Farmers doubtful of field sanitation orders

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Mel Harder, who farms 700 acres in the Bell Rapids area, says a recent federal order guaranteeing toilet, drinking and washing facilities for field workers is "a lot of nonsense."
"They got along 100 years without it," he says.
While the concept is good, say other area farmers and worker advocates, it may be impractical to accomplish and impossible to enforce.

A federal appeals court last month ruled that U.S. Labor Secretary William Brock abused his discretion two years ago when he delayed issuance of farm sanitation rules. On March 5 Brock ordered the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to develop standards — not applicable to farms with 10 workers or less — and put them into effect this season.

Regional OSHA Director Ryan Koemichael says a set of regulations may be ready April 21. But he doesn't know yet the type of format they will cover, such as whether the number of sanitation facilities will be based on acreage or number of workers.

In the Magic Valley, sugar beet producers will probably be the most affected because they employ large crews for weeding and thinning.

DeLyle Bennett, agricultural manager for White Satin Sugar Co., says a majority of the 800 sugar beet producers in his district — covering Minidoka and Cassia counties on up to American Falls — will be impacted.

LaMar Sanders, a Cassia County producer, is already thinking of ways to provide toilet, drinking and washing facilities for the 50 or so people who work his 2,200 acres.

He may rent portable toilets and use the main sprinkler line running through his fields to provide water, he says. Whether they will suffice depends on the federal rules. Although he employs mostly men, he sees a problem for women workers going without toilet facilities, Sanders says. Now the females drive to one of his shops to use the bathroom.

Because he doesn't know yet what he has to provide, Sanders says he isn't grumbling.
"Once he finds out what it will cost him, I may really grumble then," he says.
Harder is accustomed to federal regulations. He has employed Mexican nationals through the federal H-2 Program, which carries pages of rules for adequate housing, among other items.

He doesn't provide toilets in remote fields, he says. But workers bring their own supplies of water. Harder says he won't have any problems if the government requires toilets in the fields. But if he has to provide running water, that will be "impossible."
"Anything OSHA sets up is a bunch of bull," he adds.

Fred Zerza of J.R. Simplot Co. says toilets and water facilities are already provided to the temporary workers — on the company's three farms in the Magic Valley.
"The bottom line is we don't see any impact," he says.
Advocates of farm sanitation say the requirements will protect not only the workers but the products they are handling.

In the sugar business, Bennett says, the regulations won't matter because sugar beets are processed enough to protect the product against contamination or disease transmitted through handling.
The rules will be helpful with crops such as lettuce or "something you eat right from the fields," he says.

Twin Falls County Agricultural Agent Bill Hazen says the new regulations will amount to more expense for the farmer.
"But more so than the expense, it's just another job to do, it takes time to make sure everything is correct. But most farmers realize it's not a bad idea," he says.
Hazen predicts problems if the new rules aren't specific, which he says is traditional with government regulations. If there's ambiguity, one inspector might approve of how a farmer meets the standards one season. But the next season a new inspector might not like it.

Umberto Fuentes, state director of the Idaho Migrant Council, hails the court order requiring farm sanitation.
"No question about it, we're happy. It's something we've been saying for a number of years. I hope farmers are taking it in a positive way. It's supposed to be a positive step to alleviate problems and help those who work in the field."

But Fuentes is concerned about enforcement.
"The farm economy is pretty bad and I suspect it will take more than a regulation. I think it will take enforcement."

Papers favoring SCS site in Idaho

Project coordinator for state optimistic

The Associated Press

BOISE — The document that usually invites states to apply for the $1-billion-dollar supercollider project has selected Idaho into the thick of the competition, state project coordinator Rick Tremblay said.

"I feel almost guilty reading it, it's that favorable for Idaho," Tremblay said.

A corrected version of "Invitation for Site Proposals for the Superconducting Supercollider" arrived Thursday after one with typographical errors showed up April 1.

The supercollider is a particle accelerator that requires a 52-mile oval tunnel by which the basic secrets of matter. The deadline to submit a proposal to share the $4.3 billion federal project is Aug. 3.

Chiefly, the government has asked the states to donate the 16,000 acres needed to build it. All the other states would have to buy the land, whereas the Department of Energy already owns the 570,000-acre site where the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory is located.

INEL is also the home of a $3-billion atomic energy station, Tremblay said, noting that the other states would have to build a complex from the ground up. The federal government would spend about $1 billion on the land and technology, he said.

The construction requirements also call for the tunnel to be underground. Colorado and California propose to go 50 feet deep, while Illinois and Ohio would dig down about 200 feet, Tremblay said. Idaho can easily construct the supercollider 20 feet below the surface.

Idaho's cheaper hydropower would save up to $145 million in energy costs, he said.

Other states are not deterred, though.

Colleen Murphy, the spokeswoman for Colorado's effort, said officials still are inspecting the document and the land could be paid for by a $3 million appropriation by the Legislature. "I don't see any reason I think we can get more," she said.

Volunteers plant sagebrush for wildlife range recovery project

The Associated Press

SHOSHONE — Most southern Idaho residents probably don't think of sagebrush as something to plant and cultivate. It usually just grows anywhere no crop has been planted.

But a group of volunteers recently planted a test plot of 3,000 sagebrush seedlings in the 230,000-acre Wildhorse area, about 25 miles east of Shoshone. The five-acre test plot is a pilot project of the seven-member Idaho Cooperative Shrub Restoration Committee's plan to begin rehabilitating former mule deer and antelope winter ranges burned by wildfires.

Volunteers from the Twin Falls Fish and Wildlife Conservation Corporation and wildlife biologists from the Idaho Department of Fish and Game and the Shoshone District of the Bureau of Land Management are participating in the project.

The test plot is in an area that had been used as winter range by big game until fires in 1981 destroyed the shrubs necessary for food and cover.

If the sagebrush adapts in the area, officials say the test plot will provide a local source of seed for future shrub restoration projects.

The seed will be harvested in the next three to five years and used to rehabilitate larger acreages in the Wildhorse area.

The seedlings are a natural hybrid of two varieties of sagebrush hand-planted in Nevada and transplanted to the test plot site. The hybrid was discovered several years ago by U.S. Forest Service shrub researchers who noticed its heavy use by big game animals.

"Sagebrush is readily killed by fire," said BLM wildlife biologist Larry Mangan, who coordinated the planting project. "When these areas burn more than once within three to five years, virtually all the sagebrush is killed and few seed reserves remain in the soil to produce new sagebrush plants."

Mangan said restoration efforts by man have not always been necessary. Wildfires were less frequent before the introduction of, heat reestablish itself on its own.

The BLM plans to plant additional shrub test plots to determine which species adapt the best, as well as rehabilitation test plots and test greenstrips this fall.

Nine additional five-acre shrub plots will be established to test the adaptability of various shrubs and provide seed sources, officials said. The three rehabilitation test plots will be planted with different mixtures of grasses, forbs and shrubs to determine which perform best in the grass, allowing the sagebrush to

Ex-CIA chief wanted polygraphs on guards

WASHINGTON — Stansfield Turner, who headed the CIA under President Carter, says he tried to gain to require lie detector tests for Marines sent to guard the new U.S. Embassy in Moscow, but was overruled by other Cabinet members.

"The secretaries of state and defense talked the president out of it and he cancelled the order on the grounds that the Marines were too honorable to be put through this ignominious, disgraceful policy of polygraphing," Turner said in a telephone interview.

By The Associated Press

Travelers were stranded Saturday as unseasonably heavy snow continued to fall from North Carolina into New York state, with 2 feet in places and drifts up to 10 feet atop one mountain, and temperatures again plummeted to record lows from Texas to Florida.

"It's like a white out," said Dean Allen, a police dispatcher in the Cleveland suburb of Brooklyn, where it was the second major snow storm in less than a week.

"There's a lot of blowing and drifting snow. I guess I'm going to have to buy a snow machine," he quipped.

Two West Virginia ski areas hurriedly reopened, one week after dogwoods, magnolias and peach trees bloomed in temperatures in the 70s and 80s.

Some highways were closed and horse racing was canceled at tracks in Ohio, West Virginia and upstate New York.

Even the Concorde supersonic jetliner got snowbound. The plane, on a promotional visit to Asheville, N.C., took off Wednesday on Saturday after being delayed more than 24 hours.

Rivers receded in Maine after the worst flooding on record. But locally heavy rain fell from Maryland into New England, and flood waters were posted from eastern Pennsylvania across New Jersey and southern New York into southern Vermont. By mid-afternoon, 3 to 4 inches had fallen on Westchester County, north of New York City, with 3.5 inches at Roxbury, N.Y.

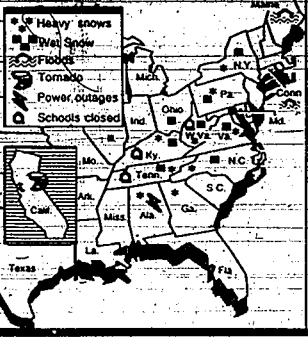

Temperatures again fell to record lows from Texas to Florida today and Monday.

Clarks Summit, Ala., and southern Arkansas, Indiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri, Daytona Beach, Fla., bottomed out at 37, and the only part of Mississippi spared freezing temperatures was the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, with a chilly 35 at Biloxi.

Friday's heavy snowstorm, one of the heaviest of record cold, suffered further casualties early Saturday and growers expected to tend fires in their orchards again during the night, said extension service agent Dan O'Connell in Fresno County, where the peach crop is valued at $3.5 million.

Richard Mullenax, director of the horticulture department at Mississippi State University, said 95 percent of the state's $1 billion peach crop and 40 percent of

About 1,000 motorists were stranded between Asheville, N.C., and the Tennessee line on I-40, where truckers set up a citizens band hookup that helped a diabetic child get medical attention, said Karen Roter, a spokeswoman, for North Carolina Gov. Jim Russians have obtained the names of Soviets who cooperated with U.S. intelligence agencies during the Vietnam War, according to an American code used in transmitting sensitive information.

One administration official said the CIA "has been a success story" for the intelligence service.

Marine guards, who average 20 years old, have been vulnerable to seduction and recruitment by Soviet agents.

"Marine guards, who average 20 years old, have been vulnerable to seduction in the past," one administration source said.

A similar case came to light through a Polish woman in the United States, "passing her off as French."

The woman became pregnant and the guard, who was recalled for investigation, and ultimately allowed to marry her and take her back to the United States, said the source.

Arthur A. Hartman, who retired last month from government after serving five years as ambassador to Moscow, said that Marines might be a "critical matter" for U.S. citizens, and complain of loneliness.

However, Showell, Hartman and other current and former officials at the Pentagon, State Department and CIA stressed that the current Marine family case is the first in which a Marine has been accused of allowing himself to be seduced by a Soviet agent. The code department supervisor, Lt. Col. John D. Green, said the code was issued in 1964 to protect the department's security. It called for the removal of Marines from the risk of seduction and recruitment by Soviet women.

The man became pregnant and the guard, who was recalled for investigation, and ultimately allowed to marry her and take her back to the United States, said the source.

The case did not result in an intelligence loss, said the source, and the Marine spokesman said the Marine had not faced court martial.

A similar case came to light through the Iranian hostage crisis in 1980, when the Islamic revolutionary government announced that it might bring charges against a Marine guard of the U.S. embassy, Sgt. Michael Moeller. He was accused of having sexual relations with an Iranian woman who became pregnant and was hanged for disgracing the really that transposed loyalty to Reagan — home state interest in the public works projects the bill will pay for. Several of them had warned White House strategists last week that they could not be counted on to vote to override a veto.

"I voted to improve the terracing and highway conditions in Mississippi," said Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., one of the 13. "I didn't vote against the president."

"It was a sad victory as far as I was concerned," said Sen. Jeff M. D'Amaral, R-N.Y., another of the 13. But he had to vote as he did because of some "very unique situations in New York."

Such legislative has not been passed in six years and the desire for the measure could be as strong as that for the highway bill.

chamber's 177 Republicans — including virtually all of the GOP leadership — joined with Democrats, in voting to override the veto.

Thus, the battleground became the more closely divided Senate, where Democrats held a 54-46 edge. In an initial test last Wednesday, the Senate voted 65-35, with one vote shy of a two-thirds majority to override the veto. On the next vote, Sanford switched his vote, allowing the Senate to override the veto.

The next test of the president's authority could come on a multibillion-dollar omnibus housing bill, passed by the Senate last week on a 71-27 vote. House action on a similar measure is expected soon.

Such legislation has not been passed in six years and the desire for the measure could be as strong as that for the highway bill.

But Reagan administration officials have expressed concern about the legislation, indicating that it may become the next veto target.

The 13 also saw the flood of publicity about the public changeover by Gen. Sanford, N.C. He voted to sustain the president's veto, but the next day, under intense pressure, from fellow Democrats, he voted to override it.

Mormon leaders talk

Urge priesthood to stick to fundamentals

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon leaders on Saturday urged members of the priesthood to stick to the fundamental principles of the church and endure "life's adversities with patience and faith."

"There are no shortcuts to eternity. We must try to understand that when adversity comes along it is likely a means of preparing us for something ahead," said Robert L. Simpson, a member of the church's First Quorum of the Seventy, who prepared remarks.

The First Quorum of the Seventy is a group of full-time clergymen who assist the governing First Presidency in directing the church's worldwide activities.

Thousands of Mormons flocked to Temple Square, in downtown Salt Lake City, on Saturday for the opening day of the 157th Annual General Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The two-day conference, at which Mormons from around the world gather to hear sermons from church leaders, was scheduled to end Sunday.

At each general conference sermons delivered in the Saturday night session are directed at priesthood members. Women are not encouraged to attend, and usually do not.

The church reported earlier Saturday that of its 6.2 million members, nearly 745,000 belong to the Melchizedek Priesthood, comprised of males 35 years old or older, and 84,000 belong to the Aaronic Priesthood, which is made up primarily of males ages 12 to 17.

During the session, church President Ezra Taft Benson stressed the importance of home teaching — a long-standing program in which priesthood members are assigned to act as the spiritual fathers in their congregations.

"There is no greater calling than that of the home teacher. There is no greater church service rendered to our Father in Heaven's children than the service rendered by home, detached-home teachers," Benson said.

Under the home teaching program, pairs of priesthood members are assigned responsibility for several families. They are urged to visit each family at least once each month to provide fellowship and to ensure that those in need receive assistance.

Benson said proper home teaching was a Christ-like service that should be given high priority.

8 new members appointed to the Seventy

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon Church leaders on Saturday announced the appointment of eight new members of the First Quorum of the Seventy and filled a vacancy in the presidency of the Young Women organization for teen-agers.

New members of the Seventy are:

- George R. Hill III, 65, Salt Lake City, a professor of chemical engineering.
- Douglas J. Martin, 59, Hamilton, New Zealand, a plant manager for a plastic moulding company.
- Alexander B. Morrison, 58, Waterloo, Ontario, a professor of food sciences at the University of Guelph and former deputy director of the Department of National Health and Welfare.
- L. Aldin Porter, 55, Meridian, Idaho, an employee of Mutual of New York who is currently directing missionary efforts in Louisiana.
- Glen Larkin Rudd, 68, Salt Lake City, former manager of the church's Welfare Square in Salt Lake City and the current president of the New Zealand Mission.

- Douglas H. Smith, 63, Salt Lake City, president of Beneficial Life Insurance Co. and Utah Farmers' Fire Insurance Co.
- Lynn Andrew Sorenson, 67, Salt Lake City, a former employee of the church's Internal Communications Department.
- Meanwhile, Elaine L. Jack was appointed second counselor in the general presidency of Young Women, an organization that teaches the gospel to girls between the ages of 12 and 18, and 50,000 adult advisors working on the local State Penitentiary after his capture on March 8 in California. He escaped from the Idaho prison on March 30, 1986.

BOISE (AP) — Anyone collecting aluminum shell casings and other items or even just sightseeing at "caching" the area during military exercises or from picking up live shells and explosives.

"We're trying to protect (against) the one-in-a-million chance that someone would pick up something dangerous, take it into the civilian community, and it would go off," said Col. Jack Kane, Guard chief of staff. "Removing a nice memento that's actually a live round could be catastrophic."

The training area long has been popular with some Treasure Valley residents. Many hunt for ammunition shells and aluminum casings, which have high resale value — in the off-limits area five miles north of the Snake River Canyon.

"It's been a problem for years," Ada County Sheriff's Capt. Tom Taylor said.

About three years ago, two Caldwell men retrieved a live 90mm shell from the area, which is used to practice tank gunnery, artillery use and tactical maneuvers.

A U.S. Army explosives team from Utah detonated the shell after a Canyon County sheriff's deputy discovered it at the home of one of the men. The blast left a crater in the yard, tore open sandbags piled around it and blew out windows in two homes and damaged the garage. Police evacuated homes in the block surrounding the home before the shell was detonated.

Besides the danger, officials say people who collect shell casings are stealing government property. The area is owned by the state of Idaho and the federal Bureau of Land Management.

Fire worries steady in '87

BOISE (AP) — Firefighting officials are afraid that Idaho forest fires this year may be as bad as last year, when tens of thousands of acres burned.

"We don't want to be down years, but ... we have to be as professionally responsible as we can be," said Clyde O'Dell, Idaho Weather Service forecaster assigned to the Boise Interagency Fire Center.

O'Dell said Idaho's dry, warm weather reduced snowpack by about half the usual amount in southern Idaho and about 60 percent of normal in central Idaho.

That lack of snow, coupled with predictions of below-normal precipitation through the end of June, spells trouble.

A serious fire hazard situation is probable unless the summer months are cool and wet, which is unlikely, O'Dell said.

Dallas legal defense fund established

BOISE (AP) — A Boise woman who contends convicted killer Claude Dallas should not be behind bars has established a legal fund to help free him from his 20-year prison term.

Laura Miller said she has retained Boise lawyer Deborah Zegart and accountant Bruce MacMahon to assist her as trustee of the money.

She calls the convicted slayer of Idaho Fish and Game officers William Poque and Conley Elms in 1981, was returned to the Idaho

Fields

OSHA people coming in and really forcing that thing. The one problem I see with this is that it's time promulgating regulations and not trying to enforce them. If the state has one or two inspectors, it's going to be almost impossible to detect any violations and make any corrective action."

But the state inspectors, he said, they have other duties, such as routine safety and health inspections of the state's private industry, says Roger Laws, acting area director for Idaho. OSHA's office also investigates complaints about health or safety violations and fatalities at a workplace.

"We've got plenty to do," Laws says.

Like the farmers, the new regulations will be just one more responsibility for OSHA without extra funding or help.

While OSHA's enforcement duties are yet to be decided, it may have to shift resources from some other job, farm sanitation, Kuehnebeck says.

The issue of toilets in fields is nothing new. The federal case behind the court order goes back to 1972 when a farm group first sought sanitation rules.

The Idaho legislature passed a bill in 1985 requiring toilets for field workers. But its effectiveness is questionable.

Sergio Gutierrez of Idaho Legal Aid, the group that pushed the legislation, hasn't heard of any prosecutions since it became law.

"But violations occur all the time," says Gutierrez, a former farm worker.

Because enforcement was left to the sheriff's offices, counting toilets in fields might have been a low priority with little, even short-term, money, he says. In a survey of sheriff's offices, some personnel didn't even know about the law.

Compliance with the federal rules will depend on punishments, Gutierrez says.

Violation of the Idaho law is a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $300 for each violation.

While much discussion has centered on expense and rules, little providing services to meet the basic needs of field workers.

Gutierrez says workers suffer kidney and other urinary infections because of the lack of toilets.

"But do they also suffer humiliation?"

"A lot of folks never knew it to be any other way," he says.

But no Canyon farm miles was harder on women workers, who would form circles to hide each other if no other cover was available, Gutierrez says.

Providing the toilets under the Idaho law didn't amount to much expense, he says. The expense of meeting the new federal rules could be handed down by the farmers.

"But when you look at the benefit to the people you have working for you, other human beings like yourself, those couple of extra cents are not that big a burden."

Illicit salmon approved for sale by judge

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — The sale of about 600,000 pounds of salmon the government alleges was illegally imported into this country has been approved by a federal judge.

U.S. District Judge Robert J. Bryan agreed Thursday to sell the frozen chum and sockeye salmon to a Seattle exporter-importer, Kusana and Co. Inc.

The government seized the fish in July, contending it was part of a laundering operation that shipped 3 million tons of salmon to Japan through the Port of Tacoma to disguise its origin from Taiwan.

The sale was authorized under a forfeiture action in which the government seeks permanent control of the fish.

PTL affair increases American cynicism

It is tempting to smirk about the continuing revelations of the Rev. Jim and Tammy Bakker and the not-so-pure inside story of what goes on inside Bakker's evangelical ministry, PTL.

Indeed, given the piousness and money-grubbing which has recently surfaced in religious fundamentalism, one could ask whether we wouldn't all be a bit more "saved" if the volume on the appeals were turned down.

Americans have had a love-hate relationship with fervent fundamentalism for centuries. Part of it stems from the realization many people have that, when it is all said and done, no one has the only route to Heaven.

Part of the skepticism also stems from a reluctance of many people to part with their hard-earned money for "causes" which, in the end, seem decidedly greedy.

