Revived Hugo strikes coast of South Carolina

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Hurricane Hugo struck the coast of South Carolina with renewed fury Thursday.

It roared ashore after thousands of coastal residents in southeastern states grabbed what they could carry and fled inland on jammed highways.

"This is a disaster striking us right in the eye," Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr. said from his City Hall command post in Charleston, where the powerful hurricane downed power lines, snapped trees and caused utility transformers to explode.

"All we can do now is pray and hope all the precautions we have taken have been sufficient," Riley said as Hugo's eye bore in on the city. "I just hope and pray we can get through this without any losses of life."

Hurricane-force winds hit the coast by 7:15 p.m. MDT, said Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

He said an observation post just off the South Carolina coast had reported sustained winds of 76 mph, and Myrtle Beach was reporting winds up to 65 mph. Winds are termed hurricane force when they reach 74 mph.

As of 9 p.m. MDT, Hugo's eye was about 10 miles off the coast of Charleston and was expected to move over the city within the hour, Sheets said. The eye was about 10 miles across and top winds were still at 135 mph.

The hurricane was expected to turn gradually to the north, flooding wide areas as it moved up the East Coast. The storm posed a 19 percent chance of hitting New York City and a 16 percent chance of hitting Boston before Sunday night, the hurricane center said.

As Hugo neared the coast, roads from Hilton Head to Myrtle Beach, 200 miles north, were nearly empty, as were the boarded-up resort towns themselves. Power lines and trees were downed in some spots and water flooded roads. Stop lights and neon lights were knocked out in Myrtle Beach.

"One eyewitness said 'It's like a light show,'" said Amy Garrison, a reporter at WKZZ AM-FM in Myrtle Beach.

"It's really bad. Winds are starting to stop real bad," said Mary Stevens, who with her family evacuated their home in Socastee, outside Myrtle Beach, and took shelter at the Socastee High School.

In Charleston, the historic City Hall was boarded up, businesses were closed and classes at public schools and universities canceled. Riley ordered residents living in one-story homes to evacuate.

Hospitals stockpiled supplies, discharging any patients well enough to go and moving others to hospitals inland to make room for emergency patients, officials said.

About 12,000 people had checked into 83 shelters across the state as of Thursday evening, and more were expected, said Bennish Brown, a spokesman for the Emergency Operations Center in Columbia, 220 miles northwest of here.

Banks trying to mend farm fences

By CRAIG LINCOLN Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — First Security Bank, concerned about its image after farmers reacted angrily to its latest move in a bankruptcy case, is developing a strategy to win agricultural support but can't say exactly what it is yet.

"It's at the forefront of our thoughts," said Dave Wood, local manager for First Security.

First Security is waiting for federal regulators to approve its purchase of locally owned Twin Falls Bank & Trust, known for supporting agricultural interests.

CURTIS H. EATON

Salt Lake City-based First Security recently challenged every farmer's claim to beans in the Hawkins Co. Ltd. bankruptcy case. Hawkins failed last year after a year-end inventory found the warehouse short on beans.

"Any time you have these issues, it's always cause to be concerned about your image, because you're dealing with perceptions," Wood said.

First Security is working on the problem, but Wood couldn't definitively say what they will do to win local farmers' hearts.

"It's an unfortunate circumstance and hopefully one of the issues will never arise," he said.

Some farmers at a Wednesday night meeting of Hawkins growers said they were withdrawing their money from the Bank & Trust and First Security because the bank challenged their claims that they owned beans stored in Hawkins warehouse.

Texas bus mishap kills 19, injures 64

The Associated Press

ALTON, Texas — A bus crowded with youngsters on their way to school Thursday plunged more than 40 feet into a water-filled pit after being struck by a delivery truck that ran a stop sign.

Nineteen students were killed and 64 other people were injured, five critically. Dazed survivors scrambled out of the submerged bus and stood on it, screaming for help. Passers-by dived in 42 feet of water to pull out survivors and the dead trapped in the bus.

Four boats, firefighters from six departments and about 10 divers helped in the rescue, as notebooks and school papers floated in the murky water.

"I thought I was going to die," Alex De Leon, 18, said as he stood in front of Mission Hospital in muddy pants and hospital slippers, with cuts on his face and bruised hands. "It just filled up with water real quick."

"I opened up a window, took out my sister, took out a couple of friends and it was already full of water, and you could smell the diesel," he said.

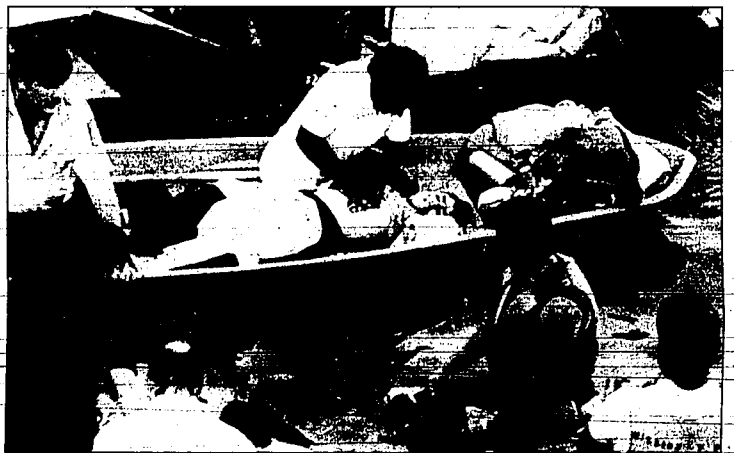

"They were just trapped. We had to break the glass of the windows to get in," said Al Nye, a diver who pulled seven bodies from the bus.

The bus driver had picked up the last of his 80 students en route to nearby Mission High School when the bus was hit by a soft-drink truck just 6:40 a.m. MDT at an intersection just east of Alton, just north of the U.S.-Mexico border.

De Leon and other survivors said the truck driver ran a stop sign and struck the bus, sending it careening off the road about 20 feet and into the gravel pit. The truck remained alongside the road.

Truck driver Ruben Perez said his brakes failed, said Sgt. Israel Pacheco of the state Department of Public Safety. The truck-pulled a state-inspection last week. Coca-Cola officials said. No charges have been filed against Perez.

Roads were dry and the weather was clear at the time of the accident.

Authorities used a crane to pull the bus from the pit and dragged the 19 victims. Rescuers later cuffed off their search and said no students were missing.

All the dead were 12 to 18 years old, said Mike Cox, a public safety spokesman in Austin. A temporary morgue was set up at a civic building in Mission.

Francis parents rushed to the scene and swamped phone lines at the school and police station. One woman was carried away in an ambulance, hysterical after seeing the bodies of her two daughters pulled from the water. The Monitor-News reported.

Another wept as she was told about the death of her child, the newspaper said. "How can she be dead? She had just gotten on the bus five minutes before," the woman said.

Students' families met with counselors and school officials at the city's community center. "It's very somber. The whole city is in shock right now," said fire Capt. Rene Lopez.

Students brought by ambulance to McAllen Medical Center were soaked from head to toe, muddy with no shoes, said Susie Ramon, a student nurse. Mission school Superintendent Ralph Cantu canceled all extracurricular activities for the weekend "because we've had a tragedy. How can you be cheering at a football game when something like this has happened?"

Cox said it was the worst school bus accident in Texas history. The nation's worst such accident was in 1976, when 28 Yuba City, Calif., high school students and a teacher were killed after their bus plunged off a freeway ramp. In 1959, 27 people were killed when a bus went into a creek in Prestonsburg, Ky.

Judge awards woman control of embryos

The Associated Press

MARYVILLE, Tenn. — A woman fighting for control of seven frozen embryos in an unprecedented divorce case on Thursday was awarded temporary custody by a judge who ruled that life begins at conception and the woman should be allowed to carry them to term.

Blount County Circuit Judge W. Dale Young, ruling in favor of Marcie Sue Davis over her estranged husband, Junior Lewis Davis, declared that their embryos were children not property.

"I'm thrilled. It's definitely what I wanted," Mrs. Davis told a news conference in Tusculum, Fla., where she now lives.

Davis said she would appeal in the state court system, and potentially beyond. "They are going to force me to become a father against my wishes," he said.

Mrs. Davis said she would not try to get pregnant immediately. "I'm wanting to see about the appeal then hopefully after that try to have a child," she said. "I could (try) at any time, but I have to recover from all of this and then consider starting a program."

She added that the earliest she would try to get pregnant was January.

"As far as we are aware, this is the first judicial decision which has declared an embryo — human being," said Charles Clifford, Davis' attorney, adding that he "would ask" the court to prevent Mrs. Davis from implanting the embryos until appeals are settled.

Clifford said the ruling could conflict with the Supreme Court's landmark Roe vs. Wade decision allowing women to have abortions. Janet Mayfield, the attorney who will handle Davis' appeal, said the decision might also conflict with state laws on property interests and anatomical gifts.

The case grew out of the decade-old technology of "test-tube babies," or in-vitro fertilization. The Davises became embroiled in the dispute after they were unable to have children and turned to in vitro fertilization.

The couple produced nine embryos in December under the guidance of Dr. I. Ray King at a Knoxville clinic. Two were implanted in Mrs. Davis but failed to develop. The others were put in "cold storage." But then, Davis sued for divorce in February.

During testimony in August, Davis, 31, said he would feel "trapped if my reproductive rights" if Mrs. Davis were allowed to implant the embryos without his consent.

Mrs. Davis, 29, argued the embryos represent her best chance of becoming a mother. She

Steer's owner forfeits $28,000

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A teenager whose steer won grand prize at the Ohio State Fair will forfeit her ribbon and $28,000 following charges the animal had been entered under another name in Illinois and its hide dyed to conceal the ruse.

The Ohio Expositions Commission approved 10-0 on Thursday an agreement reached with the family of 17-year-old Susan Shealy, whose Angus-creeper steer Hank won the blue ribbon in August.

"The message is not to cheat at the livestock show at the Ohio State Fair," said Jack Foust, general manager of the fair.

Foust said officials could not prove suspicions that Hank had been shown under the name Carl at an Illinois farm show in July — a violation of the rules.

But there was no question, officials said, that a white spot on Hank's belly had been dyed black at the Ohio fair, also a violation.

Under the agreement, the Shealy family admitted no wrongdoing, but the girl from Tiro will not get her prize money and must give up the ribbon. She and her family also were barred from competition for five years.

Family members did not return prizes, Foust said.

Farm shows have become increasingly lucrative for farm children who raise champion livestock. Hank was sold for $28,000 at the fair Aug. 14.

Hank's credentials came into question when fair officials received a tip five days later that Hank might be Carl, a second-place steer at a farm show in Illinois on July 24.

Investigators said black dye had been used to cover a swirl of white hair on Hank's belly. A similar white patch can be seen in a photograph of Carl.

Fair rules prohibit misrepresentation of an animal's history or ownership and any alterations in an animal's natural appearance.

Hank was impounded when the investigation began so investigators could wait for his hair to grow out.

The family of 12-year-old Jeremy Simmons, who exhibited Carl at the Illinois fair, has also denied any wrongdoing. They said Carl was destroyed after the Illinois fair.

Talks may narrow time frame for summit

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush met with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze Thursday, opening three days of high-level talks expected to narrow a time frame for a superpower summit next year and spur chemical and nuclear weapons discussions.

After nearly two hours of discussions, Shevardnadze said the two sides had not set a date for a summit meeting between Bush and Soviet Premier Mikhail S. Gorbachev but, "We have concluded that a summit is necessary. There is no doubt about that."

a summit meeting might not occur until next year, but said it would be in the United States. Another U.S. official, speaking privately, said, "I would steer you away from this year, definitely." The high-level meetings began with a White House session attended by Bush, Shevardnadze and Baker. The discussions will continue between Baker and Shevardnadze on Friday and Saturday at a wilderness lodge near Jackson Hole, Wyo. The two were flying there together on an Air Force jet.

Baker said that there was "a full discussion of a summit" and that "we hope to have a general time frame for a summit which we could announce while we're in Wyoming."

Shevardnadze spoke with reporters in the White House driveway before getting into a waiting limousine. Using the same language as Baker, Shevardnadze said the talks in Wyoming probably would set "a general time frame" for a Bush-Gorbachev summit. The foreign minister said, "I think it is entirely possible that we'll have something more definite for you in Wyoming."

Bush said Monday he felt he was "under no rush" to have a summit.

While saying the timing and site for a summit have not been determined, Baker said, "I think it's our turn to host such a meeting. The last superpower summit was in Moscow in 1988."

Senate votes to ease abortion rules, ignores threat of veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Thursday to ease slightly restrictions for federally financed abortions, brushing aside outnumbered conservatives and flouting a White House threat to veto any attempt to liberalize regulations.

Lawmakers on a voice vote agreed to legislation prohibiting federal assistance for abortions except for pregnancies that threaten the mother's life or those caused by rape or incest "promptly reported" to authorities.

Under current law, the only exception is for cases in which the woman's life is endangered.

Conservatives conceded they didn't have the votes to block the provision and spoke only briefly about why they believe expanding the use of abortion is wrong.

"A child conceived in the crime of rape or incest is no less human than those other children conceived under more loving circumstances," said Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H.

Humphrey and others said their strategy will be to try to eliminate the language when House-Senate negotiators try to shape a compromise bill, or to let President Bush veto it. The House version retains the current restriction.

Pro-choice lobbyists, used to years of restrictive abortion legislation emerging from Congress, said they were glad for the victory.

"It makes it clear that in the Senate of the United States, there is at least on some issues a solid pro-choice majority," said Morton H. Halperin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's Washington office.

The provision is part of a $157.4 million measure for health, labor and education programs for fiscal 1990, which begins Oct. 1.

The legislation also provides $1.6 billion for AIDS research and treatment, $370 million more than this year; $1.2 billion for added child care programs, and $23.7 billion for education, $1 billion above this year's level.

Conservatives fared well in other parts of the bill.

The Senate voted 95-3 for a measure sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., blocking federal money for public education on AIDS to states that don't require authorities or doctors to notify people whose spouses are found to be infected with the AIDS virus. The bill provides $195.8 million for the initiative.

Lawmakers also decided to bar federal financing of material for school children "which promote or encourage homosexuality, or use words stating that homosexuality is 'normal,' or 'natural,' or 'healthy.'" are sneaking in side doors," said Elaine Skellon, a registered nurse working at the Conway High School shelter near Myrtle Beach. We tried to get most guests in at doors, but people were still coming in."

American Red Cross relief efforts were buckling under the number of evacuees, said Brian Rubery, a spokesman in Savannah, Ga., who appealed for help.

Right now the Red Cross is sheltering tens of thousands of people all along the Eastern seaboard. This of course is at the same time that we're sheltering 25,000 people in Puerto Rico and the other Caribbean islands.

"We're beginning to feel the squeeze. Our resources are very tight. Right now Hugo is shaping up to be one of our biggest relief operations of the decade."

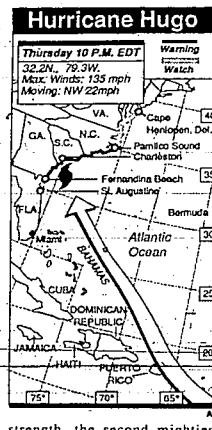

At 9 p.m. EDT, the eye of the storm was near latitude 32.4 degrees north and longitude 79.5 degrees west, forecasters said.

The hurricane's speed had picked up to 22 mph from 20 mph.

Near its center, Hugo's winds reached 135 mph, up from 125 mph earlier in the day and 105 mph the day before. North and South Carolina can expect tornadoes linked to Hugo for the next two days, according to the hurricane center.

The coastal area could expect hurricane force winds for 10 to 12 hours once the eye comes ashore, officials said. A hurricane warning was in effect between Fernandina Beach, Fla., and Oregon Inlet, N.C.

By late afternoon, Hugo was upgraded to a category 4 hurricane on the Saffir-Simpson scale of buildings will be swept clean off."

Evacuees queued up at gas stations and stripped store shelves of bottled water, bread and batteries. Officials warned coastal dwellers not to linger in beachfront areas as high floods could block escape routes. Five to 10 inches of rain was expected to fall.

The Navy moved ships out of coastal harbors to ride out the storm at sea. Army bases in coastal states moved helicopters inland or into shelters. Officials at Pope Air Force Base in Fayetteville, N.C., ordered 12 to 14 C-130 transport planes to Arkansas to wait out the storm.

In South Carolina, which was in a state of emergency, Gov. Carroll Campbell dispatched 400 National Guardsmen to assist a mandatory evacuation of coastal barrier islands and shorefront. About one-fifth of the state's 3.1 million residents live in eight coastal counties.

Late Thursday, the hurricane appeared to be skirting Georgia as it made landfall in South Carolina. Earlier in the day, however, the Georgia Emergency Management Agency ordered shelters and advised about 142,000 people — more than 95,000 of them in Chatham County — to leave their homes. Gov. Joe Frank Harris declared a state of emergency in six counties.

Coastal school systems canceled class for the rest of the week.

Only two storms of category 5 — the highest — have hit the United States this century; the 1935 Labor Day hurricane that killed 600 people in Florida would feed a normal 5-foot high tide that peaks after 2 a.m.

"On top of that will be waves," Sheets said earlier, and in many places on barrier islands "the

"I think it's important that the leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States get together periodically," Baker said. "It will have been some time if we're looking at something into next year — and I'm not saying that's the time frame we're going to give you in Wyoming. But I think it's important they get together from time to time and talk about the full range of problems between these two countries."

Bush and Baker met with Shevardnadze for about an hour in the Cabinet Room, along with aides on both sides. That session was followed by another meeting, lasting about a half hour in the Oval Office, that excluded most of the aides.

Shevardnadze said he delivered a letter "with the entire complex" of arms control issues.

Baker said the letter "in some instances restates long-held Soviet positions. In some instances it puts new twists on those positions." He declined to elaborate, saying the document required more analysis.

Baker described Gorbachev's letter as a reply to a June 20 letter from Bush. "This is a very serious letter. It is received by us in a serious manner," Baker said. He said the United States would reply to it in Wyoming.

Baker said he hoped the Wyoming meeting would produce "substantial progress" on verification and stability measures proposed by the United States for a strategic arms reduction treaty.

Shevardnadze, talking with reporters, was asked if Bush had disclosed any new initiatives. Bush said Monday he had some ideas that might capture the imagination of the Soviet people.

The White House session marked Bush's first direct contact with a high-ranking Soviet official since taking office last January and came amid complaints by congressional Democrats as well as officials in Moscow, about the pace of superpower relations.

Baker's meetings with Shevardnadze are expected to produce progress across a broad range of subjects, including:

- CHEMICAL WEAPONS. The two sides are reportedly close to an agreement to exchange information on their chemical weapons programs and to open stockpiles to inspections by the other side.
- Baker and Shevardnadze hope to resolve details about the extent of the information to be swapped and whether U.S. chemical weapons stored in West Germany would be included in the inspection scheme.
- NUCLEAR ARMS. The two sides are exploring steps to narrow differences blocking an agreement to cut by 30 percent to 50 percent the most deadly weapons in the superpowers' arsenals — long-range bombers, missiles and submarines.

Banks

Farmer Roger Vincent, summarizing First Security's legal arguments, called its position "vicious" and "an insult."

"That's been pretty much handled by our law firm in Boise," Wood said. "The bank has its position and we're trying to deal with that, accordingly on a local basis."

Bank & Trust employees have been on strike for four to eight days for several weeks, and "particularly this week," about Hawkins, said President Curtis H. Eaton.

The bank has convinced most of those customers that First Security's position on Hawkins was to affect their relationship with the bank — a relationship built on more than 80 years of service to agriculture, Eaton said.

"Clearly, I want to emphasize that the employees who have worked for the Bank & Trust are very interested in having this resolved as soon as possible," Eaton said, "so we can go back to doing the usual business with farmers and ranchers."

First Security argued in part that Hawkins had a history of overpaying farmers, resulting in a $2.66 million "windfall" profit by farmers while the bank was left with a $1.6 million, uncollectable loan.

Eaton said he didn't have detailed information on the case and couldn't comment on First Security's legal strategy.

"But it's not surprising that all the parties involved in the suit would have very aggressive attorneys to pursue their clients' interests," Eaton said.

"What's interesting, Eaton said, is that the bank and farmers have apparently ended up at odds over Hawkins' case.

"Neither one of them caused the problem," he said. "They both got drawn into it."

Embryos

contended that Davis was seeking a right not normally given to a man — whether a child should be born after he has fertilized the egg of his mate.

But Clifford said the four to eight cell embryos to be children, Young in effect treated the case like a custody dispute, in which the overriding concern is the best interest of the child.

"From genetics, the cells of a human embryo are differentiated, unique and specialized to the highest degree of distinction," the judge said. Thus, he said, "human life begins at conception."

Young said Mrs. Davis could have temporary custody so that she could have the eggs implanted in her womb in hopes of becoming pregnant. Child support, visitation and final custody will be decided if a birth occurs, he said.

"It was the toughest decision of my life as a judge," Young said in an interview. "On a scale of 1 to 10, it was a 10. I have agonized over it."

Young's ruling relied on a 1988 federal appeals court decision from Florida affirming the reliability of DNA profiling in determining a person's individuality — "that the life, genes for each special, unique individual are resident at conception and are the same for the person very soon after fertilization occurs."

The judge said the Roe vs. Wade decision was "in directly the opposite direction" from Davis vs. Davis. "Everything the court said in Roe vs. Wade dealt with the constitutionality of abortion statutes," he said. "That issue was not presented here."

But Clifford said the Roe decision "contains some explicit language that says that a fetus, which of course is much further along than an embryo, is not a human being for purposes of the United States Constitution."

Rogina Smith, executive director of the Pro-Life Council of Connecticut, called the court's decision "a victory for unborn children."

Ellen Clayton, an associate professor of law and pediatrics at Vanderbilt University, called the ruling "a disaster ... that could have implications on in vitro research and abortion."

"In the in vitro process, eggs are extracted surgically from a woman's body and mixed with sperm in a laboratory dish. Those that are fertilized can be implanted in the womb. Testimony indicated the success rate for the procedure averages about one in five."

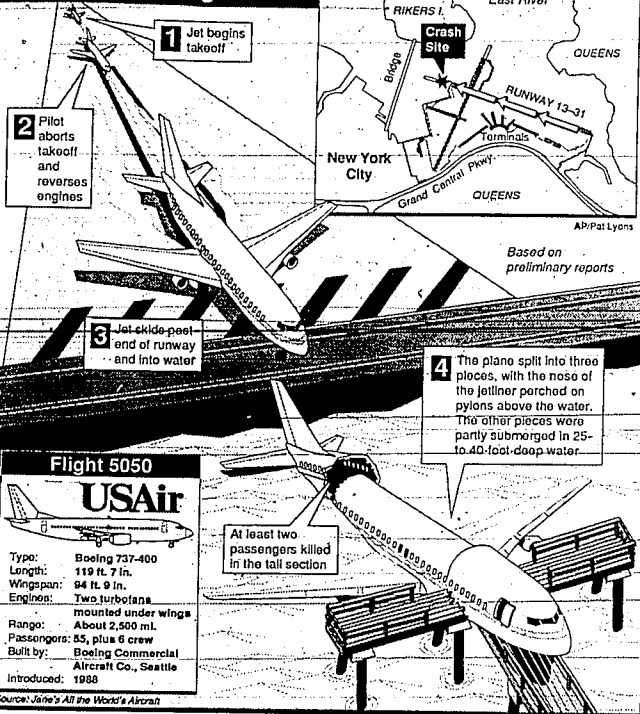

The Davises' divorce is not yet final. In his ruling Thursday, Young instructed Mrs. Davis to file final papers that would complete the proceeding. The couple did not contest other issues such as division of household property.

2 die, 59 survive aborted takeoff of USAir jetliner

NEW YORK (AP) — A USAir pilot told the control tower he was aborting takeoff moments before his jetliner slid into the East River, killing two passengers, but did not say what the problem was, officials said Thursday.

"There was no indication of why he was aborting," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Fred Farrar. "Until we know why the guy aborted the takeoff, we have no way of knowing the cause of the accident."

Survivors clung to the wings of the broken aircraft or grasped floating timbers after the Boeing 737-400 slid into Bowery Bay at 9:29 p.m. MDT Wednesday. Two women were killed, but 59 people including crew members survived.

Investigators took the jet's flight data and cockpit voice recorders to Washington for analysis. National Transportation Safety Board spokesman Allan Pollock said the data recorder should shed light on whether it was necessary to abort the takeoff.

NTSB investigators were seeking to interview the crew, but Farrar and Pollock said that to the best of their knowledge the cockpit crew had not been interviewed by Thursday evening.

USAir Chairman Edwin Colodny declined to discuss any details or possible causes of the crash, saying the NTSB had jurisdiction.

"The captain is taking advice of his own counsel," Colodny said at a news conference. He declined to identify the pilot or other crew members or describe their experience, other than to say they had been based in Baltimore and had worked for Piedmont Aviation before its merger with USAir in August.

Flight 5050, bound for Charlotte, N.C., was accelerating down the runway in a light rain when the control tower acknowledged the pilot's request to abort and cleared him to return to the last taxiway before the end of the runway.

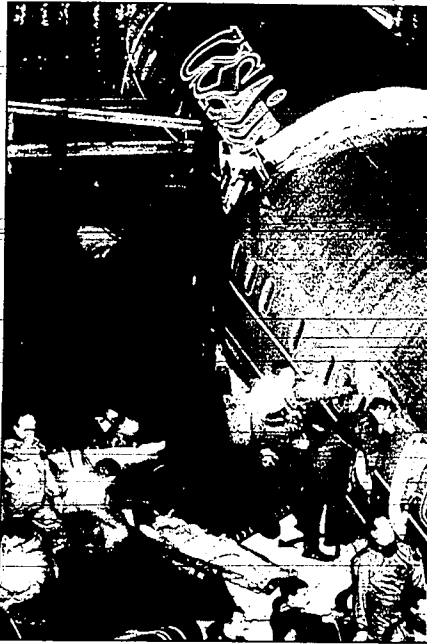

Farrar said a pilot would not be required to get permission to abort takeoff. He said it was not immediately clear exactly at what point the communication with the tower occurred or which member of the flight crew was at the radio but it likely was which pilot was not controlling the plane at the time.

"The pilot seemed to be accelerating but didn't have enough power to get the plane up," said passenger Larry Martin. "He put on the brakes. The plane took a dip and the next thing I knew all hell broke loose."

The plane broke into three parts about 50 to 100 feet into Bowery Bay. Its front sections resting above the water on a trestle that held runway lights, its back sections submerged. The two women who died were seated in the rear.

"People were on top of each other. People were screaming," said Martin, who was traveling with his wife, Valerie. "There was the smell of gas. Everyone was saying 'Get out! Get out! Get out!'"

Stunned passengers scrambled out doors and onto wings. Some escaped down an emergency chute and found themselves in about 25 feet of water.

Rescuers remove unidentified passenger from wreckage. Many clung to wings or grasped floating timbers.

"I said, hell, this thing is going to blow up," said passenger Fred O'Loughlin. "Then all of a sudden I was in the water by myself."

"The crew was great. ... They were pitching people out and down the slide," said passenger Tom Newberry, 27. "We just grabbed on to a big piece of wood and held on for dear life."

Police scuba divers freed as many as 15 people who were trapped in the cabin, while rescuers in boats scooped passengers from the water or off the wings. "They were hanging from the pier, hanging on the wing, hanging from the front of the plane," said police Lt. Larry Johnston.

Rescuers, working under the glare of emergency lights, placed slings under the tail section to keep it from sinking and had all survivors ashore within 40 minutes.

Authorities did not identify the women who died but a relative said they were Betsy Hayer Brogan, in her 30s, of Gray, Tenn., and her mother-in-law, Alice Brogan of Roanoke, Va. The relative, Jack Hayer of Morristown, Tenn., said the younger woman was a nurse who had a 5-year-old son.

There were 55 passengers and six crew members on the plane, Colodny said. Forty-five people went to hospitals, and USAir Vice President Jack Long said eight remained hospitalized. One was hurt seriously and had undergone surgery for "blunt trauma."

Flight 5050 was added to the schedule after an earlier flight was canceled because of bad weather, airline spokeswoman Susan Young said. It was raining lightly at the time of the crash, but Bill Cahill, spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, said weather was not a factor.

The plane was 9 months old and it had no history of mechanical problems, said airline spokeswoman Nancy Vaughan. A three-member Boeing crash team planned to examine the aircraft.

The 737-400 operated by British Midland Airways crashed Jan. 8 north of London, killing 44 people. Investigators said the crash may have resulted from a fire in one engine and the crew mistakenly shutting down the other engine, but no official report has been issued.

Many uninjured survivors huddled in blankets at a terminal building. Others spoke from hospital beds.

Joseph Pankow, a North Carolina businessman, recalled trying to reassure a woman who was screaming in panic after the plane came to rest. "I said, 'Calm down, you're going to make it, we're all going to make it. Let's pray together and let's get out of this airplane.'"

Investigators examine cockpit recordings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal investigators examined flight data and cockpit voice recorders Thursday in an effort to find out why the pilot aborted takeoff of his USAir Boeing 737.

The plane slid into New York's East River killing two people.

National Transportation Safety Board technicians displayed the recorders for reporters. One machine was still dripping with water; it had been removed from the crash site at LaGuardia Airport.

The data recorder measures 70 functions in the airliner and its engines and should quickly provide clues to any problems that might have caused the pilot to put on the brakes and reverse engine thrust before the plane crashed late Wednesday, said board spokesman Allan Pollock.

The data recorder in the nine-month-old aircraft is state-of-the-art and provides much more information than earlier models.

The voice recorder was connected to a microphone in the cockpit and should have picked up the last 30 minutes of conversation among pilots and anyone else in the cockpit. Technicians said both of the tapes and recorders appeared to be in good condition.

Content of the recorders is generally not made public before 60 days, but preliminary information that may give investigators some idea of any problems that existed could be available right away, Pollock said.

An investigative team remained at the crash site and other board personnel were attempting to interview passengers and members of the crew in New York.

