Security at INEL

Facility continuously prepares for possible terrorist attack

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It isn't exactly Air Wolf, but the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory for the first time has a fleet of two helicopters with infrared night vision and which are capable of mounting machine guns.

INEL's Safeguards and Security division also added an armored vehicle and a tank car.

And if the proposed Special Isotope Separation plant comes to INEL, additional security equipment and staff is likely in the chemical processing area where the plutonium plant would be located.

The changes are in response to a presidential directive to improve security at government facilities which could be the target of an adversary or a hostile group, says Bob Bozian, director of INEL's safeguards and security division.

"We are geared up for terrorism," he says. The changes are in line with security improvements since 1984 at other U.S. Department of Energy facilities, such as the Rocky Flats weapons complex in Colorado and the Savannah River Plant in South Carolina.

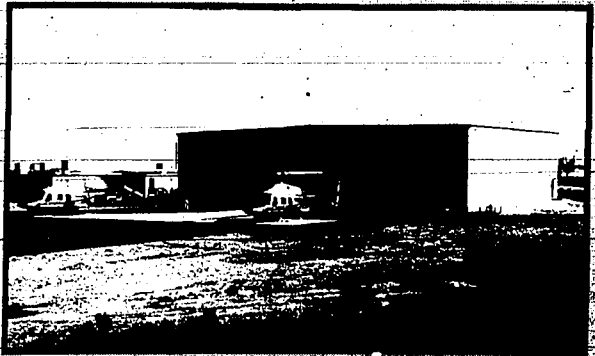

INEL operates nuclear reactors for safety research. It also reprocesses fuels for the Navy's nuclear propulsion systems and is involved in materials testing for Navy reactors.

The site stores the remains of the Three Mile Island nuclear reactor and is holding radioactive waste from the government's nuclear weapons production complex.

INEL is the proposed site for a $600 million plant to refine plutonium for use in nuclear weapons.

INEL's basic response to SIS will be to add more security personnel to the Chemical Processing Plant.

Prisoners riot; hold 3 hostages

The Associated Press

STRINGTOWN, Okla. (AP) — Inmates at an over-crowded state prison held three guards hostage Saturday following a fiery uprising that left one dormitory guard and two others damaged, officials said. One guard and one inmate were injured.

Eight guards were grabbed by 10 prisoners when the disturbance began, but five hostages were released unharmed Saturday and the others were reported in good condition, said officials at the medium-security Mack Alford Correctional Center.

The inmates, believed to be armed with crude knives, threatened to kill their hostages if authorities attempted a rescue, said Jerry Massie, spokesman for the state Department of Corrections. "One inmate is keeping it going," said prison spokeswoman Anita Trummel. "I think the inmates are tired. We have one leader. I think if it wasn't for the leader, things would have been closed up."

The uprising began late Friday after some inmates accused others of theft and threatened retaliation, authorities said. A group of the inmates was being prepared for transfer to a maximum-security prison when they seized hostages.

"They released the (fifth) hostage in return for getting to talk to two specific negotiators," said Massie. He would not identify the negotiators.

Officials said the inmates had "a short list" of specific demands, but refused to disclose what they were. "I think their primary concern is for their safety and their well-being," Massie said. "It's just real non-specific. It's not like a list of 'We want better food or better water.'"

"We're fine. They're feeding us. They're taking care of us," one hostage was quoted as saying when inmates permitted him to make a telephone call.

The 33-year-old red-brick prison was surrounded by Oklahoma Highway Patrol tactical teams in camouflage clothing.

Former Times-News publisher's wife slain

Neighbor finds body of Virginia Westergren

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls Police Saturday night were investigating a brutal homicide involving an elderly Twin Falls woman who was the wife of the former publisher of The Times-News.

Dead is Virginia Westergren, 79, of 460 Buchanan St. She was the wife of former Times-News publisher Al Westergren who was in Portland when a neighbor discovered the body Saturday night.

Authorities were called to the Westergren residence at 460 Buchanan late Saturday night, said Tim Qualls, Twin Falls Director of Public Safety.

Qualls said Saturday night that police were uncertain about the time of death.

News of the slaying crackled over the police radios about 10 p.m.

Police are looking for a suspect, and checking possible links between the crime and a similar incident that occurred Saturday in Billings, Mont.

However, Qualls said he didn't have any reason to believe the incidents were connected.

Police strung a yellow police line between two shade trees in front of the white frame house on the quiet residential street.

Police went in and out of the house late Saturday night, some carried suitcases of investigative equipment.

Qualls said police were doing a complete crime search of the house starting at each door. It was expected to take all of Saturday night.

Much of the activity was concentrated in a room at the north end of the house next to the front door.

Iraqi planes attack terminal; hit 5 ships

The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi warplanes bombarded an offshore terminal in the Strait of Hormuz on Saturday and set fire to five tankers, including two of the world's largest, in a stepped-up drive to destroy Iran's oil lifeline. Up to 54 crewmen were reported missing.

One of the ships, the 235,000-ton Spanish tanker Barcelona, was said to be sinking. Two others, including the Seawise Giant, at 564,739 tons, the largest vessel afloat, were blazing out of control hours after the mid-afternoon raid on Larak island, according to shipping sources.

Gulf-based sources said Iranian salvage tugs were battling flames aboard the ships, some of which were moored together to transfer cargo. Iraq announced the raid five hours later, the 10th attack it has claimed against Iranian oil targets since April 29.

Reports of casualties varied widely.

Oil-based shipping executives said at least 16 crew members were missing, 14 from the Seawise Giant and two from the 457,841-ton British-flag Burmah Endeavour.

In London, Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said that all of the approximately 50 people aboard the Seawise Giant and four from the Barcelona were unaccounted for.

Orwell's '1984' comes to USSR

The Associated Press

MOSCOW (AP) — Parts of a book published in the literary newspaper "Pravda" about a mind-numbing totalitarian society have been published in the Soviet Union. The novel has never before with an introduction saying it has been published in the Soviet viets are ready to judge it for themselves.

However, the excerpts appearing in this week's Literaturny Gazeta, also carry an editor's note suggesting Orwell's fictional society bears no resemblance to the Soviet Union of today.

The page of excerpts was published with an introduction by Sergei Zalygin, editor of Novy Mir magazine. Novy Mir plans to publish the 1949 novel in full later this year. The novel has never before with an introduction saying it has been published in the Soviet viets are ready to judge it for themselves.

The excerpts included the omnipresent warning of Orwell's imaginary regime that "Big Brother is watching you" and the mind-bending pedantic of the Ministry of Truth that "War is Peace, Freedom is Slavery, Ignorance is Strength."

Hearing examines emergency feed programs

By MARK PRATTER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Bureaucrats, politicians and representatives of agriculture interest groups Friday chewed over whether federal emergency livestock feed programs need changing.

Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, thinks the U.S. Department of Agriculture's response during last year's drought was too little, too late. This summer it may be so dry that trees will be churning dogs, Stallings says, borrowing a phrase from Rep. Morris Udall.

Stallings is co-sponsor of a bill to bring existing feed programs under one bureaucratic roof in the hope this will simplify matters.

The Reagan Administration says revamping existing programs could lead to higher spending. The bill also limits the time Washington can null a state's plea for help.

Administration says response time to disasters is getting quicker.

The Idaho Dairyman's Association says the bill is needed, while Idaho Grain Producers blanch at the thought of the legislation.

Grain producers are concerned about the effect on grain markets when the government gives away feed during emergencies. They say they have already been hurt by an influx of Midwest corn in the Idaho market.

Rep. Charles W. Stenholm, chairman of the Subcommittee on Livestock, Dairy and Poultry, and Stallings listened to testimony at the College of Southern Idaho Aspen Building. About 40 people attended.

Stenholm, D-Texas, supports the bill. His South Texas district is cattle country.

"What Richard is trying to do is get more flexibility while at the same time don't go and open up Pandora's Box. We're not talking about spending programs. We are talking about programs to help people in this year's dire need,"

Stenholm says.

Michael N. Duff of the U.S. Department of Agriculture says the administration has no objection to timely responses and streamlining government.

"That has been the goal of this administration from the word get go. But as drafted, this bill has a lot of holes," says Duff.

Former State Sen. Dore Watkins of Idaho Falls ridiculed the hearings as a "political dog and pony show for Dick Stallings."

Watkins is one of two Republicans seeking his party's nomination to oppose Stallings for reelection in November. He claims the House Democrat leadership is trying to make Stallings look sympathetic to agriculture interests.

Meanwhile, Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, initially supported the bill and then reversed his stance for budgetary reasons.

State Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, supports the bill. The rancher-politician says Fish Creek Reservoir is even drier than last year. George Washington or any body else could throw a silver dollar across it, he says.

The current USDA system is so confusing, cumbersome and slow to action," says Dick Rush, state agriculture director.

Currently, the U.S. Department of Agriculture pays little attention to assistance requests from county and state Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service requests, he says.

And this is true even when Congress pushes USDA, Rush says.

"The bill clearly explains the benefits available, how to apply and mandates a timely response," he says.

Gov. Cecil Andrus also supports the bill.

Vicki Patterson, representing the state's dairymen, backs efforts to consolidate feed help programs under one agency.

But the dairymen are against the section of the bill that would eliminate the role of the local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation in determining an emergency.

Patterson says having the governor seek an emergency declaration from USDA adds a step that slows the process.

The emergency assistance programs aren't needed because cattle prices are good and ranchers have a lot of experience weathering disasters, says Tom Hovenden, former Secretary-Manager of the Idaho Cattle Feeders Association.

If anything, the government should cut letting hard-pressed ranchers sell their cattle without a tax penalty, provided they agree to buy back within two years, he says.

Hovenden says the assistance programs merely move the problem from one state to another.

The government's hay purchases and hay transportation help to farmers in Wisconsin, Nevada and Montana diverted Idaho hay out-of-state. This hurt the Idaho dairy and beef producers by driving up Idaho hay prices.

The bill would change who determines an emergency such as an insect infestation or a drought.

Now the county Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee takes requests for two of the feed help programs.

But the bill would leave the request to the governor on the advice of a new special state emergency board.

The bill would require a 30 percent loss in feed before a farmer or rancher is eligible for help.

Other provisions allow the Commodity Credit Corporation to donate feed to financially strapped farmers who can't buy feed at market prices.

Farmers could be reimbursed up to 50 percent of feed costs for maintaining livestock during the emergency.

Financial help in transporting hay and moving livestock to grazing areas are also features of the bill.

The coiling of hay transportation help is $50 per ton and livestock transportation aid is limited to $24 per animal.

The bill also provides for civil and criminal penalties against farmers and ranchers who make unauthorized use of the feed.

Lincoln County has 25 people signed up for emergency feed assistance, says Judy Black, ASCS director there. If the drought worsens, there may be others.

Local rancher Gerald Tews sees too many layers of government bureaucracy in the emergency feed programs. This has been going on in both Democrat and Republican administrations since 1948, Tews says.

Consolidating the assistance programs is a good idea, he says. The bill says farmers and ranchers would be eligible for help when they have lost 30 percent of their feed. Tews thinks this figure is too low and prefers 40 percent.

There's no need for people to take advantage. When they are a little below normal, they are not entitled to go to the taxpayer and say I have got a problem," he says.

Stenholm's committee will take written testimony until May 23. Persons interested in giving written testimony or obtaining a copy of the bill should contact Charles Barnes at Stallings-Twin Falls office, 843 Falls Ave. 734-6329.

area where SIS will be located, says Eastman.

Both fiscal 1986 and 1988, INEL spending for security improvements totaled $6,157,000, according to INEL.

Here are some of the highlights of the security audit.

Two Bell 202 twin-turbine helicopters were added in late 1984 at a cost of $1.5 million each.

The security force's weapons were improved in 1985 and 1986 from pistols to semi-automatic weapons.

INEL made the guard stations more impregnable to attack in 1986 and 1987.

Next fiscal year, INEL will spend $2,843,000 for a number of security improvements, including the construction of a new security headquarters building.

Another $1 million in security spending is set for the following year. Since 1983, INEL's security force has grown from 90 to a little more than 300 persons.

Guards now carry 13-shot semi-automatic pistols now instead of six-shot revolvers and snipers have been added to a response team that backs up the security force.

The two helicopters are a money-saver, says Boston, because they allow the response team to quickly go at any location on the 890-square mile site.

The two helicopters, INEL does not need to have a response team at each critical location, he says.

The infrared equipment which detects heat sources enables the security force to spot intruders on the ground when visibility is poor.

INEL tested the system during training exercises. The system can distinguish between a deer, an antelope or a person, says Boston.

M-60 machine guns have been purchased and can be mounted on the choppers, but the helicopters were not intended to be gunships.

"It's a lot better than the response teams," says Boston, "the response team's a bullet-proof carrier built on a truck frame. INEL can mount an M-60 machine gun on its turret."

INEL says it is making improvements to security facilities because the increased security forces stretches existing facilities beyond capacity.

"When you increase the sophistication and length of training, you have to have more space to train," says Boston.

INEL will improve its weapons range for security training by making changes in lighting, communications and other areas of the range. Boston says groundbreaking on this work will begin in a month or so.

The new security headquarters building will include emergency power generators when the site loses electricity.

The building will allow the security force to consolidate activities now at several locations.

INEL says Day & Zimmerman of Philadelphia $15 million per year for security.

Effective October 1 the company will replace American Protective Services of Oakland, Calif., the security contractor for the last eight years.

APF protested Day & Zimmerman's selection, asking a new subcontract subsidiary was fined in federal court for falsifying guard training records at the Limerick nuclear power plant near Philadelphia, The Associated Press has reported.

Day & Zimmerman spokeswoman Karen Lautzheiser said the company brought the fine to INEL's attention. INEL says it knew about the fine before it made its selection.

Security improvements at the Energy Department's Rocky Flats nuclear weapons complex including adding more and better weapons.

"A sniper team has been on site for quite a while but now we have it on all shifts," says Pat Etchart, a spokesman for Rockwell, the prime contractor at Rocky Flats.

Etchart says the security improvements from 1984 to 1988 run in the millions of dollars. He declined to be more specific.

Rocky Flats doesn't have helicopters, but has had armored personnel carriers for some time.

Other changes include erecting razor wire fencing and helicopter barriers.

Like INEL, the Savannah River facility added two security helicopters with night vision and capable of mounting machine guns.

Since 1984 there has been a significant improvement in security at the facility that makes tritium and plutonium for nuclear weapons, says Brock Grant, Savannah River spokesman.

Savannah River spent $52.5 million on an alarm system at its Chemical Separation Plant. Like INEL, it made guard stations more impregnable to attack.

Another $31 million went towards installation of protection system at its four nuclear reactors.

Savannah River added dogs capable of detecting explosive and drugs.

Another similarity to INEL is a change in security contractors.

Dupont, the prime contractor, used to provide Savannah River's security.

Craft says that force "matured" and the Energy Department saw a change in security contractors.

Savannah River chose Wackenhut Protective Services Inc. of Coral Gables, Fla. as the security contractor.

Noriega prepares to stay indefinitely

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Despite months of U.S. sanctions and a crumbling economy, Gen. Manuel Noriega is hardening his position and preparing for months or possibly years of confrontation with the United States.

A confident Noriega on Friday sallied into the provinces, where he was cheered by peasants and hailed by small-town officials. Accompanied by several colonels in a show of military unity, Panama's de facto leader accused in the United States of drug trafficking, dismissed prospects for a negotiated settlement with the United States.

Noriega's comments to journalists indicated he considers himself and Panama a test case of historical proportions and that he determined to rise to the occasion and challenge U.S. might.

"Everything fell apart," he said in La Managua, 90 miles west of the capital, when asked about recent U.S. Panamanian talks aimed at resolving Panama's political crisis over Noriega's leadership.

On Wednesday, U.S. media reported that a Washington-Noriega deal was nearly complete. They said Noriega would step down.

Report: U.S. neglects Latin problems

MIAMI (AP) — Cocaine and communism have dominated U.S. relations with Latin America this decade, with the result that economic and political problems are being neglected, experts warn in an 84-page report issued here.

"Miami Report II" was prepared by bankers, oil executives, clergy and other Miami-area leaders. Moss, former U.S. ambassador to Panama, it follows up on the group's first report in 1984, which accurately forecast a gradually worsening economic crisis in Latin America.

"Without a solution, there will be severe erosion of fragile democracy in Latin America," Moss said in an interview Friday. He is now dean of the University of Miami Graduate School of International Studies. "You can't run a democracy when the economy is going to hell," he said.

Since the early 1980s, money has steadily flowed out of Latin America to the United States, depriving the underdeveloped nations of desperately needed capital, says the study, which was released Friday. By the end of 1987, Latin America was staggering under a debt burden of $460 billion.

Argentina's elected President Raul Alfonsin, who has had to put down an attempted military coup, frequently warns the United States that his region's economic troubles threaten its political stability.

But U.S. policy has ignored the deeper problems, concentrating instead on battling communism in Central America, Moss said.

There has been almost an obsession with Nicaragua to the exclusion of everything else," Moss said. "In the absolute worst case, we could send troops into Nicaragua — but we can't send them into every country in Latin America."

Quickly Improves With New 'E-Pill'

An amazing new "super-charged" vitamin E-Pill has recently been developed that reportedly "quickly increases and rejuvenates sexual drives and potency for both men and women of all ages. It also makes them feel healthier and more youthful." It is now available to the American public.

The new high potency E-Pill not only seems to increase sexual ability of both sexes but also "actually picks up" sexual interest and stimulates a persons desires," according to a spokesman for the manufacturer.

ALSO IMPROVES GENERAL HEALTH. This new, easy-to-take E-Pill contains newly formulated, highly concentrated vitamin E. It tends to quickly build-up and strengthen the "natural" physiological processes of the body that are normally not basically responsible for its potency, youthfulness, health and long life.

HELPS 4 OUT OF 5 PEOPLE. E-Pill gives quick and effective results to as high as 4 out of 5 people (80%) who have used it.

NOW AVAILABLE. The use of this high potency (one of the best) E-Pills is perfectly safe, and are now available without a prescription from the manufacturer by mail order only. To get your supply, send $16.95 for a 30 day supply, or $26.95 for a 60 day supply, or $37.50 for a 90 day supply, cash, check or M.O. to: E-Pill, Dent. H-7, P.O. # Trial may hinge on Justice Department

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department will have the final word on whether to disclose classified information needed in the prosecution of the Iran-contra conspiracy case, independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh has concluded.

Walsh said he has concluded that he "must be deferential to the executive branch's determination" of what can be made public and what must remain secret in the course of Walsh's efforts to bring former White House aide Oliver L. North and his three co-defendants to trial.

The determination was made with obvious reluctance in a 10-page memo submitted to U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard A. Gesell Friday. It means that the Reagan administration could hypothetically force dismissal of the indictment by refusing to permit disclosure of classified information that the court determines must be made public for the sake of a fair trial.

Gesell raised the question last week at a pretrial hearing on problems posed by the 300,000 classified documents that Walsh and his investigators compiled during their 15-month investigation.

Retired Marine lieutenant colonel North and his codefendants, former national security adviser John M. Poindexter, retired Air Force major general Richard V. Secord and Secord's business partner, Albert Hakim, have been accused of conspiring to defraud the government of millions of dollars in profits from the Reagan administration's secret arms sales to Iran and then to cover up their illegal activities.

The four men and their lawyers — with Hakim and Secord complaining of being relegated to second-class status — have started examining the secret documents in a specially vaulted suite on Connecticut Avenue here, but declassification of the records deemed relevant for trial has yet to begin.

At last week's hearing, Gesell said the first thing he wanted to know was "who is the person for purposes of this case that is going to fill the role of the attorney-general in determining whether or not a document can be released."

Walsh said then, and again Friday that he felt the legal authority had been delegated to him, both under the independent counsel act and under the backup appointment Meese gave Walsh last year to sustain his investigation in case the act should be held unconstitutional.

The Classified Information Procedures Act, a law Congress passed in 1980 to govern the disclosure of classified information needed for criminal trials, suggests otherwise. It gives the attorney general the authority to object to disclosures that would cause "identifiable damage to the national security" even if the court disagreed. It also says that the authority "may be exercised" by the deputy attorney general or an assistant attorney general but "may not be delegated to any other official."

Walsh contended that the independent counsel law, which Congress has reenacted twice since 1980, "unambiguously transfers" that authority to him by giving him all the investigative and prosecutorial powers of the attorney general except for one point: authorization of wiretaps.

But having said that, Walsh added that the 1982 executive order governing classified information "vests exclusive authority to declassify previously classified information" in the officials of the executive agency that originated the information.

Crash leaves stock business reeling

NEW YORK (AP) — Lawrence Weiss was about to book an order for 100 shares of Chrysler Corp. and 100 shares of Black & Decker Corp. this past Wednesday when his customer happened to ask how the market was doing.

Weiss mentioned that the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 35 points — and the customer promptly canceled his order.

"This is the kind of experience that drives bankers crazy. Retail business in stocks is off 30 percent or more on Wall Street because the October crash and the subsequent gyrations have shaken the confidence of individual investors."

"They're frightened," said Weiss, president of Odd Lot Securities Ltd., who said his own discount brokerage's business is off 50 percent.

For many Americans, "Wall Street is just another roll of the dice, especially in light of the 508-point drop in the Dow Jones industrials on Oct. 19. That came across in a sampling of opinion around the country this past week."

"I think it depends on your personality more than anything else. Some people like to gamble," said Thomas H. Egan, traffic and purchasing manager for General Lutz & Chemical Corp. in Cambridge, Mass.

"It's a little bit like the race track. ... Influence controls it as much as anything," said Marshall Webb, who manages the tool and die shop at Lacy Tool Co. in Novi, Mich.

"I favor other investments that are more dependent on my own ability to judge investment potential, like real estate," said Gary Studdard, general manager of John B. LaGarde, a concrete company in Anniston, Ala.

Small investors accounted for only 23 percent of shares traded on the New York Stock Exchange in January and February, down from 29 percent just before the crash, according to the Securities Industry Association.

Many investors are turning to safer havens such as certificates of deposit and Treasury bonds, whose value is up sharply since the crash in spite of some recent weakness.

"People are starting to invest based on their nocturnal habits. Will this investment keep me staring at the ceiling at night?" said Philip Waxelbaum, national sales manager for Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

Computerized program trading has emerged as a villain in the public's mind, and even brokerage firms that say program trading is not to blame for upsetting the markets are curbing the practice anyway.

This past week five major brokerage houses said they would stop conducting a form of program trading known as index arbitrage for their own accounts. They were Bear, Stearns & Co., Morgan Stanley & Co., Salomon Brothers Inc., PaineWebber Inc. and Kidder Peabody Inc.

Merrill Lynch & Co., among others, had curbed the practice earlier, to the relief of many of its brokers.

"I'm frankly thankful. It took me off the hook with clients," said Gene Fosing, a broker in the Rochester, N.Y., office of Merrill Lynch.

Scott Bowles, a 78-year-old retiree from Procter & Gamble Co. who lives in Wyoming, Ohio, said he is keeping half his net worth in stocks even though "like everybody, I got whacked on Meltdown Monday."

But he said his confidence is being sapped by inexplicable moves in the market. "The standard perceptions of value are way the hell off. It's unnerving."

Alice Tarrilo, a secretary in Watsonville, Calif., said she was ready to buy stock in H&R Block Inc. in January but was worried the market had not stabilized. She is glad she held off. After a brief run-up, the stock is off about $4 from its January level.

"I think the stock market boom is over," she said.

To some Americans, trouble in the stock market is part of a broader crisis.

But there are still optimists in places such as Spanish Fork, Utah. Vaughn Erickson said program trading and the possibility of a bear market do not greatly concern him because he has more than 20 years before retirement and is holding for the long term.

Gay activists heckle Dukakis

The Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis was heckled Saturday by gay political activists over his stand on their rights to be foster parents, while Republican George Bush fended off a corporate executive's criticism of Reagan administration policies on taxes and trade.

Both parties' presidential front-runners were spending the weekend campaigning in the West, where the bulk of the final round of primaries will be held in the next two weeks.

Dukakis, speaking to several dozen homosexual activists at a political action committee meeting in Los Angeles, promised, "You're going to be deeply involved in what we do."

But the Massachusetts governor was challenged over a policy in his state giving low priority to homosexual couples who want to be foster parents.

