Bush tries to clarify stand on penalties in cases of abortion

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — George Bush backpedaled Monday from his debate suggestion that he might favor criminal penalties for women who undergo abortions.

His campaign manager, James A. Baker III, told reporters in Winston-Salem, N.C., that Bush has thought the issue through and decided women are "additional victims" and should not be punished for undergoing abortions.

But Bush still believes in the possibility of "punishment as far as the abortionist is concerned," Baker said.

The head of a pro-choice group said Bush's remarks had "horrified" many women. An anti-abortion leader called the issue a "red herring" and said no one envies jailing women who get abortions.

Bush, who favors a Constitutional ban on most abortions, was asked Sunday night if women and doctors who defied a ban on abortion should go to jail.

"I haven't sorted out the penalties," Bush replied. "I'm for the sanctity of life, and once that illegality is established, then we can come to grips with the penalty side, and of course, there's got to be some penalties to enforce the law."

Bush himself told reporters later Monday in Jackson, Tenn., there was "no change" in his stance.

"He horrified women last night," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League. "If he believes that abortion is murder, this business of saying women are the second victims is hypocritical.

"What he advocates is a policy of forced childbirth for every woman who gets pregnant," she said. "The result would be that women would be forced to seek back-alley, medically unsafe abortions as we did before 1973. Women would have to risk their lives and be butchered once again."

Douglas Johnson, legislative director for the National Right to Life Committee, said that neither his group nor others want to send women who seek abortions to jail. He called that "a non-issue, a red her-

Reagan upbeat for UN

The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — President Reagan told the United Nations in a farewell speech Monday that this was "a moment of hope" for peace in the world and that a new U.S. Soviet treaty to sharply reduce nuclear arms may be completed next year.

He called for an international war on drug traffickers, terrorism and hostage-taking, and vowed to maintain U.S. support for an armed insurgency against the leftist government of Nicaragua.

He said the Sandinistas were pursuing "the oldest, most corrupt vice of all — man's age-old will to power, his lust to control the lives and steal the freedoms of others."

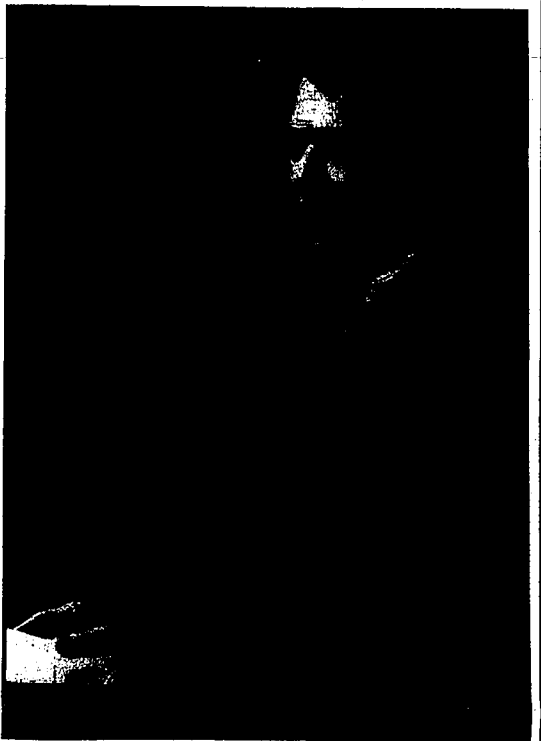

But with his presidency nearing an end, Reagan struck a mostly philosophical stance as he told the 43rd General Assembly session of 159 nations that civil wars and foreign occupations were giving way around the world.

Reagan said the trend was spurred by "a new era in Soviet-American relations" marked by the continuing withdrawal of the Red Army from Afghanistan and a treaty last year to abolish intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

He said U.S. and Soviet negotiators were making steady progress on another accord to sharply reduce long-range bombers, missiles and submarines. While completion of the pact this year was "highly doubtful," Reagan said, "I can tell you a year from now (it) is a possibility, more than a possibility."

On the conventional front, Reagan said East-West talks to reduce non-nuclear forces, tanks and other mobile weapons in Europe "will begin soon."

Launch fever takes hold as Discovery crew reaches space base

Knight-Ridder Service

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Swooping in perfect diamond formation over the craft that will carry them into space, shuttle Discovery's astronauts landed here Monday after NASA kindled the countdown for the first manned mission since the Challenger tragedy.

Upon emerging from T-38 military jets, the five astronauts fueled an intensifying wave of launch fever by pronouncing themselves wild, able and — above all — ready to fly.

Though delays are possible, Discovery is scheduled for liftoff at 7:59 a.m. EDT Thursday. "The bird is ready and we're ready," said Navy Capt. Frederick Hauk, the flight commander. "We're excited. We cannot wait to do this."

As they approached the space center's landing strip, the astronauts flew in formation and circled the space center in what is usually restricted airspace. Twice, they made certain to pass over Discovery, which stood regally on launch pad 39B.

Normally a Spartan facility, the pad has been embellished with "Green for Shuttle Go" ribbons by launch crews working in three shifts around the clock to prepare Discovery for its four-day mission. After Hauk spoke briefly to the media, he and the rest of the crew were joined by their wives. The couples — soon to be separated by time and distance and so much more — walked hand-in-hand through a light drizzle to a waiting van.

Although many technical thresholds must still be crossed, officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said prospects remained excellent for an on-time launch.

It will be the first shuttle flight since Challenger exploded on Jan. 28, 1986, killing seven astronauts. "Right now, we think we've got a good countdown," said Frank Merlino, a NASA test director. "We're looking forward to doing the shot and doing it right and launching on time."

NASA officials weren't the only ones looking forward to the shot. With every blink of the digital countdown clock, excitement mounted Monday on and off the Kennedy Space Center.

Many businesses began distributing "Green for Shuttle Go" banners, bows and lapel ribbons — the local symbol of America's return to manned space flight. Several large green ribbons fluttered from the launch pad's beams.

Throughout the self-proclaimed Space Coast, buttons appeared on shirts and blouses. Some said, "America's Pride: The Journey Continues." Others said, simply, "Back to the Future."

Although the countdown clock officially began at one day and 19 hours (43 hours), NASA officials padded the procedure with so much extra "hold time" that 74 hours actually remained until the scheduled launch.

The extra time was intended to help technicians resolve problems that might otherwise delay launch.

Protect ozone, EPA head urges

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ozone depletion by chlorofluorocarbon compounds could be even worse than previously thought, the Environmental Protection Agency said Monday in urging a stepped up attack on CFC use worldwide. Separately, the major trade association of producers and users of CFCs said for the first time the world should aim at "phasing out ... CFCs to the maximum extent feasible."

"The depletion that has already occurred calls into question earlier projections of future damage," EPA Administrator Leo M. Thomas said in releasing a new assessment of future concentrations of chlorine in the atmosphere.

"Regrettably, our new analysis predicts an even worse scenario than anticipated."

Thomas' call for ending all CFC use was a switch from his position that there was plenty of time for participants in last year's treaty to decide what, if any, further steps were necessary.

That treaty, signed by 45 major nations, pledges signatories to a 50 percent cut in CFC production in 1998.

Thomas has been urging the United Nations Environment Program to accelerate the scientific review called for by the treaty, and an informal review will convene in The Hague next month.

Environmentalists, who have been calling for an end to CFC use for months, hailed EPA's announcement.

"It underlines the seriousness of the emergency we are facing," said David Doniger of the Natural Resources Defense Council. "This kind of report will have a lot of impact on major producing countries in Europe."

"We're glad to see they've come around to our way of thinking," said Liz Cook of Friends of the Earth.

The CFC compounds are widely used as refrigeration fluids, solvents and foam blowing agents and, outside the United States, as aerosol propellants. Related bromine compounds are used in fire extinguishers. Some of them can last for more than a century, rising to the stratosphere where they eventually break down to liberate chlorine.

Arrests solve burglaries at clothing store

By KEN ARMSTRONG Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Police this weekend arrested the 17-year-old son of a manager at Roper's with a string of burglaries at the clothing store.

The teen-ager told police he had made a duplicate of his father's store key and had given it to friends who burglarized the store, according to court records. In addition, police allege that the youth personally burglarized Roper's about three weeks ago.

The teen-ager sold some of the stolen clothes at discount prices, police reports allege.

In all, police have arrested two adults and two juveniles in connection with three burglaries at the store, located at 125 Main Ave. W.

Brian Hunter, 21, of Twin Falls, and Gary Castro, 19, of Twin Falls, were charged Monday with first-degree burglary, according to court records. Bail for the pair was set at $1,500 and $9,000, respectively.

The manager's son and another juvenile, also 17, were booked on charges of first-degree burglary and released to family members' custody.

Police foiled the most recent burglary a little before 1 a.m. Saturday, according to police reports. Police arrived while the burglary was in progress, prompting one burglar to flee while another hid in the store's basement.

The fleeing burglar dropped two duffel bags holding more than $1,000 worth of stolen clothing.

Police arrested one teen-ager and the manager's son, at the scene, according to police reports. Hunter turned himself in at the police station the following day. Hunter and the juvenile told police they had obtained the store's key from the manager's son, according to court records.

The teen-ager also told police that he and Castro had previously burglarized Roper's around midnight Sept. 9, according to court records. Approximately $900 worth of clothing was stolen that night.

Police arrested Castro Saturday and the manager's son Sunday.

The charge against the manager's son stems from another burglary that occurred about three weeks ago, according to court records. Almost $500 worth of clothing was stolen during that burglary, including a $300 leather coat.

The manager's son allegedly sold that coat for $40, according to police records.

Senate Democrats give up on minimum wage bill

Knight-Ridder Service

WASHINGTON — Facing a filibuster and a clock ticking down to adjournment, Senate Democrats gave up Monday on a bill to boost the minimum wage.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., announced he was pulling the bill from the floor. He acknowledged that, barring a miraculous resurrection, the bill is dead.

The bill would have raised the current $3.35-an-hour minimum wage in three steps to $4.55 by 1991.

Byrd's move came as Democrats and Republicans blamed each other for dooming the bill by refusing to compromise.

Republicans, led by Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, had waged an insurmountable filibuster against the bill. Hatch complained that majority Democrats had adopted "stalling tactics" barring a fair hearing for amendments Republicans wanted to offer.

The Republicans wanted to permit a sub-minimum "training wage" of 60 to 80 percent of the minimum for new workers entering the workforce. After 90 days, workers would have to increase new workers' wages to at least the minimum wage.

"He's unwilling to ... promise," Hatch said of Labor Committee chair, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

Kennedy said the filibuster was inspired not by Republican discontent over procedures but by their certainty that the Senate would reject their amendments and pass the Democratic-sponsored bill if the filibuster were broken.

He balked at the Republicans' sub-minimum training wage, proposing instead that a sub-minimum wage be paid only to full-time students who work. Kennedy argued that the GOP's approach would encourage younger workers to drop out of school to go to work.

Senate Republican Leader Robert Dole of Kansas maintained that Republicans were not opposed to a higher minimum wage but were simply resisting the Democrats' "take-it-or-leave-it approach" on the amount of the increase.

Dole also indicated that Republicans were reading more than 175 amendments to the bill, thus threatening to tie up the Senate beyond its planned Oct. 15 adjournment.

The issue pitted the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and small business lobby against organized labor.

Labor contended that raising the minimum wage, which has not been increased since 1981, would make up for the loss of buying power that low-income workers have suffered.

Emperor's condition stabilizes again

TOKYO (AP) — Mmamoto sumo wrestlers joined crowds outside the Imperial Palace on Monday to pray for 87-year-old Emperor Hirohito, whose condition stabilized despite continued internal bleeding.

The emperor is in stable condition... but last night he discharged a slight amount of blood," Kenji Maeda, head of general affairs for the Imperial Household Agency, told reporters early Tuesday morning.

Hirohito had a fever of 98.4 Tuesday, down from around 99 Monday but still higher than his normal temperature of 98.5. On Saturday it rose to 102.6, prompting concern about his fate, palace officials said.

The stock market was up in early trading Tuesday after fluctuating Monday, reflecting uncertainty over Hirohito's health.

On Monday, Hirohito watched television dramas and received his sons, Crown Prince Akihito and Prince Hitachi, and their wives for brief chats, palace Maeda said.

U.S. advisers open fire on attackers

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — American military advisers, caught in a gun battle between Salvadoran army forces and attacking guerrillas two weeks ago, opened fire on the leftist rebels for the first time since the United States stationed military advisers in El Salvador, according to Defense Department officials.

Pentagon officials said Monday that the three advisers were acting in self-defense when they fired their M-16 rifles at guerrillas who attacked the Salvadoran army's 4th Brigade headquarters in north central El Salvador Sept. 13.

Sixteen Salvadoran soldiers and five guerrillas were killed in the assault, according to an official memorandum.

There are no indications of guerrilla casualties as a result of the U.S. defensive fire, said the memorandum written by Lt. Gen. Charles W. Brown, director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency.

The use of the trainer personal weapons was strictly in accordance with the rules of engagement in effect in El Salvador, he said.

Agreement near on Pentagon budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional and administration officials were close to agreement Monday on a Pentagon budget which eliminates some of the objections raised by President Reagan when he vetoed a defense spending measure last month, congressional sources said.

The agreement was being worked out in a series of closed-door meetings involving Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci and top Democratic and Republican members of the House and Senate Armed Services committees, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Country singer delivers Billy Carter's eulogy

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Country singer Tom T. Hall delivered the eulogy Monday afternoon at a funeral for Billy Carter, describing his friend as "one man, with that smile, that laugh, that gleam of trust and compassion in his eye."

About 600 mourners showed up to pay their last respects to Carter, who was thrust into the national spotlight after his older brother became the nation's 39th president. Carter was well-known for his down-home witticisms and his beer drinking at a service station he once owned in Plains, Ga. Carter, 51, died quietly and peacefully in his sleep of pancreatic cancer, the disease that killed his father, and an older sister, the family said in a statement. His funeral was held at Lebanon Cemetery west of Plains, where his mother, "Miss Lillian" Carter, and his father, James Earl Carter, are buried.

Ozone

National Aeronautics and Space Administration in March found ozone depletion of a few percent at mid-latitudes and attributed it to chlorine.

The NASA panel's work prompted some major producers of CFC compounds to announce their intention to develop harmless substitutes.