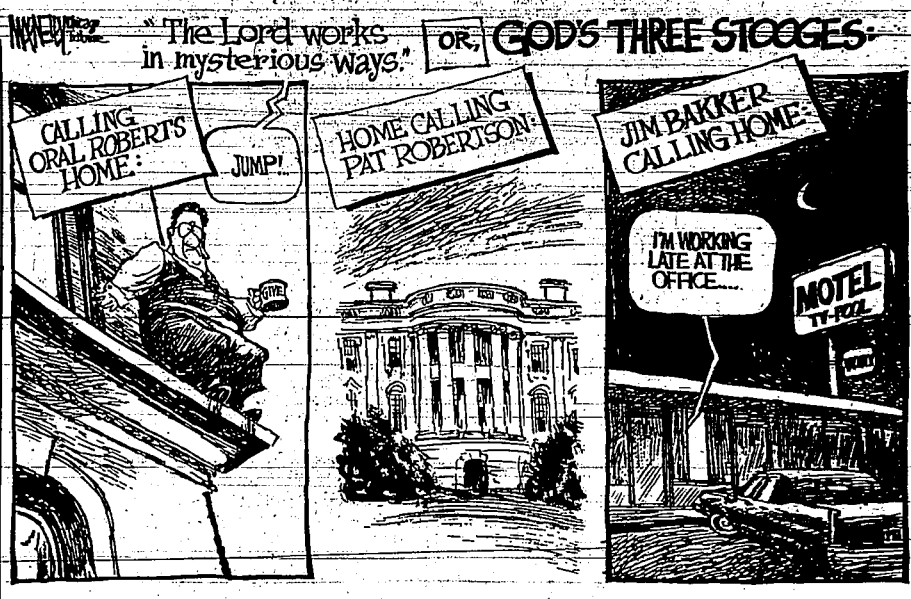

It is one thing to donate for God's work to be done in the world. It is quite another to donate when a huckster exhorts us to put our hands on the television and tries to vacuum the money from our wallets for their personal gain.

Given human nature, it isn't surprising that the Bakkers have, so to speak, feet of clay. What is surprising is that their following is as large as it is, despite the obvious crassness of their appeals and the ostentatiousness of their lives.

We predict the Bakker revelations will rub off in many ways. Television evangelists like Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson will find a higher level of cynicism in their efforts to mobilize the American fundamentalist movement for political ends. It is hard to focus on noble ends when one's brothers and sisters are seeking money, power and sex.

Anyone who thinks these events won't affect the future course of fundamentalism and politics doesn't appreciate the level of cynicism for hypocrisy in many Americans.

That rejection of charlatans has brought down many a would-be American demagogue and podium-thumper, in politics as well as religion.

School textbooks are seriously flawed

Judge W. Brevard Hand's evidence for his recent book-banning decision in Mohr v. University of Chicago. Based on the testimony of witnesses for both sides, the judge concocted a historical account of American secularism that would be unrecognizable to any but conspiracy theorists. At times, it seemed that John Dewey was on trial, and his unexplained theories of "progressive education" were explained for whatever alas American education today.

The conclusion that "secular humanism" is a religion was based on the following criteria — it is a belief system with a code of behavior, organized adherents, recognized leaders, an institutional character and its own publications and key documents. Using these criteria, one might just as easily conclude that psychoanalysis or vegetarianism is a religion. In tying the dogma of secular humanism to the textbooks, the judge offered no evidence that any of the textbook authors are humanists; he simply infers it from the defects of the books.

The decision richly deserves to be reversed, but educators and interested citizens should recognize that this decision was made possible by the serious flaws of the schoolbooks at issue. The eventual quashing of this attempt to use the federal courts as an instrument of censorship will not be sufficient to cure the two problematic issues that prompted the case.

The first problem is the systematic neglect of religion in American history textbooks, which has been documented in several recent studies. It occurs not because textbook authors are secular humanists, but because textbook publishers want to avoid controversy. Following the old principle of when in doubt, leave it out, publishers have made religion a decidedly minor, nearly non-existent, element in American history. The nine history textbooks on the treatment of religion by history textbooks, is the way values are presented in home-economics textbooks. Those people over a certain age who still remember home economics as a class where girls learned to cook, sew and make household budgets may be surprised to discover that home economics has been transformed. It is now a program where students learn to make decisions about their basic values. It includes discussion of drug "lifestyles," sex roles, divorce and family life.

Far more than the history textbooks the five banned home-economics textbooks provided the ammunition for Hand's attack on secular humanism. It was in these books that he found an abundance of statements to back his claim that the textbooks were knowingly subverting the family's religious values.

For instance, parents who tell their children not to drink alcohol may be startled to discover that their home-economics textbook says, "You need to form your own attitude about alcohol. Your attitudes may differ from those of your friends, but the important thing is that you must make your own decision." Suppose the teenager decides to drink? Is a parent going to believe that a statement of this kind leads to discourage harmful and illegal behavior?

The central point in much of this "valuing" and "decision-making" is that there is no correct right and wrong. So long as the individual thinks through what he is about to do, then no one else can fault his choices or cheat or claim that the "idea of 'ought'" is replaced by the reality of "is." People do these things; they drink alcohol, they take drugs; they lie; each person has to define his values for himself without judging others.

The voice of conscience, which so many parents struggle to instill in their children, is not to be taken too seriously, according to one textbook. Remember that adolescent is a time of trial and error. You are likely to make mistakes. That is a part of learning. Too strict a conscience may make you feel different and unpopular. Most of these feelings belong to a healthy personality.

This strategy of encouraging children to question their parents' and their own values and then to "choose freely" among a universe of values and behaviors derives from a much-debated philosophy called "values clarification." The teachers who practice "values clarification" is supposed to guide adolescents as they make important decisions about what they believe and how they will act. In some instances, the teacher plays the role of therapist, although not trained as a therapist; at times, the teacher is thrust into the role of philosopher, moralist, social worker and (yes) minister, pastor or rabbi.

Undoubtedly, Hand's decision will be reversed on appeal. But the issues that it raises should not be ignored. Teaching values by having no values at all is not what most people want from the public schools. The only way out of this morass, it seems to me, is to derive values from the content of the curriculum; by examining the consequences of major decisions that shaped history, by discussing great stories in literature that show how others have found meaning in life, by considering the moral teachings of different religions and traditions in our own and in other cultures, by reflecting on the writings of those who thought seriously about moral and ethical values at all times. These are the values that should be taught, by debating the ethical implications of our Constitution and laws.

Hand's list includes some of the most widely adopted books in the nation. In one of them, religion simply disappears from American history after the settling of the colonies; in another, religion disappears in 1850. In this there has evidently been an effort to "mention" religion more often, but only as a passing reference; thus, an indexed item called "religion" and the presidency refers to a description of John F. Kennedy as "Roman Catholic." Beyond these two words, there is no further comment on "religion and the presidency."

Students who read these books without supplementary reference materials would not learn that religious groups played an active role in the abolition movement or in the civil rights movement. They would not discover, as the most recent biography of Martin Luther King Jr. points out, that his sense of moral courage was nourished by his deep religious faith.

A sustained attention to the role of religion in American life would not likely please the plaintiffs in Hand's court, because it would show — in a way that none of these textbooks does — why and how separation of church and state became a basic principle in American politics. Ironically, the silence of the textbooks on the history of religion in America fails to prepare students to understand the very situation in which their schools are now embroiled.

The first lesson to be learned from this decision, then, is that religion in American history and contemporary life is a proper object of study. Leaving it out is not a constitutional violation; it is simply bad history.

The second issue, which the judge unfortunately lumps together with Diane Ravitch is a professor of history at Teachers College, Columbia University.

President should quit picking needless fights

The one thing the world didn't need this week was for Clubb and Chase Manhattan, the two most awesome names in banking, before whom some nations quake, to raise their prime rates.

It was speculated that the banks were anticipating a definitive upswing in interest rates. Others suggested that they were merely trying to boost earnings to repair the damage that a Brazilian default is likely to do to their profits.

Secord and his brother James A. Baker III said that he hoped it was a "temporary blip upward," and, being a nation saturated with debt as we are, it's a hope we should share.

Whatever the rest of the banking community, like a herd of single-mindedly decentered sheep, followed the lead of their Manhattan brothers with no little resistance, so it is suggested that they were merely a bunch of timid huckster managers following the orders of a Texan.

Meanwhile, Bank of America placed a billion in Brazilian debt on a non-accrual status. That could make a $100 million deal in its annual profit, if it had any. Shortly afterward, Morgan Guaranty Trust, which is immensely profitable, said that it would do the same with $1.3 billion in Brazilian loans. The banks said that they are simply being conservative. Nobody's sure what it really means, except that if the Third World debt crisis is going to blow up, such actions would be an early sign of it.

The stock market, which earlier had fits over President Reagan's trade wars that really isn't a trade war, took the rise in interest rates fairly well. It swooned on opening Wednesday, traded nervously all day and finally managed to close higher.

The Wilson Telegraph and Cable phone Corp. announced that it would buy one super computer from an American company. The announcement was timely, but the Japanese insisted that it was not an advance to be intimidating. Anyway, what's the computer? It probably means something that the Japanese are not the only ones getting their slats kicked out in Reagan's drive to prove to the domestic American protectionists that he can outdo them at their own game and on his own terms. An official of the Canadian Embassy in Washington, speaking with astonishing bitterness on the eve of Reagan's trip to Canada, complained of a "series of kicks in the shins" from Washington at a time when Canada and the U.S. are trying to negotiate a historic free-trade treaty.

Canada's conservative government, he said, having gone far and on a free-trade limb, feels a growing sense of betrayal.

The governance of a great nation is, to a large extent, an exercise in pretense. But there are times when you get a sense that this administration does not realize how important it is to do a convincing job.

It isn't that Reagan should be expected to be in complete control of global economic events. It is that he should at all times not appear to be overthrown by them.

Maybe the events of the last week are not a pattern suggesting that some sort of crisis is at hand. But maybe they are. And a President frankly trying to move himself by picking fights with Japan and striking his immense prestige on the belatedly perceived issue of a highway bill is hardly what we need.

Robert Reno

WASHINGTON — The record of American rhetoric has been enriched by Robert Byrd of West Virginia, Senate majority leader: "Potholes know no party." That insight was a highlight of the Senate debate about this attempt to use the federal courts as an instrument of censorship, a debate made especially memorable by this fact: Chic Hecht was heard from.

Hecht, the Nevada Republican, is in only his fifth year in the institution that calls itself the world's greatest deliberative body. But, being a quiet study, he has mastered the categorical imperative of his craft: "I cannot cast a vote against my state."

Byrd's Pothole Theory of History underscores the pretense that supporters of the highway bill were martyrs to their tender consciences; called high above partisanship by the tug of devotion to the national interest. He is half right: The argument was not about partisanship. Rather, it was about parochialism with a very conscience.

Hecht's name is not a household word, but he has rendered the service of stating, with childlike ingenueness, the principle by which deficits, inflation, weakened national security and deepened public cynicism are produced. The principle is: Congressmen and senators have a sovereign right to be parochial.

There are two grounds for this belief. One is elemental: A politician has a property right in his job and no argument is ethically valid if it purports to demonstrate a conclusion, or imposes a duty, that would increase job insecurity. The other rationale has the patina of political science. It is that the national interest is just is-by-definition — the sum of local interests. The public is served by whatever results from a meliorism of self-aggrandizement.

The Senate's new Nureyev, the nimble, preening, vote-switching Terry Sanford (D-N.C.), had to be told by his party what his conviction was to be (it is appropriate that the most conspicuous vote was cast by Sanford, one of the freshmen whose election last November gave the Democrats what they will come to regard as control of the Senate and thus full responsibility for Congress.

This Congress has now passed over presidential veto the two bills that were H.R. 1 and H.R. 2, the water and highway bills, respectively. Both were budget-busters. Both were passed against the musical background of loud lamentations from Congress about the "impossibility" of meeting the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction targets that were enacted into law — the targets are the law, son-of-a-bitch months ago.

Both bills were passed by lopsided majorities for the same reason: The money was spread like margarine over almost the entire country. The highway bill passed the House 407-17, a 390-vote majority. Only 17 senators voted against it, which means that of a possible 53 votes, only 34 were cast against it. Once the money in such a public-works bill is annexed around enough to make the bill seem virtually vote-proof, the egregious risk is stuffed in.

Both the water and highway bills were rationalized as indispensable to the nation's welfare. The debate on the highway bill featured the usual elastic numbers: Pass the bill or 800,000 jobs will be lost and economic growth will come to a prescribable halt. So supporters of the bill were saying: Having no bill would mean national catastrophe, but we are too busy to take another week and do it right.

The 15 Senate Republicans who joined the Democrats in this vote were: Cochran of Mississippi, Bond and Sanford of Missouri, D'Amato of New York, Bismberger of Minnesota, Hecht of Nevada, Hatch and Specter of Pennsylvania, McCammon of Kentucky, Frazier of South Dakota, Symons of Idaho, Weicker of Connecticut, Wilson of California. When next they run for re-election (the first in the process is Dan Rostenburg, Hecht, Hecht, Weicker, Wilson), arguing that they stand between the Republic and fiscal ruin at the hands of Democrats, try not to lie.

Democrats relish fighting Reagan votes, so he should enlighten by voting to veto any deficit-reduction program. It is a trick they want, but it begins here.

In just three creative months in complete control of Congress, the Democrats, by decisive action and forceful leadership, have made House speaker, Jim Wright, have established the threat that will carry them into the 1988 elections: They favor stalling education and raising taxes and reducing Gramm-Rudman requirements in order to unleash the sort of spending cap empowered by the highway bill.

The day the House voted to override the veto was the day the Democrats made history by raising interest rates. The two events probably were not connected — what, perhaps, than in the public mind.

Volunteer vets officer challenges criticism, incumbent's performance

Work together

The first requirements of a service officer is to research the facts of a case before making any decision. I am sure that Linda Stevenson and I have done this. I have prepared the letter to the editor in Times News dated March 26, that you failed to do this.

If you had done your homework you would have known that I resigned as a service officer as of August 1986 effective in July 1986. In August 1986, a very close friend of mine who was the service officer as I stepped in step back in for some years. This years term will expire early next year.

The veteran veterans were actually seeking my help and it did not matter if I officially represented them or not. They do have the right of choice of either a volunteer or a paid professional. Since Linda Stevenson, profess to be a volunteer, she was and an expert service officer, that position should be filled by you.

Following a conference for service officers in Blackfoot on March 21. This conference convened at 9 a.m. Approximately the Twin Falls County Service Officer felt in inappropriate to do so until 11 a.m. This is reasonable as he states in Times News March 22, 1987 that "I sometimes miss appointments." I have been named in veterans service work since June 1984 and have missed very, very few organization meetings. I have yet to hear of any other service officer of a VFW or DAV meeting. How can a paid professional function as a county service officer.

Geography expands vision

WASHINGTON — Let us hear it for Bill Bradley, the senior senator from New Jersey. The hour is not ripe for a new resolution to declare "Geography Awareness Week."

"That's right. The long tall tales from Devil's Den want to get aside the work of November 15-21 direct national attention toward the revival of a subject that has all but disappeared from most people's minds. It came to the floor of the Senate on March 17 loaded with depressing news."

He cited, by way of example, a study taken in January of 1986 of high school seniors in eight major cities. In Dallas, 27 percent of the students could not name the six New England states.

In Baltimore, 45 percent of those asked could not respond correctly to this instruction: "On the attached map, shade in the area where the United States is located." Nearly half of the students in Hartford could not name even three countries in Africa. Forty percent of those in Kansas City could not name three countries in South America.

Bradley had another survey, this one taken by the University of North Carolina in 1981. This was a survey of high school seniors, but of college students. Fewer than half of them, when asked to identify the two largest states, could not name Alaska. Almost 80 percent couldn't think of the two smallest states.

"The senator had even gloomier tales from Devil's Den. In two surveys by The New York Times, one taken in 1958, the other in 1984. Thirty-seven years ago, 94 percent of the college students knew the location of the Philippines. In 1984, only 27 percent responded correctly. Almost 70 percent of these students could not name even one country in Africa between the Sahara and South Africa. The situation grows worse, not better."

Bill Bradley — This news is not only shocking; it is frightening. We depend on a well informed populace to maintain the democratic ideals which have made our country great. When 35 percent of some of our best educated college students cannot locate Vietnam on a world map, we must sound the alarm. We cannot expect to be a world leader if our people do not know who the "big of the world is!"

As an aside to that, and again, seven fifty or 60 years ago, when some of us were ploughing through the public domain, we had whole books on geography. We had whole books on the subject — fascinating books, filled with pictures of exotic lands. We found them in the capital of China and coffee in Brazil and windmills in the Netherlands. We collected maps. For some reason, France was always best. The first of these books was "The World as I See It" by G. K. Chesterton. I had it beside my bed. I was mostly French, which was the case for Perry Grant. I was concentrated on one point on the North American. This must have been about the fifth grade. The first book of the series, Robinson Crusoe, had beside it the book, Robinson Crusoe. I had to memorize the state cap-

Jail considerations

I have read and heard a great deal about the new jail proposal. However, two points that do not seem to be mentioned are the fact that many of the people who become incarcerated in a city or county jail are, by our judicial system, not guilty of any crime until proven so by the courts.

Some of these people will never be proven guilty, therefore, some consideration must be given to their comfort and safety. Also, it has never, in my mind been very good to lock people up in a fourth floor facility, in which there are three floors with tons of burnable material just below which has access to anyone 24 hours a day, seven days a week and very little means of escape for those locked up.

As for the design of the proposed new jail, it seems to be efficient in many ways, however it does not seem to lend itself to future expansion for the design of the proposed new jail. It seems to be efficient in many ways, however it does not seem to lend itself to future expansion for the design of the proposed new jail.

I feel these are a few very important things that must be considered when presenting this project to the voters.

I do not feel that we should pro-

Election never over

In Sen. Larry Anderson's letter of March 29 regarding telephone deregulation, he stated: "Someone has to take the place of (Lloyd Walker) that the election is over."

I think Sen. Anderson should know that the election is never over for the incumbent — especially if he intends to seek another term. Although Gov. Andrus wisely vetoed the bill for deregulation, I was disappointed, though not surprised, that Sen. Anderson had voted for it because he thought the legislation would foster competition within the industry, and, in his words, "the deregulation would have eventually lowered telephone charges."

Sen. Anderson aware of what the deregulation of the airlines and bus companies did to the people of Idaho and to the people all across rural America? From my own personal experience it has been a disaster from the standpoint of poorer service and considerably higher fares at the local level — even though the fares are lower from one metropolitan city to another.

(sometimes) and if you're not too fussy about when you can get a reservation.

By the same token, long distance telephone rates might be lower — but what about local rates? Furthermore, I can't believe that large telecommunication companies would come rushing into sparsely populated and economically depressed Idaho any more than big airlines "didn't" come rushing in. —FRAN PARKER, Albion

Tals, and some of these were tough. Remembering the capitals of Washington, Kentucky and North Dakota wasn't easy. Geography was a wonderful subject! I don't know that we ever got deeply into it in geography, but we learned a good deal about people and places. Some of it was trivial: Name a mountainous country famed for yodeling. Some of it made an impact: Why is the Mississippi muddy, and what does this tell us of soil erosion?

Bradley is right when he warns that the decline of geography in our schools will have serious consequences in years to come. The globe dwindles. The planet shrinks. I was 6 years old when Lindbergh flew to France. It seemed an unbelievable adventure. Now the unbelievable becomes routine. Satellites and supersonic planes have turned strangers into neighbors. Our children and grandchildren ought to get to know them better.

Reagan optimistic Canadian summit will bring trade pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday he is optimistic his talks with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney will pave the way for a "mutually beneficial and advantageous" free-trade agreement later this year.

Reagan, in his weekly radio address delivered from the Oval Office, also said he hopes his two-day meeting in Canada, beginning Sunday, will smooth disagreements with the Canadians over acid rain.

"As nearby neighbors, the environment has always been a high priority for both our countries," Reagan said. "Canada and the United States continue to worry about the consequences of acid rain."

Sen. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., said that the "time has come for action... not for more research and not more delay."

The president also praised Mulroney's government for aiding in the defense of the North American continent.

"The Mulroney government has pledged higher defense spending to make certain Canada is carrying its part of the load — a move which will do little to combat damage to NATO and the United States government welcome," the president said.

Reagan gave no details about the Mulroney pledge. Some administration officials, however, have expressed dissatisfaction with the Canadian contribution.

"Canada and the United States share much more than a common border. We share a democratic tradition, and we share the hopes, dreams and aspirations of a free people," Reagan said.

Shortly after the address, the White House announced that Reagan is formally sending Congress his request for a $2.5 billion, five-year plan to attack acid rain. The proposal suggests spending $500 million annually in the fiscal years of 1988 to 1992, the announcement said.

On the free-trade issue, Reagan acknowledged that "much hard bargaining lies ahead," but added, "we are optimistic that a comprehensive plan mutually beneficial and advantageous to both sides can be hammered out this year."

"Our goal is a free trade agreement that will remove tariffs and non-tariff barriers between us," he said.

Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee, noted that the United States had a $20-billion trade deficit last year with Canada, Washington's largest trading partner.

"It is important that we work with the Canadians so that we can achieve a better balance in our trading relationship," said Gray, who delivered the weekly Democratic response to Reagan's address.

Reagan recalled that he and Mulroney have endorsed the report of their special envoys on the acid rain problem.

"We can be grateful that on these cross-border environmental questions, our two countries are working with each other rather than against each other," Reagan said.

"We can be proud of what we have accomplished... and this year we'll determine if more needs to be done," the president said.

However, Mulroney, who is facing pressure from opponents to take a hard stance during his talks with Reagan, is expected to push for more aggressive U.S. action to battle acid rain, including a 50 percent cut in polluting emissions from U.S. coal-burning utilities and industries.

In the United States, Reagan's $2.5 billion plan has been derided in Congress as a "delaying tactic that

Lead paint spurs recall of 1,800 toys

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — A suburban Chicago company has recalled about 1,800 toy trains and music boxes because of unsafe levels of lead in the paint, the state health department reported.

Enesco Imports Corp. of Elk Grove Village is asking consumers to return the wooden train, No. 309403, and the music box, No. 315477, to place of purchase for full refunds.

The toys, sold nationwide for a year under the Enesco label, were found to contain more than the 36 percent or lead allowed in paint by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, the health department said Friday.

