Reagan blocks Panama from assets in U.S.

Los Angeles Times

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan, seeking to step up U.S. pressure on the Panamanian regime of Gen. Manuel A. Noriega without halting all its trade with the United States, Friday blocked Panamanian government access to its assets in the United States and prohibited any payments by Americans to accounts of the government controlled by Noriega.

Big pistol order — A4 used against Iran, Libya, Nicaragua and — to a lesser degree — South Africa, is expected to have a major impact on Texaco, which runs a refinery in Panama, on United Brands, which has major operations there, and on Pan American Airlines and Eastern Airlines, both of which fly routes between the United States and Panama, an administration official said.

the Carter administration imposed in 1979, also using the International Economic Emergency Powers Act. At that time, the United States blocked the movement of all cash deposits to Tehran — either to the government or to private citizens.

U.S. officials said that the administration decided to limit the new restrictions to those that would squeeze the Noriega government further without hurting the Panamanian people.

For example, Washington could have blocked the movement of all cash on deposit in the United States to Panamanian banks but that would have left Panamanians without cash if local banks reopened. Panama uses the U.S. dollar as its own currency.

But the order does plug a significant hole that had frustrated the U.S. effort. Estimates are that the tax payments — to be blocked alone could amount to between $20 million and $25 million over the next several months. There were no estimates of how much in utility and telephone bills might go unpaid.

Reagans reap benefits of tax reform measure

The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Reaping the benefits of tax reform, President Reagan and his wife Nancy made more money and paid less taxes last year than in 1986, it was disclosed Friday.

The tax revision package that had been championed by Reagan eliminated many deductions and lowered tax rates. For the richest Americans, such as the Reagans, the maximum rate dropped to 38.5 percent last year, down from 50 percent in 1986.

Committee calls for $2,300 per year legislative pay boost

The Associated Press

BOISE — A committee on legislative compensation, wrestling with the need to pay state legislators more, but not enough to produce a "professional" Legislature, decided Friday to recommend a pay increase of nearly $2,300 per year.

Commission said it appeared obvious that legislators needed to receive more compensation, both for the time they serve and also for time spent on state business out of session.

Legislative pay and expense now depends on the length of a legislative session.

Based on an 80-day session, that is $4,800 per session for those establishing second residences and $2,800 for those who do not.

Anti-U.S. rioting leads to state of emergency in Honduras

Riots in Honduras's Capital

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — President Jose Azcona Hoyo declared a state of emergency Friday in the country's two major cities after students smashed shop windows and overturned cars in new anti-American riots.

The presidential press office said the emergency gives police and security agencies wide powers to search premises, make arrests and hold people without trials for up to 48 hours, the capital, and San Pedro Sula, 120 miles to the north.

It also bars street demonstrations and empowers police to restrict travel.

The violence broke out after thousands of students filled the streets Friday, shouting slogans protesting the forced deportation to the United States of a Honduran suspected of drug trafficking.

So many students had left their classrooms by early afternoon that 100 schools and both universities in Tegucigalpa shut their doors.

Shopowners boarded their windows in fear of more violence like the attack on the U.S. Embassy in the capital the night before in which five people were killed.

But looters smashed shop windows, and angry demonstrators flipped over cars. Police patrols, backed by military helicopters, sped through the downtown area Friday, picking up young people.

The government, the principal U.S. ally in Central America, said it will take all necessary actions to maintain order and tranquility.

Earlier, officials forced the country's 140 radio stations into a nationwide hush Friday controlled by the presidential press office.

In a communique repeatedly being read over the new network, the government urged people to "repudiate violence" and "remain calm," claiming the violence was being secretly instigated by drug barons, who were not named.

Troops and anti-riot police armed with pistols and submachine guns stopped pedestrians throughout the capital Friday afternoon and arrested those without their national identification cards.

The heavy police presence prevented protesters from staging prolonged demonstrations. About 1,000 students who planned a protest near the president's office at about 4 p.m. (6 p.m. EDT) scattered as a large contingent of riot police arrived. No one was arrested.

One government official speaking on condition he was not identified, said that "numerous persons have been detained and remain in public security jails." He did not give a number.

About 2,000 university students attacked two U.S. Embassy annex buildings Thursday night and set both ablaze.

They were dispersed with bullets, beatings and tear gas. Police said five people were killed, four men and a young girl, and at least 10 wounded. No Americans were injured.

About 25 automobiles belonging to embassy personnel were doused with gasoline and set afire Thursday.

The students were protesting the arrest and delivery to the United States this week of a Honduran accused of drug trafficking and involvement in the killing of U.S. narcotics agent. They also expressed anger at President Reagan's dispatch of additional American troops to Honduras last month.

Beginning at dawn Friday, Azcona met almost continuously with his cabinet and Gen. Humberto Regalado Hernandez, the armed forces chief.

On Tuesday, soldiers and police took Juan Ramon Mata Ballasteros from his luxurious Tegucigalpa home before dawn and hustled him onto a plane to the Dominican Republic without a passport.

Mata, held at the maximum-security federal prison in Marion, Ill., was wanted by U.S. officials for questioning in the 1985 slaying in Mexico of a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent, Enrique Camarena Salazar.

Justice Department challenges independent counsel law

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a conflict of interest, responsibility for investigating and prosecuting alleged offenses by high administration officials must remain with the president, the Justice Department said Friday.

Solicitor General Charles Fried presented that argument in a Supreme Court brief which challenges the constitutionality of the law under which independent counsels are appointed by a federal court to investigate wrongdoing by top executive branch officers.

The system of court-appointed independent counsels grew out of the Watergate scandal and the counsels are insulated from removal except for misconduct or incapacity.

"The possibility of personal and political conflicts of interest does not justify this sort of patchwork improvement on the Constitution," Fried said.

His brief details objections first made last year by Justice Department officials to the independent counsel provisions of the 1978 Ethics in Government Act.

"The Constitution does not contemplate that the president may be 'disqualified' because of an impermissible conflict between his chief political interest and his responsibility as chief executive," Fried said.

"Any such conflict is intrinsic to the vesting of all executive power in an elected president," the 50-page brief added.

It concluded that the tools supplied by the Constitution to deal with the conflict problem — criminal prosecution by regular or special prosecutors within the executive branch, congressional investigation and impeachment — have been used with success throughout our history."

The solicitor general's brief says that the independent counsel statute unconstitutionally takes executive power from the president and violates the appointments clause of the Constitution.

The limitations on removing independent counsels are inconsistent with Supreme Court decisions and there is no precedent for vesting purely executive power in court-appointed officers, Fried concluded.

The solicitor general's brief was filed in a case involving independent counsel Alexis Morrison, whose constitutional authority is being challenged by the target of her criminal investigation, former Justice Department official Theodore Olson.

Today's weather

Sounds like another ideal weekend

Twin Falls, Burley, Rupert, Jerome and Gooding:
Today and Sunday, sunny and warmer with light winds. Highs in the 60s. Lows in the 20s.

Camas Prairie and Wood River Valley:
Today and Sunday, sunny and warmer with light winds. Highs near 60 today and 55 to 60 Sunday. Lows 15 to 20.

Northern Utah and Nevada:
Utah — Gusty easterly canyon winds to 40 mph along the Wasatch Front late early today. Sunny days and fair at night through Sunday. Much cooler with lows both nights from near 20 to the mid 30s. Highs mostly in the 60s and low 60s.

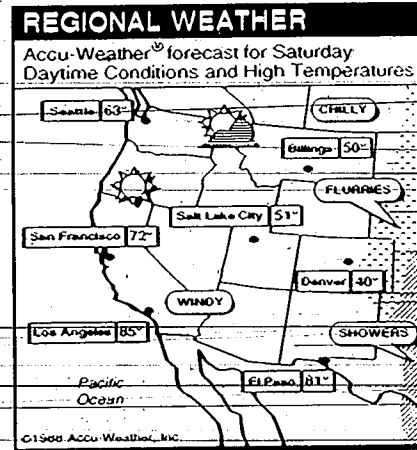

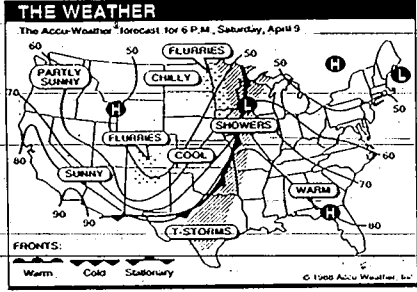

Nevada — Sunny warmer days and clear cool nights through Sunday. Overnight lows in the teens to upper 20s. Highs both days in the 60s to 70s except mid 60s to mid 60s northeast.

Summary:
High pressure is building along the West Coast, and will bring sunny and much warmer weather to Idaho this weekend. In addition, the rainy weather of the last couple of days will slack off. In the meantime, it was cold and windy across the area Friday afternoon. Temperatures ranged from the 40s and low 50s in the valleys to the 30s in the mountains. At 3 p.m., Mountain Home was the warmest with 53 degrees. Winds were generally running between 10 and 20 mph statewide.

Skies were sunny over the southwest and northern valleys, while the rest of the state reported mostly cloudy conditions. A few light snow showers were falling in the Upper Snake River Valley between Pocatello and Idaho Falls. The warmest temperature in the state Friday was 55 degrees at Lewiston and Hagerman, and McCall and Stanley reported the coldest at 4 degrees.

The pollen count in Twin Falls Friday was 75 particles per cubic meter of air.

Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the highest temperature was 93 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif. The lowest was 2 degrees at McCall, Idaho.

Prosecutors sought to prove the supposed robbery objections first made last year by Justice Department officials to the independent counsel provisions of the 1978 Ethics in Government Act.

ample of the resurgence of racism in the United States.

"We are seeing a climate that is permissive of racist behavior," he said. "People have become comfortable in engaging in this climate. Every time something like this happens, it sets back the whole movement for fairness, equality and justice. You can be a racist and get away with it, and that is a very disturbing message."

On the CBS "This Morning" program Friday, the U.S. attorney who prosecuted the case, J. Michael Fitzgugh, said: "We thought we had a good prosecutable case. ... But the jury chose otherwise and that's the great thing about this country is our jury system."

Peter Lake, a television producer who was the government's first witness, said on the same program that leader of the Panamanian Defense Forces, who has been indicted on drug smuggling charges in the United States.

The executive order imposing the measures was signed Friday by Reagan, who is winding up a 10-day Eastern holiday at his ranch northwest of Santa Barbara.

In an accompanying statement, White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater said that "these measures will provide further support to the efforts of the people of Panama and President Eric Delvalle to restore democratic government and constitutional order in Panama."

Delvalle, ousted as president by Noriega, is recognized by the Reagan administration as the legitimate leader of the government there.

House chief of staff Howard Baker Jr. said that the new steps did not mean that previous economic measures, freezing Panamanian government accounts in the United States, had failed.

"After all, Gen. Noriega is the much-betrayed, de-facto leader of the Panamanian government. He is certainly not in a comfortable position, nor are the people of Panama, which is unfortunate," he said.

On a nearly-weekly basis, the administration has been seeking way to increase the pressure on Noriega, short of an outright military operation. Last Friday, the Pentagon announced the dispatch of 600 additional troops to help protect U.S. facilities and approximately 13,000 American dependents in Panama. At that time, officials disclosed that Reagan had rejected a much more massive military involvement, favored by the State Department, to oust Noriega.

Previously, the administration decided to deposit U.S. government funds owed to Panama in an account established, at Delvalle's request, at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and removed trade preferences previously available to Panama.

Pay

The recommendation, which goes to the legislature, would raise salary to $6,675 per year, based on an 80-day session. It would make total compensation range from $9,475 to $11,475 per year.

The recommendation also will propose a new one-time expense payment of $200, to be paid in April. Committee members said they intended that to cover such things as postage, interim travel on state business and telephone expense.

In the past, the Legislature has been reluctant to allow much of pay increase: Commission member Curtis Eaton Sr., Twin Falls, said many people can remember the last time a state legislator was recalled — and it was over a pay increase.

"Mrs. Hennessey said the commission received much more testimony this time from state legislators on the need for increased compensation. She said 15 legislators appeared before a hearing in February, and another 12 submitted statements. All but three urged a compensation increase, she said."

"We need to make a recommendation that is appropriate, and then consider what is politically acceptable," she said.

Legislative Council staff member, Susan Bennion said she received a message from a woman before the meeting suggesting that the commission recognize that the Legislature did not grant school teachers much of a raise, and act accordingly.

Commission member Mel Morgan, state Democratic Party chairman, rejected that approach.

"We need to decide what they deserve, not based on what has been done in the past. I believe they deserve a raise. On some of the members, it is a real hardship to serve," Morgan said.

"I do believe there is a raise coming. You bar too many people from running if the compensation is unrealistic," he said.

Member J.R. Van Tassel, Lewiston, said he figured lawmakers made about $5 per hour, only half again as much as the minimum wage, and yet legislators are expected to solve critical state problems.

Eaton said it's always a problem achieving balance between the goal of a citizen legislature, and not excluding people because they can't afford to serve.

"It appears the present system dramatically narrows the band of people who can serve," Mrs. Hennessey said. "It is hard to get the broad variety wanted in a citizen legislature."

Hanging death ruled suicide

CALDWELL (AP) — Authorities have ruled that a hanging at West Valley Medical Center in Caldwell was a suicide, according to the coroner's office.

Coroner's office spokeswoman Vicki DeGeus on Friday identified the victim as Jorge Alvarez, 28, of Mexico.

Mhalheur County, Ore., Sheriff Ron Mallee said the victim was taken to the facility on Wednesday after suffering two self-inflicted stab wounds at a dairy just across the state line from Homedale, Idaho.

