Inouye says memo indicates Reagan briefed

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Iran-Contra committee said Sunday the panel has a document in which former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter says he briefed President Reagan on the diversion of profits from the U.S. arms sales to Iran to pay for covert activities.

the Nov. 25, 1986, announcement. It is not known if Poindexter actually briefed the president, Inouye said. "That memo does not speak of diverting the residuals for use of the Contras. It says using the residuals for other covert activities," Inouye said in an interview on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

Limán (the Senate counsel) brought out, for example, that said I approve your recommendation — this is Poindexter advising (Oliver) North — I approve or disapprove. He checks 'approve' and underneath he says 'I briefed the president, the president agrees,'" Inouye said. "Now the question is did he brief the president and did the president agree."

other than supplying the Nicaraguan Contra rebels. North said the idea grew out of Casey's wish to have an "off-the-shelf, self-sustaining, stand-alone entity" that could be summoned quickly to tackle covert operations anywhere.

peach the president of the United States. "Granted that in the past we have had presidents and other high officials brought before the bar of the Congress and indicted for lesser offenses, but this is 1987 and I doubt that the Congress would at this time, for what they have heard to date, suggest that he should be brought to the bar of the Congress," said Inouye, who served on the committees that investigated the Watergate scandal more than a decade ago. President Nixon resigned in August 1974 amid calls for his impeachment.

Britain would reflag tankers

The Associated Press

KUWAIT — Britain's ambassador was quoted Sunday as saying London is willing to let Kuwaiti tankers fly the British flag if the Persian Gulf nation requests the move as a protection against Iranian attack.

America and the Soviet Union already have moved to shield Kuwaiti shipping.

"So far, we did not receive any official request by the Kuwaiti government in this respect (reflagging)," the newspaper Al-Anbaw quoted Ambassador Peter Hinchliffe as saying in an interview.

"We in Britain say that any Kuwaiti application to reflag Kuwaiti tankers will be considered, taking into account the strong friendly relations binding Kuwait and Britain," Hinchliffe was quoted as saying.

"I personally feel there would be no problem in responding to Kuwait's request ... it depends on the Kuwaiti government."

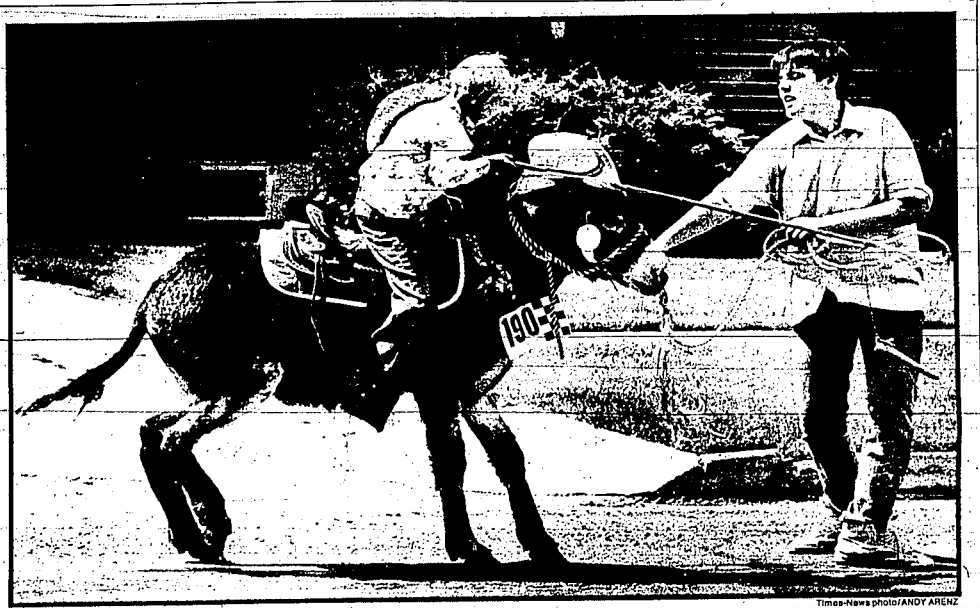

Hinchliffe said three tankers registered in the British dependency of Gibraltar carry Kuwaiti crude and "are tantamount to British-reflagged tankers," the newspaper said. It said he did not specify if the ships were Kuwaiti vessels.

The ambassador also expressed Britain's preparedness to supply Kuwait with weapons, the paper said.

Kuwait was a British protectorate until 1961, when the Arab nation became independent. Its vessels recently have been targeted for attack by Iran, which claims Kuwait aids Iraq in its nearly 7-year-old war against Iran.

In London, a spokesman for the Foreign Office said when asked to comment on the interview, "The British government has received no request from the Kuwaiti government. If we receive any request then it will be considered."

The spokesman could not be identified in keeping with official practice.

Nay to neighborly

Possibly the only unneighborly thing in Kimberly Saturday was a donkey named 'Ronald Reagan.' The stubborn beast had other ideas besides being in the city's Good Neighbor Days Parade, despite being lured with a carrot on a stick by rider Shaun Brady, 6. Darrel Glandon gives the donkey a pull along the parade route.

The city's 16th annual celebration also included races, a barbecue and the Old Time Fiddlers.

Iran intercepts vessel at Hormuz

The Los Angeles Times

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran Sunday provided a new and serious twist to its shipping war with Iraq by announcing the detention of an oil tanker in the Strait of Hormuz.

Tehran Radio quoted a military communique as saying that the tanker was detained on Saturday but gave no details on its flag, crew, cargo or destination.

Iran had previously detained several foreign commercial vessels on grounds that they were carrying cargo for Iraq. This was the first time, however, that an oil tanker was detained. Tehran officials warned last week that Iran would retaliate against Iraqi air raids on Iranian tankers by acting against tankers frequenting the neutral zone between Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

"This is a very serious turn which can have wide repercussions in the international oil market," said a Gulf-based oil industry source, asserting that the Iranians may have started a partial-blockade of the Strait of Hormuz.

Senate considers Gramm-Rudman revamp

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The degree of congressional commitment to reducing the deficit will be highlighted this week as the Senate considers whether to revamp the Gramm-Rudman budget balancing law.

The Senate will also try to finish with its trade bill, while the House continues work on bills laying out the spending allocations for federal agencies next year.

Gramm-Rudman, passed in 1985, was a plan to reduce deficits gradually until a balanced budget was reached in fiscal 1991. But newly released figures highlight Washington's failure to tame the deficit monster, despite repeated promises of action from the White House and Capitol Hill.

The budget statute envisioned a deficit no larger than $144 billion for fiscal 1987, which ends Sept. 30. New congressional projections show $162 billion in red ink — and it's only that close to the target because of a temporary windfall from the new income tax law passed last year. The deficit next year was to drop to $108 billion. But the figures show that target will be missed by more than $40 billion, even if Congress convinces President Reagan he should go along with $19.3 in tax increases.

The continuing deficits are forcing the Treasury to borrow more and more money, and the government's current borrowing limit of $2.32 trillion expires this week. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker has warned Congress that the government could default by month's end unless the national debt is increased.

Senators plan to attach to the debt bill their plan to revive Gramm-Rudman, which lost its punch when the Supreme Court last year took out the automatic spending cuts that were to enforce the deficit targets.

The bipartisan group headed by Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, and Sen. Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico, the committee's senior Republican, will offer an amendment restoring the automatic cuts and instituting other reforms to tighten Congress' fiscal processes.

But rather than forcing drastic cost-cutting or sharper tax boosts, the lawmakers plan to slip the targets. The new plan would not reach a balanced budget until 1992.

The House has already approved a debt bill, but without the Gramm-Rudman plan. Democrats who control that chamber have been waiting for Senate action but are also expected to go along with a similar scheme.

Reagan has repeatedly called for restoring Gramm-Rudman's automatic cuts, and Democrats have said they want to grant his wish, which they say might force Reagan to go along with a tax increase. The administration on Friday ordered agencies to come up with more

Kayakers decry hydro plan for North Fork

The Associated Press

BOISE — A proposed hydroelectric project on the North Fork of the Payette River would jeopardize prime kayaking water that attracts world-class kayakers, say participants in the Payette Whitewater Roundup.

"There's more money being pumped into the economy by kayak-boosting than there would be from the dam," expert kayaker Dan Givens of Boise said Saturday.

The stretch of the river from Smiths Ferry to Banks is internationally recognized as the premier 1,500 cfs of water, he said. Saturday's flow was only about 1,200 cfs.

But, he said those rapids are threatened by Western Power Inc.'s proposal to build a 350 megawatt hydroelectric plant along the North Fork and a reservoir at Round Valley, north of Smiths Ferry.

Western Power officials have said that building the hydroelectric facility would open the North Fork of the Payette River to more kayakers by reducing the water flow.

But, Bill Clark, a former kayaker who has studied the project proposal, said the power plant would make it impossible to navigate the river because it would reduce the water flow by 1,000 cubic feet per second. For ideal kayaking conditions, the river needs a flow of at least 1,500 cfs, he said.

Japanese man may be richest

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The vast Tokyo property and stock holdings of Japanese businessman Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, 53, are worth at least $21 billion, making him "probably the world's richest man," according to Forbes magazine.

Japan is sprouting billionaires, Forbes reports. There were 21 American billionaires (counting families as one unit) on last year's Forbes list of the 400 richest Americans. In Japan, "we had no trouble identifying 22 probable billionaires," Forbes says. "There are many more."

Join ANC in 'common struggle'

Whites vow to end apartheid

By MICHAEL PARKS Los Angeles Times

DAKAR, Senegal — A group of prominent white South Africans joined the outlawed African National Congress in a declaration Sunday, pledging to campaign to end apartheid and establish a democratic political system in their country.

South Africa's whites, as well as blacks, "have an obligation to act for the achievement of this objective," the two groups said, although "different strategies" will be used in what they declared "a common struggle" against continued minority white rule in Pretoria.

The joint statement, concluded four days of landmark talks between senior ANC officials and more than 50 white South African politicians, businessmen, academics, clergy, writers, journalists and students.

Entitled the Dakar Declaration, the statement is intended to be the starting point of a major effort to broaden the anti-apartheid movement in South Africa into a united front that will draw increasing support from the country's white minority as well as from blacks.

"It is necessary for everyone to act to bring about this kind of democratic, non-racial South Africa," said Thabo Mbeki, the ANC's information director and the leader of its delegation. "This is a commitment to act ... and our white compatriots have shown that they are willing to take the risks that go with opposing a regime such as that in South Africa."

What the ANC hopes for, he and other ANC officials said, is an alliance of interests with many more whites, even those who do not support its armed insurrection and may not fully share its political vision, working to end the apartheid system of minority white rule and racial separation.

"Liberation will free the oppressor as well as the oppressed," Lindwe Mabuba, an ANC delegate to the talks, said on Sunday as the group toured Goree Island after concluding their talks.

Goree Island served for two centuries as a departure port for the shipment of hundreds of thousands of Africans to the Americas as slaves. Their visit to a "slave house" in which many of the Africans were kept for months before sailing visibly moved both white and black participants in the conference.

The white participants in the conference were drawn mostly from South Africa's Afrikaans community, the descendants of Dutch, See APARTHEID on Page A2

14 hurt in traffic accident

FILER — A two-vehicle traffic accident on U.S. Highway 20, 1.5 miles west of Filer Sunday evening, sent 14 people to hospitals in Twin Falls, two of them in critical condition.

Idaho State Police, Twin Falls County sheriff's officers and Filer city officers responded to the accident call at about 7:30 p.m.

ISP Cpl. Mike Burgess, investigating officer, said three ambulances were called to the scene.

"Magic Valley Regional Medical Center officials said Ivo Mendes, 26, of Gilroy, Calif., and Steve Ferrel, 7, also of Gilroy, were in critical condition with multiple injuries. Ten others were being released after treatment of cuts and other minor injuries. A Buhi-coupe was treated at Twin Falls Clinic Hospital.

Burgess said Mendes was driving a small 1984 pickup truck north on a county road and drove through a stop sign and into the path of an eastbound vehicle driven by Floyd Garrett, 50, of Buhi. The Garrett vehicle struck the Mendes vehicle outside, forcing it across the intersection onto the railroad right of way. Neither vehicle overturned. Garrett and his wife, Janice, 51, were not believed seriously injured.

Burgess said others in the Mendes vehicle included Frank Ferrel, 45, of Gilroy, a passenger in the front seat, and their wives, Maria Mendes, 24, and Teresa Ferrel, 31, and 8 children, all riding in the back of the pickup truck under a camper shell. They were not thrown out, the officer said.

Others treated at MVRMC and released were the two California women—and the Ferrel—children Sandra, 10; Edward, 9; Jerry, 7, and Diane, 2, and the Mendes children, Lida, 5; Leonard, 3; and Melissa, 2. Mendes was cited for a stop sign violation.

The document cited by Inouye, which was written by former NSC officials and contains recommendations for Polidexter, including the suggestion that Reagan be briefed on the initiative. Both recommendations are marked as approved.

The first calls for Polidexter to "privately discuss the papers at Tab 1 and 2 with Director Casey and indicate next steps after the conversation." The approval line is marked with the letter "J," which was Polidexter's signature.

The second recommendation states that Polidexter "brief the president on the initiative outlined at Tab 3." The approval is also marked with the letter "J" and the word "done" is added.

assurances that the U.S. will indeed continue with the current point initiative in that neither Weir nor Jenico would be free today without Israel's help... it would be helpful if the president would simply thank Peres for their discrete assistance."

The Rev. Benjamin Weir and the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenico were two of the American hostages freed during the period when the United States was selling arms to Iran.

Inouye also said the committees have some documents indicating that the attorney general said, "I told the truth, in some instances he was not completely truthful during his four days of testimony."

"We have, as the colonel himself described, pounds and pounds of documents to back up what he has said, to back up what he has said that Casey said, to back up what he said that the attorney general said, and some documents to suggest that he wasn't absolutely candid," Inouye said.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, who was interviewed on the same program, said he would reserve judgment on North's truthfulness until the committee's investigation is completed.

But Hatch added: "I hope to hell that nobody indicts Oliver North on the fact that there have been mistakes, there are things to be criticized, and I'm very critical of them myself."

Inouye said North's testimony that he shredded documents just a part, told the truth, in some instances he was not completely truthful during his four days of testimony.

"Was this a cover-up? Was this malfeasance? Was this negligence? What was it? And these are the questions we will ask," Inouye said, referring to upcoming testimony from Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Police search for murderer

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — State police reported no leads Sunday in their search for a prison escapee who was convicted of killing one of her own children and wounding two others who was described as "extremely violent."

Elizabeth Diane Downs, one of Oregon's most notorious criminals, escaped Saturday by climbing an 18-foot fence surrounding the recreation yard at the medium-security Oregon Women's Correctional Center.

She was last seen outside a Salem restaurant about three blocks from the town. An unassuming couple gave Ms. Downs a ride to the restaurant after she flagged them down and told them she needed to get to a telephone.

spending cut proposals, and the president might not support a Gramm-Rudman fix that eases the deficit targets even though his own budget did not meet them.

The Senate is expected to continue work on its huge trade bill in the early part of the week before turning to the debt legislation. The House has already approved its version, and the two would have to compromise before a bill could go to Reagan for his signature or veto.

The House, meantime, will be working this week on three of its 13 annual spending bills for government operations, starting Monday with the $26.8 billion fiscal 1988 appropriation for the Department of Transportation and related agencies.

A major fight on that measure will be on a non-spending issue — whether smoking should be banned on airline flights of less than two hours.

Rep. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., was his amendment is designed to protect the lungs of non-smokers. "I think the rights of smokers to smoke ends where their smoke affects the health and well-being of others," he said.

The transportation spending bill contains money for air traffic controllers, airport modernization and expansion, road and bridge projects, and mass transit systems. It has bipartisan support in the House but the Reagan administration has threatened to veto it as too expensive.

French and German settlers who have dominated the Pretoria government of four decades, and the talks were described as probably the frankest political exchange yet between black and white South Africans.

While most of the whites were liberals within the South African political context, few until this meeting were willing to associate with black militants denounced as "radicals" and "terrorists" by the government; many declared their resolve Sunday to return home to promote fast, fundamental change and broader support for the goals of the ANC.

"Africans, particularly younger are not prepared to accept the inevitability of violence and unresolved conflict or the kind of reform program the government is offering," said Frederik van Zyl Slabbert, the conference chairman and co-director of the Institute for a Democratic Alternative for South Africa, which organized the meeting.

But the white participants have been threatened with vague government reprisals and possible violence from the extreme right on their return to South Africa for what critics have called treason and "political terrorism."

In their joint statement, the ANC and the white delegation called for a negotiated resolution of the South African crisis, but said that the government's approach to such talks, particularly its insistence on an ANC renunciation of violence as a precondition, is "the principal obstacle to progress."

The white participants agreed with the ANC that "the unconditional release of all political prisoners in prison or detention and the unbanning of ANC and other opposition organizations are fundamental prerequisites for such negotiations."