"According to safety board records, 737s used by U.S. carriers have been involved in 36 accidents since 1969, when the airliners were first produced. More than 1,700 of the planes have been built with 800 of the newer models on order, said Boeing spokesman George Weiss.

A 737 model similar to the one that went off the runway in New York crashed Jan. 8 in England, killing 44 people. Investigators have reached no final conclusion on the British Midlands crash.

CBS producer survives, helps others, calls in the story live

NEW YORK (AP) — A CBS producer on his way to cover Hurricane Hugo helped two fellow passengers with small children escape a jet crash before going back into the wreckage to retrieve his cellular phone for a live broadcast.

David Hawthorne was among 63 aboard USAir Flight 5050 that aborted its takeoff from LaGuardia Airport late Wednesday and skidded into the East River, killing two women.

"My first instinct — I'm no hero — was to get out of there," he said in a telephone interview.

Hawthorne used a cellular phone he retrieved from the wreckage for live reports, first for network-owned WCBS-TV, then for a seven-minute CBS News special.

A seven-year CBS employee, Hawthorne, 29, had planned to fly to Charlotte, N.C., then to Wilmington, N.C., to help cover Hurricane Hugo. He was sitting near the jetliner's front, which remained above water while other parts of the cracked fuselage were partly submerged.

He saw a woman standing with a child further back in the plane and helped them out of the wreckage. Then, he said, "I went down toward the exits and I saw a woman holding a smaller infant, ... and she was saying, 'I don't know how to swim, I don't know how to swim.'"

"Until then, I didn't know we were in the water," he said.

He helped that woman and her child out onto a wing.

"I was just praying that she wouldn't go down and wouldn't have to make a choice of holding up the baby or the mother," he said.

After they were clear of the torn fuselage, he said he thought, "I need to let CBS know." He said he climbed back into the wreckage for his portable phone, which he had hidden beneath his seat.

"The phone was pinned in between some seats, but I was able to twist it out," he said. "Then I went back to the exit door because I didn't want the plane to start sinking with me on it. That's when I made the initial call to CBS NewsNet and CBS News."

The former, for which Hawthorne is an associate producer, feeds news stories and footage to CBS affiliates and CBS News.

When he first called from the wreckage, about five minutes after the crash, startled CBS staff members didn't believe him, he said.

"They said, 'Come on, you must be kidding, you're in a plane crash?' And I said a string of words that I don't usually spout came out. I said, 'This call's for real.'"

After rescue crews took him and the others from the wreckage, he said, he stood on a nearby pier and began live phone reports, including a special report with Dan Rafter at 10:33 a.m. MDT.

Hawthorne, a native of Vermillion, S.D., who has lived in the Bronx for most of his life, went to TV studios Thursday for interviews on WCBZ-TV and "CBS This Morning" rather than on his original assignment.

He said he planned "to go home and get some rest," although it will be difficult.

"My adrenalin is telling me that I want to go down there and do that hurricane story," he said. "But my back is telling me that I better take it easy. And my wife is telling me" — he began laughing — "that if my back doesn't tell me to take it easy, she'll do it on some other part."

Symms should listen to his constituents

So Sen. Steve Symms thinks the sound of American military jets roaring over our heads is the sound of freedom?

Maybe instead of spending his time in Washington and going on speech junks sponsored by defense contractors, he should have been in the Magic Valley this month, listening to the hundreds of people who turned out to protest the Air Force's plan to make Owyhee County a 21st Century missile and bomb range.

But maybe Symms doesn't listen to them as much as to the generals and defense contractors who pay his way. A little research shows that our junior senator accepted honoraria of nearly $36,000 in "speech" fees from lobbyists in 1988, close to the Senate limit on such funds.

Among the interests who paid $2,000 each to Symms: defense contractors Rockwell International, Lockheed, McDonnell Douglas and Raytheon.

Times are not exactly easy in the defense industry, and those poor military manufacturers need all the help they can get.

Why, with Soviet and American foreign ministers meeting regularly (this weekend in Jackson, Wyo.), who knows when peace might break out in the world?

Boy, wouldn't it be just awful if we could turn some of our bloated military budget, ($600 million, a fair majority of the entire annual budget of the state of Idaho, folks, for one B-2 bomber) to improving our schools, delivering quality health care to our senior citizens and repairing our roads and bridges?

But our Sen. Symms says there is more freedom in jets roaring over our homes.

Maybe he should have put on a disguise and sat in the audience recently at the College of Southern Idaho as dozens of speakers from all walks of life questioned the Saylor Creek expansion.

Maybe he hasn't read the latest Air Force report which calls for military flights, day and night, down to 100 feet above ground level, at speeds up to 900 miles per hour.

Maybe he should put on a disguise and wander up and down the streets in this area, asking people what they think of Sen. Steve Symms and who he should represent, Idahoans or the military?

No one in Southern Idaho doubts the need for a strong national defense, of which training is a part.

Nor does anyone here love freedom any less than Symms, a longtime military supporter and former Marine.

But when Symms says people in Southern Idaho are needlessly concerned, he is only doing the bidding of the military contractors who pay his speech fees.

But then, what should we expect? As the saying goes, if you take the King's shilling, you fight the King's war.

Why should we expect Symms to fight for us when it is the defense contractors who pay him to speak?

We cannot allow national defense to suffer for the sake of wilderness

A. Grant Gerber

Modern warfare has greatly changed the needs of the military for training and testing areas. The need for vast amounts of airspace also became apparent during World War II with air bases scattered across the West.

The preservationist organizations, led by the Sierra Club, are now attempting to stop the military from utilizing these lands and airspace for training and testing by demanding they be designated federal wilderness.

The military need for airspace and land maneuver areas has often conflicted with other traditional users of the land such as campers, ranchers, hunters, miners, oil and gas prospectors and recreationists.

However, in most cases the military and the other users have been able to work out compromises which have been acceptable to both. Most land users are in favor of the military continuing to train and test in the West. They are proud to be a part of military preparedness.

Many stories are told with the common theme of a cowboy topping a ridge and staring an F-101 pilot in the eye as the pilot makes a low-level training run over a mountain top. When the horse turns inside out as a result of this close encounter and the cowboy ends up on the ground, the cowboy looks back at it as a natural consequence of utilizing the land and seldom harbors any long-term animosity.

The preservationists are different. A Sierra Club member plans his vacation around a backpacking trip into the mountains and he expects to have a totally pristine experience, defined by him as one that is completely free from any man-made intrusion except himself.

When a low-flying jet crests the mountain near him, it enrages him. Preservationist encounters with the wild lands of America are intense but very brief. Because of the false claims of articles in preservationist literature, they expect to find no evidence of man. The final straw is the low-flying jet on a training run.

There are 90 million acres already designated as federal wilderness and another 150 million acres proposed for federal wilderness, a total of which — when added together — would equal the entire states of California, Utah and Nevada.

The National Guard and Reserves now comprise 40 percent of our national military deterrent. These units are especially vulnerable to federal wilderness prohibitions because of time constraints on travel to training areas.

An example of this is the conflict between the preservationists and the Fallon Naval Air Station in Nevada. The Navy has been utilizing the mountains close to the base, that are now designated multiple use, in common with the other users.

The tightest web of low-level instrument flight training routes in the nation is this area in Central Nevada proposed for wilderness by Senators Reid and Bryan and Congressman Bilbray; according to the Department of Defense military training routes map published Feb. 9, 1989.

Now, as a result of this wilderness designation threat, the Navy is asking to have these areas set aside as official Military Operations Areas (MOAs).

If these areas are designated federal wilderness, the military will be eliminated from utilizing them because of the wilderness requirement that they fly at least 2,000 feet above the ridges.

In their studies of possible federal wilderness areas, the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management have not considered the impact on the military.

In 1988, Congressman Vento, chairman of the National Parks and Public Lands subcommittee, proposed a three-million acre wilderness and National Park area in the area where Oregon, Idaho and Nevada join.

This proposal would eliminate a significant amount of training area for Mountain Home Air Force Base. As a result of this preservationist pressure, the Air Force is now proposing to expand Mountain Home Air Force Base in Southern Idaho by one million acres.

With the present ability to fly virtually unrestricted across Nevada, the pilots generally avoid towns and even isolated ranch houses in their low-level training. They are now flying over the areas proposed for federal wilderness. If these remote areas are closed to training, then the military will either have to stop the flights or begin flying over homes.

The inability of the armed forces to train or place installations on mountains throughout the West will deprive our fighting men and women of necessary training they need.

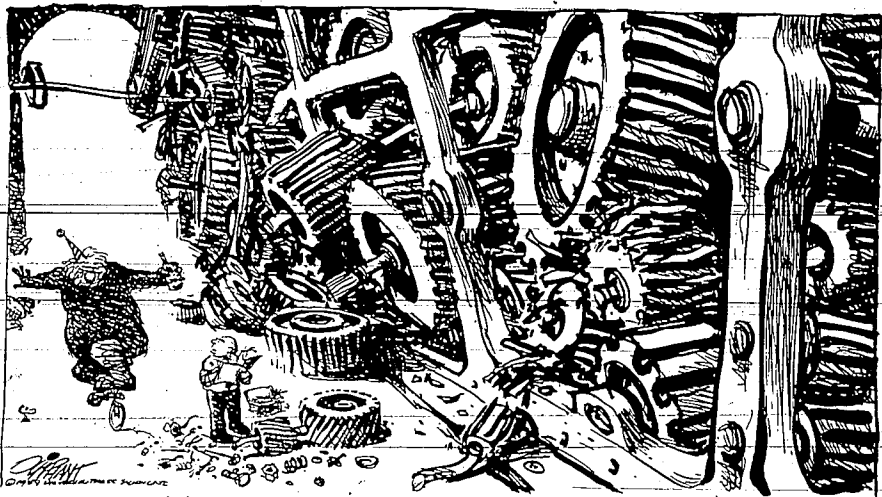

The most destructive bills to our military security at the present time are the bills introduced into Congress by Senator Cranston for Southern California, Senators Reid and Bryan and Congressman Bilbray for Nevada, and Congressman Owens for Utah.

Low-flying cruise missiles cannot be tested in flights over wilderness areas. With the interlocking web of proposed wilderness areas across the western states, this will effectively prevent the realistic testing of these weapons.

Citizen Alert, a Sierra Club front organization, in August 1989 raised the issue of cruise missile overflights and succeeded in getting Senators Reid and Bryan to put pressure on the Navy to stop a planned test.

No additional wilderness areas should be designated until a comprehensive nationwide study by the Senate Armed Services Committee, the House Armed Services Committee or the Defense Department is completed and hearings are held to determine how severely these wilderness areas are going to hurt our national defense.

A. Grant Gerber is chairman of the Wilderness Impact Research Foundation, Elko, Nev.

Canal water is managed well

Dear Mr. Stallings: I am writing this letter in response to the letter written to you by Don Farnes, The Times-News, Sept. 20.

In 1910, the farmers of Gooding and Lincoln Counties built Magic Dam for irrigation purposes at a cost of $3 million.

Since that time, they have paid a yearly 0.8¢ cost for the maintenance and operation of the irrigation system. Had it not been for the foresight and courage of these people, there would not be a Magic Reservoir here.

I think it is great that the public has a facility such as this for fishing and recreation. You would think they would be grateful for the many years that they have enjoyed Magic Reservoir and not begrudge the farmers the use of the water that they have a legal right to in a short-water year.

I do not know where Mr. Farnes got his information; but according to our records, it is inaccurate.

1. Mr. Farnes stated that since 1934, Magic Reservoir has never been below 12,000 acre feet. We show nine years that the reservoir level was below 12,000 acre feet.

2. In 1969, which Mr. Farnes stated as a low-water year that he based his business on, we had a carry-over of 83,411 acre feet.

Although it is true that in 1988 we removed the blockage from the low-level intake structure, this is a maintenance procedure which would have been done regardless of Simplot's building the power plant at Magic Dam. I would also like to stress that the Big Wood Canal Company, not Simplot, has complete control of water releases from Magic Reservoir.

As to the wasted water, we began this irrigation season with 152,642 acre feet. The reservoir, when full, contains 191,500 acre feet. The average runoff is 300,000 acre feet. The average irrigation demand is about 200,000 acre feet.

I think this shows good water management practices to be able to get through a relatively normal irrigation season with such a short supply of water.

I do not believe the water is being abused by the Big Wood Canal Company board of directors, and I feel the operation of the reservoir should be left as it is.

Hospital board needs input

This is in response to the negative comments I have heard about the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center annual planning meeting held a few days ago.

The attitude seems to be, "Why bother going to these meetings since the board of directors at the hospital aren't responsive and will do as they please anyway."

First, I have to confess that I didn't make it to the meeting myself, even though I had made the commitment to do so, due to an unanticipated situation. I regret this, but the reason wasn't because I felt that they wouldn't care about what I had to say. I believe the opposite to be the case. A few days prior to the meeting, I called

Mrs. Norma Blass (one of the county commissioners) about the increase of fees at the hospital as reported in The Times-News. Mrs. Blass wasn't available when I called, but returned my call in short order. She answered all my questions and sincerely invited me to call her anytime I had any questions or comments.

Later the same day, I received a call from Ray Ströberg, who is on the board of directors at the hospital. He had been told by Mrs. Blass that I had called her with some questions about the hospital. He answered my questions, invited me to the planning meeting and the next board of directors meeting, and offered to take me on a tour of the hospital and explain what is going on and why.

Neither of these people knew me from Adam, yet they responded to my questions fully and with concern. They both told me that anytime I had any questions or comments, to please give them a call. They both showed concern and some frustration with the lack of input from the community.

It's very obvious to me that it's not the commissioners or the directors that are at fault; but we in the community, as shown by the attendance at the planning meeting.

It's easy to complain to your neighbor about the hospital, but it doesn't accomplish anything. If you are really concerned and have constructive ideas or comments, contact the county commissioners or the board of directors. I can assure you, from my own experience, that they will respond.

Hawkins mess hurts farmers

Uh-Oh... Jim Jones wants $25,000 from a comprehensive audit of Hawkins Warehouse bankruptcy. Why wasn't the first audit comprehensive?

Attorney Tom Mannschreck says False Security Bank is defending the rights it has under loan documents signed by Hawkins more than a year ago.

Let's remember that Hawkins signed those documents, but it sounds as if False Security Bank wants to hold the farmers responsible for what that individual did.

Could be, if the farmers had known that Hawkins had gone to False Security Bank more than a year ago, the bankruptcy would have erupted then. Has anyone checked to see how the books looked at that time?

Criminal Investigator Richard Le Gall says that he will have to prove Hawkins intended to deprive the farmers of their money or beans. Can years of creative bookkeeping be anything else?

It's hard to believe, Mr. Le Gall, that a guy who disappears overnight with all the beans is any different from the guy who takes ten years to accomplish the same thing.

Through all the rhetoric, two things are clear: Hawkins did it — and all snakes don't strike with lightning speed.

Pelicans don't belong here

Regarding the article on the American White Pelican in The Times-News, Sept. 14:

The aforementioned article states that up to 75 percent of the pelican's diet may consist of rainbow trout. The article also states that they eat their weight in fish every day.

They look to me to weigh at least a ton! Whatever their size, that's a lot of Idaho trout down the proverbial tube.

Would Idahoans rather cast their peepers on a big overgrown "ugly duckling" than a beautiful silver-sided, broad-shouldered rainbow trout? I think not!

Terry Gladwin, assistant manager at the refuge in Pocatello says he is encouraged to see nesting pelicans there. Surely, this man has never felt the wrist rattling strike of a four-pound rainbow swallowing an F-5 gold finfish!

Larry DeBolle, Region 5 fishery manager says 1,000 of these wonderful "fowl" live on Blackfoot Reservoir. Fishing there this year was the worst in recorded history!

Hey, these trout swallowing "swine" have a life span of 40 years! (Unless I see 'em first.)

Solution:

A. Buy them a one-way ticket back to the Great Salt Lake, from whence they came.

B. Take this so-called "bird" off the federally-protected list and categorize it with starlings and pigeons.

P.S. Save two of these "genus pelicans" for the zoo!

U.S. will tender 'open lands' idea to Soviet officials today

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abruptly ending travel restrictions on American and Soviet visitors in each other's countries would end a relic of the Cold War that is a nuisance but has little practical effect, an expert on U.S.-Soviet relations said Thursday.

U.S. officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, said Secretary of State James A. Baker III would present the proposal to Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in their talks today and Saturday in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

It would lift virtually all travel restrictions on Soviet diplomats, trade representatives and journalists, the sources said. It was not known if the Soviets would respond to the proposal, clearly being made in light of the "openness" policies of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

"It strikes me as a sensible thing to do at this stage," said Raymond L. Garthoff, senior fellow in foreign policy studies at the Brookings Institution—and a former U.S. ambassador to Bulgaria.

"I don't think it's a terribly important matter, but I think it's an appropriate, a reasonable thing to do."

The late Soviet dictator Josef

Stalin placed severe travel restrictions on foreigners in the Soviet Union in the 1950s, and the United States reciprocated with restrictions on travel by diplomats and other visitors from the Soviet Union—and other Eastern Bloc countries.

These restrictions were gradually eliminated by agreements between the Soviet satellites and the United States in the 1970's. Garthoff said he signed the last such agreement in 1978, when he was ambassador to Bulgaria.

From then-on and my staff in Bulgaria were able to travel anywhere in Bulgaria—that any other foreigner was; which meant in effect the whole country," the Brookings scholar said.

Reciprocal travel restrictions by the United States and the Soviet Union remained, however, with close to 90 percent of the Soviet Union closed to Americans and much of the United States off limits to visiting Soviets.

"They are more an annoyance than anything else," Garthoff said. "They don't really prevent the embassies from functioning adequately, but they do represent something of an anomaly in this era."

I don't think they are really effective in terms of preventing access or protecting information. They really are more political statements or gestures than anything else."

In practice, Americans and Soviets occasionally are granted permission to enter the prohibited zones. For instance, Soviet Ambassador Yuri V. Dubinin was permitted to visit off-limits parts of the United States several dozen times, an official said.

Garthoff said this was usually done on a "tit for tat basis." He also said both the United States and the Soviet Union have made changes over the years in the amount of each other's territory that is closed.

The U.S. proposal was dubbed "Open Lands."

If it is adopted, Soviets still would have to register their travel plans with the State Department's Office of Foreign Missions for security reasons, officials said. They said the proposal had been approved by the FBI.

"The idea is to abolish the curbs on a reciprocal basis so travel theoretically is permitted everywhere," an official said.

Continued ban on electronic coverage asked

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal courts' policy-making arm is being urged to continue banning all television, radio and photographic coverage of courtroom proceedings, a spokesman said Thursday.

A five-judge committee told the U.S. Judicial Conference this week that "circumstances have not changed so drastically as to justify relaxing the ban, said conference spokesman David Sellers.

The 28-judge conference, headed by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, in 1984 rejected a request by news organizations that the longtime ban on electronic and photographic coverage in federal courts be lifted.

Today, 44 states allow such coverage at the trial or appellate level, or both.

In its report to the conference, the five-judge committee recommended that "technological advances and the expansion of the media continue to be recognized in determining whether further modifications of the restrictions would be warranted at a future date."

But one of the committee members, federal appellate judge John R. Moore of Denver, voted to end the blanket ban.

Moore, a member of the Denver-based 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, said each federal court should be free to allow electronic and photographic coverage to the same extent allowed by state courts in the same state.

Rehnquist has said he isn't unilaterally opposed to allowing television and radio coverage of federal courts, including the Supreme Court.

"If I were convinced that coverage by television of the Supreme Court would not disrupt the way the court works I would give it sympathetic consideration," he told the Senate Judiciary Committee three years ago.

But the chief justice has told reporters that a majority of the Supreme Court's nine members opposes such an innovation.

Federal court rules permit electronic and photographic coverage of various ceremonial courtroom proceedings, and allow use of such equipment for presenting evidence and making an official court record.

The committee report recommended that marshals be allowed to use electronic equipment.

Senate panel OKs flag burning bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee sent rival measures on flag burning to the Senate floor Thursday, approving a Democratic bill also sending along the constitutional amendment President Bush favors — with an unfavorable recommendation.

From a group of South Carolina, the committee's ranking Republican, argued that the amendment "as well as the proposed statute should get a favorable recommendation."

"The primary interest is not whether we should provide protection for the flag but what is the proper course to provide that protection," Thurmond said.

But Joseph Biden, D-Dele., the panel's chief Democrat, said the constitutional amendment proposal "does violence to the First Amendment because it is so broad."

The Democratic-controlled committee gave 9-5 approval to proposed statute, sponsored by Biden, that would outlaw flag desecration. The panel voted 8-6 to report the constitutional amendment to the full Senate with an unfavorable recommendation.

The committee was required under a July 14 agreement to send both measures to the floor.

The push for action to ban flag desecration began after the Supreme Court's June decision under a Texas law used to convict flag-burning protester Gregory Lee Johnson.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said the committee's choice "was really between a constitutional amendment or no action at all."

"I sincerely doubt that the Supreme Court is going to buy off on this statute," he said.

But Democrats argued strongly against amending the Constitution to deal with the court ruling.

They said nationwide interest in the issue has subsided somewhat after the initial uproar.

However, Sen. Howard Baker, R-N.H., said some lawmakers still seemed afraid that voting against a proposed amendment would cost them at the polls.

Best education ideas don't require money, Bush official tells governors

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration official in charge of next week's education summit with the nation's governors said Thursday that the most promising ideas for improving U.S. schools don't require more money.

The best ideas, including efforts to give parents more choice over which public school their child attends, "revolve around more efficient use of the moneys that we are already spending," said Roger Porter, President Bush's domestic policy adviser.

"They do not," he said, "require more money."

Accompanying Bush to Wednesday and Thursday's Charlottesville, Va., summit will be "virtually the entire Cabinet," Porter said. The White House, he said, is expecting perfect attendance from the governors of the 50 states, and several governors from U.S. territories will be there.

The aim of the largely closed-door deliberations on the University of Virginia campus will be to find new ideas to improve America's schools, Porter said.

The Democratic leaders of Congress on Wednesday unveiled their own goals for the nation's schools and promised to press for "adequate" funding to help meet them.

Porter said Americans are spending $353 billion on education at all levels, from kindergarten through graduate school, including more than $5,200 for every public school pupil.

"We're not going to be announcing any goal at the end of the summit," Porter said. "What we will be announcing will be the process by which those goals are going to be developed."

The post-summit process of drawing up those goals "will involve parents and teachers and administrators and school boards."

Porter said the ideas that "hold real promise for improving the bottom line ... invariably expand choice for parents and students, introduce greater flexibility, and demanding increased accountability for results."

"The president believes the current level of performance is not acceptable and simply doing more of the same is unlikely to improve it," Porter said. "New approaches and new ideas are needed."

"Although the agenda includes a discussion of expanding access to higher education and training more teachers, the focus will clearly be on problems in the lower grades."

Porter, on leave as a professor of government at Harvard's Kennedy School, said America's universities are "really quite phenomenal," in part because they are "incredibly diverse and ... highly competitive."

The topics for the six working groups, announced last week by the governors, are: teaching; learning environments; governance; choice and restructuring; a competitive workforce and life-long learning; and post-secondary education.

Bush will participate in each of the six working group sessions with 16 or 17 governors and five or six Cabinet members.

More HUD payoffs discovered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal housing officials have discovered nearly $300,000 in additional payments to consultants who were "rent subsidies" for developers, bringing the known total of such payments to $6 million.

The payments, detailed in a new report to the Senate Banking Committee obtained Thursday, included $57,500 more to former Department and Housing and Urban Development official Joseph Straus, by far the most highly paid HUD consultant, with more than $1.7 million in fees in the last five years.

The report by HUD's inspector general also revealed additional payments to two prominent Republicans, political consultant Lou Kitchen and Frederick Bush, the top fundraiser for President Bush's campaign. Frederick Bush's nomination for an ambassadorial post was derailed by disclosure about his role in influence peddling at the agency.

Payments to five consultants not identified in previous reports were discovered during a follow-up investigation by HUD auditors. Those payments totaled $128,000, a relatively small amount compared to the huge fees paid to more prominent consultants.

All of the $6 million in consulting fees were paid since late 1983 by HUD's Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation Program. It was an April audit of that program that triggered the current congressional, internal and Justice Department investigations — of fraud, mismanagement and influence peddling at HUD during the Reagan administration.

The April audit identified $4.2 million in fees paid to consultants and said those lobbyists, some former HUD officials and other prominent Republicans with little or no experience in housing, appeared to win special treatment from HUD officials.

At an August hearing, HUD Inspector General Paul A. Adams said investigators had found additional payments.

Teachers warn of worsening student ills

NEW YORK (AP) — Teachers believe reform is improving their schools, but many see worsening drug, alcohol and absenteeism problems among their students, according to a poll released Thursday.

Despite such problems, four out of five public school teachers surveyed said they still "love to teach," and more would recommend their profession to young people, according to a Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. survey. "Preparing Schools for the 1990's."

The sixth annual Met-Life teacher survey, published less than a week before President Bush is to meet with the nation's governors to discuss education, was conducted by Louis Harris and Associates.

It was based on a telephone survey of 2,000 public school teachers from kindergarten through 12th grade polled in May and June. The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Many teachers surveyed reported that the social and educational ills affecting their students are worsening — especially alcoholism, drug use and absenteeism.

Junior high and high school teachers concerned about drinking among their students increased from 66 percent in 1985 to 81 percent in the latest survey. Teen drinking was considered a serious problem by 91 percent of high school teachers, up from 87 percent of rural teachers.

In the last five years, the proportion of junior high and high school teachers who labeled the dropout problem a serious one rose from 40 percent to 52 percent. And 70 percent of high school teachers regard drug use as a serious school problem, up from 58 percent in 1985.

"American teachers, particularly those in our cities, have sent an S.O.S. about the severity of the out-of-school problems facing their students," said Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, in response to the poll findings.

He called upon Bush and the nation's governors to "listen to the messages from the front lines, to the problems teachers face every day in the classroom — such as poverty, drug abuse and troubled families."

Nonetheless, the poll found that 53 percent of teachers believe education reforms have had a positive effect on their schools, compared with 43 percent who expressed that view in a 1984 poll. Only 6 percent said school reforms have had a negative impact. The remainder said the effects were neutral.

Teachers were less enthusiastic about the impact of reform on themselves. 43 percent said reform has affected teachers positively, 27 percent said they were neutral, and 29 percent said reform has hurt teachers.

Troops land in St. Croix, find 'near anarchy' in wake of Hugo

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal troops landed Thursday on hurricane-damaged St. Croix in the U.S. Virgin Islands and found "chaos and near anarchy," a top Pentagon official said Thursday.

But the White House later said the situation was improving.

"Presidential spokesman Martin Fitzwater said, 'The troops are having an obvious impact in controlling the looting and other lawlessness associated with the destruction. It is impossible to say at this point how long they will have to be there.'

He said, 'The local officials of course are still in charge of law enforcement there. Our purpose is to help provide an interim and temporary way until the local law enforcement can handle the problem.'

"We stay in close contact with the police authorities on the islands and the governor and will be guided by their feelings about when they're in control and when they can handle the situation," Fitzwater said.

The first contingent of military personnel landed at 7:40 a.m. EDT on the island, and moved quickly to establish a mobile control tower and prepare the airfield for the arrival of an estimated 1,105 military police, said Lt. Cmdr. Ned Lundquist, a Pentagon spokesman.

The troops, the first active duty military personnel ordered onto the nation's streets in 20 years, were ordered by President Bush Wednesday night. Bush said he took the action to restore law and order to the Virgin Islands two days after Hurricane Hugo devastated St. Croix.

Adm. William J. Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Thursday the troops had been issued rifles and told to shoot if necessary to defend themselves.

"We've had reports of shooting on the island. We're not going to permit people to be totally defenseless," he said. Federal authorities on the scene "were reporting chaos and near anarchy and the situation as being out of control," he said.

Officials at the Atlantic Command in Norfolk, Va., said they had little information about the situation because of the difficulty in communicating.

"The communications are sporadic," said Lt. Karl Johnson, a public affairs spokesman, who said official military actions were given priority in using communications equipment.

All told, the troops would include 635 military police from Fort Bragg, N.C., and 470 military police from companies in Fort Polk, La.; Fort Hood, Texas, and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

They were flown in to St. Croix, an 84-square-mile island, on 16 Air Force C-141 Starliner transport planes.

Generally, the National Guard is summoned to restore order in civil disturbances. But presidents are allowed to use federal troops by declaring an emergency. There have been reports that the local National Guard was involved in some of the looting on St. Croix.

The last time federal troops were used to suppress riots was in 1968 in Washington, D.C., after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr., administration officials said. President Reagan authorized the use of troops in 1987 to handle prison riots in Atlanta, but they were never deployed.

Crowe estimated the troops would remain on the island "a very short period of time."

They joined 100 U.S. marshals and FBI agents that Attorney Gen-al Dick Thornburgh ordered to the island. Additionally, armed Coast Guardsmen landed in cutters, some of which evacuated tourists and residents.

Virgin Islands Gov. Alexander Farrelly said Wednesday night he did not ask for the federal troops, although Bush had said that was the case.

Fitzwater reiterated the administration position Thursday, saying Farrelly requested the troops Wednesday afternoon in a telephone call with U.S. emergency aid officials.

"The governor's request is not essential. We would probably have sent the troops anyway," he said.

From Santa Ana to Hackenbush: Naming storms nothing new

WASHINGTON (AP) — This year's big storm is Hurricane Hugo. Last year, Gilbert was a killer, and over the years Camille and Hazel, Donna and Agnes have been the culprits — a naming system intended to give each storm a clear identity for the public.

The designations can irritate or please human owners of the names, depending on the violence of the storm involved.

But the practice at least avoids confusion in issuing warnings about particular storms, especially when more than one is under way — such as the current situation with both Hurricane Hugo and Tropical Storm Iris active.

Naming these storms is a practice of long-standing, yet the current system has been common only since World War II, and it was modified about a decade ago to include male names.

