Hawkins more than 114,000 sacks short

By KEN ARMSTRONG
Times-News writer

FILER — Even more beans, tens of thousands — of — sacks — are — missing — from — the Hawkins warehouse than previously thought, but those beans that are there should be milled and marketed posthaste.

That's the riddle and recommended response now facing the Idaho Department of Agriculture, which completed its inventory of the Filer warehouse Thursday. Its new calculations, released Saturday, show a shortage of 114,084 hundredweight of beans, a marked increase from its previous estimate of 89,776.

"That's the most accurate number we have, and I feel pretty comfortable with it," said Dick Rush, the agriculture department's director.

The state's inventory shows that 194,240 sacks are in the warehouse, about 63 percent of what should be there.

Faced with those figures, Rush established an ad hoc advisory committee that met in Boise for six hours Friday. That committee, whose five members include three area farmers, hashed out a proposal that, among other things, calls for the Hawkins Co. Ltd. mills to be operating within two weeks from now.

The agriculture department seized the warehouse Dec. 8, so any such action would have to be taken at its behest, Rush said. The department could hire an independent company to process the beans or hire its own employees to do so.

"I will say that I agree with the recommendations, and my job now is to go about implementing them," said Rush, who participated in the meeting along with other members of his staff.

State officials and farmers said speed is of the essence because the volatile bean market is currently on an upswing.

"We've got to work together to get all that we can from what's there," said board member John Draney, a Filer farmer who has recorded a $77,763 lien against Hawkins.

The advisory committee also recommended that milling resume by Jan. 3 so that the warehouse can honor a major seed-bean contract. The other party to that contract, not identified by officials or farmers, has told Hawkins that it wants to know by Jan. 15 where it stands.

If there is a unifying theme to the committee's recommendations, it is the call for Hawkins' creditors to stick together and work within the parameters of the state's program. Particularly, farmers are urged to

TWIN FALLS — This evening's wrap-up of the Christmas in the City Park program will bring the nativity scene to life through singing.

"It was so well received and so well done last year that we decided to repeat it," said program chairman Ruth Turner.

The last of the program's four parts is scheduled to begin at 5 p.m. in the city park. Festivities will include the lighting of a candle to celebrate the fourth Sunday of Advent.

The program, expected to last about 40 minutes, is open to the public.

The singing nativity scene's cast is made up of the following area residents: Mary, Teddy Snow; Joseph, Burt Huish; cow, Analee Carter; lamb, Phillip Egbert; donkey, Adam Pearson; angels, Camille Cox, Charlene Day and Evelyn Meyer; shepherds and kings, Dennis Bortz, Kent Snow and Bill Sweet; and accompanist, Midge Airhart.

Soviets attempt thaw of Pacific Rim

The Associated Press

TOKYO — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze may seek breakthroughs in economic and diplomatic relations during his visit to Japan and the Philippines next week, but major obstacles are hindering Pacific detente.

Shevardnadze's tour comes when Moscow is courting Asian nations with requests for economic cooperation and promises of military cutbacks in the region.

In his latest overture, contained in a U.N. address Dec. 7, Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev pledged to "reduce significantly our armed forces in the Asian part of the country."

Asian debtor nations, including the Philippines — the second stop on Shevardnadze's tour — welcomed Gorbachev's suggestion of a 100-year moratorium on Third World debt.

But Asian and Soviet officials say Gorbachev's Asian initiatives since his visit to the Soviet Pacific port of Vladivostok on July 28, 1986, have produced few concrete payoffs.

Soviet relations with China have improved recently, but relations with most of the rest of Asia remain stagnant or chilly — crippling Moscow's efforts to expand trade and technology exchanges with industrialized Asia.

Theoretically, Moscow has much to offer: an enormous potential market for Asian goods, scientific and technical aid and abundant natural resources.

In return, Asia could sell high technology and pro-

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The huge buildup of Social Security trust-fund balances over the next four decades could create a savings windfall spurring the economy, but only if Social Security surpluses are not diverted to other purposes or used to mask the budget deficit, leading economists said at a two-day conference this past week.

The Social Security trust fund, as a result of the 1983 financial-rescue package, is growing rapidly and is expected to reach about $3 trillion in 2006 — equal to the entire national debt — Social Security Commissioner Dorcas R. Hardy said in an interview.

The trust fund will rise to $11.2 trillion by 2035 before declining as funds are spent to help support the retirement of the Baby Boom generation.

The forecast has ignited a policy debate in which some experts suggest that the Social Security tax be reduced to avert the buildup. These experts favor raising the tax, or cutting benefits, in the next century when Baby Boomers retire.

Hardy said Friday that she fears "Congress will see a pot of money and will want to use it for something else."

The conference ending Friday was sponsored by the new non-profit National Academy of Social Insurance headed by former Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball.

Portland fights back against AIDS

The Baltimore Sun

PORTLAND, Ore. — A controversial program that could change the way the nation chooses to fight AIDS will begin here in January when a social service agency begins giving free hypodermic needles to drug addicts.

The experiment, which could serve as a national model, will test an AIDS-control strategy that has been tried in only one other U.S. city, New York.

Cities across the country are debating whether needle-exchange programs will curb the spread of the HIV virus, which causes AIDS, but most have found the idea too politically risky.

The two programs hope to control the spread of the virus among intravenous drug users, the fastest-growing group of people stricken by the fatal disease. Addicts also spread the deadly virus to their spouses or sex partners and to their unborn babies.

"We have a real opportunity here to do prevention," said Kathy Oliver, executive director of the private, non-profit agency in Portland that will run the program. "This is an alienated population, a vulnerable population, and this serves almost like a hook to get people in."

The experiment has won the cautious acceptance of most city and state officials in Oregon, but a smaller project in New York that began Nov. 7 has drawn criticism from prosecutors, police, politicians and others who believe a free needle program encourages drug use.

DOE warns of insufficient nuclear safety, cleanup funds

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Energy Secretary John S. Herrington has warned the White House that there is not enough money in President Reagan's proposed fiscal 1990 budget to operate the nuclear-weapons complex in accordance with safety and environmental laws, and the department may be facing additional shutdowns as a result.

The letter contains a detailed assessment of the Energy Department's budgetary problems, which Herrington said may require choosing between upgrading plant safety and meeting the Defense Department's production goals for nuclear materials.

If the department gives priority to production goals, he said, "then unresolved environmental and safety issues are likely to lead to further shutdowns in the weapons complex."

In recent months, the department has been forced to close large sections of two major weapons plants because of safety concerns, including its only nuclear reactors capable of producing tritium for atomic bombs. State officials have threatened to close others unless the department brings them into health and environmental compliance.

Herrington's letter also contains a frank acknowledgment that years of budget austerity have taken a toll on the weapons complex, which critics contend has been allowed to deteriorate even as the Reagan administration's military buildup placed heavier demands on it.

Part of today's problem stems from our attempts to stretch, defer and absorb budgetary shortfalls, hoping that next year things would be better, and we could catch up," Herrington wrote.

"As a result, this country's ability to produce and maintain a nuclear weapons stockpile is in serious jeopardy," he said. "The risk is great that without a significant increase in resources over the next five years, we will no longer be able to sustain a strong nuclear deterrent in which we have invested $7 billion since 1980."

Herrington's letter comes amid mounting demands on DOE to bring its 17-plant complex into compliance with safety laws and begin an environmental cleanup that is expected to take decades and cost tens of billions of dollars. In a report still awaiting White House clearance, the department recommended spending $50 billion in the next 20 years to build new facilities and tackle the most dangerous environmental problems.

The department also made vague financial commitments to several western governors last week in a meeting aimed at resolving a nuclear waste storage problem that threatens to close a critical weapons plant near Denver.

DOE needs cooperation from the governors of Colorado and Idaho to handle waste, and maintain operations at the Rocky Flats Plant, which makes plutonium triggers for atomic bombs. The governors want accelerated environmental cleanups and health studies to be part of any agreement.

The situation at Rocky Flats is reflective of Herrington's concern about shutdowns. Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, D, said he will order Rocky Flats shut down rather than permit DOE to violate a state-imposed limit

Gov. Andrus will 'wait and see' on lifting waste shipment ban

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus, a central figure in a battle over what to do with radioactive waste from a key defense plant, says he has a "wait-and-see" attitude whether he will relent from a ban on shipment of the waste into Idaho.

"It is a situation where the borders remain closed, and when they (Department of Energy) get their ducks in a row, we will look at it again," said Andrus.

That could come next month. Andrus said he has given the department three conditions to be met, and if it appears those conditions are being met, he could partially lift the ban.

He held a Boise news conference Friday afternoon after returning from a Salt Lake City meeting earlier in the day. Andrus, Colorado Gov. Roy Royce Romero and New Mexico Gov. Carrey Carruthers met with Department of Energy officials over nuclear waste disposal.

The immediate problem is waste from the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant outside Denver. For years, Idaho has accepted about four boxcars a month of waste generated by the plant. It has been stored at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory in eastern Idaho.

In October, Andrus declared DOE hasn't kept promises to remove the waste temporarily stored at INEL, and banned further shipments. That threatens to close Rocky Flats, which soon will run out of places to store waste. Political and other disputes have kept DOE from opening a planned waste storage facility, Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, near Carlsbad, N.M.

Officials at the Friday meeting said the planned opening could be Sept. 1, but it could run much later in the year.

DOE presented Andrus and the others with a classified, closed-door briefing on the need to keep Rocky Flats in operation.

"We discussed classified information that convinced me and I believe the other governors that national security in the United States demands that we do not close down Rocky Flats at this point in time," Andrus said. "For that reason, we have agreed that we will do what we can to see that Rocky Flats is not shut down."

That may be allowing partial shipments, Andrus said, but only if three conditions are met:

— That DOE accelerate plans to remove millions of cubic feet of nuclear waste stored underground in Idaho. Environmentalists claim the buried material is slowly leaking deadly radioactivity, threatening the Snake River Aquifer, a vast underground waterway.

"Part of my demands today was that they accelerate the reprocessing of that material that is buried in the Idaho desert, which would turn out to be a substantial amount of money," Andrus said.

That legislative and administrative action be started to guarantee that WIPP will open in September, to start receiving nuclear waste for storage.

— That Idaho be included along with Colorado in studies to see if there are any health hazards to people who live near INEL or other nuclear facilities.

Andrus said if those conditions are met, he would allow partial shipments from Rocky Flats, enough to allow the plant to continue operating until the scheduled September opening date of WIPP.

"That does not mean that Idaho has to take the waste. That would mean that if they meet all the other criteria, we might be willing to take a partial amount of the waste..." Andrus said.

Andrus said his past experience with DOE has not been good. "That's why I say my position is one of 'Show me what you can do, and then I will think about trusting you.' The only thing I can do is wait until January and see what they put on the table at that time," he said.

The governor said DOE's attitude toward the problem is "much improved over what it was one month or two months ago. But I am disappointed that they have waited almost three months on the commencement of administrative land withdrawal (for WIPP) because they could have been halfway through the process."

Potlatch refiles to build hydroelectric plants

LEWISTON (AP) — Potlatch Corp. has refiled applications to build small hydroelectric plants on two north-central Idaho streams, including one under the Northwest Power Planning Council's protected list.

The company has refiled for preliminary study permits on Reeds and Beaver creeks near the community of Headquarters.

"The two were included in five applications filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission four years ago, which have expired."

Since then, the planned projects on Snake and Reeds creeks have been combined, said Dale McGreer, Potlatch hydrology and lands manager.

The company wants to develop the streams, which flow mostly across its own lands, he said. But it also wants to ensure that if the streams are put to use for hydro projects, Potlatch is the developer.

"We have had considerable interest in these sites from competitors who would develop these sites," McGreer said, "especially if there is potential to interfere with our timber lands."

The company faces another complication since the permit applications were first filed. When the Northwest Power Planning Council designated streams throughout the region that should be protected from hydro development, Beaver Creek was on the list.

"I'm not really sure we have come to grips with that," McGreer said.

Bert Bowler, Idaho Fish and Game Department regional fisheries manager, said the department is most concerned about the project on Beaver Creek.

The stream, which follows a road leading to the Clearwater River North Fork from Headquarters, supports cutthroat and rainbow trout and kokanee salmon, Bowler said.

The department notified FERC about its concerns in the last study and will continue to do so, he said.

Boise man charged with embezzlement

BOISE (AP) — A Boise man has been charged with embezzling more than $650,000 from a physicians' group in which his father-in-law practiced.

Bryan D. Zimmerman was indicted by grand jury on Thursday. A warrant was issued Friday for Zimmerman, who worked as an accountant for his father-in-law, Dr. G. Royden Streib, and four other anesthesiologists in Boise Anesthesia Partnership, Boise Police Detective Richard Miller said.

The group provides anesthesia services at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center.

Zimmerman is still at-large. Miller said Streib left town to avoid testifying against his daughter's husband.

The indictment charges Zimmerman with 25 counts of embezzlement, and one count of tax invasion. Each embezzlement count carries a maximum penalty of 14 years in prison.

Zimmerman is accused of making unauthorized transfers from Boise Anesthesia to other accounts every month from July 1986 to July 1988.

County fights commission on tax increase

LEWISTON (AP) — Nez Perce County officials and TCI of Idaho are trading barbs over the county's increased property taxes, while TCI customers will see higher monthly rates for their television viewing.

In a notice sent to its more than 8,000 Lewiston subscribers, TCI of Idaho is urging its customers to contact officials about what it calls a "dramatic, unwarranted and discriminatory" increase in its property tax valuation by Nez Perce County Assessor Daniel Anderson and the Idaho Tax Commission.

The company is asking the subscribers to contact the Nez Perce County commissioners, Idaho Tax Commission Chairman Larry Looney and three local legislators.

Because the company's tax bill rose this year by $348,615 in Nez Perce County, TCI plans to increase its customers' bill by $3.45 per month starting next year.

TCI has asked another county commissioner to reduce the company's

Gondola deal excites mayor

KELLOGG (AP) — The city of Kellogg and a Swiss tram builder have signed closing documents on Kellogg's ambitious $14.1 gondola lift and expansion at Silverhorn ski area.

"I just love it. I'm excited," said Mayor Mervin Hill at the conclusion of the 9 p.m. Friday ceremony.

Hill said Von Roll Systems, builder of the gondola, has agreed to hire as much local labor as possible during construction, but said it was too early to estimate how many jobs the project might create.

Court orders judge to accept plea

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court has ordered an eastern Idaho district judge to show why he should not be ordered to accept a murder guilty plea from a man who has admitted slayings in Idaho, Utah and Iowa.

In a surprise move Dec. 9, 6th District Judge William Woodland stopped a sentencing hearing for James Louis Holland, 48, and said he would not accept a plea-bargain agreement sparing Holland the possibility of the death sentence.

Instead, Woodland revoked acceptance of the Idaho confession and ordered a preliminary hearing for Holland. It is scheduled to open next week in Malad.

Late Friday afternoon, Idaho Supreme Court Justice Byron Johnson signed an alternative writ of mandate to Woodland. It orders him to proceed with the earlier agreement or present arguments why not.

Woodland, who will be represented by the attorney general's office, has until Friday at 5 p.m. to present written arguments. After that, the Supreme Court may call for more written or verbal arguments.

Part of the order signed by Johnson said, "...it appearing the respondent (Woodland) may not have authority to revoke his acceptance of the conditional plea of guilty, and may have a duty to accept the plea and sentence the petitioner under the agreement..."

Idaho Solicitor General Lynn Thomas plans to conduct the preliminary hearing. "With such short notice, it will be difficult to conduct the hearing and prepare arguments on the writ of mandate," he said.

Holland has been convicted of a separate charge of first-degree murder in Utah and awaits execution on Death Row.

Authorities say the Idaho slay case, the Utah murder and a killing 24 years ago, all started at the same remote Interstate 84 rest stop in southern Idaho.

The Idaho murder charge against Holland is over the July 4, 1987, slaying of Karl Behm, 24, Highland Heights, Fla., at the I-84 rest stop near the Idaho-Utah border in Oneida County. Behm was shot twice in the chest. His body was found by a trucker.

Holland, represented by public defender Patricia McDermott, pleaded guilty under an agreement that he would receive a fixed life term instead of the death penalty.

Holland has listed Orlando, Fla., as his home address. His Utah case is on appeal to the Utah Supreme Court. Soon after his confession last August, he said he wanted to be executed, and was sentenced to die on Nov. 16, 1988. Before the execution, Holland changed his mind and appealed the Utah decision.

Holland said he committed the two most recent murders because he wanted to be caught and returned to prison, where he had spent much of his life.

On-again-off-again dieting makes weight control a much tougher proposition in the long run. The Nutri/System Health & Fitness Information Bureau cites an ongoing medical project involving researchers from five universities around the country who are focusing on "yo-yo dieting," or repetitive large gains and losses in weight. According to spokesperson Kelly Brownell, PhD, psychologist at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, experiments on both laboratory animals and humans have shown that excess weight is lost much more quickly the first time around than it is on the second or third cycles - on exactly the same number of calories. Not only that, but the weight is more quickly gained back when each diet is over, as the cycles add up.

Brizez has worked hard for greater community

The upcoming election for the College of Southern Idaho Board of Trustees has taken new excitement and a list of talented candidates. It is refreshing to have a choice between so many quality people.
 Donna Brizez, one of those candidates, has unselfishly worked within the community on so many worthwhile projects that I feel compelled to ask others to consider her for the CSI board. Donna works hard for many community causes, but more importantly, she delivers quality results. She can deliver what she promises because she has a desire to complete what she starts. Unlike some of us, she knows when to say no. This assures those that she is committed to that she will fulfill her commitments.

 people hold differing images of who Jesus was, but that in our own attempt to limit Jesus to the image we have of him we will forget what he taught us and the point of his mission among us.

We live in a time when we buy images off the television screen the same way we buy food in the store. We can buy or boycott the image of Jesus that Snoopy presents in his movie just as we can choose Coke rather than Pepsi.

But as we shop around for the image of Jesus that we feel most comfortable with, let us remember that from the very beginning believers and followers have not agreed fully on who Jesus Christ was... We have four different Gospel portraits; we have Paul's own testimony; we have various Church documents; we have a collection of historical images and traditions.

Indeed, if Jesus Christ is truly the Son of God as I believe, then I'd venture to say that he is much bigger than our minds can fully comprehend. You see, I believe that this is part of what it means for God to be God. He has the divine capacity to be more than we know or understand.

This week, The Times-News will publish several articles by local writers on "Who Is Jesus?" Today's article is by The Rev. Lovell Greathouse, pastor of the Filser United Methodist Church.

When I heard she was interested in serving on the CSI board I knew she would give it 100 percent, as she gives nothing less. Donna has proven herself to me and many others. Give her the opportunity to serve you as a CSI trustee, and you won't be disappointed.

Kalange has background for CSI board position

We have known John Kalange for more than 15 years. In this time we have been associated with him in professional, religious, and social settings. John is the type of individual who gives 100 percent to everything he chooses to be involved in. His commitment to others and selfless attitude has impressed us for many years.

John's vast background in business and involvement in civic activities has given him invaluable experience to solve problems and provide guidance as a trustee for the College of Southern Idaho.

We feel that John would be an asset to CSI now and in the future. We are strong supporters of John and endorse him as trustee of the College of Southern Idaho.

51% pay hike should be voted on by electorate

To Sens. McClure, Symms; Reps. Stallings, Craig

Although the Constitution clearly states that Congress shall establish its salary, a 51 percent pay raise is proposed without requiring the members of Congress to vote on it. It should not be necessary to emphasize this in the private sector the stockholders (taxpayers) of the company would not allow the officers of a corporation to provide any pay raise for themselves when the company (government) has been managed so poorly as to produce a deficit for years unending?

I am aware that the proposed increase is recommended only if Congress stops "taking money from lobbyists for speeches or personal appearances." In view of past inability of Congress to adhere to any reasonable standard of ethics and its repeated unwillingness to discipline itself, such will not happen. If the people believe so, we truly can believe in Santa Claus.

Unmentioned are the extensive tax free perks. Along with such little things as subsidized meals in private dining rooms and "free" medical care, there is a retirement program which perhaps would not be considered legal in the private sector.

If this irresponsible method of filling your pockets is to continue — have it take place 90 days prior to the election. The electorate would then decide what should be done.

This is written in all sincerity even though it may appear to be in anger. Frustration is definitely a motivation. No pay raise until you produce a balanced budget! — A real one, not a false one hidden by a political smoke screen. For a better government

Chicagoans welcome Kemp appointment

Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Despite Rep. Jack Kemp's outspoken conservative fiscal views, Chicago officials are guardedly optimistic about his expected appointment as secretary of housing and urban development.

Kemp is an energetic, enthusiastic person, said Robert Mier, Mayor Eugene Sawyer's assistant for development. "His energy alone could be a force for improving America's cities."

JACK KEMP
Expected to join HUD

City officials wonder what impact Kemp will have on public and other forms of government-subsidized housing here. Chicago has more than 40,000 public housing units, second in number only to New York City, and most of it is in an advanced state of decay.

They point out that Kemp, who ran unsuccessfully in the Republican presidential primaries earlier this year, has represented suburban Buffalo, N.Y., in Congress for the last 18 years and is intimately acquainted with the housing and development needs of economically depressed metropolitan areas.

Chicago officials note he has championed several novel approaches for upgrading inner cities, including so-called "urban enterprise zones," where the government would provide tax breaks to developers in exchange for low-income housing and industrial development.

Many public housing officials across the country, reeling from a $27 billion reduction in federal funding for subsidized housing under the Reagan administration, doubt Kemp will be able to meet the challenge.

"You have to give him the benefit of the doubt that he will attempt to do something, but federal money will continue to be tight," said Robert McKay, executive director of the Boston-based Council of Large Public Housing Authorities.

The homeless population is growing," he noted. "There isn't enough decent housing for middle-income people, let alone the poor. Kemp talks about using private market strategies to address these problems. Maybe he's right, but it'll take time to implement those strategies. What do we do in the meantime?"

National urban leaders, however, say Kemp will be a plus as HUD secretary even if he only manages to put the spotlight in Washington back on the problems confronting cities.

"Being the energetic, aggressive, ideas person that he is, he will be an advocate for the cities," said Randolph Arndt, chief spokesman for the National League of Cities, the nation's oldest and largest organization of municipal officials.

"He won't be a Daddy Warbucks, but we think he'll energize people in Washington to start addressing urban problems again. Unlike the current secretary, who was virtually invisible, his heart and his energies will be in the job and that's the first step to finding solutions to our cities' problems."

Rescuers reach pilots stranded on glacier

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — A U.S. Coast Guard helicopter on Saturday rescued two pilots who were stranded four days on a remote Canadian glacier after making an emergency landing in their vintage World War II-era airplane.

One of the pilots said they were tired but in good condition after living on snacks, water and beer in the snowbound plane for four days. The vintage Grumman Wildcat amphibious plane had been equipped with survival gear.

"We both lost a little weight, but that's about it," said Michael Mills of Gustavus.

Without conditions had prevented rescuers from getting to the pilots during daily attempts that began Tuesday.

Mills, 38, said in a telephone interview from his home that he landed the plane after the engines failed. He and fellow pilot Charles "Buddy" Ferguson, 31, were confident they would be rescued, he said.

"We pretty much knew we were OK. We probably could have stayed there another week without being in too bad a shape," Mills said.

The two men had reported by radio earlier that they were unharmed and comfortable, the Coast Guard said.

The H-3 helicopter hoisted the men from the glacier about 10:20 a.m. AST and they were flown to their hometown of Gustavus, about 69 miles south. Chief Petty Officer Jim Van Atta said.

The face of the glacier, at Tarr Inlet, is in Glacier Bay National Park and Preserve and is about 60 miles north of Gustavus, a small southern Alaska port town. The huge river of ice stretches far into British Columbia.