Boise, said "it is a gold mine. People come from all over the nation to boat that river. They boat their entire careers in preparation of the North Fork, but the project would take all the water out of it."

Smith said Idaho's business leaders want to generate revenue, they should launch a public relations campaign to promote the state's reputation as the whitewater capital of the nation and attract more kayakers and other visitors.

Western Power's plans call for shipping electricity generated by the project to Las Vegas, Nev., where it would be distributed to consumers in California, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico.

Rod Lesser, who fought an earlier proposal by Idaho Power to dam the North Fork, said, "They (Western Power) have to prove that selling power at the cost of Idaho's resources is acceptable to the public." Lesser said he doubted they could do so.

"No one has really figured out the best approach, other than handing out money," he said. "If you've got to fight the people with the big bucks, it is hard to beat them. But once the dam is in, the joke will be over and the river will be lost, like an extinct animal."

Lesser Persons, a kayaker from Ketchum, said that even though many kayakers do not have the skills necessary to boat the North Fork, they still will work to defeat the proposal.

Toughen drug rules, panel urges NRC

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional panel warns that new evidence of alcohol and drug abuse at nuclear power plants is just the tip of an industry-wide problem and wants tough regulations imposed on utilities to halt substance abuse.

The House Interior and Insular Affairs subcommittee on general oversight and investigations said in a letter to be sent today to Nuclear Regulatory Commission Chairman Lamont W. Zech Jr. that the commission's current policy of having utilities police their own employees without NRC intervention is not working.

"The NRC simply cannot afford to leave it to the industry or anyone else to make sure that those in control of nuclear power plants are also in control of themselves," wrote Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., chairman of the subcommittee.

Increasing criticism on Capitol Hill for being too soft on the industry, said last August it would leave drug and alcohol enforcement up to reactor owners for at least 18 months.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., has said the decision came from industry pressure.

"We want to see how well the industry would do in policing its own employees," NRC spokesman Frank Ingram said Friday.

Ingram declined to comment on how the industry is doing, but others — including some within the NRC — say the self-policing policy is not working.

James A.F. Kelly, a senior NRC security inspector based in Dallas, testified before the subcommittee last month that "for the most part, the utilities are not up to the task."

Kelly said the industry generally does not "look for substance abuse problems, often fails to investigate specific cases brought to its attention, generally does not report the problems to the NRC and sometimes does not cooperate with NRC investigators."

He also said the commission rarely investigates allegations of drug and alcohol abuse at utilities, sometimes referring cases to attorneys that have demonstrated inadequacy at self-policing.

The subcommittee urged the NRC to issue regulations requiring utilities to prevent on-site drug and alcohol use, stop workers from entering plants under the influence and institute a "fitness-for-duty" program.

"It is difficult to identify any conceivable rationale to justify the NRC's decision not to take a firm approach to drugs and alcohol," Gejdenson wrote.

"The NRC should do everything in its power to ensure that those who operate and have access to the vital parts of nuclear power plants do not have drug or alcohol problems."

The subcommittee did not make specific recommendations, such as mandatory drug testing.

"We want to leave it to the NRC to determine how to meet the goals we set out," said Gejdenson aide Chip Partner. "It doesn't necessarily mean mandatory testing, but we'll look at whatever the NRC proposes."

Gejdenson said testimony from

Kelly and others at the June 11 hearings, plus documents obtained by the subcommittee, indicate that the cases cited by Kelly "represent the tip of the iceberg."

The NRC has reported allegations of drug or alcohol abuse at 61 atomic plants from 1981 to 1986, according to Gejdenson. In the first three months of this year, 21 cases were reported.

These statistics are alarming, especially since there is no comprehensive requirement for utilities to report instances of drug and alcohol abuse to the NRC," he said.

The congressman, whose eastern Connecticut congressional district includes four nuclear reactors, said he wants a response from Zech within 30 days.

Gejdenson was joined in the letter by the other six subcommittee members, including Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., chairman of the full committee, and Rep. Don Young of Alaska, the full committee's top Republican.

Congress gathers in Philadelphia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress returns to its Philadelphia birthplace this week to recreate the Constitutional Convention of 1787 amid plenty of pomp and, appropriately, a controversy over demonstrators' rights.

Organizers are expecting as many as 200 House members and 25 senators for Thursday's ceremonies — probably the largest congressional delegation to assemble outside Washington since Philadelphia's 177th Congress Hall stopped being the nation's Capitol in 1800, a House historian said.

Fifty-five lawmakers, one from each state plus five House and Senate leaders, will crowd into the Independence Hall room where the Declaration of Independence was signed 211 years ago and where George Washington presided over 55 delegates who framed the Constitution.

July 16 was picked for the speeches at Independence Hall, and later Congress Hall, because that was the day 200 years ago that the Constitutional Convention reached the landmark compromise over big and small states' interests that spawned the two-house legislature.

It was two months later, on Sept. 17, that the Constitution was signed at Independence Hall. Philadelphia's summer-long celebration of the document's bicentennial ends that day with a visit by President Reagan.

Demonstrations are expected Thursday. "Every day I hear about another planned protest," said House historian Raymond Smock.

Federal court caseloads mushrooming

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of lawsuits filed in federal courts has nearly tripled since 1970, with heavier caseloads stemming from contract disputes, personal injuries and suits from federal prisoners, a new report said Sunday.

The number of civil case filings rose from 87,300 in 1970 to 254,800 last year, while criminal cases increased just 4 percent in that time — from 40,000 to 41,500, said the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

Meanwhile, the number of district judges increased by 43 percent, to 1,675.

While the number of filings has ballooned, courtroom backlogs and bottlenecks stem largely from the complexity of a small number of cases such as toxic waste lawsuits with "multiple claims and multiple defendants," said Carol Kaplan, chief of the federal statistics branch at the bureau, an agency of the Justice Department.

Less than 5 percent of the civil cases reached trial in 1986. Nearly half were settled with court action, and another 47 percent were settled before trial.

The U.S. government was a party in 36 percent of the federal civil cases filed last year.

The number of contract disputes involving the government doubled in the past seven years to 46,200. Contract disputes between private parties have risen 16,000 since 1980 to just over 40,000. The detailed breakdown as to the type of lawsuit is available only as far back as 1980.

The number of personal injury lawsuit filings between private parties, meanwhile, has risen more than 45 percent since 1980 to about 32,000.

The number of complaints filed by federal prisoners rose more than 35 percent to 33,000 since 1980.

New civil case filings peaked at 273,700 in 1985. The Bureau of Justice Statistics offered no reason for the decline in 1986, but fewer lawsuits were filed in contract disputes involving the government and complaints involving Social Security benefits fell by 5,000 from the previous year.

Directors to strike; CBS plans lockout

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Directors Guild of America met Sunday with film and television producers, but a union spokesman said plans to strike NBC and two movie studios Tuesday were still on.

In New York, meanwhile, a spokesman for CBS said the network would ask its 150 guild members across the country not to report for work if NBC was struck.

"This is not a reopening of the negotiation," DGA spokesman Chuck Warn said. "The full negotiating committees will not be met in the interests of full communication, the guild has made it clear that it's willing to meet and talk and hopefully bring the strike to an early conclusion."

The parties met at the producers' headquarters in the late afternoon but no other details were available, said spokeswoman Carol Aktyama.

'Marriage tax' hits low-income pairs

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 40 percent of U.S. families will pay a "marriage tax" averaging $1,100 under the new federal tax law, and lower-income couples with children will be among the hardest hit, according to a new analysis of the law.

But most married couples will be subsidized, said economist Harvey S. Rosen of Princeton University. He estimated that 53 percent of married couples will be better off married than single and enjoy an average marriage subsidy of about $600.

In general, said Rosen, spouses who earn about the same will pay a marriage tax, while spouses with unequal incomes will get a subsidy.

"That means that families where both partners work in relatively low-paying jobs to make ends meet will pay more tax than their single contemporaries, while "traditional" families where the wife stays home to care for children will receive a marriage subsidy, even at high income levels."

The comparison deals only with married couples versus unmarried couples and singles based for 1988. It does not compare total tax burden under the old and new tax laws, so even couples hit with a substantial marriage tax may be paying less under the new law than the old.

Rosen, in the study published by the National Bureau of Economic Research, said the effect of the marriage tax law received little attention in most discussions of the new tax code.

Many people apparently believed that the issue, once controversial, would become unimportant when Congress enacted the new law because its lower tax rates would make any marriage tax so small as to be irrelevant, Rosen said.

"To the contrary," he wrote, "the new law creates large taxes on being married for some couples, and large subsidies for others. . . . The new tax law appears to be quite anti-family for low-income workers with children."

The "marriage tax" is the term used to describe the extra tax burden paid by a married couple when compared with the tax paid by two single people with the same total income.

Rosen said an analysis of the tax bill shows that the marriage tax will, indeed, be lower under the new tax law than under the old, and fewer people will pay it.

But the relatively modest $19 average marriage tax for all families can be deceptive, he said. Depending on the individual earnings of each partner and the presence of children, the tax can be substantial.

Republicans push North for president

CHICAGO (AP) — Oliver North has the qualities America needs in the White House, says a small group of Republicans who are launching a campaign to draft the Marine lieutenant colonel for president.

"The people I've had contact with are acting enthusiastically about it. I had 120 bumper stickers made up and they were almost all gone in only a few hours," Robert K. Arundale II, self-appointed chairman of the North for President Committee in Illinois, said Saturday.

"He's got patriotism and intelligence, and the kind of deer that he is would be perfect for the presidency," Arundale, a businessman and former township auditor, said in a telephone interview from his home in suburban St. Charles.

The campaign began Wednesday, the day after North, a former National Security Council aide, began his congressional testimony on the Iran-Contra affair.

North said last week that he has no political ambitions.

Al Carter, 'Mr. First or Last,' dies at 72

CHICAGO (AP) — Al Carter, who carried affidavits to prove he was the first visitor to such events as world's fairs and freeway openings, has died at age 72.

Carter, a jazz drummer, died Thursday.

Beginning in 1933, when he became the first paying male customer at the Century of Progress World's Fair in Chicago, Carter devoted himself to being first — or last, if necessary — at any significant event.

His legacy remains in more than 50 years of newspaper clippings documenting his exploits.

He claimed to be the first visitor to the Chicago Railroad Fair in 1950; the Seattle World's Fair of 1962; the 1964 New York World's Fair and Expo '67 in Montreal.

Risch has best position but won't run for seat in Congress

BOISE — If anybody's in the "catbird seat" in Idaho politics, it's Jim Risch, the veteran leader of Republicans in the Idaho Senate.

A few months ago, he won a smashing victory over a strong, well-financed and well-organized Democratic "industrial" majority before the Democrats can put up as good a candidate against Risch as Boise stock broker Larry LaRocco.

But LaRocco didn't even come close, despite near-record campaign spending. Risch quickly abandoned the "floating" legislative district covering all of Ada County. Risch collected 43,000 votes to LaRocco's 36,588.

And in the following legislative session, Risch quickly abandoned the inflexible position held by him and House Speaker Tom Stivers the previous couple of sessions, and worked with Gov. Cecil Andrus on getting the state's problems solved.

That left Risch in a good position of unquestioned prominence in state politics, with his own party and with Ada County Republicans, and with good support in the majority caucus, even the strong delegation of eastern Idaho Mormons in the Senate. So he is looking toward the future, perhaps a bid for Congress or the U.S. Senate in 1990, when a number of races might be wide open?

In a word, no. "I like politics," he says. "But not that much."

Risch has flatly declared himself out of any national elections in the immediate future. Although he says that when he is "old and gray" he might like to serve a while in the U.S. Senate.

But he has no desire to get lost in the crowd of 435 members of the U.S. House of Representatives. He says he likes what he is doing too much to give it all up for a possible shot at Congress.

He makes speeches across the state almost every time he is invited, but he says that's part of the responsibility of being a legislative leader, not laying the groundwork for a congressional campaign.

At 44, Risch is solidly entrenched. He took a traditional route to power in southwestern Idaho, serving as Ada County prosecutor for a start. Then in 1974 he took on an incumbent Republican state senator, Dave Eskelin, won the GOP primary rather handily, and hasn't been beaten since.

He's been in Senate leadership ever since his second term, first as majority floor leader and now as Senate president pro tem, the body's chief administrative officer. Former Ada County commissioner Gary Berneseolo ran a good campaign against Risch a few years ago, but did no better than LaRocco.

LaRocco, a close political associate of Andrus, had the advantage of Andrus' 7,000-plus vote margin in Ada County over Republican David Leroy, but it still wasn't enough to win.

LaRocco also raised and spent $69,000, which would be a record for an Idaho legislative race — except that Risch had no trouble raising about $40,000 more.

And that Risch is an astute politician is beyond dispute. Last year, even though Risch personally disliked the idea of a state lottery, he realized public sentiment was running strongly in favor and helped get the question before voters through an initiative drive.

Risch's wife, Vicki, also is a powerful asset. She's gaining a statewide reputation for political organizational work. When Vice President George Bush made a late visit to Idaho last fall to help Republicans win election, Mrs. Risch was the one in charge of arrangements.

Risch heads a prosperous six-person Boise law firm. He says he likes what he's doing. Idaho's lifestyle and has no plans to trade it for the hectic life of a congressman.

Quane Kenyon covers Idaho politics and state government for The Associated Press.

Immigration law hurting U.S. more

MEXICO CITY — A significant number of Mexican observers of the American legislative process were sure that the U.S. Congress would never pass an immigration reform bill.

Then when, after years of postponement, the law came into being in November, many in Mexico predicted that it would be inoperative, thanks to its loose and confusing regulations and application procedures. Once the law took effect in May, however, that attitude changed, and a serious discussion on U.S. immigration policy gradually is emerging in Mexico.

Originally the debate was dominated by a widespread fear of massive deportations from the United States, and by the more well-founded concern that the new legislation would have a deterrent effect on the flow of new undocumented Mexican workers to the United States.

Committees were hastily set up to receive deportees; politicians swore that those expelled from the United States would be given preference in finding new jobs in Mexico and in receiving assistance from the government. All in all, there seemed to be a generalized perception that the law was directed against Mexico and would cause the country severe damage.

While the government of President Miguel de la Madrid refrained from taking a public stance along these lines, influential sectors allied with the government were voicing these concerns in no uncertain terms. These with more reserved views tended to take an optimistic, though perhaps overly optimistic, look. They argued that the law would ultimately be meaningless, since it would have no significant or lasting effect on the ebb and flow of a bilateral labor market that is not subject to unilateral control or regulation. A few weeks back, Mexican newspapers were writing about deportation and the decline of undocumented Mexicans crossing into the United States. More recently, the papers were highlighting reports about crops in California and Oregon rotting in the fields because of a chronic lack of labor, and about the garment industry in the Los Angeles area suffering losses without a "cost-effective" work force.

Those who hold that Simpson-Rodino is fated to collapse were encouraged by changes announced last week in the law's regulations for admitting farm workers. Now, almost any agricultural laborer can enter the United States without papers and work for 90 days simply by stating that he was employed on American farms in the past. This hastily drawn concession to growers tends to support the view here that the "reform" law will create far more difficulties for its country of origin than for the nation it was mainly directed at.

Jorge G. Castaneda

This Mexican view, while perhaps not fully accurate, is not entirely wrong. Mexico has long held that the United States benefited as much as its neighbor from the previous, mutually convenient arrangement. American laws were paid for, and Mexican dignity was often tarnished by the shoddy living and working conditions for many Mexican nationals in the United States, but the system worked. Attempts to reform it or abolish it seemed to be more a matter of American ideological considerations than pragmatic policy-making.

Given the rough start of Simpson-Rodino, it is perhaps natural for Mexicans to gloat, and even to proclaim the law as being "on its death bed," as Jorge Bustamante, the country's leading authority on immigration issues, did last week.

At the same time, this attitude may be premature. Quite possibly, it underestimates the law's medium-term effect on Mexican immigration. It also may underestimate the United States' obsession with laws and jurisprudence, forgetting that when American pragmatism clashes with always uncertain U.S. history is rife with laws that did not work and were clearly absurd, yet were enforced and remained on the books for a long time.

But after years of hearing that Mexicans were taking away American jobs, and making the United States "lose control of its borders," a certain amount of "let the state of affairs is not entirely out of order. It never hurts to feel needed, and Mexican labor today appears more necessary than ever to the well-being of important sectors of the American economy.

Record shows Rehnquist playing fair

Paul W. Cane Jr.

The clamor over the Supreme Court nomination of Robert H. Bork brings to mind last year's clamor over the elevation of William H. Rehnquist to the chief justice.

Rehnquist's critics directly predicted that he would marshal the powers of his new office to manipulate the Supreme Court to the political right. Now, with the nomination of Bork to replace Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., the critics again have begun predicting fundamental change ahead at the court.