Using saints' names, taken from the day a storm struck, was a common practice for several hundred years, particularly in regions that have a strong Spanish influence

A storm which struck Puerto Rico on July 26, 1825, for example, became known as the Santa Ana storm.

For meteorologists, a simple system of latitude and longitude coordinates is used to locate storms. But that can be confusing to the public, especially when there are two or even three storms at the same time. Clement Wragge, an Australian meteorologist active way back around the turn of the century, may have helped initiate the current system.

"Inclement" Wragge was a well-known lecturer on the weather who began naming storms to help explain them to the public. He chose the names of females for tropical storms, the type we call hurricanes, and he used male names for other types of storms.

Often the male names were those of politicians that Wragge did not care for, and one of his earliest weather maps includes a storm called "Hackenbush," reports Ivan Ray "Tannehill" in his book, "The Hurricane Hunters."

During World War II military meteorologists found themselves busy tracking hurricanes, and to avoid confusion named them using the phonetic alphabet — Able, Baker, Charlie and so on.

Other armed forces weathermen began applying nicknames to particular storms of all types—they were tracking, explained the late Frank H. Forrester, who was a Marine Corps weatherman in that era.

Nicknames such as "Big Jack" or "Dopey" were common, but "It was strictly informal, believe me," said Forrester.

The use of women's names for hurricanes in recent years may stem from the book "Storm," by George R. Stewart. Published in 1941, it tells of a weatherman who names storms after women.

As public interest in hurricanes increased in the early 1950s, officials of the Air Force, Navy and Weather Bureau met to try and develop a new naming system. This led to a system of female names starting in 1953.

The process of selecting the names was eventually shifted to the World Meteorological Organization in Geneva, Switzerland, and starting in 1978 male names were added, alternating with females.

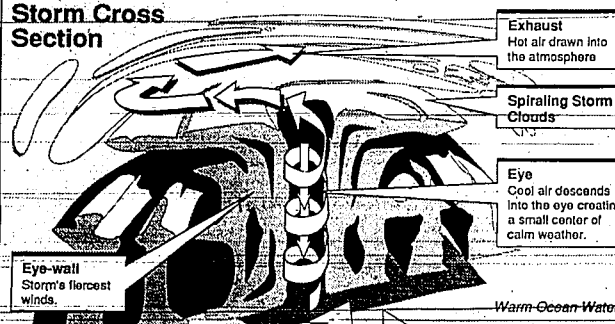

The World Meteorological Organization has lists of names that rotate over periods of four or five years to keep them from repeating too often. In addition, names of exceptionally damaging storms are retired to prevent historical confusion.

Last year, for example, both Gilbert and Joan were retired. When their turn comes around again they will be replaced by Gordon and Joyce.

Anatomy of a Hurricane

Hurricanes are born in the steamy late-summer environment of the tropics when rapidly evaporating ocean waters combine with strong wind currents. Several hundred miles wide and packing winds of over 100 m.p.h., hurricanes cool the Earth by sucking heat from the Earth's surface and drawing it into the upper atmosphere (above 40,000 feet).

Mom hits principal of school

OTOSGO, Mich. (AP) — A high school's war on drugs turned violent when an angry mother socked the principal in the jaw for calling police to question her son.

The woman, whose name was withheld, was arrested Monday for assault and battery after allegedly punching Otsego high school Principal James Leyndyke, police Chief Elton Goswick said.

Leyndyke called police Friday because he suspected a student of selling drugs, Goswick said. When the youth was told police were called, he fled on foot.

The boy's mother later showed up at school, angry that police were called, Goswick said.

"He took her into the office to try to explain the situation to her," telling her it was part of his job, Goswick said. The woman then responded, "And this is part of my job," and she struck him on the jaw with her fist.

The 5-foot-3, 130-pound woman bruised Leyndyke's jaw, Goswick said. She has posted bond and no arraignment date has been set. The misdemeanor carries a maximum 90 days in jail.

Her son was suspended from school.

Joint chiefs chairman calls for end to sales of assault weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. William Crowe Jr., retiring chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called Thursday for an end to sales of assault weapons.

He also said the nation "might consider doing unusual things with the military" to win the war against drugs.

"If we want to fight it, and we want to whip it, we want to prevent it, I would suggest that it does require unusual measures," Crowe said in a wide-ranging interview with news service reporters.

President Bush has banned imported assault weapons but has allowed sales of U.S.-made versions to continue.

Saying the nation has never "seen the fiber of our society eaten away" by an insidious, uncontrollable threat, Crowe suggested that in the anti-drug fight America might want to "bring military in new ways."

"That doesn't appeal to me," he said.

He said he could not outline the Pentagon's role in great detail, noting the military's plans were currently being worked out at the command of Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

But he said U.S. forces will not be drawn into anti-drug combat overseas, and that Pentagon officials are not interested in shooting down unidentified aircraft suspected of ferrying illicit narcotics into the country — a possibility suggested by some in Congress.

Crowe said he finds the drug threat is so severe a problem that he could foresee an expanded role for the U.S. military overseas in fighting international drug traffickers.

"Perhaps that function will grow," Crowe said of the use of military trainers and advisers in the Andean nations under Bush's anti-drug strategy. "If what we are doing now is effective, they may want more of it."

On the domestic front, Crowe cited several areas where the military role can be expanded in order to fight the flow of drugs across U.S. borders.

"If we don't have control, it's our own fault," the admiral said in an interview with The Associated Press and Reuters.

Crowe is scheduled to retire Oct. 1 after 43 years in the military. The 64-year-old former submariner is wrapping up two terms as the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, where he served as the principal military adviser to the president and as the Pentagon's top military leader.

Crowe said the nation's civilians must consider curbing some of their beloved freedoms if the drug problem is to be eradicated.

"Certainly if the threat is as grave as many people picture it to be, the United States can't fight a threat that serious and be normal," he said.

Crowe said certain elements in our society "want drugs to go away, but they don't want the quality of their rights eroded."

"The admiral, asked about the proliferation of guns in society, said, 'I've never objected to measures that make you register your guns. I think the most reasonable position further at this time, Sinai said. "In fact, had it known in June that the economy would have risen this much, it probably would not have reduced interest rates then."

In a companion report, the Fed said after-tax profits of U.S. corporations fell 7.2 percent in the second quarter, a bigger decline than the 5.4 percent drop estimated a month ago.

It was the second consecutive quarterly decline and, Dederick said, "shows that economic slowing is not without pain."

The GNP is the nation's total output of goods and services and its broadest measure of economic growth.

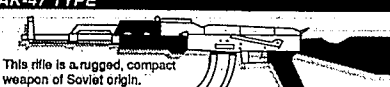

The downward revision in the second-quarter GNP reflected drops in earlier estimates of consumer and government spending. But consumer spending, which represents two-thirds of all economic activity, still increased a healthy 1.9 percent in the April-June quarter.

At the same time, business investment spending advanced a strong 8.6 percent and U.S. exports grew 13.1 percent.

GNP grows 2.5 percent, outlook called 'pretty'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy grew at a moderate 2.5 percent pace in the second quarter, the government said Thursday.

That is down somewhat from the first quarter but strong enough to stop any new predictions of imminent recession.

The Commerce Department reported that April-June growth in the gross national product compared with a 3.7 percent gain in the first three months. The second-quarter GNP had been revised downward 0.2 percentage point from the 2.7 percent growth estimate a month ago.

Nearly two-thirds of the January-March strength came from an anticipated rebound in farm output. Without the drought effect, growth actually was only 1.5 percent.

"The picture is a pretty one," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for the Boston Co. "Not too much growth, not too little... right on the nose for a soft-landing."

"The picture," said Robert Dederick, chief economist for the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago, "is an economy that is continuing to climb, albeit at a subdued rate... a laid-back pace, but that's really what the Fed wants."

The Federal Reserve has moved for over a year to achieve a so-called "soft-landing" by dampening inflation by slowing the economy without driving it into a recession.

Thus, analysts said, the Fed also should appreciate the downward revision in the GNP's April-June inflation rate. A price index tied to the GNP showed a 5 percent gain, rather than the 5.1 percent estimate a month ago.

Since the April-June quarter, Dederick noted, "inflation has ebbed considerably." He said the second-quarter GNP rate "is the worst inflation number we'll have for the year and for some time ahead, at least several quarters ahead."

And he predicted "we're likely to see more of the same on growth, perhaps a bit lower... no more than what it has been in the second quarter and more likely less."

The Fed, which influences the economy by controlling monetary growth, will not be influenced by this report "to reduce interest rates

further at this time, Sinai said. "In fact, had it known in June that the economy would have risen this much, it probably would not have reduced interest rates then."

In a companion report, the Fed said after-tax profits of U.S. corporations fell 7.2 percent in the second quarter, a bigger decline than the 5.4 percent drop estimated a month ago.

It was the second consecutive quarterly decline and, Dederick said, "shows that economic slowing is not without pain."

Federal workers criticize consumer group

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of federal employees has charged that a "consumer group" is undermining a government auto safety program, but the head of the organization said Thursday that his group serves a useful watchdog function.

"The facts show that recalls are down and that defective vehicles aren't being recalled," said Clarence Dribb, executive director of the Center for Auto Safety. "Our response is to continue to publicize when the agency doesn't do its job."

Dribb's comments came after publication in Thursday's editions of The Washington Post of excerpts from a letter to him from 50 career employees at the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Employees of the Office of Defects Investigation said Dribb was undermining its safety defects program and that the center's attacks were "eroding the public's confidence in our ability to pursue safety defects, thereby discouraging motorists from submitting safety defect information to us."

"History proves them wrong," Dribb responded. "Whenever we have criticized them, they get more complaints not less."

Dribb said he had not received a copy of the letter but learned of it from media inquiries.

NHTSA spokesman Tim Hurd called the letter "a good clear statement of the frustration (the workers) feel in dealing with the CEAS."

"I think the employees are frustrated by the fact that they can't get recalls like they used to," Dribb said.

Earlier this month, Dribb said NHTSA had halted 25 investigations during the Reagan administration under pressure from the auto industry.

"Although some of the decisions were more difficult than others, to charge that we are captives of the auto industry because investigations were closed ignores the facts completely," the letter said.

It also accused Dribb of selling information obtained from the agency to lawyers representing automobile accident victims.

Dribb said the center makes no profit from computer printouts it provides "to the public, not just lawyers," with information on complaints about cars.

Broadcasters consider reviving program codes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Association of Broadcasters, responding to a federal regulator's suggestion to curb "shock radio," said Thursday it is considering reviving radio and TV program codes that were dropped under government pressure in the 1970s.

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Alfred Sikes, in an address to a radio and TV program codes that were dropped under government pressure in the 1970s.

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Alfred Sikes, in an address to a radio and TV program codes that were dropped under government pressure in the 1970s.

revive the codes that were abandoned in the mid-1970s after the Justice Department initiated an antitrust lawsuit against provisions of the codes involving advertising. New codes should be drawn up by the industry, without government pressure, Sikes said.

NAB spokesman Walt Wurfel said the NAB's executive committee, "in response to comments made by Chairman Sikes at Radio 89 (convention) ... instructed the staff to conduct an assessment of the feasibility, effectiveness, legal and legislative elements of — and member support for — devising a statement of standards or guidelines concerning programming in the public interest."

Sikes, a former radio station owner who came to the FCC six weeks ago, told the broadcasters convention they were not "simply recorders, transmitters and antennas. We are what we broadcast."

He noted that on Aug. 24 the FCC announced it was considering action against three radio stations in Chicago, San Jose, Calif., and Indianapolis for possibly broadcasting indecent programming during daytime hours when children may have been listening. That action was widely viewed as a shot across the bow of broadcasters from a new, no-nonsense FCC.

Court ruling could hamper age bias suits

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a dozen government lawsuits alliging age discrimination by employers may have to be dismissed unless Congress restores protections overturned by the Supreme Court, a government lawyer testified Thursday.

Charles A. Shanor, general counsel of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, spoke at a House hearing in support of legislation to reverse a June ruling that has in fringe benefits is not automatically banned under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act.

The high court ruled 7-2 that federal anti-bias laws apply only where the disparities are part of an attempt to discriminate in "some non-fringe-benefit aspect" of employment such as hiring or firing.

Shanor said the EEOC has more than 30 cases pending in courts around the country in which it alleges that employers discriminated against older workers by limiting their fringe benefits.

"We estimate that over half of these cases would require dismissal... absent remedial legislation," Shanor told a joint hearing of the House Select Committee on Aging and two Education and Labor subcommittees.

U.S. House Chairman R. Gault Silberman told the hearing there is "no good policy reason for allowing arbitrary, unjustifiable discrimination against older workers in this one area when all other aspects of their employment are protected." She said more than 400 cases pending before the EEOC could be affected.

began naming storms to help explain them to the public. He chose the names of females for tropical storms, the type we call hurricanes, and he used male names for other types of storms.

Often the male names were those of politicians that Wragge did not care for, and one of his earliest weather maps includes a storm called "Hackenbush," reports Ivan Ray Tannachill in his book, "The Hurricane Hunters."

During World War II military meteorologists found themselves busy tracking hurricanes, and to avoid confusion they began using the phonetic alphabet — Able, Baker, Charlie and so on.

Other armed forces weathermen began applying nicknames to particular storms of all types they were tracking, explained the late Frank H. Forester, who was a Marine Corps weatherman in that era.

Nicknames such as "Big Jack" or "Dopey" were common, but, "It was strictly informal, believe me," said Forester.

The use of women's names for hurricanes in recent years may stem from the book "Storm," by George R. Stewart. Published in 1941, it tells of a weatherman who names storms after women.

As public interest in hurricanes increased in the early 1950s, officials of the Air Force, Navy and Weather Bureau met to try and develop a new naming system. This led to a system of female names starting in 1953.

The process of selecting the names was eventually shifted to the World Meteorological Organization in Geneva, Switzerland, and starting in 1978 male names were added, alternating with females.

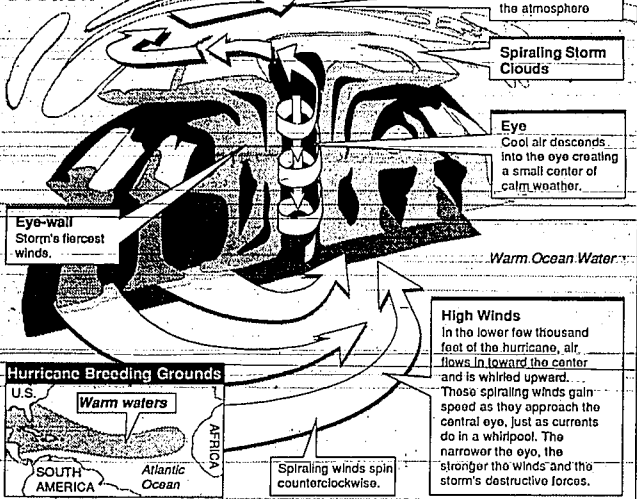

The World Meteorological Organization has lists of names that rotate over periods of four or five years to keep them from repeating too often. In addition, names of exceptionally damaging storms are retired to prevent historical confusion.

Last year, for example, both Gilbert and Joan were retired. When their turn comes around again they will be replaced by Gordon and Joyce.

Anatomy of a Hurricane

Hurricanes are born in the steamy late-summer environment of the tropics when rapidly evaporating ocean waters combine with strong wind currents. Several hundred miles wide and packing winds of over 100 m.p.h., hurricanes cool the Earth by sucking heat from the Earth's surface and drawing it into the upper atmosphere (above 40,000 feet).

Mom hits principal of school

OTSEGO, Mich. (AP) — A high school's war on drugs turned violent when an angry mother socked the principal in the jaw for calling police to question her son.

The woman, whose name was withheld, was arrested Monday for assault and battery after allegedly punching Otsego high school Principal James Leyndyke, police Chief Elton Goswick said.

Leyndyke called police Friday because he suspected a student of selling drugs, Goswick said. When the youth was told police were called, he fled on foot.

The boy's mother later showed up at school, angry that police were called, Goswick said.

"He took her into the office to try to explain the situation to her, telling her it was part of his job, Goswick said. The woman then responded, "And this is part of my job," and she struck him on the jaw with her fist."

The 5-foot-3, 130-pound woman bruised Leyndyke's jaw, Goswick said. She has posted bond and no arraignment date has been set. The misdemeanor carries a maximum 90 days in jail.

Her son was suspended from school.

Joint chiefs chairman calls for end to sales of assault weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. William Crowe Jr., retiring chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called Thursday for an end to sales of assault weapons.

He said the nation "might consider doing unusual things with the military" to win the war against drugs.

"If we want to fight it, and we want to whip it, we want to prevent it. I would suggest that it does require unusual measures," Crowe said in a wide-ranging interview with news service reporters.

President Bush has banned imported assault weapons but has allowed sales of U.S.-made versions to continue.

Saying the nation has never "seen the fiber of our society leaven away by an insidious, uncontrollable threat," Crowe suggested that in the anti-drug fight, America might want to use the military in new ways.

"That doesn't appall me," he said.

He said he could not outline the Pentagon's role in great detail, noting the military's plans were currently being worked out at the command of Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

But he said U.S. forces will not be drawn into anti-drug combat overseas, and that Pentagon officials were not interested in shooting down unidentified aircraft suspected of ferrying illicit narcotics into the country — a possibility suggested by some in Congress.

Crowe said he finds the drug threat is so severe a problem that he could foresee an expanded role for the U.S. military overseas in fighting international drug traffickers.

"Perhaps that function will grow," Crowe said of the use of military trainers and advisers in the Andean nations under Bush's anti-drug strategy. "If what we are doing now is effective, they may want more of it."

On the domestic front, Crowe cited several areas where the military role can be expanded in order to fight the flow of drugs across U.S. borders.

"If we don't have control, it's our fault," the admiral said in an interview with The Associated Press and Reuters.

Crowe is scheduled to retire Oct. 1 after 43 years in the military. The 64-year-old former submarine officer is wrapping up two terms as the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, where he served as the principal military adviser to the president and as the Pentagon's top military leader.

Crowe said the nation's civilians must consider curbing some of their beloved freedoms if the drug problem is to be eradicated.

"Certainly if the threat is as grave as many people picture it to be, the United States can't fight a threat that serious and be normal," he said.

Crowe said certain elements in our society "want drugs to go away, but they don't want the quality of their rights eroded."

The admiral, asked about the proliferation of guns in society, said, "I've never objected to measures that make you register your guns. I think the most reasonable position seems to be, that we should generally know where the guns are, and who owns them, and if you own a gun you shouldn't insist on owning it clandestinely," he said.

Asked if he believed that the sale or purchase of assault weapons should be allowed, he responded, "I don't think so."

Law enforcement officials say such weapons often are used by drug traffickers.

Asked which rights American must think about curbing, Crowe shot back, "Search and seizure. The most simple one is random drug testing. ... That is what has allowed us to bring down the usage so heavily in the military."

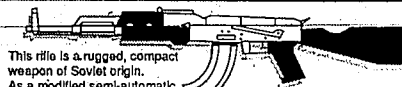

"They should be required to come in certain corridors, and to fly in certain ways that if they are intercepted, ... forced to land," he said.

Asked if unidentified aircraft should be shot down, he said, "We don't want to shoot down anybody. There's lots to things we could do before that."

GNP grows 2.5 percent, outlook called 'pretty'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy grew at a moderate 2.5 percent pace in the second quarter, the government said Thursday.

That is down somewhat from the first quarter but strong enough to stop any new predictions of imminent recession.

The Commerce Department reported that April-June growth in the gross national product compared with a 3.7 percent gain in the first three months. The second-quarter GNP had been revised downward 0.2 percentage point from the 2.7 percent growth estimate a month ago.

Nearly two-thirds of the January-March strength came from an anticipated rebound in farm output. Without the drought effect, growth actually was only 1.5 percent.

"The picture is a pretty one," said Allen Sikes, chief economist for The Boston Co. "Not too much growth, not too little ... right on the nose for a soft-landing."

"The picture," said Robert Dederick, chief economist for The Northern Trust Co. in Chicago, "is an economy that is continuing to climb, albeit at a subdued rate ... a laid-back pace, but that's really what the Fed wants."

The Federal Reserve has moved for over a year to achieve a so-called "soft-landing" by dampening inflation by slowing the economy without driving it into a recession.

Thus, analysts said, the Fed also should appreciate the downward revision in the GNP's April-June inflation rate. A price index tied to the GNP showed a 5 percent gain, rather than the 5.1 percent estimate a month ago.

Since the April-June quarter, Dederick noted, "inflation has ebbed considerably." He said the second-quarter GNP rate "is the worst inflation number we'll have for the year and for some time ahead, at least several quarters ahead."

And he predicted "we're likely to see more of the same on growth, perhaps a bit lower ... no more than what has been in the second quarter and more likely less."

The Fed, which influences the economy by controlling monetary growth, "will not be influenced by this report" to reduce interest rates

further at this time, Sinai said. "In fact, had it known in June that the economy would have risen this much, it probably would not have reduced interest rates then."

In a companion report, the Fed said after-tax profits of U.S. corporations fell 7.2 percent in the second quarter, a bigger decline than the 5.4 percent drop estimated a month ago.

It was the second consecutive quarterly decline and, Dederick said, "shows that economic slowing is not without pain."

The GNP is the nation's total output of goods and services and its broadest measure of economic growth.

The downward revision in the second-quarter GNP reflected drops in earlier estimates of consumer and government spending. But consumer spending, which represents two-thirds of all economic activity, still increased a healthy 1.9 percent in the April-June quarter.

At the same time, business investment spending advanced a strong 8.6 percent and U.S. exports grew 13.1 percent.

Federal workers criticize consumer group

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of federal employees has charged that a consumer group is undermining a government auto safety program, but the head of the organization said Thursday that his group serves a useful watchdog function.

"The facts show that recalls are down and that defective vehicles aren't being recalled," said Clarence Dilow, executive director of the Center for Auto Safety. "Our response is to continue to publicize when the agency doesn't do its job."

Dilow's comments came after publication in Thursday's editions of The Washington Post of excerpts from a letter to him from 50 career employees at the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Employees of the Office of Defects Investigation said Dilow was undermining its safety defects program and that the center's attacks were eroding the public's confidence in its ability to pursue safety defects, thereby discouraging motorists from submitting safety defect information to it.

"History proves them wrong," Dilow responded. "Whenever we have criticized them, they get more complaints not less."

Dilow said he had not received a copy of the letter, but learned of it from media inquiries.

NHTSA spokesman Tim Hurd called the letter "a good clear statement of the frustration (the workers) feel in dealing with the CFAS."

"I think the employees are frustrated by the fact that they can't get recalls like they used to," Dilow said.

Earlier this month, Dilow said NHTSA had halted 25 investigations during the Reagan administration under pressure from the auto industry.

"Although some of the decisions were more difficult than others, to charge that we are captives of the auto industry because investigations were closed ignores the facts completely," the letter said.

It also accused Dilow of selling information "obtained from the agency to lawyers representing automobile accident victims."

Dilow said the center makes no profit from computer printouts it provides "to the public, not just lawyers," with information on complaints about cars.

Broadcasters consider reviving program codes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Association of Broadcasters, responding to a federal regulator's suggestion to curb "shock radio," said Thursday it is considering reviving radio and TV program codes that were dropped under government pressure in the 1970s.

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Alfred Sikes, in an address to a radio broadcasters' convention in New Orleans last week, urged radio executives to tone out "shock radio" programs that use sexually and racially oriented humor to attract audiences.

Sikes said broadcasters should revive the codes that were abandoned in the mid-1970s after the Justice Department initiated an anti-rsult-law suit against provisions of the codes involving advertising. New codes should be drawn up by the industry, without government pressure, Sikes said.

NAB spokesman Walt Wurfel said the NAB's executive committee, "in response to comments made by Chairman Sikes at Radio 89 (convention) ... instructed the staff to conduct an assessment of the feasibility, effectiveness, legal and legislative elements of ... and member support for ... devising a statement of standards or guidelines concerning programming in the public interest."

Sikes, a former radio station owner who came to the FCC six weeks ago, told the broadcasters' convention they were not "simply recorders, transmitters and antennas. We are what we broadcast."

He noted that on Aug. 24 the FCC announced it was considering action against three radio stations in Chicago, San Jose, Calif., and Indianapolis for possibly broadcasting indecent programming during daytime hours when children may have been listening.

That action was widely viewed as a shot across the bow of broadcasters from a new, non-nonsense FCC.

Court ruling could hamper age bias suits

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a dozen government lawsuits alleging age discrimination by employers may have to be dismissed unless Congress restores protections overturned by the Supreme Court, a government lawyer testified Thursday.

Charles A. Shanor, general counsel of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, spoke at a House hearing in support of legislation to reverse a June ruling that bias in fringe benefits is not automatically banned under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act.

The high court ruled "that federal law bans biased benefit plans only where the disparities are part of an attempt to discriminate in 'some non-fringe-benefit aspect' of employment such as hiring or firing."

Shanor said the EEOC has more than 30 cases pending in courts around the country in which it alleges that employers discriminated against older workers by limiting their fringe benefits.

"We estimate that over half of these cases would require dismissal ... absent remedial legislation," Shanor told a joint hearing of the House Select Committee on Aging and Youth, Education and Labor subcommittee.

EEOC Vice Chairman R. Gault, Silberman told the hearing there is "no good policy reason for allowing arbitrary, unjustifiable discrimination against older workers in this one area when all other aspects of their employment are protected." She said more than 400 cases pending before the EEOC could be affected.

Cambodians shower flowers on withdrawing Vietnamese troops

Vietnamese troops lean out of their trucks to bid goodbye to Cambodian bystanders Thursday as they begin a final pullout

SIEM REAP, Cambodia (AP) — Cambodians showered Vietnamese soldiers with flowers Thursday as they began their final withdrawal from a war that started with a Christmas invasion 11 years ago and ended the bloody rule of the Khmer Rouge.

The Vietnamese-installed government said it would carry on the fight against a three-party guerrilla coalition. "Our friends go, but the special Cambodian-Vietnamese relationship does not," said a red banner in front of dozens of military vehicles that rumbled out of this northwestern province to the blare of a pop music band in a government-organized ceremony.

The only observers of the fanfare were foreign journalists and official delegations from Vietnam's socialist allies — Laos, Cuba and the Soviet Union, the main source of arms for the war.

As the withdrawal began, Phnom Penh's Prime Minister Hun Sen returned home from Thailand without a cease-fire agreement. The Thais had tried to patch a truce together after a failed international peace conference.

Hun Sen called on countries to honor pledges to halt aid to the guerrillas after the Vietnamese pullout.

Vietnamese officials said 26,000 troops from Siem Reap and other areas will cross the border into southern Vietnam by Tuesday, ending Hanoi's involvement in the war that erupted after it invaded to oust its former Communist comrade, the Khmer Rouge.

Leaders of the Khmer Rouge and two non-Communist guerrilla organizations in the resistance coalition say the withdrawal is a ploy and charge Vietnam is hiding troops in Cambodia. The coalition commands 30,000 fighters.

China shared that skepticism Thursday. "It (Hanoi) is still employing tricks on the question of troop withdrawal and placing a variety of obstacles in the way of a comprehensive settlement of the Cambodian question," Foreign Ministry spokesman Li Zhaoxing told reporters.

Some observers have called Hanoi's intervention "Vietnam's Vietnam" — likening its withdrawal from a costly, agonizing war against forces it could not eradicate to the United States' war in Vietnam.

Hanoi says 55,300 Vietnamese died fighting the Cambodians, half of them in 1977 and 1978 before their Christmas invasion. Vietnam's impoverished population of 65 million also suffered from economic blockades mounted by non-Communist countries outraged by the invasion.

It ended the rule of Pol Pot, who led Khmer Rouge efforts to force an agrarian revolution in Cambodia. Hundreds of thousands of civilians were slain.

"The West should stop supporting the Khmer Rouge and stop being fooled" by Khmer Rouge propaganda, senior Foreign Ministry official Ueh-Kim said at the farewell ceremony.

He said his Vietnamese-backed government is prepared to continue fighting, but added he does not believe his country ever would ask the Vietnamese to return.

Phnom Penh rejects U.S.-backed demands from the non-Communist guerrillas who say they rather would have a transitional government including the Khmer Rouge, the most powerful resistance faction, than continue fighting it.

Maj. Gen. Huol Savorn, regional commander of Cambodian forces, said his troops have taken over the fighting from the Khmer Rouge, the most powerful resistance faction, than continue fighting it.

After the pullout, the guerrillas will launch a major offensive to try to occupy border areas before striking further into Cambodia, he told reporters.

Fighting already has intensified. Cambodian refugees at a U.N. camp on the Thai border Thursday threatened a strike and demanded to be moved to a safer place after four to eight artillery shells exploded close by their camp overnight, a U.N. refugee worker said.

Across the border, departing Vietnamese troops carried rifles along with flowers and miniature flags thrown by thousands of Cambodians.

The Cambodians, many looking glum and uninterested, stood outside a kindergarten school built by Vietnamese troops of the departing Front 479, and waved flags.

Hundreds of E. Germans wait in Prague embassy

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — A visiting West German official said Thursday that more than 500 East Germans are camped out at the West German Embassy in Prague, seeking free passage to the West.

Peter Glotz, head of a visiting West German parliamentary delegation, said many were determined to stay until their demands were met.

"Well over 500 refugees, including 170 children and two pregnant women, are camping out on the embassy grounds," Glotz told a news conference in Prague.

"There are very many young people ... and there are people who quite strongly say they will not return to (East Germany)," the official said.

The flood of East Germans emigrating to the West through Hungary continued, with 465 crossing into neighboring Austria in the last 24 hours, Austrian border officials said nearly 18,000 East Germans have entered since Hungary opened its westward border 11 days ago to the emigrants.

From Austria, the East Germans are heading to West Germany, where they are granted automatic citizenship, West German officials said 304 arrived overnight.

Most have cited East Germany's hard-line Communist government as their reason for leaving.

In East Berlin, Deputy Culture Minister Klaus Hoepcke was quoted in the youth newspaper Junge Welt as calling for an investigation into the causes of the refugee wave, and social changes needed to stem it.