Nightly temperatures on the glacier were estimated at 20 to 25 degrees, said Robert Jacobson, a National Weather Service meteorologist in Juneau.

The pilots were several miles inside Canada. Coast Guard officials said they had received permission from the Canadian government to conduct the rescue.

Mills said he and Ferguson lived on cheese, salmon, a bag of corn chips and two cans of oysters. They rationed the food and had still some left when they were rescued.

"We just nibbled. We drank plenty of water. We had a case of beer and we drank that," he said. "We really weren't that hungry because we were so inactive."

"We did well together. We had three magazines that we both read about three different times, backwards and forwards," Mills said.

Golden age of frequent flier flying could end

By Fort Lauderdale News & Sun-Sentinel

A golden age in frequent flier flying may end on Dec. 31. Thousands of frequent fliers who have been collecting triple mileage since the beginning of the year will probably find the programs coming to an end.

"We are not going to renew it," USAir spokesman David Shipley said.

As with most other major airlines, USAir and its sister Piedmont offered triple frequent flier mileage for the rest of 1988 to customers who flew between Jan. 1 and March 31.

"We are not on the leading edge of giving the product away. That's their marketing philosophy, not ours," he said, referring to the competition.

As Shipley's remarks indicate, airlines would like to end the costly promotions. But they have proved so popular with the public that one observer thinks competitive pressure will force the airlines to bring back triple mileage, or maybe something even more enticing to flying customers.

There is even a frequent flier war going on right now in Canada, with the nation's three major airlines offering sextuple mileage — that is, the miles traveled multiplied by six.

Randy Petersen, editor of Frequent magazine, compares the frequent flier programs to the rebate programs in the automobile industry.

"Every year the auto industry does it again, but every year the auto industry posts record profits," said Petersen, who edits the Colorado Springs, Colo.-based magazine. The triple mileage programs get people staying a few extra nights, it gives them brand loyalty. That's the name of the game.

Delta started the frequent flier war in the United States last year when it announced it would give triple mileage to anybody buying a ticket with an American Express card. Within days, almost every major airline launched its own version of the triple-mileage program.

Earlier this year, United and American Airlines made an effort to control the programs. Although at the time, many were predicting that other airlines would take the opportunity to scale back their programs, there have been only minor changes since then, Petersen said.

United and American frequent flier mileage also expires after three years, while other airlines have no time limit. But after July 1, it will no longer be possible to accrue mileage from year to year.

These changes mean the casual flier, who accumulates mileage toward a free ticket over a long period of time, may no longer be in a position to score," Petersen said.

Although all the airlines said they are trying to hold down promotional costs, a Delta spokeswoman disputed the conventional wisdom that the frequent flier promotions were creating a time bomb that would destroy airline profits. Spokeswoman Jackie Fate said Delta finds that at least 40 percent of its frequent flier mileage is used to upgrade coach tickets to first class.

Gacy guilty of most murder convictions

CHICAGO (AP) — Ten years ago, three days before Christmas, Dr. Robert Stein was getting ready for bed when the phone rang. It was a routine call for a medical examiner — police had found two bodies.

But there was nothing routine about the case that began unfolding that night, when Stein was called to the home of John Wayne Gacy.

Stein looked out a window and grimaced at the snow that was burying Chicago, then dressed warmly for the drive to Norwood Park Township just east of O'Hare International Airport.

He walked into Gacy's ranch-style home and caught a whiff of trouble. "It was the odor of death," Stein said, recalling that two evidence technicians had found two decaying bodies in the crawl space.

"I said, 'Oh brother, let's stop right here.' I was convinced there were more bodies. Gacy later drew a diagram on a piece of paper and showed that there were many, many bodies."

In the crawl space alone, 29 bodies were found. Four more were dumped in nearby rivers.

Ten years ago this week, Gacy — successful building contractor, decorated Jaycee, amateur clown, Democratic activist — became king of the mass murderers apprehended in this country.

Gacy told police he strangled all but one of his 33 male victims by wrapping rope around their necks and twisting it with a stick. He had sex with some of them before killing them. The murders were committed over a three-year period beginning in 1975.

In 1980, he was convicted of 33 murders — more than anyone before or since.

Gacy, 46, received death sentences for 12 of the killings and life in prison for each of the remaining 21. In September, the Illinois Supreme Court upheld the convictions and the sentences.

Execution is scheduled for Jan. 11, but is almost certain to be delayed by appeals. Illinois last execution was in 1962.

Today, Gacy sits in a 46-square-foot cell on death row at Menard Correctional Center in Chester.

Reagan plans to work on budget after term

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan pledged today to work on reforming the nation's budget process after leaving office, calling the effort a "vital campaign."

"The budget system simply has no control and no internal discipline. And that's the problem," Reagan said in his weekly radio address, delivered from the Oval Office.

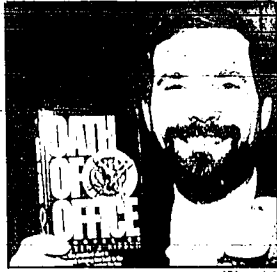

With less than five weeks left in his presidency, Reagan used his five-minute address to argue once again that the president needs greater authority to limit spending in order to curtail the country's deficit.

In the 1988 fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30, a $155.1 billion deficit was recorded. Under the Gramm-Rudman budget balancing law, a $100 billion deficit target has been set for the 1990 fiscal year.

Reagan blamed Congress for getting the nation into its red ink dilemma, saying, "Every dime of deficit spending has been mandated by Congress."

Emphasizing that he believes the deficit can be solved without raising taxes, Reagan also said such spending woes could be avoided if a laundry list of changes in the budget process were enacted.

Novel poses constitutional dilemma

'Oath of Office' is in its 2nd printing

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A thriller about the kidnapping of the president-elect which also features a vice-president-elect from a Midwestern state has gone into a second printing since its release two months ago.

The novel's author says it illustrates how the Constitution and federal laws are unclear and contradictory about what would happen if a president-elect were kidnapped between Election Day and when the Electoral College votes. In real life, the Electoral College meets Monday.

In "Oath of Office," a popular, crime-busting U.S. senator from California defeats a one-term president but is kidnapped while watching election returns. The country is plunged into a constitutional crisis.

Author Steven J. Kirsch, a lawyer, said his first novel poses the question of what would happen if the president-elect were kidnapped. Would the vice president-elect be inaugurated instead?

Though the book doesn't mention President-elect George Bush or Vice President-elect Dan Quayle, the fictional vice president-elect in Kirsch's book — which he sold in 1986 — is a young senator from a Midwestern state selected to give the ticket geographical balance.

"The electors would be going through the same mental gymnastics if Bush were kidnapped," Kirsch said. "What happens in real life would be what I described in my book."

The 20th Amendment provides for the vice president-elect to become president if the president-elect dies before he can be sworn in.

But what if the president-elect were kidnapped? Would the electors qualify the president-elect as president, even though he's missing? Would the vice president-elect be named president? Or would the decision be thrown into the U.S. House?

"Everyone has agreed there is no precedent for this," Kirsch said.

Shooting fatal to teacher Teen just snapped, pastor says

VIRGINIA BEACH (AP) — A 16-year-old student at a private Baptist school who allegedly killed one teacher and wounded another before firing into a filled classroom apparently "just snapped," the school's pastor said.

"I don't know how it could have happened," said George Sweet, pastor of Atlantic Shores Baptist Church. "This is a good, Christian school. We pride ourselves on discipline. Our kids are good kids."

The Atlantic Shores Christian School sophomore was arrested and charged with first-degree murder, attempted murder, malicious assault and related felony charges for the Friday morning shooting. Police would not release the boy's name because he is a juvenile, but neighbors and relatives identified him as Nicholas Elliott.

Police said the student was tackled by a teacher and other students when his semi-automatic pistol jammed as he fired on the classroom as the students covered on the floor crying "Jesus save us! God save us!"

The slain teacher was identified as Karen H. Farley, 40. The wounded teacher, 37-year-old Sam Marino, was in serious condition Saturday with gunshot wounds in the shoulder.

Police said the boy also shot at a third teacher, Susan Allen, 31, as she fled from the room where Marino was shot. He then shot Marino again before running to a third classroom where a Bible class was meeting.

The youngster shot the glass out of a locked door before opening fire, police spokesman Lewis Thurston said. Covering students cried "Jesus save us! God save us!" as the boy fired twice without hitting anyone.

When the boy's pistol jammed, he was tackled by teacher Maurice Matteson, 24, and other students, Thurston said.

"Once you see what went on in there, it's a miracle that we didn't have more people killed," Police Chief Charles R. Wall said.

Navy commissions Trident sub

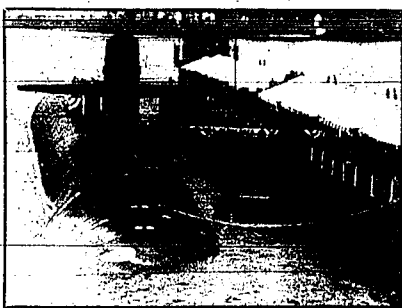

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — The nation's ninth Trident missile-firing submarine, the USS Tennessee, was commissioned in the nation's fleet Saturday.

It was hailed as a weapon "fitted for the demands of modern peace," by former U.S. Sen. Howard Baker, who along with other Tennessee and Navy dignitaries were in a crowd of about 1,200 who braved bitter cold to celebrate the submarine's formal entry into the fleet.

Nearly 100 anti-nuclear weapons protesters gathered outside the gates of the Naval Underwater Systems Center where the commissioning was held. No protesters were arrested, police said.

Members of the Coalition to Stop the Trident had threatened a large demonstration and acts of civil disobedience. Authorities responded by assigning more than 80 police officers to the ceremonies, according to New London Police Sgt. Kenneth Edwards.

The Tennessee is the first nuclear-powered submarine designed to fire potent Trident 2 missiles. The missiles have a range of 6,000 miles, and each multiple warhead can strike up to 10 targets.

AP Laserphoto

U.S.S. Tennessee is the first designed to fire 'Trident 2' missiles. The Tennessee is also the first vessel to be assigned to the Navy's newest Trident submarine base at Kings Bay, Ga. The other Trident base is in Washington state.

Baker, a former Republican senator from Tennessee and more recently White House chief of staff, was the keynote speaker. U.S. Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., and Tennessee Gov. Ned McWherter also attended the ceremonies.

"Ours is a hard and bitter peace of which President Kennedy spoke, a peace guaranteed only by our strength, unquestioned and unsurpassed," Baker said.

"The mission of the Tennessee we commission today is to keep that peace," he said.

DOE report withheld from Congress

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A classified Department of Energy report seeking $80 billion for modernizing and cleaning up the nation's nuclear weapons production plants was withheld from congressional committees last week by White House officials who are skeptical of the high price tag, according to a senior budget official.

Submission of the report to the House and Senate Armed Services committees was being delayed by Office of Management and Budget officials who said they suspect that the Department of Energy's figures may be exaggerated.

Other sources familiar with the report, however, expressed frustration with the OMB's stance.

They said that budget officials seem unable or unwilling to comprehend the enormity of restoring a unique industrial complex, much of it built in the 1950s, that the congressional General Accounting Office has called one of the most "potentially dangerous industrial operations in the world."

The Department of Energy sent the report to the White House two weeks ago. It outlined the costs of refurbishing 17 major weapons facilities through the year 2010.

Administration sources said that the document, dubbed the 2010 Report, puts the cost of modernizing and relocating critical weapons facilities away from population centers at just over $50 billion over 21 years. Another $30 billion will have to be spent on cleaning up scores of chemical and low-level radioactive waste sites, the sources said.

"There are a lot of skeptics about the DOE plan," a senior budget official said. While it is clear that the modernization and cleanup tasks will be large and expensive, the official said, it appeared that the department was asking for far more than it needed to cover any foreseeable contingencies that might arise.

"We realize this is a big problem, but there is a tendency over there (at the Department of Energy) to come in with their hands wide open," the budget official said.

Some of the report's cost figures just seem too big," he said, adding: "We want to know a lot more about where they're going." One source familiar with the outlines of the report and sympathetic to the department's case said that the skepticism reflected "the same head-in-the-sand refusal to face tough choices" on the part of budget officials that has contributed to the decline and obsolescence of the weapons plants over 15 years.

"This is one of the reasons the Department of Energy facilities are in their current state," this source said.

Department officials have declined to comment on the contents of the report, citing its classification.

Administration sources said that the department recommends closing two controversial facilities, a uranium fuel fabrication plant at Fernald, Ohio, near Cincinnati and a plutonium processing facility at Rocky Flats, Colo., near Denver.

Both plants, built in the 1950s, were slated for shutdown in the 1970s, but were kept in production despite growing maintenance problems and a succession of leaks of radioactive material after the Reagan administration began a major buildup of the nuclear stockpile.

Company recalls umbrella strollers

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Ohio company is voluntarily recalling some 14,000 umbrella strollers to correct mechanical problems, according to the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

The recall is being undertaken by Century Products Co. of Macedonia, Ohio, in cooperation with the CPSC. It involves three strollers sold nationally: model numbers 11-066DI and 11-077SA sold under the E-Z Go brand name, and model number 11-074SR sold by Sears as an "Infant Umbrella-Style Stroller."

Model numbers are found on the instruction sheet and a label on the stroller's rear legs.

Consumers having the stroller should stop using the product and return it to the retail store where purchased for a full refund, the CPSC said in a news release. For more information, consumers may call 1-800-222-9825.

The CPSC also announced that Century Products is offering a redesigned replacement horn for its Century Roudster Walker.

The horn, located in the center of the steering wheel, can be torn or bitten off by a child. According to the commission there have been 11 potential choking incidents reported.

Consumers are urged to remove the horn immediately from the steering wheel by grasping the horn with pliers and pulling it out.

To receive the redesigned horn, consumers should write to Century Products Co., 9600 Valley View Road, Macedonia, OH 44056 or after Dec. 26 call 1-800-922-6700.

Brennan released from hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice William Brennan was released from the hospital Saturday, less than a week after surgery to remove his gall bladder, a court spokeswoman said.

"He actually has gone home earlier than expected," said court spokeswoman Toni House.

She said she did not know when Brennan would return to his office at the court but added that he has been doing some work while in the hospital.

Brennan, 82, was taken to the Bethesda Naval Medical Center in suburban Maryland on Dec. 8 for treatment of pneumonia. Doctors later discovered that Brennan was suffering from gall bladder disease, which can have symptoms similar to pneumonia.

Surgery to remove his gall bladder was performed on Monday.

No malignancy was found in the gall bladder, Ms. House said.

Brennan, the court's oldest and most senior member, was last hospitalized in August 1987 for tests on his prostate gland. The tests at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., showed he did not have cancer.

Hawkish Tower won't 'give away the treasury,' Bush says

Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON — After the 1980 election, when the Republicans seized control of the U.S. Senate and John G. Tower was assured the leadership of the Senate Armed Services Committee, he met privately with newly elected President Ronald Reagan to offer his services as the next secretary of defense.

But he quickly learned that he was out of the running. An old Reagan friend, Caspar W. Weinberger, got the nod and a disappointed Tower was asked to be a "good soldier" by providing valuable help in promoting the Reagan military agenda in Congress.

Now, Tower has won the long-sought Pentagon nomination, although it appears he had to agree once again to perform the role of a good soldier.

The former senator "does believe, in a broad sense, in peace through strength," President-elect George Bush said in announcing Tower's appointment Friday. "But he also will conduct himself — in consultation with our national security team that we are putting together."

Asked whether the hawkish Tower, who was probably the strongest congressional supporter of the Reagan defense buildup, might "give away the treasury" in the name of national security, Bush said, "I think the image is wrong."

John Goodwin Tower, 63, the dapper, diminutive political science professor who burst onto the national political scene in 1961 as the first Republican senator from Texas since Reconstruction, has been known for years by friends and enemies alike as a shrewd, forceful politician who brings almost a religious zeal to the task of maintaining a strong national defense.

This determination is accompanied by a sharp temper and what some detractors call an arrogant and rigid view of defense issues. Even those close to him acknowledge his tendency to rub people the wrong way.

"Someone like Tower's got to have enemies," observed Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

While Senate courtesy virtually assures Tower's confirmation as defense secretary, his former colleagues are certain to question his ability to run the federal government's "largest and perhaps most difficult-to-manage department."

With the prospect of a budget squeeze that threatens deployment of many high-priced weapons and the size of U.S. military forces, Tower also is expected to be quizzed on his reputed devotion to military spending. His ties to defense contractors will be examined amid mounting public and congressional clamor for changes in the way the Pentagon buys weapons.

And his personal life is likely to be scrutinized, considering the exhaustive, time-consuming FBI background check that delayed announcement of his appointment for weeks. A plethora of news reports have publicized his business dealings, drinking habits and an extremely bitter divorce last year in which his ex-wife alleged he spent much time and money on other women in the course of their nine-year marriage.

However, the confirmation process is likely to focus on the nominee's plans for meeting the enormous defense challenges of the next four years, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., current chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Friday.

Without being specific, Bush told reporters Friday that "a lot of rumors" about Tower were checked by the FBI, which gave the nominee "a clean bill of health."

The Washington Times has reported that the FBI questioned many of Tower's longtime Texas friends.

Fight for 2% Pentagon budget increase, Carlucci tells Tower

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Sen. John Tower, President-elect Bush's choice as defense secretary, should let recent reforms to the Pentagon's weapon-buying system take hold instead of promising more sweeping changes, says outgoing Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci.

Tower also should fight as hard as he can for a 2 percent increase in the Pentagon's budget — and not talk about accepting less — because anything less jeopardizes the nation's security and the future of the all-volunteer force, Carlucci said.

"The last thing the Defense Department needs is somebody to come in and yank the procurement system out by the roots again and say we're going to reform it or change it," Carlucci said.

"The best reform for the procurement system is stability, predictability. The blueprint is laid out ... we've made a large number of changes in the procurement system. Real changes are taking place in the procurement system and I am proud of them."

Carlucci was interviewed last week in his Pentagon office as he awaited

FRANK C. CARLUCCI
Outgoing defense secretary

Bush's announcement of the man who would replace him.

The 58-year-old defense chief, who said he was looking forward to finding a job in the private sector but had yet to do so, talked at length about what he considered his achievements, as well as the problems he foresaw for Tower.

Of the former, he claimed a measure of credit for:

- Guiding the process and setting priorities in late 1987 in slashing the Pentagon budget plans to comply with a White House deficit compromise with Congress.

"We took it (cuts) in places the services didn't like and lost a secretary of the Navy in the process," Carlucci said, referring to the resignation of Navy Secretary James Webb over its decision to retire 16 warships.

• Protecting reflagged Kuwaiti oil tankers in the Persian Gulf. Carlucci noted he had just returned from a visit to the Middle East "and our standing could not be higher."

"The fact is that we got a high degree of cooperation from the moderate Arab states. The Persian Gulf (work) has been a major achievement."

• Taking a calm, measured approach to the disclosure of a wide-ranging fraud investigation among Pentagon contractors and private consultants.

Benefit includes Rostropovich

LONDON (AP) — Soviet-born cellist Mstislav Rostropovich postponed a performance in India to join leading musicians at a charity concert Saturday for Armenian earthquake victims.

"It was very important for me to take part in this concert," the 61-year-old musician said before a last-minute rehearsal with flutist James Galway, conductor Andre Previn and about 450 musicians who rearranged their schedules and donated their time to perform.

"At the moment, with what has happened, I feel that all Armenians are my relatives," said Rostropovich, a U.S. citizen of Armenian descent. About 2,000 people, including Prince Charles and his wife Princess Diana, will watch the sold-out concert at London's Barbican Hall.

The Soviet Union and five other nations will televise the late-night performance, and the British Broadcasting Corp.'s world service rearranged its radio programming so its estimated audience of 25 million could hear the concert live.

The event is part of an appeal called "Musicians for Armenia" which is expected to raise $42,000 from donations worldwide, including gifts from musicians, concert proceeds and film and recording rights.

Musicians, organizers, concert hall workers, program printers and other staff donated their services so that all income could go to the British Red Cross Armenian Earthquake Appeal fund. Tickets cost $45, $27 and $18.

The British Association of Concert Agents organized the appeal to aid some of the thousands of survivors from the killer earthquake Dec. 7 that killed an estimated 55,000 people.

Previn, who was to conduct the English Chamber Orchestra, said it was "amazing" that the musicians had been able to join.

"In our business everyone's booked up for the next two or three years," he said. "It was just good fortune that everyone could make it at such short notice."

"This terrible catastrophe has provoked the best qualities in people," said Rostropovich, who gave his first solo concert in Britain in nearly two decades Friday, also in aid of Armenia.

The cellist will play Villa-Lobos' Bachianas Brasileiras No. 1, then turn to the piano to accompany his Soviet-born wife, soprano Galina Vishnevskaya, in songs by Tchaikovsky. The program also will include Galway playing Debussy's Syrinx and Previn conducting the English Chamber Orchestra in Beethoven's Coriolan Overture. Soviet pianist Andrei Gavrilov, whose family in Armenia escaped injury in last week's quake, will play Mozart and Chopin.

A Story Of Relative Importance.

Judge recuses himself just before sentencing

CHICAGO (AP) — A judge, citing an obscure rule, disqualified himself from a murder case only minutes before he was expected to issue a 50-year sentence.

As a result of Cook County Circuit Judge Philip Carey's action, attorneys said Friday the case against defendant Lorraine Williams must start over, and she may have to face trial and even a possible death sentence.

Ms. Williams, 27, is charged with the stabbing and beating death of the night manager of a suburban motel where she worked as a maid.

Carey had indicated at a pre-trial hearing with attorneys for both sides that he would sentence Ms. Williams to 30 years in prison in exchange for a guilty plea. Assistant State's Attorney James M. Reilly said.

Reilly said that during the course of the plea Thursday, Carey believed he heard some additional information about the crime and felt it might merit a stiffer sentence.

Judge Carey recused himself... and (the case) was reassigned to another judge," the prosecutor said. "Recuse" is a legal term meaning that a judge or juror is prejudiced or otherwise incompetent to act.

"It's very unusual for this to happen. But the rules provide that this is how it's done," said defense attorney Marvin Levitt.

Under the agreement reached at the pre-trial conference, Levitt said, his client escaped a trial and a possible death penalty had she been convicted.

In disqualifying himself, however, Carey also vacated Ms. Williams' guilty plea, so the case essentially will start from scratch, Levitt said.

Both attorneys said they thought the details described in court Thursday were virtually the same as those told to the judge previously.

Carey declined to specify what made him change his mind.

Levitt said he is not bitter, even though the judge's action means his client could now face a trial.

"He's a conscientious and thoughtful kind of a judge," and felt he had no choice but to disqualify himself, Levitt said. "He followed the rules, if he's second-guessing himself on what he was going to do."

Ms. Williams is charged with murder, armed robbery and arson in the Feb. 15 death of Jane Youngjohns, 61. Ms. Williams is accused of using a rock, knife, and a heavy metal dustpan to kill Ms. Youngjohns in her motel office. Prosecutors say she then set the body on fire.

A Jan. 4 hearing is scheduled, but Levitt said he hopes an agreement can be reached with the new judge.

Woman falls 50 feet through street grate

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman getting out of a taxicab fell through a sidewalk subway grate 50 feet onto the tracks below, where she was partially wedged beneath an electrified third rail, officials said.

However, the 28-year-old woman apparently didn't touch the 600-volt third rail, officials said. She was hospitalized today in critical condition with a broken pelvis and numerous cuts.

The grating in Brooklyn may have been weakened because cars were driven over it during road repairs, said Jared Lebow, a Transit Authority spokesman.

Transit officials said they didn't know whether Angela Williams stepped onto the grating and it fell under her weight or whether it had fallen into the air vent before the accident Thursday night. The metal grating was found 11 feet down the shaft.

Power was shut off within five minutes of the accident and service was disrupted on two lines for 25 minutes, Lebow said.

