Panic selling pushes Dow down 500 points

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market plunged out of control Monday in a selling panic that rivaled the Great Crash of 1929, pushing the Dow Jones average down more than 500 points, draining more than $500 billion from the value of stocks and sending shock waves around the world.

"Whether today was a fawn or not ... I wouldn't want to be around for one worse than this," said John Phelan, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange.

some of the confidence underpins the growth of the world economy, analysts said.

"We're having extreme panic in the marketplace. It's like Armageddon," said Alfred E. Goldman, director of market analysis for A.G. Edwards & Sons in St. Louis.

Analysts were reluctant to compare Monday's plunge with the stock market crash that helped set off the Depression of the 1930s, but they said there were fears in the market that a possible recession in the United States could snowball into a worldwide downturn.

"In a nutshell, this thing could go further. There's a domino effect here," said Leonard Grimaldi, executive vice president of Amivest Corp. in New York.

"This is a dangerous day to say the least, and we are nervous here," Grimaldi said.

Earlier Monday panic selling gripped stock exchanges in Tokyo, Hong Kong, London, Frankfurt, Amsterdam and other financial centers, with records set for one-day losses.

In Chicago, the stock index futures also had their biggest one-day decline ever, as Standard & Poor's 500 dropped 80.75 points.

The Wall Street rout was all the Dow's plunge to 1,738.74 left it 22.6 percent below Friday's level, a one-day loss far larger than the 12.8 percent drop on Oct. 28, 1929, known as Black Monday, or Oct. 29, 1929, when it fell an additional 11.7 percent.

The Dow average's worst percentage decline ever was on Dec. 12, 1914, early in World War I, when it lost 24.4 percent of its value.

The market fed on itself in wave after wave of selling in the busiest trading day ever on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow industrials fell 508.00 points to 1,738.74, a loss of nearly 1,000 points since the market's peak Aug. 25.

The latest decline left the Dow industrial average about 36 percent below its peak of 2,722.42 on Aug. 25 and at its lowest point since April 1986.

Gene Sturgill was calling Monday 'the day of days'

Day of days

TWIN FALLS — At one point Monday at the Edward D. Jones & Co. office all the lines lit up on the telephone console. And when investment representative Gene Sturgill picked up the receiver, there was one question on everyone's lips.

"What happened?"

"The 1929 stock market crash was called Black Monday. Sturgill was calling Monday's record drop 'the day of days.'"

Sturgill, who works at the Jones office at 1027 Blue Lakes Blvd., was hoarse from fielding 30 to 40 calls.

One man with a $600,000 to $700,000 account called. The wife of the man with the largest account phoned too.

Sturgill suggested getting into gold as a hedge against higher interest rates and inflation fears, both factors in the Monday market's demise.

"They're all nervous," Sturgill said of his clients.

In Twin Falls there are no electronic ticker tapes flashing like a theater marquee for investors to stare at goggle-eyed.

Instead the ebb of the market's plunge was visible only in the quiet tap of Sturgill's fingers on the computer console.

The prices receded before his eyes. Idaho Power Co. closed at 19 down six points, Boise Cascade was at 59 1/2 down 13, Sunahine Mining, a gold stock, closed at 4 7/8, down 5/8 and Trus Joist ended the day at 19 down 2 1/4.

Before the crash, IPO was talking about having to borrow to cover its dividend. The low water year and slack surplus electricity sales to the Southwest were factors in this situation.

more stunning because there did not seem to be any major news event that caused it. A selling trend that picked up speed in the middle of last week simply gained unstoppable momentum and turned into a frenzy.

Underlying the market's decline were continued fears over inflation, rising interest rates and a weakening dollar. The United States is the world's largest debtor and has made slow progress in reducing its trade deficits.

The volume of trading soared to 604.33 million shares, dwarfing the record of about 330 million shares set Friday. Shares that lost in value outnumbered gainers by 48 to 1.

President Reagan discussed the market fall with advisers, and the administration emphasized that the U.S. economy is healthy.

U.S. strikes back in symbolic action

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Four U.S. Navy destroyers Monday shelled and set ablaze an oil platform used for Iranian military operations in the central Persian Gulf in what the administration called "a measured and appropriate response" to last week's Silkwood missile attack on an American-flagged tanker in Kuwait waters.

The warships pounded the Iranian military platform 120 miles east of Bahrain with 1,000 rounds of heavy gunfire at 2 p.m. Monday (7 a.m. EDT) after giving the Iranians at the facility a 20-minute warning to flee. The Navy later dispatched explosive teams to blow up a section of the installation that survived the shelling, Pentagon officials said.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said the former oil-drilling platform at Rashad housed radar and communications equipment used to track convoys of U.S.-escorted tankers and that Iranians used the facility to "launch small boat attacks against non-belligerent shipping."

"It is a prudent yet restrained response to this unlawful use of force against the United States and to numerous violations of the rights of other non-belligerents," President Reagan said in a written statement.

Senior administration officials said Monday the U.S. strike at Iranian oil derricks was intended as a limited and largely symbolic action signaling that the United States has the political will to defend its interests in the Persian Gulf.

"No, we're not going to have a war with Iran," President Reagan said late Monday as he left the White House to visit First Lady Nancy Reagan in Bethesda Naval Medical Center. "They're not that stupid."

But officials acknowledged that the military action, while apparently acceptable to all factions within the administration and to Congress, left open the question of whether it will set off an escalating series of retaliatory attacks.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said, "We consider this matter is now closed." But this optimistic view was countered later by

Subway vigilante gets 6 months

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — Bernhard H. Goetz was sentenced Monday to six months in prison for illegal-weapon possession, in the final chapter of the 1984 subway shooting that ignited a worldwide debate about urban violence and vigilantism.

Goetz, 39, an electrical engineer, started grinning at the floor as acting Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Stephen G. Crane imposed sentence.

Goetz, who could have received up to seven years in prison, also was fined $5,000, ordered to undergo psychiatric treatment, placed on five years' probation and directed to perform 280 hours of community service.

Goetz did not speak on his own behalf and was allowed to remain free pending appeal.

Monday's proceedings were the final echo of the shots from Goetz's .38-caliber revolver on Dec. 22, 1984, when he shot and wounded four black youths on an IRT subway car after one of them had asked him for $5.

After a seven-week trial, Goetz was acquitted in June of attempted murder charges but convicted of third-degree possession of an illegal weapon.

Minutes after the sentencing, the Rev. Al Sharpton, a black leader here, told reporters he hoped the sentence "will send a signal that white vigilantism is not going to be excused." But if Bernie Goetz had been black, he would have gotten

T-shirt triggers $1-million lawsuit

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — High school senior Rod Gano said that when he drew a T-shirt pattern for Homecoming — featuring three men drinking outside Bruin Stadium and captioned "It Doesn't Get Any Better Than This" — he did it just for fun.

But the fun evolved into a suspension, conflict with district administrators and a $1-million federal lawsuit against the Twin Falls School District.

By continuing to wear the shirt during a two-week period, despite administrators telling him not to, Gano has been suspended and twice sent home from school to change shirts.

"It's been blown way out of proportion," Gano said of the discipline. "It's not school affiliated — it's just for fun."

He and his lawyer view the most recent time he was sent home as a second suspension, although district officials deny that. A dozen to 15 other students joined Gano in wearing the shirts after his acknowledged suspension and were all ordered home to change their clothes.

In response, the boy's father, also named Rod Gano, filed a $1-million lawsuit Friday afternoon in federal court against the school district and administrators who disciplined his son for "disruption" and being "disrespectful" to authority.

District officials said the design paints three high school administrators in a bad light.

"I think it was disruptive and disrespectful," said Superintendent Carl Snow of the design believed to depict Principal Frank Charlton, Vice Principal Norm Thomas and Dean of Men Dick Baun.

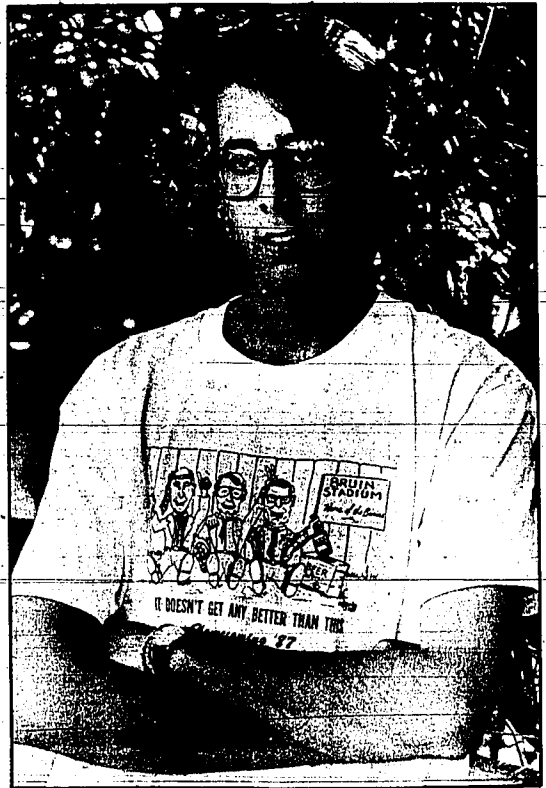

Gano's lawyer, William Hollifield, wrote the district's attorney, Ed Benoit, Oct. 6 — the day after Gano's suspension — that the caricature "apparently is of the three."

But regardless, Hollifield argues in his federal suit Gano's drawing is protected under the First and 14th Constitutional Amendments. Hollifield added that the Supreme Court has upheld such a position involving students in several cases.

"It's basically freedom of speech," Hollifield said.

The 17-year-old, a soft-spoken artist who is studying art and is an editorial cartoonist for the student newspaper, The Bruin News, shied away from credit Monday that he caricatured the administrators.

Well then, the festive design only allegedly features Charlton with his tie around his forehead holding a foamy mug of beer and signaling a "thumbs up." Thomas holding a Sun Country Wine Cooler and a peace sign, and Baun holding a bottle of Jack Daniel's whiskey. They sit propped against a wooden fence marked Bruin Stadium above the caption "It Doesn't Get Any Better Than This" and "Homecoming '87."

School officials are convinced the drawing is a caricature of Charlton, Thomas and Baun. "If you look at it, it looks just like them. It doesn't take a genius to figure it out," Snow said. He added that the school board was notified of the events at its last meeting Tuesday.

Court upholds visa ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — An evenly divided Supreme Court on Monday upheld a ruling that Communist officials should not be barred from visiting the United States if they pose no security risks.

The court, by a 3-3 vote, affirmed a federal appeals court ruling that the Reagan administration may have acted illegally in denying visas to a Nicaraguan official, two Cuban Communist Party members and an Italian affiliated with a group allegedly controlled by the Soviet Union.

Because of Monday's split vote, the unsigned, one-sentence decision carries limited value as a national precedent. The ruling does not preclude the court from readdressing the issue — with more than six justices participating — sometime in the future.

In other action, the court: — Left intact, a ruling that jury selection in the perjury trial of former presidential aide Michael K. Deaver must be conducted in public. Coincidentally, jury selection in the trial began Monday.

— Agreed to consider reinstating key provisions of a North Carolina law regulating fund-raising activities for charities. The court will decide whether the provisions are too sweeping and violate free-speech rights of the charities and their contributors.

— Agreed to hear an appeal by a convicted killer in Georgia who was barred from alleging in federal court that prosecutors discriminated on the basis of race, gender and age in selecting grand juries and trial juries.

Vice President Bush, who said, "Nobody's thinking this will end it, but at some point they (Iranians) have to realize they have to pay a price."

Iran's U.N. ambassador, Said Rajate-Khorassani, condemned the attack, saying the United States "has opened an all-out war against my country." But several Arab states and numerous Western allies, including Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, applauded the strike.

White House officials said Reagan had insisted upon retaliation but wanted a response that could be taken "without putting our people at risk." A White House official said, "It was the president who was quite firm that Iran had not attacked a U.S. warship and our response should be something less than a major escalation of the conflict."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the attack was aimed at making "the important military and political point" that the Reagan administration intends to retaliate against Iranian actions that endanger the U.S. policy of escorting Kuwait tankers through the Persian Gulf.

"It was the least provocative military response open to us," a senior official said. U.S. officials emphasized that the attack was conducted in international waters, avoiding the Iranian mainland, and was designed to keep casualties to a minimum.

Reagan decided to retaliate within hours after an Iranian missile struck the Sea Isle City, a Kuwaiti tanker flying the U.S. flag, last Friday. But the choice of targets took many hours of meetings by subordinates culminating in a presidential decision on Saturday afternoon, officials said.

White House officials said Reagan agreed at this Friday meeting that a retaliatory operation should be conducted but asked senior officials to report to him the following day with a list of options.

payor's ability to borrow, said Larry Taylor, IPC's spokesman. Borrowing ability is based on the company's credit rating.

Managers of IPC's $100 million pension fund anticipated the drop last week and took some actions to protect the fund, he said. The fund is invested in stocks and bonds.

Sturgill said he is telling his customers not to sell their stocks. The advice of financier Bernard Baruch that it is best to buy stocks when the streets run with blood stuck in some people's minds.

One woman came to Sturgill with $50,000 in cash. He advised her to wait until the dust settles from Monday's crash. Sturgill said this period would be a good one to buy blue chip stocks.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average lost 36 percent of its value while blue chip stocks were down 14 percent and growth stocks dropped half that amount, he said.

"Sturgill sees the number one culprit in the crash as the government's inability to do anything about the deficit. Interest rates are being pushed up because the government has to finance it. Other factors are a proposed $11 to $12 billion tax increase and the tension with Iran in the Persian Gulf. And all this is going on despite four strong economic quarters. The underlying economy is strong, Sturgill said.

Higher interest rates are the last thing the local farmer needs. This can only add to the agricultural depression the area has been experiencing the last four to five years, he said. Higher interest rates also hurt local retailing, home sales and the automobile market, he said.

Fred Nelson, vice president of Sinclair & Co., mentioned margin calls and people switching from mutual funds to money market accounts as factors in the crash. He agreed with Sturgill that concerns about inflation and deficits, both the trade and budget ones, are culprits.

"It's just a nervous market," Nelson said.

plaintiff someone else in a disreputable situation," said Board Chairman Calvin Lamborn.

Snow outlined the need for discipline which the board acknowledged. He said the district will take the same action again if necessary.

"It would be one thing leading to another," Snow said. "The first time you don't have effective discipline, then it leads to other problems."

Lamborn echoed Snow's concerns about disruption at the school — if not for actions in classrooms, then for disruption by disregarding the three administrators' authority.

"(School administrators) decided it was disrespectful and told him (Gano) and he disobeyed them," Lamborn said.

District policy states, "Students should be free to dress or appear as they please as long as it does not jeopardize the health and safety of themselves or others, or disrupt the educational process."

Gano furnished the design sometime during September to raise money for a senior event outside school. He said high school administrators vetoed the design and he agreed not to sell it for that senior project.

He said student interest was piqued when four students wore trial sweatshirts bearing the design.

"There were a lot of kids who wanted them after that," Gano said. So he ordered 300 blank shirts. But he said Monday he hadn't yet decided at that point which design from several possibilities he intended to sell.

Anyway, while wearing a shirt Oct. 5 that bore the design in question — before the blanks arrived — Gano said he was suspended for up to five days after an interview with Charlton, Thomas and Baum. Gano stayed out that Monday and Tuesday and returned to school Wednesday after Hollifield first wrote to Benoit.

"As I understand the facts there was no disruption of classes or interference with the school," wrote Hollifield, citing two federal precedents to defend Gano's right to wear the shirt. Gano characterized the suspension as in "flagrant" contradiction with federal code.

Gano said the suspension persuaded him to sell the offending design.

Then later the week of the suspension, between a dozen and 15 of his friends wore the shirts, in part for advertising. But all were sent home to change.

"It was just more that I just wanted to get them a T-shirt because they wanted them," Gano said. "We were just hoping it would go over as a fun idea."

Hollifield wrote another letter Oct. 14 to Benoit, with a copy to Charlton, warning that Gano would wear the shirt again and that any further reprimand or suspension would be answered with a lawsuit.

"The caricature is protected speech," Hollifield wrote. "It has caused no disruption in the classrooms or eminent (sic) danger of violence in the school."

Gano was sent home again while wearing the shirt Oct. 15.

Hollifield characterized the reprisal in the suit as another suspension. But district officials said he was merely told to change shirts again.

In any event, Gano stayed home Thursday and Friday. Hollifield filed the federal suit Friday afternoon asking for a restraining order allowing Gano to return to school and prevent school officials from interfering with Gano's attendance while wearing the shirt.

Also requested is $500,000 in special and general damages, $500,000 in punitive damages, attorney fees and costs.

Defendants in the suit are the district, its board of trustees, Snow and the three school administrators.

Gano returned to school Monday and plans not to wear the shirt again while awaiting the court's decision.

Meanwhile, he padded the cardboard boxes in his home that hold 300 printed shirts. He said sales at $12 each are on hold until it's determined whether students can wear the shirts in school.

A hearing for the suit has been set Oct. 30 in U.S. District Court in Boise.

Today's weather

Veteran senator finishes last term

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Sen. John C. Stennis, the longest-serving member of the current U.S. Senate, announced today he will not seek re-election next year to the seat he has held since 1947.

Stennis, 86, president pro tempore of the Senate and chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said another term would keep him on the job until he was 93.

"Common sense dictates that I cannot be confident of being physically able to continue to give my best effort through another six years," the Mississippi Democrat said through his Jackson office. "My doctors confirm my judgment."

Stennis' announcement came as he underwent "a surgical procedure to correct a prostatic gland problem" at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C.

A statement from the hospital described the operation as "a relatively common procedure to relieve a partial obstruction of his bladder." It said "there was no evidence of cancer" and Stennis was expected to be discharged in a few days.

A spokesman for Stennis said the senator was "resting comfortably."

"I greatly regret leaving the Senate, where it is my high privilege to represent the people of Mississippi, whom I deeply love and respect, but age and health control," Stennis said. "My heart says yes, run again, but my best judgment says no."

Stennis said he would serve the remainder of his current term, which ends in January 1989.

Stennis, who as Senate president pro tempore is third in line to the presidency, had reported during the summer that he had not made up his mind about a re-election race.

His decision will leave him just eight months short of the Senate's 100th anniversary, which would be to serve until Sept. 18, 1989, to break the service record of 41 years, 10 months and 12 days set by Carl Hayden, D-Ariz.,

JOHN C. STENNIS

who retired from the Senate in 1969.

Stennis' announcement marks the second time this year that a veteran Senate Democrat has decided not to seek re-election. Sen. William Proxmire of Wisconsin recently announced that he would not pursue another term.

Stennis has been confined to a wheelchair since he lost his left leg to cancer in 1984. He has held the respect of colleagues through eight presidential administrations and has easily ousted those who would have ousted him.

He won re-election in 1982 by defeating well-financed Republican challenger Haley Barbour, his first serious challenger since the former judge, lawyer and state legislator was first elected to succeed the controversial Theo G. Bilbo.

His reputation for honesty led fellow senators to select him to draw up a code of ethics for the chamber in the mid 1960s.

In his announcement, Stennis said he planned "to continue to make my home in Mississippi, as useful as I can in helping our state and our people."

House Minority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., widely expected to run for the Senate seat being vacated by Stennis, praised the veteran lawmaker as "a fighter for Mississippi and the nation."

Senate approves new budget package

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Agriculture Committee approved Monday a $1.3 billion package of budget savings which lawmakers said was unlikely to cut into the income of the nation's farmers.

"I believe that we must do all that we can to achieve the savings without reducing the income of hard-pressed farmers throughout America," Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., said following approval on a voice vote.

The committee was under pressure to come up with a savings package to avoid broader, automatic cuts that otherwise would go into effect under the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law.

Among other things, the measure would delay a reduction in dairy price supports, require special labels for pizzas that make heavy use of cheese substitutes and make a wide array of other changes in farm policy.

It relies most heavily, however, on a so-called triggered acreage reduction program for corn and wheat producers.

In contrast, a House version fashioned last week takes as its centerpiece limits on the amount of deficiency payments representing the difference between congressionally set trigger prices and price support levels.

The Senate plan would empower the agriculture secretary to require corn and wheat producers participating in federal farm programs to set aside additional acreage as a way of reducing government payments and thus save more than $1.2 billion in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

Lawmakers expressed doubt, however, that producers would actually be called upon to idle additional acreage. They said the trigger levels of crops in storage that would set the acreage reduction plan in motion most likely would not be reached in fiscal 1988 and the two years thereafter.

The acreage reduction program would be triggered for corn if stocks reached 6 billion bushels and for wheat if stock reached 1.9 billion bushels.

Farm budget savings required under the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law are based on the estimate that 6 billion bushels of corn and 1.9 billion bushels of wheat would be placed in storage at taxpayer expense this year. But current estimates are well below those levels.

