Turbulence possible factor in Denver crash

The Associated Press

DENVER — Investigators said Thursday they were examining the possibility that air turbulence was a factor in the crash of Continental Flight 1713, which flipped and crashed upside down just seconds after leaving a runway in a snowstorm.

Turbulence — possibly created by a plane landing on an adjacent runway — was one of numerous factors being examined as investigators continued to search for the cause of Sunday's crash of the DC-9 at Stapleton International Airport.

Twenty-eight people have died. At least five of the 21 people still hospitalized were in critical condition Thursday.

Investigators from Continental and the National Transportation Safety Board examined the wreckage of the plane Thursday in a hangar at Stapleton. Recognizable parts of the DC-9 included the forward section, the engine, the nose, a shortened mid-section of the fuselage, the right wing, the tail section and the wheels. Near the nose, someone had placed a crew member's hat, with gold braid above its black leather bill.

The Continental Airlines insignia had been covered with black spray paint, the NTSB chairman said. "They prefer not to have a wrecked airplane with their colors on it."

Bruce Hicks, Continental Airlines spokesman, said at a news conference Thursday that spinning turbulence, called "vortex," might have been caused by a Delta Airlines 767 that landed on a runway next to the one Flight 1713 was using.

However, he emphasized that there was "no probable cause on the record yet."

Rudy Kapustin, a consultant formerly with the NTSB, told reporters that the vortex remains in the air for several minutes after planes land and take off, and can be moved around by air currents.

Turbulence from one plane was enough to flip another on its back in an accident involving two planes landing simultaneously on adjacent runways at a Texas airport several years ago, he said.

In the foothills west of Denver, services were held at Church of the Hills in Evergreen for William Charles Spalbury, who was on his way to a convention in Sun Valley, Idaho. Spalbury, 46, was assistant regional director of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's animal damage control program.

In Aurora, east of Denver, services were held for Clyde M. Owens, 52, a Continental parts supply employee who was going to Idaho to help his son, who had been injured in an automobile accident.

Reagan fails to delay budget ax

Only final details of agreement left; cut orders on way

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Budget negotiators on Thursday night finished all but final details of a two-year, $76 billion deficit reduction pact, but their efforts failed to avert today's Gramm-Rudman spending cuts.

With divisions in Republican ranks casting doubt over final enactment of the agreement, White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker said President Reagan would order the $23 billion in Gramm-Rudman cuts even if the bipartisan bargainers came up with a last-minute pact.

When the White House and congressional negotiators broke for the night, they said they had reached the point where details needed to be checked with Reagan and congressional leaders.

"If they come back with a favorable response, I'd say the word is 'imminent,'" said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., senior Republican on the Senate Budget Committee.

"We've reached a point where we've got to take a breath, see what issues still remain to be solved," Baker said. "We're finally getting down to the fine print."

Democratic leaders were being asked to promise not to include in the $9 billion in taxes envisioned in the plan the levies Reagan has objected to most, including any changes in income tax rates, said House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill.

But so many House and Senate Republicans were opposing the emerging plan, that its future was in doubt even if bargainers shake hands on a deal. Given that opposition, the White House joined congressional Republicans in opposing a delay in the Gramm-Rudman cuts.

Baker, leaving a session with congressional budget writers, repeatedly said "No" to reporters' questions about conditions under which Reagan would accept a delay, as proposed by some lawmakers.

Asked if he was employing a strategy to keep the pressure on the talks, he said, "My thought is I do what the president says, and he says he won't go along with postponing" the spending cuts.

Once the cuts take effect, they can be changed or undone with subsequent legislation. There are procedural shortcuts in the law if that's initiated within 10 days.

The Gramm-Rudman law requires $23 billion in deficit reduction in fiscal 1988, which began Oct. 1. By the end of the day Friday, Reagan must order such a cut in federal spending, half from domestic programs and half from the military.

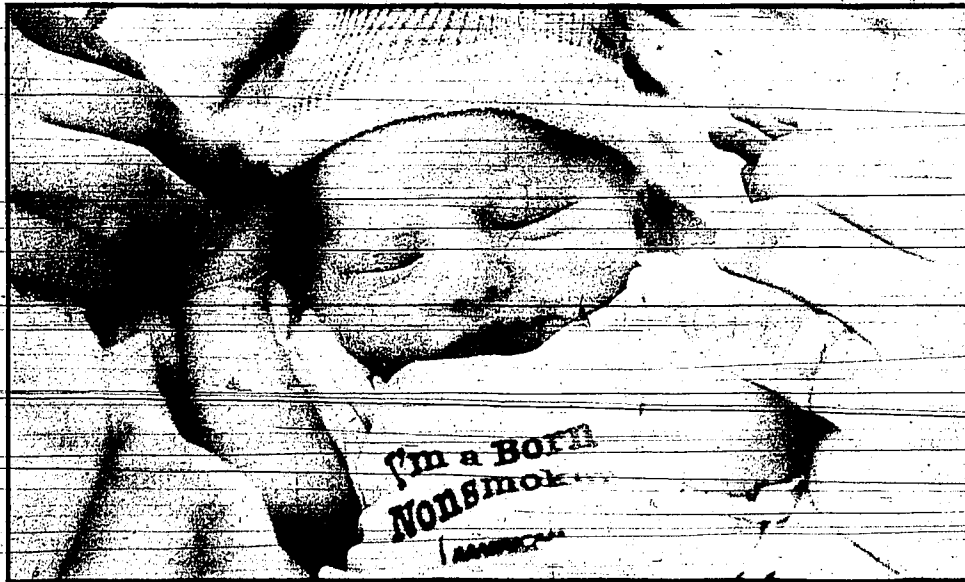

Even if a general budget agreement is reached quickly by White House and congressional negotiators on a deficit-reduction package, enacting such a program to undo the cuts might take weeks.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., one of the negotiators, said the deficit-reduction plan attracted support from only nine of 35 Senate Republicans who attended a closed session. The others said they would rather see the Gramm-Rudman cuts take effect. Many House Republicans also were opposed to the plan.

Some Senate Republicans advocate limiting Social Security and other federal rest-of-living increases, an action anathema to their House colleagues.

So many House Republicans were refusing to support deficit-reduction proposals that Howard Baker and Treasury Secretary James Baker called them to a closed caucus to emphasize the importance of action.

Democrats said they wouldn't accept a plan without GOP support.

Smoldering ire clouds 11th Smokeout Day

By The Associated Press

Where there's smoke, there's fire, especially on Great American Smokeout Day when the nation's 46.8 million puffery has a choice between a day of abstinence or smoldering recalcitrance.

Smokers at Southwestern Bell and other companies were told Thursday that they no longer have a choice, as tough anti-smoking policies were announced or went into effect.

In Washington, Rep. Chet Atkins, D-Mass., introduced The Adolescent Tobacco Education Act, which would ban the sale of tobacco products to anyone under 18. It would also outlaw all vending machine sales of tobacco products and require that existing drug education programs warn students of the dangers of tobacco.

This was the 11th annual Smokeout, and the American Cancer Society confessed it was becoming harder to win converts.

"We're at a day and age when anyone who's smoking knows the health risk. We don't have to hit them over the head with the fact that they're killing themselves. They know that," said Margaret Murphy, spokeswoman for the society's New Hampshire chapter.

"These people shouldn't be attacked; they should be worked with. It takes a little less hoopla and a little more working with them," she says.

In New York and other cities, U.S. Healthcare, a health maintenance organization, offered to trade cigarettes for apples.

"The apple won't stop me," said Maria Kabatnik of New York. "I'll give up a cigarette but I won't stop smoking."

"I know it's unhealthy to smoke. I'm playing with fire. But I hate the way everybody nags and nags," said Francis Ferrari of New York. "I enjoy my cigarettes but I might try to quit tomorrow. It depends on how good the apple is."

At one point, the apple cart was outside the headquarters of Philip Morris Inc., where spokesman Steven Weiss said U.S. Healthcare had engaged in "a cheap public relations stunt."

In St. Paul, Minnesota Twins catcher Tim Laudner was applauded when he told a "D-Day — Don't Smoke Day" rally that he threw away his chewing tobacco on the night the Twins won the World Series. Laudner said he gave up tobacco on Oct. 25 because of his wife, Tamara, and their infant son, Sam.

"I think I want to be around a while longer to explain to him" what his father's been doing, said Laudner, who distributed autographed Twins "Homer Hankies" to people who turned in their cigarettes.

Harvard's Kennedy School of Government lowered its admissions policy to accept one thin-skinned, thick-headed gent: Mr. Potato Head, who became the mascot for this year's Smokeout when he gave up his pipe.

Soviet seeks deadline on chemical arms cut

The Associated Press

TOOLEE ARMY DEPOT, Utah (AP) — A Soviet negotiator on Thursday called for a May deadline to reach an international treaty on chemical weapons as a delegation from his country arrived for a tour of the Army's chemical weapons disposal plant.

Yuri Nazarkin said he believed an agreement on reducing and eventually banning chemical arsenals could be obtained by late May, when the third session of the Conference on Disarmament is scheduled in Geneva.

Nazarkin, the chief Soviet negotiator at the conference, said he recognized that there were differences between his country and the United States on verification and other procedures. However, Max Friedersdorf, the chief U.S. negotiator, ruled out the possibility that the U.S. would accept an arbitrary deadline. The U.S. said it did not want the pressure of public opinion or congressional deliberations to come into play before the details of an agreement are worked out.

"The Soviets are always wanting to set artificial deadlines. We don't deal with them on trust; we deal with them on making a treaty so tightly bound and ironclad that they can't cheat," Friedersdorf said. Friedersdorf said that in January the Soviets attempted to set a deadline around the end of 1987, but the U.S. rejected the proposal.

"We have to negotiate a treaty that can be ratified by the U.S. Senate. They can just rubber stamp it. That's the difference in a democracy and a totalitarianism."

Defense bill goes to Reagan

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress sent the White House a $298 billion defense authorization bill Thursday, and Republicans say President Reagan will sign it despite moderate arms control restrictions.

The Senate approved by a 88-9 vote a bipartisan compromise that the House adopted Wednesday by a 264-158 vote. Most of the opposition came from conservative Republicans.

The nine senators voting against the bill were William

White House tries to ignore queries on Iran-Contra affair

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — At the height of the Iran-Contra hearing this summer, President Reagan begged off insinuating reporters' questions about the latest testimony, telling them that once the congressional investigation was over, "you won't be able to shut me up."

But now that the congressional panels have issued their exhaustive report on the affair, a document highly critical of the president's conduct, Reagan and his aides are taking a much different approach.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters Thursday that the president has no plans to comment on the matter any time soon. Nor would Fitzwater address specific issues or aspects of controversy raised in Wednesday's report by the House and Senate committees that investigated the Iran arms sales and diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan rebels.

The blank response corresponded with a new administration strategy that assumes, in the words of one senior White House official, that "the American people have pretty much put this behind them."

"Most people outside of Washington want to get on with business," he said. "Our thought is just to move ahead and not dwell on this."

The tactic reflects the hope of the White House staff that Reagan, by keeping mum, can avoid drawing new attention to his waning presidency. Instead, they want him to capitalize on the potential public relations bonanza of next month's arms-control summit in Washington with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The last time that Reagan, who has held four news conferences in the year since the Iran-Contra affair came to light, spoke at any length in public on the subject was in a speech to the nation he delivered from the Oval Office on Aug. 12. Even that address dealt only in part with the Iran scandal, and in little detail.

"Will the president ever speak in reaction to this report?" Fitzwater was asked Thursday.

"I don't think we'll ever discuss these kinds of details," he replied. Fitzwater was noncommittal about whether Reagan would study the document. "He has it and probably will read some of it," the spokesman said.

Not voting were Sens. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., Albert Gore, D-Tenn., Richard Lugar, R-Ind., Terry Sanford, D-N.C. and Paul Simon, D-Ill.

Reagan had threatened to veto an earlier version, passed by the House last May, which would have cut defense spending more drastically and imposed harsher arms control restrictions. The administration feared that the bill would hamper the United States in its arms negotiations with the Soviet Union.

The Democratic and Republican leadership of the Senate united behind the compromise version, worked out in a House-Senate conference.

The Republican leader, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said that "the bill's strongest point is that it no longer contains obstacles to the president's Strategic Defense Initiative to develop orbiting anti-missile defenses.

The bill, however, does bar the administration from spending money during the current fiscal year to produce any anti-missile weapons which would violate the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and pushes it into closer compliance with the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty.

It does so without mentioning either treaty, but by spelling out in detail how the money should be spent.

The bill authorizes spending of $3.9 billion on SDI, known as "Star Wars." Reagan asked for $4.5 billion for the program.

"The bill forces the administration to stay close to the restrictions of SALT II by ordering demolition of a nuclear-armed submarine, the Andrew Jackson. The administration exceeded SALT II limits last year, alleging Soviet violations of the treaty.

The chairman of the Senate

Armed Services Committee, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and the ranking minority member, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., spoke in favor of the bill.

Republicans said they had received indications from the White House that Reagan would not exercise his veto.

Several conservative senators led by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., spoke in opposition.

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., said that had the earlier House version passed, Reagan "would have exercised his veto, it would have been sustained" in the Senate. Wilson and another conservative, Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., expressed reservations about the bill, but voted for it anyway.

Wilson, Helms, Quayle and other conservatives strongly opposed the bill's ban on tests of anti-satellite (ASAT) weapons for the third consecutive year. The Pentagon says the Soviets have already developed and tested ASAT weapons.

Smokeout

Cancer societies around the country distributed pink or blue shirts to newsmen, proclaiming that they were born non-smokers.

The trend to ban smoking in workplaces gained momentum here and there:

- At Emerson Hospital in Concord, Mass., smoking was banned except in a few areas effective Thursday.
- Southwestern Bell Telephone announced that smoking won't be allowed in its Fort Worth, Texas, office after Jan. 1 except in designated areas.
- Moore Rehabilitation Hospital in Philadelphia inaugurated a permanent "No Smoking" policy for staff and visitors.
- Memorial Hospital in North Little Rock, Ark., became the first acute care hospital in that area to ban smoking by employees, physicians and visitors. A giant cigarette was broken in half at the hospital's entrance to symbolize the smoke-free policy, which becomes effective Jan. 1.

In Seattle, a survey of 7,000 employers indicated that one-third of Washington's work force — at least 619,000 employees — work for companies that have banned or restricted smoking on the job. The survey was released Thursday to coincide with the Smokeout.

In Waycross, Ga., 7,606 students, teachers, administrators and principals in the Waycross and Ware County school system received "Kiss Me! I Don't Smoke!" buttons to wear for the day.

School children in five Philadelphia schools and four Montgomery county school districts attended assemblies where they learned about reasons not to smoke.

In Dallas, an easy-listening radio station tried to induce non-smoking with a male voice softly explaining the hazards of smoking. The subliminal messages were broadcast with regular music at pre-announced times.

Lynn Smith, the man who started it all in 1974, said he was "kind of overwhelmed" by the growth of the Smokeout campaign.

"It's been extremely gratifying," said Smith, 67, of Monticello, Minn.

Smith was publisher of the Monticello Times when he dreamed up "Don't Smoke Day" or D-Day. He got 291 people in the town to pledge not to smoke for one day on Jan. 7, 1974.

"I suspect it's a very true and strong addiction that's difficult to break," said Smith, who started smoking at age 15 and quit in 1954. "For those who quit and fail, it's a rough deal. But they shouldn't get discouraged."

government," Friedersdorf said.

Earlier Thursday, Nazarkin said the tour of the depot's Chemical Agent Munitions Disposal System prototype plant was a major step toward an eventual ban on chemical arsenals.

The six-member Soviet delegation arrived Thursday morning at this remote desert installation 50 miles southwest of Salt Lake City for a briefing on the Army's Chemical Agent Munitions Disposal System, or CAMDS, prototype plant. The delegation will tour the installation today.

The Soviet Union refused to attend a United Nations workshop at the facility in 1983, but recently did so as a diplomatic about-face and accepted an invitation from the State Department's Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. An American group inspected Soviet chemical weapons demolition programs last month.

The Soviets were shown either a live shell or prototype of each chemical weapon in the U.S. arsenal, including artillery projectiles, mortar rounds, bombs, land mines and aerial spray tanks. The U.S. weapons are filled with liquid nerve or mustard agent, both of which are vaporized and dispersed by small explosive charges upon impact.

"Mustard blisters the skin, mucus membranes and lung tissue. Nerve agent acts on the central nervous system, impairing basic bodily functions.

Nazarkin characterized the visit to Tooele as an indication that negotiations between his country, the United States and 14 other countries to ban chemical weapons are nearing agreement.

However, in an interview after the briefing at Tooele, Friedersdorf took exception with Nazarkin's statement.

"I think that's overly optimistic. There has been progress this year, but there remains an awful lot of detail before a treaty can be concluded," he said.

He said Nazarkin had been saying the treaty is near since mid-summer in an apparent effort to influence congressional action on U.S. production of binary weapons, in which two chemicals are mixed to produce a nerve agent just before impact.

The U.S. expects the first of its new binary chemical weapons — a 165mm artillery projectile — to roll off the assembly line on Dec. 17, a fact that Friedersdorf believes convinced the Soviets to negotiate seriously.

ously on the international ban.

Major obstacles still to be resolved include details of on-site verification and the Soviets' unwillingness to say what types and amounts of chemical weapons they possess and where they are produced and stored.

Friedersdorf said the U.S. wants a verification agreement that would allow either side on-site inspection at any facility within 48 hours of a request.

Nicaragua says Wright plans visit

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An official newspaper said Thursday that U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright is expected to visit early next month to discuss peace initiatives with the leftist government, but a Wright spokesman denied the report.

At a news conference, the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front attributed the information to a "source linked to the U.S. Embassy in Managua."

The newspaper said the Texas Democrat will talk to Nicaraguan opposition party leaders during the trip, but he will devote greater part of his time to conversations with the Sandinista government.

"A U.S. Embassy spokesman Alberto Fernandez, said in a telephone interview that "there is a possibility that Mr. Wright may arrive in the near future, but we cannot confirm his visit at this moment."

Wilson Morris, a spokesman for Wright in Washington, said the congressman plans to go to Costa Rica Dec. 1 but will return to Washington the following day because the House will be voting on important issues.

Morris said Wright had hoped to visit Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador during the trip, but that the tight schedule might make the extra stops impossible.

On Wednesday, President Daniel Ortega said a joint statement by Wright and Secretary of State George P. Shultz could lead to ending talks with Washington on dem-

Speed limits under attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — Idaho Sen. Steve Symms is working on new legislation to remove the 56 mph speed limit from more of the nation's highway system.

Symms was instrumental in passage earlier this year of legislation allowing states to raise the speed limit to 65 mph on rural stretches of interstate. Idaho adopted the new limit on all but a few miles of interstate.

Symms is pushing legislation allowing the states to also raise the limit on non-interstate highways built to freeway standards.

Andrus seeks anti-drug law

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus wants the Board of Pharmacy to adopt emergency rules banning the possession of certain chemicals used to manufacture illegal drugs such as LSD and methamphetamine.

The board meets in Boise today and may adopt the ban on an emergency basis. Attorney General Jim Jones said earlier he plans to ask the next legislative session to extend the rule ban into state law.

"I am increasingly concerned about expanded use of Idaho as a place to procure certain chemicals that can be and are used in the manufacture of illegal drugs, such as methamphetamine, LSD, etc.," Andrus said, in a letter this week to board members.

The governor said he wants the board to draw up appropriate legislation for the next Legislature.

Searchers fail to find plane

GRASMERE (AP) — Search planes came up empty again after a second day of criss-crossing the Owyhee Mountain range on southwestern Idaho's high desert, looking for a plane piloted by a San Diego County sheriff's reserve pilot.

The Idaho Bureau of Aeronautics said 19 airplanes took part in the search on Thursday that focused on the Grasmere area about 30 miles north of the Nevada border.

Officials said it was in that area that the Cessna 180 flown by Lawrence Gaylord, 58, was last seen before disappearing from the radar screen last Friday. Gaylord's son Larry was also apparently onboard.

Social Security cut sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Steve Symms says "everybody should help pull the wagon" when it comes to belt-tightening to balance the federal budget, even Social Security recipients.

Symms said budget negotiators, looking for ways to cut the federal deficit, considered reducing the size of scheduled cost of living increases for Social Security recipients.

He said that was a "political hot potato" and has been withdrawn from the bargaining table, but should be restored.

The bulk of people on Social Security are not living near the poverty line. In fact, many of them have their homes paid for. These Social Security recipients should share in the deficit reduction effort, he said Thursday.

Court finds youth competent

CALDWELL (AP) — The teenager accused of the execution-style slaying of his grandparents near Caldwell last April has been found competent to stand trial on first-degree murder charges.

Third District Judge Edward Lodge ordered Carl Stiffler, 19, to stand trial for the crimes on Thursday after reviewing testimony from a hearing earlier this month.

Funds still remain

BOISE (AP) — There's still $348,000 left in the Idaho First Economic Action Council fund, and the council will accept grant applications until Nov. 30.

The council, organized by Idaho First National Bank with $500,000, said Thursday it has 90 applications to review for potential economic development grants.

If all the money isn't used, the council will call for applications again, officials said.

Melba students, teachers back in class

MELBA (AP) — Students and teachers resumed a normal class schedule on Thursday in this small southwestern Idaho farming community as funeral arrangements were finalized for their two classmates and the wife of an advisor killed in the crash of Flight 1713 in Denver.

"We're back to a normal routine, as normal as it can be," said Loraine Burrie. "I think the kids are feeling good about being back in a routine. We have things to get on with, things we need to do."

Classes had been canceled Monday and Tuesday after the crash of the Continental Airlines jetliner claimed the lives of Tami Daniel, 26, and students Sherry Nelson, 18, and Janine Ledgerwood, 17. The crash left Mrs. Daniel's husband Dave, the faculty advisor, and six other members of the school's Future Farmers of America chapter injured.

On Wednesday, as the airline began bringing back to Idaho the bodies of the state's 14 crash victims, counselors met with students, teachers and others to help them cope with the deep grief weighing on the town of less than 300.

"Today is better than yesterday," high school secretary Pauline Potter said Thursday. "We just feel like every day is going to get better. Yesterday was very difficult for a lot of people. We had a lot of help, but we needed it."

But the impact of the loss will still be visibly felt over the next three days as the community buries its dead and then holds a formal memorial service at the high school gymnasium on Monday afternoon.

"Monday will probably be a hard day," psychologist Charles Wilson said. "Survivors will be back. That will bring it all back."

A general memorial service for all 14 Idaho fatalities was scheduled for midday Friday at St. Michael's Episcopal Cathedral across from the state Capitol in Boise, about 45 miles northeast of Melba.

Attorney plans appeal of ouster from action

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A California attorney, who has sided with an Idaho Falls farm implement dealer in his foreclosure battle with Idaho First National Bank, says he will appeal his ouster from the case for ethical violations.

Attorney Richard Murphy said he has a petition filed with the Idaho Supreme Court to gain reinstatement as an attorney for David Steed and Associates in its legal fight with the bank.

The bank has gone to court to foreclose on Steed after claiming the business defaulted on about $1 million in loans. Steed has countersued for breach of contract and fraud and is challenging the court's refusal to grant him a jury trial in the case.

Earlier this month, 7th District Judge Grant Young revoked an earlier order allowing Murphy to participate in the case. State court and bar association officials said such action was rare.

In revoking Murphy's participation in the case, Young said the attorney violated the state Rules of Professional Conduct by making disparaging remarks about the judge, including claims that he was biased. Young compared the incident to an athletic coach hitting a referee.

"If a coach slugged a referee, he would be thrown out," Young said. "Mr. Murphy slugged the referee in this case, and he's disqualified from further appearances."

would be thrown out," Young said. "Mr. Murphy slugged the referee in this case, and he's disqualified from further appearances."

Murphy claimed the attempts to keep him out of the trial are prompted by the fact that he has a long record of battling banks in court and just recently won a multi-million-dollar judgment against the Bank of America. That judgment is being appealed.

Attorneys for Idaho First have opposed Murphy's participation in the case from the initial request filed with the court by Steed's lawyers.

Unpleasant economic choices facing nation

Editor's Note: This week, The Times-News publishes "The Morning After," an article on the American economy, originally published in The Atlantic Monthly in October, before the stock market crash. The author is Peter G. Peterson, chairman of The Blackstone Group, an investment-banking firm in New York, and former Secretary of Commerce in the Nixon Administration. Today's excerpt is the final installment and is published with permission of The Blackstone Group.

We face a future of economic choices that are far less pleasant than any set of choices we have contemplated. What, exactly, will these choices entail? Looking into the future is always a dangerous task, but here is my attempt to sketch a sequence of future economic issues that will change our lives. My sketch follows the probable chronological order — near-term, medium-term, and long-term — in which reality will impose these issues on us.

sources for economic investment alone, it is totally incredible that we could fund both our domestic obligations and our current global military obligations. By the end of this decade, therefore, it is likely that the United States will raise strategic "burden-sharing" as a routine point of discussion in our economic summits with other industrialized powers.

The medium term (1992 to 2007): The fifteen years that follow our near-term period promise to be a crossroads in our nation's future. As Americans enter this era, five years from now, they may still be uncertain whether the United States has successfully worked its way out of its foreign-sector imbalances. Ironically, it will probably be a signal of impending disaster if real per-worker U.S. consumption is significantly higher in 1992 than it is today, and it would almost certainly be a symptom of worsening global imbalance. Other symptoms would include minimal reductions in our budget deficits and in our credit inflows, further cuts in our net domestic investment, high interest rates, and special ad hoc arrangements to keep our creditors happy — such as yen-denominated Treasury bonds or de facto foreign veto-power over U.S. monetary policy. More likely, we will see a considerable dampening in real per-worker consumption, and we will be worrying about (or trying to recover from) a long recession characterized by stagnant global demand.

million. If investment, retirement, and health care for the elderly seem unaffordable to our society today for the next 20 years, when a "boom" generation is working and a "bust" generation is retiring, we can only imagine how unaffordable they will be 30 years from now, when the situation is reversed.

If in the medium term the Baby Boom has channeled a sufficient share of its income into education, training, skills, and infrastructure to permit a quantum leap in productivity by the next generation of workers, it may enjoy a prosperous and contented old age. But if the flow of invested funds from each generation to the next has ceased — and if each generation instead insists on its "right" to consume all its own product and part of the next generation's as well — then we can count on a meager and strife-torn future.

The question is not ... where to invest but the brute one, ignored by both political parties, of where to find the resources.

have Japan provide, for example, far more World Bank support, aid not tied to its exports, and more incentives for major capital flows to Third World countries; further, it would force a U.S.-Japan strategic-economic partnership in areas of the world critical to both countries — Latin America, say. In turn, the United States would continue to provide military assistance to Japan. Finally, the newly industrializing countries can no longer simply be beneficiaries of an open world economy. They must now join the club of the industrial countries and pay their dues, including aid to the poorer countries.