Dukakis said he favored the Massachusetts policy "because I think it's best, all things being equal, for a child to grow up in a household with a mother and father and other children."

His defense of that policy was met with some hisses from the crowd and occasional shouts of protest. One man shouted, "Bigot!" and another yelled, "You're anti-gay. Why don't you admit it?"

Dukakis later shrugged off the hostile reception, saying, "It was lively. That's what democracy is all about."

His aides, nevertheless, were pleased with the way the meeting went. "I thought it was very good, very open," said Alice Travis, national political coordinator for the campaign.

Meanwhile, Bush toured an Intel microchip plant in Oregon, where the company's board chairman, Robert Noyce, told the vice president of a need for higher taxes and for President Reagan to sign the trade bill.

"I don't think that there is any chance of a balanced budget without new taxes," said Noyce.

Reagan on Saturday repeated his vow to veto a trade bill passed by Congress because of a provision requiring large companies to notify employees in advance of plant closings.

"The plant-closing aspect of the trade bill does not seem onerous to us," Noyce said. "It is no less than we would do in any case."

Bush said he was not swayed by Noyce's arguments.

The vice president also sought to take the high ground on the issue of the environment, saying, "For too long we have given away the playing field to the Democrats on the environment. I want to make the environment a Republican issue."

Kiss-and-tells are profitable

NEW YORK (AP) — Writing about your ex-boss, who also happens to be the president of the United States, can be profitable.

A sampling of the crop of books on President Reagan by former administration officials shows that some of the authors have done quite well.

There was a first printing of 250,000 copies for Donald T. Regan's "For the Record: From Wall Street to Washington," to be published by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich on May 23. There's a second printing of 76,000, and the former White House chief of staff was given a $1 million advance. Regan says he is donating the advance and the proceeds of the book to charity.

Harper & Row spent a reported $2.4 million in 1986 for David Stockman's "The Triumph of Politics: Why the Reagan Revolution Failed." The investment seems to have paid off for both the publisher and the former director of the Office of Management and Budget with 325,000 books in print.

"Revolution," a book written by Martin Anderson, former assistant to the president on policy development, to be published on May 18, has a first printing from Harcourt of 25,000.

Charles Scribner's Sons published "Speaking Out" earlier this year by Larry Speakes, Reagan's former spokesman. The book had a first printing of 100,000 copies, and Speakes and co-author Robert Pack received a six-figure advance.

Our nod is to Wilkes for Twin school post

Twin Falls School Board elections do not usually generate much interest or debate, but in the case of the Zone 1 election held Tuesday, we think the voters should take a close look at both candidates.

The election matches Lenore McNeese, the former wife of former board member Jack McNeese, against Lorrie Wilkes, director of nursing at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. The two candidates are profiled today on page B1.

Both candidates offer perspective, common sense and good judgment. Both are good listeners. Both have children in the school system.

Either, in our view, would be a worthy successor to retiring board member Gary Fay, who has competently helped steer the board through the shoals of teacher negotiations and a controversial change of superintendents.

But our nod goes to Wilkes, who we think would bring new and fresh perspectives on Twin Falls educational needs, considerable management skills and a high level of energy and enthusiasm to the post.

School boards, in many ways, are the front line of American education. They are pulled by the competing needs of maintaining a conservative budget burden on taxpayers while improving school physical facilities, paying competitive salaries to staff and improving student performance.

They must be both cautious and innovative. They must not spend more than the community can afford, yet they must lead the community to demand the very best in performance from students, parents and teachers. In short, they must have vision.

We think Wilkes is well suited for these multiple tasks. As a parent of a high school student, she is familiar with the current curriculum and how much it is doing right. But she identifies important areas for improvement.

As a supervisor of staff, she has the management skills to work within a budget, while communicating with employees to increase their involvement. That is the essence of modern management.

She is experienced in both public health and pediatrics, two fields on which she would draw as a board member. And as someone who attended school elsewhere herself, both in secondary school and college, she would bring needed outside experience to the post.

McNeese is well known in the Twin Falls community and as the mother of four former Twin Falls students, would bring considerable local perspective to the position.

She has a sense of the district's overall strengths and weaknesses. "The whole world is not going to stop," she says, "while Idaho is trying to catch up."

But on balance, we think Lorrie Wilkes would provide the stronger leadership. We endorse her candidacy for the Zone 1 seat on the Twin Falls School Board.

Nancy Reagan deserves a lot better

WASHINGTON - Nancy Reagan always seems to get a bum rap in the "little-tale" book business. She deserves a hell of a lot better. For when we elected her remarkable husband to this job of president, she was - and surely is - "part of the deal." She took on a tough job that has no definitions but many demands. She has fulfilled her obligations and duties to her country and to her husband with great grace, class and distinction.

The bottom line of the latest catty little revelation is that she is protective of her husband, who just happens to be the president. She is accused of unquestioned devotion and loyalty to Ronald Reagan. Egnod, what will people think? It reminds me of, and strengthens the sagacity of, the old saw that "if you want to have a friend in Washington, buy a dog."

But the issue is not now "Don Regan's book." It is apparently Nancy Reagan's activities. How ironic to see two fine men whom I have known - Larry Speakes and Don Regan - bring themselves down to a lesser level by spewing out these rather vengeful portrayals. They utter leaves their personalities as the bluster leaves their pens.

Can we all remember well the early days of the Reagan presidency? In just a few short months, Nancy Reagan came under heavy fire for being "involved" in the vital issues of the day. "She doesn't take advantage of her unique position," the naysayers moaned and knurled their knuckles. Now she is being portrayed as some sort of flaky, all-powerful oracle. What guff!

I think one of the things that speaks people about Ron and Nancy Reagan is that they have a great thing going. It is called a love affair - and it has spanned 36 years and counting. They hold hands, they smooch, they share their lives and experiences, they wholly support each other, er, they laugh, they giggle, and all that pretty much threatens people who don't understand it or who don't like it.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson

All the chatter around the water cooler about Nancy Reagan is a distraction from the person who is really at the center of the controversy, Don Regan. Let's put his departure from the White House in full perspective and get things back in focus. Nancy Reagan didn't drive Don Regan out. There were a lot of people lined up in the batter's box to do just that. Many weeks passed between the time the Iran-Contra story became page-one news and Donald Regan's hurried and hurried departure from the White House. During those weeks I was honored to participate in any number of meetings with the president where he was counseled - and, yes, even directed - to dismiss his chief of staff. The congressional press crew and galleries worked overtime in those days to accommodate the calls for Regan's resignation and to provide the long knives to lop off his head.

In that time period, I also had several fine conversations with Nancy Reagan, who was, as always, alert, courteous and protective of her husband. We talked about the various views of the situation. We shared some personal observations. The person I talked to then and always have - was an informed, loving and concerned wife. She wanted to hear "all sides." She came to her own firm conclusions about her husband's best interests.

I recall with amusement some observers being "surprised" to learn that Harry Truman had consulted his steady wife, Bess, before deciding to drop the atomic bomb. That revelation couldn't surprise anyone one who had ever seen a good marriage at work. Jimmy and Rosalyn Carter wrote an entire book about the way they tried to handle the rigors and demands of the presidency as husband and wife. Only a damn fool would suggest that the wife of the president of the United States has no role whatever in the governing of our country. It might not read that way in the civics texts or statute books, but that's the way it is in the book of real life.

I have a very fine staff of more than 25 thoughtful, hard-working and intelligent folks. They are there to assist me in my tasks and responsibilities. But there is really only one dazzling person in my life who keeps me "centered" - who helps me keep it all "together." That person is my wife of nearly 33 years. She is part of my inner gyroscope, adds the balance and leaves to my life - in or out of the world of politics.

Nancy and Ronald Reagan, too, have found their own way to deal with the political world. They know where to turn when you don't know where to turn. They have deep reservoirs of faith in a higher being, in themselves and in others. Politics in itself as a singular pursuit is a rather barbaric quest. You often have to be leavened in life by a spouse and love and art and music and nature and faith and friends and civility and trust. The Reagans have that. They have it with each other. For them, his success is her success. Nancy's accomplishments and strengths are part of the president's triumphs and character too.

In this goldfish bowl of Washington (and it's odd how many sharks can get into a goldfish bowl) Nancy Reagan has put her own distinctive and unique trademark on the role of First Lady. She tackled the drug and alcohol abuse issue before it was ever page-one news. In fact,

Letters/ George Bush, seat belts draw comment

Democracy and seat belts

Have been following the diatribe in the "Letters" column on the insistent, indisputable dogma expounded on the seat belt issue. Both positive and negative factions seem properly hostile, aggressive, insistent and insensitive in talking the other into what is "right," and how wisely they will suffer if they do not come around to the other way of thinking.

You cannot deny the facts: It is the law; we live in a democracy; statistically, you do run a higher risk of being injured if you don't fasten your seat belt - better than 80 percent of our citizens in Idaho still choose not to use one.

Now what logical deductions could be made from those four statements? You may select whichever two, (three or five) meet with your approval.

1. Over 80 percent of the people of Idaho are stupid?

2. About 80 percent of Idaho's citizens feel that this is a choice best for each individual to decide for themselves.

3. Perhaps it is foolish to pass laws and legislate, attempting to protect us against everything and anything that might harm us. Is it not conceivable that each of us might have enough common sense and judgment to make the little "everyday" decisions that affect our lives without superfluous regulations and unnecessary governmental control?

4. About 80 percent caught the Level Knave syndrome when he was in Idaho, and wish to emulate his during and cheat death by choosing to ignore the dreaded mandatory seat belt law.

5. Democracy - (Webster) Government of the people: Rule of the majority. Would this not then indicate that the law should conform to the will of the majority; even though it might not be as popular with law enforcement and safety oriented groups; that common, ordinary people dare think they are capable of making decisions on their own, without the assistance, divine wisdom and guidance of the omniscient and omnipotent consumer protection groups who ordain what it is that we will do, and how it will be done?

7. Eighty percent does not constitute a majority.

8. Twenty percent is a majority, if it approves of the regulation or law.

9. Could his mother 30 or 40, but I suppose you are the judge by now. Now you can make up a few of your own, regardless of which side of the question makes most sense to you. After all, we do live in a Democracy! Be sure and mail it to The Times-News through, we could all use a few more pages on seat belts.

Bush visit excluded many

The campaign swing to Boise and Twin Falls by Vice President Bush last week was truly remarkable. It has already been forgotten. There was one clear result - George Bush is not going to be the next president of the United States.

He came not as a vice president, but as the Republican candidate for office and did not cause a mild ripple in any pond.

The vice president's first stop in Twin Falls was at a very private breakfast at the Coiner ranch. "Hand chosen" guests were allowed to attend by invitation.

Common farmers were stopped at the gate, but they were allowed to wave and cheer. Only the "hand chosen" few paid attention to his campaign stop.

The "meeting" at the Coiner ranch certainly was typical of the quality of his campaign. The stop-over was designed to portray George Bush as a decisive leader, learning about Idaho's agricultural problems.

To learn about irrigated agriculture the vice president did, as teachers, 30 "hand chosen" guests who did not come close to representing Idaho agriculture and especially the Idaho family farm.

This fancy crowd better represented the television show "The Life Style of the Rich and Famous." That crowd is certainly more comfortable gambling on cattle futures or other commodity futures than struggling to keep the family farm going and keeping the tractor from being repossessed.

The news photos coming out of the meeting were as phony as the meeting with the "hand chosen" crowd. The "farmers" were carefully arranged on hay bales in a semi-circle so that the vice president could be pictured as a leader as he lectured and waved his arms to the small group. One only hopes that some Idaho photographer did not stage that sorry display.

In addition, putting George Bush on a carefully dusted hale of hay does not change the image of George Bush.

Poor George came to Twin Falls with his wing image and he left Twin Falls with exactly the same image. A badly staged visit in the rich and famous farm did not make Vice President Bush a man appearing more comfortable with the family farmer.

In another campaign stop, George Bush tried to look like a truck driver and that also was an image disaster. The Twin Falls effort to look comfortable with farmers was worse. For Vice President Bush creating a non-wing image cannot be created by badly managed and completely controlled photo sessions.

Please attend hearing

A hearing will be held on Monday, May 16, at 7:30 p.m. in the district courtroom at the Jerome County Courthouse. All interested persons are invited to attend and shall have an opportunity to be heard.

On June 29, 1987, the Planning and Zoning Commission denied Mr. Vanderham a special use permit, but at a later meeting the commissioners issued a special use permit anyway. The dairy is located 3 miles west and 1 mile south of Jerome.

The residents adjacent to this dairy "do" want to live in Jerome County. However, we want them to abide by the Jerome County Zoning Ordinances (JCZO) and to manage and control them as to not destroy our beautiful environment and underground water.

About one year ago, many residents became concerned this dairy may not be able to be constructed on the available site chosen, and stay within the JCZO. Since that time an appeal has been denied by the County Commissioners. Measurements have been taken and it seems the residents were correct. There is not enough land to construct structures within the JCZO. This has also been a main concern there will be domestic well water contamination due to too many dairies already established in this area with somewhat poor management of wastes. Consequently, for a period of time, two wells did cause illness.

When the land in question has 1) Cavers with nothing water status, 2) four out of 3 porous rock (4) sand (5) rock and land shifting (6) and sink holes - in several areas of this one mile square - which causes irrigation water to occasionally disappear, it is naturally a concern. When also in one square mile there are three large dairies and two small ones and especially so because over 70 residents are in this square mile area.

It is a concern of the area residents that JCZO are not receiving proper management by our elected officials.

The Leisure Acres sub-division was approved with a special use permit issued in 1978. In 1984 the JCZO were made law to protect existing homes, businesses and etc. (Surprisingly our County Commissioner, Mr. Montgomery, was involved in the drawing up of these ordinances, yet he overruled Jerome County Planning and Zoning Commission's decision and issued Vanderham a special use permit.

Our canal, when dry and caked with manure on the rocks, bottom and etc. This should tell us something. Last summer, residences in the area counted 76-100 flies in the fourteen days. This is before the Vanderham Dairy Dregs this took like good management or control?

Mr. Vanderham has known from the very first Planning and Zoning meeting there was strong, valid opposition to his dairy location. Not to his dairy just the infeasibility of the location. Much publicity has since been and exists a letter of peril, advising Mr. Vanderham before he began to build, was seen and sent to Mr. Vanderham.

He chose to continue with the full knowledge he was at risk. Even as he was advised his special use permit maybe pulled, he excelerated construction. There has been pressure put on employers of residents in opposition to the dairy.

Irrigation water was to be released on April 1st, but it was blocked for several residents because Mr. Vanderham's lagoons was over 11. Anxious residents finally sent a letter to North Side Canal March 18, and only then did Mr. Vanderham put pipe in so they had access to their water.

Even now as he knows he is under court order not to operate or place cove on the property until the special use permit is removed, he continues.

Any citizens concerned with this permit desire is that Vanderham be in accordance with the JCZO and that our political managers protect both the old and the new residents of our beautiful county. It is our resident right!

Keep seat-belt issue alive

Are we going to let the seat belt "law" issue just die out? Is it like most everything else we get up in arms over and then let it go? Are we just talk and no action? Could that be one reason why we are being shackled with so many laws, licenses and taxes? Just sit back and gripe and watch our freedoms go down the drain?

Where do we start? I really do not know. Perhaps a petition - have it signed. If you can talk to a legislator, maybe you can find out how to have a law removed. I have not been able to.

I feel it is a time in our lives, for our country, for us to take more interest in our own little towns, counties and state. We do not have much choice as to national decisions. We can work a little harder for our own communities.

There is an election for Gooding County Commissioners the 24th of May. There is a school board election on Tuesday, May 17, District No. 4 and District No. 2, Wendell, at the gym from noon to 8 p.m. How many of us will vote?

And let's not give up on the mandatory seat belt law.

Soviet space plans are clearer

WASHINGTON - Thanks to increasing openness in Moscow, more detailed information is available than ever before about the Soviet space blueprint through the year 2,000.

Continuing a determined but cautious approach - driven by five-year plans but constrained by shortcomings in technology, money, work incentives and other areas - the U.S.S.R. is planning some missions involving advanced technology and greater risk. But in some categories, they are just beginning to catch up to the U.S. program of the early 1970s.

Their space-science program will place new emphasis on Mars exploration and astronomy, including missions that fill gaps in the U.S. program.

Their astronomy-astrophysics program is "not in the same league," in terms of technological sophistication and scope, with what the United States hopes to do, according to Lennard Fiske, NASA's space science chief. It reflects Sogdeev's effort to create a more balanced program and to find his own scientific niches.

Some of the Soviets' stated plans, according to Pike and others, appear to be a thinly disguised strategy to "piggyback" on similar missions planned in the West by drawing up plans they never mean to carry out.

For example, "the (Soviet) Corona mission to Saturn seems to be a bid for participation in" the Cassini mission planned jointly by the U.S. and Europe, he said.

In their top-priority manned program, the Soviets will expand the space station complex Mir with a life-sciences lab and at least two other modules. They'll try for crew stays of a year. Their strength here will lie in accumulation of experience, rather than in technology or scientific capabilities. The Mir project cannot compare to the planned U.S. space station. At its largest, Mir will weigh only slightly more than the 100-ton U.S. Skylab, which orbited the Earth for six years, but died under service for lack of launch vehicles to deliver it.

The Soviets will call on a versatile and growing inventory of launch vehicles, including their own superbooster (Energiya), their own shuttle (which could be launched in the next few months), and eventually a smaller space plane. Energiya is able to lift up to 100 tons into orbit-four times the U.S. shuttle's payload.

The U.S. had such a booster in the defunct Apollo moon program - the Saturn V - but it is likely to take a decade before this country weighs in with another. Meanwhile, a recent Defense Department assessment predicts that the Soviets will double their annual payload weight-to-orbit capacity during the next five years, and quadruple it within 15.

The ultimate goal is to land cosmonauts on Mars. Development is likely to take at least 20 years. The industry newsletter Space Station News reported recently that Soviet representatives had told a conference of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics in Los Angeles that they have made a preliminary design for a manned Mars craft.

member of VMI and took orders from Bobby Lee who drove the damned Yankee Xmas around the beautiful valley of the Shenandoah. And the wacko who could knock a white cowhide sphere out of danger near any baseball park in the world.

Now we are down to Michael a pretty boy with about as much fuzz on his face as a freestone peach, and a California ranch bigger than the one old Ronnie had hidden in the brush.

Last but not least we come to the mysterious Jesse, and I'll be blessed if I can make heads or tails of the man cause he talks a heap but never says a thing.

A long time ago my grandpa had a place over east, just a totable place all fenced in cause grandpas didn't much care for folks' collin and a settin'; said he didn't put much store in any man whose hut size was smaller than a six.

Anyway, he put a four strand "bob" wire gate across the drive and bought a mean old ram from a Paiute Indian and ensconced the old devil on a hillock out back of the burn. Now this old ram whom grandpa named Gen'l Pickett (cause the old fool would charge anybody) wouldn't let anyone crawl through that gate, why there usta be more pieces of acer sucker a hanging from that gate than from the fittin' room of Finklestein's haberdashery in Kansas City.

The one exception to all this was Mr. Schweitzer the local Raleigh man, seems this gentleman always carried spearmint gum in his pockets for the youngins and Gen'l Pickett was mighty fond of spearmint and practically led the man all the way to the house.

Moral of the story, well, I think it's time for Jesse to empty his pockets. I'd like to know if I'm a chews or a gummie.

Lucille Ball recovering in hospital

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ailing funny lady Lucille Ball is feeling better, but will have to stay in Cedars-Sinai Medical Center at least until Monday, a hospital spokeswoman said Saturday.
 Spokeswoman Paula Correia said doctors decided late Friday they wanted the comedian to stay for tests and observation.
 "Everything seems to be OK, but they just want to be sure," Ms. Correia said.
 Miss Ball, 76, the zany redhead of television's "I Love Lucy," became ill at home Wednesday and checked herself in.
 Hospital spokesman Ron Wise said Friday that "although" doctors were still unable to diagnose the cause of Miss Ball's illness, she apparently does not have cardiac trouble, as originally feared.

his share in a medical clinic and is moving in June to study psychiatry at the University of New Mexico.
 Cannell said his involvement in education helped lead to his decision to switch from general medicine to adolescent psychiatry.
 "I've become convinced that many of the problems of adolescents can be blamed on the school system," Cannell said. "Not all of them, but a good part, go back to the message of failure that the school systems give."

Wednesday, said his longtime companion, poet and short-story writer Tess Gallagher. The couple lives near here.

Bluegrass musician gets help with song title
 NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Bluegrass pioneer Bill Monroe recorded his latest album in coal country, but it took another country star's father to come up with a name for one of the tracks.
 When he heard it, Hobert Skaggs dubbed the upbeat instrumental "Stone Coal." It appears on Monroe's new LP, "Southern Flavor."

"I put that together up in the eastern part of Kentucky," Monroe, 75, said. "Ricky Skaggs and his father were there and his father came up with that name, 'Stone Coal.'"
 Monroe, "the father of bluegrass music," has been making records since the 1930s.

Motley Crue becomes target of teens' lawsuit

ATHENS, Ala. (AP) — A $1.3 million suit by two teen-agers who claim they were hurt by flying dry ice during a concert by the heavy metal rock band Motley Crue is expected to go to a jury Monday.

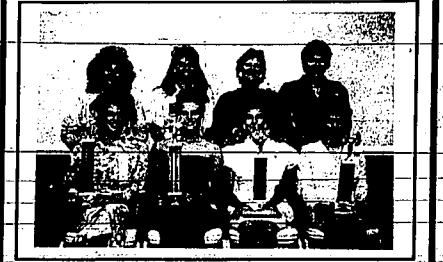

Special effects expert Dave Pitt testified Friday that there was no explosion at the 1985 concert that could have blasted dry ice into the audience. Defendants in the civil suit include Motley Crue, concert promoter Sound Seventy Productions Inc. of Nashville, Tenn., and the city of Huntsville.
 David Wright, now 19, claims he suffered a facial cut at the 1985 concert in Huntsville from a piece of dry ice hurled into the audience during a pyrotechnic display.
 Robbie Miller, now 17, says he was permanently blinded in one eye during the display.

Airline smoker plans to plead guilty

SEATTLE (AP) — The first person arrested under new regulations banning smoking on short airline flights says he's willing to plead guilty to smoking but would fight any more serious charge.
 In an interview published Saturday in The Seattle Times, Darryl Seigel denied an official's suggestion that he may have tampered with a smoke detector in an airliner restroom during a USAir flight from Seattle to Reno, Nev.
 Seigel, 38, of Seattle, admitted smoking a cigarette in a lavatory during the Thursday flight but said he did so absent-mindedly. He said that if he is charged with "smoking in the lavatory, I'll plead guilty, but if it's for anything else I'll fight it."

 Regulations that went into effect three weeks ago ban smoking on domestic airliner flights lasting less than two hours.
 Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman Ely Brekke said Seigel is apparently the first passenger to be arrested under the new rules.
 Brekke said the investigation should take 60 days, and Seigel faces three possible charges: Smoking when a no smoking sign is on, which carries a $1,000 fine; smoking in the lavatory, also a $1,000 fine; and tampering with a lavatory smoke detector, a $2,000 fine.

 The lack of an alarm from the lavatory smoke detector caused the flight crew to suspect it was tampered with, Brekke said. It was given to maintenance workers for an inspection.
 But Seigel said the smoke detector, "I touched it, that's all, but I did not do anything other than look at it out of curiosity."

Boyd endangered plan, Andrus says

LEWISTON (AP) — The land exchange behind Gov. Cecil D. Andrus' plan to retain Boise-based Micron Technology's expansion in Idaho was not completed when House Speaker Tom Boyd divulged the secret arrangement last week.

Andrus said Friday some last-minute scrambling was needed to obtain the final parcels and to avoid an escalation in land values that may have followed disclosure.

"As a matter of fact, we just barely made it," Andrus said. Upon learning of Boyd's announcement Sunday, Andrus said he advised the Boise State University Foundation to wrap up negotiations toward acquiring land for the structure.

Andrus had kept information about the arrangement from Boyd, R-Genesee, and other legislative leaders because, the governor said, publicity would lead to land speculation.

"I just wish Tom Boyd had been as concerned with the appropriation for higher education and the University of Idaho, which he opposed, as he is with the economic development that I was able to bring to Idaho," Andrus said.