Dairy provisions of the plan would allow the secretary to reduce price supports by 20 cents from their current level of $1.10 per hundred pounds on Jan. 1 and possibly by a further 25 cents on July 1 if in both cases purchases are projected to be above 5 billion pounds as expected.

FDA allows new test developed for AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration has cleared the way for new clinical trials of ribavirin, a drug whose developer believes will help delay the onset of AIDS in people infected with the virus that causes the disease.

The permission, made public Monday, allows testing of the drug in a clinical setting on 32 patients with lowered white blood cell counts or AIDS-Related Complex.

Approval for the new, if limited tests, is the first action on the drug since ICN Pharmaceuticals, Inc., of Costa Mesa, Calif., called a news conference last January to announce that just-completed clinical trials had shown the drug to be effective in preventing progression to full-blown AIDS.

That press conference, conducted over FDA suggestions to hold off on a public announcement pending more time to assess the results, came just four days after the company had presented its preliminary test data to the FDA.

ICN subsequently was denied permission to distribute the drug on a wider basis under a treatment investigational new drug protocol, a procedure by which promising drugs for life-threatening diseases such as AIDS can be made available on a compassionate basis before their safety and effectiveness has been fully assessed by the FDA.

Falling that, the company sought permission for additional clinical trials a few months ago. However, even that more narrow application was denied until the company provided more detailed information on its earlier tests and a "clinical hold" on ribavirin was lifted last week.

"We've been in negotiations with the FDA since March of April on how to do more clinical trials," FDA spokesman Chris Smith said Monday in a telephone interview.

During congressional hearings in May, Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Or., accused Viratec, Inc., the ICN subsidiary that handles ribavirin, of trying to "hot wire" the regulatory system by bringing public pressure on the FDA to approve the drug for wider distribution before it was fully tested.

Representatives of the company have denied any wrongdoing and have said it was difficult to arrange clinical trials because wide publicity about its potential effectiveness made it difficult to get patients to participate in blind studies where some would get only a placebo rather than ribavirin.

Reagan wins bipartisan support in gulf conflict

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Despite growing fears in Congress that the United States is heading into war with Iran, Democrats as well as Republicans praised President Reagan Monday for retaliating against Iran for its attack on a U.S. flag tanker.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., described the assault on an Iranian oil platform in the Persian Gulf as "minimal and appropriate," two words that were repeated frequently throughout the day by other members of Congress.

The only vocal congressional critic of the attack was House

Armed Services Committee Chairman Les Aspin, D-Wis., who called it "probably too mild." Aspin said that Reagan should have struck "a more significant target and we should have done it in association with other countries."

At the same time, Democrats made it clear that they are still skeptical about Reagan's original decision last July to provide U.S. Navy escorts to reflagged Kuwaiti oil tankers and where that policy might be leading.

"I am also concerned that we may be backing into war with Iran," Byrd added. "We do not want to drive Iran into the arms of the Soviets."

Echoing Byrd's view, Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., added: "It is another escalation of hostilities and will not be the last. The administration may consider the matter closed; but Iran will not. As long as we continue our present policy, we should be prepared for more escalation of hostilities."

Nevertheless, Democrats appeared divided over whether Reagan should comply with the 1973 War Powers Resolution. Byrd said that the War Powers Resolution applies in this situation, but House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, expressed no opinion.

"I'm not going to get into a quarrel about that today," said Wright, who indicated that he was trying to avoid a battle between Reagan and Congress that would send the wrong signal to Iran. He added: "I'm not going to be the one who gives to the world a demonstration of a country divided by partisan politics."

Under the War Powers Resolution, which Reagan contends is unconstitutional, a president must report to Congress within 48 hours after U.S. troops face "imminent hostilities." Troops then must be withdrawn within 90 days unless Congress votes otherwise.

Record lottery ticket drawn

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — A man and a woman who bought a lottery ticket together claimed the national record $46 million Super 7 jackpot today, Pennsylvania Lottery officials said.

The winners were Donald Woomer Sr., 55, and Linda Despot, 37, both from Blair County, said lottery official George Anderson.

Shortly after 11 a.m., Woomer and Ms. Despot were escorted from the lottery's headquarters to a stretch limousine for a short drive to a nearby hotel, where a 2 p.m. news conference was scheduled.

Woomer held his thumb in the air and displayed a small Super 7 logo. He said the winning numbers had been picked at random and according to birthdays.

SAVE YOUR NEWSPAPERS, ALUMINUM CANS AND GLASS BECAUSE SUPPORTING YOUR SCHOOLS MAKES . . .

As part of Twin Falls Bank & Trust's Lending Hand program, American Recycling and the Bank & Trust would like your support with their new recycling project. Community contributions benefit nine major school districts in Twin Falls and Jerome counties.

All you have to do is save your newspapers, aluminum cans and glass bottles because a student from your local school district may be dropping by in the very near future to pick up any goods you might have that can be recycled. Students will turn in the goods you give them and their school districts will receive the proceeds from the American Recycling centers for necessary school equipment and student projects. If, for some reason, a student does not come by your home or business, just drop your newspapers, aluminum cans or glass off at the nearest American Recycling center. Another alternative is to use the blue (aluminum) or yellow (newsprint) Kiwanis bins located throughout the valley. In doing so, Kiwanis will turn your recycled goods into funds that can help our community.

Wages would attract Western work force

Western growers have sounded unnecessary alarms over labor shortages since the Immigration Reform Act went into force last May. These farmers' time would be better spent if they paid more attention to meeting basic standards of pay, housing and working conditions for the employees.

Throughout the summer, for example, Western growers complained that the new law was drying up the supply of migrant farm workers. In June, growers in Washington and Oregon panicked as their abundant crops of strawberries, cherries and asparagus-ripened weeks early, and the normal supply of migrant farm workers was not to be found. Within weeks, however, enough workers arrived and the crops were harvested without serious loss.

Growers, especially those in the West who are heavily dependent on illegal laborers, have already been granted several concessions under the new immigration law. Although non-agricultural employers are subject to severe penalties if they hire illegal workers, the agricultural industry is exempt from the law's sanctions until Dec. 1, 1988.

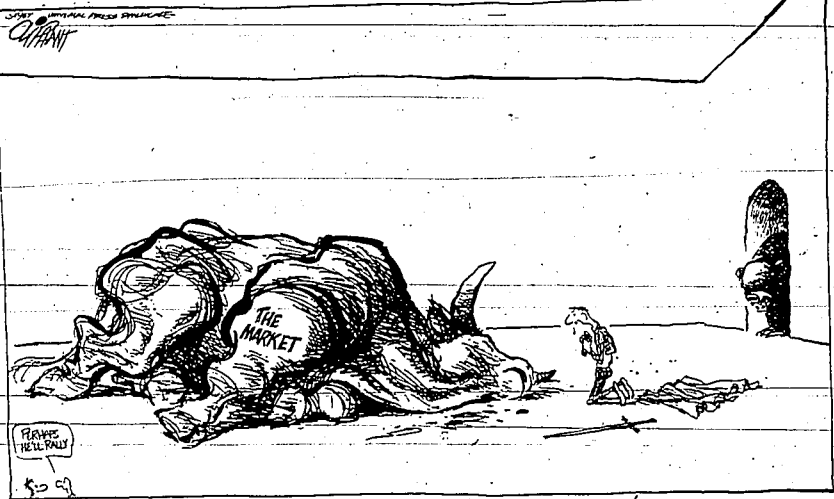

In addition, amnesty requirements are less restrictive for illegal seasonal farm workers than for their non-agricultural counterparts. Seasonal perishable-crop workers need prove only that they have worked in the United States for at least 90 days between May 1, 1985, and May 1, 1986, while all other illegal aliens must prove, with few exceptions, that they have been continuously in the United States since before Jan. 1, 1982. But even with these relaxed restrictions fewer than 60,000 field workers have applied for amnesty so far — again causing growers to question the adequacy of the farm labor pool.

Unfortunately, this debate has obscured the essential issue — fair wages and benefits. For more than 40 years Eastern growers have imported seasonal crop workers through a government alien-worker program — the same program that would import Chinese farm workers.

Under its regulations, farmers who have a verifiable labor shortage may hire foreign seasonal crop workers, but the employer appropriately must provide the worker with fair wages, temporary housing, transportation and tools. Historically, Western growers have refused to use this program, opting for less expensive illegal labor.

The solution to the underlying labor problem is simpler than Western growers would have us believe it is. All evidence suggests that fair wages and benefits would adequately guarantee a bountiful supply of workers.

All-male clubs issue is about privacy

Should men's clubs be required to admit women? The issue raises other significant issues, such as what privacy means and what are the rights of private groups.

New York City tried to deal with that question by defining a "distinctly private" club — one that would be legally permitted to exclude women, or any other category of persons. However, several of what are called "elite" men's clubs in the city can't meet the city's standard for privacy. They are testing the constitutionality of the law, in a Supreme Court. The law has been upheld by the state's highest court.

The city, of course, is not attacking the right of privacy, but rather arguing that a club that, for example, rents its facilities for strangers' parties is no longer private — no longer an extension of its members' own living rooms. The women who seek membership maintain that these clubs are really corners of the marketplace, and that some members' fees are paid by their employers on the theory that membership is good for business.

The challenges created by the changing role of women in our society are probably too large to grasp. I am not sure we will understand what has happened and the effects of what we have done for a generation, until we have the hindsight of history.

In general, though, Americans are on the right track. Women are in the work force for two reasons: One is their own or their families' need for their earnings. The other is society's need for their contributions — our health-care system, for instance, would collapse without women workers.

When I say Americans are on the right track, I mean that, however belatedly, unevenly, or unwillingly, we do recognize that all members of the work force ought to be treated fairly, and we are also realistic enough to see that both sexes as well as all races are in the work force to stay.

We are struggling forward together trying to offer equal opportunity in education, in vocational and professional training, in chances for jobs and promotions. These efforts are particularly difficult and complicated in the area of gender equality because the changing role of women affects primary relations — marriages and families — but there is no doubt in my mind that our society is committed to the goals of equality and inclusiveness.

We are bound to respect the claims of privacy where they can be justified. Imagine eight or 10 people who meet in each others' houses to read poetry. We would not think that any person or agency of government could tell this little club what poems to read, or order it to read poetry. Yet we know that in our era's assortment of deprivations — communist, fascist and other — such a little group might be forbidden, or spied upon, or have its readings prescribed.

The rights of privacy and freedom of association may be abused, but they remain precious. If the clubs' claim to be private is legally sustained, their members should be allowed to continue hiding from the 20th century. They are probably hurting themselves more than anyone they keep out.

A child's assessment

About the loudmouth car salesman: Of all the comments and reports I've read or heard in this regard, I like my 8-year-old grandson's assessment of this situation the best. Let me share it with you.

During the viewing of one of these loudmouth TV commercials, in response to the query of his 2-year-old sister, "That man is mad," my grandson replied, "No, he's just mad and he's hollering at everybody cause nobody wants to buy his cars."

This made my day.

Car ads are mistake

I wish to commend you for letting the public know what the sentiment is for these screaming car salesmen.

It is not meant in any way to personally charge them individually, but that they have a great many outsiders feel about this kind of advertising.

There have been a good number of senior citizens as well as others who say it is obnoxious and distracting to other programs they are trying to watch. Therefore, it is not building good public relations in Twin Falls or outside of Twin Falls.

Auto ads supported

Recently, while visiting in Twin Falls, several letters to the editor were critical of a particular television commercial. Like many people, I seldom notice the commercials that interrupt my preferred television program.

Curiosity, aroused by the letters, caused me to watch various commercials that were being presented on local television. I found the Latham Motors commercial to be no worse than other commercials that were being presented. The humor of the commercial, joined with the attention caused by the critical letters, resulted in a memorable, therefore, successful television commercial. Even I remember the name of the firm that was advertising.

Large amounts of money are spent for advertising by business firms that wish they could be "so lucky." Congratulations to Latham Motors.

Letters/Liberals, abortion get reader attention

Conservatism defended

For anyone with a high I.Q., Robert B. Rieche's article, "What Democrats should stand for," almost indecently exposes the frailties of the liberal cause. I love how this delightful specimen of leftist propaganda is a thriving testimony that the term "liberal philosophy" is about as accurate as "chiropractic science."

Although I must confess my whole being was nothing less than enlightened with this indoctrinated article, what I savored most was the over-all tone of big brother balldoo. It wasn't so much that Mr. Rieche, obviously the Walter Lippmann of our time, blatantly advertised total bureaucratic expansion rather, what lends to his contemporaries go about such a task.

Take heart, conservatives. Realize that liberals put on this act because they can't feel meaningful or alive unless they're in pain. If they don't have a dead mother to commemorate, they'll adopt some murdered Nicaraguan peasant.

Good intentions, no doubt, just a little too short-sighted.

In fact, analyzing these benefits in a long-term perspective, socialism has about as much value to the "average American" (the Democrats' indispensable target) as does his neighbor's toothbrush.

However, the common layman cannot seem to grasp this concept, and this is indeed and infinet the very thing that worries me.

Not to pose as a John Birchler, I'm not. But it seems as though a few of us have chosen to ignore our history lessons, either that or they have slipped our memories.

Would anyone care to reminisce and recall the fundamental fact that the proper role of the government is to protect equal rights, not provide equal things? My year oblivion be further cured if I conjure up the moral from "Tom Smith and the incredible bread machine," which practically shouts at us that economic controls are the malignant cancer of state power? How about a quote that states rather clearly what the Founding Fathers thought of "redistributing the wealth" (just for the record, Mr. Rieche did use those exact words). "The utopian schemes of leveling (re-distribution of the wealth), and a community of goods are as visionary and impracticable as those which vest all property in the Crown."

(These ideas) are arbitrary, despotic, and, in our government, unconstitutional. Samuel Adams the natural human impulse, as they say in the boards, "to cut the deal."

Lives being snuffed out

It is interesting but hardly surprising to find that the "permissive" abortion going on in our country began with a lie. I am referring to the recent admission by Norma McCorvey who used the name Jane Roe in the lawsuit that led to the 1973 Roe v. Wade Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion on demand.

In her original lawsuit she claimed to be the victim of a gang rape. But now she has admitted to columnist Carl Rowan that the story was a complete fabrication designed to bolster her claim that anti-abortion laws were unjust. Obviously she is not very repentant. Still today she is an abortion rights activist.

Over 20 million infants have been killed in the womb since 1973. Taking innocent life by abortion is murder and stopping this carnage is a most basic function of government.

Life begins at conception and the Supreme Court completely avoided, in a very dignified way, any decision of this scientific-sounding principle. There is no justification for abortion other than convenience, which is not acceptable justification in a civilized society.

When fraud is admitted, restitution is proper, but how does one go about restoring 20 million infant lives that have been snuffed out?

Put Arps with comics

Timing is everything. On the very day the Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to Costa Rican President Arias for his Central American peace plan, the Adrian Arps told us in their daily letter that the plan "will in our view stop the spread of Communism."

I would suggest to The Times-News editors that they consider moving the Arps' comments to the comics page. They're a riot!

Policy is sensible

Referring to letter written by Sandy Crosby, Filet, concerning JBA not allowing her and family in because their 12-month-old child had no shoes on.

I realize how upset the Crosby's may have been, but by the same token she should take into consideration other people who are in the restaurant plus the fact if one is allowed to do it, then it will become out of control.

As the manager, Kevin Doney, said, it is for the health of everyone that they abide by rules and regulations. Perhaps some people don't pay attention to bare feet in children that age, but there are many who cannot handle it because their immune systems are low or it just is not very appetizing to sit next to such a situation.

In days gone by, parents would not have done such a thing and I am glad to see that at least one restaurant is taking a stand on this type situation. I do not eat out very much simply because the restaurants are so remiss in following the rules and regulations set up by the health rules.

Also, referring to the letter by Victor Cantu concerning Dave Campo, the great advertiser for Latham Motors. I read where he was here during the golf tournament and he was very much a gentleman and a quite spoken person. I then wondered if he would follow this type profile in his ads if he wouldn't get just as much from his ads for Latham Motors and be the "loud-mouth" he is. I still agree with most of the writers to the forum that a less booming voice and a quietly presented advertisement wouldn't get more attention of the viewing public.

Jerome election coming

Citizens of Jerome, we have a city council election on Nov. 3, 1987. To vote in this election you need to register to vote by Oct. 30 at City Hall.

If you enjoy paying astronomical water, sewer, sprinkling and sanitation bills, don't register to vote.

Every two years city residents have the opportunity to let the council members know whether they approve or disapprove of their voting records. The city council members are the people who set the rates you pay on your water, sewer, sprinkling and sanitation bills.

It only takes a few minutes to register and vote. You have the opportunity on Nov. 3 to let the council know how you feel about the rate increases.

Gore warns about liberals

CARROLL, Iowa (AP) — Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. is following a high-risk strategy in Iowa, lecturing liberal Democrats that their influence on the presidential nominating process is too heavy and could cost the party a shot at the White House.

His is an unusual stand to take in a state where presidential candidates generally pay homage to party activists who will play a major role in the Feb. 8 caucuses. It is also a reflection of Gore's understanding that his conservative politics may not appeal to Iowa liberals but they're a winner in his native South.

"We need a nominee and a message capable of reaching beyond the hard-core activists who are the heart and soul of our party," he said. "The real battleground is in the minds of the independent voters who are weighing the message of both parties. The Republicans have been getting them in big double handfuls."

During a weekend campaign swing through the state which holds the nation's first test of Democratic presidential strength, Gore made it clear he doesn't need to win in Iowa but can bid his time until March 8, the "Super Tuesday" of Southern primaries and caucuses.

Gore criticized activists who pick candidates "on who can do the prettiest swan dive through all the hoops we're asked to jump through."

"Let's be honest, the process itself has become part of the problem," Gore said. "We can concentrate on the process, the litmus tests and the hoops and then pretend to scramble back to the center, or we can choose a new path."

Some activists argue that Gore can only gain in early states like Iowa, because so little is expected of him. The latest poll here showed him favored by only 2 percent of Democrats questioned.

On the other hand, a report filed by the Atlanta Journal and Constitution showed Gore running second only to Jesse Jackson in the South, with 13 percent support to Jackson's 27 percent.

Meanwhile, Gore has quietly assembled an Iowa staff of about two dozen organizers that, while smaller than some other campaigns, could allow him a respectable finish.

During his campaign swing, Gore staked out tough stands on the Persian Gulf, defending the U.S. presence there, and also on the Nicaraguan Contras, backing $3 million in humanitarian aid for the rebels and taunting the other Democrats for refusing to do likewise.

California bottle bill starts slowly

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — California's "bottle bill," which proponents depicted as a model to be followed across the country to promote recycling, is off to a slow start.

Two weeks after pony refunds became available for nearly every beer and soft drink container sold in the state, critics say they were right in calling the program unworkable.

Only 495 of the 2,000 to 2,700 recycling centers provided for under the California Beverage Container Recycling and Litter Reduction Act were open for business by Oct. 13, according to a survey by the state agency established to oversee the program.

State officials, beverage industry proponents and some recyclers say the program is intended to be phased in over three months, and is coming along according to plan.

Californians open 10 billion to 12 billion beverage containers every year, the most of any state, and recycling companies must hire people, buy machines, and rent space from sometimes reluctant shopping center landlords, grocers say.

"People have to understand, we just couldn't go 'boom' and have 2,700 locations in operation in one day," said Don Beaver, president of the California Grocers Association.

"We're still nervous," said Kelly Smith, recycling director for Californians Against Waste, a civic group that drafted the compromise legislation. "Until we see a lot more of the (recycling) centers opened up, we're going to be nervous."

Establishing recycling centers is central to the law, which is unlike bottle bills pioneered by Oregon in 1972 and since passed by eight other states — Vermont, Maine, Michigan, Iowa, Delaware, Connecticut, Massachusetts and

New York.

Those states established 5-cent or 10-cent deposits on containers and required vendors who sell bottled and canned beverages to take back the empties.

Instead, all states with more than $2 million in annual grocery sales must ensure there's a state-certified recycling center open at least 30 hours a week within a half mile of their business. Fines of $100 a day begin Jan. 1 for non-complying stores.

Promises diminish for windpower

LIVINGSTON, Mont. (AP) — A decade ago, some predicted this town, where winds sometimes rip across the flats at 70 mph, was on the verge of becoming the nation's wind-energy capital.

Today, after a series of failed or fudged wind-tapping experiments and a parade of entrepreneurs who promised but didn't deliver, the south-central Montana town's romance with its invisible resource has cooled.

The 220-acre "wind farm," a stretch of land above the community of 7,000 where most of the windmills were placed, has turned into a final resting place for machines that couldn't handle the area's strongest winds and were left a twisted mass of broken propellers and torn metal shards.

But technical difficulties are only part of the problem. There also are economic realities, including the elimination of federal tax credits for wind-energy investments, and utility buy-back rates that are too low to entice investors.

"Wind energy was oversold," Gordon Brittan, a rancher and a longtime wind-energy supporter, said recently. "Well-intentioned people ... got on the bandwagon. For a variety of reasons, it didn't come to pass."

