1,500 feet for a Trident 1.

Board asks for automatic freight train brakes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) has asked the Federal Railroad Administration to require automatic braking equipment on all freight locomotives sharing tracks with passenger trains in the Northeast corridor.

Federal safety experts have said that such devices likely would have prevented the Jan. 4 collision of a Conrail locomotive and an Amtrak passenger train in which 16 people were killed and 175 injured.

John Riley, head of the Federal Railroad Administration, has said the agency is exploring whether the automatic brakes, which already are on all Amtrak passenger trains in Northeast jurisdiction over corridor operations, said NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz.

As far back as 1976, the board called for the development of a backup system "to ensure a train is controlled as required by the signal system in event event that the engineer fails to do so," Lopatkiewicz said.

In recent days the NTSB's investigation into the Amtrak-Conrail collision increasingly has focused on the two Conrail locomotive crewmen, especially since disclosure that marijuana was present in the blood and urine of both men at the time of the accident.

Soviets to testify in libel suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Visas have been granted to allow three Soviet officials to testify against a businessman trying to collect a $450,000 libel judgment he won against the Soviet Union, the State Department said Thursday.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman declined comment on whether any of the officials were Soviet intelligence agents, as the lawyer for businessman Raphael Gregorian contends.

Gregorian, of Palo Alto, Calif., has been trying to collect $450,000 he won in August from the Soviet Union in its newspaper Izvestia for expelling a spy. The Soviets at first did not contest his suit but began doing so after damages were awarded.

Gerald Kroll, Gregorian's attorney, said in a declaration prepared for filing in U.S. District Court that one of the officials granted visas is Anatoly Nizenko, whom Kroll identifies as a high-ranking KGB official.

U.S. lifts ban on sale of oil, gas drilling items to Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, in a major relaxation of export controls, announced Thursday it was lifting a 19-ye-old ban on the sale of non-strategic oil and gas drilling equipment to the Soviet Union.

The move was hailed by industry officials as offering a much-needed boost to hard-pressed oilfield drilling companies. The Soviet Union is the largest market for drilling equipment outside the United States.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the action was being taken "despite our dissatisfaction with Soviet human rights efforts."

The Carter administration imposed the controls in 1978 for foreign-policy purposes to protest Soviet human rights violations, including the jailing of Soviet dissident Anatoly B. Shcharansky, who last year was permitted to emigrate to Israel.

Baldrige said the controls had "lost their impact" because of the widespread availability of the equipment from foreign suppliers, while having a "debilitating effect" on our oil and gas industry.

The equipment at issue — including drilling rigs, bits, blow-out preventers and mud systems — are not viewed as having direct military applications.

A ban on exports to the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc nations of military and sensitive high-technology equipment remain in place, Baldrige said.

And he said that all other so-called "foreign policy" export controls would continue on non-strategic materials as well, including a ban on shipments of U.S. products to Libya. These controls are subject to renewal each Jan. 20.

Baldrige said that, despite lack of human rights progress in the Soviet Union, "I am convinced ... that it is no longer in our national interest to keep these unilateral foreign policy controls on exports on oil and gas equipment and technology to the Soviet Union."

Last year, U.S. exports to the Soviet Union were valued at $2.4 billion, while imports were valued at $440 million.

Alexander B. Trowbridge, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, praised the decision, which he said would aid an industry "which really needs the help."

Trowbridge said U.S. firms have lost $2 billion in business since the ban was imposed in 1978. The administration move could "mean about 46,000 jobs" in the depressed U.S. oilfield industry, he said.

Trowbridge also said the move represents the end of a policy "which no longer has any relevance."

The decision came as administration officials put together a package of "compelliveness" proposals designed to be highlighted by President Reagan in his State of the Union message to a joint House-Senate session on Jan. 27.

The Soviet Union, which is engaged in extensive oil and gas exploration, has the largest market for drilling equipment outside the United States. New Soviet exploration in the Arctic Ocean is further increasing the demand for such equipment.

Senators back AIDS battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Reagan administration proposal to step up spending to fight AIDS won support Thursday from several senators, but they said the increase shouldn't come at the expense of other medical research.

"You're robbing Peter to pay Paul," Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., told Surgeon General Everett Koop and Assistant Health and Human Resources Secretary Robert Windom.

Kennedy said the administration's 1988 budget would siphon money from cancer and other research to pay for more research on AIDS, the deadly acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"Any fair examination of the budget would have to draw that conclusion as that's wrong," said Kennedy, chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee. He said he would fight for more money.

The administration has recommended a 28 percent increase in money for AIDS research and education, bringing the fiscal 1988 total to slightly more than $500 million.

Shuttle crew eager to lift off

HOUSTON (AP) — The astronauts named to NASA's first post-Challenger flight crew said Wednesday they are eager to lead NASA back into space and plan to visit manufacturing plants so spacecraft technicians can meet "eye to eye" with the people whose lives ride on their work.

"The spirit of Challenger is with us," said Navy Capt. Frederick Hauck, chief of the five-man crew. He said NASA is "stronger, wiser," than before last January's accident, but cautioned that another disaster could end manned U.S. manned space flight.

Hauck and his crew met with reporters to discuss their mission, a four-day flight aboard Discovery that is scheduled to begin Feb. 18, 1988.

Astronaut John Lounge acknowledged that the Discovery will be conducted in a more serious atmosphere than missions that preceded Challenger.

Back Reagan, secretary asks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger pleaded with Congress Thursday not to turn its back on President Reagan's "American renaissance" or the rebels seeking to topple Nicaragua's government.

"We must not allow reasonable political debate over pressing national concerns to be submerged from view while investigations proceed on the Iran affair," Weinberger declared.

"We must not allow America's remarkable success, and the reasons for that success, to be belittled by those who focus narrowly and only on the Iran controversy," he said in a speech prepared for delivery to the National Press Club.

The Iranian affair is irrelevant to the basic tasks and hard choices that lie ahead of this country," Weinberger said.

In the process of noting "the real issues of the world" that required continuing attention, Weinberger disclosed that the Soviet Union had recently accelerated its deployment of the new SS-25 nuclear missile.

Peanuts claim life of boy, 11

CALISTOGA, Calif. (AP) — Bryan Dias played soccer and Little League baseball and cooted the clarinet in his elementary school band in his wine country community known for its healthy water and clean living.

But the one thing the spunky 11-year-old couldn't do was eat peanuts, which would aggravate his asthma and make him wheeze.

Last week, he bit into what he thought was a piece of chocolate cake. He spit it out when he tasted the forbidden peanuts, but apparently swallowed a few crumbs. He had the first severe asthma attack of his young life, slipped into a coma and died last Friday.

On Tuesday night, about 300 of Bryan's friends and their parents gathered at a memorial service. They tried to make it as upbeat as possible. One girl told the crowd at the funeral home that Bryan would be the first one to say "Hello" if a new kid joined their class.

Bryan's music teacher and Little League coach, Dick Schuster, played "Yellow Submarine" on the clarinet, a tune Bryan had wanted to learn.

Weinberger pushes Star Wars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Campaigning in Congress this week for a $2 billion boost in "Star Wars" spending, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger tantalized some lawmakers and alarmed others with hints that he favors deploying the shield against nuclear attack far earlier than originally envisioned.

President Reagan last August cautioned Star Wars boosters not to get "antisy," but Weinberger, responding to pressure from conservatives in Capitol Hill, said several times this week that he would like to see some elements of an anti-missile defense deployed "just as soon as we can."

Since Reagan launched the Star Wars program in 1983, his aides have said the research was designed to allow officials to decide in the early 1990s whether to build and deploy an anti-missile shield. But Weinberger's remarks suggested that the cornerstone of the system could be put in place sooner.

"I am very fearful that the patience of Congress is very thin," Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., told Weinberger during a meeting of the Senate Armed Services Committee on Monday.

Phone frauds campaign target

WASHINGTON (AP) — State and federal officials declared war Thursday on hustlers trying to gyp Americans by telephone.

The aim is "to wage war on those who would fleece the American public," said Federal Trade Commission Chairman Daniel Oliver.

The FTC and the National Association of Attorneys General announced a campaign against con artists who use phony prizes, cheap products and high-pressure sales tactics to defraud Americans.

Losses are estimated at $3 billion a year and the hustlers reach across the nation via inexpensive long-distance telephone lines, Oliver said.

These frauds have grown widely in recent years as hustlers try to sell goods and services ranging from investments in oil and gas leases to rare coins, gemstones and even substandard office supplies.

Toll of bitter European cold now 216; thousands isolated

By The Associated Press

Europe's worst winter in decades claimed at least 216 lives by Thursday, with hundreds of thousands of people isolated by snow-clogged roads and troops in France and Germany blasting through ice to head off flooding and keep two nuclear plants operating.

Freezing temperatures continue to envelop the continent, prompting the Common Market to grant $2.75 million to charities providing fuel, food and shelter to the elderly and homeless.

Western European temperatures Thursday ranged from the low 30s in London to zero degrees Fahrenheit in Helsinki. The forecast was continued cold at least through Friday.

Travel by land, air and sea was affected. Southbound roads near Lyon, France, were among the many highways closed, forcing 1,500 trucks to park and wait for better conditions in Britain. A snow-clearing team rescued a motorist who had been trapped in his car under a snowdrift for 39 hours near the Scottish border. Once his car was freed he resumed his journey, apparently none the wiser.

Airports were closed in France and Spain, and boats in Denmark were warned not to leave port without aid from an icebreaker.

By evening Associated Press bureaus around Europe reported at least 216 weather-related deaths since Jan. 1, including 77 in the Soviet Union, 33 in Poland and 29 in Great Britain.

The elderly were prominent among the victims. A 79-year-old woman was found frozen to death near the Berlin Wall after leaving a home for the elderly on Wednesday to visit a daughter living nearby. Police said she had been lost before on trips outside the home. An 88-year-old woman in Nancy, France, froze to death on her way to the bakery.

Churches and subway stations in France and Spain stayed open to shelter the homeless.

Britain's Princess Diana visited a center in north London where the elderly go for warmth and a hot meal, and she learned about conditions some Britons suffer in drafty houses dating back to Queen Victoria's reign.

"She asked what heating I had in my flat," said 78-year-old Alfred Freeman. "I told her I've only got one radiator in one room, and my pipes are frozen. She was surprised."

French troops blasted channels through ice on the Loire River to let cooling water reach nuclear power stations at Chinon and St. Laurent les Eaux, 170 miles southwest of Paris.

Hamburg city spokesman Werner Hackmann said West German army units detonated dynamite to loosen packed-up ice floes blocking the Elbe est of the port city. Officials said the floes threatened floods in nearby towns.

Along Britain's east coast, many parts of Kent, Norfolk and Lancashire were cut off by deep snow. Whipped by strong winds, the snow piled up in drifts as much as 20 feet deep that defeated snowplows trying to break through to villages that hadn't had food deliveries since last weekend.

Four-wheel drive army vehicles and motorized sleds were trying to reach a village on the Isle of Grain off the Kent coast to deliver emergency supplies.

In northern Spain, heavy snow and frozen roads made travel impossible in a large section, isolating hundreds of thousands of people, officials said.

The Dutch weather bureau took the unprecedented step of advising people not to leave their homes unnecessarily. Amsterdam had an average temperature Wednesday of 5 degrees below zero, among the five coldest days this century.

In France, heavy ice floated down the Seine River in Paris for only the second time in 20 years. A search was in progress for six cross-country skiers missing since Monday in the central Vercors mountains.

There is a country by country breakdown of deaths since Jan. 1: Soviet Union 77, Poland 36, Britain 29, France 20, Hungary 14, Ireland 2, West Germany 6, Spain 12, Czechoslovakia 4, Netherlands 3, Greece 3, Denmark 2, Switzerland 2, Austria 1, Belgium 1, Italy 2, Portugal 1, Yugoslavia 1.

Anglican envoy optimistic

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Anglican Church envoy Terry Walte met Lebanese leaders Thursday in his latest effort to win freedom for American and other hostages, but militia escorts said he had made no contact with the kidnappers.

"I think we are on the way to having a resolution to a long-standing problem," Walte told reporters after an 80-minute conference with Parliament Speaker Hussein Husseini, a Shiite Moslem. He did not elaborate on the remark.

Walte, who has been credited with helping obtain the freedom of three American hostages in the past 16 months, also met separately with Sunni Moslem religious leader Sheik Hassan Khaled.

The emissary of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie arrived in Lebanon on Monday. It is his first visit to Lebanon since November 1985.

Two more foreigners have been kidnapped since Walte's arrival: a Saudi Arabian Embassy staffer and a French journalist. No one claimed responsibility for the abductions, which brought to 18 the number of foreigners missing in Lebanon.

Sources within the Druse militia protecting Walte said he has not contacted any hostage-holding group since arriving.

"The work is going ahead well. I am not saying anything further," Walte told reporters when asked if he has been in contact with the kidnappers.

After seeing Walte for 45 minutes, the white-turbaned Khaled told reporters, "Lebanon as a whole is a hostage and no one in the world is lifting a finger to release it from its bondage."

Walte said, "I think that the plight of the people of Lebanon needs to be brought to international attention and needs to be seen in a fair and balanced way."

When asked whether he was prepared to negotiate for the release of more than 200 Lebanese in-Israeli jails, Walte said: "Yes, yes." He did not elaborate.

Walte said Wednesday he has "no reason to believe" that the two abductions this week were related to his mission. However, he advised "foreign correspondents who want to come to this (western) part of Beirut not to come for the time being."

Bakr Damanhourli, the Saudi Embassy employee, was kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut on Monday evening, a few hours after Walte's arrival.

French free-lance journalist Roger Aigue was grabbed by gunmen Tuesday, minutes after he photographed Walte's morning stroll along the seaside boulevard facing his hotel.

Salvador hit by new quake

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Earth tremors shook the city in quick succession Thursday, sending hundreds of residents fleeing into the streets and collapsing some small buildings damaged by October's killer quake.

But officials said there were no reports of casualties.

Government spokesman Roberto Viera said the first two tremors occurred shortly before 11 a.m. and were almost perceptible, but the third and fourth measured 3 and 4 respectively on the Richter scale.

The epicenter was on the southern edge of the capital, where there is a major fault.

An earthquake measuring 7.5 on the Richter scale left an estimated 1,500 people dead in a long, thin area on a bus and I didn't feel it, but when I saw people rushing out of downtown buildings into the streets I knew there was a quake," said Roberto Navas, 30, a newspaper photographer.

Recent buildings four to six stories high, damaged in the October earthquake, began leaning after Thursday's tremors, endangering traffic.

Busboy also faces 96 murder counts in San Juan hotel fire

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — A Police and justice officials say they busboy accused of helping set the New Year's Eve fire at the Dupont Plaza Hotel was charged Thursday with 96 counts of first-degree murder.

He was also charged in San Juan District Court with arson, conspiracy and destruction of property.

The charred bodies of three more victims were identified, leaving only one of the 96 fatalities unidentified, a Health Department official said.

Two hotel employees have been arrested in the case: Busboy Armand Jimenez Rivera was arrested Tuesday and charged in federal court Wednesday. Escudero Aponte was charged in both courts on Tuesday. The charge of conspiracy was added Thursday to Escudero's arson and destruction of property.

The arrests have brought relief to some parts of this U.S. commonwealth, but also anger. Threats have been made against both men, Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon said Thursday. Both have been placed in protective custody.

Jimenez Rivera and other hotel employees signed confessions admitting their roles in the fire, according to court documents and interviews with investigators. Both face life in prison, if convicted. Puerto Rico does not allow capital punishment.

Immediately after the fire, Jimenez Rivera was thought to be a hero. Neighbors who recognized him on television helping victims board helicopters from the hotel's roof waited up for him and carried him down the street on their shoulders when he came home after midnight New Year's Eve, the San Juan Star reported Thursday.

Both men charged in the case were members of the hotel employees' union involved in a contract dispute with the Dupont Plaza management.

Plo Rechan, director of the island's Institute for Forensic Medicine, said the three victims whose bodies were identified Thursday were Elise Felton, 76, of Las Vegas, Nev.; Hilda Schmidt, 76, of New York state; and Idalia Montero, 52, of Puerto Rico.

He said the sole unidentified body was that of an elderly woman who "may never be identified."

Chilean junta legalizes opposition

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The military junta on Thursday restored legal life to the nation's non-Marxist political parties after a 13-year suspension.

But most politicians condemned the new legislation, saying it was too restrictive.

The four-member junta assumed legislative functions after a 1973 coup that overthrew elected Marxist Salvador Allende and installed army Gen. Augusto Pinochet as president. Allende died in the rebellion.

Despite the suspension, the parties never completely disappeared and gradually resumed limited but technically illegal activity. They have been especially active during the past five years, and the rights regime has tolerated most of the activity.

The government heralded the lifting of the ban as an indication it is fulfilling its promise to lead Chile back to democratic rule.

"This is a demonstration of the government's credibility," said Francisco Cuadra, secretary of the presidency and the regime's chief spokesman.

But Gabriel Valdes, president of the Christian Democratic Party, the nation's largest, said the measure "reflects its (the government's) dictatorial will."

Reu Abelluk, president of the moderate opposition Social Democratic Party, called the new law "anti-party."

"This law does not contribute to the restoration of democracy," he said.

Opposition leaders also criticized the government for not consulting the moderate parties in drafting the legislation.

Hours before the junta approved the bill, the Democratic Alliance, a loose coalition of moderate opposition groups, asked for a meeting with junta members to discuss the text.

W. Germans nab hijacking suspect

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — West German police have arrested a suspected sky pirate who vanished in Lebanon after the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner, a state prosecutor said Thursday.

Security officials in Bonn identified the suspect as Mohammed Hamadi, 22, a Lebanese citizen. He was the first suspect arrested in the 17-day hijacking in which a U.S. Navy diver was shot to death before the 38 other American hostages were freed.

Hamadi arrested at Frankfurt airport Tuesday upon arrival from Beirut on a Middle East Airlines flight, the security officials said.

In Washington, Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said the United States will ask for the man's extradition to the United States for trial.

Hamadi was arrested after customs agents discovered that three wine bottles in his carry-on luggage contained methyl nitrate, a liquid similar to nitro glycerin and sometimes used in making explosives, security sources said.

Hamadi was one of the three suspects indicted in the United States on counts of murder and air piracy after the hijacking in which U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem was slain.

The West German television network ZDF reported Thursday night that officials were also investigating whether Hamadi might have been involved in the June 1985 bombing of a Frankfurt airport departure hall that killed three people and injured 42. ZDF gave no further details and

China party head may be on way out

PEKING (AP) — Reports circulated Thursday that the Communist Party would dismiss its leader, Hu Yaobang, for his handling of student demonstrations that led to the government crackdown on dissidents.

Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said the action against critics of the government would not affect his reform program. He did not mention Hu, a long-time reformist ally. Reports that the party leader was in political trouble could not be confirmed.

Officials said Hu, 72, was not feeling well enough to attend a dinner Thursday. A convergence of buses outside the Great Hall of the People led rumors that either the Central Committee or Politburo was meeting.

Deng told Arvo Aalto, head of the Finnish Communist Party, there was a trend of advocating "bourgeois liberalization" with which "China's Marxists will not agree." His remarks were reported by the official news agency Xinhua.

In the stern response to pro-democracy student protests, "bourgeois liberalization" means opposition to communism and the party.

The furor will not affect China's stability and unity or its reforms and open-door policy, Deng was quoted as telling Aalto. Harsh criticism of accepting Western ideas wholesale has been an essential part of the official response to critics.

"China must have a stable political situation and unity and it must remove all obstacles to socialist construction," Deng said.

Cease-fire violations to be met with force

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Soldiers will respond to any violation of a government-declared cease-fire and Moslem insurgents should not mistake an offer of peace for weakness, Afghanistan's communist rulers declared Thursday.