Andrus stuck to the economic development theme in defending his actions to help construct a $5 million building at Boise State University. The structure will allow expansion of the UT's engineering program at Boise.

He said that was necessary to keep Micron from building its 1,000-worker expansion at Portland, Ore.

Under the arrangement, the BSU foundation would provide about 75 percent of the property, which it either owns or has an option to purchase from private owners. The final quarter would come from BSU, which would receive an equally-valued tract owned by the foundation elsewhere at Boise.

The land exchange requires approval of the state Land Board, which could take it up Tuesday.

The foundation then would finance construction of a 65,000-square-foot building and BSU would make yearly lease-purchase payments of $450,000 to $525,000.

McClure wants USSR to comply with accord

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the Soviet Union wants to gain most-favored-nation trading status with the United States, it will have to comply with the 1975 Helsinki Final Act guaranteeing human and civil rights.

"An amendment requiring that compliance, authored by Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, was approved Friday of a voice vote in the Senate.

The amendment to the Defense Department authorization bill for fiscal 1989 stipulates that any country not holding most-favored-nation status before May 1 must meet the requirements of the Helsinki accord.

Countries receiving most-favored-nation status get the same trade treatment granted by the U.S. to its allies. If the status is revoked, nations pay higher tariffs on goods exported to the U.S.

McClure said he offered the amendment in response to reports that the Reagan administration was considering granting most-favored-nation status to the Soviet Union prior to the upcoming Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Moscow.

"While the Soviet Union is making some progress on the human rights front, it remains in severe violation of major provisions of the Helsinki Final Act—especially regarding human rights," he said. "We are not asking the Soviets to do anything they haven't promised to do 13 years ago in Helsinki."

Coalition president opposes Treaty Beer

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — The president of the Northwest Coalition Against Malicious Harassment has called for a boycott of "Treaty Beer" as promoters of the novelty beverage keep trying to bring their attack on Indian treaty rights to the region.

Coalition President Tony Stewart said he will ask the coalition board to endorse the boycott when it meets next month in Wyoming.

"I will also ask the board to oppose any plan that would abrogate this country's treaty obligations with the American Indian tribes," Stewart said. "I believe this entire anti-treaty campaign smacks of racism."

Northern Idaho tribal leaders have already pledged their support for any tactics to bar the entry of Treaty Beer into the state, welcoming the backing of the coalition in the fight.

Proceeds from the sale of Treaty Beer, being brewed in Ohio for a group called Stop Treaty Abuse, go to a campaign to abrogate fishing and hunting rights granted Indian tribes in treaties signed with the United States a century ago.

Stop Treaty Abuse founder Dean Crist of Minocqua, Wis., has secured federal licensing for the beer, which has been marketed in Wisconsin. But his attempts to market it in Washington state earlier this month fell through when public outcry, including a call for a boycott by the governor, convinced distributors to back out.

Crist maintained Washington, Montana, Idaho, Minnesota, the Dakotas—and even Maine—were good states for distribution of his beer.

"Normally, a little controversy is good for our product," he said. "Our problem (in Washington) was we probably gave too much notice. We're still thrashing it out."

Sohappy leaves jail Tuesday

SPOKANE (AP) — David Sohappy Sr. will be released from federal custody on Tuesday, closing one chapter but opening another in what he says is a continuing struggle for Indian rights.

"My attorney says you've got all the rights now, since you've been in jail, that you can go out there and make your own rules and regulations," Sohappy, 63, said in a prison interview last week.

Sohappy and his son, David Jr., have been at the Geiger Correctional Center near Spokane since June 1987, where they were assigned to serve five-year terms for tribal poaching.

The two Yakima tribal fishermen said they will continue to work to change the federal wildlife laws that led to their convictions and five-year federal prison sentences.

And they will work to strengthen tribal authority over fishing, as guaranteed by treaties, they said.

Bishop questions morality of SIS

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Catholic Bishop Sylvester Treinen says the plutonium refinery planned for Eastern Idaho raises a "grave moral issue"—and should not be built while millions are starving to death.

He is one of several Idaho ministers, including Episcopal Bishop David Birney, who have attacked the $1 billion project on moral grounds.

SIS project manager Clay Nichols said he knows of no one associated with the project who considers it immoral. "Having a nuclear deterrent is not an immoral action," he said.

The Department of Energy wants to build the Special Isotope Separator at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory to refine fuel-grade plutonium for nuclear weapons.

Supporters welcome its hundreds of jobs and say it is needed for national security for flexibility in the plutonium supply, considering the department's deteriorating nuclear reactors.

Treinen, spiritual leader of Idaho's 75,000 Roman Catholics, said, "It is my firm conviction that the refining of plutonium is a grave moral issue."

Speaking for himself as Catholic bishop, he said millions of people in the world are starving to death and millions more live in substandard conditions "totally beneath the requirements of human dignity."

"How can we in good conscience deprive these poor of their rights and spend millions of dollars, which are theirs by right, for more unneeded weapons?" he asked.

Bishop Birney submitted written testimony as a private citizen, and not on behalf of the diocese's 6,000 Episcopalians, saying "moral and environmental concerns far outweigh those of an economic nature."

"The continued production of weapons, whose power could forever destroy this planet... is both indefensible and morally wrong."

One of several ministers who testified in person, David Keyes, of the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship in Boise, warned that opponents would stand in front of bulldozers to stop construction at the reservation west of Idaho Falls.

PUC approves phone cutoffs

BOISE (AP) — Idaho utility regulators have ruled that Mountain Bell and Pacific Northwest Bell may offer a service allowing them to restrict customers' access to long-distance lines for unpaid long-distance bills.

The call-blocking service will be offered as an option to interexchange long-distance carriers who want to stop customers with undispputed overdue bills from using their networks, the state Public Utilities Commission said Friday.

The Bell companies asked the commission in February for authority to offer the "Equal Access Restriction Service" — or EARS — to long-distance carriers in exchanges equipped to handle it. If a long-distance carrier asks that a customer's calls be blocked for nonpayment, the customer will be unable to complete long-distance calls through any of the carriers subscribing to EARS.

Nicaraguan Contras close to disintegration, officials claim

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nicaraguan Contras, poorly supplied and politically divided, may face disintegration, with impact beyond Nicaragua's borders, according to U.S. officials.

Less than two months after the rebels signed a temporary cease-fire agreement with Nicaragua's leftist government, administration analysts on Central America say the Contras' future seems bleak for a variety of reasons:

— Up to 3,000 rebels, denied delivery of U.S. humanitarian aid shipments, have fled across the Nicaraguan border into Honduras in search of food.

— Serious rifts have emerged in the Contra ranks. An undetermined number of rebels mutinied recently against military commander Enrique Bermudez at a Contra camp in southern Honduras. Bermudez also faces opposition from at least two members of the rebel political directorate.

— If fighting resumes after the current cease-fire ends on June 1, the Contras have enough military supplies to last only one to two months. Congress rejected President Reagan's military aid request on Feb. 3 and there is little support at present for a reversal of that decision.

— Soviet military supplies are continuing to flow to the Sandinistas at a rate slightly ahead of the 1987 pace. According to U.S. estimates, Soviet military deliveries totaled $105 million for the first three months of 1988.

"The Contras seem to be in the process of disintegrating," said one official, insisting on anonymity. "The consolidation of Sandinista rule is upon us."

The official said all of the predictions he and some others in the administration had made in February after the congressional rejection of Contra aid are being borne out.

Specifically, he said the aid vote has contributed to increasing right-left political polarization in Guatemala, reflected in a failed military coup attempt there last week, and in El Salvador, where the rightist ARENA party won impressively in national elections in March, the official said.

He added that the prospective demise of the U.S.-backed rebels in Nicaragua has had the effect of "emboldening" leftist guerrillas in El Salvador, who are aligned with the Sandinistas.

These views, however, are not universally shared in the administration. Another official, also speaking privately, said the trends in Guatemala and El Salvador are the result of internal developments unrelated to the situation in Nicaragua.

The prevailing view among more conservative members of the administration is that consolidation of Sandinista rule would generate nervousness in neighboring countries, forcing them to shift priorities from democcratic development to concerns over internal security.

The Contras and the Sandinistas signed a temporary truce in Sapoá, Nicaragua, on March 23.

Beirut fighting draws Syrian troop advance

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian troops and tanks were reported traveling from Lebanon's central mountains Saturday to move into south Beirut's "embattled" slums, where Western hostages are believed held by Iranian-backed extremists.

Military sources said the Syrian reinforcements were massing at the Beirut airport area for an apparent entry into the slums that have been captured by fighters of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God.

"They're going to move in peacefully under an agreement being worked out by the presidents of Iran and Syria," a high-ranking Lebanese military source said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

He estimated the reinforcements at two armored brigades, or about 6,000 troops and 300 tanks and armored personnel carriers.

The reinforcements were coming from the Bekaa Valley, where Syria maintains the bulk of 25,000 troops stationed in eastern and northern Lebanon, the source said.

The move came on the heels of a Syrian threat to "cancel" a "strategic treatment" after Hezbollah's forces stormed through the last stronghold of Justice Minister Nabih Berri's rival Amal militia.

"After advancing across half of Shiyah, Hezbollah now controls 90 percent of south Beirut," reported a police spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Police said 20 people were killed and 41 injured in the house-to-house inter-Shiite Moslem combat and other factional clashes in south Beirut. The latest casualties raised the toll in area fighting to 211 killed and 586 wounded since May 6.

The thud of exploding shells echoed across west Beirut as Hezbollah militiamen advanced across Shiyah and Amal fighters withdrew toward Syrian lines in west Beirut.

Soviets ready to begin Afghanistan pullout

MOSCOW (AP) — Bloodied but unbroken, the Soviet Army begins pulling out of Afghanistan on Sunday amid threats of guerrilla harassment and grave doubts about the future of the Marxist government it leaves behind.

On the eve of the withdrawal, the Soviet commander in Afghanistan denied his men had been defeated in the brutal war that has claimed an estimated 10,000 Soviet lives.

But politically, the fruits of the 8½-year Soviet armed intervention seem meager. Militarily, the Soviet presence has proved far from decisive.

On Saturday, in the Afghan capital of Kabul, a bomb exploded inside a truck near reviewing stands built for a ceremony honoring the departing Soviet troops. Eleven Afghan civilians were reported killed. Later, three rockets hit a village outside Kabul, killing four people.

Since Dec. 27, 1979, when the Kremlin sent tanks and troops into Afghanistan, Soviet soldiers have been fighting to prop up the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, but they have failed to break the back of a nationwide anti-Marxist insurgency.

Acknowledging the Kremlin's unwillingness to keep bearing the military and diplomatic costs of the intervention, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze signed U.N.-brokered accords in Geneva on April 14 that commit the Soviets to a nine-month pullout, beginning Sunday.

As the first of an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops prepare to come home, one major question is how — or if — the Moscow-aligned regime of President Najib, which claims just 40,000 regular soldiers of its own, can survive.

The first Soviets to leave will be from a motor-rifle division garrisoned at Jalalabad, a dusty provincial town 30 miles from the Pakistan border, military officials and Soviet media have said.

Lt. Gen. Boris V. Gromov, Soviet commander in Afghanistan, said Saturday more than 1,000 soldiers would be withdrawn Sunday and that a quarter of the entire Soviet contingent would be home by the time President Reagan visits Moscow on May 29-June 2.

PLANTER WARTS SUCCESSFULLY TREATED BY RADIOSURGERY

DR. DAVID BLACKMER

"Radiosurgery is now the treatment of choice for many conditions, particularly for painful, hard to get rid of planter warts." So says Dr. David Blackmer, a podiatric surgeon in Twin Falls & Burley. He is the first foot surgeon in the Magic Valley area to offer the new radiosurgical techniques to office patients.

"Planter warts are a common problem" notes Dr. Blackmer. "Conventional removal often results in pain and recurrence."

With radiosurgical equipment, a beam of electrons are generated at a frequency of 3,800,000 cycles per second, filtered, rectified, and directed through a handpiece. The resultant wave acts with greater precision than conventional surgery. It also sterilizes and vaporizes diseased tissue.

The results are impressive Dr. Blackmer says. "Radiosurgery is the latest technique that removes planter warts. Radiosurgical units have been effective in removing ingrown toenails, neuromas, and treating deep cracks in callused heels."

West Magic Care Center faces damage suit

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls woman is suing West Magic Care Center for the death of her 46-year-old husband, three months after new ownership took over and rescued the center from de-certification due to inadequate conditions.

Dorothy Rideout says her husband, in a drug-induced coma, died when his tracheostomy tube fill with mucus, the cause of death on his death certificate.

He died last October while recovering slowly from a near-fatal motorcycle accident that left him with severe brain damage.

Rideout died less than three months after new management at the nursing home saved the troubled, 184-bed nursing-home from de-certification by the state.

In her suit, Dorothy Rideout says the nursing home:

- Failed to clean out her husband's tracheostomy tube.
- Failed to keep staff members at their appropriate and required stations.
- Called the wrong emergency number to get ambulance service, delaying response time by 15 minutes.

"Didn't staff the nursing home properly,"

The lawsuit, filed in Twin Falls district court, asks for $732,500 in damages and attorney's fees of at least $25,000.

West Magic Care Center, formerly Evergreen Manor, has been through a series of unfavorable inspections in past years. Administrator Joyce Ellis declined comment on the case, saying she hadn't seen a copy of the lawsuit.

Last August, a new management team saved the nursing home from losing its state certification. If the certification had been lost, the home wouldn't qualify for Medicare and Medicaid funds.

Western Health Care Corp. of Boise, headed by Delta and Keith Holloway, is the management team that rescued the center from de-certification. Keith Holloway was out of town and unavailable for comment.

When they passed a final inspection last August, it was the 10th in 18 months.

The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare threatened to remove certification from the center in July 1987 because of violations in patient hygiene, recordkeeping, food preparation and physician orders in admitting drugs and staff training, among other things.

After the Holloways took over in late July, they trimmed the sub-standard areas from six to one. The Holloways hired 30 new nurses and nursing assistants by August 1987, increasing the staff to 115.

Dorothy Rideout, who spent 13 hours a day with her husband, was present during two of those inspections, she claims. Her husband entered West Magic Care Center May 7, just before the first critical state inspection.

Her husband started reacting to questions and was able to squeeze with his left hand before he died, she said. He was waiting for a space in the Veterans Administration Hospital in Boise at the time of his death.

He suffered severe head injuries from a March motorcycle accident in front of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. He was flown to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise for immediate treatment.

Lorrie Wilkes makes run for Twin Falls School Board seat

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Quiet but assertive, Lorrie Wilkes has built her campaign for the Twin Falls School Board on a background in health issues and a promise to be well-informed.

Wilkes, the 37-year-old director of nursing at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, says the board could use a health professional when it deals with such problems as drugs and alcohol abuse and AIDS.

She's also planning to actively research education issues, about which she admits she doesn't have a lot of knowledge.

Researching is nothing new for her, since she has a master's degree from the University of North Florida. "I'll look at what trends are there in the areas building successful school systems and implement them here," she said. She plans to do that by "delving into the literature."

Wilkes also wants to have more influence on state educational funding in Idaho from the Zone 1 board seat vacated by Gary Fay.

Zone 1 encompasses the central part of the town. The boundaries run from West Five Points along Addison Avenue to Locust Street, then south on Locust to Rock Creek. The south boundary is Rock Creek west to Washington Street. A triangle of the diagonal streets in between Twin Falls is excluded. That triangle is bounded by 5th Street West and Main Street. Polls will be open at Lincoln School between noon and 8 p.m.

"I get frustrated with the direction of the Legislature with state funding," Wilkes said in an interview Friday. "I think my words or influence will have greater impact as a board member than just as a patron."

Wilkes has been director of nursing at MVRMC since 1985. She is an administrative representative to MVRMC's Home Health Care Services, a member of the Idaho Hospital Association's Council on Nursing, a board member of the Idaho Organization of Nurse Executives and a member of the Twin Falls County Child Protection Team.

She's a five-year resident of Twin Falls and has two children. Her daughter, Katy, is a sophomore at Twin Falls High School. She's raising her children alone after a divorce.

Wilkes wants to keep local override money focused on tangible items, not for teacher salaries, which would then become subject to year-to-year funding changes. "You don't give something like that, then take it away," she said.

Her attitudes toward teacher and employee relations have been honed in the crucible of nurse-hospital relations.

She's not opposed to professional associations, like the Idaho Education Association or the Idaho Nurses Association.

"Certain professional groups, to get their needs met, do need some outside help," she said. But administrators, hospital or school, don't need to become embroiled in antagonism, she said.

To avoid that, she advocates the simple step of talking to teachers,

Lorrie Wilkes banks on professional health-care experience if elected to Twin Falls School Board giving them input on the school's direction and educating them about budgetary constraints.

For instance, the hospital organizes small discussion groups and asks nurses what MVRMC can do to keep nurses there, she said.

She also applauds the board's proposed policy on creationism, a hot topic where the school has proposed a policy opposite of what many people say they want.

At its last meeting, the board discussed a policy that would ban the teaching of creationism in science classes, saying recent court cases prohibit teaching it in science classes.

"I think the board's proposed policy is a good one," Wilkes said. "I also like the idea of getting teacher input."

She says she would apply her passion for bottom-up communication to the School Board and to hiring decisions on administrators. "You have to keep visible in any leadership position," she says. For administrative positions, she puts "prime importance" on finding communicators and negotiators.

And she promises to work hard on the job. "You have to have a well-informed board. If they aren't, and just pass what the administration asks, you have a benign board," she says.

City council votes on election change

By KIRK MITCHELL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Council members will vote tomorrow on a proposed ordinance that would change city elections from an at-large system of voting to seat elections.

Residents will have a final chance at the city council meeting at 6 p.m. to express their views on the topic before the third reading and voting by the council.

In the at-large format, top vote-getters in a pool of candidates win. But an election by seat would allow for one of seven individual seats, running against specific opponents.

Councilman Jim Vickers said the new system would allow voters to target specific candidates either for retention or defeat.

Vickers said that in the past, candidates persuaded their supporters to vote for them alone because a vote for any other would be a vote against them.

He said that prevented supporters from supporting two or more candidates they liked.

Vickers said the present system is a popularity contest in which candidates with the best advertising campaign usually win.

On another topic, the council also will consider a zone change application for four homes on Washington Street South and Orchard from residential to commercial, said LeMar Orton, community development director.

The change, which would allow Lesalle Investment Co. to turn a home into a heating and cooling office and business, has been widely opposed by residents in the area, Orton said.

Opponents of the zone change say the business would lower property value in the area and make living there less habitable. A group of area residents have collected two sheets of names in a petition they say represents 65 percent of the residents in the area.

City Attorney Fritz Wondrich said the city also will consider a proposed ordinance change to allow hot dog and other sidewalk vendors to obtain a license from the city.

He said this summer is the first time the city has encountered the sidewalk vendors. One is located on the corner of the county courthouse lot and the another outside the old Idaho First building.

Wondrich said city ordinances prohibit the practice and need to be updated if the stands are allowed to continue their businesses.

He said the Business Improvement District has requested that the ordinance require vendors to obtain permission to locate in a certain spot so that they do not compete with restaurants.

Wondrich said it is likely that a fee of $25 per quarter will be assessed for the license.

The BID is also seeking a resolution that would require assessments be paid on vacant buildings within the district, he said.

Wondrich said the ordinance to change owners of vacant lots was provided in a new law by this year's Legislature.

He said the BID will also ask the city to expand the boundaries in some of its outer zones and remove a portion in a southeast section of the district.

Has concerns

Lenore McNees possesses Twin Falls schools experience

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Lenore McNees, with the familiarity of sending four children through Twin Falls schools and being married to a school board member, says she doesn't have any major gripes with Twin Falls schools.

"I don't have any axes to grind, because my children have done well," McNees says.

But she does want to do some fine-tuning, like starting alcohol education in lower grades and creating better drug education programs throughout the school.

Her former husband, Jack McNees, served on the school board for several years until 1985.

Her children have gone on to college and done well, including one who is a patent lawyer in New York. But McNees says she's concerned about other students.

"I think counseling is very inadequate," she said. "A lot of kids don't have parents who have been to college and do not know how to apply for scholarships and for aid, she said. One of her solutions is to use teachers as counselors.

Twin Falls schools should push harder for quality education, she says.

"The whole world is not going to stop while Idaho is trying to catch up," she said.

She says override levies should be higher and specifically list what the money will be used for. Twin Falls patrons recently passed a $302,000 override targeted at textbooks, curriculum and other increases.

The district said a small state funding increase necessitated the override request. "It seems they put in a low override because they thought it would be passed," McNees said. "A higher one could have passed too."

State legislators will have to be pushed into raising funding, she said.

"They have all talked about it being a major issue."

She said she would support a one-cent increase in the state's sales tax to pump state revenue into its public schools.

McNees said the board is moving in the right direction with a policy on creationism, although the board has been criticized for its stand.

At its last meeting, the board discussed a policy that would ban teaching creationism in science classes.

troubled her, although there were some bright spots to the problems, she said.

The Twin Falls Education Association called a strike at the school in 1985.

"It does get people to thinking and calls attention to problems in the school system," she said. "That isn't bad."

But in the past, they pushed their concerns "beyond all sensibility," she said.

But in the end, parents hold one of the big keys to education, she said.

"There has to be a lot of togetherness — everybody working together in a progressive way," she said. "Some people think the school should be raising the kids."

Local school boards propose levies

Low funds pinch district budgets

Times-News writer

In what has become a frequent activity in communities across the state, patrons in four Magic Valley school districts will go to the polls Tuesday to vote on override levies.

Officials from Cassia County, Minidoka, Richfield and Murtaugh school boards are repeating what has been said elsewhere in the state — the Legislature did not fund education as much as it should have.

The Murtaugh School Board is asking voters to approve a $25,000 supplemental levy in the school trustee election. The money is needed to cover the regular school budget for the next fiscal year beginning in June.

Voters already approved a $125,000 levy this year, which was used to pay off about $70,000 in debt the district had accumulated, and to fund improvements in facilities and curriculum required to meet accreditation standards, school Superintendent Frederick Diaz-Grados said.

"We were anticipating a higher levy until we put the pencil to paper," said Georgina Wolverson, chairman of the school board.

The Richfield School District is asking voters to approve a plant facilities levy of $10,000 per year for 10 years.

Superintendent Neuman Matson said the levy would replace one that is expiring. This money is put in a reserve fund to cover those expenses that cannot be paid from the regular maintenance and operations fund in the budget, he said.

Passage of the levy would allow the district to continue taxing voters at the same rate for plant facility expenses, about $4.70 per $10,000 of taxable assessed property valuation.

Candidates pursue Wendell Zone 2, 4 seats

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — The Wendell School District needs to offer students a better variety of classes and work on improving relations among district employees and with the public.

That's the consensus of five trustee candidates competing this year in two contested races. Tuesday is election day.

In Zone 2, incumbent Vernon Mason is challenged by Clarence Sparks. In Zone 4, Don Fowler, John Irace and Sharla Dunn have filed for the seat held by Jim Davis, who is not seeking re-election.

Mason, 55, has a wife and four adult children and is self-employed in heavy construction.

Mason was on the board for eight years several years ago and is now finishing a three-year term.

"I think I try to be a good school board member," he says, explaining that for him, this means "not being in there for a petty gripe or a personal gain, but to have the education of the kids at heart."

One recent problem in Wendell, Mason says, is a general lack of communication. Better communication, he says, would improve public relations and would help the elementary school have "more harmony" among the staff.

At board meetings, the public should feel welcome to discuss any concerns or ideas with the trustees, says Mason, adding, "they're the taxpayers."

Mason says his main goal is to remedy problems in the district. Sparks, 43, has lived in Wendell eight years and is a state employee. He and his wife have two children in college and two in high school.

"I think there's an awful lot of room for improvement on the school board," says Sparks. "It's public knowledge we've had quite a few problems with different lawsuits and so forth."

Sparks says he has worked in business management programs and in sales for many years and is experienced in those fields.

He adds that Wendell has some teacher problems that should be examined. More specifically, says

Sparks, those problems concern teachers that fight the administration.

Sparks says he has no major changes in mind for the district, but would like to see more programs for achievers and more vocational-technical programs for students not going to college or into management careers.