The train, which consists of a locomotive and two engine cars, is 10 inches long, while the music box is about 6 inches high and has a drum-shaped base with a figure of a boy on top. Both are painted in various colors.

Slain adviser home from El Salvador

MIAMI (AP) — The body of the first U.S. military adviser killed in combat in El Salvador arrived in the United States on Saturday accompanied by his wife.

Sgt. 1st Class Gregory A. Frounuz, 27, of Camelsville, Pa., was among a group of 55 U.S. advisers working with the Salvadoran armed forces when he was killed in a pre-dawn rebel attack Tuesday on the nation's second-largest military base.

Forty-three Salvadoran government troops also were killed in the raid, said U.S. Army spokesman John Smith.

Frounuz' Patamanian wife, Catherine, accompanied the coffin on Eastern Airlines Flight 565 from Miami International Airport and was scheduled to fly on to Pittsburgh later Saturday evening.

"On behalf of my family and myself, I would like to express my deepest appreciation for the support provided during this tragic loss of my husband Gregory," said Mrs. Frounuz in a prepared statement read by her military escort, Maj. Michael Wood.

"He believed in his work and support he was providing to the United States Army, and more importantly in his training mission in El Salvador," the statement said. She also gave her condolences to the families of the Salvadoran soldiers who were killed or wounded with her husband.

Mrs. Frounuz had said she did not want to talk to reporters.

A private funeral with full military honors was scheduled for Tuesday in Scottsdale, Pa., where Frounuz' mother lives, said Smith. The family's two children stayed behind in Panama, said Smith.

"On behalf of my family and myself, I would like to express my working with civilians at the time of

A U.S. Embassy spokesman in El Salvador who requested anonymity for security reasons said earlier that guerrillas shot Frounuz while he was fleeing from his room for cover and that his body then was hit by mortar fire.

Report paints vivid picture of boozing, brawling guards

WASHINGTON (AP) — Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow reportedly slept with Soviet maids, fraternized with prostitutes and had a reputation for boozing and brawling, the prompted one Western diplomat to refer to the guards' quarters as "Animal House."

The Los Angeles Times, quoting unidentified sources in its Saturday edition, said a young British woman allegedly was raped at one Marine party, and five Marines later were sent home to face court-martial.

Maj. Anthony Rothrock, a spokesman for the Marines in Washington, confirmed that an incident "did take place" involving "Marines and a woman who was not a Soviet citizen, but denied that a rape occurred."

"During last winter, a couple of Marines attended a party at the 'dacha' of a woman who was owned by the embassy," Rothrock said. "Sometime during the party, Marines escorted the woman to the Marine House and had relations with her. There were no charges of rape."

"When it was discovered, two Marines were brought back to the U.S., along with several other Marines who had been told about it or heard about and failed to report the incident. They also were brought back," he said. "All the Marines received non-judicial punishment."

Rothrock described non-judicial punishment as an administrative procedure in which an individual can be admonished by a fine or a reduction in rank or restricted.

The Marines then were taken off the security guard program and reassigned to their original jobs.

Rothrock said the incident was not connected to the widening scandal in which two Marine guards, Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree and Cpl. Arnold Bracy, are accused of having sexual liaisons with Soviet women and later allowing Soviet agents to tour the most sensitive areas of the embassy building early last year.

Two additional Marine embassy guards are suspected of having sex with Soviet women, it was disclosed Friday.

The entire 28-member contingent of Marine guards has been recalled from Moscow as a precautionary step, and the embassy's top security officer, Frederick Mecke, has returned for consultations with U.S. investigators.

The newspaper said, off-duty Marines were seen drinking beer at the World Trade Center hotel with prostitutes who were assumed to work with the KGB.

Some guards made up to $10,000 by selling stereo equipment and other sought-after Western goods on the black market, an unidentified former embassy employee told the newspaper.

Residents flee chemical fire

MINOT, N.D. (AP) — A fire at a warehouse containing agricultural chemicals spread to four houses across the southern part of the city Saturday, and people who could see or smell the smoke were advised to leave their homes.

No injuries were reported from the fire or fumes.

The warehouse contained agricultural chemicals, including methikon, an insecticide, said Police Lt. Dennis Smetana.

Residents in the area of the smoke cloud had been advised to leave their homes in this city of 32,000, Smetana said. The advice was still in effect at 3 p.m., he said.

The fire at Westchem Agricultural Chemicals Inc. apparently started in a truck parked inside a warehouse containing agricultural chemicals, authorities said.

The fire spread to the building and the stored chemicals caught fire, police and fire officials said.

Firefighters pulled foam to the blaze, which caused even more smoke to go up and continued the danger, said Police Lt. Dennis Smetana.

"It's being controlled, but it's still severely, highly toxic," Smetana said.

Firefighters battled the blaze from the vantage of an open garage door, but they were unable to get into the building because of heavy with traffic, police and witnesses black smoke, fire battalion chief Bill Kraft said at late morning.

Air raid sirens sounded to inform residents of the evacuation, and those of town that winds were blowing the cloud toward the base.

Surrogate motherhood, Baby M decision divides feminist factions

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The practice of surrogate parenting, upheld last week in the Baby M case, is dividing feminists with some arguing it erodes women and others saying women must have the right to control their wombs.

The National Organization for Women, which has led the fight for equal rights for two decades, has not taken an official stand on surrogate motherhood.

Surrogate mother Mary Beth Whitehead's fight for custody of her daughter has led many feminists to argue that surrogate motherhood has special risks, such as a mother's bond with her child, that should lead lawmakers to either ban the practice or regulate it so women have the right to change their minds after giving birth.

But others say a woman's right to bear children extends to the practice of surrogate motherhood and other alternate forms of procreation, including in-vitro fertilization and artificial insemination.

The case has also raised the issue of whether courts should give preferential treatment to women in custody disputes because of the biological bonds they have with their children that are absent with men.

"The feminists have painted themselves into a corner," said Joan Wile, a playwright and surrogacy critic. "We didn't foresee this. We think women are equal to men in every regard, but when it comes to the mothering of an infant, we have to turn around a little bit."

Surrogacy was on the agenda of a regular NOW state meeting this weekend, said Noreen Connell, New York state NOW president. So far, that organization has said that judges should apply adoption laws in which a mother is allowed to change her mind about giving up her child.

Survey finds 75% approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — An overwhelming 75 percent of Americans surveyed approve of the recent decision awarding child custody in the so-called Baby M case to the biological mother rather than the surrogate mother who carried the baby, a new poll shows.

The poll by U.S. News & World Report and the New York Times found that 79 percent of the 1,017 Americans polled on March 31 and April 1 were aware of the specifics of the New Jersey case, in which Superior Court Judge Harvey Raskow gave the baby to William and Elizabeth Stern.

The Sterns had hired Mary Beth Whitehead for $10,000 to be artificially inseminated with Stern's sperm and bear the baby because Mrs. Stern feared a possible pregnancy would aggravate her mild multiple sclerosis.

The nationwide telephone poll found that among those who knew what the case was about, 75 percent approved of Raskow's ruling, while only 8 percent said Whitehead should have been granted custody, and 7 percent favored divided custody.

However, a significantly higher percentage, 20 percent, named Whitehead when asked where their personal sympathies lay, outside of the legal aspects of the case. Fifty-five percent answered that their sympathies were with the Sterns.

Asked if surrogate mother contracts should be outlawed in the future to prevent such situations, 34 percent said yes, while 53 percent said such contracts should be legal.

Thirty-one percent of those surveyed said they agreed with the pope.

The poll had a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

Prankster Prince Edward admits tricks on BBC show

LONDON — Britain's Prince Edward may become known as the prankster prince, judging from his televised confessions Saturday.

Queen Elizabeth's youngest child, 29, told the audience of a British Broadcasting Corp. children's show that he once stuck out-of-order stickers on an elevator and sometimes uses a fake telephone voice to trick friends.

Edward became the British marines' most famous dropout in January and has not yet decided on a career. He's also uncommitted romantically, he told viewers who telephoned in questions to the show.

"Asked how he felt about his two older brothers and sister being married, the prince said, "I think it's great but as for him, 'I am in no hurry at all.'" show a station spokeswoman said Saturday.

Edward, an amateur actor, jokingly described his hobby as "trying to make a fool of myself on stage."

PRINCE EDWARD
A fool on stage

Danger Mouse had been dumped by Channel 5 to make room for Mayor Edward I. Koch. The company that distributes the cartoon show began a $10,000 advertising campaign on Friday aimed at returning the rodent to the airwaves.

The mayor conceded that the mouse, who had averaged 200,000 viewers, had proved more interesting than his commissioners. About 41,000 sets were lined in to Koch's show last week.

"I think that he and I can work this out," Koch said Friday, "I am told he's a reasonable rodent."

As proof of that, Danger Mouse will appear with the mayor on this weekend's show, Koch's station spokeswoman Isabel Fernandez said.

The station decided to continue Koch's program past its initial four-week trial run despite the lower ratings, but it is considering bringing the mouse back in another slot, Ms. Fernandez said.

Boxer becomes drum major for justice at King awards

ATLANTA — Boxer Eviner Holyfield Jr. has been recognized as a "drum major for justice" in ceremonies honoring the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

Also honored at Friday night's eighth annual "Drum Major for Justice" awards dinner was Dean Curtis, a former member of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"We felt it was very significant, his being Caucasian, that he wanted to start a brotherhood march," Evelyn Lowery, head of the women's branch of the S.C.L.C., said of Curtis.

The awards were presented on the eve of the 19th anniversary of King's assassination in Memphis, Tenn. The name comes from a remark the civil rights leader made shortly before he was killed, when he said he wanted to be remembered merely "as a drum major for justice."

Besides Holyfield, who is World Boxing Association junior heavyweight champion, other "drum major for justice" awards Friday went to Rev. Michael Espy, D-Miss., and Leoline Kelly, the only black female bishop in the United Methodist Church.

Mayor Koch invites rival Danger Mouse on talk show

Haven't. Their repertoire includes fast jazz, melodic ballads, and the music of Cole Porter, a Whiffenpoof of 1919.

NEW YORK — Danger Mouse the cartoon character who squeaked past "Koch on a Guest" in the ratings, will make a call appearance Sunday morning on the mayor's TV talk show.

Prom-goers roll past town dance ban

ANSON, Texas (AP) — Public dancing is illegal in this West Texas town, but this year high school students worked out a way around the 54-year-old ban.

Previous proms were seated affairs with no one permitted to wander onto the dance floor. Last year the prom was held in nearby Abilene, but when the junior and senior students began to beg to be recorded music, a teacher-chaperone quickly put a stop to it.

Friday night, when the school-organized gathering at an Abilene hotel ended, a dance party started in the same room under the sponsorship of Footlose, an Anson group that has agitated for a relaxation of the ban.

The banquet and dance, which attended by 100 youths, ended peacefully just after midnight, officials said.

One of the tunes played Friday at the "renewed ball" by the Sweetwater-based band Blittercreek was "There Ain't No Dancin' in Anson," said composer Paul Davidson, a band member who also is active in Footlose. Ironically, nobody danced to the number.

Residents on both sides of the dancing issue said it was seriously split Anson, a normally close-knit farming and ranching community of 2,500.

Footlose, named after a 1984 movie about a dance-less town and organized by a group of parents, urged the City Council last month to rewrite the 1933 ban on dancing. The council tabled the issue indefinitely, but afterward assured Footlose members a response would be given by April 12.

However, the Church of Christ in Anson has been outspoken in opposition to public dancing, and three of the five council members are also members of that church.

Californian argued for daylight saving on behalf of barbecues

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Not many people can say they held back the night, but J. Phillip Halstead did.

He gets much of the credit, or blame, for Congress' decision to have daylight-saving time start early this year — Sunday, to be exact — instead of the last Sunday in April.

"We needed it," said Halstead. "And the campaign only cost $50,000," he added.

Halstead was manager of public affairs for Oakland's Clorox Co. when the corporation was hunting for ways to boost sales of its Kingsford brand of charcoal.

2 women audition for Yale's waste bastion Whiffenpoofs

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Melinda Stanford was about as out of place as a Kansas girl in Oz when she auditioned before Yale's all-male Whiffenpoofs singing group. So she sang "Somewhere Over the Rainbow."

She said another Yale, Stacey Hur, on Friday became the first woman to audition for the Whiffenpoofs, who have made it clear they don't intend to break their all-male tradition.

Stanford said she sang the song from "The Wizard of Oz" because "it can't have." She argued that the group should "represent the best 14 singers," not the best 14 male students, and they choose their successors through auditions. The current members voted 12-1 with one abstention last month to allow women into the group.

The Whiffenpoofs have performed around the country and abroad, including appearances on NBC's "Saturday Night Live" and on Japanese national television. The Whiffenpoofs have also entertained President Reagan.

Backers of the ban on women cited the wish to maintain an all-male sound and comradeship.

The Whiffenpoofs were founded in 1909 when a barbershop quartet of Yales met regularly at a bar in New

Media's role in civil rights fight examined

Monday, April 5, 1987 Three News, Twin Falls, Idaho A-6

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Sixteen years after the struggle for civil rights and the role of the media in covering the fight, a group of journalists gathered Saturday on a long-ago battlefield to examine the history they made and the challenges that remain.

"We have witnessed a nonviolent revolution — a revolution of values, a revolution of ideas," said Rep. Wm. Lewis Davis, a former head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

"The South is a much more humane and hopeful area now," said the former head of the National Association of Broadcasters and participants in a weekend conference at the University of Mississippi, described as the first meeting on the media's role in the civil rights movement.

Los Angeles Times' Washington bureau chief Jack Nelson, chairman of the symposium, said, "There's been a curious lack of interest" in the study of media influence in the 1950s and 1960s civil rights struggle.

Several members spoke of the irony of staging such a conference at the University of Mississippi, where 500 people were killed and hundreds injured in disturbances leading to the enrollment of its first black student, James Meredith, a quarter-century ago.

"I don't think if I close my eyes the day I die I will forget the smell of tear gas on this campus," said Karl Fleming, who reported on civil rights for Newsweek magazine and was arrested in the Watts riots in Los Angeles.

"I felt sick. I felt mortified," he said. "These facts were so horrific that they stood by themselves."

Robert Schakne swapped stories of covering the 1957 forced integration of Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

"I think we did quite well under the circumstances. I think we would do differently today," Schakne said. "We had no way of thinking that our form of journalism (television) would change the way a nation thought."

"In time, events will show that television came of age when the civil rights movement came of age," he said.

He escorted Meredith to the registrar's office in 1962. Now, more than 200 black students attend the university, or about 6 percent of its enrollment of 8,000.

Meeting exactly 13 years after the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King in nearby Memphis, Schakne called his leadership and hope "to trip the conscience of the American people."

But nostalgia collided with reminders of continuing racial struggles in New York City's Howard Beach neighborhood and in Forsyth County, Ga.

"We're not there yet, and the struggle does continue," said Chester A. Higgins Jr., a former editor of the Chicago Tribune and Detroit Courier, who chastised the national media for their current coverage of the civil rights story.

"I think it's more difficult to cover the subtle racism now than when there were the dogs and the hoses," said Dorothy Gilliam, a Washington Post reporter who had to stay at a black funeral home instead of the all-white motel in Oxford when she covered the violence here.

Boy, after second liver transplant, recovering

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The mother of 7-year-old Ronnie DeSillers said she firmly believes the boy's health is improving after a second, far more complicated liver transplant that ended early Saturday.

"I told the doctors that no matter what they said, I knew what the outcome would be," Maria DeSillers said, less than a day after her son received his second liver. "I had an inner peace that everything would be all right."

Surgeons at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh transplanted a liver into the Miami boy in a 14-hour operation that ended at 12:30 a.m. Saturday, hospital spokesmen said.

McMahon. He was in critical condition in the intensive care unit, constricted normal following a transplant operation.

DeSillers said although Ronnie looked swollen and puffy when he emerged from the operation, he was "a beautiful sight."

"The doctors told me the surgery had been very complicated," she said. "They had problems with the bleeding... and there were a lot of lesions around that area. It was hard for them to suture anything and save it all."

Jose Castillo, a family friend, said Ronnie required 25 units of blood during surgery, exhausting the hospital's supply of AB-negative blood. He said Ronnie was given A-negative blood Saturday afternoon because he was bleeding slightly through the mouth and his platelet count was down.

Ronnie's second liver came from an unidentified child of comparable size but with type A blood. Surgeons decided to proceed with the transplant, preferring the slight risk of crossing blood types over the greater risk of waiting for another donor with the rare AB blood.

Ms. McMahon said Ronnie would be watched closely, particularly in the first 72 hours after surgery, the most critical period, to make sure he shows no signs of rejecting the new liver.

After the theft, contributions poured in from around the country, including a $1,000 check from President Reagan and $32,000 from 5,000 sailors on the aircraft carrier USS John F. Kennedy. Donations exceeded $400,000 by the time Ronnie arrived in Pittsburgh with his mother Feb. 17. He received his first liver transplant a week later.

Lawmakers send mixed message to farmers

By JANE ROBINSON
Times-News writer

BOISE—Idaho's farmers lost the sympathy of the Legislature this year. Although Idaho's farmers are facing the most difficult times since the Depression, lawmakers voted to cut $15 million that funded the Farmer's Hotline.

Blaine Kirk, chief of the Department of Agriculture, said the Hotline program that helps farmers would end in June, unless outside money can be found.

"The amount of money that we need might not mean much. But lawmakers are facing the farmers, chose not to pass legislation that could have forestalled bankruptcies and helped farmers get back on their feet."

"If lawmakers were not so completely deaf to the needs of Idaho's great stumbling giant, agriculture. The Legislature did ap-

...prove an 8.2 percent budget increase in the Department of Agriculture, which last year had its budget cut. The Legislature also voted to give $3 million for higher education to go for research and marketing, specifically for studies in the state.

In the last hours of the session, the Legislature also passed partial repeal of the capital gains tax, giving farmers a tax break if they sell assets to pay off loans.

The lawmakers also sent a mixed message to agriculture in the state and around Idaho's growing schism in the farming community, a split that seems as vast as the Snake River Canyon. Agriculture officials and lawmakers agreed that more than half of the state's farmers want no more government intervention, while a small portion do.

The message from the Legislature was to pour money into marketing and research, which will help farmers capable of hanging on, while ignoring farmers about to go under. It's as if the state wants to see its houses and start fresh, a new day in Idaho, without the financial drain of troubled farmers.

New markets are few, but the problem is that if Idaho's farmers go under, even if they sell assets to pay off loans, the total agricultural debt in Idaho is $3.2 billion. Not much, really.

"Times are difficult," Rush said. "We haven't seen this number of farmers going out of business since the Depression."

The total agricultural debt in Idaho is $3.2 billion. Not much, really.

But the number of farmers in extreme financial difficulty is small, and getting smaller as farmers opt for bankruptcy.

Agriculture officials say another 200 farmers are facing bankruptcy this year.

Despite the warning signs, the majority of Idaho's lawmakers did not want to face the tough issue of farmer credit.

And why should they? Unlike last year, there were no tractors piled on the Capitol steps. There were no news photos of weeping farmers' wives, crying at losing the family farm. There were no suicide headlines to keep the issue in the forefront. And there is no consensus among the farming community that the issue is desperate.

A farmer mediation bill approved in Iowa was defeated in Idaho because bankers convinced farmers it wasn't necessary.

Although the bill made it out of the Senate, it died in the House party because House Agriculture Chairman Eugene Stucki of Paris showed no enthusiasm for the bill.

The bill received no help in the House from two Magic Valley lawmakers, Rep. Cella Falding, R-Buhl, and Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley.

Rush said Idaho's farming community is split into thirds. One-third are doing very well. One-third have some problems, but nothing that leaves their business in jeopardy. It is the remaining third that have extremely high debt, Rush said. Statistically, about 17 percent of the farmers in trouble are responsible for 42 percent of the operating debt in Idaho, or $250 million.

If those farmers go under, the ripple effects will be the equivalent of a tidal wave, Rush said.

"Boise won't see it immediately, but small."

Industries are proving ground for rehabilitation

Projects with industry program fills gap between training, wage earning

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—The efforts by the Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services to help handicapped persons establish employment skills and move into the area's labor forces would be wasted without on-the-job training and a source of employment.

In Twin Falls, a program called Projects with Industry is filling the void between class training and wage earning. The program is designed to bring the trainees into a real daily job situation and self-sufficiency.

Margie Rahr, coordinator of Projects with Industry at MVRS, says there are two "host industries" involved with the training-to-employment phase of the program. Since the program is federally funded there is little chance for expanding to other industries in the near future unless more money is made available.

About 70 people obtain some kind of training or evaluation at the Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services center on Eastland Drive South each day. These people are then moved to the two cooperating industries for training-in-actual-work conditions.

About half of the "birds" are the work training jobs. Rahr says the program helps persons whose careers and wage earning abilities are cut short by a sudden accident or illness. Others are people who have had life-long difficulties of some kind. They may be mentally or physically handicapped in "varying degrees."

"Some of these people come to us after severe injuries in traffic and industrial accidents. They may be high school or college graduates who are faced with finding a new kind of employment or people who very little education who have never held a job," Rahr said.

Most are referrals from the Department of Health and Welfare or Workmen's Compensation agencies.

Each person is evaluated at the rehabilitation center for selected training to help develop work skills. Some are severely handicapped. Some need only to learn how to converse with others or get along with fellow workers and the public. Others need help in acquiring enough self-confidence to seek and maintain employment, Rahr says.

The two industries that are giving these people a chance for a new life are Cactus-Pete's Casino at Jackpot, Nev., and Universal Frozen Foods of Twin Falls.

At Cactus-Pete's, they work and train as janitors, housekeepers, dishwashers, or laundry workers. Jack maintenance workers, says Rahr, personnel director for the casino. He said many stay on when jobs are available.