There's a big change from the late 1970s and early '80s, when tax incentives and the crash programs to encourage alternative energy sources led to wildly optimistic visions for the future of wind energy.

Montana Power Co. and a Butte-based research organization set up an experimental wind turbine in Livingston.

A Massachusetts firm started buying "wind easements" from ranchers and promised to invest $180 million in a wind-harnessing project. The company painted an awesome picture: 1,800 wind turbines set up over 5,000 acres, each with three, 28-foot blades mounted on a 65-foot tower.

The state awarded its largest-ever alternative energy renewable energy grant, $222,000, to Livingston for four, 25-kilowatt wind-powered generators. The town also inherited Montana Power's machine.

In 1982, a Michigan financial counseling firm proposed building 7,000 windmills and selling shares in them as tax shelters. Again, there were promises of an economic boom for Livingston. The company predicted an $18 million investment with 30 percent of that spent in Livingston.

But by this time, mechanical failures were taking their toll. Developers found their machines couldn't take the area's bearing cold and fierce winds. And potential investors disappeared when federal tax credits for wind-energy investments ended Jan. 1, 1986.

NBC union ends strike

NEW YORK (AP) — A 17-week strike by 2,800 NBC camera operators, video technicians and editors collapsed today when a majority of the union members voted to accept the network's offer, despite weaker job security and the planned layoff of about 200 workers.

"All the units voted to accept the contract offer," said John Krieger, top spokesman for the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, "except the couriers and technicians, except the couriers and technicians in the Chicago and the building maintenance workers in Los Angeles."

There are 26 members in each of the units that voted against the contract, and about 18 voted in each city.

The union's bylaws require that all 14 units ratify a contract before it becomes effective. It was not immediately clear whether these two groups would prevent the rest of the strikers from going back to work.

"These are the only two that are holding up total ratification," Krieger said.

"They haven't told us what they are going to do," said NBC spokeswoman McClain Ramey. "Obviously we hope that these two groups of people within the NABET ranks will not keep everyone from coming back to work; it is not our intention to make any further changes in any contracts."

What's what

RELUCTANT HUSBANDS

How do you account for the fact that men get hicups more often than women do?

A researcher claims studies prove four out of five appointments to see marriage counselors are made by men. Do you know anything to confirm that finding? Our Love and War man wants further proof.

Everything in his files suggests the husband tends to be the more reluctant to lay it all out in front of a third party.

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You will be quite pleasing to your fellow workers this morning. Later in the day, however, you should avoid arguments and unfamiliar situations at all costs, or you'll definitely regret it later on.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Don't be forceful in trying to get your views across to others. A reasonable and diplomatic attitude could work well for you.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be cautious in any movement today, or you'll cause some damage. Be more

Q. Exactly what is an "artifact," anyway?

A. Any object made by man for man's own use. "Man," incidentally, is the generic man meaning all men and all women. If you try to make the gender distinction every time you use the generic "man," you'll write something that sounds like the language of the law, oftentimes clumsy, pompous or a bit silly. It's enough to know that man's first cooking utensil, the ladle, was probably created by a woman.

ASSAULT CONVICTIONS

Q. What are the chances a rapist in this country will get caught and convicted?

A. One in 600.

Q. You know where Edmond Rostand sat while he wrote "Cyrano de Bergerac"? In a bathtub.

So you thought the siesta was strictly a Hispanic tradition? Clearly not. The Chinese Communist Constitution mandates the right of everybody in the regime to take a "two-hour break" each afternoon.

Reports a client: "I was told my hot fudge should be ready when I can write my name in the surface with a spoon and it doesn't disappear before I finish writing, but this formula just doesn't seem to work. (Signed) Alexandria Freeman-Martindale."

What glady men prize most are certain books, radios or TV sets. What older women prize most are photographs. That, according to the survey-takers.

Daily Horoscope

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Don't be extravagant in any way today, and be sure you understand the consequences before taking any financial action.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Plan a recreation for later, but remember that it needn't cost much. Be more understanding with your mate, and don't argue.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Work on improving the appearance of your home and your mood will improve. Have guests in and enjoy quiet conversation.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Make a concerted effort not to annoy anyone today. Contact some good friends and arrange an amusement for later tonight.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): You would be wise to keep your mouth shut today, as arguments will come easily. But they will not be so easy to resolve later.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Be careful not to over spend or over exercise today. Clarify your wishes to others, and you'll have a much easier time gaining them.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): This is a good time to get into new civic matters which have interested you. Take it easy and enjoy your family this evening.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You can be quite successful in putting new ideas into motion today. Don't work overtime tonight, go home and get some rest.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Come to a better understanding with a business associate. This is a good time to clarify agreements or make binding contracts.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be very popular when young and will have a great desire to learn and get ahead in life, but will have to learn to be more cooperative with others when adulthood is reached. Generosity will have to be learned, as it is not an integral part of the character.

Baryshnikov says classical dance career winding down

NEW YORK (AP) — Mikhail Baryshnikov says his career as a classical dancer is drawing to a close as he approaches 40. "But at the same time, you know, life is getting more interesting in a way. I do much less stupidity," Baryshnikov said in an interview with Cosmopolitan magazine, released Sunday. "I gave up smoking three years ago. I don't drink any more either. I talk to my dog more and more."

Turning 40 in January "sounds so horrible," Baryshnikov said. But while age is limiting his ability to dance classical ballet and has made him more prone to injuries, "It's a journal, it's life," he said. "Listen, maybe inside my stomach turns sometimes upside down, but I wouldn't tell you," he said.

Mr. Mister provides concert for policeman

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — A benefit concert by the rock group Mr. Mister raised about $8,000 to establish a college scholarship in the name of a Tempe police officer who died in the line of duty last month.

Lt. John Bradshaw, 45, was shot and killed Sept. 20 while involved in a freeway chase with an armed man on a motorcycle. He was the first officer to die in the line of duty in the 100-year history of the Tempe Police Department.

About 550 people paid $15 apiece to see Mr. Mister perform a 14-song, 86-minute show Sunday at the new Tempe Hayden Square amphitheater with the proceeds establishing an ongoing scholarship fund at Arizona State University's School of Criminal Justice.

"Something has to be done to curb the violence in this country," said bassist and lead singer Richard Page. "That kind of violence is gut-wrenching to all of us and it's really wrong. We're doing what we can and we all have to take some responsibility. We got turned into violence in this country around."

Ed Asner speaks out for organized unions

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (AP) — Ed Asner, former two-term president of the Screen Actors Guild, said organized labor is rising in status "from the ashes of the Reagan administration."

Asner, who was best known as television's Lou Grant and now the star of "The Bronx Zoo," received the Eugene V. Debs Award on Saturday from the Eugene V. Debs Foundation in Terre Haute. The annual award was presented to him for his public service work.

An outspoken critic of U.S. foreign policy, Asner also appeared at a news conference in Indianapolis, where he called upon President Reagan to cut off U.S. aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. He was joined by Lynn G. Cutler, vice chairman of the Democratic National Party, and Jack Wickes, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate seat held by Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind.

Jackson winds up tour; gives to charity sale

TOKYO (AP) — Pop idol Michael Jackson wound up a month-long concert tour in Japan on Monday by donating for a charity auction a number of personal items, including T-shirts, a windbreaker and glasses he wore during concerts.

"Michael Jackson gave us a total of 30 personalized items, some of which will be sent to us from the United States," said Tamaki Obana, secretary general of the Japan Federation of UNESCO Associations.

The items will be sold Oct. 30 in Tokyo at an auction to raise funds to educate children in Third World countries, she said. Sales of Jackson's personal items have raised thousands of dollars for charities in the United States.

Welty bestowed honor for literary contributions

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Jean Charpentier, cultural attache to the French Consulate at New Orleans, has bestowed a knighthood on Mississippi author Eudora Welty for her contributions to literature.

Charpentier named her Chevalier Eudora Welty as nearly 300 people watched Sunday in the Old Capitol Museum. He told her, "The citizens of Mississippi ... and of France, we are very proud of what you do."

After kissing each of her cheeks, he pinned the Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et Lettres medal to her dress.

Miss Welty told him, "My debt to your country, sir, has been deep before now. France has been to me what she has been to many another lover of literature and human letters, to many another writer the world over.

"I, too, have found the work of Voltaire, Flaubert, Proust and others a source of illumination to the mind, wisdom for the heart and nourishment for the human spirit."

Turner slows big spender tough image

ATLANTA (AP) — Ted Turner, the outspoken entrepreneur once labeled "Mouth of the South" has lowered his voice.

He has given up America's Cup sailing to steer his three 24-hour cable stations into the mainstream of television.

He skips games by his Atlanta Braves baseball club and Hawks basketball team to attend business meetings around the world, a sharp contrast to the days when he coached from the dugout, substituted as a bat boy and led cheers.

But his Cable News Network no longer fights for credentials to cover the president. And he owns a library of 3,650 films such as "Casablanca" and "The Wizard of Oz," many of them being "colorized" despite objections from Hollywood stars.

"It was a lot of fun and very exciting but I guess it was time to grow up," Turner said in a recent interview, breaking a long silence before the news media.

Robert Edward Turner III, a Cincinnati native who turns 49 years old next month, and the television empire he launched 17 years ago have matured and changed.

The Turner Broadcasting System chairman and president dismisses the differences, saying, "People change."

Turner entered the broadcast industry in 1970, when he bought a money-losing Atlanta TV station that in six years became "SuperStation" WTBS with a signal beamed to cable systems nationwide.

He entered business at age 24, when he inherited a debt-ridden, Savannah-based billboard company after his father committed suicide. Turner, who attended military schools and studied classics at Brown University, made the company profitable and eventually sold it.

Turner once held 80 percent of TBS common stock, but his stake fell to just over 50 percent when he sold shares to recover from debts caused by a $1.5 billion purchase of MGM Entertainment Co.

Some industry analysts believe the move cost the multimillionaire his freedom to make bold management decisions.

Doctors operate on Jessica's foot

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) — Doctors today operated again on toddler Jessica McClure's injured right foot to cut off some dead tissue and said her toes continue to show improvement.

But they said they don't know yet whether they'll be able to save 18-month-old girl's foot, damaged when she was trapped in a well for 2½ days.

Doctors performed about one hour of exploratory surgery shortly after 10 a.m. today to examine Jessica's foot and determine further treatment. They changed dressings, looked at the foot and excised some dead tissue, said Ray Branson, president of Midland Memorial Hospital.

"The toes continue to show improvement," he said. Doctors also hoped to later perform plastic surgery on her forehead to remove a section of dead skin and prepare for covering the spot with adjacent skin.

"I don't want anybody to think that she's out of the woods as regards her foot, because she's not," Dr. Charles Younger, an orthopedic surgeon, said Sunday, adding that Jessica's condition improved. The pediatrician handling Jessica's case said today that doctors expected to decide by the end of the week whether the right foot has to be amputated.

"The orthopedist and general surgeon tell us that it's a day-by-day decision," Dr. Debbie Reese said in an interview on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

Ms. Reese praised the way the little girl is handling her condition.

"She's only 18 months old so she verbalizes some, but she can't really speak to us in full sentences or anything. She is naturally a little bit frightened, but she's become very vigorous and you can tell that she's a fighter," she said.

On Sunday, Vice President George Bush, who was in Texas for campaign appearances, stopped by Midland Memorial Hospital to visit Jessica's parents. The couple also received a phone call from President Reagan, who asked the McClures to give the tot "a big kiss."

Council sides with neighborhood on request

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The majority of Twin Falls City Council members sided with neighbors of the Little Acres Subdivision on Monday and rejected a request to rezone nearby property from agricultural to commercial.

Albert and Hazel Lewis and Roger Wagner requested the rezoning for their property, located 1/4 mile north of Kimberly Road on 3200 Road East.

The Lewises operate an automobile and truck repair garage, towing service and vehicle storage yard on their lot, which is 94-feet wide by 294-feet long.

Wagner's 30-foot wide piece of property is adjacent to the Lewis property. His entire property is split, with the 30 feet in the agriculture zone and the remainder in the adjacent commercial zone.

Lewis said he purchased the existing repair business four years ago. The rezone will allow him to continue. But several neighbors opposed the request.

Norman Skinner, who resides in the subdivision said he didn't mind the business when it was small, but Lewis had expanded and added the impound yard when he took over.

Kevin Skinner, another subdivision resident, said the city will have better control over commercial operations if the area remained agricultural because they would require special permits.

The Lewis property faces 3200 Road East, he added. If the commercial zone was extended, a trend would be started on the county road.

Realtor Gene Sharp, another subdivision resident, said the business "is depressing the value of our homes."

When neighbors complained about the cars on his property, Lewis said, "We're not running a wrecking yard. I have an impound yard."

A subdivision resident, Donna Skinner replied, "What's the difference between an impound and wrecking yard. They both look the same still an eyesore."

City Development Director Lamar Orton said the towing and impound yard will not be conforming even in commercial zones.

When the vote was taken, only Councilman Rick Carr voted in favor of the rezone and chose the individual above the neighbors.

Lewis' business was already restricted by the special-use permits, he said.

"You're taking a pound of flesh out of Mr. Lewis," he told the neighbors.

The victory of the neighbors may not be long lived. The Lewis' and Wagner have the right to appeal to the Impact Area Board.

Councilman Gale Kleinkopf added that the council should consider rezoning the entire strip of property that includes the Lewis and Wagner property to commercial. That would extend the now 660 foot commercial strip along Kimberly Road by another 120 feet, right up to Little Acres Subdivision.

Carr agreed the issue shouldn't be dropped. The 120-foot of agricultural zone between the subdivision and commercial zone was useless. No one is going to have an "120-foot farm," he said.

If the rezoning was approved, the Lewis and Wagner property would have made a small notch of commercial zoning within agricultural.

Kleinkopf said he wanted the Planning and Zoning Commission to make a recommendation on what to do with the strip of property.

Jury deliberates 4 hours

Twin Falls man found guilty

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — After nearly four hours of deliberation Monday afternoon, a 6th District Court jury found a 38-year-old Twin Falls man guilty of rape, second degree kidnapping, robbery and aggravated assault.

Marvin D. Hedger showed no emotion as the court clerk read the four guilty verdicts. The jury found him innocent of a fifth charge of burglary.

The guilty verdicts ended four days in court for Hedger, who took the stand Friday to deny that he had entered the victim's home late last June, raped her at knife point in her home and then forced her, still at knife point, to drive to Jackpot, Nev., and a nearby rest area where he told her he was going to kill her.

The woman, formerly married to the defendant, wopt with relief after the verdicts were read.

The trial began last Wednesday with selection of the jury and by Friday evening both the defense and prosecution had rested their cases.

District Judge Daniel Harbutt opened court Monday morning for jury instructions and final statements to the jury by the attorneys. He told the jurors they should return separate verdicts of guilty or innocent to each of the five felony charges.

The case went to the jury at 12:45 p.m. and the unanimous verdicts were returned at 4:55 p.m.

The five women and seven men on the jury were polled at the request of Defense Attorney Michael Wood and each reaffirmed the verdicts.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter said she felt very good about the verdicts.

"I have said before that this case could well be the Jaimi Charboneau case three months before Marilyn Arbaugh (victim of a Jerome County murder case) was killed, or it could be the Keith Rosenkrantz case a few months before his victims died," Baxter said after the verdicts were returned.

"Domestic violence is a serious matter and we do take it serious in this county," she added.

Baxter said while she felt good about the victory for the prosecution, she was not the "hero" of the case.

Baxter said, in the victim, who was willing to put herself through the past few months of investigation, testimony, tension and pressures in See GUILTY on Page B2

KBSU radio expands reception with Deer Point transmitter plans

By MICHELLE COLE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Idaho's State Board of Education is expected to let its approval today to a plan by KBSU to expand its public radio signals into the Magic Valley.

Jim Paluzzi, KBSU general manager, said the board will vote this afternoon to authorize the Boise State University radio station to apply for a permit from the Federal Communications Commission to build a repeater transmitter at the Jerome Butte.

"Since we are controlled by the board of education, we need their approval before going ahead," said Paluzzi. "Our application is ready to go."

It will be at least 13 months before Magic Valley listeners will be able to tune in the station's classical nearly 60,000 Magic Valley listeners.

music, jazz, progressive rock and news offerings. But Paluzzi said that within the next six months, the membership station will also install a new $200,000 transmitter station. "It could conceivably be assured station officials that once the Deer Point transmitter is in place, local cable users will be able to along."

receive KBSU through an FM cable hook-up.

Paluzzi said that he does not anticipate problems securing FCC approval for the Jerome Butte transmitter, but said that it is still "too soon to tell."

Once the Magic Valley transmitter is in place, KBSU reception will extend into Butte, Wendell, Jerome, Shoshone, Twin Falls, Kimberly and as far as Hazelton. Outlying communities may also be able to pick up the signals, Paluzzi said.

KBSU has already made a verbal agreement to lease the land it will need for its transmitter from Channel 2 in Boise, which currently uses the site for microwave operations. Paluzzi said it will cost approximately $20,000 to move a transmitter from Boise and to purchase the land.

Christmas, Paluzzi said KBSU will have 18 months to construct the transmitter station. "It could conceivably be assured station officials that once the Deer Point transmitter is in place, local cable users will be able to along."

Farmers, ranchers can soon test new computerized record-keeping

The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS — Farmers and ranchers in the Magic Valley soon will have access to computerized and hand record-keeping systems under a pilot program sponsored by the University of Idaho Cooperative Extension Service.

Funded by a grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture Extension Service, the Farm Record Service Centers will open Dec. 1 in county extension offices in Jerome and Twin Falls.

Enrollment will be limited in the program, the first of its kind in the nation, and participants will be eligible to use the centers for up to one year.

"By scheduling regular appointments and having on-call help available, the producer should be able to set up his own record-keeping system within the year," University of Idaho extension economist Wilson Gray said. "The goal is to assist participants in keeping their own records, not to do it for them."

ments and having on-call help available, the producer should be able to set up his own record-keeping system within the year," University of Idaho extension economist Wilson Gray said. "The goal is to assist participants in keeping their own records, not to do it for them."

Besides written training materials, the centers will provide recently developed interactive videodiscs and videotapes.

Twin Falls County Extension Agent Bill Hazen said the Farm Record Service Centers will allow farmers to get started in a record-keeping system they can grow with.

He said the centers should interest "anybody who is trying to get a handle on what their costs of production are and anyone who is contemplating a major change in their operation."

"A more complete set of records will give people anticipating a major change the information they need to determine whether they have the kind of cash to make it work," Hazen said.

Jerome County Extension Agent Bob Ohlenschlaen said the center will help people better understand what records they should keep and why they should keep them.

"When they're through with this and have learned a record-keeping system and are keeping their records the way they should, then they should be able to use those records to make day-to-day decisions on their farms," he said.

Birbridge pipeline plans made for Bruneau Resource area

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The U.S. Bureau of Land Management is planning a 7.6-mile water pipeline starting at Wickahony Station that could one day extend 90 miles through the Bruneau Resource area east of Twin Falls.

The pipeline has been attacked by the Committee for Idaho's High Desert as an "ill conceived pork barrel" range project that would contribute to erosion of the public lands, hurt wildlife and constitute an eyesore.

BLM says the pipeline would eliminate the need for hauling water to livestock grazing the public lands and allow for better distribution and management of the animals.

Construction of the first segment could start this fall and would include a 2.5 million gallon storage reservoir.

The initial phase would cost about $118,000 and be the most difficult segment to build because of the rock along the pipeline path, said Dennis Hoyem, manager.

Bruneau Resource Area. The pipeline would be buried 48 inches where possible. In some stretches it would be covered with soil, Hoyem says.

The 90 miles of pipeline, entirely in Idaho, would cost $350,000 to $600,000, Hoyem said. BLM hasn't made a decision whether to go ahead with the project but if it does, construction could start this fall, he said.

The pipeline would run from south to north in the southeastern portion of the Bruneau Resource Area, the Bruneau Resource Area, in the southwest corner of the state, runs from south of Boise to the Nevada border.

The 140,000 acres to be served by the pipeline need a reprieve from livestock grazing, said Randy Morris of the high desert committee in an October 8 letter to Hoyem.

He said a critical soil erosion situation is developing along the eastern-most extension of the pipeline.

Bail reduction denied for Langley

By ADELL HARVEY
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — With District Judge William Hark Monday denied a request to reduce bail for Larry Langley, who pleaded guilty to five counts of bombing of buildings or works in connection with the Sept. 19 explosion at the Rupert water tower.

In denying the reduction, Hark said, "I am concerned with the seriousness of this crime the defendant has pled guilty to, and that the defendant is facing some prison time. Because alcohol was involved, we have no guarantee he won't get drunk again and do something crazy again."

Public defender Gara Newman requested that Langley's bail be reduced from $25,000 to "something we can live with, perhaps $10,000 or $5,000." She cited the facts that Langley had been in jail since Oct. 1, that he was supporting three children and that his employer had guaranteed him a job immediately upon his release.