"We really do not have a vocation-type program," Sparks says. "I'm speaking about something other than agriculture."

Sparks would also like to see some "pre-college-type work" for high achievers, and says funding for those programs would be through a levy or through a grant program.

Fowler, 38, has lived in Wendell 10 years and has a wife and three young children. He works as a high school counselor in Jerome and has been director of the Wendell Recreation District for eight years.

Fowler says seeking a trustee position is not "a spur of the moment decision," but rather something he has considered for three or four years.

"I'm excited to have the opportunity to be on the board," he says. "I'm not running with any vendettas or great causes. I'm just trying to make a positive contribution to the board."

Fowler says he wants to work toward positive changes when and if they are needed.

With a bachelor's degree in business education from the University of Idaho and a master of education degree in school counseling from the College of Idaho, Fowler has worked in four Idaho schools during the last 15 years.

In northern Idaho, he was a negotiator for teachers for two years at Kootenai High School. Fowler has also taught and coached in Gooding and Carey.

Irace, 31, has lived in Wendell nine years. He and his wife Dawn operate the Iron Skillet restaurant and have five sons.

Irace also works full-time as a city employee. He is a volunteer fireman and an emergency medical technician.

"I'm running as a concerned parent," says Irace. "I'd like to see everybody work together."

There is a lot of work to be done on communication, Irace says, and school business should be more open to the public.

"I'd like to see all the teachers and administrators get along better," he says. "I'm concerned about education for my children, for all the children."

Irace says he recently attended the four public informational meetings put on by school administrators to discuss issues as requested by Wendell patrons.

"I like the way things are going," says Irace. "(Superintendent) George Crawford has done a lot to get things going smoother."

Still, he says, a lot of work needs to be done.

Vocational-agriculture and art classes are needed in Wendell, Irace says, and the district should try to offer students a better variety of classes.

Sharla Dunn has lived in Wendell 13 years. She and her husband have two sons, age eight and 10.

Dunn has her own business selling Christian books in retail stores. She also is a part-time sales representative for two companies.

With a bachelor's degree in business education from the University of Missouri, Dunn taught business for eight years in Wells, Nev., and in Wendell.

"I've seen it from the side of the teachers," she says.

Dunn says she is concerned as a parent, an educator and a taxpayer about the quality of education offered by the Wendell school district for its students.

"I also have the time, I feel, to devote to the job," she says. "I'm interested in what's going on there."

Wendell needs a better working relationship among parents, teachers, administrators and trustees, says Dunn.

Also, resources — including facilities, available money and people — should be used "to the fullest extent," she says.

Eden school candidates contest Zone 3

By CHERI FORSYTH
Times-News correspondent

EDEN — Two Eden and Hazelton residents will vie for the school board seat left open when board member Delbert Kohtz decided not to run for re-election.

Janet Bingham, a Hazelton housewife, and David Kohtz, an Eden farmer, have both filed for the vacant Zone 3 seat. Rob Rogerson, who has served one term on the board, is running unopposed. Elections will be held at Valley High School on Tuesday from 1 to 8 p.m.

"I've been involved in the SOS organization for 12 years, the last two serving as vice president and president. I feel I have a real working knowledge of what's going on in our schools," Bingham said.

She is particularly concerned, she said, with the consolidation bills which died in this year's legislative session, but will surely be resurrected in the next session due to the current shortage of funds for education.

Bingham, a 15-year resident of the community, has been active in all types of volunteer work. Her six children range in grade from a second grader to senior in high school. She has completed three years of college, majoring in secondary education.

David Kohtz, a lifelong resident of the Eden-Hazelton area, farms south of Eden. He earned a bachelor's degree in business administration and served a four-year hitch in the Air Force. He has two children, ages 12 and 15.

"I don't have any big plans to shake things up, but I think some things could run smoother and we could make some improvements in some of the existing programs," Kohtz said.

Kohtz said he has had some previous experience serving on a board, having spent six years on the board of directors of the Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services, one of those years as chairman.

The public is invited to attend a forum focusing on school consolidation and other educational issues facing the next legislative session. The forum will be held Wednesday from 8 to 9:30 p.m. at the Lakeview Apartments meeting room in Hazelton.

Incumbents and candidates for District 24 and Floterial District 25 have been invited to participate in the discussion. Each candidate will be allowed two or three minutes to express his own views before answering written questions submitted by the audience.

Funding focuses Minidoka Zone 4 race

By ADELL HARVEY
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — Three candidates have filed for two seats on the Minidoka District school board, all citing the need to stretch a small district's limited resources as far as they will go.

Elections are Tuesday with polls open from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Larry Leary, who was appointed by the board to fill the Zone 1 seat vacated when Larry Burbank resigned last year, is unopposed in his bid to represent the Heyburn area.

In Zone 4, which covers most of the central Rupert area, incumbent Harold Short is challenged by Ken CooperSmith.

Short, a six-year veteran on the board, is a really specialist for the Bureau of Land Management. A graduate of the University of Missouri with a B.S. degree in Soil Science, Short said he is familiar with agricultural issues, and qualified to handle property issues facing the district.

Short is married and has five children, all active in band, choir, church, drill team, sports and academic organizations within the district.

During his years on the board, Short said he has supported numerous programs, including re-instating eighth grade sports, starting sixth grade band, energy conservation projects, planning and construction of Big Valley School and the new kindergarten program.

"Our big thing is to continue the progress we're making in all phases of the district, especially in improvement of academic performance," Short said.

He wants to continue to work on reducing the drop-out rate. "My goal is to see every kid entering first grade also graduate from high school," said Short.

He sees the plant facilities levy — which voters will also consider during Tuesday's election — to be a vital issue. "It won't increase taxes to any degree, not really more than a cup of coffee a day," he said. "The management building-maintenance program is not just a band-aiding effort, but protection of the district's properties."

Short said he enjoyed serving as a trustee and has "no political ambitions."

In contrast, Short's opponent, Ken CooperSmith, admits to having political ambitions.

"I've wanted to be in politics for a long time," he says. "I have the time, the ability and the wherewithal to be of service to the community, and the school board is a job not sought after by a lot of people."

ditional programs.

Carter said the district has attracted highly qualified teachers and those teachers should be given latitude to develop new programs.

He was a member of the committee which hired Hemingway Elementary principal Micah Fierstein three years ago, but Carter supports the present school board's decision not to renew Fierstein's contract.

Carter is opposed to the state's distribution formula for "allocations of KETCHUM — Three candidates have stepped forward for a seat in Zone 4 of the Blaine County School District's Board of Trustees, with Keith Carter and Lynn Flickinger challenging 10-year incumbent Peter Flood.

Keith Carter said he is running for the school board because he would like to see children come out of the school system excited, with a devel-

He has lived in the area for eight years and has five children — a preschooler, two children who attend Hemingway Elementary, one child at Wood River High School and one child who attends college at the University of Utah.

Glenns Ferry Zone 5 gets a race

By PATRICIA DEVOY
Times-News correspondent

GLENN'S FERRY — Tina Gluch is challenging incumbent Ward Rulien for the Zone 5 seat on the Glenns Ferry School Board because she thinks it's time for the board to have some new faces and ideas.

Gluch, who works for Corner Market Grocery, said, "there are a lot of concerned taxpayers and parents out here, and only five seats on the school board. I think the job should be spread around among the concerned public, and if an incumbent runs unopposed, there is no chance for that to happen."

She added, "the kids are what school is all about. I would like to be assured our tax money is being spent on things that will directly benefit their education."

Gluch said she is aware of her lack of experience, but says it is like being a mother—even the most experienced started at the beginning, experience comes with time.

On the sports versus academics conflict that has dominated many board meetings this past year, Gluch said, "I think sports-are-important. Winning is important. But I think first consideration should be given to student participation. If the sports program is set up so lesser skilled students are not given the opportunity to play, then there should be activities for them."

She believes athletics are "an ego building activity," but for children who don't excel in those areas, Gluch said there needs to be other activities to build their self-confidence.

Gluch says she's had lots of exposure to parents and taxpayers. "I hear a variety of comments about what is going on at the school. I am a mother as well as a taxpayer. I just want to get involved, see where our tax money is going, how it is managed and be assured it is being spent right."

Gluch is married and has a daughter, Mandy, who will be in first grade. During a recent interview, incumbent Ward Rulien said, "I have had a lot of jobs, but being a school board member is the hardest job I have ever had."

Rulien, who has three children of his own, explains that the reason why the job is so difficult is because school boards deal with the most valued commodity—children.

A board member should be going into the position to work, be willing to listen and do what's best for the kids, said Rulien. This means a lot of leg-work outside the meetings, talking to the people with problems and, he added, people need to remember the school board is an extension of the community, the mouthpiece of the people.

"We are the school, everyone who lives in the area—it's not just a building, the kids, the staff, or the board," Rulien said.

"There are a lot of nights I lay awake thinking about the problems. Often opinions are split down the middle. No matter what you do, someone will be unhappy. Ultimately, you have to think what is best for the kids. You have to be objective and open minded. The best overall decision may not be what you would like to see personally."

Rulien compared running a school to a personal relationship, with personal priorities and individual opinions. "Do you remodel the kitchen or the den? You have to try to work with an overall plan that will ultimately benefit the most."

Rulien says he believes his seven-year tenure, can benefit the board because sometimes experience is important but being a school board member is also beneficial in financial matters.

"Glenns Ferry is one of the few districts in the state that doesn't operate under some kind of levy. Many funds are from enrollment members. Since this area is shrinking in population, we're not getting more money, but less."

But Rulien also pointed out that Glenns Ferry schools have stayed in the black while other schools "are struggling and passing levies."

He said in the past years he has heard complaints about not enough school involvement in community, and if re-elected, he would like to find out exactly what the problem is. "I would like to visit with the Chamber and Merchants and then have a discussion with the school board to see if a closer relationship could be developed," he said.

On sports and academics, Rulien said, "I think there always has been and always will be a problem in some people's minds, but the two complement each other. It's not just athletics, but all activities. The school can only do so much. I believe the parents have to take more responsibility in teaching their kids not to become involved in too many things."

Levy

of a plant facilities levy that would collect at least $775,000 for each of the next 10 years to finance building projects across the county.

The board is also asking for a one-year request for $575,000 in supplemental operating funds.

The proposed plant facilities levy would be in addition to an existing plant facilities levy in effect through 1994 for maintenance and repairs. That levy raised $214,000.

The first $165 million raised would be used for a new elementary school building in Malco. The district would next work on a $1.5 million elementary school project for an Oakley schoolhouse built in 1912.

Other projects include a new $2.25 million building to replace both Overland and Southwest elementary schools in Burley, a $1.2 million building in Declo that would serve as a multipurpose room and lunch room, a $300,000 media center in Burley High School and a $600,000 auditorium in Oakley.

In Minidoka County, the Minidoka School Board is calling on its patrons to approve a 10-year $400,000 levy.

Superintendent Gene Snapp said the money would be used to offset a shortage of funding from the state.

"We're scheduling our summer maintenance plans around what is available in the plant facilities fund. We'll have to make a decision after the election about buses. If it doesn't pass, we will not be purchasing buses this year," Snapp said.

He said the budget was as slim as it could be and the levy would help the district make ends meet.

2 battle in Glens Ferry Zone 1 race

By PATRICIA DEVOY
Times-News correspondent

GLENS FERRY — Residents who live in Glens Ferry's Zone 1 will be asked to decide between incumbent school board member Rocky Trail and challenger Denise King on Tuesday.

"As a parent of four children in the Glens Ferry school system, my husband Doug and I are naturally interested in what goes on at school," said King.

King is a homemaker and says she would have plenty of time to devote to a position on the board.

"I believe we have a good school system," said King. "But anything can be improved."

Declining enrollment has caused a budget decrease for Glens Ferry and King said she is concerned that the cutback in dollars could affect education. With her children just beginning their educational careers, she would like to be part of the decision making to help assure a quality education.

"It is natural as a parent to be critical at times," said King. "But I have never believed in criticizing without affirmative action. I have no quarrel with Rocky Trail, my opponent, but feel new blood is essential on governing boards from time to time to avoid complacency."

King would like to see the educational curriculum at Glens Ferry extended. "The more a student is exposed to during his primary and secondary education, the more choices he has when he is thrust into the adult world," said King.

Although she feels sports are an important part of education, she would like to see less conflict between sports and academic events.

Incumbent Rocky Trail said he received a good education from the Glens Ferry school system. After graduating, he went to the University of Idaho and received a bachelor's degree in agriculture, animal sciences.

Trail said he feels his row crop and ranching operation provides him with certain qualifications beneficial to the school board, because he deals daily with finances and a large labor force.

"I would like to maintain a quality educational system in Glens Ferry," Trail said. "And stay within the budget. Glens Ferry has no overrides, no debt."

Trail said the way to maintain quality of education is to hire qualified teachers and encourage them to stay. "I like to try to show them there is something in life besides big towns and the fast track." But Trail admitted with low teacher salaries, and a small town with little to offer in recreation, it is difficult to attract teachers.

Coopersmith, a graduate of California State Polytechnic College, serves on the board of directors of the Mini-Cassia Softball Association and served for six years on a city planning commission. He is married and has two children enrolled in Minidoka school.

He says he can offer "fresh ideas and creative solutions" to many of the problems facing the district.

"My basic concern for the education program is to provide the best possible education for all students to allow them to have the highest quality of life they can possibly attain," he said.

"The easiest way to create more tax dollars is to have each individual increase his income so he's more able to pay. If our people are better trained and can command better salaries, it will alleviate a portion of the tax burden."

Coopersmith said, "We've got to start thinking outside the normal realm of operating a school district. We've got to find new and innovative ways to do things."

One solution he offers to problems caused by the C average rule is to offer a hands-on tutorial program.

He also feels computer literacy is a needed program, but says current lab time is a "limiting factor." He said computer lab time could be offered after hours for students willing to study computers as an elective.

"Everybody has the same basic desire," he said. "They want their children to receive a good education. The problem is, how do you fund it? We've got to figure out a creative approach on tax increases."

He suggests parental funding for some programs, such as eighth grade sports or sixth-grade band, "only when you don't have the money to get it out of the regular budget. We can't be taxing people who are hurting."

Coopersmith said there needs to be better communication between the school district and its patrons. "The average person is not being informed properly by the school board. They need better open lines of communication. If people seek out the answer, it's available, but the average person doesn't have time to do it out."

As State Farm insurance agent for the Paul area, Coopersmith says he has contact with a tremendous number of people throughout the district.

especially for positions which require master's degrees and advanced education.

With three children, ages 17, 13, and 11, in the system, Trail said he is very pro-education. "I don't think we are 'overloaded with sports,' but I would like to see more emphasis on education. We are trying to find teachers to take over other activities, like the Academic Decathlon, and also the SADD (Students Against Drunk Drivers) program."

Trail does feel, however, that some students are involved in too many activities. The parents need to control their schedules more, he said.

Trail said the scheduling problem in sports would always be there, but there would not be another problem with graduation. "Bob Fontaine (superintendent) took care of that. The district has assured him that the end of the year meets will be scheduled early in the fall, then graduation will be scheduled."

Trail said he feels his job is working with the public. "We hire a good superintendent to handle the finances. I want to know the feelings. I am working for you."

THE BEST FINANCIAL VEHICLE EVER CREATED

Better than CD's T-Bills, Money Market Funds, Zero Coupon Bonds, Annuities or Municipal Bonds.

7 1/4% - 7 3/4% - 8 1/2% Interest
Liquid - Flexible
100% Guaranteed by over 50 leading life insurance companies with assets up to 100 billion dollars.

WHAT IS AN SP?

It's the most revolutionary, yet safest instrument in the marketplace. A versatile vehicle from Professional Economic Services, with almost unbelievable benefits and tax advantages. The SP is a Single-Premium Whole Life Insurance Policy—and a lot more than just insurance.

In a sense, this is a tax-free Certificate of Deposit, Zero Coupon Bond, Money Market Account, T-Bill, Annuity, Municipal Bond, and fully-paid-up life insurance policy, all rolled into one contract. Your SP gives you a tax-free death benefit and a higher income-tax-free yield. It will never decrease your growing cash accumulation, as tax exempt bonds do when interest rates rise. And you can never lose one cent of your original single payment, as you can with municipal bonds.

ONE PAYMENT: You can make a single payment, as you would for a CD, T-Bill, Bond, etc. - any amount from $5,000 to $5,000,000. You get a fully-paid-up life insurance policy for a full lifetime, written by a major life insurance company thru Professional Economic Services. You get access to a whole world of tax advantages. And you never pay another dollar!

NO HIDDEN CHARGES: Unlike many mutual funds, the SP carries no front-end load or sales charges. No yearly management fees. 100% of your SP deposit goes to work for you right away.

LIQUIDITY: The SP's initial attraction is the tax-deferred interest buildup, but its real beauty lies in liquidity. Your cash can be withdrawn any time with a tax-free loan. You can also withdraw up to about 85% of your SP principal any time, with a minimum 2% interest loan. And you never have to repay any of these withdrawals.

TAX-DEFERRED ACCUMULATION OR TAX-FREE LOANS

Each year your SP insurance company pays you competitive interest on your principal. Currently, this runs 7 1/4 to 8 1/2% for 1 to 5 years, depending on the company you choose from Professional Economic Services. Your interest compounds tax-free, like all life insurance policies, Annuities, or tax-free, like all life insurance policy loans - or you can leave it in to keep on building up.

INCOME - TAX-FREE DEATH BENEFIT

This can be anything from 100% to 500% of your principal. (The younger you are, the larger the benefit.) The principal, any accrued interest not withdrawn as tax-free income, and the death benefit all go to your heirs with no income-tax or probate cost. Of course, you can avoid estate tax by leaving your SP to your spouse, or insure another family member, if you prefer.

PRIVACY AND SAFETY

No 1099 form goes to the IRS while your SP is in force. And your tax-free loans don't count for possible taxation of your Social Security benefit. The SP from Professional Economic Services is sold by over 50 major U.S. insurance companies, many rated A+ by the independent A.M. Best evaluation service. The integrity and multi-billion-dollar resources of these underwriters all stand behind your SP.

Office manager, retired school teacher run for Cassia seat

By DONNA SCHORZMAN
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — A retired school teacher and an office manager want to contribute their talents to the Cassia County School Board, citing the need to assess teachers' effectiveness and salaries.

In Tuesday's school board election, Katharine Bryan and Eric Fonnebeck, both Burley residents, will vie for the seat to be vacated by retiring Michael Judd.
Fonnebeck is the factory office manager for Amalgamated Sugar Co.

and holds a bachelor's degree in management from Lewis and Clark State College. He was born and raised in the area and has been with Amalgamated for the past 10 years.

"I feel that changes need to be made in the approach that the school board has taken in relation to teachers and curriculum and fiscal policies," he said.

Fonnebeck said that tenure for teachers is fine, but he added, "I think that if we have some teachers that are not doing a good job, I think we should look at replacing them." He feels that students should be asked to fill out teacher evaluations to help to determine a teacher's effectiveness.

He said he would like to see "merit" pay for good teachers. "We're doing our children an injustice by having teachers who are not teaching and do not have the interest of the students at heart," he said.

Fonnebeck also believes scheduling should be evaluated, referring specifically to Burley High School's practice of two hour classes with different schedules every other day. "That needs to be looked at seriously," he said. "We're the only school in the state that does that and we need to assess the effectiveness of it."

He also feels that more should be done to evaluate and assess how the money for education is being spent. He has talked to teachers who express concern over the spending policies and said "it seems to be spent more for administration than education."

Fonnebeck and his wife, Nancy, have four children in Cassia County schools, one in first grade, one in fourth, one in seventh and one in tenth.

Bryan taught school for 40 years — 37 in Cassia County — and is now retired. She attended Albion Normal College and took advanced courses at ISU.

Bryan organized the Mini-Cassia Reading council and is a past president of the Idaho Reading Council. She is presently serving as a committee member on the International Reading Association.

She is also a member of Cassia County Education Association, Idaho Education Association and the National Education Association and chaired the teachers' committee that wrote the Language Arts curriculum for Cassia County schools.

"I am running for the school board because I think I have some expertise and information that would be beneficial," she said, adding, "I would like to see reading really stressed, not only in elementary school, but also in the upper grades."

Bryan believes school and community relations is an item that needs improving, and that classloads should be looked at carefully.

When asked about school budget and fiscal policies, Bryan said, "I think I need to get into that before I say too much about budget." But, she feels Idaho teacher salaries should be comparable to that of surrounding states.

"I'm a parent of five children and now my grandchildren are in the schools, so I definitely have an interest in our schools," Bryan said.

Consolidation focuses Kimberly Zone 3 race

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — All three candidates vying for the Kimberly School District seat in Zone 3 say consolidation of Kimberly, Hansen and Murtough schools is an idea worth considering.

Steve Grupe, 41, was raised in Carson City, Nev. and moved to Idaho 17 years ago. He has been a Kimberly resident for 15 years.

His education includes a bachelor's degree in social work from Utah State University, and after a tour of duty in Vietnam, a master's degree in education from the University of Idaho.

For the last 17 years, he has worked as a counselor, and for more than 10 years, he has also worked as an assistant manager for the Idaho Division of Vocational Rehabilitation. In his capacity, he says he has had extensive experience managing a budget, as well as in counseling people with their problems.

Grupe, who served on the Kimberly School Board in the years 1981-1984, says one of his main goals is to keep the existing staff and to try to promote people within the system, rather than going out of the district.

He said he also feels that if there is a teacher or administrator who is not doing what is considered a satisfactory job, he should be made aware of this, and be given the opportunity to correct the deficiencies before the board replaces him out of the blue. "I just believe in being fair," he said.

He also believes that the board members are answerable to the voters. "Obviously, unless it's a confidential issue, I believe the voters have a right to demand from a board member why they've made a certain decision, or what their feelings are. I think they'd have to be communicating."

Marvel Palmer, 50, was born in North Dakota, came to Idaho when she was 10 years old, and attended high school in McCall. She and her husband and their four children have lived in Southern Idaho for the last 28 years.

Since moving to Kimberly 12 years ago, she says she has been very involved with the schools, from working with the PTSA, to being a cheerleader sponsor, to being a member of the curriculum committee.

She has also been active in the Kimberly Booster Club, although she is not a member. Palmer's husband, Lloyd, is the club's president this year.

Because she has participated in many school-related activities, she says she has ideas for improvements in areas such as the math curriculum and the fine arts.

She says she sees no problem with the present course offerings, but that there is always the need for improvement in education.

Keith Carlson, 38, grew up in Hansen, and received a degree in agricultural economics from the University of Idaho. He is in the auction business and also farms. He is married and the father of three children.

Carlson says he doesn't have an axe to grind or grudge to bear in his desire to be on the board.

"Our experiences with the school board have been very good," he said. "We have an excellent school. The people who have gone before in the school board and the administration are doing a good job."

He says his desire to be on the board stems from the days when he attended school in Hansen and knew the school board members. "I respected a lot of those people. This is something that's been in the back of my head a long time," he said.

In his work as an auctioneer, he says he has learned good communication skills which are also vital person who serves on a school board. "That person is the link between the patrons and the taxpayers and the school administrators. I feel that a person who is on the school board ought to know what they're thinking out there, and represent those people's views — and that's what I really intend to do."

KENT SPAULDING

REPUBLICAN Candidate For MINIDOKA COUNTY SHERIFF

Kent Spaulding, candidate for Minidoka County Sheriff, has prepared himself for years to accept the mantle of responsibility that will be placed on him when he is elected.

Kent has served as a Deputy Sheriff for seven years both in Nevada and Idaho. The most exciting aspect of Kent's deputy service has been his sense of justice and fairness. He simply believes in protecting the citizenry and arresting the guilty, which he has always done with exceptional skill and professionalism.

Since 1980 Kent has also helped with the Intermountain Dive Team and the Mini-Cassia Search and Rescue Team. Not only has he served with distinction, but at his own expense he has distinguished himself as a leader in both organizations.

Communication remains one issue in Richfield school race

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

RICHFIELD — At least two of the candidates running for the Richfield School Board say they want the trustees to communicate more effectively with school administrators and the public.

But Board Chairman Sheryl Firth, who is seeking re-election in Zone 4, says the board is "making progress" on many of those problems.

Firth, 39, has five children and has lived in Richfield 13 years. She has experience in business and said, "I know what it takes to make it in college and what kind of educational background you need."