It is impossible to know what the future may hold with Bork replacing Powell. But it may be instructive to examine the first-year record of Rehnquist's predecessor, the justice correctly predicted a lurch to the right.

So far they have been dead wrong. Liberal Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall last year enjoyed more influential writing opportunities than they have in years. In part this is because Rehnquist appears to be playing fair with his colleagues and the court's internal rules — much more so than former Chief Justice Warren E. Burger allegedly did.

To understand why this is so, it is important first to understand how the court's opinion-writing assignments are made. The justices cast tentative votes on cases within days of hearing oral argument. One justice then is assigned to write a proposed majority opinion. The chief justice makes the assignment if the votes with the tentative majority. If not, the assignment is made by the senior associate justice who is in the majority, normally Brennan.

Control over writing assignments is critical. Who writes an opinion often is nearly as important as which side wins. An opinion does not merely resolve the case under review. Its language provides guidelines for lower courts in deciding future cases involving different facts. Although any justice may write a separate opinion, as a practical matter the justices accord substantial deference to the justice assigned to write for the court majority.

Against this background, the significance of the opinion-assigning power becomes clear. Consider, for example, the recent decision upholding affirmative-action preferences for women in awarding promotions (Johnson vs. Santa Clara Transportation Agency).

Chief Justice Rehnquist voted with the minority at the initial conference; Brennan, the senior member of the majority, therefore controlled the writing assignment. Brennan assigned the case to himself, and wrote an extremely broad decision upholding the affirmative-action program and rejecting the claim of a more qualified male applicant. Had Rehnquist initially voted with the majority, no matter what his final vote, he could have assigned the case to someone like Powell.

Chief Justice Rehnquist has been accused of casting "phony votes" in order to control opinion-writing assignments. For example, Burger is alleged to have voted tentatively with majorities — even ones with which he did not agree — in order to retain control over writing assignments at Brennan's expense. Under the Burger regime, Brennan and Marshall often filed themselves writing non-ideological opinions like those dealing with hydroelectric power, obscure provisions of the tax code, administrative law minutiae and the Amtrak regulatory statute.

Whatever may be the truth of the allegations about Burger, the writing assignments under Rehnquist appear to be following a different pattern. The court's internal workings in individual cases are hard to know, because justices and their law clerks are expected to keep such matters confidential. But preliminary evidence suggests that Rehnquist is playing fair with his colleagues. This year, in addition to the affirmative-action case, Brennan and Marshall wrote for the majority in many significant cases — including those involving the rights of persons with tuberculosis (and arguably AIDS), railroad strikers, pregnant workers and public employees' exercise of free speech. Another of their opinions nullified a state's attempt to require the teaching of "creation science." Preliminary evidence suggests, in sum, that Brennan and Marshall may be enjoying opportunities for greater influence under Rehnquist. The record of the 1986-87 Rehnquist court contains other surprises. Much has been written about the key role played by the "moderate" Powell in many of this year's major decisions. What may surprise some of Rehnquist's critics is that "conservative" Rehnquist voted with "moderate" Powell in more than 85 percent of these.

I do not suggest that Rehnquist somehow has been born again with different ideas. Nor do I suggest that Brennan and Marshall command majorities for their views in all or even most cases. I do suggest that this term's evidence tends to show that, at least thus far, there has been no lurch to the right. As the debate on Bork's nomination proceeds, the Senate should keep in mind that the prophets of constitutional doom aren't always right.

Paul W. Cane Jr., a lawyer in Los Angeles, served as a law clerk to Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. in 1980-81.

U.S., Mexico must share blame for migrants' tragedies

Few Americans can imagine the desperation that drives 19 men to allow themselves to be locked into a boxcar for a train ride through Texas on a sweltering July night.

Clearly, the smuggler responsible for locking the men in the car should be brought to justice. But that is not enough. Americans should not view the ghastly deaths of all but one of the immigrants as an aberration of the picturesque story of "escapee" Mexicans leaving their homes to search for opportunity here.

Death is not uncommon among the thousands of immigrants who travel every day through the Southwest, with thousands of extraordinary aspects of the carnage at Sierra Blanca is that so many died at one time.

The ultimate responsibility for the 18 deaths lies in both countries. Little attention has been paid to the welfare of the migrants on either side of the border. The Mexican government has been mostly concerned with keeping "escapee" numbers down and the consequences to the already troubled economy if these laborers stayed at home. Protection of their human rights gets little government attention beyond state rhetoric.

From the American side, the migrants are portrayed by politicians as a menace to the nation that must be restricted by coercive legislation, while employers take advantage of their vulnerability to fill low-wage jobs that Americans won't take.

Decades ago Mexico embarked on a policy economic development that neglected the interests of rural peasants. The idea was that industrial progress would cause sufficient growth to employ the peasants in factories as they moved to the cities. That never happened. The result was immense wealth for a few and a growing urban middle class demanding affluence and comfort. The country stagnated, and employment opportunities in the cities never matched the numbers seeking jobs. Incapable of offering a piece of the pie to everyone, development planners in government and wealthy businessmen were content to see peasants go to the United States in search of work.

The men in the boxcar — now famous in death — are figures that stick out only temporarily from the faceless, nameless mass of young Mexicans for whom opportunities at home are few and the ultimate freedom is emigrating to the United States. One million Mexicans will join the labor force each year for the rest of the century. More than half the country's population of 80 million is under 15 years old. Although every official in the Mexican government knows these statistics and uses them in speeches, the economic policies are aimed not at job creation but at rebuilding a debt-laden economy that benefits only a few.

Mexico's ill-conceived development is only partly responsible for the latest tragedy. The powerful neighbor to the north must also assume its share of the blame. Obsessed with "regaining secure control of its southern border" and fearful of a "silent invasion" that will rend the fabric of its society, the United States has turned the Mexican immigrants into quasi-criminals who must be hunted, seized and expelled. The Immigration law that was passed last November has sent the message to Mexican peasants that pursuing their dreams of prosperity across the border is now more costly and dangerous than ever.

The climate of suspicion that is enveloping the law has undermined its generous amnesty program, and its chilling effect has only prospered and slowed migration. However, the Texas deaths make clear that many will take whatever risk they think necessary — even to the point of being locked in a boxcar — to get the jobs that are still available here.

Nor has the United States been sympathetic in any substantial way to the economic troubles in Mexico. The Reagan administration has demanded gross sacrifices from Mexico to assure the prompt payment of its $100 billion foreign debt. Few resources remain to promote growth and create jobs.

The inability of the two countries to look at the tragedy of the migrants' fate has ad-

This is not the Philippines, and I am not Ferdinand Marcos.

Panama: Echoes of Philippines

The Los Angeles Times

PANAMA CITY, Panama — In the midst of Panama's political turmoil not long ago, Gen. Manuel A. Noriega, the nation's strongman under siege, gave the following reply to a question that is on the lips of many people here:

"This is not the Philippines, and I am not Ferdinand Marcos," Noriega told an interviewer from a Mexico City newspaper.

The notion that Noriega might go the way of ousted Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos crops up because of evident parallels between the two men and situations. In Panama, the waving of white handkerchiefs and flags by street demonstrators recalls the yellow banners that became the trademark of Marcos' foes before his ouster last year.

Noriega's problems began in much the same way those of Marcos did, with charges of complicity in the assassination of an outspoken political opponent and of electoral fraud and corruption.

But opponents and supporters of Noriega alike say that a quick end for Noriega, who heads the country's Defense Forces and who is the power behind the elected civilian government, is not yet like-

GEN. MANUEL NORIEGA Target of protests

Like Marcos, Noriega is a high-profile target for protest. Former government officials assert that he has amassed a fortune worth more than $100 million during his four years in power, not including homes and other real estate he owns in Panama and France. As head of the Defense Forces, which until 1983 was called the National Guard, Noriega makes a yearly salary of $40,000.

Former Noriega associates allege that other income comes from fees paid at the duty-free port of Colon, Panama, as well as from businesses owned by the military, including a television station, liquor stores and about 60 other enterprises.

U.S. officials and Panamanian sources have asserted that Noriega has ties to drug trafficking and to activities that help Cuba circumvent the U.S. embargo with that Communist island.

Noriega, 49, also appears to have Marcos-like tastes. His large home in the fashionable Altos de Golf section of Panama City features expensive art and rare tropical birds. He drives an imported West German automobile and favors imported whiskey.

For his daughter's wedding last week, Noriega sent out invitations in the form of 5,000 personalized bottles of champagne and a pair of crystal champagne glasses.

He has also displayed symptoms of Marcos-style megalomania. For a time, posters bearing Noriega's portrait with a dove drawn in the background were hung all over Panama City. "Blessed is he who brings peace," the slogan on the poster said.

During a wave of unrest last week, pictures of Noriega being dragged by protesting supporters filled government-owned newspapers. No pictures of the elected, civilian titular head of state, President Eric A. Delvalle, appeared in those newspapers.

Such self-promotion has earned Noriega fame in Panama.

The attitude of the United States, which has important stakes in Panama's stability, is ambiguous. The United States helps train the Defense Forces and maintains military bases on the Panama Canal, which has been under Panamanian sovereignty since 1979. Washington is committed by treaty to turn full operational control of the canal and the year 2000 over to Panama in the year 2000.

Anglican demonstrators against police invasion

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — About 500 Anglican Church members staged a sit-in outside their cathedral Sunday and chanted "Disassemble the violent police!" to protest a police invasion of the cathedral grounds.

The protest ended peacefully and the protesters marched back to the Anglican Cathedral when riot police agreed to withdraw and stop blocking the demonstration.

Priests at the church were meanwhile giving sanctuary to a man who said he was a police undercover agent who posed as a Los Angeles Times correspondent to report on anti-government protests.

Also on Sunday, news reports said labor disputes increased after President Chun Doo-hwan agreed on July 11 to accept a wide range of opposition demands for democratic reforms. His concessions followed 15 straight days of nationwide protests that began when the opposition launched a drive June 10 to oust him.

Visiting Rep. Thomas Foglietta, D-Pa., said Sunday he expects anti-American feeling in South Korea to subside as reforms are implemented.

Sunday's protest was the first anti-government street demonstration reported in Seoul since Thursday, when up to 1 million people rallied to mourn a 20-year-old student who was hit and mortally wounded by a police gas canister during a demonstration last month.

"Down with the military dictatorship that violated our sanctuary," Anglican demonstrators shouted as they marched out of the cathedral, sat down on a sidewalk and faced about 300 riot police in green fatigues and helmets.

This time, the police did not wear gas masks and did not use tear gas. The church members were protesting the entry of dozens of police into the cathedral compound after they rallied Thursday, when police brought a group of young people throwing rocks.

Reporters saw police fire tear gas inside the church grounds and arrest about 20 people.

Polish Catholics meet with party officials

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Catholic intellectuals urged top Communist Party officials at an unprecedented meeting to grant more political freedoms and hold talks with Solidarity's Lech Walesa, participants said Sunday.

About 50 representatives of Catholic intellectual clubs from around the country took part in the five-hour meeting Saturday with a delegation of senior party and government officials headed by Politburo member and Central Committee secretary Jozef Cyrzek. The meeting was held at the request of Cyrzek, No. 2 man to Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski in the Communist leadership, said Catholic sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"The meeting was extraordinary because it was the first time such a representative group of Catholic intellectuals clubs met with the authorities at so high a level," said a Catholic journalist from Krakow who attended the meeting at the Warsaw Catholic intellectuals club headquarters.

"It was just a preliminary exchange of views, but I think that further meetings in the future are probable," he said in a telephone interview.

Cyrzek told the meeting there was no basis for holding talks with Walesa because Walesa showed "a lack of good will" for cooperation with authorities, participants said. They said Cyrzek did not offer specific proposals, but said it was possible for all forces that respect the state's interests to coexist and work together.

Former Solidarity adviser Andrzej

Wielowieyski, who attended the meeting, said speakers also discussed problems in church-state relations, government censorship and economic reforms.

"Our guest (Cyrzek) stressed the state's desire to remain neutral in the religious sphere, which is to be archaic and not anti-religious," Wielowieyski said in a telephone interview.

"This was simply an honest exchange of views that the authorities were eager to conduct and we were also eager ... to talk to the authorities and present our own views."

Professor Andrzej Steimachowski, a chairman of the Warsaw Catholic intellectuals club, urged the government in his opening remarks to conduct an "authentic dialogue" with the clubs and ease restrictions on settling up independent organizations, participants said.

He reportedly repeated demands raised by the outlawed Solidarity labor movement for restoration of trade union pluralism, or the right of workers to form more than one union at a factory.

Solidarity, the Soviet bloc's first independent trade-union federation, was outlawed in 1981. Walesa was a founder and former leader of Solidarity.

Steimachowski said the authorities should not only meet with Catholic intellectuals, but workers' and farmers' representatives, participants reported.

The Catholic intellectuals clubs are one of the few independent organizations in Poland that are legally registered.

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Police wielding batons charged Sunday into nearly 10,000 anti-government protesters who were trying to march to Parliament, and witnesses said more than 100 people were injured.

Court sets dismissal hearing

JERUSALEM (AP) — A special hearing is set for Wednesday to determine if John Demjanjuk knew what he was doing when he fired his rifle in his Nazi war crimes trial, the dismissed attorney said Sunday.

Israel-Soviet talks planned

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Soviet Union has indicated a willingness to renew contacts with Israel and talks between the two countries are planned for this month, a Foreign Ministry official said Sunday.

Animal rightsists claim fires

LONDON (AP) — An animal rights group claimed responsibility for planting firebombs which damaged three department stores of the Debenhams chain Sunday, saying it was to protest the sale of fur coats.

Animal rightsists claim fires

The group, the Animal Liberation Front, said the attacks were part of an "economic sabotage" campaign against the chain. There were no casualties.

Soviet says U.S. blocking arms talks

MOSCOW (AP) — A Tass commentator on Sunday accused the United States of using subterfuge and absurd arguments to block the superpower arms talks, and of then blaming the lack of progress on the Soviets.

"The more real, visible and tangible the possibility of reaching agreements on nuclear armaments becomes," wrote political analyst Sergei Kulik, "the more the U.S. side invents obstacles and complications to prevent that."

Kulik rejected State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman's statement Friday that the Kremlin recently had shown "a U.S. side eagerness to engage seriously and constructively in the nuclear arms talks."

Redman also accused the Soviets of refusing to set a date for a Washington meeting between Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Kulik said the U.S. negotiating position was to blame for the lack of movement in the talks. He said U.S. attempts to prevent negotiating progress led at times to "an absolutely absurd posture."

The Soviet proposal to scrap the weapons, Kulik wrote, "was approved by the West Europeans and the United States has given consent to it.

Little change proposed in forest plan draft

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Conservationists and politicians have all been talking about what they want in the way of additional wilderness. By September the Sawtooth National Forest's final word on the subject will be out.

Until then, forest officials won't release its wilderness proposals but a draft of the forest plan recommended 220,376 acres, including parts of the Boulder-White Clouds, Pioneers and Hanson lakes.

"You are not going to see major changes in the final wilderness recommendations," says Roland Stoleson, Sawtooth National Forest supervisor.

There are already 217,088 acres of wilderness in the forest. If the draft ideas are adopted, the forest service will have a bit less than a quarter of the forest as wilderness.

The Sawtooth Forest contains 2.1 million acres and its largest portion is bounded roughly by Highway 20 (Peach) in the south, Highway 83 in the east (Arco), Highway 76 in the north (Clayton) and Highway 21 to the west (Idaho City).

Ultimately, it's up to Congress whether Idaho gets any additional wilderness. The forest service's ideas are one of many proposals. And the Sawtooth National Forest is one of many national forests in Idaho that will make wilderness proposals in forest plans.

"What comes out of the forest plan carries some weight. They are the professional land managers," says Rick Johnson, conservation assistant, Sierra Club Northwest office.

He says he is concerned the Smoky Mountains were not part of the forest service's recommendation. The Smokies begin about 20 miles northwest of Ketchikan. They border the Sawtooth Wilderness, contain numerous geothermal features and are the home for wolverine and mountain goats.

"The finest hunting and fishing in southeastern Idaho is here due to the integrity of large undeveloped drainages," says an Idaho Conservation League brochure.

The Sierra Club is part of the Idaho Wilderness Defense Coalition which is recommending 3.9 million acres of wilderness in Idaho. Other members are ICL, The Wilderness Society, Idaho Environmental Council, Committee for Idaho's High Desert, the Greater Yellowstone Coalition and some National Audubon chapters.

The differences in acreage between the forest service's wilderness ideas and the coalition's are immense. In addition to seeing 130,000 acres in the Smokies, the coalition wants 182,000 acres in the Pioneers and 463,000 acres in the Boulder-White Clouds. These three areas are all part of the Sawtooth National Forest. By contrast, the forest service final draft recommended 220,376 additional wilderness acres. The Smokies would remain as they are but they wouldn't be managed as wilderness, Stoleson of the Sawtooth said. They would be handled as back country—motorized vehicles could be allowed in parts of it," he said.