As for domestic spending, we must above all slow the growth in non-means-tested entitlements, starting with a reform of benefit-cost-of-living adjustments, or COLA, to 60 percent of the CPI (a "dial COLA"). For instance, would save about $160-billion-in federal outlays annually by the year 2000. Gradually raising the retirement age and lowering initial benefits to the relatively well off (for example, those with histories of high wages) should be combined with the taxation of all benefits in excess of contributions, which could save well over $50 billion annually by the year 2000. Note that under this proposal the progressivity of the tax system would leave intact benefits that go to the poor. There are other who protect the "humiliation" of the means test; however, these reforms go far toward honoring the principle of need, doing so implicitly rather than explicitly.

The very success that the Democrats enjoyed in promoting consumption ... persuaded Reagan's conservative backers ... to beat the opposition at their own game.

But 20 years from now, when young adults currently entering the work force are approaching the peak of their careers and when the oldest Baby Boomers are contemplating retirement, the foreign-imbalance problem will have been resolved, one way or the other. By then we may have entered one of the prolonged crash scenarios sketched earlier — the decline of the bumpy British variety or the indefinite deflation of the 1930s variety. If, on the other hand, we have resolved the problem successfully, we can expect that our current-account deficit will have declined steadily during the early 1990s and will be turning into a modest surplus by the late 1990s.

With the proviso that we must accept the punishment we are inheriting from the ill-fated gamble of Reaganomics. Similarly, over the medium term we must overcome the low-investment heritage we have received from 30 years of postwar preoccupation with "demand management." Both tasks will require a determined effort to save. We will have to raise our net national savings rate, now somewhere between two and three percent of GNP, to between six and seven percent of GNP in the coming five years (a level still beneath our level in the 1970s) and to between 10 and 12 percent of GNP within 20 years (a level far beneath that of Japan's, but just about on par with the average for today's industrial countries). By the first decade of the 21st century, in other words, we will have to be rechanneling yearly into investment some $450 billion that we now spend on private and public consumption.

This broad prescription has implications not only for action but also for understanding. The question is not the easy and popular one of where to invest but the brute one, ignored by both political parties, of where to find the resources. Thus, in the coming election year we need to apply a critical yardstick to the policy proposals of the presidential candidates: Does this proposal face up to the long-term problems caused by our neglect of investment in favor of consumption?

We should also take a more serious look not simply at the unfunded liabilities of our federal retirement programs, but at all the various elements of a grievously costly fringe-benefit pension program. Civil-service and military retirement programs should be made part of a total compensation package comparable to those in the private sector. They should gradually be made self-supporting (that is, funded as our corporate pension plans are), through a combination of benefit reductions (with special emphasis on lower initial benefits and later retirement, as well of course, as reductions in COLA indexing) and higher contribution rates. Second, we must act decisively to put a lid on America's excessive and wasteful consumption of health care, three quarters of which is either funded directly from public budgets or paid through publicly regulated insurance systems. This is not the place to enter the thicket of specific health-care reforms; but we must begin to experiment in earnest with various means by which to reduce the horrendous, indeed grotesque, inefficiencies of the current "cost-plus" system with the discipline of market forces (for example, greater cost-sharing, or the use of medical vouchers).

Third, to the extent that our federal deficits cannot be eliminated in the near term by simply deciding to spend less, we must increase federal revenues. The Reagan administration has steadfastly opposed tax hikes by claiming that they would permanently sanction an increased "tax burden." But surely the alternative is worse: to sanction permanently an increased "debt burden." My choice among revenue options is some form of consumption-based tax. A phase-in tax on gasoline of 25 cents for a gallon, for instance, would generate about $25 billion a year by 1990 — and also serve to depress world energy prices and moderate the now-rapid rise in our oil trade deficit, without destroying the global competitive position of critical export products such as petrochemicals. A broad-based five-percent value-added tax on all products would of course generate considerably more revenue — more than $100 billion, in 1990, or enough to cover the federal deficit. Fourth, over the longer term we should encourage higher private-sector savings rates by trading off increases in consumption-based taxes for reductions in investment-based taxes. Our industrial competitors, after all, have already adopted the principle that people should be taxed more according to what they take out of the pot than according to what they put in. Most of those countries do not tax corporate income twice; most of them do not tax interest, dividends, and capital gains as ordinary income; and most of them do not allow sweeping personal exemptions for home-mortgage interest, for employer-paid health care, and for unearned public retirement benefits. At the same time, all our industrial competitors have much higher household and corporate savings rates than we do. It's time our policy-makers put two and two together.

The least productive enterprise Americans can engage in — though it is virtually second nature — is trying to place the blame for what has happened to our economy in the 1980s on one political party or ideology. Blame is beside the point, for it is something we all share. To be sure, it is easy to find fault with the conservative fiscal leadership of the current administration. (Indeed, I will confidently predict that in the years to come President Reagan will lament his May 1986 decision not to support his own party's leadership in its efforts to freeze entitlement COLAs. President Richard Nixon, after all, has come to lament his decision to sign those COLAs into law.)

But, clearly, the liberals and the Democrats are equally to blame. Long before Reagan entered the White House, liberal opinion leaders persuaded the public to reagan the budget and the tax code as engines of free national consumption. It was Democratic Congress that argued in favor of deficit spending for so many years that no one could recall (with only one budget surplus since 1960) the rationale behind fiscal balance. And it was a Democratic president who pioneered the art of disingenuous forecasts (when President Johnson signed the Medicare Act, he said that an extra $500 million in federal spending would produce "no problem"; today Medicare costs 160 times more than estimated). The very success that the Democrats enjoyed in promoting "consumption" in fact, persuaded Reagan's conservative backers to dish the Whigs and beat the opposition at their own game.

More likely, we will see a considerable dampening in real per-worker consumption and we will be worrying about a long recession characterized by stagnant global demand.

Reaganomics was founded on a bold new vision for America, yet today — another irony — we hear every politician who is warming up for the 1988 campaign, Republicans and Democrats alike, complaining about the lack of vision in America. The reason we feel adrift is that we are waking up to the fact that blind and self-indulgent gusto is not vision at all but denial. True vision requires the forging of a far-sighted and realistic connection between our present and our future. It means recognizing in today's choices the sacrifices all of us must make for posterity. America's unfettered individualism has endowed our people with enormous energy and great aspirations. It has not, however, given us license to do anything we please so long as we do it with conviction.

Panel's Iran-Contra report will hamper U.S. foreign policy

It's finally over. After months of effort, weeks of public hearings, and millions of dollars of taxpayers' money spent, the Iran-Contra committee have finally issued their report that formally concludes their work. But what do we really know now that we didn't know a year ago?

Sen. Jim McClure shown that President Reagan was forthcoming and honest when he told the American public that he was unaware of certain of his staff's activities. As Secretary of State Shultz said in the committee, the essential facts uncovered by Attorney General Meese and his investigators remain the essential facts today. It is clear that errors in judgment were made by National Security Council staff and other officials. However, if the Iran-Contra affair is to be understood properly, it is essential to place these actions in their context: the search for a strategic opening to Iran; concern for the well-being of American citizens being held hostage and, in one case, tortured; and the need to thwart the expansion of communism in Central America. The version of events that the majority of committee members have supported; however, goes far beyond the context in which events occurred and pointing to errors in judgment. It suggests and implies that laws were broken; that officials were engaged in a systematic cover-up and that our constitutional government was in peril. The evidence

we received and the testimony we heard simply does not back up those charges. That is why I could not support the majority, a majority I signed what I believe was a very objective and straightforward version of events — the minority report. Throughout the investigations, and in the Committee's report, we were told that the Iran-Contra operations and the subsequent investigations were the result of a breakdown in trust between the executive and the legislative branches. There is some truth in this, but it is not the truth that the majority has in mind. The truth is that the only reason the committees were created is that the Congress did not trust the administration when the administration itself made public the story of the Iran initiative and the diversion of funds to the Contras. When the public hearings of the Iran-Contra Committees began six and a half months ago, I thought our purpose was to conduct a fair, objective review of events and to try to restore the trust in the relationship between the executive and legislative branches. Unfortunately, the final report of the majority does nothing to promote increased trust. It simply appears that the end result of this investigation will only serve to further strain relations on the vital issue of foreign policy. Sen. Jim McClure, R-Idaho, was a member of the House-Senate panel that investigated the Iran-Contra affair. The Times-News welcomes letters to the editor but will reject those that consider libelous or in bad taste. Letters/ Water rights, school levy, district voting and senior center

Water decisions made in the back rooms

A recent news story had this quote about Box Canyon. "The Idaho Legislature pressured the BLM into granting a right-of-way for Mr. Hardy's fish hatchery."

Since the right-of-way request, the public has been against the proposal. Now why did the Legislature apply pressure to gain the right-of-way?

Let us look at the politics and the money involved, this may give us an answer. From news stories we find the quote, "Hardy stands to make between $4.5 million to $9 million annually from a trout hatchery." This is money enough to help even legislators make some fast tracks to the local BLM office.

Next, Mr. Hardy ain't no fool. He hired as his attorney a member of the Legislature, from the ruling party.

What went on with that kind of money at stake, and having an attorney who could pressure, plus even vote on the matter puts the mind a running.

When asked by a member of the audience at a Nov. 17 hearing, "why the Legislature would not protect the public interest," it was answered in a vague way by a member of the Legislature that "we didn't think the public cared."

It wasn't until 1978 that the public had any say in the uses of water in Idaho. Even today, water matters are advertised in the weekly legisla, and if a concerned citizen does not beat the drum for public interest, the water matters of the state are left up to the good ole boys in the back room.

Given cause to wonder how many water use decisions are made in the manner of the Box Canyon issue.

At the very least, we see a conflict of interest issue raised where an attorney representing a client is a leader in the Idaho state Legislature, that may well "apply pressure" or even vote on an issue relative to Idaho's water.

Thanks extended for school levy approval

To the patrons of School District 411:

Even to a casual observer, a drive through residential and commercial areas reveals the pride Twin Falls has in its community. This pride is extended to its schools whenever we appeal to you for help.

Your support at the polls on Nov. 10 allows funding for school plant facilities for the fourth 10-year period.

That affirmative vote allows Twin Falls School District to continue its stewardship of the considerable investment our citizens have, collectively, in school properties.

Thank you for the courtesies extended me when I have spoken with individuals and groups regarding our schools, on many occasions. I'm proud to be a part of this community.

We are new (senior) kids on the block but we find ourselves involved in the Hagerman Valley senior citizens controversy. Our views are based on reliable testimony combined with our own observations. All of the old timers that we know say that the recent site manager was largely responsible for the resounding success of the Hagerman Senior Citizens Center over the past 10 years. The reports say that she worked long hours to provide the seniors with a second home for meals and parties, to acquire funding from grants and promotions and to provide special support for needy seniors.

Our own observations over two years and over a hundred meals and miscellaneous contacts with Wanda (the site manager) convince us that this is true. She is a hard worker with a generous heart who has devoted ten years of her life to the success of the center. We have heard of no action by her which justifies the summary action taken against her. She deserves a medal for her accomplishments.

MARNE and MAXINE MERCER

"Me thinks they object too loud. Even Al Capone justified his actions by saying, 'I gave them what they wanted.'"

To respond to the letter written by a person who has been in Hagerman three years. Please open your eyes — come over to the legion and see how the "poor abused" seniors feel about Wanda. We know of the hundreds of hours she put in with no pay what so ever. Of the thought and work that went into the building of this center. Of the nights she sat with or transported sick people.

The sales that she promoted to pay for our fine building, she was the one who cooked at these until she was ready to drop — you accuse us of trying to break up the senior center — far from it. We are demanding the board's resignation to replace them with people who represent the seniors, not a few persons who think it's none of our business what the board does.

Finally with one question. Who in this town could possibly have done what Wanda had done for us — ten years of living and breathing senior center. If that's not love above and beyond the call of duty, I don't know what love is.

City officials should pursue district voting

In the last few days, there have been several inquiries about district voting for the City Council. To the many who have expressed their concern about the election process, and to the many who been sincere in their request for me to not drop the ideal of district voting and to pursue fair and equal representation, I address this letter.

First of all, in every city election the issue of fair representation arises, and will continue to do so until this issue is dealt with. Some of our city councilmen have stated that this idea will not work. They have stated that people will lose interest and you cannot find qualified candidates. Now let me quote a remark our made, not to long ago, in the newspaper, "That baloney!" Okay, let's deal with voter interest in the city elections.

First of all in the last city election for the city council, only around 3, 100 people turned out to vote. A few days later, less than a 1,000 people turned out for a bond election. Now if you want to discuss losing interest in elections, I would say that the lost interest is already here. As for qualified candidates, that depends mostly on who is qualifying them.

If a candidate opposes the stances and the direction that the present administration is taking, then he already becomes an unqualified candidate in the eyes of those who want to remain on the same path. But in the eyes of others, he may be a well qualified candidate. So perhaps we should pay attention to the ones who are qualifying the candidates and see which side of the fence they are standing on.

Now with the idea of district voting, where a candidate must live in the district he would represent. The man or woman who would run for city council (or a seat on the city council) would have to remain faithful to the idea of fair representation to the people of his district. For the simple fact the people could more easily vote him out of office in the next election. As for less interest, I firmly believe there would be more interest created in district voting than there is now at the present time. Any less interest and we would have no one at the polls.

As for candidates in district elections, I believe (and a good many others) we would receive more candidates because it would cost less to conduct a campaign. Votes would be earned and not bought. It is well known that the two parties (Democrat and Republican) fear this idea because the people might just get out and get their own candidates for each district. "Now wouldn't that be something?"

One of the main fears of the city council is that with district voting, they might have to do away with the city manager system. This is not really so, and I'm sure they realize this. And besides a mayor system would really save the taxpayers' money.

The idea of dividing the city into six districts and the mayor running in an overall election for office. Will solve the problem of fair representation once and for all. And would clearly get more people involved.

I firmly believe that it is the job of the city council to do something about this problem. But if they choose to ignore this city wide problem, then I will pursue this. Due to the low turnout in the last city election, an initiative to get on the ballot in the "88" election in November, when we will be assured of a good turnout, is how I plan to pursue this matter.

Again let me state that I hope that the city council will get busy and solve this problem as I feel that this is their job.

As one senior citizen said, (and a local farmer) we understand what's happening to us, we just don't understand why.

Unpleasant economic choices facing nation

Editor's Note: This week, The Times-News publishes "The Morning After," an article on the American economy, originally published in The Atlantic Monthly in October, before the stock market crash. The author is Peter G. Peterson, chairman of The Blackstone Group, an investment-banking firm in New York City. Peterson is also a member of the Nixon Administration. Today's excerpt is the final installment and is published with permission of The Blackstone Group.

We face a future of economic choices that are far less pleasant than any set of choices we have confronted in living memory. What, concretely, will these choices entail? Looking into the future is always a dangerous task, but here is my attempt to sketch a sequence of future economic tangles that will change our lives. My sketch follows the probable chronological order — near-term, medium-term, and long-term — in which reality will impose these issues on us. While near-term issues are obvious, over the next 10 to 20 years, the most difficult and the "long-term" term horizon of almost every legislator and executive policy-maker America's primary economic challenge will be to extricate itself from growing foreign indebtedness without touching off a global crisis. The single most important step toward a "successful" outcome will be for America to generate steady, large, and predictable increases in its net national savings rate over the next several years. This, in turn, cannot be accomplished without steps to eliminate the federal deficit drain on private savings. Fiscal balance is thus the cornerstone of any plan to cut our trade deficit.

As the U.S. demand for foreign savings remains insatiable, any attempt to force-feed U.S. exports to foreigners in any one sector or to any one country will simply be vitiated by a stronger dollar, which will tend to worsen the U.S. trade balance in all other sectors or with all other countries. It's like placing a few sandbags on top of an overflowing dam; you can change where the water will spill over, but you can't change the fact that it will spill over. If there is little action on the federal budget over the next five years, therefore, the odds of a global crash landing will certainly grow.

If investment, retirement, and health care for the elderly seem unaffordable to our society today and for the next 20 years, when a "boom" generation is working and a "bust" generation is retiring, we can only imagine how unaffordable they will be 30 years from now, when the situation is reversed. If in the medium term the Baby Boom has channeled a sufficient share of its income into education, training, tools, and infrastructure to permit a quantum leap in productivity by the next generation of workers, it may enjoy a prosperous and contented old age. But if the flow of invested funds from each generation to the next has ceased — and if each generation instead insists on its "right" to consume all its own product and part of the next generation's as well, then we can count on a meager and strait-laced future.

As long as the U.S. demand for foreign savings remains insatiable, any attempt to force-feed U.S. exports to foreigners in any one sector or to any one country will simply be vitiated by a stronger dollar, which will tend to worsen the U.S. trade balance in all other sectors or with all other countries. It's like placing a few sandbags on top of an overflowing dam; you can change where the water will spill over, but you can't change the fact that it will spill over. If there is little action on the federal budget over the next five years, therefore, the odds of a global crash landing will certainly grow.

The medium term (1992 to 2007): The fifteen years that follow our near-term period promise to be a crossroads in our nation's future. As Americans enter this era, five years from now, they may still be uncertain whether the United States has successfully worked its way out of its foreign-sector imbalance. Ironically, it will probably be a signal of impending disaster if real per-worker U.S. consumption is significantly higher in 1992 than it is today, and it would almost certainly be a symptom of worsening global imbalance. Other symptoms would include minimal reductions in our budget deficits and in our credit inflows; further cuts in our net domestic investment; high interest rates, and special ad hoc arrangements to keep our creditors happy — such as yen-denominated Treasury bonds or de facto foreign veto power over U.S. monetary policy. More likely, we will see a considerable dampening in real per-worker consumption, and we will be worrying about (or trying to recover from) a long recession characterized by stagnant global demand.

In any summary discussion of America's prospects in the near, the medium, and the long term, there is one theme that must be emphasized above all others: the indissoluble bond between the economic behavior of one decade or generation and the economic well-being of the next decade or generation. Over the near term, we must accept the punishment we are inheriting from the ill-fated gamble of Reaganomics. Similarly, over the medium term we must overcome the low-investment heritage we have received from 30 years of postwar preoccupation with "demand management." Both tasks will require a determined effort to save. We will have to raise our net national savings rate, now somewhere between two and three percent of GNP, to between six and seven percent of GNP in the coming five years (a level still beneath our level in the 1970s — and between 10 and 12 percent of GNP within 20 years (a level far beneath that of Japan's, but just about on par with the average for today's industrial countries). By the first decade of the 21st century, in other words, we will have to be rechanneling yearly into investment some $450 billion that we now spend on private and public consumption.

The very success that the Democrats enjoyed in promoting consumption ... persuaded Reagan's conservative backers ... to beat the opposition at their own game.

As we have seen, a successful escape from our foreign-sector imbalance (barring an improbable near-term leap in U.S. productivity growth) could be accompanied by a decline in real consumption per U.S. worker. Over the next five years, in other words, we must be prepared for a perceptible fall in real after-tax employee compensation combined with a similar decline, or at best a stagnation, in real government spending — both in benefit payments and in defense spending. On the positive side, we can be forward to a rate of expansion in U.S. manufacturing output and employment, a steady improvement in our trade balance, and a steady decline in the rate of foreign-capital inflows (allowing, though not stopping, the deterioration of the net U.S. investment position by 1992). But in order to avoid the crash scenarios, there is plenty that we must do to start with on the negative side: a further (though modest) decline in the exchange rate of the dollar, considerable inflationary import-price pressure, and a very tough assignment for the Federal Reserve Bank and its new chairman, Alan Greenspan — finding an interest rate high enough to control inflation and keep the dollar from collapsing in value enough to avoid serious U.S. recession. More likely, the Fed will have to strike a balance between bad news on both fronts: some accommodation to inflation (as import prices rise) and some accommodation to higher interest rates (as foreign lenders get finicky).

But 20 years from now, when young adults currently entering the work force are approaching the peak of their careers and when the "oldest Baby Boomers" are contemplating retirement, the foreign-investor problem will have been resolved, one way or the other. By then we may have entered one of the prolonged crash scenarios sketched earlier — the decline of the British variety or the indefinite depression of the 1930s variety. If, on the other hand, we have resolved the problem successfully, we can expect that our current account deficit will have declined steadily during the early 1990s and will be turning into a modest surplus by the late 1990s. As that happens, the focus of our policy debate will likely shift from the problem of reducing our foreign borrowing to the challenge of raising our level of domestic investment. Over the near term most of our extra savings must focus on raising net exports, which is our sole means of weeding ourselves away from foreign creditors. Only later will we be able to concentrate on the more rewarding task of reconstructing our future. Only after paying off our credit cards, so to speak, can we think of buying a new home.

This broad prescription has implications not only for action but also for understanding. The question is not the easy and popular one of where to invest but the brute one, ignored by both political parties, of where to find the resources. Thus, in the coming election year we need to apply a critical yardstick to the policy proposals of the presidential candidates: Does this proposal face up to the long-term problems caused by our neglect of investment — in favor of consumption?

Our problems are not, at bottom, economic. We are not in a lack of political consensus on economic policy — something unimaginable to our Japanese and German trading partners, for whom national consensus (born of national crisis) informs decisions on savings, investment, productivity-related wage increases, exports and money supply growth.

What the proviso that we must put a very large question mark over the efficacy of any political system to deal with the nation's economic problems. I offer these brief policy suggestions.

First, we must tame the federal budget deficit. Real defense spending has been effectively frozen for the past couple of years, and we may be at a crossroads in foreign policy which will allow us to make substantial future savings in security expenditures. Greater sharing of the burden by our NATO allies is clearly on the horizon; it should proceed proactively, not reactively (that is, simply in response to one financial crisis or another). I believe the time is also right for a historic arms treaty with General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, whose nation's resources are far more severely constrained than ours and who desperately needs breathing space. The deal I envision would cover the more costly end, when one considers the size of the Soviet tank armies, more plausibly threatening conventional forces, as well as strategic weapons.

●The long term (2007 on): Should America not make investment its number one policy priority in the medium term, it will surely have to pay the price in the long term. It will not be a price denominated solely in terms of labor productivity, real wages, and global political influence. The price will also include an utter lack of preparation for the most stunning demographic transformation — from workers to dependents — in American history. In the 16 years between 2010 and 2025 the number of Americans who are of working age will decline by perhaps as many as 12 million (from 174 million to 162 million). Meanwhile, assuming that current longevity trends persist, the population of elderly will grow from 42 million to 65

A new international division of labor remains to be worked out with Japan. The agreement that I think is needed would

The question is not ... where to invest but the brute one, ignored by both political parties, of where to find the resources.

World Bank support, aid not tied to its exports, and more incentives for major capital flows to Third World countries; further, it would force a U.S.-Japan strategic-economic partnership in areas of the world critical to both countries — Latin America, say. In turn, the United States would continue to provide military assistance to Japan. Finally, the newly industrializing countries can no longer simply be beneficiaries of an industrial economy. They must now join the ranks of the industrial countries and pay hefty prices, including aid to the poorer countries.

As for domestic spending, we must above all slow the growth in non-meat-tested entitlements, starting with a reform of benefit indexing. Cutting the non-reform-benefit cost-of-living adjustment, or COLA, to 60 percent of the CPI (a "diet COLA"), for instance, would save about $150 billion in federal outlays annually by the year 2000. Gradually raising the retirement age and lowering initial benefits to the relatively well off (for example, those with histories of high wages) should be combined with the taxation of all benefits in excess of contributions, which could save over $50 billion annually by the year 2000. Note that under this proposal the progressivity of the tax system would leave intact benefits to go to the poor. There are those who protest the "humiliation" of the means test; however, these reforms go far toward honoring the principle of need, doing so implicitly rather than explicitly.

We should also take a more serious look not simply at the unfunded liabilities of our federal retirement programs, but at all the various elements of a grievously costly fringe-benefit pension program. Civil-service and military retirement programs should be made part of a total compensation package comparable to those in the private sector. They should gradually be made self-supporting (that is, funded) over corporate pension plans are, through a combination of benefit reductions (with special emphasis on lower initial benefits and later retirement, as well, of course, as reductions in COLA indexing) and higher contribution rates.

Second, we must act decisively to put a lid on America's excessive and wasteful consumption of health care, three quarters of which is either funded directly from public budgets or paid through publicly regulated insurance systems. This is not the place to enter the thicket of specific health-care reforms, but we must begin to experiment in earnest with various means by which to replace the current, indeed perverse, inefficiencies of the current "cost-plus" system with the discipline of market forces (for example, greater cost-sharing, or the use of medical vouchers).

Third, to the extent that our federal deficits cannot be eliminated in the near term by simply deciding to spend less, we must increase federal revenue. The Reagan administration has steadfastly opposed tax hikes by claiming that they would permanently sanction an increased "tax burden." But surely the alternative is worse: to sanction permanently an increased "debt burden." My choice among revenue options is some form of consumption-based tax. A phased-in tax on gasoline of 25 cents for a gallon, for instance, would generate about $25 billion a year by 1990 — and also serve to depress world energy prices and moderate the now-rapid rise in our oil trade deficit, without destroying the global competitive position of critical export products such as petrochemicals. A broad-based five-percent value-added tax on all products would of course generate considerably more revenue — more than $100 billion in 1990, or enough to cover the federal deficit.

Fear over the longer term we should encourage higher private-sector savings rates by trading off increases in consumption-based taxes for reductions in investment-based taxes. Our industrial competitors, after all, have already adopted the principle that people should be taxed more according to what they take out of the pot than according to what they put in. Most of those countries do not tax corporate income twice; most of them do not tax interest, dividends, and capital gains as ordinary income; and most of them do not allow sweeping personal exemptions for home-mortgage interest, for employer-paid health care, and for unearned public retirement benefits. At the same time, all our industrial competitors have much higher household and corporate savings rates than we do. It's time our policy-makers put two and two together.

The least productive enterprise Americans can engage in — though it is virtually second nature — is "trying" to place the blame for what has happened to our economy in the 1980s on one political party or ideology. Blame is beside the point, for it is something we all share. To be sure, it is easy to find fault with the conservative fiscal leadership of the current administration. (Indeed, I will confidently predict that in the years to come President Reagan will lament his May 1985 decision not to support his own party's leadership in its efforts to freeze entitlement COLAs. President Richard Nixon, after all, has come to lament his decision to sign those COLAs into law.)

But, clearly, the liberals and the Democrats are equally to blame. Long before Reagan entered the White House, liberal opinion leaders persuaded the public to regard the budget and the tax code as engines of free national expansion. It was a Democratic Congress that argued in favor of deficit spending for so many years that no one could recall (with only one budget surplus since 1960) the rationale behind fiscal balance. And it was a Democratic president who pioneered the art of disingenuous forecasts (when President Johnson signed the Medicare Act, he said that an extra $500 million in federal spending would present "no problem"; today, that extra costs 150 times more than estimated). The very success that the Democrats enjoyed in promoting consumption, in fact, persuaded Reagan's conservative backers to dish the Whigs and beat the opposition at their own game.