Mallee said the man was apparently despondent because he was glibbed by his girlfriend in Mexico.

Medical Center Administrator Lirr Carringer said the man was treated for the stab wounds and admitted to the hospital, and Thursday morning he was found hanging in his hospital room bathroom.

Reservoirs may not fill

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Some farmers will face tighter water supplies than this year since the reservoirs on the Snake River are not expected to fill for the first time in 27 years.

Ron Carlson, Water District 1 watermaster, told canal managers and watermasters that the 340,000 acre-feet of storage water left in Palisades Reservoir from last season belongs to spaceholders who did not use it.

That carryover is available only for those water users who did not use all their water last year, essentially giving them priority during the reservoir filling.

"Most years, carryover doesn't become an issue because we fill the reservoirs," Carlson said at a canal managers seminar Thursday at Idaho Falls.

But timely rains, conservation and prudent use of the water supply bank could get farmers through, despite predicted low natural flows. Several canal managers, practiced by the 1987 drought, were confident they could supply enough water for farmers if the weather gives them a little help.

Carlson said there is water in the water bank, which allows storage-pool irrigators to lease water from water users who have a surplus. Because of the effect of the carryover, it is unclear how much is available.

Some water-users who have said they are offering water for lease may not have as much as they first thought due to the 1987 carryover.

"We have 68,000 acre-feet of space in the water bank," said Carlson, "which may be only 30,000 acre-feet of water."

Water bank water is available on a first-come, first-serve basis. Last year it was leased at $2.50 an acre-foot, and Lyle Swank, assistant Water District 1 watermaster, said it was likely it would go for the same price this year.

Contractor raps prosecution

POCATELLO (AP) — A Pocatello contractor convicted of misdemeanor violation of the city public nuisance law maintains he was singled out by local officials as the precedent-setting case for their city beautification ordinance.

Frank Rosa, owner of Gate City Construction, was found guilty of the violation by a magistrate court jury that cited a semi-trailer and other material on the property of his home as offensive.

"My conviction perhaps set a precedent that can be used against others in Pocatello," he said. "I believe it was the city's test case on its nuisance law and that is very disappointing."

He will decide in the next several days whether to appeal the verdict to the district court.

"I am not against city beautification, nor am I opposed to putting up a fence to screen my property from view," Rosa said. "However, I am opposed to the city's taking away any individual property rights in the name of beautification."

Rosa has been battling the city since last fall when he said city officials offered to move the truck trailer that he uses in his business.

Pocatello chief to retire

POCATELLO (AP) — Veteran Pocatello Police Chief Norman Propst will retire on July 15.

Propst, 61, had been expected to step down sometime this year after eight years as the city's top law enforcement officer. He joined the Pocatello force after 25 years with the FBI.

He said he would become a part-time investigator for a Wood River area law firm.

INEL looks at phosphate

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Processing phosphate ore takes a lot of electricity. About 30 percent of the power used in southeastern Idaho is for the production of phosphate, an important element in the fertilizer, chemical and food industries.

Researchers at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory near here are looking for microorganisms which might be used to process phosphate ore cheaper than electricity.

"The U.S. phosphate industry is facing competition from several other countries," said Robert Rogers, group leader for EG&G Idaho's biotechnology research section.

"If we can find a cheaper way to produce phosphate, it will help us stay competitive," he said.

Rogers said it has been known for decades that microorganisms can extract phosphate from ore. What EG&G Idaho scientists want to find out is what organisms do it best and why.

From testing hundreds of organisms, they are identifying the most efficient microbes and studying them further.

Winds buffet eastern Idaho

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Winds up to 60 mph kicked up dust in the Upper Snake River Valley Thursday and knocked out power in several areas.

Steve Knapp of Fall River Rural Electric Cooperative said about 30 Fall River customers were without power at some time during the night.

An outage in the Drummond area lasted intermittently from Thursday evening until about 7 a.m. Friday. An insulator came off a power pole, and the wind blew it into other lines, causing the outage, Knapp said.

Chester and Squirrel were also without power for a couple of hours during the night, he said, but power was restored to all customers Friday morning.

PAC agrees to pay $500 fine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The political action committee of the Morrison-Knudsen Co. has agreed to pay a $500 civil fine to settle allegations that it violated federal election laws.

The committee for the Boise-based engineering, shipbuilding and construction company did not admit or deny guilt in signing the contribution agreement that was unanimously approved by the Federal Election Commission.

The commission claimed the committee failed to submit its finance report on time prior to the 1986 general election. Commission records show a report of three contributions totalling $2,500 was not filed on time.

Gem court upholds firearms violations

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Court of Appeals has rejected contentions of an Elmore County man that a withheld judgment in a felony case exempted him from the federal prohibition against convicted felons possessing firearms.

The three-judge panel, in its unanimous decision, said Friday that Larry Fife had been clearly advised that one of the conditions of the withheld judgment and probation Fife received following his felony conviction was the loss of his right to own, possess or use a firearm.

Fife was sentenced to five years in prison by 4th-District Judge Robert Rowett for placing obstructions on railroad tracks, but Rowett granted a withheld judgment and put Fife on five-year probation. At the time, the judge clearly outlined the firearms prohibition, and Fife said he understood. Under a withheld judgment, successful completion of probation expunges the conviction from a person's record.

Less than two years later, three guns were found in Fife's house, and authorities moved for a parole violation and imposition of the five-year prison term.

Fife maintained that a person receiving a withheld judgment had not been convicted and therefore was not subject to the federal law barring convicted felons from possessing firearms.

He labeled as ambiguous a provision in the probation agreement specifically stating that he would not possess any firearms or weapons set forth in federal or state law.

Fife claimed that covered only persons with actual felony convictions on their record.

But the appellate court ruled that while the language of the provision was not "a model of clarity," it obviously prohibited his possession of firearms, and the case records showed he acknowledged that restriction.

"We conclude that Fife was not misled by any perceived ambiguity," the court said. "The district court found that Fife was informed he could not possess firearms and that he understood the condition. The records support the judge's findings and conclusions."

In another decision issued Friday, the Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of a malicious prosecution suit filed by Magic Valley dentist Michael Badell against attorney Paul Beeks.

Badell contended Beeks had willfully proceeded with a malpractice suit against him when Beeks knew he did not have probable cause to press the claim. That suit was ultimately dismissed as well.

The high court said Beeks was not required to have all the facts needed to back up the malpractice claim but only believe that he can establish enough facts to satisfy a court and a jury.

Guides to sail into charter boat battle

SANDPOINT (AP) — The Idaho Outfitters and Guides Board is preparing to enter the raging debate over limits on charter boat operations on Idaho lakes now that it has been armed with legislation dramatically expanding its authority.

It will still be months before the board makes any decision. But Director William Meiners indicated some kind of limitation will probably be imposed even though the sport-fishing industry is fragmented with interests pushing for a complete ban on charters for some lakes to those opposing any restriction at all.

"I think the public wants limits imposed," Meiners said, predicting any action taken by the board will be on a lake-by-lake basis. "That's something we have to run past the public and get a feel on."

The new legislation, approved in the final days of the 1988 session, expands the authority of the board to cover guide and outfitting operations over all natural resources in the state. It also increases licensing fees, gives other agencies authority to enforce board regulations and imposes up to a $5,000 penalty for violations.

The focus of the drive for charter boat restrictions has been in northern Idaho on Priest, Coeur d'Alene and Bend Oreille lakes, where efforts have been under way to upgrade the sport fisheries.

Charter boats on the lakes have been licensed since 1986, but until this year that was handled by the Coast Guard under a passenger boat license. Officials said 11 charter operators have been officially recognized but only five are fully active. But charter operator Tom Mehler said at least 17 unlicensed operators were counted on Lake Pend Oreille last year.

Fish and Game Department biologist Ned Horner said management of that lake as a sport, rather than a commercial, fishery warrants a four charter limit.

"What we're trying to do is distribute the harvest out among all the user groups," he said, and while that ceiling was originally based on limited information from some charter operators, newer information has reinforced it.

"A relatively few fishermen can have an impact on the harvest available," he said.

Mehler called the four-charter limit to extreme, maintained charters are critical to the local economy. Without adequate availability, out-of-state anglers will turn to resorts and marinas and the result will be low-quality fishing success, he said.

Anglers expect the purchase of a fishing license will bring with it a trophy fish, Mehler said, and "what they're going to end up with is illegal outfitters because the demand won't go away."

He estimated about 1,500 people a year use charter boat services on Lake Pend Oreille and 80 percent are after big fish.

But local fisherman Dave Bangle, while acknowledging the demand, argued that charter boat operations to any extent will only undermine the efforts to restore the lake fishery.

"I think it's real detrimental to the lake," Bangle said. "They (charters) are the ones causing the problem and have been benefitting from it." They ought to outlaw it all together, he contended that even with a full ban there would still be illegal charter operations. But Bangle claimed the pressure on the fishery would not be as great.

Meiners said the board will begin drawing up guidelines for lake charter operations this spring with public hearings to be held in Boise and Coeur d'Alene, probably in May.

Dry, windy conditions leave farmers on edge

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Dry conditions and persistent wind in southeastern Idaho have farmers on edge again in this year, and county extension agents are wondering whatever happened to the so-called normal years.

"We've traded real-estate four times in the last three days," said Steve Peebles, Fremont County agent. "As far as planting, on the west side of the county in the sandy areas, they're drilling small grains. Is it ahead of schedule? I don't know. What's normal anymore?"

Farmers were in the field last week planting spring wheat and barley, starting about the same time of year as last season. They're working under much the same conditions — low moisture and high winds that dry out the soil.

"I'm not real excited about the amount of moisture we've got up here," Peebles said. "They may have to be irrigating already or get a timely rain, or the spring crops aren't going to look good. We're not going to have crop failure, but they still won't be in prime condition either."

What moisture farmers in the Upper Snake River Valley did receive has been of little help, he said. Unable to seep into the frozen ground, much of the water ran off the lands, eroding the soil.

In western Fremont County near Hamer, a few farmers have started running their sprinkler systems, and some water has been turned into the canals, in an attempt to bring up the soil moisture in the Egin Bench area, Peebles said.

Range land also is dry, and sheep producers who had hoped to turn their hands out onto grass in the next two weeks may be disappointed, he added.

"We're not in what I would say good shape," he said.

Bonneville County farmers may fare better than their northern neighbors. Greg Van Doren, county agent, said he believes moisture is higher than a year ago, and farmers in the valley won't have to irrigate to get their crops up.

"It doesn't look bad," he said. "The last rainstorm filled up a couple inches on the surface that wind and warm weather dried out. The next storm could help everyone out."

Crash brings another suit

BOISE (AP) — Another lawsuit has been filed in U.S. District Court here, seeking damages for the Nov. 15 Continental Airlines crash at Denver that claimed 28 lives.

A claim was filed late Thursday on behalf of John McCabe Stewart, described as the sole heir of the late John Daniel Stewart of Boise.

Stewart was one of several Idahoans killed as the Boise-bound jetliner crashed at Stapleton Airport as it was attempting to take off.

Named as defendants are Continental Airlines, Texas Air Corp. and McDonnell-Douglas Corp.

The lawsuit seeks unspecified damages for the death of Stewart.

Thief finds crime stinks

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Crime stinks.

Just ask the thief who broke into Gary Brandt's car.

Brandt, who routinely hauls away the toilet waste from his sailboat in a five-gallon gasoline can, stopped to catch up on some work before going to the dump station Thursday night.

When he returned to the car, it had been broken into. Missing were a pair of sunglasses, several audio tapes — and five gallons of the foulest fuel in town.

Brandt doesn't know if the thief realized what was in the can before pouring it in his car's gas tank.

"But the thought is pleasant."

Lyn Nofziger maintains he's an honorable man

Nofziger receives 90 day prison term

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lyn Nofziger, a longtime associate of President Reagan, was sentenced Friday to 90 days in prison and fined $30,000 for illegally lobbying the White House.

U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Flannery allowed Nofziger, the former White House political director, to remain free pending appeal of three felony convictions of violating the Ethics in Government Act.

"I thought things were going to go better than they went," said Nofziger, 63.

"In my heart of hearts, I don't believe I'm going to serve time because I don't believe a prison sentence is justified even if I were guilty. And I repeat that I am not guilty," he said.

Addressing the judge before he was sentenced, Nofziger said he wanted to "iterate my belief that, despite my conviction, I have done nothing ethically, morally or legally wrong."

"I am an honorable man," Nofziger told Flannery. "Like other honorable people, I have gone through life making mistakes, doing stupid things. I doubt that there is a person in this room who hasn't. But I am not a criminal and I think the record of my life will bear out that statement."

Nofziger shook hands with friends and kissed his wife after the sentence was pronounced. He shrugged when a well-wisher offered words of sympathy.

Outside the courthouse, Nofziger angrily charged that independent counsel James C. McKay "set out to get me."

"He set out because I would not knuckle under because I would not cop a plea and because I would not say I was remorseful, and I think he succeeded," he said.

"He makes mountains out of mole hills. He has exaggerated, he has misstated and I think he has lied," Nofziger said. "I don't think he is an honorable man."

Nofziger was convicted Feb. 11 of three counts of illegally lobbying then-presidential counselor Edwin Meese III and other White House aides on behalf of the scandal-ridden Wedtech Corp., a marine engineers union and the manufacturer of the Air Force A-10 anti-tank plane. The contacts were considered illegal because they occurred within a year of Nofziger's departure from the White House staff in early 1982.