The forest service takes into account many factors in making its wilderness recommendations. Public opinion, scenic and recreation values, and impact on other uses such as timber harvesting or mining, environmental impact are all weighed.

Hanson Lakes, south and adjacent to State Highway 21, is a heavily glaciated area with steep mountain slopes, cirque basins and U-shaped valleys, according to the forest service. It is similar in geology and vegetation to the nearby Sawtooth Wilderness. Goat, elk, deer and bear live in the Hanson Lakes area. The forest service says there is public support for protecting this area.

The forest service says the Boulder-White Clouds near Ketchikan offer views of spectacular, colorful mountain peaks which show the forces of nature with folded and faulted strata. A majority of the area is more than 8,000 feet high and several peaks top 11,000 feet.

The Pioneers is also a lofty range, the second highest in Idaho, says ICL. Dramatic glaciation and high mountain lakes make this a favorite destination of backpackers. The area is close to the Ketchikan-Sun Valley-Hatley area.

The Sawtooth's final forest plan has been approved by the regional forest service supervisor in Ogden, Utah, Stoleson said.

Stoleson says he hopes the forest service's recommendations carry weight with Congress. The wishes of the governor and the state's Congressional delegation are also taken into account. Nothing final has come from Gov. Andrus or the Congressional delegation yet.

For the forest service the release of the final forest plan ends a journey that began some 15 years ago. Now it is up to the public and the groups with an interest in wilderness issues.

Opinions are split on issue

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — One way the Sawtooth National Forest determines which way to go on wilderness is by asking for public comment.

A sampling of letters from 1986 when the final draft plan was released shows the agency was peppered with conflicting views about what to do.

Gene and Barbara Kurtz of Arco wrote that as recreational users of the Sawtooths they support more wilderness and oppose increases in logging, road construction and livestock grazing.

They called the White Clouds the "jewels in Idaho's treasury of wild places" and asked they be made part of the nation's wilderness system. They also asked that the Pioneers, Smoky Mountains and Diamond Peak be made wilderness.

James S. Riley, then executive director of Intermountain Forestry Services, did not comment on the wilderness per se but said the forest plan, which deals with many other issues besides wilderness, should be changed.

"Of particular concern is that the proposed plan does not include the flexibility to respond to potential increases in demand for wood products within the Sawtooth National Forest market area," he wrote. Intermountain Forestry Services was a trade association for the forest products industry.

Most of the letters selected at random said the forest service hadn't created enough wilderness. Many were from Ketchikan residents. A number of letters criticized the forest service for not including the Smokies in its wilderness draft proposal.

One such writer, G. Murray Thomas of Twin Falls, wrote that he would be disappointed if on his next hike he was greeted by a view of denuded hills.

"It would be a demonstration of the crumbling march of civilization, a statement of myself and others that wilderness is not valuable, and cannot be preserved in today's world," Thomas wrote.

It would be a demonstration of the crumbling march of civilization, a statement of myself and others that wilderness is not valuable, and cannot be preserved in today's world," Thomas wrote.

Board to consider school AIDS policy

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls School Board will consider an AIDS policy for students and employees at its meeting Tuesday night.

The policy developed by Assistant Superintendent Keith Tolzin sets out guidelines for allowing a potential student with AIDS to be admitted into classes.

Also on the agenda is a proposal to change grading criteria for kindergarten and first-grade students and a proposal to raise school lunch prices at the High School from 76 cents to 85 cents.

A policy has been developed during the past several months for admitting prospective students suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome, related diseases or children infected with the virus.

A team of public health personnel, including student physician and parents, school principal and assistant superintendent will decide on a case-by-case basis whether the student will be permitted to attend classes. The student's physical condition, expected interaction at school and impact on other students will be factors in that decision.

AIDS patients suffering lack of control of bodily secretions or who display behavior such as biting or vomiting, or who have oozing lesions will not be permitted to attend school, Tolzin said.

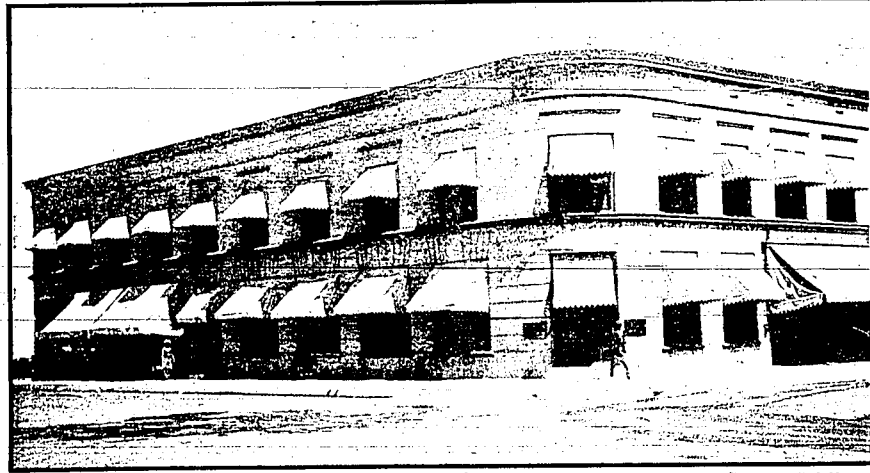

AIDS is transferred through blood and sexual fluids — most often during sex or when drug addicts share intravenous needles.

The proposed policy states the school board will make "every reasonable effort" to provide alternative education for students barred from attending classes.

In another district policy, Tolzin recommends changing grades for kindergarten students to simply pass/fail.

For kindergarten students this means education by mandatory needs improvement or not promoted. First-graders will be graded as "v," meaning consistent.

The board meets the second Tuesday of the month at 7 p.m. in the district administration building.

The old First National building stands empty today, but once had key role as Twin Falls' first permanent bank building.

First bank played key role in city

For three years, Idaho First National Bank has been trying without success to sell its empty office at the main corner in downtown Twin Falls. But there was a time when the 81-year-old structure, the town's first bank building, played a key role in Twin Falls.

No town was complete without at least one bank. I. B. Perrine was a busy man with all his projects getting the town of Twin Falls and the Twin Falls canal system started, but he still had time in January 1905 to help organize a bank for town. The First National Bank of Twin Falls was formed that month with capital of $25,000.

Perrine was the president. The other officers included Phillip Weiser a former banker in Arizona; Frank F. Johnson, president of the First National Bank of Wallace; John M. Maxwell, a teller at the Wallace bank; and H. H. Hayes, attorney for the Twin Falls Land and Water Company and former attorney general for Idaho, who later became mayor of Boise.

The bank opened for business on Feb. 20, 1905, in temporary quarters across the street from the Perrine Hotel, on the south corner of Main Avenue and Shoshone Street. In January Perrine had purchased a lot on the east corner of the intersection for $3,000 for the permanent site for the bank. Construction efforts soon commenced.

Virginia Ricketts
Then and Now

on a $15,000 building there. It took nearly two years to complete the new bank building, but the business moved to its new home on Dec. 10, 1906. Shortly after that F.F. Johnson became president and two Twin Falls pioneers, L. E. Salladay and Dr. W. H. Eldridge, became vice-presidents.

The bank's resources grew. In 1908, $40,000 was paid in capital stock and deposits subject to check amounted to $418,620.21. Four years later the Idaho commissioner of immigration report showed the three banks in Twin Falls each had capital stock of $100,000. Of the 26 banks in the valley at that time, only four had capital stock of $50,000 or more.

The first National Bank survived the perilous '20s when so many banks closed. However, it couldn't survive the effects of the Great Depression. A competitor, the Twin Falls National Bank, closed on November 23, 1931, and the First National followed suit 10 days later. The Twin Falls Daily News on Dec. 4, 1931, quoted cashier J.M. Maxwell in blaming the voluntary closure, not on the Twin Falls economy but on unwarranted withdrawals by some of the depositors. This left the town with only one bank, the Twin Falls Bank, where there had been three one month before.

The building next became the property of Guy Shearer and his Fidelity National Bank, which was formed in 1935 from a reorganization of the First National Bank of Filer. The Fidelity National Bank had its main office in the First National Bank building until July 1970, when it merged with the Idaho First National Bank.

"That bank is now operating from a new building on North Shoshone Street, and its former home has stood empty since it moved. This month bank officials announced they are considering giving away the historic Main Avenue building to a local government in an effort to preserve it since a buyer cannot be found. We can now look forward to a new chapter in the history of the oldest permanent bank building in Twin Falls.

Virginia Ricketts's column on Magic Valley history appears every other Monday.

Blaine County to say happy birthday with convention simulation

By BARBARA NEIWEIT
Times-News correspondent

HAILLEY — Residents of Blaine County can participate in a simulated constitutional convention this November to commemorate the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Titled a "Jefferson Meeting on the Constitution," the event is being cosponsored by Blaine County Community Education and the College of Southern Idaho with the assistance of a $2,000 grant received from the Idaho Humanities Council.

The meeting will be an assembly to promote informed and rational discussion of the fundamentals of the American constitutional system and the current performance of American government, organizers say.

Dr. Ronald L. Hatzenbuehler, pro-essor of history at Idaho State University, will give the keynote address based on his research of Thomas Jefferson. Dr. James R. Gentry, professor of history at the College of Southern Idaho, will address the ratification of the constitution at the Saturday luncheon.

The "meeting" will be held in the form of a mock constitutional convention, and each participant will act as a delegate assigned to debate and discuss one of the proposed constitutional amendments.

The five amendments to be discussed are: the Constitution and the amending process; limits on campaign spending; the direct election of the president; limiting the presidency to a single six-year term; and lengthening the terms of congressmen.

On Friday evening the delegates

2 Idaho thrift networks will stay intact through absorption

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

SEATTLE — The branch networks of two Idaho savings and loan associations will remain intact as they are absorbed by Washington Federal Savings and Loan.

The Seattle-based thrift institution will operate all 22 Idaho offices obtained in last week's acquisition of United First Federal Savings and Loan Association and Provident Federal Savings and Loan Association, said Elliot K. Knutson, Washington Federal chairman and chief executive.

"We've got our plate very full," he said in a phone interview. "We certainly would not have on the front burner new branches or closing branches."

United First operated 15 branches — including ones at Twin Falls, Jerome and Burley — and Provident had seven offices when the Federal Home Loan Bank Board approved the takeover.

While maintaining branches for the immediate future, Washington Federal is merging many headquarters functions into its own system and is consolidating management, Knutson said. Former United First President Robert Link was named Idaho division manager and senior vice president for Washington Federal.

Link said last week he does not expect any branch changes "east of Boise" but consolidations could take place eventually in the Treasure Valley, where both thrifts have a strong presence. United First operates five offices in the capital city, and Provident has three.

Washington Federal took over both financially ailing thrifths July 6 after almost a year of negotiation with the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which insures the industry. The FSILIC previously had placed Knutson on United First's board of directors.

The agency said what Knutson described as a "very substantial amount of cash" to convince Washington Federal to assume the troubled thrifths. The amount was not released. It also purchased a portfolio of bad loans from Provident and indemnified Seattle — institution against other — unspecified liabilities.

With assets of more than $1.3 billion, Washington Federal is considered as one of the country's strongest savings and loans. Its net worth was 13.8 percent of assets — more than four times that required by federal regulators — and the institution consistently is among the top earners in the industry.

United First and Provident have been deteriorating financially for more than a year. In fiscal 1986 ending Sept. 30, United First had losses of $36.2 million and negative net worth of $36.7 million, reports filed with its regulators, the FHILB, showed.

Losses on financial futures and commercial lending contributed heavily to the poor performance. Provident Federal also lost $16.7 million in the 12 months ending Dec. 31, said Shaurhoff & Co. Inc., a well-known consulting firm, after analyzing FHILB reports.

Washington Federal will grow 40 percent in size as it absorbs the two institutions, approaching $2 billion in assets. United First had assets of $327 million and Provident was at $208.2 million on March 30, said Elizabeth Hutchinson, spokeswoman for the FHILB of Seattle.

Link described the merger as "very favorably" for United First's customers, who hold 33,000 accounts. The merger will "lend a lot of stability to the savings and loan industry in the state of Idaho," he said.

Washington Federal's Knutson said the thrift will put its own stamp on services in its newly acquired Idaho offices.

"We would probably concentrate more in the home loan area than either Provident or United have in the past," the executive said. Washington Federal also plans to premier an uninsured savings fund backed by the bank and an unsecured held by an independent firm, he said.

With last week's acquisition, Washington Federal easily became the dominant savings and loan in Idaho. To date, it has confined its reach to 22 offices in western Washington from Bellingham south to the Seattle suburbs.

"We... would not be interested in going into Idaho in a small way, but when we can go in and acquire the largest one in the state in terms of assets, that has become very appealing to us," Knutson said.

Knutson also sees the Idaho economy reversing after its debilitating slump. "I think Idaho certainly has passed bottom. I think they are in the upswing — maybe not a quick upswing, but they are on the upswing," he said. It's the opposite time for a takeover from an economic viewpoint, the executive said.

Washington Federal is publicly held and listed over-the-counter on NASDAQ.

Spill alarm closes interstate, entry port

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

COTTEREL — A section of the interstate highway and two rest areas at the Cotterel port of entry in south Cassia county were closed for a time Sunday when a truck carrying flammable materials and a canister of poisonous cyanide solution began leaking fluid.

State police said the Burley Fire Department was completing the clean-up at the port of entry late Sunday afternoon.

SPt. Steve Jones said as it turned out, only the flammable paint material was leaking, but the situation posed a serious threat had a fire started.

The main concern was the one item listed on the bill of lading, as a Class B poison — a cyanide solution. Had the spill ignited and reached the cyanide it would have created a fatal poison gas.

Jones said the same thing could have resulted had water combined with the cyanide material so firemen could not have used hoses to fight a fire in the truck.

Fortunately there was no fire, but Jones said there is always that possibility when a truck is spilling flammable materials.

Freightways truck from Menlo Park, Calif., and driven by George Baumgardner, 39, of Salt Lake City, pulled into the state police port of entry at Cotterel at 11:40 a.m. Sunday. The driver had discovered the leak and stopped in the west-bound port area for assistance.

Jones said the Burley Fire Department, Cassia County Sheriff's Office, Department of Transportation and state police personnel responded, closing off rest areas on both sides of the interstate and getting people out of the vicinity.

Man kills 7 relatives, then himself

FEDERAL WAY, Wash. (AP) — A man who reportedly had a history of mental illness methodically killed seven members of his family, possibly over a period of two days, then killed himself when police went to his home, authorities said.

The gunman, who killed his wife's two children, his wife and her parents, was identified Sunday as Daniel Patrick Lynam, 36, by the King County medical examiner's office.

The bodies of Lynam's parents and his wife's two children, his wife and her parents, were found Saturday night at their separate homes about three miles apart in north Tacoma. The bodies of Lynam, his wife, 2-year-old daughter and 3-year-old son were found at their rented house in Federal Way, 10 miles north of Tacoma.

"We're sure that all of the incidents are all tied together," Tacoma Police Sgt. Steve Smith said late Saturday. "It is a family. Everyone involved in this situation today was related."

All four of these killed in Tacoma died of gunshot wounds to the head, and the slayings may have occurred as early as Friday, according to disposal site, the officer said. Jones said the load was destined for Orlando, Fla., and had been picked up in Salem, Ore.

He said there were no injuries or ill effects from the incident.

Firemen used "self contained" protective suits to enter the truck and remove the poison. The truck continued on its way after clean-up measures were completed.

Police reports. Police said a .38-caliber handgun was believed to be the weapon used.

Officials for King County and the Tacoma police department said investigations would continue Monday. The medical examiner's office in Pierce County, where Tacoma is located, did not immediately return telephone calls Sunday requesting identities of the Tacoma victims.

will meet to prepare pro and con arguments on the proposed amendments with the aid of study materials on each amendment. The issues will be presented, debated and voted on at the plenary session on Saturday.

Up to 150 delegates are expected to participate in the program. While

Jefferson meetings have been sponsored across the country since their inception in 1984, the Blaine County meeting is the only one scheduled this year in Idaho, said project director Tony Mabbatt.

The meeting, scheduled for Nov. 13 and 14 at Wood River High School, is provided through the assistance by the non-partisan, non-profit Jefferson Foundation based in Washington D.C. The meeting will be open to all citizens of Blaine County without charge, except for the cost of meals.

To assist outstanding students from Wood River High School, Carey High School and the Community School, scholarships will be available to cover the costs of the meals.

Further information and registration details will be included in the BCCE Fall Bulletin, available in August. For more information before then, contact Mabbatt at 622-4915.

State official set to speak to chamber

BURLEY — The Burley Area Chamber of Commerce will hold its all-member meeting will feature Terry L. Bowman, administrator of the Economic Development Division of the Idaho Department of Commerce as its speaker Monday.