Christmas trees: PVC versus the real thing

Dennis Duke digs a white pine on his Kentucky farm
 OWENSBORO, Ky. (AP) — Dennis Duke spends years nurturing fir on his Christmas tree farm in western Kentucky. Across the river at a factory in southern Indiana, Curtis Keen can snap out one in 10 minutes. They both represent rival camps in a multimillion-dollar industry fighting to win a place in the living rooms of some 61 million American households. On a cold December day, families bundle up for an outing on Duke's

Christmas 1998. He's thinking about manufacturing trees for 1989. At Hudson Valley, no Christmas carols are played over the loudspeaker to get workers in the holiday spirit. Keen has considered the idea but thinks some workers might find the music distracting. Besides, it's hard to hear anything above the racket of machinery as 160 workers twist pieces of flame-retardant polyvinyl chloride — PVC — together with green twine, making branches that are blue, green or a combination for spruce trees, and box them up. They also make wreaths and garlands. Duke worries mostly about insects or bad weather. Keen's challenge is getting all the right pieces in a box. Around the country, real trees have a slight edge over artificial ones, according to the National Christmas Tree Association in Milwaukee, Wis. It says 38 percent of America's households use real trees, while 33 percent prefer the artificial kind. The remaining 29 percent have no trees. Christmas trees are grown in all 50 states — including Hawaii — but the majority come from a handful of states. Michigan and Oregon are tied for first place, each growing 6 million annually, the association says. Other top producers are Minnesota, Wisconsin, California and North Carolina. Sales of real trees are expected to generate more than $34.1 million this year, said David Baumann, executive director of the association, which does not collect figures for artificial tree sales. Sales of real trees have been healthy this season, Baumann said, noting that growers in southern Florida are reporting increases of 15 percent to 20 percent over 1987. The number of "chop-and-cut" Christmas tree farms has grown from 1,000 in the 1960s to 5,000 today, he said. Real Christmas trees are selling for $3 to $5.25 a foot this year, Baumann said. Artificial trees cost from $20 to $60 for cheaper versions and from $60 to $300 for better quality ones.

USDA needs salmon eaters
 Knight-Ridder Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The U.S. Department of Agriculture wanted to pay a dozen women $2,300 each to eat king salmon for 100 days, but had no takers.

Now it is looking for 12 salmon-loving men.

"We're talking about salmon with dill weed, broiled salmon, baked salmon — just like fine restaurant food," said Gary Nelson, project coordinator with the Agriculture Department's Western Human Nutrition Research Center at the Presidio Army Base in San Francisco.

You guessed right. The salmon feasts are part of a study. This one will, among other things, gauge the effect that a steady diet of fish has on keeping arteries free of blood clots. As a study-control measure, all the fish will be the same — tender, juicy salmon.

There are some catches to this tasty deal. This is a controlled study, which means confinement, lots of physical tests, a bit of poking and no conjugal visits.

Nelson wants to begin the test in January, when he hopes to have his healthy men, ages 30 to 65, lined up. The participants will eat, drink and sleep at the research center's "hotel-like" facility, two to a bedroom, for the 100-day period. They will be able to shoot some pool, watch television or use the compact disc player. There will be daily walks on the scenic Presidio grounds and some organized outings. But everything will be done under the watchful eyes of USDA staff.

"We don't want anyone to sneak a candy bar or a beer," Nelson said about the efforts needed to maintain the integrity of the study.

Judge sentences godfather of soul, James Brown, to 6 years in prison

ATLANTA (AP) — For James Brown, the Godfather of Soul, Soul Brother No. 1, the self-proclaimed Pope of Music, it has finally come to this: six years in a South Carolina prison for trying to run over two policemen.

Just two years after a comeback run, Brown's life is a mess. The man praised by presidents for his good works cannot stay out of trouble. The singer of love ballads was charged this year with trying to kill his wife; it's his third tumultuous marriage.

The crusader against drugs apparently has a PCP habit.

"Obviously, there is trouble within the confines of James Brown, the man," his attorney, Albert "Buddy" Dallas, said last week.

"It's unbelievable," said Robert "Flash" Gordon of Augusta, who worked for the singer-businessman's three radio stations in the 1970s, before Brown lost the stations and much of what he owned in tax and other-money troubles.

"I can't imagine anything like this happening to him," Gordon said Friday from Augusta, the day his friend checked into prison.

Brown, 55, has shown little sign of slowing down, either on or off the stage. He still performs around the world. He still makes records.

Brown was arrested at least seven times in the past year and a half, including twice in a bizarre 20 hours in September that culminated in Thursday's sentence in Aiken, S.C.

On Sept. 24, Brown led police on a two-state chase until they shot out his tires. According to blood tests, he was strung out on PCP, a hallucinogen known as "angel dust." After posting bond, he was arrested for drunken driving.

His trial in Georgia on 10 misdemeanors stemming from the chase is scheduled for Jan. 23.

"This is not the real James Brown," said Dallas, his attorney of four years. Brown's problems, he said, "originated during a time of domestic difficulties" with his wife, Adrienne. "He just can't get it to smooth out."

"I programmed three radio stations for him," Gordon recalled. "He didn't allow anything like that. If you even had any alcohol or anything like that, you lost your job. I don't know what has happened to him?"

Long-time employee Fred Daviss saw him in September. "He had passed the point of no return," Daviss said. "He had trouble speaking. His wife was hiding the car keys from him. I pleaded with her to get him some help."

In the past, Brown made it on his own. Jailed for auto theft at 15, the former shoeshine boy got out and formed a singing group that became his Famous Flames. In 1956, he released "Please, Please, Please." James Brown was on his way.

The late 80s brought nostalgia for Brown's music. And unlike many rock legends, the Godfather of Soul was still out there working. His "Living in America," from the film "Rocky IV," won a Grammy in 1987, his second.

Camels to spend winter in Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) — One of Hawaii's richest snowbirds has received state permission to bring two pet camels to winter in paradise.

Reclusive tobacco heiress Doris Duke and her newly adopted daughter want to ship Princess and Baby, 1-year-old female Bactrian camels, from Ms. Duke's New Jersey estate to her 4.9-acre beachfront estate in the posh Honolulu neighborhood of Black Point, attorney Ronald Y.K. Leong told the state Board of Agriculture on Friday.

Ms. Duke and adopted daughter Charlene Gail "Chandi" Heffner, 35, spend late November to early April in the islands, Leong said.

The panel unanimously approved the request to allow Princess and Baby to join Ms. Duke and Heffner. Friday's hearing was necessary to comply with Hawaii's stringent laws governing the importation of animals.

Leong said Princess and Baby live inside Ms. Duke's New Jersey mansion. He did not know whether the animals would live inside or outside of Ms. Duke's Honolulu home.

Man believes he possesses mystical power

Knight-Ridder Service

VERNFIELD, Pa. — Isaac Clarence Kulp Jr. walks among the Pennsylvania Dutch of rural Montgomery County, marked by a touch of the mystical.

He was blessed at birth, blessed because he was born between midnight and dawn Christmas Day.

And, in the folk tradition of the Pennsylvania Dutch, the time between midnight and dawn on that blessed night is especially blessed.

In that tradition, in which he was raised, Kulp is believed to possess special powers, powers that the Almighty had granted to him solely because he had been born then.

But those powers, the tradition said, could be used only in those hours.

The powers consisted of what could be done on such a night, by such a person who had been born on such a night.

One power touched a higher world, that of the spirits: In those hours such a person could talk with the dead.

But another power touched a lower world, that of the animals.

"If you would go out at midnight on Christmas Eve," he said, it was "the magical time when all the animals would be able to converse with each other."

The folk belief was that at midnight ... and in the few hours left to the night, he said, "if you were born at that time, you could go out and not only hear them but understand what they say."

Kulp, who goes by his middle name of Clarence, is a lay preacher in the Church of the Brethren.

Jerome commissioners hear more tax complaints

By DENISE TURNER
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Jerome County commissioners spent another Monday listening to taxpayers' complaints. So many, in fact, that the commissioners reconvened on Tuesday to finish the job.

"We have heard about 10 complaints this week and about that many last Monday," Commissioner George Andrus said last week. "We only had about one-third as many complaints last year, if that many."

The commissioners recently cited "complaints from taxpayers" as one of their concerns in requesting the resignation of Jerome County Assessor John Wurst.

Wurst, who says he is not planning to resign, said the increased number of complaints is partly because the Jerome County assessor's office is following state regulations for the first time in recent years and because he encourages disgruntled taxpayers to appeal to the commissioners.

"A lot of this is happening because I don't just tell people to pay their bills and go home," he said. "In fact, we help them fill out appeals forms."

Many of the complaints relate to personal property taxes, paid on commercial property and agricultural equipment.

Lawrence Schwarz of Hazelton brought such a complaint to the commissioners. "I don't know what to do about this, but I think the amounts are outrageous," he said.

Schwarz, like other upset taxpayers, forgot to mail in a required declarations statement, due March 15.

Wurst said that in past years the county took no action if someone did not send in the form.

This year, Wurst said, he's following state regulations and adding a 20 percent penalty and not allowing for depreciation — a procedure done in nearly every Idaho county but Jerome.

Wurst also said his office sent out second notices, asking people to turn in their declarations forms, before sending out any tax bills.

"Most people turned in their forms by that time," he said, "but these are the few who didn't."

Another subject of several complaints is tax charged on inside acreage.

Genette Murdoch, who owns an acre of land next to her home on Fir and Eighth, is one taxpayer who falls into that category.

"My parcel jumped from $111 last year to $266 this year because the appraisal of the land jumped from $54,000 to $120,000," she said.

Wurst explained that this property has been given a very low value in the past because of the way the previous administration approached inside acreage.

Some of the increase also is the result of Jerome County falling behind the state's appraisal cycle.

"When I took office, Jerome County was a full 20 percent behind at the end of the first five-year appraisal cycle," said Wurst, who noted that the state tax commission requires that all property be appraised at least every five years. "Now, according to the last review, we are caught up."

"I really enjoy this work, but this office has some very complicated aspects that are sometimes difficult for people outside the office to understand," Wurst said.

Andrus said the commissioners will continue to sympathize with the taxpayers who come to see them. "Probably, we will have to make some kind of adjustments," he said, "but we haven't decided what to do yet."

It's official: Hailey won't get air control tower

By BARBARA NEIWERT
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — An official week-long count of air traffic at Friedman Memorial Airport confirms an earlier federal decision: there will not be an air traffic control tower for the facility.

Federal Aviation Administration officials completed tabulations this week regarding an on-site traffic count conducted at the airport Nov. 27-Dec. 3.

FAA Public Affairs Officer Mitch Barker said the survey taken by two air traffic controllers from Twin Falls revealed an average daily traffic count of 60 take-offs or landings.

Factoring in the type of aircraft using the airport, this reaches less than one-fifth of what the FAA would require for three consecutive years in order for Hailey to qualify.

"Hailey has a long way to go as far as getting their traffic count up," Barker said, adding that areas such as Greeley, Colo., are near the requirement yet they still are not considered to be a candidate for a control tower.

The survey was taken beginning the last day of the Thanksgiving weekend on days of clear weather with the exception of one snow storm day. The count was taken for 12 hours each day.

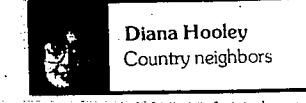

The 422 operations records that week are broken down as follows: Nov. 27 - 93; Nov. 28 - 22; Nov. 29 - 53; Nov. 30 - 58; Dec. 1 - 43; Dec. 2 - 100; and Dec. 3 - 63.

This count averages 60 per day or 21,900 per

Kimberly considers adding sidewalks

By LYNDA BOODY
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — The City Council is considering putting in sidewalks and gutters along South Main Street, possibly on just one side. Council members decided to have a special meeting at 8 p.m. Tuesday at City Hall to further discuss the issue.

"This is a major decision because it's been 60 years without sidewalks," Mayor Jesse Posey said.

Sidewalks and gutters along South Main Street between Center and Gem streets would cost between $101,000-$104,000, Scott Bybee of J U B Engineers told the council.

The council has not decided who will pay for the project. Although current plans are to put in sidewalks and gutters along just one side of the road, council members have discussed assessing residents along both sides, saying both sides will benefit.

Kimberly schools currently bus children who would walk along this road as a safety measure. The sidewalks could eliminate the need for the additional bus service. As a result, many residents would benefit from the installation.

Councilman Jack Wright wants to make this a city-wide project to broaden the support. "This would be easier to sell city-wide than from here to Gem Drive," Wright said.

He suggested constructing sidewalks, in phases beginning with the proposed project.

Bybee said that residents can be assessed for up to 10 years for new sidewalks.

Posey appointed Anna Lou Callen, Chet Nenzel and Gary or Bev Stone as judges for this year's Christmas lighting contest for residents, set for this week.

Kimberly businesses have donated prizes for contest winners, Posey said. "It's really neat how everybody pitched in," he said.

Judging will be Sunday and Monday. One grand prize will be awarded with up

The water and sewer funds showed a loss of $11,000 last year, which could be made up by raising user fees. The council has no current plans to raise the fees, however.

In other business:

- The City Council will donate one-third of the annual insurance premium of $425 to the Hansen-Murtaugh Quick Response Unit. Connie Walters and Carol Robinson requested the donation to help fund their unit. The QRU responds to calls in Kimberly and is training emergency medical technicians from Kimberly. The unit is funded solely by donations.
- An informational letter regarding garbage pick collection will be distributed to residents. The letter will discuss the proper size for containers to be picked up by PSI. The company will also use green or orange stickers on receptacles not meeting its requirements.
- Residents will be reminded that state law excludes from pickup such items as tar paper, rubber, cressote, plastic, glass and petroleum base products.
- The city is considering buying a new fire truck. It is expected to take 12

Albion to vote on liquor law

ALBION — Voters here will go to the polls Wednesday to decide whether to allow the sale of liquor by the drink in the town.

The Albion City Council voted last week to call for the special election, which will be from noon until 8 p.m. Dec. 21.

Voter registration closed Friday.

In additional business, the council approved beer licenses for the AA Mart and the Country Store. The license granted to the Country Store allows beer to be sold for consumption on the premises. A beer license was also approved for Dick's Service and Cafe, pending county approval.

Verlene Powell reported on summer plans for the Albion Valley Players. The group will again be presenting historical sketches at the old Idaho Normal School campus in hopes of attracting tourists to Albion. Musicals and melodramas planned for the summer include, the Diamondfield

Jack trial, the background of Colonel Josiah Miller, and a musical showing the action and feelings regarding the closing of the college.

Some positions require a physical examination and a fitness test. Some positions, particularly firefighting, will require a drug test before a selected applicant can enter on duty.

Application forms are available from the Shoshone District Office, 400 West F St., Box 2-B, Shoshone 83352. Questions and inquiries should be directed to Carol Lewin at 208-886-2206. Heyburn hires firm for study HEYBURN — The city of Heyburn will hire the engineering firm of CH2M Hill to do a study on the city's sanitation system.

The City Council determined last week the study was needed to determine how to update the city's system.

In other matters, Councilman John Billetz said he is concerned about shooting that he has heard on the island between Heyburn and Burley in the Snake River. The council asked city personnel to look into the laws concerning discharging firearms on the island.

The council approved a four-hour power outage for the electrical department to do routine maintenance for next April.

In other activity, the council decided to install a podium in the council room for visitors to use to address the council.

Wendell chamber elects officers

WENDELL — New officers for 1989 were elected Wednesday by the Wendell Chamber of Commerce.

Members unanimously voted for George Crawford as president, Brian Galbraith as vice president, Mitch Bunn as treasurer and Cyndi Rast as secretary. Outgoing President Jody Young said the office has been a lot of work but things have gone well. "It's been a fun year," she said. "I've had a lot of good people to help me out."

In other business, Chamber members de-decided to have a second annual Ag Days celebration next August. They also planned to present a drawing for a quilt before Mother's Day, a drawing for a rifle or similar prize before Father's Day and a fund-raising dance in October.

Minidoka P&Z OKs permit

RUPERT — The Minidoka County Planning and Zoning Commission has unanimously approved a special-use permit for Magic Valley Fur Farms to build a 1,000-head mink farm about six miles west of Heyburn.

Any appeals to the decision must be filed within 15 days, Commission Chairman George Falkner said.

Marta Moyle was pleased with the vote. "We've had everything on hold while waiting for the Board's decision, now we can begin construction within the month," she said.

Land developer, real estate agent question sewer hook-up fees

By ROBERT DOYLE
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — Sewer hook-up fees and "adoption" of the city's library generated considerable citizen comment at Hailey's City Council meeting Monday night.

A legal land developer and real estate agent both argued against the $1,900 mandatory hook-up fee Hailey city residents must pay to tie into the city's water and sewer lines.

The council decided to contact Scott Bybee, of JUB Engineers in Twin Falls, who is familiar with Hailey and the Hailey sewer processing plant, to discuss the issue.

Local land developer Clark Grubb told the council that commercial and residential real estate developers put in the sewer and water lines during the early stages of development — a cost that is passed on to buyers. The city then adds a $1,900 hook-up fee, a cost which can often run as high as half the cost of purchasing the original property.

Grubb questioned the legality of such fees, saying the service provided doesn't justify the amount of the fee. Lawsuits against the city of Hailey to eliminate the fees are just a matter of when, not a matter of if, Grubb said.

Hailey real estate broker Ned

Loomis asked the council to consider a moratorium on the fees as an incentive to keeping building costs within the reach of middle income families.

If that's not feasible, Loomis said, the council could base the fee on usage since under the present regulations property which harbors a single bathroom pays the same as one with 10.

"I get four to five calls a day from people seeking affordable housing, and so do other realtors," Loomis said. "Unfortunately, the profit margin on middle and low income housing is so small that the sewer fees prices builders and prospective buyers right out of the market. Consequently the sewer fee then creates a virtual building moratorium in Hailey."

In other matters, Councilwoman Dorothy Moore, asked the council to address the matter of the Hailey Library, which currently operates as an independent entity yet receives much of its financial support from city coffers.

Discussion followed as to whether the city was authorized to put into effect a two-mill levy to support the library, and the council directed City Attorney Steve Crabtree to research the matter.

In other action the council:

Passed an ordinance requiring subdividers to provide street name signs according to city specifications.

Passed a resolution stating that the city of Hailey would provide the police power necessary to enforce recent ordinances passed by the Blaine County Airport Commission.

Made changes in a lease to allow ice skating on the Rodeo Arena floor.

Agreed to acquire property for a bike path element linking the Hailey and Bellevue, providing details can be worked out with the property's owner, Clark Grubb. Funding for the purchase would come from a recently passed bond measure, coupled with a Blaine County Recreation Department grant.

Turned down a request for rezoning lots in the West Side Subdivision from limited residential to limited business, but asked the city's attorney to research possible grandfather clauses which might affect the property's present owner.

work sheets. I could even staple them to the work sheet. You had I can't staple a bottle of disinfectant too.

Many people believe schools are just centers of learning and education. What they don't realize is that they are also cesspools of bacteria. Just ask Ed: Ed is a teacher who gave personal attention to each student's needs. One day while doing this he caught the mumps.

Then there's Lucinda who taught preschool. She loved those precious little darlings. She still does today, but at greater distances since she contracted shingles virus from one of them. Shingles is the extremely painful adult version of childhood chicken pox.

I used to look directly in my students' eyes and talk face to face with them. Now I have decided to move out of the firing line. I hope my students and

I can still maintain effective communication with them asking questions to my car and me responding to the wall.

What's a teacher to do? Take her chances? That's easy for nonteaching professionals to say who sit in offices talking to other adults who don't swipe their noses with their fingers or throw spit wads at each other.

I've decided nonteaching professionals who had mouth "wimpy" teachers are doing it to cover up their own insecurities. They always tell everyone they didn't become teachers because the pay wasn't as good. But they really didn't become teachers because they have puny immune systems and knew they couldn't take the day-to-day bacteria load of the average classroom.

It's easy to get bitter when you're sick and down. That's why to divert my dark thoughts I've been trying to develop a Bugbuster policy. I could add to my classroom rule list. Right now all I have are rules like "Stay in your seat at all times," and "No chewing gum."

I could add "No sneezing on other people," and "Coughing permitted only in designated areas." The designated area could be out the window. What's wrong with having kids hang their heads out the window to cough? The fresh air would do them good.

I think I've got some good ideas here, some solid solutions, to a basic problem in the educational system. Now all I've got to do is convince the administrators and move toward implementation of a schoolwide Bugbuster policy. This may be difficult. All the administrators want to talk about is quality of learning.

months for the delivery of a new truck if ordered now. The fire department is compiling a list of specifications for the truck which is estimated to cost $89,000.

The council approved paying volunteer Fire Chief Rob Vawser a $500 annual salary. Councilman Wright said that Vawser is currently writing pre-fire plans on every building in town on his own time. He is also responsible for checking fire hydrants, writing fire reports, checking hoses and maintaining equipment and training for firefighters.

"I think he's doing an excellent job," Wright said.

Council members confirmed the appointment of Mary Hodge and LaVere Lee to the Zoning Commission for six-year terms. Hodge has previously served four years on the board and LaVere has served one. Also confirmed was the appointment of Trena Vandenbark and Brenda Grape to the Library Board. Vandenbark has served on the board for the past two years. Grape was appointed last year.

The council approved the following liquor licenses for 1989 — beer licenses, Eddie's, The Rainbow, Maxie's, The Maverick, Larry's Quick Stop and Persons IGA; hard liquor, Eddie's and The Rainbow; wine licenses, Persons IGA, Larry's Quick Stop and The Maverick.

Kimberly schools institute program for troubled teen-agers

By LYNDA BOODY
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — Troubled students in Kimberly's junior and senior high schools will have an opportunity for help through the Impact Program.
The program is designed to involve adults and peers in the lives of troubled students. Guidance Counselor Ron Bailey told the Board of Trustees Thursday night.
The term impact points at having impact on young people that are on their way, in one way or another, to self-destruction, Bailey said.

The program, in its second year in Twin Falls schools, should be fully implemented in Kimberly within five years. Kimberly's core team of three teachers, two guidance counselors and two principals attended training in October. Department of Health school nurse Betsy Jordan will also be a member of the core team.
The three-fold program includes as its primary components education, intervention and support.
Bailey emphasized that the purpose of the program is help, not punishment. Confidentiality will be insured for all students, he added.

Faculty, parents, students and other employees may refer a student to core team for evaluation. Information, such as grades, attendance and behavior will be used to evaluate a student's possible need for counseling and intervention.
The core team will then determine what type of intervention will be best for the student.
Bailey said that continued support is important after a student successfully completes intervention. The core team will continue to monitor a student's progress.
The district also will sponsor a "Natural Helpers" camp for student helpers to train students to assist their troubled peers. Students are often more comfortable talking to peers than to adults, Bailey said.

The Twin Falls Lions Club has donated $500 for the training.
The Impact Program has been funded by monies received through a state drug and alcohol grant.
The elementary school, which already has a drug and alcohol abuse program, will not be a part of the Impact Program right away.
In other matters, Superintendent Richard Bauscher reported on the progress of the Citizens Ad Hoc Advisory Committee, created to examine School Board's proposal to construct a new middle school.

The committee has toured the Perrine Elementary School in Twin Falls and all of the Kimberly facilities.
The committee plans to meet twice in January and provide the board with a written report in February on costs associated with the financing of the land purchased by the district for the new school. It will also discuss the expected increases in enrollment of the school district.
Driver education classes are scheduled to resume Feb. 9. Classes have been delayed due to the illness of the instructor. Twenty-eight students are scheduled to continue the class. Four additional classes previously scheduled, but delayed, will be this spring. A summer class is also scheduled.

The School Board approved buying a used 1985 30-passenger school bus for $11,335. The bus was scheduled to be picked up in Innet last Friday.
During the scheduled 17-day Christmas vacation, Kimberly administrative offices will be open from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Dec. 28 and 29.