Guerrilla leaders have vowed their men will not honor the cease-fire.

"It is necessary to tell these individuals once again that national reconciliation does not mean the destruction of the state and the defeat of the party," Communist Party chief Najibullah said.

He spoke to the National Fatherland Front, an umbrella organization created to split the party in two into guerrilla-infested countryside.

Officials said all Afghan and Soviet military units were pulled back from battle positions to permanent bases at midnight Wednesday when the government's cease-fire began. It is to last six months if the guerrillas honor it.

The insurgency began after a communist coup in April 1978 and Soviet forces arrived in December 1979. An estimated 115,000 Soviet soldiers now are helping fight the guerrillas.

No fighting was evident Thursday around Kabul. A military officer who identified himself only as Col. Fakhri said none had been reported elsewhere.

no source.

A high-ranking Interior Ministry official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Hamadi was traveling under an alias with a forged Lebanese passport.

"He was positively identified by his fingerprints," the official said.

After the TWA hijacking ended, the Reagan administration offered a reward of up to $250,000 for information leading to the capture and prosecution of the hijackers.

Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann told reporters in Bonn on Thursday that Hamadi was "a big fish."

Jochen Schroers of the Frankfurt prosecutors' office said authorities believed Hamadi was preparing a bombing, but it was unclear whether the attack was to have been carried out in West Germany.

The suspect was believed to belong to an extremist Shiite Moslem group, said security sources who declined to be identified.

The Frankfurt arrest came a day after Italian authorities stopped a Lebanese man allegedly carrying more than 20 pounds of plastic explosives and detonators through the Milan airport.

Italian authorities said Bashir al-Khodr, 26, was arrested Monday night when customs officials found the explosives and detonators hidden in chocolate Easter eggs and in picture frames.

Frankfurt authorities said the man arrested at Frankfurt airport was in investigative custody and had not been charged.

McClure asks GAO to study EIPCA lending

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

WASHINGTON — Sen. Jim McClure has called for a study by the investigative arm of Congress into the lending practices of the Eastern Idaho Production Credit Association in the Magic Valley.

After receiving what were termed "concerning" complaints from farmers, the senior Idaho senator has asked the General Accounting Office to determine whether the EIPCA has been overly strict in lending to farmers in the Gooding and Twin Falls areas.

McClure, R-Idaho, is seeking a comparison of the practices of the Pocatello-based lender with those of the Interstate Production Credit Association, which serves the remainder of Idaho and four other Northwest states.

Arnold Seelye, EIPCA president, said Thursday he had not yet been notified of the study. Nevertheless, "We would welcome

There have been continual complaints from Magic Valley farmers in the past 2 years...

McClure agricultural aide that. That's not something that gives us any concern," he said.

McClure's call for the study is "by no means an indictment" of the EIPCA.

At the same time, "There have been continual complaints" from Magic Valley farmers in the past 2 years, since the Southern Idaho Production Credit Association of Twin Falls was dissolved," McClure agricultural aide Jack Wilmore said Thursday.

The EIPCA subsequently expanded into the area to serve farmers and ranchers wanting to borrow from the Farm Credit System.

"Basically, the charge that's been leveled is that they (EIPCA) took the cream of the crop," he said. Farmers not accepted often could not gain loans from private banks or the U.S. Farmers Home Administration, she said.

The study is aimed at discovering whether decisions in lending by the EIPCA in the Magic Valley have been due to its lending practices, to interest rates or to greater regulatory red tape, McClure said in his announcement.

"If there is incongruity in the EIPCA's lending practices, the study will pinpoint them. If there's no problem, then the situation hopefully will quiet down," he said.

McClure has asked the GAO to report back by Feb. 28. The GAO was selected because it is nonpartisan and independent of the Farm Credit System, McClure's staff said.

Seelye also traced the roots of the issue back to the former SIPCA. "It appears to be a continuation of the unrest which was felt by a few stockholders of the old Southern Idaho PCA," he said.

Federal law gives each PCA a charter to provide credit for farmers and ranchers in a geographic area. McClure was instrumental in talks last winter toward allowing the Interstate PCA to do some business within the EIPCA's service area.

However, the boards of directors for both the EIPCA and Interstate PCA later rejected a proposed agreement, and negotiations have not been resumed.

The Magic Valley are no tighter than those in the rest of its 27-county system. "The same policies apply to the three offices down there (Twin Falls, Gooding and Burley) as to the six in the north end," he said.

The EIPCA currently plans to add staff to handle larger loan volumes in the Magic Valley in the next 3 months, the prime lending season.

The association has about $60 million in outstanding loans, with about one-quarter of those originating in the Magic Valley, he said.

The EIPCA and the Interstate PCA provide short-term loans to thousands of farmers, ranchers and fishing businesses in five Northwest states — Idaho, Alaska, Washington, Oregon and Montana. Borrowers generally use the loans to pay for production expenses and then repay them with proceeds from crops or livestock.

The EIPCA and Interstate PCA are part of the 12th Farm Credit District, based in Spokane.

Rotarun Ski Area may end public use

Liability insurance costs blamed

By JIM McPHERSON
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — After almost 30 years of operation, Rotarun Ski Area may be closed to the general public forever, one of the facility's directors said Wednesday.

"I can't say whether it will operate as a public facility or not," said Bill Stelma, a member of the Arkost-Halley Ski Club board of directors, which manages Rotarun. It definitely won't open this year, he said, and the lease will be maintained, and the mostly because of the cost of liability insurance.

"It's gone up something like 400 percent in the last three years," said Stelma. He said the lowest 4-month rate the directors would have been able to get for the current season was approximately $45,000, at least as long as they belonged to the club.

"Our budget is about $200 (per club)," he said, adding that each season's ski passes provide about $100 in extra operating costs. "The money for entering some sort of partnership with other sources, two recent fund-raising efforts brought in less than $500. The combined effort, leading to the lack of snow, has had to train on decision not to open the hill, this season."

Of course, opening would be a problem any day. Another 10- to 18-inch inches of snow is needed for safe ski day, and on weekdays members are only able to ski from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m., he said.

Major snowfall blankets Magic Valley

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The first major snowstorm of the year finally arrived in the southern Magic Valley, leaving 3.5 inches of snow in most communities by Thursday morning and at least a foot of snow at one ski resort.

William Galkin of the National Weather Service office in Kimberly said the light, dry snow — about 5 inches deep in Twin Falls — contained 2.0 of an inch of moisture.

The storm began in most areas Wednesday morning and continued during the night and early Thursday. It was confined largely to the south side of the Snake River, however, Galkin said. The snow tailed off in the Sun Valley and Fairfield areas and south of Burley, toward Utah. While strong winds were reported in Utah and eastern Idaho, there was a noticeable lack of wind in Magic Valley; but increasing winds are in the forecast and could blow the snow into drifts on many highways and roads.

Travelers advisories were out in the eastern part of the state, where winds of 50 mph were reported.

"This is part of a series of storms coming in from Alaska," Galkin said. "We may be seeing more snow, as there is another front moving for Saturday and possibly more snow about every other day for awhile."

The break in a long dry weather pattern left 12-13 inches of new snow at Pomerelle ski resort, south of Burley, but only an inch or two at northern ski resorts. Officials of Magic Mountain, south of Twin Falls, could not be reached for a report on new snowfall there.

Galkin said the only other storm of the winter that "can even be considered 'major'" occurred Nov. 9, when about 3 inches of snow fell at lower elevations.

Serious roads resulted in nine minor accidents in Twin Falls and about as many in the county, but no serious injuries occurred.

Idaho State Police officers reported a number of vehicles were sliding from the highways and into each other on Wednesday, but it appeared drivers had mastered winter conditions by Thursday afternoon.

Justice process aims to streamline

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The people who keep the wheels turning daily in criminal investigations and court proceedings revealed some of their concerns and solutions Thursday, during the first Magic Valley leadership seminar of the new year.

A panel of five specialists, under the direction of 5th District Judge Daniel Hurlbut, explained how law enforcement and the courts in Magic Valley function together in handling the investigation and disposition of criminal activities.

Hurlbut said that new procedures from the Idaho Supreme Court down through the magistrates have been adopted to speed up court proceedings, while still maintaining justice. There were 301 new cases filed in the 5th District during 1983 and 283 were decided by the courts. During 1985 378 were filed, but judges completed 450, clearing up some of an old backlog.

Twin Falls Public Safety Director Tim Qualls outlined the workings of Idaho's first police and fire services consolidation, which he has helped establish in Twin Falls, saying its success means a $100,000 annual saving to city taxpayers.

Qualls and Magic Valley Regional Director for the state Department of Law Enforcement, shared some of their investigative and enforcement secrets with the seminar. The Greater Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce's Magic Valley Leadership program.

Kelley said the use of wire-tapping or pen-register activities are last-resort procedures and rarely used. Court approval is granted only in extreme cases, he said, because a wire tap actually involves listening to conversations over a specific telephone and what can be used as evidence or in investigations is highly restricted.

Qualls said one of the major problems encountered in major investigations such as murder, is that "everybody, down to the newest officer on the staff, wants to get involved." As a result, he said, this can leave investigating officers with many hours of extra work checking fingerprints, footprints and other possible evidence left by well-meaning officers who are not directly involved in the investigation.

To avoid destroying evidence, a crime scene in Twin Falls is closed as soon as possible and when other top-ranking officers are kept out until the investigator in charge allows them to enter.

Tracing a criminal offense from occurrence to sentencing, panel speakers agreed they need each other. While they do not always agree as to what charge should be filed, or on plea negotiations, all factors of investigation, prosecution and sentencing must function together, speakers said.

County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter explained that her office now prepares all complaints against criminal offenders, where at one time police and sheriffs departments handled this chore.

This procedure, she said, gives the prosecutor a chance to ask the defendant for information on evidence needed to prove the case.

Randy Stoker, the county's public defender, and a criminal defense attorney, said it is not up to the public defender to determine whether the defendant is guilty or innocent, but rather to see that he or she has proper legal representation and understands the charges and court proceedings.

Stoker said he doesn't enter a case until the others have done most of their work. The difference between setting a high bond and releasing a defendant on personal-recognition bond is determined on the basis of whether or not the defendant is likely to leave the area or commit another crime if released.

"If you want to go into crime," Qualls told the group, "you should move to a community, get a job, have a home and family and socialize in the community, and you can probably be released on your OPR (without posting bond)."

Jerry Packer, of the state Probation and Parole office in Twin Falls, explained the presentence investigations that his department provides for the court in most convictions.

In the local district there are 2,627 convicted felons under supervision by parole or probation officers, and another 1,400 in prison, he said. Packer explained a new, intensive supervision program that helps cut down the prison population and gives some criminals one final chance for rehabilitation.

Kelley said his department deals largely with drug cases, working closely with city and county officers.

The Magic Valley Leadership training sessions are designed to teach business enrollees about what goes on in their local area, says Qualls.

The next monthly Leadership session, scheduled for Feb. 19, will focus on the news media.

Shoshone students get 'alternative' route for non-college bound

By JANENE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — An "alternative education" program is being considered for Shoshone students who are not planning to attend college.

High School Principal Jess Kenison told the school board at a meeting this week that there are at least 20 students in the freshman and sophomore classes who are "potential dropouts" because Shoshone has a "college-bound curriculum" and, in most cases, has only single course offerings and limited electives.

"This curriculum makes it difficult to meet the needs of students who have an inadequate academic background or lack motivation to participate in academic programs, he said.

"We need to implement a program that will make it possible for these students to be successful in school," Kenison said.

The single-course classrooms also hamper the advancement of the good students, he said. Being in the same class with unmotivated students slows down those who are academically prepared and willing to participate, and it handicaps those who are academically advanced students, because the teacher cannot attend the needs of all levels simultaneously, he said.

The proposal would use programmed teaching materials and units to help teach the alternative curriculum, allowing the lower achieving students to work at their own pace and receive credit for work completed and mastered.

These students could then take a wider variety of elective vocational training classes such as welding, auto mechanics and small engine repair, so they can leave high school with "marketable skills," rather than preparing to pursue a college degree, Kenison said. They could also be channeled toward vocational training programs at the College of Southern Idaho and the cooperative high school vocational program available through CSI.

The number of students who appear headed to become dropouts annually leave school, the district will lose almost a full funding unit, Kenison said. By providing a way for them to stay in school, the money saved by keeping the funding unit could be used to pay for the program, and thus would benefit the entire student body, he said.

Kenison told the board such alternative programs are working in other areas. He said he will present a possible class schedule, more detailed data and possible cost figures at the board's February meeting.

Legislative auditor, treasurer forecast flat state revenues

Legislative Auditor Bruce Balderton, forecasting a stagnant state economy through mid-1968, predicted on Thursday that state tax revenue will rise a paltry percentage during the new budget year, significantly below the already conservative projection of Gov. Cecil Andrus.

Treasurer Lydia Justice Edwards also added new pessimism to the deliberations of the Legislature's joint Revenue Projection Committee, forecasting one of the lowest average levels in years on investment of idle state revenues.

Mrs. Edwards said sliding interest rates and a declining state balance available for investment will likely force interest earnings during the period to begin July 1 to $4.5 million, down from an estimated $6.5 million for this year. Just a year ago, the state collected $10 million in investment interest and had expected the same kind of return during the current budget year.

Balderton's forecast for base 1968 tax revenues of $571.2 million was based on the outlook that employment, retail sales and business activity will be flat. His projection, traditionally conservative, was some $1.5 million below the Andrus administration released a day earlier.

remain his goal over the next few years.

"I did not run for governor last year simply because I wanted to see the custodian over a state that had a deteriorating economy and a less-than-quality education system for our children," Andrus said. "I promised the people what I would do and now I am attempting to do it."

Andrus' administration economist Michael Ferguson disagreed with the legislative auditor's severely depressed outlook, but in explaining the basis of the governor's $571.2 million forecast to the committee, he conceded that the bulk of the growth was fueled by an anticipated, albeit modest, resurgence of inflation.

"Our forecast reflects what we see is a relatively weak economy," Ferguson said. "The economy is not going to see very much employment growth over the next two years although we believe there will be some employment growth."

Unlike forecasters from the state Employment Department, who have projected a second straight annual loss of 3,000 or more jobs in 1967, Ferguson said the state could expect to regain in 1967 half the jobs it lost last year and then pick up 3,000 new jobs in 1968 and 1969.

But he said more and more of those new jobs will be in the lower-paying service sector. In addition, he pointed out that personal income will continue to be eroded by inflation, which will rise 0.5 percentage points faster than income.

Scoreboard to be dedicated

HAGERMAN — All members of the Hagerman Alumni Association will be admitted free to the annual game tonight in Hagerman to dedicate a new scoreboard.

The club, organized last summer, is donating the $3,100 scoreboard to the school. It was installed during the Christmas vacation.

"We want to do something for the school every year with the money we raise from dues and the annual game," says George Clark, the group's vice president.

The alumni club raised scoreboard money from dues, a donation from the Snake River Water Ski Club and sale of the old scoreboard to a church in Wendell for $400, Clark says. But still, she says, the former students owe about $500 for the new board.

At a put out in the balance due, Clark says the club will have a cake auction during half-time at the varsity game between Hagerman and Murlaug.

Anyone who has ever attended school in Hagerman is eligible to join the alumni club for $5 per person, Clark says.

The junior varsity game on Alumni Night begins at 6 p.m., followed by the varsity game at about 8 p.m.

Also on Alumni Night, the Hagerman Lions and Lionesses members will present a new stage curtain to the school.

Shopper shuttle only seasonal

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Holiday Shopper bus carried enough passengers to make a return trip next Christmas season, but not enough to support a regular route.

The small bus, which was supported by merchants and the Greater Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce, carried passengers among seven retail areas in Twin Falls during the weeks from Thanksgiving through Christmas at no cost.

The shuttle service carried 1,518 passengers in 28 days of operation, said Charlie Chambers, director of the Trans IV system, which provided the bus.

"I'm rather pleased with it for a first time out," he said. "But, although holiday shoppers were willing to board, passenger loads were not heavy enough to justify a regular route.

"It's never going to support itself under a fare situation," he said.

Earl Faulkner, owner of The Paris clothing store in downtown Twin Falls and originator of the idea, said the free transportation created business for stores. "I think we would do it again next November or December," he said.

The Chamber and seven retail centers footed the $27,700 cost of the service. Participating were: the downtown Business Improvement District; K Mart; Payless Drug Store; Lynwood (Shopping Center) Merchants Association; Erling Hommel (Blue Valley Mall); and Blue Lakes (Shopping Center) Merchants Association.

Man arrested on drug charge

BURLEY — An investigation by Cassia County Sheriff's Department officers, following an informant's tip, resulted in the arrest of a Burley resident on charges of delivery of a controlled substance — prescription drugs — and first-degree burglary.

David Lizny, 30, was released on bond Thursday after he appeared in 5th District Magistrate Court on charges of delivery of a controlled substance and two counts of first-degree burglary.

Sheriff Bill Crystal said his department was able to set up a purchase of Tylenol 3, a prescription drug containing codeine, on Tuesday. Subsequently, he said, Lizny was arrested and his residence was searched.

Crystal said Lizny was then charged with two recent burglaries of the Rexall Drug store at 1225 Overland Ave. The burglaries occurred Nov. 29, 1966, and Jan. 5 of this year, Crystal said. About $1,500 worth of prescription drugs were taken in the burglaries. Crystal reported his officers have recovered $1,365 in drugs.

Tylenol 3 contains about .5 mg of codeine per tablet and can only be obtained through a prescription, Crystal said.

A preliminary hearing in the case will be set within the next 20 days.

Court orders judge to hear Bundy's argument to overturn conviction

ATLANTA (AP) — Procedural errors believed all along that his client should get a new hearing. Florida Attorney General Bob Butterworth said the state may appeal Thursday's ruling, but added that a decision would take several days. He expressed confidence prosecutors would prevail in the case.

Bundy, a 48-year-old former Utah law student, has been on Florida's death row since he was convicted in 1959 for murdering Lisa Levy, 20, and Margaret Bowman, 21, who were bludgeoned and strangled as they slept Jan. 15, 1976, in the Chi Omega sorority house on the Tallahassee campus.

Bundy received another death sentence for killing Kimberly Leach, 12, who was kidnapped from her Lake City, Fla., school in February 1978 and found dead two months later.

It also was a suspect in seven to nine slayings dating back to 1974 in Seattle, three disappearances and two slayings in Utah and one murder

Diaper bag can serve as evidence

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A diaper bag containing counterfeit $20 bills can be introduced as evidence in a federal conspiracy trial involving three white supremacists, a judge ruled Thursday.

U.S. District Judge Justin Quakenbush ruled that the diaper bag, which the U.S. Secret Service said contained 50 counterfeit bills, can be introduced at the Feb. 23, Sunday, trial of David Dorr, 35, Edward Hawley, 22, and his wife, Olive Hawley, 27, all of Athol, Idaho.

The trial was moved from Spokane to Tucson on a change of venue.

The three, all of whom have ties to the Church of Jesus Christ Christian (Aryan Nations) in Hayden Lake, Idaho, are accused of manufacturing, possessing and passing counterfeit $20s.

Chase ends in collision, explosion; 3 are killed

FREDONIA, Ariz. (AP) — A Mississippi man, an unidentified companion and a reserve police officer were killed when a car involved in a police chase slammed into the officer's patrol car at the top of a hill near here, authorities said.

Sgt. Allan Schmidt, a spokesman for the Arizona Department of Public Safety, said the vehicles probably were traveling at close to 90 mph when they hit. The cars exploded upon impact and the occupants were killed, he said.

The collision occurred Wednesday night on Arizona 389 between Fredonia and Colorado City, after the suspect car had made a U-turn as it approached a roadblock set up 4 miles west of Fredonia, Schmidt said.