The public is invited to hear Bowman at Price's Cafe at noon. Discussion will center around developing the economic potential of the Burley area. Calls may be made to the chamber office at 678-7230 for further information.

3 slated for arraignment

GARDEN CITY (AP) — Three men were scheduled for arraignment today after being arrested with nearly half a pound of cocaine, authorities said.

Franklin M. Ricks Jr., 38, of Garden City; John L. Ricks Jr., 38, of California; and Lucius P. Ricks, 29, of California, were arrested in Garden City at 4 p.m. Sunday after an undercover officer arranged for the purchase and delivery of six ounces of cocaine, police said.

The men were being held in the Ada County Jail Saturday.

The investigation that led to the arrests began in early June, Boise Police Lt. Dick Lindner said.

The three were charged with possession with intent to deliver and conspiracy to deliver. Lucious Ricks was charged with a second count of possession because officers found another bag of cocaine in addition to the cocaine—that was to have been purchased for $11,000, Lindner said.

The street value of the cocaine, he said, was in excess of $20,000, based on $120 per gram for 55 to 65 percent cocaine.

Nine members of the two police departments, including both the narcotics and repeat offender units of the Boise Police Department, took part in the operation.

him in death May 4, 1980. He worked for the Railway Express agency in Salt Lake City on the dock and later as a messenger. He was also a night depot agent. He later moved to Cheyenne, Wyo., working as a depot agent until 1955 when he moved to Shoshone and worked as the baggage agent for the Union Pacific Railroad and as a Railway Express agent. In 1955 he moved back to Salt Lake City and worked as an Air Express agent at the Salt Lake City airport. He retired several years later and returned to Shoshone where he had his residence.

Bengoechea rallies to win state am

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

JEROME — It was billed as a 56-hole championship. But the 1987 Idaho State Men's Amateur golf tournament lasted just 45 holes.

University of Pacific junior Aaron Bengoechea, a Hawaiian by way of Boise and headed for Montana with roots in Twin Falls, played the entire three days on that one hole and went on to claim the state crown by three strokes over Dave Mollitor of Pocatello, Terry Spackman of Burley and Scott Masingill of Payette.

Actually, the competition ended on that ninth-hole confrontation between two-day leader Rick Spaeth of Boise and Bengoechea. Spaeth, terming most of Sunday's play as "ridiculous," made the double-bogey six on No. 9 while Bengoechea was rolling in a short birds putt. That three-stroke swing elevated Bengoechea into the lead and, birdying three of four holes from 11 through 15, he extended his advantage throughout.

He also got a little help on 18 when his tee shot nestled in the petunia beds and against a wall of a house bordering the fairway. Since the house was in-bounds, he got a free drop from a man-made obstruction, and sailed in easily.

The obvious point to his victory double-bogey six on No. 9 was a scoring while his closest competitor — with the exception of Spackman — fell away.

"Actually, that isn't true," Bengoechea said. "The first day I was four-under after 11 when the wind came up. I was in the second-to-last group and I finished the last four holes four-over par. I knew I was playing the course well and I knew darn well I could continue to improve on it."

Bengoechea said he felt No. 9 was the critical point in Sunday's round, since that I was in it. That was just after a birdie on eight that was maybe the best bird of the tournament.

That eight-hole birdie came after he drove into the canal that bisects the fairway. He hit an iron close and then sank the putt for four on the five par where six or seven seemed likely.

"The first two days I'd hit drive over the canal and then nine-irons on to the green. There are times you have to take risks during a tournament and today, with what I'd done the previous two days, I felt it was an opportunity," Bengoechea said.

His pull-away started on the par-five 11th hole.

"I cut the corner there and hit a smooth eight-iron to within 15 feet of the cup but missed the eagle. I made a spectacular par on No. 13 — on top of the plateau with the comeback putt off the grass to within five and then hitting the next putt."

A booming drive of about 300 yards keyed the next hole, the ball winding up hole-high but off to the right. He chipped it close and nailed the putt.

On the next hole he hit "another big drive, a sandwedge to within 15 feet and then knocked in that putt."

His tear ended on No. 16, when "I got a little greedy and went for the rocks and an easy seven-iron to the hole rather than play it safe. He wound up with a bogey six there but then parted in."

What must also be noted is that Bengoechea changed his putting direction three times during the tournament.

He started by putting badly Friday, a non-emphatic stroke allowing the ball to take more break than it should.

"I was de-accelerating on the follow-through, Scott (Masingill) told me on the putting green afterward that cross-hand putting was the thing of the future, that it would keep my shoulder down. Saturday I mixed it up and putted well. I was cross-handed most of the front nine and then regular on the back nine."

"This is the biggest win I've had in the state," Bengoechea added, but noted "Nick Ushijima and I won the U.S. two-man best ball in San Francisco last year."

Masingill agreed that his putting lesson may well have been the difference in this tournament but he didn't care.

The 1988 amateur apparently will be held at Kimberland Meadows.

Nordling big winner again at Regatta

By FLYNN McROBERTS
Times-News writer

BURLEY — It was politics as usual Sunday, the final day of the 11th annual Burley Regatta.

On the course, Milwaukie, Ore., racer George Nordling continued his dominance of the K-boat competition, the highlight of this event, as he surged to a first-place overall finish.

Off the course, Gov. Cecil Andrus greeted the crowd of more than 8,500 spectators late in the day. Joined by former Gov. John Evans, Andrus addressed the racing fans with such pithy statements as, "This is an outstanding crowd and an outstanding event. Everyone's doing a good job."

Needless to say, the excitement was on the course. And, just as Saturday, much of it came with the K-boats, which capped the two-day event.

In an unusually close race, Ron Bolton of Long Beach, Calif., edged out Nordling and George Woods of Burley, Wash., in a three-boat sprint to the finish on the circular course at the Snake River marina here.

But Nordling had entered the final heat of K's with 400 points from his first-place finish in the day's first heat, turned out to be enough of a cushion to guarantee his top overall placing.

"I didn't expect to see George, and I wasn't worried about Ron," Nordling said, referring to Bolton's unthreatening fourth-place finish in the first heat. "By the time I hit it, it was just a little bit late."

Bolton, better known as "Mad Dog," among boat racers, took an early lead in the final heat. Then, as the third and final lap began, "All of a sudden I saw that white bow," Bolton said of Nordling's Hyper-K-Nette boat. "And I thought, Oh great, what a guy to be chasing me."

Both Nordling and Bolton said it was "nip-and-tuck" for the rest of the final lap, with Woods surprising the pair on the final straightaway to provide a three-boat photofinish. Bolton was clocked at 2 minutes, 34.76 seconds, while Woods and Nordling came in at 2:34:87 and 2:35:09, respectively.

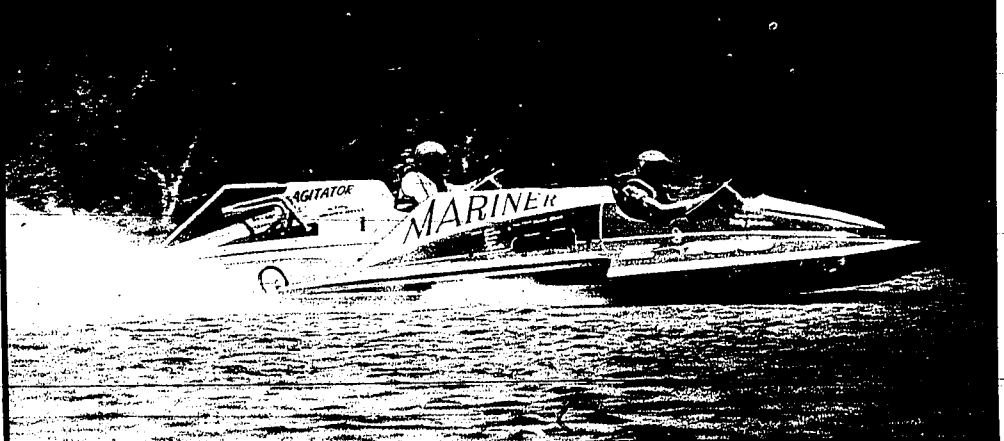

Separately, Paul Grichar of West Covina, Calif., won the coveted mink coat, awarded the racer who is closest to the American Power Boat Association record in his class. Grichar, last year's mink runner-up, was just 1.897 seconds off the record in Pro Stock class.

Jerry Dellinger, a 5-Litre driver, won the Governor's Cup, which Andrus gave him at the final ceremonies, for coming closest to a record among the National Inboard Championship Series classes — K-boats, 7-Litre Hydros and 5-Litre Hydros.

It was Dellinger's first trip to the regatta. "I sure am glad we came," he said with a smile. "The greatest competition in the world is what does it for you. And that's what we had here this week — all through the classes."

Though Dellinger took the Governor's Cup, Ken Dryden of Seattle beat him out in the overall 5-Litre competition with his second- and first-place finishes in Sunday's two heats.

In the other NICS class, the 7-Litre Hydros, Seattle's Ken Muscatel grabbed the victory, though the second heat in the class was voided because 7-Litre driver Dan Long barrel-rolled his craft on the second turn of the first lap.

Long, who was driving a boat aptly named Miss So Long, suffered only minor injuries, including a puncture wound in the left ankle.

"It was just a tight corner," he said as medical personnel worked on him. "I feel fine... I just hope the engine isn't hurt."

In the Super Stock class Sunday, George Stratton of Mira Loma, Calif., rode his craft Sew What to a comfortable final-heat win and an overall victory as well, edging out world-record-holder Dave Villwock, who finished second overall.

"We're just thrilled to death that we finally beat him — and beat him in all five heats," said Stratton, who won every one of his Super Stock heats over the two days.

Final results of the Burley Regatta: all scores are point totals.

Sage hand Idaho Falls first loss

By THE TIMES-NEWS

RUPERT — Minico handed Idaho Falls its first loss in 12 Southern Region American League games by taking the second game of a doubleheader, 3-2, here Sunday.

The defending state and regional champion Minico hadn't lost to a regional opponent since they dropped a game to Pocatello almost a year ago.

Right-handers Brett Bott and Craig Anderson, neither of whom figured in the Sage's pitching plans when the season opened, combined for a four-hitter.

Kent Schow and Anderson both went 2-for-4 in that game.

Idaho Falls will open, 15-1.

The split left Minico 10-17 for the season and 4-8 in league games.

BCI tourney gets under way

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS — Minico High School's Craig Dexter, the head coach of the Magic Valley Basketball Congress International contingent that will compete in the boys' state tournament starting here this morning, says his ballclub may have to contend with taller and quicker players. But probably none that know each other quite as well as his do.

"We've had five or six practices and I'm pretty amazed at how well they're playing together," says Dexter. "We had a pickup game Saturday morning, and the kids ran things

Cowboys reach .500 mark with Sunday split

By THE TIMES-NEWS

That came after right-fielder Shane Clark threw out the game-winning run at the plate in the bottom of the seventh to send it into extra innings.

The Cowboys had to come from behind twice, scoring six runs in the top of the third to erase a 3-0 deficit and four in the top of the six to tie the game at 10.

Ames was 2-for-5 in that game with four RBIs, while Bobby Jenco went 2-for-3 and Matt Rasmussen 2-for-4.

The consolation final was no contest, with Richland hammering out 13 hits — to back starter Mark Bensey's two-hit performance in a game shortened to five innings by the 10-run rule.

pretty well. There are six Minico kids on the team, though, so a lot of them are used to doing things the way we do them in our program."

The three days of competition will get under way this morning at 10 in the College of Southern Idaho gymnasium with the West stars, representing the Treasure Valley, taking on the North, from the Idaho Panhandle. The Magic Valley, or South, squad will face the East at 11:30. After taking the afternoon off, the West and East will square off tonight at 6:30, with the North and South to play at 8.

Action will resume Tuesday morning with the West and South meeting at 10 and the North and East playing at 11:30. On the basis of the results of the first round, the second and third seeds will play at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday with the No. 1 seed to play the No. 4 seed at 8. The consolation final is scheduled for Wednesday at 10 a.m., while the championship game will be played at 11:30.

Following the little game, the four teams' coaches will get together with Idaho BCI Commissioner Rex Johnson of Meridian to select the group that will represent Idaho in the international BCI tournament in Tempe, Ariz., later in the month. That team usually includes at least four players and the coach from the squad that wins this tournament and proportionately fewer players from the other teams.

In brief...

McCumber wins Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Mark McCumber, ending a 29-month victory drought, sank a 30-foot eagle putt on the 16th hole and went on to a one-shot victory over Bobby Clampett in Sunday's final round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

McCumber, after earlier rounds of 65, 69 and 67, finished with a 66 for a 267 total.

Player takes Senior Open

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Gary Foley, denying anyone an opportunity to gain ground, shot a 5-under-par 66 Sunday to win the U.S. Senior Open with a 72-hole total of 148-par 270 that smashed the tournament record by nine strokes.

Rosenthal triumphs in Quebec

LAVAL, Quebec (AP) — Jody Rosenthal showed how different things can be a year later as she won the du Maurier Classic, one of the four major events on the LPGA Tour.

Rosenthal shot a 6-under-par 66 to come from six strokes off the pace to beat Ayako Okamoto by two strokes and set a tournament record with a 72-hole total of 272.

Rangers sign Howe

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers announced Sunday the signing of left-handed pitcher Steve Howe to a minor-league contract with their Class AAA Oklahoma City farm club of the American Association.

The signing came on the first day the 29-year-old Howe was eligible to return to professional baseball after being suspended for more than two years because of drug problems.

Wilander rules U.S. Pro

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Changing his patient approach in the first set to an attacking strategy in the second, Mats Wilander beat fellow Swede Kent Carlsson in straight sets Sunday to win the U.S. Pro Tennis Championships for the second time in three years.

Wilander, ranked second in the world, recovered from a 4-2 deficit in the first set to win 7-6, 6-1.

Spill alarm closes interstate, entry port

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

COTTEREL — A section of the Interstate highway and two rest areas at the Cotterel port of entry in south Cassia county were closed for a time Sunday when a truck carrying flammable material and a container of poisonous cyanide solution began leaking fuel.

State police said the Burley Fire Department was completing the clean-up at the port of entry late Sunday afternoon.

ISF Sgt. Steve Jones said as it turned out, only the flammable paint material was leaking, but the situation posed a serious threat had it been otherwise.

"Our main concern was the one item listed on the bill of lading, as a Class B poison — a cyanide solution. Had the spill ignited and reached the cyanide it would have created a fatal poison gas."

Jones said the same thing which had resulted had water combined with the cyanide material so firemen could not have used hoses to fight a fire in the truck.

"Fortunately there was no fire, but Jones said there is always that possibility when a truck is spilling flammable materials."

He said the Consolidated

Freightways truck from Menlo Park, Calif., and driven by George B. Mangard, 69, of Salt Lake City, pulled into the state police port of entry at Cotterel at 11:40 a.m. Sunday. The driver had discovered the leak and stopped in the west-bound port area.

Jones said the Burley Fire Department, Cassia County Sheriff's Office, Department of Transportation and state police personnel responded, closing off rest areas on both sides of the interstate and getting people out of the vicinity.

The highway was also closed while firemen entered the truck and determined the leakage was from the paint solutions only and did not involve the poison.

The 20-pound box of cyanide solution was removed and the spill was cleaned up by covering the spill with dirt. The soil was then hauled away to a hazardous material disposal site, the officer said.

Jones said the load was destined for Orlando, Fla., and had been picked up in Salem, Ore.

He said there were no injuries or ill effects from the incident.

Firemen used "self-contained" protective suits to enter the truck and remove the poison. The truck continued on its way after clean-up measures were completed.

Man kills 7 relatives, then himself

FEDERAL WAY, Wash. (AP) — A man who reportedly had a history of mental illness methodically killed seven members of his family, possibly over a period of two days, then killed himself, when police went to his home, authorities said.

The gunman, who killed his parents, his two children, his wife and her parents, was identified Sunday as Daniel Patrick Lynam, 36, by the King County medical examiner's office.

The bodies of Lynam's parents and his wife's parents were found Saturday night at their separate homes about three miles apart in north Tacoma. The bodies of Lynam, his wife, 2-year-old daughter and 5-week-old son were found at their Tented house in Federal Way, 10 miles north of Tacoma.

"We're sure that all of the incidents were all tied together," Tacoma Police Sgt. Steve Smith said Saturday. "It is a family. Everyone involved in this situation today was related."

All four of those killed in Tacoma died of gunshot wounds to the head, and the slayings may have occurred as early as Friday, according to police reports. Police said a .38-caliber handgun was believed to be the weapon used.

Officials for King County and the Tacoma police department said investigations would continue Monday. The medical examiner's office in Pierce County, where Tacoma is located, did not immediately return telephone calls Sunday requesting identities of the Tacoma victims.

3 slated for arraignment

GARDEN CITY (AP) — Three men were scheduled for arraignment today after being arrested with nearly a pound of cocaine, authorities said.

