Key senators give blow to Bork nomination

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Robert H. Bork's Supreme Court hopes suffered major new setbacks Monday as Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, a conservative Democratic senator and two liberal Republicans declared opposition to his confirmation.

Byrd had been publicly undecided, even suggesting that he and other Senate Judiciary Committee members should send the nomination to the Senate floor without taking a stand on it when they vote Tuesday. But on Monday he called the nomination "doomed," said President Reagan shouldn't have picked Bork in the first place and suggested that withdrawing the nomination "would spare Mr. Bork."

At the White House, Reagan said he would fight on, declaring that only "over my dead body" would the nomination be defeated before reaching the full Senate. Reagan's chief of staff, Howard Baker, in an interview with CONUS News Service, said the White House had no intention of withdrawing Bork's name from consideration. And presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said he would take no questions about what might happen if Bork is rejected, adding, "We're not going to discuss replacements, period."

Baker said, "The president is determined to pursue this matter to completion. The president believes that there's a chance to get Judge Bork confirmed. He's going to pursue that chance as he always has and we are going to have a vote on it."

Before Byrd's announcement, Fitzwater called the nomination "very, much alive." After hearing about Byrd, he said, "It's getting tougher but we're still working on it."

In addition to Byrd, Sens. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., and John H. Chafee, R-

R.I., left the undecided camp for the opposition, with DeConcini telling reporters, "I think it's over." DeConcini said his personal count shows at least 53 senators opposed to Bork, while Sen. Alan Cranston — who counts noses as the Democratic whip — added that negative recommendation — although a decision of "no recommendation" is still possible. Both sides have said the nomination should be sent to the Senate, no matter how many committee members oppose confirmation.

He said Reagan, who briefly answered several questions on Bork at an unrelated White House ceremony, intends to speak out for him at the re-scheduled swearing-in Thursday of FBI Director-designate William Sessions.

Five Republican members of the committee favor Bork, and Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., is to make his decision known on Tuesday.

Weicker and Chafee became the third and fourth Republicans to speak out against the nominee, following Sens. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, a member of the Judiciary Committee, and Bob Packwood of Oregon. Democrats who say they support Bork are Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and David Boren of Oklahoma.

Byrd said he would vote against Bork because of concerns about privacy, the right of Congress to sue the president in federal court, and because the nomination is "too controversial to go forward with."

Asked if the nomination should be withdrawn, Byrd told reporters, "I think it would spare Mr. Bork and I'm sorry the president sent this nomination up to the Senate."

Byrd said he decided to switch from undecided now because, "Over the weekend I made a lot of calls to West Virginia and found a great feeling of concern, distrust, unease."

"The White House should recognize that this nomination is going down, not up," Byrd added. "The nomination is doomed."

DeConcini said Bork's career as a professor and an appellate court judge "indicates a lack of understanding of the effect of judicial decisions on real people. Judge Bork views the Constitution as a bloodless and sterile contract."

he now counts 53 opposed and 42 in favor with five senators' positions unknown.

"The outcome is now pre-ordained," Cranston said. "I don't see how it can be turned around now."

Fitzwater said Reagan telephoned four senators Monday, lobbying for their votes, but he wouldn't say who they were.

The decisions by Byrd and DeConcini also will affect the Senate Judiciary Committee vote Tuesday on the type of recommendation the panel will make to the full Senate.

They were the seventh and eighth lawmakers on the 14-member panel to announce opposition to Bork. Cranston said the vote "would likely turn out to be a

High court opens; agrees to review single-sex clubs

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, opening its 1987-88 term with only eight justices on the bench, agreed Monday to review the constitutionality of a New York law aimed at banning sex and race discrimination by all-male private clubs.

The New York law is similar to one passed last week by the D.C. City Council.

The justices, still waiting for a replacement for retired Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., Monday let stand a lower court ruling that California's famous all-male Bohemian Club could not discriminate against women seeking jobs there, left intact another ruling that the House could not publish a biography of J.D. Salinger because too much of it came from his private letters, and declined to step into a controversy over the Oakland Raiders football team's move to Los Angeles.

The court placed 21 cases on its docket, including disputes over whether states may ban direct mail ads by lawyers; whether prosecutors may force suspects to turn over foreign bank records and whether a newspaper may be held in contempt for publishing FBI documents after a judge told it not to.

But the justices declined to hear some of the most highly publicized appeals. Slitting through more than 1,000 cases held over from last term or filed during the summer, the justices:

— Cleared the way for the Oct. 19 trial of former top White House aide Michael K. Deaver on perjury charges, letting stand a lower court decision that said his challenge to the constitutionality of the independent counsel was premature.

— Declined to overrule a New York federal appeals court decision that lawsuits filed after the disaster at a chemical plant in Bhopal, India must be tried in that country. More than 2,000 people were killed and 200,000 injured after deadly gas escaped from a Union Carbide plant there. A number of American

Trade pact faces tough road ahead

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yuster conceded Monday that winning congressional approval of a far-reaching free trade pact with Canada will "require a lot of effort" on the part of supporters.

Despite "initial optimism" expressed by Canadian and U.S. officials, Yuster said obtaining approval of the agreement might be difficult, particularly over some of its provisions — including giving Canadians access for the first time to oil from Alaska's North Slope.

But he told reporters that, in the end, "this is a package that should sell itself and will sell itself."

The accord, completed after 16 months of negotiations and just before a mid-October deadline for a final "interim" agreement, calls for all-tariff and most other trade barriers between the two countries by Jan. 1, 1993. It would create the world's largest open market.

But as fuller details of the accord began to surface Monday, key U.S. lawmakers voiced skepticism over the prospects for quick approval. The pact must be approved by both Congress and the Canadian Parliament to take effect.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said in a statement that it was "obvious that a lot of the major points have not been resolved."

"Up to this point... all we've been hearing about are U.S. concessions," Bentsen added.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., a Finance Committee member, said neither the administration nor the Canadians should engage "in cheerleading tactics to build support for this agreement."

"Only after Congress has an opportunity to review the specifics will it be able to determine whether this trade agreement is free, or if the American consumer is being asked to pay too high a price for what amounts to be a political deal," Baucus said.

The accord would give U.S. businesses greater opportunities in Canada by lifting scores of trade and investment restrictions. At the same time, it gives Canadian companies greater access to U.S. markets.

With two-way trade last year of $135 billion, the United States and Canada are the world's largest trading partners.

Yuster said he had detected a "• See PACT on Page A2

Federal guideline on cholesterol issued

WASHINGTON — For the first time, a federal advisory panel Monday issued specific recommendations to physicians for treating people with high levels of blood cholesterol, saying that the guidelines, if followed, could prevent as many as 300,000 heart attacks every year.

"Medical practice is going to undergo a major change as a result of this report," said Dr. DeWitt S. Goodman, professor of medicine at Columbia University in New York, who served as chairman of the committee. "It will have a large impact on coronary heart disease and the public health."

Although information about cholesterol-lowering therapy has been available previously, many physicians "were deterred" from using it because they lacked "available practical guidance about how to go about it," the panel said.

About 26 percent of Americans between the ages of 20 and 74 have high blood cholesterol, or roughly one out of four adults, the panel said, which "translates into at least 40 million people who need further evaluation or possible treatment."

For the first time, a federal advisory panel Monday issued specific recommendations to physicians for treating people with high levels of blood cholesterol, saying that the guidelines, if followed, could prevent as many as 300,000 heart attacks every year.

"Medical practice is going to undergo a major change as a result of this report," said Dr. DeWitt S. Goodman, professor of medicine at Columbia University in New York, who served as chairman of the committee. "It will have a large impact on coronary heart disease and the public health."

Although information about cholesterol-lowering therapy has been available previously, many physicians "were deterred" from using it because they lacked "available practical guidance about how to go about it," the panel said.

About 26 percent of Americans between the ages of 20 and 74 have high blood cholesterol, or roughly one out of four adults, the panel said, which "translates into at least 40 million people who need further evaluation or possible treatment."

"cornerstone" of therapy to reduce blood cholesterol levels and said that cholesterol-lowering drugs should be used only on those with the highest risk or when diets fail. Further, the committee said, other risk factors such as being male, obesity, cigarette smoking, high blood pressure, or having a family history of premature heart disease, should be taken into consideration when determining treatment.

The panel also set a single standard for measuring high cholesterol for everyone 20 or older — a change from past practice, which modified the LDL cholesterol of 240 milligrams per deciliter of blood or above as "high blood cholesterol," while levels 200 to 239 were considered "borderline high blood cholesterol." Levels below 200 were classified as "desirable blood cholesterol."

Total blood cholesterol is composed of "high-density" lipoprotein, or HDL cholesterol, the so-called "good" cholesterol, which has an inverse relationship with heart disease, and "low-density" lipoprotein, or LDL cholesterol, which has been implicated in the development of heart disease. LDL cholesterol "is the key index for therapy," the panel said.

The panel recommended that all Americans over 20 have their total cholesterol measured at least once every five years, and that those who are classified "borderline" have the test repeated. Those with total cholesterol of 240 or higher should also undergo more specific LDL cholesterol analysis, the panel said. LDL levels of 150 to 189 are classified "borderline high risk LDL cholesterol," while levels of more than 180 are considered "high-risk LDL cholesterol," the panel said. Patients with high-risk LDL levels plus heart disease or two other risk factors need "intensive medical intervention" and should be given cholesterol-lowering treatment.

Dietary therapy should occur in two stages, the panel said. During the first phase, the patient should consume no more than 30 percent of his total calories in fat, including no more than 10 percent in saturated fat and less than 300 milligrams a day in dietary cholesterol. The second phase requires further reductions of saturated fat to less than 7 percent of total calories, and cholesterol intake to less than 200 milligrams a day.

Bork count running neck-to-neck

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty-two senators say they'll vote to confirm Robert H. Bork as a Supreme Court justice, while 33 say they won't and 35 aren't committing themselves, a survey by the Associated Press shows.

Of the uncommitted, Republicans David Karnes of Nebraska, Robert W. Kasten Jr. of Wisconsin and William V. Roth Jr. of Delaware say they are leaning toward approval and Democrat Brock Adams of Washington is leaning against.

The anti-Bork forces gained four votes Monday when Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., and Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., announced their opposition to the nomination. Byrd and DeConcini are members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The vote is generally split along party lines, with 30 Republicans and two Democrats favoring the nomination and 29 Democrats and four Republicans opposing it.

The Senate has 64 Democrats and 46 Republicans, and a simple majority is needed to confirm a nominee.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on the nomination Tuesday, but a date has not been set for a possible vote in the full Senate.

The Associated Press polled all senators who had not previously taken a public stance.

Republicans who sided with the Democratic opposition were Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, Bob Packwood of Oregon, Weicker and Chafee. Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., and David Boren, D-Okla., are in the pro-Bork camp.

Senators who have announced for Bork:

Republicans William M. Armstrong, Colorado; Christopher S. Bond, Missouri; Rudy Boschwitz, Minnesota; Thad Cochran, Mississippi; John Danforth, Missouri; Bob Dole, Kansas; Peter Domenici, New Mexico; Dave Durenberger, Minnesota; Jake Garn, Utah; Phil Gramm, Texas; Charles Grassley, Iowa; Alan Simpson, Wyoming; Orrin G. Hatch, Utah; Chic Hecht, Nevada; Jesse Helms, North Carolina; Gordon Humphrey, New Hampshire; Nancy Kassebaum, Kansas; Richard Lugar, Indiana; John McCain, Arizona; James McClure, Idaho; Mitch McConnell, Kentucky; Don Nickles, Oklahoma; Larry Pressler, South Dakota; Dan Quayle, Indiana; Warren Rudman, New Hampshire; Steve Symms, Idaho; Strom Thurmond, South Carolina; Paul Trible, Jr., Virginia; Malcolm Wallop, Wyoming; Pete Wilson, California; and Democrats Boren and Hollings.

Karnes had been listed as favoring the nomination, but his communications director, Brent Bahler, said today that the senator was "inclined to support" it. Karnes scheduled a Wednesday announcement on the Senate floor.

Roth, who also had been listed as favoring the nomination, is "favorably disposed" toward it, his press secretary, Verna Wilkins, said Monday.

Senators who have announced against Bork: Democrats Max Baucus, Montana; Lloyd Bentsen, Texas; Joseph Biden Jr., Delaware; Jeff Bingaman, New Mexico; Bill Bradley, New Jersey; Quentin Burdick, North Dakota; Robert Byrd, West Virginia; Alan Cranston, California; Thomas A. Daschle, S.D.; Dennis DeConcini, Arizona; John Glenn, Ohio; J. Bennett Johnston, Louisiana; Edward Kennedy, Massachusetts; John Kerry, Massachusetts; Frank Lautenberg, New Jersey; Patrick Leahy, Vermont; Carl Levin, Michigan; Spark Matsunaga, Hawaii; John Melcher, Montana; Howard Metzenbaum, Ohio; Barbara Mikulski, Maryland; Daniel P. Moynihan, New York; David Pryor, Arkansas; Donald Riegle Jr., Michigan; John D. Rockefeller IV, West Virginia; Terry Sanford, North Carolina; Paul Simon, Illinois; Timothy Wirth, Colorado; and Republicans Packwood, Specter, Weicker and Chafee.

One Democrat said he would vote against Bork but did not yet want to be identified.

— Turned down the appeal of American Indian Movement leader Leonard Peltier, who was convicted of murdering two FBI agents in 1976 during a shootout at the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota. Peltier argued that a newly discovered ballistics report, withheld by the government, directly contradicted the most significant evidence against him. A federal appeals court rejected that argument, saying that the jury likely would have convicted him in any event.

— Rejected appeals by black and white parents in Kansas City, Mo., who were trying to force neighborhood schools to help desegregate the majority black city school system.