He said the car apparently was traveling without its lights on and in the wrong lane when the collision took place.

The dead officer was identified as Richard Wilf, 29, a reserve deputy Colorado City marshal.

Schmidt said one of the two men in the other car was identified Thursday as Tommy D. Levine, 20, of Clinton, Miss.

"The other man seems to be about the same age as Schmidt said. We haven't found out what we're working on, but we don't have anything to tie to the body," he said. The man was carrying no identification.

Levine's wallet and identification were found next to his body and the Salvatore Caito, 104, and his wife Providenzia, 96, will celebrate 80th anniversary Saturday.

Marriage arranged by family going strong after 80 years

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — He returned to his native Sicily 80 years ago to claim his bride and bring her with him to America but her parents balked: She was, after all, only 15 years old and a first cousin.
Salvatore Caito, then 25, agreed to wait for a papal dispensation to marry his cousin Providenzia and to wait until she was older: 16.
Now he's 104 and she's 96, and Monday was their 80th wedding anniversary.
They are the oldest and longest married couple in California and the second couple in that category in the country, according to the organization Marriage Encounter of San Diego.
"It was a match wedding. The family helped put it together," said Gus Caito, 69, the eldest of the Caitos' five children.
The family plans a garden party Saturday to celebrate the 80 years of marriage, five grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren. About 100 guests are expected.

Gus Caito, a retired Bank of America employee living in Burbank, said his father emigrated to America from Sicily in 1888 with his sister and her new husband, and started working in the fruit and vegetable business.
He returned home briefly to follow the custom of choosing a wife, subject to approval of her parents. No real counting was involved.
"When he left (for America) he was 16 and she was only about 14," Caito said of his mother and father. "He just knew her. They used to play together as kids. When he decided that things were going pretty good for him, he decided to get married and he remembered this little girl that he thought he would like. But they never corresponded or anything like that."
After they were married they moved to Batavia, N.Y., and started a company that "became one of the largest fruit and vegetable operations in that area," Gus Caito said. "Dad was the founder and the head and we were proud of that."

"They were so dedicated for us as children," he recalled. "We had hard times during the Depression. It wasn't easy. We always had enough food on the table. We always had clean clothes. But we had to be very careful about what we spent."
And it was a traditional household. Salvatore was up at 3 a.m. to head for the produce warehouses, while Providenzia cooked, cleaned and sewed dresses for their four daughters.
"For a man who only went to school for three years in Sicily, he did well," said Caito. "He's self-educated: He never went to school when he was here. He learned the language basically by himself and could actually read and write from the sounding of the vowels."
Caito retired and he and his wife moved to the Northridge section of Los Angeles in 1948. The business closed in 1955.
Caito said both his parents have trouble recalling things because of their advanced years, and declined to permit an interview with them.

Requests yield uncharitable feelings

DEAR ABBY: I am not rich, neither am I poor. I've always contributed to the charities. I feel I am deserving, and nobody has to remind me to make my annual contribution, but things have now gotten out of hand.
Lately I have been deluged with what appear to be "bills" from numerous well-known organizations, pleading that they are desperately in need of funds. Yesterday, I received 16 requests from charities, without even opening the envelopes — even though some may contain a 22-cent postage stamp that could be used for another purpose.
Abby, please get this message across. These people need to know how turned off some of us get when we are...

— DUNNED TO DEATH
DEAR DUNNED: I couldn't agree with you more. But please don't quit giving to the charities of your choice because of those who dun you to death with high-pressure tactics.
— OUT IN THE COLD
DEAR ABBY: My 58-year-old husband has a habit of sitting sideways at the table when we are eating. He always has turned his chair sideways, and now the children, ages 27, 22 and 19, are doing exactly the same thing. This is especially annoying when we have company for dinner.
Would it be wrong to tell my family to please sit the proper way, or leave the table?
— E.A.K.
DEAR E.A.K.: Yes, it would be wrong. However, you could tell them before your guests arrive to please sit properly at the dinner table. And by the way, if your husband has always sat that way, your chances of breaking that irritating habit are slim. But you could work on the 19-year-old.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow, so family means a lot to me. My sister, whom I'll call Joan, is married. Hers is not a happy marriage, but she has tried hard to make it work.
Joan asked me to receive mail for her at my address, and I agreed. She's corresponding with "Jim," a former boyfriend. He is also married, and they see each other occasionally and maintain contact by mail. When I see how happy Joan is when she gets a letter from Jim, it does my heart good because she gets so little happiness from her husband.
Well, the inevitable happened. Her husband found one of those letters Joan had carelessly left in the bathroom. Although it was addressed to me, he read it and became very angry. He confronted Joan, they talked it out and she promised to end all contact with Jim.
He forgave her, but he refuses to speak to me or have me in his house. He hangs up on me when I call, and I am never included in anything they do together.
Joan tried to reason with him, but he is very stubborn. She is forgiven. Meanwhile I am being punished.
What advice have you for me?
— OUT IN THE COLD
DEAR OUT: Try to put it out of your mind. You can't change anyone but yourself.

Wall Street rally rolling on record volume

By CHET CURRIER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stock prices soared on record trading volume Thursday as the Wall Street's early-1987 rally kept rolling as a runaway race.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials jumped 35.72, to 2,070.73, posting its 10th consecutive gain since New Year's. Over that span the average has risen 174.78 points.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange reached 253.12 million shares, against 214.23 million Wednesday. The previous record of 244.68 million was set Dec. 19.

The dollar value of stocks changing hands on the Big Board for the day topped $10 billion.

Analysts said the market got a fourth quarter of last year have boost from declining interest rates in the bond market, which was spurred by talk that either West Germany or Japan, or both, might slow down their discount rates.

Market-watchers say buying also has been prompted lately by hopes that economic growth and corporate profits will improve more rapidly as the year progresses.

Some of the early reports for a fourth quarter of last year have already produced pleasant surprises. For example, Digital Equipment said Wednesday that its earnings nearly doubled in its latest fiscal quarter.

Digital stock, which jumped 1½% on Wednesday, gained another 2½% to 12½% in active trading Thursday.

General Electric, which reported higher quarterly profits Thursday afternoon, rose 1¼ to 92¾. Among other blue-chip and technology issues, International Business Machines gained 1¼ to 120, and Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing 4½ to 12¼.

Beyond any economic or business news, brokers said the market benefited from a "bandwagon" atmosphere, with investors chasing after the relentless rally. The last time the Dow Jones industrial average posted gains for 10 straight sessions was in the early 1970s.

As activity reached a frenzied pitch, some sellers moved in to take profits late in the session, pushing the Dow back a bit from its peak reading for the day of about 38-48 points.

Pan-Am gained 1½ to 5½ and AMR added 1 to 65½. The two companies were reported to be planning merger talks.

The prospect of such a deal apparently touched off enthusiasm for other airline issues. UAL rose 2¼ to 55¾; Delta Air Lines 1 to 51¼, and Trans World Airlines ¾ to 24.

Auto issues also were strong, with General Motors up 1 to 68½; Ford Motor up 1¼ to 70¾, and Chrysler ¾ higher at 144¼.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by nearly 2 to 1 on the NYSE, with 1,074 up, 567 down and 372 unchanged. The exchange's composite index gained 1.51 to 152.09.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 292.11 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 3.67 to 297.40, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 2.85 at 255.49.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market picked off 2.67 to 392.57. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 292.55, up 2.76.

Modification to halt sudden acceleration

Audi recalls pre-'87 5000 series cars

The Associated Press

DETROIT — A quarter-million Audi 5000-series cars made before the current model year were called Thursday for installation of a device designed to eliminate sudden accelerations which critics blame for five deaths.

Lettors will be sent to owners asking that they take the vehicles to Audi dealers so that the shift-lock device can be placed on the transmission and so an engine idle stabilization valve can be checked and replaced if necessary, company and government officials said.

"This is a total recall" of 1978 through 1986 model, said Audi spokesman Joseph Bennett from company headquarters in Troy, a Detroit suburb. It's an Audi 5000 with an automatic transmission, it is involved in this.

"The average price of the recalled cars is $23,000," said Bennett.

"No manufacturer gets specific about the cost of repairs, but the cost of the recall is well over $10 million," said Bennett. He said he had no information on the per-car cost of installing the device.

Audi is a subsidiary of Volkswagen of America Inc.

Shift-lock devices are standard equipment on currently available 1987 models, which are not involved in the recall, Bennett said.

Late last year, the company began a voluntary program of installing the shift-lock device, which requires a driver to press the brake pedal before operating the automatic transmission.

The Center for Auto Safety in Washington, a consumer group which has urged the government to order Audi to repurchase all its 5000-series cars, said Thursday's recall is just a "relabeling" of company-installed service campaigns.

"The track record has proven that they (the shift-lock devices and changing idle valves) are flawed," said center spokesman Dan Howell, adding that his organization has received a half-dozen reports of sudden, unanticipated acceleration in cars with the devices.

"Diane Steed, administrator of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, which launched a formal investigation of the sudden acceleration problem last year, said the agency has been told of five deaths and 271 injuries related to the problem.

She said her agency last month asked Audi to recall the vehicles because of an abnormally high rate of sudden acceleration complaints. She said the complaint rate among Audi 5000 owners "is 20 to 300 times higher as compared to GM (General Motors Corp.) cars that we also have under investigation."

Steed said the agency's investigation was checking the possibility of human error in runaway Audis, something the company has said in the past likely was a cause of the problem.

Auto analyst Tom O'Grady of Integrated Automotive Resources Inc. of Wayne, Pa., said the company has developed a severe image problem which may result in continued depressed sales figures.

"Everybody has heard so much about it (the sudden acceleration problem) that it is going to carry over into this year," O'Grady said. "It's going to hurt their reputation this year."

Sales of all Audi models dropped 19 percent in 1986 compared with the year before, and the West German-assembled car's share of the imported car market fell from 2.6 percent in 1985 to 1.9 percent in 1986.

Gas firm studying cost-cutting steps

BOISE (AP) — Intermountain Gas Co. is considering laying off employees and instituting other cost-cutting measures to stave off a financial crisis and avoid defaulting on debt obligations, company officials said.

The setbacks stem from a significant decline in earnings, which were prompted by loss of large industrial customers. Chuck Hedemark, executive vice president of distribution, said.

A decision whether employees would be laid off and on other cost-cutting measures will be made in February, he said.

Intermountain, the largest natural gas utility in southwestern Idaho, already has reduced its 326-employee work force by 10 percent during the past 18 months through an early retirement program and six office closures in Burley, Payette and other towns.

During the second half of 1986, Intermountain Gas lost about nine percent of customers, including American Potato Co. and Idaho Fresh-Pak Inc. — that switched to fuel oil, Hedemark said.

He said up to 40 percent of the company's "industrial customers, which account for 55 percent of their sales, may switch because oil suppliers are undercutting Intermountain's prices."

Intermountain has tried to take action to prevent loss of industrial customers. Hedemark said it filed a request with the Idaho Public Utilities Commission to revamp its rate structure and shift $6 million annually from industrial customers to commercial and residential customers.

However, the PUC allowed for only an industrial-rate decrease that would have amounted to $2.7 million annually, he said. Intermountain will file a petition with the PUC asking for reconsideration of the case.

The company is axing the bulk of its Federal Energy Hubert commission analyst director Regulatory Commission hearing the that could enable some of Intermountain's customers to purchase cheaper, wholesale gas, he said.

Jeffrey Lebens, the company's chief financial officer, said he was worried Intermountain would not be able to meet its debt obligations to life-insurance companies, which purchased mortgage bonds, although no figures were given on the amount of debt.

Hedemark said debt problems did not stem from a $50 million buyout of Intermountain Gas Industries Inc., the holding firm of Intermountain Gas Co., by private investors in 1984.

But Perry Swisher, president of the PUC, said: "The financial stress occurred because the acquisition was a highly leveraged buyout that moved so much debt service cost up front that it put stress on the cash flow."

In a leveraged buyout, buyers borrow against the assets of the company to raise money for the acquisition.

"The usual problem for the ratepayer in a leveraged buyout is that in the early years after that acquisition (the company has) to run as lean as they can to pay down that buyout debt," Swisher said.

He said the company needed to provide evidence of the problem operating and maintenance costs so that the PUC can hear a rate design case, which has "not been heard."

"If their ability to operate comes into question, we will react," Swisher said.

For Intermountain's fiscal year ending Sept. 30, the company's net income plunged to about $12 million, down 53.3 percent from the previous year, according to figures supplied by the PUC.

Debt included $3.53 million to be paid within a year, $32.75 million in long-term debt and $7.76 million in accounts payable, said Archie Hubert, commission analyst director Regulatory Commission hearing the War between the ages may lie in future

NEW YORK — Will the young in years to come battle their elders for a greater share of the economy's benefits?

The possibility has become one of the more intriguing research subjects of insurers, economists, politicians and others whose destiny is linked with the way the industrial era is changing.

"So far, and despite data shoveled into their electronic computers, the answer has eluded them. Nobody is certain even that the hypotheses is valid. Some scholars call it a joke.

"In its barest form, it presumes that younger generations will rebel against paying for what might be considered the indulgence of their parents, and some seek to renounce their legacy.

"Among other things, that legacy could be said to include an onerous federal debt, high taxes, inflated housing prices, environmental damage and a variety of economic malfunctions, including automatic productivity in the industrial era.

"At the extreme, the situation is seen as a self-indulgent, big-spending, wasteful, short-sighted older group seeking to have a younger generation pay the bills — bills so burdensome they could deprive youngsters of a decent life.

The concern has arisen again and again in discussions of Social Security's future, and you may be certain it will continue to be involved in future discussions, simply because the best minds can't seem to agree.

Two who should know — former Social Security Administration chief actuaries — battled it out recently in the Journal of American Society of CLU and ChFC, prepared for chartered life underwriters and chartered financial consultants.

A. Hawthorn Robertson and Robert J. Myers came up with opposing views, Robertson saying that even if able to pay Social Security taxes, young workers will rebel against doing so, Myers contending the system is financially viable.

Aside from their vast difference of opinion, one of the more discouraging aspects of the matter is that their conclusions are based on the same source, the 1986 Social Security Trustees Report.

By the year 2036, according to Robertson, wages will have to be taxed 40 percent to 50 percent to fund benefits for retirees.

He contends that if not changed significantly, Social Security will eventually cost more than taxpayers will be able to pay, adding: "Even if taxpayers are able to pay, they will not be willing to pay those taxes."

He predicts that within 50 years — when baby boomers reach age 65 — tax revenues will pay only 55 percent of promised benefits. And, he warns, the situation could be even worse for their children, should changes not be made.

Myers believes that situation will never develop because changes in the system will be made as demographic conditions warrant. But two optimistic Myers disagrees even more deeply with the pessimistic Robertson.

As Myers sees it, the 1983 Social Security Amendments Act financed the system "on a very conservative basis by assuming quite pessimistic future economic conditions in the 1980s."

But, he says, the balance in the Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance Trust Fund (OASDI) at the end of 1985 was $18 billion higher than under the original pessimistic estimate.

Myers contends that if the present law remains unchanged, a huge buildup of funds will occur in the 1990s that will satisfy the cost of OASDI's part of the Social Security system.

Myers and Robertson hold out for the two, John J. Creeden, chief executive officer of Metropolitan Insurance Co., states diplomatically if not reassuringly that "perhaps the truth lies somewhere in between."

Will there be a war of the ages?

Who knows? But what can be said with certainty is that right here and now there is an enormous dispute going on between those who believe and those who scorn.

Oakley's Mandi Strauss looks for Sally Wells, right, while Shoshone's Janis Eberhard, 10, and Patti O'Maley defend.

26 4th-quarter points keep Shoshone celebrating on ice

SHOSHONE — Put the celebration on hold. Just when things started looking bright, the right direction for the home-standing Indians, the Oakley Hornets woke up scoring 26 fourth-quarter points to upset Shoshone 63-62 in a Magic Valley Conference game Thursday night.

The loss for Shoshone puts the Magic Valley Conference in a mess with the Indians, Oakley and Rob-Warr atop the conference with two losses.

"It's not over till the fat lady sings," said Oakley Coach Don Tompkins who saw his Hornets erase the 14-point Shoshone lead in the fourth quarter.

"The victory for the Hornets is sweet revenge for Oakley which lost a controversial contest to Shoshone in December. Patti O'Maley hit the buzzer in that game and the referee looked like she would make the difference once again.

"The first half was a showcase for O'Maley who, papally, outscored the entire Hornet team.

O'Maley was a one-gal-gang in the first quarter, scoring all of Shoshone's points in the opening 10-2, courtesy of a barrage of Leslie Warr buckets.

O'Maley point-for-point in the opening quarter.

O'Maley kept up her scoring the lead to four points as Mandi Strauss hit four free-throws.

After a Shoshone free-throw, Kaye Panton and Strauss hit back-to-back buckets to cut the lead to single point.

Hale scored with 55 seconds going to give Oakley the lead for good at 60.

After the Indians drove the ball down the court, Oakley knocked the Shoshone set up for a three-point shot.

The Indians exploded in the third quarter outscoring the Hornets 20-11 in the quarter to take a commanding 14-point lead into the final stanza.

Nancy Helsey and O'Maley combined for a dozen points in that quarter to lead the Indian effort.

Just 60 seconds into the fourth quarter, Oakley had cut the lead to seven points, a feat the Indians pulled from Stephanie Hale and a bucket by Warr.

Five minutes later, Shoshone cut the lead to four points as Mandi Strauss hit four free-throws.

After a Shoshone free-throw, Kaye Panton and Strauss hit back-to-back buckets to cut the lead to single point.

Hale scored with 55 seconds going to give Oakley the lead for good at 60.

After the Indians drove the ball down the court, Oakley knocked the Shoshone set up for a three-point shot.

The Hornets, however, grabbed the inbound pass and Hale was fouled, went to the line and hit two free throws.

Down by three in the final seconds, O'Maley opted to go inside instead of taking the three-pointer and the Indians fell one point short.

"We just didn't take care of the ball," said Shoshone Coach Ed Sanyo, who saw his ballclub blow a similar lead to Montana last week ago. "We were playing like we were behind, making silly fouls.

Meanwhile, Oakley held O'Maley to eight points in the second half, a statistic that made Tompkins smile.

"We put man-to-man (defense) on her," he said. "And we shut her down pretty good."

O'Maley ended the game with 24 points while Warr led the Hornets with 27.

Hornets, Indians brace for MVC grudge match

OAKLEY — Oakley Coach Neal Wyatt takes a young Hornet squad up against top-ranked Shoshone on the home hardwoods this evening for a battle featuring the only two boys basketball teams still undefeated in the Magic Valley Conference.

At 3-0 in the MVC, 7-4 overall, Wyatt is well pleased with the early performance of his charges.

"I'm really happy with what they're doing," he said. "You know we didn't have a single starter back this year, so the pressure is off the kids. They don't have to go out and win, they just have to go and play hard."

"We've got good quickness and some kids who can handle the ball," Wyatt continued. "And, for our size, we play good defense. We're getting a lot more rebounds than we used would indicate because we've got five kids going to the boards."

Shoshone boasts a 4-0 conference slate and is perfect on the year as well at 9-0. Unlike tonight's opponent, the Indians are deep in experience, having won 10 of their 11 games.

"The word on Oakley is that Ruston Hale is a pretty good guard and they have three good size kids inside," he said. "Neal (Wyatt) always has always done a good job, and Oakley's especially tough down there. I'm sure we'll have our hands full."

Experience inside may play the late according to Wyatt.

"I haven't seen them play this year," he adds. "But from what I've heard and knowing the kids they have back, they're going to be tough to beat no matter what you do."

ISU's defense gets trampled by Bobcats

Boutin fumes at 86-80 loss

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

POCATELLO — Pressure defense, the leading suit of the State University basketball team, got trampled Thursday night.