Franklin M. Qualls, 33, Garden City; John L. Ricks Jr., 38, of California; and Lucious P. Ricks, 29, of California, were arrested in Garden City at 11 a.m. Sunday after an undercover officer arranged for the purchase and delivery of six ounces of cocaine, police said.

The men were being held in the Ada County Jail Saturday night.

The investigation that led to the arrests began in early June, Boise Police Lt. Dick Linderer said.

The three were charged with possession with intent to deliver and conspiracy to deliver.

Linderer said the three were charged with a second count of possession because officers found another bag of cocaine in addition to the cocaine that was to have been purchased for $11,000, Linderer said.

The street value of the cocaine, he said, would be in excess of $20,000, based on $120 per gram for 55 to 65 percent cocaine.

Nine members of the two police departments, including both the narcotics and repeat offender units of the Boise Police Department, took part in the operation.

will meet to prepare pro and con arguments on the proposed amendments to the aid of study materials on each amendment. The issues will be presented, debated and voted on at the plenary session on Saturday.

Up to 150 delegates are expected to participate in the program. While

Jefferson meetings have been sponsored across the country since their inception in 1984, the Blaine County meeting is the only one scheduled this year in Idaho, said project director Tony Mabbatt.

The meeting, scheduled for Nov. 13 and 14 at Wood River High School, is provided through the assistance by the non-partisan, non-profit Jefferson Foundation based in Washington D.C. The meeting will be open to all citizens of Blaine County without charge, except for the cost of meals.

To assist outstanding students from Wood River High School, Carey High School and the Community School, scholarships will be available to cover the costs of the meals.

Further information and registration details will be included in the B'CE Fall Bulletin, available in August. For more information before then, contact Mabbatt at 622-4915.

Bengoechea rallies to win state am

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

JEROME — It was billed as a 54-hole championship. But the 1987 Idaho State Men's Amateur golf tournament lasted just 45 holes.

University of Pacific junior Aaron Bengoechea, a Hawaiian by way of Boise and headed for Montana by way of Twin Falls, plotted the entire three days on that one hole and went on to claim the state crown by three strokes over Dave Molitor of Pocatello, Terry Spackman of Burley and Scott Masingill of Payette.

Actually, the competition ended on that ninth-hole confrontation between two-day leader Rick Spaeth of Boise and Bengoechea. Spaeth, termed most of Sunday's pin placements as "ridiculous," made double-bogey six on No. 9 while Bengoechea was rolling in a short birdie putt. That three-stroke swing elevated Bengoechea into the lead and, birdying three of four holes from 11 through 15, he extended his advantage throughout.

He also got a little help on 18 when his tee shot nestled in the petunia beds and against a wall of a house bordering the fairway. Since the house was in-bounds, he got a free drop from a man-made obstruction, and sailed in easily.

The obvious point in his victory was a continual improvement in his scoring while his closest-competition —with the exception of Spackman — fell away. "Actually, that isn't true," Bengoechea said. "The first day I was four-under after 11 when the wind came up. I was in the second-to-last group and I finished the last four holes four-over par. I knew I was playing the course well and I knew damn well I could continue to improve on it."

Bengoechea said he felt No. 9 was the critical point in Sunday's round, noting "I knew after the birdie on nine that I was in it. That was just after a birdie on eight that was maybe the best bird of the tournament."

That eight-hole birdie came after he drove into the canal that bisected the fairway. He hit an iron close and then sank the putt for four on the five par where six or seven seemed likely.

"The first two days I'd hit drive over the canal and then nine-irons on 16'th green. There are times you have to take risks during a tournament and today, with what I'd done the previous two days, I felt it was an opportunity," Bengoechea said.

His pull-away started on the par-five 11th hole. "I cut the corner there and hit a smooth eight-iron to within 15-feet of the cup but missed the eagle. I made a spectacular par on No. 13 — on top the plateau with the comeback putt off the grass to within five and then hitting the next putt."

A booming drive of about 300 yards keyed the next hole, the ball winding up hole-high but off to the right. He chipped it close and nailed the putt. On the next hole he hit "another big drive, a sand wedge to within 15 feet and then knuckled in that putt."

His ear ended on No. 16, when "I got a little greedy and went for the rocks and an edgy seven-iron to the green" rather than play it safe. He wound up with a bogey six there but then parred in.

What must also be noted is that Bengoechea changed his putting direction three times during the tournament.

He started by putting badly Friday, a non-emphatic stroke allowing the ball to take more "break than it should."

"I was de-energizing on the fourth swing. Scott (Masingill) told me on the putting green afterward that cross-hand putting was the thing of the future, that it would keep my shoulder down. Saturday I mixed it up and putted well. I was cross-handed most of the front nine and then regular on the back nine."

"This is the biggest win I've had in the state," Bengoechea added, but noted "Nick Ushijima and I won the U.S. two-man best ball in San Francisco last year."

Masingill agreed that his putting lesson may well have been the difference in this tournament but he didn't care.

The 1988 amateur apparently will be held at Kimberland Meadows.

Nordling big winner again at Regatta

By FLYNN McROBERTS
Times-News writer

BURLEY — It was politics as usual Sunday, the final day of the 11th annual Burley Regatta.

On the course, Milwaukie, Ore. K-boat Nordling continued his dominance of the K-boat competition, the highlight of this event, as he surged to a first-place overall finish.

Burley Regatta

Off the course, Gov. Cecil Andrus greeted the crowd of more than 8,500 spectators late in the day. Joined by former Gov. John Evans, Andrus addressed the racing fans with such pithy statements as, "This is an outstanding crowd and an outstanding event. Everyone's doing a good job."

Needless to say, the excitement was on the course. And, just as Saturday, much of it came with the K-boats, which capped the two-day event.

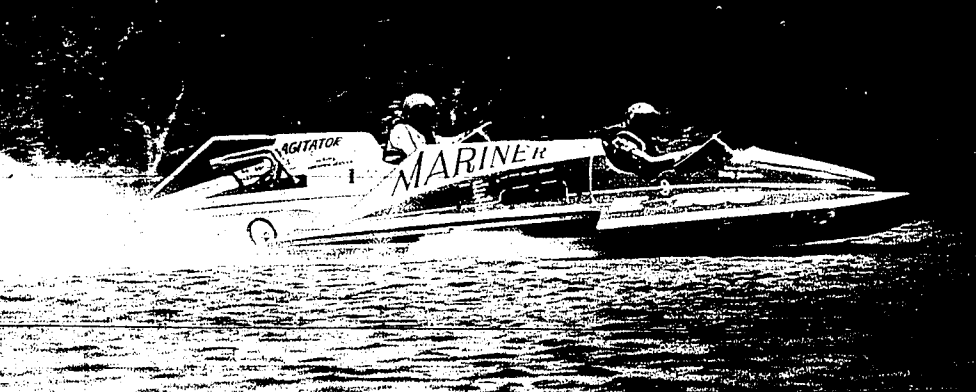

In an unusually close race, Ron Bolton of Long Beach, Calif., edged out Nordling and George Woods of Sumner, Wash., in a three-boat sprint to the finish on the circular courses at the Snake River marina here.

But Nordling had entered the final heat of Ks with 400 points from his first-place finish in the day's first heat, turned out to be enough of a cushion to guarantee his top overall placing.

"I didn't expect to see George, and I wasn't worried about Ron," Nordling said, referring to Bolton's unthreatening fourth-place finish in the first heat. "By the time I hit it, it was just a little bit late."

Bolton, better known as "Mad Dog" among boat racers, took an early lead in the final heat. Then, as the third and final lap began, "All of a sudden I saw that white bow," Bolton said of Nordling's Hyper-K Nettle boat. "And I thought, Oh great, what a guy to be chasing men."

Both Nordling and Bolton said it was "mad-and-tuck" for the rest of the final lap, with Woods surprising the pair on the final straightaway to provide a three-boat photo finish. Bolton was clocked at 2 minutes, 34.66 seconds, while Woods and Nordling came in at 2:34.87 and 2:35.09, respectively.

Separately, Paul Griehar of West Covina, Calif., won the coveted mink coat, awarded the racer who is closest to the American Power Boat Association record in his class. Griehar, last year's mink runner-up, was just 1.007 seconds off the record in Pro Stock class.

Jerry Dellinger, a 5-Litre driver, won the Governor's Cup, which Andrus gave him at the final ceremony, for coming closest to a record among the National Inboard Championship Series classes — K-boats, 7 Litre Hydros and 5 Litre Hydros.

It was Dellinger's first trip to the regatta. "I sure am glad we came," he said with a smile. "The greatest competition in the world is what does it for you. And that's what we had here this week — all through the classes."

Though Dellinger took the Governor's Cup, Ken Dryden of Seattle beat him out in the overall 5-litre class competition with his second- and first-place finishes in Sunday's two heats.

In the other NICs class, the 7-Litre Hydros, Seattle's Ken Muscatel grabbed the victory, though the second heat in the class was voided because 7-Litre driver Dan Long barrel-rolled his craft on the second turn of the first lap.

Long, who was driving a boat aptly named Miss So Long, suffered only minor injuries, including a puncture wound in the left ankle.

"It was just a tight corner," he said as medical personnel worked on him. "I feel fine. I just hope the engine isn't hurt."

In the Super Stock class Sunday, George Stratton of Mira Loma, Calif., rode his craft Sew What to a comfortable final heat win and an overall victory as well, edging out world record-holder Dave Villwock, who finished second overall.

"We're just thrilled to death that we finally beat him — and beat him in all five heats," said Stratton, who won every one of his Super Stock heats over the two days.

Sage hand Idaho Falls first loss

By The Times-News

RUPERT — Minico handed Idaho Falls its first loss in 12 Southern Region "A" American Legion games this season by taking the second game of a doubleheader, 3-2, here Sunday.

The defending state and regional champion Russets hadn't lost to a regional opponent since they dropped a game to Pocatello almost a year ago.

Right-handers Bret Bott and Craig Anderson, neither of whom figured in the Sage's pitching plans when the season opened, combined for a four-

Kent Schow and Anderson went 2-for-4 in that game. Idaho Falls won the opener, 15-1.

The split left Minico 10-17 for the season and 4-8 in league games.

BCI tourney gets under way

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS — Minico High School's Craig Dexter, the head coach of the Magic Valley Basketball Congress International contingent that will compete in the boys' state tournament starting here this morning, says his ballclub may have to contend with taller and quicker players. "But, probably none that know each other quite as well as his do."

"We've had five of six practices and I'm pretty amazed at how well they're playing together," says Dexter. "We had a pickup game Saturday morning, and the kids ran things

Cowboys reach .500 mark with Sunday split

By The Times-News

BOISE — The Twin Falls Cowboys evened their season record at 16-16 here Sunday and came home with the fourth-place trophy from the Dairymen's American Legion tournament by splitting a pair-of-games.

The Cowboys outlasted the Boise Gems 11-10 in eight innings to get in to the consolation championship game before losing 13-2 to Richland, Wash.

Kevin Ames, who had earlier been a three-run home run to keep Twin Falls in the game, singled home Kelly Chatterton from second base in the top of the eighth for the game-winner.

pretty well. There are six Minico kids on the team, though, so a lot of them are used to doing things the way we do them in our program."

The three days of competition will get under way this morning at 10 in the College of Southern Idaho gymnasium with the West stars, representing the Treasure Valley, taking on the North, from the Idaho Panhandle, The Magic Valley, or South, squad will face the East at 11:30. After taking the afternoon off, the West and East will square off tonight at 6:30, with the North and South to play at 8.

Action will resume Tuesday morning with the West and South meeting at 10 and the North and East playing at 11:30. On the basis of the results of the first round, the second and third Seeds will play at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday with the No. 1 seed to play the No. 4 seed at 8. The consolation final is scheduled for Wednesday at 10 a.m., while the championship game will be played at 11:30.

Following the title game, the four teams' coaches will get together with Idaho BCI Commissioner Rex Johnson at Meridian to select the group that will represent Idaho in the international BCI tournament in Tempe, Ariz., later in the month.

That team usually includes at least four players and the coach from the squad that wins this tournament and proportionately fewer players from the other teams.

In brief . . .

McCumber wins Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Mark McCumber, ending a 29-month victory drought, sank a 30-foot eagle putt on the 16th hole and went on to a one-shot victory over Bobby Clampett in Sunday's final round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

McCumber, after earlier rounds of 65, 69 and 67, finished with a 66 for a 267 total.

Player takes Senior Open

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Gary Flyner, denying anyone an opportunity to gain ground, shot a 5-under-par 66 Sunday to win the U.S. Senior Open with a 72-hole total of 14-under-par 270 that smashed the tournament record by nine strokes.

Rosenthal triumphs in Quebec

LAVAL, Quebec (AP) — Jody Rosenthal showed how different things can be a year later as she won the du Maurier Classic, one of the four major events on the LPGA Tour.

Rosenthal shot a 6-under-par 66 to come from six strokes off the pace to beat Ayako Okamoto by two strokes and set a tournament record with a 72-hole total of 272.

Rangers sign Howe

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers announced Sunday the signing of left-handed pitcher Steve Howe to a minor-league contract with their Class AAA Oklahoma City farm club of the American Association.

The signing came on the first day the 29-year-old Howe was eligible to return to professional baseball after being suspended for more than two years because of drug problems.

Wilander rules U.S. Pro

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Changing his patient approach in the first set to an attacking strategy in the second, Mats Wilander beat fellow Swede Kent Carlsson in straight sets Sunday to win the U.S. Pro Tennis Championships for the second time in three years.

Wilander, ranked second in the world, recovered from a 4-2 deficit in the first set to win 7-6, 6-1.

NL: Cardinals take big lead into second half

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Ricky Horton avoided a bad break Sunday as the St. Louis Cardinals began a three-day vacation with the major leaguers' best record.

Horton, a spot starter, improved his record to 5-0 in a 3-1 victory over the San Francisco Giants. He left the game after being hit by a line drive off the bat of Joel Youngblood in the seventh inning.

Baseball

X-rays taken after Horton was hit were negative and he's expected to make his next start.

"I look a little like Popeye, but I think I'm going to make it," Horton told Cardinals pitching coach Mike Roark while sporting a bruise with the imprint of seams on his left forearm.

"I think Mr. Rawlings' signature is on my arm. But it feels a lot better every five minutes," Horton said.

Horton allowed four hits in 6 1/2 innings, struck out three and walked one to win his ninth consecutive game, dating back to April 1986. It was only the third start of the season for Horton, who has seven

Cubs' Trout, fresh from successive shutouts, sent to Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees acquired left-handed pitcher Steve Trout from the Chicago Cubs on Sunday for three minor-league pitchers.

Trout, 29, is 5-3 with a 3.41 earned run average in 10 games in the Class AA Eastern League in his last two starts for the Cubs.

The Yankees gave up right-hander Bob Tewksbury, who spent parts of the last two seasons in the major leagues and was sent last week to Columbus of the International League for the second time this year, along with left-hander Rich Scheid and right-hander Dean Wilkins.

Scheid is with Albany-Colonie of the Class AA Eastern League and Wilkins is with Fort Lauderdale of the Class A Florida State League.

Both Trout and Cubs Manager

Gene Michael were seemingly upset about the trade.

"I've got nothing to say," an obviously angered Trout said Sunday after the Cubs' 12-0 loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I know nothing about it," Michael said. "They told me in the dugout in the ninth inning, I like Rainbow (Trout). They say I like him. I'm sure they took it into consideration."

Trout's consecutive shutouts were a career first for him. He became the first Cubs pitcher to 20 consecutive shutouts since Donnie Eckstein in 1985.

The Cubs said that Scheid, 22, will be assigned to Pittsfield of the Class AA Eastern League while Wilkins, 21, is going to Winston-Salem of the Class A Carolina League.

right field upper-deck seats, a two-run shot in the fifth inning and the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the San Diego Padres 4-2 Sunday.

Mike Durfee, 4-4, won for the first time in his last four decisions by helping the Padres run and seven hits over 6 1/2 innings. John Smiley worked out of two-on, two-out jam in the seventh inning and pitched one inning before Brett Gideon came on to earn his first save.

With the score tied 1-1, R.J. Reynolds led off the Pirates' fourth with a double to right off starting pitcher Eric Show, 4-11. Bonilla then hit a 2-0 pitch three rows deep into the upper-deck stands. His seventh homer of the season. The twofold drive landed about 10 feet to the left of the right-field foul pole.

Atlanta 9 Philadelphia 3

ATLANTA (AP) — Gary Reneke drove in three runs with a home run and a double, helping the Atlanta Braves to a 9-3 victory Sunday over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Reneke's fifth homer, his fourth in six games, came off reliever Doug Bair and scored Ken Oberkell, who had singled. Reneke's run-scoring double was against starter Bruce Kubiak, 6-7, who was chased during the Braves' four-run fifth.

double home the go-ahead run Sunday as the Montreal Expos defeated the Cincinnati Reds 4-2 for their third straight victory.