Depositors may receive some of lost savings

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Depositors in five failed thrift institutions may get some of their lost savings back before Christmas as officials begin carrying out the $103 million settlement with the state next week.
The first distribution, to be mailed next week, will be financed by the state's $29 million cash portion of settlement of a class-action lawsuit filed by thousands of thrift depositors who lost their savings in the collapse of five thrift and loans.
"Everything is on schedule so far as we are concerned. We will be preparing the checks over the weekend and they will be mailed out the 21st (Wednesday)," Dallas Bradford, managing partner of the Salt Lake office of Arthur Andersen & Co., which is handling the settlement distribution, said Friday.

He said the checks can't be mailed until depositors receive the state's money — $19 million from the state's liability insurance carrier, California Union Insurance Co., and $10 million appropriated by the Legislature — due Wednesday.
The remainder of the $103 million comes from a $15 million state loan, about $17 million in proceeds from liquidating thrift assets and $42 million in liquidation proceeds has already been returned to depositors.
From the settlement, depositors hope to receive about 98 percent of the money they had on deposit when state regulators shut down the institutions and froze accounts on July 31, 1986. Attorneys fees, totaling $5.8 million, and other expenses relating to the court battle must be paid by depositors.
With legal fees subtracted, next week's distribution should bring the total recovery to about 74 percent for all 15,000 depositors, said Shelby Richard, spokeswoman for DOIT, a group organized by 15,000 thrift depositors.

"She said the first checks will go toward reimbursing depositors who contributed a total of $300,000 to DOIT's legal fund, while the rest of the initial settlement distribution will go toward depositor accounts."

Ex-secretary claims sexual harassment

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A former secretary in the Davis County Health Department has filed a $1 million sexual harassment suit against Director Enrico A. Leopardi, the county and the county personnel director.

Julie Vicknair alleges in the suit that she was subjected to "unwelcome verbal and physical conduct of a sexual nature" from the director after becoming his executive secretary in October 1987.
"The suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Salt Lake City."
Dr. Leopardi was not at his residence and could not be reached for comment on Saturday.
Ms. Vicknair alleges Dr. Leopardi committed "sexual advances ... unwanted touching of clothing he wore which would result in a more appealing image of a sexual nature."
She also claims she was ordered to go into defendant Leopardi's clothes pockets to retrieve items while he was wearing the clothes.
The plaintiff claims Personnel Director G. Steven Baker retaliated against her for "making issue of the sexual harassment." The suit charges Ms. Vicknair was transferred into a job for which she was expected to do non-paid Saturday work.

Officials charge subcontractor for kickbacks

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A Morton Thiokol subcontractor has been charged with paying kickbacks to a former company buyer who pleaded guilty last January to accepting bribes.
The charges, filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court for Utah, name James Albert Bell and his employer, Bevo Supply Co., of Albuquerque, N.M.
Bell and his company are alleged to have paid kickbacks to former Morton Thiokol purchaser John E. Ward in 1985 in exchange for contracts with the aerospace and defense contractor.
"In January, Ward pleaded guilty to one count each of mail fraud, filing a false tax return and receiving kickbacks in exchange for dismissal of 27 related charges."
He was one of eight individuals and subcontractors indicted in a kickback scheme operated by Ward when he was a procurement officer for Morton Thiokol.
There was no indictment against the Morton Thiokol itself.

Nuclear waste builds up as N. Mexico plant delayed

Los Angeles Times

At the Idaho border, uniformed troopers turn back shipments of nuclear waste from defense plants around the United States.
With 120,000 barrels of radioactive refuse already stacked in the Idaho desert, Gov. Cecil Andrus figures his state has done its patriotic duty.

"I'm not in the garbage business anymore," he declares.
At the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant in Colorado, where much of the unwanted plutonium-contaminated trash is generated, seven armored railroad cars filled with the low-level to intermediate-level solid waste wait for a destination. It has been more than a month since Idaho issued its moratorium, and Colorado Gov. Roy Romer has vowed that he will shut Rocky Flats down before he lets it become a de facto dump just 16 miles from downtown Denver.

The billion-dollar solution to this stalemate lies half a mile beneath the hostile desert of southeastern New Mexico, where caverns are being mined into ancient rock salt beds to form what is supposed to be the nation's first permanent nuclear dump.

The Department of Energy hopes the salt caverns being created at the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, which is known by its initials, WIPP, will safely entomb the drums of contaminated rags, tools, gloves, papers and other solid transuranic trash for at least 10,000 years.

Transuranic or TRU waste is any material contaminated by man-made radioactive elements, such as plutonium, having atomic numbers greater than uranium. Rocky Flats generates 65 percent-70 percent of such waste in the United States.

If WIPP becomes operational, it should take 25 years to fill the repository's 56 rooms to capacity with 5 million cubic feet of waste in 330,000 barrels. The caverns would be back-filled with the mined salt, which eventually would encase the waste and form a tomb for it. Scientists say that the rock-hard salt is the legacy of an ancient sea that evaporated some 220 million years ago.

But the New Mexico pilot plants scheduled Oct. 1 opening has been postponed by bureaucratic and legislative hurdles as well as by environmental and health concerns. Now the plant will not open until at least mid-June, and where to store the mounting waste until then is an unanswered question.

Temporary dumps, such as the one at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory near Idaho Falls, are rehelling against taking more waste, and the Department of Energy readily admits that it has no long-term alternative should WIPP eventually fail.

The New Mexico facility still faces a number of obstacles.
First, it must prove that brine seeping into the salt repositories will not harm the double-walled, steel 55-gallon barrels holding the waste when it is buried. Questions also have been raised about possible leaks from aquifers, both above and below the site, environmentalists worry that such underground water could create a radioactive slurry when mixed with the salt, rock and entrapped waste, posing a potential threat to local water supplies.

WIPP officials dispute such suggestions, pointing out that the salt beds are so dry that miners evaporating the repository must sprinkle water in the tunnels to keep the dust down. No standing water or dampness is evident inside the 11 miles of tunnels and rooms excavated to date.
The plant, which will extend for 25 to 39 miles underground when finished, must also:

- Meet health and safety standards for a permanent repository.

The Environmental Protection Agency is still drafting these guidelines.
—Receive Congressional approval to withdraw 10,000 acres of federal land surrounding the site from public use.

—Obtain certification from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission of the containers that will be used to ship the barrels of waste across the United States.
—Develop a plan of operation that includes detailed proposals for any experiments WIPP wants to conduct on transuranic wastes.

They really haven't developed a plan that would demonstrate what the world do if there was a problem where they would put the waste, how much would be stored elsewhere," said Keith Folte, an associate director at the federal government's General Accounting Office.

The General Accounting Office in September that the WIPP was not ready to become operational. The Department of Energy agreed that it could not yet prove that the plant was safe.
"I wish we could tell people we guarantee this 100 percent. But, we can't. Right now it's 100 percent. Not even the air we breathe," said Derek Khuris, the WIPP spokesman for Westinghouse, the chief contractor for the project.

EAR CANKER IN DOG

QUESTION: How do you know when your dog has ear canker? Can it be serious?

ANSWER: Canker of the ears is often serious if not treated promptly. It can be caused by ear mites, wax accumulation, dirt, eczema and even by a generally weakened condition. It can be suspected when your dog constantly scratches at his ears, shakes his head or rubs it on the floor. One telltale sign is an inflammation inside the cup or base of the ear leading down into the canal where pus of brownish color can be seen.
Sever canker is a risk for the veterinarian. Ear mites so tiny that they cannot be seen by the naked eye can cause deafness if not removed before the inner ear becomes involved.

Radon is dangerous, yet easy to deal with

PAID ADVERTISEMENT

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission are concerned about the increased risk of developing lung cancer faced by persons exposed to above-average levels of radon in their homes.

"It's important for the public to put the risks of radon gas in perspective. While people should be concerned about the health risks of radon, there's no reason to panic because most problems are solved through simple and economical methods," said William D. North, executive vice president of the National Association for Radon, in a press release.

A recent report by the federal government warned that household contamination by cancer-causing radon gas is dramatically more pervasive than previously believed. It urged property owners nationwide to test their homes and apartments for the radioactive gas. The colorless, odorless gas is produced by the decay of uranium found in the soil. The EPA has estimated that radon inhalation could account for 20,000 of the nation's 130,000 annual lung cancer deaths.

It is also estimated that an additional 100 to 1,500 lung cancer deaths per year (approximately) are caused by inhaling radon emitted by household water.

About 10,000 calls were logged at the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, and radon-testing companies reported a boom in inquiries a week after the report that one in four of the state's 2.2 million homes may have dangerous levels of radon gas.

Panel OKs 'let it burn' policy; conservation groups pleased

CASPER, Wyo. (AP) — Conservation groups are happy with the report from a federal fire policy review panel, because the group recommended the National Park Service keep its "let it burn" policy intact.

The report called for a temporary moratorium on the natural burn policy, but said the controversial edict should go back into effect by next fire season.

Ed Lewis, executive director of the Greater Yellowstone Coalition, said he was pleased the panel apparently reached "the right conclusion" about the natural burn policy.

"What we'll see are changes in how that policy is implemented, what thresholds apply to begin suppressing fires, better understanding and coordination amongst the agencies," Lewis said.

"Uncertainties about the 'let it burn' policy complicated firefighting and confused the public last summer, the report released last week said.

The policy allows fires caused by lightning or set by land managers, to burn in parks or wilderness areas under certain conditions, but if those conditions are not present the fire is extinguished.

Lewis said he approves of the report's call for greater coordination among land managers, because that coordination is needed especially in the Yellowstone ecosystem.

Len Carlman of the Jackson Hole Alliance for Responsible Planning also said he is happy with the report.

"The basic policy is to let fire play its historic role in forest and park lands," Carlman said. "In my opinion that's no different from saying rain ... and wind ought to play their historic roles. It's just another force of nature."

But Bill Schilling, executive director of the Wyoming Heritage Society, dismissed the panel's effort as a report designed to protect government employees.

"If the private sector had been operating the park, heads would have rolled," he said. "In the public sector that does not happen... Government is great at stepping in after a natural disaster has occurred — earthquake, flood, fire — they create their bureaucracies, hire their people, have their training. Where they're weak is in advance planning."

Shilling also said the report limits itself to problems associated with the fires and did not address the cause — extensive stands of aged and diseased lodgepole pines and accumulated deadfall.

"What that tells me is we need to be thinking about more than the let-burn policy. We would support prescribed burns ... at times of the year they would not take off ... or affect the tourist season," he said.

George Reynolds of Riverton, the president of the Wind River Multiple Use Advocates, agreed that more aggressive timbering should be considered as a fuel management tool.

flocked tree in the living room and miniature evergreens in the bathroom and kitchen.

Luminaries light the path to the artistically decorated house where relaxed, gracious hosts greet guests attired in holiday silks and velvets.

Candles and wreaths create magical settings, while baskets of fruit and fresh holly add a natural touch. The dining room table offers visual as well as culinary delights as a candelabra casts flickering light over delicately shaped pastries with impressive sounding foreign names.

While the above describes a fantasy party that Robin Leach might gush over on "The Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," it also mirrors the generous hospitality that can be found this time of year throughout the Magic Valley.

Many would argue that Twin Falls' social life hardly competes with the glitzy glamour of the rich and famous, but we thought you would enjoy reading about a few local parties. And while we were at it, we thought we might also bring you a glimpse of some of the finery worn at the Festival of Trees opening night party.

HOUSE BECOMES A HOME

Jim and Jan Beale's annual Christmas open house was special this year because they say it turned their new house near the Jerome golf course into a home.

Eric and Carol Hovey played host for the event. The two women started baking at Thanksgiving, creating a myriad assortment of pastries, many of them traditional Norwegian pastries such as krumkake, leise, sandkake and kulachi, where pastry is folded over jam or jelly.

One of the prettiest among the wonderland of delicacies on Jan's holiday table were the Norwegian heart-shaped stacked cookies topped with ribbons.

Her bright red lacquered candleholders, which belonged to her mother, flanked a centerpiece of fruit cake that was turned upside down, drizzled with white frosting and sprinkled with green colored sugar to resemble a mountain covered with evergreens.

Guests had difficulty deciding upon the many varieties of fruit breads, bars and candies, including kahulus fondant balls and intricately shaped mints.

For their first Christmas in their new home, the Beales put up several Christmas trees, including a white

A CHRISTMAS GOOSE
A goose made of bent willows with potpourri of apples and other fruit, was the distinctive centerpiece made by Sharon Parks for her Christmas party last weekend.

Her refreshments included poached salmon, hot clam and a variety of vegetable dips. Guests also indulged in fruit bread served with cream cheese, apple and nuts spread and her petite cheese cakes.

Their holiday decor reflects the Christmas ornaments her husband, Rick, collects, such as little wooden figurines from Vienna and wooden nutcrackers from Austria.

Parks says she likes a natural Christmas, so she put out "fruit in baskets and used heather with pine boughs, plus lots of candles and fresh holly."

WHY THEY DO IT

While not everyone has the time nor the energy to give such lavish parties, fortunately for the rest of us, there are always those who do.

Like many hostesses, both Beale and Hovey like to hold a Christmas open house to fulfill, in masse, social obligations accumulated over the past year.

Other people look for occasions to show off their best linens, serving pieces and the Christmas china pieces they've been collecting.

Hostesses are probably too busy to care and it's little comfort to those who overindulge, but people have been combining friends and special food at this time of the year for centuries.

From the Druids in ancient Gaul celebrating the winter solstice to Victorian England's introduction of many of our now cherished Christmas customs, late December has been the season to socialize and eat.

DRESSED FOR THE CAUSE

Americans have become adept at converting this age-old need to brighten cold winter nights into social events for a good cause.

In Twin Falls, this purpose is well served by the gala Festival of Trees' opening night party to benefit the Magic Valley Memorial Hospital Foundation.

Several hundred people gladly paid $10 for the opportunity to dress in their holiday best, eat fancy re-

Break that party silence with upbeat tunes

By MICHELLE COLE
Times-News writer

Every party experiences that awkward silence.

It could be just parties at my house, but I suspect many of you know what I'm talking about. Silence — dead silence — comes some time after all your guests have arrived, after everyone has commented on the punch in your eggnog — and some time just before your next-door neighbor yawns and says to all assembled: "It sure looks icy out there, better call it a night."

What can you do before the dudly silence is broken by the sounds of your guests rushing towards the door?

Put on some music.

But not just any music, according to several local boogie buffs. "You want something medium to up-tempo," says Tom Nelson, a disc jockey and music director at KLLX radio. Steer clear of most Christmas music, even during the yuletide season, Nelson advises. Lest some reader brand him a Scrooge, Nelson backtracks a bit. "Holiday songs are beautiful, but many are down-tempo. You want to choose something that's festive."

Nelson suggests that "Silent Night" is a great song, but played too many times, it's title just might come to describe your party. Instead, he says you could spin some albums by Steve Winwood, Kenny G, Phil Collins — even Michael Jackson, but only if you've taken a musical preference poll first. "People either love or hate Michael Jackson," Nelson says.

John Pohlman of Twin Falls allows his guests to choose their own tunes on his at-home jukebox. But Pohlman stacks the deck in accordance with his own love of 50's and 60's music. He says "Twist and Shout" — or just about anything by the Beatles — is guaranteed to get your party rolling.

Other Pohlman recommendations include "Rock and Roll is King" by the Electric Light Orchestra, "Rock This Town" by the Stray Cats and "We Built This City on Rock and Roll," by Jefferson Starship.

And, if the majority of your guests gag over Michael Jackson, don't even consider playing "Eat It" by "Weird" Al Yankovic. Pohlman says his guests and his family voted thumbs down on that parody of Jackson's comeback song.

If you don't own a jukebox, and you don't want to spend the evening worried about the next tune to choose, you might want to consult Richard and April Haines of Buhl. Owners of "Have Music, Will Travel," the Haines will custom-make your party tape.

Their clients select songs from a list provided by the Haines. Among the most popular choices is "Maggie Mae" by Rod Stewart.

I advise them to go two or three fast songs, then slow down for a couple of songs, then back to medium beat, then back to fast," Richard Haines says.

In the slow category, he recommends "Wishing Well," by Terrence Trent D'Arby. For a medium song you might want to choose "The Locomotion" by Little Eva.

"If your crowd is more country than rock, Richard Haines says "Come On In" by the Oak Ridge Boys is a favorite. For a country Christmas, he says Debbie Allen's "Rockin' Little Christmas" is popular, and so is "Santa Claus is Gonna Get You," by Ray Stevens.

Church members bring nativity to life

Members of the First Christian Church at the corner of Shoabone and Sixth Avenue North will again bring the Christmas message to passing motorists this year with a living nativity scene on their church lawn.

They will be at their posts under the plywood stable from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday through Christmas Eve. The church is located at the northwest corner of the Twin Falls City Park.

It's not too late to help the needy

By LORAYNE ORTON SMITH

TWIN FALLS — The two major agencies providing food baskets this holiday season are asking for more help from the community if all the needy families in Twin Falls are to have a merry Christmas.

Despite what she terms an "excellent response" to the list of needs published in the Times-News two weeks ago, Cyd Dillon and her "Santa's Helpers" volunteers face the prospect of providing food, clothing and toys for more than 250 families.

The Salvation Army plans to assist another 250 families, plus take up those who are beyond Santa's Helpers beyond resources, says Kathy Lagoda of the Twin Falls Salvation Army.

But to lighten the load and spread out the Christmas cheer, many individuals, churches and organizations still are needed to provide for one or more local families.

Call either the Salvation Army at 733-8720, or Dillon at the South Central Community Action Agency, 733-9351.

If you can afford to share with others less fortunate, but can't manage shopping and delivering the items, money can be used to provide meat for each basket, Dillon says.

Or just buy an extra can of food and place it in the food barrels in local supermarkets, sponsored by Working Partners and the Salvation Army. This is an ongoing project to provide food for the needy, says Karen Hosholt, area chairman.

And if you have only time to give, both Santa's Helpers and the Salvation Army will welcome your assistance in filling and delivering the baskets.

Volunteers also will be welcomed to serve as bell ringers in locations of their choice throughout Twin Falls this week, Lagoda says.

Santa's Helpers will be sorting food and toys for individual families next week. They will meet in the KMVT community room from 7 to 9 p.m. Monday and all day Tuesday and probably Wednesday. Many hands are needed to pack

At a party? Keep it superficial

NEW YORK — Cocktails-by-the-yard. That's what the holidays are all about. And there's three must-go parties all on the same night.

Q: What's a starlette to do?
A: Go to all.
"People appreciate it even if you stop by for 10 minutes," says Charlotte Ford, the empress of etiquette. If you're a tad nervous about this drink-and-run approach, ring up your host person in advance.

"It's nicer to mention, I'd love to come but I have three other things," explains Ford. It's also helpful if you're going to a boring but obligatory drinks party and want a great escape.

In any case, as Ford explains, "People are understanding this time of the year. They know it's not easy going place to live." Such are the trials of modern living.

As for conversation material, Ford has some sound advice. "Stick to neutral topics," she says. Cocktail chat tends to be the haute superficial don't waste the breath on saying something even remotely intelligent. It always gets lost in the rumble of clinking glasses and drunken good cheer.

Naturally neutral topics are: weather, water, winter and wine. Don't stray from the obvious.

With the proliferation of holiday entertaining comes the re-emergence of faux friends. They're the folks you see once a year at a mega-huge cocktail party and immediately want the annual report on your life. Faux Friends always feign a gushing desire to become better acquainted. The intensity of this de...sire rises with the number of champagne cocktails.

In Perspective James Revson

Faux Friends can be detected by these haute lame lines:

"So why don't we get together more often?"

"Let's get together after the holidays."

"It's been too long. Really."

"Why don't you call me ever?"

Along with Faux Friends, beware of Flash Friends. They always give themselves away in the first 10 seconds. They skip the superficialities of saying hello and deliver their pre-recorded message as quickly as possible.

It goes something like this: "We're off to (pick one): (a) Lyford Cay; (b) Mustique; (c) PB (as in Palm Beach); (d) The Island."

Flash Friends are out to impress. They're known to wear fur coats in steamy houses; strapless gowns to loft parties and bank balances and foreign decorations on their jacket pockets.

All Flash Friends announce to their Faux Friends that they: (a) Own a condo in Florida somewhere; (b) Have rented a villa with staff in The Islands; (c) Have chartered a yacht with crew in the BVI.

Flash Friends don't know the meaning of simple superficial conversation. They're always out to make points. The same goes for Serial Party People. They race from party to party, complaining about the number of events they simply must attend. They believe that every cocktail party is a royal command performance. Conversational gambits include gushing about the previous party and complaining about the next one on the list. "Can you believe he lives on West 34th Street?" they say incredulously. "As you can see, with the 10-minute rule, it's easy to knock-off three or four cocktail parties and make dinner."

Now, the rules of timing for a seated dinner are quite different from a large cocktail party or even a dinner buffet. Cocktails generally run for two hours so that a run-see can be achieved quite easily. Late guests at a buffet can usually blend in with the crowd. Don't try either at a seated dinner.

Say dinner is called for 8 p.m. The correct guest arrives at the latest 20 minutes after the appointed hour, says Empress Charlotte. "25 minutes is late," she explains.

On the receiving end, the hostess should be ready at 8 p.m. Guests that arrive on time are not wrong as some people in this town think.

"What are you doing here now?" a woman asked me when I arrived exactly at the requested time. She was racing about grabbing dishes, flowers and judging telephones. I sat quietly in the corner, trying to pretend that I was somewhere else. It didn't work. She asked me to help.

Then there's the black-tie benefit. Always call in advance to find out the timing of the evening. At the recent Costume Institute bash, drinks ran from 7:30 p.m. until dinner was served at 9 p.m. Even at the most gala gala, nobody wants to make small talk for 90 minutes, if only for the fact they won't have anything to say during dinner.

As Ford points out: "This is one time you can be really late." For large balls, she recommends arriving about 15 minutes before dinner. "I don't drink and to stand around for two hours going from room to room isn't fun," she says.

So time your arrival to your standing power and conversational abilities. If you know that you have a 10-minute chatter max, plan your night accordingly. Of course, there's no law against rehearsing a few good stories. And there's no rule against repeating the same story to a half-dozen people. Just remember not to waste a word. That's a cardinal sin. Smart dinner chatters wait for a slight lull, grab the dead air and regale their seat mates with a cleverism or two. Repeating someone else's story is common practice.

Poor Party Practice: Changing place cards. Yes, it looks so easy. Don't do it. The hostess always finds out and the result is always unpleasant.

Poor Party Practice: Calling hostess in advance to arrange Siberian seating for hated rivals and relatives. Sounds cheap and tawdry.

Good Party Practice: Say good-night, Gracie.

Tele-Tax, a recorded telephone tax information service, is again this year being provided by the Internal Revenue Service.

Taxpayers who have tax questions can call Tele-Tax year-round for information on a large variety of tax subjects such as changes in the law, filing requirements, itemized deductions, tax credits, dependents, and adjustments to income, according to the IRS.

The automated service also provides taxpayers with direct access to the status of their refunds. Taxpayers must allow for normal processing time before seeking refund information from IRS.

Push-button touch tone telephone users can listen to recorded tax information round-the-clock daily. During business hours, callers with rotary or pulse dial phones can also choose topics they wish to hear.

Details on how to use Tele-Tax are contained in IRS Publication 1163, the Tele-Tax brochure; in IRS Publication 810, "Guide to Free Tax Services," or in the tax forms package. Publications can be ordered by calling the IRS toll-free number, 1-800-424-3676.

Music

SueIn Buhidar, president of the Twin Falls Music Club, likes to play jazz at her parties. She says some of her favorites include music by flutist Jean Rampall and the Claude Bolling trio. She also likes records by Kenny G.

Although she's a classical music fan, Buhidar says she never puts on classical music while entertaining. Instead, Buhidar prefers "nice, light, romantic music," like the soundtrack to the movie "Somewhere In Time."