In opposing the bond reduction, County Prosecutor Charles Crosson pointed out that Langley had a felony robbery record in New York

State, and stated that Langley has also been in trouble "a couple of times since moving to Rupert five years ago." He also said Langley had used several aliases in New York, a fact which would make it more difficult to locate him if he should leave town.

Newman argued, "The felony conviction was 13 years ago, when my client was barely 18 years old. He completed a successful probation then, and there's no reason to believe he wouldn't do the same this time."

Hark told Langley, "I am... See BAIL on Page B2"

City of Rocks hearing begins

Hagerman Mayor Owsley to testify

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Hagerman Mayor Merle Owsley will testify Tuesday at Senate hearings in Washington on a bill to make the Hagerman fossil beds a national monument.

Burt Holmes, chairman of the House on Fossil National Monument Council, will also give testimony in support of Sen. James McClure's bill calling for a $5 million appropriation to protect the beds.

They contain a world-renowned record of Pliocene age mammals and are threatened by erosion from irrigated farmland runoff, wind and off-road vehicles, according to the U.S. Bureau of Land Management.

The hearings before the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests will also be on another proposal by McClure to make the City of Rocks, near Oakley, a national reserve.

The city also is threatened by off-road vehicles. Other problems include vandalism, improper climbing of the rock.

William Penn Mott, director of the National Park Service, is also scheduled to testify Tuesday on both proposals, said H.D. Palmer, a BLM spokesman.

NPS would take over management of the fossil beds from BLM under McClure's bill. Both proposals would bring additional money and protection to the sites to make them into prime tourist attractions, according to supporters. The city contains a fantastic eroded rock shape that has fascinated visitors since the pioneer days of the 1840s.

McClure's bill would protect 32,000 acres at the City of Rocks. The proposal for the fossil beds near Hagerman calls for 4,594 acres.

The hearings are scheduled to begin at noon mountain time.

Both proposals have drawn little local opposition and considerable support. This is in contrast to the 1970s when there was little support for the fossil beds proposal and ranching interests opposed a change in status for the City of Rocks.

The Planning and Zoning Commission recommended Aug. 11 that the council turn down the rezoning of the Lewis property. But the commission voted to approve Wagner's request because his property was contiguous with the existing commercial property.

In other business, the council accepted bids for an assortment of equipment for the waterworks department.

Total bids from four companies varied from $166,565 to $210,437.

But the council reserved the right to pick and choose low bids on individual items.

The Consolidated Supply Co. and Water and Wastewater Equipment Co. of Boise; Norman Supply of Pocatello and Waterworks Equipment Co. of Ogden, Utah, submitted bids.

While not on the agenda, Ralph Brannan of Twin Falls asked for a tough jaywalking law.

Within four weeks, he said he had a couple of close calls and almost hit two people walking out in the street.

City Manager Tom Courtney said the city did have a law prohibiting jaywalking. But with only five to six police officers on the street at any one time, the chances of them catching someone in the act is small.

City Attorney Shane Bengochea said, "It (jaywalking) is covered, but I don't know if it's enforced."

Courtesy suggested a recommendation from the public safety department on what to do about jaywalking.

Candidates present views

TWIN FALLS — City council candidates have been invited to present their views today at the College of Southern Idaho at 7 p.m.

The public is invited to the candidates forum, which will be held in room 117 of the Shields Building. Larry Quinn, who teaches political science at CSI, will be the moderator.

The forum was organized by the Donald McMurrain, who is one of the 10 candidates seeking one of the four seats open on the Twin Falls City Council.

McMurrain said he has invited all the candidates to participate.

"This is a chance for the people to know what the race is all about," said McMurrain, who manages a country-western band.

The four incumbents seeking reelection are Mayor Doug Volmer, who operates a real-estate business; Erik Andersen, who operates a manufacturing company; Gale Kleinkopf, superintendent of the University of Idaho Research and Extension Service; and Jack Miller, a building contractor.

Other candidates are Robert Geesen, a teacher at St. Edwards School; Bobby Rupp, former city fire chief; Tom Condie, an accountant; Arthur Franz, a retired dentist; and Mark Beams, who owns a retail motorcycle business.

The non-partisan election will be held Nov. 3. Friday is the last day to register for the election at either City Hall or the Twin Falls County Courthouse.

Each council term is four years.

Guilty

Involved in coming forward with the case.

Judge Hurlbut asked for a presentence investigation for Hedger, or actually for an update of an investigation completed in 1984 on a previous charge. He will then set a sentencing date.

Hedger was remanded to the custody of the sheriff and returned to the county jail where he has been since his arrest last June. He could face a one-year sentence on the rape charge alone and from one to 25 years on the second degree kidnapping conviction.

In closing arguments, Baxter asked the jurors to consider that the victim's testimony had been corroborated by other witnesses while the defendant's version of incidents on June 9 and June 10, 1987, was unbelievable.

She said the defendant's testimony contained inconsistencies, contradictions and — and many — unanswered questions. Even the defense witness contradicted his testimony, she said.

Baxter asked the jurors to remember he testified he had been denied entrance to the victim's home when he had been drinking. Yet on the night of June 9 he spent several hours in a Fuller bar before going to her home.

"He would have you believe that on the night involved in this trial she invited him into her home, served him beer and she drove him all the way to Jackpot to buy a beer... a beer that she never got," Baxter said.

Baxter said there were several opportunities to buy beer at Jackpot but both testified that she asked for pop when they stopped at the Jackpot service station.

Defense Attorney Wood reminded the jurors if the defendant was found guilty, it had to be beyond reasonable doubt on each of the five counts. He argued that the prosecution had not proven its case beyond reasonable doubt.

"Don't allow them (prosecutors) to shift the burden of proof to us to prove that my client is innocent," he said. "If you find this man guilty, each of you must be able to say that you are making that decision beyond a reasonable doubt."

Wood said there were several discrepancies in the victim's testimony and her statement to him in a September interview. He said the victim did not make any attempts to escape at the Jackpot service station or to signal a police officer in Fuller at the start of their trip to Nevada.

In her rebuttal, the prosecutor asked the jurors how they would like to be cross examined three or four times by Wood concerning the subjects involved in the charges and asked whether their memory would be good enough to recall all the details without error.

Judge Hurlbut issued 30 instructions to the jurors, including seven that were given at the start of the trial. He stressed intent, including finding a way to take the victim out of the state in the kidnapping charge.

pressed with your attitude in the courtroom — and — towards — the prosecutor. These things will weigh in your favor at sentencing time. However, I think it is appropriate to leave the bond where it is."

Sentencing was set for 1:30 p.m. Nov. 16 for Langley, 32, of 401 B St.

and for Scott Kidder, 29, of 905 4th St., both of Rupert. Kidder earlier pleaded guilty to malicious injury to property in connection with the bombing. His bond was reduced to $5,000 at that time.

Dan Ward, 18, of 210 First St., Rupert, who was also arrested in connection with the bombing incident, is free on $5,000 bond. His arraignment in district court was scheduled for Monday, but Creason said it had been continued until next Monday.

Ward maintains that he is innocent and has taken a lie-detector test. Creason expects the results of the test this week.

and the northern end of the Big Lake allotment have been totally denuded of vegetation from grazing and is blowing into sand dunes, he wrote.

Morris said the rest of the area along the pipeline route has suffered extensive repeated brush fires said this is the result of converting the native sage brush to highly flammable cheat grass.

Morris said he is concerned about the effect of watering troughs near the Deer Water Springs petroglyphs. The environmental impact statement fails to say whether the petroglyphs will be fenced off if the troughs are placed as proposed.

Morris said the BLM in proposing

this pipeline is repeating the mistakes of the Monument Resource Area and the Shoshone BLM district. "Will it take television crews filming starving deer across the Snake River Bridge from Bruneau to bring about a change in management direction?" Morris wrote.

Hoyem said the pipeline will actually bring about an improvement in the range by spreading the same amount of livestock over a larger area. He says Morris has a misconception that there will be an increase in the number of cattle. The grazing will be more closely monitored than it has been before, Hoyem said.

The livestock of seven BLM permittees would be watered by the pipeline. Some are large operations involving thousands of cattle, Hoyem said. The pipeline would also provide water for wildlife, he said.

Hoyem said the cheat grass in the area is due to historic overgrazing and BLM won't knowingly do anything to make it worse.

There is already grazing occurring near the petroglyphs, said Hoyem. "BLM will not do anything to increase damage to the petroglyphs and will probably do the opposite," he said.

BLM plans to ask its grazing advisory board for one-third the cost of the pipeline, Hoyem said. The balance will be funded from BLM funds earmarked for range improvement, he said.

Donald J. Chessman

BURLEY — Donald James Chessman, 63, of Abbot Idaho, and resident of Burley, died Friday, Oct. 16, 1987, at his home in Abbot after a long illness.

He was born June 6, 1924, in Long Beach, Calif. He grew up in California, and the family moved to Tacoma when he was 15 years old.

He moved to Burley in 1968, where he worked as executive pilot for Popderson Lark for six years. He married Mary Lou York Jan. 1, 1958, in Las Vegas.

Mr. Chessman was active in the American Legion. He had been elected as commander of Burley Post 17 of the American Legion, serving in 1974 and 1976. He had served in the 11th Air Force as a fighter pilot during World War II, last stationed in the Aleutian Islands. He was a member of the Civil Air Patrol for 37 years, and a member of the BPO and the Burley Elks Club.

Surviving are his wife of Abbot; two stepsons, David Valardi of California and Louis Valardi of Michigan; three stepdaughters, Pat Morgan of Detroit, Clara Johnson of Maryland and Mary Ann Cline of Mesa, Ark.; 14 stepgrandchildren; and numerous nieces and grandchildren.

A military service and burial will be held Thursday, under direction of the Coeur d'Alene Memorial Chapel.

Clara Ahlm

BUIH — Clara Ahlm, 89, of Buhl, died Sunday, Oct. 18, 1987, in Buhl.

Born Sept. 8, 1898, in Watonga, Okla., she moved to Buhl in 1910, and attended Alton State Normal College. She married Arthur Ahlm July 31, 1917, in Albion. Mr. Ahlm died in 1980.

She moved to Buhl in 1929, where she resided until her death.

Surviving are a son, Ted Ahlm of Buhl; two granddaughters; three great-grandchildren; a brother, Tom Miller of Salt Lake City; and two sisters, Mona Larson of Minneapolis and Lillian Keaton of Buhl.

A memorial service is pending and will be announced later. Cremation was under direction of the Farmer Chapel.

Philip Glover

BURLEY — Philip Glover, 71, of Burley, died Monday in Minidoka Memorial Hospital.

Born Aug. 23, 1916, at Rella, Mo., he married Lucille Burton, and she preceded him in death. He married Lollita Burton May 1971, in Rainier, Wash. He had lived most of his life in the Burley area, where he had worked as a carpenter.

Surviving are his wife of Burley; three sons, Philip C. Glover of Salt Lake City, David Glover of Burley and Larry Glover of San Francisco; a daughter, Carolyn Whitney of Rainier; two brothers, Clarence Glover of Burley and Frank Glover of Twin Falls; six granddaughters; and four great-grandchildren.

He was preceded in death by a son, a grandson and a brother.

The service will be held Thursday at 11 a.m. in the Burley 8th Ward LDS Chapel, 2050 Normal Avenue, with Bishop Lamar Hurst officiating. Burial will be in Pleasant View Cemetery.

Friends may call at McCulloch's in Burley Wednesday from 2 to 8:30 p.m., and at the church on Thursday one hour prior to the time of the funeral.

H.H. 'Hank' Graham

TWIN FALLS — Henry H. 'Hank' Graham, 88, of Twin Falls, died Sunday, Oct. 18, 1987, at West Magic Care Center after a long illness.

Born Dec. 13, 1899, in Kirkman, Iowa, he graduated from Pomona (Calif.) College. He later moved to Idaho, where he was a writer and photographer. He wrote several books and many short stories and articles. He worked with Juneau Shinn on Twin Falls newspapers for several years.

Mr. Graham was named the Idaho State Singles Tennis Champion one year. He served in the Army during World War II.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. M.E. (Margaret) Smith of Buhl, and two nephews, Charles Browne of Twin Falls and Wallace Browne of Fremont, Calif. He was preceded in death by two sisters and a brother.

The funeral will be held Thursday at 11 a.m. in Reynolds Funeral Chapel, with the Rev. Fred Brodin officiating. Burial will be in Sunset Memorial Park, with a flag service conducted by the area veterans and auxiliary.

Friends may call at the chapel Wednesday from 9 to 8 p.m., and on Thursday until the time of the service.

Now, tax-free funds can be right for more taxpayers

Single-Premium Whole Life

It Is Currently Paying As Much As 9.00%

The reviews are in — and it's a hit!

Here's what financial critics are saying:

"The best investment of our time." — Wall Street Journal, June 11, 1987

"It seems too good to be true: An investment that earns higher tax-free yields than municipal bonds and, as a bonus, throws in 'free' life insurance." — Changing Times, May 1988

"Best of all is the ability to borrow up to 90% of the cash value... without paying taxes." — Forbes, November 4, 1985

"The investor can take the cash that accumulates out in the form of what is termed a loan. In most cases, this loan doesn't have to be repaid..." — Time, December 2, 1986

"The biggest plus is that you can use the policy's source of tax-free income... and not worry, as you do with the tax-free income from municipal bonds, about losing part of your principal as interest fluctuates." — Los Angeles Times, June 20, 1985

"Single Premium Whole Life is a four-in-one miracle!" — California Broker, December, 1985

SPWL reminds many financial analysts of four different investments. It's like a CD, since interest rates can be guaranteed for one, two or three years and incur penalties only if surrendered prematurely.

It's like a municipal bond since tax-free distributions are available... like an annuity since interest accumulates on a tax-deferred basis... and like universal life, since the death benefit is income-tax free.

"When the dust settles after tax reform... insurance will be one of the few ways you can still accumulate savings on a tax-free basis." — Money, September 1988

Laboratory error causes tragic surprise

DEAR ABBY: My wife, Kathy, and I are both Jewish, so when she became pregnant in 1985, I took a simple blood test to determine if I was a carrier of Tay-Sachs — a hideous disease that predominantly strikes Jewish children.

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

About one out of 30 Jewish adults is a Tay-Sachs carrier. If a carrier marries another carrier, there is a one out of four chance that their baby will develop Tay-Sachs.

I was tested at a local hospital and was told I was not a carrier, so since both parents must be carriers in order to produce a Tay-Sachs child, there was no reason for Kathy to be tested.

In June 1986, Kathy had a beautiful baby. We named her Abigail. She appeared to be a normal, happy baby, but when she didn't sit up or progress the way other babies her age did, we became concerned and consulted a specialist.

His diagnosis: Tay-Sachs. We were devastated. Abby, our daughter, will never crawl, walk or speak. Instead, she will go blind, become paralyzed, have seizures and die before she is 3, 4 or 5 years old.

How could this have happened when I was told I was not a carrier? Our specialist called the hospital and discovered that the lab technician had made a simple mathematical error!

We later learned that the hospital's policy was to only "spot-check" their results. Meanwhile, we looked into suing the lab, but were advised by several prominent malpractice attorneys that in New York it is not possible to collect damages for "pain and suffering."

We finally found a lawyer who agreed to take our case, but were told not to expect too much.

Abby, no amount of money can compensate for having to watch one's child slowly die, but we want to warn other prospective parents so this won't happen to them.

No one should have to go through the hell we are presently going through. You may use my name.

— DAVID ASTOR, QUEENS, N. Y.

DEAR MR. ASTOR: My heart goes out to you, Kathy and your precious daughter.

Thank you for caring enough to write as a warning to others. Readers, be aware that Tay-Sachs has occurred in non-Jewish babies, too — but the incidence is much lower.

And in order to reduce the possibility of a laboratory error, the man and woman should be tested twice — preferably at different labs.

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated your answer to that "letter" from "Considering Marriage" — the older, impotent man who was considering what he presumed would be a sexless marriage to a younger woman in a wheelchair. Thanks for setting him straight.

My husband has been a paraplegic since he was a teenager (spinal cord injury), but being in a wheelchair has not stopped him from being the sexiest, most satisfying lover a woman could want.

— FULFILLED

DEAR FULFILLED: To assume that all people in wheelchairs have no sensual feelings and cannot perform is a popular myth that needs to be dispelled.

Thank you for validating my statement.

 The Planning and Zoning Commission recommended Aug. 11 that the council turn down the rezoning of the Lewis property. But the commission voted to approve Wagner's request because his property was contiguous with the existing commercial property.

In the business, the council accepted bids for an assortment of equipment for the waterworks department.

Total bids from four companies varied from $168,565 to $210,437.

But the council reserved the right to pick and choose low bids on individual items.

The Consolidated Supply Co. and Water and Wastewater Equipment Co., both of Boise; Norman Supply of Pocatello and Waterworks Equipment Co. of Ogden, Utah, submitted bids.

While not on the agenda, Ralph Brannan of Twin Falls asked for a tough jaywalking law.

Within four weeks, he said he had a couple of close calls and almost hit two people walking out in the street.

City Manager Tom Courtney said the city did have a law prohibiting jaywalking. But with only five to six police officers on the street at any one time, the chances of them catching someone in the act is small.

City Attorney Shana Bengoechea said, "It (jaywalking) is covered, but I don't know if it's enforced."

Carr suggested a recommendation from the public safety department on what to do about jaywalking.

Candidates present views

TWIN FALLS — City council candidates have been invited to present their views today at the College of Southern Idaho at 7 p.m.

The public is invited to the candidates forum, which will be held in room 117 of the Shields Building. Larry Quinn, who teaches political science at CSI, will be the moderator.

The forum was organized by Donald McMurrian, who is one of the 10 candidates seeking one of the five seats open on the Twin Falls City Council.

McMurrian said he has invited all the candidates to participate.

"This is a chance for the people to know what the race is all about," said McMurrian, who manages a country-western band.

The four incumbents seeking re-election are Mayor Doug Vollmer, who operates a real-estate business; Erik Andersen, who operates a manufacturing company; Gale Kieinkop, superintendent of the University of Idaho Research and Extension Service; and Jack Miller, a building contractor.

Other candidates are Robert Gessen, a teacher at St. Edwards School; Bobby Bopp, former city fire chief; Tom Condie, an accountant; Arthur Franz, a retired dentist; and Mark Beama, who owns a retail motorcycle business.

The non-partisan election will be held Nov. 3. Friday is the last day to register for the election at either City Hall or the Twin Falls County Courthouse.

Each council term is four years.

 Involved in coming forward with the complaint.

Judge Hurlbut asked for a presentence investigation for Hedger, or actually for an update of an investigation completed in 1984 on a previous charge. He will then set a sentencing date.

Hedger was remanded to the custody of the sheriff and returned to the county jail where he has been since his arrest last June. He could face a one-year-to-life sentence on the rape charge alone and from one to 25 years on the second degree kidnapping conviction.

In closing arguments, Baxter asked the jurors to consider that the victim's testimony had been corroborated by other witnesses while the defendant's version of incidents on June 9 and June 10, 1987, was unbelievable.

She said the defendant's testimony contained inconsistencies, contradictions and many unanswered questions. Even the defense witness contradicted his testimony, she said.

Baxter asked the jurors to remember he testified he had been denied entrance to the victim's home when he had been drinking. Yet on the night of June 9 he spent several hours in a Filer bar before going to her home.

"He would have you believe that on the night involved in this trial she invited him into her home, served him beer and she drove him all the way to Jackpot to buy a beer, as he never got," Baxter said.

Baxter said there were several opportunities to buy beer at Jackpot but both testified that she asked for pop when they stopped at the Jackpot service station.

Defense Attorney Wood reminded the jurors if the defendant was found guilty, it had to be beyond reasonable doubt on each of the five counts. He argued that the prosecution had not proven its case beyond reasonable doubt.

"Don't allow them (prosecutors)

to shift the burden of proof to us to prove that my client is innocent," he said. "If you find this man guilty, only if you must be able to say that you are making that decision beyond a reasonable doubt."

Wood said there were several discrepancies in the victim's testimony and her statement to him in a September interview. He said the victim did not make any attempts to escape at the Jackpot service station or to signal a police officer in Filer at the start of their trip to Nevada.

In her rebuttal, the prosecutor asked the jurors how they would like to be cross examined three or four times by Wood concerning the subjects involved in the charges and asked whether their memory would be good enough to recall all the details without error.

Judge Hurlbut issued 30 instructions to the jurors, including seven that were given at the start of the trial. He stressed intent, including finding intent to take the victim out of the state in the kidnapping charge.

 pressed' with your attitude in the courtroom and towards the prosecutor. These things will weigh in your favor at sentencing time. However, I think it's appropriate to leave the bond where it is."

Sentencing was set for 1:30 p.m. Nov. 16 for Langley, 32, of 401 B St.

and for Scott Kidder, 29, of 905 4th St., both of Rupert. Kidder earlier pleaded guilty to malicious injury to property in connection with the bombing. His bond was reduced to $5,000 at that time.