The trade group, the Alliance for a Responsible CFC Policy, said its new recommendation grew out of the NASA report.

Up to now, EPA has estimated that it would take an 85 percent reduction in one of the major CFC compounds to keep chlorine from growing. But this estimate did not include low-potenency CFC compounds outside the treaty and non-CFC sources of chlorine, notably methyl chloroform, the most widely used industrial solvent.

The report focused on chlorine concentrations to avoid the uncertainties of trying to predict ozone depletion. Any increase in chlorine and bromine increases the risk of ozone depletion, EPA said.

John Hoffman, co-author of the report, said, "You ask the atmospheric chemists for a prediction (of ozone) and they won't give you one" because their computer models failed to predict the ozone depletion that has occurred so far — spectacularly so after the annual "hole" over Antarctica that sees ozone decline by half every September.

Currently, average chlorine in the stratosphere is about 2.7 parts per billion.

"This concentration" would triple or double by 2075, depending on whether methyl chloroform use increases or not, even if the entire-world abides by last year's treaty, EPA found.

"An immediate 100 percent reduction in the use of all (the most powerful) compounds and a freeze in methyl chloroform would be needed to stabilize chlorine, EPA said. "Immediate" means 1990, and the actions would have to cover all countries.

ring.

But "we do think the doctors who profit from 'killing unborn children should be punished," including loss of their licenses, he added.

Democrat Michael Dukakis seized upon Bush's comment during their debate, saying, "He's prepared to brand a woman a criminal for making the choice."

Dukakis said he does not favor abortion, but believes "it has to be the woman in the exercise of her own conscience and religious beliefs that makes that decision." As governor of Massachusetts, he has vetoed bills that sought to restrict funding of abortions for poor women.

Baker, in explaining his clarification of Bush's position, said: "After thinking about it overnight, we went in and discussed it this morning and concluded it was an issue that should be addressed and we addressed it."

Frankly, he thinks that a woman in a situation like that would be more properly considered an additional victim — perhaps the second victim — (and) that she would need help and love and not punishment," Baker said.

Susan Estrich, Dukakis' campaign manager, said Bush has altered his stance on abortion four times. The nation needs a decisive president, not someone who will change his mind after an overnight meeting with his pollsters," Estrich said.

She said the Constitutional amendment to ban abortion that Bush now favors — after opposing it in 1980 — before becoming Ronald Reagan's running mate — "would leave states free to impose criminal penalties on women who have abortions."

Bush opposes abortions except to save the mother's life or in cases of rape or incest. He supports government funding of abortions only to save the mother's life. He favors overturning the 1973 Supreme Court decision, Roe vs. Wade, that struck down state laws against abortion; and passage of a human life amendment to the Constitution.

Reagan

The United States had demanded a Soviet commitment to give equal attention to human rights. Reagan met last week in Washington with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

Afterward, U.S. officials said the Soviets had promised to release 27 additional political prisoners, to make changes in their emigration procedures and to undertake other reforms. Reagan's statement indicated the human rights obstacle had been removed.

After the speech, Reagan met with Foreign Ministers Esmat Abdel Meguid of Egypt and Shimon Peres of Israel on prospects for peace in the Middle East.

Chatting with reporters during a picture-taking session, Reagan said he had "high hopes" for release of the nine American hostages held in Lebanon by pro-Iranian forces.

"But I'm superstitious about calling a no-hitter before the game is over," Reagan said.

The former baseball broadcaster appeared to be referring to the progressive release of French and West German hostages — and being reluctant to speak about it for fear of upsetting the stock market.

But Martin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, said "there is no morsel of information that gives us reason to be more hopeful."

In the session with Meguid and Peres, the president called the 1979 peace treaty between their countries "a monumental achievement which has changed the face of the region."

He said the U.S. goal was to move beyond it to an overall settlement that took into account the "legitimate rights" of Palestinian Arabs.

In other developments on a busy day in New York, Reagan:

- Met twice with U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar to assess prospects of ending the Persian Gulf war.
- Scheduled a meeting with Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the former ruler of Cambodia, in Washington on Oct. 11. The purpose is to underscore U.S. support for his forces as they control of the country from pro-Vietnam authorities.
- Met with President Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe to register U.S. resolve for successful completion of negotiations that simultaneously would withdraw Cuban troops from Angola and South Africa from Namibia.
- Met with leaders of Persian Gulf countries after deciding to end the Kuwaiti oil tanker of U.S.-flagged U.S. military convoy.

Officials look for reasons in unit rampage at main prison

BOISE (AP) — State prison officials and local police began to look for reasons Monday behind the rampage in Unit 9 at the main prison near Boise that left a Nampa man dead and caused extensive damage to the building.

Richard Holmes, charged with aiding and abetting the death of Nampa drug informant Denise Williams, died Sunday of multiple-stabs-wounds in his prison cell, Ada County Coroner Edwin Sonnenberg said.

Holmes' body was found in his cell at the Idaho State Penitentiary Sunday after inmates set fire to the close-custody cellblock.

Marc Johnson, spokesman for Gov. Cecil Andrus, said the Corrections Department will hold an investigation into the prison riot. Ada County, where the prison is located, will conduct its own review.

Prison officials have begun interviewing inmates about the incident.

said Tim McNeese, executive assistant to state Department of Corrections Director Al Murphy.

"We're just beginning to scratch the surface on what happened in there," McNeese said.

Holmes suffered multiple stab wounds to the chest, abdomen and back, Sonnenberg said.

"There were signs of a struggle," he said. "We're putting the death in the time frame of that riot."

Twenty inmates have been moved to the Ada County Jail and 57 others were moved to other cellblocks at the prison, McNeese said.

McNeese said it appeared whoever killed Holmes broke through a cinder-block wall to reach his cell. Reinforced walls at the new maximum-security prison to be built near the present site will prevent such events in the future, he said.

The Ada County sheriff's office continued to keep the building sealed off

Monday as forensic tests were conducted at the crime scene.

"We don't know when the cleanup will begin," McNeese said. "It can't begin until they vacate the building."

McNeese declined to compare the destruction Sunday to that which occurred in another disturbance at the Unit 8 maximum-security cellblock in 1985. But he said it was similar to the damage done in that riot. The state spent over $400,000 to repair the building and upgrade security in that unit.

Inmates may be reluctant to come forward with information on the violence because of the fear of reprisal from those who led the rampage and killed Holmes, Ada County Sheriff Vaughn Killeen said.

"There's a certain code that stems from fear that something will happen to me," Killeen said. "It has nothing to do with honor."

Mine rehabilitation work under way

MULLAN (AP) — Mine rehabilitation work is under way on old workings held by Silver Mountain Lead Mines east of Mullan under an exploration agreement with Hecla Mining Co. of Coeur d'Alene.

Miners are revamping a 1,700-foot tunnel and were in about 1,400 feet late last week, "Bill" Booth, investor and public affairs manager for Hecla, said Monday.

The crew was installing new tracks for ore cars and locomotives and hanging new lines for compressed and ventilation air, Booth said. The tunnel will be used as a base station for exploratory drilling, he said.

The object of their search was a large, low-grade silver-copper deposit similar to recent discoveries in western Montana near Troy and Noxon, he said.

"The geological theory is that there might be a large, peripheral ore body similar to Troy," he said.

The Silver Mountain property was mined for about 15 years around the turn of the century, yielding 600,000 tons of high-grade ore that assayed 4 percent copper and six ounces of silver per ton, he said.

High-grade ore of similar composition was located near the Troy and Noxon discoveries, he said, leading geologists to theorize that a similar low-grade deposit might be found near Mullan.

The Silver Mountain property is adjacent to Hecla's Lucky Friday mine, a major North American silver producer. Additional exploration of Silver Mountain property may be undertaken at depth from the Lucky Friday's workings, Booth said.

Hecla and Silver Mountain signed a 25-year exploratory lease agreement June 6, calling for minimum annual work expenditures of $150,000 and a combined minimum royalty $4,000 per month.

The Silver Mountain properties are held in undivided interest by Hecla with 37.5 percent, Silver Mountain Lead Mines of Kellogg with 25 percent and Bunker Limited Partnership of Kellogg with 37.5 percent.

Both sides at college willing to go to court over fee dispute

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — The two sides on a student fee dispute at North Idaho College in Coeur d'Alene refuse to back away from a court battle, although it may severely damage the school's budget.

"I believe the students will be hurt by this," said Mary Jo Hansen, NIC student body president. "But they'll be hurt far more if the fees are allowed to go on. We're going to see this resolved at any cost."

An $11-per-semester fee was first charged in 1982 to raise funds for parking lot expansions and a sports center with running track. Students argued that NIC saved the fee instead of spending the money the money during the year it was levied, as state law mandates.

By this year, the school had saved $279,645 in outdoor facility fees. NIC's counterpart in Twin Falls, the College of Southern Idaho, charges no such fees, CSI Dean of Finance Karl Black said.

In July, school officials announced the only way to solve the dispute was by filing a lawsuit, which named the student body as defendants.

Pullman police plan to monitor noise in Idaho

MOSCOW (AP) — Pullman, Wash. police will travel across the border Friday to record Idaho noise.

Pullman Sgt. Mark Sires will escort Moscow City Council members to the University of Idaho's homecoming street dance Friday and to a Moscow High School football game, offering a demonstration of a decibel meter.

In the throes of revamping Moscow's noise ordinance, the council wants to see how the meter works.

The Pullman Police Department occasionally uses a meter to enforce the town's noise law, Sgt. Don Witt said.

Pullman adopted a revised noise ordinance in July, ordering officers to write citations after two separate complaints about a disturbance. Moscow City Council members decided to examine their city's noise ordinance after residents complained about loud music and noise.

Viola man is sentenced in hunting death

WALLACE (AP) — A Viola man has been sentenced to two years probation and the loss of his hunting license for five years for the shooting death of a Lewiston man in an October 1987 hunting accident.

Roy E. Williams, 50, received a withheld judgment on a charge of involuntary manslaughter Monday from 1st District Judge Richard Magnuson in the death of Douglas W. Niles, 25.

Last month, Williams entered an "afford plea," in which he did not admit guilt but acknowledged that there was enough evidence to convict him of the charge.

Magnuson on Monday accepted a plea-bargain agreement worked out by Williams' attorney and the Shoshone County prosecutor and rejected an argument from the victim's mother that the sentence was too lenient.

Expanding poll places improves participation

Discounting the obvious political intent in bringing up the issue ahead of an election, we think local Democrats have nonetheless raised a good point in questioning the decisions to move certain polling places and thereby to make them less convenient.

The Republican officials responsible for the decisions — County Clerk Dick Pence and Commissioners Judy Felton, Jim Fraley and Marvin Hempleman — respond that their motives are pure.

They say moving the polling places in precincts 6 and 18, which happen to have disproportionate numbers of Democrats, was done to provide consistent polling places for both primary and general elections.

But their responses when the issue was raised reveals a certain testiness, particularly on the part of Pence, and suggests that the officials aren't as interested as they might be in helping to expand voter participation in Twin Falls County.

Pence has long been known for his irascible manners in dealing with both citizens and county employees. Yet, when his own competence is questioned, he seems to find an excuse to blame others, including of course, the media.

The same tone exists in Commissioner Hempleman's remarks, who discounted concerns about elderly people not being able to get to the courthouse to vote, by saying "anyone can get anywhere they want to."

We think the officials ought to reflect more sensitivity on the polling-place access issue.

A good place to start would be to make sure Pence follows the wishes of people in precinct 18, some 150 of whom signed a petition to change the polling location.

Pence said he would try to find a place in time for the general election, but now says he meant 1990, not this fall. So citizens there are now looking at yet another delay.

The polling-place issue is not exactly a new one in Twin Falls County, but another year has now come and gone with little if any substantial progress. That seems to be because of official foot-dragging.

Rather than blame the issue on election-minded Democrats (who isn't election-minded in a fall campaign?), we think the commissioners should look for ways to increase voter participation, not restrict it.

Expanding availability of polling places is an easy way to help accomplish that. This isn't a task which should take years to accomplish.

Favors candidate Lancaster

When we go into the field to pick a flower, we want it to have character, rather than choose a weed that would be a scourge to the valley.

When we select someone for a public office, that same quality should be a prerequisite. We have here a profile of a fine gentleman: honest, forthright, dependable, and seeks to be fair to us and the issues involved.

This person is Tom Lancaster whom we need as a Twin Falls County Commissioner. He has had the experience of being a highway commissioner for eight years which involved budgeting, personnel management, bidding, audits, and the adherence of Idaho Code procedures. Presently he is a member of the Idaho State Local Highway Needs Assessment Council, State Highway Safety Commission, and the Association of Highway Districts.

We have before us a most disgusting situation: our county commissioners refuse to budget in regard to the placement of voting places that would be accessible and convenient for our citizens.

This has all the aspects of being a cheap political trick — discouraging or preventing some people from voting.

It is about time we do some weeding of those that are a scourge to our community. Lancaster will not follow that trick of no progress. Call him that good flower with his wife by his side. Remember, a former mayor of New York City, Fiorello La Guardia was called a little flower.

News media mislead public

The news media, including Mr. Hattinger and Mr. Howard, continue to show their shallowness of understanding in posing questions regarding issues of the presidential campaign.

In one breath they ask the candidates what they plan to do, if elected, to combat America's devastating financial problems, including deficit spending which has been brought about by unconstitutional social programs.

In the next breath they indicate great neglect in public spending for education, bridge building, roads, caring for the poor and elderly. They praise their socialist candidate, Michael Dukakis for advocating abandonment of Star Wars and MX Missile programs, due to their dubious value for national defense. They praise efforts to capitulate with the born-again Russian tyrants, and want positive answers from both candidates of how they plan to increase the capitalization.

They come away blinded by the false security of negotiations with the world's most dishonest men, and hid from the fact that we have no real military capability to defend us, the American people from these depots.

The Star Wars program is not just a myth and waste of money. With current technology, and a united will, we could possible deter the Russians from using a first strike, which could totally destroy our great nation for fear that the strike would fail to stop retaliation. Retaliation is not of concern currently to the Russians.

Isn't it time that we stop being idiots and choosing idiots to make our decisions? Isn't it time we put real answers to the problems and downfall of America? We must remove the government from being a universal caretaker, a universal insurance company, a universal director of our affairs, and the affairs of all others.

We must restore basic constitutional government with only basic government involvement in our lives.