About 250 would-be emigrants last week accepted an East German offer of impunity and the chance to apply for legal emigration and left the Prague embassy, reducing the number there to about 150.

Many were reported to have come to the embassy after having been turned back at the Hungarian border by Czechoslovak authorities. Hard-line Czechoslovakia has condemned Hungary for allowing the East Germans to go West.

"Our delegation tried to urge a humanitarian solution" in talks with Czechoslovak officials and Foreign Minister Jaromir Johanes, Glotz said. "But at this point I cannot raise any hopes."

Arabs execute 16 Shiites who planted bombs at pilgrimage

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Sixteen Kuwaiti Shiite Muslims were executed Thursday for planting bombs that exploded in Mecca at the height of the Moslem pilgrimage this year, the Interior Ministry announced.

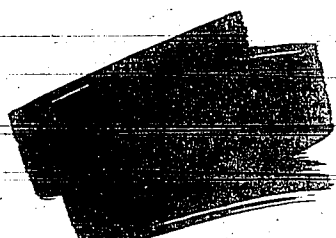

The statement, read over the state-run Riyadh radio, said that another four Kuwaitis received prison terms of 15 and 20 years and 1,000 to 1,500 lashes of the whip. It said another nine Kuwaitis were acquitted.

It was the first public word from Saudi Arabia that anyone had even been arrested in connection with the July 10 explosions, which killed one Pakistani pilgrim and injured 16 pilgrims of various nationalities.

The bombs went off as roughly 2 million Moslems were preparing to head to Mount Arafat for the culmination of the pilgrimage rites. Saudi Arabia is home of Islam's holiest shrines at Mecca and Medina.

Residents believe convent should remain at Auschwitz

OSWIECIM, Poland (AP) — A Vatican statement calling for a convent at the edge of Auschwitz to be moved has not changed the feelings of local residents who want the nuns to stay.

"This is Poland and they (the Vatican) are very far away," said an elderly man hoeing weeds in Thursday in the well-tended garden on the convent grounds adjacent to the death camp's walls.

"The nuns need to be here, and nobody has the right to throw Poles off Polish soil," said a woman who has worked more than 20 years in a bookstore inside the camp, under the cloister's shadow.

All the Poles interviewed seemed wary and refused to give their names.

The 14 nuns of the Carmelite order, who in 1984 moved into the abandoned theater used by the Nazis as a storehouse, are at the center of a controversy that is straining Catholic-Jewish relations.

The Vatican statement Monday urging that the nuns move appeared aimed at persuading the Polish church to reverse its stand and honor a 1987 agreement between church representatives and Jewish leaders to move the convent.

Led by Cardinal Jozef Glemp, the primate, the Roman Catholic Church in Poland has yet to officially react to the Vatican's position.

Glemp met Wednesday in London with a British Jewish leader, and according to the state-run PAP news agency, "further prospects surfaced" for resolving the dispute.

"For sure the church in Poland will make some moves now to solve this problem," said Krzysztof Kozlowski, assistant editor of the influential church-linked Tygodnik Powszechny weekly in nearby Krakow and a national legislator.

But Kozlowski said in an interview in Warsaw on Thursday that the feelings of Jews about the convent are "not very easy" for the average Pole to understand.

Jews and some Christians say the convent, and particularly its large wooden cross, do not belong in a place where 2.5 million Jews were killed during World War II.

"They (nuns) are trying to take away our memories and even our cemeteries," said Zvi Sambar, an Israeli guide at the camp Thursday who was accompanying a group of children from Israel.

Jewish leaders in Europe, Israel and the United States renewed appeals for the removal of the nuns this spring after the church missed a Feb. 22 deadline, set in the 1987 agreement, to move the convent to a prayer center away from the camp. The prayer center has yet to be built.

Meanwhile, relations between Polish Catholics and Jews have deteriorated.

Tension escalated in July when a small group of American-Jews climbed over the convent fence to try to talk to the nuns. Workers in the convent poured water on the rabbi and his six students and dragged them off the premises.

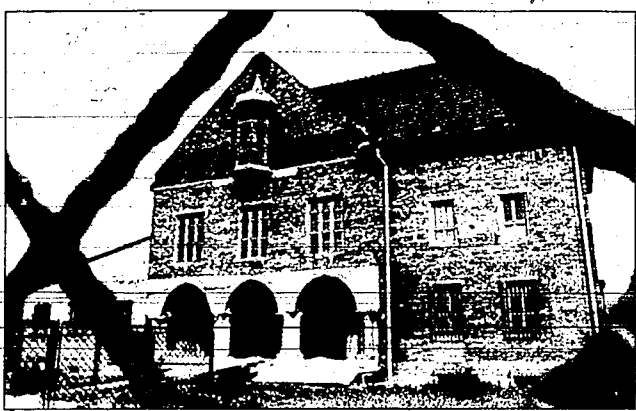

The Carmelites now have hand-lettered signs in English saying "No trespassing" and "Private property" posted in the grass near their gate. A St. Bernard patrols the perimeter of the convent.

The nuns seem determined to stay.

Throughout the afternoon Thursday, several nuns worked in the vegetable garden, tending flower beds or sweeping the front porch of the red-brick building.

"We don't listen to the radio. We don't read newspapers. We don't give out information. We only pray," said a nun who answered the door at the convent. She then went back inside.

There are signs of continuing renovations — bricks and lumber on the porch and a wheelbarrow and sand on the sidewalk.

The Vatican says this convent should be moved away from Auschwitz

USSR releases inmate identity cards

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Red Cross has given the International Red Cross the identity cards of 130,000 prisoners of the Auschwitz concentration camp, Tass said Thursday.

The Red Cross soon will begin processing the cards, making it possible to identify the citizens of many countries who became victims of Nazi Holocaust, the official news agency said.

"The deaths of over 74,000 people were neatly recorded, day after day, hour after hour, in 46 huge volumes," Valentina Fatyukhina, head of the Soviet Red Cross research department told Tass.

"Their names, the birth dates and the names of parents were written down," she said. The information was made available to the International Red Cross earlier this week, Tass said.

Crash highlights vulnerability of small airports with lax security

PARIS (AP) — The likelihood that someone put a bomb aboard a French jetliner in an African backwater, killing 171 people, kindled fresh fears among specialists over aircraft vulnerability.

Worldwide, according to the International Air Transport Association, 900 to 1,000 scheduled airlines serve 5,000 to 6,000 airports. Security is all but absent in many of the airports.

Experts scrutinize major airports after fatal incidents, but otherwise airport security is left to national authorities, with almost no international oversight.

"This is the problem with security," said John Brindley, a Transport Association spokesman. "It's like night guards at a bank. After you've been robbed, you realize you need three guards instead of two."

If terrorists target airports where security is lax, he said, echoing concerns of others interviewed, the cost of protecting flights could be far higher than once believed.

The problem goes far beyond screening passengers and baggage.

In many African airports, for example, outsiders can roam unchallenged around parked aircraft. Most have VIP lounges from which officials and their retinues walk directly to boarding doors.

Frequent travelers report broken X-ray equipment, lackadaisical searches and even instances where small bribes allow passengers to skirt time-consuming security checks.

Sometimes only cursory checks are made of baggage handlers, caterers and cleaners.

One African who recently transi-ed Brazzaville, Congo, on business described his experience on the condition he not be identified.

"I walked through the electronic gate, forgetting a large bunch of keys in my pocket. Nothing sounded, and the policeman in charge waved me through. But that is not unusual in Africa," he said.

After the crash Tuesday of UTA Flight 772 in the Niger desert, airline president Rene Lapautre said he felt some African airports had "fragile" security measures.

He was asked if that included Brazzaville, from where the UTA flight originated. "Let us be frank, yes," he told French television.

Lapautre said only the combined efforts of police, airport authorities and airlines could reduce the risk to passengers.

"It's not just Africa," Brindley said. "Not much is going on in Reykjavik (Iceland) or Adelaide (Australia), say, so people might be a little more relaxed."

Benjamin Demps, U.S. Federal Aviation Administration director for Europe, Africa and the Middle East, refused comment on the UTA accident.

Soviet paper Pravda apologizes to Yeltsin for news article

Ten thousand Soviets rally in a Moscow suburb to show support for maverick Boris Yeltsin

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party newspaper Pravda printed a rare public apology Thursday for a report that said political maverick Boris Yeltsin had gone on a boozing and buying spree in the United States.

It said the reporter who wrote the story had not seen anything of the kind.

A legislative committee created to serve as a watchdog for the state-run media said the account of Yeltsin's purported American binge smacked of the "gutter press" and was unacceptable.

Yeltsin called the piece "garbage." The lengthy expose appeared Monday in Pravda. It was originally published by the Italian newspaper Pro-Repubblica and said the Soviet legislator left behind in the United States "a wake of catastrophic prophecies, insane expenses, interviews and above all the perfume of Jack Daniels Black Label."

The Pravda article was picked up by the official Tass news agency and distributed nationwide. Regional newspapers carried it in full.

A flushed and angry Yeltsin, who returned home Monday from a nine-city U.S. tour, accused Pravda of seeking "revenge for the fact that Americans received us with admiration."

The Communist Party daily said Thursday it had instructed its Washington correspondent, V. Limnik, to contact the La Repubblica reporter who wrote the original article, Vittorio Zucconi, and check its accuracy.

"Asked whether he stood by the authenticity of everything he wrote about B.N. Yeltsin in his article, Zucconi replied he had based it on secondary sources, on a publication that appeared in The Washington Post Sept. 13 headlined 'With Drunken Embraces Towards The Capitalists' and the testimony of Soviet emigres who heard talk of Yeltsin's conduct in Baltimore," Pravda said.

The Pravda editorial board offered its apologies to Yeltsin but appeared to do so only grudgingly.

The reprint of La Repubblica's story was promoted on the front page with excerpts saying Yeltsin found the United States "a holiday, a stage, a bar 5,000 kilometers long." The apology was on the bottom of page 7.

Members of the media watchdog committee — the Supreme Soviet Committee on Glasnost and People's Rights — accused Pravda of deliberately drawing a biased picture of Yeltsin, a deputy in the Supreme Soviet.

The Pravda report apparently did little to dull public enthusiasm for Yeltsin, who revels in his role as an anti-establishment gladiator fighting for a better life for average Soviets, though he himself is a member of the elite Communist Party Central Committee.

On Wednesday night, about 10,000 people rallied in the Moscow suburb of Zelenograd to show support for Yeltsin and for two prosecutors who have alleged corruption at the Communist Party's highest levels.

During his U.S. visit that ended Sunday, Yeltsin warned Americans that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev could face a revolution if he fails to improve living conditions soon.

Yeltsin, the former Communist Party chief of Moscow, was stripped of that post almost two years ago by Gorbachev, who denounced him as politically immature and overly ambitious.

In a remarkable political comeback in March, Yeltsin won 89 percent of the vote when he ran against an establishment candidate to represent Moscow in the new national legislature, the Congress of People's Deputies.

Moroccan train crash kills 6

MARRAKECH, Morocco (AP) — A train crashed into a bus carrying 45 French tourists at an unguarded rail crossing Thursday, killing six people on the bus, police said.

At least 28 of the tourists were injured, eight seriously, police said. There were no reports of injuries on the train.

The accident occurred at 3:30 a.m. at Sidi Buatmen, 18 miles from Marrakech. The visitors had attended a festival and were returning to Marrakech to spend their last night in Morocco.

Greenpeace protest staged

LA MADDALENA, Sardinia (AP) — Greenpeace activists sailed by a U.S. naval base on this Italian island Thursday to protest the alleged presence of radioactivity from nuclear-powered submarines.

The Greenpeace ship Sirius, flanked by several rubber boats, approached the American naval support vessel Orion and the protesters unfurled a large banner reading "Nuclear Free La Maddalena."

Shiite: U.S. delaying release

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Shiite Muslim cleric linked to the captors of Western hostages was quoted Wednesday as saying Washington is delaying efforts to gain freedom for eight American captives. Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, spiritual head of the pro-Franj group Hezbollah, told the pro-Syrian Beirut daily Ash-Sharq. "In my opinion, America is following a plan for freezing the issue of the hostages at the media level."

Hezbollah, or Party of God, is widely believed to be the umbrella for Shiite factions holding most of the 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon.

German left's statue OK'ed

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The leftist Greens Party has won court approval to display a monument to an "unknown deserter" during a government festival, officials said Thursday.

The Greens say the monument is dedicated to all Germans who fled Adolf Hitler's rule and refused to serve his army.

Nepal landslide claims 38

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — A landslide caused by heavy rain killed at least 38 people and injured five, the national news agency RSS reported Thursday.

The news agency said seven people were missing from the landslide, which hit Monday in eastern Nepal.

NATO protests proposals which would reduce the threat of war

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — NATO on Thursday offered the Warsaw Pact a sweeping new proposal for reducing the threat of war in Europe, and senior Western negotiators expressed confidence an agreement could be reached by next year.

The proposals would regulate exchange of information on numbers and locations of forces and weapons systems of the two military pacts over a zone stretching west from the Atlantic Ocean to the Soviet Ural mountains in the east.

Western delegation heads said their new presentation at the talks on a Conventional Armed Forces in Europe completed initial NATO concepts on curbing the possibility of non-nuclear war on the continent.

In earlier proposals, the 16-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization suggested weapons ceilings on arms categories including combat aircraft and helicopters, and the scrapping of all withdrawn equipment.

Chief West German delegate Ruediger Hartmann called the total NATO package the "most comprehensive, most detailed and most ambitious arms control system that has ever worked out for conventional forces."

His Canadian counterpart, David Peel, told reporters, "Now that our packages are there, I think chances of our reaching agreement next year are extremely good."

Reflecting NATO confidence of quick progress, chief U.S. delegate Stephen J. Ledogar said the alliance was planning to present a draft treaty possibly before the current round of talks ends Oct. 19. The talks resume Nov. 10.

The new, 13-page NATO initiative includes the following proposals: —Exchange of detailed information on combat and support units and air defenses to the squadron or battalion level.

—Providing the numbers and locations of main battle tanks, artillery pieces, armored troop carriers, combat aircraft and combat helicopters, as well as NATO arms depots and their Warsaw Pact equivalents.

—Information on the number and location of U.S. and Soviet troops in allied European countries.

—Advance notification of major changes in force organization and strength, mobilization of reservists if they number 42,000 or more, and of major movements of main battle tanks, artillery and armored troop carriers. —Limits on the numbers of main battle tanks, artillery and troop carriers in storage.

—No more than one military exercise every two years mobilizing more than 40,000 troops or 800 main battle tanks.

—Inspection of designated bases and depots and the right to ask for inspection of non-designated ones; requests to look at non-designated bases and depots may be refused.

—Monitoring of the destruction of withdrawn equipment.

A Warsaw Pact negotiator, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said in an interview that the new proposals "showed promise" but that it was too early for substantive comment.

The seven-nation Warsaw Pact still has to formally respond to a NATO initiative presented in July.

That initiative incorporated proposals made in May by President Bush, including capping the U.S. and Soviet troop strengths at 275,000 each and slashing the number of military aircraft.

While acknowledging general superiority in numbers, the Warsaw Pact disputes the accuracy of specific NATO statistics.

Gunmen kill Lebanese parliament member

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Three men armed with AK-47 rifles opened fire Thursday on a Sunni Muslim member of Parliament, killing him and his driver and injuring two passers-by, police said.

Across Beirut and surrounding mountains, Syrian forces and gunners lay to Lebanon's Christian leader, Gen. Michel Aoun, dueling with mortars and tank cannons.

Police said at least one person was killed and 813 wounded, raising the overall toll to 927 killed and 2,731 wounded since the latest round of fighting broke out March 8.

The attack on Parliament member — Nazim — Kadri occurred as the 74-year-old politician entered his car outside his home in west Beirut at about 10:20 a.m., according to witnesses.

A police spokesman said Kadri and his police driver, Sgt. Sami Suleiman, were killed instantly and two pedestrians were injured, one seriously, in the shooting.

An official obituary released by Parliament's public relations department said Kadri was first elected as a representative for the central Bekaa Valley in the one-chamber house in 1951. The former lawyer was "repeatedly elected" until 1972 when the latest parliamentary elections were held.

The civil war, which broke out in 1975, has prevented further elections. Kadri's assassination brought to 73 the number of surviving deputies in the 99-seat Parliament.

Twenty-five have died and the seat of former President Amin Gemayel became vacant when he was elected head of state in 1982.

The latest violence occurred as an Arab League committee tried to enforce a cease-fire call.

Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt told the Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Qabas that the peace plan issued last week by the three-man committee was "inadequate." He demanded guarantees that arms supplies to Aoun would be cut off.

NBC, Jane Pauley reportedly talking about changes on 'Today'

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC News executives are talking with Jane Pauley about her future with the "Today" show.

But they won't comment on speculation that she is unhappy with changes affecting the show and wants to leave it, an NBC spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Conversations are taking place which we feel are appropriate, timely and private, said the spokeswoman, Peggy Hubble.

She said Pauley's talks with NBC News President Michael Gartner and NBC Sports President Dick Ebersol, who also is the news division's vice president for "Today," concerned her future with the program.

Other than to confirm that talks were taking place, we have no further comment on it," Hubble said. "Pauley joined "Today" as a co-anchor in October 1976.

There have been two major changes at the show this month.

One was NBC's announcement Tuesday that it has hired David Naught, executive producer of the syndicated "Entertainment Tonight" series, as senior executive producer of "Today," among other duties. The other was the shift of John

JANE PAULEY

Palmer, the "Today" news anchor, to the earlier "NBC News at Sunrise," and the move of that program's anchor, Deborah Norville, to the "Today" slot that Palmer held for seven years.

Norville this summer signed a five-year contract with NBC News, which she joined in January 1987.

Olmos says success comes from discipline

AURORA, Colo. (AP) — Actor

Edward James Olmos said he relied on "discipline muscle" to rise from Los Angeles barrio kid to movie star.

"I started off not speaking the language. I was a minority. I did not know how to read or write," Olmos said Wednesday during an appearance at a high school.

Olmos, who starred in "Stand and Deliver," told 1,800 mostly minority teen-agers that developing discipline is like brushing their teeth.

"Since all of you brush your teeth every day, something that you don't get off on, what makes you think that you can't do something that you like seven days a week?" he said.

Olmos portrayed math teacher Jaime Escalante in the film. The teacher inspired 15 inner-city students at an East Los Angeles to pass the Advanced Placement test in calculus in 1982.

Appearing with Seale, Kesy turns on Leary

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — It wasn't the first time writer Ken Kesey turned on LSD guru of the '60s Timothy Leary.

The two appeared with former

Black Panther Bobby Seale at Leary's alma mater, the University of Alabama, but Leary couldn't get his microphone to work.

Kesey flipped a switch at the bottom of the mike stand.

"I have just been turned on by Ken Kesey," Leary joked. "I can't say it's the first time."

Leary told the college crowd Wednesday night people should be allowed to use drugs if they want to.

"The war on drugs is the war against pro-choice," Leary said. "The war on drugs is a war to make America respect authority."

Actor narrowly evades knife-wielding transient

OS ANGELES (AP) — Two workers at a Skid Row mission and a pair of police detectives just driving by rescued actor Kevin Dobson from a knife-wielding transient as the "Knobs Landing" star donned clothing to the power.

Dobson, who portrays Mack McKenzie on the CBS primetime soap opera, is a regular donor to the downtown Midnight Mission.

The actor was able to break free from the would-be robber Wednesday outside the shelter, police officer Mike Schwehr said.

Two mission employees came to the actor's aid, Schwehr said.

Detectives Tom Blake and Joel Berk were driving past the mission when the scuffle broke out. They arrested Sergio Orozco, 28, and confiscated a hunting knife from him, Schwehr said.

The secondhand clothes Dobson donated included several pairs of Levis jeans and Calvin Klein socks.

Queen's cousin will honor her regiment

VICTORIA, British Columbia (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II's first cousin, Alexandra, is not only a princess but the honorary head of a regiment, and she'll present her troops with a puppy and a new flag Saturday.

The princess arrived Wednesday for the 75th anniversary of the Canadian Scottish Regiment. She brought along a new mascot, an 8-week-old St. Bernard puppy, and a new regiment flag referred to as the "Queen's Color."

Novelist agrees that school hostage situation mirrored book

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Author Stephen King said that although high school student who held 11 classmates hostage at gunpoint was acting out the scenario of one of his novels, books don't cause such incidents.

"If they didn't do it on one way, they would do it another way," he told the Bangor Daily News. "Crazy is crazy."

King said he knew from the time he watched a television news account of Monday's classroom standoff in McKee, Ky., that it was a case of imitating the plot of "Rage," the novel he wrote in 1977 under the pen name Richard Bachman.

"It was my story," King said, adding that he reached that conclusion even before it was reported that police had a copy of "Rage" in the home of 17-year-old Dustin Pierce, the student taken into custody after the standoff.

State police and FBI agents also described "Rage" as a blueprint for Monday's hostage-taking.

But Pierce denied Tuesday that he was influenced by King's novel, saying he had never read it.

In King's novel, the main character, gun in hand, takes over his classroom in pursuit of what King described as a "pathological rage fantasy about his father."

Police said Pierce demanded to talk to his father, who he had not seen in years.

King said he was grateful no one was injured in Monday's standoff and that Pierce had surrendered peacefully. In "Rage," the young protagonist kills his teacher and a classmate.

This is not the first time that a

King novel has been part of a blurred image of reality. The Bangor resident said he has received newsclippings about police finding the word "redrum" near bodies of murder victims. The word, which is murder spelled backward, appeared in the 1976 novel "The Shining."

King said his works aren't the only ones in which life has imitated art.

One man stabbed his grandmother to death after seeing Alfred Hitchcock's "Psycho," he said, while the Charles Manson murders had references to Beatles music and the 1986 Tjeleni cyanide poisoning cases were preceded by a book which depicted poisoned drugs being used to commit murder.

Editor says Hoffa story checked out

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An editor at Playboy magazine said Wednesday that a sensitive investigation turned up no reasons to disbelieve an informant who says former Teamsters leader Jimmy Hoffa was buried beneath Giants Stadium.

"I lived with this story for seven months," said Peter Moore, an associate articles editor for Playboy. "You're kind of walking on eggs on a story like this."

The story in the Chicago-based magazine's November issue quotes Donald "Tony the Greek" Frankos, a self-described hitman and federally protected witness in the upcoming New York trial of alleged organized-crime boss John Gotti.

Franks also told the FBI in 1986 that Hoffa was shot to death by alleged Irish mob boss Jimmy Coonan and dismembered in a house near the Detroit suburb of Mount Clemens. Coonan is serving a lengthy prison term in an unrelated case.

Franks says Hoffa's body was stored in a freezer until it was buried in concrete next to the west end zone of the football stadium near New York.

FBI officials have declined to comment on Franks' account, one of many purporting to explain Hoffa's July 1975 disappearance.

New Jersey state police Superintendent Col. Clinton L. Pagano said he places little credibility in the report. That view is shared by Robert Mulcahy, president and chief executive officer of the New Jersey Sports & Exposition Authority, which runs Giants Stadium.

Franks says Hoffa was killed in a dispute over his desire to regain control of the Teamsters union after his release from federal prison in Lewisburg, Pa., where he was serving time for mail fraud and jury tampering.

"Confirmation, for me, would be finding the body," Moore said in a telephone interview. "We confirmed it to the degree that it is possible when you're dealing with major underworld figures."

Moore said he received a telephone call seven months ago from someone with a husky voice, offering information on where Hoffa's remains could be found.

Moore said he was doubtful, but began research. Moore said he and at least three staff members conducted scores of interviews, checked on the relationships Franks claimed to have and were able to uncover no inconsistencies in Franks' story.

"We got to the point where we believed that enough of Don Franks' story was checking out that we had to run with it," Moore said.

"It was a real game to get information that can corroborate a story like this," he said. "There are people trying to put him in jail for the same thing we're trying to report on. We were doing a dance for a while."

The only person to meet Franks was Lake Headley, a private investigator. Moore only spoke with Franks by telephone.

Goetz leaves jail, now faces lawsuit

NEW YORK (AP) — Subway gunman Bernhard Goetz was out from behind bars Wednesday for the first time since January but due to a next trial for the $50 million lawsuit filed by the one of the young men he shot nearly five years ago.

His early morning release from jail ended one chapter in the highly publicized case, which began December 22, 1984, when Goetz fled Manhattan after shooting four teen-agers on a subway train, leaving one paralyzed from the waist down.

"This morning, Goetz walked out of prison. Darrell Cabey will never walk out of his prison," Ron Kubly, an attorney for the paralyzed 23-year-old said Wednesday. "Darrell gets no time off for good behavior. No parole, no appeal. And it's that way for the rest of his life."

Goetz, who spent 250 days in jail after his Jan. 13 sentencing, left through a side door, avoiding eight camera crews and 30 reporters and photographers gathered at the front door, jail officials said.

Neither supporters nor demonstrators turned out for the release of Goetz, who became a folk hero to some and a symbol of racism to others after the shooting.

Goetz, who is white, claimed the four young black men were about to rob him; the teen-agers said they were panhandling for change to play video games.

A police officer drove the 41-year-old Goetz away from the jail, and he arrived at his apartment early Wednesday, dodging photographers as he entered the building. Phone calls to his apartment went unanswered through the day.

Goetz whiled away much of his time in jail playing chess with inmates in an 18-cell protective custody block. Ruby Ryles, a spokeswoman for the city Correction Department, said. Others in the block included convicted child killer Joel Steinberg and Joseph Fama, the alleged triggerman in the Bensonhurst racial attack.

Goetz said before his release that he might leave New York City to escape the constant attention his presence generates.

"For the past 41 years, he has been a prisoner of the media. Perhaps it's time for Bernhard Goetz to be left alone," said his attorney, Barry Slotnick. "Fortunately, this episode in his life is closed, and it's time that he be left alone."

But his reclusiveness will end Sept. 29, when Goetz is scheduled to give a deposition in the Cabey lawsuit, said Kubly.

Armenians will take case to Shevardnadze

Resort to ask for liquor license

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze may be thousands of miles from home, but a group of Armenians wants him to remember the continuing suffering in earthquake-ravaged Soviet Armenia.

About 40 Armenians from Denver, Los Angeles and Salt Lake City will be in Grand Teton National Park today to try to draw attention to Soviet Armenia, which was struck by a devastating earthquake last year.

The Armenians claim 85 percent of the relief supplies destined for the disaster zone have been held up in the port capital of Baku, and some say the supplies have been destroyed.

"We need to see, in an immediate sense, an end to this blockade because it's a real danger, a real damage," said Guren Yegharian, a spokesman for the Armenian National Committee. "People on the order of half-a-million were left homeless by the earthquake (last year)."

Many refugees are living in box cars and shacks, he said.

"They make lean-tos out of leftovers from the earthquake stricken zones," said Yegharian.

Yegharian said about 40 Armenians plan to protest Friday during a motorcade bringing the delegations from Jackson Lake Lodge to the AMK Ranch. He said the group wants earthquake relief to be considered if, and when a full summit is held later this year.

"Currently there's three other isues, mostly security and economic-related issues, that are on the agenda between the United States and the Soviet Union," he said Thursday.

Yegharian said the protesters also will stage a demonstration near Colter Bay, adjacent to Jackson Lake Lodge, where the U.S. and Soviet delegations are staying.

Meanwhile, about 150 Jackson elementary school students plan to welcome the delegations tonight when they arrive at the airport.

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Seven months after rescinding an ordinance permitting alcohol sales in unincorporated areas, the Cache County Council has approved a measure that will allow Sherwood Hills resort to seek a state liquor license.

The council voted 4-2 Wednesday night in favor of a revised ordinance.

Sherwood Hills, located in Sardinia Canyon, has been seeking a liquor license since owner John Booth bought the resort 18 months ago.

Council members Bette Kotter and Darrell Gibbons voted against the ordinance and Councilman Randy Weston was absent.

Council Chairman Dennis Funk had opposed the ordinance last February, but he has since served on a Chamber of Commerce committee that studied the issue for several months and came up with recommendations adopted by the council.

One recommendation was to ban brown-bagging at the resort.

Employees say robber motivated by 'power'

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Three Bank of America Fork employees testified Thursday the gunman who robbed their bank in June indicated he was motivated by a higher "power" and repeatedly stated, "Is our two minutes up?"

The employees took the witness stand Thursday during the trial of James and Darlene Hatch, a Manti couple charged in U.S. District Court with the holdup of the bank on June 13. James Hatch also is charged with using a firearm.

Defense attorneys contend the couple were confused and misled by a purported religious authority when they robbed the bank of $2,500.

According to prosecutors, James Hatch entered the bank with a gun and handed a note to a bank officer and another employee. Bank vice president Carl Devey was held hostage during the robbery, but was released unharmed.

Devey testified that the note the robber handed employees stated, "You have no idea the power behind this." It also said that if an alarm was activated, there would be "death shortly after."

Devey said he told the robber, "You don't look like you want to do this." He said the man responded, "No, I don't, but there's power behind this."

All three bank employees testified the robber stated repeatedly that he had two minutes and kept asking if his time was up.

The employees also said the gunman was wearing makeup and was dressed unusually for a warm summer day, wearing overalls buttoned up to his neck, a wig, hat and sunglasses.

In opening statements, Wednesday, defense attorney Robert Archuleta, representing James Hatch, said his client was suffering from a brain disorder and that a representative of the Lord's Covenant Church in Phoenix convinced him to rob the bank.

"This case is about a sick man ... who lost control of himself. Had he been healthy, he would have never, ever ... ever committed that crime," he said.

Isaac Morley, attorney for Darlene Hatch, said she was with her husband when the robbery occurred, but she didn't intend to commit a crime.

"Darlene is not the type of woman to form this kind of intent," said Morley, who characterized his client as a "concerned, albeit confused, wife trying to deal with her husband."

According to an FBI report, Mrs. Hatch told police her husband planned to rob the bank so the couple could buy gold coins and save them to help other people after the collapse of the nation's banking system.

Police said the couple had obtained a pamphlet circulated by the Phoenix church, which stated that the Federal Reserve Board was causing the downfall of America's economy.