Dan Ward, 18, of 210 First St., Rupert, was also arrested in connection with the bombing incident. He is free on $5,000 bond. His arraignment in district court was scheduled for Monday, but Cresson said it had been continued until next Monday.

Ward maintains that he is innocent and has taken a lie-detector test. Cresson expects the results of the test this week.

Birbidge

 and the northern end of the Big Lake allotment have been totally denuded of vegetation from grazing and is blowing into sand dunes, he wrote.

Morris said the rest of the area along the pipeline route has suffered extensive repeated burns. Morris said this is the result of converting the native sage brush to highly flammable cheat grass.

Morris said he is concerned about the effect of watering troughs near the Deer Water Springs petroglyphs. The environmental impact statement fails to say whether the petroglyphs will be fenced off if the troughs are placed as proposed.

Morris said the BLM in proposing

this pipeline is repeating the mistakes of the Monument Resource Area and the Shoshone BLM district. "Will it take television crews filming starving deer across the Snake River Bridge from Bruneau to bring about a change in management direction?" Morris wrote.

Hoyem said the pipeline will actually bring about an improvement in the range by spreading the same amount livestock over a larger area. He says Morris has a misconception that there will be an increase in the number of cattle. The grazing will be more closely monitored than it has been before, Hoyem said.

The livestock of seven BLM permits would be watered by the pipeline. Some are large operations involving thousands of cattle, Hoyem said. The pipeline would also provide water for wildlife, he said.

Hoyem said the cheat grass in the area is due to historic overgrazing and BLM won't knowingly do anything to make it worse.

There is already grazing occurring near the petroglyphs, said Hoyem. "BLM will not do anything to increase damage to the petroglyphs and will probably do the opposite," he said.

BLM plans to ask its grazing advisory board for one-third the cost of the pipeline, Hoyem said. The balance will be funded from BLM funds earmarked for range improvement, he said.

Single-Premium Whole Life

It Is Currently Paying As Much As 9.00%

The reviews are in — and it's a hit!

Here's what financial critics are saying:

"The best investment of our time."
 — Wall Street Journal June 11, 1987

"It seems too good to be true: An Investment that earns higher tax-free yields than municipal bonds and, as a bonus, throws in 'free' life insurance."
 — Changing Times, May 1986

"Best of all is the ability to borrow up to 90% of the cash value... without paying taxes."
 — Forbes, November 4, 1985

"The investor can take the cash that accumulates out in the form of what is termed a loan. In most cases, this loan doesn't have to be repaid..."
 — Tulsa World, August 3, 1986

"The biggest plus is that you can use the policy as a source of tax-free income... and not worry, as you do with the tax-free income from municipal bonds, about losing part of your principal as interest rates fluctuate."
 — Los Angeles Times, June 20, 1985

"Single Premium Whole Life is a four-in-one miracle!"
 — California Broker, December, 1985

SPWL reminds many financial analysts of four different investments: It's like a CD, since interest rates can be guaranteed for one, two or three years and incur penalties only if surrendered prematurely. It's like a municipal bond since tax-free distributions are available... like an annuity since interest accumulates on a tax-deferred basis... and like universal life, since the death benefit is income-tax free.

"When the dust settles after tax reform... insurance will be one of the few ways you can still accumulate savings on a tax-free basis."
 — Money, September 1988

Laboratory error causes tragic surprise

DEAR ABBY: My wife, Kathy, and I are both Jewish, so when she became pregnant in 1985, I took a simple blood test to determine if I was a carrier of Tay-Sachs — a hideous disease that predominantly strikes Jewish children.

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

About one out of 30 Jewish adults is a Tay-Sachs carrier. If a carrier marries another carrier, there is a one out of four chance that their baby will develop Tay-Sachs.

I was tested at a local hospital and was told I was not a carrier, so since both parents must be carriers in order to produce a Tay-Sachs child, there was no reason for Kathy to be tested.

In June 1986, Kathy had a beautiful baby. We named her Abigail. She appeared to be a normal, happy baby, but when she didn't sit up or progress the way other babies her age did, we became concerned and consulted a specialist.

His diagnosis: Tay-Sachs. We were devastated! Abby, our daughter, will never crawl, walk or talk.

Instead, she will go blind, become paralyzed, have seizures and die before she is 3, 4 or 5 years old.

How could this have happened when I was told I was not a carrier? Our specialist called the hospital and discovered that the lab technician had made a simple mathematical error!

We later learned that the hospital's policy was to only "spot-check" their results. Meanwhile, we looked into suing the lab, but were advised by several prominent malpractice attorneys that in New York it is not possible to collect damages for "pain and suffering."

We finally found a lawyer who agreed to take our case, but were told not to expect too much.

Abby, no amount of money can compensate for having to watch one's child slowly die; but we want to warn other prospective parents so this won't happen to them.

No one should have to go through the hell we are presently going through. You may use my name.

— DAVID ASTOR, QUEENS, N. Y.

DEAR MR. ASTOR: My heart goes out to you, Kathy and your precious daughter.

Thank you for caring enough to write as a warning to others.

Readers, be aware that Tay-Sachs has occurred in non-Jewish babies, too — but the incidence is much lower.

And in order to reduce the possibility of a laboratory error, the man and woman should be tested twice — preferably at different labs.

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated your answer to that letter from "Considering Marriage" — the older, impotent man who was considering what he presumed would be a sexless marriage to a younger woman in a wheelchair. Thanks for setting him straight.

My husband has a teen-ager (spinal cord injury), but being in a wheelchair has not stopped him from being the sexiest, most satisfying lover a woman could want.

— FULFILLED

DEAR FULFILLED: To assume that all people in wheelchairs have no sensual feelings and cannot perform is a popular myth that needs to be dispelled.

Thank you for validating my statement.

Governor tries to avoid federal intervention

Attorneys filed for evidence exclusion

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Attorneys for accused multiple murderer Paul Ezra Rhoades have filed an exclusion motion in their defense of the Idaho Falls man, asking for exclusion of up to nine evidentiary items the state may use in trying to convict Rhoades of killing an Idaho Falls school teacher.

The motion filed with Judge Larry Boyle seeks an order preventing the items, including photographs of victim Susan Michelbacher, 34, with her children, from being introduced or referred to during the first-degree murder trial.

Boyle scheduled arguments on the latest motion for Oct. 28. Rhoades, 30 faces a Jan. 11 trial on charges of first-degree murder, first-degree kidnapping, rape, committing an infamous crime against nature and robbery in the Michelbacher slaying last March. The county has also sought four sentence-enhancement penalties, which would extend any sentence Rhoades would receive if convicted. He faces the possibility of the death penalty if found guilty of first-degree murder.

He also faces trials early next year on first-degree murder and related charges in the shooting deaths of convenience store clerk Nolan Haddon in Bonneville County and convenience store clerk Stacy Baldwin in Bingham County.

Boyle has already disposed of more than a dozen motions filed by the defense on Rhoades' behalf. In his most recent decision, the judge refused to grant an immediate appeal to the state Supreme Court of his ruling upholding the state ban on the use of insanity as a defense to a criminal charge.

In addition to the photographs of Mrs. Michelbacher with her children, the defense has asked

Boyle to bar prosecution use of:

— All references to the Haddon and Baldwin investigations.

— All references to investigations or contacts regarding alleged rapes in the Idaho Falls-Rexburg area that involved Rhoades as a potential suspect.

— Any reference to suspected marijuana allegedly found on Rhoades when he was arrested in Nevada in late March.

— All magazines and photos obtained by law enforcement officers from Rhoades or members of his family.

LEWISTON (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus has asked representatives of Idaho conservation and logging groups to return to the bargaining table in an attempt to ward off federal intervention in the state's plan for protecting water quality.

The governor has not yet scheduled a negotiating session, but preliminary contacts with interest groups concerned with the plan have been made, Andrus press secretary Marc Johnson said.

"He's trying to be an honest broker and bring the various interests together," Johnson said, adding that reception to the governor's suggestion of rejuvenated talks has been "pretty good."

Andrus hopes the talks will diffuse conservationists' efforts to legally force the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to set water quality standards for Idaho.

The Wilderness Society and other groups have filed two separate legal actions since Sept. 3, putting the EPA on notice that they intend to sue after a required 60-day waiting period.

Craig Gehrke, The Wilderness Society's forest planning specialist, said the society would "be willing to sit down and talk about it." He said he was skeptical the negotiations would help avoid the legal battle shaping up.

"We've spent the last 18 months talking about these issues," Gehrke said. "I'll be interested to see what has changed."

Joseph Hinson, executive vice president of the Intermountain Forest Industry Association in Coeur d'Alene, said he also sees little need for concern over the possibility of federal intervention since Idaho's proposed water-quality regulations already meet recently released EPA guidelines.

"You read it and it's almost a mirror image of what we're doing in Idaho," Hinson said. "So given that, I have no idea what we're negotiating."

Although The Wilderness Society always worries the industry at least a little, the group's lawsuits seem more a cause for concern at the federal level.

"I know they disagree with the EPA and I'm sorry," Hinson said.

Former Morton Thiokol worker pleads innocent

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A former Morton Thiokol Inc. purchaser pleaded innocent Monday to 27 counts of mail fraud, wire fraud, tax evasion and filing false tax returns in an alleged kickback scheme against the aerospace company and the federal government.

U.S. Magistrate Ronald Boyce said the case of John E. Ward will be heard by Judge Aldon Anderson. No trial date was set and Boyce ordered Ward remain free on a $15,000 signature bond with a $1,500 deposit pending further proceedings.

Ward and eight defense subcontractors were charged last Friday with operating a kickback scheme against Morton Thiokol and the federal government.

U.S. Attorney Brent Ward said for more than three years, John Ward allegedly charged kickbacks from suppliers and earned illegal profits by routing materials through three companies he created and operated from his basement.

The scheme involved routine supply materials, including paper towels and strapping material, used during the manufacture and development of space shuttle booster rockets, Navy Trident missiles and the Air Force's new Small Intercontinental "Bullistic" missile, nicknamed the "Midgetman."

On Friday, two other defendants, Helmut and Allison Reinicke of Salt Lake City, also pleaded innocent before Boyce. Allison Reinicke was charged with nine counts of aiding in a kickback scheme and Helmut Reinicke was charged with seven counts of the same offense.

Brent Ward said after John Ward left Thiokol in 1986, the scheme continued by selling to Thiokol through companies John Ward had formed. He had joined the company in 1979 as a buyer.

Earlier, Morton Thiokol attorney Darryl Lee said John Ward's resignation apparently was not linked to the investigation. Thiokol officials said they were conducting their own inquiry into the alleged kickbacks and had suspended all new contractual activity with individuals and firms named as defendants.

Benson listed as satisfactory

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon Church President Ezra Taft Benson, recovering from a mild heart attack, was moved Monday from LDS Hospital's coronary intensive-care unit, church officials said.

Benson, 88, was admitted to LDS Hospital Thursday with "physical discomfort" which church officials later said was associated with a mild heart attack. He was in satisfactory condition Monday, said church spokesman Don LeFevre.

"He's resting comfortably," LeFevre said. "They haven't determined yet how long he'll remain in the hospital."

He said Benson's two counselors in the faith's governing First Presidency and some family members had visited Benson in the hospital.

Benson, who served as U.S. agriculture secretary from 1953-1961 under President Dwight D. Eisenhower, became the 13th president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on Nov. 10, 1985. A year later, doctors implanted a heart pacemaker in Benson.

Pierce, Notus receive funds

BOISE (AP) — Two state grants have been awarded to the towns of Pierce and Notus to upgrade their wastewater facilities.

Pierce will receive $9,000 in state Water Pollution Control Fund money to perform engineering studies on altering its system. The city is liable for the rest of the $12,000 cost.

Notus will use $144,788 to construct an extended detention lagoon to correct any health hazards or water quality problems. The remaining $48,282 of the project will be paid by the city.

Grizzly bear wrecks plane to get dead moose

ANCHORAGE (AP) — Grizzly bears aren't bashful at dinnertime. Just ask pilot Ed Gurtler. One of the critters wrecked his plane to get at moose meat inside. Gurtler said he was returning to his plane on a sandbar in the Innoko River near Cripple Lake Oct. 12 when he heard the aircraft taking a beating. When he got closer he shined his light on the plane and saw a big grizzly staring back. He fired a shot over the bear. "He just looked right into the headlight," Gurtler said. "What can you do then? Anything that big, at night, you're not hunting him. He's hunting you." The bear already had bent the plane's fuselage by picking it up and slamming it down. The animal was determined to get at 500 pounds of moose meat inside the Cessna 170, Gurtler said. After firing the shot with no effect, Gurtler said he took his riverboat and headed back to his hometown. "As an old-timer once told me, you can always get a new airplane, but you can't get a new pilot," Gurtler said. "He ate well. I gave him everything but salt and pepper with the airplane." The next morning, the 500 pounds of moose meat inside the plane had been reduced to 200 pounds, and the plane looked as if it had crashed.

Gurtler turned on an emergency locator transmitter. Its signal was picked up two days later by an orbiting satellite and rescue officials at Elmendorf Air Force Base at Anchorage were notified. They called Fish and Wildlife Protection Division trooper Charles Beatty in the Kuakwim River community of McGrath, about 40 miles from Cripple. Beatty flew his plane to where the satellite had located the transmissions. He found nothing. "I decided to go check on Ed because I knew he had an airplane," Beatty said. While Gurtler waited, the bear returned each night

BILLY MARTIN
Kicked downstairs

NEW YORK (AP) — Billy Martin was named manager of the New York Yankees for the fifth time Monday after Lou Piniella, who had been expected to be fired, was promoted to general manager instead.

Piniella replaced Woody Woodward, who had asked to be relieved as GM, the club said in a statement.

"I'm anxious to return as Yankee manager and I'm looking toward bringing an exciting and winning team to Yankee fans," Martin said in the statement.

Piniella said in the statement, "I feel this is a step forward in my baseball career and gives me the opportunity to learn a new facet of the game."

The Yankees finished fourth in the American League East, nine games behind first-place Toronto, in Piniella's second season as manager. The Yankees were second in his first year.

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner met with Piniella last Thursday, and there were reports that Piniella would be fired and replaced by Martin.

On Aug. 8 in Detroit, Steinbrenner issued a two-page statement in which he said he might have made a mistake by hiring the inexperienced Piniella as manager. He later reminded everyone that what counted was the "bottom line."

The bottom line was that the Yankees, who led the American League East by three games at the All-Star break, finished fourth with an 86-73 record.

"Nothing Lou did hurt us in any way," Yankees first baseman Don

Herzog: Minnesota couldn't win a thing in stronger division

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Whitey Herzog jabbed at the Minnesota Twins Monday while the St. Louis Cardinals tried to stop them from running away with the World Series.

"I don't think they would win the American League East with the way they're constituted," Herzog said of the Twins, who have rampaged to a 2-0 lead.

brushed off the charges quickly.

"To bad we're not in that league," Herbok said.

The Cardinals took Monday off and regrouped — not that Herzog wanted it that way.

"I've always said you shouldn't have off days during the playoffs," Herzog said. "It's ridiculous."

"When you have two starting pitchers and two off days, that's a hell of an advantage," he said. "You can get by using five of your nine or 10 pitchers. That doesn't give a true criteria of the strength of your team."

Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven, the Twins' only consistent starters, won the first two games. Straker, hit hard in Minnesota's lone loss to Detroit in the American League playoffs, goes last in the three-mat

Doors finally open up for striking NFL players

By The Associated Press

The regular NFL players, most of whom were shown the door when they tried to report last Thursday, returned to work Monday, ready to pick up the pieces of what for them is a shattered season — financially, if not aesthetically.

As they came in, out went most of the truck drivers, security guards, teachers and coaches who had lived a three-week dream of playing professional football.

For those who stayed, there was a question of how much tension there would be with the players they replaced. At Buffalo, spray cans in the lockers of at least two players were labeled "Scab Guard: Kills Nasty Germs on Contact."

While teams were permitted to keep as many as 85 players for the time being, many chose to get rid of all but the handful who showed potential.

Among those was veteran quarterback Vince Evans, who Coach Tom Flores said would be one of "two or three" replacements kept by the Los Angeles Raiders. The 27-year-old Evans had been out of football for two years before catching on with the Raiders' strike team.

Philadelphia and Cincinnati cut all their replacements. Detroit

Sellers sent home by Bengals, at least temporarily

By The Times-News

Twin Falls' Lance Sellers was sent home along with the Cincinnati Bengals' other replacement players Sunday, and like the others he'll find out within the next two weeks whether he fits into the team's plans.

The NFL club sent the replacement players home the day before the striking Bengals were scheduled to return to work.

Sellers made his third straight start at inside linebacker for Cincinnati on Sunday in the Bengals' 34-0 loss to Cleveland.

Coach Harry Rogers said there was a slim chance any of the Lions' replacements would make the 45-man roster, although no moves were

Washington moves to top of NFC East

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Joe Gibbs said he would be "shocked" if the Washington Redskins defeated the veteran-laden Dallas Cowboys on Monday night in a showdown for first place in the NFC East.

It turned out that the Washington Redskins were "shocked" because the NFL's final replacement game because he downed the Cowboys 13-7 with a quarterback who was playing semi-pro ball in late September.

"It is one of the most emotional wins I've ever been associated with," Gibbs said. "Our (replacement) players kept us in the conference race."

Washington is now 4-1 in the NFC East while Dallas dropped to 3-2.

The Redskins were led to victory by quarterback Tony Robinson, who was fifth in Tennessee school history in passing yards. Robinson came off after Ed Rubbert was knocked out with a shoulder injury in the first period.

"I really didn't have time to think or react," Robinson said. "I just executed. I had a pretty good game I thought."

Robinson hit 11 of 18 passes for 152 yards, but also suffered two interceptions.

"I don't know confidence," he said. "I don't know whether I will be here three days from now, but I was just happy to be a part of the Redskin organization for this one game."

Gibbs said he was glad Robinson was able to play with a minimum of mistakes.

"This is a tribute to our front office because they got me super players and they've been super," Gibbs said. "Tony did a great job. He had tremendous poise for his first NFL game."

He added "This whole thing has been extremely emotional, and I haven't forgotten our team at home. I think anytime you play and beat

Pro football

Dallas is a turning point." Dallas coach Tom Landry said, "We players our own worst enemy. And we just didn't stop that second quarterback they had in there. He kept making some big plays."

Landry said he never considered replacing quarterback Danny White despite the boo barrage White and Tony Dorsett received from many of the 50,435 fans.

"It's our job to turn boos to cheers," Landry said. "I didn't want to take Danny out. We had a chance to win until the last play of the game."

Obed Ariri kicked two field goals and Ted Wilson scored on a reverse to provide the only scoring the Redskins needed.

"Dorsett said, 'This boss didn't concern me. The fans pay their money and they can react any way they want to. My job is to go out there and play to the best of my ability and not worry about what the fans' reaction is going to be.'"

White said, "It doesn't make my job any easier, but I've said that before. 'The boeing is going to hurt this team if the fans don't get behind them.'"

A crowd of 60,415, second only in the three weeks of strike-replacement football to the 61,230 drawn to Denver's Mile High Stadium last Monday, looked on as Washington improved its strike-team record to 3-0. The loss was the first in three games for the Dallas replacement team.

Washington took the second-half kickoff and drove 80 yards in seven plays, with wide receiver Wilson scoring on the touchdown on a 10-yard pass from 16 yards out for a 10-0 Redskin lead.

Dallas came right back, with White throwing a 38-yard touchdown pass to Kelvin Edwards to cap an 80-yard surge.

Ariri kicked a 39-yard field goal in the fourth quarter to give the Redskins, who led 10-0, a Dallas team that was favored by seven points because it had seven of its regulars available.

Dorsett fumbled twice in the first period and he was booted off the field each time. His first fumble led to Ariri's 19-yard field goal, which stood up for a 3-0 Washington halftime lead.

A chant of "We Want Sweeney, We Want Sweeney" echoed through Texas Stadium as the crowd called for backup Kevin Sweeney after White was sacked three times.

Dallas's deepest penetration in the first half was to the Washington 47-yard line.

Robinson, obtained from the semi-pro Richmond Ravens, had never played in an NFL game but ably directed the Redskins' attack, keeping the veteran Dallas defense on the field for extended periods.

Lionel White rushed for 130 yards against a Cowboys defensive front that included Randy White, Ed Jones, Don Smerek and Kevin Brooks, all regulars.

The Cowboys drove to the Redskins' 13-yard line late in the game, but White's fourth-down-and-3 pass to Edwards was broken up at the 7 yard line by Joe Cooper.

The Redskins' Michael Mitchell intercepted a White pass to kill a Dallas drive in the fourth period.

But Dallas got another chance, starting at its 7-yard line with 2:37 to play. White completed four passes, including a 17-yarder to Mike Renfro at the Washington 20.