Rahr says one woman trained there as a baker's helper and is now head-baker for Cactus Pete's.

At the Universal Frozen Food plant, workers train on the potato inspection tables, inspecting and removing substandard potatoes. From there they move into more demanding positions.

"These people nearly always make good employees. They try harder to please because their jobs mean everything to them. They will also accept what others turn down and we find they almost never complain," Rahr added.

"A man or woman may train as a dishwasher and be satisfied to stay at that level, while others try hard to work into a better job either where they train or with other employers," she added.

Mike Temple joined the program and worked at Universal until the annual lay-off at the close of the season left him without work.

"He had gained enough confidence and experience to go out on his own and obtain a job in a trout processing plant," Rahr said.

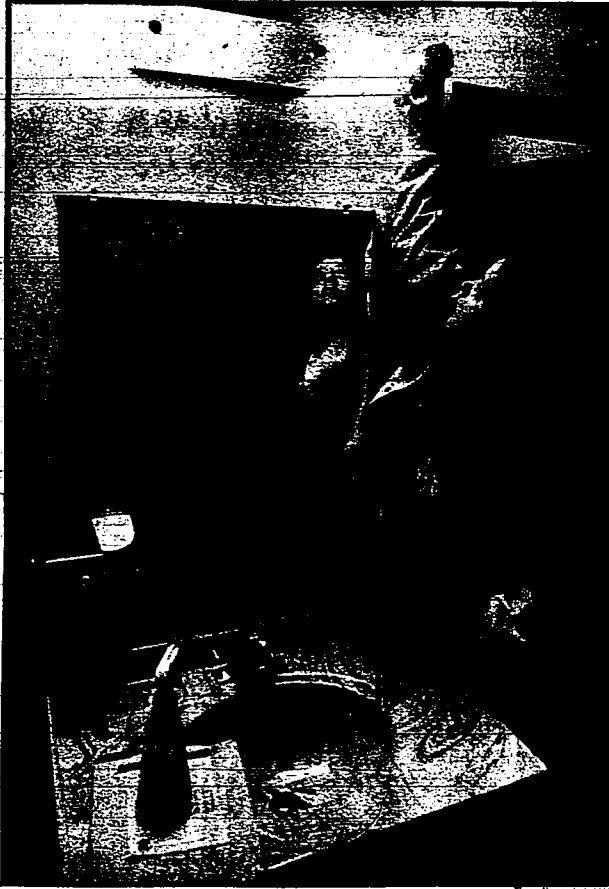

Temple works swing shift at the Clear Springs Trout Co. in Hagerman where he has learned totally new skills. Beyond that start that Projects with Industry had given him, Rahr explains.

"All of these people begin with the host industries at entry-level jobs," Rahr explains. "They receive a wage through the federal grant based on the prevailing pay scale in the industry and their individual productivity."

The on-job training averages 10 weeks after which the individual is placed with the host industry for a period of three to six months. The center for assistance in finding another job.

Buhl mulls levy for extra school activities

By URSULA FULLERTON
Times-News correspondent

BUHL—The Buhl School Board is considering an unusual supplemental levy.

Last week the board began discussing a $70,000 special levy to help support extracurricular activities such as athletics, drama and music.

Superintendent Gus Spilropoulos said that a big incentive for this one-year levy would be to take away the "pay for play" policy that the school district had been enforcing.

Under the system students paid $20 for participating in one event or $30 for participating in two. That has meant that some families with three students have been paying $90 for their children to participate in extracurricular activities.

If the levy is put on the ballot and passes, it could help with transportation to athletic tournaments, musical competitions, custodial fees, utility usage and other fees related to activities.

It would also free up the general funds to purchase more books and other academic materials and place less burden on the students' families, school officials said.

Another obvious advantage would be "more cash available for a more expanded extracurricular program," Spilropoulos said.

Board members pointed out that the public enjoys the few athletic activities available to them as spectators, so they may be willing to support the proposed levy.

Spilropoulos said that the one-year levy would cost a property owner 32 cents on $1,000 of the true market value of the home.

The board plans to vote on whether to hold the levy election April 28 at the next board meeting. If approved, it would go on the May 13 school board trustee election ballot.

Last year voters approved a $170,000 override levy and in 1985 approved a $195,000 levy. The levy plus cost-cutting measures put the district's finances in the red for the first time in five years this fall. The district entered the 1986-87 school year with a $47,425 deficit. In this year had a beginning balance of $17,350.

In other business:

Kelly Atkinson asked that the district consider naming the proposed track field after Troy Dean, Stevens, a 1986 Buhl High School graduate who drowned in a rafting accident in the region this past month. He submitted signed petitions and letters of support to the board on the proposal.

Truette Barbara Weaver suggested benches dedicated to deceased athletes. And Principal Jim Kankola said there was the possibility of a new score board for the gym being placed as a memorial to Stevens.

The board tabled Atkinson's suggestion.

Head Track Coach Keith Metzler said track and field practice lack activity and supervision because students practice in many different locations. He said they are

Teach teens to make choices about sex, drugs — specialist

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—In order to reduce teen-age pregnancies and drug abuse, adolescents must be educated and given the resources to make alternative choices in those areas, according to a specialist in family therapy.

"Young people are going to have to make choices," said Peter Scales, who spoke to more than 100 people at a two-day conference on adolescent health care Saturday during an adolescent health conference. Scales is a nationally known speaker on teen-age and young adult relations, adolescents and sexually educating.

While taking drugs or having sex may appear pleasant, young people must be taught to understand the consequences of those actions, Association, Idaho Education Association, said. But in addition, adults granting Region IV, Health Districts V, VI and VII, that responsibility must also acknowledge Children and Youth, and the Department of Health and Welfare Region V.

"The children born this year, 1987, are the first teen-agers of the 21st century — that's what we're here for," Scales said. He highlighted the importance of dealing with several choices of opening comments to teen-agers pregnant women in the country.

In the case of sexuality, people must understand that young teens choose to have sex, Scales said.

Pleasure is not the only motive, because teen-age pregnancy rates tend to be lower among students with greater aspirations, he said. And studies show between 25 and 70 percent of students of both sexes believe it's all right to have sex before they're married.

"How are you going to get them to just say no if we don't understand why they want to say yes?" Scales asked.

He said illiteracy, pregnancy, dropping out of school, substance abuse and other problems often occur together, and each problem must be addressed.

"We can't isolate the drop-out virus and in-gest it," Scales said.

Better education and access to resources such as health clinics must accompany a major shift in people's acceptance of a changing world, Scales said.

The cost of providing those resources, estimated at $3 billion, still amounts to only one-fifth of what is spent annually in the United States on programs to help families afflicted with these problems, he said.

Americans' average age of marriage in the mid-20s, he said.

If sexual intercourse is forbidden, then an alternative such as masturbation must be accepted, Scales said. Instead, masturbation has remained taboo and adults have been reluctant to discuss it for centuries, he said.

Scott Kyziole, speech "Helping Our Adolescents Create Their Future" was part of a two-day conference on adolescent health care. Other workshops featured topics such as pregnancy, parenthood, substance abuse and AIDS.

The conference was sponsored by the "Coalition for Kids," including the Idaho Nurses' Association, Idaho Education Association, Idaho Health and Welfare Region V, and the Department of Health and Welfare Region V.

Ater says HCA deal saved Walker ACT, Gooding hospital

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

GOODING—Gooding's financially ailing Walker ACT Center drifted for seven months, carrying the dead weight of a falling Gooding County Memorial Hospital, as it searched for a buyer willing to take charge of both operations.

But coming to the rescue this week, Hospital Corporation of America's financing division bought the alcohol-treatment facility and extended a rudder by managing the financially troubled hospital.

"My feeling is that without this agreement, both facilities would have ceased to exist," said Walker Center program director Gail Ater.

The center was linked to the adjacent county hospital by lease that Walker ACT Center and the facilities share laundry, dietary and housekeeping services. Occasionally, Walker Center overflow patients are treated at the hospital.

Because the two facilities shared support services, including finances that were hopelessly intertwined, three health groups each understood buying Walker Center meant also managing the hospital, Ater said.

"I think it was the only way anybody would come in and work with it," Ater said.

Two suitors received after examining the relationship of the center and the hospital.

But HCA consented to buying Walker Center and managing the county hospital for the Gooding County Board of Commissioners. Agreements reached Tuesday between Walker ACT Center and HCA for the two facilities.

Walker Center will provide support services, including housekeeping, for both facilities and charge the hospital at cost for the services.

Rumored all the finances under Walker Center's roof, directed by a new HCA comptroller, is expected to cut overhead and help the financially troubled hospital collect past-due accounts.

"That's where the major overhaul was needed for both sides anyway," Ater said.

Last September, a district judge ordered the hospital to pay the 23 people, which will swell to 40 as center nearly $200,000 that had not been transferred to the center during 1985 and 1986 under a cooperative agreement between the facilities.

County commissioners hope HCA's changes, such as computerizing reports, little change is expected under the new owners.

"I don't anticipate any changes month and housing only a handful of right now from a treatment or patients a day. Consolidating support services under Walker Center, vice president George Bone said and then paying only for services the hospital needs, is expected to help cut hospital overhead and expenses.

The Walker Center is successful, serving an average of 15 patients a day in the 24-bed facility. It employs 23 people, which will swell to 40 as the center takes over food preparation, maintenance and housekeeping for both facilities, Ater said.

But beyond administrative changes, such as computerizing reports, little change is expected under the new owners.

"I don't anticipate any changes month and housing only a handful of right now from a treatment or patients a day. Consolidating support services under Walker Center, vice president George Bone said

Tuesday on the eve of buying the center.

Ater said the 10-year-old center, the oldest independent alcohol treatment center in Idaho, may also expand after a few months of adjusting to the new ownership.

New programs for adolescents and people close to alcoholics are two programs Ater said he's discussed with HCA.

"What we need to do is bring a bona fide adolescent program to Gooding. A full 29-day program for adolescents of alcoholics, who are often also addicted to something, will also be examined."

1 family, 1 room 1 school

O'NEIL BASIN, Nev. — In the high, ranching country of Nevada, just across the Idaho border, sits the O'Neil Schoolhouse, surrounded by a dirt-packed play yard and sage-covered buttes. It is one of Elko County's seven country schools.

But in a county where there are more one- and two-room schools than in any other county in Nevada or Idaho, the roster at this school is particularly brief. It reads: Trina Stokes, Clay Stokes, Kammie Stokes, LaRon Stokes, Blair Stokes. It is a one-room, one-teacher, one-family school.

"Really the only difference is they are at school together instead of at home," says Superintendent Charles Knight in Elko.

The Stokes children began attending the O'Neil School last spring after transferring from the Valley School District in Jerome County. They range from Trina, who in seventh grade stands between childhood and adulthood, to first-grader Blair, the baby of the family, who looks to his older brothers and sisters before participating in group events. In between are Clay, a sixth-grader who likes to hunt squirrels; Kammie, a quiet, soft-spoken fourth-grader; and LaRon, a friendly, high-spirited second-grader.

"You learn more. You get more help from the teacher," says Trina, about the school. She likes it here — wouldn't want to go to school anywhere else right now, she says. "But I miss the kids," she says a little wistfully.

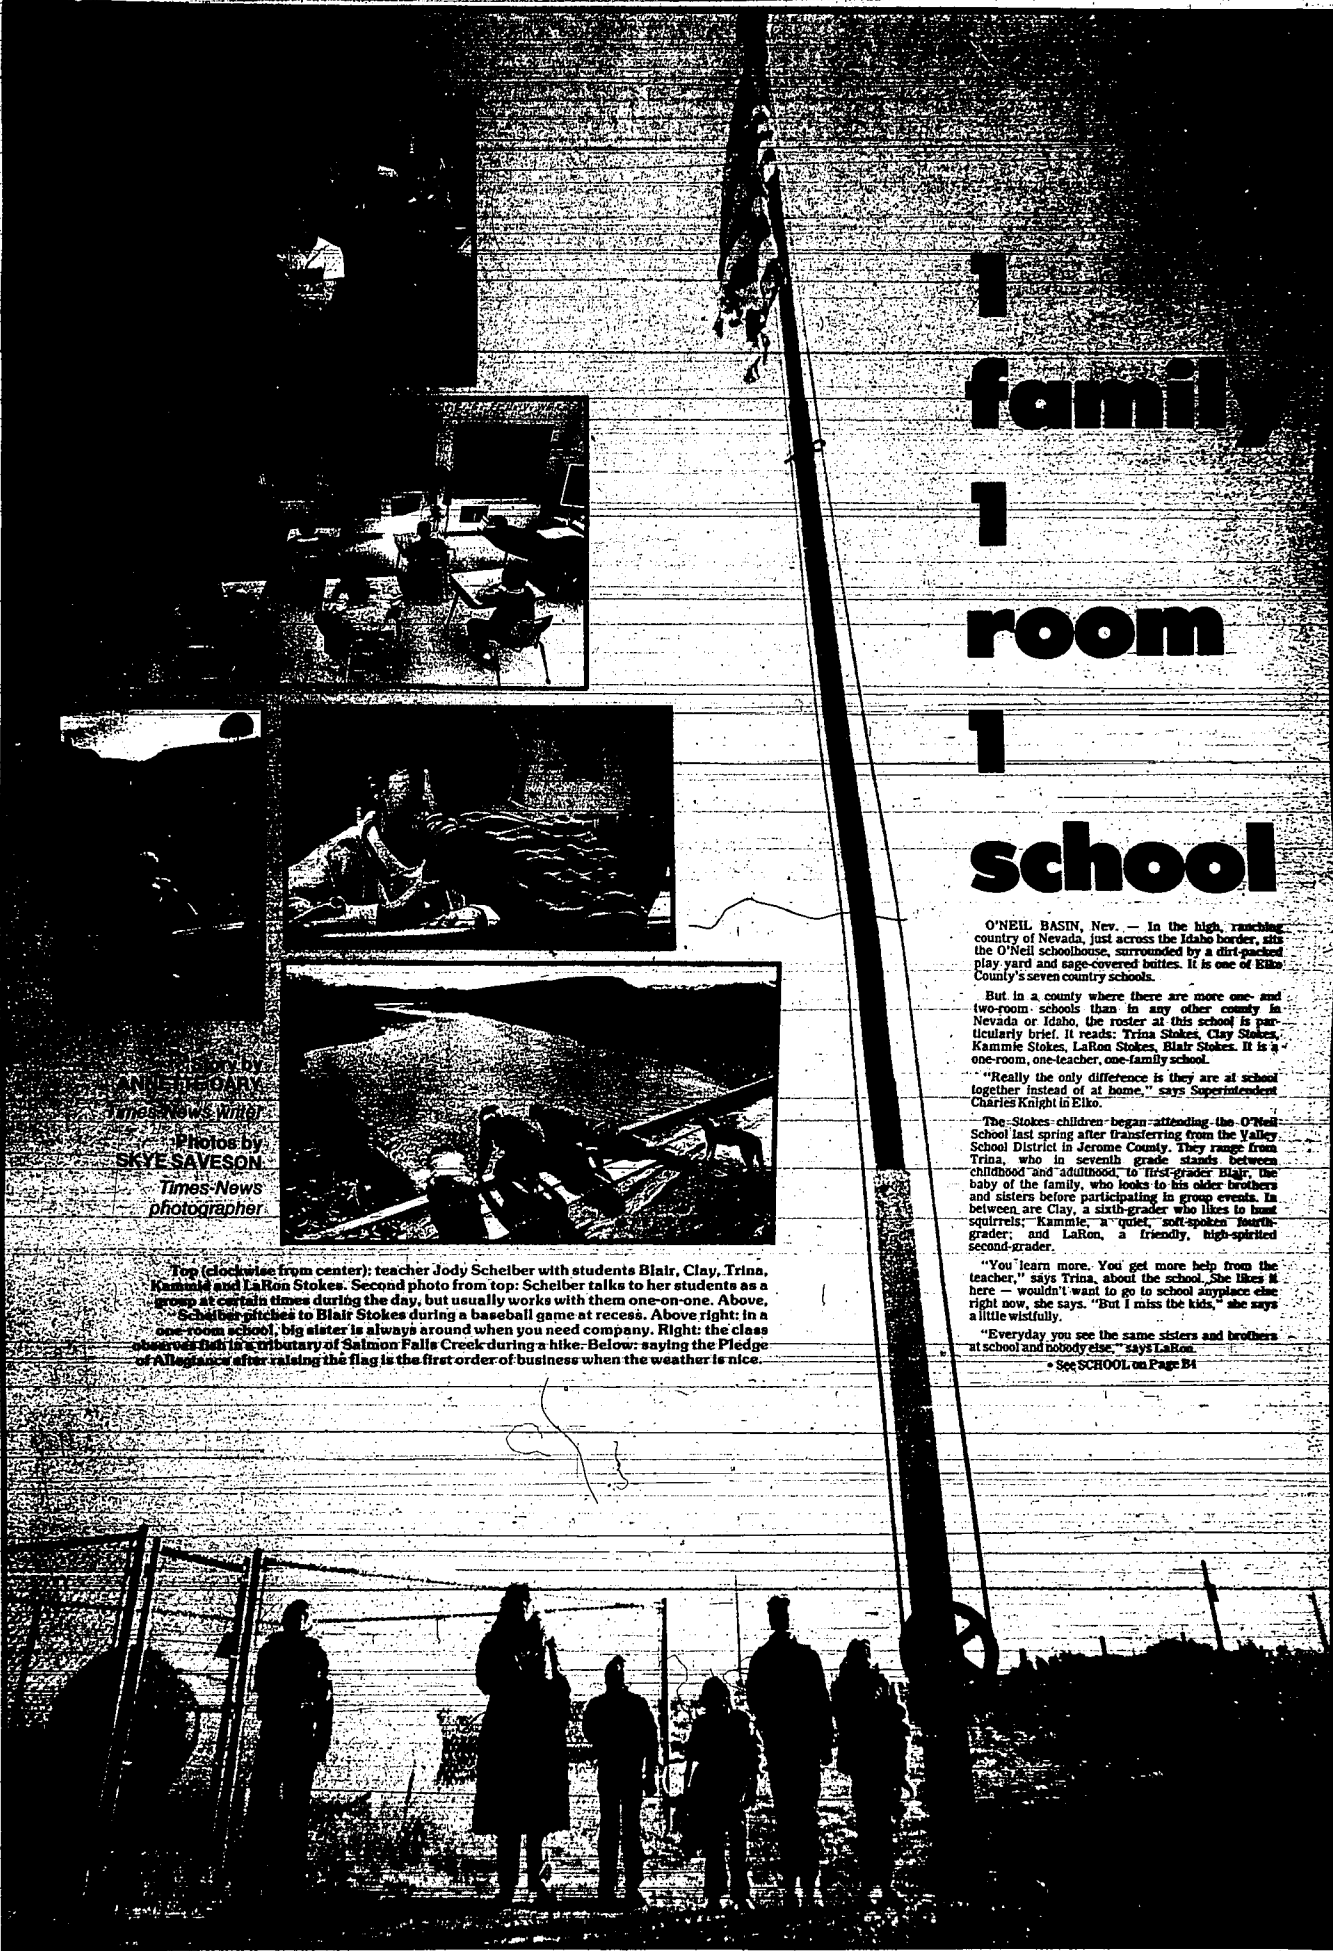

"Everyday you see the same sisters and brothers at school and nobody else," says LaRon.

...sisters and brothers at school and nobody else," says Larson.

Most of those in the O'Neil community seem to relish the solitude.

Across the border in Idaho, a former teacher at the one-room schoolhouse in Three Creek, Susan Roy, complained that her privacy was invaded by the many evening meetings held at the school beside her living quarters.

Not so at O'Neil. Teacher Jody Scheiber, who lives in a basement apartment at the school, says the community has gathered twice a week at the schoolhouse in the two years she has taught here. The first time was the 1985 Christmas pageant and the second time was the 1986 Christmas pageant, when she played the part of Santa Claus and the children played the men on the O'Neil ranches.

The community also gets together for an annual company picnic. The ranch says Quentin Kelley, the manager of the Bell Branch ranches, which provide work for seven families on the 100,000 acres of the O'Neil Home Ranch, the main ranch and the Sun Creek Ranch, all in the O'Neil Basin.

The solitude of the basin suits him fine, he says. Neither of his sons have ever lived in town. "My kids had a chance to live in town during high school, but didn't," he says. Instead they commuted 90 miles from another ranch on a more accessible road.

His granddaughter will attend the O'Neil school next year. Kelley expects her to get the same basic education her father did.

"It's good, better than any town school," he says. "It's pretty near one of them. They may not read a lot of things but they pick up a lot of other things. You go to school to read and write. Sports should be secondary."

Scheiber also relishes the solitude of the O'Neil Basin. The telephone lines are maintained by the ranchers and there are days when the service is out. There was no television until this year.

She didn't miss it. She reads and likes to hike and fish, she says, even though "the outdoor lifestyle is more fun than anything else."

"I'm anxious for my parents to come out (from Indiana)," she says. "I think they'd really be surprised. They'd think I couldn't live like this in a isolated place."

Stories of weather and rattlesnakes are favorites in O'Neil.

Every year a rattler or two are killed in front of the ranch house near the schoolyard and the Stokes' step-father, "ranch hand," was bitten by one last year before Thanksgiving.

As for the weather, in the spring the wind coats the schoolroom with dust daily, and in the winter it blows snow. School continues in January because the Stokes live about 100 yards from the schoolyard, the school may be the only place Scheiber and the children - Jody, Kelley - says. And he's seen a temperature dip to 46 degrees below zero.

The Stokes children say a shopping trip to Twin Falls is a treat, but add they don't often get to because there is not room in the car for everyone.