Defending Big Sky Conference champion Montana State, a team not known for denying opponents their share of points, picked off the Bengals for 20 turnovers and shot 56 percent en route to an 86-80 victory.

"The win, the first for the Bobcats away from home this season and the first road breakthrough" by any Big Sky team this year, left Montana State atop the league standings with a 3-0 record, while ISU fell to 2-1.

"It was the first loss for an Idaho State team in the Mindgame since the Bengals fell to Montana midway through the 1984-85 season.

"We can't be playing 86-80 games in Pocatello," Coach Jim Boutin said. "We played the game at Montana State's tempo. I told the players that we're not good enough athletes to be playing Montana State's game."

The Bobcats got 28 points from junior forward Tom Donako, the league's leading scorer, and 20 from senior forward Kral Ferch. But MSU won the game on the guard line, where junior Ray Willis and sophomore Shane Ferch had the Bengals checking their pockets all night.

"Ray and I feel we can control a lot of the guards in the league," said Shane Ferch, who ended up with 13 points, two assists, and a steal.

"Where are a few we can't control, but we're gaining a lot of confidence. If you're intense on defense you can be intense on offense, and that's a good feeling."

"The Cats forced nine ISU turnovers in the first half, moving ahead by as many as nine points before the Bengals got back in the game with a flurry of points by freshman guard Mike Chatterton.

"We did several things that the Bobcats quickly expanded their advantage to 17 points with a full-court press in the second half.

"If I were playing Idaho State, I'd do the same thing," said Boutin. "I'd press and I'd zone you."

"We did several things that we didn't do last year," said MSU Coach Stu Slatter, whose team has won 13 of its first 17 games. "We were able to get a number of steals and we were able to penetrate. Any time you can come in here and play like that against a tenacious opponent like Idaho State, you have to be extremely pleased."

The Bengals got two points in the first half from senior forward Donn Holton, the Big Sky's No. 2 scorer. He ended up with 17 for the game.

After Boutin sat him down to begin the second half.

"Donny's not playing real well right now," said Boutin. "I don't have any answers. I've been talking to him about it and encouraging him, because we don't have a lot of players who can give us some offense."

The loss came despite a commanding edge on the boards by the Bengals, an anomaly for Idaho State this season. Idaho State outboarded the visitors 46-31, including 19-11 in the first half.

"I told the players in the locker room (after the game) that I gave them the green light three weeks ago and tonight I'm taking it off," said Boutin. "From now on we're going to go back to what we did last year and play a half-court offense."

"The Bengals led the game for only two minutes, taking a 4-2 lead with 18:29 left in the first half and losing."

Rice, Sellers make I-AA honors roll

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Twin Falls' Mike Rice, who won first-team All-America Press Division I-AA All-American honors as a punter at the University of Montana last season as a junior, was selected to the 1987 All-American wide receiver this year.

And Twin Falls' Lance Sellers, who went from a walk-on linebacker to an all-Big Sky Conference defensive end at Boise State University, has been named an honorable mention selection.

The AP's All-American team, chosen by sportswriters and broadcasters from member newspapers, radio and television stations, was announced Thursday.

Rice, a 193 graduate of Twin Falls High School, caught 64 passes for 1,046 yards and 13 touchdowns in his senior season. He also carried the ball four times for 83 yards and returned 14 times for an 80.5-yard average, returned 39 punts for 271 yards and one kickoff for three yards. Rice, who spent two years at Montana after transferring from Walla Walla (Wash.) Community College, Lingmerth and Nevada-Reno after his sophomore season, holds all-time records for punting yards and punting records and most of honorable mention selections from 1984 to 1986. He also was named MVP of the Idaho State football team.

Merrill Hoag, Boise State's free safety, Maury Moore, Idaho's inside linebacker Tom Hennessey, Boise State's defensive tackle Peter Kwiatkowski and BSU's linebackers Jim Ellis and Rex Walters.

Georgia Southern quarterback Tracy Ham, the only quarterback in college football history to rush for 3,000 yards and pass for 5,000 in a career, led the AP's first team of defense.

Arizona tackle Bob Brown, Northern Arizona cornerback George Duarte, Northern Arizona placekicker Goran Lingmerth and Nevada-Reno quarterback Eric Beavers.

In addition to Sellers, All-American honorable mention selections from Idaho included Boise State's fullback Merrill Hoag, Boise State's free safety Maury Moore, Idaho's inside linebacker Tom Hennessey, Boise State's defensive tackle Peter Kwiatkowski and BSU's linebackers Jim Ellis and Rex Walters.

Vainisi steps down as Chicago general manager

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Jerry Vainisi has stepped down as general manager of the Chicago Bears, the National Football League team announced Thursday.

Michael McCaskey, the Bears' president and chief executive officer, told reporters that it was a mutual decision between the two men.

Vainisi was credited for helping fashion the team that won the Super Bowl a year ago. This year, however, the Bears lost to the underdog Washington Redskins 27-13 in an NFL playoff game Jan. 3.

"We have been 32-4 in our last two years and obviously it's hard to break up a winning combination, but (Vainisi's departure) was in the best interests of the Bears," McCaskey said. "We want to see where we stand with the idea of gaining another Super Bowl victory."

Vainisi was a "strong philosophical differences" as the reason for Vainisi leaving as general manager.

"I refuse to discuss specific differences," said McCaskey. Bears Coach Mike Ditka, speaking at a news conference, said he regrets Vainisi's departure.

"I feel very sorry for his wonderful family and his children," said Ditka, who appeared shaken by the news. "Jerry Vainisi is a class person."

Vainisi will remain with the club for a while as a consultant, McCaskey said.

His contract runs until mid-1988, and McCaskey said no agreement had been reached on how he would be paid off.

Vainisi, in a written statement, said:

"In 1983, George Halas and I signed a contract as the Bears' general manager. The Bears are an honorable organization and I am confident they will stand behind me. I will remain with the club until I am ready, willing and able to continue my efforts on behalf of the Bears as I always have.

"Based on Mr. McCaskey's statement," Vainisi's statement continued, "while I apparently no longer have the title of general manager, I will continue to serve the Bears to the best of my ability until this matter is resolved."

The Bears' president said he hoped to have a replacement by the April 28 NFL college draft and was looking for someone "not necessarily with NFL experience, but ... with financial and contractual experience."

McCaskey said other changes in personnel may be forthcoming, but gave Ditka a vote of confidence.

Vainisi and Ditka are close friends and recently became partners in a downtown restaurant.

Team officials had been in meetings most of the day, evaluating players and apparently discussing the Vainisi situation.

Ironically, the Bears' 1986 Media Guide said Vainisi "was one of the leaders" of the club's success in 1985.

Mattingly, Gooden tired of getting by on 1.3 million-dollar salaries

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets and Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees were among more than three dozen baseball players who filed for salary arbitration Thursday as a midnight deadline approached.

Both stars also filed a year ago when Gooden was the National League's Cy Young winner and Mattingly captured the American League's Most Valuable Player award, but both settled before their cases were heard.

Gooden is seeking a raise from his 1986 salary of $1.32 million after posting a 17-6 record for the world champion Mets. Mattingly hit .352, second best in the AL, with 31 home runs and 113 runs batted in, and is hoping for a $2 million contract after making $1.375 million last year.

Only nine of the 139 eligible players had filed before Thursday's deadline.

Other Mets filing Thursday were pitcher Ron Darling, who won 15 games, infielders Howard Johnson and Tim Lincecum, pitcher Doug Sisk and newly-acquired outfielder Kevin McKeyenolds. Ron Kittle of the Yankees also filed.

Two Toronto stars, outfielders George Bell and Jesse Barfield, also filed. Barfield, a Golden Glove winner, and Bell are reported to be seeking in excess of $1 million apiece next season. Both earned a base salary of $650,000 last year, plus performance bonuses.

Among others also beating the filing deadline were pitcher Frank Viola of the Minnesota Twins; California teammates Dick Schofield and Gary Peltis; Mike Marshall of the Los Angeles Dodgers; Houston second baseman Bill Doran; shortstop Spike Owen and pitcher Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd of Boston; Cleveland's Pat Tabler, Brook Jacoby, Chris Bando and Tom Waddell; second baseman Juan Samuel of Philadelphia; pitcher Davey Cox of St. Louis; and San Diego pitchers Denny Dreyer and Andy Hawkins.

By Monday, the players and teams must submit their salary figures for consideration by an arbitrator, who, after hearing arguments, picks one of the other. Negotiations are permitted right up until a decision is rendered and some hearings have ended abruptly when the two sides reached agreement while the arbitrator was considering his decision.

Giants confess they have developed into an excellent team

New York says 19-16 cliffhanger was long ago

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The word out of Denver is that Super Bowl XXI will be a close game because the Broncos weren't blown out in their visit to New York during the season.

"We the Giants have heard the word and the message heading West Thursday is "We're a lot better team now," said Giants Coach Bill Parcells.

"And it's being said by a lot of players. I think there is a little bit of a down cycle offensively when we played them the first time," Giants guard Chris Godfrey. "It was a struggle for us. I think they are an excellent club, but we're playing better now."

Fellow guard Billy Ard said the Giants were a team in transformation in New York.

"We're not the same," he said. "We were going through change then. We were developing into a fine team. We're an excellent team now."

There is no doubt the Giants struggled on offense in posting a 19-16 victory over the Broncos Nov. 23. New York was outgained on offense 405-262 and failed to score a touchdown, with defensive end George Martin returning an interception 78 yards for the Giants' only TD.

"They didn't let us move the ball on the ground," said Giants Coach

Bill Parcells, whose team gained 143 yards on 36 carries. "We got down close, but we didn't score TDs."

One of the major weapons missing from the Giants' offense in November was wide receiver Lionel Manuel, who was reactivated for the San Francisco playoff game after recovering from a knee injury.

"He definitely opens things for me," said wide receiver Bobby Johnson. "He runs routes like no body in the NFL. His speed is back and he's cutting on a dime. My ankles would break the way he cuts."

Giants tackle Carl Nelson said neither the Giants nor the Broncos came close to playing a perfect game earlier this year.

"I know there were a lot of things that we could have done better," said Nelson. "The same can be said for them. It should be a good game."

The Giants' offense isn't the only thing that has improved since November, said safety Kenny Hill. The defense also is better.

"In a word, yes," said Hill. "I think the fact that we held two playoff-caliber teams to just three points is indicative of that fact. Both of these teams are higher-powered offenses."

In their two playoff games, New York defeated San Francisco 49-3 and downed Washington 17-0.

"We are jelling," said Hill. "We aren't at our best yet, but we are getting there."

Hill says the Giants' biggest concern is obvious — Broncos quarterback John Elway.

"Elway scrambles quite a bit," he said. "Historically, quarterbacks who scramble have given us problems."

Elway, who hit 29 of 47 passes for 338 yards, was on the move eight times in the first meeting with the Giants, gaining 51 yards with a 13-yard long rush. Denver gained only 80 yards rushing on 22 carries, meaning the backs had 14 rushes for 29 yards.

"I'd like to get a couple of jeeps and nets," said Parcells. "I would have guys circling the pocket in the jeeps ready to throw the big nets around him."

Broncos hope natural turf will slow Joe Morris

DENVER (AP) — The scouting report on New York Giants running back Joe Morris says he is much more effective runner on artificial turf than on grass.

The Rose Bowl's natural surface, then, might be expected to neutralize Morris when the Giants and Denver Broncos meet in Super Bowl XXI on Jan. 25.

Not according to the Broncos, though.

"I read some statistic that Morris averages 90-some yards on artificial turf and 70 yards on grass," said Broncos Coach Dan Reeves. "That's not much of a difference. He's a great runner on anything. He has great vision and the ability to make people miss him."

Linebacker Karl Meeklenburg notes that Morris, while not as elusive as Seattle's Curt Warner, "has explosiveness. He's more of a power-type runner. Plus, his size (5-foot-7, 195 pounds) is a problem because he's hard to find. He can hide behind an offensive lineman, and before you see him he's past you."

Morris gained the bulk of his 1,516 rushing yards in the regular season on artificial turf — the surface at Giants Stadium and at most of the other stadiums in the NFC East. He gained 110 yards on grass against the Raiders, but 82 of those yards to 14 yards on 13 carries on grass at San Francisco.

"All I know is, in the big games, the ones that mean a lot, he has run awful well," said Reeves.

While the Giants remain a team characterized by defense, Morris and the rest of the offense pose problems.

"They're an offense that can score some points," said Reeves. "I thought Phil Simms' throw well against us when we played earlier in the year (a 19-16 Giants victory in the Meadowlands). Against San Francisco in the playoffs, I don't think I've seen anyone throw more good passes than he did. He was under pressure and he knew he was going to get hit, but he'd stand in and deliver a perfect pass. "Their offensive line is solid, and (Mark) Bavaro is probably the best tight end in football right now. When we played them before, they were hurting a little bit, but they've got (Lionel) Manuel back, and he's their most dangerous receiver."

Manuel had missed most of the regular season because of a knee injury.

Denver defensive coordinator Joe

Collier compares the Giants to the Los Angeles Raiders, a divisional opponent the Broncos face twice each season.

"The Giants are not into a lot of movement and shuffling," said Collier. "They just line up and say 'Here we come.' Their idea is to out-block you, to out-execute you. If they do, they're a difficult team to stop."

That philosophy, Collier said, makes the Giants a "relatively easy team to prepare for from a mental standpoint, but not from a physical standpoint."

Morris, Collier said, gives the Broncos something to worry about. "Cleveland didn't have a back like him," Collier said, referring to Denver's 23-20 overtime victory over the Browns in the AFC championship game on Sunday.

And Simms is more of a scrambler than Cleveland's Bernie Kosar, according to Collier. "Simms is a better runner than Kosar and he'll run upfield, which Kosar won't do," he said.

He said the Giants are not reluctant to send Bavaro deep, which should make for an interesting afternoon for Broncos strong safety Dennis Smith.

AP tabs Bird athlete of year

BOSTON (AP) — Larry Bird, who led the Boston Celtics to their 16th NBA title and became the first forward to win the league's Most Valuable Player award three consecutive times, is The Associated Press Male Athlete of 1986.

Bird outpooled fellow Boston athlete Roger Clemens, who was 24-4 en route to helping the Red Sox win the American League pennant, and undefeated boxer Mike Tyson, who became the youngest world heavyweight champion.

Bird, the first basketball player to win the award since it was started in 1931, was named on 60 of the 95 ballots received from a nationwide group of sports writers and sportscasters.

Clemens was named on 63 ballots, but Bird had 50 first-place votes and 214 points based on five points for first place, three for second and one for third. Clemens had 19 first-place votes and 189 points, while the 20-year-old Tyson had 188 points and 22 firsts.

Also receiving first-place votes were Tour de France bicycle race winner Greg LeMond with nine, golfer Greg Norman with eight and National League Most Valuable Player Mike Schmidt with seven. Norman had 72 points, LeMond 64 and Schmidt 33.

Tennis star Ivan Lendl (35 points), Diego Maradona of World Cup soccer champion Argentina (32), Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees (29), and Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde and NHL scoring champion Wayne Gretzky (28 each) completed the top finishers.

Bird said that winning individual awards has little meaning to him unless the Celtics win a championship. Boston's title in 1986 was the third since Bird joined the team in 1979.

"I've won a lot of awards, but winning a championship is my main goal every year," Bird said. "I play to win championships, not individual awards. If they come along, fine, but nothing is close to winning a championship."

Bird won the regular-season MVP award by

averaging 25.8 points, 9.8 rebounds, 6.8 assists and leading the NBA in free throw percentage at 89%.

He then won his second playoff MVP award by averaging 24 points, 9.7 rebounds and 9.5 assists as the Celtics beat Houston 4-2 in the NBA championship series.

"I get plenty of enjoyment out of winning MVPs, but it doesn't compare with a championship," Bird said.

Bean slips into drenched Hope Classic lead

LA QUINTA, Calif. (AP) — Big long, hard course for Friday's third round in the format that calls for couple of courses I can shoot good wind and cold to a 4-under-par 68 and the pros to play one round on each of the second-round "teed" Thursday in the four courses, each 60-70 with a different three-man amateur team.

His lead, however, was by raw force.

Bean has yet to face the new, controversial PGA West course, generally considered to be 5 shots tougher than the other three desert courses used in this 5-day, 90-hole marathon.

He will take a 131 total, 13 under if he par, and a three-shot lead to that completed 36 holes in 135.

"I feel sorry for him," said Edwards, who was 13 shots higher than his opening 61.

And one of Bean's closest pursuers, first-round leader David Edwards, has long had PGA West made double bogey-6 on the final hole, misting rain into the pond and made double bogey-6 on the final hole.

"Actually, I played pretty well until that last hole," said Edwards, who was 13 shots higher than his opening 61.

"I'm still in good shape, with a hole."

Nehemiah returns to track tonight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — World record-holder Renaldo Nehemiah returns to track Friday night, running his first hurdles race in America in more than five years.

Nehemiah, less than a rousing success during four seasons as a wide receiver with the San Francisco 49ers, has also won Greg Foster in the 60-meter hurdles at the Sunxist Invitational.

Also in the hurdles indoors at the Sports Arena is Roger Kingdom, who won the 1984 Olympic gold medal in the 110-meter hurdles.

Foster dominated the event after Nehemiah hit a football. Foster's only loss was to Kingdom in the Olympic final.

The 27-year-old Nehemiah was reinstated to amateur track last year by the International Amateur Athletic Federation.

Minico matmen await Rams

RUPERT — Minico High School's wrestling team will entertain defending Region III champion Highland here tonight, hoping the Rams' visit for a perfect regional record headed into next month's postseason tournament.

The Spartans, 1-1 against Region-III competition so far this season and 3-3 overall, will host the Rams in a 7 p.m. dual meet, then wrap up their regional season against Burley here Jan. 22. Highland, 3-0 against regional foes and 8-1 overall, can go undefeated in regional competition by beating Minico here tonight and Pocatello on Jan. 27.

Although the team results in the intra-regional matches have no bearing on the postseason tournament, the individual match results do weigh heavily on the seedings for that event.

Three world records broken

OSAKA, Japan (AP) — Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson and two Soviets, pole vaulter Sergei Bubka and triple jumper Oleg Prosenko, became the first athletes to set official world indoor track and field records at the Yomiuri International meet Thursday.

Bubka cleared 19 feet, 8 1/2 inches, improving by one-quarter inch the mark of 19-4 1/2 he set in New York on Feb. 28, 1986. He also holds the world outdoor record of 19-8 1/2, set last year in the Goodwill Games at Moscow.

Prosenko triple-jumped 57-11 1/2, bettering the previous mark of 57-6 1/2 set by countryman Maris Bruziks at Madrid on Feb. 23, 1986. The outdoor world record is 58-11 1/2, held by Willie Banks of the United States.

Johnson won the 60 in 6.44 seconds, eclipsing the mark of 6.50 he set in this meet last year.

Lucas signs with Bucks

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Veteran guard John Lucas, who tested positive for drugs last year for the second time in two seasons, has reached a verbal agreement to sign with the Milwaukee Bucks, a spokesman for the NBA team said Thursday.

Bill King said the contract for the remainder of this season must still be put in writing and signed before Lucas can practice with the team under National Basketball Association regulations, but that should take place by the middle of next week.

Lewis to test leg tonight

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Quadruple Olympic gold medalist Carl Lewis, recovered from arthroscopic surgery on his left knee, returns to competition Friday night, in the Hoosier Dome Invitational track and field meet.

His coach, Tom Teller of the University of Houston, said Lewis won't be as concerned about winning in the 60-meter dash as he will be in testing the knee after the September operation.

