Louisiana passes late abortion bill

The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, La. — The state Legislature on Sunday passed a restrictive bill that would ban most abortions and sentence doctors who perform them to up to 10 years' hard labor.

The state Senate earlier had failed to override the governor's veto of an even harsher measure that would have restricted abortion even in cases of rape and incest.

But Sunday night's measure was still the strictest state abortion bill in the nation.

The bill passed 83-22 in the House after a 32-7 vote in the Senate. It passes now to Gov. Buddy Roemer, who has indicated in the past he would accept such a bill.

The bill bans abortions except in cases of rape, incest or where the mother's life is in danger. It carries a penalty of up to 10 years in prison and a $100,000 fine for doctors who perform abortions. The Louisiana Senate earlier had failed to override Gov. Buddy Roemer's veto of a bill that didn't allow abortion even in instances of rape and incest exceptions. So Sen. John Saunders amended anti-abortion language onto an unrelated House-passed bill.

Roemer has indicated he would accept an abortion bill that contained the rape and incest exceptions. His spokesman said Roemer had not seen the bill that was hurried through the Legislature on Sunday and would not comment on it until Monday.

"We've just seen the Legislature go from the most restrictive abortion bill in the nation to the most absurd," said Terry Bartlett of Planned Parenthood of Louisiana. "The only thing that surpasses it is the mockery of the legislative process."

"Only in Louisiana could you have a flag burning bill become an abortion bill."

The bill Saunders chose to amend was another controversial bill — one that would lower the penalty to a $25 fine for people who beat up flag burners. Saunders' version of the bill stripped it of the flag burning provisions, which were headed for failure in the Senate, and inserted the abortion issue.

Sen. Mike Cross, the Senate sponsor of the vetoed bill, opposed Saunders' bill. He and other proponents had hoped to pass a strict bill that would be challenged all the way to the Supreme Court, leading to a showdown over the 1973 high court ruling that legalized abortion.

Saunders said his amendment was the only chance the state had of passing an anti-abortion bill.

"I don't want any more abortions than we have to have." Please see BILL/A2

Lawyers begin taking on accountants over audits

By Craig Lincoln Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS A new trend in the financial world is appearing in the Magic Valley — one accountants aren't excited about.

In the past few months, at least three lawsuits have been filed in the Magic Valley area charging that accountants allegedly performed negligent audits or accounting work.

Robert and Norma Blass, who were on the board of a failed bean warehouse, say their accounting firm neglected to tell them of the warehouse's condition. They are asking for $1.2 million in damages.

Filer-based Logan Farm Equipment Co. is suing its auditors over a faulty audit.

Logan claims $16,745 in damages.

The insurance company for the Boy Scouts of America Snake River Area Council says the scout's auditor should have detected a long-term embezzlement sooner than he did. Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. is asking for $25,000 in damages in the case.

The Idaho Supreme Court recently ruled, in its first accountant malpractice case, that accountants may be liable to more than just the business they audited when a faulty financial statement is certified.

Lawsuits against accountants have been around for a long time," Twin Falls accountant Rex Leforgee said. "But in our litigious society, they have grown like lawsuits against every other business."

Accountants have been caught up in the national financial messes of the 1980s, and may be an increasingly popular target of investors, business owners and others. A February 1989 U.S. General Accounting Office report placed some of the blame for failed savings and loan institutions on sloppy auditing.

"The results of our study indicate that significant improvements are needed" in savings and loan audits, the GAO concluded.

"I think lawyers finally became aware that there was another pocket," local attorney M. Gary Atkinson said. "Where they could prove liability, here was another pocket."

Idahoans bickering over use of Snake River water

Los Angeles Times

SHELLEY Here in the heart of potato country, where the ever-flowing Snake River generates cheap electricity, people were both amused and scornful as they brushed aside a recent proposal to channel river water to parched Southern California.

Among themselves, though, Idahoans bicker fiercely over use of the Snake, which was named for its meandering 1,038-mile course.

At issue now is the city of Idaho Falls' 1984 application to build a hydroelectric power plant and dam on the western fringe of this small (pop. 3,680) town.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is expected to rule on the application this summer. For nearly six years, the project has provoked allegations of deception, greed and ecological disregard between Shelley and Idaho Falls communities separated by seven miles of interstate 15 in southeast Idaho.

"They're trying to build an electrical empire when we don't need more electricity," says Gerald Jayne, president of the statewide Idaho Environmental Council.

Jayne and a throng of residents of Shelley contend construction of the power plant will do irreparable harm to eagles, waterfowl, otter, trout and numerous other species — as well as disrupt several potato farms.