— Let stand a ruling that former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda must turn over documents to a federal grand jury investigating corruption. Justice Byron R. White voted to hear the Marcos' case, but four justices must vote to hear a case.

— Stalled the execution of serial killer Theodore R. Bundy, letting stand a lower court ruling saying that there must be a hearing on whether Bundy was mentally competent to stand trial for the murder of a 12-year-old girl.

— Declined to hear appeals from eight lawsuits against a county prosecutor and other officials in Jordan, Minn. that grew out of a controversial child sexual abuse investigation there in 1983 and 1984. County attorney R. Kathleen Morris charged 24 adults with sexual abuse but then dropped charges against 21 of them after losing a trial against two defendants and allowing a third to plead guilty to reduced charges. The parents charged filed lawsuits against Morris, local police and state and local officials, but the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals dismissed them on the grounds that the officials enjoyed immunity from such suits.

— Let intact a California Supreme Court ruling that the Fourth Amendment requires Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates to seek court approval before using a motorized battering ram mounted on a tank to crash into a house and serve a search warrant.

The state court said such approval is required because an "inherently dangerous" method can be used. The case arose after the police used the armored personnel carrier with a 14-foot steel battering ram at a heavily fortified house that sold rock cocaine, or "crack."

"mood shift" in Congress in recent days in favor of the pact, but he added, "Any major piece of legislation like this will obviously require a lot of effort."

The trade chief said he planned to meet with key members of Congress in the coming days to go over the treatment, first proposed by Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and President Reagan in 1986.

The United States has a similar free-trade agreement with Israel.

One part of the U.S.-Canadian accord that "may be controversial," Youtter said, is the provision giving each nation greater access to each other's energy resources.

It would mark the first time that the United States would share oil from Alaska's North Slope. The provision does set certain conditions — Alaska oil destined for Canada would have to be shipped in U.S. tankers and would be limited to 50,000 barrels per day.

Another controversial area, Youtter and other administration officials suggested, is the process for resolving future trade disputes between the two nations — an issue that had become the biggest obstacle to the agreement.

Canada wanted an exemption from existing trade laws under which punitive tariffs can be imposed to protect U.S. industries threatened by exports that are directly or indirectly subsidized by the government.

Swan Falls water pact bill heads to House committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation providing the federal endorsement needed to finalize Idaho's Swan Falls water rights agreement was scheduled for action this week by the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

The panel, set to take up the measure on Tuesday, was expected to approve the bill and send it to the full House for a vote.

The bill, backed by the Idaho congressional delegation, requires the Federal-Energy-Regulatory Commission to approve the agreement reached between the state and Idaho Power Co. in late 1984 ending the long-running battle over control of the Snake River.

FERC approval has been the only thing standing in the way of final implementation of the agreement for the past two years.

Idaho Power Vice President Logan Lanham said he expected the bill to receive favorable House action in the near future and to be sent to the Senate for final consideration.

The measure is similar to one that passed both houses of Congress last fall as a rider to mandatory standards for electrical appliances. President Reagan vetoed the entire proposal just four days before the November general election, objecting to the energy standards. At the time, however, he said he would accept the Swan Falls provision.

Under the agreement, Idaho Power was guaranteed a minimum stream flow in the Snake to keep its hydro-generators running and the state won authority for limited future development on the Snake River Plain.

A major provision of the agreement was a general adjudication of all water rights in the Snake River and contributing basins. That process, expected to take 10 years and cost over $25 million, began last month with 5th District Judge Daniel Hurlbutt in Twin Falls presiding.

Hurlbutt has scheduled a status conference on some procedural issues still to be resolved for later this week.

Crews attack 2 revived wildfires

The Associated Press

Fire crews dug in on the most critical flanks of two Idaho wildfires Monday after weekend winds whipped life back into the previously smoldering blazes.

Some 200 firefighters actively battled the 40,000-acre Deadwood Summit Fire in the central mountains for the first time since lightning ignited that wilderness blaze 63 days ago in Boise National Forest.

Weekend winds sent fire racing over five miles in just an hour, pushing flames out of the Frank Church River of No Return Wilderness to blacken another 10,000 acres of forest land in just a day's time.

The fire swept east and south of Deadwood Summit, routing hunters in the Dagger Falls area on the Salmon River and destroying a campground there. Officials said it was "an absolute miracle" that none of the 13 people in the path of the blaze was injured.

Fire hoses were able to divert a helicopter from a nearby logging operation to help with suppression, and spokesman Milt Williams said they hoped to have a handle on the portion of the blaze outside the wilderness area by midweek. But the bulk of the fire will likely burn until nature puts it out.

"We are incapable of putting out large fires at this point," said Dick Adams, fire management officer for the Boise National Forest. "All we can do is confine them to natural boundaries and pray for rain."

On the state's eastern border, the Spring Canyon Fire, declared contained just a week ago, erupted again over the weekend, and 300 firefighters were called back to the remote area near Palisades Reservoir after the blaze spread from 800 acres to nearly 1,400 acres in just 36 hours.

"We're hitting it with all the force we have," Targhee National Forest spokesman Dennis Oakes said. "The winds are swirling up there. It's really a tough situation."

Helicopters were called in to ferry crews and supplies from the base camp near Swan Valley about 35 miles southeast of Idaho Falls to two spike camps on the fire line at about 8,000 feet elevation. They were also dosing hotspots with huge water buckets.

The Rainey Creek Drainage was closed to the public, but Oakes said there was no immediate threat to prime goat habitat on nearby Mount Baldy.

"They're trying to use the original fire lines that were developed and make them stronger," said Oakes. "They're creating new fire lines where it slipped over."

Over a dozen other fires were still burning in wilderness areas around the state, but they were not being actively fought.

The Deadwood Summit Fire, the largest in the state this season, had been allowed to burn naturally for over eight weeks in and along the wilderness until the latest rain force supervisors to commit crews to the lines.

Idaho farmers boost soil conservation record

MOSCOW (AP) — Idaho's farmers and ranchers are improving soil conservation measures on the state's 6 million acres of cropland.

Soil Conservation Service officials said.

The average annual soil erosion rate for Idaho's total cropland is about five tons per acre.

"That, on a good number of soils, is an acceptable level," state conservationist Stan Hobson said. "Any time you have an average you've got a lot of acres over and a lot of acres under. The acreage under that five tons or an acceptable level is not of great concern to us at this point in time."

However, Hobson said there are many areas where the soil erosion rate exceeds five tons per acre.

"In the state of Idaho, we anticipate that there is somewhere near 2.5 or 2.6 million acres of highly erodible land being farmed today."

The 1985 Farm Bill requires those who farm highly erodible crop-land to develop effective conservation plans by 1990 and to implement those plans by 1995 in order to remain eligible for farm program benefits.

Hobson said about 80 percent of the producers who farm 2.6 million acres of highly erodible cropland participate in the government program.

The conservation service and farmers have collaborated to write conservation-minded plans, he said.

There still are about 15 million acres of highly erodible land for which plans must be developed.

"We're going to have to do some things differently in order to reach those kinds of numbers and get plans on those kinds of acres, and we realize that," he said.

One method the service is trying is group planning. Five to 10 operators will be asked to gather together for a training session based on newly developed computer programs.

"We know that those techniques work. We've seen them work in the past in other areas, and we're convinced that they will work for us here."

Hobson said he feels an urgency to get the conservation planning completed because the 1990 deadline is coming up.

U.S. Supreme Court rejects UP&L appeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Monday rejected an appeal by a Utah power company challenging the right of an Idaho utility to provide exclusive electric service to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

The court, citing a lack of jurisdiction, let stand a ruling that the Utah company's rights were not violated by the arrangement.

The Idaho Supreme Court last November ruled that the Idaho Power Co., which has customers in Idaho, Oregon and Nevada, is the appropriate utility to provide future service to INEL. The lab, near Arco, Idaho, is run by the U.S. Department of Energy.

Electric service in the area was first provided in 1925 by the Utah Power & Light Co., which serves customers in Utah, Idaho and Wyoming.

Both the Utah and Idaho utilities signed an agreement in 1950 to provide service to the Atomic Energy Commission, which later was merged into the Department of Energy.

But the Idaho Supreme Court said that for the past 35 years Utah Power & Light has provided only 2 percent of the total energy used by the Department of Energy at its installation in Idaho. Since 1978, Idaho Power has been the lab's sole supplier of electricity.

The federal agency in 1985 asked Idaho public utility officials to designate the Idaho company as its sole supplier and they agreed.

Utah Power & Light said the Idaho court decision upholding that designation took property from the Utah company without due process. The case is Utah Power & Light vs. Idaho Public Utilities Commission, 86-1656.

Pocatello administrator wins IHA post

BOISE (AP) — W. Alan Stevenson, administrator of Bannock Regional Medical Center in Pocatello, has been elected chairman of the Idaho Hospital Association.

Stevenson previously was administrator of Moritz Community Hospital in Sun Valley and a health planner for the University of California at Irvine.

Kay H. Springer, administrator of Steele Memorial Hospital in Salmon, was named chairman-elect at the IHA's meeting in Sun Valley in September. James A. Goff, medical center director for Veterans Administration Medical Center in Boise, was chosen secretary-treasurer.

Opinion

Candidates running against themselves stumbling often

BOSTON — Okay, listen up. It's time for a political free-association test.

Hart: sex. Biden: plagiarist. Schroeder: tear. Dukakis: tattletale. Politics: yuck. Not one of those characterizations is fair, not even the last one. Not one of those labels says anything about ideas, about governing, about the nature of the post of President. But they do say something about the campaign of 1987. As a Boston wag put it, "In politics one day you're a peacock and the next day you're a feather duster."

Ellen Goodman

This has been a breathtaking and depressing couple of weeks. Weeks that leave a bad taste in the mouth. The orator of the campaign trail, Joe Biden, got caught wearing somebody else's words. The woman who brought some verve to the debate, Pat Schroeder, dropped out in tears. Now, the squeaky-clean governor, Mike Dukakis, has been tarnished by his closest aide. Not all disappointments are equal. Not all political crimes require the same punishment. But in this merciless campaign, it seems that every misdeed comes with somebody calling for capital punishment. On a scale of one to ten, Hart's mistakes get about an eight, Biden's about a five, and Dukakis' no more than a two. But on a different rating system, they all get page one. And they all get translated into a simple negative name tag. What exactly happened to the high-flying Dukakis campaign? Campaign manager John Sasso was found guilty of spreading the truth. He distributed the famous "attack tape" that showed Joe Biden doing Neil Kinnock without credits. Call it dirty pool or call it hardball, but it was a minor offense. It only entered the major leagues when, ironically, Sasso lied about his role in spreading that truth. As for the governor himself, Dukakis was guilty by association, guilty of not knowing and then, some of my colleagues say, guilty of indecision. He didn't fire Sasso immediately. In the instant time frame of modern politics, four hours of uncertainty about dumping a man who has been your closest aide and friend for seven years is considered indecisive.

Dukakis will suffer because this video escapee chips away at his strongest image and self-image: that of stiff-necked, even judgmental, integrity. He is being judged against himself. And maybe that is the peculiar and unsettling dynamic of this season. Pat Schroeder liked to say that she wasn't running for the post of Mother Teresa. Nor is anybody running against Mother Teresa. Indeed, these candidates aren't really running against anyone yet. Except themselves. This endless, slogging, non-campaign is still in its preliminary show-and-tell phase. Not a vote has been cast or will be cast for four months. The main event is 13 months away. When voters get closer to Election Day they make real-life decisions about the relative strengths and weaknesses of real people. In a two- or even three-person race we compare flaws. But in a six-man race we simply highlight flaws. We don't get to ask whether Biden's plagiarism is a greater sin than, say, Haig's militarism. We just get to watch the plagiarist.

The end result is that any candidate who slips, who shows a crack in himself or his campaign, is found grievously wanting. He loses to some arbitrary standard of perfection before he even has a chance to run against another imperfect opponent. He is constantly running against himself.

In this game of sinning and stumbling candidates, the media has become a major player. By presenting such a haphazard sequence of flaws — large and small — in full and brutal glare, we become the electronic screening system. We run a paper primary of our own. Any troubled campaign, any candidate singled by his own or his staff's misfire becomes the butt of the same in-joke: Stick a fork in him, he's done.

Is every fall fatal? Have we all lost the capacity to distinguish between a lethal injury — something that disqualifies a man from the Oval Office — and a surface blow? If I had to fringe the mistakes of Hart, Biden and Dukakis, which plugs would I pull? Hart? Yes. Biden? Maybe. Dukakis? No.

But today, every trouble draws blood. We used to talk about winners in politics. We used to focus on Election Day. This year, this brutal year, we talk about survivors. Can anyone make it to Election Day?

Ellen Goodman writes for The Boston Globe.

OOPS, SORRY, MR. DUKAKIS! - DOES THIS MEAN I'M NOT YOUR CAMPAIGN MANAGER ANY MORE?