More likely, we will see a considerable dampening in real per-worker consumption and we will be worrying about ... a long recession characterized by stagnant global demand.

Reaganomics was founded on a bold new vision for America, yet today — another irony — we hear every politician who is warming up for the 1988 campaign, Republicans and Democrat alike, complaining about the lack of vision in America. The reason we feel adrift is that we are waking up to the fact that blind and self-indulgent gusto is not vision at all but denial. True vision requires the forging of a farsighted and realistic connection between our present and our future. It means recognizing in today's choices the sacrifices all of us must make for posterity. America's unfettered individualism has endowed our people with enormous energy and great aspirations. It has not, however, given us license to do anything we please so long as we do it with conviction.

Panel's Iran-Contra report will hamper U.S. foreign policy

It's finally over. After months of effort, weeks of public hearings, and millions of dollars of taxpayer money spent, the Iran-Contra committee has finally issued its report that formally concludes their work.

But what do we really know now that we didn't know a year ago?

We have identified more of the individuals involved and spent countless hours going over their respective roles. We have plotted the intricate financial arrangements and reviewed thousands of written documents, recorded conversations and witness testimony.

Certainly, we know many more of the details, but we have really only shown that President Reagan was forthcoming and honest when he told the American public that he was unaware of certain of his staff's activities. As Secretary of State Shultz told the committee, the entire Iran-Contra affair was uncovered by Attorney General Meese and his investigators remain the essential facts today.

It is clear that errors in judgment were made by National Security Council staff and other officials. However, if the Iran-Contra affair is to be understood properly, it is essential to place these actions in their context: the search for a strategic opening to Iran concerns for the well-being of American citizens being held hostage and, in one case, tortured, and the need to thwart the expansion of communism in Central America.

The vision of events that the majority of committee members have supported, however, goes far beyond the context in which events occurred and pointing to errors in judgment. It suggests and implies that laws were broken, that officials were engaged in a systematic cover-up and that our constitutional government was in peril. The evidence we received and the testimony we heard simply does not back up those charges. That is why I could not support the majority, and why I signed what I believe is a more objective and straightforward version of events — the minority report.

Throughout the investigations, and in the Committee report, we were told that the Iran-Contra operations and the subsequent investigations were the result of a breakdown in trust between the executive and the legislative branches. There is some truth in this, but it is not the truth that the majority has painted. The truth is that the only reason the committees were created is that the Congress ther strain relations on the vital issues of foreign policy.

Sen. Jim McClure, R-Idaho, was a member of the House-Senate panel that investigated the Iran-Contra affair.

Letters/ Water rights, school levy, district voting and senior center

Water decisions made in the back rooms

A recent news story had this quote about Box Canyon. "The Idaho Legislature pressured the BLM into granting a right-of-way for Mr. Hardy's fish hatchery."

Since the right-of-way request, the public has been against the proposal. Now why did the Legislature apply pressure to gain the right-of-way?

Let us look at the politics and the money involved, this may give us an answer. From news stories we find the quote, "Hardy stands to make between $4.5 million to $9 million annually from a trout hatchery. This is money enough to help even legislators make some fast tracks to the local BLM office."

Next, Mr. Hardy ain't no fool. He hired as his attorney a member of the Legislature, from the ruling party.

What went on with that kind of money at stake, and having an attorney who could pressure, plus even vote on the matter puts the mind a running.

When asked by a member of the audience at a Nov. 17 hearing, "Why the Legislature would not protect the public interest," it was answered in a vague way by a member of the Legislature that "we didn't think the public cared."

It wasn't until 1978 that the public had any say in the uses of water in Idaho. Even today, water matters are advertised in the weekly legals, and if a concerned citizen does not beat the drum for public interest, the water matters of the state are left up to the good ole boys in the back room.

Gives cause to wonder how many water use decisions are made in the manner of the Box Canyon issue.

At the very least, we see a conflict of interest issue, raised where an attorney representing a client is a leader in the Idaho state Legislature, that may well "apply pressure" or even vote on an issue relative to Idaho's water.

We are now (senior) kids on the block but we find ourselves involved in the Hagerman Valley senior citizens controversy. Our views are based on reliable testimony combined with our own observations.

All of the old timers that we know say that the recent site manager was largely responsible for the resounding success of the Hagerman Senior Citizens Center over the past 10 years. The reports say that she worked long hours to provide the seniors with a second home for meals and parties, to acquire funding from grants and promotions and to provide special support for needy seniors.

Our own observations over two years and over a hundred meals and miscellaneous contacts with Wanda (the site manager) convince us that this is true. She is a hard worker with a generous heart who has devoted ten years of her life to the success of the center. We have heard of no action by her which justifies the summary action taken against her. She deserves a medal for her accomplishments.

She's shown love beyond call of duty

"Me thinks they object too loud." Even Al Capone justified his actions by saying, "I gave them what they wanted."

To respond to the letter written by a person who has been in Hagerman three years. Please open your eyes — come over to the legion and see how the "poor abused" seniors feel about Wanda. We know of the hundreds of hours she put in with no pay what so ever. Of the thought and work that went into the building of this center. Of the nights she sat with or transported sick people.

The sales that she promoted to pay for our fine building, she was the one who cooked at these until she was ready to drop — you accuse us of trying to break up the senior center — far from it. We are demanding the board's resignation to replace them with people who represent the seniors, not a few persons who think it's none of our business what the board does.

I finish with one question. Who in this town could possibly have done what Wanda had done for us — ten years of living and breathing senior center. If that's not love above and beyond the call of duty, I don't know what love is.

City officials should pursue district voting

In the last few days, there have been several inquiries about district voting for the City Council. To the many who have expressed their concern about the election process, and to the many who believe in the request for me to not drop the idea of district voting and to pursue fair and equal representation, I address this letter.

First of all, in every city election the issue of fair representation arises, and will continue to do so until this issue is dealt with. Some of our city councilmen have stated that this idea will not work. They have stated that people will lose interest and you cannot find qualified candidates. Now let me quote a remark our made, not too long ago, in the newspaper. "That baloney!" Okay, let's deal with voter interest in the city elections.

First of all in the last city election for the city council, only around 3, 100 people turned out to vote. A few days later, less than a 1,000 people turned out for a bond election. Now if you want to discuss losing interest in elections, I would say that the lost interest is already here. As for qualified candidates, that depends mostly on who is qualifying them.

If a candidate opposes the stance and the direction that the present administration is taking, then he already becomes an unqualified candidate in the eyes of those who want to remain on the same path. But in this year of elections may be a well-qualified candidate. So perhaps we should pay attention to the ones who are qualifying the candidates and see which side of the fence they are standing on.

Now with the idea of district voting, where a candidate must live in the district he would represent. The man or woman who would run for city council for a seat on the city council would have to remain faithful of a good turnout, is how I plan to pursue this matter.

"Again let me state that I hope that the city council will get busy and solve this problem as I feel that this is their job."

As for candidates in district elections, I believe (and a good many others) we would receive more candidates because it would cost less to conduct a campaign. Votes would be earned and not bought. It is well known that the two parties (Democrat and Republican) fear this idea because the people might just get out and get their own candidates for each district. "Now wouldn't that be something?"

One of the main fears of the city council is that with district voting, they might have to do away with the city manager system. This is not really so, and I'm sure they realize this. And besides a mayor system would really save the taxpayers' money.

The idea of dividing the city into six districts and the mayor running in an overall election for office. Will solve the problem of fair representation once and for all. And would clearly get more people involved.

I firmly believe that it is the job of the city council to do something about this problem. But if they choose to ignore this city wide problem, then I will pursue this. Due to the low turnout in the last city election, an initiative to get on the ballot in the "88" election in November, when we will be assured of a good turnout, is how I plan to pursue this matter.

"Again let me state that I hope that the city council will get busy and solve this problem as I feel that this is their job."

As one senior citizen said, (and a local farmer) we understand what's happening to us, we just don't understand why.

Drug enforcement agents inspect part of record seizure

Largest coke seizure found in lumber load

PORT EVERGLADES, Fla. (AP) — Shipments of lumber for making picnic furniture concealed the largest amount of cocaine ever seized in the United States, drug agents said Thursday as continued discoveries pushed the haul past the four-ton mark.

Packages of the drug were found over the past two days in two successive shipments of a vessel that traveled between Honduras and Port Everglades. The drugs were hidden inside hollowed 4-foot-long boards resembling railroad ties.

This is the largest cocaine seizure in history, said Harry Carnes, spokesman for the U.S. Customs Service, as drug agents tore open the boards with crowbars.

Another Customs official, Michael Sheehan, said the worth of the total haul was estimated at $70 million wholesale. A street-sales value would be much higher, but those estimates are meaningless because they depend on such factors as the strength of the market and whether the cocaine is cut with lesser-grade drugs or materials, he said.

Since early June, Customs inspectors in South Florida have seized 66 cargo containers carrying a total of 24,000 pounds of cocaine, said Carnes.

The cocaine seized in the past two days apparently originated in Colombia, home of the Medellin Cartel, which authorities say imports 80 percent of the cocaine used in the United States.

This has all the earmarks of a well-organized operation, said U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman Paul Teresi, but he refused to say if the cartel was the drugs' source.

The first shipment, 6,292 pounds worth, was discovered by dog teams and X-ray equipment Tuesday inside neatly stacked piles of lumber aboard pallets in cargo containers at a Port Everglades warehouse.

The shipment was checked after the DEA received a tip, said Teresi.

Authorities said the cocaine was wrapped in white plastic with "1,000" — apparently referring to 1,000 grams — scrawled on the top.

The second shipment of 1,760 pounds was found Wednesday after the return trip of the same ship, identified as the Stena Mariner, bringing the amount of confiscated cocaine to just over 8,050 pounds.

Arrests made in cocaine ring

NEW YORK (AP) — Eighteen people were arrested in connection with a multimillion-dollar international cocaine trafficking network linked to organized crime, authorities said Thursday.

The ring allegedly imported cocaine by plane in shipments varying from several hundred to thousands of kilograms from various Colombian drug organizations, according to an FBI complaint.

The drugs were then distributed in the metropolitan area by representatives of the Colombian suppliers and members and associates of organized crime families, authorities said.

The network allegedly operated in South America, Florida and New York.

The defendants were arrested Wednesday night and Thursday. Authorities also seized four kilograms of cocaine, 21 weapons and one car. Three suspects remained at large.

Soviets give some, not all missile data

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has provided the United States with detailed information about its medium-range missile arsenal in another step toward completion of a treaty to be signed at the December summit, Reagan administration officials said Thursday.

But the information turned over Wednesday to U.S. negotiators in Geneva dealt mostly with deployed missiles and did not include all the specific data the U.S. side wants on SS-20s and SS-4s that might be in storage and where they are being kept, the officials said.

In the meantime, there were growing indications that Secretary of State George P. Shultz would go to Geneva next week to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze on a summit agenda.

The main purpose, if Shultz decides to go, is to discuss regional problems, and not the prospective arms control treaty, said a U.S. official who demanded anonymity.

The United States has been seeking Soviet support to impose a worldwide arms embargo on Iran and for a commitment to withdraw the Red Army from Afghanistan. The two governments also have been discussing prospects for Arab-Israeli peace talks.

Charles E. Redman, the State Department spokesman, declined to repeat the statement he has been making for days that Shultz had no plans for another meeting with Shevardnadze. While that is still "technically" correct, Redman said.

"right now we are in a position of stock-taking."

A diplomatic source, who insisted on anonymity, said Shultz was ready to decide to see Shevardnadze in Geneva. It would be their fourth round of talks in three months.

All 563 SS-20 and SS-4 missiles the Soviets have deployed would be scrapped under the treaty. The Soviets also would dismantle 130 shorter-range rockets, while the United States would eliminate 364 missiles that were installed in West Germany, Britain, Italy and Belgium.

Behind the U.S. demand for more data is a concern that SS-20s might be kept in reserve and out of sight while the deployed weapons were removed.

"We really have not gotten the kind of data we need before signing the treaty in terms of location and deployment," said a senior U.S. official, who demanded anonymity.

Redman, meanwhile, said "I don't believe you could get to a treaty unless you had all the data. But the Soviets say it will be forthcoming."

He said U.S. and Soviet negotiators in Geneva would work through the weekend. Negotiations on another treaty to curb intercontinental nuclear weapons will be suspended next Monday until mid-January, Redman said.

Meanwhile, on another sticking point, the Soviets have agreed to allow U.S. inspectors to take up positions outside a plant where SS-25 missiles are assembled. That means they could observe any finished weapons as they are brought out.

But, two officials said, the United States is asking for continuous rather than occasional inspection, and the Soviets are holding back. A third official said "what they have not agreed on is inside inspection of test, storage and maintenance facilities."

Additionally, the officials said, the Soviets want a reciprocal right to inspect a plant where U.S. cruise missiles are assembled. U.S. negotiators rejected the demand, but might make a ballistic missile plant available.

Behind the dispute is a U.S. concern that SS-25 intercontinental ballistic missiles would be secretly converted into SS-20s.

The additional Soviet data was turned over to U.S. negotiators after chief U.S. negotiator Max M. Kampelman left Geneva to report to Secretary of State George P. Shultz. He had met for three days with chief Soviet negotiator Yuli M. Vorontsov and made progress on a number of issues.

The most significant was the Soviets' dropping a demand for follow-on negotiations that the U.S. side saw as an attempt to limit American fighter-bombers kept in Western Europe.

Kampelman reported to Shultz Wednesday night at the State Department.

A U.S. official, referring to the data the Soviets had turned over, said "they did not provide us with all the information we had hoped." But he said it was more specific than the mass of data given earlier to the U.S. side.

Senators urge U.N. international meetings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six senators are urging the United Nations to convene emergency international meetings to respond to scientific findings that chemicals are causing ozone loss over the Antarctic, it was disclosed Thursday.

The lawmakers — the chairman and five members of the Environment Committee — made the call in a letter sent to Monica Tolba, executive director of the U.N. Environmental Program in Nairobi, Kenya.

Tolba's agency was instrumental in bringing industrialized nations together for the negotiations that led to an agreement in September for an up to 50 percent global cut in production of chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs.

These chemicals, widely used as refrigerants and industrial solvents, are being blamed for destruction of the stratospheric ozone layer, which serves as natural protective screen against the sun's cancer-causing ultraviolet rays.

The CFC protocol has provisions for scientists to meet in 1989 to review the adequacy of the proposed cuts in CFCs. The United States had pushed for an 85 percent reduction.

House GOP leader joins revolt against Gorbachev address

REP. ROBERT MICHEL Sees 'a terrible mistake'

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republican leader Robert Michel on Thursday joined a GOP revolt against an invitation to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to address a joint meeting of Congress, spearheading prospects for such an appearance.

"I think the event would be a terrible mistake and I have relayed my views to the State Department," Michel said in a statement.

Gorbachev, scheduled to visit Washington to meet with President Reagan on Dec. 7-10, would be the first communist leader to address a joint meeting of Congress.

"The purpose of this visit is to finalize details of a very important arms agreement," Michel said in a statement. "There is no logical reason to obscure the purpose of the visit or give it an inappropriate symbolic value" by having a joint meeting.

Michel's stance threw the invitation into grave doubt, because he is one of four top congressional leaders whose approval would be needed to formally open the doors of Congress to Gorbachev, said a Republican aide.

Michel and other Republican leaders were working behind the scenes with White House officials to find a forum for Gorbachev that would be less controversial than a joint meeting of Congress, an honor usually reserved for allies.

Seventy-five conservative House members signed a letter urging Reagan to arrange another venue for Gorbachev to meet with Congress.

And Senate Majority leader Robert Byrd, D-W.V., said that such an appearance by Gorbachev "would make sense only if the Soviets would agree in advance to allow Reagan to address the Soviet people live and unedited and through his own interpreter on prime-time Soviet television."

Republicans said they saw signs of a compromise.

Paced with a revolt on Capitol Hill, White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater issued assurances that "we have not proposed or asked for a special session of Congress, and it's been discussed with any number of people."

"The Soviets are considering what they want to do, and will let us know in a few days," said Fitzwater.

Asked whether Gorbachev had been formally invited to address Congress, Fitzwater said "not as far as we're concerned."

He said the issue of a joint meeting was "a negotiated process... we aren't proposing these things. I mean, we have to see what they want, and they haven't told us yet what they want to do."

Fitzwater said "we've told them that if there is any kind of nationwide address (by Gorbachev), we would want the same kind of opportunity in the Soviet Union.

Some administration officials seemed wary of inviting Gorbachev to address a joint meeting of Congress.

One GOP congressman who spoke to Treasury Secretary James Baker said Baker told him he would recommend that the vice president find someplace else to be if this thing is not stopped."

Vice President George Bush, a candidate for president, would normally be seated behind the podium during a joint meeting, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, would be seated next to Bush.

The congressional parliamentarian said that unanimous consent was required in the House for a joint meeting, but that no action was needed by the Senate.

However, Senate aides said a majority vote in that body could block the invitation.

Despite Fitzwater's assurance that no formal invitation had been issued to Gorbachev, it was not clear exactly where the matter stood.

NOW head labels Kennedy 'sexist'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Organization for Women on Thursday broke from the cautious approach of liberal groups toward Anthony M. Kennedy's Supreme Court nomination, vowing to oppose a nominee NOW considers "a disaster" on women's issues.

NOW President Molly Yard told reporters that a study of a half-dozen of the appellate judge's more than 400 opinions had convinced her organization that the appellate judge is a "sexist, a person unwilling to help women in the struggle for equality."

"It's truly unacceptable to be a sexist and to sit on the Supreme Court," Ms. Yard said.

At the same time, the Senate Judiciary Committee appeared on the verge of setting a timetable for confirmation hearings.

Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., who met with White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr. and committee members, said the most likely timetable would be for start hearings about Jan. 20, have a committee vote about Feb. 2 and begin floor debate about Feb. 5.

A mid-December hearing date also remained under consideration, Biden said, but the earlier start would not change the floor schedule.

A broad coalition of civil rights, civil liberties and women's groups waged a successful, all-out fight against President Reagan's first nominee for the court vacancy Robert H. Bork.

But the same groups have not yet taken positions on Kennedy, urging a go-slow approach until they complete a study of his record. Ms. Yard said she hopes the other groups will soon join NOW in opposition.

Ms. Yard said her group was especially upset at Kennedy's ruling against female workers in the state of Washington, who sought equality in pay with men holding comparable jobs.

Kennedy wrote the decision in 1985 for a unanimous three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, where he has served for 12 years.

"He paid not the slightest attention to findings of fact," which, Ms. Yard said, showed that discrimination did exist.

Kennedy said the disparity in pay, without proof of a discriminatory motive, does not violate a federal law banning on-the-job sex bias.

"It is evident... that Congress, after explicit consideration, rejected proposals that would have prohibited lower wages for comparable work as wrangled with equal work," he wrote.

He said the state could not be held responsible for "an inequality which it did not create," adding, "neither law nor logic deems the free market a suspect enterprise."

Ms. Yard also criticized a 1980 Kennedy opinion involving homosexuals in the Navy. He ruled against a challenge by three sailors to the service's former policy of giving automatic discharges to those engaging in homosexual activity.

After discussing the need for military discipline and the special problems caused by long isolation on ships, Kennedy said, "Upholding the challenged regulations as constitutional is distinct from our decision that they are wise."

"It should be plain from a statement that the constitutionality of the regulations stems from the needs of the military, the Navy in particular, and from the unique accommodation between military demands and what might be constitutionally protected activity in some other contexts."

That explanation did not satisfy Ms. Yard, who said if Kennedy could not uphold the privacy of the sailors, "What will he say on the right of privacy of women to control their reproductive rights?"

According to the NOW president, Kennedy only recently resigned from a private San Francisco club that barred women and blacks.

She told reporters that NOW headquarters is trying to organize local coalitions, raise money and contact senators because Kennedy would be "a disaster for women" on the court.

Biden, speaking of President Reagan's third try at filling the current court vacancy, said, "I think this is going to go real quickly, although sure, there will be opposition."

Biden predicted hearings would only take three to five days. There were 12 days of hearings for Bork, who later was rejected by the Senate, 68-42.

Greener pilots a worry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The major airlines have been easing their hiring requirements in recent years because of the need for thousands of new pilots, and some aviation safety officials worry about the decline in cockpit experience.

Pilot inexperience has been raised as a possible factor in last Sunday's crash in Denver of a Continental Airlines DC-9 after it was disclosed that both the captain and co-pilot had only recently begun flying that type of jetliner.

Spokesmen for the airline disputed suggestions that the two pilots' flying background was unusual, calling it "the norm in the industry." They emphasized that both pilots, who were among the 27 people killed in the accident, met Federal Aviation Administration certification requirements.

But aviation experts that the overall experience level of pilots at rapidly expanding airlines, even some of the industry's largest carriers, has fallen off in recent years.

"This is one of the areas of concern that we have today. There's been such rapid expansion that (pilots) have come up (the senior system) rapidly and the total level of experience can drop," said Homer Mouden, a former commercial pilot and vice president of the Flight Safety Foundation.

Co-pilot Lee Bruscher, 26, who apparently was at the controls of Continental Flight 1713 when it crashed had been with the airline for less than four months and had only 36 hours of flying time in a DC-9. His previous flying experience was on smaller turboprop aircraft for a Texas commuter airline.

His captain, Frank Zvonek, 43, was an 18-year veteran at Continental, but he had flown the DC-9 only five months with less than 200 hours and had been promoted to captain only 17 days before the crash.

Last year, the National Transportation Safety Board raised concerns about pilots with limited experience being paired in the cockpit. The NTSB made its views in connection with a commuter accident, but board members said that with the rapid movement of commuter pilots to the major airlines they were worried the problem may spread to the jet operators.

Pilots are assigned flights by a bidding system in which seniority plays a key role. If there is rapid growth at an airline, pilots get promoted faster and the chances increase of two relatively inexperienced pilots being assigned together, aviation authorities say.

"When movement (up the seniority scale) is slow, it's rare to get two new guys (together in the cockpit), but in an airline expanding rapidly, that's not unusual," said David C. Koch, a pilot at United Airlines and co-founder of Aerospace Flight Training Academy, an aviation career counseling firm.

Abbreviated shuttle solid rocket motor passes brief firing test

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — An abbreviated version of a new solid rocket motor for the space shuttle was test-fired Thursday, and space agency officials said it appeared to withstand the stress of launch pressure successfully.

"Externally, there is no evidence of a hot gas leak," said Jim Thomas, technical assistant to the solid rocket motor project manager at the Marshall Space Flight Center here.

The test, which lasted only a fraction of a second, was the first of a series using Marshall's shortened version of the solid-fueled rocket engine. The results will be analyzed by National Aeronautics and Space Administration engineers at the center.

The shuttle uses two of the solid rocket boosters to lift off from Earth. If testing goes as NASA hopes, space shuttle flights will resume next year. The agency halted the program and called for redesign of the motor after the Challenger disaster in 1986. The deaths of the seven astronauts were blamed on a flawed g-ring in a solid rocket engine joint that leaked superheated gas, leading to the explosion of a fuel tank.

Inquiry into Britain's worst ever subway blaze ordered

LONDON (AP) — The government announced an inquiry Thursday into a fire that raged through London's largest subway station so swiftly it trapped many people, with out warning. Thirty people were killed and about 80 injured.

Survivors of the Wednesday-evening blaze told stories of passengers afire and others being carried by escalators into the flames.

People collapsed from smoke. Many pounded on windows of passing trains trying to escape Britain's worst subway fire.

Some survivors said subway workers directed them to escalators moving up into the fire; others said the down escalators churned on, carrying people toward the flames.

Maps of the station for use in emergencies were stored in the ticket office and firemen had to fight through the blazing concourse to reach it.

Mark Silver, 21, said he and about 50 others got off a train, saw the fire and tried to re-board, but they wouldn't open the doors. People were pushing and punching each other to try to get on the train. There must have been 200 people on the platform.

"I saw seven people going down an escalator even though it was on fire," he said. "When I got into the main concourse, people were still queuing for tickets and wandering around. It was terrible."

An assistant fire chief, Joe Kennedy, said fighting the flames was like "going down a roaring chimney."

Officials said they could not explain how a small fire spread so quickly. Investigators went into the cavernous, fire-ravaged ticketing plaza of the multi-tiered King's Cross station Thursday to search for clues.

Fire chiefs said they were certain the blaze began on an escalator, not beneath as was previously thought, but said they had no idea what caused it.

An independent study of the London subway system two years ago was highly critical of safety arrangements, Transport Secretary Paul Channon said Thursday. There are a lot of questions to be answered.

Twenty-one of the injured remained hospitalized Thursday, 12 of them in serious condition. A victim's list was not issued. Some of the dead were burned beyond recognition.

The North London Blood Transfusion Service said it nearly ran out of blood Wednesday night, and emergency supplies had to be flown in from as far away as Scotland.

Gerry O'Neill, a Fire Brigade divisional officer, said many people could have been saved if they had not followed their natural instinct to escape the claustrophobic tunnels.

He knew of 50 people who stayed in lower areas and were saved by seeking shelter in bathrooms and al-coves instead of fighting their way upward into the smoke.

Queen Elizabeth II expressed shock and sent condolences, and the Archbishop of Canterbury called for prayers.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher visited the injured and then picked her way through the rubble for a look at the escalator where the fire began. She later went to Parliament to announce the public inquiry. It will be headed by a senior lawyer, with assistance of rail and fire experts.

Some lawmakers of the opposition Labor Party indirectly blames the Conservative government for the tragedy, saying budget cuts had caused staff shortages and corner-cutting in the maintenance of London's Underground, the world's oldest subway system.

It was disclosed that another fire broke out Wednesday night at the central train station of Liverpool, in north-west England, forcing the evacuation of about 100 passengers.

The fire brigade said a cable caught fire and no one was hurt.

Scotland Yard said it did not take seriously telephone calls from Northern Ireland, terrorist groups claiming responsibility for the King's Cross fire.

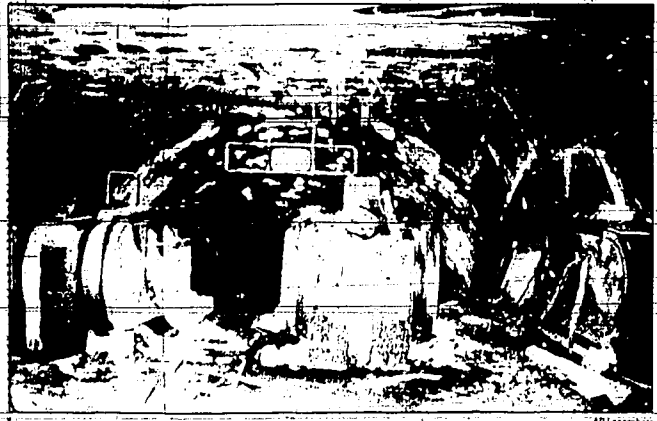

"So far we have no evidence to suggest arson or terrorist activity," said a Scotland Yard spokesman who spoke on condition of anonymity.