We must personally repent from socialism and become self-reliant. We must stop allowing government funds being spent in unlimited amounts for valueless transactions for all purposes, including military where the only value obtained is jobs, including the vast array of government jobs producing nothing. It is not the proper responsibility of government to care for any of us at the expense of the rest of us.

Again, you in the media please obtain some personal values, and correct direction, before you continue molding our minds.

Show respect for cemetery

All people should be allowed visits to the graves of their loved ones. We realize everyone has their own way of dealing with the loss.

I ask all my friends, school kids and of the community to help keep our cemetery a place to show our respect for loved ones, a place to be proud of, and to realize it is a sacred spot. If you have any problems contact me. I'll help any way I can.

Reader believes lottery OK

I've been hearing a lot about the lottery issue lately, especially on the radio. Against it.

Well as far as I am concerned, Idahoans passed the bill a few years ago, by a healthy margin.

This B.S. of changing the state's constitution is just a poor excuse to prolong the process.

If the lottery is such a bad rap in surrounding states, why don't they vote it out of existence?

As I see it, if one doesn't wish to participate, fine, I doubt if anybody would hold them at gun point to do so.

Policemen must obey the law

I've got a problem in regards to the police commander who had the accident, charged with DUI even though it was later reduced to inattentive driving. If he would have been a master average citizen, he would have been convicted.

If anyone can know how to get out of a DUI conviction, it would be a police officer with over 20 years experience.

I have no malice because I don't think I even know the man, and probably still wouldn't know him if I bumped into him on the street. Joe Average loses any trust and respect of his behavior.

As a trained police commander who, if I read correctly, trains our police rookies questions arise for me, also for and of the county except, I guess for those poor souls who are either too naive or foolish that believe those in power can do no wrong at all.

Question:
1. The length of time before the accident was reported?
2. The consumption of two cans of beer af-

Yellowstone fires are not a disaster

Richard A. Bartlett

Today the National Park Service numbers 2 million plus visitors to Yellowstone every year.

A park "for the people," Yellowstone is a stunning success. As a source of national pride it has no equal. When stories are told of deprivations in the park, or attempted raids upon its boundaries, elements in Congress have come to Yellowstone's defense. It is good politics because a growing constituency demands more protection and less exploitation. National pride is involved.

In the 1880s and 1890s, the threats were from poachers, concessionaires and railroads. Mining interests introduced bills in Congress to return the northeast quadrant of the park to the public domain. In the 1920s and '30s, it was irrigation advocates in Idaho, Montana and Wyoming trying to dam up Yellowstone Lake and cut off the southwest corner of the park.

Concern over the national treasure has never lagged. But the culprits who threaten it, real or imagined, have changed. The most common object of criticism today is the agency assigned to manage and protect Yellowstone, the National Park Service. Some of its experimental policies, based on the scientific research, have either failed — as in the bear population diminishing, the flora decreasing, the elk population exploding — or have been controversial. The park service has been forced to experiment, has done so as wisely as possible, and has indeed often had less than successful results.

This year some Yellowstone lovers have declared open season on the park service because of the destructive forest fires that have raged there.

"Yellowstone is ruined," some have cried. "Damn the park service," say others. For those who say that Yellowstone is destroyed, who say it will be no longer worth seeing — a pox upon them!

The magnificent grand canyon of Yellowstone is unchanged. Yellowstone Lake remains. The streams still flow with fish in them, the animals still roam and the thermal phenomena still boil, spout and smell. What has taken place this year — made worse by unusual climatic conditions — has been done by nature's own design and in accord with the Enabling Act "to retain (in) its natural condition." Nature is not always beautiful or gentle: note Hurricane Gilbert. But nature is regenerate. Remember that.

The honeymooners who visit Yellowstone next summer will gaze upon some charred landscapes befitting a Hollywood horror movie setting. But they will also see a carpet of green grasses speckled with wild flowers and grazing wild animals in abundance. If they will return in a decade or two, they will observe with surprise the restorative powers of nature in Yellowstone.

And years later, they will say with some pride and a bit of boastfulness to their grown children who visit the park on a honeymoon, "You should have seen Yellowstone after the fires of '88."

Richard A. Bartlett is professor of American history at Florida State University and author of "Yellowstone: A Wilderness Besieged."

Dukakis bests Bush at blah-blah

Dan Rodericks

Bush Man. Let's go to the top.

Question 1: Drugs. Bush criticized a very popular "Crocodile Dundee" film for its humorous depiction of cocaine snorting. The Diminutive One, on the other hand, brought up the Reagan administration's dealings with Manuel Noriega. Score it for Duke.

Question 2: Deficit. The answers from both sides were a lot of blah-blah-blah. The Duke called Bush "the Joe Suzu of American politics." Bush said that the Duke's answer was "about as clear as Boston Harbor." Score it a draw.

Question 3: Medical insurance. Bush stood there and said employers should not be forced to provide health insurance for their workers. Duke came back with a Reaganesque Little Jimmy story about an uninsured kid whose dad won't let him play in the Little League for fear he would get hurt. No contest.

Question 4: Personal style. A prissy Bush hit Dukakis for his membership in the American Civil Liberties Union, but then said, "There's nothing wrong with it." Then he brought up the Pledge of Allegiance "issue," the phoniest issue of the campaign, and said, "I hope people don't think I'm questioning his patriotism." The Diminutive One finally stood up to Bush on that, and he did it with such class I had to give him the round.

Question 5: Homelessness. Duke pummeled Bush on the Reagan administration's commitment to housing, which is a joke. The only thing that saved Bush was a shot about the status of interest rates before 1980. Score it a draw.

Question 6: Death Penalty. Abortion. Bush nailed the Duke on the infamous Massachusetts prison furlough program. Score it for George.

Question 7: Cities. This was where we got into Bush's "thousand-points-of-light" money. Dukakis was asked where he would get funds for urban programs and never answered the question. Another draw.

Question 8: Defense. Foreign Policy. Duke blew Bush away with the Iran-Contra fiasco, his support of Noriega, his support of Ferdinand Marcos to the bitter end and his support of the Nicaraguan Contras.

Question 9: Soviet Union. Dukakis said that "Star Wars" makes no sense, but that it's OK to spend millions researching it. Say what? Give this one to Bush.

Question 10: Terrorists. An absolute softball question for Dukakis, who used it to zap Bush with Iran-Contra again.

Question 11: The Vice President. Bush said that J. Danforth Quayle had been ridiculed. Dukakis said that, in this campaign, Bush had won the gold medal for ridicule. I scored it for Duke.

Question 12: Third World Debt. The answers were all blah-blah, but Bush's blah-blah sounded better than Duke's.

Closing statements. I became transfixed by Bush's cuff links because Bush's closing statement was so boring. Dukakis, however, shocked the nation with a schmalzy, stunning closer that would have made Ronald Reagan proud. There may be hope for this guy yet.

Dan Rodericks writes for the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service.

ter the accident and before the state police arrived for the pain? (Grow up.)

3. The witnesses who helped by reporting this accident?

4. The misquote by the prosecutor about him being a police officer and could lose his job because of a DUI conviction. It sounds like what happened when that prosecutor who was drunk and killed those two kids on the other side of the road in the Boise area. Trust in the justice establishment. If you are in it don't worry about the laws you back because they don't apply to you.

5. The fact that because of the controversy he is still on the police force as a police commander and training officer of police officer recruits?

Personally I think that the integrity, honesty and trust of the Twin Falls City Police is nonexistent. And I have heard and feel that the city has lost what respect it had.

Yes, police officers are human and have their faults, but this goes beyond that. But, they also have to enforce the laws and they must obey those laws and have and maintain a much higher standard because of their position as police officers.

Look at the lack of respect already because of that prosecutor who killed those two little children who were on the other side of the road and she was drunk and got her wrist slapped. She was protected by a judicial system that doesn't care about Joe Average.

If public servants and police officers do this type of behavior by not obeying the laws that they enforce why should Joe Average obey those same laws or even respect that police officer of judicial system?

Reagan administration corrupt

Don't need another Republican. Why can't the Republicans run a decent campaign without running the Democrats into the mud?

Because ever since Reagan has been in office, we have the most corrupt administration in American history. Look how many of his cabinet have left office, because of wrongdoings.

Reagan promised to cut the deficit. Look what happened, it's gone over two trillion. Twice as much and he can send billions overseas and let our people be homeless and starving, and then he has the nerve to say Dukakis is a sick man.

He is in a lot better health than Reagan. At least Dukakis can remember what has happened. He don't remember anything about the Contra affair, and the reason he pushed the tax deal through. He saved about $9,000.

It didn't help me a bit but it sure made these big corporations millions. Course, that's who it is for in the first place.

Now, as for Bush, he can't even remember when Pearl Harbor was. Like in his speech on Sept. 11 and 47 years ago today the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor, and in another speech he said 10 days before I was sworn in as president.

He can't even remember who or what he is. So do you think we need some one like that for president? He might some day forget where the White House is. I don't think we need him.

Now for Quayle, I think he is a draft dodger. The reason he went into the National Guard is to keep from going to Nam. He was used to eating with a silver fork, when in Nam he would have to eat with a plastic or tin fork and field rations. So we don't need a draft dodger either.

I was married and had two children, and working at Lockheed Aircraft on Dec. 17, 1941. I could have stayed there all during the war. But I enlisted on Dec. 11, 1941. I owed it to my country to go and fight for it. I also received a Purple Heart. So I don't think we need him for a vice president.

Now, for our great Senator Symms and his big mouth muth, making remarks about Dukakis' family that were false.

He better get the facts before he opens his big fat mouth, and remember one thing, senior citizens, that Symms and Dole were two of the senators that voted for the 1.5 percent raise we got on our cost of living, and Medicare took half of it. And Symms and Dole voted themselves a $15,000 raise at the same time. So, you see what they think of us.

I have been a Republican for 54 years, but I am going to change parties. I can't stand any more of these Republican corruption. Me and my family will vote for Dukakis.

Gunman opens fire in school, killing 8-year-old

GREENWOOD, S.C. (AP) — A gunman walked into an elementary school and opened fire Monday, killing an 8-year-old girl and injuring 10 other people, authorities said.

The man was taken into custody without incident after surrendering to the principal, the school superintendent said.

The gunman apparently entered Oakland Elementary School through a rear door and went into a third-grade classroom with about 20 students and began shooting randomly, District Superintendent Bob Watson said at a news conference.

The man then left the classroom and went into the cafeteria, firing on the approximately 100 children eating their lunch, Watson said.

Watson said the man shot two teachers and three children in the cafeteria. He then went back into the third-grade classroom. Six children were shot in the classroom, but Watson said he was not sure whether that was before or after the man went into the cafeteria.

Watson said Kat Finkbeiner, a physical education teacher, jumped on the assailant during the incident and was shot in the face while they struggled. She was hospitalized in fair condition.

"As far as I know, the assailant had no connection with the schools. It appears to be an entirely random incident," Watson said.

The man surrendered to Principal Eleanor Rice and police took him into custody soon afterward, Watson said.

Witnesses said some children ran into the woods when the man began shooting.

Physical education aide Philip Browning said after the suspect quit firing, he threw the pistol down and walked out as if nothing had happened. "He remained calm and offered no resistance," Browning said.

The dead child was identified as Shequila Tawonn Bradley, said Greenwood County Coroner Odell Duvall.

Dukakis, Bush renew campaign hostilities with post-debate jabs

By The Associated Press

Michael Dukakis and George Bush exchanged post-debate jabs from a distance Monday, the Democrat saying his rival would lead America nowhere and the vice president charging his opponent with trying to obscure a liberal past.

The two candidates renewed campaign hostilities as their aides waited for the impact of Sunday night's nationally televised debate to show up in the close race for the White House. The first polls rated the 90-minute confrontation a tossup.

Dukakis moved to exploit the debate to his advantage as aides rushed two new television commercials into production containing snippets of his performance. One shows the Democrat delivering a portion of his closing debate statement, saying: "The best America is yet to come."

Bush joined running mate Dan Quayle at a campaign rally in Jackson, Tenn., and said, "One debate down. How'd I do." The crowd cheered and Quayle provided the answer, declaring Bush the victor.

Overhead, a small plane carried a banner of dissent. "Dukakis 1. Bush 0," it read.

"After last night, for most people the notion of President Dukakis is a very, very troubling notion today," said Quayle. That was an attempt to reverse Dukakis' debate-night declaration that the prospect of a President Quayle was a troubling idea for many people.

The vice president devoted much of his debate time to depicting Dukakis as a liberal. "We're going to keep on doing it," Bush said as he left Winston-Salem, N.C., for a round of campaigning.

Despite the outward display of confidence, Bush and his aides sought to deflect any repercussions from the vice president's debate comment that he hadn't decided whether women who obtain abortions should face legal penalties.

Tobacco industry tries to kill measure creating toughest anti-smoking law

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — The tobacco industry is mounting an expensive campaign to try to snuff out an Oregon ballot measure that would create the nation's toughest anti-smoking law.

But opponents of Measure 6 will have their work cut out for them because a recent statewide poll found strong public support for it.

Tobacco companies are using mass mailings of brochures, newsletters and voter registration kits in hopes of scuttling Measure 6 on the Nov. 8 ballot.

"We're going to spend a lot of money," at least several hundred thousand dollars, said Mark Nelson, a Salem lobbyist who's running the campaign to defeat Measure 6. "We're going to make a major effort on this."

The anti-smoking proposal would toughen the 1981 Oregon Indoor Clean Air Act, which makes most public buildings off limits to smokers, except in designated smoking areas.

The new proposal, if approved, would wipe out designated smoking areas and ban smoking in virtually all indoor work areas and enclosed places frequented by the public. Violators would be subject to civil penalties of up to $250.

Smoking still would be allowed in bars and taverns, tobacco stores, and hotel and motel rooms.

The Oregon Lung Association led a petition drive to win a spot on the ballot for the proposal.

Gerry Odioso, who is coordinating the campaign for the Lung Association, said non-smokers should not have to put up with secondhand smoke in public facilities or workplaces.

"What we're talking about is a public health measure," Odioso said. "We know that secondhand smoke causes disease, including lung cancer in otherwise healthy non-smokers."

Study after study has shown unhealthful levels of tobacco smoke in non-smoking sections," she said.

Economic slowdown forecast

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economists from major U.S. corporations are predicting the economy will slow next year — bad news for presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis, who are both counting on strong growth to help them reduce the federal budget deficit.