Archuleta said a church representative told James Hatch he had two minutes to rob the bank.

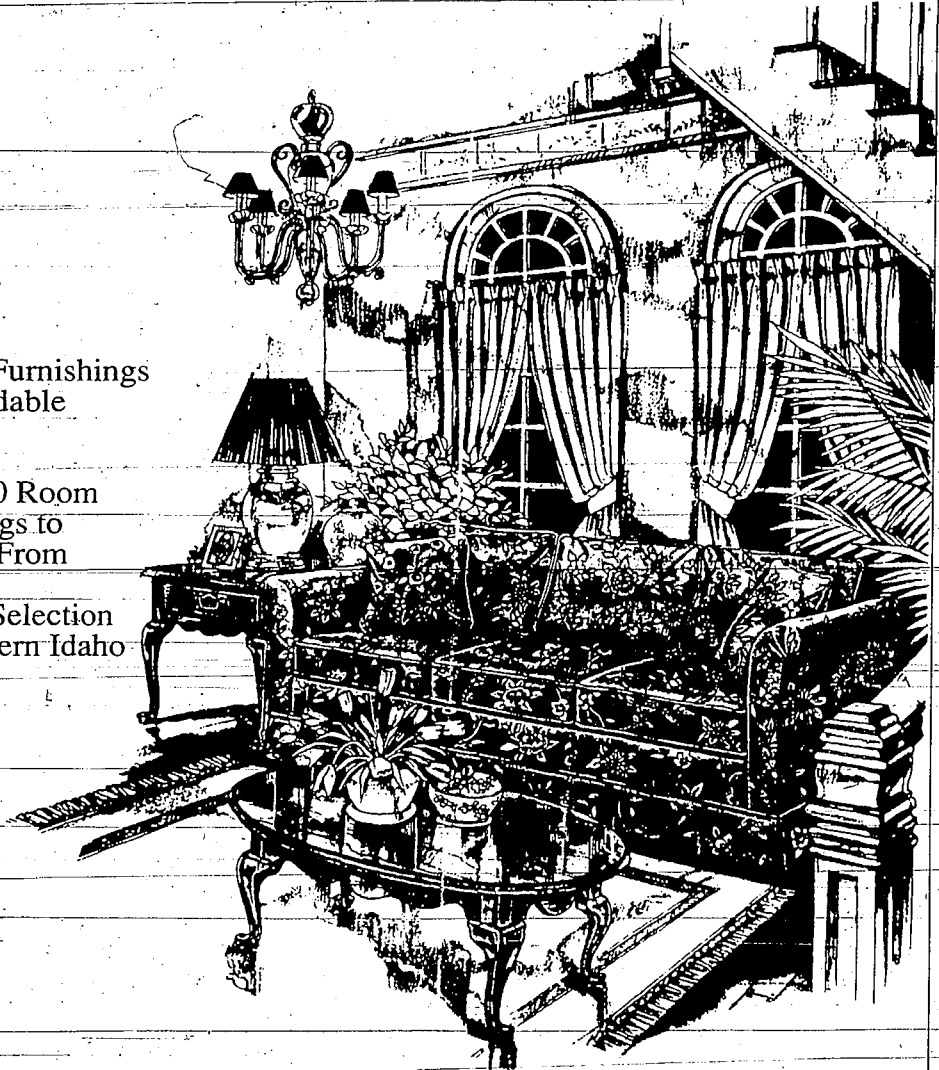

In other matters Thursday, Morley was preparing to enter a plea for his client when Judge Bruce Jenkins told him instead to proceed with the trial.

"He's waiting for something to happen," a perplexed Morley said afterward. "I don't know what that is."

Jenkins also quashed a motion to vacate a subpoena issued by Archuleta to James Hatch's Mormon bishop.

First Federal hoping name change helps

TWIN FALLS — First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Twin Falls hopes a name change will better convey to customers that it offers more services than the old-style thrift.

First Federal has expanded its offerings to include checking accounts, consumer loans, car loans and other services. The locally owned institution hopes its new name, First Federal Savings Bank of Twin Falls, will "better convey to Magic Valley residents the broader range of services we now offer," said President Richard Allen.

First Federal was founded in 1916. Association members met Wednesday to vote on the name change.

Agencies fail to find trace of alleged airplane crash

JEROME — The Jerome County Sheriff's Department, the U.S. Border Patrol and the Idaho State Police spent almost two hours Thursday searching for a plane reported to have crashed in the Devil's Corral area.

The Jerome sheriff's office got a call at 6:45 p.m. of a low-flying plane that went out of sight near the canyon, followed by rising smoke, according to Jerome dispatcher Sgt. Shane Revels.

Three cars from Jerome, two State Police cars, two Border Patrol cars and an ambulance from St. Benedict's Family Medical Center and one from the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center searched from the canyon to the north side of Interstate 84, from Route 93 three miles east.

The search was called off at 8:03 p.m., after Jerome confirmed that no planes were in the area and that a low-flying crop duster matching the description of the missing plane had landed safely, Revels said. The crop duster had been working in the area at the time the call came in, she said.

Gooding man uninjured after blackout behind wheel

GOODING — Claude Tuttle, 84, of Gooding, escaped serious injury Wednesday when he apparently blacked out while driving.

Tuttle was traveling southbound toward Gooding on Highway 46 when he passed out. According to a report filed by Chief Deputy James Howe, Tuttle's foot went down on the gas pedal and his 1988 Ford pickup continued 51 feet along a barrow pit, through a fence, another 57 feet and through a second fence, continued 21 feet and went through a third fence. It then crossed a 15-foot driveway and was stopped by running into the corner of a rental home owned by Keith Tolzin of Twin Falls.

The home, located one-half mile north of Gooding, was occupied by a renter. Howe estimated damage to Tuttle's vehicle at $2,800.

Tuttle was treated and released from a hospital, said Chris Koyle, clerk at the Gooding County Courthouse.

Volunteers will attack litter around Dead Horse Cave

GOODING — Litter around Dead Horse Cave north of here will be collected on Saturday by volunteers.

The Bureau of Land Management is looking for a few good men, women and children to participate in "Federal Lands Cleanup Day" from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. These community volunteers will join BLM employees to clean up roadside litter and unauthorized dump areas on public lands northwest of Gooding.

Students, scouts, snowmobile riders and other groups or individuals who want to help will meet Saturday at 8:50 a.m. at Gooding's East City Park on Fourth Avenue East. They are advised to wear work gloves, a hat, sunscreen and to bring drinking water. Following the cleanup project, volunteers will be treated to a potluck picnic in the park.

Judge orders Royal Lounge liquor license moved

By KIRK MITCHELL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Fifth District Judge Daniel Mechl has ordered the city to transfer the Royal Lounge's liquor license to the business' new location.

Mechl's ruling, issued Thursday afternoon states that the City Council erred by treating Royal Lounge's application for a liquor transfer as similar to applications for special-use permits.

Before covering the order, City Attorney Fritz Wendorlich said he would first discuss Mechl's decision with City Council members.

He said they may decide to appeal or "bite the bullet" and immediately grant the transfer.

"I guess I'm surprised based on what was presented to the court," he said.

Royal Lounge owner Nick Piccard said he was pleased with the judge's decision, but declined to comment further until the city had given him a license.

"You always hear that you can't beat City Hall," said Lloyd Walker, Piccard's attorney. "Maybe this is a lesson to the city that when they pass a law they have to obey it just like anybody else."

Walker filed an order-to-show-cause complaint last month after the City Council decided not to grant Piccard a liquor license transfer from his old location, at 229

Second Ave. E., to Campus Commons retail center on the corner of Fillmore Street and Filer Avenue.

The council's decision followed a heated debate in which several neighbors spoke against the move.

Thelma Huller, 593 Fillmore, who was one of the neighbors who spoke against the Royal Lounge, said she was disappointed with the judge's ruling.

"Well, it's too bad because we didn't want all the increased traffic in the area that it would bring," she said.

Mechl wrote that the city conceded that the only basis by which it denied Piccard's request was through a state law that entitles the city to deny liquor licenses to establishments in a predominantly residential neighborhood.

Walker had contended that because the city's zoning ordinance allows liquor licenses outright in a commercial zone, the City Council abused its discretion in denying Piccard's request.

In overturning the city's denial of a transfer, Mechl cited an Idaho Supreme Court ruling on a Rexburg case in which the city denied a beer license to a bar boarding a residential area, but in a commercial zone.

The Supreme Court had ruled that two of Rexburg's zoning ordinances, one that King Video manager quits, cites working differences

By JENNIFER KAUTH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Citing "fundamental philosophical working differences" and saying King Videocable has a "hidden agenda," General Manager Chris Talkington has resigned his position with the cable company, effective at the end of the month.

"The main reason (for resigning), in plural, is it's no longer a positive work environment and I have some fundamental philosophical working differences with the company," Talkington said.

Richard Shay, King Videocable's Seattle-based chief operating officer said he is not aware of any philosophical differences.

"I think any company has people coming and going over the course of time for various reasons," Shay said. "Chris has resigned his position...He's been a very good employee for years and I think we've worked well together."

King Videocable is a wholly owned subsidiary of King Broadcasting of Seattle.

CHRIS TALKINGTON
Too many excluded

Talkington for six-and-a-half years.

While not saying whether his resignation had anything to do with King Videocable charges, he did say he has some concerns about the rates.

"I think cable remains one of the best bargains," Talkington said. "But I am very concerned with the direction cable is going and Idaho has been in a flat economic state most of the '80s."

"Every time we push through a rate increase, we exclude people who cannot afford it or have not prioritized it."

"The programming is unsurpassed," Talkington continued. "But we in the industry are not at the point where we realize the need to contain the cost."

Talkington said the local branch began giving local senior citizens a discount, but that the policy was not well received by the company until recently.

To me these are considerations necessary to make cable a universal

Local lawyer Webb backs Bistline

By MICHELLE COLE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Attorney Lloyd Webb, who has eyed a spot on the state's Supreme Court for himself, has joined a group of Idaho lawyers supporting the re-election of Justice Stephen Bistline.

A liberal justice from Sandpoint, Bistline serves the people, not corporations, Webb said.

Bistline was appointed to the state's high court in 1976 by Gov. Cecil D. Andrus. He has been re-elected twice without opposition and will be up for re-election again next year.

Bistline is well known for his lengthy dissenting opinions on the bench extensive trial experience. "He works as hard or harder than any other member of the court," Webb said.

State Sen. Skip Smyser, R-Parma, and 4th District Judge Robert G. Newhouse are rumored to be thinking about challenging Bistline, Webb said.

Smyser could not be reached for comment Thursday afternoon. Newhouse, who served as Camas County prosecutor from 1980 to '82, said "he is still thinking about entering the race."

"I have a different viewpoint on the judicial decision process than he (Bistline) does," Newhouse said, though he shied away from a "conservative" or "liberal" label.

If either challenger were successful,

Webb said it would be the first time in at least 35 years that an incumbent justice was defeated.

"This campaign could make history," Webb said.

Newly-appointed Justice Larry M. Boyle, of Idaho Falls, will also face re-election.

With the recent appointments this summer, Andrus has selected every justice on the state Supreme Court bench — a fact that doesn't sit well with many Idaho conservatives. Webb said he doesn't believe the conservatives can make Andrus appointments "stick" as a campaign issue because the governor has appointed justices representing a range of ideologies.

Webb also doesn't think the upcoming election would be the time for the Magic Valley to win its seat on the state's highest court — though local politicians and lawyers are clamoring for a Magic Valley representative.

Northern Idaho also deserves the seat and besides, so far the possible Bistline challengers are from the Treasure Valley, Webb said.

The Justice Bistline Re-Election Committee has set a goal of $10,000 to get the campaign started. Thomas A. Mitchell, a Coeur d'Alene lawyer, is also serving as committee chairman. Boise Lawyer Gardner W. Skinner was named committee treasurer.

Idaho agriculture department gets $60,000 trout grant

By MIKEL BENTON
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Department of Agriculture has been awarded a $60,000 grant to conduct a study to help market Idaho trout.

Richard Rush, the department's director, announced Wednesday that the money, awarded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Marketing Service, will be matched with labor contributions by the College of Southern Idaho, Boise State University and the University of Idaho.

Including these services, the one-year study, which has already begun, is valued at $120,000.

"Trout is now the third largest animal enterprise in the state of Idaho," said Rush.

"If we can improve the trout market in the United States, Idaho will be a major beneficiary."

To this end, BSU will conduct a survey of fish wholesalers across the country. The University of Idaho will analyze the data and distribute the results to U.S. trout growers. "The research will be national in scope and the results will be available to trout growers everywhere," said Rush.

Members of the local trout industry were involved in the grant writing process, as well as developing some of the questions for the survey, Chris Howard, director of marketing at Clear Springs Trout Co., said that marketing attempts should focus on distributors.

"The distributor is really making the decision for a lot of people," Howard explained. "What's their purchasing criteria?"

He said that rainbow trout was among the "more familiar fish" and that, in general, it received a favorable response. "How do we get that fish to the consumer?" he asked.

The Department of Agriculture and CSI will study research needs and begin to develop regulatory standards. "I've no doubt that the quality of the trout produced in Idaho is among the highest in the world," said Rush.

He added that, although the trout industry was not highly regulated and had experienced no major health problems, it would be practical to develop standards from within the industry, rather than have them imposed by outside agencies. "We want to make sure that we're not introducing disease from other states into our trout industry," he added.

Hal Ricker, of the Federal State Marketing Program of USDA, said that the program had less than $1 million to work with this year. The Idaho trout industry was chosen from the 47 funding requests his department received because of the applied nature of the project.

"The project was well presented," he said. "I like to see the involvement of so many different people. It's a very interdisciplinary project."

A similar grant awarded to the catfish industry some years ago was used to enhance that product's image, Ricker said. He hopes that this grant will produce similar results.

Gooding officers confiscate marijuana worth $204,000

By ANITA DENNIS
Times-News writer

GOODING — The Gooding County Sheriff's Department Thursday confiscated 51 marijuana plants growing on a private farm near Wendell, Sheriff Robert Aja said.

The plants, between 3 and 7 feet tall, have an estimated street value of about $4,000 each, Aja said, or $204,000 total. Deputies had been watching the plants since Monday, when the office received an anonymous tip about them, Aja said. They were growing in a field three miles north and a mile west of Wendell, not visible from the road and not near any buildings.

They were "out in the middle of nowhere," Aja said.

The farm supervisor had no knowledge of the plants and agreed to let deputies watch the area this week; the sheriff said. But when nobody came to the check on the plants after four days, Aja said he decided to save manpower and confiscate them.

The sheriff's office is "working towards" making arrests, Aja said. He said he also suspects the anonymous tip came from someone involved in the plants' cultivation.

In a similar incident last weekend, the Elmore County Sheriff's Department received an anonymous tip about a crop of marijuana plants being raised on an island in the Snake River, three-quarters of a mile southwest of Glenns Ferry.

Deputies staked out the island Friday night and on Saturday, two Gooding County men were arrested when they came to harvest the 86 plants, which were 3 to 9 feet tall.

Forty-two dead plant stalks were also found on the island.

The state Bureau of Narcotics, and the Wendell and Gooding police departments assisted with Thursday's dig.

Jerome allows family to keep bobcat, despite local opposition

By DENISE TURNER
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — A brown and white bobcat named Flex has earned the right to live in the city of Jerome. The City Council voted 3-1 to allow Scott and Janet Reece to keep their 25-bobcat in the city limits. The Reeces are looking for a different location, however, following the sale of the home at 1410 N. Lincoln which they were planning to rent. Councilman Rocky Jackson voted against the motion, questioning

Jerome's liability if the council allows the cat to live in the city. He asked Mayor Ralph Peters, before the vote was taken, if the city would be accepting liability by allowing the bobcat into Jerome. "Yes, we would accept some," Peters said. "Police Chief Gregory Will has gone on record opposing bobcats in the home in the city." Councilman Don Jacobson seconded Councilman Nathan Brooks' motion to permit the bobcat in the city, but he said seconding the motion "goes against my grain."

"The Reeces have followed the state rules and regulations by obtaining a bill of sale and a health certificate," Peters said after the meeting. "We would not have followed the law if we had not voted to allow this, so we had to approve it." The Reeces, who live in the city at 104 W. 600 N. in Jerome, said they are looking for a new home in the city. The bobcat is currently being kept in the country with relatives, Janet Reece said. Flex, a 4-year-old male, is the first bobcat the Reeces have owned. They bought him a year ago and hope to someday use him for breeding.

When asked about potential dangers to the community, Reece said an animal has claws but said she is sure he won't pose a threat to the people of Jerome. "He wouldn't hurt people," she said. "In fact, he runs into his little house as soon as he gets fed near him because he is scared of people." The animal will be kept in a state-approved and locked metal and wire cage, Reece said. Bobcats are not expensive to keep as pets, she said, saying Flex especially likes chicken necks. She expressed surprise that the council decided to grant the animal approval. "I thought they would vote no," she said. In other council business: Council approved the hiring of Kirk Hansen as city building inspector on a temporary basis until permanent employees can be found. Also hired were Dean Camill and Ron Lancaster, who will fill two recently vacated full-time firefighter positions. Clayton Davis and Ron Hendricks were hired to fill two of several vacant positions in the water and street department, while Paula Thompson was hired as a Water Department clerk. Council approved sending Will to an Idaho police chiefs meeting in McCall at a cost of $125. They also agreed to allow Auclair to attend a foam and rescue equipment demonstration at no cost. Auclair reported that the fire department will hold a recruit training session for volunteer firefighters Saturday morning. He said he has eight prospective volunteer firefighters, including one female, signed up for the course. The ground-breaking ceremony for the new Keckler warehouse in Jerome is set for 4 p.m. Sept. 28.

Prairie Power wins irrigation court case

The Associated Press

BOISE — Prairie Power Cooperative Inc. of Fairfield won a court victory Wednesday when the Idaho Court of Appeals ruled that it is not unreasonable to require members to post a letter of credit or guarantee that they can pay their power bills for summer crop irrigation.

The court unanimously upheld a lower court ruling in favor of Prairie Power against a lawsuit brought by Lynn Stevenson of Boise. Stevenson claimed he was damaged in 1984 when he couldn't post a letter of credit because he was self-financed, and the cooperative refused to supply electricity for his irrigation pumps.

Valley Ranches Inc., located in Camas County, against Prairie Power, also for refusal to supply electricity for irrigation purposes.

Sun Valley denies engineer approval of building plans

By ROBERT DOYLE
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — A request by structural engineer John Jacoby to amend a building ordinance, insured an overflow audience at Tuesday's Sun Valley City Council meeting.

Councilman Stephen Luber said the present ordinance has served Sun Valley well over the last 14 years of its existence, and that the Planning and Zoning Commission did not recommend the change. Councilman Stan McCoy cast the lone vote favoring the change.

The City Council finally voted 2-1 against a proposed amendment that would have allowed engineers, not just licensed architects, to have the authority to approve plans for buildings constructed in the city.

Another change in the building ordinance was more favorably received. Sun Valley lots will now be allowed a greater portion to be used for buildings, a change some architects hope will lead to more single story dwellings.

Two Wyoming men die in plane crash

AFTON, Wyo. (AP) — Lincoln County authorities have identified the two Wyoming men who died in a plane crash about three miles south of Wyoming Peak.

The Court of Appeals said private cooperatives are not subject to the same regulation as public utilities, and therefore Prairie Power had to show only that its policy was not arbitrary or discriminatory and was adopted for a reasonable purpose.

The case was sent back to 5th District Court for an adjustment in the awarding of costs. In a related appeal, the court reinstated a claim filed by Sun

"I'd simply like to practice my profession in Sun Valley," Jacoby told the council. Darryl McMillan, one of about 30 architects living in the area, said there is a dramatic difference between engineers and architects. This is best demonstrated by the more extensive education and licensing requirements established for architects, along with their training in aesthetics, McMillan said.

Another change in the building ordinance was more favorably received. Sun Valley lots will now be allowed a greater portion to be used for buildings, a change some architects hope will lead to more single story dwellings.

Mike King, 39, of Rawlins, and Max Kershnik, 23, of Rock Springs, died Sunday when their Cessna 172 crashed in bad weather that afternoon, according to the Lincoln County Sheriff's office. Authorities had originally thought the plane crashed on Monday, but have since learned that pilot King made his last stop in Pocatello, Idaho, on Sunday afternoon.

Search crews reached the plane at about noon Thursday and positively identified the victims. Officials say the men had flown to a wedding in Washington and were on their way back to Rock Springs when the crash occurred. Lincoln County Coroner Mike Richins says both men died on impact, their bodies were found under sections of the plane, which broke up in the crash.

There was a 6 to 8 inches of snow on the ground at the site of the crash. The plane wreck of the accident is still being investigated. Representatives of the Federal Aviation Administration and the National Transportation and Safety Board will be on the scene Monday. The plane wreck was discovered Tuesday by a spotter plane. Hunters who reached the site late that night confirmed that there were no survivors.

"We must stand up for the unique character of Sun Valley," McMillan told the council. Jacoby said the architect need not be an Idaho resident to sign off the plans for a Sun Valley home. "If you wanted to, you could go to Taiwan and get an architect's signature," Jacoby said.

Minidoka program will help new teachers become adjusted

By BARBARA WARD
Times-News correspondent

ACEQUIA — The Minidoka School District will have a program this year to help new teachers become accustomed to their first year on the job.

In addition, the teachers will be given one-half day of professional leave a month to visit new teachers' classrooms for observation and making suggestions. Beginning teachers will also be given one-half day of professional leave a month to visit other classrooms, schools and exemplary projects.

160 students total in their class day, but some see as many as 186 per day. An emergency levy made possible the staff additions, as the district has at least 105 more students this year than it had planned for.

Controversial Nevada support formula eased by state court

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — A controversial 1987 child support formula mandating a minimum 18 percent support level of a non-custodial parent's gross income was eased slightly Thursday by the Nevada Supreme Court.

But the high court, rejecting an appeal by a divorced Las Vegas father who sought a reduction because he has his child nearly half of the time, said variations in the formula must be the exception rather than the rule.

Justice Charles Springer, who wrote the unanimous opinion, said Alfred Barbagallo's time with his child was commendable but was more in the nature of visits than "assumption of full custodial responsibilities."

The ruling upholds a decision by Clark County District Judge Joe Pavlikowski requiring Barbagallo to continue paying $450 a month to his ex-wife, Cathy.

Springer said the father's claim to a reduction has "considerable merit," adding it's unfair to impose the formula when divorced parents "share the financial burdens of child-raising on a close-to-equal basis, and where mother and father have close-to-equal financial resources."

The 1987 Legislature didn't say whether the support formula applies in joint or shared-custody cases and was designed to deal with the traditional situation in which one parent, usually the mother, is the custodial parent.

The Supreme Court ruled that the formula does apply in joint and shared-custody cases "subject to certain limited adjustments."

"Trial courts may even, in certain rare cases of equal caretaking and equal financial status of the custodians, rule that neither party is entitled to receive child support from the other," Springer wrote.

But he said courts in most cases can identify "a primary and secondary custodian" and require payments to the primary parent under the formula, which requires 18 percent for one child up to 31 percent for four children with 2 percent increments for each additional child. The law also caps the payments at $500 per child.

Fire destroys Oregon State facility

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — A small electric motor that overheated triggered a fire that destroyed the Oregon State University entomology laboratory and delayed important agricultural research, officials said Thursday.

The motor was part of a device called a thermograph, which measures temperature and records it on a moving sheet of paper, said Corvallis Fire Marshal Claire Keith.

She said the motor burned out and melted the thermograph's plastic casing, which ignited the paper and spread to the wall and storage shelves lined with cardboard boxes.

The Wednesday afternoon blaze in Cordley Hall was confined mostly to one of 12 labs.

Former TV reporter loses round in lawsuit

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A federal judge has granted a partial summary judgment against a former KUTV reporter who filed a discrimination lawsuit against the Salt Lake City television station.

Jennifer Skiff filed suit in August 1988, claiming among other things that she had been fired one year earlier in retaliation for sex discrimination complaints she lodged with the station's attorney.

In the judgment, U.S. District Judge David Sam ruled the station did not slander her or interfere with her prospects for future employment when she was fired.

He also found that KUTV's employee handbook did not constitute an employment contract that guaranteed she could be terminated only for cause, and said Skiff could not sue for wrongful termination on the basis of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Skiff also cannot recover compensatory and punitive damages under the claims remaining in the suit, Sam said.

However, the ruling left several parts of the suit intact, including Skiff's claims she was subjected to sexual discrimination and paid less than male reporters with similar job responsibilities.

A five-day trial on the remaining issues is scheduled for Oct. 23.

Named as defendants were KUTV, owner George C. Hatch and former managing editor Brad Remington.

Skiff contends that male reporters at the TV station received higher salaries than more experienced females and were promoted over women with more experience or seniority.

She also claims the station's management provided free health spa memberships for men, but not women, and imposed different dress standards on women.

New law in effect quickly, attorney general says

BOISE (AP) — Most new laws go into effect July 1 in Idaho. But Attorney General Jim Jones says one new law became effective on Wednesday. The 1989 Legislature passed legislation allowing the designation of outstanding resource waters in Idaho. It was part of an overall effort to protect water quality. It stipulated it would not go into effect until a lawsuit filed by the Idaho Conservation League was dismissed. The ICL and other groups filed the lawsuit against the regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, challenging nonpoint source pollution standards for Idaho, or the lack of them.

Jones said Thursday the lawsuit was dismissed with prejudice earlier this month, which means it cannot be refiled. Under terms of the legislation, Jones had to certify it as law by Oct. 1, or the legislation would have been nullified. "The 'outstanding resource' water legislation was passed to carry out part of an anti-degradation program negotiated by representatives of conservation and industry groups."

Stallings, McClure support Ellsworth in flap

POCATELLO (AP) — U.S. Attorney for Idaho Maurice Ellsworth has the backing of two members of the state's congressional delegation against a human rights coalition's charges of racism. A consortium of groups including the Idaho Migrant Council and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is calling for Ellsworth's resignation over a leaked memorandum he sent to U.S. Sen. James McClure.

Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, said Thursday that, although he is not surprised by charges made against Ellsworth, he believes they are false. "I'm not surprised at the response. If the Hispanics are singled out, they'll think it is unfair. But the facts speak for themselves," McClure said. "The charges are absolutely false, and he can prove it if called upon." Republican Sen. Steve Symms also defended Ellsworth. "As far as he (Symms) knows, the charges are laughable," said Symms spokesman Lee Teague.

Vietnam memorial gets first airing today

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Starting today, Idahoans will get their first look at what will become the Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Freeman Park in Idaho Falls. Idaho Freedom Bird, the Idaho Falls-based veterans' organization sponsoring the memorial, will move the framework of the memorial to its permanent site. A 24-foot fabricated frame in the form of an inverted "V" will be moved to the park for finishing work. Plans call for the metal frame to be put in place on an existing concrete base in Freeman Park. Sheets of stainless steel will be applied to the frame in coming months.

A bronze mural is planned for one side of the memorial and the names of Idaho's Vietnam War casualties will be listed on the other side. The mural, which already has been cast, depicts a prisoner of war and two Vietnam servicemen, a male and a female. The Idaho Memorial will be the only official state Vietnam Veterans memorial featuring a female veteran. Sponsors said it is hoped the memorial will be completed in time for Idaho's Centennial next July. "It will be a fitting tribute to those who gave their lives in service to their country and it is especially appropriate to make that tribute during Idaho's centennial year," said Freedom Bird member Gary George. The Freedom Bird organization uses the name given by Vietnam veterans to planes that took them home after completion of their tours of duty. It began planning for the memorial in 1985. About $50,000 has been received from companies and individuals. In addition, the legislation authorizing the state lottery stipulated that the first $2,000,000 of profits would be used to complete the Vietnam Memorial. Sponsors said some of the money will be used to construct a visitors' center at the memorial.

Group will pay for wolf depredation

(AP) — A conservation group that has been pressing for expansion of wolf ranges said Thursday it has agreed to pay two Montana ranchers for livestock believed lost to wolves. Defenders of Wildlife said it will pay $1,700 to the Kalispell, Mont., area ranchers to compensate for the loss of a cow and seven calves earlier this month.

"The whole premise of our program is that people are willing to pay to have wolves," said Hank Fischer, the group's Northern Rockies field representative. The group said it is paying full-market price for the cow, which animal experts said was a definite wolf kill. Government officials said the calves were probably wolf kills, and the group paid the farmer 50 percent of their value. Fischer said Defenders hasn't firmed up all of the rules guiding its compensation program, and that the 50 percent payment for "probable" kills is being offered on a trial basis. Fischer said the calves belonged to Marion-area rancher Elmer Baker, and that the cow belonged to a rancher who did not want his name released. Marion is southwest of Kalispell.

An adult female wolf and her two pups and an adult male wolf were trapped and relocated to Glacier National Park after the livestock killings. Steve Fritz, coordinator of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Rocky Mountain wolf recovery effort, said the female wolf moved back toward the east shore of Flathead Lake by Wednesday, and remained north of Swan Lake. Trapping efforts continued for a third pup in the Marion area, he said. Defenders of Wildlife began offering compensation for stock lost to wolves two years ago. The only other claims under the program came in 1987 when it paid three Brownings, Mont.-area farmers $3,200 in compensation for 10 sheep and five cows.

Symms uncertain on Elk Creek Falls plant

MOSCOW (A) — Sen. Steve Symms, citing conflicting information he has received on the project, says he remains uncertain whether he will support the installation of a proposed hydroelectric plant at Elk Creek Falls in northern Idaho. He visited the site 50 miles east of Moscow, three weeks ago. Symms said Thursday he has heard "a lot of conflicting reports" about how much damage a proposed hydroelectric plant would cause at the falls and has not yet taken a position. He is still looking into the different options. After talking to fellow Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, Symms said he has decided against pressuring the Federal Energy Regulatory Agency to reach an immediate decision about the project. The agency probably won't rule (on an appeal by Lewiston developer Richard Sigismont) anytime in the short term because of a backlog of other cases, he added during an interview.