However, Divisional Fire Officer Phil Lloyd said: "We are rather mystified at the moment why at the end of the rush hour, with a lot of people about, a relatively small fire can accelerate and cause such horrendous damage and such horrendous injuries in such a small space of time."

He said forensic investigators would "identify any accelerants, explosives or any other terrorist or fire accelerant that may have been used by person or persons unknown."

The fire was reported at 7:36 p.m. and extinguished four hours later.

Mrs. Thatcher said trains continued to run through the station and picked up passengers. But some witnesses said there were trains that did not stop.

Physicist says exit visa battle over

MOSCOW (AP) — A Jewish physicist considered one of the Soviet Union's brightest scientists, before emigration activities cost him his career said Thursday he was being allowed to emigrate.

Yakov Alpert, 76, fought for an exit visa for 12 years.

Alpert said Soviet authorities notified him Thursday that he and his wife, Svetlana, 46, could leave the country. He said they would emigrate as soon as they were able to put their personal affairs in order.

He said by telephone that they will go first to Vienna and then decide where to settle.

"We have so many invitations," added Alpert, the latest so-called Soviet Jewish refusenik granted an exit visa recently. Prominent Jewish refuseniks Vladimir Slopan and Ida Nudel also have been allowed to leave the Soviet Union in recent weeks.

Before superpower summit meetings, the Soviets customarily move to resolve certain human rights cases that have been an irritant in U.S.-Soviet relations. Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan are scheduled to meet in Washington Dec. 7.

In a recent interview, Alpert said he had stepped up pressure to emigrate because "when a man is 50 he can wait — when he's 76, he can't."

Alpert worked alongside human rights activist and Nobel Peace Prize-winning physicist Andrei D. Sakharov when Sakharov was a young man.

Alpert developed an experiment that used the Sputnik's radio signal to map the ionosphere, the outer part of the earth's atmosphere. The Sputnik launched in 1957, was the world's first satellite.

He represented the Soviet Union in 1947 on an expedition to Brazil to track a solar eclipse and in 1958 went to Vienna for a discussion of how to detect atomic explosions.

But after Alpert became an advocate for fellow Jews seeking to leave the Soviet Union, he and his wife, who also is a physicist, lost their jobs and many of the benefits of the Soviet scientific elite.

After applying to emigrate in 1975, Alpert was demoted from his job at the Soviet Academy of Sciences and his wife was discharged. He began holding seminars for foreign and fellow refusenik scientists in his apartment in 1983 and soon was retired from his part-time job.

"This is one of the areas of concern that we have today. There's been such rapid expansion that (pilots) have come up (the senior system) rapidly and the total level of experience can drop," said Homer Mouden, a former commercial pilot and vice-president of the Flight Safety Foundation.

Co-pilot Lee Bruscher, 26, who apparently was at the controls of Continental Flight 1713 when it crashed had been with the airline for less than four months and had only 36 hours of flying time in a DC-9. His previous flying experience was on a smaller turboprop aircraft for a Texas commuter airline.

His captain, Frank Zronek, 43, was an 18-year veteran at Continental, but he had flown the DC-9 only five months with less than 200 hours and had been promoted to captain only 17 days before the crash.

Last year, the National Transportation Safety Board raised concerns about pilots with limited experience being raised in the cockpit. The NTSB made its views in connection with a commuter accident, but board members said that with the rapid movement of commuter pilots to the major airlines they were worried the problem may spread to the jet operators.

Pilots are assigned flights by a bidding system in which seniority plays a key role. If there is rapid growth at an airline, pilots get promoted faster and the chances increase of two relatively inexperienced pilots being assigned together, aviation authorities say.

"When movement-up-the-seniority scale is slow, it's hard to get two new guys (together) in the cockpit, but in an airline expanding rapidly then it's not unusual," said David C. Koch, a pilot at United Airlines and co-founder of Aerospace Flight Training Academy, an aviation career counseling firm.

Abbreviated shuttle solid rocket motor passes brief firing test

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — An abbreviated version of a new solid rocket motor for the space shuttle was test-fired Thursday, and space agency officials said it appeared to withstand the stress of launch pressure successfully.

"Externally, there is no evidence of a hot gas leak," said Jim Thomas, technical assistant to the solid rocket motor project manager at the Marshall Space Flight Center here.

"The initial indication is that everything functioned normally," said Ed Medal, a spokesman for the center. The test, which lasted only a fraction of a second, was the first of a series using Marshall's shortened version of the solid-fueled rocket engine. The results will be analyzed by National Aeronautics and Space Administration engineers to determine if the new motor and critical new joints handle the stress load of a launch.

The shuttle uses two of the solid rocket boosters to lift off from Earth. If testing goes as NASA hopes, space shuttle flights will resume next year. The agency halted the program and called for redesign of the motor after the Challenger disaster in 1986.

The deaths of the seven astronauts were blamed on a flawed joint in a solid rocket engine joint that leaked superheated gas, leading to the explosion of a fuel tank.

Inquiry into Britain's worst ever subway blaze ordered

LONDON (AP) — The government announced an inquiry Thursday into a fire that raged through London's largest subway station so swiftly it trapped many people with-out warning. Thirty people were killed and about 80 injured.

Survivors of the Wednesday evening blaze told stories of passengers a-fire and others being carried by es-calators into the flames.

People collapsed from smoke. Many pounded on windows of pass-ing trains trying to escape Britain's worst subway fire.

Some survivors said subway work-ers directed them to escalators mov-ing up into the fire; others said the down escalators churned on, carry-ing people toward the flames.

Maps of the station for use in emergencies were stored in the ticket office and firemen had to fight through the blazing concourse to reach it.

Mark Silver, 21, said he and about 30 others got off a train, saw the fire and tried to reboard, but they wouldn't open the doors. Peo-ple were pushing and punching each other to try to get on the train. There must have been 200 people on the platform.

"I saw seven people going down an escalator even though it was on fire," he said. "When I got into the main concourse, people were still queuing for tickets and wandering around. It was surreal."

An assistant fire chief, Joe Kennedy, said fighting the flames was like "going down a roaring chimney."

Officials said they could not ex-plain how a small fire spread so quickly. Investigators went into the cavernous, fire-ravaged smoking plaza of the multi-tiered King's Cross station Thursday to search for clues.

Fire chiefs said they were certain the blaze began on an escalator, not beneath as was previously thought, but said they had no idea what caused it.

An independent study of the Lon-don subway system two years ago was highly critical of safety arrangements. Transport Secretary Paul Channon said Thursday: "There are a lot of questions to be answered."

Twenty-one of the injured re-mained hospitalized Thursday, 12 of them in serious condition. A vic-tim's list was not issued. Some of the dead were burned beyond recognition.

The North London Blood Transfu-sion Service said it nearly ran out of blood Wednesday night, and emer-gency supplies had to be flown in from as far away as Scotland.

Garry O'Neill, a Fire Brigade divi-sional officer, said many people could have been saved if they had not followed their natural instinct to escape the claustrophobic tunnels.

He knew of 50 people who stayed in lower areas and were saved by seeking shelter in bathrooms and al-coves instead of fighting their way upward into the smoke.

Queen Elizabeth II expressed shock and sent condolences, and the Archbishop of Canterbury called for prayers.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher visited the injured and then picked her way through the rubble for a look at the escalator where the fire began. She later went to Parliament to announce the public inquiry. It will be headed by a senior lawyer, with assistance of rail and fire experts.

Some lawmakers of the opposi-tion Labor Party indirectly blame the Conservative government for the tragedy, saying budget cuts had caused staff shortages and corner-cutting in the maintenance of Lon-don Underground, the world's oldest subway system.

It was disclosed that another fire broke out Wednesday night at the central train station of Liverpool, in northwest England, forcing the evacuation of about 100 passengers.

The fire brigade said a cable caught fire and smoke was hurt-ling.

Scotland Yard said it did not take seriously telephone calls from Northern Ireland terrorist groups claiming responsibility for the King's Cross fire.

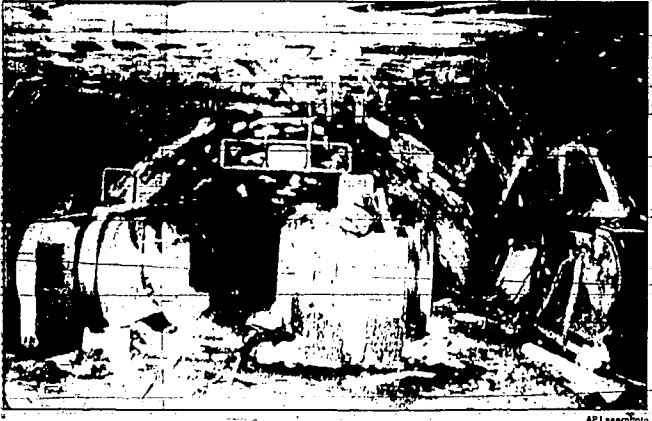

"So far we have no evidence to suggest arson or terrorist activity," said a Scotland Yard spokesman who spoke on condition of anonymity.

However, Divisional Fire Officer Phil Lloyd said: "We are rather mys-tified at the moment why at the end of the rush hour, with a lot of people about, a relatively small fire can ac-celerate and cause such horrendous damage and such horrendous in-juries in such a small space of time."

He said forensic investigators would "identify any accelerants, ex-plosives or any other terrorist or fire accelerant that may have been used by person or persons unknown."

The fire was reported at 7:36 p.m. and extinguished four hours later.

Mrs. Thatcher said trains contin-ued to run through the station and picked up passengers. But some wit-nesses said there were trains that did not stop.

Physicist says exit visa battle over

MOSCOW (AP) — A Jewish phys-icist considered one of the Soviet Union's brightest scientists, before pro-emigration activities cost him his career said Thursday he was being allowed to emigrate.

Yakov Alpert, 76, fought for an exit visa for 12 years.

Alpert said Soviet authorities notified him Thursday that he and his wife, Svetlana, 46, could leave the country. He said they would em-grate as soon as they were able to put their personal affairs in order.

He said by telephone that they will go first to Vienna and then de-cide where to settle.

"We have so many invitations," added Alpert, the latest so-called So-viet Jewish refusenik granted an exit visa recently. Prominent Jew-ish refuseniks Vladimir Slepuk and Ida Nudel also have been allowed to leave the Soviet Union in recent weeks.

Before superpower summit meetings, the Soviets customarily move to resolve certain human rights cases that have been an irri-

tant in U.S.-Soviet relations. Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan are scheduled to meet in Washington Dec. 7.

In a recent interview, Alpert said he had stepped up pressure to em-grate because "when a man is 50 he can wait — when he's 76, he can't."

Alpert worked alongside human rights activists and Nobel Peace Prize-winning physicist Andrei D. Sakharov when Sakharov was a young man.

Alpert developed an experiment that used the Sputnik's radio signal to map the ionosphere, the outer part of the earth's atmosphere. The Sputnik, launched in 1957, was the world's first satellite.

He represented the Soviet Union in 1947 on an expedition to Brazil to track a solar eclipse and in 1958 went to Vienna for a discussion of how to detect atomic explosions.

But after Alpert became an advo-cate for fellow Jews seeking to leave the Soviet Union, he and his wife, who also is a physicist, lost their jobs and many of the benefits of the Soviet scientific elite.

After applying to emigrate in 1975, Alpert was demoted from his job at the Soviet Academy of Sci-ences and his wife was discharged. He began holding seminars for for-ign and fellow refusenik scientists in his apartment in 1983 and soon was retired from his part-time job.

Soviets to sell satellite photography with high resolution

This photograph of Seattle was taken by a Soviet satellite and is on sale for $70. AP Laserphoto

Soviet prowess in military reconnaissance from space is no surprise, but this photo is available for $70 from a venture begun this year to sell Soviet satellite photos and mapping skills abroad.

"We are open to do business, and to make money," says Vyacheslav A. Piskulin, general director of Soyuzkarta, a company based in Moscow.

Soyuzkarta enters a market that has been dominated by the Landsat program of the United States and France's Spot satellite program.

In the opinion of Soviet and Western specialists, however, pictures from a camera with a 1,000mm lens, and other Soviet cameras, surpass anything now available to private users.

Their quality led an official of the U.S. Geological Survey to express interest about possible use of the Soviet pictures by U.S. government agencies.

Piskulin said recently, "What we can now offer customers abroad is better images than any realized by electronic means." He was interviewed at Soyuzkarta headquarters in Moscow's southeast industrial district.

Finer resolution in the Soviet pictures means objects 20 feet across are visible. Western scientific attaches in Moscow say Landsat can see nothing smaller than 100 feet and Spot cannot resolve objects under 33 feet.

Among the many uses of images recorded by satellite are mapping, crop forecasting, land use, transportation planning, detection of water pollution and charting continental shelves.

Landsat pictures taken after the accident April 26, 1986, at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Ukraine gave some of the first clues that something was wrong.

By choosing various wavelengths from light spectrum, different features can be detected. Piskulin said a satellite can detect different types of trees in a forest.

Photos from space have clear military applications. Both superpowers use spy satellites to keep track of each other's missile sites and movements of ships and troops.

Soviet officials say the Soyuzkarta photos are intended purely for civilian use and that the photography program has nothing to do with the military.

"In this country, we sell pictures taken from orbit to over 900 civil organizations," Viktor Kravchenko, a leading cartographer, was quoted as saying in an interview with the government daily Izvestia.

Some scientific attaches at Moscow embassies say the Soviet space photographs would be ideal for military applications, however, because they show objects in great detail.

"If you need pictures of your own country, you can put a plane up and shoot away at 1,000 meters and get better results than from any satellite," said a Scandinavian attaché, speaking on condition of anonymity. "But if you want to look at your neighbor's backyard, the Soviets have an ideal option."

Difference between the Soviet operation and the older Landsat and Spot programs are fundamental.

Poliburo approves job placement, adds more unemployment benefits

MOSCOW (AP) — The ruling Politburo approved plans Thursday for a government-run job placement service and greater unemployment benefits to ease the shock of large job losses expected under economic reforms.

Under changes to go into effect on Jan. 1, Soviet factories will become economically self-sufficient and their managers will be allowed to set salaries and fire unproductive workers.

A newspaper disclosed last week that Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign to streamline the bureaucracy would cut 50 percent of all jobs in ministries by 1990 and lead to the firing of at least 60,000 Muscovites in the next two years.

The Soviet Constitution guarantees each citizen a job, and Kremlin officials have stressed that the leadership's drive for efficiency in government and business would not cause a wave of unemployment.

Soviet factory and office workers receive an average of 200 rubles (about $300) a month, a low figure by Western standards. However, the country has touted its ability to provide secure employment for all.

The Soviet Union also subsidizes bread and other basic goods. Some officials have contended that about 5 percent of Soviets are without work at any given time due to firings and voluntary job changes.

A report by the official Tass news agency on the meeting Thursday of the 13-member Politburo, the top Communist Party body, mentioned some measures intended to lessen the impact of the job cuts.

"It is planned to employ a complex of organizational, socio-economic and legal measures to create an integral state system of job placement of the population," the report said.

"Existing benefits and compensation for workers relieved in the new conditions of economic management are expanded, and additional ones are introduced," the report added, without giving details.

The daily newspaper Sotsialisticheskaya Industriya said last week that 60,000 people would lose their jobs in Moscow-based industrial ministries, but did not make clear how many workers in cultural, educational and other ministries would be fired.

Joint venture planned for Soviet Union

MOSCOW (AP) — American industrialist Armand Hammer joined plans Thursday to join with the Italian company Montedison SPA and Marubeni Corp. of Japan to build a giant petrochemical complex in the Soviet Union.

Under terms of an agreement with the Soviet Oil Industries Ministry, the Soviet Union will provide the gas liquids and sulfur gas at its Tengiz oil field near the Caspian Sea in exchange for 51 percent ownership of the joint venture.

Hammer said his Occidental Petroleum Corp., Montedison and Marubeni will seek other private partners for the project, which is expected to cost $5 billion to $6 billion and should be operating in 1995.

If the project lives up to expectations, it will be the largest joint venture of its kind in the Soviet Union and one of the largest petrochemical plants in the world.

Hammer told a news conference that the developers will prove their investment and make profits by exporting 50 percent of the sulfur, plastics and other petrochemicals produced at the plant. Montedison is a leading producer of polypropylene and polyethylene, and Occidental is a major consumer of sulfur in its manufacture of fertilizers.

"So it's a good fit," the billionaire industrialist and philanthropist told reporters. "The value of the project is so great that 50 percent profit will finance the project very well, returning our investment and giving us a profit," Hammer said.

Pasquale Langolfi of Montedison said his firm has built 60 plants in the Soviet Union and will take the lead in construction and operation of the complex, which he said should be in operation in three years and in full production by 1995.

Langolfi said it is too early to estimate how many Soviets and foreigners will be employed at the plant, adding that many details have yet to be settled.

Springsteen fans gather while their hero rocks

ASBURY PARK, N.J. (AP) — Bruce Springsteen fans gathered Thursday outside a dilapidated arcade where the blue-collar rocker worked on a new music video.

Garrett Giberson, deputy director of public maintenance for the city, said Springsteen's crew began shooting film Wednesday and would work through Thursday night.

City Manager Samuel Addeo said Propaganda Films of California obtained permission through the city's beach department and his office to film the video at the arcade, which was sealed off to avoid publicity.

Springsteen was believed to be doing a video for his latest album, "Tunnel of Love."

Springsteen's video coincides with the filming of the movie "Home Boy" starring Mickey Rourke, whose locations include a nearby amusement park set.

No hope that Hope will show on his day

NACOGDOCHES, Texas (AP) — Friday is Bob Hope Day, but it's hopeless to hope he'll be here. Mayor Judy McDonald says it would be better described as "No Hope Day."

The comedian was to perform at Stephen F. Austin University on Friday, which prompted the City Council to declare the day in his honor.

But Hope's promoter contacted school officials Wednesday to say that because of disappointing ticket sales, the performance would be canceled. The council, however, has no plans to meet and change its declaration.

Canadian ski team makes Fox a member

TORONTO (AP) — The national alpine ski team welcomed Michael J. Fox to the family, establishing ties by looking forward to the future.

Fox, who was born in Vancouver and is the star of the television series "Family Ties" and such films as "Back to the Future," has been named honorary captain as part of the team's preparation for the 1988 Calgary Olympics.

Fox will appear on a fund-raising poster with Canadian skiers Rob Boyd, Brian Stemmler, and Karen Percy, the ski team announced.

"I may not be able to help the team ski faster, but I hope that the funds I help raise will allow the athletes to do their best possible at the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics," Fox said in a statement.

Tremml joins cyclists to prepare for flight

MOJAVE, Calif. (AP) — Glenn Tremml, who set the distance record for human-powered flight, is training with a team of Olympic-class cyclists and a lighter plane for a Greek flight odyssey in homage to Daedalus.

Tremml, a medical student who set a record here in January by flying 37.2 miles over Edwards Air Force Base, is back for three months of training and testing in preparation for a 72-mile flight from the island of Crete to mainland Greece in March. Tremml's Massachusetts Institute of Technology team is staying at the same Mojave Airport hangar where the Voyager airplane was housed before its historic round-the-world flight without refueling last year.

The new $400,000 human-powered plane, the Daedalus, is 20 pounds lighter than the 92-pound Eagle, in which Tremml set his record, and its 112-foot wingspan is two feet shorter than the Eagle's.

Its wings are shockproof pink from a special high-density foam that gives a smoother surface than the material used for the earlier plane. Daedalus, according to Greek myth, fabricated wings that he and his son Icarus used to escape from the Labyrinth on Crete.

CMA elects record merchandiser chief

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Record merchandiser Jack Eugster has been elected chairman of the board of the Country Music Association, and singer Randy Owen of the group Alabama has been chosen a vice president.

Eugster, of Minneapolis, is president of The Musicland Group, one of the world's largest merchandisers. Owen, of Fort Payne, Ala., is lead singer and guitarist for Alabama and has written many of its hit songs.

The Nashville-based association is the country music industry's trade group.

Chiropractor on probation for exorcism

ST. GEORGE, Utah (AP) — A St. George chiropractor who allegedly used his practice to sideline in exorcisms has been placed on year-long probation by state licensing officials.

The Utah Division of Occupational and Professional Licensing ordered Dr. Jan Marion Graf to stop his "unauthorized practice of chiropractic." He was also ordered to meet every three months with the chiropractic licensing board to review the nature and scope of his practice.

The DOPL filed a petition in May, alleging that Graf was using a technique called "kinesiology" to diagnose evil spirits in his patients. "According to the order released Wednesday, Graf has treated numerous patients since 1979 with "chiropractic psychology."

After reviewing the case history, Graf reportedly would evaluate the "energy fields" of the patient's body and "locate and draw off negative energy and eliminate stress."

If he determined evil spirits were causing the patient's problem, Graf would refer the patient to "religious authorities or command the patient to instruct the evil presence to leave."

The chiropractic licensing board determined that Graf's treatment "does not comport with the recognized standards of ethics of the chiropractic profession."

In addition, Graf's alleged failure to render an accurate diagnosis for patients treated for evil spirits could constitute a danger to their physical well-being, the board found.

Phone bills lead to court

WEST JORDAN, Utah (AP) — A 19-year-old girl who allegedly ran up more than $3,000 in "party-line" telephone bills in one month has been referred to juvenile court on charges of burglary and theft by deception, authorities say.

The girl's parents received a phone bill of $2,613 for calls made to toll numbers between Sept. 19 and Oct. 12, said Detective Vern Peterson.

The girl and two younger friends also made calls totaling more than $700 from other homes in the neighborhood, in some cases while the owners were not home, Peterson said.

The girl's parents have made arrangements to pay the bill at the rate of $10 per month, the detective said.

By calling the toll numbers, persons people can talk with up to seven other people at one time.

Peterson said the 14-year-old is an introvert who "doesn't fit in" with other kids teen-agers and does not communicate well with her parents.

Iran confirms another raid on unfinished nuclear plant

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iran claimed Iraqi warplanes raided an unfinished nuclear power plant Thursday for the second time this week, and Iraq said it bombed three tankers in Iran's waters and shot down two enemy planes.

Iraq did not confirm the latest reported attack on the nuclear plant near Iran's coastal city of Bushehr. The other attack on the plant came Tuesday.

Iraq has said it moved "fissionable material" into the facility and claimed that a second attack might result in a nuclear disaster equal to the 1986 Chernobyl accident in the Soviet Union. Nuclear experts discounted the claims.

Iraq said its anti-aircraft gunners shot down two of Iran's U.S.-built F-5 jets two hours apart over northern Kurdistan province. Iran reported conducting raids in the province but said all aircraft returned safely.

British navy units detonated one of two mines found in the Persian Gulf, where Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980. The explosion prompted a flurry of rumors that a ship had blown up. Both mines were found off the coast of Qatar in the central waters of the 600-mile-long waterway.

In the Kurdistan city of Dohuk, near the Turkish border, thousands of Iraqis shouting calls for revenge marched in a funeral procession for 10 civilians killed Wednesday in an Iranian air raid on a hospital.

Iran denied bombing the hospital. West Germany's foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, arrived in Jordan for talks with King Hussein. They were expected to discuss efforts to end the 7-year-old war and the results of the Arab summit last week that condemned Iran. Genscher also visited Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

Tehran radio said Iraqi planes attacked the Bushehr nuclear site at mid-morning Thursday. It said no casualties were reported, but gave no details.

Official Iraqi media did not mention a raid on the unfinished facility, which its aircraft have attacked several times during the war.

After the attack Tuesday, Iran reported 11 people killed, including a top Iranian nuclear expert and a West German engineer.

Spokesmen for the International Atomic Energy Agency, and U.S. nuclear experts, said no reactors were working at the plant and there was no evidence supporting Iran's claim that "fissionable material" stored there.

Baghdad radio said Iraqi warplanes scored hits Thursday on three more "large naval targets," meaning tankers, in Iranian waters. Another was reported Wednesday night.

The reports raised to 19 the number of tanker attacks claimed by Iraq in 11 days. Only four have been confirmed independently by salvage officials and other sources in the Gulf. Iraq raids tankers that shuttle crude oil from Kharg Island, Iran's huge northern gulf terminal, to makeshift loading facilities in safer waters about 450 miles down the waterway.

Iraq said its warplanes made three attacks Thursday on military targets near Dohuk in northern Iraq and Shahrani in the south, causing "substantial losses" of troops and equipment.

It said all planes returned safely, but Iraq said two F-5E Tigers were downed and others driven off before reaching their targets.

About 30 to 45 of the U.S.-made jets are believed to remain in Iraq's air force, which is badly depleted by age and parts shortages. Iranian pilots fly relatively few missions compared to Iraq, whose air force is estimated to have an 8-1 advantage.

The Iranians denied an Iraqi claim that the hospital in Dohuk was bombed "deliberately" Wednesday. Ten people died and 64 were wounded. The official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted a military spokesman as saying no such raid occurred and contending that Iraq was "paving the way for committing fresh crimes" against Iran.

At the hospital, four of the missiles were still lying unexploded, waiting to be dismantled by military experts.

IRA retaliates; anti-Catholic councilor shot

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A former Protestant city councilor who once said Roman Catholics should be burned was shot in the head and critically wounded Thursday, police said.

In telephone calls to Belfast news media, the Irish Peoples Liberation Organization claimed responsibility for the shooting of George Seawright. The organization is a new nationalist group formed out of the extremist Irish National Liberation Army.

The attack was condemned by the Social Democratic and Labor Party, the largest Catholic faction in Northern Ireland.

The incident threatened to aggravate sectarian tensions in the British province, where an Irish Republican Army bomb blast killed 11 people on Nov. 8.

There have been several attacks on Catholics by Protestants in retaliation for the bombing in Enniskillen, and Seawright's popularity among Protestant extremists raised fears that more reprisals could follow.

Seawright, 36, was rushed to Mater Hospital and later transferred to the Royal Victoria Hospital for neurosurgery. His wife, Elizabeth, said that if her husband survived he would be paralyzed from the neck down.

Seawright retired from politics in June after being defeated for a seat in the British Parliament. He had been working as a taxi driver in Belfast.

Verity: Japan's export strategies hurt industry

TOKYO (AP) — U.S. Commerce Secretary William Verity told Japanese officials Thursday that their aggressive export strategies are wrecking foreign industries, a Commerce Department spokeswoman said.

Verity told Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita that Japan must refrain from its "tendency to organize what's left to go after a key market by using government, industry and the banking system together to create an absolute domination of a foreign domestic market," said spokeswoman Desiree Tucker. "This is not the way to seek export markets," she quoted him as saying.