Letters/ More comments about work of veterans' service officer

Case of vet helping vet

In response to Mrs. Margaret Lee's letter that appeared in The Times-News on Wednesday, Sept. 30, 1987. She stated that she and her husband, a World War II veteran, had tried to get help from the veterans service officer by going over to the designated place (DAY Hall), find a phone number on the building, called the number and learned that the (service officer) was only there 3 to 4 hours, two days a week. This is all very true, except when this service officer is out performing his duty at a rest home in Buhl, Twin Falls, or any other place a veteran might be needing his expertise at. Personally, I have seen the service officer in the past week talking with a widow of a recent deceased veteran on that first day he was scheduled to be at the hall. He talked to her very patiently, advising her to bring the necessary papers she would have to provide to start the paperwork on her behalf. When the lady left it was at least two hours of his time. The next morning was Friday, he was there at 9:30 a.m. waiting for the lady to come in with the papers for him to start work on her claim. He was also prepared to travel to Boise for my appointment at 3 p.m.

that afternoon. He immediately went to work on the numerous questions on the form, many of those the lady did not know or so often had to think for a short time in order to give the right information, he is very patient and explains things that are not familiar to her. The same courtesy given to the veterans. The lady did not have all the necessary papers, so that always means more time for the service officer to do all the answers he could at that meeting, he made arrangements to see that lady once he arrived back in Twin Falls that evening. Not only was he available to give me a ride (my car was having brake trouble, I called him two days earlier and his friendly manner of talking to me would be able to meet my medical appointment in Boise with the feeling of not causing him any trouble was a load off my shoulders) he was also scheduled to pick a young veteran up in Buhl, with just the information that this veteran would be at the garage west of Buhl. For someone living in Twin Falls and not knowing Buhl or any other town, he had to find that garage and hope his second ride would be there. To make a long story short, he got me to my appointment on time and the other passenger got the medicine he would have otherwise had to pay for in Buhl. This man (service officer) took his car and his time to help two fellow veterans out in a time of their need, not his. In his particular case, our service officer is going to school four days a week, he is a husband and father of two daughters, he answers phone calls all hours of the day and night. And while I appreciate Judy Felton and her job, I cannot compare it to our service officer for the mere fact she is paid for work and a service officer is not being paid by the hour and many instances is reimbursed for a fraction of the gas he puts in his car for the trip to Boise and none for all the miles and I expect he travels in this area. Just, he can't make long distance phone calls from the hall, but still, he does it, make sense to go all the way over to the hall after receiving a call in the middle of the night just so he can call VA Hospital in Boise and it won't be on his home phone bill! I also know he does exactly that. Not because he is rich or he has so, but because he is a very caring veteran and friend. I wonder how many people (veterans and their families) who will complain about the time they waste trying to contact any service officer and feel neglected because he wasn't there just for them?

I am surprised to know so few veterans involved in various organizations afforded the veterans and their families, organizations that has a designated member represent all veterans in both Boise and Washington, D.C., when it comes to fighting for the benefits that all veterans were promised or guaranteed while serving his/her country. I think it is fair to assume that if more people came out to the monthly meetings, they would have the opportunity to get to know their service officer as a person and then be able to realize that he has a mighty big assignment and then understand that it takes a special person to take on the task of service officer. I am sorry that Mrs. Lee feels let down at this time and I am glad that Mr. Felton was there to help her and her husband when she needed it. But I don't believe Mrs. Felton is there in the middle of the night on weekends. Five days a week is good, but isn't it nice to know your service officer is really there 24-hours-a-day in case of emergency? I wonder if Mrs. Lee would be willing to put herself on a roster and tell the service officer that her husband has a scheduled appointment at the VA Hospital on any given day so that some other veteran could meet his/her appointment if they could not drive whether it was a physical handicap, car problems or did not have the funds to travel to Boise. The DAV now is reimbursing any driver 6 cents a mile, which isn't much but at least they are trying to make it possible to see that all veterans can get the necessary medical care no matter if they have the funds or not. It truly is a case of veteran helping the veteran. I hope more veterans will take the time and concern to look into this new program and call the service officer so that all of us veterans can truly help one another, not because we have to, but because there is a need. MARCELLA ARMSTRONG Buhl Post opposes decision The members of Kimberly Post 10328, Veterans of Foreign Wars, join the other organizations in opposing the decision of the Twin Falls County Commissioners to select a non-veteran to fill the position of veterans' service officer. We also strongly oppose the Veterans Service Officers Association with welfare services. P.R. (JEEP) BOWMAN Commander, VFW Post 10328 Kimberly

Dislikes the sales pitch

I read the letter that the lady from Buhl who wrote about the car salesman with male chauvinism. I have a problem, too. It's the loud mouth car salesman from Latham Motors. I am a freshly retired person and it's so terrible the tremendous repetition of screaming and yelling in my home in front of me and my family. If I needed to buy a car really bad, he would cause me to go the opposite way. VAUGHN BARRUS Gooding

They talk about the pitiful condition of the bankrupt farmer. Did they ever consider the little fellow who spent his life doing without all the world's goodies, so he wouldn't be in the same shape? I expect a lot of them would have enjoyed a new or remodeled home, new milk barns and sheds, every conceivable type of new machinery with duplicates, motor homes, new pickups and autos. Think about it. BERNICE WALKER Shoshone which is 5.5 miles from your company in Twin Falls? The only time HBO comes in during school hours, when it is free on a promotional weekend and I do need to use a box. I feel something is lacking in your company which is either human or technical or both. I hope that all problems can be corrected to a high standard so that when I turn to a certain channel, I will receive a sharp, bright picture and I can once again renew and enjoy HBO at my liking. JAMES R. CHARMICHAEL SR. Kimberly wrote, "He's anti-Communist, great"; others, "He's anti-Communist, terrible"; still others, "He's not really anti-Communist at all." We've also seen several rather garbled, horribly abbreviated renditions of Unification Church doctrine. Here are some facts: Rev. Moon is a Korean citizen and an American resident. He visits Korea several times yearly, where he is well received. He grew up in northern Korea, where he endured the Communist takeover and war. Most of his family was killed, and he was imprisoned and tortured at that time. So, is he anti-Communist? He adheres firmly to Christian principles. Such as, "Love the sinner but hate the sin." In this instance, "overcome communism by stopping and converting the Communist." Some readers expressed various concerns about Rev. Moon's methods and goals. These folks simply don't know him very well. Martin Luther King wisely said: "The ends don't justify the means. The means build the ends." Only caring people can build a more caring society. And it's quite impossible to coerce or manipulate anyone into being a truly loving person. America is clearly the fruit of Judeo-Christian principles and efforts, spanning many centuries. Rev. Moon believes that sacrificially loving people will finally populate an entire world of love. With Jehovah god at the helm, this would be none other than the Kingdom of God on Earth, which Jesus Christ told us of. This has been Rev. Moon's clear unchanging message for 42 years now. And the unwavering mission of the worldwide Unification movement for 33 years, including religious works, and ideological and also scientific scholarly efforts. As well as many economic and charitable projects. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them; a good tree bears good fruit." Despite fierce opposition, the years have been bearing this out. Thanks again to the readers for your concern and your interest. PAUL E. CARLSON Twin Falls

Contrasts in fire policies

Well, it appears that the present administration is finally accomplishing its purpose in the Frank Church Wilderness area. They're just letting it burn up — game and game habitat included — but they didn't do the same in the Sun Valley area that is deluged with people. Ketchum has annexed the only picturesque place left near them, the farm south of them. Lausanne they are going to fill it full of some more hideous condominiums similar to those adjoining the property. It is already a city that has lost its small town and country charm. Tourism this year has almost ruined the primitive beauty of our forests and lakes. They have been turned into unattractive dirt bowls. With their continuous hunting seasons, they are dispensing with our wildlife, as fast as they can and no one seems to care. What a humdrum existence we will have without any wildlife, and just people left. Go shopping in Twin Falls on a weekend, or try to drive a car from Twin to Sun Valley, if you wonder what I'm talking about. Our present administration really shouldn't be causing so many problems for the opposing side, with its track record, Nixon, Reagan, etc. Even Stallings is under the gun. I really haven't seen any wings on Steve, Larry or Jim these days, either. The only candidate they leave alone is a Negro preacher. It will be interesting at any rate.

Poor reception displeasing

For approximately five years I have had Showtime or HBO, with no problems except as snowy pictures or darkened color. No problems that is until the first of September of this year. I switched to HBO to watch a movie and the picture was dark. I thought the whole movie was shot at night. I returned my original HBO box for another one which got me no picture or sound at all. So I returned the box and got another, same nothing. I called the service department and a man came out. He checked the lines in and around the house and the HBO box and said it must be in the main line somewhere. I explained to him that in the evening the various regular cable channels get snowy as if interference of some kind caused it. The technician informed me that Kimberly gets poor reception plus he didn't care for the standard relay switch attached to the HBO box. I returned the last HBO box. I can understand the interference part because it could be caused by shortwave sets or weather disturbances. Problems in the main line I'll accept to a point. If a customer calls and says that they are getting poor reception and the technician says it is in the main line, then that should be corrected immediately. I have seen a line lying in the gutter for almost a year or strung on a fence on my street. Is this the work of trained technicians? In today's world of high technology of atomic energy, rocket ships to the moon and beyond, satellites in the heavens, computers, and, etc., why can't I get HBO or clear regular channels on my television

Consider extending Madrona

In regards to Stadium Drive being closed during school hours, why not move the curbing to the fence line on the school property north of the football stadium where there is about 20 feet or more of property along the fence going to waste and doing nothing else but collecting garbage and growing weeds? This way, there would be space for parking for both the school faculty, tennis players, etc. Also, Madrona on the east side of the high school should be taken through if for no other reason than to get rid of the treacherous coulee there. It would be less expensive to put this street through rather than to have a parent sue the school district if one or two children fell in the coulee. JEAN GARRISON Twin Falls

Years bear out his comment

It's been a fascinating month, watching the newspaper-borne controversy over Rev. Moon, politicians, Contras, anti-religionists, etc. I'd especially like to thank Mr. Milne, who, by the way, is a Mormon. I had thought that folks wouldn't muster sufficient interest to plow through so much lengthy material. But I sure was wrong! We all agree, I'm sure, that such scrutiny can only be beneficial in the end. Otherwise, agreement has been rather scarce. We've seen pro-and-anti Rev. Moon letters, anti-Moon-pro-Contra and anti-Moon-anti-Contra ones, and so on. Some

Survival rate for AIDS far worse than official data

NEW YORK (AP) — The survival rate for AIDS patients is worse than official figures suggest, with up to 89 percent of victims succumbing less than three years after diagnosis, a researcher said Monday.

The official tally of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta shows that about 16 percent of AIDS victims will live longer than three years. But a detailed examination of long-term survivors suggests that only 2 percent to 5 percent may hang on that long, said Ann Hardy of the CDC.

Hardy presented her results at the Interscience Conference on Antimicrobial Agents and Chemotherapy, a meeting devoted to research on infectious diseases.

Hardy's findings came from a study attempting to determine why some people seem to beat the odds, living with AIDS for an extended period.

But when she began to search for such long-term survivors, she found that their numbers were considerably lower than official figures indicated.

She is studying a pool of 544 AIDS victims who were reportedly alive more than three years after their diagnosis and said she is finding that some have died and their deaths were not reported.

Careful investigation of a few of the long-term survivors led her to calculate a survival rate that may be as low as 2 percent to 5 percent after three years, she said.

Elsewhere at the meeting, two researchers presented reports differing sharply over whether the AIDS virus is being spread commonly through heterosexual contact.

Doctors have known for some time that the virus can be spread through heterosexual contact, but the most widely held notion is that such spread is uncommon. Most AIDS victims continue to get the disease through homosexual contact, the sharing of needles through intravenous drug abuse and other high-risk behavior.

Dr. Thomas Quinn of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., found that one-third of men infected with the AIDS virus and half of infected women in an inner-city neighborhood in Baltimore apparently became infected through heterosexual contact.

Approximately one-third of the infected men and nearly half of the infected women denied being intravenous drug abusers or homosexuals or engaging in other behavior that would put them at special risk of getting AIDS, Quinn said.

Senate may alter war powers act

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Senate leaders, frustrated by repeated stalemates over use of the 1973 War Powers Resolution to contain U.S. involvement in explosive conflicts such as the Persian Gulf war, are considering a high-level bipartisan commission to draft changes in the law.

It would be patterned after the independent panel that spearheaded overhaul of Social Security financing four years ago.

An independent commission to rework the law was proposed last week by Sen. John W. Warner, R-Va., ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, and endorsed in general terms by committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., as well as Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Minority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan.

The idea would be to remove war-powers issue from the dispute over Persian Gulf policy and turn to respected outside experts to deal with complicated constitutional and policy issues that have kept Congress and the White House in conflict over the law since its enactment.

Congress and the White House have gone out of their way to avoid invoking the resolution over the past 14 years and a "short-term band-aid fix is not enough," Warner said.

The Vietnam-era war powers law had "good intentions" but is "not a workable piece of legislation" for conflicts such as the Iran-Iraq war in the Persian Gulf, Nunn said.

However, the move is expected to encounter resistance from lawmakers who contend that the law will work if Congress just musters the political courage to apply it. Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., who has been pushing to apply the law to the U.S. tanker-escort operation in the gulf, said Congress can make any necessary changes. "We don't need any commission. We can just go out there and do it," he said, pointing to the Senate floor.

Warner said Monday that he expects Senate leaders will meet over the next week to 10 days to work out details of an independent commission. He said White House officials have also "expressed interest" in the idea.

The War Powers Resolution was passed over President Richard M. Nixon's veto in the waning days of the Vietnam War to assure Congress some control over commitment of U.S. forces in future hostilities.

It requires the president to consult with Congress before introducing U.S. forces into hostilities or "imminent" danger of hostilities and to report any such deployment within 48 hours. Troops would have to be withdrawn in 60 to 90 days unless Congress declares war or specifically authorizes their continued deployment.

But every president dating back to Nixon has regarded the law as an intrusion on chief's powers as commander-in-chief and has balked at triggering provisions requiring congressional approval for continuation of any military operation.

A majority of the Senate has voted for separate legislation to require approval of Congress for continuation of the operation beyond 90 days from enactment, but could not muster the 60 votes necessary to break a Republican filibuster. A group of House members has filed suit to force the president to invoke the law, but it has not been decided.

Workers would like share of action

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost three of every five workers would be willing to trade their next pay raise for a share of ownership in the company they work for, according to a private poll released Monday.

Two-thirds of the respondents earning more than $40,000 a year said they would make such a trade, while just under 40 percent making less than $20,000 would do so, according to a survey by R.H. Bruskin Associates of New Brunswick, N.J.