They lead an outdoor life on the six hours to drive in the winter, they go skating in the snow. They go fishing, fly fishing, kite flying, go fishing, play with the dogs and sometimes get to ride the ranch horses.

Scheiber does what she can to keep a normal school atmosphere.

There may be just five of them. The students line up to go in and out of the one-room school building. The children begin the day reciting the "Pledge of Allegiance," even though they may do it in a field where the school's only flag flies.

The students bring their teacher to the end of the day, but she also takes time to put an ink stamp for their parents to see on the hand of each student who has behaved well.

The stamp is probably a moot exercise, Scheiber admits. With four brothers and sisters in the same class, parents are sure to hear of any child's misdeeds.

On Fridays the students are all required to have a story to tell or an object to display for about and tell, even if their sisters and brothers are already familiar with it. She stands firm on the exercise, even though the subject is met with groans.

"I'm running out of things," says Kammie.

Physical education, part of the Elko County schools curriculum, is held in the one-room schoolhouse with the chairs pushed back on cold days. On warm days, the children troop outside, often to play baseball, keeping the bases filled with "ghost runners" while two- and three-member teams alternate at bat.

Or the students may take turns leading their brothers and sisters in jumping jacks and toe touches as the ranch dogs look on. On spring days the schoolyard can sometimes be seen from schoolhouse.

Teaching at a one-room schoolhouse is not easy, Scheiber says. Her mornings are spent judging separate phonics, math, spelling and reading lessons for the five children.

"Lots of teachers comment, 'You only have five students - you have it so easy,'" she says. "But with the same families, the same kids, you can't use the same ideas. You have to keep coming up with new ones."

The superintendent agrees, teaching all subject areas to all grades is, he says, "All of the class activities become magnified in preparation. The longer a family and teacher are together, the more of a challenge it is for the kids and student. If a child hears the same eight-grade lesson being taught for ghost-eight years, he knows it before he reaches the eighth grade."

Having all the children from the same family makes the job of teaching at the O'Neil School more challenging, but he's sold on the benefits of the one-room school.

In the last decade, the seven smallest schools in the district have produced two National Merit scholars, a testimony to the advantages of one-on-one teaching and learning, he says.

The eighth grade is the last taught at the O'Neil School. After another year of school Trina will have to leave the Basin. She says she may live with her grandmother in Twin Falls and attend the Twin Falls school.

There are likely to be as many people in a single classroom as there are in the entire O'Neil Basin now. And she can bet each school day won't end as it does in O'Neil, with a hug for the teacher.

Soviets to expel 4 French diplomats, 2 businessmen

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said Saturday it would expel four French diplomats and two businessmen in retaliation for the expulsion of three Soviets from France after an alleged high-technology spy ring was uncovered there.

The Foreign Ministry said in a statement the six were being expelled for activities inconsistent with their status — a diplomatic euphemism for spying.

The expulsions would have to leave within eight days and the other three within an unspecified time.

Tass, the official news agency, said the Foreign Ministry on Saturday summoned the French ambassador to Moscow, Yves Pagiez, and handed him a note protesting the earlier expulsion of three Soviet diplomats from France.

It reported the note said the Soviets were expelled "without any proof of the accusation of activity not corresponding to their function and status."

"The Soviet side judged this action as an open unfriendly action having a clear political coloring and having the goal of poisoning Soviet-French relations," Tass said.

The expulsions came a month before French President Jacques Chirac is scheduled to visit the Soviet Union.

One of those ordered expelled, Embassy Counselor Pierre de Bruchard, said when contacted at home: "I have no reaction. I am a civil servant and the reaction will come from my government."

In Paris, the French Foreign Ministry declined comment on the Soviet expulsions.

France ordered the three Soviets expelled Thursday, but did not give their names or say why they were ordered to leave.

However, the expulsion order was assumed to be linked to the recent arrests of seven people in France accused of gathering information on Europe's Ariane space rocket and other advanced technology for an East bloc country.

French news reports have said that the group's contact with the Soviet bloc was Valery Kovner, a deputy air attaché in the Soviet Embassy in Paris. They also have said Kovner was one of the three Soviets ordered expelled, and that seven Soviets altogether were implicated in the spy ring.

Soviet officials have denied involvement in any spying activity, and said the French bear responsibility for the retaliatory expulsions.

"It was pointed out to the French side on more than one occasion that a number of French workers in Moscow did not observe the rules of conduct of foreign representatives in the USSR that they had engaged in activities incompatible with their status," the Soviet Foreign Ministry said.

"In these conditions, the Soviet side deems it necessary to demand that a number of French representatives leave the Soviet Union," it said.

The French citizens ordered expelled were identified as Bruchard, Yves Delamare, a second secretary at the embassy; Anita Pinhas Davidenko, a cultural affairs attaché; Capt. Pierre Laprenet, an aide in the defense attaché; and businessmen Serge Bricot and Patrick Chebroux.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has engaged in high-profile expulsions with the United States, Britain and France since coming to power in March 1985.

Indonesian plane hit by lightning; blast kills 34

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A passenger jet of the Indonesian airline Garuda exploded while trying to land at Sumatra's Medan airport Saturday, killing 34 people, an airport official said.

He said the plane was hit by lightning which made a drop in its altitude, and that the jet struck a high-voltage wire near the end of the runway.

Eleven of the 45 people aboard the DC-9 jet survived, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

It was raining and heavily overcast at the time of the accident, about 2:30 p.m., the official said.

He said three Japanese, including one of those killed, and a Singaporean were among foreigners aboard. The official said the Singaporean, Ng Chong Sen, was among the survivors.

The pilot, Sumirat, also survived, the official said.

Medan, with a population of about 500,000, is in northern Sumatra.

The flight originated from Banda Aceh, on the northern tip of Sumatra, one of Indonesia's main islands. The plane was scheduled to stop in Medan and then fly on to Jakarta, 425 miles away.

No further details were available.

Habre: ready for peace with Libya

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — President Hissene Habre joined his people Saturday in celebrating Chad's sweeping military victory over Libyan forces and said he was ready to open immediate peace talks with Libya's Muammar Gadhafi.

"Chad wants peace. If the Libyan regime wants to open a dialogue with us in order to find a peaceful solution to the conflict, we are ready at any moment," Habre said at a joint news conference with visiting President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire.

"But we are not prepared to fold our arms and allow Gadhafi to attack and occupy our territory, employ terrorism against us and try to surround us by subverting our neighbors," he said.

Mobutu flew from Kinshasa to join in official ceremonies marking the lightning campaign that routed the Libyans from most of Chad's northern desert, which they had occupied for five years. Zaire troops had fought with Chad in the past against the Libyan occupiers.

Habre and Mobutu were cheered by thousands of Chadians who danced in tribal robes and sang patriotic songs.

Pope urges Chile peace

PUNTA ARENAS, Chile (AP) — Hours after an anti-government demonstration violently upset his plans for peace, Pope John Paul II pleaded anew on Saturday for reconciliation in troubled Chile.

"You must eradicate all types of violence. You must find concrete means of creating a true culture of peace and harmony," John Paul told a crowd of tens of thousands in the southern city of Punta Arenas.

Chilean Roman Catholic Church leaders labeled his "senseless" disturbances Friday night in a large park in Santiago, the capital.

Foes of President August Pinochet's 13½-year-old rightist military rule have been provoking clashes with security forces since the pontiff arrived in Chile Wednesday, but Friday night's clash was the worst so far in the trip.

"We protest against this offense against the Holy Father... this incredible attack which caused injuries to the police, to papal guards, journalists, priests and the Chilean people," said a note signed by Archbishop Juan Francisco Fresno of Santiago and Archbishop Bernardino Pinera, head of Chile's Conference of Bishops.

Paper: Group wants a ransom for Waite

LONDON (AP) — A newspaper on Saturday quoted Iranian sources as saying a group of Shiite Muslim extremists has indicated it is willing to release Iranian Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite for a ransom.

Waite disappeared in Lebanon on Jan. 20, and there have been conflicting reports about his fate. No group has claimed responsibility for holding him.

John Lyttle, a spokesman for the Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Runcie, said no ransom request has been received and no ransom would be paid for Waite's freedom.

Soviet ship hides hashish

TRIESTE, Italy (AP) — Customs police on Saturday confiscated 400 kilograms (880 pounds) of high-quality Lebanese hashish from a Soviet ship docked in this northern port city, another Russian vessel.

Col. Giuseppe Gervasi, the local police chief, said the drugs were found in the false bottom of a container filled with German rugs unloaded from the ship, General Gorbatorov, which came from Beirut.

Police opened the container after receiving intelligence that German carpets coming from Lebanon, he said, adding that the hashish has the Italian black market value of $2.3 million.

No word on American hostage said dying

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — No word emerged Saturday on the fate of hostage Alan Stein, two days after a fellow American captive was in a videotaped message that Stein was ill and near death.

The (police) department isn't even sure that Stein is seriously ill, said a police spokesman, who refused to be identified in keeping with standard regulations.

Jesse Turner, 39, of Boise, Idaho, said in a message released Thursday by the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine that Stein could die in a few hours.

Stein, 47, of Boston, and Turner, 37, of Boston, were taken to Beirut University College for the robbery of an Arab professor in Israel.

Robert Pollack, 33, of New York City, and Anthony Slight, 30, of Dallas, Texas, were taken to Beirut with President John F. Kennedy in the United States, were kidnapped from the campus on Jan. 24 by gunmen disguised as police.

Turner said in the videotape that Stein's "life will be over in a few hours... despite the treatment he's receiving and the continuous care by the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, it's going to save his life."

He urged Israel and the United States to fulfill kidnappers' demands.

Shelk Mohammed Mohdi Shamseddine, Lebanon's most senior Shiite Muslim cleric, pleaded Friday for the release of Stein, and other American hostages.

The kidnappers are believed to be Shiite extremists loyal to Iran.

It is unclear... This is an Islamic matter that we do not we know of... In a different videotaped message released earlier, Turner said Stein was suffering from high blood pressure and breathing difficulties.

Reagan and Mulroney's woes may overshadow trade issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The political woes of President Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney threaten to overshadow environmental and trade issues when the two meet Sunday in Ottawa for a summit without drama.

At the top of the formal agenda are free trade talks between Canada and the United States, acid rain that Canadians say is drifting across the international border, and poisoning herbicides and pesticides used on Canada's Arctic waters.

The two countries differ on each issue.

Canada complains that even while negotiators seek agreement by the end of the year, the U.S. Canadian duty-free trade area, Reagan has imposed a 36 percent duty on Canadian cedar shingles and has taken other actions against Canadian exports including softwood lumber.

Canada seeks an agreement incorporating a timetable for reducing the heavy U.S. emissions of coal-fired generators and smelters that cross the border as acid rain. The Reagan administration maintains more research is needed before a timetable can be established, and for now the policy is "go slow."

Canada claims sovereignty over the Northwest passage, the avenue of access to the Canadian Arctic. The United States claims a right of international rules of transit passage, and heightened Canadian concerns by sending an icebreaker, the Polar Sea, through the passage two years ago.

Mulroney, whose Progressive Conservatives have the lowest standing ever recorded by a Canadian party while in power, is accused by his opponents of knowing that Reagan is expected to take a tougher stance than in their two previous summits.

"There will be some plain talk," Canadian embassy spokesman John Fieldhouse told reporters last week.

Canadian Ambassador Alan Godley added that when Mulroney has made his case, "we hope the Canadian people will see that he is an effective prime minister."

A recent poll by Environics Research of Canada put the Progressive Conservatives in third place among Canadian political parties with 24 percent support, compared with 49 percent for the Liberals and 34 for the New Democrats.

Mulroney's personal popularity was down to 23 percent, a drop of 47 points from his standing two months after coming to power in 1984.

Mulroney must call national elections by September 1988.

Reagan, buffeted by disclosures that secret arms sales to Iran were plotted in the White House and money diverted without his knowledge to aid Nicaraguan rebels, is also down sharply in opinion polls.

The Ottawa trip will be his first out of the country since the scandal broke in November.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater denied that the trip is any test of Reagan's stature on the international stage.

"I don't think the president needs a test," Fitzwater said. "His stature is conferred by six years of activity."

Nevertheless, although long scheduled, the trip fits neatly with the new White House strategy of exposing Reagan in situations where he is seen as an active, aggressive executive.

That strategy hit a snag last week when the president made an unusual personal pilgrimage to Capitol Hill to stave off a Senate vote to override his veto of a highway bill, and lost.

No major announcements or agreements are expected in the two days of talks.

"Nobody-in-town-is-working joint statements, joint announcements. It's going to be really a review of the relationship," said a senior administrative official, speaking on the condition of not being identified.

On trade issues, the official said, "I would expect that the president and the prime minister will sort of look at it as a status report. I am back to describing a summit without drama, a lot of businesslike, workmanlike sessions to look at the agenda."

On acid rain, this source said, "You can't even get people to agree on how you measure the stuff; so it's go slow."

Reagan announced last month that he would seek a $2.5 billion clean-coal technology research program. Canadians say this is nothing more than what he had agreed to last year but failed to follow up on in his budget proposal in January.

Acid rain protest set for Reagan arrival

OTTAWA (AP) — Thousands of demonstrators protesting what they say is U.S.-generated acid rain are planning to converge on Parliament Hill Sunday to protest Reagan's arrival for a summit with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

Church leaders, environmentalists and opposition parties are urging Mulroney to insist that Reagan set a timetable for mandatory reductions in U.S. smogstack and car-exhaust emissions — the airborne pollution Canada blames for 50 percent of its acid rain.

In background briefings before the 24-hour summit, U.S. officials told reporters that Reagan will go no further than to pledge support for a 25 percent U.S. program of clean-coal research and demonstration projects. Reagan presented the $2.5 billion plan to Congress on March 18, but lawmakers have not acted on it yet.

"At this rate of progress, transboundary acid pollution will not be reduced by one ounce well into the 1990s," Charles Caccia, environment spokesman for the opposition Liberal Party, complained to Mulroney's Conservative government in Parliament Friday.

Environment Minister Don Mazankowski replied that Canada is not content with research and will press its demand for a binding, Canadian-U.S. agreement on reductions in sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions.

Canada has embarked on a program to cut its own emissions 50 percent by 1994 and wants the United States to do the same.

"So, the government says, will endanger 300,000 lakes."

About 14,000 lakes in eastern Canada have already suffered multiple life because of acid damage, and maple sugar producers in Quebec blame airborne pollution for killing forests.

China troops reduced, says senior official

BEIJING (AP) — A senior Chinese military official said Saturday the goal of reducing China's military personnel by 1 million troops has basically been completed.

Deputy Chief of General Staff Xu Xiang said at a news conference that the People's Liberation Army plans to reintroduce ranks for its officers and troops. Ranks were abolished during the 1966-76 "Cultural Revolution."

Xu said the drive to reduce by 1 million troops the world's largest standing army, which had more than 4 million at its peak, has gone "very smoothly." He also said the ratio of officers to soldiers, long top-heavy in favor of officers, has become more rational.

The government announced the troop reduction plan in 1985 and said it would be achieved in one year. But the cutbacks extended into a second year, reportedly because of resistance from older officers reluctant to give up the benefits coming with their positions.

Europeans back Paris accord to keep exchange rates steady

KNOXKE-HEIST, Belgium (AP) — European finance ministers said Saturday that signs of a weakening world economy do not threaten the Paris agreement by six major industrial powers to halt the decline of the U.S. dollar.

Finance ministers and central bank chiefs of the 12 European Economic Community nations discussed the issue in a full day of talks at this North Sea resort. They sought to align their views on key issues to be debated this week in Washington at a series of meetings on international financial problems.

Nigel Lawson, the British chancellor of the exchequer, indicated to reporters that he saw no signs that the Paris agreement of Feb. 22 was in danger. He said all the European ministers believe it is working well.

"I was very glad to see it (the Paris accord) was widely welcomed by all," he said.

The Paris agreement by finance ministers from the United States, Britain, West Germany, France, Japan and Canada commits the six countries to work together to keep international exchange rates near existing levels. It was the first time the Reagan administration had formally agreed to cooperate to keep the dollar steady.

Exchange rates were stable for a month following the Paris deal, but on March 30 the dollar resumed its downward slide — hitting a record low against the Japanese yen — amid concern about heightening trade tensions between Tokyo and Washington.

Financial markets also have been unsettled by signs that world economic expansion this year will be weaker than previously thought.

AIDS testing draws protest

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — About 10,000 people, some toting inflated condoms, marched through Munich Saturday to protest the Bavarian government's plan to start mandatory testing of groups with a high risk of catching AIDS.

Protesters carried banners saying, "We Homosexuals Protect Ourselves," "Who's Protecting Us Against AIDS Policy?" and "Against the Police State — Bavaria is Renouncing Dechau."

Dechau is the site of a former Nazi death camp outside Munich.

The conservative Bavarian state government announced in February that it would begin compulsory testing of all known homosexual prostitutes. Infraverted drug abusers and prison inmates for the AIDS virus.

Civil service job applicants also were to be included in the controversial plan aimed at curbing the spread of AIDS.

Clemens reports to Red Sox

By DAVE OHARA
The Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Roger Clemens rejoined the Boston Red Sox Saturday after a 90-day walkout, ending a bitter salary dispute settled by the intervention of baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth as a mediator.

"I'm glad to be back and put my name down in the lineup," Clemens said after pitching six hitless innings for Boston's minor league team in an exhibition game against Harvard University.

"I might have to take my lumps in the first couple of starts, but I'm ready," the big right-hander said.

"My velocity is fine. I just have to get my location down," Clemens said. "I fell good, but it's hard to evaluate yourself against these kids. I did manage to keep the ball down low when I wanted to."

"He threw the ball very well," Boston pitching coach Bill Fischer said. "You could tell he's been throwing regularly since he left the team. He had command of all his pitches. Now we'll see how he feels tomorrow (Sunday) before we make plans for him."

"I'm delighted," Red Sox co-owner Haywood Sullivan said after watching the 1988 American League Most Valuable Player and Cy Young Award winner. "I think we can find a seat for him on our charter flight to Milwaukee this evening (Saturday)."

Clemens faced a minimum of 13 batters against Harvard. He struck out 15 and retired six on infield grounders. The other two batters walked. One was caught stealing and the other was picked off first by Clemens.

"I'm not ready to pitch. I want to get started right away," Clemens said earlier at a news conference before the Red Sox broke training camp.

Randy Hendricks, Clemens' agent, said that "a number of issues" remained to be resolved in a new two-year contract, but the "important thing is for Roger to get on with the season."

Clemens said he hoped to accompany the team on a chartered flight Saturday night to Milwaukee, where Boston opens the season Monday, but the Red Sox said it depended on his performance against Harvard. Obviously, his performance was convincing.

Fischer, gloomy over pitcher Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd's trip to Boston for examinations of an ailing shoulder, broke into a big grin when he saw Clemens.

"Now we're right there," Fischer said in looking ahead to Boston's defense of the AL pennant. "We've just improved our chances by 24 games."

Clemens, who had a 24-4 record in his second full season while pitching the Red Sox to their first championship in 11 years in 1986, appeared as fit as when he walked out of training camp — March 6 — when contract negotiations broke down.

"I'm very happy that things are starting to work out," he said. "Now I want to get back to doing what I do best, playing baseball."

As for the contract, Clemens said, "As for the contract, Clemens said, 'I'm happy where we're at. The (the Red Sox) are ready to recognize what I did last year.'"

Ineligible for arbitration because he was 30 days shy of being a three-year major leaguer.

Declo girls stun Pilots at Andrus

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

HAZLETON — The Declo girls delivered a rare District 4 track setback to Glens Ferry here Saturday to win the distaff division of the Monte Andrus Memorial Track Meet.

But the defending district champion Glens Ferry boys held up just fine.

Coach Jay Darrington's Hornets picked off a lot of auxiliary points and won three of the four relays to steal Glens Ferry's usual depth thunder and win 163-144.

In the boys' division, the Pilots outdistanced runner Valley, 143-115.

"I'm glad this is over," said Darrington after his team had secured the 100-meter dash. "It's the first time we've beaten Glens Ferry ever."

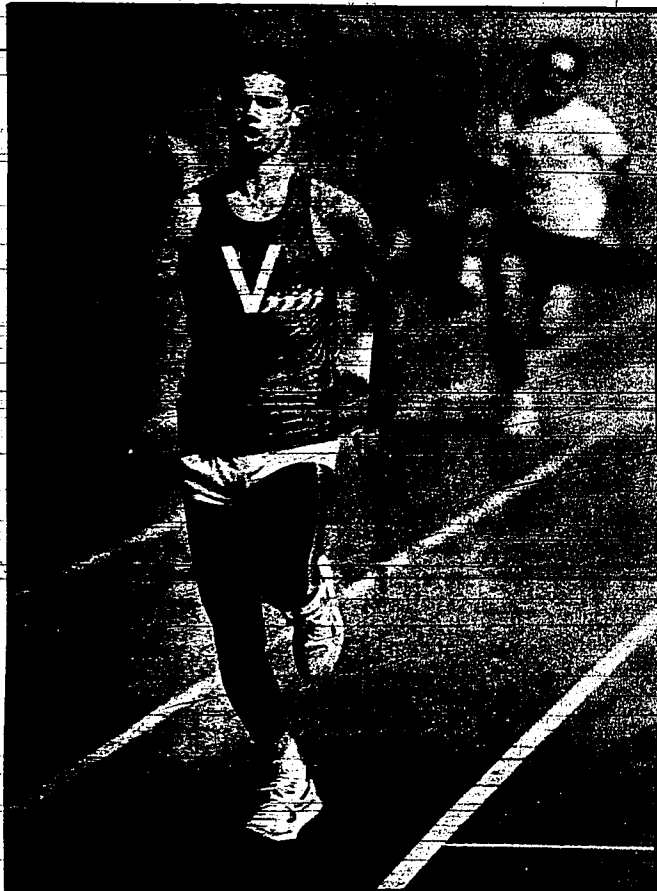

He said the victory was due to the Declo girls' cohesiveness.