A panel of 60 economists from the National Association of Business Economists are bullish about growth this year, predicting an expansion of 3.9 percent as measured by the gross national product. That's even more optimistic than the administration's forecast of 3.5 percent.

However, the median forecast for next year is an anemic 2.3 percent, substantially less than the administration forecast of 3.1 percent.

Nearly half of the economists — 47 percent — said in a survey in late August and early September that they expect the country to topple into a recession by the end of next year. Another 42 percent believe a recession will occur in 1990. Only 11 percent believe the six-year-old economic expansion will continue into 1991 or later.

That's slightly more optimistic than a similar survey in May when 57 percent said the recession would come in 1989.

Republicans are looking for strong growth the rest of this year to boost Bush into the presidency, and the economists are optimistic he'll win. They boosted their projection from 2.9 percent in May to 3.9 percent, even though the summer drought is expected to knock a full percentage point off GNP growth.

Fifty-three percent of a larger panel of 300 association members believes Bush will win, while 37 percent think Dukakis, the Democrat, will be elected. A more lopsided majority, 62 percent vs. 22 percent, believe Bush's policies would better maintain stable growth and moderate inflation.

However, the economists — who identified the budget deficit as the No. 1 economic problem facing the next president — were pessimistic that either candidate will be able to accomplish much on the deficit.

However, by a 3-to-1 margin, the 300-member economists' panel predicted no major deficit reduction package would be enacted in 1989.

A majority, 51 percent, said there would be no great difference between a Bush and a Dukakis administration in the chances of a package being adopted. Twenty-eight percent said they believed Dukakis would have a better chance, versus 20 percent who said Bush. That probably reflects an assumption that Dukakis would find it easier to work with a Democratic Congress.

The median deficit projection for next year was $150 billion, about the same as last year's budget gap and the deficit expected in fiscal year 1988.

Other economic policy priorities, listed in order of importance after shrinking the budget deficit, were: completing the free trade agreement with Canada; speeding up productivity growth; encouraging personal savings; and stimulating business investment.

Near the bottom of the economists' list was curbing hostile corporate takeovers, discouraging corporate debt accumulation, increasing antitrust law enforcement, reforming securities laws to prevent another stock market crash and changing federal law to allow banks to enter the securities industries.

In another prediction, the 60-member panel said inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index will kick up, from a projected 4.5 percent this year to 5.1 percent next year.

State unemployment insurance funds face massive borrowing, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most state unemployment insurance funds would have to borrow billions from the federal government to pay benefits in a future recession because of inadequate reserves, according to a congressional report released Monday.

The General Accounting Office study found the Unemployment Insurance system's ability to cushion economic hard times for many Americans has declined as states have tried to manage their financially troubled programs.

Created to help working people make it through economic hard times, the state trusts are tightening eligibility requirements solely to keep their books in the black, leaving more Americans to face a bleak future if a recession strikes, the GAO said.

Only one in four unemployed people received unemployment benefits in October 1987, GAO said.

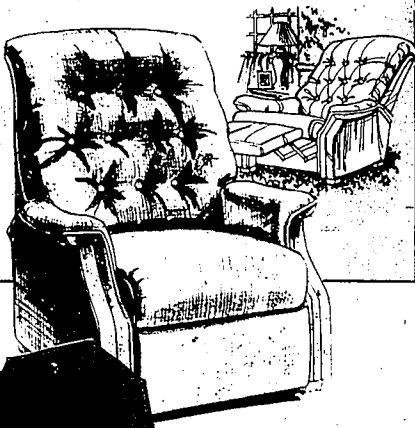

The GAO, an investigative arm of Congress, said that represents a decline in the proportion of unemployed receiving the benefits.

The average proportion of the unemployed receiving benefits during the 1980s has fallen by about 30 percent since the 1950s, according to GAO.

In 1952, nearly 55 percent of unemployed civilian workers were receiving benefits; by 1986, only 32 percent received benefits, it said.

Reagan will end gulf ship escort

NEW YORK (AP) — Citing the Iran-Iraq cease-fire agreement, the Reagan administration said Monday it will end America's ship-escorting operation in the Persian Gulf while maintaining a presence there.

President Reagan's decision to terminate the close-quarter convoying of commercial ships came after officials reviewed how the Aug. 20 cease-fire was working, said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

The move substantially lowers the U.S. profile in the troubled waters nearly three months after a U.S. Navy Aegis cruiser shot down an Iranian civilian airliner with 290 people on board. The United States said it regretted the accident, and officials have been weighing a program to compensate relatives of the victims.

Talking to reporters aboard Air Force One while Reagan flew here from Washington, Fitzwater said the administration decided to relax the Persian Gulf sea-lane policing operation only after consulting with allies and friends in the region.

After making a farewell address to the U.N. General Assembly, Reagan met with Sheik Jaber Al-Ahmed Al-Sabah, the emir of Kuwait, and also had a session set for later Monday with leaders of the Gulf Cooperation Council, which is headed by Saudi Arabia.

During the meeting with the Kuwaiti official, Reagan was asked why the change was being made in the U.S. military operation.

New Lebanese leader fails to win support

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Army commander Gen. Michel Aoun failed Monday to win Arab recognition for his fledgling Christian military Cabinet in a struggle for power with a rival Syrian-backed Muslim government.

None of three Arab envoys who attended a meeting at the presidential palace called by Aoun apparently made any commitment to his Christian Cabinet, while other Arab envoys boycotted the session.

At the same time, Syria, which supports the rival Muslim government led by Salim Hoss, stepped up its criticism of Aoun's 4-day-old, three-man Cabinet.

Syria's rejection of Aoun has sharpened sectarian tensions in Lebanon and threatened to formalize the country's de facto partition into Christian and Muslim areas carved out during the 13-year-old civil war.

President Amin Gemayel appointed fellow Maronite Catholic Aoun prime minister in a six-man interim military Cabinet on Thursday, five minutes before Gemayel's six-year term ended. Parliament repeatedly failed to elect a successor to was the legitimate authority.

Three Muslim army officers Gemayel named to serve in Aoun's government refused to serve. But the general insisted his Cabinet had legally inherited Gemayel's powers and constituted Lebanon's legitimate government.

Gemayel's action in naming Aoun violated an unwritten covenant from Lebanon's independence in 1943 under which the president must be a Maronite, the premier a Sunni and the parliament speaker a Shiite.

The only envoys to respond to Aoun's call for a meeting Monday were Iraq's Charge d'Affaires Sabhan Al-Hadithi, Tunisia's Charge d'Affaires Mohammed Ali Ben Abdallah, and the head of the Egyptian interest section, Hassan Shash.

An aide said Aoun asked them to "inform your governments that the Cabinet appointed by President Amin Gemayel before his term ended is the legitimate executive body in Lebanon."

The representatives of Algeria, Libya and South Yemen, who are based in Muslim west Beirut, refused to attend the meeting, an action interpreted in some circles as reflecting their country's disapproval of Aoun's Cabinet.

The envoys who attended the meeting were non-committal on the issue of recognition.

"We expressed to Gen. Aoun our hope that the Lebanese would agree on the election of a new president to unite the country and avert the evil of partition," Shash said.

4 more mines found, destroyed in gulf

ABOARD USS VANDEGRIFT IN THE GULF (AP) — Four mines have been discovered in the northern Persian Gulf recently and U.S. naval officers say shipping will be endangered if rough, winter weather rips more mines from their moorings.

U.S. Navy officers said Monday three of the mines were spotted drifting on the surface after breaking loose from their seabed anchors.

As winter approaches, the waters in the northern gulf get a lot rougher and that's when the anchored mines are more likely to break away. They're also harder to spot, said one officer. "We're very concerned that the situation is going to get worse in the immediate future."

The warning was issued as this 3,600-ton missile frigate arrived off Kuwait, escorting what U.S. military sources said could be the next-to-last convoy of U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti tankers to be protected by American warships.

Monday's convoy, the 67th this year and the 89th since "Operation Earnest Will" began, brought the 294,739-ton tanker Townsend up the gulf to Kuwait. A second tanker, the U.S.-owned Overseas Valdez, dropped off at Bahrain.

As they neared Kuwait Monday, the Vandegrift and its massive charge sailed through waters where the missile frigate Taylor, a sister ship, spotted a mine Saturday. It was destroyed by Navy divers.

A Kuwaiti cargo vessel reported a similar discovery Friday near Hout island, 40 miles northwest of the Taylor sighting.

Israelis kill 2 in occupied territories

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops killed two Palestinians and wounded 67 in the occupied lands on Monday, hospital officials said, and a U.N. agency claimed the army was resorting to gunfire too often to quell the unrest.

There is a clear trend of a growing use of live ammunition that cannot be justified, said a senior official of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency. "Our concern is very real. This is not just a knee-jerk reaction to a bad day."

The Israeli army rejected the criticism.

The number of Palestinians wounded Monday was the second highest since the Dec. 8 start of the uprising against Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. As many as 90 Palestinians were wounded during protests against the April 16 assassination of PLO military commander Khalil Wazir.

Monday's clashes came as Palestinians staged a general strike in the occupied lands to protest the detention of thousands of Palestinian activists by Israeli authorities.

Soviets say rebels shell Afghan cities

MOSCOW (AP) — Muslim guerrillas staged rocket attacks on the Afghan capital of Kabul and the southern city of Pulafikan on Monday, killing 21 people and wounding 33, the official Soviet news agency Tass said.

Also Monday, a bomb exploded under a military jeep in Kabul, killing two soldiers and injuring two pedestrians, said a Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity. It was not known if the soldiers were Soviet or Afghan.

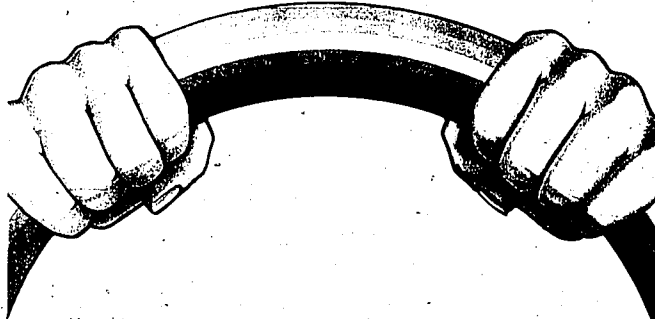

Tass said 16 people were killed and 27 people were wounded in a ground-to-ground missile attack on Kabul.

The report said five people died and six others were injured by shelling on Pulafikan. It said Afghan forces confiscated rocket launchers, a rifle, a mortar and several machine guns.

Four Afghan jets swept into Pakistani territory Monday, bombing three border villages and killing six people, Pakistan's state-run television reported.

This man fights fires by setting them

TWIN FALLS — With a helicopter of incendiary pingpong balls, Dale Jarrell set fire to 2,500 acres of national forest this summer. For the 48-year-old Forest Service official, it was just part of the job. "There's no magic to it," he said.

"It's just a matter of having the intestinal fortitude to light that much fire."

Jarrell, fire management officer for the Sawtooth National Forest, has been with the Forest Service since graduating from high school in 1958. He went to work in insect and disease control but "ended up fighting more fires than anything else," he said. This summer, Jarrell's 30th season of fighting forest fires, he was an incident commander at the Yellowstone area fires. "He was in charge of three fires in the Bridger Teton National Forest and the Grand Teton National Park just south of Yellowstone National Park. Jarrell spent 42 days as the overall supervisor of Mink, Emerald and Huck fires. His job included coordinating resources and information with teams fighting the seven major fires in the Yellowstone area. In the Mink fire area, a July 1987 tornado had downed a swath of timber that lay tangled like jackstraws, dry and ready to burn. To prevent the wildfire from reaching the downed timber, Jarrell planned to backburn 2,500 to 3,000 acres.

A helicopter flying between 50 and 100 feet above the ground released pingpong balls injected with a substance that ignites about 30 seconds after launching. The balls were timed to drop about every two seconds, falling about 14 feet apart. Within seven minutes, the whole 2,500-acre area was on fire, Jarrell said.

This is the worst fire year Jarrell has seen since the Sundance Fire burned 50,000 acres in one night in Northern Idaho in 1967.

In the Bridger Teton area, the most any fire burned in a single day was about 30,000 acres. That's 47 square miles, or an area from just east of Twin Falls to Bliss — squared.

Twelve helicopters flying an average of 5,500 pounds of supplies and 500 passengers a day made the firefighting base camp the busiest airport in Wyoming, with a flight about every two minutes, Jarrell said.

Fire conditions were "absolutely perfect for ignition" this summer, he said.

"It takes a combination of many things to have a really big fire," Jarrell said. "That's what we had this year."

Hot and dry weather lowered moisture in the dead wood in the forest. The Teton area has received 23 inches less rain than normal for the past two years, Jarrell said.

Lightning started the tinder-dry timber, and winds fanned the flames. One day at Huck fire, wind knocked trees into power lines and started another fire about 3:30 p.m. By 6 the fire had moved six miles and consumed 24,000 acres.

One helicopter and two crews were dispatched within minutes of the start of the fire, but they had no chance of stopping it, Jarrell said. The fire's convection columns were strong enough to pick up burning branches as large as three feet long

1 held in teen beating

TWIN FALLS — A club-wielding attacker pursued his victim to the city police station's door Sunday and continued battering him even after a police officer drew his gun and ordered him to stop.

The episode, which occurred about 2:45 a.m., ended only after the attacker — still defying the officer's commands — smashed a window of the victim's car, according to police reports.

Police detained a 16-year-old Twin Falls boy on charges of aggravated battery and malicious destruction of property. He was taken to the Jerome Juvenile Detention Center later that morning.

State law prohibits authorities from releasing the names of juvenile defendants.

The victim, 16-year-old Lillias Linch of Jerome, was taken to the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center where he was treated and released, according to hospital officials.

