BLM lands figure in next Idaho wilderness controversy

By ERIC ANDERSON - States News Service

WASHINGTON — Even as the Idaho wilderness debate continues, a second major wilderness controversy is brewing over vast tracts of Bureau of Land Management land.

And this one, officials say, will concentrate on southern Idaho.

Though the pending Idaho wilderness bill drafted by Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, and Gov. Cecil Andrus addresses almost only U.S. Forest Service tracts in the northern two-thirds of the state, 1.8 million acres of BLM land in southern Idaho is under review for possible wilderness designation.

"People in south central Idaho who have heretofore seen wilderness as a problem for people up north will see it coming down there," said H.D. Palmer, McClure's press secretary.

The wilderness designation protects land from mining, timber harvesting, vehicle traffic, and commercial development.

BLM's preliminary recommendations call for 972,000 acres of Idaho BLM land to be given strict wilderness protection, but only Congress — which generally pads administration proposals with extra acres of wilderness — can draft this into law.

However, a renewal of the arduous wilderness designation process for BLM lands could hinge on Idaho lawmakers finishing the separate Forest Service wilderness bill, officials say.

"Right now, the intent is to get the Forest Service bill passed first," said Gary Pavcek, a BLM planner in Washington.

Idaho boasts roughly 12 million acres of BLM land, much of it high desert. Of that, the BLM reviewed 1.8 million acres for wilderness protection.

After an extensive review of potential environmental and economic impacts, the BLM recommended that about half of the acres reviewed receive wilderness designation, including 340,000 acres around Craters of the Moon plus large areas in southwestern Idaho.

At present, Idaho has 3.9 million total acres of wilderness and the McClure-Andrus proposal would add another 1.4 million acres of Forest Service wilderness.

Pavcek said BLM officials are hoping to forward a final Idaho wilderness recommendation to President Bush by this fall, although the deadline is not until October, 1991.

The president then has another two years to send the administration proposal on to Congress.

In the meantime, the 1.8 million acres of BLM "wilderness study areas" will be frozen in a regulatory limbo which restricts the land's commercial uses.

Congress, however, does not have to wait for the recommendations to take action. In fact, Arizona lawmakers expect to pass a statewide BLM wilderness bill this year, the first of its type, without any official recommendation from the Bush Administration.

Another alternative is that if the currently stalled McClure-Andrus proposal dies at the end of the year, the BLM and Forest Service proposals could be melded together into one bill.

While that would make an already complete bill, it would also mean that the BLM "wilderness study areas" will be

Sequel a success; nearly 700 at abortion legislation hearing

By MICHELLE COLE Times-News writer

BOISE — By Hollywood standards, the sequel was a success. Nearly 700 people turned out again Tuesday for a second night of hearings on proposed abortion legislation. Some quoted poems. Others cited the Bible. Others invoked the U.S. Constitution.

Like Monday night's crowd filling the Boise State University Student Ballroom, the group included Idahoans from every part of the state. Again, the majority spoke out for restricting abortion access.

"I have traveled from Twin Falls tonight because I believe in everyone's right — the right to life," said Susan Barry, director of the Magic Valley Pregnancy Crisis Center.

Speaking on behalf of the pro-choice side, Julie Caldwell of Blaine County told lawmakers they cannot legislate human sexuality or moral decisions. Did either Barry or Caldwell waste her time? Certainly not, said Magic Valley legislators who called Monday and Tuesday nights "useful" and "interesting."

"As far as this being a cut and dried issue — it's not," said Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, who is a member of the House-State Affairs Committee.

In the next week that 21-member committee will sift through the stack of abortion bills. Newcomb thinks the committee will settle upon House Bill 625, a proposal endorsed by Right to Life that outlaws abortion for birth control but does not restrict abortion access in cases of rape, incest, significant fetal deformity or if the mother's life is in danger.

The committee may favor at least one pro-choice measure. Newcomb, who is not only a member of the House State Affairs Committee but also House Republican Caucus chairman, said the committee is also likely to endorse a bill calling for the repeal of Idaho's trigger law.

That law, which sets criminal penalties for the mother and persons performing the abortion;

House passes increase in Gem minimum wage

By The Associated Press and The Times-News

BOISE — Despite Democratic opposition, the Idaho House has voted for the first increase in the Idaho minimum wage since 1977.

Democrats didn't object to raising the Idaho minimum wage to $3.85 per hour, up from $2.30, on April 1 and to $4.25 one year later. They objected to including a provision that up to 25 percent of the base could be made up by a credit for tips received by employees. "It's not fair to any employer. Taking away tips to help pay the overhead of employers... it's just not right," said Democratic Floor Leader Jim Stoicheff, D-Sandpoint.

The House first voted down an attempt led by Rep. Gino White, D-Cataldo, to put the bill up for amendment so the tip credit could be deleted. The vote was 53-24. Minutes later, the bill itself was approved 54-28 and was sent to the Senate.

The Magic Valley delegation split on the measure.

sure. NHU voted in favor of raising the wage. Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, and Rep. Meek Neibaur, R-Paul, voted no.

Most businesses are subject to the Federal minimum, which is $3.35 now but goes to $3.80 on April 1 and to $4.25 on April 1, 1991. But federal law also says up to 40 percent of the base can be made up by a credit for tips, a figure that will rise to 50 percent in later years.

Fed chairman thinks U.S. can avoid recession

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan on Tuesday expressed "guarded optimism" that the country can avoid a recession this year, but his warnings on the dangers of accelerating inflation helped send financial markets into a tailspin.

Setting up a potential clash with the administration, Greenspan said the central bank was looking for the economy to grow at a rate far below the one on which the administration based its 1991 budget.

Wall Street, which has been battered this year by rising foreign interest rates, took Greenspan's inflation warnings and growth forecast as further evidence that the central bank is intent on pursuing a tight money policy to battle inflation and thus will not move anytime soon to lower interest rates.

At mid-afternoon, interest rates on long-term government bonds had jumped sharply while the prices, which move in the opposite direction, fell as much as $18 per $1,000 in face value. The Dow Jones industrial average of 30 stocks was down more than 38 points at the close of business.

"We're in an area where (inflation) is in danger of accelerating," Greenspan said in his appearance before a House Banking subcommittee.

He called the performance of inflation so far this year "horrendous" although he said the January's jump in prices was attributable in large part to temporary factors stemming from severe cold in December.

But he said that the risks of higher inflation in the present circumstances were "larger than we should be willing to tolerate."

In the new Fed economic forecast, the central bank projected that the economy, as measured by the gross national product, will grow at anemic rate of between 1.75 percent and 2 percent this year, the slowest annual growth rate since the 1981-82 recession.

The Bush administration, in a forecast released last month with its 1991 budget request, forecast growth of almost a half percentage point higher at 2.6 percent, when measured from the fourth quarter of 1989.

Divers hunt for bodies in lake

The Associated Press

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif. — Boats and helicopters crisscrossed Convict Lake on Tuesday, searching for the bodies of three teen-agers and four would-be rescuers who fell through thin ice during an outing for a group of young offenders.

Some of the victims struggled to stay afloat in the icy water for 15 minutes before disappearing Monday, witnesses said.

"We could see them bobbing around," said volunteer firefighter Jim Lambert. One pleaded, "Throw me a rope!" but they were too far from shore.

The hole they fell through froze over within hours.

Divers recovered the body of U.S. Forest Service ranger Clayton Cutter, 31, on Tuesday. Said Mono County sheriff's spokesman William Merritt: "Two divers at a time, able to withstand the 32-degree water, for only 10-minute spans, were dropped from helicopters into the water where the victims were" but seen. Marker buoys bobbed near holes in the ice on the remote lake on the east side of the Sierra Nevada.

Although sunny, the temperature was near zero when the recovery operation began.

"We go ice skating out there all the time. It's gonna be hard to get there now," said fellow ranger Rick

The recovery could be hampered because in the extreme cold the bodies may sink to the bottom of Convict Lake, which is 140 feet deep at its deepest point, said Mono County Sheriff-Coroner M.A. Strelneck Jr.

The 30-member recovery team included divers from Washoe County, Nev., military personnel and helicopters from China Lake and Sacramento, and an air boat able to travel on-ice from the Truckee Fire Department.

The teen-age boys, aged 13 to 15, from nearby Camp O'Neal for youthful offenders were part of a group on an outing when they fell through thin ice around noon Monday, Strelneck said. Most of the group had gone on land.

"It was horrifying," said Pierre Labossiere, a reporter for the Mono County Review Herald who watched three of the rescuers go into the water.

The youths were playing or walking on the ice about 200 yards from shore when the surface gave way.

Arriving soon after the boys fell through, Labossiere said he saw one youth bobbing on the surface in an ice hole.

As he and dozens of others on shore watched helplessly, two other adult rescuers plunged into the lake in failed attempts to reach the boys.

In 22nd century, space travel common, weather uncontrolled

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans in the 22nd century will be working and living in space, perhaps talking to extraterrestrials and buying replacement body parts while shopping from home, a survey says.

But kids will still have to go to school, and humans still won't be able to turn a rainy Earth day into a sunny one.

Results of a survey of 12,300 junior and senior high school students were released Tuesday at a National Society of Professional Engineers press conference in the library of Jefferson Junior High School.

The survey was conducted in December by the society's National Engineers Week committee and Science World, a magazine distributed in classrooms.

Eighty percent of the students predicted Americans would be working in space in the year 2100. Sixty-three percent said they would be living in space also. As for shopping, 12 percent said it would all be done from home. The remaining 83 percent said most of it would be.

Asked whether people would still go to schools to learn things in the 22nd century, 68 percent said yes.

Roughly a third of the students, 33 percent, said the average lifespan of a human being would be 100 years. Eighteen percent said it would be only 80 years, but 11 percent said it would be more than 125 years.

On the question of how people will travel, 48 percent said by individual jet-propelled vehicles, 38 percent by passenger jets or commercial planes and 14 percent by recreational spacecraft.

A slight majority, 51 percent, believed earthlings will be communicating with extraterrestrials being in the 22nd century.

Ten percent said aircraft will be able to travel at four times the speed of sound, compared with 12 percent who said they would reach the speed of light.

Frank Ramirez, 15, of Whittier, Calif., submitted along with his answers a drawing of a high speed automobile powered by magnetic levitation. "As you can see, it runs on a totally different kind of power, and the driver does not need to worry about friction, too much speed, stopping distances, or a lot of dangerous stuff," he said.

Cheney seeks more support in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney arrived Tuesday from the Philippines seeking what the United States hopes will be a "sizeable increase" in Japan's $2.4 billion annual support for American troops stationed here.

Cheney's visit came as Philippine President Corason Aquino signaled a willingness to work out despite her refusal to meet with Cheney during his stay in Manila the previous three days.

The defense secretary had a warm reception in Tokyo.

"The Japanese are very understanding and are very willing to help us as much as they can," said a senior Pentagon official traveling with Cheney.

And even though it was known that Cheney intended to explore with Japanese officials possible 10 percent to 12 percent cuts in U.S. troop levels in Asia, Japanese government spokesman Taiso Watanabe said officials were not worried by such a development.

The positive tone set by both sides

at the opening of Cheney's visit was in marked contrast to the scenes he has encountered at the other major stops on his two-week Asian tour.

In Manila, the defense secretary was burned in effigy by demonstrators who protested U.S. military bases in their country.

The military sessions in Tokyo appear free of the tense wrangling that scars the two nations' economic relations, since the United States looks to Japan as the anchor of its Asian strategy, and the Japanese prosper under U.S. protection.

Storm drops heavy snow over Plains

By The Associated Press

A winter storm dumped up to a foot in parts of the Plains and South-west, closing schools and roads Tuesday, and heavy rains that caused minor deaths in the South abated even as rising waters continued to threaten more flooding.

Federal officials surveyed east-central Illinois to determine whether areas qualify for disaster relief. Workers struggled to restore power to thousands of residents in Campaign after snow and ice storms last week.

In Georgia, Georgia Gov. Joe Frank Harris asked for $15.7 million in federal disaster assistance to help nine counties devastated by floods and tornadoes.

Warhead cuts won't go deep

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The reduction of nuclear warheads in U.S. and Soviet strategic arsenals won't be nearly as dramatic as previously announced by the countries' leaders because of a shift in emphasis toward manned bombers in arms negotiations in Geneva.

Because of the way U.S. and Soviet negotiators propose to count the weapons carried aboard bombers, the total number of warheads in each side's nuclear arsenal will fall by only about 10 percent instead of the announced 50 percent, according to the latest analysis of the weapons-counting provision by arms control experts.

The Strategic Arms Reductions Talks, known as START, have been underway in Geneva since 1985, and President Bush has said he hopes an agreement can be signed at his summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in June.

Whether the shift in emphasis will make the world safer from nuclear attack is a matter of debate. The Bush administration and other proponents of the provisions assert that they are designed to move both sides away from missiles.

would become enforceable if the U.S. Supreme Court reverses its 1973 Roe v. Wade decision.