In Idaho Falls (pop. 42,830), where nearly $1 million already has been spent on studies aimed at winning a federal permit, Councilman Wes Deist and others insist the project is a scam.

Bush says he'll brief summit leaders on Soviet aid appeal

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — President Bush threw a Texas-style welcome for Western leaders Sunday on the eve of an economic summit already divided by an appeal from Mikhail S. Gorbachev for aid to bolster the crumbling Soviet economy.

U.S. and British officials dug in their heels against direct aid. But Prime Minister Brian Mulroney was more sympathetic, extending commercial credits to Moscow and saying, "Houston has to provide the beginnings of an economic response."

Bush said he would present a letter from Gorbachev when leaders of the world's seven richest democracies convene Monday for their 16th annual economic summit. The letter, dispatched July 4, came to Bush in his role as summit host.

To strengthen the Soviet case for aid, foreign ministry spokesman Gennadi Gerasimov said Moscow was taking steps demanded by Bush. He said the military was being cut down to size, and that Moscow's huge subsidies to Cuba would "fade away, but not tomorrow."

Two of the Western leaders delayed their arrivals to attend the World Cup soccer championship in Rome. Helmut Kohl cheered West Germany to a 1-0 victory over Argentina, and Italy's Giulio Andreotti was there to present the trophy.

Trade and environmental issues were being aired at the summit, but the question of direct aid to Moscow topped the agenda. The United States, Japan and Britain said Moscow wasn't ready for aid from the West, while West Germany, France and Italy were ready to plunge ahead.

Japan to spend $330 million on U.S. cultural relations

The Baltimore Sun

HOUSTON — To help overcome what it is calling a "sense of mistrust" in the United States toward Japan, the Japanese government is undertaking a $330 million effort to make Americans more familiar with Japan's cultural and social life. Tokyo officials disclosed Sunday on the eve of the seven-nation economic summit.

The project is part of Japan's drive to assume a more forceful role internationally as an economic superpower as U.S. clout wanes and to arouse more U.S. interest in the Far East.

"To underscore the importance Japan attaches to its new plan for improving U.S.-Japanese relations, Prime Minister Toshiruki Kaifu discussed it with President Bush as part of their pre-summit talks."

Kaifu is to announce the plan Thursday in an Atlanta speech following the summit.

The funds will be spent in large part to finance Japanese language courses in U.S. colleges and universities and to support student and teacher exchange programs, officials said.

"Japan and the United States have become so interdependent that we believe it is in our mutual interest to improve our relations," Kaifu said.

but not tomorrow," as the Soviets shift to market prices for sugar purchases and oil sales. Mulroney, he said, "We are now taking steps to cut our military to size. That is why they are grabbing some of the general's."

"Canada was not ready to provide direct aid," but Mulroney said, "Yes, we will provide credits ... We want to send out a signal that this leadership in the Soviet Union is valid and valuable." The $2 billion (Canadian, about $1.7 billion in U.S. funds) in credits have been granted for wheat and other products.

National security adviser Brent Scowcroft said Gorbachev is asking for help for a couple years as he implements his economic reforms.

"It will be a time of austerity and troubles, and what he would like is some assistance to help tide over while those economic restructuring programs are taking hold," Scowcroft said on CNN.

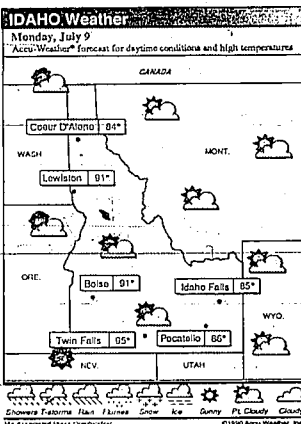

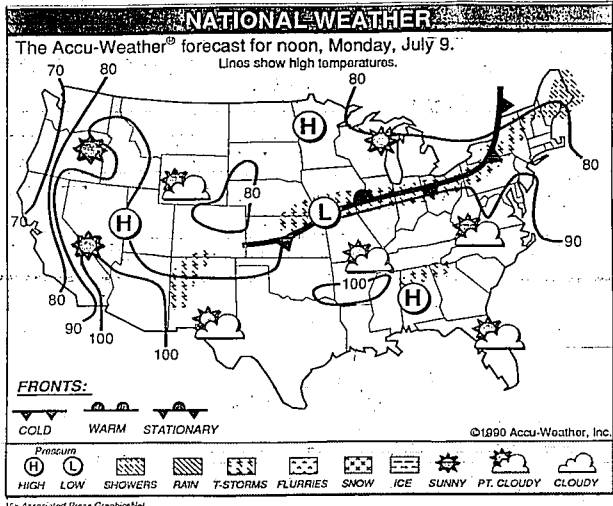

He said Gorbachev was interested in "food aid, consumer aid ... to give some hope to the average Soviet citizen that things are getting better." Asked if the United States would provide that help, Scowcroft said, "It's very difficult for the United States."