"The fine in the most Flannery could have imposed, Nofziger could have received a maximum two-year sentence for each conviction.

Instead, Flannery imposed terms of two to eight months for each of three counts but suspended all but 30 days for each count. He also ordered that Nofziger be placed on two years probation.

McKay made no statement during the 25-minute hearing but in a court filing last week he recommended imprisonment, contending that Nofziger deliberately flouted the ethics law and showed no remorse.

"There will be some bitterness, but we're very satisfied with what judge Flannery has done today," McKay told reporters.

Defense lawyer Robert Plotkin said "we're disappointed, but I think the judge did a good job of trying to balance the symbol Mr. Nofziger has become of the ethics law against the man Mr. Nofziger is."

E. Lawrence Barcella, Nofziger's attorney, disputed the prosecution's contention that the former White House aide exploited his government connections for financial gain.

Memo leaked by rebel member of military

Noriega dealt for thousands of pistols

WASHINGTON (AP) — A secret memo outlining a plan by Panamanian strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega to acquire thousands of semi-automatic pistols has been leaked to an opposition leader by a rebel member of Panama's military.

The proposed acquisition of the Browning 9mm pistols is part of a sizable weapons buildup by Panama's Defense Forces that got under way shortly after Panama's crisis began six weeks ago with Noriega's ouster of President Eric Arturo Delvalle.

The memo was sent to Noriega on April 1 by Leo Wanta, president of AmeriChina, Global Management Group Inc., an arms exporting firm based in Appleton, Wis.

Wanta told Noriega in the memo that the supplier of the weapons had advised that "they are ready to finalize the delivery" of the pistols.

The schedule called for the delivery of 5,000 pistols immediately and 2,000 per month thereafter until "all units are delivered."

The memo did not specify how many weapons were to be sent all told. But a previous memo by Wanta, obtained by The Associated Press last month, said the purchase involved 30,000 pistols, including the 5,000 to be sent immediately. The list price is $398 each.

The earlier memo was given to the AP by Panamanian Ambassador Juan B. Sosa. Wanta had sent a teletype to the memo to Sosa, unaware that the envoy had broken with Noriega and continues to regard Delvalle as the legitimate president of Panama. Sosa has refused to relinquish the embassy to a replacement envoy named by the new government in Panama.

Wanta sent the April 1 memo directly to Noriega, bypassing the embassy here. A stamp in the upper left hand corner of the communication said it was received by the Defense Forces on April 5.

The memo was leaked by a Defense Force officer to a Panamanian opposition leader, who turned over a copy to the AP on condition he not be identified either by name or location.

The pistols are manufactured by Fabrique Nationale, S.A. of Belgium and are to be delivered from that country to Panama, according to the memo. The State Department raised the issue late last month with the Belgian firm, which said that it had not

U.S. Air Force forward air control team keeps watch for helicopters

Troops bolster U.S. forces

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 2,100 uniformed military personnel being temporarily sent to Panama will be added to the 10,900 U.S. military personnel already stationed in the Central American nation.

The 10,000 persons include: 7,000 Army soldiers, including the 193rd Light Infantry Brigade and a Special Forces battalion of about 200 men, all of whom are attached to the Pentagon's Southern Command, based in Panama.

2,400 Air Force personnel, who maintain a variety of close-air support aircraft, including C-130 gunships; A-7D Corsair jets; A-37 Dragonfly jets; and UH-1N Huey helicopters. All are stationed at Howard Air Force Base.

600 Navy and Marine personnel. Most are Navy sailors, who maintain a fleet of nine harbor patrol boats to help canal navigation.

The new personnel include about 500 Army military police; about 350 Marine aviation troops; a reinforced Marine rifle company of 300 men; and 150 assorted Air Force personnel.

Eight hundred Marines going to Panama from Camp Pendleton, Calif., will be attending the three-week course at the Jungle Operations Training Center, a jungle warfare school. The Pentagon says the Marines' trip has nothing to do with the unrest in Panama.

had contact with anyone from AmeriChina, a U.S. official said.

The U.S. government cannot legally block the sale because the weapons are not of American origin. The U.S. official, insisting on anonymity, said AmeriChina has not registered with the U.S. government, a requirement he said applies to all American arms dealers.

Wanta could not be reached for comment. The company phone number that appeared on the first memo was deleted from the second memo. The phone has been "temporarily disconnected," according to a recorded announcement. The only address listed is a post office box.

Concerning Panama's arms buildup, a Panamanian pilot who defected from the Defense Forces last month said he and two other pilots flew 94,000 pounds of weapons to Panama from Cuba on Noriega's behalf a few days after the political turmoil in Panama erupted.

Another aspect of the military buildup is a training program for thousands of Panamanians, who have formed into volunteer units known as "Dignity Brigades" to repel what the government says is an imminent U.S. invasion.

Some of the brigades are being trained in the use of M-16 rifles. The two memos sent by Wanta make reference to a possible deal with the Defense Forces involving M-16s.

A U.S. official said the transfer of M-16s to Panama would require U.S. government approval because they are manufactured by an American company, Colt Industries. He added that the government would disapprove any such request.

Walsh denies relying on testimony from Iran-Contra case defendants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh denied Friday that he illegally relied on the congressional testimony of defendants in the Iran-Contra case who received limited immunity from Congress.

A brief filed by Walsh's office said the "overwhelming majority" of his case against former national security adviser John M. Poindexter, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North and businessman Albert Hakim is based on evidence collected before the three defendants gave congressional testimony last year.

Defendants' involvement in the activities underlying the indictment had been fully identified prior to any of their immunized testimony, said the prosecution brief filed in U.S. District Court.

The government, in short, had no need for any immunized testimony to focus or aid its investigation," said the pleading filed by Herbert J. Stern, a former federal judge who was hired to represent the independent counsel on the immunity issue.

The prosecution opposed the motion by the three defendants to dismiss the indictment on the ground that the criminal charges violated their Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

The three, along with retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, are accused of conspiring to illegally divert profits from the U.S. arms sales to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Secord, the lead witness at last year's congressional hearings, gave his testimony on Capitol Hill without limited immunity.

Under the so-called "use immunity" granted by Congress, Walsh is prohibited from using the congressional testimony of North, Poindexter and Hakim as evidence against them.

But Stern argued that the immunity restriction does not apply to statements any of the defendants made voluntarily to the House and Senate Iran-Contra committees. Such statements are distinguished from compelled testimony given in response to questions, Stern said.

But the prosecution offered to forego introduction of such statements by the three defendants as evidence if U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell agrees not to hold an extensive pre-trial hearing on the immunity issue.

Gesell is scheduled to hold a hearing next Tuesday on the immunity issue.

Jackson reaches out for Jewish vote

By The Associated Press

Jesse Jackson, reaching out to Jewish primary voters in New York, said Friday he was trying to "heal relationships" that frayed during his 1984 presidential campaign.

Republican George Bush, his own nomination secure, surveyed the Democratic race and said "I wouldn't trade" places.

The Democrats focused on New York and its April 19 turning-point primary with 255 delegates, with Michael Dukakis and Albert Gore Jr. both waging war on drugs.

Jackson, campaigning in Manhattan, was asked by reporters about his relationship with the Jewish community, severely strained since he referred to New York as "Hymietown" during his 1984 presidential bid.

"Our own commitment is to end any vestiges of racism, of anti-Semitism, or sexism," Jackson said. "We've sent a message no one can miss."

A poll released Friday by the Marist College Institute for Public Opinion showed Jackson was supported by just 9 percent of Jewish voters. Michael Dukakis was the choice of 68 percent of Jews surveyed, while Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee was favored by 10 percent.

Jews make up one-fourth of the voters expected to cast ballots in the state's contest.

Jackson would not say whether he has agreed to meet with Jewish groups, but he said, "We continue to build relationships, we continue to heal relationships." Jackson has alienated Jews by endorsing a homeland for Palestinians and because of his close relationship with Louis Farrakhan, the Black Muslim leader who has called Judaism a "gutter religion."

Asked what his relationship with Farrakhan is today, Jackson said, "We do not have one. It is precisely that."

One of Jackson's antagonists, New York Mayor Edward Koch, defended his comment that Jews would be "crazy" to vote for Jackson. "Supporters of Jesse Jackson are saying Koch can't say these things," the mayor said. "What do you think a political campaign is? A political campaign is divisive. Somebody's got to win and somebody's got to lose." Overall, the Marist poll showed Dukakis leading Jackson among likely Democratic voters by 47 percent to 31 percent, with Gore receiving support from 6 percent.

Dukakis and Gore waged war on the Reagan administration's drug war during their campaign stops.

"This administration declared a war against drugs and they won," Gore said in Brentwood. "They've got to say yes to funding for drug programs."

Street clashes leave 9 Arabs wounded

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soldiers wounded nine Arabs in street battles after weekly Muslim prayers Friday, and the prayer leader at the sacred Al Aqsa mosque condemned the peace plan offered by Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Muslims in Siam told worshippers: "It is known that the United States does not give people their true rights."

Young Palestinians chanted anti-Israeli slogans, raised black mourning flags and threw rocks at soldiers after services at mosques in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, which have been swept by violence since Dec. 8.

Most protests dispersed quickly, however, on what proved one of the quieter Muslim sabbaths in four months.

A military official said the army continued investigating the death of a 16-year-old Jewish girl in a clash with Arabs on Wednesday.

Army spokesmen last said Wednesday that "Yusra Porat died of a blow to the head from a large stone thrown by Arabs, but results of an army report leaked the next day indicated she may have been shot inadvertently by an Israeli."

Arab hospital officials reported nine Palestinians wounded by soldiers Friday in four separate clashes in the West Bank and Gaza, which Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in 1967 Middle East war.

The largest toll was at the Jabaliya refugee camp in Gaza, where worshippers emerged from a mosque and marched to an Israeli military base. Palestinian reports said they hurled rocks at soldiers, who responded with tear gas and gunfire, wounding five.

On Jerusalem's Temple Mount, the sacred hill Arabs call Haram al Shari, dozens of Palestinians chanted nationalist slogans after noon prayers at Al Aqsa and paraded with a black flag to mourn Arabs killed in the violence.

At least 141 Palestinians have died since Dec. 8, according to U.N. figures. An Israeli soldier was stabbed to death and Miss Porat was the first Israeli civilian killed.

"With our blood and spirit, we will redeem you, Palestine!" the demonstrators at Al Aqsa chanted. Several youngsters threw rocks at border police perched on rooftops with sniper rifles, but were dispersed without incident.

Inside the mosque, prayer leader Siam urged worshippers to reject the U.S. peace initiative. "Give yourselves to Allah, but not to Shultz," Siam said. "He is not the person to decide what is good and what is bad for us."

Shultz headed home Friday after an unsuccessful five-day effort to arrange negotiations between Israeli and Arab leaders. Palestinians refused to meet him and accused the secretary of trying to crush the rebellion with his peace effort.

A senior military official said Friday the army still had not determined what killed Yusra Porat, who was on a Passover holiday hike with other teen-age children of Jewish settlers. Two Arabs also were killed, and two Arabs and 13 Israelis injured.

"We know she was struck by a bullet and a stone," the official told The Associated Press.

According to an army report leaked to Israeli radio and television, the clash began when 16 teenagers and their two guards were stoned by youths from Beita, a nearby Arab town, as they hiked in a dry river bed.

The radio quoted the report as saying the guards disagreed over what to do. It said Romam Al Dubi, 26, wanted to shoot but the other guard asked him not to.

Al Dubi told the children to gather around him and started shooting, the radio said, then the Arab youths disarmed him and took the Israelis to Beita.

A large crowd attacked the Israelis in the town, reports have said, but the army stressed that many villagers also helped the teen-agers, hiding some in their homes and calling ambulances.

Israeli media reports have identified Al Dubi as an extreme religious nationalist and follower of the anti-Arab Kach movement of U.S.-born Rabbi Meir Kahane.

Last year, the army barred him from the West Bank city of Nablus for three months after he repeatedly sought confrontations with Arabs over prayer rights at a site in the city holy to both Arabs and Jews.

Section of new British sub installed upside down

LONDON (AP) — Embarrassed managers at a company building a nuclear-powered hunter submarine for the British navy have ordered an inquiry into how a large section of the vessel was welded into position upside down.

any into how this occurred. "We don't envisage there being any impact on the building program or the quality standards which apply to this submarine," he said.

"I don't think anyone can remember quite such a blunder," an unidentified employee of the Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. in the northwestern town of Barrow told The Daily Telegraph.

Smith refused to say how the mistake occurred. The unidentified trade union leader told the news agency it was a mistake by "senior management."

Correcting the mistake to the $446-million Trafalgar-class submarine, named the Triumph, will cost up to $1.86 million, according to a trade union leader quoted by the British domestic news agency Press Association.

Smith said he did not think the welding error would jeopardize Vickers' bid to win an order to build submarines for the Canadian navy. Vickers is pursuing the order in the face of competition from the French company Societe Navationale Atomique.

Mike Smith, a spokesman for Vickers, said: "A section of the SSN19 (the Triumph) has been welded into an incorrect position. An investigation is currently under "This is a very isolated incident and we will be pressing ahead with our bid. How much it will cost to put right I don't know, but the figure of one million pounds ($1.86 million) is ridiculous," Smith said.

Afghanistan accord negotiations over gen leaving on May 15, but added the withdrawal is not "a present to President Reagan." The two begin their fourth summit May 29 in Moscow.

Although Cordovez has a mandate from all sides to promote dialogue within Communist-ruled Afghanistan, there is no guarantee the 10-year-old war will stop.