During an interview prior to Tuesday night's hearing, Newcomb spoke of the dilemma lawmakers face between their own personal feelings and the feelings of their constituents.

"I think we do not want to give the impression that we are going to shove the people out of the decision-making," he said.

In addition to recommending the Right-to-Life bill and repeal of the trigger law, Newcomb said the Legislature may once again solicit Idahoans' views — this time through a voter referendum.

In November, Idaho voters could be asked whether they approve of about 25,000 jobs in Idaho's 400,000-person labor force could be covered by the state minimum, and less than 2 percent of those surveyed in the restaurant business actually were paid at that level.

Almost overlooked in the battle over tip credit was a precedent-setting provision in the bill. It declares that for work over 40 hours a week, an employer must pay time and a half. That's in federal wage law but not in Idaho's law.

"The time has arrived for Idaho to raise its minimum wage," said chief sponsor Pam Bengson, R-Boise. In response to those who linked including tip credit with the minimum pay issue, she said, "To raise the minimum wage, to get enough people to vote yes, you need to take into consideration both the employee and the employer."

She and others warned that if the tip credit section were amended out of the bill, it would fail. "To amend it would kill the bill," said Rep. Dean Hagenson, R-Coeur d'Alene, co-sponsor.

"We have better things to do with our time than create statutes with fuzzy language," said Rep. Patricia McDermott, D-Pocatello, criticizing sections dealing with tip credit and tip pooling.

While called the tip credit provision "a tip off that something is wrong with the bill," he said it was wrong to allow employees to use tips received by employees to offset part of operating expense.

"A tip is something that a waitress works hard to receive," said Rep. Mary Lloyd, D-Pocatello, a cafe operator who described herself as "an old waitress."

"It is a gratuity that should not be used by an employee to subsidize her employer. It is theirs, it should be left there and nobody should get credit for it," she said.

"The employer contributes to the worker's ability to receive those tips," said Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Blackfoot.

"If you are unwilling to compromise on the tip credit, the ultimate result will be no increase in the minimum wage," Simpson said.

licated bill even more complex, it could save time in the long run, Pavek said. "To do it over for BLM just extends the process," he said. One way or the other, officials agreed a bill — plus an accompanying dispute between industry representatives and environmentalists — are inevitable.

"The cycle will begin anew except that his time it will be BLM," Palmer said. "It's something that McClure's successor will have to deal with."

Nationwide, about 10 percent of 272 million acres managed by the BLM is being considered for wilderness designation. The agency will hand down final recommendations on all of these areas in the next few years.

Congressional sources say they expect this will cause a second wave of state wilderness bills across the West that will rival the rash of bills following similar recommendations handed down by the Forest Service in the late 1970s.

"We're going around again — there's no question," said one congressional source familiar with wilderness issues.

But many lawmakers may not be anxious to tackle the wilderness issue in their state so soon after the last round of wilderness bills.

"I just don't think that a lot of states are ready yet to deal with it politically where the battle is long and just recently won," said the congressional source.

Or not yet won, in Idaho's case.

BATUS official sees dark omens in takeover bid

POCATELLO (AP) — Leonard Arensen, executive vice president of BATUS Inc., says he sees disturbing parallels between attempted hostile takeover of Farmers Insurance Group and the recent financial problems of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. and the Campeau Corp.

Hoylake Investments Ltd., a group of international investors headed by corporate raider Sir James Goldsmith, and Axa Midi, France's third largest insurance company, are attempting to seize control of BAT industry, a British-based conglomerate with holdings that include Farmers Insurance, for $4.5 billion.

Hoylake proposed to spin off Farmers Insurance to Axa Midi if it succeeds in acquiring BAT. Axa Midi's major shareholders include a French bank and a large Italian insurance company, Arensen said.

Retired federal bankruptcy judge Merlin Young will hear the case Monday in Boise on behalf of the Idaho Department of Insurance. Farmers employs more than 400 people in Pocatello.

Arensen contends it is no coincidence that Hoylake contracted with Drexel to arrange the junk bond financing needed to swing the deal. He argues that Hoylake is a highly leveraged "shell" corporation based in Bermuda and created as a takeover vehicle.

"In effect, they are basing their whole plan on buying BAT and busting up the company," Arensen charged in a telephone interview.

Drexel, the nation's largest "junk bond" brokerage, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection last week and has terminated most of its 5,300 employees in New York.

In January, Campeau — Canadian owner of many famous American department stores — also filed Chapter 11, allowing its 260 stores to continue operating as it struggles to pay off $8 billion in leveraged debt.

Neither Hoylake nor Axa Midi have financing commitments secured to acquire BAT and Farmers, Arensen said, which means 100 percent of the buyout would be financed with borrowed money.

Father challenges attendance rule

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — The father of a Grangeville High School student is challenging the state's 90 percent attendance rule and says he will take the issue to court if it cannot be resolved by the local school board.

Tony E. Fisher says his son Chad, a freshman, was hit with influenza during the first semester and missed several days of school.

Then, in January, Chad wanted to attend a friend's funeral along with other schoolmates who were being excused for that purpose. Grangeville High School Principal Judy A. Leuck notified Chad that he, along with two other students, would be in violation of the 90 percent attendance rule if they missed another day of school.

The 90 percent rule, adopted by the Idaho State Board of Education, states that a student may miss no more than nine days or 10 percent of class time during a semester.

Officials dedicate Idaho portion of trail

POST FALLS (AP) — Officials shoveled dirt imported from a local cemetery to dedicate Idaho's portion of the two-state Centennial Trail between Coeur d'Alene and Spokane, Wash.

The ground was frozen Monday as the Kootenai County Centennial Trail was dedicated in ceremonies attended by about 125 people, so dirt was brought from Coeur d'Alene's Forest Cemetery to a site near the Idaho-Washington border.

"This is truly a community project, not a one-person project," said Harry Magnuson, state Centennial Commission chairman. "It is one of this state's best-lasting legacies for the people of tomorrow, our children, and their children."

Work on the eight-mile section of trail from the state line to Spokane Street in Post Falls is scheduled to begin in May. Some sections were rerouted after a $1.35 million federal grant for trail construction was announced last year and residents complained about the proposed trail route.

Contractors challenge INEL labor policy

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Nineteen building contractors are challenging the legality of a labor policy at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory that they contend forces them into collective bargaining agreements.

At issue is a 1985 order from former Energy Secretary Donald Hodel requiring that building contractors be hired through union halls for construction work at the U.S. Department of Energy site.

The building contractors contend the order infringes on their ability to compete for work at the INEL, said Phillip Oberrecht, a Boise attorney representing the contractors.

Crane accident injures 4 workers

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Four workers were injured when a 200-ton construction crane toppled onto a smaller crane at the site of the Anheuser-Busch barley malting plant being built in Idaho Falls.

All four men were taken to Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center. Their names were not released, but a nursing supervisor said three were treated and released and the fourth was admitted and in fair condition.

All four men were employees of Klug and Smith Construction of St. Louis, said Mark Armstrong, a spokesman for Anheuser-Busch and Klug and Smith.

The construction supervisor at the plant would not comment on the accident and referred inquiries to the St. Louis public relations firm where Armstrong works.

Students register soon for new school

MERIDIAN (AP) — Students will begin registering soon for a new alternative school planned for high-school dropouts and those with a high risk of becoming dropouts.

The Meridian School Board unanimously approved a resolution to go ahead with registration for the Meridian Academy. But that approval holds the condition that the project's startup costs of about $200,000 will come largely from grants.

The project was supposed to get underway last year, but was delayed because only 89 students enrolled. An additional 10 students were needed to qualify the district for state funding for the academy.

Hayden Lake man heads for Antarctica

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — While North Americans look ahead to the warmth of spring just around the corner, the season's headed in the opposite direction for the Hayden Lake man, making home this year at the bottom of the globe.

Fred Schrom, a 34-year-old science technician, left for the ice-capped region last October for a tour of duty to conduct research into the Earth's thinning ozone layer.

On Monday, his wife, HyeKyong, said Schrom is braving the cold with temperatures approaching 100 degrees below zero. But becoming accustomed to the chill has not been as difficult for the adventurer as battling the loneliness.

Congressman says INEL may still have a chance

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A House Armed-Services subcommittee chairman favors the New Production Reactor design slated for his home state, but said it will not rule out a gas-cooled reactor proposed for the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

The Savannah River Plant's heavy water NPR "probably stands the best chance of being fully funded," Rep. John Spratt, D-S.C., said at an Idaho Falls news conference Friday.

The decision on whether to fund two NPR projects or to choose one type of reactor over the other is "a fork in the road" Congress will get to for another year or so, said Spratt, who chairs the Armed Services subcommittee looking at U.S. Department of Energy weapons projects.

"The NPR would produce tritium, a short-lived radioactive hydrogen isotope, for nuclear warheads."

For now, Spratt said he is impressed with the high-temperature gas-cooled NPR the Energy Department wants to build in Idaho. If the department funds the project, he said, it may be the best way to promote the gas reactor design as a commercial power source.

"I think the HTGR is a technology that has a lot to say for itself," Spratt said.

The Energy Department wants to spend more than $360 million on NPR in 1991. Earlier last week, Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, said he expects Congress to fund the project.

Last year, Spratt was a key opponent to construction funding for the plutonium-refining — Special Isotope Separation project that the department wanted to build at the INEL. His subcommittee eventually cut $75 million from the SIS budget before it was killed by the Bush administration last month.

Spratt said he does not expect any 1990 INEL budget fights to rival the SIS struggle last year.

"We didn't come out here looking for fights, either," he said.

Spratt visited the INEL on Friday to get a first-hand look at site operations. After touring several INEL facilities, he said he expects a "long future" for the site.

"Richard (Stallings) has justifiable parochial pride in the INEL," he said.

Spratt, Stallings, members of their staffs and Energy Department officials toured the INEL's Naval Reactors Facility, the Radioactive Waste Chemical Processing Plant and the Advanced Test Reactor, which is being used for tritium research on the NPR.

Spratt said he thinks the INEL is in better environmental shape than other Energy Department sites, but he remains worried about the significant backlog of plutonium waste at the facility.

While his subcommittee won't be taking a look at the Boron Neutron Capture Therapy project, Spratt said he was "very impressed" with the INEL cancer treatment program. If it comes down to some political trading to get funds for BNCT, Spratt said he would back it.

Federal official meets with Nez Perce representatives

LAPWAI (AP) — A federal official is talking with Nez Perce tribal representatives to review complaints about continuing housing problems on the reservation.

But the official bypassed a meeting at Lapwai where homeowners gathered to air grievances about alleged poor workmanship by contractors and poor management by tribal housing officials when it comes to federally funded homes.

Donn Messer met with some Nez Perce Tribal Executive Committee and housing authority members and toured HUD homes at Lapwai, Orofino and Kamiah. But the group did not stop at the resolutions committee meeting. No representatives of NPTEC, the housing authority board or HUD attended.

Some tribal members said that's because the Nez Perce Tribal Housing Authority, the governing Nez Perce Tribal Executive Committee and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development are part of the problem.

The groups aren't responsive to complaints about homes tribal members purchase through a HUD program, critics said Monday. And while the homes are built to the agency's guidelines, those standards are so low some homes basically are falling apart, owners contended.

"The end result is it deteriorated," Gordon J. HighEagle of Lapwai said of his home.

While HighEagle and other homeowners shared complaints with the HUD resolutions committee, which met Monday, the group is on to NPTEC, HUD's Indian housing director was touring the reservation.

Health and Welfare prepares to seek adoptive parents

POCATELLO (AP) — The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare is preparing to seek adoptive parents for the newborn girl found abandoned in a garbage bag last summer in a Pocatello alley.

But first the parental rights of her still-identified father must be terminated, said Stephen Weeg, regional services director for Health and Welfare in Pocatello.

Weeg said the department began advertising for the child's father to stop forward. If no one responds to published legal notices, all parental rights to the child will be legally terminated.

The baby, who is in foster care, is healthy and doing well, Weeg said.

Court approves indefinite jailing for parents in abuse cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that parents suspected of child abuse sometimes may be jailed indefinitely for refusing to disclose the whereabouts of their children.

Voting 7-2, the justices permitted the indefinite jailing of a Maryland woman for refusing to tell authorities where her young son can be found. The boy is feared dead.

Society's interest in protecting the boy from harm prevails over the mother's claim that her right against self-incrimination will be violated if she is forced to reveal the child's location, the court said.

Although narrowly written, the ruling could provide a new weapon for officials seeking to protect children from parental abuse.

In other action, the court:

- Made it easier for disabled children to win some federal welfare benefits. The 7-2 decision in a Pennsylvania case could force the government to re-evaluate benefits for some 250,000 children.
- Agreed to use an Ohio case to decide whether prosecutors who exclude blacks as jurors because of their race violate the rights of white defendants.
- Left intact Baltimore, Md., ordinances requiring the city's employee pension plans to divest themselves of all investments in companies doing business with South Africa.