McClure blasts Medicare payments
WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, says an amendment approved by the Senate could help avoid the possibility that hospitals at Pocatello, Nampa and Caldwell would be forced to close by a cut in Medicare reimbursement rates. "It doesn't stretch the truth at all to say if they didn't get that rate, they'd close," McClure said Thursday. "They couldn't exist at the rate the federal government wants to reimburse them for Medicare patients." McClure said the Senate approved an amendment to the appropriations bill for the Department of Health and Human Services preventing a proposed cut in reimbursement rates to the three hospitals. It now goes to a House-Senate conference committee.

State department faces spill fines
BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Transportation Department faces $10,000 in fines for "spilling" of median stripe paint into Mores Creek north of Boise. In a notice issued Wednesday, Idaho Health and Welfare Director Rich Donovan cited three water quality violations from the accident along Idaho 21. Donovan said the over-truck spilled 700 gallons of paint into the water, killing trout and other aquatic life. The paint also threatened a water system serving nearby homes. Cleanup operations have recovered nearly all the paint for disposal at Enviroserve Services of Idaho's toxic waste dump near Grand View.

Principal receives Idaho Gem Award
POCATELLO (AP) — Bria Shal, principal of Pocatello's Indian Hills Elementary School, has earned her Idaho Gem Award for outstanding Idaho principal. "I feel really honored to have the opportunity of working with the students and the staff and the parents at Indian Hills," Ms. Shal said. "I am very proud of them and grateful for the opportunity to be part of their lives. I want to help them achieve excellence in education." Her award came in the area of school management. A number of people wrote letters of recommendation, lauding her leadership skills. She will receive the award at the state principals' meeting in October.

Pocatello loses canning plant bid
POCATELLO (AP) — Canbra Foods Ltd., a Canadian company based at Lethbridge, Alberta, has selected Butte, Mont., over Pocatello and Reno, Nev., as the site for a $15 million plant that will process rapeseed into canola oil and employ 60 workers. Canola oil is now in vogue as a storage fat, and is becoming increasingly popular among health-conscious consumers. Mike Pullian, vice president of operations, said Tuesday. Canbra officials decided at the end of August to locate in Montana, but Pocatello came close to securing the facility.

Smuser criticizes justice fund cuts
BOISE (AP) — The Bush administration should reconsider cuts in juvenile justice funds sent to the states, says state Sen. Skip Smuser, R-Parma. Smuser said Wednesday the cutsback eliminate two-thirds of the money Idaho uses to remove juvenile offenders from adult jails. Juvenile justice funds also have paid for diversion programs as an alternative to jail for young substance abusers.

"I don't understand the rationale of a policy that takes money from juvenile rehabilitation programs to pay for enforcement," Smuser said, in a letter to Idaho's congressional delegation. He said the state may have to pay for the youth programs crippled by the reduction in funds.

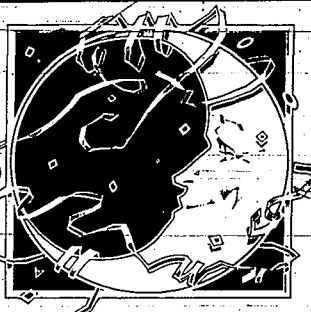

Payette teen dies in rollover crash
PAYETTE (AP) — A Payette teen died after the pickup truck he was riding in rolled over and was thrown down an embankment near Payette, Idaho State Police said. Tyler A. Cox, 17, was pronounced dead Wednesday afternoon at Holy Rosary Hospital in Ontario, Ore. Police said 14-year-olds Joel Keim and Joe Hemmingsway of Payette were admitted to Holy Rosary Hospital with serious injuries, including cuts and bruises, a hospital official said.

Judge disallows deputy's statement
MOSCOW (AP) — A federal judge has ruled that former Idaho County deputy Gerald Marko's statement to FBI investigators about wiretapping at the sheriff's Kooikia substation will not be allowed as evidence at his trial. U.S. District Judge Harold Ryan decided Wednesday that prosecutors may not use Marko's statement to the FBI in the trial scheduled to begin Monday in Moscow. Ryan said he would decide during the trial whether the jury may be informed the statement exists. Marko is charged with two federal felony counts in connection with wiretapping of a sheriff's department phone on Dec. 28, 1987. The wiretap allegedly recorded conversations between former deputy Travis Breckon and the Joy McLean, who then was Idaho County prosecutor. Also recorded were conversations between Breckon and his wife and girlfriend.

Albertson's donates county seals
BOISE (AP) — Boise's heavily traveled Capitol Boulevard from the Boise River to the Statehouse will be lined with a colorful display of seals from all 44 Idaho counties, thanks to a donation from Albertson's Inc. The $55,000 gift from Albertson's to the Idaho Centennial Commission was unveiled Wednesday at a news conference by Warren McCain, chairman and chief executive officer of the Boise-based grocery and drug chain. Classic Sign Studio is project designer and manufacturer of the round, 30-inch diameter signs that will be attached to reproductions of Boise's original street lights along Capitol Boulevard.

USFS may log at Lake Pend Oreille
SANDPOINT (AP) — As predicted, the Forest Service has started the process to log some of the mountainsides around Lake Pend Oreille. Public comment is sought by the Sandpoint Ranger District on three proposed sale areas: the Three Sides, above the town of Sandpoint; Spruce Mountain and vicinity on the east side of the lake; and Gold Hill, located directly across the lake from Sandpoint. Newly appointed district Ranger Claire Lavendal has inherited the sticky task of selling timber on the slopes above the lake. The three study areas cover a total of 100 acres, although the initial logging would be far less. She said friction over land use "goes with the territory."

FDA checks sleep medication

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration is looking into a "relatively high" number of reports about unwanted side effects from the drug Halcion, the world's most widely prescribed sleep medication.

An FDA advisory committee is expected to review the reports at a meeting today to determine why more adverse reactions have been reported for Halcion than for other drugs in its class of hypnotics.

Halcion has been on the market since the beginning of 1983 and is the Upjohn Co.'s second-largest sales item.

Spokeswomen for the company and the FDA said they did not know the nature of the reports about adverse reactions or the number of reports received.

However, the FDA said that at the time the drug was approved, the agency was aware of a variety of adverse effects reported in association with use of Halcion, including confusion, agitation, hallucinations, amnesia and bizarre behavior. All except bizarre behavior were included in label warnings, the FDA said. Upjohn spokeswoman Florence Steinberg said the company will review epidemiological data at a meeting that "indicate that side effects with Halcion are not different in number or kind when compared with other medications in its class."

She said the higher number of reports of problems associated with the drug stem in part from "sensational allegations in the media about Halcion," including a case in which a Utah woman who was using the drug was accused of killing her mother. Murder charges against the woman, Ilo Marie Grundberg, 61, were dismissed.

Grundberg, a former-Hurricane, Utah, resident, was charged with second-degree murder in the June 1988 shooting death of 82-year-old Mildred Coats. Grundberg claimed she killed her mother in a "homicidal compulsion" induced by Halcion.

A judge dismissed the case and Grundberg has a lawsuit pending against Upjohn in U.S. District Court in Salt Lake City. Steinberg said it was never established that Halcion caused Grundberg to act as she did and contends the woman was taking a number of medications at the time.

The FDA, in seeking the advice of its Psychopharmacologic Drugs Advisory Committee, did not say how many reports of adverse effects have been received for Halcion, but said the number is higher than for other hypnotic drug products. The agency asked the panel to determine the meaning of this relatively high reporting rate and how this finding might be meaningfully communicated to the medical and lay public.

Analysts quoted in Wednesday editions of The Wall Street Journal said Halcion sales have been declining apparently because of reports of adverse reactions to the drug. The newspaper quoted analysts as estimating that Upjohn's worldwide sales of Halcion were expected to fall from about $260 million in 1988 to about $235 million this year.

Forest Service launches fast rehabilitation work on burnt lands

LOWMAN (AP) — A devastating fire season that blackened 46,000 acres of prime timberland in the Boise National Forest has prompted one of the most expensive fire rehabilitation efforts in U.S. history.

The Forest Service said Wednesday that it will spend $3.6 million in the coming weeks to shore up blackened hillsides and reduce the chance of catastrophic flooding that could cause an estimated $6 million in damage.

Heavy rains and spring thaw could send a wall of mud and trees 70 miles down the Payette River to Emmett and beyond, officials fear.

"The worst-case scenario is that we could get some big gully washers that could threaten the people and towns below," said Terry Sexton, rehabilitation project leader.

The month-long Lowman blaze, which cost $12 million to battle, was the nation's top-priority fire for several days. Lightning strikes sparked the fire and high temperatures and high winds expanded the flames.

Heavy rains in the area last Sunday were precursors of what could follow, Sexton said. The downpour made the top few inches of blackened soil "just like a slick," he said.

Sexton said larger slopes such as Steep Creek, a raw, brownish mass of bare soil, pose the most hazard in the coming months.

"Such a big portion of this fire just plain burned hot," he said. "If the soils get oversaturated with water, we're expecting there may be some mass failures." This whole process is a fight against the weather.

About 300 firefighters have been felling logs across mountainsides like Steep Creek since the Lowman fire was corralled in late August in an effort to prevent erosion.

But Sexton said erosion-control devices will only slow surface erosion.

"If we get one of those storms that Lowman is so notorious for, like an inch of rain in a half-hour, we could get a massive failure," he said.

Rockwell sues government; says contract requires waste violations

DENVER (AP) — Rockwell International Corp. Thursday sued the government, alleging its contract to run the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant requires the company to violate federal hazardous-waste laws.

The lawsuit was filed in Washington in an attempt to get a court to clarify Rockwell's obligations under the contract.

Rockwell said it was forced to sue because it feared it would be charged with criminal offenses for its running of the plant near Denver. The plant makes plutonium triggers for nuclear weapons.

Last Friday, Rockwell threatened to shut down the plant unless federal agencies resolved disputes over how wastes at the plant should be handled. The Energy Department, the Environmental Protection Agency and the state reached an agreement on "waste disposal," but Rockwell did not sign the pact.

Donald R. Beall, Rockwell chairman and chief executive, said in a statement issued in Denver that the government has not adequately assured the company it won't be prosecuted.

A federal grand jury is investigating allegations that the plant illegally handled hazardous wastes.

"We have filed suit very reluctantly, but we simply cannot expose our employees and the company to the risk of criminal charges arising out of good-faith actions under the contract and at DOE direction," he said. He said the company is "caught in the middle of an intergovernmental feud." Ben McCarty, an Energy Department spokesman at the plant, said the lawsuit came as a surprise, but he had no other comment.

The lawsuit alleges Rockwell cannot discontinue all the activities challenged by the Justice Department and the EPA because some are inherent in the design and the required operational procedures.

"We understand completely and fully respect the national security importance of the Rocky Flats plant," Beall said. "And we are satisfied that continued plant operations pose no threat to health, safety or the environment."

Forest Service says developers must clear obstacles prior to building $60 million resort

CASCADE (AP) — A Forest Service official has identified three critical issues developers must address before ground can be broken on a $61.6 million, four-season resort near Cascade Reservoir.

Greg Spangenberg, Valbois planner for the Boise National Forest, said Wednesday that hundreds of citizens and county, state and federal officials agree the project must overcome:

— Water quality problems in Cascade Reservoir, which is reeling from existing farming and mining pollution and leaky sewage tanks.

— Social-economic impacts on Valley County, Cascade and McCall.

— Traffic congestion on Idaho Highway 55, the main route proposed for new travelers heading for the resort.

The Boise National Forest has received about 230 letters from citizens since releasing a draft environmental impact statement on the Valbois resort project in June. A final decision is expected to be released late this year.

Developer Dennis Taggart needs approval from the Forest Service to use 2,800 acres of federal land for a ski area and 120 acres of lakeshore before he can build the year-around resort.

overwhelming or unsolvable impact, we would have to back off from approval."

A major concern is the resort's potential effect on water in Cascade Reservoir. "Because of its present condition, that reservoir cannot stand any more impacts," Spangenberg said.

That means Taggart and his partners must design the resort so fertilizers from the 18-hole golf course, wastewater from the ski area development and sediment from soil development will not harm water quality, he said.

A number of residents cited concerns about financial hardship — particularly higher taxes — that would be needed to fund the expansion of city services, schools and hospitals for the influx of new residents to the Cascade area.

The resort is expected to create 876 new jobs, 637 at the resort and 239 in support services, amounting to a 37 percent increase in Valley County employment.

If the resort is built, traffic on Idaho 55 is expected to nearly triple during the winter and summer months. And since the state has no plans to expand the north-south route in the next five years, traffic congestion on the highway could become intense, Spangenberg said.

"From Banks to Round Valley is a real bottleneck right now," he said.

Filer defeats Declo to stay in race

By LARRY HOVEY
 Times-News writer

Filer's Anna Parrott makes a late dive for the ball as the Wildcats defeated Declo Thursday night.

FILER — Just 48 hours after it appeared their Canyon Conference title hopes may have flown out of reach, the Filer Wildcats pulled themselves back into a contention by knocking off previously unbeaten Declo, 15-8, 15-12 Thursday night.

Filer had lost the first match with the Hornets in Declo and then were surprised by Wendell Tuesday.

"We feel we can still be there at the end," said Coach Vicki Leach. She then pointed out that the conference chase still is tough but this provides a little confidence factor for the troops when the District A-3 tournament comes up next month.

"I think the Tuesday loss was an up for them," said Declo Coach Lynn Payne. "We knew this was going to be a tough match because their backs were against the wall. Tuesday loss made them more determined than our girls."

The difference in the game was Filer's serving. Declo never received the hard shots well, and possibly for a physical reason. In the first game the Wildcats hammered low, hard shots to the Declo left backline and the result was a succession of bumps that caromed off the low Filer gymnasium ceiling. Only on a couple of occasions was Declo able to react to those.

The Hornets then tried to flatten out their receiving and there followed a succession of mishits into both sidelines.

"Our ceiling is an advantage for us," Leach affirmed.

The loss was the first for Declo in conference play, while the Wildcats stayed within halting distance at 5-2. The conference standing goes toward selecting the postseason, state-qualifying District 4 Class A-3 tournament.

"I told our girls that they can win that for an excuse but they can't say that beat us. I felt they (Filer) served well. Not a lot of aces but low, hard serves that we didn't handle well," Payne said.

In both games Declo jumped into the early lead but couldn't stay there. In the opener, Lisa Blakeslee and Tammy Moon then unleashed their serving points and Filer rushed into a 15-8 win. In the second game, Filer got out 8-4 after some early squabbling. Declo then rallied into an 8-8 tie and then took the lead when Filer hit the ceiling for the first time and couldn't react. Declo moved ahead 11-8 and there were several missed opportunities. But after getting to 12-12, Filer took the lead on a Blakeslee spike and then a Moon slam directly off a return. Brandi Blakley iceed it, rather fittingly, with an ace.

Pate, Andrade, Fehr share Southern lead

—COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Steve Pate, Billy Andrade and Rick Fehr each shot 6-under-par 64s Thursday for a share of the lead after one round of the $400,000 Southern Open.

The trio held a one-shot lead over Kenny Knox and Ray Barr Jr.

At 66 was a group of eight players, including No. 13 money-winner Tim Simpson and Corey Pavin at the hilly par-70, 6791-yard Green Island Country club course.

Also at 66 were four rookie Billy Tuten, Hugh Royer III of Columbus, who got a sponsor's exemption to enter, Ted Schatzel and veterans Bill Britton, Bill Kratzer and Andrew Magee.

Turner, Walters hit 67s to move ahead in MBS

—BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — Sherri Turner, last year's leading money winner on the LPGA Tour, birdied the last two holes to card a 67 and match Lisa Walters for the first-round lead Thursday in the MBS Classic.

Amy Alcott, who won an amateur tournament here at the Los Coyotes Country Club as a 14-year-old, is two strokes off the pace at 69 along with Pat Bradley, Patty Fizzo, Judy Rosenthal and Jill Briles.

Giants' Clark leaves game with severely bruised knee

—SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco Giants first baseman Will Clark left Thursday night's game against the Los Angeles Dodgers with a badly bruised right knee resulting from a first-inning home plate collision with Dodgers catcher Mike Scioscia.

Clark scored from first base on Kevin Mitchell's two-out double, but slid hard into Scioscia on a close play. He laid on the ground near home plate as trainer Mark Letendre examined the knee.

Twin Falls vs. Burley: Could be a shootout

By LARRY HOVEY
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Everything points to a lot of offense—and a lot of points tonight when the undefeated Burley Bobcats come to Twin Falls to meet the once-beaten Bruins.

The Bobcats are throwing the ball with exceptional success with junior Justin Robinson at the controls and Jason Allen giving their one-back offense a lot of punch, evidenced by his six-touchdown effort last week.

Twin Falls, 2-1 and with two of its three backs on the injured list, will be relying largely with senior Alan Heck, who ran for 166 yards last week, and quarterback John Horner who had two big passing nights against Jerome and Weiser.

"Sometimes when two good offenses come together it winds up being a defensive show," cautions Burley coach Jeff Savage, whose Bobcats are off to a 3-0 start and ranked third by The Associated Press in the Class A-1 Division II poll. "I don't predict things like that. But I do think the fans are really going to enjoy this game."

Twin Falls coach Tom Lund says "Burley's been throwing about 75 percent of the time with great success. We certainly aren't reluctant about throwing the ball. But this time around, I'd like to see us exercise some ball control, punch it out on the ground and keep it away from Burley's offense."

Twins succumb to A's, 2-1

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Despite a career-long slump in the Metrodome, Mark McGwire was looking forward to coming to Minnesota.

That spirit showed Thursday night, as McGwire hit his first-ever homer here to back a strong performance by starter Bob Welch and lead the Oakland Athletics to a 2-1 victory over the Twins.

Welch, Rick Honeycutt and Dennis Eckersley combined on a six-hitter in helping the Athletics pick up a half-game on California, which was at Cleveland. Welch, 17-8, allowed all six hits by the Twins before Honeycutt came on with two outs in the eighth, then Eckersley pitched the ninth for his 31st save.

"The Metrodome hasn't been the greatest of places for me," said McGwire, who entered the game with a 130 average in 46 Metrodome at-bats. "But last time we were in here, I noticed the lights were changed, and I started to hit the ball hard.

I was optimistic coming in this time."

The Metrodome was the only American League park in which McGwire had not homered.

McGwire's 453-foot homer, to center field in the fifth inning made Welch, 17-8, the A's fourth pitcher with at least 17 wins. The 1971 Baltimore Orioles were the last team to accomplish that feat and had four 20-game winners.

"They certainly have four high class pitchers, and that's why they are in the position they're in," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "And if you get past the starters, if anything it gets tougher."

Dave Stewart leads the staff with 19 wins, and Mike Moore and Storm Davis have 18 each.

"Players on other teams tell me they don't like facing our staff," Welch said. "When other players tell you that, it shakes you, feel-good you're on their team."

Pitching coach Dave Duncan said the staff's success is by design.

"If you look at our staff, you'll see that none of them are from within our organization," Duncan said. "These are all people we've acquired. I look at this staff as the result of good decision-making on the part of the general manager, the manager and me. That gives me a sense of satisfaction."

Minnesota's Rick Aguilera, 2-5, threw a complete game but was the victim of Oakland's fine staff. Aguilera lost for the eighth time in his last 10 decisions, dating back to July 22, when he was with the New York Mets.

Welch retired 14 of the first 16 batters and two of the 15 against him were infield singles.

Valley vs. Declo in early showdown

By STEVE CRUMP
 Times-News sports editor.

DECLO — Two teams of young veterans will collide here tonight in a football game that will bring the rest of the Canyon Conference season into sharp definition.

Valley, 3-0 and ranked second among Class A-3 teams in Idaho by The Associated Press, will put its 1-0 league record on the line against a Hopnet team that is off to a 2-2 start, 1-0 in conference.

"No question about it, it's a big one for both teams," said Valley coach Rod Malone. "We're concerned about Declo's passing game, and Declo is always tough to beat at their place."

The Hornets have a long and consistent history of giant-killing—including league champion Glendon Ferry last year and play-off-bound Kimberly in 1985—and the current edition of the Hornets is far more experienced than either of those two Declo teams.

"We have no excuses this year," said Declo coach Mike Matthews. "We have our offensive line back and we started one junior and seven sophomores last year who are back."

Going into the fourth weekend of the season, there are four unbeaten teams in the Canyon Conference; after tonight there will be two: Kimberly, which opened last week with an upset of two-time defending league champion Glendon Ferry, will play at Wendell tonight in the Trojans' conference opener.

On the face of it, this should be a matchup between Valley's overwhelming offense, which is averaging 47 points and almost 500 yards a game, and Declo's defense, which has allowed four touchdowns in three games. But both teams are deeper and more diverse than that.

"It could be a low-scoring game, and we've got to count on that," said Matthews. "We don't match up well with them physi-

Buhl plays Wood River: Inconsistent Big Sky teams May be crucial matchup make season unpredictable

By The Times-News

One-third of the District 4 Class A-2 high school football schedule will be set- tled tonight when Buhl visits Wood River for a South-Central Idaho Conference showdown that could prove crucial to which team eventually makes the playoffs.

The Indians and Wolverines share one postseason berth with Jerome, and qualify- ing for that amounts to a round-robin play- off. The winner tonight will have a leg up toward an eventual showdown with Jerome.

Buhl, 1-2, is coming off a 31-7 non-con- ference loss to Valluave in Caldwell. Wood River, 2-1, has had its season marred only by a 49-7 setback at the hands of Burley last week.

They'll collide at 7 p.m. at Wood River High School in Halley.

Two other big games are scheduled in the Canyon and Magic Valley conferences. In the former, two of the remaining four unbeaten teams in the Canyon, Declo and Valley, will get together in Declo (see story elsewhere on this page). In the MVC, de- fending champion Oakley, which opened its conference season last weekend against Hansen with its first victory of the season, will take on third-ranked Mackay, 2-1, at 7:30 p.m. in a battle of the last two MVC champions.

By QUANE KENYON
 The Associated Press

Big Sky Conference football teams haven't been very consistent this season, and as a result, with the season only three weeks under way, there are no undefeated teams left.

An exception has been Montana, one of the preseason favorites. The Grizzlies gave Fresno State a good game, and have beaten Portland State and Eastern New Mexico for a 2-1 nonconference mark heading into Big Sky action.

This week's game is against Eastern Washington, long a Big Sky doormat but which knocked off Nevada-Reno two weekends ago.

Montana coach Don Read said he's aware that EWU's Dick Zornes has brought in a lot of new, skilled players. "We are very concerned over all of their offensive weapons. They also have good speed up front. I think it might be their best group since we've played them," Read said.

In other Big Sky games Saturday, Idaho, 1-2, is at Weber State, 0-2 and Idaho State, 1-1, is at Nevada-Reno, 1-2.

In nonconference games, Boise State hosts a Pac-10 team for the first time when it plays Oregon State and NAIA New Mexico Highland, winless in three games, plays Montana State, 2-1, at Bozeman.

'Idaho Nuggets' will feature state writers

BOISE Fifty Idaho writers, including several from the Twin Falls Chapter of the Idaho Writers' League, are featured in "The Nuggets: A Book by Idahoans for Idahoans," a Centennial book.

The hardcover volume is available for $12.50, postage and handling included, before its Oct. 1 publication date. After that, it will cost $15. For information on a limited-edition run of the book featuring the writers' autographs is available for $35 per copy.

Area writers represented in the book include Jan Wimberly, Laura Read, Sandra Calkins, Alice Behr, M.J. Freeman and Bill Whitcomb.

To order, mail a check to Dr. Wayne Moulton, editor, 1609 Eastover Lane, Boise, ID 83706.

Defections by young stars concern 20th Century Fox

HOLLYWOOD — The folks at 20th Century Fox continue to prove shrewd at establishing young stars, like Johnny Depp and Richard Grieco, spawned in Fox Broadcasting's "21 Jump Street." But Fox can't seem to keep 'em — both are making features for other studios — and the Fox brass is concerned.

"We've learned that executives from the TV and film divisions recently convened to discuss how to avoid such future defections. Of particular worry, said a source, are the ensemble of attractive young actors in Fox's midseason replacement series 'Universal — Imagine Entertainment, 'Cry Baby.' Grieco — another "Jump Street" heartthrob, and star of Fox TV's new spinoff series, "Booker," will spend next spring's hiatus making "It Looks Could Kill" for Warner Bros.

Consider what happened with Depp and Grieco: Depp spent his series hiatus in a movie for Universal — "Imagine Entertainment, 'Cry Baby." Grieco — another "Jump Street" heartthrob, and star of Fox TV's new spinoff series, "Booker," will spend next spring's hiatus making "It Looks Could Kill" for Warner Bros.

'Black Rain' doesn't work as Japanese translation

HOLLYWOOD In "Black Rain," American cop Michael Douglas, on a mission to Japan, expands his cultural consciousness. But the Paramount Pictures promotional staff may not be so culturally aware: A Japanese-born reader tips us that a translation of the movie's title into Japanese that appears boldly at the top of publicity material is incorrect.

"The first set of characters translates correctly as 'black,' said our source. But the second set appears to be nonsense — and that's in a word that is supposed that Paramount attempted a phonetic translation of "rain," and simply goofed.

A Paramount spokeswoman, without elaboration, said the studio stands by its "final translation."

It takes took this storm of controversy to Little Tokyo, where Japanese-speaking persons were shown Paramount's publicity item. All agreed that "black" was correctly translated — and were likewise confounded by the second set of Japanese characters.

Airline doesn't want its name associated with film

HOLLYWOOD Due to "public relations reasons," you won't see the name Aloha Airlines depicted in CBS' forthcoming movie, "Miracle Landing," about the remarkable April 1988 journey of Aloha Flight 243 — which landed with a big chunk of its fuselage missing. Nor will you see the creation of the grim death of a flight attendant, swept from the open fuselage at 24,000 feet.

Although the carrier was "very cooperative and helpful" with the project, according to producer-director Dick Lowry, "they were absolutely sure they didn't want their name on screen for 2 1/2 hours."

As for flight attendant C.B. Lansing, the sole fatality on the 737 — writer Garner Simmons told us, "The way I wrote it, we cut to the cockpit when suddenly all the pilot could see behind him was blue sky. You don't see anything (of Lansing)."

Greta Garbo turns 84

HOLLYWOOD Happy Birthday, Greta Garbo; the legendary film star turns 84 Sept. 18, as elusive as ever. She left Hollywood at age 36, a star. She didn't need the attention. She didn't need to sell products or to worry about making the transition to radio. "She simply stirred, having made some movie real estate investments in Beverly Hills — mostly, she wanted her privacy. The unprecedented departure spawned a mystique.

Classical guitarist plays in Twin Falls

The Leatherman hosts alternative arts event offering feast for senses

By JULIE FANSELOW SWETYE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The angelic lilt of classical guitar. The rich aroma of espresso. The sweetness of pastry, the sight of friends mingling and the clipping of hands. A decidedly different event slated downtown tonight promises the ingredients of a feast for all the senses. The Twin Falls Music Club will present guitarist Bill O'Brien in concert at The Leatherman, and Mickey Joelson — owner of the funky emporium at 133 Main Ave. W. — hopes the evening may prove a prototype for future alternative arts events.

Joelson says he's long wanted to present programs in his store, but it was only last year when The Leatherman moved from its former location across the street, tripling in size, that the idea became feasible. The Music Club approached him with the prospect of hosting O'Brien's concert, and the idea became reality. If the presentation goes well, future events could include a foreign film screening or a performance by improvisational actors from the College of Southern Idaho.

"I want to see what happens," says Joelson. "If it works, once every six to eight weeks, I'll just do something outrageous." Joelson figures his store could accommodate between 80 and 100 people.

Doors will open at 8 tonight, with the concert starting at 8:30. Tickets are $9 for adults and $5 for children 12 and under. Proceeds will benefit the Music Club's scholarship fund for student musicians.

Before the performance and at intermission, the Double Decker and the Grape Escape will provide an assortment of pastries and wine for connoisseurs, all included in the price of admission. "We have a cappuccino and espresso machine here in the store, and we'll be firing that," adds Joelson. O'Brien, in his eighth year as guitar instructor at Idaho State University in Pocatello, will present a varied program with compositions ranging from the baroque period to the present.

Guitarist Bill O'Brien presents selections from the baroque period to the present tonight at The Leatherman

At 23, O'Brien — who grew up in Chicago — enrolled at Northern Arizona University in Flagstaff, Ariz., intent on majoring in forestry. But by the time he arrived on campus, he'd changed his major to geology. Soon after, he realized guitar was his true calling.

He'd been playing since 18, mostly folk-oriented material and slide guitar. But at Northern Arizona, "I needed I really wanted to get serious about classical guitar because my musical tastes were going in that direction," O'Brien recalls.

The repertoire for classical guitar has broadened substantially in recent decades. O'Brien says most of the credit goes to Andres Segovia, probably the best-known classical guitarist ever.

originally written for piano, O'Brien notes. And Segovia's friends also wrote pieces for him to play.

One such work on tonight's program, "Cavatina" by Polish composer Alexander Tansman, won an international composition competition in 1951. But Segovia had Tansman add a fifth movement 10 years later because the maestro wasn't happy with the original ending, O'Brien says.

Other contemporary compositions he plans to perform include selections by 'Saturday Night Live' looks back on 15 years

By LAWRENCE CHRISTON
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — When the hosts and performers and honored guests — all in black tie and formal wear — settle in Sept. 24 at NBC's Studio 8H to look at 15 years of "Saturday Night Live," the occasion will be more than a picture-book retrospective or a fond reminiscence on the creation of one of the longest-running comedy shows in television history.

They will be watching an allegory as well as a history, a modern, classic showbiz tale of celebrity overrunning art, of character pitted with the peculiar canker of fame, of a show exuberantly conceived in the spirit of spontaneity and iconoclasm reluctantly hardening into its spiritual core — a smooth commercial monolith now referred to by some of its staffers as "The Franchise."