Trendy hosts are playing New Age music at their parties this year, says Janice Elam, manager of Musicland in the Magic Valley Mall.

Elam says just about any of the albums in the Windham Hill collection are appropriate. "You don't want your music to get too loud because people are talking," she says.

Another popular New Age tape is "Fresh Air" by Mannheim Steamroller. Finally, if you're like me, and you just don't think it's a Christmas party without Christmas music, Elam says "A Very Special Christmas Album," featuring the likes of John Cougar Mellencamp, U2 and Whitney Houston singing traditional holiday carols, is a good choice and a best-seller. Proceeds from the album go to the Special Olympics.

For more traditional music, Buhidar says the tapes issued every year by Hallmark are actually good holiday bets.

And if you're looking for the off-beat, you might want to try "Winter Wonderland," a musical collection compiled by Warner Records. The bright green and red albums—it's a two record set—include a strange combination of songs including Christmas rock, Christmas rap, Christmas comedy and the more mainstream Christmas carols. The album includes songs by the "Traveling Wilburys, Apollonia, Randy Travis and yes, even Pee-Wee Herman.

freshments and see who else would do the same.

The most stylish outfits, it appeared, seemed to be of silk or velour, although many guests came in working clothes.

Claire Gibbs, Kimberly, sported an attractive emerald green outfit of French silk with matching shoes and ermine muff with black tails. Her husband, Garland, told us to be sure to report that he wore a "cranberry pink" shirt.

What is Christmas without a red dress? That's Jean Boyd's rationale for her red silk gown with black trim. Bonita Hepworth's pink/salmon dress also was trimmed with black in the form of large black buttons.

Margaret Perkins' red silk dress had purple and black designs and a drop waist.

Cindy Ball wore a constyle cream chemise dress. While Pat Harder had an elegant paisley silk print with black velvet trim. Natalie Hoss' paisley print artistically combined turquoise and purple.

LEGGY SNOWFLAKES
Deborah Andrews created her own winter scene with cream satin two-piece dress, complete with white hose decorated with snowflakes.

Dressy black outfits also were much in evidence.

evening jacket over black silk pants, while Donna Wuthridge had an attractive black pants suit with white blouse.

Juanita Pinkston was in a black velvet suit and Barbara Rangen, Buhl, chose a black fox jacket over a black wool sheath dress. Pat Fisher, Kimberly, had a two-piece black and white outfit with black top.

Sue Summers was in a blue silk gown with ruffles and long sleeves. Her pearl necklace, she told us with a laugh, is definitely "in" now since that's what Barbara Bush always wears.

Donna Brizee was helping Bethel 56 members serve refreshments, but her silk variegated figured blouse and even her red

TASTE OF GOLD
Among the elegant desserts provided by Dallas and DeeAnn Jenks, owners of the Double Decker Deli and European Dessert Shoppe in Twin Falls, were their chocolate mousse in gold cups.

These tasty dainties, of white chocolate holding chocolate mousse and dipped in 24 karat gold, are one of their most popular holiday party items, Dee Ann Jenks says.

She has read that gold is supposed to be good for the digestion and let's face it — gold's the ultimate party food!

Many take children's games too seriously

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — There has been much said about the violent themes of children's games.

But area psychologists and counselors point out that toys and games, like other fun things, shouldn't be taken too seriously.

Jack Oakwright, licensed clinical psychologist who practices in Sandpoint and Coeur d'Alene, likens the video game complaints to those a few years ago about the fantasy game Dungeons and Dragons.

"My youngest son played D and D. I played it with him a few times," said Oakwright, describing the game as basically innocuous. "But it's been corrupted by a few children with other pathologies. Violent games, toys and other activities are an expression of aggression, rather than a cause, Oakwright said.

Oakwright's son, incidentally, is apparently undamaged by D and D. An avid arcade video game player, he is now a third-year government student who recently returned from study in India.

Many video games actually help youngsters develop their brains and motor skills, Oakwright added.

Sometimes he even uses a computer game to help children with learning disabilities. "It's a difficult balance," adds Christina Zampich, Coeur d'Alene psychologist who works with children and adults.

"Kids need an outlet for aggressive feelings, and outlet for the energy that builds up. Violent play — I don't mean one kid acting aggressively toward another kid — needs to be expressed." If a child does begin acting aggressively or is solely engaged in aggressive kinds of pursuits, Zampich said, then problems may be developing. But if that type of activity is balanced with more benign play, parents can put the aggression in proper perspective.

Pamela Olson of Coeur d'Alene, who works with clients of all ages, has less concern about stories in which the hero fights evil forces than with those containing violent themes with no meaning or cause. She cites a book by renowned child psychoanalyst Bruno Bettelheim, "The Uses of Enchantment."

It outlines the child's need for a fantasy world where good guys are always good and the bad guys are truly bad. "If they can get a sense of an all-bad witch and an all-good princess, they can integrate that later on," Olson said.

Olsen, in her 20 years of counseling, used to work primarily with children. She still employs "play therapy" with young clients, using games, dolls and other devices in which children can transfer their own feelings and emotions to the toys they are playing with.

"They get out what they are feeling." For parents and other surrogate Santas, the local professionals have a few suggestions:

— Teaching toys: Zampich said not all the so-called educational toys are necessarily educational, and parents should not feel those toys are prerequisite for well-adjusted children. The best toys and games, she said, involve some type of social interaction, allow time for independent fantasy activity or help them improve mechanical skills.

— Board games: "You can learn amazing things about a kid by playing a board game with them," Olson said. "Many parents don't realize that their kids are ready for board games as early as 4 years old."

Give the man in your life a gift that makes scents

By the Baltimore Sun

So, he already has more ties than he needs and it is hard to guess his crazy. But his medicine cabinet has not been quite so bare lately and he has been experimenting with grooming products, so perhaps a gift of a special new cream, or face mask, or even a bottle of cologne might be rather timely?

If only it were as simple as it sounds, right? Women often have a favorite fragrance or brand of cosmetics propped up in the bathroom, but not too many guys know whether they prefer Clinique to Paco Rabanne. There are hundreds of colognes out there now, and every day new grooming lines are introduced, so finding the perfect gift for him can be quite confusing.

The choices for cologne include gimmicky possibilities ranging from Gemmicki Musk (in which a rubber worm is floating) to celebrity fragrances such as Herb Alpert's Listen and the long-established favorites such as Old Spice by Shulton.

Old Spice has been a best seller for what seems like an eternity with its classic, fresh scent. "A lot of men who are still conservative fragrance wearers find Old Spice very acceptable," says Annette Green, executive director of the Fragrance Foundation in New York.

Traveling fragrance expert Linda Fratantonio, a consultant to such fragrance houses as Revlon and Este Lauder, says, "Women give men the gift of fragrance because it's romantic. The sense of smell is controlled by the same part of the brain that controls the memory. Many scents are given as gifts because it's nice to have lingering memories."

Men's colognes fall into groups similar to those in women's colognes. For instance, there are those with an Oriental scent such as Cerruti Pour Homme, Krizia Uomo, Lagerfeld and Jovan Musk for men.

Choices in the woody category include Quorum, Kouros, Antaeus Pour Homme and English Leather.

Scents in the citrus range include Eau de Sauvage, Gucci Pour Homme, Chanel for Men and Aramis 900.

If a man is interested in prolonging the fragrance, Ms. Fratantonio suggests what the industry calls "layering." For example, a man might try Calvin Klein's Obsession Body Bath Shower Gel, followed by the body talc, deodorant and then the cologne. "He can splash on the scent when he's dressing in the morning and apply again to the pulse points — the neck and the wrists — in the evening to make the scent last for hours," she says.

If you are a spouse or significant other, you might very well give a scent that you prefer, but if you don't want to impose your taste, Ms. Fratantonio recommends the "spicy, crisp fragrance of Oscar de la Renta Pour Lui for the executive man and Perry Ellis for the man on the edge of fashion."

Her

Continued from Page C1 and watch his eyes light up. Not that I'm good around the house. In fact, I don't do a lick of work around the house. I couldn't hang a new chandelier if my life depended on it. But good tools are like guns and fine cameras. They feel great in your hands even if you don't know how to use them.

That settled, it's curious just how difficult it can be even figuring out what your mate desires, particularly when she has taste and you don't. Even now, after almost six years of marriage, I only have the vaguest sense of my wife's taste in clothes.

She could make it easy and dress like those models in the Lands End catalog or she could make that style of dress. Instead, she has chosen to dress in her own eclectic "tailored professional" style that I have yet to find in any catalog or department store.

Fun to be mixing the blouses, the dresses and jewelry in a way that totally baffles me. Don't get me wrong. It looks great. It's just that I have no earthly idea how to buy for it.

You just can't run in a store and say, "Hey, how about something in your Eclectic Tailored Professional line?" You do that and the first thing you know they'll be asking you penetrating questions like: "Well, what does she like to wear?"

And that's the thing that is so maddening: if I can't figure out her tastes, what is there to save me from myself?

Consider some of my transgressions: I once bought her a red-and-black knit-type outfit last seen at the Kappa Delta sorority house at the University of Georgia. Boy, was that a big hit. It was two years before I had the nerve to buy her clothes again.

And then there was the perfectly fine (and perfectly ugly) brown pleated dress that was promptly exchanged for a perfectly stylish unpleated dress of a different color.

But I am making progress. Black, for example, seems to be a key. I think I'm onto something with black. Really.

And silver jewelry. You know the type. Big silver earrings and brooches made in Mexico, set off with black onyx orbs and long, dangling streaks of silver. Another big hit.

Cashmere sweaters, preferably black, also seem safe.

Stray away from the basic black and silver, and watch out. It's a mine field out there.

So what's happened? My wife has received absolutely nothing from me in the past two years that has not been silver or black. There were the silver earrings and silver Mexican brooch, the black sweater, the black silk walking shorts and the white silk blouse (it goes with the black shorts).

I think she likes these things. At least, when she opened the presents she gave me a warm hug and a nice smile. Or maybe she's been talking to my mother. Maybe she's filling up the closets.

Him

Continued from Page C1 mas present for my husband would be. For example, if money were no object, I'd love to give him something like a Giorgio Armani suit, which would look fabulous on him.

But if he were to unwrap such a present from me on Christmas Day, Richard would probably say something like: "What is this? An Italian suit? You want me to look like those guys with those stupid tapered shirts and those skinny ties?"

Never mind that the suit did not include a shirt or a tie, that is what he would say. He makes these associations all the time. Like when he sees some particularly awful-looking man on the street, or in some store, usually one who is probably color-blind or otherwise aesthetically impaired, he'll turn to me and say, "See, that's how you want me to look."

And this is from a man who still wears, almost every day, the same style of shoe — they're suede, with crepe soles, sort of like desert boots — that he wore in high school.

When you find something good, you stick with it" is what he says in reference to the shoes.

All right, so back to Spain. I search, for days on end, for the perfect gift. I think the clue that my husband gave me beforehand, when I asked what he would like for Christmas, was something like, "a nice button-down shirt."

But, while some of you, probably men, will say, "Why not just buy him a button-down shirt?" maybe others among you can realize that such is not possible.

What kind of a surprise is getting a button-down shirt? What kind of imagination does that show? How much caring goes into picking out a button-down shirt?

So instead, I bought my husband a suede jacket. It was expensive, very supple and roomy, and, I thought, just right for him. It was stylish, without being trendy. My husband hates trendy, but sometimes he can be tricked into stylish.

On Christmas Day, Richard unwrapped the jacket, slightly turned up the corners of his mouth, and said something like, "Oh, isn't this nice?" I think he also gave me a small kiss.

I was wise, however. I told him he could take it back.

"Oh, no! Why would I want to take it back?" he said. "Remember, we were newlyweds at the time."

I thought it was about a year ago when I bought that that suede jacket again. He had never worn it, and still hasn't, not even when he hasn't lathered and is doing some household chores.

So I've learned. No more stylish apparel, and no button-down shirts, either. I still cling to some principles.

Last year, I got him a larger-than-life color TV. He loved it. The year before, I got him a small color TV. He thought it was neat.

And this year, having exhausted the TV option, I may branch out into an outdoor barbecue or a power chair. Durable and never out of style, these may be the ticket.

Of course, had I known about this genetic impediment-thing when I got married, I could have saved a lot of money in unwanted Christmas presents.

But I suppose such knowledge takes time to accumulate. My mother, who has been married to my father for 35 years, called the other day to report that for the first time in memory, she had given my father a Christmas present that he loves.

She gave it to him early, so that in case he didn't like it, she could return it in time to buy something else. But she need not have worried. She bought him a vacuum cleaner, on sale, with all sorts of attachments.

"And it has a light on it," my mother said. "You know how your father loves lights."

Redecorate bedroom to end nightmare

DEAR ABBY: My husband had an affair with a young woman last month. It lasted for eight months and ended a year ago. He admitted having brought her to our home while my children and I were at church. Abby, he even used our bedroom!

Abigail Van Buren Dear Abby

I went for counseling. My husband did not. Just when I think I'm over it, I'll be making our bed and I fall apart. It's so unbearable that I usually have to leave the room. I feel as though our bedroom has been desecrated.

Abby, please tell your readers that if they are ever going to do anything like this, to please have the decency to do it someplace other than their own beds.

Thank you for being there for those who need you. I am planning to get more counseling when I can afford it. Right now you are all I have.

question, switch bedrooms with your children. If that's not possible, sell your bedroom set and buy another one that's totally different, and re-decorate your bedroom — new curtains, new bedspread and a different color scheme. Giving the room a different "look" will give you an entirely different feeling when you walk into your bedroom.

And, please try to forget. Don't go through life looking in a rearview mirror. You can't undo the past, so don't dwell on it. Chin up, my friend, and start redecorating!

DEAR HEARTSICK: It will be much easier to forget the pain of your husband's affair if you change your surroundings. If possible, move to another house. If that's out of the

DEAR ABBY: My husband suggested I write to Dear Abby about this. Our newlywed son and daughter-in-law live only a few miles from us, but they don't come over very often.

The problem is that when they do, my daughter-in-law spends the entire time reading. (She brings magazines along for that purpose, and seldom speaks to us.)

I have asked my son about it, and he said, "Sometimes she's moody." Abby, this happens every time she comes over here. Are we being over-sensitive to resent it? Or should this girl have been taught better manners? I think she's inexcusably rude. — NO TOWN, PLEASE

DEAR NO TOWN: Your daughter-in-law may not be rude at all — she could be very shy and insecure. Instead of judging her, try reaching out to include her so that she will feel more comfortable and more a part of the family. A little effort on your part will go a long way toward opening the door to better communication.

DEAR ABBY: Why all the fuss about women wearing men's clothing, and vice versa? I am happily married to a big, burly, good-looking construction worker. We have slept together for years — both wearing my nighties!

Bill (not his real name) likes to wear my nylon panties under his work clothes. He says they feel soft next to his skin, and he likes that feeling.

Abby, there is only one problem: If I gain five more pounds, Bill will look better in my panties than I do. — COZY IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR COZY: Don't worry. If you gain five pounds, you can always wear Bill's pajamas.

Graveyard shift causes high stress on workers

By Psychology Today

For police officers on the graveyard shift in Philadelphia, each day can be a blur of confusion, fatigue and malaise. The stress builds up over time, producing high rates of alcohol and sleeping pill use, accidents and estrangement in families.

The problem is in the schedule, not the job, says neuroscientist Charles Czeisler of Harvard Medical School. According to Czeisler, the typical schedule, which rotates officers through graveyard, evening and day shifts, fails to accommodate the body's natural circadian rhythm — which controls individual sleep/wake cycles.

Czeisler redesigned the schedule of a group of Philadelphia police officers and detectives. The new schedule made three major changes: First, workers changed shifts every 18 days rather than every 8 days, allowing more time to adjust to the change.

Second, the rotation shifted forward — from day, to evening, to graveyard, — rather than backward as before. Since the typical circadian clock runs on about a 26-hour day, the natural tendency is to shift to a later hour, shifting to an earlier hour makes readjustment more difficult.

Third, Czeisler reduced the number of consecutive days worked from six to four to allow officers to catch up on lost sleep, thereby avoiding the cumulative sleep deprivation night-shift workers often experience.

After 11 months on the new schedule, officers reported significant declines in sleep problems, sleepiness on the job and fatigue and an increase in alertness.

On-the-job automobile accidents fell by 40 percent, sleeping pill and alcohol usage were dropped 90 percent and sick time declined 23 percent.

Family satisfaction with the new schedule increased fivefold. Although the quantity of time spent with families remained about the same, the quality improved. Officers said they felt more rested, more energetic and less irritable.

Other shift workers, including those in the energy and transportation industries, experience similar adverse effects of sleep deprivation, Czeisler says. They function in an impaired state, he adds, and thus may endanger public safety.

NEUROMA

A neuroma occurs most commonly between the third and fourth toes, and is caused by a pinching of the nerve between the metatarsals, causing inflammation. As this irritation continues, the nerve gets larger, causing sharp pain, cramping and burning. The symptoms may move into the web space or toward the tips of the toes. Shoes that are too tight will aggravate the condition. The condition is often related to imbalance in walking. This may necessitate surgical removal.

Neuromas may also occur between any of the other toes of the foot, or on the inner aspect of the heel.

TREATMENT

Your doctor may choose the following conservative measures before considering surgery:

1. Foot Exercises
2. Padding & Strapping
3. Physical Therapy

If the conservative approach with padding and strapping proves to be successful, your doctor may utilize orthotics.

If none of the above conservative methods satisfactorily relieve pain, a surgical procedure is indicated.

An incision is made over the affected area. The enlargement of the nerve is located, and the portion of the nerve is removed. This procedure is performed in the office of the hospital, depending upon the severity of the condition and the choice of the doctor and of the patient.

Sri Lankan rebels hurt 3 in bombings

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Sinhalese militants, accused of killing more than 430 people in the past month, set fire to a bus Saturday and threw a firebomb at a shop in attempts to spread terror two days before presidential elections, police and witnesses said.

Three people were injured in the bomb attack, witnesses said on condition of anonymity.

Also Saturday, security forces shot and killed a suspected Sinhalese radical and the bodies of four other suspected radicals were found in the last 24 hours, officials said.

There was no word on who killed the four.

No one was hurt in the bus fire in the center of Colombo, but the flames engulfed three nearby shops, a police official said. He also spoke on condition of anonymity.

Witnesses said a gang of militants entered the parked bus, sprinkled gasoline and set it on fire.

Sinhalese militants also hurled a firebomb at a shop opposite the city's main train station, other witnesses said. At least three people were injured in the attack, they said.

The attacks prompted authorities to move up a night curfew on the island by one hour. The curfew now is to start at 8 p.m. Saturday and end at 5 a.m. Sunday.

Officials say Sinhalese militants have killed more than 430 people since Nov. 16 in an attempt to disrupt Monday's balloting.

Cabinet minister Vincent Perera told Parliament that 405 people were killed by the militants between Nov. 16 and Thursday in Sinhalese-dominated central and southern Sri Lanka. The 168-member Parliament then voted 65-2 to extend emergency laws in effect since 1983.

At least 26 people were killed by the militants since Thursday, military officials said on condition of anonymity.

The killings are a part of a campaign of violence aimed at disrupting presidential elections scheduled for Monday. The People's Liberation Front, the main militant Sinhalese group, has called for a boycott of the polls, claiming they will not be conducted fairly.

The group, which has called for the dismissal of the government and organized a series of crippling strikes, says the government gave too many concessions in a July 1987 peace accord aimed at ending the 6-year-old insurrection by guerrillas.

Extremists have killed members of the incumbent party, as well as supporters of the other two major candidates, former Prime Minister Sirimavo Bandaranaike of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party and Ossie Aboeygoonesekera of the United Socialist Alliance.

No one knows for sure how many people have disappeared or been killed for suspected links with the People's Liberation Front. But conversations with villagers indicate scores have died.

Military officials in Colombo said Friday that the bodies of eight suspected front members had been found in the last 24 hours in the Sinhalese heartland. They blamed the killings on the People's Revolutionary Red Army, a group unheard of a few weeks ago.

Handicapped refugees compete in competition

KHAO-I-DANG, Thailand (AP) — Cambodian refugees who lost their limbs in a decade of war against Vietnam competed in a special athletic competition on Saturday, pushing themselves to the limit on crutches and wheelchairs.

A young man with a wooden right leg jogged into a soccer field with a torch to inaugurate the event at this refugee camp, where 55 disabled veterans competed in 11 sports. Most are the victims of landmines strewn over vast areas of embattled Cambodia.

Several thousand refugees watched the games, standing or sitting in the dirt of this camp of bamboo and thatch-roof huts at the base of a mountain in the eastern province of Prachinburi.

For the second straight year, Suk Sam, 22, won the dash on crutches, leaving his closest competitor far behind on the dirt-swept field. The guerrilla soldier lost his leg in 1986, when a mine exploded as he was fighting Vietnamese troops that invaded Cambodia in 1978.

"Sports keep you healthy, and I participated for the honor of my camp," said the mild-mannered young man. "I felt very sorry about losing my leg, but I realized that among other people lost their limbs too, and I was doing my duty to my country."

Suk Sam said that after he lost his leg, fighting prevented him from being evacuated from the front for six months.

Chang Pan, 29, who won the wheelchair race, lost both legs to a landmine in a fierce 1982 battle for Pnom Malai, opposite the central Thai border.

"I thought I would be No. 1 in a wheelchair, and I wanted to find out if I would succeed," said Chang Pan.

Prizes for the winners included scarves, T-shirts, books, sweets and other items donated by foreign relief workers.

The fourth annual competition was organized by Operation Handicap International, the French-based agency that sponsors rehabilitation services for thousands of handicapped refugee in camps along the Thai-Cambodian border.

The athletes competing Saturday were brought to Khao-I-Dang from other U.N.-aided refugee camps.

Khao-I-Dang is neutral, but the other camps are controlled by Cambodian guerrillas, including the communist Khmer Rouge, the non-communist Khmer People's National Liberation Front and the forces of Cambodia's former leader, Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

The Khmer Rouge allowed athletes to leave only its Site 8 camp, which is U.N.-sponsored. Aid officials say the Khmer Rouge, who killed hundreds of thousands when they led Cambodia in 1975-78, are holding refugees as virtual captives in their three other camps.

Vietnam, which has promised to withdraw its 120,000 troops by 1990, is supporting the Cambodian government against the Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge and other rebels.

"(The guerrillas) are all separated for political reasons, but some of the refugees don't care about these differences," said Myriam Houtart, a Belgian medical coordinator for Operation Handicap.

After curfew lifts, talk centers on bodies

TANGALLE, Sri Lanka (AP) — Every morning, when people return to the streets of this town after a dusk-to-dawn curfew, the talk is of bodies: how many were found, whether the victims' names are known, how they died.

Like the rest of the population of this tropical island once known as an ideal of democracy, Tangalle's residents are to vote Monday for a new president. Although voting is only hours away, they speak not of ballots but of bullets, charred bodies and people who disappear in the night.

"Have you seen the body at Katuwanna village?" asked Gamin Dissanayake. "It is almost burnt beyond recognition."

Bodies of young Sinhalese men have been found almost every day for the last two weeks, according to the people of Tangalle and other towns along the south coast.

Anula Gamage, a 26-year-old mother of three in Tangalle, often slips out of her house at night to see whether more bodies have been dumped the roadside — and whether her husband is among the victims. She said he was taken away on Nov. 12 by armed men in civilian clothing.

Villagers blame government troops for the killings. They accuse the troops of rounding up people suspected of belonging to the People's Liberation Front, a Sinhalese radical group that has vowed to disrupt the elections and kill anyone who supports a government peace plan for ending a 5-year-old insurrection by members of the Tamil minority.

Military officials deny the allegations. They say the killings are spontaneous civilian retaliations against the front, which the government blames for the deaths of more than 600 people since the peace accord was signed July 29, 1987.