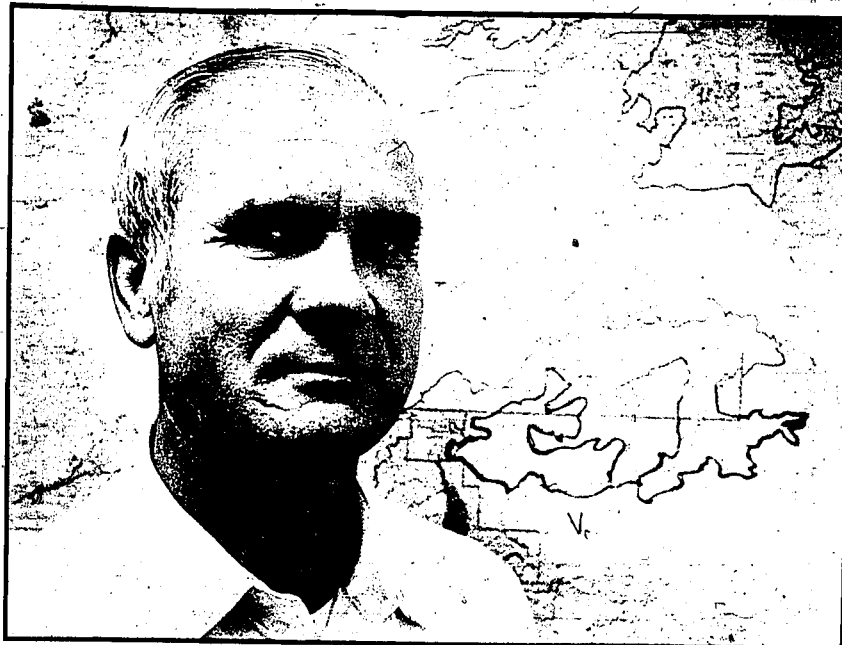

"He just had some lumps and bruises," said Dan Chatterton, the arresting police officer. "He was pretty sore."

The beating followed a car chase that ended in front of the police station at 356 Third Ave. E., according to police reports. Linch jumped out of a car and ran for the station's door, but his attacker, who had been in another car, caught him and started beating him around the head and shoulders.

Meanwhile, Chatterton drove up, jumped from his car and ordered the attacker to stop. He didn't, so Chatterton drew his gun and repeated the command, according to police reports.

After a few more seconds, the attacker stopped beating Linch, ran to

City council may increase street lighting

By KIRK MITCHELL
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The chance that a street light could prevent violence may persuade city council members to increase city lighting.

The cost of losing a bike to thieves because of insufficient lighting may not seem worth the expense of upgrading lighting, Councilman Jim Vickers said, but "if we can prevent one rape or one murder then that is not a lot of money."

City Manager Tom Courtney told council members at a city work session Monday that installing and maintaining lighting in 110 cul-de-sacs and 75 dead-end streets around the city would cost approximately $26,000 the first year. Since 1981, the city has maintained street lighting only at intersections.

The council made no decision but asked staff members to draft a plan for turning the lights back on a few at a time.

The city looked into the cost of lighting cul-de-sacs and dead ends after recently receiving a complaint from Ponderosa Street residents, who said when the city turned off the light on their street in 1981, they became easy targets for thieves.

"We have a policy of not providing lighting for security," said Councilman Richard Carr. "I'm not uncomfortable with our current policy."

He said the intersection lights are for pedestrian and traffic safety.

Several people throughout the city maintain street lights privately through contracts with Idaho Power Co. Each of those lights costs private citizens $15.62 a month, $4 a month more than the city would pay.

The city did a crime comparison of Southwood, Cascade and Skyline Subdivisions and Skyland Trailer Park from Jan. 1, 1985 to Sept. 9, 1988. During that time, there were 37 crimes committed per home in Southwood, where Ponderosa Street is located, 5 per home in Cascade, 1.39 per home in Skyland and 14 per home in Skyland, Courtney said.

Through comparison of the various subdivisions and the number of crimes reported, "it appears Southwood Subdivision does not have an unduly high crime rate," he said.

No accidents were reported on Ponderosa Street during that time, Courtney said.

Mayor Doug Vollmer said city staff members will see if there is a program the city can use to systematically add street lights at about $5,000 to $6,000 a year until all streets are lighted.

One possibility is that the city would add lighting by geographic areas until the money runs out, Courtney said.

TV station closer to earning space

TWIN FALLS — TV station K49AZ may be close to winning the squabble over whether it deserves one of the primary King Videocable channels.

A recent A. C. Nielsen Co. survey firmly places K49 in the top 12 most-watched channels in the area in a recently released breakdown of its July ratings, said Kris Harvey, station manager.

Nielsen rated K49 ninth out of 25 King Videocable stations.

"We're thrilled," Harvey said.

K49 is a local, low-power station that has struggled to win a favored position in King Video's first 12 channels. The station was placed on Channel 2 in January and King Videocable has given it until December to prove it has sufficient popularity to warrant a spot in the first 12 channels.

Station owners had complained last year that the station was in danger of going under because it had been placed on Channel 19, which many television sets are not equipped to receive. The station also contended that other stations had been given preferential treatment, Harvey said.

She said the station paid for a special breakdown of survey results that included only King Videocable subscribers.

Since being placed on the new channel, K49's advertising revenue has doubled, enabling the station to buy better programming, she said.

"That's fine and dandy," responded Chris Talkington, manager of King Videocable, when told of the recent ratings, but a decision will not be made until later Nielsen ratings are released, he said.

"The ultimate test will occur this November," he said. "We hope them the best."

Talkington was unable to confirm the survey results, but he urged The Times-News not to take Harvey's word for it.

He said although K49's programming has improved since January, it has been uneven.

"The programming still lacks," Talkington said. "I wish she (Harvey) would spend less time blowing her horn and more time providing good programming."

Harvey said the ratings are unlikely to fall by November. With programming such as the "Dating Game," the cartoon series "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" and the movie "Nightmare on Elm Street," the ratings should improve, she said.

Talkington said if K49 turns out to be one of the 12 most-watched channels on the system, King Cable then would decide which channel it would be on permanently.

"There is no agreement what channel they would be on," he said.

Minidoka bill clears House

By Andrea Peirce
 States News Service

WASHINGTON — A bill that authorizes the Bureau of Reclamation to build and run new camping grounds, a boating area and other facilities at the crowded Minidoka recreation area near Rupert sailed through the House on Monday.

The bill, sponsored by 2nd District Democrat Richard Stallings, limits federal spending on the project to $1.6 million and requires local groups to pay half of the project's construction and maintenance costs over the next 40 years.

Last year, more than 61,000 people jammed the grassy, 21-acre park dotted with majestic, foreign trees to fish, water ski and relax, said Allen E. Iman, facility manager at the Minidoka Field Division.

Speaking in favor of the bill on the House floor Monday, Rep. Peter A. DeFazio, D-Ore., noted that "visitor use on the lake has been increasing and (in) the next 15 years is expected to double."

But controversy persists over whether the bureau, which controls Lake Walcott — the reservoir created by the dam — and nearby lands, needs the special authority provided in Stallings' bill to build at Minidoka.

Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, has asserted that additional authorization is unnecessary because the Energy and Water Appropriations Act for fiscal 1989 already provides $760,000 for the project.

A McClure aide added that the solicitor general in Boise agrees that the bureau already has ample authorization for the construction.

The bill still needs Senate approval.

Karen E. Megorden, regional landscape architect for the Bureau of Reclamation, said that the House bill's cost-sharing provision would threaten the project.

"I don't know what is going to happen," Megorden said. "We have already been told they (local groups) don't have that support."

The latest plan for Minidoka would include 25 new campground units, a boating area, and a group-use picnic area, Megorden said.

Community groups, spearheaded by the Commerce Department and local tourism committees, appealed to the Idaho delegation for help in getting the bureau authorization more than a year ago, when they decided to enter Minidoka into the Idaho Centennial project, Megorden said.

Sued lawyer goes to Boise

By CRAIG LINCOLN

TWIN FALLS — Lawyer Thomas G. Walker Jr., the target of several lawsuits over a failed tax shelter, is leaving Twin Falls to set up a solo practice in Boise.

Walker said in a telephone interview Monday that Boise offered "better business opportunities." He will vacate his office late this week and open in Boise next Monday.

Walker has been sued by several people over a tax shelter for physicians and other professionals he organized in 1983.

The shelter, operating under the corporate name Professional and Executive Leasing, purported to hire physicians, lawyers and independent businessmen, and then lease their services to businesses or professional practices.

The company offered a variety of pension and benefit plans.

In effect, a doctor (technically his practice) would be able to lease his own services from PEL and receive benefit plans other employees, such as nurses, wouldn't get.

The Internal Revenue Service decided PEL wasn't the lawful employer of its professionals and couldn't offer pension plans. The U.S. Tax Court upheld the IRS's decision in August 1987, and Walker is waiting to argue his appeal in the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

At least 17 people have sued Walker and his former law partner, M. Gary Atkinson, and say the two were negligent when they formed PEL.

Walker declined to comment on whether the lawsuits played a part on his decision to leave Twin Falls.

"That's a private matter," he said.

Jerome citizens split over waste lagoon

By DENISE TURNER
 Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Response was split Monday at a packed hearing before the Jerome County commissioners as they considered a request to build a potato plant waste lagoon.

About 50 people crowded into a large room in the courthouse basement for a public hearing on Idaho Potato Processing's request for a special use permit to build two one-acre lagoons for the plant.

Ten people spoke in favor while six said they opposed granting the permit for the plant, being built in Jerome's new South Lincoln Industrial Park.

The commissioners said they would make a decision at a later date.

Although opposition to granting the permit has arisen in recent weeks, there was little during a series of related hearings over the past two years.

Dave Burgess, who lives about a mile from the plant, said most people assumed the plant would use the park's sewer system instead of open lagoons. Burgess and his wife said they are not against the plant but are concerned about the odors that might result from its lagoon waste system.

"I called the EPA and they told me they don't really regulate odor, and we can see from the experience of other companies that lagoon don't always work," Cathy Burgess said. "I don't want to see us in a big lawsuit somewhere down the line because of odors."

Resident Jim Gladowski, who lives near the plant site, voiced a similar sentiment. "I am for the plant, but I think we need to upgrade the sewer system," Gladowski said.

Larry Esvelt of Spokane, who is the consulting environmental engineer working with Western Idaho Potato, addressed the environmental considerations.

He said Jerome's plant has the capacity at 1.5 million gallons per day to handle the estimated 333,333 million gallons of flow the plant is expected to produce. It wouldn't be able to handle oxygen demand or anticipated solids, about 1,600 pounds, he said.

Jerome Public Works Director Lanny Sloan has said that it is difficult for a city to know the total possible amount of waste from a plant when developing a sewer system for an industrial park.

Esvelt said odors from the lagoon should be minimal, due to state-of-the-art work and newly developed types of aeration systems. He also said that there are other odors from such a plant that have nothing to do with the lagoon.

Murtaugh man is arrested, charged on DUI, disorderly

TWIN FALLS — Authorities have filed three misdemeanor charges against a Murtaugh man accused of threatening people in the Albertson's parking lot Friday night.

Michael Mangum, 21, was charged Monday with driving under the influence, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct, according to court records. Total bail was set at $2,050.

Court records allege that Mangum was staggering in a circle around his farm truck when police arrived at Albertson's, 1221 Addison Ave. E., at about 8:15 p.m. Police allege that Mangum was yelling obscenities at bystanders and that he struggled when arrested. Witnesses told police that before their arrival, Mangum came close to hitting other cars and pedestrians while driving around the lot. Court records further allege that he threatened Albertson's customers.

Mangum also became very upset when informed that he was not in Murtaugh as he had presumed he was, court records stated.

Mangum was taken to the police station for a breath test, according to police reports. He registered a blood-alcohol level of .12, Idaho's legal limit for driving is .10.

and six inches in diameter. Many smaller firebrands picked up by the wind helped the rapid spread of the fire.

With winds near 50 mph, firefighters could only hold their ground and hope for the wind to stop.

The complexities of fighting a major fire sometime include dealing with other local problems that are not always related to the fire, said Jarrell, who supervises about 1,100 firefighters and support crew.

In one incident he landed a helicopter and some firefighters to help agents transplant a grizzly that had wandered into a recreation area. They had trapped and tranquilized the bear.

The sleeping bear was flown to a remote area. But it woke up sooner than planned. When the sling was set down, the bear was fully alert and ready to get out of the net.

There were people really scrambling to get out of the path of the bear, Jarrell said. One helicopter pilot claimed the claw marks on his helicopter were not from the bear, but from a fleeing biologist. Another problem Jarrell faced was medical evacuations. One firefighter with a collapsed lung had to be carried on a litter through five miles of rough wilderness terrain.

All Jarrell has to do is worry that it comes together and he makes it to the hospital in time, Jarrell said. These are the kinds of complexities that add to a large fire.

He had to arrange for equipment and personnel and try to fit the emergency into an already hectic schedule. He also met with local people to explain why they needed to evacuate their homes and why the park was being closed.

One of his pilots one day discovered some people on horseback trying to hide among the trees in a dosed area near a fire, he said.

People don't understand the danger of a wildfire, he said. Wildfires will move faster than that horse can move.

The No. 1 concern of the incident commander is the safety of the firefighters. Temperature within the fire line can climb into the low hundreds,

Watkins interview set for Channel 10; no Stallings debate

TWIN FALLS — King Videocast will air an hour-long interview with 2nd District congressional candidate Dana Watkins at 7 p.m. Wednesday and Friday on Channel 10.

Local campaign manager Chris Talkington said both Watkins, a Republican, and Democratic Rep. Richard Stallings had been invited to debate Wednesday. However, neither accepted initially, Talkington said. Stallings turned down the invitation and Watkins later agreed to appear for an interview.

The Wednesday interview will air live, Talkington and Times-News political reporter Annette Cary will ask the questions.

Jarrell said. Usually water is dropped on an area to cool things down before firefighters are sent in. But the biggest problem is smoke. Firefighters are rotated every few days to get them some time in the fire.

They can't do it every month. The biggest change has been in 30 years is the greater aircraft use, primarily helicopters, he said. But the person on the ground with a shovel still is the main weapon, he said.

More women are now on firefighting crews, he said. And the comforts of firefighting camps now include kitchens and showers.

They didn't have showers 30 years ago, Jarrell said. Back then if you wanted to get clean you jumped in the creek.

TWIN FALLS — About $100 in coins was stolen during a break-in this weekend at Satellite Technology, 953 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Nothing else was taken during the burglary, which occurred sometime between 6 p.m. Saturday and 12:15 p.m. Sunday, according to police reports.

The burglar forced open a rear door to the business and rummaged through desks, taking about $80 in pennies and the rest in quarters.

Linch's ear and smashed the passenger-side window, according to police reports. He then put down the club and surrendered.