Bush would not describe Gorbachev's treaty, explaining, "I have some responsibilities to be sure that our summit partners are briefed on that Gorbachev letter before we go public." But sources said the letter was a general appeal for assistance from the West, but made no specific requests.

Weather summary

The National Weather Service in Boise predicts temperatures and thunderstorms will increase over Idaho.

An upper air trough of low pressure along the West Coast, combined with building high pressure at higher levels over the southern states is producing a more southerly flow aloft into the Gen. State. This southerly flow will bring not only warmer temperatures but also substantial moisture from the south as well. The result will be warming and an increase of showers and thunderstorms into much of the coming week.

Mid-week highs may reach near record levels.

Moisture from the south increases over southern Idaho Sunday, which combined with the hot weather produced some widely scattered thunderstorms.

Lows ranged from the 40s to the mid 50s. Lowest temperatures reported in the state overnight was 40 degrees, reported at Soda Springs, Idaho City and McCall.

The warmest temperature in the state Sunday was 93 degrees at Boise. Yellow Pine reported the coldest at 35 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Sunday, the hottest temperature was 108 degrees at Borrego Springs, Calif. The lowest was 37 at Truckee, Calif. and West Yellowstone, Montana.

Strong thunderstorms batter Minnesota

Strong thunderstorms battered Minnesota on Sunday, while rain also was scattered from the Southwest to the Midwest and over the Southeast, and temperatures were high across much of the nation.

Thunderstorms spawned wind up to 70 mph, damaged buildings, uprooted trees, knocked down power lines and flattened fields around Minnesota but no injuries were reported.

Dan Stob, deputy sheriff in Mille Lacs County, said the worst damage in the county was reported by a farmer about 3 miles south of Mille Lacs, north of Minneapolis and about 33 miles northeast of St. Cloud.

S. Africa bombings seen as emergence of right-wing terrorists

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A wave of bombings and attacks is widely seen as the start of a terrorist campaign by right-wing extremists who also want to preserve white rule at any price.

Government and security officials fear the terrorism will be a major threat to stability as white and black leaders seek a peaceful solution to South Africa's centuries-old racial conflict.

The right hopes it can preserve white rule by foiling any peace talks.

"What they are doing is to harm the efforts at reconciliation, as well as the hopes of a peaceful transition to a new society," The Citizen newspaper said in an editorial July 5.

"South Africa does not need white terrorists any more than it needs black terrorists."

Minister of Law and Order Adrian Hanekom said Sunday-nine white, right-wing whites had been detained without charges in connection with a series of bombings against anti-apartheid targets that began on April 12.

Vlok said all nine had been detained under the Internal Security Act, which allows for indefinite detention without trial. "The people arrested are all supporters of a far-right political ideology, but cannot thus far be connected to any particular organization," he said.

Leaders on both sides say right-wing attacks could lead to general racial violence and undermine the peace effort. Black leaders say they will be forced to strike back if their people are hurt by the extremists.

"He had 13 trees down in his yard, a power line down, the roof of his car and one of his shingles off his barn. And one of his hay fields was flattened," Stob said.

Trees were uprooted and power lines torn down all around Minneapolis, said Mike McCooky, a foreman with the city's department. But no major thoroughfares were blocked, he said. Northern States Power Co. spokesman Sam Macaluso said the storm left more than 60,000 customers in the metropolitan area without power.

In southwestern Minnesota, strong wind knocked down trees and power lines in Tracy, leaving much of the town without power. Trees and power lines also were reported down in nearby Hallock and Garvin.

Weather helps Alaska firefighters

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Wildfires continued to spread across Alaska on Sunday but the third straight day of cooler weather and scattered showers slowed the rate at which forests were igniting.

The favorable weather has been helpful to our suppression efforts and hopefully it will continue, said Pat Flowers, a spokesman with the inter-agency fire information center in Fairbanks. "Cloudiness and more rain are forecast."

The cooler weather allowed the 2,100 firefighters assigned to the most threatening of the 203 wildfires burning across the state's vast interior to approach close enough to take the offensive from the flames, said Rob McWhorter of the Bureau of Land Management.