- Rejected an appeal by Nevada officials, letting the federal government withhold highway money from states that do not comply with a national speed limit.
- Refused to revive a lawsuit against the federal government and a NASA engineer by the widow of one of the astronauts who died when the space shuttle Challenger exploded in 1985.
- In a case involving the private papers of Church of Scientology founder L. Ron Hubbard, left intact a ruling that limits dramatically the right of authors to quote unpublished material.
- Rejected an appeal by Colorado officials seeking proceeds of drug transactions that were forfeited to the federal government.

In the case of the jailed Maryland mother, Jacqueline Bouknight has been behind bars since April 1988 for refusing to disclose the whereabouts of her son, Maurice. The boy has been missing since September 1987, when he was 11 months old.

Maurice was admitted to a Baltimore hospital in early 1987, when he was 3 months old, for treatment of a broken leg and other injuries. He temporarily was held in protective care.

Maurice was returned to his mother's custody, after she agreed not to punish him physically and to undergo training in parenting skills.

Nine months later, social workers said Ms. Bouknight no longer was cooperating with them. The mother was held in contempt by a judge after she refused to disclose Maurice's whereabouts.

The Maryland Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, ruled that jailing Ms. Bouknight for refusing to disclose the information violates her constitutional protection against self-incrimination. That ruling was overturned Tuesday.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court that Ms. Bouknight's claim that her constitutional rights are being violated is particularly weak because of her agreement with welfare officials.

Welfare mothers testify before panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rapid descent from the middle-class to poverty was wrenching, Mary Tamper told Congress Tuesday, but the worst part was trying to feed two young sons when the food and money were gone.

"There were times when my son would say, 'Mom, I know you just fed me, but I'm still hungry,' she recalled. "This hurt me more than any knife, especially when there was no food in the cupboard."

Mrs. Tamper, who lives in Prince Georges County, Maryland, was one of two welfare mothers who testified before the Senate Budget Committee in hearings on hunger and the Bush administration's proposals for food and nutritional funding.

"My children are always asking for food," said Peggy Adams, a mother of nine from Montgomery County, Maryland. "You may think that's fairly typical for children, and maybe it is, but half of the time I don't have enough food to feed them whenever they are hungry."

Washington mayor to move to hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry, who was indicted last week on cocaine possession and perjury charges, will move from a Florida substance abuse clinic to a South Carolina hospital, city officials said Tuesday.

The mayor, who has been receiving treatment for what an aide described as an alcohol problem, will enter the Fenwick Hall Hospital near Charleston, S.C., on Wednesday, sources said.

Barry decided to enter the new program at the urging of his wife Effi, according to one city official. That official and the other sources commented only on a condition they not be named.

Meanwhile, Barry's Attorney, R. Kenneth Mundy, asked Tuesday for a postponement of the mayor's federal arraignment, tentatively set for Wednesday, on three felony perjury and five misdemeanor drug possession charges. He did not specify a date.

U.S. won't tolerate Soviet jet shipments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department said Tuesday that Cuba has received a new shipment of high-performance Soviet fighter planes that the United States "simply cannot tolerate" such developments.

Under questioning, department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler denied that the statement constituted a threat to Cuba. She referred reporters to recent testimony before a Soviet legislative committee by Secretary of State James A. Baker III in which he said Cuba posed no threat to the United States.

In confirming a delivery of new MIG-29 jet fighters, Ms. Tutwiler gave the figure. The Washington Times, which reported the shipment in Tuesday's editions, put the number at six.

Service knew of missile possibility

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House said Tuesday that the Secret Service had known there was a possibility that drug terrorists had surface-to-air missiles when President Bush flew to Colombia for last week's four-nation drug summit. Ten such weapons were seized by Colombian police Monday.

"There was intelligence before we left of various kinds about missiles and rockets and other kinds of equipment, about people with various plans," said presidential spokesman Martin Fitzwater.

But he added that the reports were difficult to confirm at the time.

The weapons seized Monday in a raid on a Bogota drug hideout were capable of downing large aircraft. Two men were arrested.

Soviets unwilling to renew Israeli ties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a strong U.S. plea, the Soviet Union is unwilling to renew diplomatic relations with Israel or begin direct flights of Jewish immigrants to Tel Aviv, U.S. officials said Tuesday.

"We're disappointed that they have not approved those (flights)," Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, said. "But we're hopeful it will might happen."

Bilateral issues were raised by Secretary of State James A. Baker III with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze during talks in Moscow two weeks ago. Baker also expressed concern about flashes of anti-Semitism, particularly threats of pogroms on specified dates by anti-Jewish groups.

Girl undergoes 2nd liver transplant

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Surgeons expect no complications for 12-year-old Stormy Jenkins, the fourth recipient of a heart-liver transplant, who received another liver Tuesday.

The Texas girl, with an ailing and teddy bear in tow when she arrived at Children's Hospital, underwent 10 hours of surgery that was necessary because of liver damage from hepatitis, not rejection of the organ she received six years ago, doctors said.

"The word was everything went fine," hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon said.

Stormie was listed in critical condition after the operation led by surgeon Andrew Tzakis. Six other doctors helped with the surgery, which started at 7:15 a.m. and ended about 1 p.m. at the Pittsburgh hospital where the girl's history-making procedure was performed.

4 die trying to escape Cuba in rafts

ISLAMORADA, Fla. (AP) — Four Cubans died while trying to escape their homeland in rafts, the Coast Guard said Tuesday.

Two men died at sea and their bodies were thrown overboard by companions, Coast Guard officials said. A third disappeared overnight and a teenage boy was dead by the time he reached a Florida Keys hospital.

Five people aboard the same rafts survived the voyage.

"It's a hazardous trip, very dangerous," Coast Guard spokesman Luis Diaz said. "At this time of year, the waters are much colder, and exposure has to be a factor."

Refinery explosion kills 2, injures 3

WHITING, Ind. (AP) — A truck loading liquefied petroleum gas into a storage tank caught fire and exploded at an Amoco Oil Co. refinery Tuesday, killing two people and injuring three others, authorities said.

The accident occurred shortly before 10 a.m. near the main storage area of the refinery, prompting evacuations of nearby residents and closing streets and highways.

No storage tanks were ignited, Amoco spokeswoman Lisa Houghton said.

The names of the dead were not immediately released.

Bush gives warm welcome to Czech leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush gave investment and trade rewards to Czechoslovakia Tuesday for overthrowing communist rule, but told President Vaclav Havel the United States wouldn't retreat from a precautionary "strong military presence" in Europe.

Bush gave a warm welcome to the first of Eastern Europe's new reform leaders to visit the White House.

He called Havel, an onetime dissident playwright who went from prison to the presidency in a year's time, "a man of tremendous moral courage, one of the heroes of the revolution of '89."

The two leaders talked for 2½ hours in the Oval Office and over lunch.

"Afterward, Havel said the talks had been 'very warm, very open, very friendly,'" and he invited Bush to visit Prague.

Bush announced a waiver of the Jackson-Vanik amendment that restricts trade relations with communist nations that inhibit Jewish emigration.

The waiver clears the way for negotiation of a trade agreement and the eventual award of most-favored nation trading status, which would provide Czechoslovakia the most liberal access possible to American markets.

In return, the Czechoslovak Parliament would have to enact a law ending the former communist government's restrictive emigration policies.

Bush also authorized the Export-Import Bank to operate in Prague and said he would support readmission of Czechoslovakia to the International Monetary Fund and World Bank.

Bush authorized sending Peace Corps volunteers to Czechoslovakia by autumn to teach English.

Regarding military forces, Havel has called for disarmament throughout Europe and has asked the Soviet Vaclav Havel and George Bush emerge from a working luncheon in which Bush announced the U.S. will withdraw the 75,000 Soviet troops in Czechoslovakia. Some "I know I can speak for all Western leaders when I say that the Atlantic with the Warsaw Pact, the Soviet-led Alliance will continue to play a vital role in assuring stability and security in Europe at this great and historic moment."

alliance to play a vital role in assuring stability and security in Europe at this great and historic moment.

"And America will continue to play its part, including a strong military presence for our security and for Europe's," said Bush, who has proposed that the United States and Soviet Union reduce their troops in Central Europe to 100,000 on each side.

Bush in the private discussions, talked at length about a need for U.S. troops in Europe and portrayed NATO as a stabilizing factor at a time of great transition, said Assistant Secretary of State Raymond Seitz.

Seitz quoted Havel as saying, "There is no doubt about the stabilizing role of NATO and the United States." And he said the Czechoslovak president agreed on a need for NATO and U.S. forces until "new security structures emerge in Europe."

Bush said NATO perhaps should have a broader role than at present, Seitz said.

Moreover, the official said Bush told Havel "he did not envisage a U.S. presence going on forever and ever and ever and ever... It was contingent on the U.S. presence being centrally welcomed in Europe and that if the United States were no longer welcomed in Europe, the U.S. forces would come home, forthwith, 'right away,' last one out, turn-out the lights."

Havel told Bush he expects Soviet troops to be withdrawn from his country "on a pretty prompt timetable."

Discussing the turmoil in the Soviet Union, Havel told Bush "it was important that the Soviet Union not experience... political earthquakes."

Havel said that the "difficulties plaguing the Soviet Union almost inevitably would have... should things go sour, almost inevitably have an impact on Eastern Europe, indeed, on all of Eastern Europe," Seitz said.

Soviet legislature urges crackdown

MOSCOW (P) — The Soviet legislature on Tuesday urged a crackdown on illegal demonstrations scheduled for Sunday and said authorities should exercise tight control on legal rallies, the Tass news agency reported.

The legislators, saying they feared that extremists and criminal elements will exploit the demonstrations to destabilize the political situation, adopted a resolution urging law enforcement agencies to take special measures to keep demonstrators in line.

Mandela meets tribal chiefs, diplomat

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela met Tuesday with chiefs from his tribe and a Swedish diplomat, and plans were made for him to travel to Zimbabwe and Zambia next week.

The National Reception Committee, which has coordinated Mandela's schedule since he was released Feb. 11 after 27 years in prison, said Mandela would go to Harare, Zimbabwe, on Monday. On Tuesday, he will go to Lusaka, Zambia, where he will meet with exiled ANC leaders.

Jan Lundvik, a representative of the Swedish legation in South Africa, said after a meeting at Mandela's Soweto home that preparations were under way for his forthcoming visit to Sweden. ANC president Oliver Tambo, Mandela's former law partner, is recovering from a stroke in Stockholm.

Exiled leader speaks to U.N. panel

GENEVA (AP) — An exiled leader of last June's pro-democracy movement went before the U.N. Human Rights Commission on Tuesday and condemned Beijing for continued repression in a speech that a Chinese delegate failed to stop.

Wu'er Kaixi told the 43-nation panel that "systematic violations of human rights" continue in his native country and urged the international community to keep a close watch on the situation there.

Wu'er, who is continuing his studies in the United States, said underground resistance networks are still trying to organize in major Chinese cities.

Bomb under Army van injures 2

LEICESTER, England (AP) — A bomb exploded beneath an Army van in the town center Tuesday, the Defense Ministry said, and two people reportedly were injured.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility. The explosion was about 50 yards from the car park of an armed forces recruiting office.

"As far as I know, there are no service casualties," Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, quoted a ministry spokesman as saying.

Britain fails to persuade sanction lift

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Britain on Tuesday failed to persuade the European Community to ease sanctions against South Africa and announced it would unilaterally lift an embargo on new investment.

"There was no consensus on a lifting of sanctions," an Irish government spokesman, requesting anonymity, said at the end of a one-day meeting of community foreign ministers.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd announced immediately afterward that Britain would unilaterally lift the embargo on new investment. "I cannot see any reason for delay," he said.

Investors fear West German slump

TOKYO (AP) — The symbolic collapse of the Berlin Wall attracted a big flow of Japanese investment to the West German stock exchange, fueling a market boom but also raising speculation of a big slump once the money dries up.

According to the Securities Dealers' Association of Japan, Japanese investors increased the amount of their holdings of West German stocks to $944 million worth by the end of 1989, about 2½ times the amount of a year earlier.

"The amount of Japanese investments has been growing nowhere else but in West German stocks," said Kazumasa Funaoka, an association spokesman.

Finns learning to live without cash

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — With banks closed for the third week, Finns are learning to live without cash — or with bags of it.

Commercial, savings and deposit banks were shut Feb. 1 in a wage dispute that has been unusual in its intensity for this Scandinavian country known for quiet negotiation and consensus. Only the Post Office bank, which has its own union, remained open.

Angola, Cuba agree to resume Cuban troop withdrawal

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — Angola and Cuba agreed Tuesday to resume a withdrawal of Cuban troops from the African nation, one month after the pullout was suspended, the Angolan foreign minister said.

The withdrawal of the estimated 28,000 Cubans still in Angola would start again Sunday to comply with U.S.-brokered regional peace accords signed in December 1988.