The victory gave the Expos their best record of the season at 47-39, the first time they've been in eighth place over 500.

New York 5 Houston 2

HOUSTON (AP) — Howard Johnson hit his fourth home run in his last three games to snap a six-inning hit ball for 7 1/2 innings as the New York Mets defeated the Houston

Astros 5-2 Sunday.

The home run was Johnson's 20th of the season and tied Charlie Smith's club record for homers in a season by a third baseman. Smith hit 20 in 1984.

Johnson's 20 homers and 52 runs batted in are both career highs.

Los Angeles 12 Chicago 0

CHICAGO (AP) — Bob Welch pitched a four-hitter and Mickey Hatcher drove in four runs with a homer and two-run single as the Los Angeles Dodgers routed the Chicago Cubs 12-0 Sunday.

Welch, 9-5, won for the first time since June 2, striking out five and walking one. Jerry Mumphy had two of the Cub hits, a single and double.

The Dodgers managed only nine hits but also were the beneficiaries of eight walks off Les Lancaster, 2-1, Ron Davis and Ed Lynch. John Shelby and Ken Landreaux also homered for Los Angeles.

Pittsburgh 4 San Diego 2

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bobby Bonilla became the second player to homer into Three Rivers Stadium's field Sunday as the California Angels defeated the Detroit Tigers 5-4.

Will, 11-5, struck out nine and walked five before needing relief help with none out in the eighth from Greg Minton.

Milwaukee 4 Oakland 3

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Greg Killebrew hit a home run and singled in the winning run in a three-inning eighth-inning rally and Juan Nieves and two relievers combined on a four-hitter as the Milwaukee Brewers gained a 4-3 victory over the Oakland Athletics Sunday.

Steve Steinbach's pinch-hit three-run homer in the seventh inning had given Oakland a 3-1 lead after an early pitching duel between A's starter Steve Ontiveros and Milwaukee's Nieves, 6-6.

AL: Sizzling Toronto turning East into a dogfight again

TORONTO (AP) — Even power pitcher Jim Clancy was surprised at the streakout today.

"Usually, Toronto's big right-hander, had just equalled his career high by striking out 11 batters in the Blue Jays' 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals Sunday.

"I didn't know I had 11 Ks until I got here (at the clubhouse) and heard it on TV," said Clancy, who improved his record to 10-6 with his 7 1/2-inning stint.

Clancy was the fourth consecutive streakout total against the Royals in the series. Through the four games, three of which were won by the Blue Jays, Toronto pitchers registered 40 strikeouts and were touched for just 20 hits.

The Blue Jays enter the All-Star break with a record of 51 wins and 36 losses, three games behind the AL East-leading New York Yankees.

New York 6 Chicago 2

NEW YORK (AP) — Henry Cotto hit a 440-foot homer, doubled twice and drove in four runs, Dan Mattingly homered for the fifth game in a row and Tommy John pitched a six-hitter over seven innings Sunday, leading the New York Yankees to a 6-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Cotto, a 6-foot-2, 178-pound outfielder who was called up from the minors last week for the third time this season, tagged homer-prone Floyd Bannister, 4-6, for his fifth home run of the season following Gary Ward's one-out single in the second inning, giving the Yankees a 2-1 lead.

The drive cleared a second fence some 430 feet from home plate in almost straightaway center field and landed in the Yankees' bullpen. It came on the 77th at-bat of the season for Cotto, who hit only two homers in 280 at-bats prior to this year.

Baltimore 5 Minnesota 0

BALTIMORE (AP) — Dave Schmidt, starting on one day's rest, called the first 17 batters and pitched a two-hitter Sunday to lead the Baltimore Orioles to a 5-0 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Mike Young, who entered the game in a 1-for-20 slump, hit a pair of two-run homers to back Schmidt. Young's eighth and ninth of the season.

Schmidt, 9-2, pitched to just one batter over the minimum. He was perfect for 5 1/2 innings before Greg Gagne pulled a soft line single to left.

Seattle 6 Boston 1

SEATTLE (AP) — Gary Matthews made his American League debut in impressive fashion Sunday, going 2-for-4 and driving in three runs to lead the Seattle Mariners to a 6-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Sox starter Al Nipper's third pitch in the second inning off the facade in the second deck in left field to give Seattle a 1-0 lead. Matthews had 231 home runs in his NL career.

Sunday as the California Angels defeated the Detroit Tigers 5-4.

Will, 11-5, struck out nine and walked five before needing relief help with none out in the eighth from Greg Minton.

Milwaukee 4 Oakland 3

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Greg Killebrew hit a home run and singled in the winning run in a three-inning eighth-inning rally and Juan Nieves and two relievers combined on a four-hitter as the Milwaukee Brewers gained a 4-3 victory over the Oakland Athletics Sunday.

Steve Steinbach's pinch-hit three-run homer in the seventh inning had given Oakland a 3-1 lead after an early pitching duel between A's starter Steve Ontiveros and Milwaukee's Nieves, 6-6.

Here comes baby: Preparing siblings helps

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — When there's to be yet another visit from the stork, can the green-eyed monster be far behind?

Maybe not — If the soon-to-be big brother or sister attends the Big Kids Klub at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls, taught by Kim Kvale, South Central Health Department public health nurse, or the Sibling Class at St. Benedict's Family Medical Center in Jerome, where Gail Goodin, R.N., is the instructor.

Each is a one time, one hour class, designed to prepare the child for the birth of a rival for mom and dad's attention.

Kvale says the object of her class is to help boys and girls who are expecting a baby at their house, to feel better about the whole event. She talks to them about what it is like to be a big brother or sister, and points out to them that they will be their babies' first friends. She also talks about the things they can do to help their moms and dads.

But, she says she does not talk as much about lending support to their parents as she does about that which pertains to the children themselves.

"My concern in 45 minutes to an hour, is support for you (the child), and playing up your role as a small person in the house — how important you are. And, I think support for mommy comes secondarily to that," she says.

Kvale says it's necessary for the child to feel important. If the new brother or sister feels threatened, then they are going to begrudge every minute the parents spend with the new baby.

Janet Casabonne of Twin Falls took her 3-year-old daughter, Nicole, to the Big Kids Klub in March, two weeks before baby Patrick was born. She says, "The class made Nicole feel special. It made her feel like being a big sister was important."

Goodin says she begins her class by reading a story about babies, and the jealousy, and a lot of the emotions involved with having a new baby come," she says, especially important to help the kids feel like they weren't good enough, and that's why their parents are going to have another child.

Robin Fowler of Hagerman, who attended Goodin's class with her 3-year-old son, Jamie, says she has heard some really bad stories of jealousies, but since the arrival of London, he hasn't shown any whatsoever.

She also used to read her son stories at night about new babies. "He used to get all excited about it," she says, "I think preparation is really necessary."

The sibling classes give the children the opportunity to learn quite a few facts about babies. Goodin says they are usually surprised babies' eyes are always blue at first. She says the children have been told not to touch the soft spot, but that they do not know why. They learn that the head is in sections, and it separates there so baby can grow.

"We talk about how to handle babies," she says, "how to touch them, and not poke them in their faces, and things like that."

Kvale says she shows the children a film called "Big Kids." And she tells the children that all their new siblings will be able to do, at first, is to sleep, drink and cry. And that babies can't eat popcorn and ice cream like they do, but can only drink milk. She then discusses breast and bottle feeding.

The children take along their favorite dolls or stuffed animals to the classes. Nadine Tateoka, of Hazelton, says her 3-year-old son, Joseph, and 2-year-old daughter, Elise, benefited from the Big Kids Klub.

"They enjoyed the class," she says. "They let them diaper a little baby doll. They brought their favorite little animal, and they were able to diaper it."

She says she thought it was helpful that some of the daddies, her husband Paul included, were able to come to the class. "I think that was nice, making it a whole family thing."

One of the daddies, F.T. Freestone Jr., who attended the Big Kids Klub with his 6-year-old daughter, Megan, says he thought it was very educational.

Goodin says they're letting the young kids go in with the parents and the baby in the room after a new one is born. I think it was beneficial to the child in that sense, because then they kind of have an idea of what's going on when they get there, and a lot of things they can look for," he says.

The children are given a tour of the nursery, mom's room, and at St. Benedict's, the labor room. Kvale says in the tour of the nursery, the kids see real babies with pink and blue hats. "We show them where mom is going to be sleeping, after the baby is born. And how moms have telephones, and if they're lonely, and you miss your mom, you can call her on the telephone."

Older children also benefit from all of this. Shoshone residents, Sandy and Mike Sants have four children, ages 5, 6, 7 and 8 from previous marriages.

Craig Draper, 3, looks through the book 'That New Baby' with father Kevin Draper at a St. Benedict's sibling class.

"This was our first baby together," she says. "There has been no problem. The baby fit right in, and they were excited. They're ready for another one."

Ellen Schreffler's daughters, 7-year-old Angela and 4-year-old Carla, attended the Big Kids Klub before her son, Jeremiah, was born. She says she would do the class again. "I think it was good for the girls, especially just making Carla feel important."

Big Kids Klub classes are held in Twin Falls the second Saturday of the month. The fee is $5 per child or $8 per family, if more than one child attends. For more information, call 737-2900.

The Sibling Classes are held every seven weeks; and the next one is scheduled for August 18. The cost is $4 per family. For more information call 324-3301.

Competition can be positive

TWIN FALLS — When there are two or more children in a family, there is inevitably going to be some degree of sibling rivalry, say most psychologists.

"It's perfectly natural," says John McDermott, a medical doctor and chairman of Department of Psychiatry at the University of Hawaii School of Medicine.

In his book, "Raising Cain (and Abel too), The Parents' Book of Sibling Rivalry," McDermott says competition between siblings can strengthen a youngster for success in later life, but parents can make the difference between whether that competition becomes a positive or negative influence.

While some psychologists advise parents to let children settle their own squabbles, Stephenson says you should be careful with that "strength makes right" policy.

"I think it's better to separate them by sending each to their room," he says. "The hardest part is to determine who started what. Don't get involved, just say it takes two to make a fight and leave it at that."

Stephenson says parents should also avoid the inclination to put the oldest in charge when they have to leave the house. "Don't let one child have authority over the other," he says.

Parents can take some comfort in the fact that brothers and sisters usually become friends by the time they reach high school age. Still, Stephenson says, "There's no guarantee. Sibling rivalry can continue well into mature adulthood."

Good books to read

There are several books you can read to your child to prepare him or her for the new baby. Here are a few recommended by the Big Kids Klub staff:

"Nobody Asked Me If I Wanted A Baby Sister," by Martha Alexander, New York: Dial Books for Young Readers.

"When the New Baby Comes, I'm Moving Out," a companion book also by Martha Alexander and published by Dial Books.

"Hi, New Baby! A Book to Help Your Child Learn About the New Baby," by Andrew C. Andy and S. C. Kratika, Simon and Schuster.

"Go and Hush the Baby," by Betsy C. Byars, Penguin Press. Here's a book especially for parents:

"Raising Cain (and Abel too), The Parents' Book of Sibling Rivalry," by John F. McDermott, Jr., M.D., Wyden Books.

Quick takes

Implant may enhance surgery

Immediate implant of a tiny radioactive source at the tumor site following lumpectomy breast cancer surgery may contribute to success of the operation, according to a study in Archives of Surgery.

While many studies indicate that lumpectomy combined with radiation therapy produces the same survival rates as modified radical mastectomy in patients with early breast cancer, this study suggests that implanting the radioactive source at the tumor site may reduce local failure rates even further.

The study was done by researchers at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City who used the technique to treat 110 breast cancers in 107 patients over more than a four-year period.

Friedan rips 'age mystique'

Famous feminist author Betty Friedan says America's older generation is the victim of an "age mystique" that is similar to the "feminine mystique" she described two decades ago.

"What I see today is an age mystique as pervasive and almost more deadly than the feminine mystique in its denial of the personhood of people over 60," Friedan said at a conference on "productive aging" in Washington D.C. She does not believe in celebrating the youthfulness of older Americans. She thinks we should view aging as "a new kind of human development, instead of trying to get old people to have their faces lifted, to dye their hair, to be cosmetic cowboys," American Medical News reports.

Friedan believes those who receive the gift of good health and long life will lead the nation into a social revolution that celebrates aging and the opportunities and strengths that that segment of life effects.

"We will not go gently into the good night. We are going to lead this country into a new day," Friedan said.

Hearing about earwax buildup

It's a common problem but one that has yet to enter the world of polite conversation. Earwax buildup plagues almost all of us. While it doesn't compete with nuclear power or Gary Hart's love life for conversational value, it can be annoying and potentially harmful.

While earwax serves a useful purpose in coating and moisturizing the skin of the ear canal, protecting it from infection, buildup of it, which can inhibit hearing, should be avoided.

Good ear hygiene is the key. Since wax is formed in the outer part of the ear canal, it usually is enough to keep the ear clean. Cotton swabs should not be used for this purpose because they can push the wax inward toward the ear drum. When wax builds up, there, hearing can be impaired.

Hepatitis is major blood risk

Even though screening techniques have lowered the risk of contracting AIDS from blood transfusions to near zero, concern remains that banked blood may not be safe. But AIDS isn't what should be feared from blood transfusions, according to the Harvard Medical School Health Letter. Hepatitis is a much more prevalent complication. About 5 percent of people who receive blood transfusions get the so-called "non-A, non-B" hepatitis virus. And about half of those infections become chronic with the potential to cause cirrhosis and liver failure. The reason: a good technique to screen blood for this type of virus exists.

The answer is an easy one but one that has yet to catch on. The answer is predonation or autologous blood transfusion, which simply means banking your own blood prior to surgery.

Heart attacks a poor teacher

If your mother or father had died young of a heart attack, don't you think you would take better care of yourself? Not necessarily, say researchers at the University of Michigan Fitness Research Center.

Such individuals take some of the easy steps thought to prevent heart attacks, the researchers found, such as getting their cholesterol level checked, but they usually shy away from the lifestyle changes that require some real effort, like exercising.

Louis Yen, a Michigan graduate student, and Dr. D.W. Edington compared the habits of 1,270 persons whose parents had died of a heart attack before age 60 to those of 14,679 in a control group.

Persons in the high-risk group; they found, were significantly more likely than others to engage in health behaviors associated with coronary heart disease: smoking, using drugs and failing to exercise.

Labor drugs linked to addiction

The Associated Press
SAN FRANCISCO — Women who take certain painkilling drugs during labor increase the risk that their offspring will become drug addicts later in life, according to a Swedish study.

The study also showed that the various types of birth trauma associated with higher suicide rates among adolescents or young adults.

Dr. Bertil Jacobson, in a report of his findings at the Third International Congress on Pre and Perinatal Psychology, noted that only a tiny percentage of mothers given bar-biturates or opiates at birth during the period studied produced babies who later became drug addicts.

Similarly, he emphasized that "very, very few of those who experienced trauma at birth actually committed suicide."

However, the association between the birth events and self-destructive behavior later in life was conclusively shown in the study, he said.

"People who committed suicide by violent means more often experienced mechanical birth trauma," he said.

"People who committed suicide by violent means more often experienced mechanical birth trauma," he said.

(rear) presentation," said Jacobson, who works at the prestigious Karolinska Institute in Sweden.

"People who committed suicide by asphyxia, including hanging, drowning and poisoning by gas, more often experienced asphyxia (loss of oxygen) during birth," he said.

The study looked at 99 addicts with 144 siblings, comparing their birth records. Among addicts to opiates such as morphine or heroin, 24.5 percent were born to mothers who were given opiates and/or barbiturates while 9.6 percent of the controls' mothers were given drugs.

Looking good

Leather's not just for bikers

Leather clothing once considered the uniform of bikers, is now showing up at board meetings, elegant evenings out and even in wedding processions.

Importers say new techniques for treating leather have made it as easy to cut, dye, stamp and print as any other fine fabric. As a result, leather has become increasingly popular with designers seeking novel fabrics for their new styles.

Tailored suits, trim, fitted dresses, and soft blouses were among the styles shown at the recent New York Leather Exposition.

Sophisticated styles in leather have widened the consumer market, says Isabelle Borbely, an analyst for the Italian Trade Commission. "We have finally broken down the American buyer's hesitancy to purchase leather clothing."

The new styles are appealing to an older, career-minded purchaser, according to Kari

Allen, who imports the leather clothes of Australian designer Bridg Brock, through the Australian Wool Skin Co.

Longer hair takes on curls

Just as hemlines and shoulder pads change with the seasons, so do hairstyles reflect trends in fashion. Stylists and salons say the newest looks — longer lengths in flowing curls or soft waves — are romantic and feminine.

Longer hair, permed or naturally curly, is cut in layers and styled with mousse or gel for a finished daytime look that requires minimal fuss. For evening wear, hair can be worn up with accessories or twisted into a stylish chignon.