Firth said in her three years on the board, a lot of "tough decisions" had to be made. This school year, she said, the board terminated two employees (a clerk and a cook) in the middle of the year.

"We received some criticism, yes, but the majority of the people were behind us," Firth said. "A small group was very critical and very vocal. I am not ashamed of anything I've done."

She said she has tried to be very fair and has no personal vendettas. The school has had some discipline problems at the secondary grade levels, Firth said, but new programs have been started to help solve these problems.

"They're still not solved," she said. "But we are making progress."

Firth said her goals are to make the secondary stronger, to hire versatile and creative teachers, and, in general, to see the Richfield education system does well in preparing students for college or life after high school.

Firth is being challenged for her Zone 4 seat by Craig Vaughn.

Vaughn, 31, a Richfield native, is a rancher and a dairyman with three sons. He has also worked as a bookkeeper.

"I'd like to take my shot at it and see if I can improve the school a little bit," Vaughn said. "It's a new experience for me."

Also, he said, "a lot of people asked me" to challenge Firth because they were not happy with her as a trustee.

Consolidation is a major issue in Richfield, Vaughn said, adding, "I'm not for it."

In Zone 5, David Whitesell and Sharon Johnston have filed for the seat vacated by James Wellhausen, who is not seeking re-election.

Whitesell, 44, has six children. He works as a dairyman-farmer, was recently appointed to the Richfield Housing Committee and has lived most of his life in Richfield.

One problem with the school district, said Whitesell, is a recent rule that requires citizens to call three days in advance of a trustee meeting to get on the agenda.

"We've got to be on the agenda to be able to speak at the meetings," said Whitesell. "I'd like to see them open it up to the public."

Whitesell said he does not know if the school has other problems or what those problems might be. But, he said, "They have a lot of executive meetings and are asking for an override levy. The district is probably getting in financial trouble."

Johnston, 34, has four children and has lived in Richfield almost seven years. She and her husband Bill operate a farm and dairy business. Johnston says there is a lot of turmoil in the Richfield school system, and she would like to see more unity among teachers, administrators and parents.

"They don't get along," Johnston said. "They used to get along really well..."

Johnston said she wants to be a trustee because she is concerned about her community and the school system. Also, she said, "quite a few" have asked her to run for election. Johnston taught a disabled child one year in the Child Development Center of the Shoshone School district. This work, she said, was a learning experience that could help her as a trustee.

"I'm really concerned for the programs for kids that are slower learners or have special needs," Johnston said.

Castleford Zone 4 seat up for grabs

By DIANE SCHORZMAN
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — Greg Gandiaga will challenge incumbent Don Gray for the Zone 4 trustee position on the Castleford School Board.

"I'm running on the school board because I decided the people should have a choice in who they vote for," said Gandiaga. He said he is not running in order to make changes on the board, although he would like to help improve the district's curriculum.

"I think our school board is doing a good job and our kids are getting a good education, but there's always room for improvement," said Gandiaga.

Gandiaga, 30, is married and has two boys, ages 7 and 9. He attended the University of Idaho and now works for Blick Trucking in Castleford. He has been active in the community as a Cub Scout leader and Little League coach.

Gandiaga feels he is qualified to serve on the school board because he is a Castleford native and attended both grade school and high school there. He said he has a continued interest in the school because his two sons are enrolled there now.

Gandiaga said he supports the Change rule as it means for improvement of the individual student's education.

"I think the school boards have sort of forgotten about educating our kids and that's what it's all about," he said. Gray, 39, is seeking his second term on the school board. He said he is seeking re-election so he can use his three years' previous experience to help make long-term plans to benefit the district.

"We need to make plans and have goals for the future," said Gray. "The last three years have been rough for this school and I think the next three years might be worse because of the increased graduation requirements that will mean more classes and more teachers. We don't know yet what the apéates testing is going to cost and there is work to be done on the buildings. Costs in general are going up."

Gray has lived in Castleford all his life. He attended school there and graduated from Castleford High School. He received a degree in ag-economics at the University of Idaho. He now farms southwest of Castleford. He is married and has two sons, ages 3 and 4.

Gray is active in the Castleford quick response unit and the First Baptist Church.

Gray said he considered not running again because he was frustrated about not getting to do some of the things he and the community wanted to do, but he feels the school board has done a good job.

"The Castleford schools have always provided students with a good education, but, with community support, I think the attitudes of students and teachers can be changed for an even better education," he said.

2 continue in Blaine Zone 2 race

HAILLEY — Two candidates from Zone 2 are left to run for a seat on the Blaine County Board of Trustees after a third candidate was disqualified because of a boundary dispute.

Melita Sullivan will challenge incumbent Kathy Gouley in Tuesday's school board election.

Larry Sowersby, a resident of Hailley's Woodside subdivision, began his campaign for a position on the board, but in a special school board meeting last week, officials ruled Woodside residents are in fact in Zone 3 rather than Zone 2, making Sowersby ineligible for this race.

Incumbent Kathy Gouley has served as a trustee for the past four and a half years after being appointed to fill a vacancy. She was then re-elected three years ago in an unopposed race.

Gouley, 40, is married and has two children. She is a registered nurse and works on a part-time basis at both Blaine County Medical Center and Merit Community Hospital.

Gouley helped establish the child-birth and parent education classes in Blaine County and has been active in the March of Dimes. She has also served as president and crusade chairman for the American Cancer Society, establishing a chapter in the Wood River Valley.

"The big reason why I'm still running is I just think there's a lot of unresolved major decision-making that needs to take place," Gouley said.

Gouley identified several issues that need to be resolved, including forced teacher transfers, an extended building program, teacher evaluations and alternate funding for the district.

She said she is opposed to forced teacher transfers even though she acknowledges the teachers are employees of the district rather than employees of each individual school.

Gouley said the board is just beginning to work on solving the "funnel effect" — large classes at the elementary levels that will be moving on to junior and senior high. She said both the junior and senior high schools need expansion.

Gouley also said the board needs to address the problem of alternate funding. She served on a committee this past year to find ways to fund education in Blaine County.

Gouley has also been involved in teacher and administrative evaluations.

Melita Sullivan, 35, has lived in Hailley for seven years. She is married and has two children. She is office manager for the Elephant's Perch in Ketchum. Until last fall Sullivan served as Treasurer for the school district for four years.

Her working knowledge of district finances — budget preparation, filing reports, investing funds and preparing override levies — and her familiarity with Idaho Code, will be an asset to the board, she said.

Sullivan has served on the board of directors for the Idaho School of Business Officials and has been treasurer for the church council of the Valley of Peace Lutheran Church. She has also served as an aide at Hailley Elementary.

Sullivan said she decided to run for the trustee position because she is concerned the board's over the past couple of months, including the issue of not renewing Fierstein's contract.

"The morale of the school district is at an all time low, and it's not just the teachers, but the parents," Sullivan said. She explained she thought people who supported Fierstein felt their views had not been heard, and teachers were concerned about the threat of transfer.

On other issues, Sullivan said she is concerned about expanding enrollment and lack of space to house the students.

Sullivan said the board has to develop a plan to solve this problem now — either by expanding the high school or possibly building a new elementary school — and they need to decide how to pay for it.

Blaine

funding and thinks there should be a more equitable distribution. Out of the district's $7 million budget, Carter said the district only receives about $300,000 from the state.

Carter said since he has spent a lot of time as a volunteer in the schools, he would have a lot of first hand exposure to the school system.

Lynn Flickinger, 42, is a native Idahoan. She grew up in Pocatello and has lived in Blaine County for more than five years. She has been married for 16 years and has two children aged eight and 11 who attend Hemingway Elementary.

Flickinger worked as a full-time teacher for eight years, cutting back to substitute teaching when her kids started school. She has volunteered in the schools and has been active in the Parents' Auxiliary.

Flickinger has several goals she would like to achieve if she were elected to the board.

First, Flickinger said she would strive for the type of relationship between the school board, the administration and staff which would allow the administration and staff to do the job they were hired to do.

Secondly, she said, Blaine County does not seem to get its "fair share" of property tax money, so other avenues should be actively sought as a source of funding, such as grants and other funding for special programs.

Flickinger also feels a need for the addition of a full-time counselor in the elementary schools.

Flickinger said as a board member she would make sure the processes, such as grievances, complaints or problems, are followed according to district guidelines.

She said the non-renewal of Fierstein's contract was a situation where the public was not informed, creating a "shock" when it was learned he was not rehired. Flickinger said there should have been public input before the decision was made rather than after the fact.

Incumbent Peter Flood has served on the school board for the past-10 years. He is married with three children and is a landscape contractor. Flood declined a telephone interview and had no comment about his campaign.

A meet-the-candidates session will be held Monday evening at 7 p.m. at Hemingway Elementary School.

Wood River netters win state B title

By COLIN MULDOON
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — One can bet that on Saturday, Wood River High School tennis coach Nancy Smith was thinking two out of three ain't bad.

For the second time in three years, the Wolverines have claimed the Idaho state Class B high school tennis title at the Sun Valley Tennis Center. This year, they did it without grabbing one individual title.

In the A division, it was Boise's Capital High School leaving the competition behind, compiling 83 team points for the state title, followed by runner-up Centennial of Meridian with 44 and Borah in third with 41.

Wood River finished with 64 team points and second place Parma tallied 47. Kendrick took third with 42.

Prep tennis

Class B

Although Wood River is a perennial powerhouse in Class B tennis, Smith said her team was known that winning the state crown would not be a cakewalk, but what she didn't anticipate was the team depth of some of the competition.

"I don't think the kids ever thought it (the state title) was a wrap-up, ever," Smith said. "When we got here on Thursday, I didn't realize Clearwater Valley had 11 players and BK (Bishop Kelley) and Parma had eight."

"When we came here this (Saturday) morning, I was surprised we were ahead of Bishop Kelly by one," Smith added. "We said it would come down to the last match."

The only Wolverine with hopes of winning an individual title was Florian Esinger, but he had his work cut out for him in meeting two-time state champ Ron Hewett of Kendrick in the boys' singles final. Hewett, however, rolled to his third state crown in straight sets 6-4, 6-1.

Wood River's Bridget Thornton, who suffered an unexpected second-round upset on Friday to Vallivue's Staci Yamamoto, avenged her loss by shutting down Yamamoto in the consolation semifinals 7-5, 6-3. In the second-place final, however, Payette's Jana Baxter fought Thornton in the first set 7-6 and then cruised to a 6-0 second set victory.

Becky Clayton of Capital defeated Borah freshman Chris Shin, 6-7, 7-6 (7-5), 7-5 in a marathon final match in girls' A singles, while Steve Schosberger of Pocatello's Highland High School won the boys' A singles championship in the A division over Tyler Hansen of Meridian's Centennial High School, 6-3, 7-6 (7-6).

Schosberger shared the A mixed doubles' title a year ago.

The three A division doubles titles went to Capital, Borah and Boise. In the B division, Hewett's sister Renee took the girls' singles title, beating Jana Baxter of Payette, 6-3, 7-6, in the girls' singles final.

Parma, Clearwater Valley of Kootenai and Payette won the three B division doubles championships.

Tiger boys, Buhl girls capture state B prep golf titles

By The Times-News

HAYDEN LAKE — Jerome's boys' golf team capitalized on its nine-stroke lead at the end of Friday's first round to cruise to the state Class B high school championship here Saturday.

Buhl, tied with Kellogg at the end of the first round, Friday, outshot the Wildcats by 17 strokes Saturday to win the girls' B division. Jerome's girls finished fourth.

Boise High's Matt Ennis sank a 40-foot birdie putt on the 18th green Saturday to give the Braves a one-stroke victory over Borah for the boys' Class A championship.

In girls' Class A competition, Capital beat Borah of Boise by four strokes for the title. Twin Falls was third and Bonneville fourth.

The teams struggled all day through cold and rainy weather conditions on the Avondale Golf and Tennis Club.

Jerome shot 329 Saturday to go with its 315 Friday for a total score of 644, a whopping 25 strokes better than runner-up American Falls. Buhl was fourth at 673.

"The kids didn't play as well today as they did yesterday, but they played solid enough to win," said Jerome Coach Dale Mowrer, who collected his second state trophy.

"This championship feels especially good because all five kids contributed. We've had five kids who've won medals this year and five kids who finished fifth."

Luke Rowland led the way for the Tigers on Saturday with a 78 on the par-72 course, tying with Buhl's Robby Sauer for medal honors for the day in the B division. Jerome's Jeff Van Orman had a 79 and teammates Shene Burton and Chad Thompson both had 86s.

Buhl's Kade Wilson, the B tournament medalist from Friday, shot an 81 Saturday, while Scott Erickson had 89 and Derek Meyer 94.

"I hoped when the season started we might have a chance to win it," said Mowrer. "Early in the season we took a trip up to Lewiston and played in a tournament and I think that helped us. The kids played with a lot of a poise up here."

Buhl's girls shot 287 Saturday to break a deadlock with Kellogg, which ended Friday's first round tied with the Indians at 293. The Indians ended up with a two-day score of 580 to Kellogg's 697. Jerome was fourth at 685.

Twin Falls' girls, who finished fourth Friday, outshot Bonneville of Idaho Falls 298 to 323 Saturday to move up to third in the A division final standings. The Bruins ended up with 618 to the Bees' 629.

The boys' teams from Twin Falls, Minico and Burley failed to make the cut in Friday's first round and did not compete Saturday.

No individual scores were available at press time Saturday for either the A or B girls.

Boise's win in the boys' A division came down to the last hole. Although his teammates were aware that the score was tied, Ennis was not, and his long putt earned the Braves a 628-629 win. Both Boise and Borah had battled all day.

"It was five guys from each team going at it. We've had a running battle with Borah all year," Boise coach Gary Larson said. "This was about as close as it can get."

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's considered young but the Twin Falls baseball team drew its leadership from two of its few veterans Saturday in claiming its second consecutive trip to the state Class A tournament.

4-3 to claim second place in the Region III tournament here Saturday.

The Bruins now advance to the state finals in Boise next Thursday where they are slated to meet the No. 1 team from Region II, probably the defending state A champion Meridian

Warriors, who have lost only two games this year.

Twin Falls, which has a history of not making it in the door-to-door situation, gave Bruins fans a thrill by allowing Pocatello two runs in the top of the seventh, the tying tally on second base before Hayes finally got the strikeout that locked the decision up.

"I wasn't worried," said Hayes about entering the top of the seventh. See BRUINS on Page C3

Indians blow 6-5 lead in last inning

By The Times-News

MORELAND — A year ago on the Snake River High School diamond, Buhl blew a late-inning lead with a series of errors in the opening game of the Idaho State Class B baseball tournament. The Indians did much the same here Saturday in the consolation final of the District 4-5-6 B tournament, and it may have cost the Indians the chance to go back to state.

and two strikes on their hitter, and he gets a home run," lamented Coach Joe Shepard of his Indians' 8-6 loss to St. Anthony's South Fremont High School. "That ties it, then they get a single and a our left-fielder drops a routine fly ball, and they get the winning run."

The Indians then finished third in this five-team tournament, with district champion Shelley and runner-up South Fremont earning spots in the state B tournament, which starts in Weiser Thursday. It's possible that Buhl could get an at-large invitation, but Shepard wasn't holding out much hope Saturday night.

The tournament manager talked to the Snake River coach Friday, and See INDIANS on Page C2

Sun Valley's Allender makes USST Alpine Select Team for next year

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) — Adele Allender of Sun Valley was named Thursday to the Alpine Select Team of the U.S. Ski Team for the 1988-89 season.

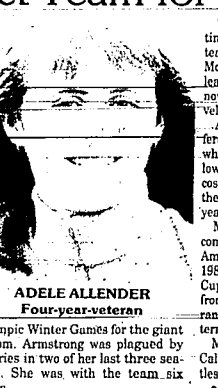

Allender, 23, has spent four years on the USST. She was a member of the "C" squad last year and during the 1984-85 and 1985-86 seasons and skied on the "B" squad during 1986-87.

The Alpine Select Team is the second-tier squad after the "elite" team, which takes part in World Cup competition.

Alpine skiers Felix McGrath and Tamara McKinney led the athletes named to the elite squad.

Head men's coach Ueli Luthi and women's coach Paul Major also named 31 others to the U.S. Ski Team and Alpine Select Team rosters.

Team officials also announced the retirement of Debbie Armstrong, who won a gold medal in the 1984

Olympic Winter Games for the giant slalom. Armstrong was plagued by injuries in two of her last three seasons. She was with the team six years.

"In terms of my ski career, it is time," Armstrong said in a letter to team Alpine Program Director John McMurtry. "I feel like I have learned so much in this area and now I am so eager to expand and develop in new areas."

Armstrong, 25, of Seattle, suffered a knee injury in 1986, and while she came back strong the following season, another leg injury cost her the chance to compete in the Olympic downhill earlier this year in Calgary.

McGrath, 25, of Norwich, Vt., is coming off the best season by an American male alpine skier since 1984. He finished third in the World Cup Slalom standings and climbed from 60th to sixth in the slalom rankings—published by the International Federation of Skiing. McKinney, 25, of Olympic Valley, Calif., has won four World Cup titles and more individual World Cup

NBA playoffs: Nuggets rally late, beat Mavs

DALLAS (AP) — Denver guard Bill Hanzlik was as surprised as the sell-out crowd of 17,002 in Reunion Arena that Coach Doug Moe chose him to be the hero Saturday.

But he had in feeling it would work out — and it did.

Hanzlik drove for a layup with three seconds to play, giving the Nuggets their first lead of the game and a 107-105 victory over Dallas in Game 3 of their NBA Western Conference semifinal series.

"I hadn't been shooting well, so Dallas never expected me to take the shot," Hanzlik said. "But for some reason, things were going to happen. Everything I'd been doing in the last few minutes had gone right."

Hanzlik scored only nine points in the game, but had the tying and winning baskets to give the Nuggets a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series. The Mavericks host Game 4 Sunday night.

Pro basketball

He pulled Denver even at 105-105 with 56 seconds to play, then grabbed a rebound with 20 seconds to go and called time out to set up the winning play.

Hanzlik said the final play was designed to make the Mavericks think that Mike Evans would take the final shot.

But Dallas forward Sam Perkins still couldn't believe the Nuggets would place the game in Hanzlik's hands.

"I don't really think they were going to him," Perkins said. "The clock was just running down and they took a chance. I don't think it was a designed play."

Moe attributed part of the winning basket to luck.

"You have to get lucky sometimes," he said. "You would think Hanzlik would be the last player you would guard, so we set up the play for him. It was supposed to be a jump shot, but he made a good fake on (Roy) Tarpley and made the shot."

"It's funny because during the third quarter I told him never to drive into the lane again."

Denver never led until the Hanzlik hit his game-winner, but kept within striking distance until the end.

"They hit all the big shots at the end," Dallas Coach John MacLeod said. "But I thought there was a lot of positive things that happened for us in the game."

The Mavericks jumped off to a 10-2 lead and led 61-53 at halftime as the Nuggets, who shot poorly in losing the second game to the Mavericks, 112-108, put themselves in an early hole again, hitting just eight of their 24 shots in the first quarter.

Dallas' biggest lead of the half was a 42-31 advantage with 8:38 to go.

The Mavs still led 87-78 entering the final quarter, but the Nuggets moved to within 90-87 with 9:20 left in the game and cut it to one with 5:59 left on a basket by Alex English, who led them with 23 points.

Denver finally pulled even with 55 seconds left when Hanzlik scored after Lafayette Lever stole the ball from Dallas' Rolando Blackman.

Perkins, who led Dallas with 17 points, missed a jumper and Hanzlik rebounded and called time out, setting up his game-winning basket.

led Michael Jordan as the Detroit Pistons beat the Chicago Bulls 101-79 Saturday to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven NBA Eastern Conference semi-final.

Johnson scored 13 of his points in the final quarter to kill any chance the Bulls might have had for a comeback.

He also was part of a three-man defensive alignment with Thomas and Joe Dumars that held Jordan scoreless for the first 17 minutes. Jordan, who had been averaging 41.6 points a game in his first seven playoff games, finished with 23.

Less than two minutes in, Jordan and Bill Laimbeer traded punches. Laimbeer was called for an offensive foul and Jordan a technical. Seconds later Rick Mahorn and Sam Vincent were showing and Mahorn drew a technical.

Once matters were resolved, the Pistons won on a 16-1 run led by Thomas to open a 2-1 lead, which they expanded to 37-18 midway through the second quarter.

Jordan's first basket came with 5:23 left in the quarter and sent him on a 12-point tear. But Laimbeer and Thomas maintained a steady scoring pace and the Bulls still trailed 62-38 at the half.

With Jordan and Charles Oakley hitting in a 9-2 run, the Bulls managed to get within 11 points at 58-47 and finally down to 10 at 65-55 with 3:37 left in the period on a basket by Jordan but the Pistons held on and baskets by Vinnie Johnson and Thomas in the final minute gave them a 73-58 lead going into the final quarter.

Johnson then took charge of the scoring.

NHL playoffs: Bruins skate into Stanley Cup showdown with Oilers

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins are on the way to the Stanley Cup finals after surviving what coach Terry O'Reilly called "a death struggle" with the New Jersey Devils.

"When they got to within one early in the third period, I think I wanted off for five or five minutes on the bench, but the goal by Craig Janney opened it up," O'Reilly said Saturday night after the Bruins won the Wales Conference championship with a 6-2 victory over the Devils.

Janney, a rookie center, spoiled New Jersey's comeback bid by scoring his second goal of the game with just under eight minutes remaining after the Devils cut a 3-0 deficit to 3-2 and had several chances to tie the game.

By winning the seventh and deciding game of a surprisingly tough series with the Devils, the Bruins advanced to a showdown with the Oilers, the defending Stanley Cup champions, beginning Wednesday in Edmonton.

But it wasn't easy. The Devils had several good chances in the first few minutes, only to be stymied by Boston goaltender Rejean Lemelin.

"We got off to a shaky start, but

Hockey

Reggie made some great saves and we came up big after the first five minutes," O'Reilly said.

After that, it looked easy for the Bruins when first-period goals by Janney and Moe Lemay three minutes apart and Rick Middleton's tally early in the second period gave them a 3-0 lead.

But John MacLean scored late in the second period and Kirk Muller's goal early in the third cut the lead to one.

"We weren't struggling, we were just pressing too hard," Janney said. "We were thinking of the score, but we worked hard and got a break. I got the goal, but it could have been anyone."

"We went so far and we accomplished so much we couldn't let it end on a sour note," Lemelin said.

Janney's second goal deflated the Devils and Cam Neely's tally less than two minutes later gave the Bruins some momentum.

But the Devils, making their first playoff appearance since moving to New Jersey in 1982 and only the second in the franchise's 14-year history, had nothing to be ashamed of.

"I don't think (Coach) Jim Schoenfeld can be any prouder of the way they performed," O'Reilly said. "They never quit."

"I certainly couldn't ask any more from my players," Schoenfeld said. "We've accomplished a lot, we're a good team, but we came up a little short."

"I congratulated Terry and told him not to stop here. If we had to get beaten, I'm glad it was by a guy like him."

After Muller pulled the Devils to within 3-2 by converting a passout from Aaron Bruen, at 3:41 of the third period, Lemelin made several key saves to keep the Devils from tying the score.

"It's pretty tough battling back from three goals," Devils defenseman Ken Daneyko said. "We gave it a heck of a shot. We just couldn't go far enough."

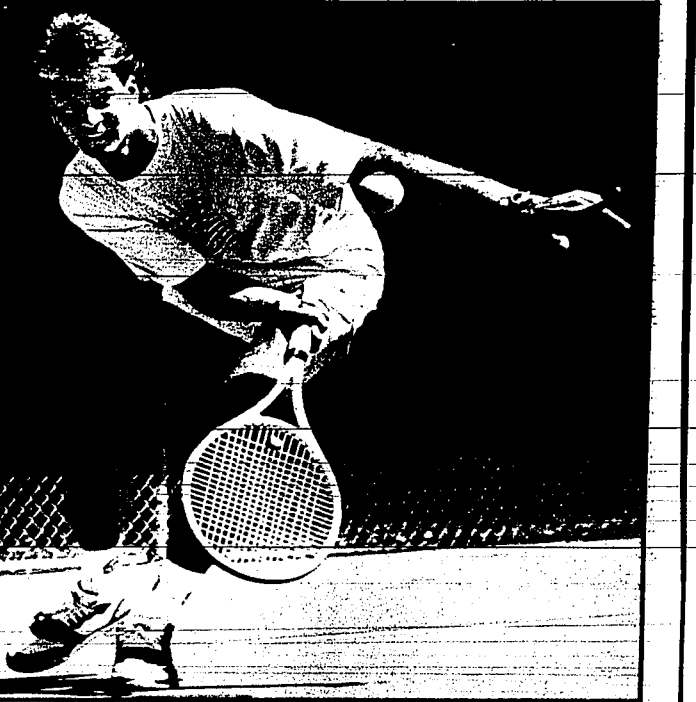

Janney, who joined the Bruins after playing with the U.S. Olympic Team, then dashed the Devils' comeback hopes when he intercepted a pass by Daneyko in the New Jersey end, went in alone and swept the puck past Sean Burke at 12:05.