Chatterton, a public safety officer, said he didn't fire his weapon because he "didn't feel it was quite life-threatening enough to shoot." He said department policy prohibits an officer from shooting unless he believes there is imminent danger to life, either his or someone else's.

I was also wondering if he heard me because there was yelling and screaming and other fights were breaking out.

Two other teenagers also were taken into custody in connection with that night's events, James O'Dell

Jr., 18, who was with Linch, was charged with illegal consumption of alcohol and a 17-year-old boy who was with the attacker was charged with reckless driving.

Chatterton said Linch and his attacker had gotten into another fight earlier that morning near Kentucky Fried Chicken. Otherwise, they apparently did not know each other.

After the earlier fight Linch went to MYRC's emergency room with a bloody nose and bruises, Chatterton said. He had just left the hospital when the attacker spotted him and began pursuit.

The hilly club, 18 inches long and two inches thick, was seized as evidence.

When you first get into the vicinity of a potato processing plant, it smells like french fries, he said. People who live there either don't eat french fries or don't notice the odor after a while.

Evenly said septic waste odors are generally not noticeable with this type of system.

Gary Burkett, of the Idaho Division of Environment, said an industrial zone is subject to some odors. "If I was going to build a home in the country in Idaho, which I wouldn't, I would expect to be bothered by odors every once in a while," Burkett said.

The odors from this plant would be neither constant nor intolerable, he noted, and would certainly be a better bet than the odor from a 600-cow dairy.

Among residents who spoke in favor of granting the use permit were Bonnie Ross, a real estate agent and member of the Jerome Task Force who toured a similar plant in Nampa, and Mario Dalry, who said he went door to door months ago to make sure everyone in the vicinity of the plant favored it.

Evenly said when the plans and specifications for the lagoon are completed in two or three months state environmental agents will have to approve the system. "And they will address the issues of both nuisance and groundwater contamination," he said.

Burgess remained unsure throughout the two-hour hearing. "I want the plant to run," he said, "but I don't want the plant to run at the expense of a clean environment for Jerome."

Fire destroys pumphouse

Buhl — Fire destroyed a pump house about four miles northwest of here Sunday, causing damage estimated between $2,000 and $3,000.

The pump house, owned by Eldo Nield of Buhl, caught fire around 2:40 p.m., said Mark Grimes, chief of the Buhl Fire Department. Officials believe the fire was electrical in origin.

EXERCISING CAUTION

Similar to most pieces of electronic equipment, hearing aids are vulnerable to the effects of moisture. Not only can rain, fog, and high humidity eventually affect the inner workings of hearing equipment, but perspiration can do perspire and sweat gets into the hearing aid, it leaves a salt deposit which can have a corrosive effect on any vulnerable part. For this reason, people who play sports or otherwise actively exercise should have their hearing aids in place should take care to dry their aids frequently. It also helps to have a hearing aid cleaned professionally twice a year. Very active people can inquire about moisture-resistant aids that are designed with the requirements of the exercise-conscious person in mind.

Your hearing aid is a delicate piece of sub-miniature electronic equipment. With careful handling it will last for years. School enrollment down again in valley

By CHERI FORSYTH
Times-News correspondent

HAZELTON — Valley schools opened the fall semester with 20 fewer students than last year.

District principals Dale Tilley and Bryce Sorensen reported the decline at the school board's recent meeting.

Sorensen, principal of the district's two elementary schools, said about five students had enrolled since opening day but exact figures were not yet available.

"I'll be interested to see where we are after the farming season is over," District Superintendent Arlyn Bodily said. "If we can hold where we are now, we'll be okay." Enrollment fluctuates with the farm labor situation.

While a 20-student drop may not seem significant, it follows four years of decreases, from 643 students in 1984 to the current approximation of 553. That translates into about $150,000 loss to the district over that time span," Bodily said later.

A number of small schools across the state are facing similar enrollment deficits, adding their diminishing statistics to the consolidation movement initiated in last year's Legislature.

Board Chairman Keith Huettig, who represents the district on a committee initiated by State Superintendent Jerry Evans to study consolidation, gave the board copies of a surrogation by the State Department of Education which indicated smaller schools graduated a higher percentage of students, have a lower percentage of dropouts and fewer students failing to graduate because of the C average ruling.

"If dollars are the main interest, then it, (consolidation), may be the answer. If kids are the main concern, then we'd better take another look at it," Bodily said.

Huettig said the purpose of the state committee is not to recommend consolidation, but try to determine an effective means of implementation should it become necessary.

In other business, Bodily told the board the billing for the federally required asbestos inspection came in considerably under the original low bid of $2,750. Snake River Association did the inspection for $1,950 and will have the asbestos abatement plan to the school and state offices by the October deadline.

Schools earn $2 million in Wendell

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Total revenues for the Wendell school district last year were about $2 million and auditor Tom Jones says the district's finances are "moderately healthy."

Meanwhile, school board members said negotiations with teachers for a new contract will continue and members heard test scores for vocational classes were low.

At the board meeting last week, Jones said expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30 were about $17,000 more than the revenue. Part of this difference, he explained, was because property taxes were not collected and added to the school budget as expected.

About 80 percent of the school's budget is from state funds, Jones said.

In highlighting other figures in his 42-page report, the auditor said the district's total assets, now at $3,355,522, have gone up by about $20,000 since the previous year.

The school hot lunch program took in $104,248 and spent $91,437. Expenditures for teachers and aides salaries, at $471,722, were $23,292 more than the budgeted amount.

Cost of administration was up about $7,000 from the 1987 year and maintenance costs were about $55,000 higher.

Overall, revenues for the 1988 fiscal year were $2,334,542. The previous year, they were $2,062,877. The biggest single increase, said Jones was from state school apportionment.

In other action:

"The board met in executive session for more than an hour to discuss teacher contract negotiations. At the end of the session, the trustees returned and voted to adjourn.

Chairman Clayton Pope said the board agreed a contract plan ratified by teachers was "not equitable." He said other plans were discussed and talks with teachers will continue.

High School Principal Doug Skinner said recent ACT test scores for Wendell do not give the school a very high average. Students taking the core classes for college preparation did fine, he said, but students in the vocational classes did not, and so the average was brought down.

Skinner and elementary Principal Gary Thomasson told the board the schools are starting drug programs for parents and students. Overall the program will be awareness and education at the elementary level and intervention at the junior and senior high levels, Skinner said.

In October and continuing through March, the board meetings will begin at 7 p.m. instead of 8 p.m.

Pipe-bomb killer released from hospital

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah (AP) — Confessed pipe-bomb killer Mark Hofmann was returned to Utah State Prison Monday after 11 days in a hospital for an overdose of an anti-depressant drug, officials said.

Hofmann, 33, was released from the University of Utah Health Sciences Center at 11:30 a.m. and taken to the prison's hospital unit, where he was expected to remain for about a month while a skin graft on his arm heals, said spokesman Juan Benavidez of the Department of Corrections.

Hofmann was under "pretty much" 24-hour observation, both by officers and a television monitor, he said.

Benavidez said medical personnel had described Hofmann as "fine, normal and alert" and communicating well. He could not say whether the inmate was undergoing psychiatric treatment.

A cellmate found Hofmann catatonic in his cell on Sept. 15, in critical and unstable condition from an overdose of a tricyclic anti-depressant drug.

Four days later, surgeons operated on an arm injury thought to have been caused by a lack of blood circulation from lying in one place too long. Doctors cut away dead muscle tissue and grafted skin from Hofmann's thigh to the injured area.

Benavidez said an investigation of the incident was expected to be complete in two weeks. He had no information on the kind of drug, how Hofmann got it and whether the inmate would be subject to disciplinary action.

"That's the focus of the investigation," he said. Hofmann is serving a five-years-to-life sentence for his guilty pleas to a pair of pipe-bomb murders on Oct. 15, 1986.

In a plea bargain that allowed him to avoid possible execution under a first-degree murder conviction, Hofmann confessed to the killings and said they were intended to mask his activities as the forger of historical documents, many related to the Mormon Church, one of his best customers.

He also pleaded guilty to two fraud charges stemming from the forgeries. Killed in the explosions were documents collector Steven Christensen and Kathleen Sheets, wife of a former associate of Christensen's.

Hofmann himself was seriously injured when a third bomb blew apart his car on Oct. 16, 1985. He said later he meant to kill himself, but prosecutors said they believed the bomb was intended for a third victim.

WPPSS witness says forecasts not meaningful

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Independent forecasts of future Pacific Northwest electricity needs were not "meaningful" enough to include in early documents used to sell $2.25 billion in bonds for a nuclear-power project, witnesses testified Monday in a securities-fraud trial.

The forecasts were mentioned in later official statements issued by the Washington Public Power Supply System, a system employees testified. Also Monday, U.S. District Judge William Browning ruled that hours of tapes which the prosecution claims will show WPPSS officials conspiring to hide information to sell the bonds will be played for the 17 member jury.

Harlan R. Kosmata testified for a second day in the fraud-and-conspiracy suit by a class of more than 24,000 bondholders who bought WPPSS municipal bonds. Fifteen public utility districts, two engineering firms and a financial company are defendants.

Chemical Bank of New York, a trustee for bondholders, also has sued the utilities.

WPPSS defaulted on the bonds in 1983 and the plants in western Washington were never completed.

Kosmata was a WPPSS employee who was the liaison to the seven-member participants committee, formed to represent the 88 utilities involved in the two projects.

He said that while there were several forecasts on energy needs available before the first bond issue in February 1977, the supply system and consultants believed... there was nothing that could be said in a meaningful nature.

The official statements, which outlined the projects and bonds to prospective buyers, included its own forecasts provided by the utilities.

It was only after the studies were recognized by the consultants and utilities that mentioning of them were included, Kosmata said under questioning by Chemical Bank attorney Thomas Barr.

Some of the independent studies came from Seattle, Oregon, the Bonneville Public Administration and the University of Washington, Barr said. Kosmata said he was not familiar with many of them when the first official statement was drafted.

Kosmata said the studies were difficult to compare with the forecasts that justified building the plants because of different regions and different assumptions covered in each.

Bondholders' attorneys have maintained the other forecasts show a lower need for energy than what was predicted in the official statements.

Barr spent most of the day leading Kosmata through the sequence of events in 1976 and 1977 that ultimately led to the first bond issue of $145 million in February 1977.

State to investigate Pocatello gas prices

POCATELLO (AP) — Attorney General Jim Jones is promising motorists in the Pocatello area an inquiry into gasoline pricing there.

While prices have risen to nearly $1.06 a gallon in Pocatello in the past two months, gasoline in surrounding communities continued to sell for just under $1 a gallon.

"My office is now trying to get information on what wholesalers are paying for gasoline and how that is translated into pump prices," said Jones, whose questioning of pricing tactics in the Boise area in recent years has been followed almost immediately with dramatic declines of prices. Jones also said the pricing inquiry could be expanded to Moscow, where gas prices were also unusually high.

While the attorney general emphasized his office was not undertaking an official investigation, he said the fact that prices in Pocatello were higher than other areas was of some concern. Normally, fuel prices drop somewhat following the Labor Day holiday weekend, he said.

Five years ago, Jones launched a similar probe in Pocatello and was successful in prosecuting several gasoline dealers on charges of price fixing.

School leaders back handicap education

BOISE (AP) — Idaho's public school administrators have gone on record in support of implementing the federally mandated expansion of free public educational services to preschool handicapped children ages 3 to 5.

But Rick Van Hemmert, director of the Idaho Association of School Administrators, said education leaders want the state to recognize its financial responsibility to meeting that federal mandate by the fall of 1990.

"There are some concerns about funding, about where the money is coming from," Van Hemmert told the special legislative committee on Educational Needs on Monday. "The concern is the Legislature will slice up the existing pie into finer and finer portions without providing any really new dollars."

State officials said $1 million or more in federal education aid could be lost if the deadline is not met.

Currently, the state does provide free educational services to handicapped children ages 6 through 18, but federal law requires expanding that mandate to those ages 3 to 5.

Officials said there is no clear count on the number of additional children who would be brought into the system, but a Council on Developmental Disabilities survey put the number at at least several hundred.

Van Hemmert said school administrators said they could begin offering the services as soon as next fall, but he urged the legislative panel to phase in compliance, using the entire period until the fall of 1990 to ensure that the expanded program provides quality special education that is acceptable to the children, their families and school administrators.

Driver dies in Last Chance wreck

LAST CHANCE, Idaho (AP) — The driver of a semi tractor-trailer hauling household cleaning products and insecticide has died in an accident that closed U.S. Highway 20 for several hours.

The driver was identified as Keith Meyers, 31, of Colby, Wis.

Meyers was on his way to Twin Falls about 4 a.m. Monday, when he struck a calf and veered into a 10-foot-high lava outcropping on the east side of the highway, said Idaho State Police Sgt. David Johnson.

The cab was torn to pieces and debris was scattered for about 300 feet.

Meyers was ejected from the cab, the trooper said.

The trailer spilled containers of floor wax, shampoo and household insecticide, Richard Horne of the District 7 Health Department said none of the chemicals are toxic. They did, however, turn the highway into a slippery, gooey mess.

Meyers was driving a truck owned by England Contract Carriers of West Bend, Wis.

The highway was closed from Ashton to West Yellowstone while crews worked to clear the debris from the roadway.

Raiders come back from 24-point deficit to win

By JOHN MOSSMAN
The Associated Press

DENVER — Trailing 24-0 and playing demoralized in the first half, the Los Angeles Raiders got neither a blistering chewing out nor a rousing pep talk from Coach Mike Shanahan at intermission. That's not his style.

Shanahan's way is to keep plugging away and try to make the outcome respectable. But his Raiders achieved far more than that, overtaking the Denver Broncos on Chris Bahr's 35-yard field goal with 12:35 elapsed in overtime for a wild 30-27 victory Monday night.

"I wish I could say I gave a Knute Rockne speech at halftime," said Shanahan, a Broncos assistant for four years before taking the Los Angeles head job this year. "I just said, 'Guys, we've been embarrassed, we've made mistakes. Just go out and play the second half.'"

"Anytime you come back like this, you take your hats off to the team. They played hard."

Quarterback Jay Schroeder, in his first start for the Raiders since being acquired from the Washington Redskins three weeks ago, fueled the second-half comeback.

"We had nothing to lose in the second half," Schroeder said. "You don't like to lose so badly. We said, 'Win or lose, let's give them a dog-fight."