The U.S.-supported insurgent alliance was not included in the negotiations and issued a statement Friday saying its fighters "will not be bound by the outcome of the Geneva agreements and they will continue the war as long as the Russians and their puppets are present in Afghanistan."

A U.N. spokeswoman, Therese Gastaut, said the date of the signing ceremony will be announced Monday.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev confirmed that Soviet troops will be withdrew from Afghanistan. "The documents are now finalized and open for signature."

Agreement became possible after what diplomatic sources said was a secret understanding that Washington will phase out aid to the guerrillas while Moscow cuts off military support to Kabul.

Cordovez said all parties are ready to sign, including the Soviet Union and United States as guarantors, after a final round of negotiations that lasted more than five weeks.

The agreement covers Afghan and Pakistani assurances of non-interference in each other's affairs, safe and voluntary return of Afghan refugees, and superpower guarantees. A fourth part ties the others together and Cordovez said a memorandum of understanding was added on the U.N. role in supervising the agreement.

Texts are to be published later.

Reformer Yang China's new president

BEIJING (AP) — China's highest body of state power on Friday named a reformer and veteran of the Long March to the ceremonial post of president, replacing a conservative.

The National People's Congress selected Yang Shangkun, 61, who made the Long March in the mid-1930s with Mao Tse-tung. He now is China's most powerful general and a close ally of senior leader Deng Xiaoping, 84.

was chosen chairman of the congress. He helped pioneer Deng's economic reforms in the late 1970s as Communist Party chief in central Anhui province.

Deng kept his only government post, chairman of the Central Military Commission. His main power base remains in the military, which has appeared unwilling to accept any of the leader's younger proteges as head of the commission.

Relief workers leave drought area

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Foreign relief workers on Friday began complying with a government order to leave the drought-stricken north where civil war has stymied efforts to feed millions of people threatened with starvation.

They had been operating out of the Eritrean town of Asmara and are among about 60 expatriates sent to the north, where crop failure threatens more than 3 million people with starvation.

It was unclear when the rest of the foreign relief personnel in other northern towns would be pulled out.

The government Relief and Rehabilitation Commission on Wednesday ordered all relief agencies to bring its foreign workers from the north "to avoid personnel security risks" from rebels operating in the area.

The commission said it would assume responsibility for the massive relief operation, which already had been crippled by the civil wars in Eritrea and Tigre.

The order came a week after President Mengistu Haile Mariam admitted for the first time that his government was in a "grim struggle" with northern rebels. He called for a national mobilization of troops.

Since then, government vehicles used in the relief operation and planes flying domestic and international routes for state-owned Ethiopian Airlines have been requisitioned to move troops and equipment, relief officials said.

Eritrean rebels have been fighting for 27 years against the central government. It is Africa's longest civil war. In neighboring Tigre, rebels have been fighting for 14 years.

Chanting Iranians cast their ballots

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iranians chanting "War, war until victory!" defied threats of Iraqi missile attacks Friday and voted for a new parliament after being urged to go to the polls by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

polling stations opened for 12 hours. Later, the government extended polling hours until 10 p.m. because many people were still voting.

Prime Minister Hussein Musavi, surrounded by Iranians chanting "We're not tired of the war!" voted early.

The official media said the turnout among Iran's 20-25 million voters was "massive," but it gave no figures. Khomeini had called on his followers to turn out in force to defy the Iraqis.

The results may take up to 10 days to be announced.

Decline in oil wealth reduces trade in arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decline of oil wealth and easy credit has sapped the energy of the Middle East arms-buying spree of the early 1980s, contributing to a $16 billion-a-year drop in worldwide arms imports, the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency said Friday.

cially in non-democratic countries, the most recent country-by-country data on weapons imports covers the year 1985, the agency said. In that period, war-torn Iraq topped the list, importing $4 billion worth of armaments, mostly from the Soviet Union.

Iraq was followed in order by Saudi Arabia, India, Cuba, West Germany, Iran, Libya, Syria, Egypt and the Soviet Union, which purchases large amounts of weaponry from its allies in Eastern Europe.

As it has for many years, the Soviet Union led the list of international arms sellers. Its transfers totaled $15.3 billion; the United States was second with $12.3 billion, followed by France, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Italy, Britain, West Germany, China and East Germany.

The oil glut and the Third World's debt problems have forced a decline in arms buying. Besides, many of the countries who bought all those weapons in the early 1980s don't need any more now, the report said.

The study, "World Military Expenditures and Arms Transfers," contains statistics on arms supplying and buying countries through 1986, when weapons imports totalled more than $94 billion. That compared to $42 billion in 1985 and approximately $50 billion a year between 1981 and 1984.

Military spending by Middle Eastern countries also declined, while the world as a whole was paying more and more for war-making capability. From $880 billion in 1985, global military spending rose to $921 billion in 1986, the report said.

Because of the difficulty of obtaining data on arms purchases, espe-

Graham says evangelists' problems have created cynicism

HONG KONG (AP) — American evangelist Billy Graham said Friday the problems of Jim Bakker and Jimmy Swaggart haven't affected his ministry, but they have increased cynicism outside the church.

Graham, in Hong Kong to announce details of his first trip to China, said that the fall of the two television evangelists has "made more people conscious of their need of true faith in Christ and it has made more people discerning."

"It has, I'm sure, made some people outside the church more cynical," said Graham. He told a news conference Internal Revenue Service audits have failed to uncover any problems in his own ministry.

Graham begins a 16-day trip to China on April 13 that will take him to Beijing, Nanjing, Shanghai and Canton. He also will visit Huaiyan in China's eastern Jiangsu province, where his wife, Ruth, was born.

Graham refused to discuss China's record on religious freedom and said he "certainly will not get involved in politics" during his visit.

B.F. Skinner recovers from injury, operation

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Maybe it isn't news, but we're going to tell you about it anyway.

BILLY GRAHAM

JOAN RIVERS
Suit upheld

B.F. Skinner is back at home. The psychologist, author and teacher suffered a fall in his kitchen just before Christmas, and had to have an operation for a head injury.

"It's not a news story at all," the 84-year-old pioneer in behavioral psychology said Thursday. "I just slipped and fell and had a slight concussion."

Skinner, who retired from Harvard University in 1974, said he underwent an operation four weeks ago to relieve pressure from the Dec. 20 injury and was released from the hospital two weeks later.

Teacher of the Year never expected awards

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Maybe the secret of winning is to avoid thinking about it. That's one lesson you could learn from the new National Teacher of the Year, Terry Weeks.

The seventh-grade social studies teacher in Murfreesboro won the award in a contest sponsored by Good Housekeeping magazine, Encyclopaedia Britannica and the Council of Chief State School Officers.

"When I was in school, I dreamed of becoming a teacher. Awards were not a part of that dream," Weeks said Wednesday. "I would read about others receiving awards like this and I would think there was a remote chance, but I never thought winning this award would become a reality for me."

Weeks kept mum about the award, which was due to be announced in Good Housekeeping and at a news conference in Washington next week. But the magazine's Tennessee subscribers couldn't keep quiet.

Weeks, 37, has taught in the Rutherford County school system for 14 years.

First American women will challenge Everest

SEATTLE (AP) — When Julie Andrews sang "Climb Ev'ry Mountain" while gambling through the Alps in "The Sound of Music," she probably would have been happy to make an exception for Mount Everest.

The three will get a chance to become the first American women to scale the 29,108-foot peak as members of the 1988 Northwest American Mount Everest team.

Those interested in sponsoring the first American woman on top of the world wanted more women on the team to improve the odds, but expedition leader Jim Frush said he didn't pick team members by gender.

"I was against adding women just to add numbers, but we added women and still stayed strong and experienced," said Dailey, 44, a high school teacher with extensive climbing experience around the world.

The team is to leave Seattle on July 20 with plans to reach the summit by late September or October.

The other women are Stacy Allison, 30, of Portland, Ore., and Peggy Luce, 29, a Seattle bicycle messenger.

Everest has been conquered by at least 209 climbers, six of them women. So far, 87 people have died trying. The first American woman to try the ascent, Marty Hoey of Seattle, died on the mountain in 1982.

"I've never been on a trip that had a budget of a quarter-million dollars," said Dailey. "I'm used to smaller groups where you save money for four or five years and then go."

Joan Rivers' libel suit upheld in appeals court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The validity of comedian Joan Rivers' $50 million libel suit against Gentlemen's Quarterly magazine has been upheld by the state Court of Appeals, which concluded an article about her may not have been gentlemanly.

Miss Rivers sued the magazine and writer Ben Stein for a story that claimed she wished her late husband was dead before his suicide last August. Stein, who used the pseudonym Bert Hacker for the article, said the story was a parody.

The December article quoted the comedian as saying her husband, Edgar Rosenberg, had turned manic and was driving her insane.

"The average reader reasonably could have understood the statements made in the subject article as a true report of actual events," the appeals court said Tuesday. "The communication reasonably could be interpreted as conveying a defamatory meaning of and concerning (Joan Rivers)."

Calls Thursday and Friday to Gentlemen's Quarterly offices in New York were unanswered. Stein, who could not be located, has said previously he considered Miss Rivers a legitimate subject for reportage in such an article.

American meets Soviet fiance after 9 years

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — The courtship between an American teacher and her Soviet fiance, who has been in this country 2 weeks, has spanned most of her adult life, but she's still hesitant about marriage.

Victor Novikov, 56, met Elizabeth Condon, 45, 21 years ago when she was a tour guide for the U.S. Information Agency in Moscow.

They planned to marry in 1979, until Soviet authorities stood in the way, and Novikov has considered himself married ever since.

But Mrs. Condon hesitates when asked if the two will marry before Novikov's visa expires.

"We're very pleased with the way things are going," Ms. Condon said. "I just want us to get re-acquainted a little bit, to at least have two months to think about it."

"America has exceeded my expectations," Novikov, speaking through an interpreter, said last week while sitting on the steps of Ms. Condon's home, where she has lived with her mother since she was 10.

"I want to say sincerely that I am in ecstasy," he said.

Novikov arrived for his visit March 26, and Ms. Condon met him at New York's Kennedy Airport.

He was wearing this horrible hat, this soft men's type hat," she said. "The first thing I did was to take the hat off."

Novikov said he never married after meeting Ms. Condon because he always felt committed to her.

"He always insisted that everyone call me his wife," she said. "For him, coming here is more like a technicality, like filling out a form. He already feels he's married."

Novikov is planning to take English lessons and hopes to resume work as a research chemist in the United States.

Soviet Union. "I have confidence, but it depends on Elizabeth," he said. "As they say in Russian, every week has seven Fridays."

He meant, said Ms. Condon, "that I'm a lot more up and down about this than he is."

But ups and downs have been a hallmark of their relationship.

After they met in Moscow, they kept in touch by mail.

Firefighters assist Pete Schillaci AP Laserphoto

Man rescued after cave-in PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Co-workers saved the life of a man buried when an underground wall of dirt suddenly gave way, covering him with two tons of dirt.

Pete Schillaci, 33, was reported in good condition at Oregon Health Sciences University Hospital following the accident Thursday in northeast Portland.

City workers and firefighters frantically used their hands, helmets and shovels to uncover Schillaci, who was underground for less than 20 minutes.

"It was a common, everyday job," said Jerry Kuhn, himself mired to the waist. "Everything was looking good, and then with absolutely no warning two tons ... came down on us."

Kuhn was able to pull himself from the hole and, together with backhoe operator Paul Thompson, began scooping out the earth.

After about four minutes, Kuhn said, they uncovered Schillaci's face.

"He was out of it," Kuhn said. The men followed procedures they had learned in a cardiopulmonary resuscitation class at work, Kuhn administering mouth-to-mouth resuscitation as Thompson massaged Schillaci's heart.

When emergency crews arrived with a breathing apparatus, Schillaci was turning blue from lack of oxygen and blood was trickling from his mouth, according to firefighter Eric Brinkhead of the Portland Fire Bureau.

Mother sentenced in children's deaths

WASHINGTON, Pa. (AP) — A woman was sentenced to 12 to 46 months in jail for the deaths of her two children, who were locked in a hot car for five hours last August.

Washington County Judge John Bell on Thursday sentenced Lisa Shields, 20, of Indiana. She pleaded guilty March 1 to two counts of endangering the welfare of children.

Her husband, John Shields, 23, has yet to be sentenced. He pleaded guilty to two counts of involuntary manslaughter.

The parents' separate trials were moved out of Indiana County because of widespread publicity about the case.

Calvin Shields, 1, and his sister, Kristle, 3, died of heat exposure, authorities said. They were locked in the car from morning until early afternoon on a hot, partly sunny day while the parents slept in a house after a party the night before.

U.S. threatens Japan with trade retaliation

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter threatened retaliation Friday after Japan blocked a U.S. request for creation of an international panel to resolve a dispute over beef and citrus imports.

Yeutter also urged Japanese industrialists to use their political clout to block the protectionist measures for which Japan's farmers are lobbying.

"I regret, the Japanese today blocked our request for the formation of an independent panel to review Japan's beef and citrus quotas and other restrictive practices," Yeutter said in a statement.

Hours earlier, Yeutter told National Public Radio, "If the intransigent attitude that prevails in Japan at the moment on beef and citrus continues, we are clearly heading toward retaliation by the United States, and somebody will pay the price."

"It may or may not be the Japanese agricultural producers, but someone will have to pay the price of retaliation," he said.