East German premier asks immediate unification talks under allied formula

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East German Premier Hans Modrow, pressing by mass emigration and a crumbling economy, appealed Tuesday for immediate reunification talks under a formula worked out with the Allied victors of World War II.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl, the West German chancellor, urged Modrow's government to create a social security system as generous as West Germany's as a means of stopping the flight.

More than 400,000 people have left the East for West Germany in the past year, most of them skilled workers, after giving up hope of significant improvement in living conditions at home.

Kohl met with West German industrial leaders Tuesday to draft plans for "solidarity with East Germany," and told journalists his government would help finance unemployment benefits and pensions for East Germans.

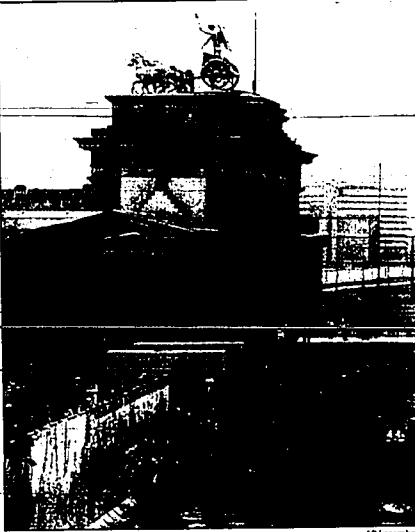

He was vague about the degree to which West Germany would underwrite the costs of East Germany's transition to capitalism, however, saying only that Bonn could provide "start-up financing" for the benefits.

His references to German "social unity" reflected a growing realization among West Germans that they must pay for reunification. Kohl's government has been reluctant to make firm deals with Modrow, a reform-minded Communist whose interim Cabinet will govern only until free elections East 18.

East Germany's parliament passed a constitutional amendment and legislation Tuesday setting rules for the elections.

The new parliament will have 400 seats, 700 fewer than the current People's Chamber, and no minimum percentage of the vote will be needed for a party to win seats. In West Germany, a party must get 5 percent of the vote.

Modrow, addressing the parliament, said representatives of the two

Germanys should "begin preparing" a "2-plus-4" conference as soon as possible.

At a meeting in Ottawa, Canada, last week, the United States, Soviet Union—Britain—and France agreed with East and West Germany on a two-stage plan for reunification.

In the first stage of what became known as the "2-plus-4" formula, German experts would discuss political, economic and legal steps to unity. In the second, the Germanys would be joined by the Allies to discuss international ramifications. Modrow said parallel plans should be made for a meeting of the 35-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

He again expressed regret that Bonn would not provide the $9 billion in immediate aid he requested. "Such aid is in my opinion necessary to counter a further exodus, and this should be of common interest" to both governments, the premier said.

Kaifu to form new cabinet

TOKYO (AP) — Leaders of the governing Liberal Democratic Party agreed Tuesday that Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu should stay in office and form a new Cabinet.

Because of his weak power base in the party, Kaifu's position had been considered uncertain despite an election victory Sunday that gave the Liberal Democrats a comfortable majority in the powerful lower house of Parliament.

Doubt was cast on the party's chances by a widespread influence-buying scandal and an unpopular sales tax, but it won 275 of the 512 seats in the lower house, which chooses the prime minister and controls the budget.

If 14 conservative independents join them as expected, the Liberal Democrats will not be far short of their 295 seats in the outgoing house.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECASTS

IF FEBRUARY 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Current cycle highlights major domestic change that could include where you live, family relationships, marital status. Pressure was on you this month — it was a testing, challenging period. You learned to cope with delays, broken promises.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You'll be "called in" for conference. Superior wants to know how you intend to get rid of superfluous material. You do hold trump card, and don't forget it. Means refer to be intimidated. Invest.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Focus on power, authority, intensity, ability to deal with people in high positions. Blend practicality with idealism. Message becomes clear with aid of Capricorn individual. Accept challenge.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Strive for universal appeal. Means use broad canvas, reach beyond previous limitations. You might declare, "Tonight I love!" One close to you finally expresses true feelings. Aries involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Check Gemini message. Be direct, get to heart of matters. Love relationship has chance to blossom. Focus on relationship, marriage. Be aware of legal rights, permission. Leo represented.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll encounter "star-struck" individual. Maintain your own sense of fitness. Separate genuine psychic impression from wishful thinking. Emphasis also on care of pets, dependents. Aquarius involved.

Soviet legislature urges crackdown

MOSCOW (P) — The Soviet legislature on Tuesday urged a crackdown on "illegal demonstrations scheduled for Sunday and said authorities should exercise tight control on legal rallies, the Tass news agency reported.

The legislators, saying they feared that extremists and criminal elements will exploit the demonstrations to destabilize the political situation, adopted a resolution urging law enforcement agencies to take special measures to keep demonstrators in line.

Mandela meets tribal chiefs, diplomat

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela met Tuesday with chiefs from his tribe and a Swedish diplomat, and plans were made for him to travel to Zimbabwe and Zambia next week.

The National Reception Committee, which has coordinated Mandela's schedule since he was released Feb. 11 after 27 years in prison, said Mandela would go to Harare, Zimbabwe, on Monday. On Tuesday, he will go to Lusaka, Zambia, where he will meet with exiled ANC leaders.

Jan Lundvik, a representative of the Swedish legation in South Africa, said after a meeting at Mandela's Soweto home that preparations were being made for his forthcoming visit to Sweden. ANC president Oliver Tambo, Mandela's former law partner, is recovering from a stroke in Stockholm.

Exiled leader speaks to U.N. panel

GENEVA (AP) — An exiled leader of last June's pro-democracy movement went before the U.N. Human Rights Commission on Tuesday and condemned Beijing for continued repression in a speech that a Chinese delegate failed to stop.

Wu'er Kaixi told the 43-nation panel that "systematic violations of human rights" continue in his native country and urged the international community to keep a close watch on the situation there.

Wu'er, who is continuing his studies in the United States, said underground resistance networks are still trying to organize in major Chinese cities.

Bomb under Army van injures 2

LEICESTER, England (AP) — A bomb exploded beneath an Army van in the town center Tuesday, the Defense Ministry said, and two people reportedly were injured.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility. The explosion was about 50 yards from the car park of an armed forces recruiting office.

"As far as I know, there are no service casualties," Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, quoted a ministry spokesman as saying.

Britain fails to persuade sanction lift

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Britain on Tuesday failed to persuade the European Community to ease sanctions against South Africa and announced it would unilaterally lift an embargo on new investment.

"There was no consensus on a lifting of sanctions," an Irish government spokesman, requesting anonymity, said at the end of a one-day meeting of community foreign ministers.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd announced immediately afterward that Britain would unilaterally lift the embargo on new investment. "I cannot see any reason for delay," he said.

Investors fear West German slump

TOKYO (AP) — The symbolic collapse of the Berlin Wall attracted a big flow of Japanese investment to the West German stock exchange, fueling a market boom but also raising speculation of a big slump as the money dries up.

According to the Securities Dealers Association of Japan, Japanese investors increased the amount of their holdings of West German stocks to $944 million worth by the end of 1989, about 2½ times the amount of a year earlier.

"The amount of Japanese investments has been growing nowhere else but in West-German stocks," said Kazumasa Funaoka, an association spokesman.

Finns learning to live without cash

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — With banks closed for the third week, Finns are learning to live without cash — or with bags of it.

Commercial, savings and deposit banks were shut Feb. 1 in a wage dispute that has been unusual in its intensity for this Scandinavian country known for quiet negotiation and consensus. Only the Post Office bank, which has its own union, remained open.

Angola, Cuba agree to resume Cuban troop withdrawal

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — Angola and Cuba agreed Tuesday to resume a withdrawal of Cuban troops from the African nation, one month after the pullout was suspended, the Angolan foreign minister said.

The withdrawal of the estimated 28,000 Cubans still in Angola would start again Sunday to comply with U.S.-brokered regional peace accords signed in December 1988.

East German premier asks immediate unification talks under allied formula

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East German Premier Hans Modrow pressed by mass emigration and a crumbling economy, appealed Tuesday for immediate reunification talks under a formula worked out with the Allied victors of World War II.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl, the West German chancellor, urged Modrow's government to create a social security system as generous as West Germany's as a means of stopping the flight.

More than 400,000 people have left the East for West Germany in the past year, most of them skilled workers, after giving up hope of significant improvement in living conditions at home.

Kohl met with West German industrial leaders Tuesday to draft plans for "solidarity with East Germany," and told journalists his government would help finance unemployment benefits and pensions for East Germans.

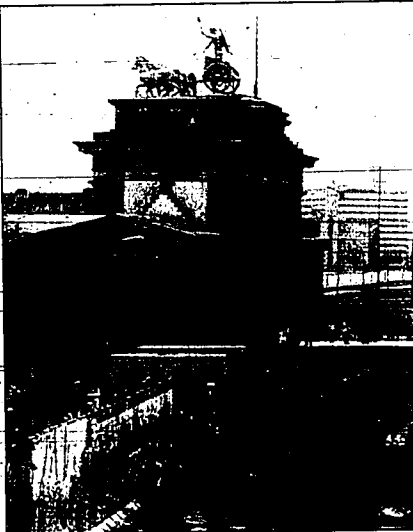

He was vague about the degree to which West Germany would underwrite the costs of East Germany's transition to capitalism, however, saying only that Bonn could provide "start-up financing" for the benefits.

His references to German "social unity" reflected a growing realization among West Germans that they must pay for reunification. Kohl's government has been reluctant to make firm deals with Modrow, a reform-minded Communist who's interim Cabinet will govern only until free elections March 18.

East Germany's parliament passed a constitutional amendment and legislation Tuesday setting rules for the elections.

The new parliament will have 400 seats, 100 fewer than the current People's Chamber, and no minimum percentage of the vote will be needed for a party to win seats. In West Germany, a party must get 5 percent of the vote.

Modrow, addressing the parliament, said representatives of the two

Because of his weak power base in the party, Kaifu's position had been considered uncertain despite an election victory Sunday that gave the Liberal Democrats a comfortable majority in the powerful lower house of Parliament.

"Doubt" was cast on the party's chances by a widespread influence-buying scandal and an unpopular sales tax, but it won 275 of the 512 seats in the lower house, which chooses the prime minister and controls the budget.

World drops as international war worries rattle market

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market dropped sharply Tuesday as an upward trend in worldwide interest rates troubled traders.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 38.74 points to close at 2,956.85. At one point pointing to the widely watched barometer was down nearly 50 points.

Exciting issues outnumbered gainers by about 4 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 327 up, 1,257 down and 388 unchanged.

The board volume totaled 146.8 million shares, down from 167.8 million in Friday's session. The market was closed Monday for Presidents' Day.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 174.9 million shares.

Analysts said the tone for the ses-

Commodities

was set by rising interest rates in Japan and West Germany as U.S. index returned after the three-day weekend.

U.S. interest rates followed the trend, rising sharply. Prices of long-term government bonds plunged as much as $16 for each $1,000 in face value, increasing their yields to the 8.66 percent, 8.70 percent range.

Bidder, the bond market, traders said—the overcast market—depressed by news that the Treasury raised its first-quarter borrowing needs by $6 billion.

Upward pressure on worldwide interest rates have been widely cited as a primary force behind the stock market's poor performance so far this year.

Utah House passes taxing option; strike prospects uncertain

Mike Bemis was trying to get a better view of the teachers' rally at the Utah Capitol when his head became stuck. He was freed without injury.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah House Tuesday passed legislation which would enable school districts to impose taxes to reduce class sizes, but it was not known if the action would avert a statewide teacher strike.

While the state's main teachers' union continued discussions, a minority union called on its members to stage a walkout.

The House voted 38-37 to approve the bill, a hotly disputed addition to a 6 percent salary-and-benefits package under scrutiny by the state's 20,000 teachers, but the Senate adjourned for the evening without considering it.

President Jim Campbell of the Utah Education Association, whose 16,000 members are on "strike alert," later met with Gov. Norm Bangert and the UEA board of directors, which had been meeting at the Capitol for most of the day.

"The House passage of a school board-voted levy bill was an important step," he said. "We have reached the zero-hour-on-a-legislative issue that means $20 million for class sizes in our schools."

"We also realize that any untimely action could destroy the foundation laid for the improvement of education," Campbell said, refusing all further questions.

However, officials of 1,000-member American Federation of Teachers, which opposes the local property tax option, recommended Tuesday that affiliates hold strike meetings Wednesday morning and vote to stage wildcat walkouts.

AFT Project Utah Director Ken Zenger said the council of presidents advised members, who are concentrated in schools along the Wasatch Front, to "take job action due to the lack of funding for public education."

The legislation would enable most of the state's 40 school boards to impose a levy assessing an additional 2 mills from property owners, raising some $17 million that would be augmented by up to $6.8 million in state funds.

Districts certifying that class sizes aren't a problem could use the money for other purposes, including teacher pay.

The bill's passage followed several days of negotiations between the UEA, Gov. Norm Bangert, legislative leadership and representatives of a variety of education organizations, including the AFT.