Earlier Saturday, Bill left-hander Mike Brady struck out the side in the second of the seventh inning to give the Indians a 13-12 lead in a game that was suspended because of darkness Friday night. That victory put the Indians into a rematch with South Fremont, which had beaten Bill 10-2 in the tourney opener on Wednesday.

Buhl erased a 1-0 lead by the Cougars in the first by tying the game in the bottom of the inning on Casey Boyer's triple and Mike Brady's double. They made it 4-1 in the bottom of the second when Jeremy Schabot singled, John Karol walked and Darryl Lierman tripled, driving in both runs. Derek Ruether followed with the single which scored Lierman.

AL: Rangers tie record by winning eighth straight Golf

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Mike Stanley's two-run homer and Jeff Russell's effective pitching in his first start of the season sparked the Texas Rangers to a record-tying eighth straight victory Saturday night, 6-3 over the Kansas City Royals.

The eight-game streak equaled a club record set in 1976 and matched in 1979.

Russell, 2-0, promoted from middle relief into the rotation after Bobby Witt's demotion to the minors earlier in the week, scattered eight hits in 7 1/2 innings, his longest outing since 1985. Russel hadn't started a game since last August.

The Rangers tagged loser Charlie Leibrandt, 1-0, for six hits and four runs in the second inning, sending Kansas City to its eighth setback in nine games.

Scott Fletcher's single drove in two runs and Stanley and Jerry Browne added run-scoring singles after Larry Parrish started the uprising with a one-out double.

Cleveland 4 Milwaukee 6

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Joe Carter singled in the go-ahead run in the fifth inning and the Cleveland Indians defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 6-4 Saturday for their fifth straight victory.

Carter's two-out single in the fifth broke a 2-2 tie and came after a single by Willie Upshaw and a balk on Milwaukee starter Mike Birkbeck, 1-3. The Indians then added three runs

Chicago 7 Toronto 5

CHICAGO (AP) — Light-hitting Fred Manrique hit a tie-breaking three-run homer and drove in a fourth run with a bunt single Saturday night, powering the Chicago White Sox to a 7-5 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

San Francisco 3 New York Mets 2

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Robby Thompson's wind-blown, two-run triple keyed a three-run rally and gave the San Francisco Giants a 3-2 victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

Right-hander Mike Krukow, 2-2, continued his career mastery of the Mets, giving up five hits in 7 1/2 innings in winning a pitching duel with right-hander Ron Darling, 3-3, who yielded three hits in seven innings. Allee Hamaker finished up for his fourth save.

Ex-Giant Mickey Sasser gave the Mets a 1-0 lead in the third by leading off with his first major league home run. Sasser was the only Mets' batter to reach first base through the first five innings.

The Giants, winning two games in a row for the first time since April 18, erupted for all of their runs and three of their hits in the third inning. It was the first time since April 19 that New York has lost two straight.

Jose Uribe led off with a single to right and Krukow sacrificed. Brett Butler snapped an 0-for-19 slump with an infield single and Thompson followed with a towering drive to right center.

Center fielder Len Dykstra appeared to misjudge the ball and it sailed over his head in a stiff wind for a two-run triple. Thompson scored on Will Clark's groundout to first for a 3-1 lead.

Krukow, now 18-7 lifetime against New York, was touched for a run in the sixth. Kevin Elster led off with a single, Darling sacrificed and Elster went to third on a wild pitch. He scored on a bloop single by Dykstra.

After Thompson's triple, Darling retired the next 14 batters before leaving for a pinch-hitter in the seventh.

Boston 3 Seattle 0

BOSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens pitched a three-hitter and struck out 10 en route to his fourth shutout of the season as the Boston Red Sox beat the Seattle Mariners 3-0 on Saturday. Clemens, 6-1, walked a season-high five and was helped by three double plays as he beat Scott Bankhead, 0-1.

It was the sixth time this year Clemens has struck out 10 or more in a game and the 27th time in his career.

The five walks were the most allowed by Clemens since last June 6, when he walked seven versus Detroit.

Minnesota 7 Detroit 0

DETROIT (AP) — Les Straker pitched his first major-league shutout and Mark Davidson hit his second big-league homer Saturday as the Minnesota Twins defeated the Detroit Tigers 7-0.

Straker, 1-1, who came off the 15-day supplemental disabled list 10 days earlier, allowed four hits. He walked one and struck out one.

Straker gave up a leadoff hit single to Gary Pettis in the first, then didn't allow another hit until the fifth inning when Chet Lemon had a one-out single.

San Diego 3 Montreal 2

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Ed Whitson and Lance McCullers teamed on a four-hitter and Roberto Alomar singled home the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning Saturday night as the San Diego Padres beat the Montreal Expos 3-2.

Whitson, 3-2, gave up three hits in seven innings and struck out five. He hit an RBI single in the fifth that put the Padres ahead 2-1. McCullers finished with one-hit relief for his third save.

Manrique's four runs batted in made a winner of Dave LaPointe, 4-2, who yielded nine hits and three runs in seven innings.

Toronto scored an unearned run in the first inning. Lloyd Moseby singled to right and continued to second when Ivan Calderon fell to his knees while fielding the ball. Moseby took third on a single by Juan Beniquez and scored when the White Sox failed to turn a double play on George Bell's grounder.

Chicago took a 2-1 lead in the second thanks to two players called up from Vancouver of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League a day earlier. Russ Morman singled with one out and Dave Gallagher followed with a triple.

Kal Daniels doubled to left to start the game, then beat Dunne's throw to third on Barry Larkin's grounder. Chris Sabo's infield single scored Daniels before Dunne waked Eric Davis and Paul O'Neill in succession to force in the second run.

Bo Diaz struck out, but Lloyd McClendon hit an RBI single and Jeff Treadway's sacrifice fly made it 4-0. Dunne settled and retired the next 18 batters.

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston left-hander Bob Knepper continued his surprising start Saturday, becoming the first Astro pitcher to win five games this season with a 3-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Dave Smith pitched the ninth to gain his sixth save.

Al Nipper, 0-1, was the loser, giving up three runs on three hits, walking three and striking out one in six innings.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the first when Shawon Dunston singled, moved to third on a Mark Grace single and scored on Andre Dawson's sacrifice fly. It was Dawson's 1,000th career RBI.

Cockrell joins Davis' staff

MOSCOW (AP) — Fletcher Cockrell, formerly an assistant at Odessa, Texas, Community College, was named Friday as an assistant basketball coach at Idaho.

Cockrell, 29, is one of two assistants who will serve under new Vandale head coach Kermit Davis. Davis took over last month for Tim Floyd, who left to take the New Orleans head coaching job.

Davis will select his second assistant this week, the school said. Davis and Cockrell were finalists in 1984 for the Southwest Mississippi Junior College head coaching job, which Davis later won. The two chatted for the first time after Cockrell left the interview room.

Cockrell has been an assistant at Odessa for the past four years, during which the team compiled a 95-31 record. This past season, Odessa finished at 30-5.

Prior to his stint at Odessa, Cockrell was an assistant for two years at McNeese State in Lake Charles, La.

Idaho, of the Big Sky Conference, has recruited two players from Odessa for next season.

Hanchey, Meyerhoeffer lead

TWIN FALLS — Just 10 hours after coming home from University of Arizona, Jason Meyerhoeffer joined with Perry Hanchey Saturday to take the lead in the Canyon Springs two-man best ball tournament.

Meyerhoeffer and Hanchey, who knocked in an eagle chip on No. 4, went seven under par on the reorganized Canyon Springs course that sports a 74 par. They hold a three-stroke lead over Kevin Packard and Doyle Dugger going into today's closing round. Jim Purves and Barry Esip are at 71 with Jon Rasmussen and Bill Brodeen at 72.

In the second flight, a three-way tie developed for the gross lead among Dave Harris and Art Watkins; Joel Ransdell and Shawn Sees, and Dwight Sandmark and Rex Goley. Locked at 77 were Pat Fich and Everton Sequira and Bill Stuart and Orville Kemper. Steve Fahrenwald and Steve Behn led the net division at 59.

Jaguars second at state

JACKPOT — The endurance of freshman State Downs and teammate Alicia Torero in the distance events carried the Jackpot Jaguars to second place in the Nevada State Class B Track and Field Championships.

Downs won three individual titles and set one state record along the way. She won the 800-meter run in 2 minutes, 46 seconds, the 1,600 in 6:22, and the 3200 in 13:02.2. The latter is a new state Class B standard.

Torero seconded Downs in the 800 and 1,600 in 2:51 and 6:25, respectively, and was third in the 3,200 in 14:10.

ISU signs seventh player

POCATELLO — Idaho State University has signed a seventh basketball player to a letter of intent.

He is Craig Murray, a 6-foot, 1-inch, 170-pound transfer from the University of Hawaii. Murray will not be eligible for the 1988-89 season, but will play in 1989-1990.

Murray, from Seattle, started the first half of the 1987-88 season at point guard for the Rainbow Warriors, averaging 11 points a game. He was the backup point guard at Hawaii as a freshman, averaging 5 points.

"Craig is a very intense, gifted athlete," said ISU Coach Jim Boutin. "He has great quickness and jumping ability. He is a big-time leaper. Craig can score, penetrate and dish the ball off."

Boutin's previous signees include two former JC players, center Pat Clark and forward Todd Peterson, as well as JC transfer Butch Mettlinger, incoming sophomore Robert Andersson and freshmen Jeff Clark and Scott Roberts.

Auto-racing

INDIANAPOLIS — Rick Mears muscled into the pole position for the 72nd Indianapolis 500 Saturday, setting one- and four-lap speed records as he mastered a slippery track that ambushed a bitterly disappointed Mario Andretti three hours earlier.

The team, owned by alter-haired business entrepreneur Roger Penske, grabbed the spotlight from Andretti by sweeping the three front-row positions among the 19 drivers who qualified for the May 29 race on the first of the four days of time trials.

Danny Sullivan, the 1986 Indy winner, took the middle of the first row, between teammates Mears and four-time and defending champion Al Unser.

Mears, a two-time Indy winner, grabbed his fourth Indianapolis pole and his eighth front-row start in 11 races, at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway with his record run, which featured a sizzling lap of 220.453 mph on his first trip around the historic 2½-mile oval.

Each of the three succeeding laps on his 10-mile qualifying run was slower as the track surface turned slippery from an unremitting mid-afternoon sun. But Mears' four-lap average of 219.198 easily broke the record of 216.828 he set in 1986.

The expected battle for the pole between Mears and Andretti failed to materialize after Andretti became the first qualifier of the day with a disappointing 214.692 mph average.

That four-lap speed, with a fast lap of 217.014, was far off the practice speeds which the 1969 Indy winner had been throwing at Mears throughout the week leading up to the opening of qualifying.

Until Mears turned a 222.827 lap in Saturday morning's practice session, he had been virtually everyone in the estimated Speedway crowd of 200,000 hoping to see another record. Sullivan expected his teammate to take the top spot away from him.

"It's been incredible all month and on oval he's as good as they get," Sullivan said.

Mears, smiling and talking with friends and officials before climbing into the cockpit of his bright yellow car, then went out and did what he was expected to do, following his record lap with speeds of 219.877, 216.781 and 217.702.

"I really thought that as hot as it got today, we'd have trouble running that quick," he said. "I used up the freshness in the tires on the first two laps and after that just hung on."

A small condition change can make a big lap time change because of the speeds we're running now," Mears added. "That's what happened today. We really had to kind of modulate the throttle and pedal that thing through some of the turns on the last two laps."

Mears said he conferred with both of his teammates before going out for his attempt.

"I watched the other cars and got to talk with Al and Danny and that was a big help," he noted. "We thought about making some changes, but after talking to my teammates and thinking about it, we decided to stay where we were. It was the right decision."

"A lot of people asked me if it was a relief when I saw what happened to Mario because it gave me an open door. But it was just the opposite. He's such a competitor, if that can happen to him, then the same thing could happen to us."

Only the top two in Saturday's qualifying were faster than Andretti's pole-winning four-lap average of 215.390—a year ago in similar weather conditions.

Joining Andretti in the second row were Al Unser Jr. at 214.186 and Arnie吕endyk of The Netherlands at 213.611.

Among the drivers who did not qualify Saturday were four-time winner A.J. Foyt, three-time champion Johnny Rutherford, 1986 Indy winner Bobby Rahal and Jim Crawford of Scotland.

He attacked Carlsson's looping top-spin groundstrokes and came through with big-first serves, while the Swede played exclusively from the baseline and committed more errors than usual.

With Carlsson leading 3-2 in the first set, Lendl lost only four points in running off the next four games.

Italian finale pits Lendl, Perez-Roldan

ROME (AP) — Top-seeded Ivan Lendl, looking sharp after a rain delay that lasted more than five hours, powered into the final of the Italian Open tennis championships Saturday by beating fifth-seeded Kent Carlsson of Sweden 6-3, 6-3.

No. 14 Guillermo Perez-Roldan of Argentina topped unseeded Randal Agener of Haiti 6-3, 6-3 in the other semifinal of the $825,000 clay-court tournament.

The semifinals were played simultaneously at the Foro Italico Saturday night as a result of a heavy afternoon downpour that interrupted the Lendl-Carlsson match at 1-1 in the first set.

On center court, with the stands half-empty, Lendl played his best match of the tournament after three straight lackluster three-set victories.

Sluman takes one-shot lead in Nelson Classic

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Jeff Sluman, a non-winner on the PGA Tour, birdied the lead hole with a 20-foot putt to take a one-shot lead over filtering Ben Crenshaw and Bruce Lietzke Saturday after 54-holes of the $750,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Sluman shot a 3-under par 67 for a 200 total, 10-under par, over the Tournament Players Course at Las Colinas.

Crenshaw, who had a two-shot lead when the day began, bogeyed three of the last five holes and staggered to the clubhouse with a par 70 and a 201 total.

Lietzke, who hasn't been within one shot of the lead in a year, had a three-putt bogey on the final green for a 66 to tie Crenshaw, the 1983 Nelson winner. Lietzke won the Nelson in 1981.

Sluman, whose highest finish was a second place at the Tournament Players Championship when he lost a playoff to Sandy Lyle, is one of the steepest players on tour. In 1987, the New Yorker won a degree from Florida State, was in the money 22 times on 32 tour events.

Sluman had a three-birdie, no-bogey round to jump into contention for the $135,000 first place prize.

Golf

Crenshaw went out in 31 but began his bogey run when he missed a 6-foot putt on the 183-yard par 3 No. 13. He was blocked by a tree after his tee shot on the 390-yard par 4 No. 14 and bogeyed again.

Crenshaw, known as one of the finest putters on the tour, then three-putted the easy 554-yard par 5 No. 16 green from 90-feet.

Paul Azinger, who used only 25 putts to shoot a 65 on par 63, just a shot off the course record, to move into contention at 204.

"It was a day when everything went in," said Azinger. "I was thinking about a 59 after I made a 40-foot birdie putt on the 14th hole. A 59 (the PGA Tour record) was very achievable. However, I parred in from that point. It was very exciting."

Defending champion Fred Couples shot a 65 for a 206 on a sun-splashed day in which Nelson official Ron Case estimated attendance at 50,000 fans.

Lopez takes one-stroke lead in Chrysler-Plymouth LPGA

MIDDLETOWN, N.J. (AP) — Nancy Lopez, seeking her third win of the year, fired a 2-under-par 70 Saturday to take a one-stroke lead over Alice Ritzman after two rounds of the $250,000-Chrysler-Plymouth Classic.

Lopez had four birdies and two bogeys on the 6,232-yard Navesink Country Club Course and was at Sunday 138 after 36 holes. Her round tied her with three other players for the best showing of the day.

"I have been playing real, real well," said Lopez, who has won 38 times on the LPGA-Tour and ended the year with the goal of becoming the "Tour's No. 1 player again." There have been just a few putts that have kept me from having a great year. I haven't had a great round in a long time."

Lopez, currently second in earnings on the Tour this year, rolled in 5-foot birdie putt on the first hole, sank a 10-foot on No. 4, curled in a 40-footer on the sixth hole and dropped a 10-footer on No. 11. The Hall of Famer had her only bogey on the front side on Nos. 2 and 7, when she missed the green.

Lopez lost a playoff in last week's Crestar Classic. In all, the last four LPGA events have been decided by playoffs.

Ritzman, who has not won since joining the Tour in 1978, had a wild round of 71 that featured five birdies, four bogeys and three par-saving putts from at least 15 feet.

"My putter saved me a lot today," said Ritzman, who shared the first-round lead with Lopez. "I was up and down and all over."

He then got the decisive edge in the sixth game, breaking Carlsson for a 4-2 lead with a blistering forehand service return.

Lendl served a double-fault on his first match point, but made good on the second, firing a hard first serve that Carlsson slipped into the net.

Perez-Roldan's victory halted the surprising run of Agener, who had upset second-seeded Mats Wilander and American teen-ager Andre Agassi.

Winter wheat shows increase

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Farmers soon will be harvesting a winter wheat crop estimated at 1.62 billion bushels, up 4 percent from last year's production, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

The first forecast of the season, based on surveys May 1, compared with a 1987 winter wheat output of 1.56 billion bushels. The average yield was estimated at 40.7 bushels per harvested acre, up from last year's 39.8 bushels per acre.

Farmers are expected to have about 39.8 million acres for harvest this year, up 1 percent from 39.3 million in 1987, the report said.

Winter wheat is planted in the fall and harvested the following summer. It makes up about three-fourths of total U.S. wheat production.

No 1988 production estimates for spring wheat, corn and other major spring-planted crops were included. Those will be issued by USDA later in the growing season.

The outlook for wheat prices at the farm also has brightened, reflecting brisk export demand and a reduction in once-awful U.S. wheat stockpiles.

In a related supply-and-demand report, USDA projected total wheat production this year, based on historical trends, at 2.17 billion bushels, up slightly from 2.1 billion bushels in 1987. That would include winter wheat and other kinds planted this spring for harvest in 1988.

The report also projected the U.S. wheat stockpile to decline further to around 796 million bushels by the end of the coming marketing year on May 31, 1989, compared with more than 1.23 billion bushels of old-crop wheat expected to be carried over this June 1.

Carl Schwensen, executive vice president of the National Association of Wheat Growers, said the expected reduction in U.S. wheat inventories will mean tighter supplies in the year ahead.

Does that mean the United States is running low on wheat after the recent years of huge surpluses? "That's relatively correct," Schwensen said. "And if we're going to stay in the world (export) market, we're going to have to have adequate supplies for our customers. That's why we feel the acreage reserve level can be relaxed and farmers can have the opportunity to market more bushels in the 1989 season."

Schwensen referred to a farm law provision that limits USDA to no more than a 20 percent land-tiling requirement when the wheat stockpile is projected to drop below a billion bushels. At a projected 796 million bushels on May 31, 1989, that would be well below the mark.

Wheat market prices were projected for 1988-89 at an average range of $2.80 to $3.20 per bushel, compared with $2.55 estimated for 1987-88.

The indicated production of winter wheat, based on May 1, prospects, are listed here. The first numbers show the total production in thousands of bushels. The second numbers are the average yields per acre for the major states.

1 percent loans available

TWIN FALLS — The Farmers Home Administration is offering 1 percent interest loans and some grants to pay for repairs and improvements which will result in removal of identified safety and health hazards.

County supervisors have the authority to issue either loans or grants.

To obtain a grant, a person must be 62 years or older and be unable to repay a loan, said Twin Falls County supervisor James G. Robbins.

Loans are available to very low income people who are owner occupants, and possess repayment capability. Applicants must demonstrate they are credit worthy but cannot obtain credit from other sources including the FmHA 502 Rural Housing Loan program.

Combination loans and grants cannot exceed $7,500 and grants alone cannot exceed $5,000.

For more information call the county FmHA office. In Twin Falls County contact Roni Burch, assistant supervisor at 733-8891. In Gooding County call David Shaver, the county supervisor at 934-4468.

Water experts say to mulch

KIMBERLY (AP) — With farmers facing their second straight drought, researchers at the University of Idaho are recommending straw mulch in the irrigation furrows of sloping fields to save water and boost yields and quality.

In fact, experts at the school's Conservation Research Center in Kimberly warn that irrigation sets must be cut back when a light straw mulch is used to avoid overwatering and possibly rotting crops like potatoes or enhancing the atmosphere for moisture-loving diseases.

In experiments conducted in 1984 and 1985, soil scientist Mel Brown determined that irrigation times could be cut in half on sloping bean fields where a pound of straw was spread in every 100 feet of furrow.

Depending on flow rates and slopes, water runoff from the furrows was cut to as low as 11 percent from 44 percent on fields without straw while soil erosion was reduced up to 90 percent and yields rose as much as 62 percent.

"I think that would apply, no matter what crop was grown," Brown said.

UI reinstates hay tests

PARMA (AP) — The University of Idaho has reinstated an alfalfa testing program to help hay growers and dairy operators determine when their crop is in top shape for harvest.

The UI College of Agriculture will conduct its Alfalfa Quality Watch in Bingham, Camas, Canyon, Elmore, Gooding, Jefferson, Owyhee, Twin Falls and Washington counties. The service was offered for the first time last year in five counties.

Forage specialist Robert Romanko said field analyses enable hay growers to time harvest to when conditions are best. Hay quality depends on such parameters as the percentage of digestible dry matter in hay, which affects milk production.

Romanko said "premium" hay usually is worth up to $30 more per ton than "good" hay, which in turn, brings in up to $20 more per ton than "fair" hay.

Samples of first-cutting hay are dispatched to laboratories for testing. Five weekly analyses can cover a field from maturation until it reaches "poor" quality.

Officials say the program has helped growers increase their earnings and boosted the reputation of Idaho's hay among its customers.

Milk war rages in Montana

BILLINGS (AP) — A lawsuit filed in district court at Billings asks Judge William Spear to help prevent a wholesale-price war between Montana's two biggest milk distributors.

The suit was filed by the Montana Department of Commerce. It accuses Country Classic Dairies Inc. and Meadow Gold Dairy Inc. of selling milk to Albertson's and Buttery Food Stores at below state-regulated prices. The state claims the dairies are undermining the stability of the milk industry in Montana.

Spear set a show-cause hearing for June 9 and said he would decide after that whether to prohibit the two milk processors from selling their products at prices less than those established by the Montana Milk Control Act.

The state is seeking a permanent injunction against the dairies. According to the lawsuit, Meadow Gold claims it is selling its products to Buttery at lower prices to compete with Country Classic's sales to Albertson's.

The state claims that the issue has wide implications. The entire milk industry of Montana will be irreparably damaged if Country Classic and Meadow Gold are not restrained from selling their milk products at less than official wholesale prices, the lawsuit says.

Idaho enjoys 2nd highest wheat yield

The Associated Press

BOISE — Despite one of the driest falls in a century in 1987, Idaho wheat growers emerged from another water-short winter with a winter wheat crop that could produce the second highest average yield on record.

In the first harvest estimates of 1988, the Agriculture Department reported Tuesday that Idaho's winter wheat crop should produce 70 bushels an acre, just five short of last year's record yield.

"Standards are a little thin but they're up," said Dick Mox of the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service. "Unless things change from here on out, 70 bushels an acre will look pretty good for this state. We've got moisture, and we're in pretty good shape."

Based on May 1 field surveys, the government estimated Idaho growers would produce about 55.3 million bushels of winter wheat from about 790,000 acres this year.