The Japanese move came Friday in connection with a session of GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The United States asked GATT to form a panel of independent experts to determine whether the Japanese citrus and beef import quotas were consistent with international trading laws. But the Japanese ambassador, Yoshio Hatano, rejected the panel, saying the dispute should be resolved in bilateral discussions. Since GATT council decisions are made by consensus, the U.S. request was effectively rejected.

Yeutter said the United States would continue to consult with Japan, but if a solution is not found in the coming weeks it will renew its request for an independent panel at the next GATT meeting on May 4.

"Continued resistance to the establishment of a panel at this time would undoubtedly lead to further escalation of this dispute," he said.

Yeutter told NPR he had information that Japanese industry is already reacting to the possibility that the United States might curb its imports of Japanese goods as a retaliatory measure.

"I just saw a cable today that indicates that a number of Japanese industrialists are now beginning to speak up on the issue because they are fearful that if it is not resolved satisfactorily, they will suffer retaliation," he said. "They should be pounding the desk of Japanese government officials, saying 'don't let the agriculture folks have the controlling voice in this issue,'" Yeutter added.

The U.S.-Japanese agreement on citrus and beef imports expired last month and no new accord has been reached. Under the 1984 agreement, Japan agreed to admit 141,000 tons of American beef in 1984, rising to 177,000 tons this year. The agreement called for a 1,100-ton a year increase over the 1984 quota on U.S. orange imports.

College censors award-winning student script

HOUSTON (AP) - An award-winning play about a student's suicide has been deleted from a San Jacinto College literary magazine because the school chancellor believes the play's language is too offensive.

"It's an excellent play. Good work. But I had a real problem with the harsh language. I'm the publisher and it's sold to students and the community we serve," Chancellor Tom Stewart said.

As a result Robert Earl Milsaid's play "Just A Phase," about a 17-year-old student whose social and domestic woes drove him to a beer-soaked suicide, has been dumped from next week's issue of "The Prism."

"I'm not a member of the Moral Majority or anything, but it's not appropriate for the public we send it to," Sewell said.

The one-act play drew big crowds last year during three performances, received good reviews in the campus newspaper and in December earned the author an Excellence in Play Writing honor for originality at the American College Theater Festival in Denton.

Sewell said he would have considered barring the campus production had he known about its content beforehand.

Milsaid, 24, said he used cursing in his play for realism, not for shock. "It's sad that one person in a high position has a right to dictate his opinion."

U.S. rejects Soviets' cruise missile proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administration has rejected a Soviet proposal to conduct tests to determine whether cruise missiles aboard ships are armed with nuclear or conventional warheads, a U.S. official said Friday.

Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev raised the issue at the Washington summit last December, saying the Soviets had a new scientific technique. And the Soviets want to include limits on sea-launched cruise missiles in a Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty now under negotiation. U.S. officials argue that it is impossible to verify whether shipboard cruise missiles are armed with nuclear or conventional warheads, and therefore reject making them part of the START pact.

The Soviets responded by proposing a joint experiment to be conducted in the Mediterranean Sea of the new technology

Gorbachev mentioned last December.

Soviet officials have not released details of the new method, but a senior administration official said March 17 that "it seemed to be just a Geiger counter hanging from a helicopter. Such a device would be easy to fool, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

However, said the official, the administration "was considering going along with the experiment, just to see what they have."

On Friday, a State Department official said that the proposed experiment had been rejected.

"The United States stands by the commitment it made at the Washington summit to find a mutually acceptable solution to the questions of limiting the deployment of long-range nuclear armed cruise missiles and to seek mutually acceptable and effective methods of verification."

Tax protest group misleads, says IRS

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The Golden Mean Team, which just completed a whistle-stop tour to whip up enthusiasm for tax protest, uses incomplete information and out-of-context quotes from court cases to support its cause, says the Internal Revenue Service.

The positions they take, the courts continue again and again to reject them," said Mary Trudeau, spokeswoman for the IRS.

The Golden Mean's positions, similar to other tax-protest groups, include filing a return with little or no information and saying to provide more would be a violation of Constitutional rights.

Trudeau cited a 1973 U.S. 8th Circuit Court of Appeals case in which Jerome Daly, a lawyer, said he could file tax returns without violating his right against self-incrimination.

The court rejected that argument, saying Daly made no showing of how the disclosure of his income could incriminate him.

Trudeau says another 1927 court case, U.S. vs. Sullivan, led the way in rejecting the argument that filing a tax return violates rights against self-incrimination.

"This case, the one involving Daly as well as others, represents an extension of the holding in the Sullivan case that a taxpayer must do more than file a tax return or tax form with little or no information," Trudeau said.

The Daly and Sullivan cases still stand as precedent.

Trudeau says Golden Mean leader Peggy Christensen cites one Baltimore case as a victory, when in fact a jury ruled the taxpayer was actually too stupid to violate the law.

"The jury said, yea, he was wrong but naive and easily misled," Trudeau said. "He had no intent to defraud."

The Baltimore case is typical of the misin-formation used by tax-protest groups, Trudeau said.

"They take these cases out of context," Trudeau said. "That one is taken totally out of context - but you can say it's a victory, depending on what your viewpoint."

Christensen was unavailable for comment Thursday.

Although Trudeau says tax protesters are relying on incorrect arguments, Christensen says she's assisted on several cases where taxpayers won. She gave no details at a meeting in Burley, attended by nearly 40 people, on how she won those cases.

Trudeau says tax protesters are a problem in Idaho. During the fiscal year 1987, 444 protester returns were filed in Idaho.

Those returns represented a total tax deficiency of $3.2 million, an average of $7,100 per return.

The IRS doesn't take the problem lightly. Strict enforcement, Trudeau says, has reduced the number of protest returns in Idaho. In 1985, the state had 700 protest returns.

"They have slowly declined," Trudeau said. "Because once tax is assessed and we go out and enforce by seizing property, they start listening."

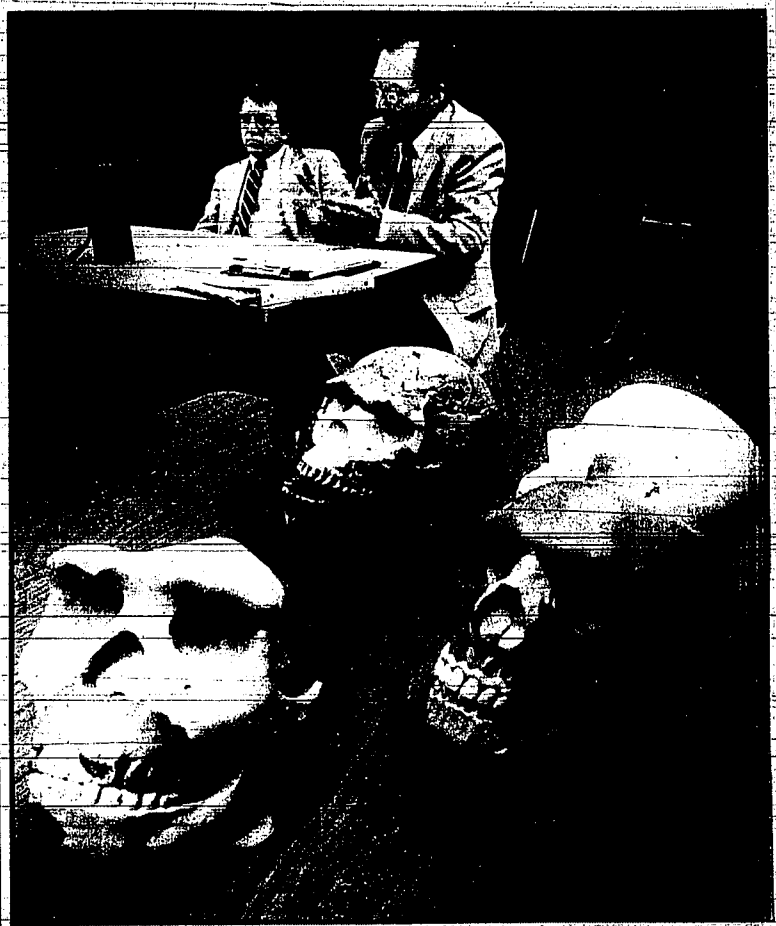

"We don't just let them go, we go out and collect, and then they become believers," Trudeau said.

Christensen spoke at Burley on Tuesday and in Boise on Wednesday to whip-up support for the Montana-based organization. The IRS calls the organization an "illegal tax-protest group" and some adherents to its philosophy have been convicted of willfully avoiding to file tax returns.

But that doesn't stop Christensen, who says she hasn't paid taxes for 21 years.

"I've stayed out of jail, although sometimes I think a rest would be nice," she said.

Then she challenged the 40 people at the Burley meeting to stand up for their Constitutional rights even if it means going to jail.

Storm knocks out power to 7,000

By MARY FRATER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Power was restored to some 7,000 Magic Valley residents on Friday after a spring snow storm, marked by high winds knocked power lines, said a spokesman for Idaho Power Co.

The outage started Thursday evening and darkened sections of Burley, Oakley, Kimberly, Castleford and Dubl.

"It was a terrible windy, it plastered big white spots on the windows and car-and Mrs. W.B. Casier, who lives south of Burley.

She lost her electricity about 8:30 p.m. Thursday and her service wasn't restored until 10 a.m. Friday.

There were no reports of outages in Twin Falls, but winds were clocked at more than 30 mph at the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport, said a spokesman for the control tower.

The Cassia County Sheriff's office said power was out all over Oakley on Thursday night and there were sporadic problems in the area.

Scientists oppose teaching creationism

Mormon professors find that religion and evolution are compatible

By KEN ARMSTRONG
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Trent Stephens, who decided in eighth grade he'd rather be a biologist than a cowboy, was an ambitious high-school graduate.

While speaking at a press conference Friday afternoon, Stephens said he had two goals upon entering his freshman year at Brigham Young University.

"One was to disprove the theory of evolution, and the second was to be the first person to map a chromosome," he said.

Stephens, who was in Twin Falls Friday as part of an evolution-creationism colloquium, failed on both counts.

The second goal - for all intents and purposes - had been reached 50 years previously, Stephens said.

"And the first goal? Well, a scientist has the right to change his mind."

"The more I looked, the more I found the evidence was overwhelmingly in support of the (evolutionary) theory," Stephens said.

That was part of the message Stephens, an associate professor of anatomy and embryology at Idaho State University, and Duane Jeffrey, an associate professor of zoology at BYU, brought to Twin Falls.

The issue created controversy in the Twin Falls School District after parents Stephen and Jan Hartgen protested the teaching of creationism by O'Leary Junior High School biology teacher Phil Gerrish.

Twin Falls School District Board of Trustees will issue a report on the matter Tuesday at its 7 p.m. meeting.

At the colloquium Friday night, the two men, both of whom are Mormons, argued that science and religion should not mix - at least not in the classroom. The colloquium, attended by approximately 80 people, was held in the Shields Building on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho.

It was sponsored by several groups, including the Region IV Idaho Education Association, the Idaho Academy of Sciences, and the National Center for Science Education.

At the press conference preceding the colloquium, Stephens and Jeffrey said evolutionism is not science.

"It really has no evidence as a science," Jeffrey said. "Its entire identity is anti-evolution."

At the same time, however, both professors said there need not be tension between evolution and creationism. Jeffrey referred to it as a "false dichotomy," noting that one can simultaneously believe in God and evolutionary principles.

But, according to Stephens, creationism should be barred from those classrooms where science is being taught.

"What we need to be teaching in our science classes is science," he said. "Science is a very pragmatic way of looking at things instead of dogmatic."

The two men said that if creationism is to enter a school, it

Sunbeam Mine officials question EPA guidelines

The Associated Press

STANLEY - Sunbeam Gold Mine officials say the Environmental Protection Agency is proposing too stringent pollution-discharge regulations for its planned Yankee Fork area mine.

Sunbeam Mining Corp. Chief Mining Engineer A.J. Silva and a former EPA employee who works for Sunbeam objected to monitoring requirements and procedures at a public hearing Wednesday.

The proposed gold mine is northeast of Stanley on Jordan Creek in the Yankee Fork of the Salmon River drainage. Issuance of the EPA permit is the last major hurdle the mine has to clear before opening.

Sylvia Kawabata, an environmental engineer from the EPA's regional office in Seattle, said final permit approval could take up to two months (following the close of the public comment period April 15).

When in full production, the mine is expected to employ 85 to 90 workers.

Silva has said mine construction will take nine to 10 months to complete after permits have been issued.

Jim Rouse, a geohydrology consultant hired by Sunbeam who once helped draft ore mining effluent guidelines for the EPA, said he thought the permit's proposed minimum effluent background levels were too stringent for effective monitoring.

Rouse said ground water has a characteristically high level of chemical variability depending on surrounding conditions. He said overly stringent standards would make

Filer Library completes preparations for move to new home

By DON PUDDER
Times-News correspondent

FILER - The long-awaited move of the Filer Library into its new home will take place this morning at 9 a.m., weather permitting.

At the Filer City Council meeting this week, council member Wanda Shuffer said that new furniture for the reading room had been purchased and that all arrangements had been made for the move.

Scott Bybee, city engineer, said that the book drop should be ready soon, and complimented the city crew on the sidewalk job that it completed in time for the library move. "If any problems should take place, concerning the library as far as the completed construction - and equipment bought, we're under warranty," said Bybee.

The city received $48,359 in state money to purchase and renovate the unoccupied Westwood Building, Supply, structure at 219 Main St. Work has included installing new interior floors, walls and ceilings, and completely insulating the building. The lighting and electrical service are also new.

The existing building includes reading rooms, an office, bathrooms and storage areas.