State Superintendent of Schools James Moss called the AFT action "premeditated, counterproductive and irresponsible." "It flies in the face of substantial progress made on meeting teacher needs," he said. "If there is anything that could kill the package, this is it."

The bill reached the House floor only after lengthy GOP caucuses in which Bangert, who has orchestrated days of negotiations between lawmakers and education officials, tried to persuade reluctant lawmakers to lend their support. It passed by the narrowest possible margin.

Assistant House Majority Whip Byron Harward of Provo said some Republicans were balking because the UEA rejected the proposed compensation package.

If the teachers walk, some 420,000 students would be left without classes to attend.

During debate, House Majority Whip

Craig Moody said the legislation gives local boards the means and authority to determine how to run the educational system.

"We've handcuffed them. We give them the responsibility, but no authority," he said. "It comes down to the teacher in the classroom who is fighting the 35 kids or the 37 kids and we haven't given them the tools."

But House Democrats contended the measure is merely a convenient out for Republicans who promised teachers a substantial pay raise this session after slashing taxes by $38 million during a special session last summer, an action that prompted a one-day teacher strike at the time.

"I think this is a tax increase of the most hated tax in the state of Utah, a property tax," said Rep. Kelly Atkinson, D-West Jordan.

Rep. David Jones, D-Salt Lake, said the legislation would hurt retired property owners as well as aggravate the differences between low- and middle-income districts and those with wealthier patrons.

"The rich districts are going to get a little richer and the poor districts a little poorer," he said.

The Democratic minority, which accounts for just 34 votes in the 104-member Legislature, has been unsuccessful in advancing legislation that would have repealed the tax cut.

Atkinson had made similar remarks during a news conference earlier Tuesday, earning a sharp rebuke from Bangert's chief of staff, Bud Scruggs, who charged the party with fostering even more ill will between legislators and teachers.

Barley growers: Price levels set unfairly

MOSCOW (AP) — Northwest barley growers this week will try to persuade U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Clayton Yeutter to overturn a decision forcing them to return millions of dollars in 1988 price supports.

Representatives of the National Barley Growers Association, Idaho and Washington barley groups and congressmen from barley-growing states expect to meet with Yeutter Friday.

"We're going to explain the hardship that is being caused by this barley deficiency payment and its unfair calculation," Idaho Barley Commission Administrator Tim McGreevy said. "We feel the secretary should understand the problem and how it's affecting rural Idaho, and the rest of the country."

Last year, the U.S. Department of Agriculture announced barley growers would have to give back price support money advanced to them in the spring of 1988. About 2,700 Whitman, Wash. and Latah county farmers received almost $4 million, with some getting more than $10,000. Payments totaled about $17.5 million in Washington and Idaho.

Under the program, the Agriculture Department sets a break-even "target price" for commodities. Farmers who enroll in various federal conservation programs are guaranteed that price. If the actual market price for the commodity is below the target, USDA makes up the difference with a deficiency payment.

USDA routinely advances farmers as much as 40 percent of the deficiency payment each spring.

In 1988, the target price was $2.51 a bushel, and the federal government determined the national average price was $2.83 a bushel and ordered barley growers to pay back the 32-cent-a-bushel difference.

That is not fair, the farmers say.

When the federal government calculated the national average price, it lumped high-priced barley, which sold for $3.24 a bushel, in with $2.29-a-bushel barley sold as cattle feed. But the target price was set based on the value of feed barley only.

"There's a fairly large injustice here," said Idaho State Rep. Tim Tucker, D-Porterville, who farms just south of the Canadian border. "We got penalized."

Track athlete charged with damaging jail

MOSCOW (AP) — An Eastern Washington University track athlete was charged Tuesday with one felony count of injuring a jail after allegedly damaging three telephones in the Latah County Jail's visitors room.

Appearing before Magistrate William Hamlet, Harvey Cobbs, 20, was released without bond and ordered to return for a preliminary hearing Feb. 28.

Latah County Sheriff Kenneth

Buxton said that Cobbs was arrested along with fellow Eastern Washington sprinter Robert Jefferson early Sunday at Moscow.

Cobbs was charged with false representation of an identification card, a misdemeanor to which he pleaded guilty Tuesday and was fined $118. Jefferson, charged with battery, was released on $300 bond.

When Cobbs was being processed after his arrest, the holding cell at the jail was occupied, and he was placed instead in the jail's visitors room, a temporary holding cell.

Cobbs allegedly ripped three communication phones out of the wall, drawing the felony charge, Buxton said.

Cobbs and Jefferson had competed Friday and Saturday in indoor track meets at the University of Idaho, but EWU sports information director Bruce Parker said they had returned to Cheney with the team Saturday afternoon.

House bill won't allow rent controls

BOISE (AP) — Idaho doesn't allow cities to have rent control laws, and a bill passed by the Idaho House won't allow it in the future.

Approved 68-11 on Tuesday was legislation preventing local agencies from imposing rent controls on privately owned residential property. It now goes to the Senate.

Sponsoring Rep. Judi Danielson, R-Council, said the measure will protect the rights of private property owners, which will encourage them to make rental property available.

"She said there's no need for the law now, but it's a good time to enact it."

"I'm not sure it is needed at this time and I'm really leery about what it could do," said Rep. James Stoicheff, D-Sandpoint.

Ms. Danielson said it does not apply to rental agreements on mobile homes.

Cities seek tax increases to pay for insurance

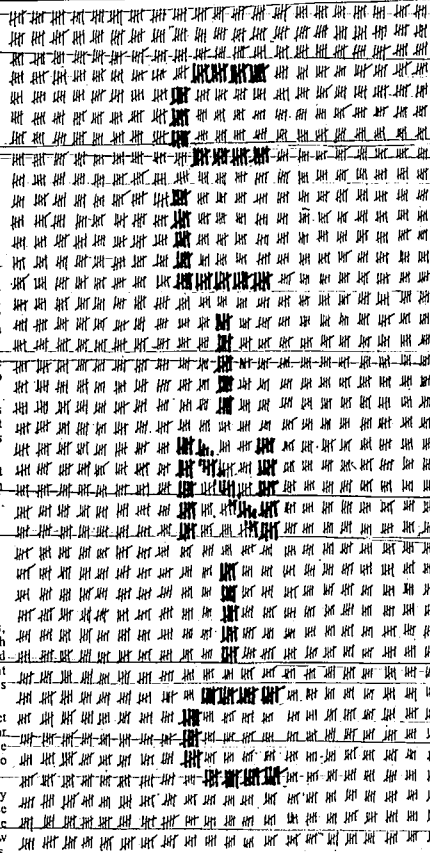

BOISE (AP) — City officials, contending they can't keep up with the spiraling cost of medical and other forms of insurance, want authority to increase property taxes to pay for it.

"There is no way for cities to meet these expenses," said Emmett Mayor Leroy Campbell. "We do need some flexibility because we have no control over these rising costs."

Campbell was one of several city officials appearing before the House Revenue and Taxation Committee today pushing a proposal to allow cities to increase property taxes, outside current restrictions, to meet the rising cost of employee health insurance, liability insurance and workmen's compensation.

But as in the past, the committee rejected the proposal to give cities local option taxing authority. On a motion from Rep. Don Loveland, R-Boise, seconded by Rep. Golden Linford, R-Rexburg, the bill was held in committee, usually a killing move.

"It was not a recorded vote and there was no debate."

AL MVP Yount agrees to $9.6 million deal

MILWAUKEE (AP) — American League MVP Robin Yount agreed Tuesday to a three-year contract with the Milwaukee Brewers for $9.6 million, two months and a day after the team first announced the deal had been reached. Yount becomes the 10th player in baseball to average $3 million per season, joining teammate Paul Molitor, who agreed to a three-year, $9.1 million contract on Tuesday.

That gives the Brewers, who play in one of baseball's smallest markets, two of the highest paid players in the game. Yount will receive a $1.5 million signing bonus and then receive annual base salaries of $2.7 million in 1990, 1991 and 1992 with $1.44 million of each year's base deferred with interest.

No. 1 contender Holyfield turns down $40 million deal

ATLANTA (AP) — Evander Holyfield on Tuesday turned down a $40 million, three-fight deal offered by Steve Wynn, owner of the Mirage Hotel in Las Vegas. "We don't want a three-fight deal. We just want to take things one fight at a time," Holyfield said. "We just want what's coming to us — the Douglas fight."

Undisputed heavyweight champion James "Buster" Douglas and Holyfield, the No. 1 contender, have agreed to a title fight this year. The time and place haven't been decided, Holyfield said during the weekend.

Holyfield wants a June fight; Douglas wants it scheduled for September in Las Vegas.

Minico shocks Burley in Region III opener

By JEFF HOSKISSON
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Tournament time, when the unexpected happens.

In this case, it was the fifth-seeded Minico Spartans pulling the surprise by knocking off the fourth-seeded Burley Bobcats 55-46 Tuesday in the first round of the Region III Class A-1 boys' basketball tournament.

"It's unbelievable," said Minico coach Terry Johnson, whose ballclub finished the regular season 2-18 and split its two earlier meetings with the Bobcats. "We struggled all year. The boys wanted to show people they can play."

They victory put the Spartans into a Thursday showdown against top-seeded Pocatello in Pocatello, while the Bobcats will travel to Twin Falls to face the Bruins in a loser-out contest. Both games are scheduled for 8 p.m.

Free throws were the name of the game Tuesday night. For the Spartans, tough defense and a solid night at the free throw line made the difference. The Bobcats were plagued by inability to hit from anywhere on the court, including the foul line.

"We were cold the whole game," said Burley coach

Steve Jensen.

In all, the two teams combined to shoot a total of 76 free throws.

The Bobcats jumped out to their last lead of the game when Zac Fink scored a layin, and converted the free throw to put Burley up 4-1. From that point to the end of the quarter, the Spartans' defense allowed Burley only one more shot while the offense ran off 10 points to put Minico ahead 11-5.

"We were forcing things in the beginning, always forcing the first pass," said Johnson. "During the timeout I told them to forget about the first pass and go to the second pass. That was the turning point."

In the second quarter, the Spartans kept up the intensity and quickly opened an 11-point lead at 17-6. Burley for the only time in the game then started to connect from the free throw line, hitting five of six attempts to narrow the gap to six points.

The Minico offense then took over. Ron Bierman, Travis Schow and Burke Garner combined to lead a 9-0 run which put the Spartans up 26-13 at halftime.

"We really had some kids on the boards and played a good tough man defense," said Johnson.

As the second half opened, the Bobcats looked as if they might come out of their shell as Eric Mabry scored on a drive and picked up a free throw after being fouled. After Brandon Delozier got two points back for the Spartans, Burley's Brian Peterson hit a three-pointer to make it 28-19.

Garner then put in four points to extend the Spartans' lead to 32-19. From that point, the Bobcats' defense held Minico to five points over the last six minutes of the quarter. The only problem for Burley was inability to hit free throws.

In all, Burley had 15 attempts, but could only convert five of them, leading to a 37-27 Minico lead at the end of three periods.

The game's final quarter turned out to be a free throw exhibition as the Spartans' went 16-for-20 from the line to ice the victory.

Bruins miss 2 free throws, fall to Highland, 48-47

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

POCATELLO — That opening tournament win in eastern Idaho that has eluded the Twin Falls Bruins for the past five years still isn't available.

The Bruins, in a succession of missed opportunities in the first quarter, bowed to the Highland Rams 48-47 here Tuesday night in the opening round of the Region III Class A-1 boys' basketball tournament when luckless senior Chris Smith missed two free throws.

Smith, who was Twin Falls' second-best free throw shooter this season, thus ended the night for 1-for-8 from the line as the Bruins made only 2 out of 10 from the charity stripe.

That easily told the story since Twin Falls outscored the Rams by five field goals and Highland made 10 of 14 free throw attempts.

"Here we are again in the loser bracket," said Bruin coach John Astorgia. "Free throws — that's the whole story." Twin Falls, the No. 3 seed in this five-team, state-qualifying tournament, will host fourth-seeded Burley in a loser-out contest Thursday night at 8 p.m. in the Twin Falls gym, while Highland sits out

Bulldogs roll into A-3 championship game

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

WENDELL — The Kimberley Bulldogs did what they do best here Tuesday night in whipping District 4 Class A-3 boys' basketball tournament championship game.

Kimberly used its lincensee man-to-man defense to force a series of Declo turnovers in the second period that ignited a 16-6 run by the Bulldogs and give Kimberley an insurmountable 39-19 halftime lead.

The Bulldogs' now face Canyon Conference champion Valley tonight at 7 p.m. in the Wendell High School gym for the District 4 title and an automatic berth in the state A-3 tournament that starts a week from Thursday in Moscow.

If the Bulldogs beat Valley tonight, a second championship game will be played Thursday.

At the very least, Kimberly's win Tuesday gave the Bulldogs a shot at making it to the state by beating the runnerup from District 5 in a playoff Saturday afternoon in American Falls.