The results are based on 1,001 telephone interviews conducted Aug. 14-16 by Bruskin in a survey commissioned by the Bureau of National Affairs, a private publisher of business research, and the National Center for Employee Ownership.

Of those polled, 57 percent answered "yes" to the question, "Would you trade your next wage increase for a share of ownership in your company?"

Thirty percent answered "no," and 3 percent expressed either no opinion or said they did not know.

Full-time workers appeared to be more inclined to such stock deals than those working part-time. Among the full-time workers, 59 percent said they would be inclined to accept stock in their company instead of a pay raise while only 44 percent of the part-timers said they would do so.

On other questions, 81 percent of those surveyed said they think people who work for employee-owned companies pay more attention to quality than those with no employee stock ownership plans.

And 69 percent said they think employees work harder if they have a share of the company's ownership than those who do not.

However, the sponsors of the survey noted that an unusually large share of those polled, 19 percent, said they currently work for employee-owned companies.

According to the National Center for Employee Ownership, a private, non-profit research organization, less than 10 percent of the nation's workers are on the payrolls of employee-owned companies.

Reporters, educators shout it out

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Rose Garden ceremony to honor outstanding schools ended Monday with a shouting match between educators and reporters trying to question President Reagan about Judge Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court.

Principals angrily rebuffed several journalists who shouted questions to the president as he walked back to the Oval Office. Several journalists gave the educators a tongue-lashing in return and told them to brush up on the First Amendment.

The tempest came at the close of a 10-minute ceremony for leaders of the 271 junior high and high schools cited in an annual recognition program sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education.

The reporters had maintained silence when Reagan emerged from the nearby Oval Office and throughout his speech. Reagan told the educators, "Your schools are part of what's right with American education" and called for schools to "teach old-fashioned ideas like right and wrong."

But after a jovial Reagan said, "Class dismissed!" and began walking back to the Oval Office, Bill Plante of CBS-TV asked in a stentorian voice, "Mr. President, looks like the Bork nomination will fall in the committee."

Reagan responded loudly and firmly, "Over my dead body!" The crowd laughed and applauded.

As Plante and Sam Donaldson of ABC-TV shouted follow-up questions, John Vassak, a teacher from one of the award-winning schools, turned on the reporters in back of the Rose Garden and said, "You're taking away from the joy of the whole occasion for us."

Donaldson shot back, "He's a grown man and he can take care of himself. ... We're doing our job here as reporters, asking the president questions."

"This is our day," several educators said.

"Why should this ruin the occasion for you? You've had your part of the occasion," said Plante.

"Freedom of the press," said another reporter. "Now you can go home and watch it on TV."

"You don't have the right to ruin it for us," said Vassak, who teaches American history to eighth graders at the North Salem Middle School in North Salem, N.Y., 50 miles north of New York City.

"That's ridiculous," replied Plante.

"No, you're the one that's ridiculous. Would you like to take a poll here?" said Vassak.

"The First Amendment applies here as well as anywhere else," a reporter said.

"Sure it does, but for every right we have a responsibility, and that's what we teach our kids, and you've overstepped your line of responsibility," Vassak said.

House approves legislation on airline delays

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House, brushing aside the threat of a presidential veto, Monday passed a bill to crack down on delays and other hassles faced by airline travelers.

The legislation, approved by voice vote and sent to the Senate, requires airlines to submit monthly reports to the government, including their on-time records, overbooking, canceled flights, lost and damaged luggage and other consumer complaints.

Under the measure, travelers would get free, one-way plane tickets on the same route if luggage were delayed for more than two hours. Delays of more than 24 hours would penalize the airlines a round-trip ticket.

The legislation increases the fines imposed on airlines for safety violations. Consumers also would be provided additional information on airline flight schedules, including restrictions and availability of discount fares.

The bill would require the Department of Transportation to set flight limits at large airports and to establish service standards at hub airports.

A provision also would require the department to impose regulations to protect the jobs of airline workers when mergers take place.

President Reagan has threatened to veto the bill, which is far more sweeping than the consumer protections announced recently by former Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole.

Americans willing to care for elderly, poll says

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than two-thirds of Americans are willing to pay higher taxes for long-term care for the elderly, according to a survey issued Monday by advocates of such a program.

The pollster who conducted the sampling for a coalition seeking to make long-term care a major presidential campaign issue called the results the most "truly extraordinary" he has seen in 17 years in the business.

Michael Rappaport, president of R L Associates, acknowledged that "people always want all kinds of things" in surveys asking whether they support this or that program.

"The difference in the new sampling, he said, is that a new 68 percent of those asked to pay a specific amount of higher taxes — depending on their income — to support a government long-term care program.

"I've never seen results like these," Rappaport said. "They are overreacting. It's an issue waiting for candidate to pick up."

In fact, the poll was conducted for the Long Term Care '88 coalition as part of a drive to elevate the issue in the presidential debate.

Ronald F. Pollack, executive director of the Villers Foundation, called it "perhaps the quietest association in family issues" and said the coalition will work to "expose the quiet suffering of millions of families" and make it a topic "no presidential candidate is likely to ignore."

The Villers Foundation, which focuses on needs of the poor elderly, joined the 25-million-member American Association of Retired Persons to form the 83-member coalition, which includes such groups as the Consumer Federation of America, the National Urban League and the National Easter Seal Society.

"The next president must demonstrate the leadership and vision to address this national family crisis," said AARP Vice President Robert Maxwell.

The most striking poll result was the response when people were asked whether they would pay a specific amount in higher taxes. The amount ranged from $10 a month for those with income under $20,000 a year to $60 for those above $30,000 a year.

For example, the projected tax increase for a family with $25,000 income was $40 a month and 65 percent of the respondents in that income bracket said they would be willing to pay that amount.

When asked what tax increase would be preferable assuming there was a government program, 34 percent opted for higher income taxes and 25 percent for additional Social Security withholding.

Asked whether they would be more or less likely to vote for a presidential candidate who made long-term care a major part of his or her campaign, 50 percent said more likely and 4 percent said less likely. The rest said it would make no difference, or they didn't know.

Pollack said the coalition is preparing refined poll data for Iowa and New Hampshire, the states with the first presidential tests, and will use it to urge candidates to address the issue in campaign forums there.

AARP, which claims 300,000 members in Iowa, is planning a major advertising effort there leading up to a two-day forum in Des Moines Nov. 19-20 on elderly-related issues.

In New Hampshire, Villers is joining The New Hampshire Charitable Trust to underwrite a series of separate forums with each candidate in which long-term care will be the only issue.

Sessions' swearing-in reset

Bad debts squeezing Idaho hospitals hard

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Bad debt at Idaho hospitals averaged $6.26 million last year among facilities comparably sized to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

MVRMC fared slightly better, although indigent and governments stilled the county hospital out of nearly $4 million in patient charges last year.

In addition to bad debt and coinciding operations from the Idaho Hospital Association's 54th annual convention last week, MVRMC board members unanimously passed a policy for hiring and retaining employees suffering AIDS.

Administrator John Bingham told the board that MVRMC has lost $3.9 million with a month to go in the fiscal year. Those losses went to poor people, not paying their bills, county commissioners denying indigent payments and federal Medicare/Medicaid reimbursements that fell short of hospital charges, he said.

That $3.9 million — and counting — is almost 17 percent of $22.7 million in budgeted annual expenditures.

Bingham said that at the IHA convention in Sun Valley, between Sept. 25 to 30, it was reported that 39 of 46 responding hospitals declared $63 million dollars in uncompensated care.

"Although hospitals' ability to support substantial levels of indigent care has diminished, their willingness to do has not," IHA President John Hutchinson said during the conference.

Reviewing estimates that 37-million Americans are without private health insurance and are not covered by governmental health benefits, Bingham noted the IHA supports the concept of mandatory health insurance, although specific programs must still be analyzed.

In other business, the hospital board unanimously approved, without discussion, a policy concerning potential employees with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The policy states employees stricken with AIDS will not be fired or otherwise discriminated against, unless the employee is unable to perform essential elements of the job or risks causing "substantial danger to the health and safety of self or others."

ferred through bodily fluids. Due to primary transmission through blood and sexual fluids, homosexual men and intravenous drug abusers represent the vast majority of people afflicted with the disease.

The policy reiterates the employee's patient confidentiality. The policy states the health matters would be treated privately without disclosure to other patients or health care workers not involved in providing direct care for that worker.

Rosemary Barta, director of human resources who presented the proposed policy, said she was unaware of any current employees infected with AIDS.

Council raises water, sewer service rates

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN-FALLS — Although its meeting was short, the Twin Falls City Council raised water and sewer rates, approved a firefighters contract and changed city code to allow a new fish-processing business to open.

City residents and businesses will soon see a 3 percent increase on their water bills, thanks to the council action on Monday.

The increases to the water rates are necessary to offset additional operating costs and to pay for a 9 percent wage hike for employees, City Manager Tom Courtney said.

The minimum charge for water users will now rise from $4.39 to $4.52 a month for the first 4,000 gallons.

Sewer rates also rose slightly, by one cent to be exact. The base rate for sewer use, computed on a complex formula that develops a unit cost for handling of waste water, rose by 3.7 percent over last year.

But a 22-cent administrative fee was eliminated, resulting in a one-cent increase for city customers over last year, Courtney said. The administrative fee, which covers the cost of preparing the bills was dropped because of a new computer system.

Only Councilman Jim Vickery voted against the water and sewer rate increases. He said the city operated in the black this year and expects had a surplus.

Courtney said the increased rates will provide adequate funding for the water and wastewater fund. The city attempts to maintain rate increases to keep up with the cost of doing business to prevent large increases all at once.

But Vickery said he didn't favor the additional, although small, costs for older residents and others who might not be able to afford it.

"It's not necessary," he added.

Councilman Gale Kleinkopf was absent.

In an item not on the agenda, the council approved an amendment to the city code that allows a fish processing water source to be used for the holding of fish prior to processing.

Deadline here for petitions

By the Times-News

TWIN FALLS — More people are throwing their hats, or make that, nominating petitions, into the ring for four seats on the Twin Falls City Council.

Incumbent Gale Kleinkopf has successfully turned in his name, required 40 signatures of registered voters, said City Clerk Jewel Chandler on Monday.

Another four candidates have turned their petitions into Chandler to determine if they have met the requirements.

Among them are Mayor Doug Vallner, dentist Arthur Frantz, businessman Mark Beams and Donald McMurrin, the manager of a country-western band.

The two other incumbents, Erik Andersen and Jack Miller, have not yet handed in the petitions that will get their names on the Nov. 3 ballot.

Today at 5 p.m. is the deadline for filing the petitions. The council seats up for election are for four-year terms.

company, requested the code change because he intends to move the business to a site on 450 Locust St.

The business would employ about 30 people.

Ken Ashley, with the company, said a well would be drilled on the property. The water from the well would be used in fish holding tanks. The wastewater will be discharged into Rock Creek, after meeting environmental standards.

City water would be used in other aspects of the fish processing, Ashley said.

Courtney said the new business "is a good deal" for Twin Falls. The council approved also a 1987-88 contract with the Twin Falls Fire Fighters Association.

New fair building bid opening Oct. 19

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Bids will be opened Oct. 19 for the construction of another new building at the Twin Falls County Fair. But the new building won't house flowers and produce as originally planned.

The Twin Falls County Board of Commissioners has called for design-build proposals for a new merchants building that will be constructed east of the existing Produce Building.

The produce exhibits will be moved to the existing Merchants Building located on the other side of the Produce Building, said Fair Board member Emmett Harrison.

At a meeting on Monday, the Fair Board voted to proceed with the demolition of the 70-year-old Produce Building. Harrison said an offer had been made to Fair Board member Don Kramer, who did not attend the meeting, to tear-down the building at no cost to the county in exchange for the salvaging the materials. The name of the person who made the offer was unavailable.

The cement floor of the old Produce Building will be left untouched and rented to merchants during next year's fair, he said.

Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said the county board did not want the new building constructed on the west side of the existing Merchants Building behind the park because it will cut into a good display area.

The Fair Board decided last month to clear the area, now used for trailers, for more exhibitors.

The new 10,080-square-foot merchants building will be constructed to look just like the cinder block Merchants Building built in 1986.

Unlike the existing Merchants Building, the newer one will not be insulated because there is only need for one insulated building to lease for winter activities, Harrison said.

Instead of having an architect design the project and prepare specifications for bid, the commissioners and fair board members decided to

Grand jury indictments unsealed by judges

By the Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Two grand jury indictments handed down a week ago in Twin Falls were resealed Monday in 5th District Court when the indictments were unsealed by the court judges.

Shane Kymbal Lloyd is scheduled to appear for arraignment at 2 p.m. Oct. 26 in district court to answer to the indictment's charges of possession of a controlled substance.

The second indictment made public names Stewart Benjamin King, who was in custody in the Twin Falls County jail, and was brought to court for the unsealing of the indictment against him Monday afternoon. He is also charged with possession of a controlled substance and will be in district court Oct. 13 to answer to the charges.

A Department of Law Enforcement narcotics investigator was the only witness to present testimony before the grand jury's closed session on the two suspects.

Deputy Twin Falls County Prosecutor Joel Horton said the remaining indictments will be unsealed on an individual basis as the summons are served on those indicted.

Records show the indictments were unanimously made by the 16 jurors.

The second grand jury session ever held in Twin Falls County was concluded last week following four days of hearings.

The first such jury was conducted in June with 21 indictments, which were all dismissed in District Court because of jury selection irregularities. At that time prosecutors said they planned to bring the cases back again before a properly selected panel of grand jury members.

Neither of the two men named in the indictments made public Monday were on the list of 21 individuals named by the first grand jury.

Gooding school suit decision brings appeal

By JANE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — A $2.56 million lawsuit against the Gooding School District and the Gooding Ambulance Service has been appealed to the Idaho State Supreme Court.