The Tok airport was reopened to civilian air traffic on Sunday as the fire that swept through portions of that town of 1,200 residents was moving away from the Tok and toward the village of Tetlin, 20 miles away, McWhorter said.

Neither Tetlin's homes nor its 60 residents were immediately threatened by the fire, but firefighters were monitoring winds to see which way the fire would go, McWhorter said.

Canceled concert sparks melee
DALLAS (AP) — A dispute with promoters prompted the rap group 2 Live Crew to cancel a concert, triggering a melee by unruly fans that injured two newspaper photographers and a reporter.

The rappers, whose album "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" has been ruled obscene by a federal judge in Florida and banned in San Antonio, refused to play Saturday night at the Longhorn Ballroom after a promoter refused to pay them in advance.

Shortly afterward, about 50 people went on a rampage, breaking chairs and throwing bottles.

Widow says husband warned of blast
CHANNELVIEW, Texas (AP) — The widow of a millwright killed in an explosion at the ARCO Chemical Co. said her husband called her half an hour before the blast, saying workers restarting equipment there were afraid it might explode.

Lori Davis, 26, said her husband, Michael, had been working an extended shift at the plant Thursday for Austin-Industrial Inc., a subcontractor at ARCO Chemical. Davis, 24, called home about 11:15 p.m., she said.

Bill

The Senate sustained Rowner's veto of the earlier bill Saturday with a 23-16 vote to override, three short of the needed two-thirds majority.

An even stricter abortion bill was passed in the U.S. territory of Guam. But it has been blocked for now by court challenges. That law makes it a felony to perform an abortion or aid in the procedure, a misdemeanor for a woman to have an abortion and a misdemeanor for a person to solicit a woman to have an abortion.

The Pennsylvania measure, approved in November, requires a woman wait 24 hours before getting an abortion, bans abortions based on the fetus' sex and bans abortions after the 24th week of pregnancy except to save the life of the mother or prevent "substantial and irreversible harm."

A doctor convicted under the selection ban or the 24-week provision could be punished with up to seven years in prison and a $15,000 fine.

As the Senate began its work Sunday, some 1,000 demonstrators gathered on the Capitol steps and in the rotunda that separates the Senate and House chambers. A strong majority appeared to be backers of the anti-abortion bill, but there were also scores of abortion rights activists.

Nearly 100 members of the rotunda, in black spray paint, someone had scrawled the words "Stop Killing the Innocent." A few feet away, abortion-rights advocates had taped a poster to the wall that read simply "Sustain, Sustain, Sustain."

About 300 to 400 of the anti-abortion demonstrators, some carrying Bibles and singing hymns, began a continuous march around the Capitol in the 90-degree heat. "We're marching around the walls of Jericho," one shouted.

At 3:30 p.m., a sudden thunderstorm came up and sent many of the demonstrators scurrying for cover.

Senate President Samuel Nunez said lobbying Saturday and Sunday was intense, with thousands of telephone calls jamming switchboards.

"People were even calling the House switchboard for us because they couldn't get through," Nunez said Sunday morning. "Our secretaries didn't keep any record of how many were for one thing and how many were for another."

"I did get a call from a woman purporting to be representing the Vatican. I talked to that woman who wanted me to change my vote. Naturally, I was suspicious and asked for her phone number. I said I would call her back. Well, she turned out to be a resident of Mandeville and works with the Friends of Americas."

Audits

source for their clients."

Atkinson has been on both sides of the fence; he was a certified public accountant before becoming an attorney.

Leforge calls the problem an "expectation gap" — people expect more from an audit than it is designed to do.

"An audit is the highest standard we have in America for saying 'these books are correct,'" Atkinson said. "And a lot of people rely on them."

Under a standard audit generally isn't designed to catch fraud, Atkinson said. The tests an auditor performs during a standard audit are designed to raise the level of confidence that nothing is wrong, but not to guarantee it.

If someone wants a fraud or an embezzlement investigation, that should be the subject of a totally separate investigation," said Leforge.

An auditor decides, after weighing several factors, how far off the numbers can be on a financial statement and still not be misleading.

For instance, a theft of $10,000 from a business worth $10 million "won't make much of a difference," Leforge said. "If he lifts $1 million, that's probably pretty significant."

"We're saying financial statements reflect the financial position of the company. We're not saying every nickel-and-dime ure—where they are supposed to be," Leforge said.

Twin Falls accountant Dennis Brown is the target of the Boy Scouts lawsuit even though he discovered the embezzlement.

"I'm sure that when the auditors disclose something and find something that actually has fraud, then anybody can say you should have found it earlier," Brown said.