The third meeting of these two teams, the second and third seeds in this tournament, wasn't that different from the first two, won by Kimberley 72-44 in Declo on Jan. 12 and again 61-39 in Kimberly two weeks ago.

Declo had limited success penetrating to

Baseball players will break off talks Thursday if no agreement reached

By RONALD BLUM
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball players will break off contract talks if no agreement is reached by Thursday, thus endangering the start of the regular season.

There was no progress Tuesday on the key issue of salary arbitration eligibility and talks will continue on Wednesday, the seventh day of owners' spring training lockout.

Chuck O'Connor, chief negotiator for the owners, said management would make a new proposal on Wednesday in an attempt to break the stalemate. The union wants players with two years in the major leagues to be eligible for arbitration, as they were before the 1985 agreement. Owners want the threshold to remain at three years.

O'Connor said. "That's what we're looking at."

Donald Fehr, executive director of the players' association, said talks would break off Thursday because the union staff needs to travel and update players on the situation.

"They're scattered over the country and it's going in take time," Fehr said. "I don't know whether it's 10 days, two weeks, 12 days, 16 days."

"This is not new," he said later. "They're known for 10 or 14 days that we would have to do this."

Fehr, who said talks probably would not resume until March 5 at the earliest, said the Thursday deadline was set because it was the last possible date an agreement could be reached that would get players to spring training by Feb. 28, the mandatory reporting date.

"At that point it's apparent you're not going to have anybody there next Wednesday," Fehr said.

Both sides say at least three weeks of spring training are needed for players to get in shape. Fehr said some players need as much as five days to get to camp and that "the clubs say it's going to take five days to get the equipment there."

With those constrictions, there would not be much time for an agreement if talks take a prolonged freeze. When O'Connor was asked if a break would endanger a start of the season on April 2, he said: "We may be. We may be."

Fehr and O'Connor said a break would be needed anyway because it was necessary to meet only to disagree over arbitration.

"There isn't much sense in meeting with the other side if there's no purpose to that," O'Connor said.

At a side meeting Tuesday, negotiators discussed scheduling, meal money and termination pay and came closer to agreement on those issues.

However, arbitration eligibility has become the issue that's holding up an agreement.

"It doesn't mean that's the only issue left," O'Connor said, "but that's the centerpiece."

Fehr said the only reason the union gave back the year of eligibility in 1985 was because of management's plea of economic hardship. The union's year returned since the forecasts were wrong and baseball is making record profits.

O'Connor said management's view is that the limit was raised as part of a tradeoff for other things, such as benefit money and the removal of the 100-percent salary cap proposal.

"There may be a bunch of owners out there who convinced themselves of that," Fehr said. "Some people think the cart is flat, but that's not the way it is."

Baseball salary escalation has been dizzying

By PAUL SULLIVAN
Chicago Tribune

Seventy-six years ago in Baltimore, Babe Ruth experienced what he later would describe as his greatest "thrill" in baseball.

In February of 1914, according to Ruth's autobiography, Baltimore Orioles boss Jack Dunn ventured to the St. Mary's orphanage and convinced the 19-year-old Ruth to sign a contract with the minor-league Orioles for the princely sum of $600 a year.

"I had some great moments in the years that followed," Ruth recalled, "including the day I signed a contract for $80,000 with the New York Yankees. But none of my later thrills ever topped the one I got that cold afternoon at St. Mary's, when $600 a year seemed to me to be all the wealth in the world."

Pascual Perez, who pitched 198 innings while finishing 9-13 with Montreal last year, signed a $3.7 million, three-year contract with the New York Yankees during the off-season. If the newly mustered Perez pitches the same amount of innings this year (if there is a "this year") at a salary of $1.9 million, he will receive $3,198.65 for every out he records.

As recently as 1984, the signing of a million-dollar-per-year player was usually page-one news in sports sections across the country. But now that nearly 125 players make at least that much, and the average annual salary has risen well above the $500,000 mark, even

Nutritional aids show extensive popularity

By the Los Angeles Times

A surprising number of Americans — particularly children — are using nutritional supplements, some at dangerously high dosage levels, according to a recent federal survey.

Researchers from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the National Center for Health Statistics reported that as many as 36 percent of those adults surveyed take some kind of over-the-counter vitamin, mineral or fluoride compound.

Women were the most likely supplement users and 41 percent of those females queried in the study reported consuming the products, compared with only 31 percent of the males.

The results, published in the center's ADVANCE DATA journal last year, showed that an even higher percentage of children are using supplements than adults. For instance, 47 percent of those aged between 3 and 4 years old reported vitamin usage. That compares with 40 percent of the 5- to 6-year-olds.

Seafood industry focusing on product quality, image

Los Angeles Times

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Several seafood industry veterans, gathered at a recent convention, said that most fish processors are working toward improving the quality and image of their products rather than developing new items. As such, there was little in the way of breakthrough food technology on display at the recent Sea Fare International 1990 here.

Even so, with the incredible diversity that typifies the global seafood market there are usually several items that, if nothing else, warrant mention. These include products as diverse as goose-neck barnacles, giant red king crab from the Soviet Union, sea urchin and an electric oyster shucker.

One of the most unusual seafoods on display was the sinister-looking goose-neck barnacles being grown and marketed by Ecomar, Inc. The Goleta, Calif.-based company is best known for growing mussels on oil-shore oil platforms near Santa Barbara.

In recent years, however, the company has also begun cultivating the goose-necks, a distant relative of the shrimp family. Jill Meek, of Ecomar, says that the wormlike tentacles with a small shell at their tip are actually a delicacy in Spain and Portugal. In those countries, the barnacles are regarded about the same lines as the most prized cluga crabs would be in this nation. Meek's barnacles, in fact, sell for as much as $100 a pound in Portugal.

The sales trip is considered a success if she can merely persuade the chef to prepare the goose-necks, let alone eat them. Despite her efforts, Meek has yet to entice any California market or restaurant into carrying the barnacles.

Chilean salmon farmers begin rigorous inspections

By the Los Angeles Times

Salmon farmers in Chile have undertaken an ambitious inspection effort to ensure that any fish exported from the South American nation is safe and wholesome. The move is designed not only to reassure consumers, but to distinguish Chilean seafood from other farmed or wild salmon varieties.

The Chileans, who should know something about food safety after last year's disastrous episode with poisoned grapes, have become an important source of aquacultured salmon.

The program is being conducted by the Association of Chilean Salmon Farmers, a Santiago-based group. The actual effort involves inspecting fresh salmon four times during the processing cycle and also checking the fish three additional times for proper temperature. Frozen fish are checked at six different points in the process and also checked for proper temperatures. Independent inspectors have been employed to run the program.

Momentous news expected: Chicken could surpass beef

By the Los Angeles Times

The next 12 months could be historic for the meat industry, according to a recent newsletter report. Per capita chicken consumption is estimated to exceed that of beef for the first time in 1990, Nutrition Week states.

Citing federal statistics, the journal stated that consumers would each eat 69.8 pounds of chicken in the coming year, or two pounds more than the rate for beef. Per capita pork consumption is expected to be 63.2 pounds.

A similar projection was made for 1989, but that estimate turned out to be incorrect.

The total meat consumption rate for 1990 is expected to be 223.8 pounds per person, according to the report.

"Americans are eating more poultry than beef and nothing can change that," Nutrition Week stated.

Key lime tart, crab and artichoke crepe towers, spicy mulled coffee, sweet and sour meatballs, almond tweed bread

A Mardi Gras brunch

Say Mardi Gras and you've said party. Put on a Mardi Gras brunch and guests will arrive in their most festive spirits.

Hosting a brunch this beautiful is amazingly easy when you do much of the preparations in advance. Stash make-ahead bread, tart shell and crepes in the freezer. But don't freeze up at the mention of crepes. These are truly simple and virtually fail-free.

Since pancake suppers are traditionally served on Mardi Gras, crepes are naturally a pivotal point of brunch. Use any ordinary skillet or automatic crepe maker. Cast iron skillets work exceptionally well because of their even heating.

The key to successful crepe-making is allowing the batter to rest several hours so the flour expands fully, resulting in delicate yet durable crepes. Almond cereal in the batter bolsters the crepes' strength and also adds a flavor compatible with a broad range of savory and sweet fillings — a big plus when used in many main dish or dessert crepe recipes.

Sweet and Sour Meatballs stretch a pound of ground meat to make appetizers for a crowd. The secret to their tenderness is almond cereal which also lends its own special flavor.

Almond Tweed Bread deserves its own spotlight. Why not make a couple extra loaves when filling the freezer with party fare, and send them home for prizes for lucky guests?

Round out the meal with seasonal vegetables and a fruit salad. Cap the entire event with cool Creamy Key Lime Tart with a twist: a crunchy crust that's a perfect foil to the tart filling. This crust can jazz up many of your other favorite pie recipes.

Lastly, full-bodied coffee is essential to every Louisiana meal. Accompany the tart with Spicy Mulled Coffee, whose muted spicy tones deepen the coffee's exotic richness.

NUTTY CREPES

- 3 cups Almond Delight brand cereal, crushed to 1/4 cups
- 1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
- 3 eggs
- 2 cups milk
- 3 tablespoons margarine or butter, melted
- In large bowl combine cereal, flour and eggs; gradually add milk and margarine, beating until smooth. Cover and refrigerate several hours or overnight to thicken batter. (Batter should be consistency of heavy cream. If it is too thin, add 2 to 3 tablespoons flour.) Cook on crepe maker following manufacturer's instructions or lightly grease 5 to 6-inch skillet. Heat skillet over medium heat; remove from heat. Pour 2 tablespoons batter into pan; tilt pan until batter is spread evenly over bottom of pan. Brown, yellow, orange, red, green, tan - and 50 years old

One of the most accomplished hostesses I've ever known had a party trick: at the end of each of her lavish, candlelit, five-course dinners she would put a silver bowl on the table filled with a rainbow of candy little monogrammed discs of shiny orange, brown, yellow, red, green and tan candy, so appealing that even the stuffed-to-the-gills guests found them irresistible.

Ulla, who was Swedish and came to the U.S. as an adult, thought that M&M's were really special and, we, her seen-it-all guests, agreed. M&M's, those unique sugar shell-coated chocolate and/or peanut-filled candy pop-it beads, are special, so special that we are delighted to pause and say — even sing — "Happy Birthday." M&M's are 50 years old this year.

M&M's are now the largest selling confection in the U.S., but even in 1940, the year they were introduced, they generated record sales for a new product. The original plain chocolate M&M's were a little bit larger, they were packed in paper tubes, and they came in a mix of covering colors: brown, yellow, orange, red, green and violet. (In 1949, violet was replaced by tan and has never appeared again.) By 1950, the company had figured out a way to stamp the trademarked "M" on each candy's thin sugar shell, using a delicate printing process. In 1954, all-brown peanut M&M's were introduced, setting sales records for the year. (In 1960, van-colored peanut M&M's were introduced; purists were disturbed, but we've gotten used to it.)

About 100 million M&M's come rolling off the assembly line every day, just about evenly divided between plain and peanut. The peanut M&M's are slightly ahead, sales figures that may be due to this correspondent's consumption.

Some facts I know you've never known: On average, a bag of plain chocolate M&M's contains 30 percent browns, 10 percent yellows, 20 percent reds, 10 percent oranges, 10 percent greens and 10 percent tans. The thin sugar shell on the outside of each M&M is due to a delicate process called panning in which the candies are coated while they revolve in a rotating pan. During the process evaporation leaves an even layer of sugar shell. The process is repeated several times until the desired thickness builds up. Because of the coating process and the different sizes of peans in the

Dutch food mingles flavors of Netherlands, Indonesia

By JOAN BEAN
 Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — After Caroline Segeren arrived in the United States a couple of years ago, she began sharpening her knowledge of how to prepare Dutch cuisine. She says she did this because her friends were interested in the kind of food served in her native country.

"So, I got some cookbooks from the Netherlands and I tried to make typical Dutch food," she says. "And well — it's sort of my specialty now."

Segeren says she enjoys cooking, and her first experience with it was when she helped her mom with "easy" things like macaroni. "But, it was when she became a college student that she began to cook in earnest."

There are no dormitories in Holland, and so students live on their own while attending college. "When students go out of their parents' house, they learn how to cook," she says. "They have to, because otherwise they wouldn't survive."

During that time she says she took an interest in cookbooks, and especially liked the French-style. This included tackling the more difficult recipes, to see how they would turn out. "That's the way I learned to cook, I think," she says.

Her husband, Toon, also learned to cook while he was a student. "If I don't feel like cooking, he will do it," she says. "He's rather good at it."

Segeren says the following recipes are typical Dutch fare, beginning with...