"They all worked hard and it takes them all," Darrington said, "every little point from sixth place on up."

Declo did outscore Glens Ferry 6-4 in first places, with the relays providing the difference.

Most of the teams will participate in the Magic Valley Classic Thursday and Friday at Jerome.

Eagles win own tourney

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS — Absent all three of its regular outfielders, the College of Southern Idaho hammered Utah Valley 18-5 here Saturday to win the championship of the CSI/Treasure Valley-Community College Invitational baseball tournament.

The Eagles finished the three-day, eight-team round-robin event, which was held at Frontier Field and at the TVCC diamond in Ontario, Ore., with a 4-0 record.

Early Saturday Ricks College defeated Eastern Utah 6-3 in a tourney game at Frontier.

"It was a good win under the circumstances," said Eagle Coach Jim Walker of his high school's 15th rout of Wolverines. "I would have liked to see our guys be more aggressive at the plate when we got away. Our players have a tendency to coast when we get a lead; they don't say 'let me get one more hit.'"

The victory was the seventh straight for CSI, now 17-0 in the season pending a Tuesday afternoon double-header against Snow College here. That sets start at 2 p.m.

With outfielders Billy Satterfield and Kirk Slater sitting on the bench with injuries they suffered earlier in the tournament and outfielder Errol Shriver suspended for his part in an altercation with a Lewis-Clark State pitcher-Friday night—the Eagles still managed to wear out three Utah Valley pitchers, sparked by freshman catcher Chris Hanks' 11th home run of the season with two aboard in the third that gave CSI a 3-0 lead. The Eagles also got a pinch-hit homer from freshman Chris Betrum to lead off the ninth.

Hanks finished the day 4-for-4 at the plate, with a double in addition to his home run. He had six RBIs.

Boise State wins All-Idaho meet; CSI's Johnson jumps 7-2

BOISE (AP) — Boise State has come away with its third straight victory in the All-Idaho track and field championships without scarcely drawing a breath.

Bronco men's coach Ed Jacoby once again must pursue the elusive Big Sky championship after the flush of victory in the All-Idaho meet.

"Certainly we know what we've got to do, but we can't screw around. We're basically balanced across the board," he said.

BSU's men scored 101 points on their home turf, leaving Idaho State second in the fight for second place. The Bengals prevailed over Idaho's sprinters, scoring 62 1/2 points, to the Vandals' 60 1/2.

Ricks College was fourth at 33 1/2 and the College of Southern Idaho took fifth with 28.

Nampa upends Meridian for Mini-Cassia Easter tourney championship

By RON GATES
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Nampa pounded out 22 hits in claiming an 18-4 win over Meridian and the championship of the Mini-Cassia Easter baseball tournament Saturday evening.

Only Nampa among Magic Valley teams gained a semifinal berth, that coming at the expense of Burley 3-0 on the Bobcats home field. The Spartans, however, were stung in one game later on a narrow 13-12 loss to Meridian.

In the day's other opener, Madison on the Minico diamond, Pappan captured its first victory of the season 5-7 over Twin Falls.

Nampa, which entered the two-day event with six consecutive one-run wins, earned its shot at the crown by eliminating the Bobcats 5-1 in Meridian.

Meridian avenged an earlier loss at the hands of the Warriors, Nampa flexed its offensive muscles.

It was the first loss in 14 games this season for the Warriors.

— Dave Wilkins, the fifth man in the Bulldog lineup, cracked a three-run homer and, after a scoreless sixth, scored on a sacrifice fly.

The Warriors, who fell to 1-4 overall, rallied for a pair of runs in the bottom of the third inning, but possed their only serious threat in the more than offset a second Bobcat fifth when faced with the possibility score.

"A high, major league pop-up to shortstop and we had to try for it in the wind," said Burley Coach Dean Satterfield. "We weren't able to make the play. If we had (Condie) would have never got up."

Like his Burley counterpart, Minico Coach Corby Bridges expressed satisfaction with his squad's effort against Meridian.

"That's a great team and we looked good at the plate," he said. "We hit some of our best pitching, but we really need to solidify our outfield work on the fly balls of the bat."

In that game the Spartans rallied from a 5-0 deficit to gate the lead-off run for Meridian in the sixth. The Warriors' double drove in three runs and centerfielder Jack Bagley sent two more across on a wind-blown double.

Three singles produced four runs and Meridian regained a lead they held for twininnings before the Spartans banged out five hits and many runs to take a 12-10 advantage. Lonny Rieber halted the winning run for Meridian from third base in the sixth when a pickoff throw went away at second.

Considerably less satisfied was Twin Falls Bill Ingram.

"It's hard to score eight runs in two innings," he said. "We had the bases loaded three times in the last two innings and the people at the plate that we wanted, we just didn't get the runs in."

Although the Bruins hit the ball hard over the first three innings, most of those went directly to Bobcat catchers — Offensively Madison, out hit 10-4 by Twin Falls, made the most of those passes to lead 9-1 after five innings. At that point the Bruin offense clicked.

Simpson takes Greensboro Open lead

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
The Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Scott Simpson warmed up on the back nine with a trio of birdies to finish with a 3-under-par 69 and no possession of first place Saturday after the third round of the Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament.

Simpson, who tied for fourth at last week's Tournament Players Championship, has a three-hole lead of 4-under-par 212 after watching potential leaders—and challengers—fade into the pack.

Tom Byrum, starting Saturday's cold round at 3-under-par 64, fired an even-par 72 to go to 3-under-par 213, just one shot back of the leader. Byrum's best effort this year has been a tie for 15th at Pebble Beach.

While the tournament was promoted as North Carolina's spring spectacular, the 77 golfers left for the final two rounds had to deal with a temperature of 39 degrees when they teed off just after noon. Wind gusts to 30 mph, the wind chill factor dropped the temperature to 21 degrees.

The day started with a morning snow shower as golfers attempted to complete a second round delayed by rain.

"I've never hit a golf ball in the snow before," Simpson said. "It was pretty neat for me. Being born and raised in San Diego, we don't get snow—we don't get days this cold."

Simpson started the day at 1-under-par and remained there through his first 10 holes. Ten-foot birdie putts at his 11th and 18th holes, and a five-foot birdie putt at 16 moved him into first.

"When I did hit some bad shots, I made some real good saves," Simpson said. "I'd love to just get out there tomorrow and play a real good round. Anything under par was real good today."

Byrum started on the back nine and had three straight bogeys. He broke the slide with a three-foot birdie putt on his fourth hole. A four-foot birdie putt one hole later sent him out in even-par 36.

On the back side, Byrum had one birdie following a 15-foot putt at 12. To complete the round, Byrum saved par on four of his last six holes.

"I haven't played this cold in a long time," Byrum said. "My face was numb the whole last nine holes."

After botching 7-under-par with three birdies on three of his first six holes, GGO champion and second-round leader Danny Edwards bogeyed his next two holes and finished the front nine at 5-under-par.

Clarence Rose, a North Carolina native looking for his first victory on the PGA Tour, birdied his first two holes to move to 6-under-par at the start of the round. But as the temperature began to drop, Rose ran into more trouble. A triple-bogey on his 17th hole dropped him back to 215 with a third-round 75.

Also at 215 were Payne Stewart, Brian Clair and Gene Sauer. The start of Saturday's round was delayed because of heavy rains, thunder and lightning on Friday, which halted the second round and left 75 golfers out on the course. The second round was completed Saturday morning as snow fell on the Forest Oaks Country Club course around 7:30 a.m. EST.

T.C. Chen, the first-round leader with a 68, ballooned to a 76 in the second round and was at even-par 144 at the start of the third round. He shot a 77 Saturday for a three-day total of 221.

Team roping today at Jackpot

JACKPOT — A team roping will be held this afternoon at Cactus Pete's Dinner Arena.

Ropings will begin at 1 p.m. at two steers for $5, then three steers for $8 then two steers for $7, one roper over 40.

Federico to meet players

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls Cowboys' American Legion baseball Coach Mike Federico will meet with returning and prospective players tonight.

Federico will attend the monthly meeting of the Legion boosters, scheduled for 6:30 p.m. in the conference room at the KMYT TV studios, 1110 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Anyone planning to try out for the team this summer should attend tonight's session.

Co-ed sponsor fees due Monday

TWIN FALLS — Sponsor fees are due Monday for teams planning to play in the Twin Falls Co-ed Softball League this summer.

The fees must be turned in at a meeting Monday night at 7:30 in the upstairs conference room at City Hall.

Fees are $100.

Players looking for teams on which to play may attend the meeting or call 733-0866, extension 265, or 734-5369.

Hagler-Leonard at BLCC

TWIN FALLS — The Blue Lakes Country Club will show the Marvin Hagler-Sugar Ray Leonard fight on closed-circuit TV Monday night.

Anyone interested in tickets can call the BLCC at 733-2330. Preliminary bouts will begin at 7 p.m.

CS women golf Tuesday

TWIN FALLS — Canyon Springs Golf Course women will kick off their 1987 season with a nine-hole sweepstakes tournament and banquet Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Host professional Del Ericson said the nine-hole competition may be played anytime after 4 p.m. He said the banquet will begin at 7 p.m., one hour later than originally announced. Those attending the banquet are asked to make reservations at the clubhouse as soon as possible.

Mecir upsets Wilander

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia trounced Sweden's Mats Wilander 6-0, 6-2 in a semifinal match Saturday night and qualified for the finals of the $345,000 Fila Trophy indoor tennis tournament against top-seeded Boris Becker.

The 19-year-old West German ace needed three sets and two hours of play to overcome unseeded Yugoslav Slobodan Zivonovic 6-2, 3-6, 6-2 in an earlier semifinal.

Mecir, seeded second in the competition at Milan's Palatrussardi Sports Palace, dominated Wilander throughout to improve his record to 4-2 in head-to-head matches with the Swede.

Umpire talks continue

NEW YORK (AP) — With the start of the season just two days away, major-league umpires met with the two leagues Saturday in an attempt to reach a new collective bargaining agreement.

The meeting began at noon and continued well into the evening. Richie Phillips, chief counselor for the umpires' union, had said he expected the meeting to last at least eight hours.

No early briefings were held, but Phillips reported after Friday's session that some progress had been made in the areas of salary and pension while there still was "real philosophical distance" between the two sides in some areas.

Phillips, who cited an official strike deadline, said Phillips has said the umpires would rather strike at the start of the season than work without an agreement. The season begins Monday.

Bair wins state championship

HALLEY — Justin Bair of Rupert won the state bench press championship in the high school age powerlifting tournament recently in Boise.

Bair broke the old state record of 350 pounds with a lift of 355 pounds.

Pankratz case near decision

BOISE (AP) — The decision on whether deposed Borah High School football coach De Pankratz will get his coaching job back now rests with Boise School District Superintendent Barney Parker.

Parker presided over a hearing Wednesday during which Boice Deputy Superintendent Dennis represented the district's position. Michael Brubaker, executive director of the Boise Education Association, presented Pankratz's side. The BEA is the union that represents the district's teachers.

Parker said he probably will make his decision by late this week.

ISU assistant goes to UT

POCATELLO (AP) — Idaho State University assistant head basketball coach Allen Corder has resigned to become the top assistant at the University of Texas at Arlington.

Corder, who has been a Bengal assistant for two seasons under head coach Jim Boutin, will assist the Mavericks' new head coach Jerry Stone.

Stone moves to Texas-Arlington from Midland Community College, Midland, Texas. He was named junior college coach of the year this past season after his team lost to the College of Southern Idaho in the NJCAA national championship.

Boutin said assistant coach Barry Janusch would replace Corder as ISU's top assistant.

Eckersley dealt to A's

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs traded right-handed pitcher Dennis Eckersley to the Oakland A's Friday in a five-player deal.

Along with Eckersley, the Cubs sent infielder Dan Roan to the A's for three minor league players, outfielder David Wilder, infielder Brian Guin and right-handed pitcher Mark Leonette.

Eckersley, 32, came to the Cubs in June of 1984 from the Boston Red Sox and was traded for first baseman Bill Buckner. He posted a 10-8 record for the Cubs while helping them win the National League East. Eckersley was 11-7 in 1985 and fell to 6-11 last season with a 4.57 earned run average. But he led the club in strikeouts with 137 and 201 innings pitched.

Starnes gets extension

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — Stu Starnes, whose Montana State basketball teams have made it to the nation's top two post-season tournaments the past two years, has signed a one-year contract extension.

Starnes has compiled a 60-57 overall record in four seasons as the head coach of the Bobcats.

Last season, MSU won the Big Sky Conference regular season title but lost in the opening round of the league's post-season tournament.

Bradley, King move atop Shore LPGA

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Pat Bradley, who began a sensational LPGA career last year with a victory in the Dinah Shore, charged into a share of the lead Saturday with Betsy King after three rounds of the 1987 tournament.

The tournament will be tightly bunched at the top heading into Sunday's final round of the $500,000 event at Mission Hills Country Club as nine other players are within three shots of the co-leaders.

"I expect it to be a tremendous golf tournament tomorrow, the way it's all bunched together," Bradley said after her third-round 69 put her at 1-under-par 215 for the tournament.

"The way everybody's bunched up, anything can happen. Because of it being a major, I don't think anybody will pull out and run away with it."

"If I play the same way I did today, keep in control of my game, I should have no real problems."

King, who carded a par-72 for her third round, said: "I'm still tied for the lead; didn't lose any ground today. I think I'll take a round in the 60s to win."

"It would be nice to win a major," she added.

Bradley was three shots back of co-leaders King and Amy Alcott heading into the third round.

Alcott had a 74 to drop to 1-over-par for the tournament.

Chris Johnson, with a 66, and Jane Geddes, with a 67, both shot their way into contention and were with Alcott in a group at 217.

Also in that group were Jan Stephenson, with a third-round 73, and Rosie Jones, with a 72.

Conditions were virtually ideal for the third round after winds gusting to 40 mph had made play extremely challenging on Friday. Bradley, who had a 74 on Friday after an opening 72, and King, with 68-75 the first two days, were the only players under-par after three rounds.

Bradley, 36, is trying for her second straight victory, having won the LPGA event in Phoenix last weekend.

That was her first victory of 1987, but she was the tour's dominant player in 1986. She followed her Dinah Shore victory with four other wins, including two more of the LPGA's majors — the du Maurier Classic and the LPGA Championship.

Bradley also earned $492,021 last year, a record for the women's tour that also made her the first LPGA player to top the $2 million in career earnings.

Charms of travel, Old South beckon to the adventurous

A tour of South almost perfect

Weather was only drawback to the trip

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If the weather man had had a little more crop orated it would have been a perfect trip.

But, even though an unusually late spring delayed the promised beauty tour of the Great Old South — from New Orleans across the southern tier of states to the Atlantic and back through Big Bend National Park to Nashville — provided much else to see and do. And the two-week vacation bus tour, which my husband, Vernon, and I just completed, offered more history than one could absorb — or recall.

This was our first U.S. four-purview vacation we've done on our own. But because this section of the country was new to us, we knew we never could see or do nearly as much as we would have had all the gardens, mansions and historical sites ourselves.

Visitors to picturesque New Orleans can enjoy taking a pleasing and informative carriage tour of that city's historic sites.

Because of the humid climate — 60 to 70 inches annual rainfall — most houses have long porches to catch the breeze. They are called galleries in New Orleans and piazzas in Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S.C.

Four groups always are given adequate opportunity to part with their money, so we had a long lunch break at Jackson Brewery, now filled with some 60 tourist shops, overlooking picturesque steamboats and paddle wheelers along the Mississippi River.

Although the Mardi Gras was over, its traces were everywhere. Restaurants display masks and costumes used at the event. Arnaud's, where our welcome banquet was held, even has a museum of the many elaborate costumes worn by a past owner. Some 120 balls and 60 parades are held during Mardi Gras season from Jan. 6 to the day before Ash Wednesday. Some residents leave town during that time, renting their homes for goodly sums, our guide said.

Dancing in Bourbon Street as we returned to our hotel. The street was filled and, since it was St. Patrick's Day, groups, individuals and bands were parading sporadically all evening, undeterred by light rain. We were advised to keep a light hold on our purses, but the guide said there is little danger in streets filled with people.

While New Orleans is an old Alabama, we learned, claims its even older white settlement — a colony of Welsh in 1100 or 1200 which later became extinct.

At Montgomery, the state capital, two neighboring buildings poignantly represent the extremes of Southern racial attitudes. Within sight of the Confederate White House once occupied by Jefferson Davis is the Baptist church made famous by Martin Luther King Jr.

As we were photographing the Davis home, the door opened and hostesses invited us in for a free, quick tour. The house, refurbished by gifts of period pieces, illustrates the charming lifestyle enjoyed in the antebellum South, made possible by the institution of slavery.

Southerners refer to the conflict as the War Between the States, several city tour guides said, "because there was nothing civil about it."

Although it is often said that many southerners are still fighting the Civil War, Peter Kalb, our tour director, said as economic conditions improve — boosted to a great degree by tourism — century-old resentments are receding.

Later, as we visited the little park containing the tomb of the slain civil rights leader, an all-black group of Cub Scouts smiled at us from along the reflecting pool.

Although the azaleas were not yet open at either Bellhugh Gardens near Mobile, Ala., or Callaway Gardens at Pine Mountain, Ga., the huckleberries and waterfolds, a few camellias and Japanese magnolia brightened — the beautifully landscaped grounds.

My favorite garden, however, was Middleton Place, near Charleston, S.C., with its beehive-shaped lakes, rice mill and big live oaks. The 18th century river plantation of Henry Middleton, president of the First Continental Congress, was restored and embellished early this century after years of neglect following Civil War destruction.

Southerners refer to the conflict as the War Between the States, several city tour guides said, "because there was nothing civil about it."

Although it is often said that many southerners are still fighting the Civil War, Peter Kalb, our tour director, said as economic conditions improve — boosted to a great degree by tourism — century-old resentments are receding.

The Little White House, vacation home of President Franklin Roosevelt, remains much as it was when he died there in 1945. It is small, but comfortable. A memorial walk, bordered by flags and native stone from each state, leads to the modest museum. Idaho's stone is slate, cut into the irregular shape of the state.

Atlanta is the building metropolitan giant of the Southeast, with 46,000 hotel rooms and its international airport, competing with Chicago's O'Hare International, the "Gone With the Wind" city (with a square named for author Margaret Mitchell) also has the impressive Cyclorama.

Visitors' seats slowly revolve around the three-dimensional painting depicting the Battle of Atlanta fought on July 22, 1864, considered the turning point in the Civil War. Accompanying narration, music and booming guns make realistic effect.

At nearby Stone Mountain has the South's answer to Mt. Rushmore in South Dakota — the largest bas-relief sculpture in the world, showing Jefferson Davis and Generals Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson on horseback on the north face of the world's largest exposed granite mountain. The park was full of sunbathing Atlantans that Saturday afternoon.

At the initiative of another ecotouring couple and assistance from the Atlanta hotel concierge, whose job it is to assist guests, we got tickets to the Broadway musical "Pump Boys and Dinettes." In one of Atlanta's many theaters. Another evening in Asheville, N.C., we experienced local color at Bill Stanley's Bluegrass and Barbecue night spot, featuring dancers who clogged as they square-danced.

Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S.C., two port cities, both have retained their colonial charm by discouraging progress in the form of high rise buildings. Pirates House, a quaint, top-rated restaurant in Savannah, is associated with Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island" and it's claimed old Cap'n Flint died in an upstairs room. There is a separate dessert menu with intriguing names like "Bit of Heaven."

Laid out by James Ogelthorpe in 1733, Savannah has squares every two blocks, with squares which never match the name of the square. John Wesley, founder of Methodism, Grace Reynolds Square. Fort Sumner, where the Civil War began April 12, 1861, was an extra bonus at Charleston. The city, which cele-

Europe travel slowly rebounds

Hawaii and Mexico also gain popularity

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — European travel is slowly regaining popularity this spring, local travel agents say.

Representatives of three Twin Falls travel firms also report Hawaii sales are up to a favorable "repeat trips" for many area residents.

Both the lower exchange rate for the American dollar and fear of terrorism last year cut into the number of area residents heading for Europe.

According to the industry-trade magazines, all U.S. travel is up this year, according to Karen Porter of Four-Way Travel in Twin Falls. She says Hawaii remains a perennial favorite for area travelers with last winter's airfares the lowest in years.

"Many people here return to Hawaii year after year because they enjoy it so much," she says.

While European trips are gradually increasing, other popular destinations continue to be Disneyland in California and Disney World in Florida, which can be reached for $198 round trip from Boise to Orlando, Porters says.

She urges potential travelers to visit the library where there is a "wealth of material" about "where to travel, how to travel, when traveling on their own or with a tour. All travel agencies also have many free travel brochures.

Whether to travel on your own or take a planned tour is a major question for people, especially those taking their first trip, she says, particularly if they are going outside the states.

Both types of travel have advantages and disadvantages, the travel agents point out.

"The obvious advantages of a tour is you pay up front and know what you'll see and what it will cost, while if you're on your own you never know what you'll have to spend for hotels," Porters says.

"Not having to handle your own luggage and the security of being in a group are other benefits of going with a tour, well, not our tour, particularly if you're in a strange city."

"Many people think they wouldn't be caught dead on a tour because it is too regimented," says Joe Salisbury of Magic Carpets. "But you see so much more on a planned tour, especially in a foreign country."

He believes European travel is as safe, or perhaps safer, than it has ever been, because the few isolated incidents in recent years have caused a much tighter security at all airports.

"People should go on a major trip when it's the right time in their lives, and not worry about the rate of dollar exchange," he says.