White threw an interception and then Dorsett gained three yards on a draw play and Dallas had to use its final time out.

The Redskins' secondary covered well on third-down-and-7, and White scrambled for four yards to the 13 before his final pass fell incomplete.

Washington allowed Dallas only 90 yards rushing and never allowed Dorsett to break away. His longest gain was 11 yards.

Dallas leads the series against the Redskins 31-22-2.

Ryan will be back with Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros have exercised the option on veteran pitcher Nolan Ryan's contract for the 1988 season, Astros General Manager Dick Wagner said Monday.

Wagner, who is leaving the Astros on Friday, made the announcement to keep Ryan another season after the two met during the weekend.

"Everyone associated with the Astros is pleased that Nolan will be a member of the Astros in 1988," Wagner said. "This certainly helped to solidify the pitching," he said. "His stats for 1987 were exceptional."

Although Ryan posted eight victories and 16 losses, he also led the major leagues with 270 strikeouts in 1987 and tied Toronto's Jimmy Key for the major league lead in earned-run average at 2.76.

Terms of Ryan's contract were not disclosed.

Friesz earns weekly BSC player award

BOISE (AP) — University of Idaho quarterback John Friesz and Weber State wide receiver Wade Orton have been named Big Sky Conference offensive players of the week, while Montana defensive end Pat Foster holds the lone defensive honor.

Friesz, a sophomore from Coeur d'Alene, earned a share of the award for the second straight week as he marshaled Idaho to a 38-28 victory over No. 11-ranked Nevada-Reno. He passed for 363 yards and five touchdowns with no interceptions.

Orton, a junior from Kanab, Utah, caught 10 passes for 230 yards and two touchdowns as No. 13-ranked Weber State kept up its undefeated streak in Big Sky play with a 35-32 road win at Montana State.

Welshman wins world match play

WENTWORTH, England (AP) — Ian Woosnam became the first British holder of the World Match Play Golf Championship Monday, edging countryman Sandy Ley as one hole in an exciting climax to the rain-delayed final.

The 5-foot-4 Welshman, Europe's leading money winner this season, added $120,000 while ending Ley's dream of winning the title for the first time in his fourth attempt.

Torrential rain and hurricane-force winds early in the event had postponed the final from Sunday to Monday. It was worth the wait.

Three-times previously, Ley had lost in the final of this event, but when he went to lunch 1-up after a birdie-birdie finish, it appeared he would get the elusive title.

Correction

The Times-News incorrectly reported in Saturday's edition that the College of Southern Idaho's men's basketball team would play a series of scrimmages this week.

The games will be played next week.

The Eagles will take on a team from Mountain Home Air Force Base at 8 p.m. Monday and hold a benefit scrimmage of the Idaho chapter of the American Cancer Society at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 27. Both games will be played in the CSI gym.

The Eagles will play a team of Northside alumni on Thursday, Oct. 29, at 7 p.m. in the Kimberly High gym.

The Times-News regrets the error.

Atlanta kept only two replacements — quarterback Erik Kramer, who threw for 336 yards and three second-half touchdowns as the Falcons overcame a 17-0 deficit and beat the Los Angeles Rams 24-20 Sunday night at the Georgia Dome.

The New York Giants kept offensive linemen Dan Morgan and Mike Black from the group that went 0-3 and left the Super Bowl champions in desperate straits.

Other teams retained several players.

Indianapolis Coach Ron Meyer cut just 16 replacements, retaining 71, although he said more would be cut later this week.

Cleveland retained 16 strike players, although Coach Marty Schottenheimer said the active roster for next Monday night's game with the Rams would be the same 45 as on the roster when the strike started.

The Denver Broncos kept 11 players, including running back Joe Duke, quarterback Ken Carcher and nine others, while cutting 37.

Miami kept 14 replacements, New Orleans 11 — including much-travelled quarterback John Fouts — including defensive linemen Scott Mereseau and linebacker Jay Brophy.

"The strike is the reason one of our players is with us," Jets Coach Joe Walton said, referring to Mereseau, a fifth-round draft choice of the Los Angeles Rams from San Diego last year.

"As we entered the season, one of our biggest question marks was the defensive line, particularly nose tackle. He's shown he can play. At this point, that area looks a little brighter."

Another player who may have earned a job was punter Tommy Bartholomew of New Orleans, who averaged 44 yards a kick in three games. Regular punter Brian Hansen, a former Pro Bowler, averaged 36.9 in two pre-strike games.

The most bittersweet parting for the replacements was at San Diego, where the irregulars went 3-0, putting the Chargers at 4-1, their best start since 1981.

"Just another day at the office," said quarterback Mike Kelley, who threw a touchdown pass and a 67-yard completion to set up a field goal — as the Chargers beat the Raiders 23-17. San Diego's first-ever victory over the Raiders at Los Angeles.

Mattino said. "He did what he could. He put the best players on the field every day and made the right moves. We just didn't produce. We didn't play well when we had to. But we never lost respect for Lou. Never. We played hard for him."

Piniella has one year remaining on his two-year contract — though Steinbrenner's decisions have never been affected by that.

"I had a job to do and did it to the best of my ability," Piniella said in the last week of the season. "I just wouldn't be liked to have seen this club if we didn't exist. But we're talked enough about injuries. We're not making excuses. It's just a shame."

The Yankees suffered major injuries to their first two hitters in the lineup — outfielder Rickey Henderson, with a right hamstring strain, and second baseman Willis Randolph, torn knee cartilage and eventual surgery. They missed a combined 109 games.

Piniella did not talk with Steinbrenner for almost a month after missing a schedule call from his boss on Aug. 3. Piniella later apologized for not being in his hotel room to accept on Oct. 27, 1985, just before the start of Game 7 of the World Series between Kansas City and St. Louis. He had been named Yogi Berra — 16 games into the season.

On Sept. 20 in Baltimore, he got into a fight with team patron at the Cross Keys Inn, where the Yankees were staying. The next night, he broke his arm as he fought Yankees' pitcher Ed Whitson in the hotel lobby, in an elevator and in the parking lot.

Although the Yankees were 81-54 under him, Steinbrenner decided to switch to Piniella.

In 1976, New York won the first pennant since 1954, and in 1977 the Yankees won the World Series by beating the Los Angeles Dodgers in six games.

But the Yankees fought while they won. Martin nearly brawled with Reggie Jackson in the dugout at Fenway Park on June 18, 1977. It was a dispute with Jackson that led to Martin's first Yankee firing the next season.

On July 19, 1978, Jackson ignored Martin's instructions to hunk in a game. Jackson was suspended for five days. Martin continued to show anger at his star player and on July 23 at O'Hare Airport in Chicago, Martin said of Jackson and Steinbrenner: "One's a born liar; the other's convicted."

"They've won six out of seven and Viola and Blyleven have won all six," Herzog said. Reliever Jeff Reardon actually won one of them after taking over for Viola.

The Twins are the only team to reach the World Series despite being outscored during the regular season. Yet in seven of the 16 games with a 2.90 earned run average; the next-best ERA on the team belongs to reliever Juan Berenguer at 3.94.

Twins Manager Tom Kelly sidestepped any debate about his team, pitchers or World Series setup.

"I've asked a guesser it's OK," he said, "if off to a series it's OK."

"I don't care to tie to figure it out," he said. "It's up to that way, and I don't see to think about it."

Kelly said Joe Niekro, the 21-year knuckleballer, could make his first World Series appearance in Game 4.

"There's a good possibility. It's not gospel yet," Kelly said. "I haven't really decided."

"Viola is in good shape according to our trainers. He rebounds well. But, I really haven't thought about it yet."

Most likely, Niekro will start Game 4 if the Twins lead 3-0. Otherwise, it will probably be Viola. Left-hander Greg Mathews will start the fourth game for St. Louis; if Tudor falters, it might be all over for the Cardinals. No baseball team has ever overcome a 3-0 deficit in the postseason.

Of the 37 teams that have taken a 2-0 lead in the World Series, 27 have gone on to win. One of those clubs that did not win was the 1965 Twins, who beat Sandy Koufax and Don Drysdale in the first two games before losing in seven to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"We haven't accomplished anything yet," Kelly said.

CSI men finish fifth at ISU meet

By The Times-News

POCATELLO — The College of Southern Idaho's men's cross country team finished fifth at the annual "Top Hiker" for the CSI men's meet on Saturday at Idaho State University.

The Eagles, the only junior college runners in the meet, rolled up 100 points to finish behind Boise State with 38 points, Idaho State with 39, Utah with 78 and Montana State with 93. Southern Utah State was sixth with 257. The "Top Hiker" for the CSI men's meet was Todd McKay, who covered the 5.2-mile course in 27 minutes, 49 seconds to finish 13th. Teammate Rick Covarrubias was 19th in a time of 28:08, while Ammon Bennett finished 29th in 28:39. Tom Scott was 34th in 29:03, while Robert McGovern finished 36th at 29:30 and Chris Chavez finished 37th in 29:33.

Paula Wartlauf was the top CSI women's finisher, taking 28th place on the 3.1-mile course in 50:51. Orallo Castaner was 50th in 72:34.

The meet, the first of the year for the Eagles' combined team, wrapped up the regular season for CSI. The Eagles will host the Region 16 championship on Saturday at the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course.

Decline affects everyone, not just Wall Street

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market's stupefying drop has injected frightening uncertainty into the economy and could have a profound impact on millions of Americans who don't ordinarily think about the wild gyrations of Wall Street.

The results of a violently depressed stock market may be felt over the next several months in the form of lower consumer spending, higher unemployment, reductions in business plans and even a recession, economists said Monday.

"The stock market always has been a leading indicator of the economy," said John Markese, vice president of the American Association of Individual Investors in Chicago. "If the market is right and it's a precursor of a declining economy, then we all have to be worried."

"The impact of a bear market already has started to affect fortunes on Wall Street, where many young professional brokers accustomed to six-figure salaries and high-priced Manhattan condos are confronting the prospect they may take pay cuts or possibly lose their jobs.

More than 1,000 people have been laid off in the past month, and several major brokerages reportedly are contemplating big restructurings on the theory that the market's 5-year-old upward direction has reversed and interest rates are starting to rise significantly.

Many economists said the sudden loss of hundreds of billions of dollars worth of stock value would ripple through the economy in waves, simply by making investors much more cautious about where they put their money or convincing them to keep it in safe, interest-bearing savings accounts.

"A lot of people could be affected by a prolonged and severe decline in the market," said James Lorie, a professor at the University of Chicago's graduate business school. "A major market decline represents a major decline in wealth, and people's willingness to spend money depends on wealth. The indirect effect could be significant to people who don't invest."

For example, investors who had wanted to buy new cars, houses or appliances with earnings from their stock mutual funds might scrap those plans now. That in turn could hurt auto dealers, retailers and building contractors, who already are suffering from economic sluggishness and rising interest rates.

Many companies could be particularly hard hit by the market debacle because their pension funds were among the most significant institutional investors. Although the pensions of an estimated 40 million Americans aren't jeopardized, companies may have to compensate for stock losses suffered by those funds.

"People should be concerned about the market because many own stocks, whether they know it or not, through a pension fund," said Steven Mjlin, an economist at the Conference Board, a business research group in New York.

"Obviously, what has happened in many companies is that the rise in the stock market had been so profligate that pensions were overfunded and the companies didn't have to contribute," he said. "We may get into a situation where a company might have to make a contribution. For companies with tight budgets, that could mean jobs."

Traders on the New York Stock Exchange work frantically to sell during frenzied Monday

Reagan-calm Market chair: never seen 'worse market'

The Associated Press

President Reagan sought to soothe panicky investors Monday by calling the stock market's 500-point plunge inconsistent with healthy economic signals, but other White House officials, congressional leaders and the New York Stock Exchange's chairman suggested the drop was far more serious.

"I don't think anyone should panic because all the economic indicators are solid," Reagan told reporters after conferring with advisers about the stock market's worst day since the Great Crash of 1929.

Nevertheless, Robert Ortner, a senior administration economist, said the drop was either a sharp correction or "the first signal of the next recession."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the administration was not alarmed by the market's fall, but "on the other hand, it is a situation we have to watch."

David S. Ruder, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, told reporters in Washington that the SEC was contemplating ways to halt the plunge and said the market's "volatility is something we all need to worry about."

In New York, NYSE Chairman John Phelan called the selloff "the worst market I have ever seen in my lifetime or would hope to see again."

Phelan rejected suggestions that the nation's biggest stock exchange would suspend trading or open late Tuesday. But he asserted the drop would have ripple effects in other markets.

Asked his prediction for the market Tuesday, Phelan said: "I'm like everyone else in America. I'm praying for an up day, not a down one."

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said of the market slide, "Today, the bad news is another drop that can be heard around the world."

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, assailed Treasury Secretary James A. Baker's remarks Sunday in which he blamed Wall Street's problems on investor fears of congressional tax increases.

"The blame rests with an administration that won't sit down and face up to the tough choices, determine what the priorities are and where the cuts must be made," Bentsen said.

Similarity Economists discount any 1929 parallels

Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — The stock market's breathtaking plunge has evoked memories of the stock market crash of October 1929, which burst the euphoria of a decade-long speculative bubble and foreshadowed the Great Depression.

But though the parallels seem to grow daily, economists and other analysts say the similarities are still far outweighed by the differences between the current decline and the debacle of 1929. Since the Great Crash, limits have been placed on borrowing for stock purchases, government has assumed an active role in regulating the markets and the economy, and nations have made greater efforts to minimize international economic disruptions.

Today's economy is far stronger than the one that succumbed to depression within three years of the 1929 market dive.

To be sure, Monday's drop in the Dow Jones industrial average has far overshadowed the losses suffered on Black Monday — Oct. 28, 1929 — when the Dow lost 12.82 percent of its value. The index fell 508.32 points on Monday, to 1,738.42, for a 22.62 percent loss that astonished the gloomiest of market analysts.

Yet the market has a way to go to match the collapse that occurred between 1929 and 1932, when the market finally hit bottom. The decline represented nearly 90 percent of the Dow's value; so far, the Dow has fallen 36.14 percent from its Aug. 25 peak of 2,722.42.

Even with Monday's sell-off, the Dow is up 124 percent from its level in August 1982, when the bull market began.

In fact, the Dow still has a way to go to match the losses of the 1973-74 market plunge, which still represents the sharpest decline since World War II. That market, troubled by runaway inflation, a volatile dollar and the loss of confidence in the U.S. government that followed Watergate, lost nearly 50 percent of its worth in that period, analysts note.

"The point drops of these recent sessions are shocking, but it's important to remember that there have been other big falls, too," said Robert A. Cavesh, professor of finance at New York University.

The bull market of the 1980s never reached the dizzying heights of the 1920s market, when the Dow rose more than 500 percent. At the peak in August, the Dow had climbed nearly 250 percent.

The market boom of the 1920s was largely propelled by investors who borrowed heavily to purchase stocks, since the rules of the day required them to put down only 10 percent of the purchase price. This "margin" buying contributed heavily to the market's collapse, for when prices fell, investors were required to come up with the money to cover their losses.

And when they could not, their stocks were sold, driving the market down further.

Investors are now required to put up at least 50 percent of a stock's price. The Securities and Exchange Commission, which didn't exist in 1929, acts rules to ensure that Wall Street companies have enough capital to make good their debts to investors if the market tumbles.

Global market plunge spread financial panic worldwide

By The Washington Post

Financial panic spread around the world Monday as a series of stock market collapses followed the sun from Asia through Europe and back to New York.

The panic started over again Tuesday morning in Tokyo, when in the first hour of trading the market plunged another 729.19 yen on top of Monday's drop of 620.18 yen.

Japanese brokers reported they had been flooded with sell orders at the opening, which was just four hours after the New York exchange closed.

The markets Monday took huge losses, including the biggest one-day plunge in the history of the London Stock Exchange, in reaction to last week's record declines on the New York Stock Exchange and comments by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III that were interpreted to mean that the United States wants the dollar to fall further.

In London alone the losses were estimated at $90 billion, 12 percent of the value of the shares on the exchange.

It was the first time so many stock exchanges around the world have taken such a beating in a single day, a result of the globalization of financial markets. In this new international marketplace money is transferred from country to country with a telephone call and there barely is an hour in the day when some exchange is not trading stock.

"This is our first really global crash," said Prof. Morris Mendelson of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business. The markets "are all tied together. This is one financial world today."

"For the first time, you have a global economy," added Prof. Jagdish N. Sheth of the University of Southern California School of Business Administration. "What happens in one market can be picked up very quickly in the others. It began here last week, spread to Tokyo, Hong Kong and London today (Monday). Speed is the key. It happened in the old days, but now it takes hours, not weeks."

In Tokyo Monday, the market nose dived to its sixth largest one-day loss on record — a drop of 620.18 yen in the Nikkei average of 225 stocks. The market came back slightly in afternoon trading from a day's low that was down 716 yen.

Big losers in Tokyo were export-related issues such as electronics, autos and precision instruments companies. Traders were concerned that a further rise in the value of the yen relative to the dollar would hurt those industries' overseas sales.

The market fall followed by only a few days a surge last Wednesday that took the index to a new high of 26,646.43 yen. Monday's close was 25,746.56 yen.

In Hong Kong, panic selling hit the market, which also suffered its worst single-day loss, with the Hang Seng Index falling by 11 percent, a record 420.81 points. Dealers noted that the sell-off was even greater than the sharp fall touched off in 1983 on the announcement that the Crown Colony would become part of China when the British lease expires in 1997.

Elsewhere in Asia, markets in Singapore and Sydney also plunged to record losses before the sharp downturn moved across to Europe.

In London, where the stock market fell 249.6 points, close to five times the previous record loss for a day, some British brokers drowned their sorrows in champagne. "It's the traditional way to celebrate disaster, and believe me today has been a disaster," said broker Symon Wright.

The London market was closed Friday because of a major storm, and when it opened Monday major investment institutions, pension funds and insurance houses already had lists full of sell orders triggered by the drops on Wall Street last week.

The selling pressure was compounded by fears of major storm-related insurance claims and news that Asian markets were falling.

The midday news of the U.S. raid on an Iranian oil rig, raising fears of a widening of the war in the Persian Gulf, worsened the fall. At the end of last week, the Financial Times Index stood at just over 2300. Within 10 minutes of Monday's opening, it had dropped 136.6 points and by early-afternoon the fall had increased to 280.2. When Wall Street opened with a downward spiral, the London exchange fell to its lowest point of the day, a drop of 301.27 points, before recovering slightly at the close.

 Analysts had hoped that the selling frenzy hitting the world would stop in London, especially since there is high confidence in the stability of the British economy.
 When the tidal wave of sales engulfed the London exchange, however, analysts pointed the finger of blame at Reagan administration economic policies.
 "I think the essence of the problem is a lack of confidence about American (economic) policy and a worry that U.S. interest rates are going higher," said Roger Bootle, chief economist at Lloyd's Merchant Bank.
 The fall may increase problems for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, since it came as her government is in the midst of selling off major government-owned enterprises. There were concerns in the market that the stock plunge will hurt investor interest in the largest-over share sale when government-owned British Petroleum Co. is put on the block later this month.
 In Frankfurt, the stock market also took a dive as the widely-watched Commerzbank index dropped 132.5 points, to 1744.11, again a record fall.

 The market stayed open an extra 30 minutes to cope with a surge of small orders and because of the difficulties in finding buyers for the flood of sell orders.
 Germany's concern over a further fall in the U.S. dollar played a major role in influencing the stock market plunge, analysts said. U.S. Treasury Secretary Baker, who was in Bonn meeting with German financial officials yesterday, had hinted over the weekend that the United States might let the dollar drop against the mark because Germany is not living up to the Louvre agreement by holding down short-term interest rates.
 The increase in the value of the mark has hurt profit margins of German corporations.
 Prices also plunged on other stock markets throughout Europe. In Amsterdam, dealers called the sell-off "the Monday massacre" as prices fell a record 12.9 percent.

Parallels

 The companies are also insured to guarantee that they have enough money to pay off investors and keep money in the securities market.
 "There's a whole elaborate system that's developed over the years to monitor and regulate," said Edward I. O'Brien, president of the Securities Industry Association.
 The changed role of the government is dramatically reflected in the attitudes of the Federal Reserve Board. In 1929, the Federal Reserve, seeking to maintain the gold standard, took a passive role after the crash that allowed the money supply to contract nearly 30 percent, placing a further, heavier burden on the economy.

Experts say the withdrawal of even a modest share of the capital in the stock market can set off a sharp drop in stock prices.
 While the U.S. market's plunge was mirrored in markets elsewhere, Wall Street's fall may be considered the first cause of the drop, "and that concerns me," he said.

Today the question is not whether the Fed should expand the money supply but by how much," said James Lorie, a University of Chicago business professor.
 Also underlying the financial markets and the economy is the federal banking insurance system, which guarantees deposits in banks and savings and loans. While banks have gone out of business regularly these days, a bank that failed in the 1920s, with no deposit insurance, had a far more serious effect on the public, economists point out.
 The U.S. economy was expanding at the time of the Great Crash, but serious problems were also becoming apparent. In addition to bank failures, the agricultural sector and coal mining "were seriously depressed. Unlike today, unemployment was high by historic levels," said John A. Garraty, professor of history at Columbia University and author of "The Great Depression."