The front has accused President Junius R. Jayewardene of selling out his own Sinhalese community, which comprises 75 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people, in attempts to make peace with the Tamils, who account for 18 percent of the population.

Jayewardene, barred by the constitution from seeking a third term, has fielded his prime minister, Ransinghe Premadasa, to represent his United National Party.

Extremists have killed members of the incumbent party, as well as supporters of the other two major candidates, former Prime Minister Sirimavo Bandaranaike of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party and Ossie Aboeygoonesekera of the United Socialist Alliance.

No one knows for sure how many people have disappeared or been killed for suspected links with the People's Liberation Front. But conversations with villagers indicate scores have died.

11 sentenced for calling Nigeria strike

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — A government tribunal has sentenced 11 officials to life imprisonment for calling a strike by workers at the national electricity utility that caused a four-day nationwide power outage.

The tribunal sentenced the men Friday in the northern city of Kaduna after they were convicted of instigating the Oct. 5-8 blackout.

The men are top officials of the staff association that represents the utility's senior officials, who struck to demand a review of their salaries and benefits as part of a plan to run the authority on a commercial basis.

Authorities say the blackout caused untold hardships and many deaths in public hospitals. Justice Mofeye Oyelunde, chairman of the tribunal, said the convicted men had placed their own needs above the needs of society.

"With every right there must be a duty. Your duty was not to put the whole country in total blackout. Only God knows how many persons died as a result of the strike and the great economic loss incurred by the government," he said.

Lebanese militia rescue 3 kidnapped Irish soldiers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A moderate Lebanese militia on Saturday staged a dramatic raid on pro-Iranian Shiite Muslim extremists, rescuing three Irish soldiers who had been kidnapped a day earlier in south Lebanon.

Also Saturday, P.O. chief Yasser Arafat indicated he had been involved in the release a day earlier of a Swiss Red Cross official, and a leading Shiite cleric said he had suspended efforts to free 14 other foreign hostages because they had reached a "dead end."

Lebanese police said the mainstream Shiite Muslim militia Amal freed the three Irishmen, who were serving with the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon, or UNIFIL, while seizing more than 100 members of Faithful Resistance, a small, fanatic affiliate of Hezbollah.

The Irishmen were abducted in Israel in Tibnin, a village bordering Israel's self-proclaimed security zone. The abductions apparently were intended to retaliate for Israel's seizure Thursday of Faithful Resistance guerrilla commander Jawad Kufsi in Tibnin.

Police sources said the kidnapers demanded that UNIFIL negotiate with Israel for the release of Kufsi and three other guerrillas seized Thursday by Israel "for ter-rogation" about acts against Israel. Israel later released two of the seized men without identifying them, saying they were not involved.

A Lebanese police spokesman identified the three rescued Irish soldiers as Corp. Patrick Macken, 35, Pvt. Brian Kearney, 25, and Pvt. Bernak McCarughey, 30.

UNIFIL spokesman Timur Goksel said Amal returned the three to their command. "They are in good shape," Goksel said.

Czechs stop jamming Radio Free Europe

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Czechoslovakia announced Saturday it has stopped jamming Radio Free Europe after two decades, and the U.S.-owned network urged Bulgaria to stop its interference with the station's signals.

The Czechoslovak government said the jamming of the Munich-based radio station ended on Friday. "We will be happy to be able to get our message through at last," said Bill Marsh, the executive vice-president of Radio Free Europe.

Marsh said the station will consider how to take better advantage of the cleared air waves between Munich and Czechoslovakia.

"We would be able to include more music, and we could also eliminate some repeat programs. All our jammed services had been repeated to make sure we got through," Marsh said.

He said Bulgaria is the only Soviet bloc country that continues to hinder Radio Free Europe signals. "We'd like to see the last of the jamming countries stop the jamming."

Marsh said Bulgaria had unexpectedly turned off some jammers aimed at Radio Free Europe on Friday night, but switched them back on after several hours.

Sources in Prague, who insisted on anonymity, said Czechoslovakia also had stopped jamming Deutsche Welle, a West German radio station based in Cologne. Hans Petrik, a spokesman for Deutsche Welle, said interference of Czech-language broadcasts had stopped several months ago.

Petrik said Deutsche Welle's sister station, Deutschfunk, was responsible for the Czech-language programs. "But they sometimes use our shortwave transmitters to send them."

Dear Family and Friends,

What comes from the heart goes to the heart. Your many kind and thoughtful acts shown during our time of sadness shall never be forgotten. Sincerely we thank you.

Karen Hack and Family.

Palestinians mourn deaths of 5 Arabs with strike

JERUSALEM (AP) — Palestinians shut down the occupied territories Saturday to mourn the fatal shooting of five Arabs a day earlier. Hospital officials said Israeli soldiers wounded at least 18 Palestinians in clashes Saturday.

The impromptu strike paralyzed the West Bank cities of Ramallah, Tulikarem, Qalqilya and Hebron as well as Arab east Jerusalem and the seaside Gaza Strip.

In Gaza City, Palestinians hurled stones at Israeli troops, and students abandoned classes to march with outlawed Palestinian flags, an Arab reporter said. Black mourning flags were raised on school rooftops.

"Strike against the occupation army" said a slogan painted by Muslim fundamentalists in Gaza City. Groups of masked youths walked the streets, urging merchants to close their shops, Arab reports said.

Palestinians clashed with troops in some of Gaza's refugee camps. Twelve people were wounded in stone-throwing protests in the Jabaliya, Nusseirat, Khan Yunis, Shati and Bureij camps, Arab doctors said. The army clamped a curfew on Shati, home to 42,000 Arabs.

The army confirmed six wounded in Gaza and two in the West Bank and said it was checking the other reports.

Among the wounded was a 41-year-old woman struck by a bullet in the back of the head, said officials at Gaza's Shifa Hospital. They said they also treated two sisters, aged 3 and 7, who were hit by rubber bullets.

In Arab east Jerusalem, students took to the streets to hurl stones at policemen. Ten Arab protesters were detained during a riot near national police headquarters, police spokesman Rafi Levy said.

In Ramallah, nine miles north of Jerusalem, streets were empty except for groups of masked youths hurling rocks at Israeli troops, Israel radio said. Officials at Ramallah hospital said they treated two wounded men from the nearby Kafr ed-Dik village.

Palestinians also held mourning processions in many West Bank areas, Arab reports said. Hundreds of residents marched through the narrow streets of Zawata village near Nablus, carrying black flags, wreaths and outlawed Palestinian flags, and a mourning procession of women was reported in Tulikarem.

A 25-year-old curfew violator who decided to sneak out and visit his neighbor was shot in the leg, hospital officials said.

The strike was to protest the deaths Friday of five Palestinians in Nablus, the West Bank's largest city.

Four of the victims died Friday, and the fifth, 20-year-old Mohammed Al-Kuni, died overnight of a chest wound at Nablus' Itihad Hospital, officials said.

Thirty-two Palestinians were wounded Friday in other parts of the occupied territories.

Hundreds of black flags flew from Nablus rooftops Saturday.

Rescuers find woman in rubble of building

LENINAKAN, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Ten days after Armenia's devastating earthquake, rescuers on Saturday gently extricated a 62-year-old woman from a collapsed building, reviving hopes that more survivors can be found if the search goes on.

An Armenian official told Soviet television Friday night that 20 people had been found alive Thursday in the ruins of Leninakan and one in Spitak, another Armenian city shattered by the Dec. 7 quake.

However, a government official overseeing search and rescue efforts in this Caucasus Mountains city that once was home to more than 250,000 said it was now just as urgent to free and bury the dead to prevent the spread of disease.

"We must get out the dead. We must bury them," Armenian Deputy Prime Minister Vardkes Arutyunyan said in an interview.

The official casualty toll in the earthquake that rocked northwestern Armenia is an estimated 55,000 dead and thousands injured, with some 500,000 homeless.

Only 22,312 dead had been recovered by Friday, said George Reid, spokesman for the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

In Geneva, meanwhile, the International Committee of the Red Cross urged a temporary halt to the planning of worldwide relief shipments to the Soviet republic to assess where relief was most needed and avoid waste.

Edgard Eeckman, a spokesman for the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, said "It's not that that there are no more needs in Armenia. The message is, let's stop for a little while to make an evaluation." Krasnaya Zvezda, the military daily reported Saturday that rescue teams in Leninakan had begun wearing masks to purify the air they breathe, since many decomposing bodies still lie under the debris.

Doctors cannot guarantee that the city's restored water system has not been contaminated by decomposing bodies, the newspaper said.

Leninakan is 55 miles northwest of Yerevan, the Armenian capital.

The trapped woman in Leninakan, identified by witnesses only as Lucy, was eased from the rubble after a 20-member rescue team from Czechoslovakia heard her voice from under the rubble, witnesses said.

It took 21 hours to free the gray-haired woman from the wreckage of what had been the kitchen of a third-floor apartment.

The bodies of four children, apparently the woman's grandchildren, were also found in the debris.

The woman, who looked alert and gripped the stretcher she was placed on, was rushed to a hospital. Chief Dr. Sergei Uruman marveled that she was still alive after being buried for 10 days, but said she had suffered extensive injuries to a thigh and was in critical condition.

"It was a miracle, but I doubt she will live," said Uruman. The woman was later airlifted to Yerevan for emergency care.

Near the ruined nine-story building, sobbing by a smoldering campfire, sat the woman's daughter, who appeared to be in her 40s. She repeated the names of relatives killed in the same apartment where her mother was found.

Troops continue to patrol Armenia's capital city

YEREVAN, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Tanks and soldiers that could be used for earthquake relief instead patrol Armenia's capital, evidence that the Kremlin believes a show of force is still needed to keep a lid on nationalist unrest.

Already, dozens of Armenian activists have been jailed for alleged curfew violations. Other activists say, however, that the real reason for the arrest has been their continued political agitation.

It was the activists' heated campaign for Armenia's annexation of the Nagorno-Karabakh district in neighboring Azerbaijan that drew world attention to Armenia for most of the year.

But the Dec. 7 earthquake that killed an estimated 55,000 people in northwestern Armenia became the focus of the republic's 3.4 million people.

The activists did not give up, however, and despite the government's avowed policy of "placation," or openness, it has launched a crackdown against them.

Three days after the quake, while Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was visiting Armenia to check on disaster relief, five leaders of the Karabakh committee, an activist group, were arrested. Another leader was arrested later, and the other five are now reported in hiding.

The unsanctioned group has spearheaded the annexation campaign, which has led to bloodshed between Armenians and Azerbaijanis. The Kremlin has refused to turn Nagorno-Karabakh over to Armenia. During a visit to Yerevan, Gorbachev blasted committee members as "provocateurs" trying to take advantage of the instability created by

Soviets open door to others in tragedy

MOSCOW (AP) — The world's most secretive giant threw open its borders last week to bare the pain of the Armenian earthquake and let the world — and the Soviet people — help dig out from under the rubble.

Suddenly, Soviets were human. They were crying in grief, agonizing over the crumbled concrete hiding their lost loved ones, bleeding from their wounds.

They had faces, unlike the thousands of unidentified Soviets irradiated and uprooted under cover of a media blackout following the Chernobyl nuclear power station explosion just two and a half years ago.

In opening the region to international relief workers, the Soviet Union also gained $40 million in emergency aid — and saved thousands of lives that would have been lost without French search dogs, Israeli doctors and Belgian artificial kidney machines.

The United States alone sent $6.6 million in assistance from both government and private sources.

It was the first time since World War II that international aid has poured into the fiercely self-sufficient Soviet Union, and once again it cracked the image of evil Western capitalists fostered by decades of propaganda.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov, thanking the world for help last week, fondly recalled eating Spam, an American canned meat product, during World War II. He said he still considers it a delicacy.

Foreign journalists, who normally must wait weeks or months for permission to enter the country, flew in aboard relief planes and were handed monthlong visas at the Moscow airport. Others went straight to the stricken area without papers and weren't disturbed by authorities who ordinarily subject each new arrival to a thorough document check.

The government waived its requirement that Moscow-based correspondents give 48 hours notice and a detailed itinerary before they leave the city, and it reopened Armenia, which had been closed to foreign journalists since a renewed outbreak of ethnic violence in November.

In Moscow, the Foreign Ministry, which now holds daily press briefings but rarely provides news, gave regular updates on the number of casualties and the state of the relief effort.

Newspapers printed daily interviews with victims, rescuers and even critics of the disorganization hampering the relief effort and the shoddy construction practices that caused concrete-slab buildings to collapse and contributed to the huge death toll.

Over half of residents in Spitak die in quake

Chicago Tribune

SPITAK, U.S.S.R. — Spitak is a city of the dead.

The earthquake that leveled most of this city and others in Armenia 11 days ago left a soccer stadium intact, but instead of people the stands now are filled with thousands of coffins.

Coffins are stacked on nearly every street corner. Rescue workers sift through the rubble, but with little hope of finding anything other than more corpses.

People move in slow motion, as if in a nightmare. The only sound is from bulldozers and trucks.

An old man sits atop a pile of broken concrete that once was his home and stares blankly at a family photo album that he dug out of the rubble.

Spitak, a town of 25,000 in which 15,000 are reported to have died, is mostly evacuated now. Soviet authorities are expected to close the city and raze it.

Compared to Spitak, which was destroyed, the earthquake's violence in Leninakan seemed random and capricious. One building collapsed and the one adjacent remained intact.

The city's central square has become a temporary morgue. In the surrounding streets, homeless people huddle close to campfires in makeshift shelters, refusing to leave the city until all the dead are accounted for.

There is a wrenching scene at a collapsed school building, where scores of children were crushed to death. Mothers search the wreckage for their children's belongings.

The artifacts of everyday life — teapots, toys, articles of clothing — seem strangely dislocated from reality amid the twisted steel and concrete. Most of the clocks on public buildings are stopped at 11:40, the time of the morning the earthquake struck.

Radical students demonstrate Saturday in Seoul

Korean radicals want Chun arrested

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Student radicals and dissidents today attacked a government party office and staged anti-government demonstrations demanding the arrest of the disgraced former president, Chun Doo-hwan.

News reports said about a dozen students briefly occupied an office of President Roh Tae-woo's governing Democratic Justice Party in the southern city of Chonju. "Arrest Chun Doo-hwan," they shouted while attacking the office and destroying windows with rocks and steel pipes, according to the reports.

Police, firing tear gas, retook the building in 20 minutes and arrested six students, the reports said. The other students ran away, they said.

In southern Seoul, 1,200 radical students and dissidents held an outdoor rally denouncing Roh for blocking public efforts to divulge more details of misdeeds committed during Chun's reign.

Japanese question business-government ties

The Baltimore Sun

TOKYO — For 40 years, a partnership between business and government has been the cornerstone on which Japan has rebuilt itself from the ruins of World War II into the world's most dynamic economy.

Last week, when an ever-spreading stock-and-politics scandal forced one of Japan's most respected businessmen to resign as chairman of the world's biggest corporation, some of that partnership's seldom-seen corners caught a few rays from the investigators' spotlight.

The immediate incident that prompted Hisashi Shinto's resignation as chairman of Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp. was the discovery by prosecutors that about $75,000 — consisting of insider-trading profits from stock in the real estate company Recruit Cosmos Inc. — had gone into a bank account in Shinto's name.

But behind Shinto's resignation was a web of money and politics far more complex than the single transaction that finally led to his resignation.

As reporters, legislators and prosecutors have looked into the case, it has turned out that the web spread well beyond Japan's domestic politics.

Through Nippon Telegraph, the web also touched major international issues such as former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's efforts to meet U.S. demands that Japan give U.S. manufacturers a piece of its huge telecommunications market.

In many ways, Nippon Telegraph's role in the Recruit scandal is turning out to be a case study in the way money lubricates — and, some Japanese are beginning to feel, often corrupts — relations among the gigantic partners in Japan's government-business complex.

The involvement of several high-level officials has also demonstrated that Japan's widely respected bureaucracy, long thought to be the one incorruptible part of the seamless political-economic partnership, is not as impervious to the temptations of money as most Japanese like to believe.

"What has become of Japan's leaders?" the Asahi newspaper asked Thursday in an editorial commenting on Shinto's resignation.

Not everyone in Japan thinks that is the right question.

Many Japanese and foreigners who professionally follow the business-government partnership see the Recruit dealings as an inevitable and natural product of the seamlessness itself.

"I'm not sure whether Recruit proves businessmen and politicians are doing worse things than they always did, or whether it proves the Japanese public is beginning to apply ethical standards that never got much attention here before," Darrell Perkins, an American stock analyst in Tokyo, said Friday.

"A few years back, everyone had a sense that the whole country was struggling, like no one should question a system that seemed to be bringing economic growth. I think maybe this society is rich enough now that people have some self-confidence about their economy and dare to ask questions that would have made you unpopular not so long ago."

Recruit Cosmos is a high-flying real estate developer. Hundreds of thousands of its shares were quickly parceled out to at least 76 politicians, business leaders, bureaucrats and newspaper executives in 1986, in time for them to make tidy profits when the stock's price took off after it was first publicly listed as an over-the-counter issue that fall.

The spreading scandal also led to the resignation of Kiuchi Miyazawa as finance minister earlier this month, and it has involved the names of Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, two former prime ministers, the head of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party and virtually the entire Cabinet headed by former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone.

It has also cost other business leaders, and the secretaries of many politicians, their careers, but Shinto is by far the most powerful business figure to resign so far.

USSR wants loan from Korea

The Washington Post

SEOUL, South Korea — The Soviet Union has asked South Korea for a $300 million loan to construct a large furniture plant in Siberia, according to sources at the Korea Trade Promotion Organization.

The two nations do not recognize each other diplomatically, and Moscow is the chief supporter of communist North Korea, South Korea's bitter foe for the past four decades. But the two nations agreed earlier this month to exchange trade offices for the first time, and major South Korean firms are preparing to open offices in Moscow.

This is the first time that the Soviet Union has asked South Korea for a loan for its economic-development plan, the sources said. The request, which South Korean officials are viewing favorably, is one of several signs of substantial improvement in economic and cultural relations between Moscow and Seoul since the September Olympic Games.

South Korean officials hope that warmer ties with the communist world will lead to improved relations with North Korea, which remains isolated and impervious to pressure. Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's policy of restructuring. They also would welcome alternative markets to the United States, where they fear the rise of protectionism.

The Soviet Union, on the other hand, is eager to take part in the booming Pacific economy and wants money and technology for Siberian development. Soviet officials also appear to hope that fear of South Korea's competition might spur Japanese firms to trade more actively with the Soviet Union.

The question of the $300 million loan was raised by Vladislav Malkevich, chairman of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce and Industry, when Korean Trade Promotion Organization (KOTRA) President Lee Sun Ki visited Moscow early this month. Moscow suggested that it would deliver lumber to South Korea as repayment of the loan and interest.

Officials of KOTRA, a semi-governmental organization, are looking favorably on the request, the sources said, and hope to conclude an agreement on the loan when Vladimir Golanov, vice chairman of the Soviet chamber of the commerce, visits Seoul in January.

The Soviet Union also called upon South Korean construction companies to take part in the building of the General Trade Center in Nakhodka, which will cost more than $40 million. The Soviet Union has opened the Far Eastern port city to attract foreign investments for Siberian development plans.

U.S. cuts back gulf presence

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The U.S. Navy is further scaling back operations in the Persian Gulf and will reduce its forces from 15 to 14 ships early next month, U.S. military sources said Saturday.

In the latest change of procedure, U.S. warships will use radar to monitor U.S.-flagged vessels in the water, said sources who spoke on condition of anonymity. The move means the warships may no longer be within quick reach in emergencies.

One source said the change, like some earlier ones, reflects a Pentagon judgment that the threat to shipping in the gulf has decreased since the cease-fire in the war between Iran and Iraq went into effect Aug. 20.

At least 1 million people have been killed or wounded in the war, which followed border skirmishes and an Iraqi invasion in September 1980. The fighting spilled over into the gulf with attacks on foreign ships.

There have been no armed incidents reported in the gulf since the truce, and the United States has already reduced its forces in the region by two ships. Other foreign navies are also reducing operations or pulling out.

However, U.S. Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci said during a visit to the region Dec. 5 that Washington had made no plans for major changes in forces because U.N.-sponsored peace talks between Iran and Iraq are stalled. Senior U.S. officials have talked recently of an eventual force of 10 U.S. ships.

PLO believes conference to negotiate peace is coming

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
The Associated Press

TUNIS, Tunisia — The PLO, having made a series of concessions to lure the United States into a dialogue, believes Israel is now isolated and an international conference to negotiate a comprehensive Middle East peace is on the horizon.

"There is an international moral force facing Israel now," Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman Ahmed-Rahman said Saturday. That moral pressure, he said, is what led the United States to change its policy.

The PLO's moves began last month when its parliament-in-exile, the Palestine National Council, declared an independent Palestinian state based on U.N. resolutions on the Mideast. PLO chief Yasser Arafat then set about meeting all three U.S. conditions for opening talks with the organization.

Washington had demanded that the organization clearly recognize Israel, renounce terrorism and accept U.N. resolutions 242 and 338, which recognize the right of all nations in the region to live within secure borders.

When the United States rejected Arafat's speech to the U.N. General Assembly on Tuesday as not clear enough, he came back a day later with another, more explicit declaration.

Washington then abruptly reversed its longstanding policy of refusing to deal with the PLO and two days later opened what it called a dialogue — not negotia-

The PLO's priority now, Arafat told reporters Saturday, is to "push forward with the international conference to be held very soon."

The change in the U.S. position caused shock in Israel. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir rejects the idea of an international conference or any talks with what it calls a "terrorist organization."

"The PLO has opened a new era, an era of peace," Abdul-Rahman said. "The Israelis have failed to enter it. We put an agenda of peace on the table."

The revival of the Middle East peace process, moribund for the past two years, is a direct result of the year-long "intifadah" — Arab uprising — in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip that has resulted in more than 320 Palestinian deaths. Thirteen Israelis also have died.

More than anything else, the rock-throwing youths in the streets of the territories and Israel's tough response has won new sympathy for the Palestinian cause.

As Yasser Abd-Rabbou, leader of the PLO delegation that met with U.S. Ambassador to Tunis Robert H. Pelletreau Jr., put it: "We are here in the name of the intifadah."

American officials in Tunis refused to make any substantive comment about the 90-minute meeting Friday, referring all queries to Washington. But in the Palestinian view, there is no distinction between "dialogue" and "negotiations." They say the talks, whatever they are called, mean recognition of Palestinian rights.

The only suitable framework for working out an overall Mideast peace, the Palestinians say, is the long-discussed international conference, involving all parties directly concerned, including the PLO, and the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council.

"Our impression is that the Americans are serious, and that they understand that this dialogue should lead to a comprehensive peace in the Middle East," Abdul-Rahman said of the Tunis talks.

Arafat said he hoped Washington now could be neutral in its peace efforts.

"We started this dialogue according to their (U.S.) desire," the chairman said. "We will continue with this attitude because we know that America is one of two superpowers, and also one of five permanent members of the Security Council. No peace can be settled without their participation and their efforts."

The Palestinians say the next U.S.-PLO meeting will not take place until after President-elect George Bush takes office Jan. 20. Both Abdul-Rahman and Abd-Rabbou said they expected an international peace conference to get under way "soon," though neither said when.

The PLO's acceptance of U.N. Resolutions 242 and 338 in Abdul-Rahman's words, "the passport to the international conference."

Negotiations slow between PLO, Israel

Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON — In a year when the Soviet Union agreed to pull out of Afghanistan and Iraq finally stopped fighting and a peace settlement was reached in a corner of southern Africa, the Middle East conflict seemed to remain intractable, immune to all attempts to shift its glacial rigidity.

In a fundamental sense, that still is the case after the dramatic U.S. decision last week to open contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Israel and the PLO still confront each other across a wide gulf of 40 years of animosity and mistrust. Both still are talking past each other, with no sign they are about to become negotiating partners.