The appeal filed Sept. 24 by Russell and Rose Czaplinski asks the state's highest court to overturn a summary judgment issued Aug. 31 by 5th District Judge Phillip Becker dismisssing the case.

The Czaplinskis claim the school district and the ambulance service were negligent in providing trained personnel and supplies and in securing medical aid for their 5-year-old son Garrett.

The Czaplinski boy died following a fall at Gibbons Elementary School last year.

The school district asked for a dismissal of the case claiming there

Pac 5 back with tabulation of legislators' voting records

By JANE ROBINSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Pac is back, but few local politicians seem to care.

Pac-5, a conservative political action committee, this week released its first "public service project," a tabulation of legislative voting records that bears a striking resemblance to an earlier version, with two major exceptions.

Pac-5 this time takes credit for the report, and any mention of Associated Taxpayers of Idaho, a watchdog group, has been deleted. A similar legislative report released in June in Twin Falls sparked controversy because it was first issued anonymously and was attached to material put out by the Associated Taxpayers of Idaho, which denied any involvement with the report.

Pat Callen, wife of Jerome Republican Rep. Jerry Callen and a Pac-5 member, later claimed credit for the report card, which only listed the voting records of Magic Valley's 17 lawmakers.

The latest report card gives the voting record of all 126 state legislators on 17 spending bills approved by the 1987 Legislature. The bills are the same ones used on the first report and the same ones issued by Associated Taxpayers.

But the report draws no conclusions and lists no amounts of what bills will cost next to the names of lawmakers, as the first version did.

Former state Rep. Robert Forey said the group purposely stayed away from editorializing or issuing a rating system.

"We believe that the voting record is a matter between the legislators and their own constituents," the Nampa resident said by phone. "Our main attempt is to educate voters. We just want to expose the records, and we hope voters call them and make the reasons."

Forey said he had seen the report issued by the Callens, and said the now report was similar.

raised for dedicated purposes, such as an increased levy on potatoes that will raise $1.5 million for the Idaho Potato Commission. The Potato Commission requested the increase.

"Dedicated funds are not tax increases to the general public, and we did not think it was fair to saddle legislators with those costs," Forey said.

Still, the report does show who voted for raises in dedicated funds. Forey said those bills were included because it showed total dollars going to fund government.

Unlike the previous report, lawmakers in the Magic Valley expressed little interest in the latest report.

State Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, said he thought the report would have little impact.

"No, I don't think it will have much impact," Noh said. "If this is what you want to leave the impression that if you support increases in agricultural fees, it was a tax increase, but we just supported the wishes of the ag producers."

State Rep. Colin Fokkinga, R-Buhl, a conservative who criticized the earlier report card, said the latest report did not bother her.

"It's nothing different, but I don't have a problem with the way it was put out," she said. "I think it's good that the public sees our voting records. I wish they'd also show how we voted on appropriations."

Burglars hit dental offices

TWIN FALLS — Burglars visited three dental offices in Twin Falls Saturday night, taking sound equipment and dental supplies.

Dr. Steve Lincoln told police someone entered his office at 174 Ash St. N. taking gold and silver dental supplies and causing $60 damage to the building. Police said the work was done on a high-pressure line.

Dr. William Toole, whose office is located at 497 Eastland Dr., reported about $350 loss, mostly in sound equipment. The break-in resulted in $100 damage to the building.

The office of Dr. Richard Alexander at 506 2nd St. E., was also burglarized, police reports showed. Officers said $250 damage was caused by prying open a door and employees reported $300 in losses of dental gold.

Youths hurt as pickup flips

JEROME — Three young Jerome residents were hospitalized Saturday night after a small pickup truck carrying seven persons went out of control and rolled over on the road to Devil's Corral near the Snake River Canyon.

Idaho State Police reported three of the persons were riding in the cab of the pickup and four others were in the open bed of the vehicle. The accident was reported at 10:30 p.m. Saturday, three miles east of U.S. Highway 93.

State police reported the pickup, driven by Brian Cantelero, 15, of Jerome, was traveling west when it hit a bump on the road which was also on a curve.

Injured were Arnon Rountree and Wade Falconburg, both 16, and Lorie Schorling, 14, all of Jerome, and all riding in the back of the pickup truck.

Officers said all three were thrown out as the vehicle rolled.

Rountree was listed in stable condition at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Sunday and hospital officials said Falconburg was released Sunday.

Schorling was listed in stable condition in St. Benedict's Family Medical Center in Jerome Sunday evening. Others in the vehicle included Gal Bolish, no age given, and Ryan Irish, 18, passenger in the cab of the vehicle and Bill Haney, 18, riding in the back but not injured. All are from Jerome, officers said.

Investigating officers were ISP Cpl. Gene Bolton and Jerome County Deputy George Silver. The driver was cited for inattentive driving.

Collision kills truck driver

MALTA — The collision of a horse with a small pickup truck resulted in the death of the driver, of the vehicle early Monday in Cassia County.

Lt. Jim Higgins of the Cassia County sheriff's department said the name of the victim and his age and other identification is being withheld until family members can be contacted.

Higgins said the accident was reported at 7:15 a.m. four miles south of Malta on a county road.

He said the horse, owned by Lance Udy of Malta, was struck by the light blue truck and thrown partially into the vehicle through the windshield.

Shuttle tile tester goal of INEL unit

BOISE (AP) — Scientists at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory are combining sound and laser technology to develop a system to inspect the thermal-protection tiles used on space shuttles.

The research is being conducted for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The ultimate goal of the project is to develop practical inspection equipment to detect loose or damaged tiles following a space flight, without touching the tiles in the process. The tiles protect the shuttle from the intense heat generated by reentry from orbit.

The INEL technique would bounce acoustic waves off the tiles. The laser would detect any distortion in the waves and lead the inspectors to the faulty tiles.

Based on the initial success of the project, NASA has funded additional testing and development of a prototype portable sensor.

BOISE (AP) — Mountain Bell customers in larger towns in Idaho are finding it more expensive to get the time of day.

Beginning Oct. 1, Time-of-Day call surcharges by AT Time Inc. of Salt Lake City cost callers 29 cents plus toll charges for calls outside the Boise area.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission is looking at ways to include the Time-of-Day calls in the free information call allowance a telephone subscriber receives each month. Currently, the three-call allowance is only for directory assistance calls.

Beginning Thursday, Mountain Bell customers in Boise dialing the old toll-free Time-of-Day number were interested by an operator reading the following:

"The new number for the time, weather and temperature is 1-976-TIME, that's 1-976-8463 — 29 cents per call plus toll charge if it applies." AT Time Inc. initially offered the time announcement free by adding advertisements with the time recording.

"It was not a profitable situation, with telephone costs rising and calling declined," Ad Time President Dick Reinholdt said.

Mountain Bell kept its time announcements in smaller towns where it did not compete with Ad Time, said Steve Guerber, manager of external information for Mountain Bell. Some of the cities served by the Salt Lake City company are Boise, Pocatello, Idaho Falls, Nampa and Caldwell.

Officials from the PUC said Boise customers would pay the 29 cents and those in Pocatello or other towns served by Ad Time would also be liable for a long-distance charge to Boise.

Gas leak blamed on laxity

TOOELE ARMY DEPOT, Utah (AP) — Misguided and inattentive management, along with serious safety deficiencies, were cited by government investigators probing the Jan. 28 release of nerve agent from an incinerator at Tooele Army Depot.

The accident, involving liquid GB nerve agent, occurred at the depot's Chemical Agent Munitions Disposal System plant in the state's western desert. CAMDS is a prototype for a proposed national effort to destroy the nation's aging stock of chemical weaponry.

Recent Army reports state that the GB had built up in the pipes of the liquid agent incinerator. It leaked through faulty valves or gaskets, or both, in the primary combustion cubicle — the heart of the incinerator itself, investigators concluded.

No injuries were reported. A spot of nerve agent about 10 inches across was discovered on top of the agent tank, and it was decontaminated but not before the agent, carried by a faulty ventilation system, wafted through other parts of the building, where it was detected by monitors inside the building, setting off alarms.

A charcoal filter failed to properly contain the material, resulting in the smokestack releasing GB Vapor. More nerve gas than allowed by standards escaped to the outside atmosphere, the Army acknowledged.

Not for two hours and 20 minutes after the alarm at the filter went off did anybody stretch plastic across the stack, sealing the agent inside the building. However, the stack wasn't being used to vent combustion products because disposal operations weren't being carried out.

According to the Army, the public was in no danger and no one was exposed to nerve gas.

A team of experts headed by Col. Aas E. Stewart evaluated the accident. An additional assessment was conducted by a team headed by Col. John W. Hart of the Army Nuclear and Chemical Agency.

The latter report noted that CAMDS' "management philosophy was misguided; procedures and techniques lacked attention to detail. There was also a lack of an aggressive, dynamic system of checks and balances; safety training, communication, and procurement programs."

Utah desert shakes again

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Another small earthquake shook Utah's west desert 76 miles northwest of here Monday — the eighth to hit the same area since Sept. 17, the University of Utah Seismograph Stations reported.

The quake had a magnitude of 3.2 on the Richter scale and its epicenter was located about 12 miles west of Lakeside, a tiny shoreline outpost near the site of the Great Salt Lake pumping project.

Officials have said the pumping project, which channels excess lake water into an evaporation pond in the west desert, would have no effect on ground motion or earthquake activity.

No one reported feeling the tremor, which was part of an "earthquake swarm" that included a shock of magnitude 4.8 on Sept. 25, said Paula Oehmlich, a research analyst with the seismograph stations.

Six of the tremors have been between 3.9 and 4.8 on the Richter scale.

The series of Utah quakes have no relation to the strong earthquake and aftershocks that have rocked Los Angeles, Oehmlich said.

Flowers top more of our supermarket lists

NEW YORK - Sales of plants and flowers topped those of snack foods and rivaled coffee, reports a New York-based marketing communications company. According to the Howard Marlburo Group, some 80 percent of U.S. supermarkets now sell plants, fresh-cut flowers and foliage regularly, with sales totaling more than $3 billion annually - or nearly 40 percent of the nation's $8.3 billion floral business. The survey shows the fastest growing category in supermarket floral departments to be cut flowers, with poinsettias the top-selling flowering plant. Persons under 45 were the most likely to buy flowers on impulse while on food shopping excursions.

DEAR ABBY: I do volunteer work with an alumni association at a large state university. We have a difficult time trying to locate our alumni who move or change their names through marriage. People with common names may not realize how many William Johnsons or Susan Smiths we have. A serious complication is women who give us no clue as to who they are. Who is "Mrs. K Jones"? How much clearer it would be if he signed her name "Mrs. Karen (Adams) Jones".

Abigail VanBuren Dear Abby

We do not always want money. We would like to notify alumni of reunions, travel opportunities, lectures, art exhibits, etc. Abby, please suggest that grade write to their alma maters to let former classmates know where they are and what they're doing. We really care. - LOIS HAUGERUD, ALUMNI VOLUNTEER, RICHFIELD, MINN. P.S. - It would be nice to include a donation to the college scholarship fund, too. The cost of education continues to climb, and public and corporate support is dropping off

DEAR ABBY: My mother and I have been arguing about this for some time now, and I need your opinion so we can finally settle the matter. Every time Mother stays in a motel, she looks around the bathroom for an extra roll of toilet paper, and when she finds it, she takes it home! She claims that the price of the room is so high, she is entitled to it. I personally think it is degrading. Honestly, Abby, my mother is not so hard up she has to steal toilet paper. Am I right to assume that the toilet paper in hotel and motel rooms is there for the use of the guests during their stay - not to take home? - MRS. WIPPLE DEAR MRS. WIPPLE: Yes, but most motel and hotel managers would gladly settle for disappearing toilet paper. Guests have been known to steal pictures, lamps, carpets, draperies, pillows, bedspreads, furniture and anything else that isn't nailed down. Some even try to steal away without paying for the room.

DEAR ABBY: I've been friends with "Violet" for a long time. We work together. I was thrilled when she asked me to be a bridesmaid. I helped her select the bridesmaids' dresses and also helped her plan her wedding. When I received my invitation, I learned that I was expected to come without my fiancé. I thought it was an oversight because Violet knew I have a fiancé, so I mentioned it. She said she was sorry but nobody could invite an escort because she couldn't afford to have extra people. It's to be a catered affair. I tried to explain that I really wanted my fiancé to be there. I even offered to pay for his dinner in advance. She said no.

I told her if she couldn't let my fiancé come, I couldn't be in her wedding party. Well, I dropped out, and now we aren't friends anymore. Was I wrong, or was she? Can you figure out why she refused to have my fiancé at her wedding? I sure can't.

DEAR FEELS TERRIBLE: She was wrong. It's possible that she couldn't afford the extra dinner, but since you offered to pay for it and she refused, I would conclude that she didn't want your fiancé at her wedding.

FEELS TERRIBLE, STATEN ISLAND DEAR FEELS TERRIBLE: She was wrong. It's possible that she couldn't afford the extra dinner, but since you offered to pay for it and she refused, I would conclude that she didn't want your fiancé at her wedding.