Ms. Tucker said Verity added that the consequence of such trading practices was the destruction of domestic industries abroad.

She said Verity stressed that Japan should assume more responsibility and work with the United States toward mutual leadership in the world.

In meetings with Japanese government and business leaders, Verity also expressed "concern that Japanese people and the government in particular have lost credibility," Ms. Tucker said.

"The perception now is that the Japanese government says it will open up a particular market segment and then delays and delays without taking action," she quoted him as saying. He said it was "important that the Japanese rectify this perception problem," the spokeswoman added. Verity, who arrived Wednesday for his first overseas visit since being sworn in on Oct. 19 as commerce secretary, also met separately with International Trade and Industry Minister Hajime Tamura, Foreign Minister Sosuke Uno and a group of business leaders.

His visit comes at a time of renewed tension in U.S.-Japan trade relations following the Commerce Department's railing that Japanese companies are dumping, or selling below fair market value, color television sets in the United States.

On Tuesday, Verity told reporters in Washington that Japan risks imposition of U.S. retaliatory duties for failing to price its products in line with the yen's appreciation against the dollar.

Ms. Tucker described Wednesday's meetings as "positive and constructive."

However, after Verity's meeting with Uno, Yoshifumi Matsuda, the Foreign Ministry's senior spokesman, told reporters, "We tried to submit our thoughts and policies, but in spite of our efforts, they are not persuaded, they are not satisfied. Certainly, they don't give up."

One sticking point, Matsuda said, was the U.S. demand that American firms be accorded equal footing in bidding on contracts for Japanese public works projects.

Tacoma, BLM don't see eye-to-eye on environment study

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — U.S. Bureau of Land Management officials and Tacoma City Light disagree about the timing and extent of environmental impact studies on the Washington-utility's A.J. Wiley hydroelectric project near Bliss.

Tacoma could get its project license from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission without satisfying BLM's environmental requirements, said Jeff Jarvis, BLM Shoshone District hydro coordinator.

Tacoma will do what is normally necessary to satisfy BLM—but not before City Light gets its federal dam license, says Garth Jackson, City Light's A.J. Wiley coordinator.

BLM, state and federal environmental officials met with Tacoma in Idaho Tuesday and Wednesday for talks on what they want to see in the environmental studies Tacoma is preparing. This is required as part of the FERC license process.

BLM has its own, stricter environmental requirements that have to be satisfied before the land management agency will issue a permit allowing Tacoma to flood BLM land.

"We had serious problems with the last environmental impact statement on the Wiley project," said Jarvis, referring to Idaho Power Co.'s unsuccessful attempt to develop the site.

It would be hard to complete the studies satisfying BLM—in the time FERC allows for the license application, said Jackson, City Light's Wiley project coordinator.

"You can do it on schedule," said Jarvis.

Jackson said City Light wants to know what environmental issues it is facing but that doesn't necessarily mean it will find out in the next six months.

Generally, the 86 megawatt dam will have impacts on the white sturgeon fishery, water quality in the Snake River and riparian vegetation, said state and federal environmental officials. The extent of the impacts is not known at this time.

Tacoma sees the dam as a way of reducing its reliance on Bonneville Power Administration electricity. However, the project has spurred opposition from Idaho officials concerned about an out-of-state interest in developing resources that Idaho might need one day.

Tacoma distributed plans for its environmental studies to the affected state and federal agencies. It proposes looking at water temperature and dissolved oxygen problems, taking an inventory of fish species. Another item to be studied is the impact of the dam on bald eagles that nest along the shore.

City Light's timetable is to complete the studies by October, when its preliminary permit with FERC runs out, said Ron Campbell of Beak Consultants-in-Portland.

Jim Clark, a BLM biologist in the Jarbidge Resource Area, questioned how Tacoma could tell the extent of environmental damage, when it doesn't know what the existing environment at the site is.

The final answer to repairing the damage won't come during the licensing process, said Campbell.

The representatives from the BLM and U.S. Environmental Protection Agency stressed that scientists know little about many aspects of the Snake River ecosystem.

Another issue is the loss of riparian vegetation along the Snake from grazing and development. Michelle Stevens of EPA's Idaho office said 70 percent of the wetlands along the river have been lost and the balance of Group advocates foreclosure juries

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A private committee that says it is trying to restore jury trials in bank foreclosure suits is holding a public hearing at 7 p.m. tonight at the Twin Falls County Judicial Annex.

The "Trial by Jury Committee," headed by Idaho Falls businessman David C. Steed, is campaigning to get the 37,836 signatures needed to place an initiative on the ballot requiring jury trials in all actions.

"The problem here really is that the people, when they're in contest with a lender, just don't get a damage claim jury trial," Steed said. "When there's a trial by jury, the lender gets his fair share of risk. You can't find judges in this whole state who will rule against banks."

Part of the problem, Steed said, is that a judge can decide to try a foreclosure suit himself and avoid jury trials where banks could be judged by harsher standards.

"You know what, it's killing Idaho," Steed said. "It's a tragedy, it makes you want to weep and cry."

Steed says he has hooked up with the Southern Idaho Rural Council to sponsor the hearing tonight, and he wants to accomplish two things at the hearing.

First, Steed said, he wants to find out if people in the area want to have jury trials in foreclosure suits. "One big problem is that most people don't know they're denied trial by jury, and once they do they get mad," Steed said.

Steed also wants to find out how farmers and other people who have been foreclosed on by banks feel about their lawsuits.

"We want people to come forth and say how they've been treated," Steed said. "We're not going to lead the hearing."

Emerging lender-liability law is putting more pressure on banks to act in good faith, Steed said. He said he feels that juries will hold banks to a higher standard of care in making and foreclosing on loans.

"Most people, when they borrow money, they do it in good faith," Steed said. "Under emerging laws of lender liability, the lender has the responsibilities, too."

And often, banks share some of the responsibility for a borrower's financial difficulty, Steed said.

They encourage a farmer to buy that farm, buy that tractor, and they say, "well, back you," Steed said. "When it fails, they trash him. What they should do is compromise and work it out."

In many foreclosure suits, Steed claims, a jury would rule in favor of a borrower, especially if the bank shows bad faith in its dealings.

Lack of gloves cited

District Clinics nearly canceled

By PAT MARGANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The South Central District Health Department has come close to canceling programs because of a lack of gloves, recommended to protect health workers from AIDS.

Physical Health Director Cheryl Juntunen reported on the state of gloves and other matters to the district's Board of Health at its meeting on Wednesday.

The federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta recommended recently that anyone drawing blood or conducting blood tests wear gloves because of the potential transmission of the fatal Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) in the case of the district, that amounts to thousands of gloves, Juntunen said.

Health workers conduct more than 7,000 blood drawings or "finger sticks" for blood samples a year in the district's various programs, such as family planning, she said.

"It's really a problem. We do use a lot of gloves and have come close to canceling clinics for the lack of gloves," Juntunen said.

Fortunately, there were no cancellations because the district borrowed gloves from other agencies, she said.

The price has gone up for the gloves, which cost about $7 for a box of 100 pairs, she said.

"It's a new expense we have this year. But we've been able to manage," Juntunen said.

The risk of health workers being exposed to AIDS from blood drawings is small, especially in this low-risk area, she said. But nationwide health workers have been exposed to the deadly syndrome.

"We've always had a policy that if you have a cut or an abrasion, you wear gloves," Juntunen said.

But experts say transmission of the AIDS virus can occur with even a minute scratch. "As a result, health workers have been erring on the conservative side, especially with the 'hygienic situation' surrounding AIDS," she said.

AIDS has been diagnosed in 12 people in the state so far this year, with two of those people diagnosed in the Magic Valley, according to a Nov. 7 report from the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. Between Oct. 24 and Nov. 7, a new case was diagnosed in Bonneville County.

Also this year, 78 people in Idaho have tested positive for exposure to the AIDS virus with 10 of those cases in the Magic Valley.

On another potentially deadly disease, Juntunen said there had been in excess of 400 HIB-related illnesses. The cases seemed more coincidental than pointing to an outbreak.

HIB, haemophilus influenzae type B, is most dangerous to children under 5 years old because it brings serious and sometimes fatal complications. Two deaths from HIB-related illnesses have occurred in Twin Falls this year, say state health officials.

Shots to protect children between the age of 2 and 5 are available at the health district.

Children in day-care centers seem to be more at risk, Juntunen said.

Juntunen also reported that the health district had given 2,500 flu immunizations, which is 500 more than last year.

Overall, immunization clinics have increased 30 percent, and as a result clients sometimes wait two to three hours for a shot at the main office in Twin Falls, she said.

The story is the same at the district satellite offices elsewhere in the area.

Trails pass through woods near Rock Creek in a 40-acre tract adjoining Rock Creek Park

Park advisory board urges Rock Creek expansion

By BART JANSEN

TWIN FALLS — As Darrell Heider's aerial photographs illustrate, Rock Creek flows north away from Addison Avenue, winding first to the left, then back right and left again.

But not so obvious is the boundary to Rock Creek Park, sitting in the foreground next to Addison Avenue and ending at the creek's first zig. Heider, Twin Falls County's parks and recreation director, pointed out that beyond the park lies a half-mile of twisting green riverbed and anbling trails.

And that potential 40-acre addition to the county park is for sale.

The Twin Falls County Parks Advisory Board told the Board of Commissioners Thursday that if they buy only one piece of land this year, this should be

it. "I'd go far enough to say I think it's a once in a lifetime opportunity," said board member Jean Turnbaugh.

"There are some areas down there that have themselves two trails—not just one but two," said Heider.

The advisory board advocated buying all the land, which also includes a plateau of desert above the canyon rim. Heider said the land now lists for $75,000—far less than the $200,000 price tag it carried four years ago.

And board members suggested that steps could be built up the canyon wall to the desert above, or the desert could be a separate area, such as one illustrating local vegetation.

"We could make a decent display of the different

Sergeant claims seat-belt law is unenforceable

By PAT MARGANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Idaho State Police Sgt. Davo Neal is blunt about the state's seat-belt law.

"The laws are unenforceable and our hands are tied," he told the Board of Health of the South Central District Health Department on Wednesday.

The board has been hearing presentations about the seat-restraint law because of its concern over the weakness of the one-year-old adult seat-belt law.

Only about 14.5 percent of the drivers surveyed in the Magic Valley use seat belts, according to 1987 state figures, Neal said.

When drivers were waiting in line during a recent Idaho State Police check of equipment, he could hear the seat belts clicking, he said.

"It sounded like a bunch of crickets out there," Neal said.

Yet, few citations were issued for violation of the seat-belt law because it appears the Legislature's intent was not to enforce them, he said. He believes the adult seat-belt law is weak because an offender can't stop someone just for driving without a seat belt, he said. Before a driver can be convicted for not wearing a seat belt, he or she must be first convicted of another violation. And even if convicted the fine is only $5.

In addition, passengers in the back seat are not required to wear seat belts, he said.

He sees the weakness of the child-restraint law as requiring only parents or guardians to buckle up children, Neal said.

"It's up to us to prove who these people are. It's very unenforceable," he said.

Just as he is convinced the laws are unenforceable, Neal is convinced about the effectiveness of seat belts to save lives.

Of the 33 fatalities in the Magic Valley during the first 10 months of the year, 16 of the victims were involved in rollovers or where they were ejected from the vehicles. In those cases, there is a strong possibility they might have survived if they wore a seat belt, he said.

"Verbal warnings don't work in most cases," he said. Buckling up has to become a habit. "But it's got to be enforced."

When contacted by The Times-News, Twin Falls County Sheriff Jim Munn and Twin Falls Police Commander Pat Bermingham agreed the adult seat-belt law is not strong. They said the child-restraint law was more effective.

"You see a lot of kids in safety seats," Munn said. He recalled only a few citations issued by his deputies for seat-belt violations.

Bermingham said he couldn't recall any violations issued by the city police.

Because of the low fine and required conviction on another offense, enforcing the seat-belt law is a bother, especially if an offender is already fined on another offense, he said.

At the meeting, Neal mentioned the media blitz about the law. It was a tragedy because 27 people died, he said. But nationally, the equivalent of a 727 plane full of people are lost each day to traffic accidents and no one says a word. "I don't understand that," he added.

Health district calls for funds

By JANE ROBISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Legislation that stripped the local health district's ability to charge fees has seriously crippled the department and cut into services, lawmakers were told Thursday.

"The intent of the law was good, but it didn't turn out right," said Gerald Hurst, director of the South Central District Health Department. "We need help. We're dying."

Hurst laid out the health district's needs Thursday during the annual meeting with legislators as lawmakers and groups gear up for the upcoming Legislative session.

Attending the session were Rep. Ernest Hale, R-Burley; Sen. Danton Darrington, R-Deer; Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly; Rep. Ralph Peters, R-Jerome; Sen. Darrel McRoberts, R-Twin Falls, and Rep. Russell Newcomb, R-Twin Falls.

Hurst said state law stipulates a 6 percent contribution from the state to help support the state's seven health districts. But in 1986, the Legislature eliminated fees charged to food and milk establishments inspected by health officials.

"The idea was to make it up with general fund money, but we didn't get it," Hurst said.

The local health department received $322,000 from the state this year and $530,900 from counties. But it lost $30,000 this year when fees were abolished and is down another $30,000 from lower state funding.

Meanwhile, demands for services have increased dramatically, officials said.

Cheryl Juntunen, head of the physical health division, said the immunization program "is in crisis."

The number of parents bringing their children in for shots is up 30 percent over last year, and some parents have to wait up to three hours, she said.

AIDS monitoring is increasing, also. The number of diagnosed cases has jumped from one in 1985 to 107 now. In the Magic Valley, ten people have tested positive for exposure to the AIDS virus while another two have been diagnosed with the disease.

"I think we're looking at the future of AIDS in Idaho," she said.

Idaho is one of the few states that does follow-up work with those diagnosed with the deadly virus and contacts others who might be infected.

"Idaho is doing a marvelous job," Juntunen said, but it's also claiming more staff time.

Keeping tabs on toxic chemicals also is demanding more time, Hurst said.

"We're strapped for time to meet compliance, such as monitoring the solid wastes program," he said.

The health department is requesting funding to hire another nurse for the immunization

Accident injures driver

TWIN FALLS — Carolyn Broner, 39, of Twin Falls, was listed in stable condition after a traffic accident at Falls Avenue and Washington St. North.

Hospital Administrator Merlis Jackman said Broner suffered a number of fractures but was stable Wednesday afternoon.

Police reports showed she was traveling west on Falls Avenue when she drove into the path of a northbound vehicle driven on Washington Street North by John F. Winkle, 59, of Filer.

Broner was cited for failure to stop at a stop sign. Damages were estimated at $5,000 to her vehicle and $1,500 to the Winkle vehicle.

The accident occurred shortly before 6 p.m. Tuesday. Broner was removed from her vehicle by ambulance personnel and officers and transported to the hospital.

Earlier Tuesday, a pickup truck driven by Eric Glenn Carlson, 19, of Twin Falls, crashed into the front of the 7-11 store on Filer Avenue, resulting in $7,000 damage to the building. Twin Falls police said the accident occurred at 7:53 a.m. at 107 Filer Ave.

Reports indicated Carlson pulled into the store's parking lot and the brakes on his pickup truck failed, causing the vehicle to drive through the front window of the building. There were no injuries and damage to the truck was estimated at $200. Carlson was cited for failure to maintain equipment.

Miller on critical list

TWIN FALLS — Geraldine Miller, of Twin Falls, the former wife of City Councilman Jack Q. Miller, remained in critical condition Thursday night in a Denver hospital where she is being treated for injuries suffered Sunday in an aircraft at Stapleton Airport in Denver.

A medical spokesperson at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center in Denver said Thursday night that Miller's condition is unchanged and she is still being treated in the hospital's intensive care facility.

She was aboard the Continental Airlines Flight 1713 that crashed on take-off Sunday in a snow storm at the Colorado airport.

Hospital officials said the Twin Falls woman suffered a broken neck and numerous other injuries.

She was among 55 persons injured in the crash that also killed 28 of those on the aircraft. Councilman Miller and the couple's daughters left Monday to be with the injured woman.

Family history fair slated

BURLEY — The Magic Valley Genealogical Society, Germans from Russia Genealogical Society and the Burley Family History Center are co-sponsoring a Family History Fair Saturday at the Burley Inn.

According to Pete Carter, director of the Family History Center, the fair is scheduled to culminate "Family Week," designated by President Ronald Reagan for the third week of November.

The fair will offer a variety of exhibits and displays. Mini-classes on how to get started on genealogical research will be offered five times throughout the day, scheduled from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Blanche Simmons, local instructor in genealogical research, will conduct the classes.

House of Video will show how home movies, old pictures and slides can be preserved on video. There will also be a demonstration on using computers in genealogy.

One of the special features of the fair will be a large display sponsored by the Germans from Russia Genealogical Society. Carter said, "We are fortunate to have three experts in this difficult research field. They have already gathered thousands of names for the Germans from Russia and are collecting more data each day."

Carter said they would like to extend a special invitation to any descendants of this group.

People who have done research are invited to bring their records to share and compare. A photocopy machine will be available for use.

Carter said there is no charge for booths, and encouraged anyone interested in setting up a booth or display to contact him at the Family History Center, 678-7286 or 678-1628.

He said the Burley Family History Center has over 7,000 rolls of microfilm, quarterly genealogical magazines from 32 states, plus hundreds of state and family history books available. The center is on a library loan system with the Utah Genealogical Society, which has 1.3 million rolls of microfilm, and the Idaho State Genealogical Society in Boise.

"This fair is to acquaint the general public with genealogy, to teach them how to do it, and to assist in research and organizing to make it fun and interesting," Carter said.

Contaminated cheese found

RUPERT (AP) — Several thousand pounds of contaminated Kraft Philadelphia Cream Cheese from Rupert were found at the company's Springfield, Mo., plant, but none of the cheese was ever delivered to area stores, company officials said Wednesday.

The cheese, with a code date of Feb 18-88-R, was discovered in the Springfield plant Tuesday. The problem was caused by an ammonia leak at a plant in Rupert, said Kraft spokesman Scott Horne.

"While the leak was quickly contained and cleaned, traces of ammonia were absorbed by the packaging of the product," Horne said in an interview from Kraft's headquarters in Glenview, Ill.

"The product was then shipped to Springfield for distribution. However, none of the product with the code date has been distributed," he said.

Theft from vehicle reported

TWIN FALLS — Burglaries reported Wednesday to Twin Falls police included the theft of money from a Twin Falls bar and tools from a vehicle parked at the home of the owner.

The manager of the Pour Haus bar, 127 South Park Ave. W., told police that $300 disappeared from the business sometime early Tuesday morning. There was no evidence of forced entry at the building, police said.

Leonard J. Williams of 579 Quinney St., told police someone broke into his vehicle sometime Sunday night or Monday and took an estimated $150 worth of tools. Police said entry was apparently gained through an unlocked door.

Positive drug tests drop at INEL

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The number of employees and job applicants testing positive for drugs at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory has dropped by nearly two-thirds since random drug testing began three years ago, officials said.

"You can see the trend is going down," said INEL Security Chief Bob Boston. "People see we don't tolerate drugs out here."

So far this year, Boston said, 18 employees or applicants have tested positive for drugs. That compares to 45 positive tests in 1985.

Under the INEL program, which predates the Reagan administration drive to force drug testing throughout government, all successful job applicants are tested along with employees in "sensitive positions," including security guards. Currently the tests are only for marijuana and cocaine although that could change with proposals now under consideration by the federal government.

This year, of the 1,583 people checked, 13 successful applicants and five employees tested positive, Boston said. The greatest number of positive tests came from applicants for jobs with America's Protective Service, the security guard force at the site.

Alcohol smuggling charge dropped

MOSCOW (AP) — A Kanasawick woman accused of smuggling alcohol into the Kibbie Dome has successfully denied the charges, but Moscow City Attorney Will Herrington warns that others shouldn't get the notion that they can beat the law as well.

Consumption of alcohol inside the dome remains a violation of the city's open container ordinance, Herrington said Thursday. But U.I. regulations, which apply to alcohol possession within the dome, have run into enforcement roadblocks.

Those rules were drafted by David McKinney, former UI vice president for Finance and Development, but state law says the rules must be approved by the Idaho State Board of Education, Latah County Magistrate William Hamlett said.

The city attorney couldn't come up with the documents to certify that approval in its case against Helen Taylor, 23.

The legal quirk comes as 16,000 people are expected to attend Saturday's University of Idaho-Boise State University football game.

Nevertheless, Herrington said, "If you take alcohol into the Kibbie Dome, you're still at risk."

While UI officials and Moscow police may face some difficulty in arresting people who carry alcohol into the dome, those caught drinking inside can be cited under the city's open container ordinance.

Ma Taylor had been accused of smuggling three cans of beer and one bottle of wine into the Kibbie Dome on Oct. 24. But Herrington dismissed the charges in court on Wednesday.

She had been charged under a 1917 Idaho "pleasures resorts" law, which gives facility managers the authority to prescribe rules of conduct.

The act, passed as part of Idaho's state prohibition effort, puts managers under certain requirements — such as posting copies of the regulations in "conspicuous" places.

In Ma Taylor's case, Herrington ran into a roadblock when he tried to introduce as evidence copies of the UI alcohol regulations.

them have been degraded.

The question is historically what were the extent of wetlands and how much is there now, she said.

A 1979 National Science Foundation study showed there were four high quality riparian zones on the river. Stevens said when she evaluated them two years ago, she found only one was left.

Riparian zones can contain rare vegetation, they provide cover for wildlife, they prevent stream bank erosion and act as a filter to keep sediment from getting into a body of water.

Stevens urged the Beak consultants to do more than evaluate the vegetation along the river. Beak should look at all the functions of the riparian zone and examine the germination rate of plants, reproduction and how they respond to flood stress.

Carol Wilson, a botanist with Beak, said a first step would be to look at the extensive literature on replacement of wetlands and making up for damage to them.

Jackson says Tacoma believes there is potential for the project. By the time the license material is to be filed with FERC, City Light will have a good handle on the project's environmental impacts.

"If the level of impacts is substantial and unmitigable then we won't be filing," he said.

types of plants that grow there," said board member Earl Peck.

The commissioners agreed, but said they were also faced with a tight budget.

"I think it's our general feeling that we want to preserve it, but we don't have $75,000 laying around," said Chairman Judy Felton.

Other funding sources the board is exploring include a nearby power project and state Department of Parks and Recreation funds.

The Rock Creek II Hydroelectric Project, planned three miles downstream from the park where the case against the Snake River, is seeking approval from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

In exchange for building the road, powerhouse and diversion structure on about 3.2 acres at the mouth of Rock Creek, the project could buy the unaffected 40 acres upstream, adjacent to Rock Creek Park, to give the county.

Heider said the power project's impact area is small and involves mainly wetlands. But officials are still studying whether proposed uses of Rock Creek expansion, such as hiking, picnicking and fishing, are appropriate for such a compromise.

Felton said the expanded park could add local tourism, which was echoed by board member M.F. Smith.

"I was fascinated by the place and what can be done with it," Smith said. "Birds fascinate everybody."

Smith said, as Heider recalled seeing a red-tailed hawk at the park during a tour with state officials that morning.

At the board's suggestion, Twin Falls commissioners said they would write a letter supporting the swap — a lot of park land for a little flooding of wetlands. Local support is expected to hasten FERC's approval of the project.

Another possible funding reserve is the state Department of Parks and Recreation. Heider said he's walked state Department of Fish and Game representatives and the parks department's executive director through the land.

Heider recalled that the parks official agreed with the proposal to buy the land. "He said 'Heider, don't lose that. This is one of the most serene, tranquil places in the state,'" Heider said.

The parks department administers federal conservation funds, which built Rock Creek Park originally and which funded $87,000 worth of improvements during 1987. Eight acres of land across Rock Creek from the park were acquired, a car bridge was installed and plans call for a pedestrian bridge and 13 picnic tables on the east side of the creek.

Heider said the pitch to the state parks department must be made now, for the money allocated next February.

program, and an epidemiologist for the AIDS program, and a half-time employee for the environmental program.

Juntunen said a sharp increase in the number of infant deaths from premature births is causing major concern. Low-income women are showing up at hospitals to have their babies without any prenatal care, and then have no insurance to pay the bills.

Darrington said he believes the Legislature will pass a Medicaid program to provide coverage to low-income pregnant women.

Lawmakers also were updated on the health department's rule-making efforts to implement last year's direct legislation.

Hurst said the health departments are adopting standards already governing restaurants to use as a guide for day-care operators in preparing food.

His comments drew a favorable response from Darrington, one of the sponsors of last year's legislation.

"I'm very pleased with the attitude the health districts have taken," Darrington said. "You haven't thrown some curves at us like some others, and I think the approach you're taking is right on."

Legislators seemed supportive of the health department's request for more money.

"I'm always impressed with the amount of work they do on what little they get," Nois said.

Darrington said he thought the health districts were "short-changed" by the Legislature last year.

"I think they are in line for more money," he said.

"It (the wait) is not fair to clients," Juntunen said.

Children perceive—from the bus-waiting rooms that the quality of care is inadequate, she added.

"We're going to have to do something down there," she added.

In other district business, Environmental Director Alan Biernmann reported on the findings of state health food coordinators. Don Brothers, from a "pre-survey" of 40 school lunch cafeterias in the state. The specific schools weren't identified in the summary he received, he said.

Brothers conducted the pre-survey in preparation for a primary survey he will conduct in 1990, Biernmann said.

The cafeterias overall scored 80 percent—in good health—standards with cafeterias in the Magic Valley rated about the same as the state average, he said.

"It could be better at 85 percent or better," Biernmann said.

The presence of pests, such as rodents and roaches, were found in some cafeterias, he said. This concern leaving the back door open.

Lack of handwashing facilities or improper storage of toxic substances were other violations found, he said.

The district inspects the cafeterias at least once a year, but they are also inspected by the State Education Department, Biernmann said.

"They (the cafeterias) are pretty well controlled," he said.

Senate panel expected to approve strict nuclear safety law

WASHINGTON — In a move spurred by mounting evidence that government nuclear installations are dangerously unsafe, a Senate panel is expected to approve legislation this week establishing stringent oversight and worker safety guidelines — all Department of Energy nuclear facilities.

The Senate Armed Services Committee met Tuesday to work out details of the Nuclear Protections and Safety Act of 1987, which is designed to improve the safety, health and environmental conditions at 127 DOE-owned nuclear facilities which employ over 142,000 people.

The guidelines would apply to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory outside of Idaho Falls. INEL employs 10,400 workers, most of whom are involved in the complex's 26 nuclear programs, according to spokesman John Walsh.

Government atomic installations process material for the nation's nuclear defense, such as plutonium for warheads and fuel for nuclear submarines. Unlike commercial nuclear plants that produce electricity, DOE facilities are not regulated by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and their employees are not covered by safeguards under the Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA).