The obvious advantages of traveling on one's own, says Stephanie Claiborn of Desert Inn, is that potential tourists can check the validity of an unfamiliar tour group through their offices. Reputable tour businesses belong to one of several organizations, she says, such as the American Society of Travel Agents, which includes tour agencies, or the National Tour Association.

"If they have an offer that sounds too good to be true, it probably is," she says. She recently learned of an advertisement that appeared to offer two persons airfare to Hawaii for $300. But in the fine print it said this package included only one airfare.

"So by the time the people paid full fare for the other ticket they probably spent more than if they'd have gone through a regular travel agency," she said. Some tour companies will reserve a block of say, 10 hotel rooms, she says, but then send out many times that many brochures, so it's possible one could find themselves without accommodations.

Salisbury says travel agencies can provide many alternative tours and arrangements, and she says that travelers have a choice which will best fit their interests.

Maryland canal and lockhouse a special spot to call home

Riley's Lockhouse, by the towpath of the C&O Canal, has been opened to visitors.

The Washington Post

SENECA, Md. — For years, his slight figure was a fixture along the C&O Canal towpath between the Seneca Creek aqueduct and Violet's Lock. Usually, he was seen hauling small cart holding plastic bags full of cans.

Keeping the towpath tidy along the old canal was a mission with Raymond Riley, but it was also a blight.

He was born in the stone house next to the aqueduct where his father tended lock until the canal closed for good after the devastating Polans fire and forest.

Last October Riley, 89, fell and broke his hip on the basement steps of the house he built up the hill from the canal. He gets around with a walker now, but his trash-collecting days may be over.

"I had two big trucksload every year," he said. "Took them to the junkyard for me $400. Got $200 last year. I got six bags left laying in the shed that didn't fit on the truck," he lamented.

"Every day, he had bags and bags of cans piled up in a little two-wheeled golf cart. At the end of the day, he'd push the cart filled with cans up here," said his sister, Helen Bradner, 80, who lives with him.

"It kept him busy. You'd hear him in the shed, clicking cans; he had a masher that mashes them together."

Riley was a frequent visitor to the lockhouse, he pulled them up here until the day he fell.

"That, that time is over with," she said, gently. "Ray, you won't be picking up cans this year and bringing them home."

Riley has done many things in his life. He did construction work in the home of his father, John Rainier, Md. He was a street conductor. He was a handyman on the farms around Seneca in upper Montgomery County. But the canal was his first and foremost.

He helped his father tend lock. When he was all of 15, he captained a grain boat down the canal to Georgetown in Washington. He was tied to haul corn, hay to the flour mill in Georgetown," he said, and bring fertilizer and lime back.

"I haven't been down there in a long time," he said. "It was a right good place. They didn't have that new (Key) bridge down there then."

Raymond Riley and his sister are living right by the past.

Their father and grandfather, an Irish immigrant, both worked in the Seneca stone quarry. Their father, — See LOCKHOUSE on Page D3

Daughter feels betrayed by her father

DEAR ABBY: Dad is a very successful plastic surgeon. When my parents divorced seven years ago, I was in high school. At that time, I told my dad I wanted to go to college and might need his help financially. Dad said he had enormous legal fees (from the divorce), but after they were paid, he said what he could do was to help me go to college. Shortly after this conversation, he married his girlfriend — 30 years his junior — and they started a new family.

Once again I approached him. He said his new family (one child) was expensive, and besides, what did I need college for? His young wife never went to college; I could not believe a so-called educated man uttered those words. Every time I visit Dad's home, it's obvious where his money goes — a live-in nanny, new cars, massive home improvements, expensive clothes and jewelry for the young wife, etc. Don't misunderstand, I am glad to see my hardworking father enjoying the good life that he has earned, but it still hurts me to think my education means nothing to him. Perhaps after he reads this he will better understand why I have chosen to keep my distance.

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

Oh, during a recent visit, his wife said she had a bad habit of being a trust fund for their child's college education. How can I deal with this financial situation?

A DISILLUSIONED DOCTOR
Dad is a plastic surgeon and he is a trust fund for their child's college education. How can I deal with this financial situation?
DEAR DISILLUSIONED: If you were in high school seven years ago, you should have been out for a number of years. You don't say what you've been doing in the meantime. If you're determined to get a college education, you can get one without your father's help. Get a part-time job and a college loan. Many have. Forgive your father for falling you when you were fresh out of high school. Get on with your life, and you'll be all the stronger for having made it on your own. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: I have a distant relative who is running for U.S. senator in another state. I just wrote a letter asking for a political contribution. Am I asking something to "thank" that someone who has done nothing for me? Should I stick to sending such letters to politicians who are not running?

I am not a wealthy person, and I think this man is out of his mind to ask me for a contribution to help finance his campaign, especially when both he and his wife are very wealthy.

DEAR ANONYMOUS: It's essential we keep appropriate for a person who's running for the U.S. Senate to solicit funds from out-of-state prospects. Because running for the U.S. Senate is very expensive, if the candidates didn't solicit out-of-state campaign contributions, they could never make it. If you think your distant relative would make a good senator, you should help him, even if it's only a token. If you think he wouldn't make a good senator, then don't contribute. — MR. DON'T FEEL LIKE A HYPOCRISIT

DEAR ABBY: I was sitting around with nothing to do, and I was bored with sitting who's going to be at a party, especially if it's a small one. There are a few friends of friends of mine whom I don't care to be around. I never make ultimate decisions. — CHOOSE BETWEEN ME AND SO-SO-DO — I just prefer to stay home and read a good book than be in the company of persons who make me uncomfortable. I am fortunate to have friends who respect my point of view. I may not go to parties as often as others, but when I do, I enjoy them. — JOHN D. IN L.A.

DEAR JOHN: Congratulations on two fronts: Having the courage to avoid uncomfortable situations, and having friends who respect your point of view.

Lockhouse

James, became a lock tender in 1887. He and his wife had seven children, but after a daughter drowned in the creek, Roberta Riley, fearful of losing another, moved her family in 1896 to a big red house up the hill. It stands next to the modest house Raymond later built for himself.

From March until November, James Riley lived at the lockhouse in order to raise and lower the lock for the canal boats, filled with cargoes of coal from Cumberland. "My mother did the cooking up here, and we used to take his dinner down there every day at 4 p.m.," Helen Bodmer said.

His father had a garden and a pig pen at the lock. "After Nov. 15, my father would bring the pigs up and butcher them," she said. "I loved having my father home. They were the only times I seemed to want to live."

The Riley children went to a nearby one-room schoolhouse, now a private home where a cousin lives. None graduated from high school.

Raymond Riley was in the Army in World War I but never got beyond Virginia. "They unloaded me at the Seventh Street (Southwest) wharf in Washington. I didn't have a penny in my pocket and walked up to my aunt's home near the ballpark (Griffith Stadium, since razed, at Florida and Georgia avenues). I borrowed 35 cents from her to get (streetcar) to Rockville and walked the balance of it."

After the canal closed, James Riley rented boats on Seneca Creek until his death in 1931. Raymond continued the business until the boat concessions were banned by the government in the 1940s. Raymond also built boats, a skill he said he learned from his father. He also painted and built barns.

"Yes, I done a little bit of everything," he said. "I rode the (wheat) binder. I dug wells for fellas. Anything that made money, I was on it."

The year the canal closed, Helen married and moved to Mammoth Hot Springs. From 1934 to 1938, Raymond Riley held a regular job in his brother-in-law's construction business. In 1941, Riley, the modest white house where he still lives.

Helen Bodmer, widowed, returned in 1980 to help care for Riley's wife Pearl, who died a year later. Bodmer stayed on to help her brother.

"Ray can do anything outside," his sister said. "But he didn't know how to do anything in the house. He doesn't cook. He didn't know even how to make himself a cup of coffee. He knows now."

Over the years, the memory of his sister's drowning etched in his mind, he took it upon himself to rescue and recover bodies from the river. He figures he pulled more than 20 out of the Potomac, dead and alive.

For years, nobody was much interested in Riley's recollections. Then the National Park Service opened Riley's lockhouse, by Lock 24 off Riley's Lock Road, to visitors.

And, in 1983, the recollections of Riley and his sister were included in a book, "Home on the Canal," by Elizabeth Kyle. When the book was published, they were among 11 old castlers brought together and honored at Great Falls Tavern. Kyle recalls the event with pride and pictures.

"He's the most in-place person I know," said Kyle.

His place, as he sees it, is by the canal. But since his fall, Riley had not been back to the lockhouse.

The lockhouse, built in 1887, is now a National Park Service visitor center.

A surrogate's story: 'I told him how special he was'

Los Angeles Times

Shortly after Denise Maher gave birth to a boy for another couple, she sat down in her hospital room when nobody was around, and told him what was on her mind. "I told him that in years to come, when he was older, he would understand how he was conceived and how much his parents wanted him and how much he is loved and that I do love him, but he belongs to them. They are your parents. Not me. I just carried you for nine months and took care of you because your own mother couldn't. I just told him how special he was. Because he is a very special baby."

Maher's story is an "aberration in the 'surrogate mother world,'" said Hilary Haszlin, a staff psychotherapist at the Center for Surrogate Parenting Inc. in Beverly Hills, Calif. It is more typical of "birth mothers in the adoption world. Most of the surrogate mothers have a need to see the child and have some reassurance about the child, but rarely have they needed to have an outpouring of feeling toward the child. As a psychologist, I want to support that if it is needed and not support any denial. But still, as best I can tell, that is an aberration."

If most surrogate mothers think that it is all right to give up a child, why do they seem to work so hard at reinforcing that idea? And why are support groups such a necessary component of successful surrogate programs?

There is "going to be a percentage of surrogate mother cases that don't work — that's true of everything," Haszlin said. It's dangerous to think that a surrogate has "bonded so fully with the couple she has no feelings for the child."

Haszlin said that the post-partum responses to the child vary tremendously. "Quite a few (surrogate mothers) genuinely and honestly say that they felt this child is the couple, was really created because this couple wanted the child ... and feel the child is (the couple's) morally and emotionally."

Maher, 24, of Los Angeles, has two children of her own, a boy, Shawn, 5, and a girl, Heather, 3, and is adopting a 5-year-old niece, Rachel. Maher said that she enjoys older children but not babies. And she wants to be a surrogate mother again, she said. The couple for whom she had a child may want another, and even if they don't, "I'm hoping to do it again," she said. "I would like to wait at least one year to have my body back, though."

The Heat Pump

Next to Mom, the world's best year-round comfort system

It can't kiss your little hurts away or bake your favorite cookies, but like Mom, a high-efficiency heat pump can keep you comfortable and happy all year long. That's because it's the only single comfort product that both warms your home in the winter and cools it in the summer.

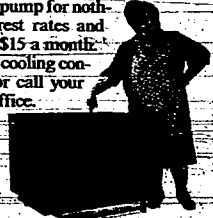

Two important jobs, one terrific little package. It's up to 260 percent efficient.

A heat pump takes advantage of one of Mother Nature's many little quirks. To wit: even when it's cold outside, there's still some heat in the air. Using a series of coils, refrigerants and heat exchangers, the heat pump takes this heat from the outside air and moves it inside.

And because it takes less energy to move heat than to make it, a heat pump is much more efficient than a conventional furnace. In fact, at up to 260 percent efficient, heat pumps are two to three times more efficient than the most efficient gas furnace. And that makes a heat pump less expensive to operate, too.

Moving heat also makes the heat pump very versatile. For example, in the summer, it reverses itself and presto — it's an air conditioner, keeping you cool and comfortable even on the hottest, muggiest days.

The finest financing. Heat pumps are now easier to buy than ever. Through Idaho Power, you can finance a new high efficiency heat pump for nothing down, low interest rates and payments as low as $15 a month. Ask your heating or cooling contractor for details or call your local Idaho Power office. It'll make Mom so proud.

A growing demand

Business blooming for bedding plant wholesalers across the Magic Valley

by BOB FREUND
Times-News Staff Writer

JEROME — Thousands of Idaho gardeners take first look in a misty fog at the colorful seedlings of geraniums and marigolds.

Close to 2 1/2 million seedlings a year are produced in the Magic Valley on shelves in the small room — on the grounds of Moss Greenhouses Inc.

In the next 10 weeks, the petunias, geraniums and marigold that sprouted there in February will move to market as bedding plants — ready for the flower of home gardeners — and the contracts of commercial landscapers.

DeWitt, Carolyn and Kevin Moss will rush more than 50 varieties of bedding plants to customers such as Ernest Home Centers, Albertson's supermarkets and King's department stores.

Like other plant wholesalers, Moss Greenhouses Inc. is on the grow.

In 1985 alone, the company boosted its brilliant-looking production 20 percent. Output has expanded at a rate of 15 percent yearly since 1980. In fact, Moss last year abled away from a chance to place satellite greenhouses in the Boise area. Instead, the family-owned firm will absorb its emerging growth and develop its Jerome operations.

"We still have the opportunity with our current customers to expand (business)," says Carolyn, who handles marketing of the crop.

Moss Greenhouses is not unique in its business growth. Other bedding and blooming plant wholesalers in the Magic Valley are experiencing the same demand. The area's marketing areas, which include Salt Lake City, parts of Montana and Wyoming.

At the root of the trend may be a stark economic twist. The industry has been helped — not hindered — by the slowdown in the regional economy.

"We're better in bad times because people stay home," says William Carlson, executive vice president of Bedding Plants Inc., a Twin Falls nursery group. They beautify their homes or cultivate a garden as a hobby instead of spending dollars on travel or entertainments.

With warm weather imminent, Magic Valley gardeners now are starting to plan their flowerbeds. They are about eight months behind the masses, who business relies on forecasts made last summer and fall.

The humidity-controlled chamber gives the tiny seedlings the best of both worlds. Last week, the final seedlings of the season — most will be sold in cool weather zones such as the mountains of Sun Valley — were in the final stages of growth. The seedlings were being laid out specially prepared soil by machine at the Moss plant.

Within 10 days, they go in trays of DeWitt and Carolyn Moss stand among hanging pots containing geraniums in the "plughouse," where seedlings are located following germination.

406 plants to a sophisticated greenhouse called the "plughouse," where they grow on movable benches, nurtured by a rolling sprinkler system that sprays water and fertilizers from above.

After they've gotten a start, the emerging flowers are transplanted to deeper "flats" of different sizes for further growth and markets.

Growing millions of individual plants takes two acres of outdoor space. When the approach of the spring planting season, they are all but filled to capacity. The work force has ballooned to more than 40 flower tenders, some making final transplants, some spraying the outdoors plants and some still grooming the youngest plantlings.

Part of the skill in the business is timing the plants for marketability. If you don't sell when it's ready, you can only cool it (to retard growth) so long, says Carolyn.

The accuracy of the forecasts from months ago are pivotal in April, May and June. "We either make the right guess to sell the product in this 10-week period or we're going to eat it," DeWitt says.

The condition of the plants also is critical. When they pick them up at nurseries, do-it-yourself home centers or supermarkets, customers are choosy. They want "a plant that is short, stubby and in bloom," DeWitt says. But they don't want one too full or too sparse.

"I think the customer is going to look for good, hardy plants," agrees Steve Zares, store manager for Ernest Home Center in Twin Falls.

"If they're buying color for their garden, they're going to buy brilliant color."

During the spring-planting rush, his store alone will buy close to 10,000 plants from Moss and other suppliers. "We will try to get daily or twice a day service," he says.

Keeping the bedding plants fresh is one reason for Moss' success in southern Idaho nurseries in the past 14 years. "What we displaced were the Portland - Salt Lake and Sacramento shipments," DeWitt says.

Dave Wultrich, partner in Wultrich Magic Gardens in Twin Falls, says the transportation advantage extends as far as his markets in Salt Lake City and areas of Wyoming and Montana. "We try to give one day's service on deliveries, which is very important right now," he says. "That's where we can beat our out-of-state (competitors)." His business cultivates flowers in Twin Falls and sells in a group with his three brothers' stores.

Moss Greenhouses also preserves the freshness of the flowers by hand-picking orders. Holding up a catalog, he points to glossy picture of a fully bloomed flower, saying the gardener is going to want "a quality plant that is going to look like this."

Although only about half as large as M & L Greenhouses, northwest of Bull, raises many of the same bedding plants as the Moss company and piles some of the same market in Idaho cities. However, it deals more with family-owned garden centers, says part-owner Laura A. G. Bald.

M & L, along with two other flower businesses, have located along the Snake River to take advantage of geothermal springs in the area.

The heated water allows the companies to heat their greenhouses.

Quality reports to hay growers will help time cuttings at peak

CALDWELL — Hay farmers who want to sell their crop for a better price will be able to do so by dialing a phone number or reading the newspaper, as well as checking their fields.

The University of Idaho Cooperative Extension Service is developing quality reports from sample alfalfa fields in Twin Falls and Camas counties, as well as other areas this spring.

"The reports are the first of their type," says Bob Romanko, a specialist with the university's Southern Idaho Research and Extension Center.

The reports are designed to give farmers a guideline to use in timing their harvest. The reports also will allow producers to gauge the general quality of hay they can expect to sell in area markets.

"The need for a cutting is critical in producing high quality, highly digestible hay for milking herds," says Romanko. "The key to high quality, especially during cool weather, is timing."

The reports will be taken weekly from fields over about six weeks, beginning in late April or early May. They will be taken from fields that start about May 15, with those from fields that start in the month. Other cuts are near Caldwell and Caldwell typical varieties will be taken.

Within three days after samples are taken, reports will be released over a hotline phone number and in some area newspapers. The Times-News will carry the information.

The reports will rate the hay samples as premium, first, second or poor based on test results. The tests focus on a chemical factor, acid detergent fiber, which indicates digestible dry matter in hay. This indicates the level of the fiber, an estimate of digestible dry matter and crude protein content. The standards are important measures for dairy feeding.

The reports are scheduled for only the first of the three cuttings normally taken in southern Idaho. After the first cutting, the pace of growth within a change substantially, Romanko said.

Daily cutting hay normally commands a better price when sold. Premium hay often is worth $10 to $30 more per ton than lower grades and doesn't cost significantly more to grow, Romanko said.

Although some farmers rely on color and physical traits to measure quality, good-looking hay may not always be valuable, he said.

"A summer-cultivar can be fine-stemmed, leafy-looking and bright green, but it is typically feeder quality and should not be used for milking cows," he said.

The reports will show farmers when maturity may be approaching and help them harvest better crops. Romanko says "we could certainly increase the value of our crop if we produced better quality hay. It's just that simple," he said.

The pilot program may be expanded to other areas of the state in the future.

By DON KENDALL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Cattle producers who sold out to pay debts the last few years probably are out of the beef business for good, according to an Agriculture Department livestock economist.

"Herds that were liquidated are not likely to be reestablished because many of these farmers probably cannot generate the needed investment capital, or borrow for an enterprise which at best will provide only a small return on investment," said Ron Gustafson of the department's Economic Research Service.

Thus, he added in an outlook report, the nation's beef cow herd is stabilizing at near current levels or slightly below.

The Jan. 1 total cattle inventory was 102.2 million head, down 3 percent from a year earlier and the lowest since 1962. But beef cow numbers rose 27,000 head or 1 percent — the first increase since 1984. Dairy cows were down 6 percent, primarily because of culls during the government's whole herd buyout program.

Gustafson noted that the beef cow increases were concentrated in the 1982-84 drought areas of Oklahoma, Oklahoma, up 10 percent, Texas, up 10 percent, Arkansas, up 10 percent, and Missouri, up 2 percent.

Cattle producers selling out probably will never be back

These areas boosted beef cow numbers by 407,000 head, which more than offset a decline of 726,000 head in other parts of the country.

In four of the six states hit hard by drought last summer, beef cow numbers expanded an aggregate of 83,000 head: Alabama, up 4 percent; Georgia, up 1 percent; South Carolina, up 3 percent; and Virginia, up 11 percent. In Maryland, beef cows declined 30 percent, and in North Carolina, they dropped 3 percent.

"It appears that while most producers in this 1986 drought area were selling off large numbers of calves and yearlings last summer, many producers in the area were nevertheless able to maintain or even expand their base herds," Gustafson said. "Cows reserves and forage available to the reduced cattle inventory supported the herd until rains came in early fall."

Then in September, rains helped renew pastures and provide a good start for fall and winter grazing.

Gustafson said the Jan. 1 figures showed beef cattle herds in the North Central and Western states generally declined or held to year-earlier levels.

"Thus, beef herd expansion in 1986 reflects a rebound in forage conditions in the Central and Southern plains, rather than a broad-based expansion," he said. "Forage supplies in these areas began to recover in 1985, when breeding decisions were being made. Grazing conditions are now very good, particularly in the reduced cattle inventory, and cow-calf producers are bringing their herds closer to carrying capacity."

As a result, Gustafson said, national expansion of the cattle herd and the summer of 1986 are likely to result in more conservative stocking rates on pastures and ranges.

"The incentives needed for a large national expansion of the cattle industry are not present," he said. "Last year was the first since 1981 that producers were able to cover cash costs."

"Some further expansion is likely among producers with cow-calf operations as their primary source of income," Gustafson said.

Some profs say values must be learned early in life, not classrooms

By RICK GLADSTONE
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Business schools are intensifying efforts to teach ethics in students who will enter a world scarred by scandals, but some professors say values must be learned early in life and developed rather than schooled in the classroom.

The heightened interest over business ethics was underscored this week when Harvard Business School announced it was giving $2 million to fund a program in ethical teaching.

Most of the money is coming from John S. S. Shad, outgoing chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, which has been in the thick of the widening investigation into misdeeds on Wall Street.

"I've been very disturbed most recently with the large numbers of graduates of legal ethics teaching into all courses. Dunfee said the project has received widespread interest among other schools.

Some institutions, such as the University of Santa Clara in California, have special councils devoted to promoting business ethics. Others are weighing ethical testing procedures as part of graduation requirements.