Del Scholl named 'Kiwanian of the Year,' club officers and board members elected

TWIN FALLS - Del Scholl has been selected as the Kiwanian of the Year by the Twin Falls Kiwanis Club. Scholl, employed by Magic Valley Electric Supply of Twin Falls, was presented with the Judge O.P. Duvall award, the highest honor bestowed by a local Kiwanis club. "Del Scholl has been involved with Kiwanis in Twin Falls for the past 10 years," says Dexter Ball, club president. During this time he has been active in club projects, particularly the Twin Falls and Magic Valley Junior Miss program and the club's newspaper and aluminum can recycling project. The award is a memorial to the late Judge Duvall, who was active in the club from 1911 until 1970. Other Kiwanians honored include members inducted into the Legion of Honor. This award recognizes members with 25 or more years of service in Kiwanis International. Recipients were Lee Takington, 25 years; Bobby Bopp, 35 years; John Hahn, Gus Kelker and Ken Montgomery, all 40 years; and Les Crowley, 45 years. Honored-for-perfect attendance were Claude Brown Jr., for 39 years; Charles Allen for 32 years; Dr. Art Franz for 29 years and Kelker, 25 years. Bob-Cameron, lieutenant-governor for Division 6, inducted new officers and directors for the Twin Falls club. They include Dexter Ball, president; Larry Braga and Mac Christoffersen, vice presidents; John Waldand, secretary; and Claude Brown Jr., treasurer. Directors include Leonard Anderson, Elmer Haggerty, Dr. Ben Katz, Ray Parrieh, Doug Tollerrid, Larry Baxter, Marvin Chamberlain, Carl Grinstead, William Kee, Dr. Dale Stukenholtz and Ed Waldapfel.

Revamp bank system, Greenspan advises

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan urged Congress on Monday to revamp the nation's banking system, which he said was "frozen within a regulatory structure fashioned some 60 years ago."

"It is essential that Congress come to grips with the difficult decisions that must be made to update our laws to the new circumstances of technology and competition," Greenspan said in his first testimony to a congressional committee since becoming head of the central bank two months ago.

Banks have been pressuring Congress to allow them to expand into other enterprises, such as the underwriting of securities. But securities firms have so far blocked all efforts to eliminate the barriers between the banking and securities industries that were established in 1933.

Greenspan told a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee that the securities industry had expanded rapidly in recent years, offering new products and new competition in areas once reserved for banks.

"All of these developments have amounted to a very much more competitive environment for banking, while at the same time banking has been frozen within a regulatory structure fashioned some 60 years ago," he testified.

"Banks have been trying to circumvent the congressional impasse by using loopholes in existing laws to expand into other enterprises. But Congress closed those loopholes in August, barring federal regulators from granting any further expanded powers to banks until next March 1. Lawmakers hope to have forged a legislative compromise on the issue by that time.

Greenspan approved of this approach in his testimony, saying it would give Congress time to "review our banking and financial laws and to make decisions on the need for financial restructuring legislation before the moratorium expires."

Calling himself a "strong deregulator," Greenspan signaled his willingness to support greater banking deregulation than his predecessor, Paul Volcker, who often cautioned Congress of the need to insure stability in the banking system.

Greenspan, however, stopped short of telling out just what type of legislation he would favor. He said the other members of the Federal Reserve Board were still studying the issue and they had not reached a consensus. He promised to present a report to Congress within several weeks on specific ways that traditional bank practices should be expanded.

"We hope that these recommendations... will enable the American financial system to remain competitive, serving the needs of customers here and abroad without compromising the strength or stability of our financial markets," Greenspan told the telecommunications and finance subcommittee chaired by Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass.

Some members of the panel expressed disappointment that Greenspan was not more specific on changes he felt should be made.

The panel also heard from David S. Ruder, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who said his agency supported a bill introduced by Markey that would require banks engaged in securities underwriting to do so through separate affiliates under SEC regulation.

Ruder said the SEC should be involved in such regulation by banks because of its duty to insure "fair and orderly securities markets."

New car sales drop in September

Los Angeles Times

DETROIT — Sales of new cars in September fell 26.1 percent from the year before, as buyers appeared weary of massive sales incentives offered by the major auto makers.

"The relative weakness... reflects consumers holding back a little bit," said Harvey Heintach, an analyst with the Merrill Lynch investment firm in New York. "The incentive campaigns aren't as productive as they were last year, and consumers (have been) spending more than they've been earning, so we're seeing a little bit more conservative behavior among consumers right now."

The industry — including imports and domestics — sold 899,508 cars last month compared to 1.22 million in September 1986. Sales of U.S.-built models fell 37.7 percent in September, while sales of imports dropped 2.3 percent.

Despite such incentives as 1.9 percent interest rates on two-year car loans, sales of the Big Three auto makers plummeted. General Motors' sales dropped 40.8 percent, Chrysler's sales fell 47.7 percent and Ford's auto sales fell 17.5 percent.

Domestic models produced by foreign companies showed gains. Nissan's sales rose 14.6 percent, refecting expanded capacity at its Tennessee plant, and Honda's sales rose a scant 0.8 percent.

Toyota sold 4,956 U.S.-built cars, its best domestic sales month to date. There were no comparable figures for 1986, since Toyota began U.S. production at a plant in Fremont, Calif., late last year.

Among imports, three manufacturers posted slight gains. Toyota's sales rose 3.4 percent, Honda's sales rose 10.2 percent, and Subaru's sales jumped 17.4 percent. Nissan showed a drop of 25 percent compared to September, 1986.

Downturn seen likely by 1990

Business economists expect growth to last through '88

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States, enjoying the longest peacetime economic expansion on record, will have continued growth this year and through the 1988 presidential election, the nation's business economists predicted Monday.

The National Association of Business Economists said its latest survey of member sentiment found growing optimism that the country will be able to avoid a recession through 1988, a view that is certain to cheer Republicans hoping to hold onto the White House.

But the next president, whatever party he represents, is likely to have to deal with a downturn soon after taking office, these economists believe.

A solid majority, 66 percent, picked 1989 as the most likely year for the next recession to begin.

The economists, who advise some of the country's largest corporations, cited rising inflation and higher interest rates as likely causes of the next recession.

"While economists continue to push back the expected date of the next recession, they still believe that a downturn will occur before the end of 1989," said Larry Jordan, president of the association and chief economist of First Interstate Bancorp of Los Angeles.

The current recovery from the 1981-82 recession entered its 59th month in October, making this recovery the longest peacetime expansion on record.

For this year and 1988, economists remain optimistic about economic prospects, although they have been steadily raising their forecasts for inflation.

"They now are predicting consumer prices will rise by 4.5 percent this year, up substantially from the 1.3 percent inflation performance of 1986. A year ago, the economists had predicted inflation would increase 3.7 percent this year.

By contrast, their views on economic performance have changed little over the past 12 months. The economists are predicting the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, will expand 3 percent this year, compared with a 2.9 percent growth they forecast a year ago.

The economic prediction is close to the administration's forecast of 3.2 percent growth this year, when measured from the final quarter of 1986. This is a substantial improvement from GNP growth of 2.2 percent in 1986.

For 1988, the economists are predicting growth of 2.7 percent, while the Reagan administration is forecasting a higher growth rate of 3.5 percent.

The business economists cited growing demand for their companies' products as one of the reasons for their belief that the recovery is not running out of steam. Nearly 70 percent of the economists surveyed said orders at their companies were on the increase, the biggest percentage since the spring of 1984.

The survey of economists' sentiments was made for the association's annual convention in New Orleans. Copies of the report were also made available in Washington.

The business economists made these additional predictions:

- Unemployment, which edged down to an eight-year low of 6.9 percent in August, will show little further improvement next year, still hovering around the 6 percent level at the end of 1988.
- The U.S. foreign trade deficit, which last year hit a record $166.2 billion, will decline only slightly to $155 billion in 1987. For 1988, the economists see more of an improvement, with the trade deficit shrinking to $140 billion.
- The dollar, which has already declined in value by almost 50 percent in the past two years, is still headed lower, in part because of the stubbornly high trade deficits. The majority of the economists predicted another 10 percent to 30 percent decline in the dollar's value, with a minority forecasting an even bigger drop of as much as 60 percent.
- The federal budget deficit, which last year hit a record $221 billion, improved to $165 billion for the budget year just ended, the economists predicted. For the 1988 fiscal year, the economists forecast an increase in the deficit to $170 billion.
- Business investment spending, which fell by 2.3 percent last year, will decline a further 1 percent in 1987 before rebounding with a 3 percent gain in 1987.

NEW YORK — The stock market which little changed in a drizzling session Monday as lingering interest rate worries took the momentum out of last week's rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down about 12 points for much of the session, closed with a loss of 81 at 2,640.18. The average rose 70.82 points last week.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to 159.85 million shares, against 189.07 million Friday.

Interest rates rose in the credit markets Monday, leaving prices of long-term government bonds with losses of nearly $10 for each $1,000 in face value.

Entex climbed 3 to 23 and Arka dropped 1/2 to 21 3/4, both in active trading. Entex, which had been planning to go private, agreed to be acquired by Arka in a transaction calling for the exchange of 1.15 Arka shares for each Entex share.

Metals stocks, which have benefited from rising prices and talk of increased general inflation, added to their recent gains. Phelps Dodge rose 1 to 54; Asarco 3/4 to 34; Alcoa 1 1/4 to 63 1/4, and Alcan Aluminium 1 1/4 to 37 1/4.

Auto issues, by contrast, were weak as companies in the industry posted a 6.4 percent drop in day-for-day sales of domestic cars for the last third of September. General Motors fell 1 1/2 to 61 1/2; Ford Motor 3/4 to 99 1/2, and Chrysler 3/4 to 41 1/4.

Declining issues outnumbered ad-

MARKET REPORT

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 18 to 383.46, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 0.1 to 326.09.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market gained 2.02 to 453.82. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 359.33, down .04.

By about 0 to 0.4 on the Big Board, with 687 up, 838 down and 432 unchanged. The exchange's composite index edged up .01 to 153.44.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 185.74 million shares.

Incident stirs new questions on corporate school support

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — When the University of Rochester business school abruptly rescinded the fall admission of a Fuji Photo Film Co. employee, some critics blamed the heavy hand of rival Eastman Kodak Co.

As one of Rochester's biggest benefactors, Kodak admitted it had expressed concern to the William E. Simon Graduate School of Business. Administration that Tsuneo Sakai's presence might compromise Kodak secrets.

The incident, which became a major embarrassment for both the university and Kodak, sparked an uproar in academic circles while raising fresh questions about the strings attached to corporate gifts to business schools.

"This was the sort of thing that rekindled conversations and fanned them up again," said Raymond E. Miles, dean of the graduate business school at the University of California, Berkeley.

Miles noted that while corporate grants have become crucial to replacing lost government support to higher education, schools must be capable of telling major donors that "we need your money, but for your sake and ours, you need to give it and we need to take it under conditions that serve everybody best."

Although the decision at the Rochester school was reversed, Sakai decided not to re-enroll there.

Coby Chandler, Kodak chairman and chief executive, has said that the company informed the school of its concern about the Fuji student but did not request his removal. Chandler also said that "we were not sufficiently sensitive to the possible interpretations of our actions."

More than other academic institutions, business schools are inextricably bound to the corporate world. Companies recruit young executives from business school. They also send employees back to school, both to learn and teach subjects ranging from accounting fundamentals to advanced inventory control.

Kodak's ties to Rochester are among the closest of any company to a university. Kodak has donated $3.5 million to the school over 10 years to develop entrepreneurial programs and spends about $600,000 a year in tuition allowances for its employees. About 200 employees currently attend. In addition, the university's property was donated by Kodak founder George Eastman.

Some educators were astonished that Kodak feared its corporate secrets could be leaked from a school. Most major companies have strict

Here are answers to questions about IRAs, new tax code

Individual retirement accounts are still a source of tax confusion, and speculation is intense on how to handle the accounts to your best advantage.

To help get the story straight, I turned to Eli J. Warach, tax attorney for Pretzler Hall Information Services. Between us, we have worked up this series of answers to your most often-asked questions about IRAs and the new tax code.

Sylvia Porter

Q: I know the new law cracks down on IRAs in some situations. Is that effective for money invested only in calendar year 1987 or can I make my 1987 cash contribution in 1988?

A: Basically, the new law affects IRAs set up for 1987. However, you may still be able to set up or contribute to a deductible 1987 IRA after 1987. You have until April 15, 1988.

Q: In addition, if you pay someone for investment advice or for IRA custodial fees in 1987, the fees are lumped in with other miscellaneous deductions and are deductible only to the extent that they exceed 2 percent of your adjusted gross income.

Q: This paradox: you may be able to make a full contribution to a 1987 IRA, but 2 percent of the related deductions may be cut back.

Q: Neither my wife nor I belong to an employer-sponsored retirement plan. How much can we contribute to a 1987 IRA?

A: Up to $2,000 each — provided you earn at least $2,000 each annually. You and your wife can contribute, and deduct, $2,000 each even if each of you earns more than $50,000 a year.

Q: But you might object, "I thought that deductible contributions to IRAs were knocked out for people earning over certain amounts?"

A: That's both right and wrong! Let's try to clear away some of the confusion.

1. If neither spouse is an active participant in a retirement plan, the deduction limits remain unchanged, no matter how much you earn.

2. A taxpayer who is married and files a joint return will be treated as an active participant if the taxpayer's spouse is an active participant.

Q: If I assume that one or both spouses belong to retirement plans. What are the limits on contributions and deductions then?

A: This falls into three separate categories: 1. Married filing joint returns; 2. single; 3. married filing separate returns.

There are different rules for each. Married couples filing joint returns. The key rule and one you must remember is: "If one belongs to a retirement plan, both belong."

In short, couples with a combined adjusted gross income of $40,000 or more still losing deductions for IRAs at a rate of $200 in deductions for every extra $1,000 of adjusted gross income. That means that when a couple filing a joint return has an adjusted gross income of $50,000, the deductible IRA is zero. If the combined adjusted gross income is $40,000, there is no loss of deduction.

For single taxpayers, the range is from $25,000 to $35,000. At $35,000 or more the deduction is completely lost.

For married taxpayers filing separate returns, the range begins at zero and is completely lost when adjusted gross income is $10,000.

Q: Isn't there a double penalty for pension-connected married taxpayers filing a joint return? Once their adjusted gross income reaches $50,000, don't they really lose $4,000 in IRA deductions rather than $2,000?