America will be looking in as well to watch 450 hours of SNL programming distilled into 21 hours, in addition to live sketches and movies. Dan Dunn will be hosting, as will Steve Martin, Mary Tyler Moore and — as improbable as it may have seemed 15 years ago — Charlton Heston. The entire current cast will be on hand (Dana Carvey, Nora Dunn, Phil Hartman, Jan Hooks, Victoria Jackson, Jon Lovitz, Dennis Miller and Kevin Nealon). Of the old guard, Chevy Chase will appear, as will Jane Curtin, Laraine Newman, Dan Aykroyd, Billy Crystal and Garrett Morris.

We will remember the real John Belushi and Gilda Radner, and the fictional gale of the Samurai hotelier, the fatuous Roseanne Rosannadanna, the rock 'n' roll duo the Blues Brothers, the ultrasquare Todd and Lisa Looper, the surrealistic Conehead family, Mr. Bill, and all the other characters who came to prominence and then played themselves out. Many viewers will watch the show as an entertainment, but chances are many more will watch in memory of their own youth, and because the life and times of "Saturday Night Live" mirror an American age.

"Saturday Night Live" was conceived in 1975 in a new kind of innocence and excess as the country's first rock 'n' roll comedy show. Saigon had fallen that year, as had the Nixon administration the year before. AIDS and crack were unheard of, and there were relatively few bodies of the homeless shadowing the streets. The NBC network, then anchored in third place behind CBS and ABC, was looking for something to put in the late-night space — namely taken up at the time by Johnny Carson — and the task fell on a 29-year-old writer-producer from Canada named Lorne Michaels, who had written for "Laugh-In" and had worked with Lily Tomlin and Flip Wilson.

After a network go-ahead, Michaels decided to give his new idea a try, and almost at once the formulaic elements of "Saturday Night Live" fell into place. For one thing, it would actually be done live so that no one else could tamper with it. Changing hosts for each show meant "you didn't run out of ideas trying to figure out what Sonny would say to Cher week after week."

Michaels went on a six-month talent search. He remembered Gilda Radner and Dan Aykroyd from Toronto and Laraine Newman from the Lily Tomlin special. He met Chevy Chase in a line waiting to see a movie at Filmmex. Jane Curtin was hired out of an audition, and Garrett Morris out of a Writers Guild program. John Belushi came recommended by Chevy Chase, who, like Morris, was first hired as a writer.

After a dress rehearsal, which went so badly that everyone thought the show would self-abort before a nationwide audience, "Saturday Night Live" premiered without a hitch Oct. 11, 1975. George Carlin hosted, and Janis Lan and Billy Preston were the musical guests.

It wasn't until its third season that

"Saturday Night Live" became a national media darling, but it was in its first that a shattering precedent was set — the defection of Chevy Chase, which drove a stake into the company's communal heart.

The fame and constant attention began to exert a centrifugal force on the company. Behind the scenes, Belushi grew more violently obstreperous, and Aykroyd more taciturn. Radner became bulimic. Newman was anorexic. Garrett Morris, as reported in the authoritative "Saturday Night — A Backstage History of Saturday Night Live," by Doug Hill and Jeff Weinograd, suffered paranoid hallucinations from free-basing — a drug he had used as a means of escape. "The dream took a labyrinthine twist into darkness." By the fifth season Belushi and Aykroyd had taken the Blues Brothers to Hollywood, and Michaels had no more fight in him to keep the show together. The company disbanded.

But not the show. The network realized it had too much of a good thing going in what had once been a dead slot. "Saturday Night Live" was a moneymaker, and NBC had no intention of letting it go.

"I think the show is better now," Michaels said; "but I also know that it's not new. I can admire Nora Dunn, for example,

Future for music videos isn't so certain now

By DENNIS HUNT
Los Angeles Times

MTV's future - D2

HOLLYWOOD — Soon after MTV went on the air in the summer of 1981, the word was that videos were going to revolutionize the record business.

The new, three-to-five-minute promotional clips would not only cause television to replace radio as the dominant medium for selling records, but an artist's video might become as important as the music.

For a while, videos seemed well on the way to fulfilling that promise. The success in the early and mid-'80s of such colorful, video-conscious acts as Michael Jackson, Madonna and Duran Duran did indeed suggest the important thing in pop was as much what you heard as what you saw.

But what now? Have videos, as some rapturously predicted, replaced radio as the chief means of selling acts? And has appearance become as important as music as a basis for signing acts?

Based on interviews with a variety of music-industry executives, the answer is that, yes, video is continuing to gain strength as a marketing tool, but, no, video hasn't replaced radio as the chief means of selling records.

"All of the more than a dozen record industry executives interviewed agreed that video is continuing to gain importance, thanks to the increased penetration by cable TV into American homes and the rise in recent years of two additional all-music-cable channels, VH-1, which aims at an older pop-crowd than MTV; and Black Entertainment Television, which specializes in soul and rap styles.

But, executives were quick to point out, music videos alone still cannot create a hit record.

"Radio airplay is still the most important (device) for selling records," said Bob Willcox, vice president of marketing for Columbia Records. "That's because it still offers us the biggest audience."

Videos have encouraged record companies to think more visually, though they insist not at the expense of the music.

"Since music videos came along, the look of an act has become much more important than it ever was," said Ron McCarell, Capitol Records' vice president of marketing. "But make no mistake, music is still the most important thing. An act can have the right look and come across great in the videos, but if the music isn't good, the act won't get very far. You still have to consider radio and having the right look doesn't do you any good on radio."

The pop-off industry observers now believe, was due to more than just general problems with the economy. Teen-agers, long the most active buying group, seemed alienated. They had burned out on disco and were having trouble finding new veteran rockers that the kids found tame and boring.

But video provided these teens with a new wave of heroes. MTV was their own private world. Parents gumbled about videos, dismissing them as silly gimmicks to sell records. They couldn't believe that anyone could sit in their rooms watching these videos all day and night on MTV, like their kids were doing.

Eventually, however, many adults became converts. The audience for videos expanded, encouraging record companies to begin making them for artists in other genres, not just for teen-oriented music. This adult interest also led to the formation of the additional cable music channels.

Music videos can also expand an artist's audience by teaching fans who don't go to concerts or kids in out of the way places who don't have easy access to major centers.

Alan Niven, manager of Guns N' Roses, the hottest new hard-rock band in years, noted:

"When you talk to kids out there in certain parts of the country, they'll tell you their total exposure to music is watching MTV. For a band like Guns N' Roses, that MTV audience is the core audience. Music videos expose kids to a band and inspire them to buy records by creating visual excitement. Without music videos, there's a lot of fans who might not be turned on to Guns N' Roses."

While music videos can be influential in all areas of pop, they seem to have the most impact in the areas of hard rock/heavy metal and rap.

In the last year, MTV has helped break Living Colour, a black rock band whose

Critics savage Sting's stage debut in Brecht's 'The Threepenny Opera'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rock star Sting suffered the slings and arrows of outraged theater critics last Friday for his stage debut in "The Threepenny Opera," but he was a smash hit with the Soviet ambassador and Yulia Sukhanova, the Soviet Union's first beauty queen.

With President and Mrs. Bush watching from box seats above the National Theater stage, Sting made the best of a daunting, three-hour performance as Mack the Knife in the pre-Broadway premiere of Bertolt Brecht's biting musical satire.

The critics, however, agreed that Sting's best wasn't good enough. "Slow and turgid stuff," complained The Washington Post's David Richards, who said Sting's "acting has little resonance and his singing voice is surprisingly thin."

"If you're going to see Sting, prepare to be stung," said Harper Erstein of The Washington Times, who said this "Threepenny Opera" proved "to not be worth 2 cents" despite a stellar cast directed by Tony Award winner John Dexter and music conducted by Julius Rudel.

Many in the black-tie, opening night audience agreed that Sting — who is accustomed to mega-decibel amplifiers at his huge stadium rock concerts — desperately needs a body mike for Kurt Weill's bawdy songs in the intimate confines of a legitimate theater like the National. Sting himself, nearly crushed in the melee of fans at a post-performance party at the Old Ebbitt Grill, was pleased that Bush came backstage at the second intermission to greet the cast.

"He said he enjoyed the show, and so did Barbara," Sting reported.

Soviet Ambassador Yuri Dubinin joined Bush backstage, and the curtain for the final act was delayed when the two men stepped aside for an animal conversation.

"We didn't know if we were going to have a peace treaty ending the Cold War or a third act," said one cast member later.

Dubinin, clearly enjoying the show, said Brecht's plays are popular in the Soviet Union and that "The Threepenny Opera" often is performed there in Russian.

"It's the truth about life," he said, smilingly acknowledging that Brecht was an outspoken Marxist who rewrote the 18th century English satire, "The Beggar's Opera," to espouse his political theories about religion, sex and morality in capitalist society.

Dubinin said Thursday night's performance, in a fresh English translation by Michael Feingold, "brought an American spirit to the spirit of Brecht's epoch" that is "a good combination of the two."

The ambassador's companion for the evening was Miss Sukhanova, a 17-year-old model and budding actress who recently was graduated from a Moscow high school for the arts. She was elected "Miss U.S.S.R." in June during a beauty pageant in which Soviet television viewers called in their votes by telephone.

Miss Sukhanova said she became a Sting fan when she saw a television broadcast of the former lead singer and songwriter for the defunct rock group Police performing last year at a Moscow stadium concert.

"I'm not really in love with him, but I like him very much," she said through an interpreter at a post-performance party at the Old Ebbitt Grill also attended by members of Congress, Lynda Johnson Robb, actress Kelly McGillis and other celebrities.

Miss Sukhanova managed to slip past other admirers crowding around Sting's table, including Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., and his 16-year-old daughter, Karenna, to shake hands with her singing idol.

She said she blushed "just a little" when Sting gave her a compliment. "She's too shy to say," the interpreter said, "but he told her she was very beautiful."

Feingold said there have been three movies and no fewer than six translations or adaptations of "Threepenny Opera" for the stage.

We may be losing Gilligan, Lassie as television culture

My friend Jane once challenged me to sing all the words to the theme song from "Gilligan's Island." I immediately met her challenge right down to the last notes.

"Now," Jane said, "Aren't you ashamed of yourself?" Maybe I should be ashamed that my mind has stored more television trivia than Shakespearean sonnets. But I'm a member of the generation that grew up on television; it forms a common point of reference, my generation's common culture.

For the 30-something and 40-something crowd, these songs from television shows are as familiar as show tunes were to a previous generation. Likewise, TV commercials are another shared cultural experience. We quote from them as if they were literature: "Try it, you'll like it." Builds strong bodies 12 ways. "The uncola." "Gee, No, GTE."

Is there anyone left in America who still says "garbage" instead of Jonathan Winters' more refined "gar-BAGE"? I once thought of devising a psychological test using today's cultural signposts to gain insights into a person's deepest subconscious — like an updated Rorschach ink blots test. Picture a bearded, German-accented psychotherapist querying a patient lying on a couch: "Who was your favorite Beatle?" "Which was the most insightful Star Trek adventure? Which was the dumbest?"

"Are you a member of the Pepsi Generation?" "Who did you identify most with: Wilbur or Mr. Ed?" "Where is Marlboro Country?"

"Why do you see Beaver Cleaver as a child of innocence in an otherwise corrupt universe?" But our shared TV culture may be dying out. Cable television might be destroying it. Cable? How can more television destroy TV culture?

Because now there are too many channels to choose from. When your attention is scattered over 30 channels, when you can choose sports or movies or weather or even shopping — the commonality of the television experience is lost.

There was a time when practically the whole nation watched "Bonanza" together on Sunday nights (although the counterintelligence types later left for the Smothers Brothers.) There was a time in school when everyone would be going over the jokes on "Laugh-In" the night before. Everyone viewed Walter Cronkite as the nation's father figure. Now the television audiences is distracted by the variety of different channels. Add in the impact of the videocassette recorder, and you have people who are watching movies or exercise tapes or shows taped hours or days earlier. No one has to wait for the 6 p.m. news anymore, not when CNN runs news 24 hours a day.

In a series on cable television, The New York Times quotes Todd Gitlin, a professor of sociology at the University of California, Berkeley, as questioning the impact of so many channels via cable: "The crucial question is: Does this mean we are no longer a nation of national symbols because we don't have Walter Cronkite or 'Leave it to Beaver' in common?"

Like it or not, television has provided our national symbols, but those symbols now could be diminishing in impact. We could be losing that sense of shared culture, the link that insured that whether you grew up in New York or North Dakota or Los Angeles or Seattle, you could sing the Oscar Mayer Wiener song.

Some might rejoice at the death of TV culture. I mean, swapping "Leave It To Beaver" episodes is not like comparing favorite Hemingway passages. Wouldn't it be better if we all based our common culture on that ancient artifact — literature? But I fear worse is to come.

Cable television, while often including classic movies or innovative shows, also plunges to new cultural depths, particularly with the more sexually explicit shows or the shopping channels or yet-another-special on pro wrestling.

Fortunately, I think Gitlin exaggerates. Many cable channels are recirculating old shows, and in fact, keeping them alive. A whole new generation is not only getting to know "Gilligan's Island" but Bob Denver's earlier show, "Dobie Gillis." (Do you remember his character's name in that one? If you said Maynard G. Krebs, give yourself the rest of the day off.) Remember, television also created the concept of the rerun.

So go ahead, sing the theme song to "Gilligan's Island." You can? Well, I still bet you can name all the characters.

Twin Falls man will represent Idaho at international camp

TWIN FALLS — Thomas Breske of Twin Falls has been selected to represent Idaho as the official representative to the International Music Camp during North Dakota's centennial year celebration. The North Dakota Centennial Commission has sanctioned Breske as the "Official Musical Ambassador from Idaho" to the camp. The International Music Camp, now in its 34th season, has also been sanctioned as "North Dakota's Centennial Summer Arts Camp." Nearly 3,000 students from 25 countries are enrolled in the seven weeks of arts activities. Breske is well known throughout Idaho for his skills as a music educator, saxophonist, and conductor. He will serve as a saxophone instructor and stage band conductor, along with 100 other guest artist teachers and conductors chosen to work with students enrolled in the camp programs. The International Music Camp, founded in 1956 and located at the International Peace Garden, is one of the most well-known summer arts schools in North America. In addition to attracting students from nearly every state and province in North America, students have enrolled from as many as 36 countries during the past 34 years. More than 65,000 students have attended the camp during its 34-year history.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECASTS

IF SEPTEMBER 22 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY—those who recently regarded you as "soft touch" had not been kidding. You are dynamic, stubborn, creative, well aware of your own destiny. You tear away from restrictions, traditions while young. Much of what you planned during January will be fulfilled in October. Taurus, Leo, Scorpio persons play important roles in your life. You broke from parental discipline early. You'll have chance in October to go through written word. Major domestic adjustment occurs in November. ARIES (March 21-April 19): You see "beyond" facts and figures. You'll be one step ahead of competitors. Emphasis on home, security, ability to drive "hard bargain".

Taurus (April 20-May 20): You gain access to privileged information. Close relationship with brother or sister. Wants to "take a trip." Be discreet. You know plenty but cannot talk about it. Postpone that journey. Pves involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain hint from Taurus message. Errand that should have been taken care of yesterday again commands attention. Define terms, check legal aspects. You'll eventually go places, but please not today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lunar, numeric cycle insight indicates dramatic, sensitivity, sex appeal. Older individual provides opportunity to hit financial jackpot if you can meet deadline. Romance is no strategy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): No one actually holds you back, but you suddenly seem to be afflicted by self-doubt. Break loose, take initiative out of situation, that drains motivation, financially. Aries plays significant VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Obtain hint from Leo message. Stress independence, creativity, willingness to get to heart of matters. Special note: Avoid heavy lifting! Scorpions highlights discovery, originality, pioneering spirit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Attention centers around income, career, business possibility of partnership. You'll be asked to "referee" family dispute. Rise above petty differences, be as objective as possible. First hunch is correct.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on travel, curiosity, dissemination of information. You'll learn more about legal rights, permissions. Be aware also on spiritual matter, abstract design. Publishing, philosophy figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may say "I feel as if I'm in knots!" That's temporary. Financial bind will be resolved. You are due for significant reward. Scorpions behind scenes nets up vigorously. Check reference material.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Dialogue with one whose ideas oppose your own proves stimulating. Emphasis on legal affairs, publicity, marital status. You'll say, "I know I'm advancing but I just don't know how I'm doing it!"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Family member wants to talk about employment income, basic issues and problems faced by relatives. Be diplomatic without becoming involved in "foolish" situation. Major domestic adjustment commands attention.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Individual who knows you well talks, about fact you are, "true romantic." Accept this as compliment. Current cycle emphasizes creativity, style, physical attraction. Energy that has been lacking surges to forefront.

Detective Frank Keller (Al Pacino) finds himself attracted to Helen (Ellen Barkin), a prime suspect in a murder case

Universal becomes 3rd producer to grab the top weekly spots

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Universal became only the third movie studio this decade to nail down the top three spots at the weekend box office when "Sea of Love," "Uncle Buck" and "Parenthood" gave it a convincing 1-2-3 sweep.

According to figures released by Exhibitor Relations Co., Universal became the first studio in two years to claim the No. 1, 2 and 3 titles in one weekend. The last time a studio shared the honor came in January 1987, with Paramount's "Critical Decision," "Star Trek IV" and "The Golden Child."

The fall movie season is off-to-a strong start, with the top 16 titles collecting $37.2 million, $10 million more than the top 18 movies a year ago.

Led by the Al Pacino-Ellen Barkin romantic thriller "Sea of Love," with a record fall opening of $10 million, Universal's films accounted for nearly 50 percent of the overall domestic theater gate, a studio said. Universal has held the No. 1 box-office spot for seven weeks in a row.

Finishing in second with $4.1 million in theater sales was "Uncle Buck," a comedy starring John Candy as a maladjusted babysitter. In third was the ensemble family comedy "Parenthood," with Steve Martin and Jason Robards, on grosses of $3.7 million.

"When Harry Met Sally..." the story of best friends who become lovers, landed in fourth with a gate of $2.7 million. It was followed in fifth by the martial-arts adventure "Kickboxer," which netted $2.6 million.

In sixth was the action sequel "Lethal Weapon 2," with receipts of $2.206 million. In seventh, on grosses of $2.15 million, was the underwater-suspense tale "The Abyss."

Rounding out the Top 10 were "sex, lies and videotape" with $1.75 million in eighth; "Turner and Hooch" in ninth on $1.66 million and "Batman" in 10th with $1.5 million. "Batman" has now grossed more than $243 million, passing "Raiders of the Lost Ark" to become the fifth biggest smash in Hollywood history.

RATINGS

The five category system of the voluntary film industry rating program is now as follows:

- G. General Audiences, all ages admitted
- P.G. Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.
- P.G. 13. Parents are strongly cautioned to give special guidance for children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for children.
- R. Restricted, under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian
- X. No one under 17 admitted.

Pacino, Barkin make big splash in 'Sea of Love'

By KEVIN THOMAS
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — "Sea of Love" is a satisfactory end-of-summer diversion, the kind of film that works as long as you ask nothing of it beyond simple escape. It's a slick, knowing genre film, through and through, a New York cop suspense thriller that we've seen countless times before.

It does, thankfully, have a sense of humor, and it does have Al Pacino, Ellen Barkin and John Goodman, all of whom are in for a good time of pleasure. Pacino and Barkin do scorch the screen, although this doesn't happen until a full hour into the picture; nevertheless, they become helpful in distracting attention from various implausibilities.

Writer Richard Price and director Harold Becker take more time and pains than necessary to establish that Pacino's Frank Keller, a Manhattan police detective unscathed by "teaching 20 years on the force," is a savvy, dedicated pro, earthy, gregarious and volatile yet an "achingly lonely man beneath all the bravado." Goodman's sharp, humorous Sherman, a detective in Queens, comes into the picture when he and Frank team up to try to catch a serial killer whose victims are selected in the personals column of a women's magazine. Their one break appears to be that the murderer is attracted to ads employing poetry.

Movie review

Barkin's Helen, the cool, sexy manager of a chic shoe store, is one of the respondents to an ad placed by Frank as a bait. After a bit of skirmishing, Frank and Helen commence a highly combustible romance. Never mind that this is contrary to orders; Frank is so carried away that he even resists having Helen's water glass checked for prints. Yet a series of incidents and remarks suggest that Frank's life could very well be in great danger. Golly, Helen even has a copy of Phil Phillips' "Sea of Love" in her collection of old 45s, a record that was playing over and over at the scene of the killing.

On its most basic level, "Sea of Love" works because Barkin has the skill to keep us guessing whether she is actually a main-freaking-crazy or just a wary veteran of the dating wars. There's no question that we are meant to see writ in large the paranoia that cripples so many relationships out there in the urban jungle; but this is to take "Sea of Love" too seriously. Actually, the film is preferable to the disturbingly muddled seriousness of "Fatal Attraction".

There's nothing at all profound in Helen or Frank, and Pacino and Barkin are engaged in showy star turns, loaded with attitudes and poses, that are fun in themselves and in fact appropriate for this superficial entertainment.

Their duet of personalities is nicely anchored by Goodman's presence, whose wit is as formidable as his bulk. Patricia Barry is heart-breaking as an elegant, lonely older woman who has answered Frank's ad.

As sleek as "Sea of Love" (rated R for violence, sex and language) is, it can't quite keep us away from wondering how a smart woman like Helen, whose looks would stop traffic and whose work would bring her into constant contact with an array of sophisticated men, would ever resort to the personals — unless, of course, she really is a psychopath.

Special effects dominate 'Honey, I Shrank...'

The following are capsule reviews of movies currently showing in the Magic Valley.

Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association of America and the Los Angeles Times.

HONEY, I SHRUNK THE KIDS (PG). Shrunken suburban kids, accidentally tossed out with the trash by their mad scientist daddy, try to fight their way back home through a yard turned into a jungle of monstrous bees and towering foliage. What happens to them is what happens to the movie: the humans shrivel into crawling piffles or caterwauling robots and the grass and the insects and giant cookies take over. It is a special effects marvel, no doubt — but the verbal jokes have the comic timing of a mating dance by blind, jealous elephants.

PARENTHOOD (PG-13). Those with "impossible," even "hated" teenagers, whose every sentence is punctuated by a slammed door, might swear that "Parenthood" was their group portrait. And adult children of alcoholics might claim the movie as their own.

Watching the emotional fallout from Jason Robards' boozily indifferent attempt at fathering, four decades later. Director Ron Howard, who also created the film's original story with Lowell Ganz and Babaloo Mandel ("Splash," "Night Shift"), uses these bitter-sweet elements like smelling salts, to bring us around after the laughing gas effect of the jokes. Robards and a vastly put-upon Eileen Ryan are parents of two sons: Steve Martin and young black sheep Tom Hulce, as well as two daughters: Dianne West, whose husband has left her, and lovely newcomer Harley Kozak, whose husband (Rick Moranis) alas, has not.

TURNER AND HOOC (PG). A dog-meets-cop version of "The Odd Couple," with Tom Hanks as a picky Felix type and a jowly, drooping, pug-nosed Dogue de Bordeaux named Beasley as a sloth Oscar. The co-stars generate some chemistry, but three teams of screenwriters have come up with a mystery story that could only bamboozle 12-year-olds who weren't paying attention, a love story that should put anyone over or under 12 to sleep, and a dog story that dogs themselves might actually enjoy — if the pages were edible.

UNCLE BUCK (PG). Writer-director John Hughes has managed to fuse his two genres-of-choice: the clashing-family comedy and the torture-teen pic, with mixed results. As the blue-collar relative from hell shunned by all but the youngest relations in his stuffed-shirt family, John Candy has never been more likable, but to get to the chuckles you have to wade through Hughes' favorite anti-adult stereotypes and then endure the palest of warm resolutions.

WHEN HARRY MET SALLY... (R). Genuinely witty dialogue is not exactly a staple of summer movies, but Rob Reiner's newest from Nora Ephron's screenplay bristles with it as broody Billy Crystal and sunny Meg Ryan meet, attract, then worry a lot whether lovers can be friends, and the reverse. Lovely ensemble work with Carrie Fisher and Bruno Kirby are just right as a couple the audience is pushing together. Yes, with its Manhattan setting and "real" married couple interviews, interlarding the action, it has an aura of Woody Allen.

Son's friend enjoys free ride on too many family vacations

DEAR ABBY: We are an ordinary middle-class family. Our older children are married, and we have one son at home who just turned 15.

We like to take vacations, and our son likes to take a friend with him. For the last four years, the same friend has been going with us. (I'll call him Buddy.) We always pay Buddy's way as though he were a member of the family. I'm talking about food, motel room, which he shares with our son, and whatever it costs to get through the gate at some parks.

We never thought about it until this year, but we resent the fact that Buddy's parents have never offered to pay the lodging for their son, gas for our car, meals or anything else. They aren't any worse off financially than we are. They never go on vacations, so they aren't able to invite our son anywhere. They always thank us when we bring Buddy home and tell us they'd never get to go anywhere if it weren't for us.

Abigail VanBuren

We're not greedy or cheap, but this kid practically lives at our house during the year. I'm not even sure if it's proper to expect anything. I wish our son could have as nice a free vacation as Buddy gets. What are your thoughts on this?

COLORADO QUESTION
DEAR QUESTION: It would be most thoughtful and considerate if Buddy's parents paid a little something toward their son's vacations, but look at it this way: Your son has a compatible companion on his vacation trips, which makes those vacations more enjoyable for everyone, including you. All things considered, it's a pretty good deal for all parties. Especially Buddy.

DEAR ABBY: You missed the mark by a country mile when you admonished an affectionate couple to "control themselves" in public lest some onlookers say, "Why don't you two get a room?" (This couple was married, mind you, and spending the weekend at the summer home of his parents.)

Abby, why should they take their cue from his prudish, uptight parents?

Let me quote Henri Matisse: "Nothing is sweeter than love, nothing stronger, nothing lofter, nothing grander, nothing pleasanter, nothing fuller, nothing better in heaven or on earth."

Which is to say, that to observe a couple holding hands in public, or bestowing a gentle kiss one on the other is indeed a joy to behold, and in this world of ever-increasing hatredfulness a welcome sign that there may yet be hope for the human condition.

— G.L.L. IN LOS ANGELES

DEAR G.L.L.: All the world loves a lover. (Emerson)

"Discretion is the better part of valor." (Shakespeare)

"Moderation in all things is the epitome of wisdom." (Van Buren)

DEAR ABBY: Concerning the bride's problem of guests "inviting" extra people by filling in the blank on the response card where it has "number of guests":

When my husband and I married 16 years ago, someone suggested that we send out invitations with the blank on the response cards already filled in. This, we were told, would clear up any confusion as to how many guests were expected.

Well, in our case, it didn't work. One couple crossed out the "2" we had filled in and made it "3" because we had "forgotten" their young son.

Poll shows most Americans approve of funding of arts

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Americans approve, by nearly 2-to-1, of government funding of the arts, and they are evenly split in their opinions as to how much to spend on a National Endowment for the Arts funding bill offered by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that would ban public money for "obscene" or "indecent" art.

But while an overwhelming majority of Americans — 66 percent — agree with First Amendment guarantees against government-imposed restrictions on freedom of speech or the press, 16 percent disagree that such protections should exist and 18 percent say they don't know.

Those observations are among findings of a new Los Angeles Times Poll, based on telephone interviews with 2,177 Americans, 18 and older. The national sampling included respondents in all 50 states and is subject to a sampling error of plus or minus 3 percent.

The poll, conducted last weekend, comes as a Senate committee is prepared to hold a confirmation hearing today on President Bush's nominee to be the national endowment's new chairman, Oregon lawyer John E. Frohnmaier.

The poll results were tempered by the finding that three-quarters of Americans haven't heard about the controversy that has enveloped the endowment. Large proportions said that they didn't know enough about the issues in the controversy to respond intelligently.

A House-Senate conference committee is expected to begin deliberations next week on a compromise version of the endowment's 1990 appropriations bill, which was amended in the Senate to include the Helms restrictions, as well as provisions blacklisting two private arts groups for five years for organizing controversial exhibitions.

Helms did not respond to calls from The Times seeking his reaction to the poll results.

Poll findings on artistic freedom of issues found Americans generally unaware of details of the endowment controversy and related issues. A total of 49 percent believe artists receiving government funding have no right to be daring or sometimes offensive in their work, while 40 percent say they did, whereas 11 percent didn't know or wouldn't say.

Some arts observers said, however, that the lack of awareness of key issues in the controversy wasn't as high as they feared. But they said it reflects a reality the art community has been reluctant to face — that the security of artistic freedom and the future health of the federal arts program are not issues that have excited widespread public concern.

Anne Murphy, executive director of the Washington-based American Arts Alliance, said that she found the results overall to be "a rather encouraging set of statistics." She said that the division over the right of government-funded art to be daring or offensive may be the most significant finding of all.

"Obviously, the majority of people are not even aware of what Mr. Helms is doing," Murphy said.

"The poll seems to have captured the level of awareness the American public has about the endowment and issues that are surrounding the controversy," she said. Richard Koshalek, director of the Los Angeles Museum of Contemporary Art, "I think the arts world is very small. I don't think the vast majority of the public is aware or concerned at this time."

Although there was a nearly equal division over the Helms amendment — with 25 percent of respondents approving of it and 23 percent disapproving — the largest proportion of all, 52 percent, said that they didn't know enough about the issue to have an opinion or hadn't heard of the controversy at all.

A similar division appeared in public opinion over whether government money should be spent to promote the arts. While 40 percent said they favored such expenditures and 21 percent said they opposed, 39 percent had no opinion or were not aware of the issue.

Among the poll's other observations were these:

— While an overwhelming majority — 61 percent vs. 21 percent, with 12 percent saying they didn't know — opposed government censorship of the arts, 49 percent of Americans said they think artists who get government money have no right to be daring or offensive in their work.

Another 40 percent supported such work and 11 percent didn't now or refused to answer.

— More people — 39 percent vs. 31 percent — thought government support should be withdrawn when a controversy develops over a publicly funded artwork — specifically work alleged to be distasteful or profane; 15 percent said the response depended on the situation and 15 percent weren't sure or wouldn't say.