Although down nearly 8 percent from last year's crop, the harvested area is also down 10,000 acres along with the yield, and the total production estimate would still put the crop at the fifth largest ever.

Statewide, the Agriculture Department rated the crop in good condition with consistent rains in recent weeks keeping soil moisture and irrigation supplies adequate.

Nationally, the winter wheat crop is projected at over 1.6 billion bushels, up nearly 4 percent from 1987.

Winter wheat, which accounts for two thirds of Idaho's total wheat production, is planted in the fall and harvested in the late spring. The government will release its first estimate for the spring wheat harvest in August.

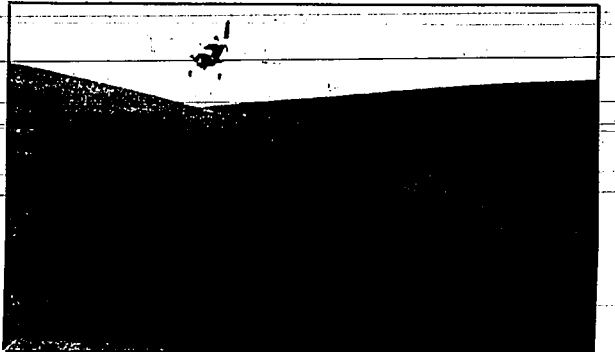

Wheat growers were extremely concerned late last year because of the rainless October that many feared could destroy as much as a third of the planted crop. But many dryland producers "planted in the dust" and prayed for the rain that finally came in November.

Possibly the most encouraging figure released by the Agriculture Department on Tuesday was the estimated acreage for harvest. It showed that producers expected to abandon only about 30,000 acres of the land they planted last fall, one of the lowest abandonment totals ever posted in Idaho.

With wheat prices finally starting to show some strength, growers can improve their financial picture by harvesting as much of their planted acreage as possible.

USDA projects strong Soviet harvests

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union's 1988 harvests could produce 215 million metric tons of grain, up 2 percent from last year's bumper output of 211.4 million tons, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

In its first forecast of this year's Soviet grain production, the USDA said the harvests could include 92 million tons of wheat, 109 million tons of coarse grains such as rye, barley, oats and corn, and 14 million tons of miscellaneous grains and pulses, which include peas and beans.

The report said the harvest outlook could mean a cutback in grain imports, particularly wheat. The United States has been selling the Soviets huge quantities of wheat lately, all of it at subsidized prices under the department's Export Enhancement Program, or EEP.

If the 1988 harvest turns out as forecast, it would be the third straight year that Soviet grain production has exceeded 200 million tons, an unprecedented feat in that country.

It also would be the third-largest Soviet grain output, exceeded by the record crop of 237.4 million tons in 1978 and the 1976 harvest of 223.8 million tons.

Officials said the 1988 forecast is "highly tentative" and that it "will be modified as the season progresses by both positive and negative factors, including weather developments."

Total grain area was estimated at 116 million hectares, slightly more than last year's 115.2 million hectares.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn. One hectare is equal to 2.47 acres.

"The improved outlook for the 1988

U.S.S.R. grain crop, particularly wheat, is expected to reduce total grain import needs in 1988-89," the report said. "This year's coarse grain crop is projected at 109 million tons, somewhat below last year's large harvest."

Therefore, it said, total Soviet wheat imports could decline to 15 million tons in the international marketing year that begins on July 1 from 22 million tons in 1987-88. That would be the lowest level in nine years.

But imports of coarse grain, at a forecast of 10 million tons in 1988-89, would be about the same as the last two years.

Total grain imports, including wheat, coarse grains and miscellaneous grains, could fall to 26 million tons in 1988-89 from 32.5 million tons this season.

Analysts said much will depend on the quality of the Soviet's 1988 wheat harvest and how competitively priced lower-quality feed wheat is relative to other grains used for livestock feed.

In 1985, when the Soviet Union last harvested 92 million tons of wheat — the 1987 crop was 83.3 million tons — it included much low-quality grain, which prompted large imports of higher quality U.S. wheat.

A similar problem with poor quality in the 1987 harvest triggered further imports of higher quality U.S. wheat, all of it sold at subsidized prices under EEP arrangements.

Moreover, the United States and the Soviet Union are still negotiating a long-term grain agreement to replace the current five-year pact that expires on Sept. 30. The agreement would continue the practice of specifying minimum amounts of U.S. wheat and corn to be bought by the Soviets each year.

Experts work extra hard these days making farm forecasts

By DON KENDALL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Back in the last century or thereabouts it was pretty easy to forecast the weather by how the sky looked or how birds, caterpillars, and other creatures behaved. Anybody could do it, and many did.

Everybody talked about the weather, especially farmers and their neighbors. There was talk about hard times, too, and how it seemed nobody was doing anything about it.

If times were good, farmers kept their mouths shut, knowing that another drought or something bad was right around the corner.

Not much was heard about economic forecasts, though. Somebody in the government or a big-shot financier occasionally said something, but scientifically-developed projections did not abound. Today's economic forecasting, once as primitive as predicting the weather from the topper chicken entrails, has come a long way, to be sure. But agricultural economists still have their problems with weather, the greatest single variable confronting farmers.

And the agricultural economist's weather map is a lot bigger these days, global, in fact. Hundreds of people in the Agriculture Department, for example, look at and analyze world weather conditions.

Clark Edwards of the department's Economic Research Service says weather isn't the only guidepost. Domestic and foreign policies of other countries, demand trends, population growth and economic growth are all part of the package.

Farmers have little defense against "uncertain events" that occur because of government actions or as a result of major variations in world weather patterns, he said. That was evident during the agricultural boom of the 1970s and the bust of the 1980s.

"Who could have foretold the devastating late and poor monsoon in Asia and its effect on the 1987 crop and on world prices?" Edwards said. "What farmer could have said in the early 1980s I choose to farm in an economy with a larger money supply and therefore with lower interest rates?"

Edwards added: "Because of the unpredictability of major events that affect the national and international agricultural economies, it is getting harder to know how to use economic forecasts."

One solution would be to simply accept a forecast and act accordingly. Farmers often do that, when dealing about events and processes with which they are familiar, he said. The likely response of corn yields to fertilizer applications, or milk yields in response to feeding rates are examples.

And some economic forecasts are hedged by giving users a set of possible outcomes that illustrate the uncertainties. For example, the agency's forecast of net cash farm income this year is in a range of $50 billion to $55 billion.

"A farm equipment manufacturer, for whom this forecast is important, might determine then consequences if the actual outcome is at one end of the range or the other, and then attach a degree of confidence to each of the two outcomes," Edwards said. "Using this information, a manager can work out the best position to take. This is one way to allow for known risks."

But Edwards acknowledged in an article published in the May issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine that it is getting harder for farmers to make decisions when they are increasingly faced by uncertainties caused by events which they can neither predict nor control.

"Greater exposure to these uncertainties has come along with U.S. farmers' increasing dependence on world markets," he said. "Two major sources of risk ... are climatic events in other hemispheres and the policies and actions of governments."

A classic example of a global influence on American farmers is the Soviet Union. Since 1972, when Moscow secretly bought the equivalent of one-fourth of that year's U.S. wheat crop, weather in the Soviet Union has been watched almost as intently as it is in Kansas and Iowa.

The huge 1972 purchases led to a bilateral agreement several years later, pledging the Soviet Union to buy U.S. wheat and corn on a sustained annual basis. That was one attempt to soften some of the variable connected with the export trade.

"United States and Soviet government-policy changes can exacerbate the effect that Russian weather patterns have on U.S. wheat producers," Edwards said. "There was a time when the U.S.S.R. tended to tighten its collective belt after a short crop. Now the Soviets are more likely to seek imports to stabilize their livestock economy, with larger needs in some years and smaller needs in others."

The Export Enhancement Program, or EEP, is a more recent example of the U.S. government trying to soften some of the variables for American farmers by providing subsidies of taxpayer-owned surplus grain to exporters so they can sell wheat and other designated commodities to selected foreign buyers.

Fruit, vegetable imports on the rise

States News Service

WASHINGTON, May 10 — Fruit and vegetable imports to this country have more than doubled from 1980 through 1986, while U.S. agricultural exports dropped from $34 billion to $26 billion, according to a congressional report released Tuesday.

The report's release coincided with a House Agriculture subcommittee meeting chaired by Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., who asked the General Accounting Office to study the rise in farm imports and their impact on American farmers and food processors.

Panetta expressed concerns, echoed by an official of an Idaho fruit growers' association, about the trends.

According to the GAO report, more than half the increase in agricultural imports came from just four products — broccoli, tomatoes, table grapes, and frozen concentrated orange juice. Most of the products came from Brazil, Chile, and Mexico.

Not only are fruit and vegetable imports rising, but Americans are eating proportionately more of them. For example, about 9 percent of the frozen broccoli eaten consumed here in 1980 came from foreign sources, as compared with 89 percent in 1986, the report says.

In addition, there has been a significant rise in imports shipped to the U.S. from foreign subsidiaries of U.S. firms. The GAO reported that shipments from foreign affiliates to their U.S.-based parent companies rose 80 percent between 1982 and 1985, or between $430 million to $776 million.

Panetta said the rise in imports comes as concerns about the Food and Drug Administration's pesticides inspection activities are mounting.

"According to the GAO, the FDA tests less than one percent of all food shipments and uses laboratory methods that can only detect one-half of the pesticides available on world markets," he said. Panetta added that imported agricultural products are twice as likely as domestic products to violate U.S. pesticide rules and that shipments containing illegal pesticides are often sold and eaten instead of being destroyed. Budgetary cuts will continue to limit the number of inspections, Panetta said.

Panetta's fears were echoed by Lerry Lanks, secretary-manager of the Parma-based Idaho-Oregon Fruit and Vegetable Association.

"I was in Nogales, Ariz., and I saw the FDA inspecting shipments of produce from Mexico," Lanks said. "They stop the truck and do an inspection, and the only way they can check that is to send it to a lab in Los Angeles. They're not going to hold up those trucks — those trucks are held up a mile long, and they're going everywhere. And by the time they get the test back, the stuff has been sold."

Lanks also said he was concerned over imports of apple juice concentrate from Chile and increased imports of onions from Mexico. Apples and onions are major Idaho crops. "This is a real concern here; we're not too happy," Lanks said in a telephone interview.

Panetta also expressed concern over decreasing U.S. exports.

"Our growers find themselves in something of a dilemma. Their domestic markets are eroded by imports from other countries and export markets are often foreclosed by import restrictions, or foreign prices kept artificially low because of subsidies," he said.

The challenge facing regulators is to balance free market considerations with a healthy agriculture industry, Panetta said. "We need to protect that balance," he said. The GAO report attributed the six-year import boom to a variety of economic and demographic factors, including inexpensive foreign labor, the dollar's strength relative to foreign currencies, foreign producer and export subsidies, and a spate of bad weather and crop disease in U.S. growing areas.

The report also cited increased global agricultural production and an aging U.S. population with a growing awareness of the nutritional benefits of fresh fruits and vegetables as causes of the growth in imports.

Aside from worries about pesticide levels in imports, consumers are beneficiaries of greater supplies, more variety, and, in some markets, lower prices, the report said. Some domestic producers have suffered from the competition, but distributors benefit because they are able to operate on a year-round basis.

Domestic processors are variously affected by imports, the report said, depending whether the imports are finished or unfinished products.

BBB tips on phone service may help

Lately our Bureau has received numerous calls from consumers regarding long distance service. Our Bureau has available a brochure entitled "Tips on Long-Distance." For a copy please send a business-sized, self-addressed stamped envelope, and 25 cents to 409 W. Jefferson, Boise 83702.

Also recently our office received an editorial from KSL entitled "Another Racket Surface." We would like to pass the information on to our readers: Hardly a week goes by we don't learn of another racket — schemes devised to part you and your money when you're least expecting it.

One of the latest is a new type telephone service provided by out-of-state companies. In the jargon of the trade, it's called "Alternative Operator Services." It's perfectly legal and it has nothing to do with the Bell companies or other long distance services — normally deal with. Here's how it works. The company — often operating from another state — sells its services to hotels, motels, and other pay phone owners. When someone uses a pay phone to make a credit card call, the company intercepts the call. The operator asks for a card number, then processes the call. But when the bill arrives, the user finds the phone call costs two to 10 times as much as usual, because the company adds a surcharge.

For example, KSL recently tested a few credit card calls using Alternative Operator Services. A three-minute call from across town — normally 49 cents — cost $4.09. And 83 cent call from Provo cost $4.20. A call from California cost over $4, almost triple the normal $1.45 fee.

KSL cautions listeners to know who you're dealing with when you make credit card calls. Make sure the operator is an AT&T or Bell system operator. If not, ask that your call be handled by AT&T or the local Bell company. The BBB of Treasure Valley would like to thank KSL for giving us permission to use their editorial in our column to warn consumers.

Beef prices stay high, land threat remains

POCATELLO (AP) — Idaho cattlemen are enjoying the highest beef prices in years, but they are constantly threatened by efforts to close off access to public lands, says an industry spokesman.

Gary Glenn, executive director for the Idaho Cattle Association, spoke here Wednesday to a 10-state gathering of members of the American Cattlewomen. He said beef prices are so high that many ranchers who got out of the business during a depression four to five years ago now wish they could get back in, but prices are too high.

One of the reasons cattle prices are so high, Glenn said, is that stockmen have responded to consumer demands for leaner meat. He said a recent survey showed U.S. cattlemen are producing beef with 27 percent less fat than two years ago, and 45 percent of all cuts have no fat.

But he said profits are continually endangered by what he labeled "environmental extremists," who want to raise grazing fees on public land, and restrict access to that land through wilderness or national park designations.

About 85 percent of cattle in Idaho are grazed on public land, said Glenn.

"If suddenly we were denied access to public land, that would have a dramatic effect on the cattle industry in Idaho," he said.

The Idaho Cattle Association opposes any new wilderness in Idaho. Glenn carried that message to Interior Secretary Donald Model and Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng in recent meetings.

Gov. Cecil Andrus and Sen. James McClure have proposed 1.4 million acres of new wilderness in Idaho, and 600,000 acres of special management area. Their bill includes special management language for some areas to protect grazing rights.

Subsidies hurt family farming

By BLAKE HURST
Los Angeles Times

Analysis

Ten years ago, I graduated from the University of Missouri and returned to our family's farm in the far northwest corner of the state. My brothers and I are the third generation to farm here in Adair County, Oregon. I founded our business after his first farm was lost in the late '20s in an earlier agricultural downturn. The enterprise has grown and today it includes some 2,700 acres of corn, soybeans, and beef cattle. Last year, we produced about 125,000 bushels of corn. We don't really like accepting subsidies. But if we didn't enroll in government farm programs, our corn would be worth about $1.80 a bushel; because we participate, we receive about $3 a bushel. Everybody has his price. Now you know ours.

Northwest Missouri is a patchwork of corn and soybean fields, pastures, small towns, hills and rivers. Lately a new feature has been added. These days, nearly every small town has a grain bunker. Grain bunkers are football field-sized piles of corn 30 feet high covered with a huge white plastic sheet. My hometown of Tarkio is in a particularly fertile area, so we have not one, but two bunkers. Each holds one-half million bushels of corn stored under a three-year contract with the federal government at a cost to the taxpayer of $500,000 per year. These bunkers, which resemble nothing so much as truncated stadiums, like the Minnesota Homer Dome, are necessary because the more traditional forms of grain storage are already full. Billions of bushels of grain are stored all over the Midwest in bins, sheds, and bunkers — grain raised by farmers like me in response to government payments that hold little relation to any market signals. During a rainstorm this past summer, the dikes along the local river broke, surrounding the bunkers with four feet of water — sort of a floating monument to a failed farm policy.

From 1977 to 1985, government support levels for program crops increased each year regardless of supply and demand. This policy probably did the most to fill Tarkio's bunkers, but there were other reasons. Exports fell during the time of the strong dollar. Third World countries were under pressure to cut imports of farm products and increase exports of agricultural products to reduce their horrendous debts. The European Economic Community embarked on a massive export-dumping program to protect its own farms. The federal government's tax and farm credit policies also contributed to our woes.

When I started farming, the Farmers Home Administration was lending money for 40 years at 5 percent interest to farmers unable to get commercial credit. Not many farms in Adair County were purchased on those terms but land costs rose much higher than they would have without the subsidized credit. This credit-led boom increased costs for all farmers.

Today the FmHA is trying to deal with the results. In neighboring Nodaway County a farmer borrowed money from the FmHA to purchase a farm. Unable to make payments, he simply packed up his family and left. A commercial lending institution would have begun foreclosure proceedings, taken possession of the farm and sold it in order to recover at least a portion of the original loan. The FmHA couldn't react as a normal lender would because it was under a court injunction prohibiting it from foreclosing on its borrowers. Today the farm lies idle and the house has been looted because the FmHA could not protect the taxpayers' investment.

Nationwide, the FmHA has $14 billion in outstanding loans. Two-thirds of that debt is delinquent debt, at least three years overdue. The disaster and emergency loan programs of the '70s were a national scandal. In some Southern states, 80 percent to 90 percent of those loans were never repaid. Small Business Administration loans were available to farmers at an interest rate of 3 percent. Now, most farmers don't know what arbitrage is, but I do know neighbors who figured out that borrowing money from SBA at 3 percent and buying certificates of deposit paying 10 percent at the local bank sure beat the hell out of feeding hogs.

I guess the Reagan administration has finally gotten the message. On March 1 of this year, the FmHA announced a new policy to fulfill the mandates of the Agricultural Credit Act passed by Congress in December of last year. In essence, the FmHA has admitted defeat. As much as $7 billion in bad debt will be written off. Since many of the delinquent loans are located in the South, the announcement of this decision a week before Super Tuesday can hardly be called a coincidence.

"Crazy, crazy for feeling so blue," sang Willie Nelson at his Farm Aid concert. And Willie had every right to be blue. After all, not only were we family farmers in terrible shape, but Willie himself testified to a several-hundred-thousand-dollar cattle feeding loss. Of course, Willie's cattle feeding problems weren't what they seemed. Family farmers, including Willie Nelson, are eligible to use cash accounting for tax purposes because we aren't sophisticated enough to pay income taxes on an accrual basis like every other business. We may not be sophisticated, but it didn't take us long to figure out that cash accounting is a terrific tax dodge for an expanding business. By advancing purchases and delaying sales, a farmer can report a tax loss even though his business is profitable. As long as he keeps expanding, he has what amounts to an interest-free loan from Uncle Sam. Willie Nelson's tax advisers know this. Consequently, family farmers like myself are faced with larger supplies and lower prices than would otherwise be the case.

Farm surpluses are not a new problem. In the 1960s, the government cut production through a program of long-term rental agreements with farmers. The Soil Bank program made it more profitable for farmers to retire marginal land from production than to farm it. The program was devastating to agribusiness in those areas with high participation. Some counties essentially shut down their crop-producing plant.

But agriculture is a highly cyclical business and the 1970s saw a turn for the better. Exports increased and, in response to this demand, highly erodible pastures and rangelands sprouted grain. The Soil Bank contracts were allowed to lapse and production rose to meet the demand from overseas. Across the road from where my grandpa grew up in the community of Chicken Bristle, a large farm that had been in grass for generations was plowed up and planted to corn. Yields were low, but subsidies made it profitable.

Conditions changed again in the '80s. There was renewed interest in conservation as grain supplies moved from shortfall surplus. You can guess what came next. An uneasy coalition of farm groups wanting to cut production, environmental groups wanting to reduce erosion, and politicians wanting more votes, presided over the birth of the "Son of Soil Bank," otherwise known as the Conservation Reserve Program. Hailed as a new high break through in farm policy, the CRP supports land out of production through the use of long-term rental agreements between farmers and the government.

Some family farmers profit from crisis

Los Angeles Times

GILSON, III. — The weeds are first, little green tips breaking through the gray and coal-black soil like eyes blinking open.

Trees, leafless skeletons tinted green by tiny buds, are silhouetted against morning skies.

Newborn calves, still wet behind the ears, stop tentatively in pastures at first light while insects, newly hatched, race across misty farm ponds weaving trails. Tractors, damp with morning dew, idle beside barns where sacks of seed corn and soybeans are stacked awaiting sowing this week or next.

Across the great Midwest grain belt, the season is turning. Farmers like Mike Hennefent are busy at an ancient spring rite — preparing the soil for crops, their annual gamble with wind and weather, insects and weeds.

Hennefent, 43, has been a farmer for more than a quarter-century. But he begins this season working more land with bigger, more powerful equipment than ever before. He not only survived the great farm crisis that gripped rural America for much of the 1980s, he enlarged his farming enterprise.

He is not alone. Hennefent is one of thousands of successful farmers whose successes during the farm crisis went largely unnoticed. And he belongs to an evolving class of family farmers upon whom the United States will depend for food well into the 21st century.

The new American family farmer emerging from the economic turmoil of the 1980s — surviving amid the wreckage of farm foreclosures and bankruptcies — will oversee more land, produce more and spend less time at physical labor than the farmer of the 1960s and 1970s. The signs of that turning are already visible.

A decade ago, the Los Angeles Times chronicled the annual cycle from planting to harvest with Hennefent, his wife and business partner, Judy, and their children, Matt, Bill and Julie, as they worked and lived on their fertile farmstead 180 miles southwest of Chicago.

Then, as now, the Hennefents mirrored the Midwestern farm family. The changes that have rippled across and permanently reshaped agricultural mid-America can be seen on the Hennefents' grain and livestock farm and in the way they live. To look at them is to look at the other side of the farm crisis.

The Hennefents' success was gradual. It grew out of conservative spending, diversified farming and keeping debt manageable, which economists cite as perhaps the most important reason some farmers succeeded and others did not. "I don't feel any different," says Hennefent, a fourth-generation farmer. "I think of myself as average, but when you start analyzing how things have changed it's almost mind-boggling. I just think of myself as trying to survive."

Of the years of farm failures, Hennefent says: "You always wondered if you were going to be the next one. You were always worried that you might be turned down at the bank for a loan or that you might incur a major crop loss. At one time we owed more for our land than it was worth."

In 1978, Hennefent could reach the 682 acres he worked by traveling a mere mile along a two-lane blacktop. Today he farms 1,110 acres along a 6 1/2-mile stretch of the same road. Some of that is the land of those forced out of agriculture by the farm crisis. Hennefent owns 142 of those acres, 40 more than he owned in 1978. He shares crops another 660 acres, 80 more than a decade ago, dividing the profits and expenses equally with the landowner while he provides all the labor.

But what is new is the total of 308 acres that Hennefent has rented in the last few years for a flat annual fee. The practice is a rapidly increasing trend across the Midwest, U.S. Department of Agriculture analysts say.

Corporate ranch gets to work

Marriott Corporate ranch at Hume, Va., raises quarter-horses for sale in the West

HUME, Va. — Virginia Route 635 is a roller-coaster blacktop road that winds across the narrow lanes where dirty pickup trucks live side-by-side with Mercedes and the Blue Ridge Mountains loom over farms with names like Valhalla and Shiloh.

At the base of Rattlesnake Mountain in Fauquier County, only 68 miles from downtown Washington but a world away in atmosphere, more than 4,500 acres of rolling land is taking on a corporate slant.

On the north side of the road above the black, creosote-soaked fences, sheep graze on a rocky ridge. To the south, a "manor house" built in the early 1800s overlooks barns and stables filled with horses. Words on an archway that runs between stone walls that were built by slaves label the property Fairfield Farms and Fery Run Ranch. But the land, bought by J. Willard Marriott Sr. in 1951, is known now by its corporate name — Marriott Ranches.

Marriott, who grew up in Utah, used the ranch as a get-away where he could ride Western-style and dabble in the business of horses, cattle and sheep. Ronald Reagan went riding with the King of Morocco there, and other dignitaries and friends of Marriott, as well as family members, also enjoyed the farm.

Yet while Marriott had Hereford cattle, sheep and about 40 quarter-horse brood mares on the property, it never was a paying business venture.

In 1985, Marriott hired Reist Mummau, a lanky cowboy who grew up in South Dakota and Wyoming and who recently had come East to set up a stable about 20 miles away in Middleburg for a wealthy Texan, to restore the place and put it in the condition of a real working ranch.

Mummau's work had hardly begun when J. Willard Marriott died.