Raider linebacker Matt Millen called it "the biggest comeback we've had because we don't know what we've got. Now we feel we can play with anybody."

Even Denver coach Dan Reeves was impressed. "That was a remarkable comeback," he said. "Give them credit for taking back the momentum in the second half."

Reeves shouldered the blame for allowing time to expire at the end of the first half, when the Broncos were in field goal range at the Raiders' 17. Denver had one timeout left, but the final 10 seconds ran down without the ball being snapped.

Reeves said he was pleased with his team's effort, however, after some lachrymose play in recent weeks. "If we continue to play this hard, I believe we can get back our winning ways," he said.

With the victory, the Raiders moved into the first-place tie in the AFC West with Seattle and San Diego at 2-2. Denver fell to 1-3.

Backup safety Zeph Lee, a Broncos replacement player during the 1987 strike, picked off Elway and returned 20 yards to the Denver 31 to set up Bahr's winning kick. It was the fourth interception of Elway on the night.

Dodgers beat Padres, clinch NL West title

By DENNIS GEORGATOS
The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — The Los Angeles Dodgers clinched their fourth National League West title in eight years as Mickey Hatcher's RBI single broke an eighth-inning tie in a 3-2 victory over the San Diego Padres Monday night.

After reliever Jay Howell got Marvell Wynne on a pop out to second to end the game, the Dodgers rushed to the mound, mobbing their bullpen ace.

Los Angeles will meet the New York Mets in the National League playoffs, which start at Dodger Stadium on Oct. 4th. The Dodgers lost 10 of their 11 regular season games to the Mets and were 0-6 at Los Angeles.

The Dodgers' Fernando Valenzuela, making his first since July 30, worked three innings, allowing two hits, striking out three, walking two and throwing a wild pitch.

Valenzuela, who had been in the disabled list with a shoulder injury, was on a 60-pitch limit.

Alejandro Pena, the fifth of six Dodgers pitchers, allowed one hit in three innings and improved his record to 6-7. Howell pitched a perfect ninth to earn his 21st save.

The Padres were held to four hits.

Alfredo Griffin led off the eighth against Dennis Rasmussen, 15-10, with a sharp grounder to shortstop Dickie Thom, whose throw skipped past first baseman Keith Moreland for a two-base error.

Griffin advanced to third on a sacrifice bunt and came around on Hatcher's sharp single to left.

The Padres took a quick 2-0 lead in the first. Leadoff batter Roberto Alomar reached on shortstop Griffin's fielding error and Randy Ready followed by hitting an O-1 pitch for his seventh home run.

The Dodgers made it 2-1 in the fourth on John Shelby's 10th homer and tied it in the fifth when Tracy Woodson connected for his fifth homer.

Los Angeles, in fourth place with a 72-89 record last season, 17 games behind the Giants, moved to the top quickly this year behind its new players — outfielder Kirk Gibson, shortstop Griffin, and outfielder Mike Davis.

Drug test shows steroid use

Olympic Committee strips Johnson of gold

By CHRISTINE BRENNAN
The Washington Post

SEOUL, South Korea, Sept. 27 — Olympic 100 meters champion Ben Johnson was stripped of his gold medal by the International Olympic Committee Tuesday after testing positive for an anabolic steroid called stanozolol, the IOC medical commission said.

The announcement of Johnson's disqualification from the Olympics rocked the Games, for he was considered their biggest star.

The gold was awarded to Carl Lewis, who finished second to Johnson in the glamor event of the Olympics three days ago. It gave Lewis, who also won the long jump, his second gold medal of the Games.

Linford Christie of Britain was awarded the silver medal and fourth-place finisher Calvin Smith of the United States was given the bronze medal.

Johnson's world record time of 9.79 seconds set here also has been wiped out, although he still holds the world record of 9.83 seconds, set at the world championships in Rome a year ago. He will be banned from competition for a minimum of two years, the International Amateur Athletic Federation announced.

tragedy, a mistake or a sabotage. Up to five days before the race, Ben was in perfect condition. Something has happened in those days. We do not know what happened and how it happened, but apparently someone has sabotaged Ben and we will find out who it was and how it was done."

Roger Jackson, president of the Canadian Olympic Association, said he had been told by Johnson and his coach, Charlie Francis, that in "the time between the performance and the doping test, a steroid was placed in his drink."

Michele Verdier, IOC spokeswoman, said that could not have happened.

"The IOC Medical Commission discussed all arguments presented by the Canadian delegation, especially the statement that the substance in question might have been administered after the competition by a third party. The steroid profile, however, is not consistent with such a claim," she said.

According to Heidebrecht, Johnson will appeal the way the test was conducted, not the result of the test.

Medical commission chairman Merode appears grim as the action is announced

This is a blow for the Olympic Games and the Olympic movement," IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch said in a statement. "However, it shows that the IOC was right in the firm stand it has adopted to keep the Games clean."

Johnson's manager, Larry Heidebrecht, said, "The only thing we can say at this stage is that it is a

Louganis wins dramatic gold

By HOWARD ULMAN
The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Greg Louganis saved his best for last.

Knowing he needed an exceptional effort to overtake Chinese teen-ager Xiong Ni, he came through on Tuesday's final platform dive, the toughest in the sport, to become the first man to win two diving gold medals in consecutive Olympics.

"That was probably the biggest dive of his career, the most pressure, the most difficult," U.S. coach Ron O'Brien said. "To hit it like that, under those circumstances certainly proved that he was a champion."

Jesus Mona of Mexico was the surprise bronze medalist.

Louganis had little margin for error and there was very little wrong with his winning plunge.

He received 86.70 points, the highest score of the day, and finished with 638.61, just 1.14 more than Xiong, who was two years old when Louganis, 28, won his first Olympic medal. Louganis had trailed by three points going into the last round.

"I knew I had to hit the last dive," he said. "I knew it was going to be tight. ... Like in '84, I reminded myself that my mother's still going to love me no matter what happens, which makes it easier."

"I think this is the closest (finish) I've been in, in a major international competition."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"My idea of education is to unsettle the minds about young and inflame their intellects through the study of..."
— Robert Maynard Hutchins —

The second annual North American Collegiate Bridge Championships, held in Buffalo, N.Y., last spring, produced an exciting final round between the University of Illinois and Harvard. The Fighting Illini emerged victorious by a score of 131 to 103 IMPs. Today's deal involves a slam, bid and made by the eventual winners, during one of the rounds.

Dealer was Justin Graver of Lincoln, Nebraska, and thanks to the clues he got from the bidding, he knew which finesse to take and which he should refuse.

He wisely won dummy's spade ace, refusing that finesse. He next led a heart to his king, taking that finesse. He cashed the heart king and led a diamond to dummy's ace, refusing that finesse. The heart ace was cashed to discard a spade, and declarer had no major-suit loser. Later he took his second winning trick in clubs and the defense's trump trick. The successful slam was good for a large swing, the opponents stopping at three no-trump in the replay.

Students from six universities competed in Buffalo, the winners of country-wide contests on 29 campuses involving 308 students. It was an excellent addition to efforts to "in flame the intellect."

Football pools: enter at own risk

Each autumn, I like to help put a mobster's kid through college by playing the office football pools.

The way it works is, some shakily-looking character sidles up to you next to the coffee machine.

But instead of saying "Hot enough for you?" and reaching for the Sweet 'N Low, he hands you a card.

The card lists the betting lines on the pro and college games that week. And what the shakily-looking dude wants you to do is:

Put down your coffee.
Fill out the card with your bets.
Fish into your pocket and give him some money.

Then he goes away, promising to return the following week with your winnings.

There is only one problem: Nobody ever wins. Well, hardly ever. Because the odds of winning one of those football pools are about the same as the odds of me doing lunch with Meryl Streep.

When I first started playing football pools, though, it seemed like a wonderful opportunity to get rich quick, which has always been a prinincipal goal in my life. I figured betting on football was a piece of cake.

In fact, even as I filled out my first card, I visualized what I would do with my winnings.

I had the new Sony Trinitron over here, the compact disc player over there, the new Porsche in the driveway.

Oh, God, it was a wonderful vision. I was in Fat City.

For 24 hours. Then all four of my teams went out and got crushed that weekend.

Texas Tech got obliterated by Texas. The Giants got massacred by the Eagles. If you can stand another of these Charles Manson verbs, the Bengals got murdered by the Raiders.

I could go on, but each time I dwell on it, I get the urge to hurl myself in front of a freight train.

Anyway, as I cried in my beer that evening, a new vision suddenly came to me.

Gene were the Sony Trinitron, the compact disc player, the Porsche. Instead, I visualized the opulent New Jersey home of some Mafia don named Vito.

Vito could be seen sitting at the dining room table.

He was laughing hysterically while counting huge stacks of money. And now he was yelling upstairs to his kid: "Hey, Tony! Maybe you're going to Harvard after all! Look at the bets this idiot in Baltimore makes!"

The reason football pools proliferate is that every American male thinks he is an expert on the subject of betting football.

I don't know what the psychological term is for that, but in layman's terms it is known as rampant stupidity.

Let me tell you how these football cards work.

First of all, the people who print those cards are not all star boys.

In fact, when they sit down to dinner, the conversation often turns to which relative is up for parole and which business associate was found permanently snoring in the Hudson River, if you catch my drift.

Anyway, for some reason, those people hate to lose money.

So to ensure that they do not lose money on their football cards, they set ridiculous betting lines that are way out of whack with the Las Vegas line.

Then they make you pick a minimum of four winners, with no losers.

Passenger leaves cocaine on plane

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An airline passenger abandoned about $1 million in cocaine aboard a jetliner Monday and fled during a stop at the Indianapolis International Airport, police said.

Police Sgt. Bobby J. Flowers said the cocaine weighed more than 7 pounds and has a street value of $1 million. It was found about 6:15 a.m. in a gray bag aboard a USAir flight from Los Angeles to Pittsburgh with a stop in Indianapolis.

The passenger was scheduled to continue on to Pittsburgh, but as the jet left the terminal, a flight attendant noticed the luggage on the seat where the man had been sitting.

Worried the bag might contain a bomb, the attendant notified the pilot and the plane returned to the gate, Flowers said.

Airport police Officer Charles Hasselburg opened the bag and found it contained four large and six small bags of a white substance and $6,945 in cash. The money was stuffed inside a pair of sneakers, police said.

Flowers said a test confirmed the substance was cocaine.

Before leaving the airport, the passenger had gone to the USAir ticket counter where workers said he acted suspiciously and seemed nervous.

Birthday party

With the help of life-size dancing raisins, entertainer Ray Charles laughs when presented a cake to celebrate his 58th birthday Friday

Bounty hunter goes after big-name stars

By JOHN HORN
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD — Phil Ramey is a bounty hunter, and the bigger the name, the greater the prize.

Don Johnson and Barbra Streisand fetch more than $1,000. Michael J. Fox and new wife Tracy Pollan can bring in five times that. Sean Penn and Madonna, though, are on the discount shelf.

Ramey calls himself a photographer. His critics call him a paparazzo. Whatever the case, Ramey's subjects rarely say cheese.

"If you're in open view, you're fair game," Ramey said recently as his Bell Jet Ranger helicopter roared over Beverly Hills.

"When you're a celebrity, the normal rules of 'privacy don't apply,' he said, leaning out the door to shoot another roll of Merv Griffin's new home site.

Ramey takes the shots — a secret wedding, an undiscovered affair, a private estate — that push readers of National Enquirer and Star into tabloid ecstasy.

Ramey is aggressive: He collected shots of Bruce Willis and Demi Moore's wedding with a camera hidden in a friend's purse. But he does have standards.

"I don't pop up from behind hedges, and I don't enter private property," Ramey said. "I think this thing about invading privacy is way overblown."

Tell that to Cher.

On July 27, Cher's live-in boyfriend Robert Camilletti was arrested for investigation of felony assault after he crashed into photographer Peter Brandt's car. Brandt, who had been staking out Cher's mansion for the Star with Ramey's assistance, said Camilletti also smashed his camera.

"He tried to kill me," Brandt said. Prosecutors have yet to decide if Camilletti's outburst was justified, and no charges have been filed. Meantime, the incident has prompted fierce debate over the tabloid photographers' place in Hollywood.

"I'm getting really, really angry," Cher said. "After a while it really bothers you and disrupts your family life."

Veteran publicist Richard Grant concurs. On a recent Saturday night, he took clients Jill Eikenberry and Michael Tuckey, both stars of TV's "L.A. Law," to dinner at Spago, a fashionable Los Angeles restaurant.

"I pulled up and I saw 20 photographers out front," Grant said. "So I used my car phone, called the restaurant and told them to open the back door. We had to sneak in."

If they're not sneaking through back doors, celebrities are fighting back. Photographers have been chased and beaten, with Sean Penn and Prince's bodyguards leading the charge. In one famous case in the early 1980s, a New York judge ordered cameraman Ronald Galella to stay at least 25 feet away from Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and her children.

The photographers, for their part, claim their

Flawed exhibits spoil zoo for children

CHICAGO (AP) — Some exhibits in the children's section of the Lincoln Park Zoo are so flawed youngsters can't even see the animals, despite a $2.5 million renovation, zoo officials said.

The main problems are in the new outdoor otter and raccoon exhibits, where a natural-looking rock wall was built as a safety barrier to separate the children from the animals, said Edward Uhler, director of engineering for the district.

"None of the kids can see over the boulders," said Susan Fisher-Yellen, who recently took her 3-year-old daughter to the zoo.

"I saw 20 or 30 kids climbing on those boulders," Ms. Fisher-Yellen said.

"No question there are sight-line problems for little kids," said zoo Director Lester Fisher. "I'm 6-foot-1. I can look in, but if I were 4 feet, I couldn't. You just had to get down on your knees and know this isn't workable."

Zoo officials want the architectural firm that designed the exhibits, Hammond, Beeby & Babka, to correct the problems.

The architects said the plans were approved by the Park District, which owns and operates the zoo, and by the Lincoln Park Zoological Society, a private, non-profit group that helped fund the renovation.

Neither the architects nor the zoo knew how much the changes would cost.

Roseanne Barr hits tv-land at full speed

By JAMES ENDRST
Hartford Courant

HOLLYWOOD — Roseanne Barr will break some new TV ground this season:

"I'm, like, the first mom on TV that ever was female," said the star of ABC's new sitcom "Roseanne," in a characteristically scathing whine. "Usually on TV shows and stuff the mom's dead or the dad acts like the mom."