Many lawmakers have raised concerns that aging equipment, along with faulty safety and environmental procedures, could lead to an accident that would threaten the availability of materials for the country's nuclear deterrent.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, the bill's author, said, "It is intolerable that the safety of the employees who are on the front line of our national nuclear defense production are themselves endangered at government-owned facilities."

"Assuring safety at these facilities is a necessary condition for national defense needs to be met," Glenn said.

Glenn's bill is gathering bipartisan support in the Senate because evidence produced this year in four Senate hearings and in 21 reports issued by the General Accounting Office suggests the DOE has been lax in overseeing health and safety matters at its plants.

"All this indicates that serious deficiencies and a number of potentially dangerous situations have resulted from Energy's neglect of safety, health and environmental considerations," Glenn admonished.

Among several examples cited, GAO pointed to a DOE installation in Fernald, Ohio which over a 13-year period exposed its employees and the surrounding population to radiation dosages that exceeded federal standards by 12,000 percent, according to tests by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Glenn's bill would establish a presidentially appointed independent board to oversee the DOE's safety practices. The board would have the power to force the DOE to act on the panel's recommendations, and in some cases would have the power to force the DOE to shut down plants the board deemed dangerous.

The President could overrule the board's recommendations to cut back on nuclear weapons production if he thinks the nation's security would be threatened by such action.

The bill also extends OSHA provisions to DOE facilities to enable employees to call in federal inspectors on safety matters at DOE plants, and mandates annual inspections for DOE facilities.

Under current guidelines, the contractors who run DOE installations are virtually self-regulating, according to a Senate aide who helped write Glenn's bill.

Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, is among several lawmakers who are worried about the impact on the Pentagon's nuclear arsenal if an accident at a key facility were to force a shutdown of production.

A long-awaited report issued by the National Academies of Science and Engineering on October 29 sparked intense debate because it concluded that the U.S. may not be able to meet its need for materials to build new nuclear weapons unless the DOE acts to meet safety problems immediately.

At a recent hearing on the report McClure angrily criticized the deplorable condition of five DOE reactors where production of plutonium and tritium has been cut by 70 percent because of safety concerns since 1985.

These plants, located at the Hanford nuclear reservation in Washington and at Savannah River in South Carolina, began production in the 1950s and 1960's.

"I find the situation to be most disconcerting," McClure complained. "It could have been avoided altogether had we taken an exceptional safety record steps back in the 1970's to begin since 1961 when a radioactive building new production reactors to replace these old workhorses."

"We have been called the jewel in the Soviet reactor in Chernobyl. Just the crown of all DOE sites," said INEL's press spokesman.

Most observers contend INEL has avoided altogether had we taken an exceptional safety record steps back in the 1970's to begin since 1961 when a radioactive building new production reactors to replace these old workhorses."

"We have been called the jewel in the Soviet reactor in Chernobyl. Just the crown of all DOE sites," said INEL's press spokesman.

Delegates concentrate on intervention

BOISE (AP) — Early intervention, perhaps going as far as stressing care for counseling in grade school, might be a solution to Idaho's youth problems.

That was among ideas presented here Thursday at the conclusion of a three-day conference. Delegates concentrated on possible solutions to such problems as school dropouts, teen pregnancy and substance abuse, which might prevent youngsters from entering the work force as they mature.

Department of Health and Welfare official Ray Winterowd described the session as a foundation for future activities.

"Make sure you're in the regions that are the catalyst necessary to work on the problems identified here and the identified solutions," he told delegates at the closing session.

Delegates focused on three problem areas, school dropouts, teen pregnancies and juvenile delinquency. After breaking up for small workshop discussions, Winterowd said response from those attending indicated those were the most pressing problems for Idaho's youth.

Members from seven regions presented recommendations. Almost every one declared that early intervention in youth problems is critical.

Kristy Jackson, Moscow child protective worker, said early intervention is so important that it might not be a bad idea to have social workers available for "at risk" children—even in the elementary school grades.

Most of the regions stressed the need for sex education, or "sexuality awareness" as a means of reducing teen-age pregnancies which often result in school dropouts.

A Twin Falls school counselor suggested expanding the "Just Say No" campaign against substance abuse to improve sexual activity.

Regional spokesmen said there's a need to coordinate state activities on youth problems. Some said there are "many programs available," but few know of all of them and it appears there is little coordination.

Delegates from southern Idaho suggested more "parenting training" for teens, not training on how to take care of a baby but solid information on the responsibilities that go along with being a parent.

Nearly every region called for involvement of parents in the handling of juvenile delinquents but also stressed the importance of expanded use of school leaders to help schoolmates with problems.

Boise-area delegates urged the new "three-Rs" should be emphasized on resources, responsibilities, reliability.

Some delegates urged more spending on preventive programs, noting that after-the-fact treatment for dropouts, pregnant teens and juvenile violators almost always is far more expensive than prevention would have been.

But conference leaders say it appears they have a problem getting state legislators involved.

An official said information packets and invitations to attend were sent out to all 126 of Idaho's state legislators. A response was received from only one, Rep. Deanna Vickers, D-Lewiston, who said an out-of-state conference would prevent her from attending.

Olson goes out to public

MEDFORD, Ore. (AP) — After taking calls from listeners to a Christian radio talk show, state Sen. Bill Olson said he feels support is growing among the public, despite increasing pressure from the Republican Party to resign.

"I think the people are showing their thoughtfulness and are taking the time to be understanding about this," Olson said in a telephone interview Wednesday after appearing on KDOV radio, a Christian radio station in Ashland.

"That is to our personal regard and in the best interests of our family."

Olson was interrupted for a half hour by KDOV owner Perry Atkinson. Olson then took phone calls for a half hour. Afterwards, the station continued to air the comments of callers for another hour, Atkinson said.

"I won't resign today," Olson said. "I guess that's the bottom line."

Game violation probe brings county action

OROFINO (AP) — Clearwater County officials have fired one deputy and accepted the resignation of a second after receiving a preliminary report from state investigators that both were involved in improper tagging of game.

The preliminary investigation shows there were probably some infractions of the law," Prosecutor John Swayne said.

But because the initial action by the county was based on only an oral report from the state Bureau of Investigation, Swayne said he would wait for a complete written report on the probe before deciding whether to prosecute any of those involved.

Swayne and Sheriff Nick Albers said that Deputy Gary Geidt had been fired and Deputy Roseann Page had resigned as a result of the preliminary investigative report and a third deputy, John Bryant, was suspended pending further review of the case.

Emphasizing that the case did not involve the illegal killing of game, Swayne said the allegations against the three stemmed from two separate incidents centering on the improper tagging of game.

He said complaints in each case were filed by people from outside Clearwater County.

None of the deputies involved has discussed specifics of the case although Bryant has maintained that he did nothing wrong. Geidt said he may talk about the incident once he knows what charges, if any, are filed against him.

Foundation will be host to fundraiser

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Foundation and 18 environmental and scientific groups are hosting an auction and sale Sunday to help create a master plan for the creation of an Idaho Heritage Trust.

Ed Robertson, an Idaho Foundation founder, said 60 percent of the monies raised from the sale and silent auction of goods, trips and other items will go toward funding a full-time person to study Idaho's needs in natural resource protection and historic preservation.

Those needs would be written into a master plan, Robertson said, and the plan would pinpoint priority projects for an Idaho Heritage Trust.

The rest of the proceeds will be funneled into the groups who helped sponsor the event.

An Idaho Heritage Trust is an idea being considered by members of the Lasting Legacy committee of the Centennial Commission. The commission has not yet endorsed or adopted the trust idea, said Barrett Rainey, a commission spokesman.

Robertson said the trust could provide long-term funding for historical preservation and environmental protection in Idaho.

The Idaho Foundation is an information group devoted to the wise use of Idaho's natural resources.

Executives fail the stress test

CLEVELAND (AP) — More executives are finding it harder to deal with tension-filled situations caused by on-the-job stress, says a psychiatrist at Case Western Reserve University.

According to Dr. Herbert Meltzer, common symptoms of stress include exploding over minor problems, being irritable with employees and showing a lack of interest in work.

To cope with such problems, Meltzer suggests, executives should establish clearly defined goals, learn to handle setbacks, avoid isolation by sharing decision-making with key employees and taking time out for leisure activities.

DEAR ABBY: A few months ago, the woman I had loved for six years moved to another city. We lived together for the last three years. Finally, she said she needed to get on with her life, and she left me.

In the process of moving, she inadvertently left behind a gift I had given her last Christmas—it was a beautiful, expensive (not that the price matters), sexy, very revealing nightgown.

Our relationship is over, but I can't bear the thought of her wearing that nightgown for another. I feel that I should mail it to her, but as I have said, I hate the idea of her wearing it for someone else.

—What do I do, Abby?

—BEWILDERED IN LA CROSSE

DEAR BEWILDERED: You pack up the lady's property and send it to her, that's what you do. If it's any consolation, Freud said, "There are no accidents." Could she have left it behind because, unconsciously, she wanted to come back?

DEAR ABBY: The letter, signed "Jeffrey's Mother" hit home with me. It seems that Jeffrey had been dating Karen exclusively for two years—a fact, well-known to his mother, but in introducing Karen to her friends, she said, "This is my son, Jeffrey, and his friend, Karen." Karen took offense, saying she should have been introduced as "Jeffrey's girlfriend."

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

Here's my situation: My boyfriend and I have been living together for six months. Although we are not formally engaged, we plan to marry next year.

Last month, at his sister's wedding, I had a chance to meet his whole family, who all live out of state.

His mother, who is aware of our relationship and future plans, introduced me to all the aunts, uncles, sisters, brothers and grandparents as her son's "little friend!"

—BELITTLED IN EL PASO

DEAR BELITTLED: The letter from "Jeffrey's Mom" sparked other memorable introductions. For example:

DEAR ABBY: Years ago when I was just a poor college kid, I was invited to spend the Christmas holidays with the family of a girl I'd been dating for about six months.

We liked each other a lot, but I was in no position to make any kind of commitment. Well, can you imagine how I felt when her mother introduced me all over the place as "Jennifer's fiancé!"

—GIL (STILL SINGLE)

CONFIDENTIAL TO 'A LOVING MOTHER': So far you have given your son a car for his 18th birthday. He totaled it after three days. You gave him another car, which he totaled in two months. You gave him a chance for a college education. He dropped out in his sophomore year. You paid for the diamond ring that he gave his fiancée. He then broke the engagement, she returned the ring, and he hooked it and kept the money.

And now you ask me if you should borrow on your home to put this son in business.

My answer is an unqualified NO! Give him one more gift: a chance to prove that he is a man. Let him find his own job, stick to it, and learn how to stand on his own two feet.

Can Boise State gridders finally break spell cast by Idaho?

By QUANE KENYON
The Associated Press

By Sunday night, the Big Sky Conference will know which teams have been invited to the NCAA Division I-AA football playoffs, a championship the league has won three times.

Idaho hopes to get a telephone call with a playoff invitation. But first the Vandals have a small chore. They must defeat archrival Boise State to capture the Big Sky title and guarantee a playoff berth.

Ironically, Idaho State, which is among the Big Sky's also-rans this season, could prove to be the team with the biggest impact on the Big Sky championship. The Bengals handed Idaho its only loss in Big Sky action, and also knocked Boise State out of the championship race with a last-minute victory. ISU hosts Weber State on Saturday, and the Wildcats must win at the Minidoma and hope Boise beats Idaho to capture the title.

It's the last weekend of the Big Sky regular season, with seven of the nine teams in action.

Nevada-Reno, already heading to the first losing season since 1976 in Coach Chris Paul's 11-year reign, winds up the campaign at Northern Arizona. The Lumberjacks, 7-3, could easily capture a playoff invitation with a victory, but that chance probably was lost when NAU was blasted by Boise State 48-18 last week.

Rapidly improving Montana, considered by some observers to be the Big Sky's best team at this point of the season, winds up at Fullerton State in a nonleague game. Montana State finished the season at 11-0, 9-8 in Big Sky, last week and Eastern Washington wound up 4-7, 2-6 in league.

The scoreboard might be kept busy in the Boise-Idaho game. The Broncos have the league's top rusher in Chris Jackson, the top receiver in Eric Andrade and the Big Sky's most productive offense at 463 yards per game.

But Idaho has John Friesz, who has 17 touchdown passes among his 281 completions for 3,264 yards.

Friesz leads the Big Sky in total offense at 310 yards per game and the Vandals have four receivers in the Big Sky top 10.

Idaho has won five straight in the series, but Coach Keith Gilbertson said he's preparing for perhaps the toughest game of the season.

"I think they're probably the most improved team in the conference, and right now maybe the best team in the conference," he said.

"It has all the makings of a really interesting matchup. They're really proficient on offense, and I don't think they've fallen off on defense as much as people have said."

Boise Coach Skip Hall said his team will be motivated by the fact it has lost five straight to Idaho. "There isn't a guy on this team that has ever beaten Idaho. That's all the motivation we need. We don't need the other stuff, people telling us this or that."

"This is a great opportunity for this team to come together for one last time and have one more great effort like we had last week," he said.

"There's another side to this story. They have a problem. They have got to stop us," Hall said.

Waber, 8-2 overall, could make the playoffs even if it does not beat ISU. But Coach Mike Price said he's worrying about the Bengals first. See BIG SKY on Page C2.

The hard way

Nothing has come easily for T.F.'s McLauchlin on path to the Big Sky

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

BOISE — Boise State University nose guard Bob McLauchlin is only 20 years old, but he's already paid his dues.

The sophomore from Twin Falls muscled his way — quite literally — into the starting offensive line of an NAIA program as a freshman, left the security of that position for a no-guarantee tryout at Boise State; sat out a year and then worked his way into a regular job on the defensive line under a new Bronco coach.

All that for the privilege of going one-on-one with players who typically outweigh him by at least 200 pounds and outsize him by 3 or 4 inches.

"This guy loves the game," says Boise State defensive coordinator John Gough. "This guy was born on the defensive line. He loves the game to the point of being (physically) sick before almost every game. If he doesn't get sick, everybody knows something is wrong."

"He's Mr. Blood and Guts," says Bronco head coach Skip Hall. "He plays like his arms or his hands are a real competitor. If he's hurt, if he cracks his finger, you can't get him out of the game."

McLauchlin, who is 6 feet, 11 inches and weighs 230 pounds, has split time this season with sophomore Pat Moore, a 6-3, 265-pounder. They have essentially alternated defensive or offensive plays.

"Bobby Mac came on (last spring) and nobody knew him," says Gough. "I wanted him. His spring is wound so tight that he's playing a lot of football."

McLauchlin, an inside linebacker at Twin Falls High and a guard at Western Montana College where he spent his freshman season two years ago, caught Gough's attention with his upper-body strength — he's a former-national junior powerlifting champion — and his quickness.

"That's his spot," says Gough. "He can use his quickness to get past a blocker, get into a position where you gotta be tough, and he's one tough mother."

"Usually I'm going toe-to-toe with guys who are a lot bigger — 6-3, 265," says McLauchlin. "My only chance is if I can use my strength and quickness."

He added into Saturday's season-ending game against Idaho, McLauchlin has 33 tackles — 22 of them unassisted — as well as four tackles for loss and a fumble recovery. In BSU's ever-variable 4-3 defensive set, the basic job of the nose guard is to hold his own against the run and create pressure on the quarterback, and by most accounts McLauchlin has succeeded in both this season.

"In the Reno game (won by BSU 36-31) two weeks ago, Pete Kwiatkowski got the credit for the sack (of UNR quarterback Jim Zachee) on fourth down on the last play of the game," says BSU Sports Information Director Max Corbet. "But it was actually Bobby who had as much to do with it. They were running a stunt where Pete usually goes in first to pick up the blockers and Bobby follows. On that play, Bobby went in and got the blocker and that freed up Pete to get to the quarterback."

"Right now, the pass rush is the weakest part of my game," says McLauchlin. "I think I play the run pretty well, but the pass rush is the area that needs the most work."

"He has a hard time getting an arm out," says Gough. "Rushing the pass, sometimes he's physically overwhelmed."

McLauchlin was a linebacker best known for his strength and his ferocious hits as a senior at Twin Falls High, where his weight-lifting prowess drew the attention of a few college coaches. But none except Don Christensen, coach of the now-defunct Western Montana College program, made him an offer.

"We used him on the offensive line, at guard, mainly because of fine linemen are hard to come back at this level," says Christensen, now an English instructor at WMC. "Had he stayed in the program we would have moved him over to inside linebacker. (Former Twin Falls High Coach) Bill Jones knew what he was doing when he put them there."

McLauchlin left WMC after his freshman year in 1985 and transferred to Boise State with no commitment from then-coach Lyle Stencich that he'd get a look. But McLauchlin hung around the BSU program last season; bulked up 15 pounds and prepared physically for his shot at making the team.

"Nobody promised Bobby anything when he came here," says Kwiatkowski. "He did it all on his own."

"The new defense wasn't hard for me to learn because I hadn't been involved with the team under Coach Stencich," says McLauchlin. "The defense we run here isn't all that complicated."

"I think it was to his advantage last spring that it was new to everybody — new to the coaches, new to the players," says Gough. "None of the guys who played last year really had an advantage over the new guys."

"One of his strengths, and one of the reasons he's played so much this year, is that he picked up the defense so quickly," says Hall. "He understands the defense and he understands what his job is."

None of that surprises Christensen, whose football program was canceled a year after McLauchlin left WMC when Montana's higher education authorization cut state spending for colleges by 10 percent.

"Bob's success is the visible evidence of good work habits," he says. "There's nothing artificial about him. He gives you total dedication. He was a very beneficial influence here not just on the other offensive linemen but on all the players."

Christensen adds that McLauchlin's combination of speed and strength is an unusual asset in a lineman.

"He's a good mover to start with, and the powerlifting has given him excellent flexibility," he says. "When he was here, it surprised me how strong and agile he was, so it doesn't surprise me that he's chasing quarterbacks now."

BSU's Bob McLauchlin looks to the skies after nearly batting down a pass against Northern Arizona Saturday.

Rich get richer in WCFR opener

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — With two exceptions, the rich got richer in the opening round of the Wilderness Circuit Finals Rodeo at the College of Southern Idaho Expo Center Thursday night.

Three of the division-leading cowboys coming into the final competition of the season padded their margins. The first exception came in the saddle bronc division where Lewis-Field, Elk-Ridge, Utah, Wellsville, Utah, zeroed out for failure to spur coming out of the gate.

Then the major exceptions were provided Myron Sharpe, Star, and Greg Richins, Preston, who wowed a crowd of about 650 with back-to-back 78 and 74 efforts in bull-riding. That relegated division leader Vance Avery, Rigby, to third with a respectable 73.

The leaders who showed why they were No. 1 coming in were Lewis-Field, Elk-Ridge, Utah, in bareback; Dick Pickett and Barry Johnson, both Caldwell, in team roping; and Lance Robinson, Farmington, Utah, in steer wrestling with a flashy 4.3.

Field, who is battling for the world championship in bareback, also took a major stride in the saddle bronc riding: He posted a 73 and gained noticeably on the No. 1 seeded Hamilton with two nights left in the season. But others made bigger hay with Kevin Small of Laramie, Idaho, collecting a 76 on a ride and Jim Lee of Fallon, Nev., notching a 73.

The rodeo will continue at the CSI center at 8 p.m. today and Saturday. The competition pits the top 12 based on regular season money earnings in Utah, Nevada and southern Idaho, in each of the divisions. Each will ride three times in these finals and the season placements will be announced at the end.

Bullriding, always one of the crowd's favorites, had one of its best showings in southern Idaho this year, especially with those 78s from Sharpe and Richins. Doug James of Gooding, shined in with a 70 to finished fourth behind Avery, who already had pocketed $11,021 in this division and stands 10th in the world ratings right now.

Scott Keel of Round Mountain Nev., used a ride to card a 64 while Rhett Plocher, Pocatello, given his option between a 56 score

Banner recruiting season turns sour for Tarkanian

By TIM DAHLBERG
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Jerry Tarkanian took Nevada-Las Vegas to the Final Four in 1977 and the school was put on probation by the NCAA. UNLV got there again last season and the NCAA is looking again.

"The more things change, the more they stay the same in Glitter Gulch. A new college basketball season is starting and a new controversy is surrounding Tarkanian. If the loss of three starters from last season's 37-2 team wasn't bad enough, the NCAA investigated UNLV late last month that it is investigating its recruiting of former New York City star Larry Daniels, who was supposed to lead the team over the next four years but was instead kicked off the squad for buying cocaine.

Two other potential starters forward Lawrence West and center David Willard — are also off the team, West because of academic problems and Willard because of bad knees. And, what had been expected to be, a banner recruiting year went down the tubes, the result, Tarkanian believes, of publicity over the NCAA's investigation.

"I can't believe what's been happening, it's just been awful," said Tarkanian.

Awful may be relative in this case, however. With UNLV's three returning seniors showing signs of blossoming into dominant players, and some very talented players to back them up, few expect the Runnin' Rebels to stay out of the national rankings long.

"I'll tell you how good they'll be. They'll be damn good," said University of California-Irvine Coach Bill Mulligan, a fellow Pacific Coast Athletic Association coach. "No, they probably won't be a Final Four team. But only four teams get to the Final Four. They'll be the class of the league again."

An indication of that came Tuesday night when UNLV handed the Soviet national team its first loss in five games against college competition on their national tour.

"I think this team is the best team so far on the tour," said Soviet Coach Aleksandr Gornesky, whose team lost 93-88 on a blitz by UNLV in the final five minutes.

UNLV has lost a total of eight players, including the two leading scorers and the point guard, from last year's team that lost to eventual champion Indiana by four points and was ranked No. 1 most of the season.

Only nine scholarship players are currently on the team and Tarkanian worries that the depleted ranks may prove costly.

Instead, Tarkanian has a team with a starting center that averaged less than two points a game last year and a top outside shooter who hit on only 41 percent of his shots.

What he does have, however, is a potentially outstanding power forward in 6-8 senior Jarvis Bassnett and a very quick team that will run hard and play pressure defense for 40 minutes. Some think that Tarkanian has enough raw talent to win another 30 games this season, particularly with the relatively easy schedule the Runnin' Rebels play.

"I think we have a good team, but it may take to January before we jell as a group," said Tarkanian, in his 14th year at UNLV. "It's a whole new team, but it will be a very competitive team. All the kids we have now play real hard."

Particularly important to the success of the UNLV team will be the play of the two starting redshirt freshman, 6-8 forward Stacey Augmon and 6-4 guard Karl James.

"It's a whole new team," said Tarkanian. "I don't know how good we're going to be. The main thing is we've got to avoid injury to certain key people because we don't have much depth."

While Tarkanian ponders the upcoming season, he finds himself beset by the NCAA, probing his ties with the university's president, who he blames for ruining recruiting by announcing the results of an in-house investigation the month before high school seniors signed letters of intent.

Tarkanian said an excellent recruiting year was "shot down" by UNLV President Robert Maxson. "I think he realizes it was probably a mistake," Tarkanian said of Maxson. "I think when he did it he thought he was doing the right thing."

But Maxson said he stands by his decision to release the report, which he said is a public document and not to be released.

"The timing of the announcement had to do with when we received the report," said Maxson. "Recruiting deadlines were never an issue. We simply did what we thought was the right thing to do and I believe strongly now that we did the right thing." See UNLV on Page C2

Purdue, Georgia Tech collide in NIT opener

By The Associated Press
Second-ranked Purdue and No. 18 Georgia Tech play their first games of the 1987-88 college basketball season — one that Boellermakers Coach Gene Keady says could be "very enjoyable" — in the opening round of the Big Apple National Invitation Tournament tonight.

Seton Hall, Weber State at New Mexico and Oral Roberts at UCLA. Two more games Saturday night: Virginia Tech at Middle Tennessee, and Jacksonville at No. 14 Florida — complete the NIT first round.

Keady said he was worried about the Purdue defense. "I'm glad I'm playing them now rather than in March after they've become organized," Keady said. "They play very hard on defense, and when teams play hard on defense, that worries me."

think this team will play hard. It's going to be an exciting year."
Orr has a converted forward, 6-8 LaFester — Rhodes, — starting at center, while Texas Coach Bob Welch will go with 6-9 Jose Nasar of Brazil in the pivot.

"We're very excited about this season," said Keady, whose club returns four starters from the team that tied a national championship Indiana for last season's Big Ten Conference title. "We should have a chance to have a great team. Purdue opens the NIT at home against Arkansas-Little Rock. Georgia Tech entertains Alcorn State.

Purdue is led by senior guard Troy Lewis, who apparently has fully recovered from a broken bone in his left foot, suffered Aug. 26. He scored 18 points last Friday in a 100-80 exhibition victory over Czechoslovakia.

The game will be at Atlanta, where the Yellow Jackets have won 37 in a row against opponents outside the Atlantic Coast Conference. Texas and Iowa State are coming off losing seasons and they'll both try to regroup with an up-tempo style.

"Last year we got tired and couldn't run like we wanted," Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr said. "I

There's new breed of sophomore: Proposition 48 frosh

A new breed of freshmen will be playing college basketball this season. They're sophomores.

Michigan Coach Bill Frieder will get a big boost from Rumeal Robinson and Terry Mills, two big reasons why his team is No. 9 in the preseason poll; but Frieder still thinks about what could have been last season.

son a while to make up for last time. "I have no doubt they're behind basketball-wise, especially on the defensive end of things," said Frieder. "But they're better off academically, socially they've benefited, and if they work hard enough, they'll catch up on the floor soon enough."

publications in 1986 and rated the No. 1 high school player in the country by one; Robinson was similarly honored — but they likely won't be the only new faces crowding into the spotlight traditionally reserved for freshmen.

Robinson. "I don't doubt that sitting out helped me get adjusted, but I wouldn't want to go through it again," said Robinson, whose grade point average at Greater Cleveland High in Buffalo, N.Y. — 3.0 — and game stats — 30-points and 22-rebounds per contest — first caught Irish Coach Digger Phelps' notice.

Robinson's freshman campaign was short-circuited by his poor performance on both of the standard college-admission tests administered to high school seniors.

"This year many are back, a year older and a year wiser. Cincinnati has live of them. Michigan has two of the best. And many of the best programs in the country, including Purdue No. 1 Syracuse and Notre Dame, will be relying on Proposition 48s to step in and help."

"If anybody has a gripe about this thing," said Frieder of Proposition 48, "it should be me. I lost two of the greatest players in the country. With Rumeal Robinson, it was one thing...but we were really, really shocked when Terry Mills didn't qualify," he said.

"And in the long run, I'm convinced it will turn out to be a good situation," he added. "Because all these kids — the ones who had to sit, or even the ones who didn't — will need the learning for a much longer time than they'll be able to play basketball."

Just down the road from Frieder, for instance, Illinois will be taking the wraps off Neilson Anderson, Illinois Mr. Basketball of 1986, and Ervin Small, Anderson's teammate at Chicago Public League powerhouse Simon High.