"There is too much euphoria now. Peace is not around the corner," said Robert Neumann, former U.S. ambassador to Morocco, Saudi Arabia and Afghanistan and now head of Middle East studies at the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

"We are looking at a long, terribly complex process, and the best that can be expected is a compromise both sides can live with. It might take the whole first term of the Bush administration."

Joseph Sisco, former assistant secretary of state for Near East and South Asian affairs, agreed: "This is an important step forward, an opening, but it doesn't mean we are closer to peace. We are talking years of negotiations."

The one thing that definitely has changed, in the view of these and other Middle East experts, is that the United States has, for the first time, put itself in the position of being an honest broker in the Middle East, able to talk to all sides.

Its long refusal to talk to the PLO, while no doubt necessary in American domestic political terms, limited its effectiveness as a mediator and affected its perceptions of the parties involved in the conflict.

"Now the United States can talk to its friends and to the non-friendlies," said William Quandt, a member of the National Security Council staff during Jimmy Carter's administration. "That alone doesn't guarantee anything, however."

The outline of a new peace process now being negotiated for some time. Until now the United States has promoted, without success, a plan premised on Jordan taking the leading role on the Arab side. The Jordanians would negotiate with Israel, and Palestinians would merely form a part of the Jordanian delegation.

Most experts think the Bush administration will have to reconsider that position. It may continue to oppose an independent Palestinian state, but it is unlikely to go on insisting Jordan represent the Palestinians.

Israel has reputedly vowed it never will negotiate with the PLO, but most Middle East experts do not take that seriously.

"In politics, 'never' means not this week," Neumann said.

Indeed, after the U.S. decision, 30 dovish members of Israel's Labor Party issued a statement calling for contacts with the PLO.

Sisco predicted that Israel would swiftly come forward with a proposal designed to get U.S. support. "Israel can afford not to be in step with the other 158 nations in the world, but it can't afford not to be in step with the U.S.," he said.

Israel's political leaders struggle with sense of diplomatic isolation

The Baltimore Sun

JERUSALEM — Israel's political leaders are grappling with a heightened sense of diplomatic isolation and new difficulties in forming a government because of the dramatically improved status conferred on the Palestine Liberation Organization by the United States.

Israeli officials, angry with the United States for having opened contacts with the PLO, are having to patch up with rapid developments in American Middle East policy they had assured the Israeli public would never occur.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres are having to develop their responses while negotiating the ground rules for a new government in which agreement on a diplomatic counter-offensive for achieving peace with the Palestinians is one of the major stumbling blocks.

Shamir's pledge to retain all of the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip now seems a fantasy. Already undermined by the Palestinian uprising that began in December 1987, any long-term plan for holding onto all the territories was in effect rejected last week by the Reagan administration.

U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering, usually a person of careful understatement, told an Israeli audience that Israel no longer had as many choices as Shamir assumed.

"Israel must face up to the need for negotiated withdrawal from occupied territories and to the need to accommodate the legitimate Palestinian political rights," Pickering said. "The extent, the shape and the form of those results need to be hammered out through negotiations. But they should be addressed squarely and head-on."

For Israel, all of the choices for a long-term response involve sizable risks.

If officials choose to maintain their rejection of the PLO as an acceptable partner for peace talks, Israel will find itself totally alone in that policy. For the first time, Israel will not be sheltered by the United States from criticism that it is ignoring political reality.

If Israel's leaders propose an alternative to contacts with the PLO, they will first have to put aside major internal differences. The record of the four years of their "unity government" suggests that even in times of crisis Shamir, leader of the rightist Likud bloc, and Peres, head of the left-of-center Labor Party, find it difficult to agree on major initiatives.

As a third choice, Israel could follow the Reagan administration and announce that it would take Yasser Arafat at his word that the PLO recognized Israel's right to exist, and open talks with him.

FOOT PROBLEMS

If you're like a lot of people these days, you like to jog for your health. But if you're having any problems with your feet, you should have them checked by a foot specialist. When you jog, you're putting a lot of stress on your feet. If there are any problems there, you'll feel them. And they'll get worse unless treated in time.

Your foot are a lot more complex than you realize. Each foot has 26 bones, each serving an important function. Then there are the joints, ligaments, muscles, tendons, the network of nerves and blood vessels. When you're jogging, all of these structures work together to provide balance and support. They help propel the entire weight of your body forward.

Are you wearing the proper shoes when you jog? Good jogging shoes provide cushioning and support for your heels and arches. Is there enough room for your toes to move comfortably? Shoes wear out with a lot of use, and that's something you should guard against. Make sure your shoes — as well as your body — are in good condition.

And if any problems develop with your feet, have them checked by a foot specialist.

Oklahoma football on probation

By PATRICK CASEY The Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — The University of Oklahoma football program has been placed on three years probation, banned from television appearances in 1999, and barred from postseason competition in 1999 and 1990 for recruiting violations, a television station reported Saturday.

Oklahoma City television station KOCO-TV reported that it had obtained a copy of the NCAA report due to be released Monday.

The station also reported that the NCAA will tell the school that the number of official paid visits by prospective students athletes will be limited to 50 for the next two years and that only eight full-time coaches can participate in off-campus recruiting in 1999.

The station also said the NCAA will limit Oklahoma to 18 football scholarships for the next two years. Athletic Director Donnie Duncan and his assistant, John Underwood, said they would have no comment about the television station's report.

An athletic department official said a news conference will be held Monday afternoon to discuss the NCAA sanctions.

David Berst, the assistant director in charge of enforcement for the NCAA, refused to confirm or deny the station's report.

"We will have nothing to say until Monday morning," Berst said.

The NCAA reportedly has asked the school to show cause why it should not be penalized further if it fails to take disciplinary action against three assistant coaches and fails to disassociate itself from a booster.

CSI wins Eagle Classic easily

By LARRY HOVEY Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — We played alike a top-five team tonight, said College of Southern Idaho coach Fred Trenkle after watching his fourth-ranked College of Southern Idaho Golden Eagles handle Walla Walla 110-62 Saturday night to win up another Eagle Classic.

Earlier in the evening, Treasure Valley posted its second win, also, beating Southern Alberta Institute of Technology 92-77.

"At least we worked hard the whole 40 minutes tonight, not the 20 minutes like we did last night," Trenkle continued, still upset with his Eagles allowing SAIIT 94 points in the opener.

This time around there was no doubt. The Eagles took it out to 37-10 in the first 10 minutes, 50 seconds and that left the rather small crowd to spend the rest of the night wondering not who would win the game but whether Wendy hamburgers would be a reward.

That wonderment ended with 1:48 left when Brian Martin drilled a three-point out of the corner to make the score 101-60. The crowd left in droves thereafter.

With one player out with flu and two others, Dave Henderson and Cliff Martin, hurting with it, the Eagles didn't have a lot of depth.

But they didn't need a lot either as everyone who played contributed.

None more so than freshman Corey Warner who blazed at his CSI career best in the first half, stuffing in 15 points in a six-minute period and hauling in a bunch of rebounds as well.

"Corey did have a great performance tonight," confirmed Trenkle. "When he is on and into the game, he is a real force. But he lets things bother him and distract him. When he overcomes that, he will be a major factor in our season."

Returning to his defensive team, Trenkle said "holding Walla Walla to 62 points is pretty good because just four nights ago they beat North Idaho by four points in Walla Walla. I'm sure that game plus the travel and the two games here contributed to their lower scoring tonight but we feel good about holding them to that level. We worked hard to do it."

For the night CSI again had six men in double scoring figures, with Warner and Kenny Jarvis leading.

Twin Falls defeats Capital, 51-46

By RON GATES Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Frustrated both at the free throw line and on the boards earlier, the Twin Falls Bruins took control of both aspects in the late going Saturday night to defeat Capital 51-46 in boys' non-conference basketball.

Swede Trenkle and Chris Smith each dropped in a pair of foul shots in the last half-minute of play to decide the contest at 45, but Capital regained the advantage less than a minute into the final period.

"Trenkle's free throws with 37-seconds remaining in the third quarter decided the contest at 45, but Capital regained the advantage less than a minute into the final period."

Broncos end season with win over Patriots

By JOHN MOSSMAN The Associated Press

DENVER — Thriving in an atmosphere they haven't experienced in seasons, the Denver Broncos brushed aside questions about their own futures and that of some assistant coaches and turned in a spirited season-ending performance Saturday.

"We haven't had a game like this — with nothing on the line — in a long time," linebacker Jim Ryan said after Denver's 21-10 victory over the New England Patriots. "It was a little strange. We wanted to come out, play hard and have a little fun today."

Sammy Winder ran for two touchdowns and Tony Dorsett rushed for 86 yards and another score as Denver wound up 8-8.

The Patriots, 9-7, could have clinched a wild-card berth with a victory Saturday. Now, they'll need losses by both Cleveland and Indianapolis on Sunday to make the playoffs.

Denver's victory, however, did clinch a playoff spot for Houston. "I don't know if odds count," New England coach Raymond Berry said of his team's damaged playoff chances. "But I'd rather be in this position than none."

Bengals claim 1st division championship in 7 years

Patriot cornerback Raymond Clayborn said he would be glued to his television to await the outcome of Sunday's games.

"We let this game slip from our hands, and we don't control our own destiny anymore," he said.

Denver coaches, most notably defensive coordinator Joe Collier and some other defensive assistants, might resign or be fired after a dismal year defensively. Collier hinted to several of his players on Friday that the New England game might be his last for the Broncos.

Collier declined comment Saturday, but Reeves said: "The only person that hires and fires coaches in this organization is me. I have not thought about firing anybody, so if somebody wants to speculate, that's just what it is — pure speculation. I'll assess the situation and make a decision as quickly as I can."

 About 2,500 Idaho producers will be contacted by phone or visited in person to help inventory the nation's cattle and sheep numbers and measure the changes in stock on hand, said Dan Gerhardt, the new state statistician for Idaho's Agricultural Statistics Service.
 The voluntary cooperation of Idaho producers is important to make accurate, unbiased and timely estimates, he said. All information provided by producers is confidential and used only in combination with other producers' reports to develop county, state and national cattle and sheep inventory estimates.
 The results will be published by the Agricultural Statistics Board on Feb. 8, 1989. Producers who participate will be mailed a report.

Dry edible bean crop drops 29%

BOISE — The 1988 dry edible bean crop in Idaho decreased 29 percent from last year, according to the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service.
 Production totaled 1,998 million hundredweight, down 814,000 hundredweight from that produced in 1987. This year's decrease in production is contributed to a 27 percent decrease in harvested acres.
 Farmers harvested 108,000 acres with an average yield of 1,850 pounds per acre. Last year 148,000 acres were harvested with a yield of 1,900 pounds per acre.
 Pinto beans made up 40.4 percent of the crop. Pink beans were second at 21.3 percent. Great Northern accounted for 13.9 percent of the total while Small Reds were 13.3 percent. Other varieties made up the remaining 11.1 percent.
 Nationally dry edible bean production is estimated at 19.1 million hundredweight, down 26 percent from last year and 16 percent below two years ago. Area for harvest is set at 1.37 million acres, down 19 percent from last year. Average yield is set at 1,393 pounds per acre, a drop of 9 percent from last year.

Drought worries persist despite rains

CALDWELL — Steady rains in November and deepening mountain snows in December haven't put an end to concerns about drought next year.
 Once the ground freezes, thirsty valley soils won't be soaking up more moisture until spring, said Dorrell Larsen, irrigation specialist with the University of Idaho Extension Service in Caldwell.
 More than 90 percent of Idaho precipitation falls above 5,000 feet of elevation. Irrigated fields will benefit from heron's mountain snowmelt, but dryland farming areas need local precipitation.

"We have no submoisture," Larsen said.
 "The drought mired any kind of moisture we've had over the past three years. We're just beginning to replace it. We can't expect Mother Nature to bring us back up to the average soil moisture conditions we've had in the past in just one season.
 "There's enough moisture out there right now to germinate crops next spring," he added, "but there won't be enough in most cases to fill the soil profile through the root zone."
 Most farmers will have to irrigate especially early to start restoring moisture which means more overall water use during the 1989 growing season.

 Mountain snowfall levels of 20 to 30 percent above normal would cover irrigation needs, but that dryland soils will require 30 to 40 percent more precipitation, said Bill Orndrechen, Idaho Department of Water Resources hydrologist, "and it would all have to be absorbed into the soil."
 With better than normal valley precipitation this winter, gradual warming in the spring, and timely spring and early summer rains, Orndrechen said Idaho dryland areas could "get back to normal" in one season.

Sexless sheep cost ranchers millions

DUBOIS — An estimated 16 percent of the 130,000 American male sheep may reject female mating overtures, costing sheep ranchers at least $7 million a year.
 Scientists at the U.S. Sheep Experiment Station at Dubois found that 16 of the 100 rams they tested were "duds" lacking in sex drive, said a story in Agricultural Research magazine. Similar ratios have been reported in other studies.
 "Of the 16 rams tested, half were attracted solely to other males," said animal scientist James A. Fitzgerald with USDA's Agricultural Research Service.
 "Rams mounting other rams is considered normal behavior. However, rams that persist in mounting males even in the presence of females in heat, we call homosexual," said Anne Perkins, a doctoral candidate from the University of California, Davis, studying sheep behavior at the station.

 Sheep producers need to watch for these nonproductive rams, Perkins said. "Our study showed homosexual behavior disrupted the matings of rams expected to service up to 100 ewes in 21 days. This leads to fewer births, smaller flocks and less income for lamb producers."
 Perkins' study indicates, for the first time, that differences in high and low sex drives are linked to physiological differences, said Fitzgerald.
 Implied by Perkins' findings that blood hormone levels differ according to a ram's sex drive, Perkins will continue to investigate links between a ram's hormone levels and endocrine control originating in his brain.

Sheeps' fussy eating habits may interfere with adaption

IDAHO FALLS — Sheep are more likely to prefer foods to which they are exposed early in life — and that may interfere with adaptation to new grazing environments and to feedlots, researchers have found.
 Sheep's fussy habits about new foods may be costing ranchers in pounds of gain, said Dr. Fred Provenza, of Utah State University.
 Provenza and his graduate students have conducted extensive studies on sheep's feeding behavior. Their research indicates that, like many other animals, sheep's readiness to accept novel foods declines rapidly after weaning.
 As a result, grazing time on unfamiliar ranges increases up to 25 percent and consumption drops 40 percent.
 The resulting loss in production of between 5 and 20 percent can persist throughout the grazing season, Provenza said newcomers are also more likely to experiment with poisonous plants.
 In the feedlot, fussy animals may cost a large operation thousands of dollars in increased days required to "finish" animals before slaughter, he said.

 Lamb feeders nationwide say range feeder lambs raised using extensive Western range conditions are "extremely difficult" to get started on feed in feedlots following weaning, said Dr. Hudson Glimp, location leader of the U.S. Sheep Experiment Station at Dubois.
 "It can take up to three weeks to net them through that situation," he said.
 Lambs unfamiliar with standing water will balk and then look at it," he said. They have to be provided running water.
 Researchers at several Western universities are investigating ways to enhance sheep's dietary selections. Behavior modification increases animals' interest in new foods and may entice them to eat weeds or keep them away from vegetation they shouldn't eat.
 Provenza said sheep raised on sagebrush consume more of it than sheep unfamiliar with the plant.

Labor Department opens Idaho Falls office

SEATTLE — The U.S. Department of Labor's Employment Standards Administration announced recently it has established in Idaho Falls the state's first Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP).
 According to Jim Valin, regional administrator for ESA, Patricia Chadwick, an OFCCP equal opportunity specialist currently assigned to the Portland OFCCP area office, has been reassigned to the new Idaho Falls location.
 Chadwick, an OFCCP equal opportunity specialist since 1984, previously worked as an equal employment assistant with the U.S. Forest Service in Portland and an equal employment specialist with Idaho's Department of Health and Welfare in Pocatello.
 Chadwick has been an active volunteer with Native American organizations in the Pacific Northwest.

"We are pleased that an individual with Chadwick's background and extensive knowledge of labor conditions in Idaho requested this assignment," Valin added.

"When I lost my husband, I was left with 900 acres, 550 milk cows, and 7 hired hands. What I needed was a lender that believed in me."

Six Years ago, Irene VanderVegh was suddenly left in control of a large dairy operation. That meant dealing with a lot of new questions, and making some tough decisions.
 One thing was certain, though: She had the strength she needed from dedicated field hands, and the support she needed from her family. She also had a good lender—Farm Credit Services.
 It would have been easy for Irene to give up when times were bad. And it's easy for us to be a bank when times are good.
 But she didn't take the easy way out and neither did we.

Fertilizer distributors argue pollution

SPOKANE (AP) — When fertilizer and agricultural chemical distributors from the West gathered here for their annual convention, there were plenty of trade demonstrations and exhibits to take in.

But the three-day convention which ended Thursday, wasn't all show-and-tell. Also on the agenda was a no-frills discussion on groundwater pollution.

Amid threats of litigation and increasingly vocal complaints from environmentalists, the suppliers and users of chemicals have a potential problem on their hands — or on the farms.

The debate is whether the problem is one of pollution or of public perception.

Jim Thorup, an agronomist with the Chevron Chemical Co. in Kansas City, Kan., said the fertilizer folks have been the "whipping boys," blamed whenever increased levels of nitrogen are found in groundwater.

"People get preconceived ideas," Thorup said. "Once they do, it's pretty difficult to remove their thinking. That's why we believe very strongly in educational programs to set the record straight."

"I'm not saying that there is no nitrogen that could possibly get into groundwater from fertilizers — that isn't true. But there are many other potential sources as well."

The state Department of Ecology agrees that farm chemicals may not be the sole source of contamination.

But industry representatives need to acknowledge that there is a potential problem, not deny it, said Dayle Ann Stratton, non-point pollution source specialist for Ecology's groundwater quality unit.

This much is certain, Ms. Stratton said. "In Washington state, what we have right now is increasing levels of nitrates that are showing up in every county."

Nitrates are often used in fertilizer products. Converted to nitrates, in elevated levels they can be harmful to infants, preventing blood cells from transporting oxygen. Some people also contend high levels of nitrogen compounds can cause cancer in adults.

Early tests from an ongoing U.S. Geological Survey study in the Pasco basin, Ms. Stratton said, show nitrate levels above the drinking water standard of 10 parts per million in about 15 percent of the wells tested.

The state has no groundwater standards, although it plans to introduce such standards for public review early next year.

The problem can be defined two ways, Ms. Stratton said. "Do you say that you don't have a problem until you have contamination? Or do you say there is evidence for a high potential and the solution is to keep that problem from manifesting itself?"

Some in the agricultural supply industry seem to be taking the first approach, Ms. Stratton said.

The fertilizer people are real sensitive about the possibility that groundwater contamination could be coming from fertilizers," she said. "That's kind of understandable."

"Some of them are reluctant to admit that fertilizers are a substantial part of the problem and say that septic systems are the culprit. I think both are part of the problem."

The federal government has basically left it up to the states to develop management plans to deal with agricultural groundwater pollution.

The fertilizer people are real sensitive about the possibility that groundwater contamination could be coming from fertilizers. That's kind of understandable, I think.

Fed approves bank investment guidelines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board on Friday approved new capital guidelines designed to push banks into safer investments or force them to put more of their stockholder's money behind riskier activities.

The Fed, by a 6-0 vote, approved the regulations, which reward institutions for directing their deposits into prudent investments such as government securities and home mortgages.

Starting Dec. 31, 1990, banks will have to hold capital — representing the stockholders' investment in the institution — of 7.25 percent of loans and other assets. The minimum will increase to 8 percent two years later. The current standard is 6 percent.

But banks will get a break for certain kind of investments. They will only have to hold half as much capital for home mortgages, one-fifth as much capital for mortgage-backed securities — sponsored by government agencies and no capital for U.S. government securities.

Diane Casey, director of regulatory affairs for the Independent Bankers Association, a trade group, said the rules may have the effect of making more mortgage money available.

"You will see banks that have ceased making mortgage loans looking again at mortgage loans because the risk-weighting is such now that they can afford to make them," she said.

The regulations could provide a wider market in the United States for government securities, which have been sold to investors in Europe and Japan, she said.

Board member Wayne Angell objected to the zero risk rating for government securities, saying, "There is always some risk." He also said the 20 percent rating for many mortgage-backed securities — is on the side of inadequate" and complained, "I see in front of me a document that doesn't do much."

However, Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan said the regulations, by their nature, "cannot be better than merely satisfactory."

Vice Chairman Manuel Johnson said the regulation was "an important first step — it may be unsatisfactory relative to some ideal, but I think it's highly satisfactory to where we were."

Beginning with the effective date of the rule — Feb. 15 — banks will have to show they are working toward meeting the stiffer requirements by 1990 and 1992 deadlines.

An earlier version of the rules was approved by the Federal Reserve on Aug. 3. Board member Martha Seger, who dissented at the time, was not present at Friday's meeting. Fed staff members said they hoped by the end of 1990 to develop standards that would adjust banks' capital according to their vulnerability to changes in interest rates. The standards adopted Friday apply to the risk of default.

Other federal banking agencies — the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which regulates nationally chartered banks, and the Federal Deposit Insurance, which oversees federally insured state chartered banks — are expected to approve similar capital guidelines soon. The Fed regulates holding companies and banks that belong to its system.

The rules bring U.S. regulations into conformance with an international agreement adopted a year ago in Basel, Switzerland, by the Fed and the central banks of 11 other major industrialized countries.

Futura to sell aluminum subsidiary

BOISE (AP) — Futura Corp. of Boise tentatively has agreed to sell its Clearfield, Utah, aluminum products subsidiary to Knappe & Vogt Manufacturing Co. of Grand Rapids, Mich.

The sale is expected to close Jan. 1. Terms have not been released.

Under the agreement, the subsidiary, Futura Home Products, will be merged into Knappe & Vogt, which will run the company using present management and workforce. Futura Corp. will receive a combination of cash and Knappe & Vogt common stock.

Futura Home Products makes extruded aluminum products that are sold mainly to shelving and floor covering companies. It expects sales of $15 million this year.

Futura Corp. becomes Knappe & Vogt's largest shareholder and Futura President Robert Hansberger will get a seat on the Michigan company's board of directors.

"They thought us out," Hansberger said. "I didn't want to sell it. But he later decided, it was too good a fit to ignore. He really represents a better opportunity for our company and our people than they could have had standing alone."

Knappe & Vogt makes metal hardware and store fixtures. It had sales of $101 million last year.

Micron 1st-quarter profits up 300%

BOISE (AP) — Aided by strong demand and high prices, Micron Technology Inc.'s first-quarter profits were almost 300 percent higher than during the same period last year.

The Boise-based computer chip manufacturer earned $32.2 million on revenue of $110.4 million during the quarter that ended Dec. 1. Last year, Micron earned $8.4 million on revenue of $43.2 million.

Income rose 282 percent, while revenue was up 155 percent.

Per-share earnings were 88 cents for the quarter, compared to 33 cents per share a year ago.

"The increase in revenues and improved results are due primarily to improved market conditions, increased manufacturing efficiency and diversification of our product line," said Joe Parkinson, Micron's chief executive officer.

However, both income and revenue were down from the last quarter of Micron's 1988 fiscal year, when the declines were due largely to a higher effective tax rate and costs associated with hiring new employees, said Kipp Bedard, manager of investor relations.

Per-share earnings also were off. Bedard said they were diluted by Micron's issuance of new common stock, which is being sold to a British electronics company, Armstrad PLC, under an agreement announced in October.

Parkinson said the company is continuing to set aside cash for expenses related to establishing and protecting its product and process rights. It set aside $9.9 million in pre-tax dollars during the recently completed quarter.

The provision is a hedge against anticipated costs of licensing processes and products. It also may be used to defend Micron against allegations that its products and manufacturing processes infringe on patents or rights held by other companies.