Big and brash, Barr is about to blow TV mom convention to kingdom come.

Though this is clearly a domestic comedy, Barr's biting, blue-collar barbs set "Roseanne" far apart from its historically cutesy counterparts.

"I mean I just really hate 'I Love Lucy,'" she said in a recent interview here. "I could never take that Lucy had to beg her husband for five lousy bucks ... and then she tries to get in on his act and he humiliates her."

But Barr does not go for the mean-

in-profile

Roseanne Barr got her comic start as a cocky cocktail waitress in Denver serving up one-liners to her customers. Now after appearances on 'The Tonight Show' and 'The Comedy Store' in Los Angeles, she is starring in her own sitcom 'Roseanne' spirited low blows of Fox Broadcasting's "Married ... With Children" (She turned down the co-starring role on the show for that reason and because "it's not on a real network").

"The funniest stuff is the true stuff," said the mother of three, pointing to her heretofore blue-collar life.

Of course, now that she is a success and has her own series, she has a mind taking care of all that domestic drudgery.

"Sure do. Hell, yeah," she said. But does she have any fears she might be getting too far away from herself, from the Roseanne that led to "Roseanne"?

"Well, you know, I had 36 years of it," she said, "So I think I've got enough material stored away there."

Barr, who at one time worked as a window dresser, got her comic start as a cocky cocktail waitress in Denver — serving up one-liners to her customers along with their drinks.

Dishing out some sample repartee, Barr told the story of one married guy — a regular — who knew Barr was married, too. Flirting with Barr, he coyly inquired, "Do you know any married women who don't want to get a divorce but want to have an affair with a married guy who'll treat 'em real good and spend a lot of money on 'em and make love a lot?"

Came the reply from Barr, "Yeah, your wife."

No surprise, then that it was her customers who encouraged her to go down to a local comedy club.

She followed their advice, watched carefully and came back a year later. "I really liked it and kept doing it," she said.

Three years ago, she came to Los Angeles on her way to Seattle and stopped in at The Comedy Store.

"It was this dream-come-true night," she said. She did her "basic six" — her signature routine that she describes in short form, as, "Hi. I'm a housewife, domestic goddess. Then I tell jokes about my kids, then I talk about my husband and then I get off."

A somewhat more fleshed-out version of that routine was such a hit that George Schlatter, of "Laugh-In" fame, asked her to be in his ABC special, "Funny, the same night."

By the following Friday, she was on "The Tonight Show," the Ellis Island of stardom. Roseanne Barr had arrived.

Barr's personal history is, as one would expect, no less interesting.

 behavior is decent and acceptable.
 But lost in all the finger-pointing and name-calling is the fundamental role these photographers may play in perpetuating the Hollywood myth.

"We absolutely feed on each other," said Mary Ann Norborn, Los Angeles editor of Star. "We need them, but they need us, too."
 Said James Seymour Jr., assistant managing editor of People magazine: "Celebrity is a two-edged sword. If these people did not hunger for fame, they would not make themselves so available or show up in such conspicuous clothes. Part of the price of fame is the loss of anonymity."

While the photographers are frequently depicted as voyeurs and leeches, their relationship with stars can sometimes be symbiotic and even friendly. They do, after all, keep stars in public view.

 "I'm a centrist and I see both sides," said publicist Michael Levine. "These photographers might be able to help ingrain a celebrity into the culture. And I think they can have a place. There are a few (photographers) who are, in fact, responsible."

"We may make thousands of dollars on photographs, but the stars make millions on them," said Bob Michelson, who runs a celebrity-photo agency in Los Angeles. "If we take the stars' shots and put them on the covers of magazines, these people will continue to work."
 Conventional thinking holds that celebrity photographers always stalk their victims, springing from bushes at just the right moment. Their real tactics, in fact, tend to be much less dramatic. Ramey's helicopter notwithstanding. Most published shots come from photographers in the right place at the right time — often with inside information supplied by publicists and other sources.

 Dominick Conde, a New York celebrity photographer, depends on theater press agents to tell him when people such as Streisand or Bette Midler buy Broadway tickets. Conde then waits outside the theater. A girlfriend at the New York hot spot Columbus calls Conde when big names reserve a table.

Ramey has a staff that fields tips and tells him where to be and when, sometimes guiding his helicopter (rented for $425 an hour) from the ground by cellular phone.

And the Nancy Seltzer and Associates public relations firm recently sent out a release alerting photographers that Bruce Willis, Dennis Hopper and Michelle Pfeiffer would attend a benefit screening of Miss Pfeiffer's new movie, "Married to the Mob."

"Don Johnson, for one, said he's resigned to the fact that the photographers — and their other half, the gossip writers — will never disappear."

"It used to bother me," Johnson said, but he quit worrying "when I came to the realization that it didn't really matter what the truth was, that it didn't really matter what I felt or how I felt."
 In the end, an individual's celebrity can be measured by the number of photographers he or she attracts.

"We have a saying in New York," Conde said. "The celebrities shouldn't worry when we take their picture. They should worry when we stop taking their picture."

to collect any dough.
 So if you were a realist, instead of playing those pools and turning your hard-earned dough over to the shaky-looking guy near the coffee machine, you would just toss it in a steel drum and burn it.

Or you would just mail it to the Mafia don in New Jersey and get it over with.

Either way, you will never see it again.

The problem is that too many American males are not realists when it comes to gambling.

Too many of us play those stupid cards each week thinking: Aw, what does Don Vito know? This is the week I hit and make that down payment on the Porsche.

I don't know what the psychological term is for that, either, but in layman's terms it is known as being a jerk.

 But that is something I don't have to worry about anymore. Because I'm through with these cards. Uh-uh. They're not playing me for a sucker anymore.

Although I see the Giants are favored by a touchdown this week. Hmmm...they—should—lobber—the Cowboys.

And the Redskins should drill the Eagles.
 And if there is any justice in this world, the Bears should stomp the Vikings.

Think I'll go get some coffee.

Victim of maiming begins life over

By RAUL DEAN
Los Angeles Times

In one moment, by vows exchanged with tears staining her bridal satin, the marriage of Mary Vincent moved her public life closer to a private peace.

It (life) just began all over again," she said. In fact, "everything that has been happening lately seems like the beginning of another life, a better life."

Anything would be better. Ten years ago, Vincent was raped by Lawrence Singleton, who hacked her forearms off with five swings of a hatchet and dumped her to die in Del Puerto Canyon near Sacramento, Calif. Singleton, 60, was released from San Quentin in April after serving eight years and four months of a 14-year sentence. Vincent, now 25, has spent a decade picking up the pieces of her life with hooks for hands.

But, Saturday, on a lawn overlooking a village in the Pacific Northwest, Mary Vincent found one more fragment of a future when she married a man she says can always make her laugh, a red-haired, 23-year-old straw boss of a landscaping crew, and became Mrs. Matthew... — well, the first duty of her new husband was to ask that their surname remain undisclosed to further protect their start together.

Deep secrecy surrounded the short, simple, 65-guest garden ceremony at the home of a close, caring family where Vincent rooms in the sub-basement. Only three reporters were invited to attend. Each signed an agreement not to disclose the city nor even the state where Vincent has lived for almost three years.

Many residents know who she is but they won't talk to outsiders.

Mary Vincent, 25, exchanges wedding vows

They say they have adopted her. What Mary Vincent has had, by her own description, is a decade of despair that even when condensed and capsulized remains an inconscribable: "The next morning, two individuals" found "Mary" Vincent wandering nude... she was holding up her arms so that the muscles and blood would not fall out."

While only 16, she re-created every awful second of her assault at Singleton's trial and again for the inevitable magazine interviewers and researchers for books and television movies that were never written nor produced.

Psychotherapy was for years. Her mother and father separated, he to work in Alaska and join that state's air-national guard, she to Las Vegas as a blackjack dealer.

Anger and fear of Singleton was exhumed with his prison release in April and exacerbated by his subsequent written claim of innocence that forms an incredible psychological denial: that he was the victim, that he was kidnapped and held by threats, that Mary Vincent actually had been maimed by two others, not by him.

Singleton's fallout from the 1978 assault was a shortened sentence, rejection by communities wherever he sought to live, isolated death threats, an offer of a one-way ticket out of Florida and, now, almost ironically, a full media pursuit that has forced him into hiding as deeply as his victim.

Yet none of this had any part of Mary Vincent's weekend wedding. It was, in fact, an afternoon more normal than she could ever have hoped.

What Mary and Matthew have together is the stuff of a thousand young marriages each week in America. He sees in her, he says, a woman of enormous strength, personality and friendship. She sees in him, she says, a stable, uncomplicated influence from a man who has "always tried to put a smile on my face."

Barr

barhood, Barr writes in her ABC biography that "stunned and dazed at the gravity of this realization, she wandered aimlessly in the streets until she was run over by a passing motorist."

Sometime after that — when she was 18 — she met her husband, Bill Pentland in a Colorado artists' colony. He distinguished himself, she remembers, by being "the only man in the county with a bathroom."

She moved in with Pentland (who is a writer for the show and will have a recurring role as friend to her TV husband, played by John Goodman) the next day.

Eventually settling down in a 600-square-foot tract house in Denver with their three kids, Barr and family barely got by financially. So do not take "Rosanne" too lightly. There is social commentary among the dirty dishes in that Lanford, Ill., tract house, the unpaid bills spilled out over the kitchen table and the three often screaming kids.

"I take it pretty serious," she said. "I don't think it's just about housewives and stuff. I think it's about women. I think every woman is like a housewife whether she has a career or not, because you're the one who has to do all the stuff. You have to be responsible for everything in the world. So, the way I look at it is, since we are responsible for everything in the world we should get the power that goes along with it and the thank you's. Which is why I want to be queen because I think I'm capable of being queen of the world."

Boy makes bogus deposit, goes on spending spree

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A 15-year-old boy made a bogus deposit of nearly $30,000 at an automatic teller machine, then started writing checks for a new car, clothes, and two nights hotel lodging with his girlfriend, authorities said.

Police and others involved in the investigation said the boy went to a teller machine Saturday at a branch of Commercial Federal savings and loan and punched in a combination of numbers to register a deposit of $29,990 into his checking account.

Then the boy, claiming to be 20, went to a car dealer and wrote out a check for $18,389 for a 1988 Chevrolet IROC-model Camaro, said Randy Kraft, general manager at Kraft Chevrolet.

The dealership called a Commercial Federal employee, who said the check couldn't be cleared until the deposit could be verified, officials said.

That night, the teen-ager picked up his 15-year-old girlfriend, checked into a hotel at Missouri Valley, Iowa, and paid for two nights' lodging.

During the weekend, the youth wrote at least 10 checks for clothing, food and other items, police said.

The three planned to move to Arizona, apparently intending to get jobs and support themselves, police said.

Sunday evening, the three went to a check-cashing service and the youth wrote a check for $25,000, showing his auto driver's learner's permit as identification.

HANOVER, Md. (AP) — Some crooks will do anything to pull off a robbery — even order breakfast.

A gun-wielding robber got away with $296 from a fast-food restaurant Thursday, but not until he followed the instructions of the 16-year-old cashier, who told the man he'd have to order something first, Anne Arundel County police said.

The robber first ordered a soda at the drive-up window, then pulled a gun and demanded the cash.

The cashier said he couldn't hand over the cash until he'd punched in another order to get the cash drawer open.

The robber handed over 32 cents and the restaurant employee gave the bandit hash browns and the $296 in the drawer, police said.

The gunman sped away, hash browns in hand, said police spokesman Richard Molloy.

company phoned a Commercial Federal officer at home, who said she couldn't verify that the check was good.

Police said the youth who wrote the checks was held in police custody and the other two were released to their parents.

Cousin may need shove out the door

DEAR ABBY: Over three months ago, our 22-year-old cousin got a job in our town (only 30 minutes from his home town), and his parents asked our parents if he could stay with us until he got on his feet.

It now appears that Cousin Dearest has moved in with us permanently.

He first showed up with one suit-

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

case. A week later, he brought in a great big suitcase and his own mattress because he had been sleeping on a couch in our den.

The next thing we know, he brought in the rest of his possessions! Abby, we are a family of eight and were cramped to begin with, and we can't accommodate another person permanently.

Cousin Dearest is rude to our parents, resents my mother's smoking and ridicules our family's lifestyle. Our father makes his lunch every morning, drives him to work and picks him up.

Every evening, Cousin Dearest showers, puts on his pajamas, shows up for dinner (in pajamas) and retires to "his" room. The room that is now his used to be our family room — which we can no longer use in the evenings because he is sleeping on his mattress in the middle of the floor.

Although the rest of us are expected to help out either financially or with household chores, Cousin Dearest does not lift a finger and pays no rent. We are tired of watching our parents abused by this character and want him out. Our parents feel obligated to keep him because he's "family."

Our problem is how to get Cousin Dearest to move back home or to get a place of his own without causing hard feelings. Any suggestions? — HAD IT

DEAR HAD IT: Your parents agreed to let Cousin Dearest stay with you until he "got on his feet."

Now, it appears that he has gotten on your nerves before getting on his feet. (He is no longer a houseguest — he's a permanent house-pod!)

It's unfair of your parents to allow this inconsiderate relative to inconvenience the entire household, but all you can do is complain loudly and consistently to your parents.

And I suggest that you do so.

DEAR ABBY: What can we, as parents, do to get our 33-year-old daughter to repay the money we loaned her?

We loaned her money to make a down payment on a car. We loaned her money so she could go to beauty school. We loaned her money to pay her rent and security and electric company deposit — and instead, she used the money to give her stepdaughter a birthday party.

She promised to pay for the collect phone calls she made to us, but she hasn't. The list goes on and on.

Her father called and asked her to please send us a little something. All we get are promises. She manages an office and makes good money. Her husband also has a job that pays well.

Abby, we are trying to get along on our Social Security and need the money.

— NEEDED PARENTS

DEAR PARENTS: Unless you have an IOU or promissory note signed by your daughter, complete with the terms of repayment, your chances for collecting are slim. Sometimes threatening to sue will motivate a deadbeat.

I wish you luck. Meanwhile, this should be a lesson for others: Don't lend anybody (relatives included) money without a signed IOU or promissory note.

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc. because you don't know what to say. Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)