At Harvard, other big schools have been engaged to finance studies of ethical issues. The University of California at Los Angeles, for example, has received corporate donations of at least $225,000 to develop a business ethics curriculum.

The push for higher moral standards in business has spread into the big-tech school system. In New York, for example, an annual conference on business fast-paced takeovers and brutal competition for high school students will feature a speech on insider trading by U.S. Attorney Rudy Giuliani, who also has played a key role in the investigation of the Wall Street firm.

Business professors queried by telephone said the government's widening investigations of insider trading and securities fraud have been the most active catalyst for the emphasis on ethics teaching.

But there is no campus consensus on teaching business ethics around the usefulness of attempting to indoctrinate young adults with moral values. Some professors say they have no role in preaching right and wrong to the stock market. Others say the market's hidden losses on a balance sheet to avoid planning in accounting, finance, marketing and other faculty have no competence in the ethical role in the investigation of the Wall Street firm.

University of California at Berkeley professor of business and public policy at the University of California at Berkeley said, "Business schools have lots of other things to worry about, such as the survival of the American economy," he said. "Would I rather have people worry about ethics or how to sell computer chips to Japan?"

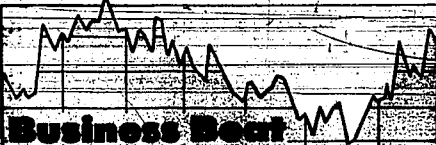

Others contend ethics can and should be taught aggressively, or at least ethical principles should be noted, such as profiting from inside information or hiding losses on a balance sheet to avoid

Simplot firm wins contest

BOISE — Simplot Livestock Co. grew 224.5 bushels of corn per acre last year at its Grandview farm to win the irrigated division of the 1986 Idaho Yield Contest sponsored by the National Corn Growers Association.

The company, a unit of J.R. Simplot Co., entered production from 160 acres at its 10,000-acre farm.

Nelson to discuss water rights

TWIN FALLS — Tom Nelson, a Twin Falls attorney, will discuss Swan Falls water rights at the April meeting of the Magic Valley Chapter of the Idaho Society of Rural Appraisers and Farm Managers on Monday. The chapter also will elect a 1987 president.

The breakfast meeting begins at 7:30 a.m. in the Depot Grill at Twin Falls. Farmers and others interested in farm finance are invited.

FmHA moves Twin Falls office

TWIN FALLS — The U.S. Farmers Home Administration has moved its Twin Falls County office recently.

The office now is located at 693 Miller Ave., a few doors away from its previous location in the same office complex.

The move was made last month, an FmHA spokeswoman said. The location of the FmHA district office, which also is in Twin Falls, has not been changed.

Oregon banks raise prime rate

PORTLAND (AP) — Several Oregon banks followed the lead of major eastern banks Thursday and boosted their prime interest rate by one-quarter percent to 7.75 percent.

The increases were announced by U.S. Bank, First Interstate Bank of Oregon, Key Bank of Oregon and the Oregon Bank.

It was the first change in the prime since banks dropped the rate to 7.5 percent last August.

The prime reflects the rate charged to a bank's large corporate borrowers and is seen as an indicator of the trends for other interest rates.

Lumber orders, shipments rise

PORTLAND (AP) — Lumber production fell, but orders and shipments increased in 12 Western states in the week ended March 28, a trade association reports.

The Western Wood Products Association said production dropped 1 million board feet from the previous week, to 429 million feet. Orders, however, jumped 127 million board feet to 488 million feet, and shipments picked up 50 million feet to 445 million board feet.

Figures for the same week one year ago show production at 396 million board feet, orders at 395 million feet and shipments at 458 million feet.

State blocks securities sales

BOISE (AP) — A court order has been obtained by the state Department of Finance against further sales of securities by the owners of two Boise-based video companies.

The order, issued by 4th District Judge George Carey, resulted from department allegations that Gerald Monroe Arras, operator of Video Jukebox Distributors and Video Jukebox Advertising, was offering unregistered securities and using unlicensed brokers-dealers or salesmen.

Department Director Tom McEldowney said Arras had acknowledged selling the securities in violation of state law.

Still pending before the court are allegations by the department that Arras had engaged in a number of fraudulent practices.

M-K part of winning venture

BOISE (AP) — A joint venture involving the Morrison-Knudsen Corp. has won the largest U.S. Army construction contract issued since World War II.

Officials announced on Wednesday that Black River Constructors, a joint venture between the Boise-based company and a subsidiary of the Hunt Corp., will handle the $517 million construction program for Ft. Drum, N.Y.

The project includes construction of over 70 buildings and other facilities to accommodate the Army's new 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry).

Officials said work was expected to begin later this month with completion of the project scheduled for early 1991.

Retires from bank post

Kenneth J. Newman, Magic Valley area manager for First Security Bank of Idaho, retired his past week after 33 years in banking.

Dave Wood, who has been assistant manager for the bank's Idaho Falls operations, was named to succeed Newman as manager for the five branches in the Twin Falls area.

Newman headed the Twin Falls operations for 20 years after several promotions through First Security's network in Idaho. He managed offices in Mountain Home and at Burley before being moved to Twin Falls in 1967 as vice president and manager. He was appointed Magic Valley area manager in 1983.

Wood supervised four First Security offices as vice president and assistant manager in Idaho Falls. He joined First Security in 1974 and worked more than four years in Magic Valley offices. He was assistant manager of the Gooding branch from 1979-1980 and assistant during the winter at very low costs, eliminating important expenses, says Larry Flint, partner with his father in Callis Flint Floral Inc. The company has a second plant near Salt Lake City as well.

"(For) one acre of greenhouses down there, it cost us $50,000 a year to heat it with natural gas, where up here we can heat the exact same acre for $11,000," Layne says. "You can do a lot of trucking for that cost."

His cousin Dave Flint, who is part-owner of Flint Greenhouses and its subsidiary Mountain State Plants Inc., says his company spent $20,000 trucking flowers to its major markets in Salt Lake City last year.

However, those costs were less than expenses of heating a large greenhouse.

Between the two companies, they ship close to 500,000 chrysanthemums and other blooming plants those that have matured from Buhi to markets in the Salt Lake area.

"We have to bring it to the finish point, where they (bedding plant growers) just start it and you finish in your yard in most cases," Layne says.

For all the growers, though, it's a volume business. "The more you grow in the amount of space, yet still turn out the good quality — that's the name of the game," he says.

The wholesale flower business is a mixture of timing, technology and marketing. The businesses do little retailing, concentrating instead on growing plants that someone else will put on their shelves.

The Mosses entered the business with only the experience of Carolyn's father, Ed Adams of Jerome. DeWitt was a nuclear engineer who longed to raise his children in the countryside.

As the planting season opens, the Mosses now will finish their 10th season covering the countryside with Swan River daisies, Yellow Magic petunias, Bedmaster tomatoes, Trailing Sapphire lobelia, Mexican Beauty geraniums and hundreds of other flowers.

Oilseed crusher under study

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A Utah-based company is considering building a rapeseed crusher at the site of an old sugar plant east of town, which officials say could help farmers looking for a new crop.

"We need a rapeseed crusher in eastern Idaho," Brian Finnigan, Bingham County extension agent, told the Blackfoot Chamber of Commerce recently.

Heaped has been touted as the perfect crop to fill out Idaho's sluggish farm economy. Demand both abroad and at home is growing for the seed's oil from both the edible and industrial varieties, but the lack of a crusher in this area limits what Idaho farmers can market.

Evans Grain and Elevator, of Ogden, Utah, purchased the vacant Utah-Idaho sugar plant last summer and began using it for grain storage in September.

But the company is considering building an oil seed crusher on the site.

Managers acquire restaurants

TWIN FALLS — Managers of Taco Bandito restaurants in Twin Falls Thursday have purchased their stores, bringing the Pocatello-based chain from five to three stores.

Randy and Kris Guillot bought the Mexican fast-food outlet in Twin Falls early this year, while his brother, Ray and wife Diana picked up the Burley store.

Randy Guillot had managed the Twin Falls Taco Bandito for the past decade. "I just wanted to own my own business," he said.

He said he plans to diversify the menu with a few more American foods and frozen yogurts.

Both drive-in employees are workers.

The Taco Bandito chain began with the Twin Falls store in 1968. Both Randy and Ray Guillot were among five partners in the chain before acquiring their stores. The remaining two Bandito stores are located in Pocatello, Idaho Falls and Blackfoot.

Ethics

replace the lifelong commitment to ethics that can be learned very early," said Burton at Columbia. "On the other hand, the schools can play a productive role. We can sensitize people to what are ethical issues."

Wharton's Dunfee said a significant problem is that ethics is still widely considered a separate subject in most business schools.

"You've got a finance professor who says something's not relevant. Then you've got this 'kooky' ethics prof over here who says it is. The student has to sort it out," he said.

Another problem is lack of money. Richard F. Reckert, executive officer of the National Catholic Business Education Association and an instructor at Emporia State University in Kansas, said his group has increasingly promoted ethics teaching, but many small business schools are too poor to finance it.

"The money that Harvard got would be like a thousand dollars in a school out here," he said. "I hope we'll see some of that trickle down."

Some business school professors remain skeptical that ethics can be taught. Besides, they say, most ethics classes are still non-mandatory.

"The level of ethical understanding in business schools remains abysmal," said LaRue Hosmer, professor of corporate strategy at the University of Michigan's graduate business school. "We're beginning to see a recognition of the need, but we're a long way from fulfilling the need."

Stallings seeks transfer of funds to loan account

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, has asked Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng to use authority granted him in the 1985 Farm Bill to transfer 50 percent of Idaho's allotment of FmIA recreation funding into the direct operating loan account.

In a letter to Lyng, Stallings said that the recreation account immediately because of an "urgent need for credit in the farming communities of Idaho."

"If my request is granted, I am applying with the request to go through the Operation AHEAD Program which requires a FmIA lending officer to accompany the borrower to a commercial bank as part of the FmIA recreation loan guarantee," Stallings said in the letter. However, third and fourth quarter funds of more than $4.3 million are already committed through previous years.

Stallings said he hopes Lyng will use his authority to act quickly to make funding available. "Our borrowers will continue to go through the Operation AHEAD Program if that's what it takes to get the funding. However, it is an assurance that the funds will be available by the time the third and fourth quarter allotments are depleted, and they are already committed. As in previous years, it may be necessary to pool resources and transfer funds from states that aren't experiencing a credit crunch," Stallings said.

Robert Mascaro, president of Paradigm, a holding company for the limited partnership and for Paradigm Securities Inc., said the hotel has ended its franchise with the Hilton Hotel organization, effective March 31.

Management and operations will remain the same for the hotel, which employs about 100, said Linda Hendricks, assistant manager.

The hotel opened in 1980 and went into foreclosure in 1984. Pacific First Federal Savings acquired the property in 1985.

Farmers' share of loaf smaller

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers received 1.5 cents for the wheat in a one-pound loaf of white bread selling for 25 cents in 1986, according to Agriculture Department economists.

That is down 0.6 cent from 1985, when consumers paid 55 cents for the same loaf, a report showed Wednesday. The farm value of other ingredients, mainly shortening and sweeteners, was put at 0.5 cent in 1986, down 0.2 cent from 1985.

Chick hatch set record in '86

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Easter season always brings out the fuzzy, soft baby chicks for children to see and get as gifts, often to the dismay of humane societies and other animal welfare groups who advise parents on proper ways to handle the young birds.

As a matter of record, the Agriculture Department offers some general statistics on baby chicks: last year's total hatch was a record of 5.01 billion chicks.

Of the total chicks hatched, 493 million were egg-laying types. That led to nearly 4.5 billion eggs, the kind that are fed, slaughtered and sold a few weeks after hatching, winding up fried or barbecued in backyards and fast-food places.

The egg layers survive a while longer than broilers, but they also are consumed as roasters and ingredients for soups and other processed items.

Airline acquisition gains OK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department has given final approval to American Airlines' acquisition of Air California for $225 million, saying there is no evidence the merger will harm competition.

The department had given tentative approval to the deal in February.

In approving the merger, the department said that Air Cal, a regional carrier operating along the West Coast, is a relatively small airline operation that the merger "will not substantially affect the national market."

IBM brings forth new computer line

NEW YORK (AP) — IBM unveiled a line of powerful personal computers designed to shake off copycat rivals' but not cost-conscious customers by departing too far from the standard it created six years ago.

Competitors of International Business Machines Corp. promptly charged the computer giant Thursday with ignoring its customers' needs and throwing the personal computer market into confusion.

But several analysts said IBM seemed to have struck a careful compromise.

After the announcement, IBM's common stock tumbled 13 1/2% a share, to $148, in New York Stock Exchange composite trading.

Proceed carefully with these vacations

Q: Security in the paper I saw an advertisement for a round trip vacation to Hawaii for $28. It sounds too good to be true. Can you tell me what you have on this company?

A: Our file report shows World Travel Agency, 3014 W. 71st St., Chicago, Ill., seems also going under the name of World Travel Vacations Brokers, Inc. 12323 S. Cicero Ave., Alsip, Ill. 60504.

Better Business Bureau

A: Several companies throughout the United States and Idaho are currently using multi-level marketing techniques to sell long distance telephone services. The service is sold by most firms at a rate of $100 to $125 for "unrestricted" usage. Service is made available through independent distributors who receive commissions on new subscribers and bonuses from downline recruits. When one adds up all of the potential commissions, it amounts to 50 percent of the totals paid into the firm from subscribers, thus leaving $50-$60 per month for unlimited long distance service.

According to the BBB/Chicago their files opened in May 1986. Scott Wallace is listed as president.

World Travel's attorney has advised that presently, "they have contractual arrangements with the Colony Hotels and the Ala Moana Hotel." This attorney also stated that they are "booking the airline tickets through a wholesale broker in Phoenix, Ariz."

When one takes into account the cost of this service which pays for WATS lines, one can understand why the rate of completion of calls made by these firms is so pitiful, often times less than 5 percent compared to AT&T's 99 plus percent rate of completion. Thus, it is obvious that if one of these firms allows between 50 and 550 firms to use one line, the service is going to be poor and subscribers will be angry with those who sold them the service to begin with. Claims made by firms of "unrestricted" usage are untrue and could make both the firms and those connected with them liable for potential violations of state laws. Extreme caution should be used by firms and consumers before either subscribing or selling these types of service.

This company has sent a mass mailing throughout the United States offering ($29 plus tax) $29 vacation certificates. This certificate enables two people the opportunity to purchase a travel package plan from World Travel for an 8-day, 7-night trip to Hawaii.

As a general guideline, when using vacation certificates, consumers are advised to verify with the airlines and hotel, knowledge of the offer and obtain a written confirmation of reservations. It is also recommended you shop and compare to determine the value of the certificate.

Consumer Watch" is a reader's service column. Queries should be addressed to "Consumer Watch," 409 W. Jefferson, Boise 83702. Questions of general interest will be answered here, while others will be answered by mail.

The plan includes two roundtrip airline tickets and hotel accommodations for 7 days ranging from $900 to $1,000. A deposit of $100 per person must be paid 65 days in advance of departure.

Based upon the 2,500 telephone calls made to BBB/Chicago by people who have received the certificate, there is considerable confusion regarding the cost of the airfare. The airfare cost is included in the "package" that must be purchased from World Travel. The airfare is not $21, and cannot be used as a voucher and redeemed at an airline counter for tickets to Hawaii, as many believe.

World Travel Agency, has an unsatisfactory business performance record, to date. Specifically our files show a record of misleading and deceptive advertising and selling practices. A bureau report is neither a statement of approval nor disapproval.

Recent certificates seen by BBB/Chicago have indicated that the points of departure for the trips are "O'Hare International and Houston Inter-

Q: Recently our office has received numerous inquiries for consumers stating that they were offered a flat rate of long distance services from multi-level companies. What information can you give me on these companies?

American farmers plan to reduce corn plantings sharply

Idaho wheat acreage declines

BOISE (AP) — In the wake of strong support for the federal government's land-banking program, Idaho wheat and barley producers have significantly curtailed acreage on Idaho crops this season.

The government's Agricultural Statistics Service reported that planting intentions for both crops will be at their lowest in over a decade.

Spring wheat farmers indicated they planned to devote only 370,000 acres to the crop this season, down 22 percent from a year ago and the smallest acreage since 1975.

Barley farmers, the report said, indicated they planned to cut plantings 26 percent to 840,000 acres, the smallest commitment since 1974.

The cutback comes amid the announcement that the federal government had accepted nearly 300,000 more acres of Idaho farmland into its long-term conservation reserve program. That brings to nearly 1,000,000 acres the amount of Idaho crop land enrolled in the program by about 2,000 farmers.

The latest enrollment will mean nearly $12 million a year in federal payments to the participating farmers.

The government also reported that total wheat stocks in the state hit a record of 4 million bushels on March 1. On April 1 last year, total stocks were under 52 million bushels.

Although a change in reporting procedures makes it impossible to compare the March figure with previous spring, the government said the fall-based assumption of normal grain movement through the month, the stockpile figure was a record for the state.

Statewide, spring wheat producers indicated an 11 percent decline in plantings from last year's 135.5 million acres while barley growers expected to lose their acreage drop 16 percent.

For other crops in Idaho, the planting intentions report showed declines of 37 percent for oat acreage, 31 percent for corn acreage, and 1 percent for hay acreage.

Only bean growers indicated any intention of expanding, advising government analysts they will probably boost acreage by 43 percent this season to 200,000 acres.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers in planting and the reduction from 2.7 million acres, was up 1.4 million acres, the survey said.

Other crops surveyed included sorghum, 118 million acres, down 2 percent; soybeans, 118 million acres, down 2 percent; and dry beans, 11 million acres, down 11 percent.

Barley, 8 million acres, down 11 percent; oats, 15.7 million acres, down 7 percent; rice, 2.2 million acres, down 7 percent; and dry edible beans, 1.24 million acres, up 19 percent.

Gem packing plant production drops

BOISE (AP) — Commercial red-meat production in Idaho packing plants dropped in February, the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service reported.

February's total was 37.2 million pounds, down 15 percent from head slaughtered in January and 63.9 million pounds, down 15 percent from head slaughtered in February 1986.

The commercial slaughter in Idaho totaled 23,000 head of cattle, 7,100 hogs and 200 lambs and sheep. There were 62,900 head of cattle, 20,000 hogs and 200 lambs and sheep slaughtered in January and 63,900 head of cattle, 20,000 hogs and 200 lambs and sheep slaughtered in February 1986.

Hog production starts to increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new survey by the Agriculture Department shows that hog farmers have begun to increase production after falling back in recent years because of a drought and low profits.

As of March 1, hog inventories in the 10 major pork states were estimated at 52.2 million head, up 9 percent from a year earlier, the report said. The breeding herd, at 5.23 million head, was up 6 percent. The inventory of hogs going to market was 34 million head, up 3 percent.

Increases were reported Tuesday in seven of the states, while Iowa and Missouri were unchanged from a year ago and Kansas declined from a year ago and Kansas declined from a year ago and Kansas declined from a year ago.

The March 1 inventory included: Georgia, 1.13 million head, up 7 percent from a year earlier; Illinois, 5 million head, up 6 percent; Indiana, 4 million head, up 1 percent; Iowa, 12.6 million head, unchanged; Kansas, 1.83 million head, down 3 percent; Minnesota, 4.1 million head, up 5 percent; Missouri, 2.8 million head, unchanged; Nebraska, 3.9 million head, up 7 percent; North Carolina, 2.4 million head, up 8 percent; and Ohio, 1.92 million head, up 3 percent.

The 10 states account for about 78 percent of the nation's pork supply.

According to the report, hog farmers in those states intend to have 2.1 million sows farrow during the March-May period, which would be up 7 percent from last spring. Farrowing intentions for June-August were indicated at 2.2 million head, an 8 percent increase from last summer.

Farmers follow through with current plans; 1987 corn plantings would be one of the smallest since 1975

The indicated 1987 corn acreage also was held down by many farmers signing up in the department's long-range conservation reserve under a special bonus arrangement designed to attract fragile, highly erodible Corn Belt land into the program, thus keeping it out of crops for 10 years.

"Actual acreage planted may vary from intentions because of further adjustments to the 1987 farm program, the effects of weather, availability of production inputs, changes in market conditions prior

Weather varies widely

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's weather has been on a roller-coaster ride since the late 1970s, compared with the previous 20 years or so, says the Agriculture Department's chief meteorologist, Norman Strommen.

Average per-acre corn yields, for example, dropped 17 percent in 1980, rose to a record high in 1982, fell 22 percent in 1983, and then set 1986 consecutive records in 1985 and 1986.

Weather directly affects corn yields. Further, Florida's citrus crop has been devastated by four freezes in the last five years.

"We've been keeping records since 1882, and never have we recorded four severe freezes in five years," Strommen said in a report to be published in Farmline magazine by the department's Economic Research Service.

Although weather in the 1980s is more erratic than seen in the 1950s through the early 1970s, Strommen said that the recent variability may be closer to the historical norm. In his view, the stable weather of the earlier period was unique in this century. Now, he said, "We're going back to greater variability."

But it's too soon to characterize the apparent change as a long-term shift in weather patterns, Strommen said. One decade of capricious weather does not necessarily mean several decades of the same.

NOTICE TO STOCK HOLDERS

TWIN FALLS CANAL COMPANY

Water was started into the system on March 28, 1987 and will be available for initial deliveries beginning Monday, April 6, 1987.

As is customary initial water deliveries will be 1/2 of an inch per share of stock. Because of the prospects of water shortages this year, available storage and future water delivery amounts will be reevaluated by the Board of Directors at such time as the demand for water exceeds river flows and drafting of storage is begun. Based on this evaluation, the future delivery amounts per share of stock will be determined.