STIMP-STAMP

- Serves 4
- 2 pounds potatoes
- Milk
- Butter
- Egg (optional)
- Salt
- Pepper
- Ground nutmeg
- 1/2 pound bacon
- 1 pound, or a little more, of endive
- Boil potatoes. Drain. Mash them with some milk, butter and egg, if desired. Mix in salt, nutmeg and pepper, to taste. Keep warm meanwhile, cut bacon in little pieces, and fry slowly until crisp. Reserve the grease. Wash the endive and cut into small strips. Do not cook it. Mix endive with the warm mashed potatoes. (Kale may be used in place of the endive, but must be boiled first. See says she doesn't think most people like it with kale, though.) Mix in the bacon. Serve with warm smoked sausage and mustard. The bacon grease may be put in a dish, to spoon onto individual servings, if desired.
- "It's a dish we used to eat a lot in the Netherlands," she says.
- If you like Dutch windmill cookies, you will probably enjoy filled speculaas. They have a similar flavor.

peanut variety, no two M & M's are ever alike; like snowflakes, each is unique.

Forrest E. Mars Sr. is responsible for all of our pleasure all these years. The son of Frank C. Mars — the creator of the Snickers and Milky Way bars — Forrest founded a company called M&M M&M in Newark in 1940 to manufacture an innovative new candy. The name came from the last initial of Mars Sr. and his partner Bruce Murrie. These gastronomic heroes, optimistic as they were, had no idea of what was to come.

One of the most famous advertising slogans ever created: "The milk chocolate melts in your mouth ... not in your hand."

Solace for soldiers: World War II rations included tubes and bags of M&M's.

A place in space: The first space shuttle astronaut took M&M Chocolate Candies along as part of their food supply; they're now on permanent display as part of the space food exhibit at the National Air & Space Museum at the Smithsonian.

Most parents are deeply grateful for M&M's, which no birthday party, no gingerbread house, no Halloween could do without. Late-night bingers are devoted to M&M's for their availability (sold all over the world, 24 hours a day) and for the continual reassurance of that floppy bag containing those buttons of tongue-tingling pleasure. But bingers will be distressed now that the facts are in. Thought we should be burdened with guilt for a glut of M&M's, did we? Turns out each plain one has only 5 calories, and each peanut M&M has 10. I like to think it's a perfect 10. Happy birthday, M&M's.

Chile peppers gain popularity

By LOU PAPPAS
Peninsula Times Tribune

PALO ALTO, Calif. — Peppers are hot and getting hotter. Chiles, both fresh and dried, have moved into the mainstream supermarket and specialty sections of supermarkets. No longer need one search in "chile territory" for this lively ingredient that lends pizzazz to a range of global dishes.

With the cook's interest in exotic ingredients at an all-time high, the chile pepper measures up to this demand for new tastes to pique an ever-inquisitive palate.

For an excellent primer on how to handle chiles, turn to "Peppers Hot and Chile" (Aris Books, $9.95) by Georganne Brennan and Charlotte Glenn. The authors are the proprietors of the specialty vegetable seed company, Le Marche Seeds International, located in Dixon, Calif., and the co-authors of "The American Vegetable Cookbook" (Aris 1985).

They unravel the culinary complexities of hot peppers. The world of chiles is confusing. Botanically, chile peppers belong to one large family called Capsicum. This group also includes sweet peppers as well.

They vary in color, shape and texture as well as in hotness and flavor.

There are some constant characteristics. When the fruits are first formed, most chiles are green, and with the onset of maturity, their color changes to brilliant red. Others, as they ripen, change to yellow, orange, salmon and even chocolate brown.

Chile names are elusive: In Mexico alone it is said there are more than 65 kinds of chiles, and the spelling can vary with the English and Hispanic languages. The "e" ending of the word chile is the authentic Hispanic spelling of the word, whereas English linguists have

Spices are the variety of life

By LARRY BROWN
Seattle Times

If nine out of 10 doctors agree that variety is the spice of life, then we probably owe it to ourselves to spice up our lives by using a greater variety of spices.

In all likelihood these flavor boosters are quietly waiting for us neatly arranged in their labeled containers inside the kitchen spice cabinet or drawer — eager to perk up our meals. Grab hold of that can of cloves. Well-known for their ability to spark the flavors of gingerbread and sweet potatoes, they can be surprisingly savory additions to tomato juice, steaks, chili, chocolate sauce, beets and onion soup.

Be brave. Experiment with spices. But go slowly at first. A ¼ teaspoon can be a handy kitchen tool for this procedure. And keep notes about how much spice provides the most pleasing flavors.

Don't confuse the word spice with the word hot. Most spices are quite mild and, if used with discretion, will add subtle flavors to a dish. And don't be afraid to combine several spices. Many cooks don't realize that when they add 1 teaspoon of curry powder to a chicken salad dressing, they can be adding more than 20 spices that have been blended.

At Market Spice, the aromatic shop in Seattle, customers can choose from five kinds of curry powder — regular, salt-free, Indian, chicken and hot. The Indian curry is a blend of 13 spices and the hot has 24 ingredients.

Debbie McKinlay, manager at Market Spice, has been working among the shop's 230 varieties of spices and herbs so long — a dozen years — that she seldom notices the plenitude of odors.

"We encourage customers to buy whole spices — the flavor is so much better when they are freshly ground," McKinlay says.

No disagreement here. There aren't many things for which I'd willingly risk scraping off the skin on my fingertips, but nutmeg is one of them. The smell and the flavor of freshly grated nutmeg is incomparable. "Take a taste test; comparing the fresh with the pre-ground product, and I'll eat a spoonful of cayenne if you don't agree," McKinlay says. The spices and herbs at supermarkets may have been in storage for as long as a year before you purchase them, an added incentive for buying whole spices that have longer lives.

Hang around her spice shop for a few minutes, and you're likely to overhear a cooking tip or two. She says customers are good about educating each other, sharing information about how they used their spices. In one of the fringe benefits of the job, she received a cookie from a woman who wanted to show how she had used the cardamom she purchased.

McKinlay says one of the most delicate parts of her work is recommending how much spices to use, because of so many variables in personal preferences. She asks customers how spicy they like foods, and often has them sprinkle a bit of a spice blend such as chili powder on their hand, then taste it to gauge their tastes.

"You want spices to accent foods, but not overpower them," McKinlay says. The popularity of Cajun and Southwestern regional cuisines in recent years has helped home cooks become more adventurous with spicing.

For example, one of chef Paul Prudhomme's Louisiana recipes for fried chicken uses salt, paprika, onion powder, garlic powder, gumbo filé, thyme, basil, white pepper, cayenne pepper and black pepper in the seasoning mix.

Chef Mark Miller of Santa Fe includes mild-chimayo chile powder, medium chimayo chile powder, cilantro, coriander seed, allspice, oregano, mint, star anise, saffron and salt in his marinade for pan-fried quail, served at his Coyote Cafe.

"Madhur Jaffrey's Cookbook" joins the battle cry for experimentation. "Being Indian, I'm naturally familiar with a vast spectrum of spices and know all the simple tricks and techniques that can draw out many almost contradictory flavors from the same spice," Jaffrey wrote. "Mustard seeds, for example, can be very hot and pungent when crushed. They turn amazingly sweet and nutty if they are thrown into a little hot oil and allowed to pop. The popping seems to dissipate their anger."

Jaffrey recommends roasting sesame seeds and cumin seeds in a frying pan over medium heat to accentuate their aromas.

Michael Roberts, chef of Trumps Restaurant in Los Angeles, is equally passionate about spicing foods. "Using only one herb or spice to achieve a certain taste usually results in a lackluster dish — each mouthful tastes the same," he wrote.

Orange beef and broccoli makes tasty stir-fry meal

For speeding supper on busy days, stir-fry cooking is hard to beat. It cuts cooking time to a matter of minutes, keeps food flavors and colors at their peak and makes healthy eating easy.

Orange Beef & Broccoli is a streamlined version of the classic Szechwan dish seasoned with soy sauce, ginger and orange peel. Instead of using the traditional dried hot peppers, which can be hard to find and uncomfortable-to-bite into, picante sauce provides spicy "heat" that is spread evenly throughout the dish.

ORANGE BEEF & BROCCOLI

- ¾ pound well-trimmed beef top sirloin steak, cut 1-inch thick
- 4 teaspoons soy sauce
- 1 to 2 teaspoons finely shredded fresh ginger, as desired
- 1 teaspoon finely shredded orange peel
- 1 tablespoon vegetable oil
- 2 cups small broccoli florets
- 1 small red bell pepper, cut into short, thin strips
- 2/3 cup picante sauce
- 1/2 teaspoon sugar
- 1/3 cup orange juice
- 2 teaspoons cornstarch
- 3 green onions with tops, cut diagonally

Orange beef and broccoli is based on a classic Szechwan dish

- agonally into 1-inch pieces
- 2 cups hot cooked rice
- sliced almonds (optional)
- Stir-fry beef and broccoli in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add picante sauce and sugar to skillet. Reduce heat, cover and cook until broccoli is crisp-tender, about 3 minutes. Combine orange juice and cornstarch; add to skillet with reserved meat and green onions. Cook and stir 1 minute or until thickened. Serve over rice. Sprinkle with almonds, if desired, and serve with additional picante sauce.
- Makes 4 servings.

FILED SPECULAAS

- Serves 6 to 10
- 3 cups flour
- Pinch of salt (optional)
- 15 tablespoons brown sugar (not packed)
- 1 ½ sticks of butter
- 2 ½ tablespoons of the "spice" mixture*
- 1/3 teaspoon baking powder (omit if using self-rising flour)
- 2/3 pound almond paste
- ¼ of a beaten egg, if necessary
- ¼ lemon
- 1 egg
- Almonds (optional)
- *The spice mixture:
 - 1 teaspoon cinnamon
 - 1 teaspoon cocoa
 - 1 teaspoon ground nutmeg
 - ½ teaspoon ginger
 - ½ teaspoon cardamom
 - ½ teaspoon ground cloves

You will only need 2 tablespoons of the mixture for this recipe, so there will be a little left over to use another time.

Mix almond paste with the rind and juice of half a lemon. Put into an airtight container and store in refrigerator. It is better if this is allowed to rest for a week or more before using. If the almond paste is quite dry when you are ready to use it, it may be softened by mixing in half a beaten egg.

Make dough by combining the flour, salt, brown sugar, butter, baking powder and spice mixture. Mix very well until you have a good dough. Let this rest in refrigerator for about 1 hour.

Divide in two. Roll out one half of dough to the size of cookie sheet. Put rolled out dough on cookie sheet (greased, if necessary), and spread almond paste mixture on the dough.

Leave edges free to about ¼-inch. Roll out other half of dough and place over top of the almond-paste mixture. Press edges with a fork. Baste the top with beaten egg. Decorate with almonds, if desired. Bake 40 minutes at 350 degrees. Let cool on the cookie sheet. Cut in 6 or more rectangles.

Caroline Segeren says she and her husband enjoy eating these along with cups of Dutch cocoa, topped with whipped cream.

Here's another sweet treat from Holland:

DUTCH APPLE PIE

- 1 ½ cups flour
- 1 stick butter
- 7 tablespoons brown sugar
- ½ teaspoon vanilla extract
- About ½ teaspoon grated lemon rind
- 3 large apples (sweet - sour are best for this)
- A handful of raisins
- Sugar
- Cinnamon

Mix flour, sugar, vanilla and lemon rind together into a dry dough. Grease a 9" pie pan and press in enough dough to cover the bottom and sides - not too thick, about ½ inch or so. Leave out some of the dough to cover the top of the pie. Slice the apples and put in bottom of pan. Sprinkle some raisins over them, then sprinkle on sugar and cinnamon, to taste. Add a second layer of apples; then raisins, sugar and cinnamon. Crumble the rest of the dough over the top. Bake for 30 - 45 minutes in the middle of a 350 degree oven.

Segeren says this is an easy dessert to make, and the preparation time is only about 10 - 15 minutes.

"In the time that you eat, the pie is baking," she says. "And it's really nice if you eat it warm with some ice cream."

Because Indonesia was once a colony of the Netherlands, its cooking style is popular with the Dutch people. Here is an Indonesian dish Segeren says is easy.

NASI GORENG

- Serves 4
- 2 cups uncooked rice
- 4 cups water
- 1/2 yellow onion, chopped
- 1 or 2 cloves of garlic, chopped
- 1 teaspoon sambal (an Indonesian red pepper paste) or 3 or 4 fresh red Spanish peppers, cut in small pieces
- 4 green onions, sliced
- ¾ pound pork, diced
- ¾ pound chicken, diced
- ½ teaspoon coriander powder
- ¼ teaspoon cumin powder
- About 1/10th of a pound of cooked shrimp (optional)
- 1 tablespoon soy sauce
- ½ tablespoon celery leaves, chopped

Boil rice as usual and let cool. Using a wok or frying pan, stir fry in oil (not olive oil) the onion, garlic and peppers, over medium heat - about 3 minutes. Add green onions; pork and chicken. Stir fry until golden brown. Add coriander, cumin, cooled rice. Stir everything on medium heat for about 5 minutes. All the ingredients have to be mixed really well. Put in the shrimp, soy sauce and chopped celery leaves. Garnish with sweet pickles and a cucumber salad. In The Netherlands this is also accompanied by slices of boiled ham and eggs, sunny side up.