While the economy's expansion has been fitful in recent years, most analysts have expected a moderately healthy expansion of nearly 3 percent in the gross national product this year and a similar figure next year.
 In 1929, nations were less inclined to cooperate with each other to try to maintain currency value and healthy trade relations, economists note.
 The current market fall was set off in part by a United States dispute with the Germans and Japanese over the two nations' plans to raise their interest rates in what U.S. officials considered a breach of an international understanding. But in 1929, economists say, the countries would not even have attempted to reach such an understanding.
 The growing interdependence of the world's economy, in some ways a threat to national economies, may also be a stabilizing factor, economists say. The interdependence might mean that, if one economy collapses, stronger trading partners will continue to offer a market for its goods and help its recovery.
 But while these differences with 1929 are encouraging, other developments in the markets and the economy disturb many analysts.
 Critics say relatively new securities and stock trading practices have increased the volatility of the market. Among them are so-called program trading, in which investors seek to exploit differences between the price of stock index futures and the prices of underlying stocks; and portfolio insurance, a recently developing trading technique that calls for investors to sell as prices drop.
 Both practices hastening the fall of stocks in a declining market.
 Critics have also found fault with the volatility involved in such inventions as stock index futures.
 In buying these securities, investors bet on the future price of an average of several stocks. While they are a means for big investors to off-set the risk of a sharp rise of fall in his stock portfolio, "when I shift that risk off my back, I shift it to somebody else's," said Alan Bromberg, professor of securities law at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.
 Many see big risks, too, in the American market's dependence on foreign capital. Before the current sell-off began, foreign investors had $200 billion in New York Stock Exchange securities — about 8 percent of the total — and a 38 percent inwith a frequently asked question about the United Way of the Magic Valley.

Q: Why doesn't United Way serve all of the fund raising groups?

A: United Way has an "Open Door" policy. Any agency which does not duplicate services can be considered for admission. In some cases, agencies do not join United Way due to their national policies. Others do not meet all of the United Way admission standards.

When a United Way Volunteer calls on you at your job, give your fair share to your United Way. One hour a month will make a difference to United Way Agencies and the entire community.

One donation to the United Way and you've given to 18 agencies right here in Magic Valley. If you find it difficult to donate your time to public service, donate through your company's payroll deduction plan.

The United Way works for you, the donor. Give your fair share today through your place of employment or call the United Way.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"There is plenty of courage among us for the abstract but not for the concrete."
 — Helen Keller.

Put yourself in today's East chair. See if you can find the best defense against South's spade game.
 South ruffs your heart king, cashes two high trumps with a frown and then leads his club king to your ace. It's now your moment of truth. What should you lead?

If you, as East, follow the course of least resistance, you lead a "safe" low heart and South runs off with an unmakeable game. After South ruffs, he leads a low club toward dummy and the defense is finished. If West wins and shifts to diamonds, dummy's ace goes up and South discards two diamonds on the high clubs. If West ducks his club queen, the defenders get only one trump, one diamond and one club.
 To beat the game, East must return the diamond king after winning his ace of clubs. This courageous play removes dummy's entry before the clubs are established, and the defenders are sure to win four tricks.

 Experts say the withdrawal of even a modest share of the capital in the stock market can set off a sharp drop in stock prices.
 While the U.S. market's plunge was mirrored in markets elsewhere, Wall Street's fall may be considered the first cause of the drop, "and that concerns me," he said.

Today the question is not whether the Fed should expand the money supply but by how much," said James Lorie, a University of Chicago business professor.
 Also underlying the financial markets and the economy is the federal banking insurance system, which guarantees deposits in banks and savings and loans. While banks have gone out of business regularly these days, a bank that failed in the 1920s, with no deposit insurance, had a far more serious effect on the public, economists point out.
 The U.S. economy was expanding at the time of the Great Crash, but serious problems were also becoming apparent. In addition to bank failures, the agricultural sector and coal mining "were seriously depressed. Unlike today, unemployment was high by historic levels," said John A. Garraty, professor of history at Columbia University and author of "The Great Depression."

In addition to bank failures, the agricultural sector and coal mining "were seriously depressed. Unlike today, unemployment was high by historic levels," said John A. Garraty, professor of history at Columbia University and author of "The Great Depression."

While the economy's expansion has been fitful in recent years, most analysts have expected a moderately healthy expansion of nearly 3 percent in the gross national product this year and a similar figure next year.
 In 1929, nations were less inclined to cooperate with each other to try to maintain currency value and healthy trade relations, economists note.
 The current market fall was set off in part by a United States dispute with the Germans and Japanese over the two nations' plans to raise their interest rates in what U.S. officials considered a breach of an international understanding. But in 1929, economists say, the countries would not even have attempted to reach such an understanding.
 The growing interdependence of the world's economy, in some ways a threat to national economies, may also be a stabilizing factor, economists say. The interdependence might mean that, if one economy collapses, stronger trading partners will continue to offer a market for its goods and help its recovery.
 But while these differences with 1929 are encouraging, other developments in the markets and the economy disturb many analysts.
 Critics say relatively new securities and stock trading practices have increased the volatility of the market. Among them are so-called program trading, in which investors seek to exploit differences between the price of stock index futures and the prices of underlying stocks; and portfolio insurance, a recently developing trading technique that calls for investors to sell as prices drop.
 Both practices hastening the fall of stocks in a declining market.
 Critics have also found fault with the volatility involved in such inventions as stock index futures.
 In buying these securities, investors bet on the future price of an average of several stocks. Chairman: No plan to close market

NEW YORK (AP) — The head of the New York Stock Exchange said Monday there are no plans to close the exchange in response to a securities selloff he described as "the worst market I have ever seen in my lifetime or would hope to see again."

John Phelan, the exchange's chairman and chief executive, said there was no reason for the markets to open late Tuesday.

Speaking at a crowded news conference at the exchange, Phelan called Monday's activity that saw the Dow Jones industrial average plummet an unofficial 608 points a "significant fall, a significant decline of assets."

He said the drop to 1,738 in the widely watched indicator represented a "culmination of things that have been building up for the last nine months," including a rise in interest rates, rekindled inflation fears, a decline in the dollar and "five years of a bull market without a correction."

Asked if Monday's severe performance constituted a financial "meltdown," Phelan replied: "I'd call it the nearest thing to a meltdown I'd ever want to see," and one that will have ripple effects in other markets.

The exchange consulted with the Securities and Exchange Commission and other Washington officials throughout the day, he said, but decided against closing the market because such a move would have had a "far more adverse effect" than keeping them open.

While Phelan said his role at the helm of the exchange forces him to be "an eternal optimist," he stressed that "these things tend to exhaust themselves." He predicted the negative activity would bottom out and that the market would find a new equilibrium.

The exchange chairman also said he knew of no major investment houses that were experiencing "significant" problems.

The exchange's trading system, which handled an unofficial record volume of 604.4 million shares, worked very well throughout the day, he said. While Phelan said the system could handle another day of similar volume, he said he hoped that would not have to be tested.

In an attempt to allay fears, Phelan said, "all of us are with" the small investor.

Computer traders lead stock plunge

Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — In December 1986, New York Stock Exchange Chairman John J. Phelan warned a Washington audience that a new form of computerized stock and futures trading known as portfolio insurance could someday lead to "financial meltdown."

The markets laughed him off, but Phelan's term may now have burned itself into the stock market's permanent lexicon.

Much of Wall Street's panic selling in the last week is blamed on the activities of portfolio insurers. There are strong indications that the computerized programs, designed to hasten selling when the markets turn down in an effort to protect clients from the impact of sharp declines, inspired the snowballing waves of selling.

The impact of portfolio insurance programs on the market's epic free fall Monday and last week cannot be precisely gauged. But estimates place the amount of assets "protected" by the programs, including the vast securities portfolios of such institutional investors as Actna Life & Casualty Co., at as much as $61 billion.

"Because of the mechanics of portfolio insurance, a significant portion of that pool of cash was poised before all at once to begin marching, all at once, in a single direction: down. If that money's all moving at the same time, it has a considerable impact," Robert Gordon, president of Twenty-First Securities, a New York investment management house, said Monday.

What's more, the leading insurance technique involves selling not stocks, but related stock-index futures, and using the proceeds to offset stock losses. As the selling waves hit the futures markets, they

Gold prices surged in Monday's wake

By The Associated Press

Gold prices surged forward in the wake of Monday's stock market plunge, surpassing $480 a troy ounce, their highest level since the winter of 1983.

Meanwhile, gold stocks were among the only shares that bucked the ongoing selloff on the New York Stock Exchange. Only 15 of the approximately 1,600 stocks traded on the NYSE rose in Monday's wild selling spree.

Shares of such gold producers as Newmont Mining, Northgate Exploration and Sunshine Mining were among those that gained in trading — a day when the Dow Jones Industrial Average fell more than 600 points.

Newmont Mining, in the lead of takeover battle with investor T. Boone Pickens, rose 10 percent in value to close at $39.50 a share.

Silver prices also benefited from the gold rush. The bid silver price was $8.30 an ounce in London, up 47 cents from Friday, and $8.19 on the New York Commodity Exchange, up from $7.88 Friday.

The flight into precious metals, gold in particular, usually occurs in times of instability in world financial markets. Monday's nervousness was heightened further by continued turmoil in the oil-sensitive Persian Gulf that was exacerbated by the U.S. attack on an Iranian oil platform.

Oil prices initially rose Monday on news of the attack, but fell later in the mass move to safe-haven investments. The November delivery price for West Texas Intermediate ended at $19.80, off 42 cents.

On another front, retail coin dealers reported a surge in the sale of one-ounce government coins known as the American Eagle and Canadian Maple Leaf.

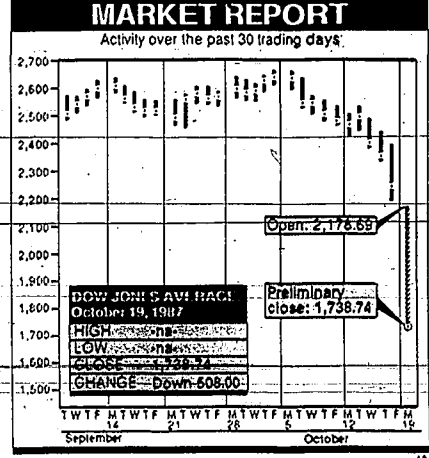

Hallock Coin & Jewelry in Anaheim, Calif., crowded with customers Monday, sold "several dozen" of these gold coins, about five times the normal amount, said Scott Hallock, whose family owns the store.

The one-ounce coins were selling for about $600 apiece. "People are very nervous," Hallock noted. "They don't like to see a market like this."

"The move into the gold market has been modest," said Donald McAlvany, president of International Collectors Association, a gold brokerage in Denver. "There is no stampede yet."

Gold prices haven't been this high since closing at $608.70 a troy ounce on the New York Commodity Exchange on Feb. 18, 1983.

Republic National Bank in New York quoted a $486.50 per-ounce price late Monday afternoon, up $15.60 from Friday's close. The price on the Comex closed at $481.70, up from $471.60 Friday. The closing bid price was $488.50 and the Zurich bid $487.50 in London.

Biggest 15 daily drops listed below

NEW YORK (AP) — Here is a list of the 15 biggest daily percentage losses in the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks:

- Dec. 12, 1914 — 24.4 percent, off 17.42 points to $4.00.
- Oct. 19, 1987 — 22.9 percent, off 608.00 points to 1,738.74.
- Oct. 28, 1929 — 12.8 percent, off 38.33 points to 260.64.
- Oct. 29, 1929 — 11.7 percent, off 30.67 points to 230.07.
- Nov. 6, 1929 — 9.9 percent, off 25.55 points to 232.13.
- Dec. 18, 1899 — 8.7 percent, off 57 points to 65.27.
- Aug. 12, 1982 — 8.4 percent, off

- 6.79 points to 63.11.
- March 14, 1907 — 8.3 percent, off 6.89 points to 76.23.
- July 21, 1933 — 7.84 percent, off 7.55 points to 88.71.
- Oct. 18, 1937 — 7.75 percent, off 10.57 points to 125.74.
- Feb. 1, 1912 — 7.24 percent, off 91 points to 85.52.
- Oct. 5, 1932 — 7.15 percent, off 09 points to 66.07.
- Sept. 24, 1941 — 7.07 percent, off 8.20 points to 107.79.
- July 20, 1933 — 7.07 percent, off 7.32 points to 96.28.
- July 30, 1914 — 6.9 percent, off 30 points to 71.42.

Few stocks rose, but most plummet

NEW YORK (AP) — There were some winners, but mostly losers, Monday as the stock market made its dramatic plunge.

The most prominent stocks to escape the carnage were those of gold-mining and other precious metals companies.

Newmont Gold carried the distinction of posting the day's best percentage gain among New York Stock Exchange issues, rising 4.76 a share to $39.50.

Callahan Mining rose $2.25 to $32.50 and Sunshine Mining gained 25 cents to $5.75. Both are silver producers.

Gold prices rose Monday as investors, following a long tradition in times of great uncertainty, turned to precious metals as a haven.

Other than the mining issues, the biggest industrial name among the day's percentage gainers was Pleas-ey Co., a British electronics concern, which was up $1.60 to $35.50.

Among the day's biggest percentage losers were retailers Zayre, down 9.12% a share at $15.62 1/2, and Shoe-Town, down $2.62 1/2 at $4.00. Technology issues such as Comdisco, down $10.25 at $17.50, and Baker Hughes, in the oil service group, which was off $7.62 1/2 at $31.25.

The household-name blue chips, which generally trade at higher prices, did not show such big percentage declines. But the names and numbers showed just how severe the drop was.

Ford Motor fell $15.25 to $69; Exxon $10.25 to $36.50; International Business Machines $31.25 to $108.25; American Express $5 to $22.50; General Electric $5.87 1/2 to $41.87 1/2; Gillette $8.75 to $24; and American Telephone & Telegraph $6.37 1/2 to $23.62 1/2.

Corporate news

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Morrison Knudsen Corp. has confirmed its chief executive's week-old forecast of a record third-quarter loss amid a campaign to restructure the corporation and reassess its domestic operations and pension program.

Corporate news

But in a signal of recovery in the future, the company also said it had a near-record backlog of work on which to base its bid for renewed high-level earnings.

Corporate news

The Boise-based international engineering, construction and shipbuilding company announced Monday that it suffered a net loss of $68.2 million during the third period through September.

Corporate news

The record loss, translating into $6.30 per share of common stock, turned earnings of $12 million during the same period a year ago, and the first half of 1987 into an accumulated net loss of $68.2 million after nine months of operations this year.

Corporate news

Chief Executive William Deasy attributed the red ink to charges for discontinued real estate operations, provisions for project losses in construction, mining and shipbuilding and writedowns associated with foreign investment.

Nakasone selects new party leader

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone on Monday chose Noboru Takeshita to succeed him as president of the Liberal Democratic Party, virtually ensuring he will be Japan's next prime minister.

Party Deputy Secretary General Soukei Uno said Nakasone chose Takeshita over two other contenders, party Executive Council Chairman Shintaro Abe and Finance Minister Kichi Miyazawa, just before midnight. Nakasone is stepping down as party leader on Oct. 30 after five years in office.

Takeshita, a former finance minister who now is secretary of the governing party and head of its largest faction, will serve as prime minister and party president for at least two years after his expected confirmation.

A party convention has been set for Oct. 31 and the Diet, or parliament, is to meet in an extraordinary session, expected on Nov. 6, to elect him prime minister.

The party's large majority in both legislative houses assures his election.

"I am determined to make utmost efforts to maintain party unity and tackle various tasks facing and involving Japan," Takeshita said after his nomination.

Takeshita, who prefers back-room consensus-building to Nakasone's more free-wheeling style of leadership, has said he will follow such major Nakasone policies as steering the economy to less dependence on exports, and maintaining the close security relationship with the United States.

Takeshita will become Japan's 74th prime minister since the nation's cabinet system was inaugurated in 1885.

Uno told a nationally televised news conference that Nakasone, informing Takeshita of his choice, asked him to name Abe and Miyazawa to the key posts of party secretary general and deputy prime minister in his future Cabinet.

The arrangement by Nakasone was made to avoid a divisive vote

in the Diet on a new party leader after extended talks among the three contenders and other party leaders failed to produce a consensus by Monday night, a day before the deadline.

Nakasone had been elected twice to two-year terms as party leader and his second term was extended by one year in a rare exception after the party won a landslide victory in the summer of 1986.

If the issue had not been decided by Tuesday morning, the party's 445 legislators in the upper and lower houses of Parliament would have voted Tuesday on the party president.

Takeshita and the other two candidates have pledged to continue Nakasone's policies of transforming the economy into one less dependent on exports, and of maintaining a close security relationship with the United States. They also cite the need for a new land-use policy to improve urban-housing, and for an overhaul of national tax laws.

Takeshita, the onetime judo expert from the isolated Japan Sea prefecture (state) of Shimane, is known as a skillful internal party maneuverer and a patient and cautious negotiator. He has little international experience.

Shultz: No new ground broken for peace

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said on Monday that Israel and Egypt have a "genuine preoccupation with the importance of peace" but said his Middle East visit broke no new ground toward that goal.

However, he said his discussions with leaders of the two countries convinced him that "people are putting a higher and higher premium on the importance of getting somewhere."

Shultz spoke briefly with reporters during a six-hour stop in Cairo. The trip followed visits to Israel and Saudi Arabia.

He left Cairo for London for a meeting with King Hussein of Jordan. The monarch is visiting the British capital.

Shultz approached regional leaders on prospects for an international Middle East peace conference. Hussein, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres support the idea, but Peres' coalition partner, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, strongly opposes it.

In Cairo, Shultz and Mubarak extended their scheduled 30-minute private meeting to 90 minutes, then met for another hour over lunch.

Shultz said he and Mubarak discussed the Arab-Israeli question and the Iran-Iraq war. But he ignored reporters' questions about U.S. military actions in the Persian Gulf. Shultz said the ultimate goal of any peace process in the region should be direct negotiations between Israel and the Arabs, pointing to the Jewish state's peace treaty with Egypt as a model.

"We had worthwhile discussions about (prospects for peace) in Israel and here," Shultz said, speaking outside Mubarak's office in his suburban palace.

100 feared dead in collision

Los Angeles Times

JAKARTA, Indonesia — More than 100 people were feared dead and 200 seriously injured in a head-on collision between two Indonesian commuter trains in the southern suburbs of Jakarta early Monday.

A railway official said that most of the victims had been riding on the train roofs or sitting on the couplings between the cars.

City police chief Maj. Gen. Poedi Syanuddin said that investigators were trying to determine how the two trains, carrying an estimated 2,100 passengers came to be on the same track.

Hospital sources said that by late afternoon they had counted a total of 104 dead, with scores of other victims in critical condition.

Rescue workers were still tearing apart wreckage searching for bodies or survivors.

Professors mount strike at university

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The military government's attempt to apply its pay-as-you-go philosophy to higher education has produced a bitter standoff at the country's biggest university.

The 17,000-student University of Chile in Santiago has been paralyzed by a professors' strike since late August. The conflict, marked by occasional violence, has become a focal point for resistance to right-wing Gen. Augusto Pinochet's regime during a season in which political and labor protest has ebbed significantly.

So far, neither side shows any signs of surrender.

"We are willing to resist as long as is necessary," said Patricio Basso, head of the professors' association at the school. Speaking in an interview, the French-educated mathematician predicted "a great mobilization of people on behalf of the university."

Leaders of the university's 3,400 students are demanding that the government rescind the Aug. 24 appointment of a new rector, Jose Federici, and back off from a plan to "rationalize" university spending. Under rationalization programs, Pinochet's economic team has dismantled unprofitable state-run businesses.

A former minister of economy and of transportation under Pinochet, Federici served last year as head of the state railways, firing many employees in a rationalization program. He also briefly managed the state coal company, overseeing mass dismissals in a similar project to make the industry self-sufficient.

His opponents at the university call him the "terminator" after a murderous movie character.

Federici's appointment triggered the strike, but dissatisfaction among professors has festered for years as the government slashed spending on higher education from about 1 percent of the gross national product in 1980 to 0.6 percent in 1986.

Teachers' salaries have dropped in real terms by 70 percent, according to the professors' association, and now range from about $460 to $885 a month.

Once considered one of Latin America's finest schools, the university produced several of the region's leaders, including Venezuelan President Jaime Lusinchi and former Bolivian president Luis Adolfo Siles.

Despite U.S. involvement, Persian Gulf war continues

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The Persian Gulf war appears to be headed for another winter of heavy fighting, with Iraq's air force pounding Iran's oil lifeline and the Iranians jangling their troops for another bloody offensive.