McLain lawyers start appeal

ATLANTA (AP) — Attorneys appealing the racketeering conviction of Denny McLain, baseball's last 30-game winner, argued Thursday that his 14-week trial was run ineptly by an inattentive judge.

McLain, 42, was convicted March 16, 1985, in U.S. District Court at Tampa, Fla., on charges of racketeering, extortion, conspiracy and cocaine dealing. He was sentenced to 23 years in prison and now is in a federal prison at Talladega, Ala.

Leavell rejoins Rockets

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Houston Rockets starting guard Allen Leavell has signed a 10-day contract with the team, filling one of the vacancies left by the banning of guards Mitchell Wiggins and Lewis Lloyd.

Leavell was waived by the Rockets last November. He played well during preseason but a foot injury cost him a spot on the team.

Leavell and Lloyd were banned from the NBA for two years Tuesday after tests showed they had used cocaine.

Leavell became a Rockets' starter last March when John Lucas was waived for the second time for using cocaine.

Miami players won't apologize

MIAMI (AP) — Some University of Miami football players have refused to apologize for their behavior at the Fiesta Bowl, despite Coach Jimmy Johnson's public apology.

College President Edward Poole had called their behavior at the Fiesta Bowl, where they lost the game 14-10 to Penn State and a national title, an "embarrassment."

But fullback Alonzo Highsmith and lineman Jerome Brown and some others would have none of the apology.

"I apologize for nothing," Highsmith said. "The only thing I apologize for is losing the game. That's it."

NFL seeking salary cap

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The NFL may suggest some form of wage control, such as a salary cap, during talks on a collective bargaining agreement later this year, says Jack Donaghy, executive director of the league's Management Council.

"I can see us looking very strongly at it," Donaghy told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram on Thursday. "At some point in time, the NFL owners are going to say the way we've been doing business doesn't make any sense anymore, unless we get revenue increases."

Spinks dumps fight, returns

MIAMI (AP) — Former world heavyweight champion Leon Spinks pulled out of a weekend bout against Jose Ribalta and then changed his mind Thursday and asked the promoters to let him come back.

The unusual turn of events caught Ivetto Promotions, the fight's organizers, completely by surprise. They even held a news conference Thursday to announce that veteran heavyweight Jimmy Young would replace Spinks.

Just hours after that news conference, Ivetto spokesman Chuck Covello had to call all of the reporters back to tell them Spinks had changed his mind and would be fighting Ribalta after all.

"Spinks is coming back," Covello said. "His people were in contact with us after the news conference and said they want to come back and they want to fight."

Alaska finds costs of bidding

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The Anchorage Organizing Committee spent nearly $3 million on an unsuccessful bid for the 1992 Winter Olympics, a budget overrun of about 50 percent.

The committee's year-end financial report also shows that much of the money went to businesses owned by committee members.

Most of the cost overrun went to pay for elaborate receptions and exhibits to try and win the votes of members of the International Olympic Committee.

"There were things that came up during the course of the bid that we had absolutely no clue about," said Rick Nerland, executive vice president of the AOC.

Polish cager accepted by U.S.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A Polish basketball player who defected in November while touring the United States has been granted political asylum.

"I'm ecstatic," Waldemar Sender, 23, said Wednesday through an interpreter. "I expected it, but it is still a wonder. I am amazed and happy."

Steven Farquharson, an assistant at the Immigration and Naturalization Services in Providence, said the State Department approved Sender's political asylum request, which requires applicants to show they would face persecution if returned to their homelands.

Sender scored four points for Poland in a Nov. 15 game against College of Southern Idaho in the Twin Falls High School gymnasium.

Kookaburra takes first race in Aussie America Cup finals

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — Kookaburra III, even though it sailed the last mile with a loose mainsail, breezed to another victory over Australia IV in the America's Cup defender finals Thursday, and this one counted.

The triumph by a substantial one-minute, 34-second margin gave Kookaburra III a 1-0 lead in the best-of-nine final and was even more decisive than the previous days' race.

On Wednesday, it beat Australia IV by 29 seconds after taking the lead in the second half of the race. But both boats lodged protests and were disqualified for rules violations.

That race gave an indication, however, of Kookaburra III's strength, Thursday's race, in which the winning boat took advantage of wind shifts, reinforced it and this time there were no protests.

"The winner of the series will face Stars & Stripes or New Zealand in the America's Cup final, a best-of-seven series scheduled to start Jan. 31. The U.S. boat, taking the challenger final 2-0 and can wrap it up with victories Friday and Saturday. The Australian boats will race Friday.

New Zealand had won 37 of 38 races in the first 90 days of sailing. But when they lost on consecutive days to Stars & Stripes, the New Zealanders called for a lay day Thursday to figure out how to get their boat into what skipper Chris Dickson called a "fifth gear." Alan Robinson, a spokesman for the KIWI syndicate, said it had received 18,000 messages of support in less than 24 hours after the race.

"We can't wait to get back into it," he said. Stars & Stripes personnel spent a relaxing day Thursday as befits a crew which whipped its opponent by 1:20 and 1:36 in the last two races. Skipper Dennis Conner watched the defender race and didn't take the boat for a practice run.

Conner lost the America's Cup to Australia II in 1983. He is trying to avenge that setback which made him the first U.S. skipper to lose the Cup since the competition began in 1851.

Oregon passer says he belongs with stars

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Quarterback Chris Miller, who spent four years at Oregon out of the national spotlight, is ready to make a bid for a career in the National Football League.

"I believe I belong here," Miller said. "I think I'm at the level of all these players."

Miller, and the more celebrated Jim Harbaugh of Michigan, a second-team All-American, will handle the quarterback duties for the North team in Saturday's Senior Bowl football game.

The two faced each other in last week's Hula Bowl, with Miller winning the Most Valuable Player Award after hitting on 10 of 16 passes for 214 yards and one touchdown, leading the West to a 24-17 victory over the East.

Harbaugh passed for 69 yards and one TD for the East.

North Coach John Robinson of the Los Angeles Rams has been impressed with Miller's work in practice.

"He gets rid of the ball very fast and has excellent athletic ability," Robinson said. "He's got a great future ahead of him."

Coaches and scouts from the NFL and Canadian Football League crowded the practice field during the week of practice, watching how the 76 seniors on the two teams reacted under the instruction of NFL staffs.

"Practices are a little more important than the game because you see so many scouts and player personnel directors and coaches," Miller said, adding that most of the pro teams had either seen him play during his college career, or viewed films of his games.

"In practice you can show your individual skills and talents; how quick your release is and how far you can throw the ball," Miller said. "You really haven't played with these guys in game situations."

Miller broke or tied 13 school records at Oregon. He ranked No. 14 nationally in total offense last season with 231 yards per game.

Howser expects spring training to be his test

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Despite two operations in the past six months for a malignant brain tumor, Dick Howser is looking forward to returning as manager of the Kansas City Royals when the team reports to spring training.

Howser, who has lost about 12 pounds since the tumor was discovered last July, hopes to meet the Royals' pitchers and catchers at Fort Myers, Fla. on Feb. 17.

"I am really looking forward to this," Howser told the Tallahassee Democrat in a story published Thursday. "Spring training is going to be a test."

He thinks the Royals are capable of returning to their 1985 world championship form.

Howser, who now wears glasses and a cap as a result of the operations and extensive radiation treatments, said his health comes first.

"That is the way it is now," said Howser, who lives in Tallahassee. "Baseball and everything else comes after."

At the end of the 1986 season, the Royals fired interim manager Mike Ferraro and hired former Minnesota Manager Billy Gardner in case Howser was unable to return to full-time duty.

"The worst part is probably lying day to day — not knowing what's going to happen tomorrow," Howser said. "Ultimately, this is the kind of thing we all face."

"I would rather be an optimist. I feel things are going to be all right," Howser said. "I have forced him to re-evaluate his priorities."

"If adversity has done wonders for my marriage," Howser said. "In baseball... you are gone so much."

Howser knew he wasn't feeling well before managing the American League team in the 1986 All-Star Game, held by a scout.

"I thought maybe it was the 11-game losing streak — the stress thing," said Howser, who said he had suffered passing-out spells four or five times beginning in 1979.

Surgeons were unable to remove all of the cancerous tumor without disturbing vital brain tissue during a three-hour operation at Kansas City.

"One knew as soon as I got out of that one it would not be good enough," said Howser, who seems encouraged by a second, but experimental, operation at Pasadena, Calif., in December.

Pianist to perform at Renaissance

By SHANNON CORPRON
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Renowned classical pianists Alfred Cortot, Wilhelm Kempff and Rostislav Letnikov all have something in common.

"They are three of many musicians who have instructed, inspired and refined the music of Madeleine Hsu, a North African-born, French-raised and internationally known concert pianist.

Hsu will perform works by Franz Liszt, Frederick Chopin, Bela Bartok, Maurice Ravel and Claude Debussy on Sunday at 3 p.m. at the Renaissance Academy of the Arts in Twin Falls.

Professor Larry Curtis, head of the music department at the College of Southern Idaho, played clarinet in a trio with Hsu. He was also conductor of the Magic Valley Symphony in 1976 when, as a soloist, Hsu played Beethoven's fifth piano concerto.

"She is full of life, very dedicated to her music, and probably the best pianist in Idaho, at least," said Curtis. "She plays with great skill and is an excellent piano teacher. I think this is a chance for the Magic Valley to hear a very, very fine pianist. I think she's about as good as they get."

Hsu, a veteran of performances on four continents who has played with the Warsaw Philharmonic in Poland and the Rio de Janeiro Television Symphony in Brazil, will also conduct two piano workshops at the Academy the day prior to her concert.

Children ages 7 to 17 will have an opportunity to discuss their piano studies at a workshop Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

At 1 p.m., adult teachers and students will discuss teaching and performance techniques.

The French pianist, who speaks five languages "well" and six others "for traveling purposes," will also listen to workshop members who wish to perform.

Hsu (pronounced "ghoo") was born in Orleanville, a city in what was then the French colony of Algiers in North Africa. Her father was a lawyer for the French government and she spent her childhood traveling between Algiers and France.

"It was not that far, you know," she said.

When Hsu was 3½ years old, she began formal piano study with her aunt, Sonia Chalou.

"I started with my aunt," recalled Hsu in heavily accented, truncated English. "She was first an opera singer and then she became a teacher of piano, and voice."

"In Europe you start very early, okay? It is not uncommon to start that young. In music, in art, in dance, everybody starts quite early. You have what we call 'little mice' in the French opera. The kids are 3, 4, 5, 6. In Russia, also, everybody starts training extremely early."

Hsu said that her earliest musical memory was of playing for American soldiers in Orleanville during World War II.

"I remember they gave me a dog," said Hsu. "A little dog called Speed. It was a white bulldog. When they left they gave me the dog for playing. They liked me, also."

Hsu practiced daily with her aunt, who was living with her family.

"I practiced for one hour a day from the age of seven to the age of 18. Ah my life I remember 7 to 8 p.m. with her all the time. And after that, without her. But I was trained to practice, 60 practices."

The French musician found she enjoyed the rigors of a disciplined piano practice schedule.

"Oh, I love it!" she said enthusiastically. "I was just telling my son how much I love practicing. I suppose I love the sound of it and the gymnastics of it and I just want it to be perfect. I remember loving to practice; I just adore practicing."

Her diligence as a youngster paid off. At 13, Hsu won a national Beethoven competition held in Paris. First.

"My aunt had a big studio. You see, after she had a prize was the right to give a major concert in Vichy, a career in opera; she had a big studio and she was teaching at our home. So, she always gave concerts to raise money for orphans, for refugees, you know, and all the kids would play. So we had a tremendous experience of performing. We played always for good causes and raised money for, you know, nursing homes and things like that. So I was really used to performing all the time.

"I never got nervous when I was young. I got nervous when I was older. Seventeen. Because I was not a kid anymore. You see what I mean? Before that I was a little prodigy, but after that I realized I was not a kid, so everybody treated me like an adult. Then it becomes tougher."

Hsu continued to study, and at her father's request received a baccalaureate in general education as well as piano.

"My dad decided that," said Hsu. "It was for culture. A baccalaureate in Europe is like two years of college. With that you can teach anything."

She went on to the Ecole Normale de Musique in Paris and entered international piano competitions. She won prizes in Italy in 1961, in Spain in 1962, and in Poland and Brazil in 1965.

In 1966, Hsu was given a grant by the French government to study at the prestigious Juilliard School in New York City. It was her first visit to the United States.

"It was hard to adjust. It was very tough to live in New York, very competitive and very tough. You have to live alone, you have to do a lot on your own, you have to be ready to defend yourself, I would say."

"But in the end it's better, because you become tougher. You become stronger. It helps you survive better. And you meet many great talents. You meet millions of other people who are very talented from all over the world, even more than anywhere else. From Japan, from Korea, from Russia, from all over the world, see, much more than anywhere else."

Hsu also began practicing 6 to 7 hours a day.

"Al Juilliard, everybody's crazy," she said.

Hsu received her bachelor's and master's degrees in piano performance, then accepted a position teaching piano, accompaniment, dual piano and piano literature at Boise State University.

"It was very exciting because we thought we were going to the Wild West. My older son was 10 and we thought we'd find cowboys and Indians," said Hsu, admitting they were mildly disappointed upon arrival.

In 1979, Hsu took a one-year sabbatical leave and went to Hungary to study the composer Bartok for a doctoral dissertation. She returned to Boise to teach and spent summers in Manhattan at New York University until 1984, when she received her doctorate in musicology.

Now, Hsu said, she lectures and gives workshops on technique and teaching in the American Northwest and in Canada "about four times a year. Accompanying her on most of those trips is her French, English- and German-speaking 11-year-old son, Olen."

"He plays the piano, yes," said Hsu. "He draws, he plays the piano and he's studying drama."

Another son, Jann, who holds master's degrees in English and German, is living in France and teaching part time.

In her spare time, Hsu said she swims, bicycles and tends to her two cats and a "big, huge, German shepherd dog."

"Oh Speed? We had to give him up. After many years, my brother trained him to be so mean we had to give him away," Hsu recalled.

There will be a charge of $5 per person for each workshop attended. Reservations can be made by calling 734-0719.

Cowboy poets will gather Jan. 29-31

By CATHERINE ARNOLD
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Cowboy poets Owen Barton of Twin Falls and Dave Chadwick of Hollister are two of the seven poets representing Idaho at the Cowboy Poetry Gathering in Elko, Nev.

Elko is a cowboy town on any day of the year. But on Jan. 29, 30 and 31, cowboy culture will pervade even the local fast food restaurants as more than 100 cowboy poets and musicians and several thousand spectators will be in town for the event held at the Elko Convention Center.

Poets have been chosen to represent 17 states at the gathering in sessions that are scheduled throughout the three-day event. They will interpret their own original work and traditional cowboy poetry. All participants must be involved in ranch or farm work as their main livelihood.

Friday and Saturday performances at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. will showcase professional humorists, musicians and poets. Masters of ceremonies will be Waddle Mitchell, "New" on Friday and Baxter Black, a humorist from Colorado, on Saturday. Mitchell and Black appeared together on The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson recently.

Elko motels report that limited space is available so people who plan to attend should make their reservations as soon as possible. The Elko Chamber of Commerce, at 702-738-7350, has information on room availability.

No tickets are necessary for daytime sessions. Advance tickets have sold out for evening performances but a limited number of tickets will go on sale at a cost of $6.50 for auditorium seating and $4 for convention room telecasting at 10 a.m. on Jan. 29 at the Elko Convention Center.

For more information, call the Elko Chamber of Commerce at the above number or the Western PolkLifeCenter at 702-738-7841.

Herrett to feature 13 works by Green

TWIN FALLS — Interest in color might seem to come naturally to an artist named Michael Green.

Green, an associate professor of art at the College of Southern Idaho, will be honored at an opening reception of an exhibit of his paintings Tuesday from 7 to 9:30 p.m. at the Herrett Museum Art Gallery. He will present a slide show of his art at 7:30 p.m.

Thirteen works completed this fall will be on display through Feb. 19. The paintings range from watercolors to acrylics and oil pastels.

Green's art is non-objective and focuses on the formal investigation of line, color, shape and gesture and how these elements influence each other in various arrangements. Color, used to create tension, is generally the most important element in his work.

Green has been teaching art at CSI since 1963. He has exhibited extensively won numerous awards. His work has been included at exhibitions at the Boise Gallery of Art, the Seattle Art Museum, The Salt Lake City Art Center, the Joslyn Art Museum and the Smithsonian Institution.

In 1981 he received the Idaho Arts Commission Individual Project Grant to produce a suite of handmade paper paintings at the Imago Paper Mill in Oakland, Calif.

The Herrett Museum is open from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday; 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Wednesday through Friday and 10 to 4:30 p.m. Saturday.

Dancer Ray Bolger dies of cancer at 83

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Ray Bolger, who as the brave but stumbling scarecrow helped lead Dorothy back home in the 1939 movie "Wizard of Oz," died Thursday of cancer. He was 83.

Bolger, the last survivor of the troupe that marched down the Yellow Brick Road, died at a Los Angeles nursing home, said family spokesman Barry Greenberg.

The lean, loose-limbed Bolger preferred to think of himself as a comedian, rather than a dancer, and his stage, screen and television career spanned six decades.

But he was best known for his role as the Scarecrow, and was the last survivor of the cheerful foursome Hamilton, who played the Wicked Witch, that braved the witch's wrath to

Magic Valley Regional Medical Center

Local talent Park City festival showcases variety show new U.S. independent films fund-raiser

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The U.S. Film Festival in Park City, Utah, which begins today, offers an array of films, seminars on moviemaking, and the artists and professionals who make movies happen. The real stars of the festival are American films.

The festival is presented by the Sundance Institute, established in 1980 by actor-director Robert Redford, to nurture new American artists in film and television. The event is held in cooperation with the Utah Film Development Office.

Participating in the program will be the CSI Jazz Band, directed by Larry Curtis; the Magichorns, men's barbershop chorus, led by Mike Fisher, and Alleen Weir's Shm Sham tapdancers.

Proceeds will be used for the hotline the association has sponsored for many years, says Jeanne Schlegel, president, and also for the emergency medical fund which under the direction of Dr. Richard Worst, helps provide medication for mentally ill individuals.

Tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for senior citizens and children. They are available at Judy's Bookstore from association members and participants and may be purchased at the door.

Patron and sponsor tickets also are available and all donations are tax deductible. For more information about tickets contact Lorayne Smith, 733-0931 days, or 733-3521 evenings.

A screenwriting seminar will be held on Sunday. Panelists include Tom Rickman who wrote "Coal Miner's Daughter"; William Wilkerson who wrote "The Black Stallion"; "Homey" Rose; and "Barbarosa"; and Frank Pierson, and the artists and professionals who make movies happen. "Dog Day Afternoon" and "A Star is Born."

Documentary features and Canadian films are the topics of seminars on Wednesday.

Financing independent films, film distribution and first-time directors are on the agenda for Thursday. The directors' panel includes Randa Haines, director of "Children of a Lesser God"; Wayne Wang, director of "Chan Is Missing"; and producer Sandra Schulberg, whose credits include "Wildrose."

The art of acting will be discussed next Friday by Tom Hulce, best known for his work in "Amadeus," and "Animal House." Co-panelists are Oscar-winning actress Linda Hunt, who starred in the "Year of Living Dangerously"; and producer "Silverado"; Sam Waterston, star of "The Killing Fields"; Armand Assante, star of "Private Benjamin"; and "Belizaire the Cajun," and Christine Lahti.

"Let's make a (mock) deal" is the title of another Friday seminar, about the birth of a profect. The final seminar is scheduled Saturday, Jan. 24, with national critics critiquing independent filmmakers. Panelists include Newswatch film critic David Ansen and Los Angeles Times film critic Sheila Benson.