A: They sure do. It's another version of the marriage penalty. If they have a combined adjusted gross income of $40,000, they have a potential of $4,000 in IRA deductions ($2,000 each when they both work) if they reach $30,000 there's a loss of the full $4,000 in deductions. In the in-between areas, it's not as bad. For example, if adjusted gross is $46,000, there is an $800 deduction for each of them or a total $1,600 in deductions.

Q: What if Mary and John are unmarried but living together, sharing expenses and the like. Each belongs to a pension plan, each has $25,000 in adjusted gross income. How much can each deduct?

A: Putting morals aside, they come out better financially here: Each could have a $2,000 IRA — fully deductible.

Q: Suppose Mary has an adjusted gross income of $50,000. John has an adjusted gross of $25,000. Each belongs to a pension plan.

A: Net results: Mary can't deduct anything for her IRA. John can invest and deduct $2,000 in an IRA.

Gem wheat stocks reach all-time high

BOISE (AP) — As market prices hovered near decade lows, stockpiles of wheat grew to an all-time high in Idaho last month, underscoring the continuing economic problems facing producers...

Wheat stocks were 10.6 million bushels higher than the previous all-time record set last September, marking the seventh straight quarter that wheat has been piling up on and off the farm at a record pace.

School

Guidelines about what to talk about in a classroom

It's understood how Rochester had information that was "spurious," said Preston J. dean of the University of Nevada's Carlson School of Management...

The latest record report came as farmers were ending harvest of their 1987 crop. Planted acreage was at its lowest level since the early 1970s as Idaho producers agreed to idle over 670,000 acres in response to government incentives aimed at curtailing price-depressing surpluses.

The land-lending plan coupled with the declining value of the dollar in the international market has helped ease the surplus problem somewhat, and stocks nationwide last month were down 6 percent from a year earlier.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF
'It is much easier to be critical than to be correct.' - Benjamin Disraeli.
"Please render an opinion regarding this hand," writes a reader. "My partner and I are critical of each other's actions and neither of us will budge an inch."
The hand was played in a duplicate game and the result was not good. The defense slipped and allowed South to score four diamonds, three hearts and a spade - minus 180 points. Perfect defense nets a 100-point penalty, still a poor score when compared to what East-West can make in a heart contract. East maintains that he had all that he had promised by his bidding and that he had no reason to pull the double of two diamonds. West maintains that he had not doubled, he would have denied such good diamonds-and-a-chance-for-a-substantial penalty would have been lost.
In matters of this sort, good arguments can be advanced to defend one's favorite action. The Aces solve these problems by first determining the par for the hand and then apportioning blame for failing to achieve par.
In this case, East-West par is 140 points at a heart partial. Against a normal diamond lead, 170 is available as well as 420. East might have chosen to bid two or three hearts over one no-trump or two hearts over the double; West had no reason to support hearts; West might have passed to two diamonds, but either a three-club bid or a double is a more reasonable action. Verdict? East 80 percent of the Last week: Against Western Oregon State, Yore split playing time. He is now listed as co-starter at the position. Season: Yore has played in all three of Willamette's games this season.

Team owners raise ante for absent players

By MARK ASHER
The Washington Post

As representatives of the striking players on the 28 National Football League teams met in Chicago Monday night to discuss options for getting the owners back to the bargaining table, management increased the pressure on the union to end its 14-day-old strike without a signed contract.

Meeting in New York, the executive committee of the Management Council, the owners' negotiating arm, reaffirmed its position that all games played with replacement players will count toward the playoffs and said that striking players have until 1 p.m. Wednesday to report and be eligible for this week-end's games.

Last week the deadline was 3 p.m. Friday. In Chicago Monday night, a major issue among the player representatives was whether to go back to work without a contract. There also was speculation that the players were ready to drop their demands on free agency, the major sticking point of negotiations to date.

On Sunday, union leaders and player representatives hinted that they might be willing to give up their desire for free agency, a player's ability to move on his own to another team after his contract expires, in order to negotiate six other major issues, including pension, severance pay and insurance. But those same leaders were adamant about staying on strike until a contract was signed.

Striking players have lost two weeks pay — they are paid 16 times a season — and there were unsubstantiated reports over the weekend that as many as seven teams were ready to cross the picket lines on masse early this week. Those reports were denied by union leaders and player representatives. The six-member Management Council, headed by Tampa Bay Buccaneers owner Hugh Culverhouse.

Super Bowl champ Giants slide to 0-3

By TOM CANAVAN
The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The San Francisco 49ers had a more experienced replacement roster on paper than the New York Giants, and they proved it on the field Monday night. Del Rodgers ran two yards for a touchdown and Mike Wells returned a blocked punt for another score as the 49ers replacements scored twice in a 28-second span just before halftime and went on to rout the winless Giants 41-21 before the smallest crowd ever to see the reigning Super Bowl champions play at Giants Stadium.

"They made a game of it while they could physically," 49ers Coach Bill Walsh said of the Giants. "But I think we were better than them and we wore them out."

The 49ers came into the game with 17 players with some sort of NFL experience compared to just four for the Giants. And the Giants lack of experience showed. The team of free agents and semipro players which was put together later than most NFL replacement teams earned the ball over four times, struggled on offense and defense and were never in the game after collapsing just before halftime.

"I don't have any control over the situation, including the procurement of players," Giants Coach Bill Parcells said. "I am just playing with the cards I was dealt."

Wide receiver Carl Monroe, who caught a touchdown pass in the third quarter Monday night for the replacements and in the first quarter of the 1984 Super Bowl for San Francisco, said the 49ers banished from two scrimmages with the Los Angeles Raiders last week. "It had to help," Monroe said. "I know we have a good team. That was good for us. I don't know how long this is going to go on but I think we'll get better as we go along."

The Giants did not scrimmage in the 1 1/2 weeks the replacement team was together. Only 16,471 fans attended the nationally televised replacement game, a record low for the Giants at 76,000-seat Giants Stadium. The previous attendance low was established late in the 1983 season, when 25,156 braved a cold, rainy day to watch the Giants, who would finish 3-12-1, play St. Louis.

Some 40,000 tickets for Monday night's game were returned by fans, making it the first non-sellout in 87 games at Giants Stadium. Those who did attend were treated to the offensive genius of Walsh.

Absent Clark, Cardinals will try end run on S.F.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals, the fastest team in baseball, could run themselves into the ground against San Francisco in the National League playoffs.

With slugger Jack Clark injured and likely limited to pinch-hitting duty for another week, the Cardinals will rely heavily on their fleet feet when the best-of-seven series starts tonight at Busch Stadium. Game time is 6 p.m. MDT. NBC channels 7 and 38 in the Magic Valley will broadcast the league championship series games live.

But speed can kill and no one posts more stop signs than the Giants, who this season threw out the most potential base stealers in the major leagues. They were particularly adept against the Cardinals, limiting them to 14 steals in 24 attempts (58 percent), compared to their overall rate of 78 percent.

"You can throw out what happened during the season," said St. Louis manager Tom Herr, who led the majors with 109 stolen bases in 131 tries. But the Giants were the only team to slow him, throwing him out five of eight attempts.

St. Louis wants to run often in order to offset the loss of their only power source. Clark hit 35 of the Cardinals' major-league low 94 home runs despite being out of the starting lineup since Sept. 9 with an ailing right ankle. Manager Whitey Herzog does not expect Clark to be ready until Game 6 next Tuesday night, if the series goes that far.

The Giants hit 201 homers this season, their most since moving to San Francisco in 1958. They out-homered St. Louis 16-8 this year and won seven of 12 meetings. The teams split six games at Busch Stadium.

Danny Cox will face the Giants' potent lineup when he starts the opener for St. Louis. He will be opposed by Rick Reuschel.

Bob Brenly and Bob Melvin do the catching for San Francisco and are helped by Manager Roger Craig's predilection for pitchers.

Mulroney's foes claim trade treaty selling out Canada

TORONTO (AP) — Prime Minister Brian Mulroney told Canadians Monday that the real issues with the free trade pact he secured with the United States. But the Conservative leader's daunting task in selling the week-end deal at home became clear when "opposition" leaders accused him of putting Canada up for sale and demanded an election over the issue.

"From the wheat-growing prairies of Alberta to the prosperous car plants of Ontario, Canadians were divided on the wisdom of entering a treaty Mulroney said would 'strike down protectionism' and give youth a future.

"When both countries prosper, our democracies are strengthened and leadership has been provided to our trading partners around the world," Mulroney told Parliament in Ottawa, where fellow Tories gave him a standing ovation.

He said the accord, although imperfect, would "broaden access to the greatest, richest and most dynamic market in the world."

In a fiery response, John Turner, leader of the main opposition Liberal Party, charged: "Today, the prime minister has put Canada up for sale."

Although final details of the treaty were not immediately released, Turner accused the prime minister of turning Canada, the world's second largest country, into a satellite and storehouse for U.S. interests under a compact he dubbed "Takeover Unlimited."

Canada is second only to the Soviet Union in area size.

Ed Brodeur, leader of the socialist New Democratic Party, said Mulroney has a moral obligation to call a general election for a confirmation or rejection of this betrayal of Canadian history.

Born out of the rivalry between Britain and its former American colonies, Canada has struggled for more than a century to preserve its own identity while sharing an undefended border with a country 10 times as powerful.

The Tories have now been thrown wide open, Turner clapped. "Time Inc. is back taking over our Canadian culture."

Broadbent, the country's most popular politician, charged: "This gang of Tories ... sees this country as nothing but one large cash register that should be taken over by the United States."

He said by agreeing to virtually unimpeded American investment, Mulroney "has volunteered Canada as the 51st of the United States."

Proponents of free trade had argued that Canada already sends three-quarters of its goods to the United States, and Americans account for 25 percent of all investment north of the border. Those economic ties were threatened, however, by the wave of protectionist measures being considered in Congress.

Canada's key demand in the 16-month negotiations was a binding, impartial tribunal to settle trade disputes such as the 1986 battle that resulted in a 15 percent export tax on Canadian lumber.

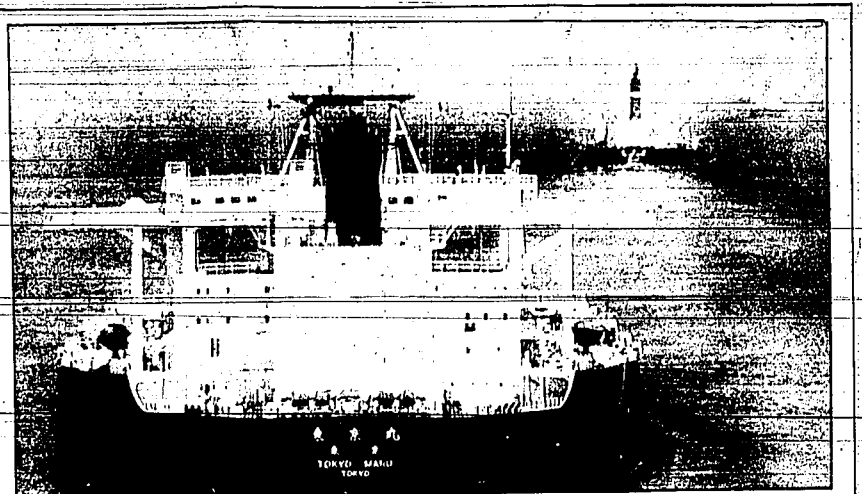

A difference emerged Monday over what was agreed in Washington.

Finance Minister Michael Wilson said the rulings-of-the-disputes panel will be binding, but U.S. officials portrayed it as more of an advisory group unable to overturn existing trade remedy legislation.

Turner called the compromise a fraud that left Canada vulnerable.

If ratified by Congress early next year and approved by the Canadian Parliament, the treaty will take effect Jan. 1, 1989, with some changes at once and others phased in over a decade, Mulroney said.

Many awaited the reaction of David Peterson, premier of Ontario, the most populous and industrial of Canada's provinces. Elected by a landslide after raising doubts about free trade, he could sway public opinion on the deal.

Four Japanese tankers leave the Persian Gulf Monday in a convoy after that nation halted shipping in area.

Missile hits Baghdad, high toll feared

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iran fired a long-range missile into the Iraqi capital Monday night for the first time in nearly eight months. Authorities said it hit a residential area and killed many people, but they did not give figures.

Iraqi warplanes attacked Iranian oil terminals Monday in the southern Persian Gulf and shipping sources said five tankers were damaged, including the world's largest ship.

Chartered tankers shuttle oil from Iran's huge Kharg Island export terminal in the northern gulf, which regularly comes under Iraqi attack, to makeshift loading facilities in the waterway's southern reaches. Tankers of other nations pick load the oil there.

The Middle East Economic Survey, a respected oil newsletter published in Nicosia, Cyprus, said Iran had chartered 14 more tankers in recent weeks, nearly doubling its fleet to 29. Iran depends on oil exports to finance the 7-year-old war with Iraq.

In Baghdad, a person living near where the missile struck told the Associated Press they heard and felt a "strong blast" at 10:07 p.m. They reported seeing flames and a column of black smoke. One said all the windows at his home were shattered.

Ambulances and fire engines rushed into the area, which was sealed off by police. Authorities would not say precisely where the missile landed.

A military spokesman said on state radio that many people were killed.

He vowed revenge, but did not say how Iraq would respond. The government announced in July that it had surface-to-surface missiles with a range of 500 miles, enough to reach Tehran.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency filed an urgent dispatch under the headline "Thundering Missile Gives a Rude Awakening to Baathist Regime," a reference to Iraq's ruling Baath Socialist Party.

which has been a periodic feature of the conflict since it began in September 1980.

The official Iraqi News Agency said 136 civilians were killed last month in almost daily shelling of Basra, Iraq's southern provincial capital. More than 1,000 people have been reported killed in Basra this year.