Notre Dame will make an splash in the Prop 48 poll, giving superb playmaking guard David Rivers another finisher in 6-9 forward Keith

Where Proposition 48 differs from previous attempts to lift academic standards for incoming freshmen is in its concentration on a core curriculum of English, math and science courses.

Samaranch to North Korea: Take it or leave it

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The International Olympic Committee has made what it says is its final offer to North Korea. Now, it's up to the North Koreans — whether they want to participate in the 1988 Summer Olympics in Seoul, the IOC president says.

terms on an Olympic compromise, Samaranch called Jan. 17 a "very important date."

favorable responses from Third World countries received up to now include India, Pakistan and Iran. Iran's adversary in the Persian Gulf war, Iraq, has not yet replied.

Korea formally applied Tuesday to compete in the Asian table tennis qualifying rounds scheduled Dec. 4-6 in Tokyo.

Olympics

North Korea has demanded to be made a full co-host of the Games with South Korea. The IOC offered a compromise in June that included the right to play host to five events.

Without status as a full co-host, however, representatives from the North Korean capital of Pyongyang say they will organize an Olympic boycott. National Olympic Committees have until Jan. 17, 1988, to accept invitations to the Games.

The IOC report stressed, however, that the deadline does not expire for two more months.

Judge Conrad Rushing ordered the NCAA to cease tests in 26 of 28 sports and to return to court Dec. 4 with a plan for testing in the two excepted sports. Rushing issued the order in a preliminary injunction and said he would decide on Dec. 4 whether to make the ruling permanent.

League League agrees to permit league for handicapped players

If the Bears can't win it, then who can?

By DAVE GOLDBERG
The Associated Press

After Chicago lost to the Denver Broncos Monday night, Coach Mike Ditka consigned his once dominant Bears to the NFL pack.

Pro football

Which gives rise to a couple of questions.

If the Bears are not dominant, who is?

And is the decline of the traditional powers and the rise of the recently downstart Houston, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, New Orleans and San Diego because of the strike or because there's a serious shift in the balance of power?

A little of both.

"People not only expect you to win, they look for domination and artistic perfection from teams, particularly teams like the Bears and Giants," says General Manager Jim Finks of New Orleans, which is 6-3 and challenging San Francisco in the NFC West.

"It can't always be that way. This is a league of 28 teams and the difference between winners and losers is a half-inch and the half-inch is in your eyes. If you think you can win, you can win."

Despite the appearance of parity, the NFL has been anything but equal the past few years.

Since 1984, only six of the 13 NFC teams have made the playoffs and four — the Bears, 49ers, Giants and Rams — made it the past three seasons. The Redskins made it in 1984 and 1986 and the Cowboys in 1985. And the NFC team won the Super Bowl easily each year.

The AFC has been a little more even or is it mediocre? But there have been clear have-nots — like the Oilers, Bills and Colts.

This year, the Bears and Raiders will not make the playoffs, the Giants and Dolphins probably won't. The Colts, Oilers, Saints, Vikings and Chargers very well could and the Eagles would have a better shot if they hadn't gone 0-3 in the strike.

What is going on is a legitimate changing of the guard with some exciting circumstances.

Of the winners who are losing, only the 84 Giants are not in long-term decline — their problems are injuries, illness, the post-Super Bowl blahs and an 0-3 strike team. They probably will get back near the top next year. Others, like the Raiders, Cowboys and Dolphins, have some serious rebuilding to do and the Broncos need help on defense.

The Bears are 7-2 but their once invulnerable defense has given up 108 points in its last four games — the most since Ditka took over in 1982. Some people think it's a matter of teams catching up to their blitting defenses, others think it's an unavoidable problem compounded by injuries to two of their best pass rushers, Dan Hampton and Otis Wilson.

"Getting Hampton and Wilson out is a big load," says George Young, the Giants' general manager. "It means the quarterback gets more time and it puts more heat on the corners."

They're not the only less than dominant winner.

The Redskins are 7-2 (3-0 during the strike) but last Sunday, Joe Gibbs had to take the unprecedented step, for him, of changing quarterbacks in mid-game — from Jay Schroeder to Doug Williams. And the 49ers are 7-2 (3-0) but are hardly dominant — their regulars were handed "the first game of the season" by Cincinnati Coach Sam

Wychs and could easily have lost in New Orleans.

Most of the rising teams have made recent coaching changes.

The Colts, for example, are 8-4 since Ron Meyer took over from Rod Dowhower and won the final three games last season.

The addition of Eric Dickerson has had a major impact but they also have five No. 1 draft picks in their front seven, led by linebacker Duane "Bigget" one of the game's coming stars and two No. 2s and a No. 3 on the offensive line.

New Orleans has turned around with the hiring last year of Coach Jim Mora and Finks, who had a major role in building the Bears. They may be a quarterback away from major contention.

San Diego, 11-6 since Al Saunders took over midway through last season, was 3-0 during the strike en route to its 8-1 record and the addition of Chip Banks from Cleveland has established the defense. Houston has built on four of five years of high draft picks and Warren Moon has matured as a quarterback after his years in Canada.

Then there's the strike, which has still skewed the standings, helping teams like the Chargers, Redskins and 49ers, leaving the Giants, Eagles and Vikings, all 0-3, hanging on for their lives.

Rozelle says NFL will expand before 1991

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Thursday the league intends to expand no later than 1990, despite the labor uncertainty which has prevented the move since 1981.

Rozelle said Phoenix was a prime candidate for a new team, but stopped short of assuring about 800 at a charity luncheon that the city would receive one eventually.

"Phoenix would rank very high, certainly," he said. "But there are other attractive cities — Baltimore, Oakland, Memphis and Jacksonville (Fla.) are among the most mentioned."

Rozelle listed location, weather and population as the top three criteria for determining which cities get expansion franchises.

Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard earlier had extolled the city's climate and said the metropolitan area would exceed 2.3 million by the end of the year.

Rozelle indicated the league wanted to balance itself geographically.

"We are the largest major professional league in the country, with 26 teams, and we have the largest number of cities with 19. We feel we have a great advantage to cover this country with NFL franchises," he added.

He said the NFL's ties with Phoenix went back to the 1920s, when Chicago Bears owner George Halas used to visit the famed Arizona Biltmore Resort with Phil Wrigley, owner of baseball's Chicago Cubs.

Rozelle also noted the presence of three NFL Hall of Famers and would-be team owners — Bart Starr and Willie Davis of the Green Bay Packers, and O.J. Simpson of the Buffalo Bills.

Phoenix has been planning a $160 million, 74,500-seat downtown stadium with a retractable dome.

while Arizona State University and the city of Tempe have tried to lure an NFL team — most recently the St. Louis Cardinals — to 70,021-seat Sun Devil Stadium, which would be expanded if the bid is successful.

The commissioner said he hadn't seen ASU's stadium and couldn't comment on its suitability. He also said it appeared that Cardinals' owner Bill Bidwill had convinced some owners he has sufficient reason to move his team — but didn't know if Bidwill would get the requisite 21 votes.

Bidwill was not formally applied to leave St. Louis, Rozelle said, adding that such a request would have to be made by Jan. 15.

Rozelle said litigation — first with the Oakland Raiders' move to Los Angeles, then with the USFL — stifled the league's intention to expand in the early 1980s.

He said two of three conditions for expansion had been met with a "satisfactory" television contract and resolution of the USFL's anti-monopoly suit. The third item is a labor contract, Rozelle said, and lack of one has prevented naming an expansion committee.

Tom Stoen, the major partner in a group which includes Starr and Davis, said he thought Rozelle considered the competition healthy.

"When they say they're looking for unity, they mean the community effort (ticket sales and inducements)," the Colorado Springs, Colo., resident said.

Wood carver Ken Henderson is surrounded by his favorite, and most popular, design, the Sun Valley sun logo

Times-News photo/ANDY ARENZ

His magic hands bring wood to life

By DANA WATERS
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — It's all in the hands. One feels it when grasping the 83-year-old ones of local woodcarver, Ken Henderson. Warm and calloused, they've shaped countless pieces of pine, fir and poplar into beautiful works of art that reflect the natural world he enjoys so much.

His home, located south on Highway 93, is a perfect retreat for this gifted craftsman. Surrounded by 40 acres of farmland and framed by evergreens, elms and locusts, it is filled with priceless examples of his craft: graceful swans, jaunty roosters, wading sandpipers, elegant cranes and brooding owls poised for flight while intricately carved mirror frames and window cornices quietly grace the rooms.

"It all started 35 years ago when we wanted something special to hang above the fireplace in our home in Burley," says Henderson. "A wall that was helping us with the decorating suggested an iron wall hanging from Chicago that cost about $250. I drew up a pattern from a picture of the original, and with old clothesline wire, made a darn good replica for about $18. I knew I could make things with my hands then, and turned to wood."

Henderson's method of carving is different from the chisel and mallet form. Using either chain or hand saw, he cuts the rough outlines of the pieces he plans to create, and then does the actual shaping and detailing with a high-speed rotary rasp. The results are remarkable — with some pieces requiring more than 40 hours of work — are labors of love.

Born in northern Maine, Henderson is the "tail-end" of a brood of nine children. His family came west in 1912; and he's lived in this area ever since. On the kitchen table is a hand-carved butter trencher, hollowed from a log by Henderson's father some 100 years ago.

Fairytales live happily ever after

By MATT DAMSKER
The Hartford Courant

Pop escapism thrives on subverting our sense of the routine. The unattainable sex object, absurd-nerd, mega-alien, slashing fiend or dashing vampire may seem interchangeable after a while, but the further they escort us from daily grinds, the more we seem to surrender to their formulas.

Yet one escapist route that transcends mere formula is on the upswing these days. Fairy tales are back big. Not that they ever really left, but the prominent use of fairy tale themes in the three major pop categories — stage, screen and television — amounts to something of a trend.

On Broadway there is "Into the Woods," the new musical — by Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine, which cleverly jumbles Cinderella, Little Red Riding Hood, Jack and the Beanstalk and other tales into an ambitious allegory on happy-ever-aftering. The show, in previews, is playing to packed houses at the Martin Beck Theater. Meanwhile, the new and generally acclaimed film by Rob Reiner, "The Princess Bride," transforms its fairy tale pastiche — courtesy of William Goldman's 1973 book — into a broad comedy-adventure that crackles as much with adult appeal as with kid stuff.

And new on TV this fall, an unorthodox CBS series spun from the tale of "Beauty and the Beast" (Friday nights) is made timely via its crime-ridden Manhattan setting, while opposite on ABC, "The Charmings" casts fairy-tale faves such as Snow White into a domestic sitcom world.

What to make of all this? Well, for one thing, let's not mistake coincidence for trend. Rob Reiner has been trying to get "The Princess Bride" financed for years, while big-budget musicals such as "Into the Woods" also result from years of development. It is almost accidental that they would appear in the same season. But to the extent that this sort of entertainment is successful, it does suggest that the timing is right and that audiences are especially receptive to it.

Generational timing may be one reason. The baby-boomers who grew up on Walt Disney block-buster reissues such as "Sleeping Beauty" and "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" are now escorting their own children to the seasonal re-showing of the animated classics. The phenomenal box-office success of these re-releases confirms the ongoing, all-ages appeal of Disney's genius and of the fairy tales he made his own.

From there, it is not hard to make a typical armchair-sociologist's leap wit as with kid stuff.

Local celebrities bring storybook characters to life for kids

By MICHELLE COLE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — One would expect to find the likes of "Natty Newt" from North Newport, "Rosa the Rabbit" and Ronald McDonald in an early morning cartoon on television, not in a bookstore.

But on Saturday, these and other characters visited Judge Books, along with more than 100 children, mostly preschoolers who sat cross-legged on the floor, listening to stories and watching "celebrity" readers with wide-eyed attention.

It was a celebration to kick off National Children's Book Week, says Judi Baxter, owner of the downtown bookstore. Baxter invited 11 well-known personalities from the community to read to the children from their favorite books.

The adult readers seemed to enjoy spending a cool and windy afternoon inside with a good book as much as the kids: Burg Langdon, executive director of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce, elicited giggles from his young audience as he shared the tales of "Natty Newt" and "Rosa Rabbit" from a storybook by Steven Kellogg entitled "Alphabet Adventures."

Other readers included Lillie Brown, principal of Perrine

Elementary, Jason Houser, Twin Falls High School student body president, Maureen Evans, Twin Falls' Miss Junior Miss; Terry Tario, KEZJ radio; Daniel Furibut, a fifth district judge; Nita Trenkle, wife of basketball coach Fred Trenkle; Annie-Laurie Burton, children's librarian at the Twin Falls Public Library; Michael Sommermeier, a KMYT reporter; Paul Miles, a Twin Falls pediatrician, and Tony Mannon, representing the College of Southern Idaho.

Although this is the first time she has sponsored a storytime in her store, Baxter says Children's Book Week has been celebrated nationally since 1946. The Twin Falls Public Library is also marking Children's Book Week with a story reading set for 1:00 this afternoon.

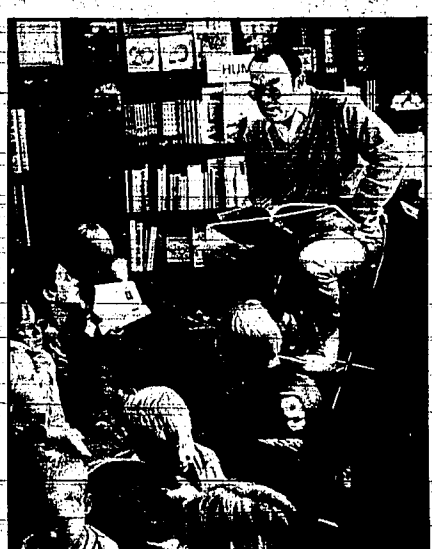

The purpose of Children's Book Week, of course, is to encourage children to read.

The love for books and reading is something that should be instilled even before a child is born, Baxter says. She started reading Dr. Seuss books to her 28-month-old daughter while she was still in the womb. Later when her child was just a few months old, Baxter says she used to hold her in her arms and read.

"Closeeness is important," she says. "It helps set the idea that reading is a warm and pleasant thing."

Children's books are now the fastest growing segment of the publishing business, encouraged in part, by the growing number of baby boomers who are now having their own children at a later age, Baxter says.

With so many books now on the market, it can be confusing to determine which is best for a child. Baxter says she reads every book before ordering it and also advises parents to play with the tried-and-true authors, such as Judy Blume.

For babies and children up to 3 years old, Baxter says she looks at the sturdiness of the book as well as illustrations, color and concept. For children 4 to 7 years old, Baxter says books should reflect humor and a playfulness with language. The library has been involved in a project to help make selecting the right children's book easier. Burton says area children have been encouraged to write the titles of their favorite books on pumpkin-shaped cutouts which were then posted on a library bulletin board. The librarians are now in the process of counting the cutouts. The child with the most will win a prize. There will also be a prize winner selected from each school, she says.

The result of the contest will be a bibliography entitled "Pumpkin Patch Publications," which parents and children visiting the library will be able to use to help them select popular and age-appropriate books.

Film ads just aren't the same anymore

By JAY SHARBUTT
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD - I was reading the movie ads the other day and it made me long for the good old days. Back then, by neddies, a movie ad meant something. It said things like "Doom Alley," then "Robert Mitchum" and "Jane Russell," then offered a lurid headline like: "She was a 12 o'clock girl in a 9 o'clock town."

Well, neighbors, what you now see in film ads are two things: first, the movie title, and second, a list of names in association with, and (c) what Siskel & Ebert and Joel Siegel and whoever is on duty at People magazine say about this film.

Never mind critics' quotes. They usually are taken out of context and don't have much real meaning. It is the other stuff that can send you around the bend.

For example, take the "Dirty Dancing" ad I saw in the Los Angeles Post. It said the movie was a VESTRON PICTURES presentation in association with a GREAT AMERICAN FILMS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP A LINDA GOTTLIEB Production.

That's what it said, lots of upper-case stuff but no punctuation or anything. A little farther down it said: Produced by LINDA GOTTLIEB.

I guess that's in case you didn't see the lines about the film being a Linda Gottlieb production. But at least it didn't say A LINDA GOTTLIEB FILM. Good for you, Linda Gottlieb.

That sort of thing has gotten completely out of hand.

Consider the ad for "The Principal." It identifies this flick as A CHRISTOPHER CAIN FILM. Farther down in the ad you read: Directed by CHRISTOPHER CAIN.

Same deal with "Like Father Like Son." The ad calls it a ROD DANIEL FILM. Read on and you see: Directed by ROD DANIEL.

Turn to the ad for "Man on Fire." It says A FILM by ELIE CHOURAQUI. Farther down: Directed by ELIE CHOURAQUI.

Or "The Princess Bride," billed as A NEW FILM BY ROY REINER.

But at least they're trying to say something different here. But lol, farther down in the ad they ruin everything. They say: Directed by ROY REINER.

That gets kind of lame after a while. And so does the repetition of the same old names in most of the ads nowadays.

In "Bride," Reiner is cited four times - as in A REINER-SCHEIMAN Production. Produced by ANDREW SCHEIMAN and ROY REINER. Directed by ROY REINER, and the A NEW FILM BY ROY REINER that started the whole thing off.

In the "Man on Fire" ad, Elie Chouraqui proves a worthy competitor. His name appears three times. So does that of Ridley Scott or Scott or someone in the ad for "Someone to Watch Over Me."

A welcome bit of restraint is seen in the ad for "Surrounds." There, Aaron Spelling makes do with only two mentions, once after the phrase In Association With, and again after Produced By.

Let's hear it for Aaron Spelling. Sometimes, if your loupe is handy and the light is good, you can see down there in the fine print exactly who is in these things that are a film by or were presented by in association with. I make reference to actors and actresses.

But they may be a vanishing breed in films. I mean, if this sort of thing keeps up, the average fan won't care about the cast. Saturday night will come along and a guy will turn his true love and say:

"Hey, want to trot on down to the Bijou and see that new Paramount Pictures Presents a Jaffe-Lansing Production?"

in the family," he says. "I had an older brother who was a taxidermist and my 85-year-old sister who is the only one left besides me, still does a lot of painting and drawing."

Henderson sees a photograph or a drawing that he would like to work up, and does all the preliminary sketching and planning on paper. Then, making a carbocopy template, he begins his work with the wood itself.

"When the sawmills in Salmon were running, I used to be able to get a lot of good pine to work with. It's soft, so is really easy to handle. I have to use fir now, and it's quite a bit harder, so takes longer to shape."

Henderson also takes advantage of any other wood that's available. When a neighbor was cutting down a large grove of dying poplar, he used it to make some wonderful pieces: A quaint duck from apricot wood, and a grinning sun in walnut, both attest to the artist's versatility.

"I love working with wood because no two pieces are the same," he says. "It's often quite temperamental. In fact, one chunk will give you the exact results you were hoping for, and another will really disappoint you. It's always a challenge."

Once the shape has been perfected with the rotary rasp, Henderson's work is still far from over. The sanding and finishing of each piece require many tedious hours, depending on the final look Henderson wishes to achieve.

His wife of 50 years, Helen, is a great help in this final process.

"We take each piece through the different grits of sandpaper, and then do the last smoothing with a crocus cloth. This can be used damp, and gently removes any remaining imperfections. We use the same cloth even between coats of stain or varnish," she says.

After the piece is perfectly smoothed, it is sealed. Then, depending on the look Henderson is trying to create, details are added with oil paint and features such as eyes for the birds are inserted.

Stain is applied next, the previous sealing process protecting the wood from too much absorption, and wiped away until the right effect is reached. Then comes the varnishing, with careful use of steel wool between the coats.

"This is often the most lengthy part of the process because drying time between the steps must be strictly followed.

Henderson's workshop and showroom are connected to the main house by a walkway. On the way out to see them, one has to stop to admire "Butch," the orphaned squirrel which the Hendersons bottle fed and have thoroughly enjoyed for the past year-and-a-half. Reprints of this little rascal and his wild brother adorn shelves in the showroom itself.

The workshop has rows upon rows of hand tools, saws, a lathe, clamps, every container of stain, varnish and shellac imaginable, and even three "worn" aprons hanging on hooks, just waiting to be pressed into service.

In every knob and cranny are templates from Henderson's repeat designs and scraps of paper containing pictures for new ideas. His favorite and perhaps most famous pattern, the Sun Valley sun logo, finds a place of honor amongst the orderly disorder.

"Fifteen years ago, I ran across that design for their logo, and decided to work a few up to see if I could sell them to that market. I made 10 small ones, and took them up to a local shop on a Friday. They all sold over the weekend, and on Monday they gave me an order for 20 more," Henderson recalls.

Some 1,500 of the four-layered, laminated and graining sun-faces have left Henderson's shop... three traveling as far as Japan when the Sun Valley Corporation requested them for their overseas resort.

The suns are Henderson's biggest movers, and, even though some have a ray-span of more than 4 feet, they've been stolen from their original owners.

"One was taken right out of the lobby of the ski lodge itself," says Henderson. "Another was taken off the front door of a Twin Falls home in broad daylight. The owner had insured, so asked me to make another one. This he bolted to his door with an attached alarm that neighbors could hear for three blocks."

The Hendersons had a major setback in July of this year when a fire that started in the wastebasket of the workshop destroyed the top half of the entire garage structure. Not only were some of Henderson's pieces destroyed, but many family heirlooms were consumed as well.

"It's something you can just never imagine happening to you," says Helen. "We lost so many things that I wanted to pass on to the next generations. It took three huge dumpster loads to haul all of the rubble away."

But through this crisis and plenty of others found in everyday living, Henderson keeps things in perspective.

"I don't know what I'd do without my wife," he says with a shake of his head. "Now that my eyesight is failing, she has to really fix up the things I miss. Doesn't seem to mind a bit though."

Because of his eyes and the worsening arthritis in his hands, Henderson feels this holiday season will be his last to have a large display of his work for sale.

For the past few years, he's had a large table at the annual Artisan's show held at the Episcopal Church to mention lamps, plates, cornices, bookends and mirrors.

"Yes, it started out as a hobby, but when it gets to be work," he admits with a chuckle. "But I love it and it will always be worth the time and effort it takes me."

Lust wins hands down
When Harper's magazine approached prominent advertising agencies to develop campaigns promoting the seven deadly sins, nine agencies were too skeptical to play the game. The seven willing players then were asked to choose their sin, and reportedly all of them picked lust.

Harper's was making the rules, though, so only TBWA Advertising got the chance to compose the slogan: "Any Sin That's Enabled Us to Survive Centuries of War, Death, Pestilence and Famine Can't Be Called Deadly. Lust - Where Would We Be Without It?"

Among the best responses to this inspired idea (in the "Forum" section of the November issue) are J. Walter Thompson's sly campaign - "If the Original Sin Had Been Sloth, We'd Still Be in Paradise" - and the Martin Agency's choice of Santa Claus to serve as pitchman for greed. Another good one, NW Ayer's ad for envy, goes like this: "What luck! All the other agencies got the 'plum' deadly sins ... But, what do we get stuck with? ENVY! Boy, talk about deadly!"

Andrews tells of her start

Editor's note: The Times-News and Interstate Amusement Inc., will present "The Sound of Music," Wednesday night in Twin Falls and Thursday in Jerome.

Produced and directed by Robert Wise and written by Ernest Lehman, "The Sound of Music" stars Julie Andrews and Christopher Plummer and co-stars Eleanor Parker, Richard Haydn and Peggy Wood.

The film received five Academy Awards including Best Picture and Best Direction. The following interview was released by the film company.

In today's sophisticated society, a belief in fairy tales usually is reserved for the very young. It's just not fashionable for anyone who admits to being more than 10 years old.

But Julie Andrews is different. "Not," she hastens to add, "that I believe in all of the fairy tales. But I certainly believe in 'Cinderella.' Because it is, in a way, the story of how my career began."

The tall English girl, who reached motion picture superstardom with her role of Maria in "The Sound of Music," which was first released in 1965, remembers her fairy-story success well.

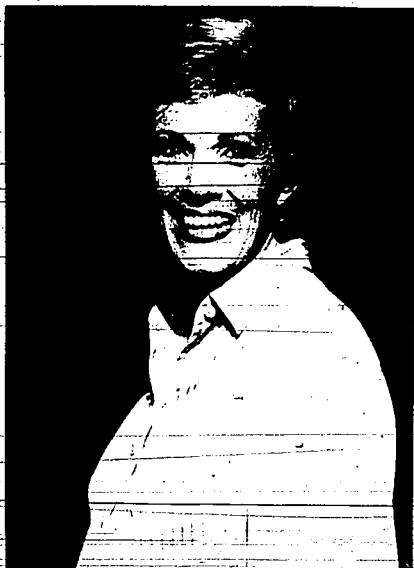

"My real career," she explains, "started with 'Cinderella.' I was appearing in a Christmas pantomime called 'Cinderella' at the London Palladium when I got my first break. Up to that time, I had been working in various shows in England, beginning when I was 12, and had done concert tours, guest appearances on radio and television and all the things that are supposed to prepare you for eventual stardom. With all the work, however, nothing really tremendous appeared to be in my future until I did 'Cinderella.' Vida Hope, who had produced and directed the original London production of 'The Boy Friend' was looking for someone to play the lead on Broadway. She saw me at the Palladium and suddenly, I was on my way to the United States."

"The one job," Julie admits, "didn't seem enough to warrant a belief in the Cinderella legend. But she emphasizes, a good part of her career after that followed the same pattern. She had for example, refused to sign for more than a year in the Broadway musical hit 'The Boy Friend,' fearing that she would be terribly homesick if she stayed away from England longer than that."

"As a result," she recalls, "I was available 11 months later when Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick 'Loewe' approached me about playing Liza Doolittle in a musical version of 'Pygmalion' which they planned to call 'My Fair Lady.' I guess I don't have to tell you that, stripped of its sophistication and George Bernard Shaw's biting wit, it's really only a variation of the Cinderella story."

As the star of the stage version of "My Fair Lady," Andrews says it was a blow when she was passed over for the film. "But," she adds, "I see now that it was a blessing. If that had been my first picture, I might have been typed, and at the very heart would have been compared, on screen, with my performance on stage. And since distance lends enchantment, most people probably would have thought I was better on stage."

The decision to bypass Andrews for whatever reasons film moguls have for casting decisions, actually broadened her career. She was finishing up her run in "Camelot" on Broadway and available for films when Walt Disney suggested she make her screen debut in "Mary Poppins." She followed that with "The Americanization of Emily," in which she did not sing at all, and then moved directly into "The Sound of Music," and superstardom. Thinking of her role as Maria in "The Sound of Music," she says, "Here we are stretching the (Cinderella) coincidence even more."