And then, there are the films. Several other films — with name and no-name stars — will have premieres at the festival, including "The Big Easy," a cop-thriller starring Dennis Quaid; "Hoosiers," a tale of sports and life in a small town, with Gene Hackman; and "Beyond Therapy," a Robert Altman love story with a twist, starring Jeff Goldblum.

In the film competition are a score of films not readily seen on movie marques, but which may end up as cult classics or merely classics. Among those films entered in the dramatic division: "Impure Thoughts," "Welcome Mr. Fox," and "Sette the Day," starring Robin Williams.

In the documentary division: "Working Girls," about the women of a high-class brothel; "Are We Winning Mommy?," a history of America's Cold War; "Sherman's March," a comedic trip through the South; and "Ozawa," about the conductor of the Boston Symphony, Seiji Ozawa.

Canadian films receive part of the spotlight at the festival, with screenings to include "My American Cousin," now showing in theaters across the country.

Bolger

Watchman. His first performance was in an amateur show put on by the insurance company for which he worked. Before long, he was fired for dancing in the halls.

Bolger continued his dance studies in Salt Lake City. "Square Dance" is a film about a young girl's coming of maturity, starring Jason Robards and Rob Lowe.

For nine more days, there are more films and seminars, centered in Park City.

Pioneer Independent filmmaker Jim McBride will discuss his work at a seminar on Saturday.

He was hired as a comedian in my first show and I'm still a comedian. I became a dancer in self-defense. I was doing a comedy monologue and didn't know how else to get off, so I danced off. I've been dancing ever since, but I'm still a comedian."

But he acknowledged, "the public seems to want me to dance — and so I dance."

His comedy depended heavily on pantomime and his dancing was individual and personal. He was so lanky and disjointed that he seemed to be well over six feet tall, but he stood 5-foot, 10 1/2 inches. He worked so hard on stage that he often had to be cooled off and rubbed-down after a performance.

Bolger starred in the NBC-TV, music and comedy show, "Washington Square" in the late 1950s and traveled for months each year well past middle-age.

Bolger said in later years that he had no idea the movie would become a Hollywood classic.

"I knew that I was taking part in a strange kind of adventure," he said. "Everything had to be invented for the picture — the effects, the sound, and the Technicolor. It was all new. But the celebration and exhausting dance when the reviews came out, it was a terrific disappointment. The picture got terrible notices."

"It was only when 'The Wizard of Oz' came into the home with television that it redeemed itself. Then it was no longer a picture, it was an institution. After all, 'The Wizard of Oz' carries the message that there's no place like home."

Raymond Wallace Bolger was born Jan. 10, 1909, in Boston, and first became interested in dance when he discovered that his moves on the floor did not impress his date for the high school prom. He avidly attended the theater, and picked up pointers on tap from a bank night primarily a dancer.

After Broadway came Hollywood and roles in "The Great Ziegfeld," "Rosalie," "Sweethearts," "The Wizard of Oz," his favorite — and "Sunny." But Bolger found that he couldn't stretch his legs and his tal- Oz carries the message that there's no place like home.

During World War II, he helped organize USO tours of remote bases. Bolger insisted that he was not primarily a dancer.

Champs Elysees tapes tune in French culture

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — From the heartland of country music comes Champs Elysees, which offers a radio program produced by a disc jockey who shoves twangy country tunes and cor-pose banter for French music and stories.

Wes Green's company produces a French radio program on two cassettes a month. They are mailed to 3,500 subscribers around the country.

"Bonjour, c'est Champs Elysees," says French radio personality Georges Lang, an announcer for Radio Luxembourg, RTL, a top French-language station based in Luxembourg and heard in France and Belgium.

Lang began one tape with a synopsis of stories on the French in Lebanon, a Jacques Cousteau oceanic museum, a history hot line, a clinic for damaged paintings, a recipe for pigeon with fete gras and truffles, and French theater.

The tape is peppered with French pop tunes and is aimed at anyone who wants to hear a show in French. For the most part, the subscribers are French students and university professors.

"Language lab tapes are so boring for the most part," said Green, 32.

"One of the real problems with learning language here is that it is so terribly remote. There's nothing exciting about it. But foreign culture is interesting," he said in a recent interview.

A transcript and English glossary accompany the tape to guide the listener through idioms and historical and cultural references.

At the University of Chicago, Champs Elysees has been more than an exercise for students over the last two years, said Gerald Honigsbloom, director of French-language instruction.

"I go back and forth between here and Paris to run our education abroad program, and with the tape here I find myself quite up-to-date on the political and cultural scene," Honigsbloom said. "It has the compelling quality of a living document."

Champs Elysees tapes have been broadcast on the campus radio station, Honigsbloom said.

"The impression that many Americans have of France is people with Basque berets and baguettes under their arms," Green said.

Green, a former disc jockey at WSM and WLAC in Nashville, said the idea originated three years ago when a former company of his, Nashville Radio Workshop, was sending Grand Ole Opry broadcasts to RTL.

"I worked out a deal with Georges Lang," Green said. "I asked him if he'd be willing to do the programs."

Three hundred subscribers received the first tapes from the company, which is a family business with Green, his mother, Edna; and brother, Mark, as co-owners.

Dominique Laurent, a Vanderbilt doctoral student in French, writes the transcript and glossary with Vanderbilt French Professor Jean LeBlanc serving as editorial consultant. The format is similar to typical French-language radio newsmagazines, using background music from classical to New Wave to accentuate the broadcast's rapid-fire pace. On the tape, the French is spoken at a moderate pace.

In fact, Green has been told that Champs Elysees tapes are too modern.

"Some people say there are not enough accordeons," he said.

"We're starting German (this month)," said Green, who attended Aiglon College in Montreux, Switzerland, and graduated with a degree in German from Vanderbilt University.

A subscription costs $112 for 14 tapes and transcripts, sent from September to March, Green said.

Soviet panel to review works by Pasternak

MOSCOW (AP) — The Tass news agency announced that a commission has been formed to review the works of Boris Pasternak, and Radio Moscow made the first public reference to the late author as a winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature.

A leading cultural official also hinted Pasternak's banned book "Doctor Zhivago" may be released in the Soviet Union.

Tass gave few details of the new commission in its announcement Jan. 6. It attributed its report to the latest issue of the weekly newspaper Literaturnaya Gazeta, which is expected to be available in Moscow on Wednesday.

The commission was created by the Union of Soviet Writers and will be headed by poet Andrei Voznesensky, Tass reported.

Radio Moscow's late-night broadcasts said the commission would supervise the literary heritage of Boris Pasternak.

"Poet and prose writer, a winner of the Nobel prize, Pasternak died in Moscow in 1960," the broadcast said.

The state-run media's first reference to Pasternak's Nobel prize made no mention of "Doctor Zhivago," the work for which he won the prize in 1958.

In last week's issue of Literaturnaya Gazeta, Dmitri Likhachev, the head of a new Soviet cultural fund, said he recently had been asked to read "Doctor Zhivago" and write an article about it.

"Doctor Zhivago" was banned for its sympathetic portrayal of Russian opponents of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution that established Soviet power.

Pasternak was expelled from the writers union after the Nobel Award, which he was forced to reject. Soviet authorities made clear he would not be allowed to return home if he accepted it.

He died in disgrace in 1960, but slowly has won the acclaim from Soviet officials that he never lost among Soviet and foreign readers.

Although the novel never has been published in the Soviet Union, poems from the work were included in a two-volume collection of Pasternak's poetry issued last year.

Likhachev told Literaturnaya Gazeta that while reading "Doctor Zhivago" he recalled that "opinions about the novel in its time were expressed by our respected writers."

"But it occurred to me while reading the novel that much today is being perceived differently, and obviously, a new evaluation is needed as we have done with several other of our literary works," he said.

Over the past year, previously banned works by Vladimir Nabokov and Anatoly Rybakov have been reviewed and published for the first time here.

Stones roll onto CDs; Beatles due

By ROBERT HILBURN
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Rock 'n' roll bands may die, but they never fade away.

The big news in the compact disc world is that the Rolling Stones have finally arrived and the Beatles are on the way.

In separate marketing campaigns, Capitol Records and Columbia Records have released 27 Rolling Stones albums on CD in recent weeks. The 13 ABKCO packages range from the Stones' 1964 debut album through 1969's "Let It Beed," the final studio LP released in the United States by London Records. Columbia's 14 Stones albums begin with 1971's "Sticky Fingers" and include everything else the group has released on its own Rolling Stones Records label.

The first four Beatles albums will be released in separate CDs on Feb. 26, with the remaining studio LPs due — in chronological order — by the end of the year.

Bhaskar Menon, chairman and chief executive of EMI Music Worldwide, said the CDs would be based on the original British sound to standardize the packages worldwide.

Initially, the Beatles albums were released in England on the Parlophone label, but record companies around the world were then free to repackage the songs in any way they wished. Thus, the songs on the U.S. albums (released by Capitol) were frequently different from British collections.

The Beatles' first English album, "Please Please Me," contained the title track and 12 other songs, including "I Should Have Known That," "Love Me Do," "Do You Want to Know a Secret?" and "Twist and Shout."

Next came "With the Beatles," with a lineup that included "All My Loving," "Please Mr. Postman," "Roll Over Beethoven," "You Really Got a Hold on Me," "I Want to Be Your Man" and "Devil in Her Heart."

It was followed by the "Hard Day's Night" sound-track album and "Beatles for Sale," whose tracks ranged from "I'm a Loser" and "Baby's in Black" to "I'll Follow the Sun" and "Eight Days a Week."

In addition to the Beatles packages, EMI is releasing CDs by more than a dozen other artists over the next three months, including the "Band," Neil Young, Peter Dinklage, Pink Floyd, Kenny Rogers, Bob Seger and Frank Sinatra.

But the Stones and, especially, the Beatles albums are expected to add most to the CD sales explosion. Klein and Andon said their initial shipment of both titles was 250,000 and 300,000 units with orders expected to double or even triple during the year.

"When you're talking Rolling Stones (and Beatles), you're talking about the ideal album for the CD market," Andon said. "We're talking someone 25 to 35 years old with high income and well-educated. The demographics match up perfectly."

Klein and Andon said their initial shipment of both titles was 250,000 and 300,000 units with orders expected to double or even triple during the year.

"When you're talking Rolling Stones (and Beatles), you're talking about the ideal album for the CD market," Andon said. "We're talking someone 25 to 35 years old with high income and well-educated. The demographics match up perfectly."

So how do the Stones sound on CD?

Terrific. In many ways, it is like listening to some of these albums for the first time. Even if you grew up with these LPs, they have probably sat on the shelf for years. So, the CD arrival is an invitation to listen to them again, and the sound quality gives them a new dimension, especially in the earlier releases.

There is little trace of the sterile sound that sometimes weakens CD versions of hard-rock records. The early '70s albums such as "Exile on Main Street" also benefit from the CD process, though the differences in sound become less apparent as you move into the late '70s. It has been so long since the Rolling Stones lived up to the "World's Greatest Rock Band" title that it is easy to forget the claim was ever valid. But spend time with some of the new CDs and you understand why the group once represented the height of excellence in rock. The challenge is picking the right albums.

In his book "The Rolling Stones: An Illustrated Record," enthusiastic British pop critic Roy Carr calls the Stones' first album ("The Rolling Stones") the best rock debut ever, and the 1964 album does have a raw, gritty punch that makes it a quintessential example of the "garage band" spirit in rock. But it lacks the individuality of vision of such other, more convincing debuts. Among them: the Band's "Music From Big Pink" and the Sex Pistols' "Never Mind the Bollocks."

"The Rolling Stones Now!" (1965) shows the Stones moving toward that vision. One senses Mick Jagger gaining confidence as a singer and you hear the guitar work moving beyond the early Bo Diddley-Chuck Berry influences to the contemporary blues style that the Stones eventually developed.

Most of the Stones hits from the '60s are collected in "Hot Rocks" (a two-disc set that runs 81 minutes), but "Beggars Banquet" (1968) is another essential step in the Stones' growth. The LP, much of it acoustic, showcased a growing artistic ambition that combined the Stones' own blues-rock instincts with a trace of Dylan-influenced social conscience.

"Let It Beed" (1969) and "Sticky Fingers" (1971) are fascinating because they reflect the band's twin goals of living up to its bad-boys-of-rock image and yet pushing forward artistically. The most striking example is the contrast on "Sticky Fingers" between the commercial calculation of "Brown Sugar" and the disarming poignancy of "Wild Horses."

"Exile on Main Street" (1972) was the Stones' greatest album; a work that both celebrates the rock 'n' roll lifestyle and reflects with unexpected candor and power the weary, disillusioned nature of the excesses surrounding that lifestyle. Except in occasional tracks, the Stones have not regained that excellence on record since "Exile" but "Sticky Fingers" (1978) deserves to be part of the basic Stones collection because the band has so much fun mocking its own image.

Together, these albums show that the Stones were more than simply an outrageous attitude and masters of media manipulation. They were also, for a spell, the world's greatest rock band.

The other winners included singer and actress Dolly Parton; Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md.; Sister Darlene Niegorski, who gave sanctuary to refugees in Guatemala and El Salvador; Ann Bancroft, the first woman to go

Movie power sweeps Latin America

NEW YORK (AP) — The Latin American movie industry marked a worldwide resurgence in 1986 with a record number of prizes in international festivals, including the coveted Academy Award for best foreign film.

Those in the industry attribute the rapid growth to a relaxation of censorship, and government support through subsidies and low-interest loans.

Four Latin American films — from Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Peru — are competing for the 1986 best foreign film Oscar.

Argentina's movie industry experienced its most spectacular increase in 1986, with 37 productions finished during the year and 11 still in production. Only 19 were shot in 1983.

Argentine movies, once a powerful rival of U.S. and European productions in the Latin American market, had been reduced in recent years to a fringe played by stiff censorship and lack of promotional support.

"The Official Story," a harrowing film on the plight of those people missing in Argentina's political violence of the 1970s, won the 1985 Best Foreign Film Oscar. The movie, by Luis Puenzo, starred Norma Aleandro, who shared the Cannes film festival best actress prize with Cher.

Similarly, Brazil increased its production in 1986 and turned out slightly more than 100

Brazilian movies won a record 22 international prizes during the year, including the 1985 best actor award for William Hurt, co-star of "Witness," a Brazilian film.

An American production directed by Argentine Hector Babenco.

Brazil and Argentina swept most of the prizes at the Huelva, Spain, Agrigento, Italy, and Belgrade film festivals, among others.

Argentine filmmaker Carlos Sorin, a newcomer in the international film market, won a "Silver Lion" at the Venice International Film Festival for his "The King's Movie," while Brazilian director Suzana Amaral got the "Golden Bear" at the Berlin Film Festival for her production "The Hour of the Star," a candidate for the 1986 Foreign Film Oscar.

"Tangos: The Exile of Gardel," an Argentine-French production directed by Fernando Solanas, already had won several prizes before being submitted, by Argentina for the 1986 Academy Awards.

Venezuela and Peru, which have a comparatively less-developed film industry, also won international prizes and contributed to the new Latin movie image.

Venezuelan director Olgario Barrera's "Pequena Revancha" ("The Little Revenge") won awards at the Berlin, San Sebastian, Frankfurt and Havana film festivals.

Peru, with an output of eight movies, has nominated "The City and the Dogs," by Francisco J. Lombardi, for the 1986 Foreign Film Oscar. It also won in Biarritz and is based on a novel by Peruvian novelist Mario Vargas Llosa.

Colombia's "Visa USA," by Lisandro Duque, won at the Cartagena film festival, while compatriot Jorge All Triana's "A Time to Die," a winner in the Rio de Janeiro festival, has been nominated for the 1986 Oscar.

Although the Mexican government cut film-industry budget allocations, 56 local movies were produced. Another 10 foreign productions, mostly American, were shot on location or at the newly refurbished Churubusco Studios.

The Mexicans have nominated "El Imperio de la Fortuna" ("The Realm of Fortune"), by Arturo Ripstein, for the 1986 Foreign Film Oscar.

In contrast, Central America produced very little, except for some Nicaraguan documentaries, mainly due to the area's political instability.

Movie critics and filmmakers in Latin America attributed the overall resurgence, in part, to the support some democratic governments in the area have provided.

They're lowering their sights at Cannon Films

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — On paper, December looked good for Cannon Films.

Chairman Menahem Golan had finished the biggest creative assignment of his career, directing Sylvester Stallone in the $20 million "Over the Top." At the same time, Cannon also was making the $25 million "Superman IV."

After eight years in Hollywood making movies like "The Last American Virgin" and "Revenge of the Ninja," Golan, 57, and cousin Yoram Globus, 42, seemed to have finally shed their reputations as schlockmeisters and were penetrating Hollywood's thick walls of respectability.

As it turned out, though, December was a long-running nightmare. On the first of the month the second installment of the 1986 $275 million buyout of British entertainment conglomerate EMI was due and Cannon, a studio that last year produced some 40 movies, simply did not have the money.

Suddenly, Hollywood's Go-Go Boys (Newsweek) were stalled out. There was talk in the industry that Cannon was a house of cards about to fold. "We slept very little that month," says Golan, dressed in a nylon "Over the Top" jacket and leaning back in an overstuffed leather desk chair at his office, which has a view of the Hollywood sign. "There is no denying we went through a crisis in the last two months of the year."

Some observers wonder if the crisis has ended yet. Last week Cannon announced that some 30 staffers had been let go (one fired staffer insisted the total was closer to 60) and that they would slash production plans in 1987 from an original slate of 30 to 40 pictures down to only 15. A number of pictures set to start in January have not yet begun production, and the normally bustling hallways of the company's office here were unusually quiet this week. "We are taking a step back," says the ever-uptight Golan, "but we will be here forever. This company will heal its wounds."

The trouble was initiated by two dangerous forces. First, Wall Street lost confidence in the company, at least partially because of an ongoing Securities and Exchange Commission investigation into Cannon's accounting practices.

Second, despite more attempts than any of its competitors, Cannon was sorely lacking a box-office hit. Hence, financing for the EMI deal that had been promised orally, says Golan, suddenly dried up, leaving the company woefully short of cash.

Cannon found a white-knight in Warner Bros., the studio that is distributing "Over the Top" (it opens Feb. 12), in exchange for a $75 million cash injection, Warner Bros. received the domestic video rights to 21 Cannon movies (some of which have not yet been released) and a share of the company's exhibition business (Cannon owns theaters in Great Britain, Italy and the Netherlands).

The question now is: Is the Warner Bros. funding merely a palliative that will tide Cannon over until the final EMI payment is due, or can Cannon return to profitability and win back the respect of the movie community.

"If we were Standard and Poor's, we'd say they are on a credit watch," says one powerful agent who insisted on anonymity.

"At this time the town has a wait-and-see attitude and no one is doing a lot of business with them."

For Cannon, this marks a down cycle in what has been a roller-coaster ride of highs and lows.

Golan and Globus came to America in 1979 from their home town of Tiberias, Israel, with a small bankroll (about $500,000) and no connections. They began by churning out inexpensive exploitation fare that earned them monikers like "the Golan Depths" and "Hollywood's Rug Merchants."

But their strategy of pre-selling ancillary rights (video and foreign distribution) while keeping budgets to under $5 million paid off handsomely. With the advent of the video revolution, there was an enormous demand for product and Cannon found its smaller films could go into profit before they had even opened in the United States.

In recent years, the company has moved up a notch in quality, making deals with first-class directors like Jean-Luc Godard (an updated "King Lear") and Franco Zeffirelli ("Otello") and wooing big-name actors like Al Pacino and John Travolta.

'Window': True shades of Hitchcock

By MICHAEL HEALY
The Denver Post

"The Bedroom Window" is a slick mystery thriller very much in the manner of Alfred Hitchcock. Often, these words have been attached to witless, mechanically plotted movies, a series of cinematic "in" jokes, that do nothing more than make one miss the real Hitchcock all the more?