In other Filer business, resident Lloyd Leddom said that the debris left over from a house on 6th Street that had been removed was creating a "mess," especially when the wind was blowing. The council said that it would correct the problem as soon as possible.

He also said he was concerned about children crawling through rolls of steel chain-link material, on the Acme company storage area.

Councilman Ron Stokesberry said, "Kids have been doing that for over 15 years." The council did answer the complaint by agreeing to check on details in order to determine if there are any actual hazards for which the Acme company could be potentially liable for.

A letter was read by Mayor Bob Fort from The Prudential-Bache Securities firm, suggesting some options the council might consider for obtaining a better return for city monies the options including government bonds, and other investments which have high yields, but daily access.

City Attorney Fred Decker said, "The firm has a good reputation, it wouldn't hurt to look into it." The council passed a motion to request that the company send its prospectus for further study.

Scott Bybee, city engineer, reported that the telemetry system that regulates the water system had three regulatory problems that are presently being corrected. He also reported a problem with the chlorinator flow meter in the water treatment plant which is being corrected. The problem was resulting in twice as much chlorine being used per day as is necessary.

Also, the digging of the new sewer line to the treatment facility will have to be sidelined until fall, Bybee said. The city has an easement arrangement allowing the land to be farmed and planting on the property will begin soon. Possibly the portion going through the corral can be dug this spring, but the rest will have to wait, said Bybee.

Adrian Lang, of Filer, has proposed placing banners over Main Street, when there are events to be publicized. The council agreed to the proposal, with the understanding that the poles will be high enough so as to not interfere with traffic.

Also, Twila Knutson, chairman of the City Planning and Zoning Committee, proposed that a sign with removable letters be placed on city property adjacent to Highway 30, to advertise events taking place in the city. The committee was given approval by the council to check on prices of illuminated signs and to consider ways of raising money for the sign project.

In other action:

Clifton Johnson was promoted to corporal in the Filer Police Department and was given his Basic Peace Officer Certificate, which he recently earned.

Bud Gomphor, city fire chief, reported that four of the members of the fire department had completed training and that some of the procedures they have learned will be incorporated into their drill sessions. The drill times have been changed to the second Wednesday and fourth Thursday of each month.

The special use permit request by the Peterson boat-building company was approved with the stipulation that a privacy fence be constructed on the north side of the property and a fence or tree buffer zone be developed on the east side, and that this stipulation be in writing.

Bud Gomphor, fire chief, volunteered to be chairman of the Johnny Horizon Day. The last reading and approval of Ordinance No. 423, to de-annex the property of Lyle Abel, adjacent to the high school, was made by the council.

Jury ready in polygamist trial

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - An eight-man, four-woman jury was impaneled Friday to hear the federal trial of four polygamist clan members charged in the January bombing of a Mormon chapel and a subsequent standoff that left a lawman dead.

The 12-member panel and two alternates were selected from an initial pool of 170 that was reduced to 70 by Friday morning. A 20-page questionnaire was circulated Wednesday to help screen potential jurors.

"I'm pleased with the jury, and I'm real surprised we got it this fast," said defense attorney Fred Metz. The questionnaire "turned out to be extremely helpful. I would guess we saved at least a week because of them."

U.S. District Judge Bruce S. Jenkins directed the jurors to return to court Tuesday morning for preliminary instructions and the start of testimony.

Federal prosecutors informed the court Friday that they planned to call about 200 witnesses, including neighbors of the defendants and several reporters who were contacted by clan leader Addam Swapp 27, and matriarch Vickie Singer, 44.

Swapp and the two Singers had been charged with conspiracy in the bombing and standoff, but Jenkins dismissed that count Wednesday on a motion from prosecutors.

Before dismissing the jury for the weekend, Jenkins instructed members not to read or listen to any news reports about the case or to talk with anyone, including each other, about it.

"You're going to see it all, hear it all and know it better than anyone else," Jenkins said. "This is the place to get your information."

"I remind you also to keep an open mind," the judge added. "You must not decide any issues before the evidence is presented."

Before the panel was selected, the judge asked the pool whether any would be prejudiced if it were known that the bombed building belonged to the Mormon Church, or if the marital status of some defendants "may be different from mainstream marital status."

Jenkins also asked if any jurors could not be open-minded about practitioners of fundamentalist religions or "if someone's ecclesiastical beliefs differ from the mainstream."

None raised their hands, but several prospective jurors who said it would be hard to attend the trial were excused.

Mrs. Singer, the widow of slain polygamist John Singer, and Addam Swapp, who is married to Mrs. Singer's daughter Heidi and Chmpton, espouse the practice of polygamy and other doctrines that are by-laws of the church.

The mainstream church abandoned polygamy in 1890.

Addam Swapp's attorneys had earlier requested that his trial be moved out of Utah because of the prominence of the Mormon Church here. Jenkins, who said he would rule on the issue during jury selection, gave no indication Friday that he had ruled other than his statements that the trial would resume Tuesday.

Defense attorneys and prosecutors spent most of Thursday reviewing the questionnaires, which Metz said consisted of "questions of a personal nature and questions we had to have answered."

Metos said he believed the questionnaire not only helped shorten the process, but gave attorneys a better idea of the opinions and personalities of the jurors.

"I think they tend to be more open because they didn't have to stand up in front of 40 or 50 people and talk about their lives and their opinions on things," he said.

However, he added: "It can safely say there was not one juror who said they had not heard anything about this case."

The clan received international attention throughout the 13-day siege, which ended Jan. 23 in a shootout that killed Corrections Lt. Fred House and injured Addam Swapp.

The Utah Attorney General's Office plans to file homicide charges in House's death. However, Associate Attorney General Paul Warner said no charges would be lodged until after the federal trial, which attorneys estimate will take two weeks to a month.

Authorities have said John Timothy Singer is their chief suspect in House's death.

Oregon hepatitis epidemic still increasing in severity

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - Oregon's hepatitis epidemic appears to be worsening this year, with cases being reported at a record rate. The Oregon Health Division reported 490 cases of hepatitis type "A" so far this year, up sharply from the 396 cases reported during the same period of 1987.

The epidemic, declared in January 1986, appeared to be easing last year when the number of reported cases reached a three-year low of 1,328, down from 1,900 cases in 1986. The 1986 total was the highest number of cases reported in Oregon since the state began keeping records in 1949.

So far this year, however, the infectious disease is making a strong comeback, officials said.

While most cases have been transmitted in the home or at day-care centers, officials said they were most concerned about a rise in reported cases traced to food in restaurants.

In 1989, for example, only one restaurant-associated outbreak of hepatitis A was reported in Oregon. From 1985 through the present, eight such outbreaks have been reported, the division said in a news release. Four of those cases have been reported in 1988.

Hepatitis A is a viral disease that inflames the liver. It is transmitted by contact with feces or urine, and usually is acquired indirectly by eating food or drinking water handled by an infected person.

Symptoms range from nausea and fever to jaundice, a yellowing of the eyes or skin. It is rarely fatal.

The latest restaurant-related case was disclosed Thursday when Marion County health officials said a part-time waitress might have exposed customers of a Salem restaurant to the disease last month.

Officials said there was a small chance of exposure for customers who ate at the Vine and Del in late March. The incubation period for the disease is about a month.

Another recent outbreak of hepatitis A was traced to a cook who worked in late January in the restaurant in the state Capitol building in Salem. Authorities say four people are known to have contracted the disease there.

At a news conference in Portland, Health Division officials said they would expand their public notices of restaurants where a food handler is found to have contracted the disease.

State and federal guidelines have recommended the public not be notified of an infected food handler unless there was obvious evidence of poor personal hygiene or restaurant sanitation.

"In the past, the approach has been effective in preventing spread (of the disease) from restaurants. It does not appear to be working now," said Art Keil, a Health Division spokesman.

The division has instituted a new policy that requires public notification whenever a restaurant food handler contracts hepatitis. The only exception will be when there is evidence that the individual had "impeccable" sanitation practices, including wearing gloves when handling food, the agency said.

The division will notify the state's restaurants of the tougher policy and will include a review of food-handling practices to help prevent the spread of hepatitis.

"We want the restaurant managers to say to their employees, 'Hey, you guys use these practices regardless,'" Keil said.

There was a slight rise last year in the number of reported cases of hepatitis B, a more serious strain that is most common among intravenous drug users.

NASA defends its decision to build shuttle rocket plant

ODGEN, Utah (AP) - Reliability and tighter control are good reasons for the nation to spend $500 million about joining work done by space shuttle rocket plant rather than refurbishing existing facilities at Morton Thiokol Inc., a NASA official says.

J.R. Thompson, director of NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., told Morton Thiokol's suppliers that the space agency is at a point where it can no longer risk crippling flight delays.

"What it comes down to is reliability. Any failure we've got is going to bring the shuttle program and the rest of the nation to a screeching halt," he said Thursday.

Such delays could cost the space program billions of dollars, as did the two-year delay following the Jan. 28, 1986, Challenger disaster, in which the shuttle was destroyed and its seven-member crew killed.

The accident commission later determined the explosion was caused by a leaking seal in the booster rocket made by Morton Thiokol at its Utah Wasatch Division plant, 26 miles west of Brigham City.

However, Thompson insisted that accident had nothing to do with NASA's decision to build its own plant.

Thompson said he is "very confident" about joining work done by Morton Thiokol and its suppliers. But he said in the future NASA would have the best chance of building reliable products and protecting workers at a new, automated plant.

The space agency could incorporate advanced technology, sophisticated cleanliness measures and humidity controls essential to producing advanced solid rocket motors, he said.

The next generation of motors will propel about 12,000 pounds of payload. Current motors can lift about 63,000 to 65,000 pounds of payload, he said.

There are other advantages to a government-owned plant, Thompson said.

If NASA owned the facility, it could build control to compare the cost of building over the buildings and the work, keeping production in a competitive environment.

Further, a new plant wouldn't duplicate resources of existing ones, he said.

"We've got to use these facilities for the next decade."

"You're going to have to build a new facility because all the current ones will be tied up, they'll be at full capacity. It would be too difficult to upgrade them," he added.

"Thompson it would be difficult to refurbish Morton Thiokol's plant while workers were producing 170 solid rocket motors for 79 planned flights during the next decade, he said.

"I feel very confident about what the local people and Morton Thiokol are doing for us," he said. "We're in the process of making a commitment to Morton Thiokol and Utah for the next decade."

NASA contracts with the company add up to about $15 million in state tax revenues a year and 3,000 jobs, said Reed Searle, Gov. Norm Bangerter's chief of staff.

Morton Thiokol's Wasatch plant would be out of business if NASA builds a new facility, possibly in Mississippi or near Cape Canaveral in Florida.

Several companies, including Morton Thiokol, might bid to do the work at a new plant.

should be in one of the social science classes.

"I cannot see why one cannot develop a social science curriculum that develops respect for belief systems," Jeffery said. "I think we are selling the community short if we do not develop that kind of curriculum."

Stephens said fusing religion and science tends to corrupt both elements. The effort also aggravates the situation where students and others haven't the foggiest idea of what the scientists are talking about.

Jeffery, who has been a professor at BYU for 19 years, said the commissioning of science and religion paves the way for an all-too-common phenomenon - diluted textbooks which, in order to offend no one, say nothing.

"I am disturbed when a textbook says pilgrims are people who went on long voyages," he said.

"According to Stephens, another difficulty with the teaching of creationism addresses the lack of agreement among those people espousing the belief system. "There is not even any consensus among the Christian churches," he said.

Jeffery and Stephens both noted that the evolutionary theory - despised having been subjected to intense criticism - has continued to find scientific support.

"Darwin is the favorite whipping boy for about everything going on from the ashes," he keeps coming back up."

accurate monitoring impossible. Rouse recommended minor changes in the minimum effluent baseline figures to ensure more accuracy in monitoring pollution.

Silva also objected to the EPA's proposed imposition of a ground-water monitoring program as a condition of the permit. Silva said he was unaware of any law, regulation or precedent authorizing the stipulation.

Ms. Kavanagh said the EPA considers monitoring wells necessary to monitor potential pollution from the spent ore pile into the groundwater. The gold will be leached lems in Burley.

Power was out for about an hour Thursday night in Kimberly, said Kathryn Widmer, city clerk.

The Twin Falls County Sheriff had reports of lines touching in Buhl.

Sections of Buhl lost power for 10 to 15 minutes, said Buhl police.

There was no property damage despite winds of 30 to 40 mph, police said.

Most of the minor problems were caused by two transformers and a circuit breaker failing at the Miller Substation, said Dale Manson, IPC southern division electrical superintendent.

"It took us quite a while to get power rerouted and install a spare transformer," he said.

Some lines were felled by the winds, others bumped together causing shorts, Manson said.

IPC crews worked through Thursday night to restore service.

Most of the power was back by midnight Thursday but some electrical service had not been restored as late as 8 or 9 a.m. Friday, Manson said.

Assemblies of God leaders defrock evangelist Swaggart

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) - Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart was defrocked Friday as a minister of the Assemblies of God for rejecting punishment ordered by national church leaders.

The Executive Presbytery of the Springfield-based Pentecostal denomination had ordered Swaggart to stop preaching for a year because of "moral failure." Swaggart confessed publicly to unspecified sin after reports linked him to lewd acts with a New Orleans area prostitute.

The Rev. G. Raymond Carlson, general superintendent of the church, announced the decision after he and other members of the Executive Presbytery met by telephone conference call.

Earlier Friday, the church had received what Carlson described as a "gracious" letter from Swaggart in which the evangelist refused to accept terms of a church-ordered, two-year rehabilitation program.