In November, Texas Instruments filed a patent infringement lawsuit against Micron. Texas Instruments alleges that Micron is producing memory chips that disregard TI's patents.

Parkinson said Micron has been expanding production of 1-megabit dynamic random access memory chips, called DRAMs, as well as fast static and video random access memory chips.

The company also has expanded its Memory Allocation Group, which manufactures and markets memory expansion products for desktop computers.

Bedard said Micron's expansion plans are on schedule. The company's third fabrication plant, which eventually will double Micron's production capacity, is scheduled to begin production of chips sometime in the first three months of 1989.

A new marriage is invalid where an old marriage by one of the parties is still valid.

A Federal Appeals Court in Florida ruled that a local law could not require joggers to wear shirts while jogging within city limits.

A parent is not legally required to send a child to college if it is not financially possible to do so, even though the child wants to attend.

Legal IMPOSSIBILITY is the inability to perform a contract due to unavoidable and unanticipated circumstances.

U.S. auto sales drop 10% in early December

DETROIT — Sales of new U.S.-built cars slipped 10.5 percent in early December, the eight major domestic auto manufacturers reported Wednesday. Auto analysts blamed 1989 car prices, as well as rising interest rates.

The U.S. operations of the Japanese auto makers, however, generally did well, due to expanding production at their new American manufacturing facilities. Japanese-designed cars built in such "transplant" plants are counted as domestic cars rather than imports.

Sales of U.S.-built cars fell to 167,438 units during early December, down from 187,126 in early December of 1987. Sales by General Motors fell 12.9 percent; Ford dropped 11.6 percent and Chrysler was off by 8.6 percent.

"My guess is that (sales fell because of) the new higher prices on the 1989 models," said David Healy, an auto analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert. An additional factor, he added, could be that auto financing companies have been suffering some losses, and are now less willing to approve financing for marginal consumers.

Others argued that the decline was part of a longer-range slowdown. The slow sales rate is "a continuation of a trend that began two months ago," said Theodore Sullivan, an automotive analyst with WEPA Group. "Consumers are reacting against high interest rates... (which) raise the purchase price (of a new car), and play with the consumers' psyches."

If the early December slump continues, analysts warn that the domestic companies may have to pare back their production plans to reduce their inventories of unsold cars. "I think we're going to see a gradual slowing of the new car market," said Chris Codrigan, an auto analyst with J. D. Power & Associates.

S&P drops M-K paper rating

BOISE (AP) — Standard & Poor's has lowered Morrison Knudsen Corp.'s commercial paper rating a notch, six weeks after the New York-based bond rating agency put M-K on its CreditWatch list.

The company's rating was dropped Monday, one week after Moody's Investors Services Inc. took a similar action.

M-K's S&P rating fell from A2 to A3. The Moody's rating went from P2 to P3.

The downgradings will make it slightly more expensive for M-K to borrow money. Most of M-K's short-term borrowing is done by issuing commercial paper on almost a daily basis, said Michael Shirley, vice president of administration for the Boise-based construction and engineering company.

"We're disappointed, certainly, but we're not terribly surprised," Shirley said.

S&P and Moody's acted because of M-K's writedowns of $155 million over the past 15 months. The writedowns were caused largely by protracted problems at the company's shipbuilding subsidiary and costs associated with liquidating its real estate operations.

The losses have eroded stockholders' equity in M-K, which in turn has reduced the company's financial flexibility, S&P analyst Kenneth Pelt said.

First Security Corp. buys Davis Bank

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — First Security Corp. has agreed in principle to acquire Davis County Bank and its holding company, Davis Bancorporation, said Spencer F. Eccles, First Security chairman and chief executive officer.

Under the agreement, Davis County Bank would merge into First Security Bank of Utah, with Davis County Bank shareholders receiving First Security Corp. common stock.

Davis County Bank is a state-chartered institution with branches in Centerville, Layton and Farmington, Utah, and total deposits of $24 million. First Security has 161 banking offices in Utah, Idaho and Wyoming and deposits of $3.9 billion.

British Petroleum may be selling Utah firm

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — British Petroleum Co. is rumored to be considering selling its BP Minerals American of Salt Lake City to another British firm, RTZ Corp., the Wall Street Journal said.

BP Minerals includes the Kennecott copper operation at Magna. It also includes gold operations in Utah, the southeast part of the United States, Nevada and a new development in New Guinea.

According to Tuesday's Wall Street Journal, it is rumored that BP may sell its minerals division for $4 billion and possibly use proceeds to buy the Los Angeles-based Unocal Corp.

RTZ is the acronym for the old Rio Tinto Zinc, a worldwide mining company.

Federal regulations endanger chemical farming

MOSCOW (AP) — The story of modern agriculture is in large part a story of chemical fertilizers, herbicides and pesticides. But the partnership between laboratory and field that gave U.S. farmers some of the world's most productive crop yields is beginning to unravel.

A constricting network of federal regulations is making the compounds stashed in an agricultural chemical dealer's tanks or a farmer's storage shed less of a friend and more a potential foe.

As the federal government classifies these chemicals as hazardous, the cost of disposing of them becomes enormous — up to $600 for a 55-gallon drum. And when some chemicals are deemed too dangerous to have in the environment at any cost, farmers who have come to depend on them to ensure crop yields sometimes find themselves without an alternative.

"We're a chemically dependent society," says Gordon Cockrum, agricultural chemical sales manager for the McGregor Company in Colfax, Wash., one of the largest agricultural chemical dealers on the Palouse.

"I wanted these things, but with them have come complexities. We asked for them. The issue has sprung to life this year as federal regulations governing the storage and reporting of chemicals have gone into effect. Spurs have been put to the process so all the pesticides registered and approved for use by the Environmental Protection Agency are being retested using stiffer guidelines to determine their safety.

Chemical dealers and farmers, as concerned with environmental safety as anyone, generally applaud the tightened regulations," said Cockrum. But they worry about the expense of complying.

Joe Anderson, a Pottlatch area farmer, agrees. "The fear is we're going to find ourselves one day all of a sudden having huge amounts of record-keeping requirements. I would dare say most of us are a little hazy as to just what we are supposed to be doing," he said.

"I think I am on top of changes, but it's a full-time job. I find, as time goes along, much more of my time is devoted to that kind of thing."

Paul McGourty, an Idaho Department of Agriculture pesticide specialist, said the agency is increasingly becoming a contact point for farmers and chemical dealers confused about new federal regulations.

As frustrating as recordkeeping requirements may be, and as costly as disposal has become, an even greater concern is that the EPA will withdraw registration on a chemical for which there is no adequate substitute.

"Raped is a cause for some concern now, and it may very well cause a good deal more. The problem is, we have to spray the crop for the cabbage seed pod weevil. We use ethyl parathion. If we lose that, we are out of the rape business," Anderson said bluntly.

'The fear is we're going to find ourselves one day all of a sudden having huge amounts of record-keeping requirements. I would dare say most of us are a little hazy as to just what we are supposed to be doing.'
— Joe Anderson, Pottlatch farmer

Chuck Sherk, chief of the pesticides section of Region 10 for the EPA, said ethyl parathion "is one I would be concerned about." He said the EPA has scheduled pesticides for re-registration based on their toxicity and the likelihood humans will be exposed to them. The EPA is looking at re-registering 600 chemicals. It had been proceeding at a rate of testing about 25 chemicals a year, "a process that would have taken us past the year 2000," said Sherk. But Congress this year ordered the process dramatically speeded up, to be completed in about five years.

Lentil growers, for several years, have not known from one season to the next whether the herbicide dimosoy will continue to be approved. There is no substitute for it. "If we lose it, we'll just grow the weeds or not grow lentils," said Anderson.

Cockrum noted the use of chlorinated hydrocarbons (pesticides like DDT) have already been banned because they do not readily break down and accumulate in the food chain.

Speculated Paul Collins, manager of the Wilbur-Ellis Corp. retail outlets in Pullman, Wash., and Moscow: "The next class of chemicals we might lose is the phenoxy's. They are beginning to find them in water tables in country with sandy soil, and I am sure they will come under severe scrutiny within the next few years. I would say that 70 percent of the weed control done around here is done with something that has phenoxy's in it."

Sherk said chemical companies are reluctant to bear costs in the millions of dollars to develop alternatives to pesticides for minor crops. "The vast majority of pesticides were developed for corn, wheat and soybeans. It costs millions to get a new active ingredient on the market. You can't make a profit to defray those costs on minor crops."

Farmers, Anderson said, are just beginning to feel the grip of tightening restrictions, and Sherk agreed most farmers do not yet harbor enough pesticides to fall under EPA guidelines as hazardous waste generators. Even as those guidelines tighten, Sherk acknowledged, the EPA does not have enough money to police small waste generators.

But the fear of getting stuck with large quantities of chemicals that might lose their registration has changed dealers' methods, say Cockrum and Collins.

"We have chemicals that even before they've lost their registration we have chosen to pull them out of our inventory," said Collins. "We don't accept back partial containers anymore. Farmers have to sit down and sharpen the pencil and do a better job of figuring out the amounts they need."

So far, dealers have been able to stay ahead of the tightening web of regulations, "but it is a challenge, an absolute challenge," said Cockrum. He said the challenge is made even more compelling by the increased cost of disposing of a chemical that loses its registration. "In the past, if the EPA banned use of a substance, there was an indemnification clause."

Ag expert considers best '89 food buys

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chicken, rather than beef and pork, and fresh vegetables rather than canned or frozen ones are likely to be the best bargains for consumers in 1989, according to a top Agriculture Department food economist.

Prices for eggs are likely to shoot upward as much as 20 percent, and substantial price increases for fresh fruits, cereals and bakery products also can be expected, department economist Ralph Parlett says in a 1989 outlook report issued Wednesday.

Overall, consumer food prices should rise about 3 to 5 percent next year, Parlett said, roughly equaling this year's 4 percent increase. This year's rise means food prices have about kept pace with price increases in the rest of the economy, although consumers may notice their food bills more because of more frequent trips to the grocery store, he said.

A variety of factors influence food costs, including the amount farmers make for the raw commodities, the costs of packaging materials, and charges for processing and distribution. In 1988, packaging cost increases were the main contributor to a 5 percent increase in processing and distribution expense, while farmers averaged 3.5 percent more for their raw products.

For 1989, Parlett said increases in egg prices will be the sharpest in the marketbasket, 15 to 20 percent, in part because of a squeeze produced by increased use of eggs in processing and a decline in production because of higher feed costs and poor returns to producers.

Other steep increases are likely in fresh fruits, which may go up 6 to 9 percent because of strong consumer demand both domestically and in the export market. Orange prices are likely to remain strong because of growing purchases by Japan, and a smaller apple crop will lead to higher prices there.

Continued effects of the 1988 drought will be felt in the area of cereals and bakery products, Parlett said. Prices are expected to rise 4 to 6 percent next year due to a combination of grain price increases and strengthened demand from health-conscious consumers who see cereals as a good and easy-to-prepare nutrition source.

The biggest bargain for shoppers, compared to current prices, will be in poultry, Parlett said. Growing supplies will bring prices down by at least 4 percent and possibly as much as 7 percent, he said. Beef production next year is likely to drop by 6 to 8 percent, leading to a moderate 1 to 3 percent price increase, similar to that expected for pork.

Prices for fresh vegetables, which climbed this year because of the drought, will show little change next year because of expanding production, the economist forecast.

Priest sells art to keep his jobs center open

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — A Russian Orthodox priest with only $40 left to keep his jobs center open says the hard times are forcing him to sell his prized possessions, two 19th-century French lithographs.
The Rev. John DacCheck, who operates the non-profit New Times Service Center in nearby Glassport to help unemployed steel workers, has an overdue telephone bill of several hundred dollars and he already has topped businesses in the depressed Monongahela Valley for donations.
"To raise money, he placed classified ads in Pittsburgh newspapers Wednesday and Thursday offering two works by French artists Honoré Daumier and Jacques Villone for a total of $500. He estimates they are worth $500 to $1,000 each.
"I have to do what I have to do and if I look stupid doing it, that's too bad. I've had these for 20 years, but to keep the place going. I'd sell them," he said.

DacCheck, 42, received 10 such lithographs as gifts when he was a businessman nearly 20 years ago; the two are all that remain.
Slowly and surely through my life, whenever a financial crunch came up, I would sell one," he said. "I'm terrible at asking for money. It kind of tears something out of you to have to do that."
DacCheck, assistant pastor of a small independent church in Washington, Pa., founded the center seven months ago with $800 of his own money and a monthly $50 stipend from his church. Job-seekers are asked, but not required, to make a $2 donation for job leads and a $5 donation for resume help.
The agency, staffed by volunteers, has provided about 900 lead-off steel workers and others with a free, fast and simple way to find employment and job training.

Street Sheets help the homeless

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — They are pulled from dirty pockets, tattered and scribbled upon, then consulted like road maps to the compassionate heart of the city: Want a free meal? Medical care? Counseling? A place to sober up?
For the homeless in New York City, the answers can be found in Street Sheets, a sort of Yellow Pages for the down-and-out.

All but unknown to most New Yorkers, Street Sheets have become an institution among the homeless since their introduction in the autumn of 1986. The single-sheet listings, printed on durable, non-rip paper, are treasured, memorized, copied and passed from hand to hand in shelters, soup kitchens and street corners around the city.

"They're legendary," said Bill Batson, who runs the Grand Central Food Program for the Coalition for the Homeless. "The people that I know that are surviving the best and seem like they have the best chance of improving themselves are equipped with Street Sheets."
From an initial printing of 6,300 and listings covering one neighborhood of Manhattan, Street Sheets have grown to a planned circulation of 70,000 this year, with listings covering all of Manhattan and the South Bronx, at a cost of $35,000. The 1989 Manhattan listings will hit the streets this weekend.

Street Sheets are the work of Suzanne Firtko, 45, an architectural historian who got the idea while working as a volunteer in a soup kitchen at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.
"Customers continually asked for names of other places to get free meals or other assistance. I began to find that this was very difficult information to find — that there was no organized way to find out where they can go," Ms. Firtko recalled in an interview.
So she began to collect information, relying on tips from homeless people and her own investigations, until she had a list of 54 places on Manhattan's Upper West Side that offered help to the homeless.
Then she applied her own criteria, visited each place and eliminated all but 25.
Ms. Firtko excluded any place that required a referral from a social service agency — a common stipulation among providers of care to the homeless. "The referral process," she said, "is stressful and difficult for many homeless people; she wanted places that were 'no hassle.'"

The first batch of Street Sheets, providing listings for the Upper West Side only, were snapped up in five days. Ms. Firtko said. Paper for the listings was provided by the DuPont Corp.; money for printing came from a private benefactor.

After a second printing of the Upper West Side list, Ms. Firtko came out with a separate list for Harlem. Then, last December, after incorporating as a non-profit organization and receiving contributions from foundations and corporations, she expanded Street Sheets to include editions for Homeless New York man sits bundled against the cold on Fifth Avenue

The East Side, the Lower East Side and the Chelsea-Clinton neighborhood.
Last year's printing run was 60,000, and demand for the listings was "overwhelming," Ms. Firtko said. Estimates of the number of homeless in the city vary; the Coalition for the Homeless says there are 60,000 to 80,000.

Navy decommissions its last Hull Class ship

The Associated Press

MIDDLETOWN, R.I. — The Navy has decommissioned its last Hull Class destroyer, signaling the end of the "all-gun" ships that attacked with artillery power rather than missiles.
"I share with you a sense of history, as the last Navy gunship in history," Capt. John E. Branelli said at Thursday's ceremony for the Edson at the Naval Education and Training Center.
The Edson's three 5-inch guns supported group forces in Vietnam, for which the ship won Meritorious Unit Commendations in 1967 and 1968. In 1968, the Edson fired more than 23,000 70-mm projectiles and was named "top gun" destroyer by Naval gunfire spotters in South Vietnam.

The ship, commissioned in 1958, was named for Marine Gen. Merritt Austin Edson, a Medal of Honor winner.
Since 1977, the Edson has been used to train officers and enlisted personnel in the Naval Reserve Force.
The ship is scheduled to be displayed at the Intrepid Air and Space Museum in New York.

Philadelphia demolishes homeless' cardboard city

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Homeless people seeking shelter from freezing temperatures gathered Friday in a subway concourse a day after city workers demolished a "cardboard city" that about 75 street people had built there.

The city crews Thursday morning removed the boxes, mattresses, blankets, crates and makeshift furniture that some of the homeless had brought to the cavernous underground passageway above one of the city's subway lines.
Mayor W. Wilson Goode told a news conference that the action was only a cleanup, not an eviction.
"We intend to clean up every day,"

Goode said Thursday. "We will not forcibly remove the persons who are there."
One homeless man, Charles Twigg, 59, said he didn't blame police officers who asked the homeless, most of them men, to leave to allow sanitation workers to clean the area.
"That's their duty; that's their job," said Twigg.

Several of the homeless blamed the media in part for the cleanup because of extensive coverage of their communal living in the concourse.
Workers for the Philadelphia Committee for the Homeless arrived Thursday night to bring food for the returning homeless.
Several members of a Philadelphia church prayed in a circle with about eight homeless men, and workers from city-funded shelters stopped by to gather the few who were willing to go with them.

Police said they would not prevent people from returning to the concourse, which the homeless have used for shelter for a decade.
Terry Ryan, 19, had assembled one of the most elaborate cardboard homes, using wire and two metal poles to combine several smaller boxes into a 7-by-14-foot shelter, with plastic sheets to cut down drafts.
By Thursday morning, the shelter was disassembled.

"The police captain came to my door and asked me to tell everyone to get out," Ryan said. "I had three beds, a table and chair, heat, had running water."

Ryan, who said he has been homeless for more than a year, said he lived at the Broad Street subway concourse for the past two months with five friends in his "condo."

Other homeless people said they were permitted to take what belongings they could carry when the cleanup began.
Police Capt. Lawrence Norton said the homeless left the concourse on their own Thursday morning. "We've had no problems," he said.

Police had planned to evict the homeless officially from the concourse. A police spokeswoman, Cpl. Theresa Young, said she did not know why the decision was changed.

It's the best and worst of times on Wall Street

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wall Street is a house divided as Christmas approaches, with merger specialists raking in big year-end bonuses while brokers fear layoffs because of the slump in stock trading.
"Somebody could easily say it's like Charles Dickens: It's the best of times, it's the worst of times," said P.J. Johnson, a spokesman for Nomura Securities International Inc.

The surge of takeover business this year has enriched investment bankers. The kingpin of leveraged buyouts, Henry Kravis of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., is likely to earn $40 million to $50 million or more this year, estimated Perrin Long, an analyst for Lipper Analytical Services Inc.

Meanwhile, Wall Streeters whose livelihoods depend on the volume of stock trading are suffering because transactions by individuals and institutions have tailed off since the crash of Oct. 19, 1987.

Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. announced this week it had laid off about 120 employees, largely in its municipal bond and stock departments. That was a fraction of the 1,800 that Grumman Corp. announced it will lay off come January, but it nonetheless stremors through Wall Street.

Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., a unit of Sears, Roebuck & Co. that depends heavily on retail brokerage business, saw its profits slashed in half through the first nine months of the year. It has had no major layoffs and none are in the works, but many brokers who work on straight commissions have left.

"The mood is probably as bad as I've seen it since 1972 or 1973 when the bear market was really bad," said Bard Quku, a senior vice president for sales at Deau Witter in New York.
Quku said his own business has held up well. But he said, "There's some people who are losing hope."

"The mood has not been a real jovial one the last month or two," said Gary Goldstein, president of the Whitney Group, an executive recruiting firm that specializes in top-paying Wall Street jobs.

Spirits have picked up recently as it became apparent that bonuses overall would not be slashed from their 1987 levels, Goldstein said. Bonuses may fall 20 percent to 50 percent for stock traders and municipal finance specialists, but rise for investment bankers, he estimated.
Income producers like sales people and investment bankers get money from a bonus pool based mainly on performance. Back-office employees, from mailroom clerks to the personnel director, are getting bonuses equaling about 20 weeks of their salaries.
"The decline in living standards is, of course, all relative."

"Even in this operating environment, anyone who wants to work hard and has a little bit of luck, he or she can probably make more on Wall Street than just about anywhere else," Long said.

Retrenchment in many cases means selling a second house or forgoing an expensive vacation. "I spoke to someone yesterday who had a horse farm in Princeton who's selling the horses, selling the farm," Goldstein said.
Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. canceled money for Christmas parties this year, as it did in the aftermath of the 1987 stock market crash, but employees in retail trading put $100 apiece so they could have their own party Friday night.

"We only took the hundred bucks from the people we thought could afford it. We're not making big figures," said Peter DaPuzza, the senior executive vice president for retail trading.
Everybody has confidence at Shearson that this, too, will pass and things will get better," DaPuzza said.

"The downturn on Wall Street has provoked some to go into businesses they once dismissed. Goldstein said he knew of a Harvard Business School graduate, who probably made $1 million a year at his peak, who left investment banking to go into the family clothing retailing business.

David Resler, chief economist of Nomura Securities, writes a yuletide review of the year each Christmas, and this year the theme was the slump on Wall Street. It said in part:
"The year eighty-eight found the markets less frisky
"As investors judged trading as overly risky
"So many decided, on the sidelines they'd stay
"And the rest took great care when the markets they'd play."

Everybody has confidence at Shearson

JUDGE JACK HAMPTON Believes voters won't care

Judge reveals sentencing bias

The Associated Press

DALLAS — A gay rights leader warned Friday that outraged voters will remember a judge's statement that he gave a lighter sentence to a murderer partly because his two victims were homosexuals.

"These two guys that got killed wouldn't have been killed if they hadn't been cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys," State District Judge Jack Hampton told the Dallas Times Herald in Friday's editions.
"I don't much care for queers cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys," he said Thursday. "I've got a teen-age boy."
Hampton, 56, who has been on the bench eight years, said the homosexuality of the murder victims entered into his decision on Nov. 28 to give the 18-year-old killer a 30-year prison term instead of a maximum life sentence.

The judge said he would have given a harsher sentence to Richard Lee Bednarski if his victims had been, for example, "a couple of housewives out shopping, not hurting anybody."
Hampton expressed "no reservations about his statements, the newspaper reported.

"Just spell my name right," Hampton said. "If it makes anybody mad, they'll forget it by 1990 (election year)."

statements.
He said he hopes Hampton's remarks will prompt the public to work to remove him from the bench when he comes up for re-election.

"Judge Hampton said it himself: No one will remember this in 1990. But we will remember," Waybourn said.

"Being at the wrong place at the wrong time is just a tragedy," Waybourn said of the killings. "I'm sorry for the families of the men who were killed. They don't deserve this. And Hampton doesn't deserve to be a judge."

Robert Flowers, executive director of the state Commission on Judicial Conduct, declined to comment on Hampton's statements and said the commission would investigate.

Police dub him 'Fumbles' but he's robbed 30 banks

The Associated Press

PALM HARBOR, Fla. — He drops wads of cash and even lets his handgun slip at times, but the robber defied agents dub "Fumbles" remains free after committing as many as 30 bank heists in Florida in four years.
The latest robbery occurred Wednesday, when a tall man in a baseball cap, cotton gloves and sunglasses stuck up the Beneficial Savings Bank.

The 6-foot-2-inch robber left quickly with an undisclosed amount of money, and once again nobody knows whether the getaway was on foot or by car.
He appears to stay outside and wait until it's rather quiet," Duneдин police Detective John Brown said Thursday. His department suspects the man in two bank heists this year.

"I don't think anybody that robs a bank can do it without being caught," Tampa FBI spokesman Larry Curtin said. "But he's been successful for over three years. I don't know why."

The bandit dons the cap, sunglasses and gloves. Then, armed with a handgun, he walks inside and heads straight to a teller's window. He demands money and grabs whatever he can.

He doesn't bother to make employees remove money from vaults because that is time-consuming, detectives say.