Kharg Island is bombed and rocketed almost daily, but long-range Iraqi raids on the southern on condition of anonymity, said five vessels were hit at Larak, including the world's largest ship, the 554,739-ton super-tanker Seawise Giant. Iran was using it for storage.

Whether the other ships also were under charter to Iran was not certain. They fly the Liberian, Cypriot and Panamanian flags.

War communique from Baghdad said the raids were in retaliation for Iranian shelling Sunday of the border cities of Basra, Sulaymaniyah, Qalnat Deza and Khanuqin. The Iraqis said 31 civilians were killed and 51 wounded.

Seamen on French corvette watch Iraqi jets pass

There has been speculation that Iraqi raids had put about half the 15 to 16 Iranian tankers out of action. By nearly doubling the size of the shuttle fleet, however, Iran has been reported able to maintain exports at about 2 million barrels a day.

According to the Middle East Economic Survey, about 20 Iranian tankers still are moving crude oil south despite the Iraqi raids.

An Iraqi bombing campaign late last year cut Iranian oil exports to about 600,000 barrels a day. President Saddam Hussein's government has vowed to pursue this bombing offensive until Iran's economy is shattered.

Seven tankers, including the Seawise Giant with a storage capacity of 20 million barrels, were reported at Larak on Monday, along with eight products carriers with a total capacity of 12 million barrels.

400 Contras quit, cite support lack

PUERTO CABEZAS, Nicaragua (AP) — About 400 Indian Contra rebels with U.S.-supplied weapons have switched sides and become members of the Sandinista government army they had been fighting for five years.

One of their leaders said they stopped fighting to overthrow the leftist Sandinistas because they didn't have U.S. support.

"If the American government and the Congress that maintains power in the United States, if they understand we could have fought the Sandinista government until the bitter end," Uriel Vanegas, one of the Contra leaders, told reporters covering the event.

Sandinista military officials said about 400 Contras, mostly Miskito, Sumo and Rama Indians, switched sides in this area last Saturday.

The 80 of rebels through this humid, palm-covered fishing port of about 20,000 people, in northeastern Nicaragua, on the Atlantic Coast, near the Honduran border.

Dressed in new U.S.-made camouflage fatigues, the 50 rebels marched to the dusty main square, where they stood in rows of three, sweat running down their foreheads, clutching Soviet-designed AK-47 assault rifles, which had been supplied to them by the United States.

After their decision was announced to a crowd of chanting Sandinista supporters, Interior Minister Tomas Borge said, smiling, "It was a definitive blow to the armed activity in the Atlantic Coast."

In a brief speech, Borge, who flew in from the Nicaraguan capital for the surrender, welcomed and praised their decision and incorporated them into the Sandinista army.

The new recruits stared straight ahead, expressionless, while Vanegas said they were not surrendering and would not turn in their arms. But under an agreement between Vanegas and the government, the Indian rebels became part of the army and will fight other Contra groups and the "imperialist aggression."

"Long live the Sandinistas!" a group of pro-government youths chanted.

Vanegas made it clear he and his groups were not supporting the Sandinistas, but that they switched sides because they lacked American backing.

"We don't support the Sandinistas," Vanegas said, "saying with a gold Oryx watch with a single diamond chip that Borge had given him as a gift. 'This is a gentleman's agreement. The Sandinistas have their project, with the Soviets or Cubans, or whatever. This is a war of interests.'" Vanegas said he decided to switch sides because the Contra Indians were always the subordinate "little brothers" to the main U.S.-supported Contra groups, the Nicaragua Democratic Force.

The Force, he said, has received most of the $100 million in military and other aid approved by Congress, which the Reagan administration provided the rebels in the past year.

According to the rebels here, the Contra Indians numbered from 500 to 1,000, out of a total of about 15,000 rebel-combatants. Saturday's defection means there are as few as 100, or as many as 600 Indian fighters still left among the Contras.

Because of the remoteness of the region, news could not be filed immediately.

The Indians, who inhabit the isolated, jungle-covered Atlantic Coast, want mostly to be left alone. Their problems began in 1981, two years after the Sandinistas seized power. When they refused to let Sandinistas effort to join the leftist revolution.

"Almost all of the Indians speak English, compared with the rest of Nicaraguans who speak Spanish, and they were under British rule until the late 1900s, when Britain ceded the territory to Nicaragua."

The Sandinistas forced thousands of Indians to leave their homes ancestral homes, and resettled thousands of others in camps inland, because they considered them "a threat" to national security.

An estimated 25,000 also fled across the Corinto River, which divides the two countries, into neighboring Honduras where they lived in a squall of refugee camps.

Later, the Sandinistas publicly acknowledged their "error" and made great efforts to woo the Indians back, granting them limited autonomy to levy local taxes and govern themselves at the municipal level, and preserve their ethnic culture.

Limited apartheid law changes win approval

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha today endorsed an advisory council's recommendation that apartheid laws be changed to permit some multiracial residential areas.

But Botha said he could not accept a second major recommendation from the President's Council, to scrap the law that segregates public amenities on a nationwide basis. He said different races should be able to maintain segregated beaches, swimming pools and certain other facilities.

Speaking in Parliament, Botha said the government approved in principle the council's recommendation that localities be allowed to establish multiracial neighborhoods if they wished.

Botha reiterated that integration would not be forced upon whites, or other groups. The council's proposal suggests that residents of a neighborhood would have to approve any decision to integrate and that such a decision would be subject to veto by a government-appointed provincial administrator.

"It would be unjustifiable to deny those who do want to live amidst their own community the right to do so," Botha said. "On the other hand, it would not be correct to deny those who prefer to live in the context of an open area their right to do that."

Anti-apartheid groups have condemned the council report, which was issued Sept. 17. They urged total abolition of the Group Areas Act, which mandates segregated neighborhoods, and said the council's proposals were unlikely to produce significant change.

Botha said implementation of the proposal would be postponed pending investigations of how voting rights would be provided in newly integrated areas and how decisions to integrate would be made.

At present, whites, blacks, Asians and people of mixed-race all live in segregated areas and vote in segregated local elections. The country's 26 million blacks have no vote in national affairs, while the 6 million whites control the government and the economy.

Botha warned South Africans not to defy the Group Areas Act while the new arrangements were being made.

"Such action could result in serious uncertainty and even chaos," he said. "This cannot be allowed."

Botha said the government had no philosophical objection to scrapping the Separate Amenities Act, as proposed by the 60-member President's Council. But he said the recommendations could not be accepted until new guidelines were adopted.

"Groups must have the assurance that the law of the country recognizes their right to their own institutions," Botha said.

But he said there might be cases where amenities could not or should not be duplicated for different races and thus would have to be integrated "in an orderly and civilized manner."

A balance should be sought which cannot be found in the strict application of the present act — an act which was never a success in any case," he said.

Americans think business pullout wrong move

NEW YORK (AP) — Only one-third of Americans support a pullout of U.S. businesses from South Africa, and most are unsure of what American policy concerning that country should be, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

About half of the 1,223 respondents in the nationwide telephone poll opposed a pullout of U.S. businesses from South Africa, while about one-third said businesses should abandon the country and its racially discriminatory government.

When the same question was asked in a Media General-AP poll two years ago, 28 percent supported a pullout — 50 percent opposed a withdrawal, and 22 percent were unsure.

Among black respondents, 40 percent wanted U.S. businesses out of South Africa, compared with one-third of whites who felt that way. Only 37 percent of blacks said businesses should stay, compared with 61 percent of whites.

Respondents were asked to choose between two statements: "U.S. companies should stop doing business with South Africa because it is immoral to deal with a government that practices racial discrimination," or "U.S. companies should not stop doing business in South Africa because to do so will economically hurt both the blacks and the whites."

While the poll found most people did not favor business pullouts, it also indicated that many Americans have no idea what U.S. policy toward South Africa should be.

When asked, "In your opinion, what should the United States do next concerning South Africa?" 46 percent said they didn't know. Among those who had opinions, 18 percent said "stay out of it," and 8 percent supported stronger economic sanctions. The rest were divided among dozens of answers.

A year ago, the United States imposed limited economic sanctions against South Africa. But Edward Perkins, the American ambassador, recently questioned the effectiveness of U.S. sanctions and urged Western nations to "proceed with sensitivity."

Perkins, who believes the apartheid system of racial segregation will eventually be eliminated, also said that economic sanctions and other presures applied by Western governments may serve to prevent rather than promote changes in South Africa's system of racial segregation.

Senior Reagan administration policymakers have complained almost from the beginning that the imposition of economic penalties on South Africa was misguided. One high-level State Department official said the sanctions had weakened Washington's influence with Pretoria.

In South Africa itself, the American sanctions are criticized from all sides: black activists say the sanctions are too weak, executives say they undermine prospects for reform, and the government accuses Congress of meddling harmfully in South Africa's internal affairs.

President Reagan, who is due to submit a one-year assessment of the sanctions' effectiveness, will refuse to recommend new sanctions against South Africa because those imposed last year failed to achieve any desired changes, according to a report in The New York Times.

On the other hand, the author of corporate guidelines for companies doing business in South Africa this year rejected his own suggestions and urged U.S. companies to pull out of the country.

China tightening its control over Tibet capital after riots

LHASA, Tibet (AP) — China flow security troops into Lhasa on Monday and blocked roads leading to Buddhist monasteries after monks led Tibetan independence protests that left at least 14 people dead.

Witnesses said police arrested and beat monks after last week's demonstrations, and high-ranking monks in Lhasa appealed on Monday for world support.

"The Chinese have ruled violently in our country and we want them to leave Tibet," said a two-page statement that the monks distributed to tourists. "We ask the U. N. and all the countries of the world to please support our true cause. We are suffering."

The statement said: "The Chinese have taken away Tibetan human rights for the last 30 years. We Tibetans have the Dalai Lama in our mind and he's our leader forever."

The Dalai Lama was Tibet's civil and religious leader until China annexed the remote Himalayan region in 1950, enforcing a centuries-old territorial claim. The Dalai Lama fled in 1959 after a failed uprising by his supporters and has since lived in India.

In Washington, the State Department condemned last week's violence, called for restraint and reiterated the U.S. view that Tibet is part of China.

Police in Lhasa tore down posters denying the official Chinese accounts of the Thursday demonstration and a smaller protest on Sept. 27.

"They (the Chinese) have killed 10 (Tibetans)," read one poster. "But we will sacrifice 20, 40, 100 ... as many as needed."

In a report reaching Beijing early Tuesday, Western doctors traveling in Lhasa said eight Tibetans were killed Thursday. In addition, Chinese officials had said six police were killed.

Unofficial estimates said up to 50 Tibetans were injured. There was no official confirmation because many Tibetans apparently feared going to the hospital for treatment. The official news media said 19 police were injured.

Dozens of monks and lay people reportedly have been arrested since the protests began, but no official total was available.

John Ackorly, a Washington lawyer, said that while he was detained briefly by police on Thursday, he saw police beating monks they had arrested. He said one monk was beaten repeatedly over the head with a shovel.

Police barricades were erected on roads leading to Sera, Ganden and Drepung, Tibet's leading monasteries.

Police turned back most vehicles. But an Associated Press reporter who reached Sera, four miles north of Lhasa, on a less-used route found its more than 320 monks mourning two members who were shot to death in Thursday's demonstration.

The abbot, who gave his name only as Tenzing, said police came the day of the first demonstration and arrested 21 monks. He said they returned Saturday and arrested six more.

"We're not able to go out now," the abbot said. "They (police) surround the place at night. Please, all of you Westerners, help us to become independent."

Sera monks said police had arrested 20 monks at Drepung, six miles northwest of Lhasa.

An Associated Press reporter who flew into Lhasa on Sunday said high-ranking armed police officers were on the flight.

Madlen Huber, a Swiss tourist who arrived Monday in Chengdu from Lhasa, said she saw two jets arrive at the Lhasa airport Sunday night and a third on Monday morning carrying at least 100 security troops each.

Virginia Burkhead of Charlotte, N.C., also reported seeing the plane load of troops arrive Monday.

The city was quiet Monday. Police patrols were light, apparently in an effort to avoid angering the public.

Workers began razing a ruined police station in central Jokhang Temple square. Protesters burned the station on Thursday.

The demonstrations appear to be triggered by the Dalai Lama's Sept. 19-29 visit to the United States.

Officials posted warnings to foreigners not to become involved in the demonstrations.

Viet fighter brought down along border

BEIJING (AP) — China said it downed a Vietnamese jet fighter Monday in one of the most serious incidents along the tense Sino-Vietnamese border since the two former allies fought a brief war along their common boundary in 1979.

The official Xinhua News Agency said its air force shot down a Vietnamese MIG-21 Monday afternoon after it intruded as far as 20 miles into Chinese air space over Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region in southern China.

The report said China's Foreign Ministry had "made representations" to Vietnam's ambassador about the violation of Chinese air space.

"The Vietnamese authorities must adopt practical measures to put an end to such incidents. They will be responsible for all the consequences," Xinhua said.

The duty officer at the Vietnamese Embassy in Beijing said he had no information about the Xinhua report.

China and Vietnam fought a 17-day frontier war in 1979 that China started to "punish" Vietnam for its invasion of Cambodia.

Since then there has been sporadic fighting along the border, with each side claiming attacks by the other.

In January, Vietnam said its forces killed or wounded 300 soldiers from a Chinese army division that tried to seize four hilltops in Vietnam's northern highlands.

China in turn said its frontier guards "wiped out" more than 200 Vietnamese troops in repulsing Vietnamese attacks in one of the bloodiest confrontations in recent years.

China said that Vietnam had staged more than 10,000 provocations and that it had pushed back 4,200 armed intrusions since 1979.

China and Vietnam were allies during the Vietnam War but have been bitter foes since Vietnam's late-1978 invasion of Cambodia, which drove the Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge from Phnom Penh.