"It is on this basis of precedent and our own by-laws, and upon his decision not to accept a rehabilitation program that he himself has agreed is right and proper, that the Executive Presbytery has, with regret and deep sorrow, taken formal action to dismiss Jimmy Swaggart as an ordained minister of the General Council of the Assemblies of God," Carlson said.

Swaggart's multimillion-dollar television ministry, based in Baton Rouge, La., scheduled a news conference there later in the afternoon.

Swaggart voluntarily stepped down from his pulpit Feb. 21, after a tearful public confession of "moral failures" before his wife, son and congregation gathered in his family worship center.

Church officials and Swaggart have refused to elaborate on his misstep, but a Baton Rouge prostitute has said Swaggart paid her to pose as his wife.

Carlson had called Swaggart on Friday after the 13-member Executive Presbytery, which serves as the board of directors of the church, met and made its decision.

"He received it graciously," Carlson said. "We had prayer together at the conclusion of our conversation."

Carlson declined to release details of Swaggart's letter. He said that when he talked to him, the evangelist did not explain why he was refusing the rehabilitation program. But, Carlson said, "I assume he's wrestling with what will happen with the Jimmy Swaggart Ministry."

The leaders of the country's largest Pentecostal denomination and their most prominent minister had been locked in an impasse since an attorney announced last week that Swaggart would defy a church-directed one-year preaching ban and return to his television ministry May 22.

But church leaders on behalf of Swaggart did not constitute communication between a disciplined minister and his church. They had been waiting since for the direct communication that came in Friday's mail.

Church elders in Louisiana originally recommended that Swaggart be barred from his pulpit for three months as part of a two-year rehabilitation plan. The Louisiana district insisted on the three-month ban, despite protests from national leaders that every other Assemblies minister who had confessed to moral failure was banned from preaching for at least a year.

The Executive Presbytery recommended the one-year ban and stood firm through a challenge to its authority by Louisiana officials. On March 29, the Executive Presbytery's authority to discipline Swaggart, and the specifics of its rehabilitation plan, were endorsed by an oversight body, and Louisiana officials later reconciled themselves to the national plan.

Swaggart's church, television and school complex in Baton Rouge has been shaken by the scandal. Donations are reported down, about 100 workers are being laid off, and Swaggart's Bible Colleges are said to be clamoring to transfer to other religious institutions.

Swaggart's ministry brought in an estimated $142 million last year, and his sermons are broadcast in more than 100 countries. He has been known for his harsh denunciations of the sins of others, including two other prominent Assemblies ministers who were brought down by scandal.

Briefly

Politics and church studied

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) - An increasingly volatile topic in this election year - the place of religion in American public life - will be examined by about 100 scholars April 11-12 at the University of Virginia.

The gathering is part of a project by the Williamsburg Charter Foundation to forge a new consensus on the subject.

The chairman of the non-partisan, widely representative organization, Alonzo L. McDonald of Troy, Minn., businessman and former diplomat, says "deep polarization" has developed about religion and politics.

He says "the time is ripe for re-thinking the principles that should guide debate about religion in the public arena."

Human rights leaders vow to oppose racial hatreds

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) - Thirteen white supremacists, including Aryan Nations leader Richard Butler, may have won in court, but their racist attitudes still will not be tolerated in the Northwest, area human rights leaders say.

Local efforts against racial violence will continue despite Thursday's acquittal of 13 defendants on charges including conspiracy to overthrow the U.S. government, right activists said.

"If any person with racial violence fantasies in his head comes to the state, they should take a look at Idaho law," said Coeur d'Alene lawyer Norman Gissel, chairman of the Kootenai County Task Force on Human Relations.

"We have the means and the wherewithal to bring people to justice here in Idaho," he said.

Defendants in the sedition case included three leaders of white supremacist groups: Louis Ray Beam Jr., 41, of Houston; Robert E. Miles, 63, of Cohasset, Mich.; and Butler, 70, of Hayden Lake, Idaho.

Butler, head of the Church of Jesus Christ Christian (Aryan Nations), issued a statement on Thursday's acquittal through his church office secretary, Betty Tate.

"The 10 men and two ladies who are our peers have rendered a verdict in favor of freedom of speech, freedom of association and freedom of religious faith," the statement said. "It is too bad that so many of us had to go through these trying times again to have to re-assert the sacred principles of our founding fathers."

Prosecutors had contended some of the defendants brewed a plot to establish an all-whites homeland in the Northwest.

Gissel said he was satisfied with the verdict because he believes in the judicial system. His sentiments were echoed by Tony Stewart, president of the Northwest Coalition Against Malicious Harassment, and former task force chairman Rev. Bill Wassmuth.

"What I find interesting is that the system they hate so much has set them free," Gissel said.

The all-white federal jury in Arkansas returned the verdict in its fourth day of deliberations, a day after U.S. District Judge Morris Arnold refused to accept the panel's statement that it was deadlocked on two of the counts.

"I personally feel very disappointed in the verdict, but I have a tremendous respect for the judicial system and I have to respect the juror's decision," said Kootenai County Underheriff Larry Broadbent, who has long been monitoring the local white supremacist movement.

Broadbent and the others said they don't anticipate any problems stemming from Butler's return to northern Idaho. They said they believe previous convictions of people engaging in racial violence have reduced support for it.

Plane fire forces exit, no injuries

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) - Fire in the engine of a Southwest Airlines Boeing 737 jet forced the evacuation of 118 passengers at McCarran International Airport Thursday night.

No injuries were reported and firemen brought the blaze under control quickly, airport officials said.

Some passengers used emergency chutes to exit the plane, which was parked at the terminal gate. Others exited through the jetway connecting the plane to the terminal.

Airport spokesman Roy Clason said the incident occurred when the pilot started the engines. He said one engine ignited and the pilot decided to evacuate the plane.

Clason said it took only two minutes to clear the plane.

The fire was the result of a "hot start," Clason said.

"That's where you have warm temperatures and high winds," Clason said. "What sometimes happens is fuel vapors will build up in a concentrate in the engine and fuel will not flow as it normally does.

"It's not common, but it's not overly dangerous," Clason said. "The pilot was extremely cautious and decided to evacuate the plane."

Passengers on the flight, 781 from Las Vegas to Phoenix, were rebooked on other flights.

The Federal Aviation Administration is investigating the incident, Clason said.

Hospital death prompts suicide investigation

CALDWELL (AP) - Authorities today were investigating the hanging death of a man at the West Valley Medical Center in Caldwell in what was apparently a suicide.

The victim's identity has still not been disclosed. But Malheur County, Ore., Sheriff Ron Mullen said the victim was taken to the facility on Wednesday after suffering two self-inflicted stab wounds at a diner just across the state line from Homedale, Idaho.

Mullen said the man was apparently despondent because he was galled by his girlfriend in Mexico.

Light plane makes safe SLC landing

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - A single engine airplane, lost power on its approach to Salt Lake International Airport today, landing 250 yards short of the runway, authorities said.

The Cessna 172 was undamaged and the pilot, a flight student whose identity was not released, was uninjured when the aircraft landed in the field between the runway and Interstate 80, about 8:45 a.m., said Airport Operations Officer Terry Fuessel.

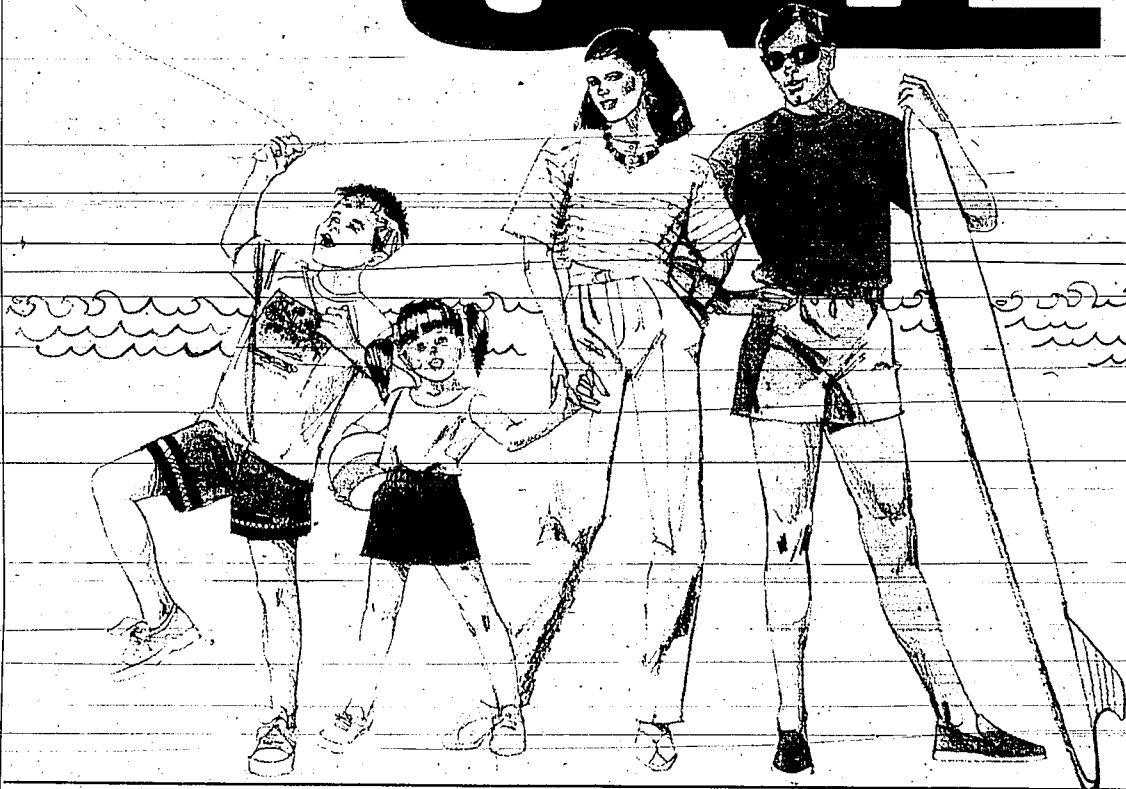

Fuessel said at mid-morning crews were working to get the airplane, which was separated from the runway by a fence, onto airport property.

The airplane was flown by a student from Intermountain Air College who had a total of 25 hours flight time, including five hours solo, said Ben Millward, assistant chief flight instructor.

Millward praised the pilot, who was the only one on board, for landing the aircraft safely. He said the incident likely was due either fuel supply or engine problems.

Secret weapons keeping bankers in the dark

Loosen up, Wall Street advising Pentagon

By RALPH VARTABEDIAN
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES - When a series of financial blows nearly bankrupted Lockheed Corp. in the early 1970s, commercial bankers, before extending additional credit, insisted that they be granted government security clearances so they could review the status of the company's top-secret programs.

Although the government initially balked, the bankers eventually were granted at least limited clearance to review those secret programs and agreed to provide loans that kept the aerospace company alive, according to banking industry officials.

But such access to the world of top-secret weapons programs is rare. Government security policies are meant to exclude, rather than include, institutions and individuals who would normally have an interest in multibillion-dollar programs.

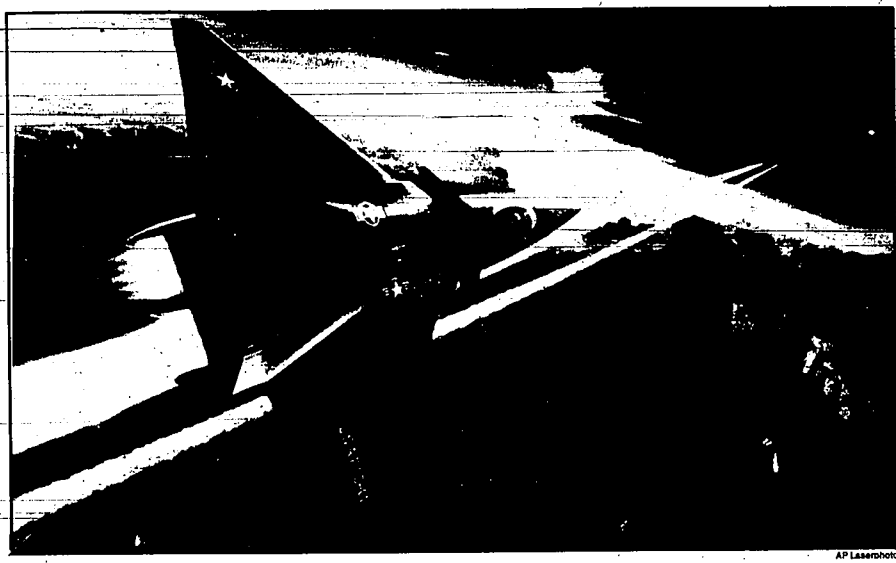

Until recently, that was not a problem, because the so-called black world of defense was just a small, though militarily important, part of the defense procurement system. But today, secret weapons programs have moved into the mainstream of the Pentagon's industrial activities.

An estimated 39 percent of Air Force procurement in the next fiscal year will be in black programs, in which outsiders' access to financial and technical information is limited or non-existent. U.S. industry is producing aircraft, spacecraft and electronic systems employing tens of thousands of aerospace workers in a shadow world.

The tremendous growth of secret military programs during the past decade has raised serious questions about the financial information sought by commercial bankers and investors. Even members of the boards of directors of aerospace firms are not always cleared to review a large part of the business that they are elected by shareholders to govern.

The trend raises the critical question of how commercial bankers, investment managers and directors can intelligently fulfill their fiduciary duties when they do not have access to information about a growing part of their own companies' business.