Home/garden

Now is a good time to study catalogs listing flower seed

It may seem a long time before flowers can be planted outside. However, if you would like to start some seeds indoors, many with a greenhouse, now is a good time to select and obtain seed.

Even if you are not ambitious enough to start seeds inside, many perennials can be sown directly outside from early spring to late summer. If you prefer to buy plants rather than wait for seeds, you may want to save this column for plant selection later this spring.

The biggest advantage with perennial flowers is that they do not have to be replanted every spring like annual flowers. Most perennials do not have as long or showy blooming period as some of the best annuals such as petunias and marigolds. However, there are an increasing number of perennials which do have a long blooming period.

One of the favorites is Achillea Yarrow. One of the best varieties is a new All-America award winner for 1990 named Summer Pastels. It grows about two feet high and has half shaped pastel colored flowers in a wide range of colors. The flowers are excellent for cutting and can be dried for everlasting bouquets.

When started inside and transplanted outside it blooms from late July to frost the first year. It will start blooming earlier the second year.

Allen Wilson
Intermountain gardening

Perennial Baby's Breath is also well adapted to the Intermountain area. It does not usually bloom the first year unless seeds are started early. Once established, it blooms from June until frost if cut regularly. The tiny white flowers make excellent fillers for floral bouquets and can also be dried.

Columbine or Aquilegia is a flower native to the Intermountain area which has several new improved varieties that bloom for two months or longer in mid-summer. The new Music hybrids and Star varieties are among the showiest.

Shasta Daisies and Gloriosa Danishes are among the showiest flowers for our area, annual or perennial. Both have varieties ranging in height from a foot to three feet. Shastas are white and Gloriosas have a color range of yellows, golds and maroons.

Two of the newest Dianthus hybrids with long blooming period include Princess and Telstar. Telstar Picotee was an All-America Winner in 1989. Both grow about 10 to 12 inches high.

There are several species of Bellflower or Campanula which grow well and bloom for a long period. The Carpathian Bellflower is a nice little, rounded plant growing 6 to 8 inches high with blue and white flowers. Clustered Bellflower (18 to 24 inches), Peach Bells (2 to 3 feet), and Harebell (12 to 18 inches) produce purple to white flowers, with blue the predominant shade.

Other long-blooming perennials include Perennial Geranium (pastel pink to lavender-blue shades), Gaillardia (red and yellow daisy flowers), Statice (pink, yellow, apricot and blue spike flowers for cutting and drying), Perennial Verbena (pink and red shades), Veronica (pink and blue spikes), Iceland Poppy (yellow and orange shades), Lisiris (bright cerise pink) and Erigeron Daisy (lavender to pink).

I have a list of perennial and annual flowers adapted to the Intermountain area which includes plant suggestions. For a copy, send $1 and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Allen Wilson, P.O. Box 343, Rexburg, Idaho 83440.

Allen Wilson teaches horticulture at Ricks College. His column appears every Wednesday in The Times-News.

You can extend space by using stacking shelves like these

Planning can expand space

By The Associated Press

You could make more work and storage space in your present home by thinking twice: Can the area serve more than one purpose, and is there available vertical "air" space?

Even a small kitchen usually can accommodate a multi-purpose spot for household paperwork and meal planning, according to Better Homes & Gardens' Remodeling Ideas magazine.

And consider wallpaper and doorspace in addition to floorspace, advises Judith Miley, spokeswoman for Clairson International, makers of closet and storage systems. You may have more cubic footage available than you realize.

The key to working out a multi-purpose work space is to figure out which tasks are done regularly and base the design on those needs.

If you cook and entertain frequently, then you probably can use a desk for meal planning and shelves-deep-enough-for-cookbooks. The same area can double-as-a-family-message, study and computer center, complete with wall-mounted cabinets, shelving bins, wallphone, stationery and books.

You might choose a flat display rack similar to those in stores if many of the cookbooks are in large formats. A stacked desk and shelf combination for the personal computer might be the best choice if you manage household accounts on a PC. Keep in mind that reading and writing by hand require a desk height of about 30 inches, while a computer or typewriter keyboard should be on a surface about 26 inches high.

Also provide a stable power source for the computer, which can lose its memory or scramble your work during power surges caused by use of other appliances or temporary electrical outages. Power strips or boxes with fused protection against electrical surges and spikes, available in hardware and electronics stores, can be mounted easily to existing outlets.

Use overhead shelves to store small equipment and other items you need frequently but want out of the way. A cork bulletin board mounted next to the wall phone will cut down desktop clutter.

Miley suggests you analyze each room for inventive ways to make better use of the space you have. Your bathroom linen closet could be turned into a miniature laundry with a compact, stackable washer-dryer (since it's often right on plumbing mains), then bins can be accommodated on wall-running shelves in the bathroom or with tiered shelves in part of a nearby closet outside the room. If you are replacing the tub, consider putting the new one on a platform, with storage drawers in the platform top.

While you can maximize cubic footage for storage as part of a renovation project, there still are ways to reorganize your existing space without rebuilding, Miley says. She suggests using stacking shelves, double-hanging shelf-and-rod combinations, vertical dividers, wall-to-wall shelving, or even automated revolving retrieval systems, which her company markets under the Closet-Maid-and-Keiji trademarks. Most of these pieces are based on coated metal wire, with wood and laminates.

You also can find useable kitchen space by suspending cookware and lightweight plants from ceilings where there isn't traffic, or hanging shallow, coated-wire bins in existing shelving. Put tiered shelves in previously unused corners.

'Idaho Master Gardener' class starts

TWIN FALLS — Friday is the registration deadline for the upcoming "Idaho Master Gardener" class that will begin next week through the University of Idaho's Cooperative Extension Service.

The course, slated from 9 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. Wednesdays and Fridays March 2 through March 23, will offer information about a wide variety of horticultural subjects. Areas to be addressed will include lawn care; ornamental trees and shrubs; insect, disease and weed control; pesticide safety; soil and water management; fruit and vegetable culture; plant propagation; houseplants; garden flowers; and greenhouse and nursery management.

Participants who complete the course are certified as "Master Gardeners," and they will be asked to provide volunteer leadership and educational services to the community. They may be asked to answer questions, give horticultural talks, conduct workshops and perform other related activities.

Anyone interested in taking the course is asked to pre-register by Friday. For more information, or to register, contact Bob Vodranska, extension agricultural agent for Twin Falls County, at 734-9590, or stop by 246 Third Ave. E.

Chile

Caution is in order when handling hot chiles. The flesh is not hot, but the heat comes from capsaicin present in the seeds and the ribs. If you remove seeds and ribs, the pepper's intensity will diminish markedly.

Gloves are recommended to wear while working with peppers. Handling the skin and then licking the fingers or rubbing the eyes will burn the tongue or sting the eyes. It's smart to use a kitchen fan or open a window when grinding chiles.

Some of the more commonly found chiles with their various names follow:

- Anheim: Also known as long green chile, New Mexico or Texas chile. Pale to medium green and only mildly piquant. Good for stuffing, salsas and casseroles.

- Cherry Pepper: The small round, somewhat flattened green and red peppers with diameters the size of quarters. Served pickled and in gardenia.

- Hungarian Wax: A canary yellow color, turning salmon and scarlet, it comes three to five inches long and about 1/4 inches across. Good for frying.

- Jalapeno: These thick-meated, plump peppers turn from shiny dark green to bright red. Versatile, they adapt to a range of dishes.

- Pasilla: The true pasilla is dark green, long, and tapering. It is used in meat entrees, tamales and quesadillas.

- Pequin: A tiny hot chile usually sold dried, this one is sometimes available fresh in roadside stands.
- Poblanos: Puffy and large—the three-inch-wide stem ends taper to a pointed tip. It is used for rellenos and making thick rich sauces.

- Serrano: Medium green, like a bullet, this one is very versatile.

- Thai: These slender, pointed pods are usually straight and hot.

It is not necessary to roast chiles in order to remove the skin. A vegetable peeler works well on thick-meated chiles.

To roast them, one may use a grill, a broiler or a griddle or comal (a type of griddle). Then the hot roasted chile is slipped into a plastic bag or wrapped in a damp cloth to sweat for 5 to 10 minutes until the skin slips easily. Using a small paring knife or gloved fingers, peel the skin under running water and rinse.

Avocado and salsa make tasty omelets

By the Seattle Times

The following quick and easy recipe was developed by CeCe Sullivan, home economist on the staff of The Seattle Times:

OMELETTE WITH AVOCADO AND SALSA

- (3 servings)
1 medium avocado, peeled and cut into ½-inch cubes
2 teaspoons lime juice
6 eggs
¼ teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 tablespoon margarine
¼ cup shredded jack cheese
3 tablespoons salsa
- In a small bowl, combine the avocado and lime juice, tossing to coat.
 - Whisk together the eggs, salt and pepper. In a 9-inch nonstick skillet, heat the margarine over medium heat. Add the eggs and stir. Continue stirring until the eggs start to set, about 4 minutes.
 - When the omelette is almost dry on top, sprinkle the cheese over the top and spoon half of the avocado over one side of the omelette. Loosen the bottom of the omelette from the pan and slide onto a large plate, folding over.
 - Garnish each serving with the remaining avocado and a spoonful of salsa.

Letters of thanks

Business generously aids walking group at mall
 This is to express our thanks and appreciation to the staff of For Health Only in the Magic Valley Mall.
 We accompany a group of developmentally delayed adults who enjoy the walking opportunities at the mall. Knowing there are no public cost racks available, this business was generously volunteered to provide a rack for our use, thus eliminating the need to stack coats near the entrance.
 We want to thank these individuals for seeing a need and responding to it. Their consideration and courtesy is greatly appreciated.

Attention Deficit Disorder presentation was valuable
 On behalf of the Association for Learning and Behavior Problems, I would like to thank "The Times-News" for their presentation of the presentation of Dr. Cantrell Nielsen of Boise.
 Dr. Nielsen's discussion on teaching, disciplining and parenting children with Attention Deficit Disorder was very helpful for educators and parents. We appreciate the assistance of our local media in informing the public about this event.

Group appreciates help with annual variety show
 The Twin Falls Mental Health Association wants to publicly thank the many talented persons in the area who gave so willingly of their time and talents to make our annual Variety Show such a success.
 Among the groups were the JUMP Community, barbershop quartets, Liz Pierce Combo, Top Hat Dancers and Aileen Weir Dancers, as well as 20th Century Club members who modeled historical costumes.
 A special thanks to Jenn Hovey, Robert Newman, Art Frantz, Audean King and Mike and Vern Redman, as well as all the people who helped behind the scenes.

 We also want to thank all those who attended, especially the patrons, sponsors, media and First Federal Savings Bank for providing programs and tickets for this annual event. Proceeds from this annual event support our Hotline (733-0122) and emergency medical funds, as well as education about mental health.

Most short men do just fine
 DEAR ABBY: "Tall in California" insisted in her letter that short men had a tendency to come on too strong in order to compensate for their shortness.
 I was recently watching the TV special "Gandhi," which left me quite puzzled. Why was this short guy doing all these wonderful things for humanity?
 Then I recalled the letter from "Tall in California" and it all became crystal clear to me! Gandhi was overcompensating out of frustration from being unable to date tall California girls.
 And then there was Einstein, of course! I had always wondered why this little man of underaverage height bothered to completely revolutionize modern scientific thought with his theory of relativity. It should have been done by someone big and tall — like John Wayne.
 What a tragedy that we can no longer reach Gandhi and Einstein with this deep new understanding of human behavior and relieve them of their personality problems.
 On the other hand, what wonderful news to find that if short men behaved just right, they may earn the privilege of dating tall girls. I'm sure Einstein and Gandhi, not to mention

Abigail VanBuren
 Dear Abby

Picasso and Freud, would be drooling at the prospect of dating girls taller than themselves.
 Really, if shallowness has any relation to height, how tall is "Tall in California?"
 — RONALD ANTHONY CROSS; SANTA MONICA

DEAR RONALD: She didn't say, but if "Tall" reads this, it will probably cut her down to size.
 DEAR ABBY: I am a 92-year-old veteran of three wars: World War I, World War II and the Korean War. The U.S. Army recently mailed to me 13 medals, including the Bronze Star.
 I have no heirs who would be interested in having these medals, so if you will suggest a manner of disposal, I would very much appreciate hearing from you.

CSI computer, flower classes begin
 TWIN FALLS — The following courses begin soon through the College of Southern Idaho.
 • A four-session course on flower arranging begins Feb. 28 at the Idaho State School for the Deaf and Blind in Gooding. Leslie Tennant will instruct students in the various styles of floral arrangements, use of the color wheel in floral design, and selection and handling of garden variety flowers suitable for fresh arrangement. The class will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on Wednesdays, and the fee is $35. Pre-register by calling 536-2600.

• An introduction to computers class is slated for 6:30 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays March 6 through March 29. Anita Fahrenwald will be the instructor, and the cost is $49. Students can pre-register in the Taylor Building records office.