The news is that "Bedroom Window" is a very engaging and heartfelt imitation of the master that takes on a life of its own, no matter how deep its debt to Hitchcock.

Director-screenwriter Curtis Hanson has a good story to tell and one that he tells it well. He and his two solid anchors firmly in place, freely indulges his stylistic playfulness. The result is a very pleasing movie.

Terry Lambert (Steve Guttenberg) does not immediately catch our sympathies. We first see him beginning an affair with the elegant Sylvia Wentworth (Isabelle Huppert), who is Terry's boss's wife. They jump into bed precipitously. Terry grinning like an idiot, Sylvia icily assured of what she was doing. Their sport is interrupted early in the morning when Sylvia goes to the Terry and sees the murderer has been murdered in the street. She gets the window open, screams and a man runs off. Neighbors come to help the victim, and Terry comes out of the bathroom to ask what all the fuss is about. Just life in the big city, they agree.

Terry changes his mind the next day when he reads in the paper that another young woman was raped and murdered not far from his apartment soon after Sylvia witnessed the assault. He worries that it might be the same man and suggests during their next tryst that Sylvia call the police. She won't. She can't. If her husband finds out where she was the night before — well he better not.

We have already seen that husband, Colin (Paul Shenar), to be a suspicious and potentially dangerous guy. Writer Hanson skillfully plugs up all the escape routes that Sylvia and Terry might have had from their predicament, but Terry, the cocky yuppie that he is, does not know how thoroughly trapped he is.

So he calls the police himself, claiming he saw the assault. He conveys the information he got from Sylvia to the police, getting them both out of the moral hook, he supposes, simple as pie.

But the police begin to suspect Terry. They suspect the murders. The land web becomes more and more thickly knotted and it ends up around Terry Lambert's throat.

The nice thing about this story, which is a clever variation on Hitchcock's patented "wrong man" plot, is that the audience's sympathy is split between rooting for the not-so-lovable Terry and hoping the truth will out. It is possible to take pleasure both in Terry's prevaricating cleverness and also in the way that cleverness is never enough to get his problem solved.

Steve Guttenberg is remarkably effective as Terry, and actually gives an understated, restrained performance for a change. His handsome blankness is just perfect for the role, and though Guttenberg says he can't be coming near a genuine emotion, he is not often called upon to make such an approach here.

The film has some of the inevitable flaws of this kind of story. Sometimes the rules of the game get just a bit too complex, and we wonder why Terry cannot take a more direct route to the truth. Hanson has tied up all the loose ends of the plot, but some of the explanations are too intricate to be convincing. Some of the flashbacks in the film are a bit awkward and do the damage that flashbacks usually do: stop the story's momentum. And Terry's conversion to a set of more solid values and to a more wholesome girlfriend, is a little pat.

But these small faults are more than compensated for by the film's many virtues, including its distinctive visual style. Hanson sets the story in Baltimore, usually at night, usually in the rain, and makes, the most of that city's hitherto virtually unseen locations.

If Hanson's treatment of the city recalls Hitchcock's San Francisco setting for "Vertigo" among other of his films, that is all to the good. "The Bedroom Window" is the kind of good film that makes one think fondly of Hitchcock's canon. Comparisons need not always be odious.

Zeffirelli triumphs with 'Otello'

By MICHAEL HEALY
The Denver Post

"Otello" is Franco Zeffirelli's lavish film of Verdi's 1887 opera, based on Shakespeare's tragedy, of the Moor of Venice.

This is movie making on an epic scale. Zeffirelli has no fear of the titanic passions at the opera's heart, which are so much larger than life that they might seem too big to be contained within the intimacy of the movie screen. Instead of attempting to understate, Zeffirelli builds the rest of the production to match the emotional grandeur of the piece.

The light in all interior scenes is preternaturally golden, and sculpts the faces of the principals in the manner of Rembrandt. The massive stone buildings in which the action is set are filled with huge open rotundas and the rooms filled with thousands of shifting weapons of war and oversized furnishings. The film is crowded with extras in the public scenes and it teems with life.

The richness of this view of the world in 15th-century Cyprus puts the struggles of Otello, Iago and Desdemona — into — a believable perspective.

All this spectacle is a pleasure to watch, in and of itself, of course. And the musical performances, by Placido Domingo (Otello), Katia Ricciarelli (Desdemona) and Justino Diaz (Iago) are all first-rate. Domingo also acts his role superbly well, changing from impeccable hero to tortured murderer with great skill and grace. Domingo's passionate creation of this character is a great achievement, and marks the first time the singer's genius has been captured fully on film.

Among the memorable moments in the film, and there are many, are Diaz's chilling rendition of Iago's evil creed, sung in the great emptiness of a medieval chapel. Diaz's iago is no cackling melodramatic villain, but rather a great, cold-hearted schemer — carrying out his campaign of destruction with logic, diligence, and a deep understanding of human weakness. The precision with which Iago destroys makes his claim that he should have been a more honied military leader, perhaps Otello's successor, all the more plausible.

Zeffirelli's grand scheme for "Otello" only falls short toward the end, which could have been unbearably touching, but is not.

Desdemona's murder is the most intimate act in the drama, a private, domestic tragedy, no matter its public cause. The director cannot quite narrow the focus of the spectacle enough to capture fully the sadness of the scene, and it remains strangely unmoving.

What's what

Poetry of trademark

Henry Heinz took "57 varieties" as his trademark for no other reason than that he liked the sound of "57". George Eastman took "Kodak" as his trademark for no other reason than that he (liked) the sound of "Kodak." Each was sensitive - as a poet is sensitive - to the syllables. Neither committees nor computers have that sensitivity. They can understand "for" - for example, why "Unisys" is not as good as "Kodak" or "57 Varieties."

once they're full, you can't move them.

DIETER
I can understand how a snake might go all year without food. What I can't understand is why it doesn't lose weight. It doesn't. Maybe a dieter can understand.

NO SNORING
Remember, traveler: No snoring in Coral Gables. It's against the law there.

That African tribe called the Tuareg migrates every year to find fresh pasture. In 1983, there was a particularly severe drought. But the tribespeople delayed their migration for 10 days, anyway. In order to see the season's last episode of "Dallas."

Recall when the big earthquake tore up Mexico City? Some dog owners were killed, some displaced. Anyhow, about 10,000 dogs were abandoned there that day.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): A letter or phone call could cause you to worry, but know that the matter can soon be rectified.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Today is not ideal for handling financial matters. You get good ideas from partners, so listen carefully.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Don't try to push your talents on someone. Before you handle a business matter, consider your family.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Use tact in handling a difficult affair at home. Show your friends and kin that you truly care.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): A friend wants to think over a plan of action before going through with it, so wait it out patiently.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Avoid a bigwig who doesn't want to be bothered. You may find it difficult to start new tasks.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Be sure to plan how best to gain new aims. Don't run off on any tangents and things go smoothly.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Study a bill well before you pay it and make sure it's correct. Be careful with your expenditures.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Do whatever will bring greater understanding with an older partner. Be careful in conversations with others.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Don't let a thoughtless remark from a co-worker disturb you. Later you come to a better understanding.

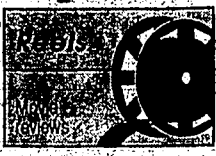

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will have very expansive ideas for the future, so be sure to give as fine an education as money can buy. Praise when exceptional work is accomplished is wise, for this will raise the incentive and insure success. Your progeny will be concerned with humanity.

'Horrors' explodes with loony humor

TWIN FALLS — Following are capsule reviews of movies currently playing in the Magic Valley. Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association of America and the Los Angeles Times. Opinions are by Los Angeles Times reviewers.

THE LITTLE SHOP OF HORRORS (PG-13). This remake of the 1960 Roger Corman Z-horror classic (about Audrey, the man-eating plant) taken from the "loose" script by Alan Menken-Howard (man stage musical, connects with its audience in a big way; it is a loony, loopy, ex-plicitly funny movie. Director Frank Oz handles his cast — especially bruised romantic Ellen Greene, bristling dentist Steve Martin and masochistic patient Bill Murray — with a Muppeteer's skill. And, as the insatiably voracious Audrey II, voiceman Lev Stubbs (of the Four Tops) and 40 animatronics handlers all but belt the house down. The evil little table has a tacked-on happy ending, but there is a dark wink at the end, anyway. It is a rousing show.

CROCODILE DUNDEE (PG-13). The sunny, reassuring personality of Paul Hogan (the fellow who says "G'day" in the Australian tourism ads) is at the heart of this movie, which he designed and co-wrote for himself. It is more than enough to carry it: a "fish out of water" story, with Hogan as an adventurer-hunter-Dundee, wooing Linda Kozlowski's inquisitive Newsday reporter in the Aussie outback, and then in the wilds of Manhattan itself. "Dundee" is really nothing more than a pleasant, amiable, good-natured crowd-pleaser, but it's hard to think of many crowds it could not somehow please.

THE GOLDEN CHILD (PG-13). High in the wind-tossed mountains of Tibet sits the Golden Child — whom many believe is the true, perfect soul humanity has long awaited — surrounded by Evil Forces: heinous killers, slaving brutes, vile demons surging up from the bowels of Hell. Will he survive? Oh, sure. And deep in your own local movie house lies "The Golden Child," which many believed would be the great new Eddie Murphy comedy we have long awaited. It is beset by even more Evil Forces: heinous scripting, slaving special effects, vile clichés surging up from the bowels of Hollywood. Can it survive? Nope.

McGovern regrets starting with movies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Elizabeth McGovern says her only regret so far in her short career is that she did movies first and theater second.

When she was only 18, Miss McGovern starred in Robert Redford's "Ordinary People" as a troubled young girl. A year later, she was an intriguing socialite in Milos Forman's "Ragtime." That was followed by "Lovesick" and "Racing With the Moon."

"Theater is my first love," she said in a recent interview. "If I do have any regrets, it's that I didn't begin doing theater until after I'd been in 'Ordinary People' and 'Ragtime.' Because if I had to make my first gross mistakes on stage with the spotlight on me."

Miss McGovern, 25, moved from Los Angeles to New York several years ago to pursue theater, and has received good reviews in "A Map of the World," "Painting Churches" and "My Sister in This House."

HEARTBREAK RIDGE (R). The material here is thin, thin, thin — has the notion of a not-ready-for-prime-time combat pilot (played by Leonard Nimoy) and a not-ready-for-prime-time actress (played by Jane Fonda) traveling backward in time to a primitive era (our own) to rescue two humped whales and thereby save Earth. There has been a conscious effort to lighten things up after the "sturm und drang" of the first three movies. "Star Trek" and "Star Trek II" were certainly the best loved of the four: full of the old crackling Enterprise crew badinage and a lot more besides. Even audience members with a terminal Spock block should be amused.

THREE AMIGOS (PG). There is hardly a moment here that is not silly — make that incredibly, outrageously and breathtakingly silly. Maybe that is why this tale of a trio of inept silent-movie stars (Chevy Chase, Steve Martin, Martin Short) turned real-life heroes is such a goodly delight. It is like a cross between a big-budget Three Stooges movie and a Hope-Crosby road picture, with dozens of old cowpoke gags thrown in to spice up the brew. Nothing is real, not even the post-er-board sunsets. And it is this giddy silliness that gives this Western charade a delightfully fresh spin.

'Golden Child' mines box office bucks

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Paramount's biggest "studio" movie, "Golden Child," sprouted a patch to fourth with a $3.1 million ticket take in only 653 theaters for the field's biggest per-screen average of $3,564.

Jane Fonda's murder mystery "The Morning After" attracted $2.4 million for fifth place. Tough-guy Charles Bronson, teamed with wife Jill Ireland for the Cannon adventure movie "Assassination," earned $2.8 million to take sixth.

"Three Amigos" was seventh with audiences shelling out $2.3 million to see the Old West fancy starring Steve Martin, Chevy Chase and Martin Short.

Rounding out the Top 10 were vacation holdovers "Heartbreak Ridge," "Lady And The Tramp," and "Crimes of the Heart."

Life's search for spiritual answers to 'Out on a Limb' star MacLaine

By ANDREW J. EDELSTEIN

Shirley MacLaine, that mistress of metaphysical films, claims that in a past life she was a 17-year-old Scottish woman, victimized by a wicked man, and who did not survive. The 40-year-old actress has gone through enough changes in her lifetime to qualify her as a genuine "karma chameleon." In the late '50s, she was the "perky mascot" of Hollywood's Rat Pack. During the turbulent '60s, she gained fame as one of the first actors to take an active stand against the Vietnam War. In the '70s, she led the first woman's delegation to China. And in the '80s, she turned her interests toward the spiritual, writing extensively about her out-of-body experiences and her past lives.

It seems no matter what her incarnation, Warren Beatty's big sister has generated controversy. The MacLaine saga gets its latest boost this week when ABC airs "Out on a Limb," the miniseries based on the bestseller of the same name (7 p.m. Sunday, 8 p.m. Monday, KTVB).

SHIRLEY MacLAINE
Multi-dimensional actress

MacLaine co-wrote (with Colin Higgins, screenwriter of "Harold and Maude" and "9 to 5") and stars in this chronicle of her spiritual quest. It includes her beliefs in reincarnation, out-of-body experiences and the existence of extraterrestrials.

"It's a love story and an emotional story about finding one's spiritual self—the story of a very practical, down-to-earth woman who finds herself experiencing things that heretofore she would have called fantasy," says MacLaine.

She says she had no difficulty playing herself—because, "I really want to be real. I feel some real explanation that only sounds plausible when spoken by someone who has spent a majority of her adult life in Southern California."

"The adventure of playing myself came from the feeling that we were portraying something that was happening to another person," she says, "also I now understand that I'm only 'playing' the script. I've created for my own life, anyway."

"Writing for the screen really put me in touch with the profound truth that all of life is an illusion, anyway. We're all playing parts and hopefully doing the best we can."

"The character that I play lived 10 years ago," she asserts. "She was a substantially different person from Shirley MacLaine today. If I played her now, it would be different and I would probably speak of her as 'she.'"

Fonda used tragic story for role

BY ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN

Q. As a recovered alcoholic, I was tremendously impressed with the accuracy of Jane Fonda's performance as the boozing actress, Alex, in the suspense thriller "The Morning After." Did Jane draw on any inspiration for this movie role? — D.S.

A. Fonda, who's never before portrayed a heavy drinker, drew on observation and extensive research for this demanding role. Plus, she watched all the films of Gail Russell, gifted young actress popular during the 1940s and '50s whose rise to Hollywood stardom was sabotaged by her private torment of alcoholism. The screenplay's author, James Hicks, was so touched by the real-life tragedy of Russell's life (abandoned at the age of 37) he created the character of Alex. In "The Morning After" partially in her image, Fonda plays Jane Fonda for the role.

Q. I think it tacky of Bruce Willis to exploit his "Moonlighting" TV show by coming out with a singing album. Is he really all that musical? — K.O.

A. Can't you tell? Seriously folks, Bruce can sing reasonably well. He also plays a mean harmonica. I saw him mix both with comedy recently during the Hollywood taping of his upcoming cable TV show. It's called a "mockumentary" and shows Bruce warbling such tunes as "Respect Yourself." Bruce's record album will be in your local stores shortly, and then you'll get a chance to see if his vocal abilities command your respect. And let's not forget that "Miami Vice's" Don Johnson is into the same bit — he's got an album out too.

Q. Has Sidney Poitier given up acting in movies altogether because he's fed up with the racism in Hollywood? — I.P.

A. Poitier, who broke the color barrier by becoming a big star some 30 years ago, remains high on acting. Sidney, who'll be 62 this year, tells me that acting and directing movies at the same time is just too exhausting. Poitier should know because he's done both five times. Now he's decided to "only" act — with a vengeance. Poitier is set to make as many as four pictures this year. "It's about time I got out of the house," Sidney told me, referring to his recent period of inactivity as an actor.

Q. I was amazed to see Jane Russell on TV recently trying out as a singer. Is she serious about making a comeback that way? — M.R.

A. Jane has no serious plans to make a comeback as a performer, certainly not as a singer. She turned 65 last year, after all, and she's into other creative things outside Hollywood's always youth-obsessed arena. Her TV appearance was her way of promoting a new line of fashions for the larger-sized woman — Jane always sported a mature figure.

Q. Was Kim Novak really paid over a million dollars to do those episodes on TV's "Falcon Crest"? Is she worth that kind of money? — D.O.

A. That figure is somewhat exaggerated. Kim received $30,000 for each of the 13 episodes she did for the series.

Q. A TV segment on famed Hollywood producer Samuel Goldwyn cryptically referred to the fact that he had two widely divergent public images going for him simultaneously. Sounds intriguing. Specifically, what were they? — F.W.

A. The late Goldwyn's PR men fostered the impression that he was a "canny," articulate producer whose hallmark was quality fare and consummate taste as reflected in such memorable films as "The Little Foxes" and "The Best Years of Our Lives." All well and good, but his publicity staff, working overtime, also established a second Goldwyn image — that of the slightly offish mangler of words, whose malapropisms included such timelessly quotable "Include me out" and "In two words, it's impossible." The movie-going public of the Goldwyn era was rather naïve, and seldom questioned the apparent discrepancy between the two images.

BRUCE WILLIS
Musical

Q. Is it true (as noted in some Southern newspapers) that Diane Keaton, Jessica Lange and Sissy Spacek, who play a trio of slightly bawdy sisters in the new movie "Crimes of the Heart," each demanded her own elaborate trailer dressing room during filming? — P.K.

A. These temperamental accounts began circulating at the start of location filming in Southport, N.C., probably due to the announcement that such were the original dressing room logistics. However, it was soon determined to forgo the typical "star's camper," which only serves to isolate the performer. Rather, producer Freddie Fields came up with the brainstorm of renting an existing, sprawling four-bedroom house right beside the main set. This home was re-designed with separate dressing rooms for each of the stars. Rooms for hair, makeup and wardrobe were also created for the shooting. "This house helped bring us and our kids together and we truly began behaving like real-life sisters," says Sissy.

Q. On a recent TV interview, Scott

SIDNEY POITIER
Striving to stay busy

Valentine, the handsome young television actor who portrays neighbor Nick Moore on "Family Ties," discussed his future projects, but made no mention of Michael J. Fox, who stars on "Family Ties." What's Valentine's opinion of Fox? — L.R.

A. We shot your question to Scott Valentine, who grinned, "He's a cute little fellow, but you have to be careful not to step on him!" Expanding on this unexpected remark, Scott explained that Michael (whom he greatly respects) is the first one to kid about his diminutive height, so no malice is intended. "Actually, it's inspiring to be around someone like Michael, who's largely self-taught in so many areas. He's extremely alert, bright, and most cooperative to work with, and he has his hand in many ples — just as I have. Performing with him has proven to be a terrific experience for me."

STRIKE OUT: A famous Hollywood heartthrob showed up at a Beverly Hills restaurant with three gorgeous females in tow; however, his natural roving eye didn't stop him from noticing a beautiful young actress across the room. When she rose to visit the ladies' room, our Don Juan excused himself from his table to wait eagerly outside for the young actress to emerge. When she did, he asked for a date, and she politely but firmly turned him down. Gately, he returned to his trio of dates and swallowed his pride along with his cocktail.

Versatile Herrera heads home to shoot play adaption for PBS

By SOHN N. GOLIDAS

Anthony Herrera found out that if you want to go home again, it's best to go as the director of a TV movie that is shooting in and around your hometown. The actor-writer-director returned to Wiggins, Miss., where it all began for him, to shoot an American Playhouse presentation adapted from Pulitzer Prize-winning author Eudora Welty's short story, "The Wide Net."