"When he passed away, his son (Marriott Corp. Chairman J.W. Marriott Jr.) said: 'I don't care what you do, but make it economically sound and keep it honest.'" Mummau recalled. "Those were the only two criteria he gave me — honesty and making money."

As Mummau goes about the task of making money in what may be the most unusual and obscure corner of the Bethesda, Md.-based hotel, restaurant and food service giant's empire, residents of the surrounding area are watching with interest.

Mummau is selling horses from the ranch and is thinking about putting in a Western-style village and offering wagon rides to attract more people to the ranch.

If the attempts to run the property at a profit fail, there is another alternative that scares a lot of local folks: the possibility that Marriott might break up the property and sell it — for what experts said could be as much as $30,000 an acre.

Because of Fauquier County's restrictive development codes, Marriott probably would be limited to selling parcels of not less than 50 acres. Yet even that could mean vast changes in the nature of an area where most farms and ranches are hundreds or thousands of acres.

"I hope they're successful," said Fauquier County real estate attorney Alan Olsen. "What they're doing, given the amount of land they have, is very low intensity. There's no indication that they're going to do anything really commercial."

"A lot of people are concerned about the rural setting," said Don Ladd, Marriott's vice president of government affairs, to whom Mummau reports.

Mentioning the spreading housing development in the area, Ladd said, "We certainly have no plans for that type of development. ... After having it for more than 30 years, we have no immediate plans to dispose of it. But at the same time, we want it to contribute to the company and not be a drain on it."

About the time Mummau began searching for a way to make the ranch profitable, former Washington Redskins football player Sam Huff came out and asked if Mummau could get a horse for someone's wife.

"Horse people are good people, but some would do anything to sell a horse," Mummau said — and Huff wanted a horse from someone he could trust.

With that experience, Mummau saw there was a market for well-trained horses at moderate prices in the Washington area. He started building a herd, going west to Oklahoma, Ohio, Utah, New Mexico and Missouri to buy horses and bring them back to Virginia.

Mummau hired Barbara Sullivan, a local trainer, to manage the horse operations, and offered a money-back guarantee for anyone not satisfied with a Marriott horse.

The business has grown slowly, with horse people coming from as far away as New Jersey and Virginia Beach to buy the Marriott horses which usually number about 200 — as well as from closer-in Washington suburbs.

In 1987, the Marriott Ranch showed its first profit.

"We're on the map now," Mummau said. "We have 50 customers a week coming out here."

But being on the map as a horse operation just outside the heart of the Virginia hunt country is not a distinction that comes without a few raised eyebrows in the inner circle of horse lovers.

"It's a challenge here because everybody seems to be in the horse business," Mummau said.

"It's also a challenge to gain the respect of traditional Eastern riders, many of whom are used to riding the thoroughbreds that are specially trained for hunting and jumping."

The horses Mummau sells are quarter-horses, the working-style horses used in the West for cowboy pursuits such as roping and riding the range. It's a distinction that is important to the tony horse crowd.

"I don't know what they're up to," Peter Wynans, editor of the weekly Middleburg, Va. horse bible, The Chronicle of the Horse, said of Marriott Ranches.

"If you're selling quarter-horses for pleasure, you're talking low tickets," Wynans said. "You'd have to sell an awful lot of them."

Study finds retail beef has lost much of its fat

WASHINGTON (AP)— Cattle already have lost much of their flab and will lose still more as consumers demand less fat in their beef, a new study by Texas A&M said Wednesday.

Researchers found that the amount of visible or separable fat was down 27 percent in retail cuts from two years ago, and the fat content of ground beef was down 10 percent.

The study, which was released by the Agriculture Department, involved supermarket surveys in late 1987 and early 1988 in Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, New York City, Philadelphia, Seattle, Tampa, Fla., and Washington, D.C.

Randomly selected retail beef cuts contained an average of 78.9 percent separable lean, 11.7 percent separable fat (3.3 percent external fat and 8.4 percent "steam" or intermuscular fat), and 9.4 percent separable bone and connective tissue.

Teacher awards go to 4

Four Magic Valley residents were honored during the "Proud-to-Teach" luncheon held last week in Twin Falls by the Idaho Education Association Region IV.

Marion Peterson, Twin Falls, received the "Friend of Education" award. She was honored as a community member who has contributed to school children through the McGruff "crime dog" program in Magic Valley schools and has traveled thousands of miles in Idaho to make sure McGruff is in many elementary classrooms. The popular classroom puppet has introduced children to safety and self-protection.

Angie Eames, a special education teacher from Bliss, was honored as the Region IV TEA Courageous Teacher of the Year. She was placed on probation at Wendell for being "too assertive." Although she met terms of probation but the school board fired her anyway, according to Terry Gilbert, district IEA representative. Gilbert said many community members supported her and testified on her behalf.

"We present this award because she has exemplified courage that we admire," Gilbert said.

Merle Jaques, Blaine County Education president, was honored as "Outstanding Local Leader." The Hailey teacher was described as "superactive... thoughtful, committed, mature and highly professional... and a real model for other local leaders."

Melanie Hutchins, Filer teacher, recipient of the "Outstanding Regional Leader" award, was cited as a young lady who has created a reputation as an excellent teacher, active lobbyist and political activist. She has been government relations and political action coordinator for the region the past three years, during which time she has helped elect some of the most progressive citizens to the legislature," Gilbert said.

Gl Jaramillo, Bliss, received a $50 savings bond as first place winner in the school bus Road-E-O held by D Bus Co., Inc., of Twin Falls School District.

Pauline Patheal, Jerome, won a $25 gift certificate for second place and Sandie Fry, Twin Falls, $15 certificate, for third place. All three received trophies.

Other winners were Carole Thorson, Clover, fourth; Susan Ekresman, fifth, and Hazel Runser sixth, both Jerome.

After a long career in education, retiring Sawtooth school principal Keith Turner still likes children and says 'I'll miss 'em'

Keith Turner's retiring

And everyone wants to send him off in style

By LORAYNE ORTON SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When Keith Turner was in the fifth grade he spotted a coyote while walking to school in Oklahoma City.

He ran home, got some gizards, lured the animal back into his family's garage, shut the door and — presto — the 10-year-old had captured one of the craftiest of species.

His father, director of the Oklahoma Fish and Game Department, called the newspaper and the event was publicized before the animal was taken to the local zoo.

Despite this youthful exploit of outsmarting the hungry animal, Turner says he has "lots of respect for coyotes" and the experience precipitated a lifelong interest in coyotes, as well as hunting and outdoor exploring.

Now, retiring from a long career in education, the principal of Sawtooth School will have more time for these interests.

"I'm looking forward to exploring new territory such as caves," Turner says.

In addition to hunting, he hikes in the canyons or desert, often up to 15 miles a day. It is a habit which has kept his waist trim at age 61.

Turner will be honored at an open house from 2 to 4 p.m. today at the multi-purpose room at the school. All former students, teachers and friends are invited.

Sawtooth teachers, staff and students are planning a variety of pranks to "honor" their departing principal next week, but Evelyn Donnelly, school secretary, did not want to "tip their hand" and divulge any details.

She described Turner as the "most wonderful man in the world to work for" and said in 21 years of association, she'd "never heard a cross word."

Other teachers also had praise for their principal. Miriam Reed, who taught under Turner for 20 years, says: "He has a way of showing he has confidence in you, which is appreciated." Jan Alexander, a new teacher this year, says "He has a gentle spirit; he deals with both teachers and children with concern. He cares."

Turner came to Idaho 30 years ago, lured by the "outdoor life and lack of people." With his two sons, David and John, were young he made several survival-trips with them. Once he and David took a 70-mile round trip into Bruneau Canyon.

"We lived off the land," Turner says, "trapping, snaring and fishing." Turner and both sons took their own 100-mile boat trip down the middle fork of the Salmon River and Turner taught survival courses at Bradley Boy Scout camp.

Turner and his boys also pioneered a trail through the White Cloud Mountains, covering 70 miles from behind Boulder Mountain to a point below Sunbeam dam on the Salmon River.

A native of Texas, Turner grew up in Oklahoma and says he has been hunting since he was a young boy. He remembers shooting doves when he was 5 years old, sitting on a pond with his dad-

Stars turn to stars

Astrology's just the thing to do

The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Even as jaws dropped over the use of horoscopes in the White House, astrologers who cater to high-powered clients were saying that Nancy Reagan is hardly alone in her pursuit of schedules timed to the stars.

"Indeed," they claim "the Astroturf is mighty crowd with celebrities from the worlds of show business, politics, literature, high finance and more.

Astrologer Jacqueline Stallone, for instance, says she routinely advises her son, Sylvester, on whether his films will be successful and chooses the most favorable dates for releasing his movies to the public. Other celebrities she has prepared astrology charts for include Farrah Fawcett, Elizabeth Taylor and the late Richard Burton, Patti LaBelle, Grace Jones, Al Pacino and the late Grace Kelly, says Mrs. Stallone.

But, for her son, she scrutinizes the planets relentlessly, sometimes advising him on a daily basis.

"Everything (regarding his films) has been done on the basis of astrological prediction," the astrologer says, recalling that her son has had to wage "big battles to get these movies released on specific dates."

During the filming of her son's most recent film, "Rambo III" opening this summer, Mrs. Stallone reveals that because of assorted dangers associated with the film making, "he was fearful the whole time he was in Israel. He called every day. I'd throw the Tarot cards and do astrology and numerology. In case one thing doesn't fly, it's good to check the others."

Socialites, too, have sought her counsel, among them C.Z. Guest of New York and her daughter Cornelia, the "Debutante-of-the-Year" turned actress who's recently dated Sylvester Stallone.

"She's very accurate," the younger Guest says. "I've asked her about jobs and stuff and different decisions I've had to make. She's generally on the money, I'd say 90 percent."

Comedienne Phyllis Diller reports that she, too, has found it worthwhile to consult an astrologer: Chicago-based Katherine de Jersey, for the last 28 years.

Diller says she checks with de Jersey "maybe if I get interested in a new man. I get her to do a rough chart and she throws a few things at me about the character. She warned me not to marry my second husband and she

Stories behind the legacies sought

By LORAYNE ORTON SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — They're lurking in every community in Magic Valley.

It may be an old hotel whose weather-beaten exterior hints at early day tales waiting to be preserved, or a now-defunct grocery store or cafe which sparks nostalgic memories of past neighborhood gatherings.

Perhaps the business was long a town landmark but no longer operating, such as Meyer's Hardware store in Gooding or the venerable Hiawatha Hotel in Hailey.

While some businesses have played a more dominant role in their communities, such as the former Perrine Hotel in Twin Falls, or the North Side Inn at Jerome, all have a story to tell.

Now that story is being sought as a lasting legacy during Magic Valley's observance of the Idaho Centennial.

Donna Scott, Twin Falls, suggested and was asked to head the project. She urges individuals in every type of operation throughout the entire Magic Valley to participate.

The project is twofold, she says.

All businesses and industries are invited to write their histories and to enter displays of pictures, old equipment or products at the July 3 Statehood Day celebration to be held this summer at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Filer.

Described as an old-fashioned fair, the Filer event will include old-time crafts, an antique fashion show, games, food booths, music and entertainment, according to Carol Stephens, chairman.

It will be a day of fun and activity celebrating local cultural patterns, Scott says, while the written history project will leave something permanent for later generations to enjoy.

To counteract human reluctance to compile such information, Scott

The Independent Meat Company (left) was established in 1904 and was first located in Rock Creek Canyon. Purchased by Otto Florent Sr. in 1945, it is now a third-generation family business.  was right but it didn't keep me from it.

"I had the charts of all my children done so I could better understand them. And Katherine has warned me about people I considered doing business with," Diller recalls. "She warned me once when two guys came after me to do a sitcom. She said one was sleazebag and the other was suicidal and she was right. I don't consult her often enough. I once opened a restaurant and didn't consult her and it bombed."

Contacted in Chicago, de Jersey acknowledged that she has several well-known clients but would only name one: the late Arthur Treacher, who for many years was Merv Griffin's television announcer.

Astrologer Carroll-Righter, who died earlier this month, acknowledged that his clientele included Marlene Dietrich, Lana Turner and Clark Gable. And it is still widely rumored that Righter prepared charts for Ronald Reagan. When Righter was asked by the Los Angeles Times in 1985 if he consulted with Ronald Reagan on astrology, he replied, "No comment."

Astrologer Linda Goodman says that she gave Reagan an astrological prediction in the early '70s when Reagan was the governor of California. "I sent Gov. Reagan a telegram around the time that (former Vice President Spiro) Agnew resigned in which I told him he'd be the president of the United States in 1980," she says.

Goodman, author of "Linda Goodman's Sun Signs" (which has sold 7 million copies over the last two decades), says she doesn't have the time to do many astrological charts. But she reveals that "Nelson Rockefeller was a client of mine," along with Merv Griffin, Ali MacGraw, Sonny Bono and the late Grace Kelly and Steve McQueen.

Santa Monica, Calif.-based astrologer and syndicated columnist Sydney Omarr points out that astrology is nothing new to politics, in California or elsewhere.

"When Goodwin-Knight was governor of California (1954-58), he called me in to his office and showed me charts of people he was dealing with," says Omarr, an author and syndicated columnist.

During World War II, Omarr says, he was "the only soldier given full-time duty as an astrologer" and conducted a radio show for troops in the South Pacific in which they could ask questions and receive astrological answers.

Though like Goodman, Omarr maintains that he gives few private astrological readings, he says that living clients who have allowed him to reveal their names include Kim Novak, Angie Dickinson, Susan Strassberg and Tom Smothers.

But astrology use is hardly limited to those in the arts: New York City-based financial adviser and astrologer Sam Crawford, whose financial predictions have been written up in the Wall Street Journal and Barron's, says his days are routinely peppered with calls from big business types from around the world.

"I get calls every day from the Middle East, London and other parts of the world, as well as from traders in the United States," says Crawford, who says he dares not mention the names of his clients.

In addition to private consulting, Crawford publishes his financial predictions in the newsletter, Crawford Perspectives. Among its subscribers, he says, are a Middle Eastern bank, a Swiss brokerage and "the president of Kentucky Fried Chicken in Tokyo." Knowing when to consult the stars and when to ignore them can be a problem for even devoted followers of astrology. Jacqueline Stallone remembers that she urged her son not to marry Brigitte Nielsen until after a certain eclipse when he would "see her in a different light."

The marriage lasted 18 months and recently ended in divorce. "If he'd waited for the eclipse, he wouldn't have married her in the first place," she laments. "Astrology can only predict; it can't prevent."

Turner

After graduating from high school in 1945 in Clinton, Okla., he was "just getting ready to ship out for Japan" with the Army infantry in World War II. But his unit never went because the atomic bomb was dropped on Japan that August.

Although his mother was a teacher, Turner didn't plan to follow that career. He majored in forestry at Oklahoma State but found it "wasn't what I thought it would be."

A counselor suggested teaching and so with another semester's work, he went into education and says he has no regrets.

After teaching and serving as principal in Lynwood, Calif., Turner came to Twin Falls in 1958 to become principal at Lincoln Grade School, moving to Sawtooth when it opened in 1975.

"They're different," Turner says, "but I love both schools."

He describes Lincoln as a melting pot but says both schools have "have a great group to work with."

He doesn't think today's children are any worse than years ago, but admits the pace is much faster and there's much more paperwork because of government regulations.

"Some kids may be tougher," he says, "and some years are worse than others."

But the retiring principal clearly has enjoyed his work. After 30 years as a Twin Falls elementary school principal, he still likes children and says, "I'll miss 'em."

Turner is married to a teacher and has two children. He has been in education for 30 years.

says the histories need not be long or elaborate. Material should be sent to Donna Scott, 486 Madrona, Twin Falls, Idaho 83301, phone 733-2535.

The accounts should give dates, names and interesting facts, including why the business started or quit. In anticipation of the project, a handful of local businesses were willing to share their histories with The Times-News.

Independent Meat Co. was founded in 1904 in Twin Falls "primarily to provide fresh beef to the laborers building the Twin Falls canal system," says Otto Florence, Jr., whose father, the late Otto Florence Sr., was a longtime owner.

Started by Emil Brose and Frank Terrill, the firm was first located in Rock Creek Canyon, near where the Oregon Trail ran. Between 1910 and 1915, Carl Jungst and a Mr. Whitney purchased the firm and began making sausage which was sold through five retail markets in Twin Falls and one in Kimberly.

Oldtimers will remember these stores which bore different names, such as Kimball's Grocery which stood where Magic Carpet now is on Shoshone Street East.

Others were located where Price Hardware, The Paris and the Aroma Restaurant now are, and in the old Idaho Department store basement until the 1940s, Florence says.

His father, who started working with the firm in 1919 as a laborer and gradually bought enough stock to become owner, typified the successful European immigrant who made good through hard work.

In 1945, with the promise his three sons would join him after World War II, Florence became full owner. Otto Jr., Ted and Frank operated the firm until 1983 when Otto Jr.'s sons, Pat and Frankie, purchased the family business.

Another longtime family business, now with fourth generation members, is the Kimberly Nursery begun by Carl W. Wright in 1907. It operated for 60 years in Kimberly before moving to Twin Falls.

The late Lloyd Wright assumed management after his father's death in 1923 and his son, Jack, became manager in 1958. Now Jack's sons, Doug and David, head the bookkeeping and landscaping departments.

Paul S. Molchan, Sun Valley, was initiated into Alpha Sigma Nu, Jesuit honor society at Saint Louis University, St. Louis, Mo., where he is a junior in the school of medicine.

CAT DERMATITIS

QUESTION: My cat has sores all over her body. They ooze liquid and then scab up. She scratches all the time. Could this be chicken pox, poison ivy, or something like that?

ANSWER: It sounds like your cat is suffering from dermatitis. Ointment is impossible to say exactly what the cause is. It could be contact dermatitis which, like poison ivy, results from your cat's coming into contact with a certain plant or object. It could also be an allergic reaction to certain foods. You should also look for parasites, such as fleas, which might be the source of the trouble. However, if your cat is suffering greatly, you should take her to your veterinarian. While he or she is searching out the cause of the dermatitis, medication can be administered to relieve the symptoms.

Mable came to Ringmakers and saw a old yellow gold ring that really caught her eye. She had an old wedding set, and wondered if we could set the diamonds from it into the new ring. We told her "Yes, we can!" She told us where on the new ring she wanted the diamonds set and we did the rest. Mable now has a beautiful new gold and diamond ring. If it has to do with jewelry, Ringmakers makes it!

UI marks 100 years with trees

TWIN FALLS — The University of Idaho will launch local observance of the centennial celebration of its founding by planting trees in three Magic Valley counties Wednesday.

Depending upon the weather, the plantings are scheduled at 9 a.m. at Shoshone, 1 p.m. in Twin Falls and 4 p.m. in Jerome at the courthouse lawns in all three counties.

Representatives of the university's College of Forestry will be traveling throughout the state in the next few weeks, planting the trees as soil temperatures and weather conditions allow.

The university Alumni Association will dedicate a grove of trees in each of the state's 44 counties this summer and the planting of five trees in the project is the first phase of the project.

Ross Gedeberg, Shoshone, is coordinator for the project in Lincoln county with Jerry Diehl serving in that capacity for Jerome and Donna Brizee, Twin Falls county.

The grove sites for each county were chosen by county commissioners. University cooperative extension agents also have been involved in the project.

The trees will be dedicated in public ceremonies in June.

Each grove will consist of a western white pine, hybrid poplar, Douglas fir, western larch and ponderosa pine.

The alumni grove project is designed to take the University of Idaho to every corner of the state during the Centennial celebration, says UI centennial coordinator Roy Fluhrer.

Sister has no respect to pay when estranged brother dies

DEAR ABBY: Will you please settle an argument between my husband and me? Recently my mother's brother died. He and my mother had a falling out seven years ago, and they had not spoken to each other since. My mother chose not to go to her brother's funeral. My husband said she should have gone and paid her last respects. My mother said, "I'm no hypocrite. We didn't respect each other while he was living; why should I pay my respects when he's dead?" My husband thinks my mother was wrong. I think she was right. What do you think?

— DYING TO KNOW

DEAR DYING: Funerals are for the living. The deceased will not know who was there and who wasn't — but the grieving family members will. I think your mother's presence at her brother's funeral would have comforted the family — after all, they were brother and sister. Had she attended his funeral and buried her grievances, it might have made her feel better.

Abigail VanBuren Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: Please help us thank all the wonderful people who were kind enough to send letters, Valentines and Easter greetings to us aboard the USS Tower. More than 20,000 Dear Abby readers flooded our ship with messages of love and gratitude — some sent candy and cookies. Our lone postal clerk went bananas!

Morale is certainly high out here; many crew members are corresponding with those who wrote. However, some letters were separated from their envelopes, and others had no return addresses. Even if they were intact, there is no way a crew of this size could answer each writer individually. But we want to thank everyone who wrote.

Each one of us is proud to be an American, proud to serve in the military, and proud to know that we are defending so many caring and loving people.

— MIKE CERVI FOR THE CREW OF THE USS TOWER

DEAR MIKE: I appreciate the explanation. Some disappointed readers wrote to say that they had written per my suggestion, but received no feedback.

I was assured by the military that if one ship had more mail than it could handle, the overflow would be transferred to another ship. Dear Abby readers don't care where their letters land — as long as they're read.

DEAR ABBY: I was very much impressed with your efforts to cheer up American troops who are far from home in the service of their country. And judging from the letters you received from grateful servicemen, it was a great morale booster.

However, being a serviceman myself (Army), I was disappointed to see the U.S. Navy get all the attention. I am stationed in Korea in the DMZ (Demilitarized Zone), and there are Air Force and Marine troops over here, too, you know.

We are stationed here for a year at a time guarding against North Korean troops trying to infiltrate. So, please, Abby, give us a break and direct a little mail my way.

— J. YARGO (DMZ, KOREA)

DEAR J. YARGO: Here's your letter, and don't say I didn't warn you. Just wait until this hits print.

Readers, how about cheering up our men and women in the Army, Air Force and Marines? Write to: Operation Dear Abby-DMZ, c/o Commanding Officer, CO C 122 Signal BN, Camp Casey, Korea 96224-0346.

TALK ABOUT SHOTS BEING HEARD AROUND THE WORLD!

On Sunday, April 3-<sup>a</sup> A Day of Infamy occurred when the Times-News erroneously placed the Frontier Motors "Quitting Business" advertisement across the bottom part of Wills Motor Company Ad. Literally hundreds of phone calls have been made to Wills Motor regarding their "going out of business". "We've even had inquires from some of our suppliers back east", says Ernie Wills, General Manager of Wills Motor.

NOWAY! ... are we going out of business. We're one of the oldest - if not the oldest - and the most reputable car dealers in Twin Falls, and we're here to stay.

It was an unfortunate "blunder" that happened, but it does illustrate the "POWER" behind little ads in the Times-News. At the left is a reproduction of the advertisement as it should have been.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

Dear Mr. Wolff: If dummy's cards are carelessly arranged on the table, is a defender justified in "reaching them"?

ANSWER: No, he is not. A defender should ask either dummy or declarer to tidy up. He should not touch any of dummy's cards intentionally.

Dear Mr. Wolff: If a player makes a simple over-one overall (e.g., one spade over one heart), does he deny the high-card strength of a takeout double?

ANSWER: No, he doesn't. The range for an overall is 8-18 HCP. If opening bid strength or higher is held, the overall is chosen because it is missing (support for unbid suits).

Dear Mr. Wolff: Partner opens one no-trump and I make a quantitative raise to four no-trump. If partner bids five hearts, what does that mean?

ANSWER: Assuming that he recognizes your bid as a quantitative raise and not a Blackwood request, I would guess that he is conditionally accepting the slam invitation and showing two aces on the way.

Dear Mr. Wolff: My RHO opens one club and I overcall one spade. If partner bids two clubs after a pass by my LHO, what is the meaning?

ANSWER: He bids, following over a round and strongly invites game. If he next bids three spades, you may pass with a minimum overcall. If he bids a new suit, you must find another bid.

Dear Mr. Wolff: Partner opens one no-trump and I bid two clubs (Stayman). Next player doubles to show clubs and partner bids two diamonds. What should I infer?

ANSWER: Since a pass would deny a four-card major, the two-diamond denial (after the double) should signify a good diamond suit and probably club weakness.

Send bridge questions to The Column, P.O. Box 12343, Dallas, Texas 75213, with self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.