The focus in the conflict, now in its eighth year, has in recent weeks been on the confrontation in the gulf between Iran and the United States. An Iranian rocket hit an American-flagged ship on Friday and on Monday, the United States struck back with an attack on Iranian oil platforms.

But the daily fighting on other fronts drags on without letup. Battles daily report artillery exchange and air raids. The Iranians last week lobbed four missiles into Baghdad, Iraq's capital.

The last one hit a school, killing 29 children and wounding 200 other people. Tens of thousands of Iraqis fled through Baghdad behind the tiny, flag-draped coffins clamoring for revenge.

With the searing 120-degree heat of the summer waning, both sides seem to be gearing up for another campaign season. That usually favors the lightly armed Iranians because the rainy weather bogs down Iraq's superior air and tank forces.

The Iraqis, their arsenal replenished during the summer with Soviet-made fighter-bombers and tanks, are braced for a new offensive in the southern sector of the 730-mile front.

The Iraqis have been fighting a defensive war on the ground since 1982 when they were pushed out of Iranian territory seized in the Iraqis September 1980 invasion.

The Iraqis have massed an estimated 100,000 Revolutionary Guards and volunteers in the south opposite Basra, Iraq's second largest city.

The Iraqis consider Basra the key to the land war. The Revolutionary Guards fought to within six miles of the ancient city earlier this year in one of the bloodiest offensives of the war.

But, as in the past, the massive assault foundered after two months with the Iranian human-wave assaults unable to penetrate Iraq's formidable defenses of massed artillery, thousands of tanks, minefields, man-made lakes and huge earthworks.

The Iraqis have been retaliating against Iraq's air attacks on their oil centers and tankers by hitting neutral ships in the Persian Gulf.

But, apart from antagonizing Arab states in the gulf, the attacks have had little impact on Iraq's war effort. The one way the Iraqis can hurt the Iraqis is by bleeding their army to death on the ground in a war of attrition.

Unlike Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Shiite Muslim forces, many of them ill-trained infantry and boys for whom death in battle is considered an honor, the Iraqis seek to avoid casualties.

Iran, lacking Iraq's high-technology firepower, outnumbers its foe 3-1 in manpower.

The Iraqis have received new weapons from China and North Korea in recent months, which usually signals another offensive is looming.

The Iraqis also have armed Kurdish guerrillas fighting the Baghdad regime in northern Iraq, opening up a second front that has forced the Iraqis to divert as many as 35,000 troops to combat the insurgency.

The U.S. and European intervention in the Persian Gulf to protect shipping and vital oil routes has by all accounts stiffened Iranian resistance and bolstered the radicals who favor a major push against Iraq and its allies.

Chinese report says wild men exist

BEIJING (AP) — Scientific tests on strands of hair prove China's "wild man" exists, a newspaper says.

Tests on six strands of hair found in central and southern China, where numerous sightings of the "wild man" were reported, showed the hair did not belong to humans or scientifically known animals, reported the Wenhui Daily in its Saturday edition.

The paper quoted a recent edition of Nature magazine that carried the report by Li Mu, Zeng Xianzhou and Hua Tianwei. It said Li collected the strands of hair over four years in Hubei, Hunan, Sichuan and Guizhou provinces.

The Chinese say records of such wild men date back 3,000 years in China.

Economic problems detailed during fall Soviet parliament

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet economy is waking up, but problems in light manufacturing and machine-building keep slowing it down, officials said Monday at the fall gathering of the Supreme Soviet, the nominal parliament.

Officials at the first day of a two-day session said national income would reach its predicted 4.1 percent growth rate this year. But they said the economy has not made enough machines to improve performance in agriculture and industry or to prevent shortages in shoes, clothing and basic foods.

Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev and the 13 other members of the ruling Communist Party Politburo opened the session of the 1,400-member Supreme Soviet after they filed into the elegant Grand Kremlin Palace.

But Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze slipped away 20 minutes after the start of a series of long speeches that take the place of debate.

The deputies, elected in single-party balloting in districts nationwide, meet in the Kremlin in the fall and spring to rubber-stamp proposals set before them by government organs directed by the Communist Party leadership.

A plenary meeting of the 300-plus-member party Central Committee usually precedes each Supreme Soviet session to formulate policies and present them to the parliamentary body for approval. But there was no such meeting this time, indicating no special business in the session.

The main business before the Supreme Soviet is the 1988 budget, which was outlined by Finance Minister Boris I. Gostev and Planning Committee Chairman Nikolai V. Talysin.

Production figures for the first nine months of 1987, released last week, disclosed that one in four Soviet enterprises failed to fulfill its production targets, and that Soviet farms were boosting output more slowly than planners had hoped — only 1.1 percent more than last year.

Gostev said the projected budget for 1988 is $723 billion, including $32 billion for defense, the same spending level reported for 1987.

But Western analysts contend the Soviet military budget is actually many times larger when expenditures covered by other budget items like scientific research are included.

Gostev also said the national treasury lost $19 billion this year because of reduced alcohol sales mandated by Gorbachev's nationwide anti-drinking campaign.

Production of vodka and other strong drink has been cut by more than 40 percent under the program introduced by Gorbachev in May 1985.

Some Soviet officials have said the revenue losses were more than compensated for by a corresponding drop in industrial accidents and absenteeism. But Gostev made no mention of social benefits from the liquor production cuts.

Nakasone selects new party leader

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone on Monday chose Noboru Takeshita to succeed him as president of the Liberal Democratic Party, virtually ensuring he will be Japan's next prime minister.

Party Deputy Secretary General Sosuke Uno said Nakasone chose Takeshita over two other contenders. Party Executive Council Chairman Shintaro Abe and Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, just before midnight. Nakasone is stepping down as party leader on Oct. 30 after five years in office.

Takeshita, a former finance minister who now is secretary of the governing party and head of its largest faction, will serve as prime minister and party president for at least two years after his expected confirmation.

A party convention has been set for Oct. 31 and the Diet, or parliament, is to meet in an extraordinary session, expected on Nov. 6, to elect him prime minister.

The party's large majority in both legislative houses assures his election.

"I am determined to make utmost efforts to maintain party unity and tackle various tasks facing and involving Japan," Takeshita said after his nomination.

Takeshita, who prefers back-room consensus-building to Nakasone's more free-wheeling style of leadership, has said he will follow such major Nakasone policies as steering the economy to less dependence on exports, and maintaining the close security relationship with the United States.

Takeshita will become Japan's 74th prime minister since the nation's cabinet system was inaugurated in 1885.

Uno told a nationally televised news event that Nakasone, informing Takeshita of his choice, asked him to name Abe and Miyazawa to the key posts of party secretary general and deputy prime minister in his future Cabinet.

The arrangement by Nakasone was made to avoid a divisive vote

NOBORU TAKESHITA

Possibly prime minister

in the Diet on a new party leader after extended talks among the three contenders and other party leaders failed to produce a consensus by Monday night, a day before the deadline.

Nakasone had been elected twice to two-year terms as party leader and his second term was extended by one year in a rare exception after the party won a landslide victory in the summer of 1986.

If the issue had not been decided by Tuesday morning, the party's 445 legislators in the upper and lower houses of Parliament would have voted Tuesday on the party president.

Takeshita and the other two candidates have pledged to continue Nakasone's policies of transforming the economy into one less dependent on exports, and of maintaining a close security relationship with the United States. They also cite the need for a new land use policy to improve urban housing, and for an overhaul of national tax laws.

Takeshita, the onetime judo expert from the isolated Japan Sea prefecture (state) of Shimane, is known as a skillful internal party maneuverer and a patient and cautious negotiator. He has little international experience.

Shultz: No new ground broken for peace

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said on Monday that Israel and Egypt have a "genuine preoccupation with the importance of peace" but said his Middle East visit broke no new ground toward that goal.

However, he said his discussions with leaders of the two countries convinced him that "people are putting a higher and higher premium on the importance of getting somewhere."

Shultz spoke briefly with reporters during a six-hour stop in Cairo. The trip followed visits to Israel and Saudi Arabia.

He left Cairo for London for a meeting with King Hussein of Jordan. The monarch is visiting the British capital.

Shultz approached regional leaders on prospects for an international Middle East peace conference. Hussein, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres support the idea, but Peres' coalition partner, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, strongly opposes it.

In Cairo, Shultz and Mubarak extended their scheduled 30-minute private meeting to 90 minutes, then met for another hour over lunch.

Shultz said he and Mubarak discussed the Arab-Israeli question and the Iran-Iraq war. But he ignored reporters' questions about U.S. military actions in the Persian Gulf. Shultz said the ultimate goal of any peace process in the region should be direct negotiations between Israel and the Arabs, pointing to the Jewish state's peace treaty with Egypt as a model.

"We had worthwhile discussions about (prospects for peace) in Israel and here," Shultz said, speaking outside Mubarak's office in his suburban palace.

100 feared dead in collision

Los Angeles Times

JAKARTA, Indonesia — More than 100 people were feared dead and 200 seriously injured in a head-on collision between two Indonesian commuter trains in the southern suburbs of Jakarta early Monday.

A railway official said that most of the victims had been riding on the train roofs or sitting on the couplings between the cars.

City police chief Maj. Gen. Poedi Spamsudin said that investigators were trying to determine how the two trains, carrying an estimated 2,100 passengers came to be on the same track.

Hospital sources said that by late afternoon they had counted a total of 104 dead, with scores of other victims in critical condition.

Rescue workers were still tearing apart wreckage searching for bodies or survivors.

The collision took place about 6 a.m. in Bintaro, about 12 miles from the center of the city.

Professors mount strike at university

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The military government's attempt to apply its pay-as-you-go philosophy to higher education has produced a bitter standoff at the country's biggest university.

The 17,000-student University of Chile in Santiago has been paralyzed by a professors' strike since late August. The conflict, marked by occasional violence, has become a focal point for resistance to right-wing Gen. Augusto Pinochet's regime during a season in which political and labor protest has ebbed significantly.

So far, neither side shows any signs of surrender.

"We are willing to resist as long as is necessary," said Patricio Basso, head of the professors' association at the school. Speaking in an interview, the French-educated mathematician predicted "a great mobilization of people on behalf of the university."

Leaders of the university's 3,400 educators are demanding that the government rescind the Aug. 24 appointment of a new rector, Jose Federici, and back off from a plan to "rationalize" university spending. Under rationalization programs, Pinochet's economic team has dismantled unprofitable state-run businesses.

A former minister of economy and of transportation under Pinochet, Federici served last year as head of the state railways, firing many employees in a rationalization program. He also briefly managed the state coal company, overseeing mass dismissals in a similar project to make the industry self-sufficient.

His opponents at the university call him the "terminator," after a notorious movie character. Federici's appointment triggered the strike, but dissatisfaction among professors has festered for years as the government slashed spending on higher education from about 1 percent of the gross-national product in 1980 to 0.6 percent in 1986.

Teachers' salaries have dropped in real terms by 70 percent, according to the professors' association, and now range from about $460 to $885 a month.

Once considered one of Latin America's finest schools, the university produced several of the region's leaders, including Venezuela's President Jaime Mubarak and former Bolivian president Luis Adolfo Siles.

Despite U.S. involvement, Persian Gulf war continues

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The Persian Gulf war appears to be headed for another winter of heavy fighting, with Iraq's air forces pounding Iran's oil lifeline and the Iranians massing their troops for another bloody offensive.

The focus in the conflict, now in its eighth year, has in recent weeks been on the confrontation in the gulf between Iran and the United States. An Iranian rocket hit an American-flagged ship on Friday and on Monday, the United States struck back with an attack on Iranian oil platforms.

But the daily fighting on other fronts drags on without letup. Both sides daily report artillery exchanges and air raids. The Iranians last week lobbed four missiles into Baghdad, Iraq's capital.

The last one hit a school, killing 29 children and wounding 200 other people. Tens of thousands of Iraqis paraded through Baghdad behind the tiny, flag-draped coffins clamoring for revenge.

With the searing 120-degree heat of the summer waning, both sides seem to be gearing up for another campaign season. That usually favors the lightly armed Iranians because the rainy weather bogs down Iraq's superior air and tank forces.

The Iraqis, their arsenal replenished during the summer with Soviet-made fighter-bombers and tanks, are braced for a new offensive in the southern sector of the 780-mile front.

The Iraqis have been fighting a defensive war on the ground since 1982 when they were pushed out of Iranian territory seized in the gulf September 1980 invasion.

The Iranians have massed an estimated 100,000 Revolutionary Guards and volunteers in the south opposite Basra, Iraq's second largest city.

The Iranians consider Basra the key to the land war. The Revolutionary Guards fought to within six miles of the ancient city earlier this year in one of the bloodiest offensives of the war.

But, as in the past, the massive assault foundered after two months with the Iranian human-wave assaults unable to penetrate Iraq's formidable defenses of massed artillery, thousands of tanks, minefields, man-made lakes and huge earthworks.

The Iranians have been retaliating against Iraq's air attacks on their oil centers and tankers by hitting neutral ships in the Persian Gulf.

But, apart from antagonizing Arab states in the gulf, the attacks have had little impact on Iraq's war effort. The one way the Iranians can hurt the Iraqis is by bleeding their army to death on the ground in a war of attrition.

Unlike Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Shiite Moslem forces, many of them ill-trained infantry and boys for whom death in battle is considered an honor, the Iraqis seek to avoid casualties.

Iran, lacking Iraq's high-technology Greppyer, outnumbers its foe 3-1 in manpower.

The Iranians have received new weapons from China and North Korea in recent months, which usually signals another offensive is looming.

The Iranians also have armed Kurdish guerrillas fighting the Baghdad regime in northern Iraq, opening up a second front that has forced the Iraqis to divert as many as 35,000 troops to combat the insurgency.

The U.S. and European intervention in the Persian Gulf to protect shipping and vital oil routes has by all accounts stifled Iranian resistance and bolstered the radicals who favor a major push against Iraq and its allies.

Economic problems detailed during fall Soviet parliament

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet economy is waking up, but problems in light manufacturing and machine-building keep slowing it down, officials said Monday at the fall gathering of the Supreme Soviet, the nominal parliament.

Officials at the first day of a two-day session said national income would reach its predicted 4.1 percent growth rate this year. But they said the economy has not made enough machines to improve performance in agriculture and industry or to prevent shortages in shoes, clothing and basic foods.

Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev and the 13 other members of the ruling Communist Party Politburo opened the session of the 1,500-member Supreme Soviet after they filed into the elegant Grand Kremlin Palace.

But Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze slipped away 20 minutes after the start of a series of long speeches that take the place of debate. The deputies, elected in single-party balloting in districts nationwide, meet in the Kremlin in the fall and spring to rubber-stamp proposals set before them by government organs directed by the Communist Party leadership.

A plenary meeting of the 300-plus-member party Central Committee usually precedes each Supreme Soviet session to formulate policies and present them to the parliamentary body for approval. But there was no such meeting this time, indicating no special business in the session.

Beirut inflation rate rockets; economic salvation doubtful

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A small left-wing party, the Union of Leagues and Committees, recently wrote to the mayor of Beirut asking that he get the city's rubbish collected in the interests of public health.

A few days later the party's leader received a telephone call from an irate West Beirut resident. "Don't you realize," he asked, "that hundreds of people live off that rubbish?"

The garbage, and the people who live off it, are today a feature of almost every street in West Beirut, a constant reminder both of the perilous state of public services and the heading impoverishment of what was considered the "Switzerland of the Middle East."

By day and by night, men, women and children sift through the stinking piles of plastic water-bottles that are now being recycled, for glass bottles that are being reused, for rags, cardboard and old newspapers.

The Lebanese economy, which survived even the Israeli invasion, appears for the moment beyond hope of salvation, its health inextricably tied to the health of the body politic.

The Lebanese government is relatively rich, with 9.2 million ounces of gold that are today worth $4.2 billion. But the Lebanese people are for the first time poor — and getting poorer as the real value of their wages declines and the cost of living increases, climbing into the realm of hyperinflation.

Four years ago, the minimum monthly wage in Lebanon was the equivalent of $20 in a country that imports 85 percent of its needs, and where many items are now priced in the U.S. currency. At the end of last week the monthly wage was barely $20. Inflation this year is already running at more than 250 percent, and unions predict that it will more than double by year end.

Anyone who has foreign currency to convert is still prosperous. And plenty do. Eighty-five percent of bank deposits are in foreign currencies. But those who have only Lebanese pounds — especially those with limited incomes — are facing a catastrophe.

A driver who suffers from diabetes needs five times his salary simply to buy the insulin he needs to stay alive. A maid who needed chest

X-rays spent two-thirds of her monthly wage in one afternoon. Newlyweds find that an entire year's salary goes to buy a refrigerator. And so, in poorer areas, marriage is on the decline; setting up house is for the well-to-do.

Only the abuses built into the Lebanese system have enabled so many to keep going for so long. Few pay taxes. Anyone who wants electricity just hooks in. Telephone bills come in years late.

The militias, concerned that this economic crisis may lose them public sympathy, are now trying to buy future support with present help — bus services, for example, school books, cut-price petrol, dispensaries, food handouts.

But even these dodges and compromises with legality are no longer sufficient. For the poor, food is becoming a problem, and education rapidly getting out of reach.

A kilogram (2.2 pounds) of meat costs almost one week's minimum salary; a year's education for a young child costs three months' salary. Adults photocopy books, finding them too expensive to buy; kids unable to afford school kick about the streets and sift the rubbish.

The first reaction to the new poverty has been the birth of a new trade-union militancy — a militancy that cuts across religious lines, despite certain links to the Christian right, but which is limited by the very impotence of the government it seeks to influence.

A second reaction, in August, was the eruption of spontaneous protest demonstrations in West Beirut. Crowds of Lebanese, many of them in their early teens, attacked money-changers and smashed shops.

These demonstrations quickly lost whatever popular potency they originally had as they wore harassment and distorted for political mileage — by pro-Syrians to make trouble for pro-Iranians, by Palestinians to make trouble for Syrians.

If the economic collapse continues, and no one is expecting an improvement before next year's presidential elections, many are predicting a social explosion as the purchasing power of the Lebanese pound, 75 percent down in the first eight months of this year, shrinks still further.

Rebels continue to retaliate

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Indian soldiers fought off Tamil rebels Monday and advanced to the center of the separatists' stronghold in Jaffna, Indian officials said. Town leaders said the battle killed nearly 700 civilians.

Indian officials called the high estimate of civilian casualties "simply not true."

A land mine exploded in eastern Sri Lanka, killing at least 30 Tamil students and an Indian soldier, a police official in Batticaloa said. State radio put the death toll at 40.

No independent verification was available of the situation in Jaffna, 185 north of Colombo on the Jaffna Peninsula, where Sri Lanka's Tamil minority is predominant. India will not let journalists into the combat zone.

An estimated 17,000 Indian soldiers are on the island to enforce a peace agreement the two governments signed in July, hoping to end a 4-year-old civil war between Tamils and the ethnic Sinhalese-dominated government that has taken more than 5,000 lives.

In Jaffna, Indian troops achieved a major breakthrough Monday when a force pushing in from the west linked up with another in an old Dutch colonial fort on the southern waterfront, an Indian official in New Delhi said.

The western pincer of the Indian Peacekeeping Force has advanced farther and reached the heart of Jaffna town," Foreign Ministry spokesman D.K. Majtra told reporters.

"They have secured the microwave (television relay) station, the town hall and the main bus stand. They have also secured the main telegraph office, which was heavily boobytrapped. Mopping up operations are now on."

Over the weekend, Indian troops fought their way to the city limits on the northern and eastern sides of Jaffna, according to Indian and Sri Lankan officials.

The Indians have had a tough battle with guerrillas of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam. The Tigers want to establish an independent Tamil nation called Eelam in northern and eastern Sri Lanka, the tea and spice island just south of India, formerly known as Ceylon.

Fiji economy could tumble

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — The second military takeover in four months in this tiny, racially divided nation has put Fiji on the brink of economic ruin and stirred fear among the majority Indian population.

"In the economic field, we're still nose-diving. ... signs of mass poverty and suffering are already here," said former Prime Minister Timoci Bavadra, whose Indian-dominated government was toppled in the first coup led by Col. Sitiveni Rabuka on May 14.

An interim government was set up to give more power to ethnic Fijians, but when it didn't please Rabuka he staged a second coup on Sept. 25. Since the latest takeover, a nervous calm has settled over the island nation.

With each dazzling sunset, scores of Suva's inhabitants head home to beat the overnight curfew Rabuka clamped on Fiji.

On Sunday the nation comes to a virtual standstill. Recreational and commercial activities, including public transportation and taxis, are banned under a "Christianity clause" in the unfinished new constitution. Security forces have broken up picnics, stopped people from jogging and raided a hotel dance party.

Most ethnic Fijians are Christians, while most Indians are Hindus or Moslems.

The curfew, the Christianity clause and the over-present soldiers and military checkpoints are reminders Fiji is no longer the tranquil resort it was six months ago.