The comment is apt. In "The Sound of Music," Julie plays a young girl studying to be a nun who seems to be too full of life for a religious career and is sent out to be a governess to the seven children of a widowed naval captain. And again like Cinderella, she gets her Prince Charming and lives happily ever after — to the accompaniment, of course, of the Rodgers and Hammerstein music, in the most popular motion picture of all time.

"Don't ask me what all this signifies," Julie concludes. "Maybe nothing. On the other hand, it may just be that the things you believe in affect your life rather than your life affecting the things you believe in. I freely admit that I believe life is beautiful and promising and, above all, fun. And everything that has happened to me has only served to strengthen that belief."

That's why I believe in fairy tales. Wouldn't you?"

Psychologist Bruno Bettelheim, in his popular treatise on the meaning of fairy tales, "The Uses of Enchantment," explains that "Beauty and the Beast" "posits man to have a dual existence as animal and as mind. ... In the process of maturation, these artificially isolated aspects of our humanity must become unified ..."

Bettelheim concludes: "Each fairy tale is a magic mirror which reflects some aspects of our inner world, and of the steps required by our evolution from immaturity to maturity."

Indeed, Bettelheim is an acknowledged inspiration for the Bondheim-Lapine musical "Into the Woods," which addresses, despite the fairy-tale trappings, its main setting, the woods, becomes an obvious metaphor for Bettelheim's "dark, hidden, imperceptible world of our unconscious," while the interlaced adventures of its characters are clearly emblematic of our emotional and social growth.

The play's first encounter between Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, for example, is an ingeniously suggestive depiction of the combined fear and lure of adolescent sexuality (not to mention the perverse stirrings of child-molestation). And the story of Rapunzel, shut up in her high tower by a domineering witch (the show's nominal star, Bernadette Peters), unravels as an allegory of parental over-protectiveness.

And just as Act I ends with its characters' attainment of a happy-ever-after — at the usual fairy-tale cost to life, limb and personal integrity — Act II explores the moral consequence of their actions. Cinderella and her prince, for example, must struggle with some marital discontent. The Jack who stole the giant's gold and then chopped down the beanstalk to slay the giant must account for his ill-gotten gain to the giant's equally giant wife, who threatens the fairy-tale world with catastrophic retribution.

By then, of course, it is clear that the play's characters have been immature in assessing their responsibilities toward each other, and issues of social welfare and accountability are raised. The desires of the individual versus the good of the community are examined, and the bitterest ending offers up a global anthem, "No One is Alone."

Tales

And as social ills seem more and more insoluble — from the plight of the homeless to the frightening facts of urban blight, a threatened economy, environmental pollution, nuclear jeopardy and AIDS — audiences cannot be blamed for wishing it would all just go away, that these curses be lifted with the help of some good, old-fashioned magic. Indeed, the likes of Shirley MacLaine and her channeling suggest that psychic and occult answers are perhaps possible.

If nothing else, CBS' "Beauty and the Beast" offers that sort of balm. In this prime-time version of the tale, a beautiful (read: glamorous) yuppie) but crime-fighting Manhattan attorney, played by Linda Hamilton, is savagely attacked by thugs, her face scarred, only to be rescued and nursed back to beauty by a gentle but powerful man-beast (Ron Perlman) who lives in the New York underworld.

The Beast, who resembles Bert Lahr's cowardly lion in "The Wizard of Oz," at least until he bares his werewolflike fangs, is achingly sensitive to urban problems and typically lends — his — superhuman strength to helping cure the social ills that Hamilton's character must confront in her job. The star-crossed love story between beauty and beast is the ongoing plot line, but the mix of realistic crime and supernatural policing is what keeps the show moving.

"Beauty and the Beast" is not TV's only fractured fairy tale to gloss its social realism with utter magic. ("Werewolf" on the Fox Network Sunday nights) bends its folklore — horror — romance — young man is bitten by werewolf, turns into a wolf under the full moon, only silver bullets can stop him, and so on) to a virtual remake of the 1960s series "The Fugitive," in which a man wrongly accused of his wife's murder roamed from episode to episode, pursued by a police lieutenant obsessed with his capture.

In "Werewolf," innocent young man-turned-werewolf Eric Cord (John J. York) is relentlessly pursued by bounty hunter Alamo Joe (Lance Le Gault). Episode to episode, Eric drifts into encounters with plain folk (luncheonette owner, typewriter salesman, trusting) and whom he typically rescues from the wrath of brutal policemen or rabid motorcycle gangs once he turns into a werewolf.

Neither of these shows is very deep on its own formulaic terms, yet the fairy-tale content helps them resonate far beyond the last commercial break.

Psychologist Bruno Bettelheim, in his popular treatise on the meaning of fairy tales, "The Uses of Enchantment," explains that "Beauty and the Beast" "posits man to have a dual existence as animal and as mind. ... In the process of maturation, these artificially isolated aspects of our humanity must become unified ..."

Bettelheim concludes: "Each fairy tale is a magic mirror which reflects some aspects of our inner world, and of the steps required by our evolution from immaturity to maturity."

Indeed, Bettelheim is an acknowledged inspiration for the Bondheim-Lapine musical "Into the Woods," which addresses, despite the fairy-tale trappings, its main setting, the woods, becomes an obvious metaphor for Bettelheim's "dark, hidden, imperceptible world of our unconscious," while the interlaced adventures of its characters are clearly emblematic of our emotional and social growth.

The play's first encounter between Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, for example, is an ingeniously suggestive depiction of the combined fear and lure of adolescent sexuality (not to mention the perverse stirrings of child-molestation). And the story of Rapunzel, shut up in her high tower by a domineering witch (the show's nominal star, Bernadette Peters), unravels as an allegory of parental over-protectiveness.

And just as Act I ends with its characters' attainment of a happy-ever-after — at the usual fairy-tale cost to life, limb and personal integrity — Act II explores the moral consequence of their actions. Cinderella and her prince, for example, must struggle with some marital discontent. The Jack who stole the giant's gold and then chopped down the beanstalk to slay the giant must account for his ill-gotten gain to the giant's equally giant wife, who threatens the fairy-tale world with catastrophic retribution.

By then, of course, it is clear that the play's characters have been immature in assessing their responsibilities toward each other, and issues of social welfare and accountability are raised. The desires of the individual versus the good of the community are examined, and the bitterest ending offers up a global anthem, "No One is Alone."

by which Bettelheim comforts the isolated and also asserts that no moral choice is made in a social vacuum.

Clearly, the fairy-tale format of "Into the Woods" affords a colorful and light-handed means of exploring all that. The potentially deadly trap of social realism is circumvented by escapist fantasy and magical effects and an invitation to a sort of parallel universe.

In contrast, Rob Reiner's "The Princess Bride" does not have the metaphorical depth of either "Beauty and the Beast" or "Into the Woods," nor is it very message-oriented. The film is a gumbo of swashbuckling comedy, mutated Borscht belt comedy (especially when Billy Crystal appears as a cranky old Miracle Man), and a little fantasy-horror (a giant rat attacks our hero in the "fire swamp"). It is all in the service of a wispy plot about a beautiful princess betrothed to an evil prince, and how her real Prince Charming saves the day.

The film plays broadly to its audience, dazzling the children with its action and visual appeal, tickling the adults with its lyrical character comedy. But the clear delineation of good and evil strikes a chord in both segments; there are no anti-heroes to ponder here.

If anything, Reiner's real hero is the tradition of literacy itself — and this may be the real magic trick of the fairy-tale trend. For "The Princess Bride" unfolds to us as a grand-father reads the tale to his sick grandchild, who at first would rather be playing with his video games than listen to some old story. As the tale progresses, though, the grandson's fascination increases, and by the end he is enthralled — and perhaps converted to the pleasures of reading.

The desires of the individual versus the good of the community are examined, and the bitterest ending offers up a global anthem, "No One is Alone."

CBS begins prime-time reshuffle

The Los Angeles Times. HOLLYWOOD — In the first round of major prime-time reshuffling this season, CBS Thursday canceled one of its new fall shows, "The Law and Harry McGraw," and said it would add two new programs and the returning "Simon & Simon" to its lineup.

"Simon & Simon," renewed last spring despite its failure to win a spot on the fall schedule, will begin its seventh season Dec. 3 in the time slot it occupied last season, Thursday night. Back as the brothers who work as private detectives will be Jameson Parker and Gerald McRaney.

"High Mountain Rangers," a new action-adventure show starring Robert Conrad, and "48 Hours," a series from CBS News that will be anchored by Dan Rather, will join the schedule in January. CBS Entertainment President Tom LMasters said.

"The Law and Harry McGraw," starring Jerry Orbach as a Boston private eye and Barbara Babcock as a patrician-criminal lawyer, will have its final broadcast Dec. 22, the network said. CBS had already canceled two other first-year series this season: the private-eye show "Leg Work" and the comedy

"Everything's Relative." "High Mountain Rangers" will premiere Jan. 2. Filmed in the Sierra Nevada, the series stars Conrad and his sons, Christian and Shane, as members of an elite unit of mountain rangers.

Installments of "48 Hours," which debuts Jan. 19, will be shot during 48-hour periods and will explore contemporary issues.

CBS, running third in the prime-time ratings so far this season, said it also will move five shows to new time periods.

"Frank's Place" and "Kate & Allie" will trade time slots Monday nights, beginning Dec. 7, with "Kate & Allie" starting the evening, followed by "Frank's Place."

"Cagney & Lacey" moves from Monday nights to Tuesday nights Jan. 5; its Monday position will be filled as of Jan. 4 by "Wiseguy."

Reiner's 'Princess Bride' captures all in its magic weave

By RITA KEMPLEY
The Washington Post

Once upon a time, in a land called Hollywood, the jester Meatehead (secretly director Rob Reiner) decided to expose his true identity as a prince of the projector. Polishing his pate to a luster and making a wish for a blockbuster, he proved himself thrice worthy. Still questing, he decided to cast a really big spell with a magnificent fairy tale, "The Princess Bride."

And so it came to pass that the young and the young-at-heart alike were granted their wish: a movie for the whole family. It is the sweet, slightly silly story of Buttercup, the most beautiful woman in the world, and her true love Westley, a farm boy from the kingdom of Florin. Two-time Oscar winner William Goldman, tongue in cheek and a twinkle in his eye, adapts his bestselling novel for Reiner's splendid romantic adventure.

In truth, it's a story within a story, which finds a boy, bedridden with the flu, at the mercy of his cheek-pinching grandfather. The old-timer reads aloud to him from the book "The Princess Bride." The boy, who prefers computer games, is "fascinated" by the "fairy tale book?" he demands. Grandfather reassures him with promises of monsters, mayhem and chase scenes. Ten-year-old Fred Savage as the grandson and Peter Falk as the grandfather grow closer as the story of Buttercup and Westley comes to life.

The characters are classics, played to a "fair-weather" well by eclectic, entirely credible cast led by Robin Wright of the sudsy "Santa Barbara." Wright has the title role, "Mrs. Miriam," as a "heroine" as dense as a Disney ingenue but as impishly up-to-date as Di.

Cary Elwes, who was the queen's consort in the costume drama "Lady Jane," is no stranger to partnering princesses. He plays the most optimistic protagonist since Superman, part Errol Flynn, part Leo Buscaglia — a "rubber-tipped swabstick" in pursuit of perfect love.

"Was that so terrible?" he says to his companion after an early scrape with the outside, ravenous rodents of the Swamp of Despair. Anon, Buttercup, believing "Westley drowned, has agreed to marry the smarmy Prince Humperdinck (Chris Sarandon)" but she is snatched by ruffians and the adventure is truly begun. The kissing stops and we get to the good parts.

There's a "kiss" that's really a comedy set in the ruined castles and rolling hills of England and studded with stylistic, eccentric actors. Billy Crystal, one of the most memorable, not only steals his scenes, he plunders them. He plays Miracle Max, a wizard who gives the hero CPR with a bellows. "I've seen worse," he says of Westley, who "luckily" is mostly dead. Carol Kane is also an asset as his wizened wife Valerie, a Hobbyist-looking buttny who shares his hotel.

Mandy Patinkin is absorbed by his role of Spanish swordsman Inigo Montoya, complete with a crazy-quiet Castilian accent. Montoya, one of the kidnapers, is a free-lance swordsman "hired" by medieval mafioso Vizzini, played with relish by Wallace-Shawn of "My Dinner With Andre."

Andre (not the one from dinner) the Giant co-stars as the gang's strong man, Fezzik, a good-hearted colossus with a Schwarzenegian biceps that is even madder than Patinkin's. But presence — 625 pounds' worth — is what counts when you're talking giants. Fezzik, a bad giant in the beginning, is bested by Westley, because he is used to fighting large groups — and the moves are different man-on-man. He falls like a sequoia under the saw. "Sleep well... an dream of large women," says Westley over the unconscious big guy.

It may sound like Mel Brooks and the Holy Grail, but the parody is never that coarse. The characters really believe in their mission. If they didn't believe, the little boy would's.

Goldman, who first wrote the screenplay in 1973, keeps things screwy, lightly twisted, but sincere and endearing. He revised the script for Reiner, who was attracted to the relationship between the grandson and the grandfather. The two characters interrupt the fairy-tale to quip, argue and get better acquainted. "It isn't fair," protests the boy when poor Buttercup is about to marry the evil Prince Humperdinck. "Life isn't fair," says his grandfather gently.

As a good fairy tale should, "The Princess Bride" teaches but never preaches. It's a lively, fun-loving, but nevertheless epic look at the nature of true love. And, of course, that means living happily-ever after.

'Baby Boom' a sparkling comedy

The following are capsule reviews of movies playing locally in the Magic Valley. Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association and opinions are by Los Angeles Times reviewers.

BABY BOOM (PG-13). Charles Sheyer and Nancy Meyers. Of Irreconcilable Differences is "Bum!" based upon "women's" Manhattan-career woman Diane Keaton, who is terrific and never prettier; which results that are hilarious and touching in this sparkling comedy that is as topical as yuppiedom but honors the great '30s tradition of sophisticated screwball comedy. With Sam Shepard and Harold Ramis.

DIRTY DANCING (PG-13). Smart and funny, touching and unabashedly sensual, this musical love story set in the Catskills in the early '60s is the sweet sleeper of a hot season. Because director Emile Ardolino comes from a background in dance films (including "He Makes Me Feel Like Dancin'"), he does not insult us with the impossible, the too-easily achieved. Instead, the dancing is smart and sympathetic and, as the musical, "Dirty Dancing" is one of the most significant fusions of drama and music since "Saturday Night Fever," and more involving.

FATAL ATTRACTION (R). For much of its length, this movie wavers between giving us an absorbing battle of the sexes — a true psychological shocker about a scorned woman systematically persecuting the married man who ditched her, after a clandestine fling — and another formula revenge saga. At the end, sadly, the formulas win: Glenn Close's subtly detailed, terrifyingly passionate obsessive turns the movie into bloody predictability. Before then, Close and Michael Douglas — and director Adrian Lyne — wind the tension up tight; there is real heat under Lyne's usual glib. The scariest moments here come not from violence but from flickering moments of everyday pathology pushed to the limit.

LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON (PG-13). Warm, imaginative comedy that has a brilliant heart surgeon (Dudley Moore) and a free-lance changing brains with his happy-go-lucky teen-age son (Kirk Cameron). With Sean Astin, Catherine Hicks and Patrick O'Neal.

PRINCE OF DARKNESS (R). Some graduate students are summoned by their wild-eyed professor (Victor Wong) and a delirious priest (Donald Pleasence) to an abandoned church, where they are asked to rescue the world from the devil trapped in what looks like a green lava lamp — and his minions, which include a gang of homeless zombie delinquents. This absurd premise jumbles up "Night of the Living Dead," "The Omen" and director John Carpenter's best film, "The Thing," to no laudable purpose. Carriage and glop interspersed with scientific bible-babble. But Carpenter directs it very elegantly, and there is one paralyzing shock moment at the end.

'Running Man' muscles out 'Fatal Attraction'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The box-office muscle of Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Running Man" earned $8.1 million in its weekend debut and showed "Fatal Attraction" out of first place after eight weeks.

"Running Man," a Tri-Star movie featuring Schwarzenegger as an enemy of the state who has to fight for his life on a televised game show in the year 2019, Richard Dawson is featured as the show's twisted host.

"Fatal Attraction" earned $6.3 million at box offices last weekend for a second place, with total earnings of $94.6 million; it is certain to break the $100 million mark this month.

"Hello Again," the Shelley Long comedy, earned more than $4 million for third place, while Diane Keaton's "Baby Boom" earned $2.46 million for the No. 4 spot.

Tri-Star's "Suspect" sold more than $2 million in tickets for fifth place, while "Less Than Zero," earned less than last weekend and fell from fourth to sixth place with $1.9 million.

Leno concentrates on the family in his first prime-time TV special

By PAUL ELIE

"Finding the prime-time audience now is the same challenge that finding the hip audience was 15 years ago," says comic Jay Leno, whose first prime-time special, "Jay Leno's Family Comedy Hour," airs Wednesday, Nov. 25 on NBC. "I want to do something that's watched across the board."

Leno, a frequent guest on "Late Night with David Letterman," splits time with that other hot comedian, Garry Shandling, as the regular guest host of "The Tonight Show." With this special, he aims to break with late-night and its reputation for inside jokes aimed at a young, cultish audience.

"This is a variety show, in a similar vein as '60s shows like 'Laugh-In,'" he says of "Family Comedy Hour." "Straight comedy, with no singing guests. Is it hip? Not at all."

Guests include Corbin-Bernsen ("L.A. Law"), Dick Van Patten ("Eight Is Enough"), Barbara Billingsley ("Leave It To Beaver") and Florence Henderson ("The Brady Bunch"). In one skit, Leno plays Robopop, an automated father. In another, Van Patten, Billingsley and Henderson file a lawsuit against TV for invading the privacy of the Bradfords, Cleavers and Bradys.

Why family as the theme of his first special?

"When I do Letterman and Carson, the stuff that seems to watch the board is the stuff about my family," he explains. "The family things are the things everyone seems to get. So with all the family interest around Thanksgiving, we decided to play on it."

"I'm real curious to see who watches," he adds. "I'm interested to see whether it's going to be, 'Oh gosh, he's sold out!' or what."

Leno contends that his reputation as a "hip" comedian is a result of the venues he has played, not his material.

"People always call me the best of the new young comics," he says. "Well, I'm not young — I'm 37 years old. I'm not new — I've been around for 15 years."

After years of performing at colleges and rock 'n' roll clubs, Leno now headlines at established stand-up showcases such as Caesars Palace in Las Vegas. And when he hosts "The Tonight Show," he is seen by as large and diverse an audience as any comedian can hope for.

"When you host 'The Tonight Show,' you suddenly get recognized in the supermarket," he says. "The old ladies come up to you. 'Oh, you're the young man on 'The Tonight Show!' We liked you! We really did!'"

Hepburn recovering from surgery

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN

Q: What are the details about Katharine Hepburn's throat cancer? Is she still in the hospital? — G.H.

A: Hepburn did not have throat cancer. She had laser surgery for a benign polyp in her throat. She rested for two weeks — "keeping my mouth shut," as she said — and then went back to work filming a TV movie in Canada called "Guest Appearance."

KATHARINE HEPBURN
Back to work on film

A: That handsome heartbreaker, Philippe Junot, just got married again — this time to a Danish beauty, Nina Larson, who is nearly half his age. He claims that now that he's 47 he plans to settle down and stop running around. However, that's what he promised Caroline and it never happened.

The many sides of Quinn Redeker

By JOHN N. GOUDAS

Is the lanky Rex Sterling (played by Quinn Redeker on "The Young and the Restless") a jewel thief about to skin Kay, a blueblood temporarily gone wrong, or a con artist? Redeker, known to "Days of Our Lives" fans as the two-faced Alex Marshall, says, "Rex is a bum by choice — one of those types from the old 'My Man Godfrey' movie."

Lifting Kay's jewelry recently, returning with an empty box and a few high-sounding words about testing Kay, Redeker is vague about just how rotten Rex really can be. Quinn learned from a show writer that Rex had been in jail at one time, but that was all. Keeping the actor in the dark, if possible, is the norm on afternoon shows.

If Rex and Alex are foolers clad in varied stripes, so is actor Redeker. His dressing room borders on CBS stage 41, a cubbyhole barely long enough to contain a writing table. When Quinn isn't playing Rex on camera, he's at the table knocking out a screenplay. He's a writer with Academy Award credits, but he pays his bills by performing on soaps. For almost a decade on "Days of Our Lives," Redeker became Alex for a few moments, then could be heard typing away in his dressing room.

"The last two years on 'Days,' the writers had nothing for Alex, maybe two lines a day. Then I was free to write," Quinn explains.

Redeker happens to be the original co-author, with his friend Lou Garfield, of the 1979 Oscar-winning picture "The Deerhunter." But producer Cimino used only Quinn's Vietnam portion, along with his scary Russian roulette sequence, and the actor had to fight for that.

"There I was on Beverly Boulevard pleading with Cimino to keep in the roulette business. He was never interested in that." The pleading paid off, and Redeker split the money with his wife Patricia, who had suggested the roulette idea.

A few years ago, Redeker ran an industrial film company on the side, learning how to do things cheaply. "It can be done," says Quinn. "Give me $500,000, I'll shoot my movie, take it to Cannes and I'm home free."

Last year he shot a TV pilot and didn't like it, so he put it on hold. He did the same with a recent script. But in that "Restless" dressing room, Redeker plays what can be the most satisfying game in town when things go right. "Sometimes it just comes. I can't explain it," notes Quinn. "I only know I have to do it." Then the writer goes on camera and becomes a bum, but his fellow actors listen when he ad-libs.

PLOT PORTENTS:

Stephanie is pleased with the way daughter Kristin takes her bait, handsome Clarke, on "The Bold and the Beautiful." Rocco's flirtation with Donna seems to work, offering a new direction for the show.

Foiled again, Harper schemes to polish off Kayla once more on "Days of Our Lives." Roman learns about Justin's revenge plans for Stavros. Serena will use Diana to stop Roman.

Andy may have a kidney tumor on "General Hospital." The Laverys hold their first Thanksgiving dinner. Autumn learns about her father going to jail. Scotty springs Bobbie from jail. Ed swears he'll kill Herbert.

Sophia learns about Gina blackmailing Pamela on "Santa Barbara." Eden begins to despair over Cruz winning a new trial. Keith is impressed by Dr. Clark, the newcomer. Gina has doubts.

The Faren-Evan fight over daughter Betsy heats up on "The Young and the Restless." Kay doesn't believe Rex, yet keeps him dangling. Victor is determined to win Ashley again. Even Jack fails to comfort Nikki.

Travis admits his transgressions to Erica on "All My Children," but she says Jackson is to blame. At Ross's trial, a mysterious witness comes to light. Matt hears one "Cliff" too many and walks. Silver seems to have a strange visitor.

Clint learns that any little jolt could kill him on "One Life To Live." Mari Lynn finds new significance in Thanksgiving day. Cassie discovers John's masquerade. Max offers to help with Al, for a reason. Patrick thrusts Cord into an explosive situation, but then finds out who gets to say, "Cheese!"

Steve's condition vacillates on "Loving." Cecilia thinks Rick got canned because of her, while Gwyn finds him another job. Anne finds Gwyn in Harry's apartment again, and thinks the worst.

Emily is in hot water on "Ryan's Hope." Evidence points to her, but the doorman may know something. Frank and Pat are ecstatic about their success.

CREST: Tension is really crackling on the "Falcon Crest" set ever since Lorenzo Lamas called off his pines to marry co-star Robin Greer. I hear one of them is going to have to leave the show as it's too awkward to work together now that the fireworks have fizzled.

FATHER-DAUGHTER ACT: Danny Thomas and daughter Mario will do a film together for the first time since she made her acting debut years ago on a "Zane Grey Theater" anthology. They'll co-star in "Deception," an original screenplay by playwright Arthur Kopit, which will be filmed in Turkey starting in January.

Q: What's this about Jacqueline Onassis making her acting debut in a forthcoming French film titled "Manon of the Spring"? Is this a stretch for Jackie from her duties as an editor at a publishing house? — L. W.

A: Definitely not true. That bit of false news has its genesis when it was printed that an actress named Jacqueline Bouvier has starred in the title role of this film's original version, released in 1952 as "Manon des Sources." Most coincidentally, that actress happens to have the same maiden name as Jacqueline Onassis, born Jacqueline Bouvier — hence your mix-up. The first Jacqueline Bouvier was the young bride of Marcel Pagnol, the distinguished author, who wrote and directed the original as her valentine. The current movie, "Manon of the Spring," is actually a sequel to the recent, highly acclaimed "Jean de Florette," which also starred Yves Montand.

Q: I understand that Tony Curtis collects canes. Can this hobby have come about as a result of his most famous screen role, in the movie "Some Like It Hot," in which Marilyn Monroe portrayed a character named Sugar Kane? — D.V.

A: That's a very imaginative theory, but I doubt it. It certainly is true that Curtis has developed a passion for collectible canes of all sizes and materials and descriptions. Tony and Marvin Mitchelson, the famed divorce lawyer, never fail to pick up collectible canes while traveling separately, which they enjoy trading or giving to each other.

Q: We've been reading all the rumors about the trouble between the Prince and Princess of Wales. What would happen if they split? Could the monarchy tolerate a messy divorce in the courts? — E.O.

A: If Prince Charles and Princess Di decided to go their separate ways you can be sure such a divorce would never reach the courts. The entire matter would be worked out by a battery of lawyers behind closed doors. Diana would be given the luxuries she's grown accustomed to, including a fine house, but might lose the children and her title. However, the price she would have to pay would be SILENCE. The first item the lawyers would demand is her agreement never to talk publicly or write about her marriage.

Q: When Bob Fosse died everyone referred to Gwen Verdon as his ex-wife. Yet a dancer friend of mine, who is devoted Verdon fan, says he is sure they never divorced. Could everyone be wrong? — E.P.

A: Your friend is absolutely right. Although they were separated and each had remarried, they never divorced and in Fosse's will he divided the bulk of his estate between Gwen and their daughter Nicole. Fosse used to tell close friends that Gwen saved him from a lot of alimony as there were three actresses he might have married and divorced.

Q: What's the scoop on Cher? I hear her boyfriend is practically a baby. — D.L.

A: Well, at 23, Robert Camelletti, a former waiter, is 18 years younger than his actress girlfriend. But Cher, since her divorces from Sonny Bono and Greg Allman, has consistently dated much younger men. Camelletti is the youngest, barely five years older than Cher's daughter Chastity. Cher says he has a calming influence and that she's been very busy both with films and a new album and that an older man wouldn't have the patience to be with someone who had so little time to spare.

Q: Why is it that Dom DeLuise plays effeminate characters onscreen? Is he really that way? — M.B.

A: Brooklyn-born DeLuise has been married for 21 years to Carol Arthur, and the couple have three sons. His personal secret, Dom tells me, is that, "I'm still a little boy." He tends to play vulnerable characters who are broadly funny.