Wisp bangs, tendrils or fringes framing the face further soften the look.

"Fuller, longer-looking hairdos have come back in vogue," says Antoinette Salgado, international artistic director of Cerec des Artes et Technique de la Coiffure, an association of hair designers in 40 countries.

Strategies can stop family bickering

It happens much too often to families behind closed doors: members pitted against each other — screaming, yelling, hitting, verbally wounding the people they care most about.

How can parents reduce the bickering and fighting in their families? Here are an assortment of strategies that can help:

Agree with your family that no issues, conflicts, or negative comments are allowed at the dinner table. You could decide that any member of the family who violates the rule gets a five-minute time out.

Avoid handling problems with individual children in front of an audience whenever possible. If you have to discipline in front of other children, don't let them side with you against a sibling.

Agree with your partner that if one of you starts getting heavy with a child, the other can step in and offer to take over.

Control your voice level. Parents too often don't take responsibility for the yelling and screaming they do, which, of course, kids do model.

Take responsibility for your tone of voice and for every word that comes out of your mouth. Use mature language and avoid any responses that are condemning, threatening, attacking, hostile, belittling, haughty, and the like.

If you do slip, apologize for your own negative responses. Remember that if you apologize when you have erred, your children will learn to apologize, too.

Spare your children the pain of watching you argue with your partner. If you do have to argue, do it privately.

When responding to everyday annoyances in the family, follow these general guidelines: 1. Don't sweat the small stuff; and 2. Everything is small stuff.

Jo Ann Larsen

Try to handle your problems with other family members with a "light touch." Use humor and soft voice tones. Instead of demanding change, invite it through requests and negotiation. And increase your touching, holding, hugging, and "I love you's" in the family to help create a positive family atmosphere.

Work to eliminate any "grim" mode of dealing with problems that may now characterize your family interactions. This also includes eliminating a "punishment" atmosphere and approach for dealing with the problems kids cause.

Point out instances in which kids respond respectfully, treat others in caring ways, or communicate responsibly.

Set up rules with kids that eliminate their using name-calling, swearing, other abusive language (such as "shut-up"), or physical violence. Don't wait even thirty seconds to intervene if your children violate these rules.

Consistently model "emotional courtesies" for your children, such as "please," "thank you," and "excuse me."

Don't let kids just "fight it out." Nothing is gained by letting children tear each other apart. When children are allowed to physically or verbally attack others, they learn it is permissible to hurt others when they get angry.

Separate children when they're having serious scraps (unless you decide to referee). When you interrupt quarrels, however, don't take sides ("There you go again, picking on your sister. Won't you ever grow up?"). By avoiding side-taking, you'll avoid the alienation that occurs between quarrelers and leave your children on their own side with handling.

Don't handle aggression with aggression. If you handle your children's quarrelling on their level — with screaming, hitting, name-calling, and raw anger — you simply become one of the quarrelers and lose your ability to influence your children. If you find yourself becoming irrational as you attempt to stop a fight, leave the scene and try again when you are calm.

Teach your children how to negotiate when they are not fighting and help them apply this skill when fighting occurs.

Coach older children on how to avoid letting younger children get a rise out of them. To help prevent quarrelling, develop decision-rules specifying what happens when children encounter particular situations. For example:

— The child who divides a snack chooses his portion last.

— When fighting occurs in the car, the driver will stop the car until the fighting stops.

— One child (nits in the front car seat) picks the TV shows (does the dishes) (etc.) on even-numbered days; another child, on odd-numbered days (with more children, be creative).

— Any object kids fight over is put away for a day or until they have peacefully settled the issue.

Lack of natural tranquilizers may cause spider phobias

Fear of spiders may be caused by a lack of natural tranquilizers in the brain, says a Stanford University research team that intends to find spider out for spider-phobic people.

Volunteers who are scared of spiders will come to the California research institute for what might be called "spider therapy." They will be exposed to a spider in a series of 14 steps, beginning with merely seeing a spider through hands-on tests.

Diet soda may erode enamel on teeth

By The Los Angeles Times

Sandra Banks, a personnel specialist from Lake View Terrace, Calif., often drinks diet sodas and cans of diet soda a day. She reports that an office-mate is a six-pack-a-day man himself.

"Like many diet-soda drinkers, Banks and her friend think that "Sugarless" on the can label means that is probably no danger of the teeth.

"Dentists, however, are seeing a steady increase of patients with enamel problems ranging from chipping to total tooth loss. The only explanation they can find is consumption of excessive amounts of diet soda.

"Many dentists have observed in their own practices patients where they could find no other cause but the possibility of a diet drink being the actual reason for the teeth dissolving," said Mark Friedman, D.D.S., a University of Southern California dental professor who lectures to other dentists on the subject.

Although there has been virtually nothing on the topic in the media or in dental literature, Friedman says dentists are aware of the problem. "Each of his lectures he said, elicited comments from a number of dentists who say they have seen patients with enamel erosion due most likely to drinking too many diet sodas.

Soda consumption in this country is booming. We drank an average of 486 cans per person in 1985, up from only 289 cans in 1975, according to the National Soft Drinks Association. Diet sodas accounted for more than 21 percent of all 1985 sales.

We are drinking more but are we reading the small print on the back of our favorite diet soft drinks? And, if we are, do we realize that the phosphoric and citric acids listed pose potential danger to the enamel of our teeth?

Citric and phosphoric acids, which are listed among the ingredients of a soft drink, are routinely added to most sodas as flavor enhancers. "I'm a label reader, but that's one I haven't happened to have read."

Banks said. The low pH levels in sugared sodas and more so in most juices — like orange, grapefruit, apple and grape — make them acidic as well. This includes the new, juice-type sodas.

"If you take a soft drink which is already acidic and add very acidic juice, the product you end up with will tend to be highly acidic. In many cases, even more so than vinegar," said Larry Wolinsky, Ph.D., D.M.D., a biochemist and periodontist at the UCLA Dental School.

The lower the pH of a product, the more acidic it will be. Vinegar has a pH of about 5.5. Most sodas with phosphoric acid have a pH level of 2.3 to 2.6. Dentists fear that pH levels of lower than 5.5 can be harmful to the teeth.

"Most people might talk of drinking a soda here or a glass of juice there, and not the three, four, five or even more cans a diet-soda drinker can swallow in just one day. "I thought it was harmless, you know, sugar-free, so I just drank it like water," said Karen Wehrmeister, a 29-year old Los Angeles computer programmer.

Wehrmeister averaged six to seven cans of diet cola a day all through college and until recently. She is currently having more than $5,000 worth of dental work done to correct her eroded teeth.

"In Karen's case, we could find no other explanation for the erosion than the fact that she was an excessive diet, soda drinker," Friedman said.

To do for you

"To Do for You" is a calendar listing health-related activities, events and education. Information should be submitted by Thursday for publication in the following Monday's Reach section. Mail notices to The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, 83303, or deliver them to our office at 132 Third St. W.

CPR course set to start today

TWIN FALLS — A basic Cardiac Life Support Instructor Certification course will be held at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center at 7:30 p.m. in the 3rd Floor Conference Room beginning today. The course will run four nights, three hours each. Participants must attend all four sessions to become certified. The course fee is $30 and preregistration is recommended as class size is limited. For more information, or to register, contact Stacy Miller at the Educational Resource Center, 737-2007.

Go for the burn with triathlon

SUN VALLEY — The Sun Valley Athletic Club will sponsor the Sun Valley Sprint Triathlon Sunday. The event will include a 1/2-mile swim, 4 mile run and 14 mile bike ride. For information, call 726-3664.

9th falls run is approaching

TWIN FALLS — The Ninth Annual Falls to Falls 5.3 mile run will be held Saturday. Check-in time is 7 a.m. with the race beginning at 8. The race will start at the Twin Falls Park in the Snake River Canyon and will finish at Shoshone Falls at Dierkes Lake. There is a $10 entry fee which includes T-shirts for all runners. Awards will be given to top finishers. Entry blanks are available at KEEP Radio or Donnelly Sports. For more information contact Bob Ridgeway, 734-4330 or KEEP Radio at 733-7512.

Board breaking will help MDA

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Taekwondo Club is helping the Muscular Dystrophy Association find a breakthrough to a cure by putting on three separate board breaking marathons on Saturday. The first attempt to break 200 boards by the senior black belts will take place downtown at 11 a.m. The second demonstration will be by the junior black belts, who will attempt to break 100 boards at 1:30 at the Blue Lakes Mall. At 4 p.m., the instructor, Bruce Koeh will attempt to break as many boards as he can. That demonstration will also be at the Magic Valley Mall.

Wake up with aerobic lessons

JEROME — A six-week session of aerobic dance classes offered by the Jerome Recreation District will begin July 21. Classes will be held at 6 a.m. Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday with Louise Slatter or at 9 a.m. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday with Patty Slobod. The fee is $10.50 for 2 days a week or $15 for 3 days per week for the six week session. Registration may be made by calling the District office at 324-3393.

Bicycle tour open to top 25

STANLEY — The Stanley/Lowman Bicycle Tour will be held July 25-26 and is limited to 25 experienced cyclists. Participants will caravan to Stanley where the ride begins and continue up Hwy. 21 over Banner Summit down to Lowman and camp along the Payette River. Camp supplies will be carried by the Stag Wagon. All meals are included. The fee is $35. Pre-registration is necessary by calling The Elephant's Perch, 726-3497.

Get fit with Y.F.C.A. classes

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Y.F.C.A. is offering fitness classes through July 31. Water exercise and low impact aerobics classes are available weekday mornings. For more information, or to register call 733-4384.

Guns can make deadly toys

Most unintended firearm deaths of children occur when a child plays in the same room in which the gun was found by the child. The study suggests that the assumption that owning a gun reduces the risk of harm may be false. "Of 10 intentional fatal shootings of friends and family members in the home as many as six times as common as fatal shootings of criminals."

The study suggests that the assumption that owning a gun reduces the risk of harm may be false. "Of 10 intentional fatal shootings of friends and family members in the home as many as six times as common as fatal shootings of criminals."

"I really do think the administration of drugs to women is a risk factor," she said. "If people are worried about drug addiction, I hope they will pay attention to this. We need to be cautious about giving drugs to women in labor."

Dr. Mary L. Davenport, an obstetrician at the University of California-San Francisco and co-chairperson of the conference, said Jacobson's research could have a profound effect on obstetric practice.

"It has to do with parenting, early life experiences, stress, and the biology of the person," Davenport said.

"The adult may be trying to duplicate the experience he had when he was being born," he said. "Perhaps if the baby is born with drugs it gets the wrong message that the meaning of life is to spend it in a drugged state."

Jacobson acknowledged that "the medical community does not appreciate this," but added, "The important thing is the connection. We should be careful about using drugs at birth because they could cause damage later."

Jacobson and suicide are influenced by a variety of factors, Davenport and Jacobson agreed.

"What you get is a rapid release in chemicals," Metcalf explains. "If the chemicals are released in the lungs, you get asthma. If they're released in the gastrointestinal tract, you might get nausea. In the skin, you get hives. Most food allergies are immediate-type I allergic reactions. A few, involving other systems, are more complex and rare."

Topping Metcalf's list of foods which are all-too-familiar to allergic sufferers are:

- peanuts
- tree nuts (pecans, cashews, etc.)
- crustaceans (like lobster and shrimp) and whitefish (particularly cod)
- eggs
- milk

"People can become allergic to other foods," he says. "Certain individuals can become allergic to just about anything, including carrots or celery, in rare cases."

Metcalf gives very succinct advice to those who may have read a column explaining self-treatment or self-diagnosis of food allergy: "Do it yourself," he warns.

"It's a risky business, because if you have a reaction in the form of hives, trying to test your idea of what caused it might precipitate a much more severe reaction."

"If you get hives from eggs once, the next experience could be anaphylaxis — allergic shock — which can kill. It's much wiser to go to a physician trained in allergies and immunology, who may take any number of routes toward a diagnosis," Metcalf advises.

Figuring out what caused what is a tricky business. Sometimes cooking a food destroys its allergenic quality. Sometimes cooking creates allergens. "So you might have a reaction to milk, but lose that sensitivity when it's boiled," Metcalf explains. "These reactions also depend on the amount of food eaten." It's the same as with ragweed sensitivity. Sometimes when there's only a small amount in the air, the allergic person may have no reaction. It's a dose-response relationship. A person sensitive to peanuts may be able to eat half a peanut without any trouble but may go into shock on eating 10 peanuts. This is an important factor that people forget all the time.

Also standing by to confuse the diagnostic works are food additives. Was it the shrimp or the additive in it? "The main problem is sulfites; severe asthmatics can become extremely sensitive to sulfites, which have caused death in some cases."

Farther down the list, and quite rare, are sensitivities to yellow dyes and the sweetener aspartame. The food additive MSG, ingested in excess of 5 grams, may cause an unpleasant reaction in some people. It lasts for only about 20 minutes, however, and is not an allergic reaction.

"Once you identify a person as having a food allergy, the treatment is avoidance of that food. But if they have especially severe reactions, we want them to be prepared to self-administer Adrenalin, with the same kind of kit people carry for bee stings. They need to be prepared to treat it instantly," Metcalf also advises those patients to wear a MedicAlert bracelet in case they lose consciousness.

FAMILY VACATIONS

There are so many places which make travel with children a vacation! Does that sound familiar? Even though it's a commonly asked question, it certainly shouldn't pose a problem.

There are so many places which make travel with children a vacation! Does that sound familiar? Even though it's a commonly asked question, it certainly shouldn't pose a problem.

The first place that comes to mind is Club Med which has Mini-Clubs in several locations with special facilities for children under 12. Some Clubs even offer baby sitting service for infants, so you can plan a true family vacation. The younger set will be so totally occupied with their own activities that Mom and Dad can truly relax.

Or, how about a cruise? A cruise is the best family vacation money can buy. There's no need to plan your culinary desires or to not one penny more, where else can you determine if your three year old has developed a taste for ceviche? If not, you can eat it and order something else for your child. Some children never eat anything but peanut butter at home and never order anything less... than flat pizza for breakfast. A cruise will cater to those bizarre whims which afflict virtually every child.

If you're not ready for anything on quite such a large scale, why not a resort within driving distance? Most hotels have greatly reduced rates for children in the same room with parents. (Remember, however, that many hotels will only put a maximum of four in a room.) It's a good way to determine if your child is ready for a large vacation.

We'll help you find the perfect place for your vacation, to stop by and let our experience pave the way for a perfectly family trip.

Husband's last goodbye riles minister

DEAR ABBY: I recently lost my wife when she lost a six-year battle with a terminal illness. The medical school to which we had planned to leave her remains rejected her, so I was suddenly faced with changing all of our plans and arranging an open casket memorial service.

At the wake, knowing that after the casket was closed, I would not see her again until I joined her in eternity, I poured out my heart to her as she lay on display. I guess I shed a few tears as I said goodbye and planted a farewell kiss on her cold and silent lips.

The clergyman (I am a former clergyman) scheduled to preach her memorial service became highly incensed because of even having the viewing in the first place, talking to my wife while she lay in the casket and kissing her. (Her mother did the same thing.) He doesn't believe in the traditional American way of death and honoring the remains, but only in "commencements" as he calls them — when the body is not in view.

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

After the viewing, he telephoned me and "laid me out in lavender" using a few choice phrases, suggesting I was a mental case and in need of a psychiatrist. (One hundred and eight people attended the wake, and no one else objected.)

Abby, is it very unusual and totally out of order for a husband to act as I did under the circumstances? And what do you think of this minister?

— BEN FROM BROCKTON

DEAR BEN: Forgive your minister for his lack of compassion and his insensitivity to your last moments with the remains of your beloved wife.

I think he is a troubled man, and his behavior should be reported to whom ever is his superior.

DEAR ABBY: My parents say that when my date picks me up, he should come to the door and get me. The guy I go with doesn't watch for him in the window, and as soon as his car pulls up in front of our house, I run out and get in.

I guess I will have to tell him, but I don't know what to say. Please help me.

— STARTING TO DATE

DEAR STARTING: Say, "The next time you pick me up, would you please come to the door and get me?" Explain — that it's the courteous and customary thing to do.

(P.S. — You don't say how old he is, but if he's old enough to drive, it's time he learned one of the elementary rules of dating.)

MURTAUGH — Murtaugh Friendship Day will be held Saturday with a parade at 11 a.m. followed by games, races and softball for all ages. A horseshoe pitching contest is scheduled at 5 p.m. and a barbecue

MURPHY — The Idaho State Historical Society will sponsor a field trip Saturday. Participants should meet at 9:30 a.m. at the courthouse in Murphy and bring a lunch. Autos with good clearance will be able to make the trip. The round trip from Murphy via Flint and Silver City is about 100 miles. At Flint a 20-stamp trail will be viewed and hikers can take a 20-minute walk to view a quiet cemetery. For more information contact Larry Jones, 334-3356.