— Fully 76 percent of the respondents had heard either nothing or very little about the controversy enveloping the national endowment. Only 6 percent said they had heard "a lot" about the issue.

— A majority of people believe arts support should be at either the state or federal level, with about a quarter favoring each level of government.

Another 10 percent said all levels of government should support the arts while 14 percent favored city governments and 4 percent preferred counties.

Elton's newest impressive, not impassioned

By MILTON KENT
The Baltimore Evening Sun

Over the years, Elton John has become pop music's P.T. Barnum, a master showman in gaudy clothes, outrageous sunglasses and feathers, who, by the way, just happens to have a knack for producing polished, mainstream music that sounds better than he looks.

But John has shed most of the exterior act in recent years and has concentrated on the music. As he returns to MCA records, the site of his 1970s triumphs, John, with his new album "Sleeping With the Past," follows his usual form, with a slick, seamless piece of pop that isn't disappointing, but doesn't stretch the imagination either.

John and his longtime collaborator, Bernie Taupin, pledge in the album's liner notes that "These songs were inspired by the soul pioneers of the Sixties and Seventies, whose music meant so much to us."

"And while it is true that John's best works have always had a rhythm and blues orientation, the best that 'Sleeping With the Past' can do to live up to its promise is to make fleecing lyrical references to Otis Redding and Marvin Gaye in a doo-wop setting in 'Club at the End of the Street.'"

The truth is that John, while possessing a fine voice, has never had the distinctive vocal tones to pull off "blue-eyed soul" effectively, the way his fellow Brit Paul Young did on his former Dobie Gray cover.

Group recognizes Judi Baxter

TWIN FALLS — Judi Baxter of Judi's Bookstore was one of two winners of the 1989 Lucile Michaels Pannell Awards, given annually by the Women's National Book Association to honor creative efforts by booksellers to bring children and books together.

Baxter's program was called "I'm Hooked on Books." She developed it to celebrate her store's tenth anniversary as well as an expanded children's book section. Among the various phases of the program were a Summer Reading Club, Quilting for Literacy, an "I'm Hooked on Books" Parade and Celebration, and a Christmas Pageant.

Bookstore in 1978.

The Lucile Michaels Pannell Awards are named in honor of an educator and librarian who also was a bookseller at Carson Pirie Scott's Hobby Horse Bookshop in Chicago from 1943-1953. An endowment from Mrs. Pannell's estate funds the awards which consist of a $1500 cash gift and a piece of art by a noted children's book illustrator for each winner.

Such is the case on "Sleeping With the Past." None of the 10 songs will ever be held in the same esteem as John's best work, like "Your Song," "Daniel," "Crocodile Rock" or "Philadelphia Freedom." But even if they aren't groundbreaking pieces, they hold their own.

John launches the album with the reggae-flavored "Durban Deep," a surrealistic piece that comes across well, as does the driving "Healing Hands," marked by John's flashy keyboard work.

The title piece is vaguely reminiscent of "Philadelphia Freedom," but nowhere near as optimistic. Taupin's lyrics here have a biting, scolding edge, while the synthesized organ and horn sounds recall slightly the Memphis soul sound of the '60s.

Beach Boys' Wilson sues music publisher

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Brian Wilson, the eccentric creative force behind the fun-in-the-sun Beach Boys, is charging his music publisher with fraud and seeking $50 million in royalties lost over 20 years and $50 million in punitive damages.

The singer-composer filed suit in Los Angeles County Superior Court against Irving Music, the publishing company owned by A&M General Corp., which also is named along with four other divisions — A&M Records, Rondor Music International, Almo Music and Almo Irving Music.

Also named was the prominent entertainment industry law firm of Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp.

A companion suit also was filed in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles charging copyright infringement.

Capitol Records has the recording rights to the Beach Boys and is not involved in the dispute.)

The Superior Court suit makes a variety of charges, including forgery of Wilson's signature on the original 1969 contract in dispute, plus mispractice, misrepresentations, suppression of fact, breach of contract and conflicts of interest.

The filing charges that Wilson, now 47, was suffering paranoid psychosis in 1969 — "and continues to suffer from this disorder" — and was incompetent to sign such a document.

Several bizarre details are included in the suit, including the legendary allegation that Wilson's father, Murry, the iron-fisted manager of the band in its formative years, would remove his prosthetic eye and force his son to look at the scarred socket to terrify and punish him. The father died in 1973.

In the mid-1960s, the suit alleges, Wilson suffered a widely publicized nervous breakdown, and he was "given LSD (a hallucinogen) by an agent of the William Morris Agency (the band's representative)." That led eventually to Wilson's psychosis, the suit says.

Boise Art Museum offers after-hours entertainment

BOISE — "Museum After Hours" is back this fall at the Boise Art Museum featuring jazz entertainment, visual arts, appetizers and beverages, Wednesdays, from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., Sept. 27 through Oct. 18.

Kicking off the series Sept. 27 is The Bob Nora Quartet featuring Sun Valley's Bob Nora with his jazzy sax and some of Boise's best musicians: The Al Pine Jazz Band brings its mainstream jazz style from Sun Valley with its jockey Al Pine on bass, Mike Boylston's drums and the jazz guitar of John Northrop on Oct. 4.

At the museum on Oct. 11 is Jazz at La Kirk, with former-Moody Blues violinist Tom Tompkins on saxophone, saxophonist, Al Joberg and drummer Greg Belzeski joining Kevin Kirk in an urbane blend of class and sass. Grand finale for the fall series on Oct. 18 will be Chicken Cordon Blues, Boise's best blues band, featuring vocalist, Kathy Miller.

The museum is located downtown, off Capitol Boulevard in Julia Davis Park.

'60s singing group is basis of plot of TV movie 'My Boyfriend's Back'

By CONNIE PASSALACQUA

"OF COURSE I am!"

Actress Judith Light's voice hits a high C when she is asked if she's nervous about making her TV singing debut in the NBC TV movie "My Boyfriend's Back," airing Monday, Sept. 25.

Light (who plays Angela Bower on the sitcom "Who's the Boss?"), Jill Eikenberry (who plays Ann Kelsey on "L.A. Law") and Sandy Duncan (who plays Sandy Hogan on "The Hogan Family") play The Bouffants, a 1960s teen-age singing group who are reunited for a TV special 25 years after their only hit single. ("My Boyfriend's Back" is actually a 1983 hit by The Angels.)

"I wouldn't call myself a singer," says Light, who recalls last singing professionally as a regional theater actress in 1974. "So I took singing lessons with a wonderful man named Nathan Lamm, who's a cantor at one of the big temples (synagogues) here in L.A." She describes her character's voice as "very poignant and dense with feeling." That's because, while the other members of The Bouffants have gone on to have professional careers and raise families, Vicki Vine is a singer in the lounge of a bowling alley.

As Vine, Light wears a Dolly Parton-esque blond wig, and says her costumes range from a vinyl miniskirt to marabou feathers and sequins. "But she doesn't sing schlicky like Bill Murray. That's not the kind of actress I am. Most of the work I do is based on very serious character, even if not all my roles are serious. When I create a character, it's usually grounded in reality."

Light says that "My Boyfriend's Back" is more than just a lighthearted comedy. "I'd call it a musical comedy-drama. The reunion of the women, who haven't seen each other in 25 years, brings up a lot of serious stuff. My character, for example, is still resentful that the lead mike was taken away from her back when The Bouffants were stars."

Although this sounds like the situation in "Dreamgirls," the Broadway hit based on The Supremes, Light says the TV-movie idea is an original. "It was submitted to my agent, who is also Jill's agent, and it was developed with the three of us in mind. We all had a lot of input into the script." Light had never met Eikenberry ("although I worked with her husband, Michael Tucker, in theater in New York") or Duncan, but now raves, "They are fabbb...ulous women. They are both very deep, talented and professional. I can't say enough wonderful about them."

Which is also how Light describes her "Who's the Boss?" co-stars Tony Danza and Katherine Helmond. Light feels that the threesome's chemistry is the reason the sitcom is entering its sixth season. And she also says the chemistry between housekeeper Tony and advertising executive Angela will be much heated up this season. "We (the characters) were good friends last season but this year will be a little bit more directly involved. The writers have come up with some really clever ideas."

Light says, "I'd be lying or unprofessional if I wasn't thinking of my career beyond 'Who's the Boss?' I think a movie like 'My Boyfriend's Back' could help show my versatility as an actress to the (TV-and-movie) industry. Even with my singing, it can do nothing but help me."

ON THE COVER From left: Jill Eikenberry, Judith Light and Sandy Duncan star in 'My Boyfriend's Back,' airing Monday, Sept. 25, on NBC.

Anita Ekberg hopes for a comeback

Q: You're good at the whatever-happened-to game, so how about Anita Ekberg, the blond bombshell from that great Italian movie, "La Dolce Vita"? — D.U.

A: The news was bad but it's getting better. Some 15 years ago Anita's second husband took off with all of her money while she was ill with hepatitis. After that she went into seclusion in Italy, seeing no one and gaining weight. Her old friend Fellini persuaded her to do a movie with him, and seeing herself so obese on the screen finally made her determined to go on a rigorous diet. Now svelte again, she's doing a TV series for French television. Next on the agenda is Hollywood. Her old friend Kim Novak has invited her to stay at her home while she tries for a come-

Q: Both of Martin Susan's sons, Charlie Sheen and Emilio Estevez, have followed in their father's footsteps. What about the daughter? Doesn't she want to be an actress? — R.B.

A: She does but so far, even with the clout of her father and brothers, Renee Sheen has had only bit parts. She was in "The Intruders" and "That Was Then, This Is Now," but was easy to miss

Q: Several movie reviewers have been comparing the hilarious John Candy to a latter-day Fatty Arbuckle. Can you tell me who Fatty was? — R.T.

A: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle was a baby-faced actor and director who was extremely popular during the silent screen period. Noted for his comedy flair and grace, even though he weighed 320 pounds, Arbuckle's career was cut short in 1921 by a manslaughter charge after the death of Virginia Rappe, a starlet/model, at a wild party under bizarre sexual circumstances. Though Fatty was acquitted in court, public opinion turned against him and the scandal ultimately wrecked his Hollywood career. Despite an abortive comeback, some directional work (under an assumed name), and a Broadway stage appearance, Fatty died a disconsolate man in 1933.

Q: Have you heard rumors that Clint Eastwood and his ex-wife Maggie might be getting back together? — I.C.

A: Those rumors have been around ever since Clint dumped Sondra Locke. Maggie decided to divorce her husband of four years, Henry Wynnberg, a former boyfriend of Elizabeth Taylor's, who is now suing Liz for a piece of her perfume action. A remarriage is always a possibility. Clint and Maggie have known each other since childhood and had two children together — Kyle, 21, and Alison, 17 — during their 31-year marriage.

MYSTERY-DEEPENS: A new twist has developed in the mysterious death of Christina Onassis, who died almost a year ago. Greek Archbishop Ganadius Christoulakis has just revealed that Christina phoned him only 12 hours before she died and asked him to be the one to arrange memorial services in the event of her death. He obviously had no idea her death was imminent, insisting she sounded happy and said she was looking forward to marrying the brother of her best friend. Although the official cause of death was a heart attack, it FORBES FOLLY: The Scots are delighted to call millionaire Malcolm Forbes one of their own. However, on seeing photographs of Forbes at his megabucks 70th birthday party in Tangiers, they wished a native had helped him put on his kilt. They claim he had it backwards with the pleats in front.

ROCK HUDSON STORY: Both ABC and NBC are reportedly at work on blockbuster TV movies about Rock Hudson's life and death. Rumors are that influential guys in Hollywood, many of them still in the closet, are trying to put a stop to both productions although they have little hope of succeeding. As one told my Hollywood spy, "He was a warm and gentle man and deserves to be left alone now rather than raking up those old scandals."

Q: I know Margaux Hemingway ended a disastrous marriage and saved herself from a major alcohol problem. What is she doing now — H.D.

Q: Is there any basis for those stories that Michael Fox and Sean Penn were vicious enemies during the filming of "Casualties of War"? — L.L.

A: Penn is an obsessive actor and tends to stay in his character on the set and off. Sean and Michael also agreed that in order to maintain the ammosity in the script, they would give each other a wide berth. There were no off-screen fights, however, and Fox when asked recently said, "I really enjoyed working with him and I'd work with him again in a heartbeat."

Q: Two questions about Liza Minnelli. She now has a hit single from her album with that British pair The Pet Shop Boys, but what were her other hits? And are she and her husband Mark Gero still together? — S.S.

A: Believe it or not, Liza Minnelli has never had a hit until now. Despite all her fame, "Losing My Mind" is her first hit record. Liza and Mark's rocky marriage has survived for 10 years and she says that now that Gero has become a sculptor and quit his work as a theatrical stage manager, the marriage has never been more solid. She says his also being in the entertainment business was too competitive and turning to sculpture has saved their marriage.

Soap opera scene

Character transition smooth in 'Light'

Characters in soap operas are often sent away to such exotic locales as South America or the Fiji Islands, when the actor or actress playing the part leaves the series. Then some months later, the character returns to the fold in the person of a new actor or actress.

Soap fans are used to this procedure but it's still hard on the actor who is the replacement, particularly if the actor being replaced is a popular one.

Krista Tesreau made the character of Mindy Lewis one of the most appealing in the cast of "Guiding Light." She managed to go through the pangs of teen-love and capture the devotion of a faithful following. The character grew up and went through many changes and last December, Krista decided it was time to explore other career possibilities. Mindy was shipped off to South America for some months while the part was recast.

As is the case with recasting a soap-opera role, many actresses were seen and the field narrowed down until Kimberly Simms was chosen as the new Mindy.

Kimberly is as beautiful as Krista and she has equal poise and presence. Now, it was up to the viewers to evaluate the new Mindy and accept or reject her. So far, the letters indicate Kimberly is pleasing "Guiding Light" fans.

"The transition was smooth, I thought," the actress said. "I know that some fans would miss the old Mindy but I didn't let that concern me. I also knew that it would take awhile before I was totally accepted in the part. The producers seem to be happy with my performance and I am getting comfortable in the part."

Kimberly came to New York after a few years in California where she worked in some low budget films and had small roles in soaps such as the now defunct "Capitol." She also resorted to modeling jobs and TV commercials to pay the bills but she really didn't like modeling, which she had done since her early teenage years.

Kimberly Simms has taken over the role of Mindy

"When I decided to study acting," said Kimberly, "I know that my modeling days would come into conflict with my new career choice. So, I have worked very hard and I take my work seriously. I didn't want to fall into that good looking-model vacuum."

Kimberly admits that her family may be her biggest fans. Her father, whom she describes as an intelligent businessman, tapes the show and watches every scene she's in. Kimberly's eyes teared up, though, when she mentioned her grandmother, who was a true fan of "Guiding Light" for decades.

"I called my grandmother when I was cast in the soap because I knew how much she liked 'Guiding Light' and she was so thrilled. I'm happy that she got to see me in the show at least a few times before she died."

Q: You've been saying all along that there was trouble in the Princess Anne-Mark Phillips household and now it's official. Is there a suitor in Anne's life? — J.R.

A: Anne recently spent a couple of weeks with the royal family at Balmoral, the summer palace. Another houseguest was the handsome equerry (personal aide) Tim Laurence, whose affectionate letters were stolen from the princess and offered for sale. Fortunately, no publication would buy them and they were turned over to Scotland Yard. The gossip among the staff at Balmoral is that Commander Laurence is a great favorite of the royal family and could be next in line for the hand of the princess.

COMPUTER TENNIS — If a Nova Scotia inventor has his way, we won't be seeing any more hot-headed hassles with the umpire at the big tennis tournaments. Millionaire inventor John Van Auken has come up with what he calls a foolproof electronic fault-finder. His system uses a tennis ball with conductive fibers wound into its surface. When the ball hits wires on the top of the net or on the edge of the court, the hit registers on a computer. Van Auken says John McEnroe tried it and said if it had been invented earlier, he wouldn't have been so famous since there wouldn't have been fighting with the umps over so many wrong calls.

Q: Is Prince Rainier of Monaco resigned to the fact that his daughter Stephanie is going to marry that record producer? — G.C.

A: Not yet, he isn't, even though Ron Bloom, his prospective son-in-law, cut off his ponytail to appease the prince. Apparently Ron's old girlfriend, Lisa Fedi, has been accusing Bloom of being a gold digger. Although Stephanie has ignored those charges, Rainier is worried. The prince has demanded that Bloom sign a prenuptial agreement specifying that if the couple divorces, he has no claim on Stephanie's fortune. So far, Bloom has refused to sign.

Q: Is it true that deposed Philippine dictator Ferdinand Marcos has refused to bury his mother, who died more than a year ago? How can that be? — D.G.

A: Marcos, a dying man on a life support system in Hawaii, has refused to permit Dona Josefa to be buried until he is allowed to return to his country. The mother lies in state in a town some eight hours north of Manila. Macabre as it sounds, an embalmer visits every two months to freshen her yellow satin gown and her makeup. The body awaits what Marcos hopes will be a ceremonial state funeral.

Q: I've been seeing photographs of Rosy De Palma, who was the star of "Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown," with a number of Oscars. I can't recall that the lady or the movie won any Academy Awards. What's the explanation? — P.K.

A: It was simply a publicity stunt for De Palma and the movie. The Academy complained about the photo, as it was misleading and violated its right to the trademarked and copyrighted statue. The producers have promised not to use the publicity picture anymore.

clearer on "The Bold and the Beautiful." It's going to take therapy before Thorne can handle the Ridge-Caroline affair. Still, Thorne feels good about counseling. Margo begins to think seriously about opening a fashion house with Clarke.

Felicia and Decker are in Louisville to pull a few con jobs on "General Hospital." Bobbie and Tony fight over the fire she thinks Lucy set. Robin becomes friends with Tangeneva. Phoebe says she knows nothing about the motorcycle accident.

Paul goes to trial without firm evidence against Adrian on "The Young and the Restless." Rejected Nikki feels better after learning what Jim is doing. Derek's threat has Cricket in a panic. She needs a bodyguard not just friends. Skip and Carol are on edge waiting for the phone call from the pregnant girl.

News, documentary Emmy awards are spread liberally among networks

NEW YORK (AP) — Many were culled, but many were chosen.

Such was the night of news and documentary Emmy awards, with 50 given in 21 categories. At one point it provoked a gentle joke from billionaire Malcolm Forbes, a presenter.

There were three winners out of four nominees in one category, he mused, and "I just wonder how the one who didn't win feels."

PBS led the pack with 18 winners, followed by CBS with 16, ABC with eight, and NBC with five. An HBO special, "JKF: In His Own Words," got cable's lone Emmy for achievement in 1988.

When the non-televised, black-tie ceremonies at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel finally ended late Tuesday night, even a syndicated show that bowed last fall to critical boos when it was known as "USA Today: The Television Show," had won two Emmys, for title sequences and art direction.

True, critically acclaimed works were honored, including Ted Koppel's "Nightline" town meeting special from Israel on ABC. And fine coverage of a breaking stories got Emmy honors, including CBS' special on last year's bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 and Fred Francis' "NBC Nightly News" report on the USS Vincennes and its downing of an Iranian jetliner.

But at times it seemed a hard task not to win.

Example: In the category of "segments"—stories—in informational, cultural or historical programming, there were nine nominees, six of them from CBS' "West 57th." There were three winners. All were "West 57th" entries.

In another segment category, for "outstanding background analysis of a single current story," ABC's "20/20" won three Emmys for various stories. There had been eight network nominees.

In yet another segment category, for "outstanding interview interviews," there were seven nominees and four winners. Yet another segment category, for a continuing news story, had eight nominees. Half of them won.

Methinks it might be a good idea to restrict each category to no more than two winners.

CBS' Meredith Vieira, who shared in the first four Emmys she ever has won, proved one of the night's most frank and gracious winners when she paid tribute to Jane Stone, producer of one of her "West 57th" reports.

Stone shared an Emmy with the correspondent for the segment. Vieira, referring to her colleague's off-camera reportage on the story, said, "This was truly her piece, not mine. I came in at the end."

Tuesday night is doctor night as new season television shows begin

The Baltimore Sun

Tuesday night is doctor night in the world of new season television premieres: "Doogie Howser, M.D." debuts on ABC and "Island Son," another new show featuring a medical doctor, appears on CBS.

If "Doogie Howser, M.D." isn't successful, it is not because of the writing. The pilot episode for this show, about a 16-year-old doctor has some of the smartest touches since, well, Steven Bochco's last pilot.

Bochco, the man responsible for "Hill Street Blues" and "L.A. Law," is the executive producer of "Doogie Howser, M.D." You might want to remember that if you tune in Tuesday night and find early on that you are having some trouble, well, following the premise of this series.

Douglas (Doogie) Howser, played by Neil Patrick Harris, is a boy-wonder and then some. He graduated from Princeton at 10. Then he did med school in a couple of years. And he is now a resident at a big-league hospital.

Accepting that at first is a stretch. Think of the first time you saw Alex P. Keaton (Michael J. Fox) on "Family Ties." Now, think that if a few minutes into the pilot for "Family Ties" you had been told Alex not only believed he should be on the Federal Reserve Board, but he actually was.

But Bochco manages with some success to get us far enough inside Doogie Howser's head and heart by the end of the half hour that suspension of disbelief seems worth the chance to spend some time there.

Bochco accomplishes this mainly by using a device that seems pretty obvious, once you stop and think about it. But it is a device I have not seen elsewhere in prime-time weekly television. Bochco uses Doogie's personal computer as a diary.

The last image in Tuesday night's premiere episode is of Doogie sitting in his room at his computer. The camera closes in on the computer's screen as he writes the day's date and then: "Kissed my first girl. Lost my first patient. Life will never be the same again ..."

The effect is even more melancholy than the adult voice-over often is in "The Wonder Years."

A lot of television precedes this poignant ending. Some of it is silly. Some of it is sad. Some of it is cliched. Some is original. And some of it even seems profound. The mix still needs some adjustments. But, overall, "Doogie Howser, M.D." feels a little like being 16.

Doctor

The big news about "Island Son," of course, is the return to prime-time doctoring by Richard Chamberlain after signing off as Dr. Kildare 23 years ago.

In "Island Son" Chamberlain plays Dr. Daniel Kulani, an adopted son of Hawaiian parents. He works at a hospital in Hawaii. He's the doctor who doesn't wear a white jacket when he makes his rounds. This is supposed to suggest that he's into more important things than appearances and status.

It is never really clear, though, what Dr. Kulani is into. He makes a couple of speeches about being in some kind of spiritual contact with the essence of old Hawaii and its pureness. But it is the kind of vague psycho-religious-pop-talk that makes Shirley MacLaine seem real accessible.

Dr. Kulani's Hawaiian father is even worse. He sounds like Pat Morita in "The Karate Kid" — which seems to be Hollywood's idea of how a holy man from the Far East sounds.

night's episode concerns Dr. Kulani trying to get the mother of a child who's living on life support systems to donate her daughter's heart so that another child might live. Dr. Kulani goes to ask his father for guidance.

"Listen to the voice within, my son," the elder Kulani says. His son says he's confused by the inner voices.

"Your mother," the old man says, "sometimes she feels the spirit of her mother in the rush of a warm wind, in the shape of a cloud ... (it's) eternal."

Is it pantheism or is it Memorex?

Only Dr. Kulani knows.

This is not a very interesting two hours of television. It relies on some of the most shopworn hospital heart-string pullers around — like an old man and his dog, the stuffed animal that remains after a child dies at an obscenely young age. This may sound shallow, but the most interesting thing about "Island Son" is how young Chamberlain looks.

Is it the result of being in touch with the spirituality of old Hawaii or is it cosmetic surgery?

Only Richard Chamberlain and Dr. Kulani know.

'Entertainment Tonight' producer will move to NBC's 'Today' show

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Former WRC station manager and news director David Nuell — for the past three years executive producer of "Entertainment Tonight" — is returning to NBC as a major player.

In an unusual deal that puts him to work for three different divisions of the network, Nuell will become senior executive producer of NBC News' "Today" show, starting in January; develop a program for NBC Sports to be part of the daily coverage of the 1992 Barcelona Olympics; and "will be charged with the development of a daytime series for the NBC Entertainment Division."

The three division presidents, Brandon Tartikoff of Entertainment, Michael Gartner of News and Dick Ebersol of Sports, issued this statement: "We are extremely delighted that we were able to convince David Nuell to rejoin the NBC family. David brings the type of depth, imagination, talent and range that is essential if NBC is to continue to thrive and prosper in the increasingly competitive television environment of the 1990s."

Nuell had spent 20 years with the network before moving in 1986 to Los Angeles as executive in charge of the syndicated entertainment magazine for Paramount Television.

The "Today" assignment would insert him in an increasingly complicated management structure between current executive producer Marty Ryan and senior vice president (and NBC Sports division president) Ebersol in the administration of the morning program.

Ryan was to confer with Ebersol Tuesday regarding his future. The Nuell assignment comes as "Today" continues to lead, if no longer dominate, the morning network race despite a turbulent nine months for the show's staff.

—Earlier this year, a secret memo critiquing the operation that Ryan had requested from co-anchor Bryant Gumbel late last summer was leaked to the press. Highly critical of weatherman Willard Scott, the memo also found fault with several other on-air performers as well as the pace and content of the show.

In August, News president Gartner talked Ebersol into taking on the additional duties (the Sports president is a self-confessed news nut) of overseeing the "Today" show. The appointment of Nuell is Ebersol's second major move since taking over.

Earlier, Ebersol removed longtime "Today" newscaster John Palmer, who has switched jobs with "NBC News at Sunrise" anchor Deborah Norville, which didn't help the uneasy situation that Ebersol inherited. That behind-the-scenes unrest — the Palmer move was unpopular within the staff — reportedly has contributed to co-anchor Jane Pauley's uncertainty about her future with the program.

Nuell said Tuesday he will remain with "ET" through December. "Our new season just started Monday and it's a critical time. I just can't leave now. I owe Paramount a great deal. They made me a terrific offer to get me to stay but the chance to come back to NBC and eventually have the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to have my own show on the network was just too good to pass up."

Nuell declined to speculate on any changes he and Ebersol might have in store for "Today," adding only that "in the next three months, I'll try and come up with short, medium and long-term plans for the show."

He said he hadn't talked to Ryan, with whom he has worked in the past at NBC.

Nuell called the three-division NBC offer "wonderful and totally unprecedented."

Nuell first joined NBC in Chicago and moved to WRC in 1971. During his 15 years here he was a news producer, executive news producer, news director and station manager.

Former Washington associates Tuesday recalled with some glee the circumstances of the departure of Nuell and his friend Jim Van Messel three years ago.

At the time Nuell was station manager — a position that the network was in the process of eliminating at the stations it owns — and Van Messel was news director, the job Nuell had previously held.

A recently arrived general manager took the two out to lunch, during which he announced that Van Messel was being fired and Nuell was being demoted to the news director job again.

The two men were so mad, they refused to ride back with the general manager from the lunch site, two miles from WRC. Within a couple of weeks, Nuell had taken the job with Paramount and he soon sent for Van Messel, who is in charge of the day-to-day operation of "ET."

Now for the rest of the story. Several months after their departure, the general manager was axed by NBC.

Nuell is reported to be in line for $2.5 million over the life of his new three-year contract with NBC.

And Tuesday, the talk in Los Angeles was that Van Messel — who reportedly received a six-figure raise last year from Paramount for his part in the success of the program (it ranked eighth among all nationally syndicated programs as of last week) — is in line to succeed Nuell as executive producer of "Entertainment Tonight."

The New Season

The new season is upon us, TV Column fans, and the big question at NBC is — how can they possibly top 1988-89? With last week's win, the House of Hits became the first network in TV history to win every week of a 52-week broadcast year.

For the week ending Sept. 17, NBC averaged a 12.4 rating and a 22 share, compared with an 11.8-21 for ABC and 11.0-19 for CBS.

It was also the fifth straight year that NBC has won over the other two networks and the 65th straight weekly primetime win.

Among the highlights last week, the Koppel Report on "Television: Revolution in a Box," finished 49th among 65 programs ranked for the

Students like TV, says NBC

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC, in what may not prove a surprise, asserted Monday that college students like television.

The network also said college students are undercounted in the Nielsen ratings and would have a substantial impact in the Nielsens were they included in national audience estimates.

NBC's conclusions were based on a telephone survey last spring of 1,014 students ages 18-24 at 50 four-year colleges and universities nationwide.

Among other things, the study found that 96 percent of the students it polled watch TV; they watch it 1.8 hours a day compared to the national viewing average of nearly seven hours; more males watch late-night TV than females, and the opposite is true for daytime soap operas.

NBC's study was the latest in recent network efforts to study viewing audiences that traditionally haven't been included in the national Nielsen audience estimates.

The national Nielsens only count viewers in homes; not in college dorms, hotel rooms, and such places as sports bars.

During the November ratings "awards" period, Nielsen Media Research, in a study commissioned by NBC, ABC and cable's ESPN, will conduct a survey of such uncounted viewers, using diaries given to 6,000 people, according to Richard Montasano, an ABC research vice president.

The studies come at a time when the networks, losing audiences to cable, videocassette recorders and independent stations, are seeking ways to include hitherto uncounted TV viewers in national estimates — or at least convince advertisers that these viewers should be considered in their television time-buying plans.

NBC, whose spring survey focused only on college students, estimated that there are about 13 million college students — 8.5 million in the 18-to-24 age range — with spending power of $20 billion annually.

The NBC study, by Survey Design and Analysis of Ann Arbor, Mich., found that 83 percent of those it polled considered commercials a fair exchange for TV entertainment. It also found that 60 percent of the males polled watch late-night TV entertainment, as did 39 percent of the women polled.

But 63 percent of the women students polled said they watched daytime TV, compared with only 29 percent of the men.

As with the general public, television was the main source of news for the students polled; 43 percent said they got most of their news from television, compared to 27 percent who said they got it from newspapers.

They tended to trust TV news more, too. When asked which medium they would believe in the case of conflicting stories about a news event, 53 percent said television, while 36 percent said newspapers.