"If directors and investors are not informed on black programs, I don't see how they can make informed and rational decisions about the financial health of their corporations," said Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the

Lockheed's advanced tactical fighter is one example of 'black' or highly secret defense projects now in the works

House Energy and Commerce Committee's subcommittee on oversight and investigations. "And the proliferation of these secret programs within corporations only makes the situation worse."

Many government officials agree that the military has too many secrets, but they discount the importance of the problems that citizens in financial markets. "None of them say it is his job to change things, but I am hoping the pressure will force a re-evaluation."

The cost that Campbell cites can be most directly measured in terms of uncertainty within financial markets that causes investors to discount the value of stocks and bonds that aerospace firms issue.

The philosophy of capitalist free markets is that they should operate on perfect knowledge, but the intent of military classification is to maximize ignorance. Measuring the cost of secrecy is difficult, if not impossible, but the degree of uncertainty is clearly growing.

According to a recent study by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, 28 percent of Air Force procurement money is being spent in the black world during the current fiscal year and 39 percent of it will go black in fiscal 1989. The Pentagon will spend $24.1 billion on secret programs next year, according to the center's estimates.

A similar study by the Center for Defense Information reached virtually the same conclusion.

A study of the black world by the U.S. General Accounting Office, issued in February, found that the Department of Defense's "management structure was not initially set up for activities of such magnitude."

Lockheed, Northrop, TRW and Hughes Aircraft, all based in the Los Angeles area, are the major prime contractors who have the largest segments of classified work, and among those, Northrop clearly has the largest proportion of its revenues derived from contracts for "special-access" programs.

More than 50 percent of Northrop's revenues come from such programs as the stealth bomber and the Tuck Rainbow missile. Northrop Chairman Thomas V. Jones said the company has attempted to deal with the situation with such measures as arranging for security clearances for a few outside directors and an outside auditor as well as the use of a standardized accounting system for both black and white programs.

TRW derives an estimated 50 percent of its defense-connected revenues from classified programs, and Lockheed Missiles & Space is close to that figure, according to analysts. Hughes Aircraft derives 20 percent of its work from the black world, analysts say.

"Historically, an aura of technical excellence has accompanied secret military work, but that is increasingly giving way to uncensured suspicion."

"Northrop stock is lower than it would otherwise be if we knew more," Campbell, the aerospace analyst at Paine Webber, said. "The market cannot tolerate the uncertainty."

Moreover, it is not just analysts who are concerned.

"The issue has certainly come up, and it is of concern to outside directors," Michael Berberian, a long-standing director of Lockheed, said recently. "The company executives have expressed sympathy with our concerns. We are developing a plan where a certain number of outside directors who have the necessary clearances will serve as a watchdog for the board."

"There is an awareness and concern by the outside directors to this exposure," he added. "Within 60 to 90 days, we hope to have a plan. Even though no problems have cropped up, as these programs grow in size, the board is increasingly concerned about that exposure and has addressed the problem."

Berberian asserted that secret or classified areas have historically had fewer technical problems than open programs, but whether that can continue is debatable.

Michael Rich, director of Rand Corp.'s National Defense Research Institute, noted that as secret programs become the norm, rather than the exception, performance in those programs is more likely to resemble the average for all military programs.

"The size of these programs has meant that specialized management methods specific to the black world have not been possible," he said. "The management structure and procedures used look a lot like the white world, and so it is not surprising that the results resemble the white world."

"Some critics of the Pentagon" go much further, arguing that investors are doubly exposed in companies with significant black programs because not only do they lack information to make their own judgments, but they cannot rely on the normal system of oversight that exists for the white world.

The regulatory oversight, which is suspect in the best of times, is almost non-existent when a program is black," said Gordon Adams, director for defense studies at the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities in Washington.

"The regulatory oversight, which is suspect in the best of times, is almost non-existent when a program is black," said Gordon Adams, director for defense studies at the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities in Washington.

Not every analyst or director agrees that secrecy is causing measurable disruptions in financial markets.

"Paul Nisbet, a leading analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities, said the accuracy of analysts in predicting financial performance of aerospace companies with large amounts of secret programs was 'fairly darn high.'"

"We are much more accurate in projecting the outlooks for these companies than we are in projecting most commercial businesses," he said.

But others point to stunning surprises that have hit the financial community on "some secret programs. Wall Street was caught unprepared, for example, when Northrop was forced to take two writeoffs amounting to $214 million in its stealth bomber program in recent years. To this day, they still disagree about the cause of the write-offs and whether they are part of continuing problems.

"It was a painful surprise for everybody," recalled Wolfgang Demisch, aerospace analyst in New York for Union Bank of Switzerland. "It is hard to find a sample of the unknown unknown biting you in the rump."

Analysts have been forced to repeatedly reduce their projections of Northrop earnings and, partly as a result, the share price has fallen 50 percent. It is since recovered partially, but is still selling at a steep discount.

One continuing source of uncertainty, for example, is whether the Pentagon will require contractors to be written under new tax laws and new procurement rules that could significantly increase the company's cash needs. Northrop's cash flow turned negative last year, and the company has been borrowing heavily to meet its cash needs.

Brown satisfies Kansas by rejecting UCLA

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP)— Larry Brown shocked Kansas and UCLA with the ultimate change of heart Friday, rejecting an offer to return as the Bruins' basketball coach and staying with the national champion Jayhawks.

"Although I visited UCLA last night, I came back and after thinking about it, I've decided to stay at the University of Kansas," said Brown, reading a one-paragraph statement then leaving without taking questions.

It was a stunning turnaround even for Brown, basketball's most famous vagabond who left previous jobs with the Carolina Cougars and the Denver Nuggets of the old American Basketball Association, the NBA Nuggets and New Jersey Nets and, after just two seasons, UCLA.

This time, according to the scenario sketched by UCLA and Kansas officials, Brown went to Kansas to UCLA back to Kansas in less than 24 hours.

UCLA officials were so sure it was a done deal that they had scheduled a news conference Saturday to announce that Brown would replace the fired Walt Hazzard. Instead, he became the second coach in a week to turn down the job, following North Carolina State's Jim Valvano.

"When Coach Brown left Los Angeles this morning, we had every reason to believe that he had accepted UCLA's offer," UCLA athletic director Peter Dalis said.

"We have since learned from the media that Coach Brown has decided to remain at Kansas, but we have not heard this directly from Coach Brown."

His change of mind was so sudden that most Kansas officials didn't know about it, either.

"When we left our staff meeting at noon, we were all quite sure we'd lost our coach," said Floyd Temple, Kansas' assistant athletic director who had told The Associated Press shortly before Brown's announcement that "he's gone. It's definite."

"I don't want to mention any names, but we were told it was a lost cause," Temple said.

In fact, Temple said that even as Brown sat at a table in Allen Fieldhouse to reveal his decision to about 200 students and fans and reporters, "We all thought we were going to lose our basketball coach. We thought it was all over."

When Brown said he was staying, Temple and assistant athletic directors Doug Vance and Gary Hunter "looked at each other in amazement," Temple said. "It was an absolute shock. It was tremendous shock to all of us."

More than 200 students and boosters burst into cheers and chanted, "Larry, Larry," so loud that Brown had to pause and gesture for quiet so he could read his statement.

The Kansas campus is still in euphoria following the NCAA championship. Brown's unranked team won Monday night with 83-79 upset of Oklahoma.

"I apologize at this time for these things that are coming out," Brown said. "I think it's a time everybody ought to be celebrating the accomplishments of our team. Right now I'm just going to meet with our team and leave it at that."

With that, he left.

UCLA officials met Thursday evening and Friday morning in Los Angeles with Brown regarding the basketball job.

Brown had coached at UCLA beginning in 1979 and took the Bruins to the 1980 title game, losing to Louisville, before abruptly leaving for the NBA Nets. When he took the Kansas job five years ago, he was asked by the Nets to leave before the end of the season to avoid further disruption as the team prepared for the league playoffs.

UCLA first learned of Brown's decision when an AP reporter called for reaction.

"We had the room," we were ready with the release," said Bill Bennett, UCLA's associate sports information director. "I think the atmosphere here is one of shock and extreme disappointment."

Kansas athletic director Bob Frederick said he made no contract adjustments to induce Brown to stay.

Lyle takes two-stroke Masters lead

Zoeller blasts Augusta for tricked-up greens

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP)— Sandy Lyle took the lead at the Masters on Friday and Fuzzy Zoeller took on Augusta.

Zoeller, usually an easy-going, happy-go-lucky guy, stepped out of character and delivered perhaps the sharpest criticism ever of the famed Augusta National Golf Club course.

Fuzzy aimed his remarks at golf's officials and what he called "the tricks they put to golf courses like they've done out there."

"I'm mad. I'm flat out mad. I'm upset at what they're doing to the game of golf."

"Golf is supposed to be fun, an enjoyable thing. But when they put the tricks to it like they've done out there, it's like war total war."

Lyle's no fun at all, Zoeller said after finishing a 6-under-par 68, the best round of the tournament.

The unflappable Lyle, a burly Scot who said he is "playing the best of my career," stopped just short of joining Zoeller's criticism.

"There's a very fine line between a very, very tough course and being ridiculous," he said after compiling a 5-under-par 67 that gave him a two-shot lead over Mark Calcavecchia, who shot a 69.

Lyle, a former British Open champ who scored his second victory of the season last week, reached the tournament halfway point at 138.

That's six shots under par on the Augusta National Golf Club course that has been described as a "cathedral of golf."

Conditions were calm for the second round, compared to the 30 mph winds on Thursday that saw half the field shoot 77 or worse. On this day, controversy was swirling instead of the unfair.

"Calcavecchia instead of the ninth green."

"They're not greens. They're browns," Gary Hallberg said.

But it was Zoeller who took the lead in one of the most outspoken attacks on a major championship since Dave Hill called Hazeltine, the 1970 U.S. Open course "a cow pasture."

"I'm a little surprised," Masters chairman Hord Hardin said. "I would expect it from someone not shooting a 66... I'm sorry he feels that way."

Zoeller's effort, which included seven birdies, lifted him into a tie with Hallberg for third at 142, four off the pace.

Tom Watson, twice a winner of this title and a five-time British Open champion, had a 71 that gave him a 143 total and a tie with Fred Couples, Don Poley, West Germany's Bernhard Langer and Chip Beck.

Couples had a 68, Poley matched par 72 and Beck birdied the 18th for a 70. Langer, a former Masters winner, had five birdies and an eagle in an round of 72 that also included five bogeys and a double bogey.

First round co-leaders Robert Wrenn and PGA champion Larry Nelson drifted back.

Nelson stumbled to a 78 and was at 147. Wrenn, a Masters rookie, shot 75 for 144.

Jack Nicklaus, 48, the only six-time winner of this title, could not overcome an erratic putter. He took 73 strokes and completed 36 holes at 145, 10 shots off the pace.

Australian Greg Norman, a runner-up in the last two Masters, was two strokes higher after a frustrating 73.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, a two-time Masters champion and one of the pre-tournament favorites this year, matched par 72 and was at 145.

U.S. Open champ Scott Simpson, four-time Masters champion Arnold Palmer, Lee Trevino, Ian Woosnam of Wales and Paul Azinger, the 1987 Player of the Year, all failed to qualify for the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Curtis Strange scored a hole in one, only the 11th in Masters history and the first in 16 years in this tournament, with a 7-iron on the 155-yard 12th hole.

But Zoeller's outspoken criticism of the major golf championships in the United States — he made it clear he included the U.S. Open and the PGA as well as the Masters — upstaged the on-course action.

Zoeller, a former winner of both the Masters and the U.S. Open, directed his ire at extremely hard, very fast greens.

"Golf is supposed to be fun, an enjoyable game. But I haven't heard the roar of the Augusta gators."

"It's all majors," Zoeller said.

"It's Johnny Miller's fault," he said.

"Ever since he shot that great score in a U.S. Open on a great ball course, ergs have gotten in the way and everybody thinks they have to grow rough up to the knees and have greens as hard as this table."

Highland sweeps to easy victory in four-way meet

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

4x400. "There will be some qualifiers by time, but those teams usually come out of the Boise Valley."

POCATELLO — It was a hey-loo-over track meet, and Twin Falls Coach Duane Stands got an eyeful.

"We can make some adjustments, but I don't know if we can make that after his defending state Class A-1 champions girls' team lost by 42½ points to Highland Friday in a four-way Gem State Conference get-together on the District 25 oval.

Highland, a team loaded with sophomores and juniors, won 12 of the girls' events and beat the Bruins in all four relays — including Twin Falls' first losses of the season in the 4x400 and the 4x200.

The tally on the boys' side was even more discouraging for Twin Falls, which finished a distant third, 65 points behind Highland and 16 points behind runner Pocatello.

The Bruins took just two events — Bryan Haymore's victory in the 110-meter high hurdles and Nick Brunkow, Steve McLaughlin, Shane Newton and Ron Marshall's win the 4x100-meter relay.

"You've got to be impressed with Highland's depth, especially in the sprints," said Stands. "They're strong in sprints anyway."

The Bruins girls, who lost this meet to Highland by a narrow margin last spring before beating the Rams in three straight competitions en route to the Region III and state titles, will have two weeks to gear up for Highland again. The two teams will meet again in the Boise Relays on April 23, then collide in the GSC meet in Rexburg on April 30. Highland will be calling for the Twin Falls Classic on May 7, then the two teams will compete in the Region III championships on this track on May 13.

"Only one relay team is going to qualify from each region, so that's a big concern for us," said Stands, whose 1987 girls' team used its state victory to a victory in the 800 relay, a second-place finish in the medley and a third-place finish in the