Anthony also had a homecoming of sorts when he returned to the role of archvillain James Stenbeck in "As the World Turns" in November of last year. As fans of the soap will recall, Stenbeck first exploded on the Oakdale scene early in 1980, wreaked havoc on just about everyone that crossed his crooked path and was killed off (or so the citizens of Oakdale thought) in 1983.

At that time, the actor decided to do something he wanted to do for a very long time: He made a film... a documentary titled "Mississippi Delta Blues" which ended up winning a bunch of prizes, including the CINE Golden Eagle Award. When he decided to do the documentary, he thought it would take him just a short time and cost somewhere in the vicinity of $20,000. Herrera now refers to "Mississippi Delta Blues" as his $50,000 resume.

In order to continue making a living (prize-winning documentaries don't make money), Anthony joined the cast of "Loving" for a time. However, his burning desire to do another film won out. He met a producer who knew about "Mississippi Delta Blues" and they discussed the Farm struggle basis for drama

A two-hour drama on CBS focuses on the bitter struggle between rival teams of wheat harvesters as they work their ways across the Midwest.

"American Harvest, a made-for-TV movie, airs 8 p.m. tonight in the Magic Valley on KMYT, KBCI and KSL.

The special tracks two "custom combine" operators locked in a family feud and an economic battle ranging across the Wheat Belt.

Wayne Rogers stars as Walter Duncan, a father who returns to previous work as a harvester for hire after being wiped out by harsh Kansas weather. He heads a crew of mostly inexperienced young men working with worn, second-hand farm machinery.

Meanwhile, his brother-in-law Krab Hogan — to whom Duncan turned over his original harvesting business — is determined to prevent him from winning back old customers. Earl Holliman plays Krab Hogan.

Heavily in debt, Duncan must steer his harvesting machinery and crew through Nebraska, South Dakota and Montana to the Canadian border before he or the workers will be paid in full.

Marielore Costello stars as Duncan's loyal wife, Mary Alice, and Frederic Lenhe is his son Roger. Jay Kerr is T-Bone Conlin, Hogan's righthand man.

"American Harvest" was filmed on location in Alberta, Canada.

Nielsen ratings

CBS ratings champ for 2nd week

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS wore down NBC with a pair of successful movies early in the week, then got a boost from football on Sunday to win the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings for the second straight week.

The keys to CBS' win were "At Mother's Request," the two-part movie which concluded on Tuesday night, and "Footloose," which aired Monday, said Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects.

The New York Giants-Washington Redskins football playoff game also helped CBS on Sunday night, when the network is traditionally strong anyway. The post-game show spilled over into prime-time and became the fifth-highest rated show of the week.

CBS won the week of Jan. 5-11 with an average rating of 18.3; followed by NBC at 17.6 and ABC at 14.0. For the 16 weeks of the season, NBC's average rating is 17.9, followed by CBS at 16.0 and ABC at 14.1.

NBC had the top three shows, "The Cosby Show," "Family Ties" and "Cheers," followed by CBS' "60 Minutes," a tie between NBC's "Golden Girls" and CBS' NFL postgame show for fifth place, NBC's "Night Court," ABC's "Growing Pains," CBS' "Murder, She Wrote," and two shows tied for 10th place, NBC's movie "Mercy or Murder" and ABC's "Who's the Boss?"

NBC News produced the week's lowest-rated program, the documentary "The Arms, Men & Money" on Tuesday night, and the highest-rated nightly news program, "NBC-Nightly News" had a 13.2

rating and 22 share; followed by the "CBS Evening News" at 12.9 and a 22 share and ABC's "World News Tonight" with an 11.3 rating and a 19 share.

Each rating point represents 874,000 homes with television; the share is the portion of sets-in-use during a time period.

"Mercy or Murder," starring Robert Young as an elderly man who kills his wife, was the week's highest-rated movie, average 23.9

Protests work

By JOHN CARMODY
The Washington Post

After receiving "thousands of letters" protesting the show's removal from the schedule after 11 episodes, CBS is bringing back "Designing Women" for 10 more weeks as the network revises its Sunday night schedule by replacing the current Sunday night movie.

On Feb. 1, "Designing Women" will return with a one-hour special at 9 p.m. The same evening CBS introduces a "new regular" one-hour drama series called "Hard Copy" in its regular 10 p.m. time slot.

Network seeking more creativity

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC will have new shows next fall from the makers of "L.A. Law" and "Buffalo Bill." ABC Entertainment President Brandon Stoddard said Friday.

Stoddard told a news conference that directors Mike Nichols and Barry Levinson and actor Alan Arkin also will do projects for ABC, which he said is trying to "become a place that attracts creative people."

Stoddard said the team of actor Dabney Coleman and producer-writer Jay Tarses from the critically praised but ultimately unsuccessful sitcom "Buffalo Bill" will do a new comedy for ABC next fall.

Steven Bochco and Terry Louise Fisher, the producers of NBC's "L.A. Law," have written three scripts for a new series for ABC that will star John Ritter, Stoddard said.

Levinson has created a comedy about a wacky hospital supply administrator that will star Arkin and Arkin's wife and son. Mike Nichols will also develop a comedy for the network.

Other mid-season replacements will include "Ohara," starring Pat Morita as a police lieutenant, the tentatively titled "The Max Headroom Show," with the computer-enhanced cable-personality, and "Mariah State," starring John Getz in a drama set in and around a state prison.

Spring made-for-television movies scheduled to air on ABC include "Casanova," starring Richard Chamberlain; "The Betty Ford Story" with Gena Rowlands; "Cracked Up," about drug abuse; "Daddy," about teen-age pregnancy; and a yet untitled movie about famine in Ethiopia starring Ted Danson and Allie Shady.

Soaps

stories wouldn't translate easily to the screen. Then he came across Miss Welly's "The Wide Net" and knew that this was the one. The producer didn't have the rights to "Net," but he got them and the project was initiated.

"American Playhouse showed an interest. I received a great deal of encouragement and guidance from Miranda Barry, who is the director of program development for Playhouse. Since I adapted 'Net' myself, I worked closely with Miranda and learned a great deal in the process."

The actual filming was an experience that held many surprises. Anthony admits that the schedule of working fast on a daily soap came in handy when he was directing. There were many times when a decision had to be made quickly, and his soap opera background prepared him for these fast decisions.

Herrera further admits when he first came back to "As the World Turns" he talked incessantly about his film. His preoccupation with it has settled down but a new anxiety has arisen. He's anticipating the showing of "The Wide Net" on American Playhouse on PBS, Feb. 2, when the fruits of his labors will be there on the small screen for all to see.

CHANNEL CHATTER

Kim Zimmer is expecting her second child in March but her character Reva will not have the baby until after the actress has her real delivery. The plot line in "Guiding Light" calls for Reva to go into labor at a later date, enabling Kim to play out the scenes after her actual pregnancy is all over.

PLOT PORTENTS

Erica has been rather low-keyed these days but look for things to boil over soon when circumstances involving a pending deal come to her attention in "All My Children." The road to romance is never a smooth one as Ross and Natalie are hiding out.

Reginald suffers a heart attack and Peter takes over Love Enterprises International in "Another World." M.J. finds out that Chad is involved with a prostitution ring under current investigation. Vince goes to see Mary and collapses.

Reva leaves Springfield for Europe in order to escape from those who are threatening the Lewis clan in "Guiding Light." Rusty Shayne and Mandy Lewis discover that the irresistible force of mutual attraction cannot be denied.

Tom has a big decision to make regarding his exciting job offer in Washington on "As the World Turns." Will Tom be able to leave his wife Margo for long stretches of time? Duncan's return to Scotland spells danger for him.

'The Morning Program' premiere

Program review

NEW YORK — "The Morning Program" isn't too proud to beg. With its blazing fireplace, a rocking horse under the stairs and lonely-hearts videos, CBS' new morning show is so eager to please that it almost wets on the rug.

If the dream-home set doesn't win your heart, how about Mariette Hartley's big, friendly dog? OK then, how about — a baby born the very same morning as the show?

"We're going to be following this little baby — hopefully for years to come," Hartley said, as the baby wailed.

Unless something is done quickly to fix the chemistry on this show, the kid should have that monkey off his back pretty soon.

Hartley and co-host Rolland Smith seemed to be trying to do different programs. Hartley was bright and bouncy, just as we remember her from the Polaroid commercials, and chattering like a magpie. Smith, in his dark suit, acted like an insurance salesman who had wandered in, trying desperately to get the conversation back to premiums and coverages.

Between them, they managed to waste even such a bit of spirit as John Madden, the arm-waving CBS football commentator.

Anyone who watched the New York Giants-Washington Redskins football game Sunday knows exactly what's wrong with "The Morning Program."

CBS appropriated a minute of the halftime for an awkward promo which showed Smith, previously a local CBS news anchor in New York, dressing around the set to show off the fireplace and Hartley telling refrigerator jokes.

This may be the perfect morning show, something so empty and aimless that you can run the vacuum cleaner and the dishwasher while you watch.

"The Morning Program" is CBS' white flag after being perpetually in third place behind NBC's "Today Show," which celebrates its 35th an-anniversary this week, and ABC's "Good Morning America."

CBS News clearly kept its distance. Smith introduced the news segments by standing next to a monitor, making it absolutely clear that the news people were somewhere else.

With ABC now searching for someone to replace David Hartman on "Good Morning America," it's an opportune time for CBS to attempt to gain ground. The producer of the CBS entry is Bob Shanks, who, not coincidentally, developed "Good Morning America."

CBS used to run one hour of "Early Morning News" and two hours of "Morning News." Under the new arrangement, it has given the last 90 minutes of that period to the Entertainment Division, and now CBS "Morning News" runs from 6 to 7:30 Eastern time.

Hartley, who appeared the most nervous on Monday, stepped all over guests Tyne Daley and Sharon Glass of "Cagney & Lacey." In a short interview. They all talked so fast that it became hard to follow.

When she let her guests talk, as in the segments with humorist Roy Blount Jr. and Rep. Joseph Kennedy

II, D-Mass., things went better.

The big innovation on "The Morning Show" is its video personal ads. "You can see the people behind the words," Smith said. "In some cases, you may hear their cry."

Chris, Brenda and Al, however, proved to be three handsome, apparently normal people who were looking for the usual things — a friend; a lover, someone to share that canoe trip.

Why, he asked the star, do both men and women adore you? "Maybe because I am a nice person," Miss Loren said.

The Morning Program records hike in ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS improved its early-morning ratings on the first day of "The Morning Program," according to A.C. Nielsen Co. data released Tuesday by the network.

"The Morning Program" won its time period in New York on Monday and boosted CBS' ratings 46 percent overall in a 12-city overnight sample, said Jim Sirmans, spokesman for CBS Entertainment.

Although Nielsen surveys 13 cities, Atlanta was excluded because "The Morning Program" is not carried there, Sirmans said.

The program, with hosts Mariette Hartley and Rolland Smith, had a rating of 4.1 and a 23 percent share of the sets in use in New York, compared to a 2.1 rating and 17 share for CBS programming in the time period last week, Sirmans said.

Ratings increased from 3.0 to 3.1 in Los Angeles, from 1.5 to 2.1 in Chicago, from 3.5 to 3.8 in Washington and 1.7 to 3.3 in Denver, Sirmans said.

Each rating point represents 1 percent of the television households in the market.

"The Morning Program," produced by CBS Entertainment, moved into a 90-minute time period formerly occupied by the CBS "Morning News."

Debt-ridden TBS, cable firms meet

ATLANTA (AP) — Turner Broadcasting System Inc. said Friday it is holding discussions with a group of cable television operators about investing in the company, which is heavily in debt.

"We're holding a meeting next week," TBS spokesman Ari Sando said. He would not identify the cable operators involved in the talks. The company issued a 49-word statement in which it said it was asking cable operators for "a possible material infusion of equity capital into the company."

"While these discussions are continuing, there is no assurance they will culminate in any firm agreement," the statement said.

TBS' debt is estimated at $1.34 billion, mostly due to the acquisition of the MGM film library last year.

TBS operates Cable News Network, CNN-Headline News and the WTBS superstation, seen on cable outlets around the country. The company has 21.7 million outstanding shares, with 81 percent owned by Ted Turner.

The company is expected to report losses of $190 million for 1988.

The New York Times in Saturday editions reported that Wall Street analysts and sources close to the company said Turner may be negotiating to sell a piece of his stake in the company.

Nielsen changes cloud TV horizon

NEW YORK (AP) — A change in the way the Nielsen ratings are taken and ABC's cancellation of its contract with the audience measuring service could complicate negotiations between advertisers and the networks over ad costs, industry executives say.

Capital Cities-ABC Inc. said last week it had notified A.C. Nielsen Co. that its ABC television network planned to drop Nielsen's national ratings on Sept. 1, just before the new season begins.

The announcement came hours after Nielsen announced it planned to change the approach it used to measure national television audiences for the past 30 years.

Instead of relying on people to remember what they watched and record that information in handwritten diaries, Nielsen plans to use "people meters" that will do the job electronically this fall. It is also dropping "audiometers" that supply measure whether the TV is on and what station it's tuned to.

People meters enable individuals to identify who is watching by pressing buttons on a device that resembles a remote control channel-selector.

PBS series examines progression

Americans as well as white. The fight was waged by blacks and whites in the streets and churches, the courts and schools of the American South. It was a struggle for racial integration and equal rights that changed the fabric of American life, a struggle whose reverberations continue to be felt.

"Eyes on the Prize: America's Civil Rights Years, 1954-1965," is a six-part documentary series that tells the human stories of the movement for social change in the words of both famous and less-known participants. "Eyes on the Prize" premieres 9 p.m. Wednesday on KALD.

Through contemporary interviews and historical footage — much of it never before broadcast — "Eyes on the Prize" traces the civil rights movement from early acts of individual courage through the flowering of a mass movement and its eventual split into factions.

"Eyes on the Prize" chronicles the civil rights years through the individual stories of people compelled by a meeting of conscience and cir-of civil rights movement in U.S.

circumstances to play a role in history. These are the stories of blacks and whites, of civil rights organizers from the South and the North, of government officials at all levels, of Southerners who fought to maintain a way of life they had cherished since reconstruction and of blacks who were determined to make America live up to its promise of equality. Some played their parts and faded back into obscurity; others became household names in the America of the time and permanent figures on the pages of history.

"Awakenings 1954-1956," airing Wednesday; highlights two, extraorinary acts by ordinary people that focused the eyes of the nation on Southern battlefields: first, the murder of 14-year-old Emmett Till in Money, Miss., and Moses Wright's courageous testimony identifying his nephew's killers; then, Rosa Parks' refusal to give up her bus seat to a white man, which triggered the 12-month-long bus boycott that ended segregation in the Montgomery, Ala. city bus system.

"Fighting Back 1957-1962" airs Jan. 28. It tells the story of states' rights loyalists and federal authorities colliding in the 1957 battle to integrate Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., and again in James Meredith's 1962 challenge to the whites-only enrollment policy of the University of Mississippi. In both instances, Southern governors squared off with U.S. Presidents, but integration of the schools was carried out.

In subsequent episodes other aspects of the Civil Rights Movement are examined in detail. Among the topics discussed are: U.S. in the movement; the special problems of integration in Mississippi; the strategy of mass demonstration; and the culmination of the movement when the Voting Rights Act became federal law.

Donaldson, Brinkley share spotlight

By MORGAN GENDEL
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Anyone who thinks that politics and entertainment do not mix could take a lesson from some of ABC's luminaries.

Consider that the duo of political reporters David Brinkley and Sam Donaldson was the most entertaining act yet seen during the all-network press sessions under way at the Century Plaza hotel here. And that "Dynasty" producer Esther Shapiro admits to creating a Reagan-era fantasy with the series' message of pomp and glitz.

Or that David Brinkley once played trombone.

That admission came in answer to a question about the legitimacy of networks airing news during half-time at football games, a practice currently encouraged at both CBS and NBC.

"You have to do something at half time," the host of "This Week With David Brinkley" responded. "Unless you want to see the high school marching band from the next county march across the field and play off-key. I can say that because I used to play trombone."

Donaldson, the bad boy of White House reporting and a member of Brinkley's Sunday morning round table, insisted, in response to another question, that TV journalists were not too soft on President Reagan prior to the Iran-contra scandal.

Clips from "This Week With David Brinkley" even brought occasional laughter from the hard-nosed TV critics; this from a show that, as its host noted, has "no car crashes, no explosions, no shootings, no sex, no body with his or her clothes off."

But Brinkley and Donaldson denied that they are "performers or entertainers," as one critic suggested.

Brinkley said he personally had to back off from reporting news firsthand when he began drawing bigger crowds than the political candidates.

Shapiro noted that the time has come for Dynasty's emphasis to shift, as the Reagan administration winds down.

Though a political liberal by her own admission, Shapiro said that she "must have been tuned into the vibrations" of the Reagans before they took office. Just weeks before the Reagans came under close public scrutiny, Shapiro fashioned a show about opulence and a family with a sensitive son and a strong-willed daughter.

TV writer offers help

NEW YORK (AP) — Stephen J. Cannell is one of Hollywood's most prolific television writers and producers. Since his studio was founded in 1960, it has produced a dozen prime-time series — including "The A-Team," "Hunter" and "Slingray."

So it was a surprise when Cannell said in a recent interview, "I was convinced by the time I was 11 or 12 years old that I was a loser."

Cannell said he came from an upper-middle-class family, went to private schools — and promptly flunked out of one after another, repeating three grades.

"I remember going home at night and looking up at the ceiling and going, 'Boy, I'm in trouble here,'" he said.

Cannell, 46, has dyslexia, a condition that causes him to transpose numbers and letters. He said his long-time secretary is able to decipher most of his writing, but even she sometimes has to ask him to translate.

"It's nothing you can get over. I'm as bad at spelling and sequencing and all the things that gave me trouble in high school. I'm as bad at that today as I was when I was in school," Cannell said.

He was in New York to appear on the NBC after-school news show "Main Street" to offer encouragement to kids who have the learning disability.

His company has two series in the works.

More advice expected on airwaves

By MORGAN GENDEL
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — If you think you are in sync with the newest trend in daytime shows, you may want to have your head examined.

Or at least your relationship. Advice and counseling shows are proliferating this year among distributors of syndicated TV programs, who displayed their wares over the weekend here for the Association of Independent Television Stations.

If programs like "Good Advice," "Strictly Confidential," "Between Us" and "Getting in Touch With Dr. David Viscotti" sell to enough stations, you can look forward to on-camera psychotherapy, Dear Abby-style advice and the dramatization of group therapy sessions.

"Television is the only medium that hasn't been used to give advice," said Robert King, president of syndication for Coca-Cola Telecommunications, which encompasses part of what used to be Columbia Pictures Television.

Until now.

Coca-Cola's potential entry into the field is "Good Advice," which features New York radio shrink Dr. Joy-Browne counseling members of the studio audience and callers on relationships and personal problems.

In this age of — well, telecommunications, as Coke has named one of its many new entertainment subsidiaries — call-ins may actually be view-ins. King said plans call for a roving camera crew to seek out advice-seekers during the show's taping.

"It's all the advice columns on TV and radio pulled into a TV show," said executive producer Andy Friendly.

Blair Entertainment takes a different approach with "Strictly Confidential," which features Dr. Susan Forward, author of "Men Who Hate Women and the Women Who Love Them," sharing the camera with a handful of actors who dramatize sessions from group therapy case files.

What this show lacks in spontaneity it intends to make up for with its probing of "the bitter conflicts unravelling the fiber of modern marriage." That includes "the controverstal, sometimes shocking issues rarely discussed" as well as "the secrets real people hide."

That juicy sales promo, pitched via videotape and a slick, printed flyer, is typical of what independent stations representatives saw and heard last week.

INTV, as the indie TV organization is known, turned the Century Plaza Hotel into a bustling marketplace for next year's non-network shows, of which the advice entries represented a mere fraction.