Accountant malpractice lawsuits are the reason some accounting firms won't do audits any more, Brown said.

"I'm starting to move into that direction myself," Brown said, especially after one of his potential clients asked him how much liability insurance he had.

"I see a trend in society where people don't want to take responsibility for their actions and look for somebody to blame," Brown said.

But local attorney Monte Carlson said he views the trend as attempts to make professionals responsible.

"Lawyers have been hit and, quite frankly, I think accountants and engineers are next," Carlson said. "Run that by a doctor, and he will say, 'join the club.'" is important that the two countries come to understand each other to a much greater extent," said Taizo Watanabe, Japan's chief spokesman at the summit.

Japan

While many in Japan, especially in business and government, have demonstrated a keen knowledge of U.S. politics and society and an ability to speak English, the United States has been much more oriented in language studies and culture toward Europe.

Aside from its cultural initiative, Japan made clear Sunday that it intends to use its economic power and growing global influence at the summit by rallying behind the United States on liberalizing farm trade and opposing economic aid to Soviet Union.

These are the two issues that are splitting President Bush from most of the European summit leaders.

The U.S.-Japan alliance was emphatically affirmed at the Kaifu-Bush session before the summit, according to officials from both countries.

But comments from the two sides demonstrated that the growing relationship goes beyond these two issues.

As the world's largest aid supplier, Japan is showing its willingness to use its enormous funds, derived from its trade surplus, to back the basic policies of the United States, which, as the world's largest debtor nation and largest export market for Japan, is short of cash.

Japanese officials said they were working up a technical aid package to help Panama, devastated by the actions of the regime of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega and the U.S. military action to oust him.

An economic aid package is also being prepared to shore up the new democratic government in Nicaragua and to reduce pollution in Mexico, the officials said.

hydro plant is an economical hedge against uncertain energy supplies of the future.

Southwest Idaho, shouldered on the east by the Grand Tetons, is both energy and environmentally conscious. On the one hand, thousands are employed in nuclear defense research at the Idaho National Engineering Lab. And nearby Arco claims to be the first city lighted by nuclear power.

On the other, the region sports a variety of game species and its tributaries are internationally renowned.

Others have a stake in the Snake, too. Commercial barges weighted with commodities and potato farmers irrigated with river water also trace their vitality to it.

Indeed, Shelley, whose high school mascot is the "Russel," is the center of the largest potato-producing region in the nation's number one spot.

Ted Harder's family has been growing potatoes on a 350-acre riverside farm since 1942. Twelve-foot high dikes for the proposed Shelley hydro plant would replace the shoreline homes of Harder and his son, Doug, who is gradually inheriting the family farm. The project's canals would supplant their potatoes.

Like several neighbors, Harder says he is not budging and has refused Idaho Falls' offer of $500 to allow biologists, engineers and others access to his land for studies crucial to obtaining the license to build the plant.

"I've got some things you sell and some things you don't sell, some things you can't put a price on," says

Harder, 58.

When Harder and others learned that Idaho Falls had designs on their stretch of the river, they organized "Save Our Snake." Though Councilman Deist contends detractors are merely a small "vocal minority," the group boasts nearly 20 dues-paying members and has been formally recognized as intervenors by federal officials.

Like many, Shawna Wardell, a mother of five who is president of Save Our Snake, says enough is enough. The Snake's flow already is interrupted by two dozen power plants and dams including, she notes, Idaho Falls' recently completed Gem State plant just four miles upstream from Shelley.

Idaho Falls has two other plants, and the city produces about half of the 530 million kilowatt hours it uses annually.

At 3½ cents per kilowatt hour, electricity for Snake Falls residents is about as cheap as it comes. Los Angeles residents pay about 8 cents per kilowatt hour.

Idaho Falls' Shelley application faces an uphill climb. Besides federal approval, state agencies also must give the green light. And two, the Department of Fish and Game and the Department of Water Resources have expressed reservations about the project, estimated to cost $24 million to $40 million.

BURLEY — A fire destroyed a barn Saturday southwest of Burley.

Captain Craig Thompson of the Burley Fire Department said firefighters arrived at the fire shortly before 6 p.m.

The wooden barn belonged to Robert L. Ramsey of Burley. Damage was estimated at $15,000. A pickup and a camper were also damaged in the fire, but were not destroyed.

Fourteen firefighters, one engine and two tanker trucks responded to the fire, which took two hours to extinguish.

Thompson did not know whether the property was insured.

The fire started from sparks from a barrel of garbage that was being burned, according to fire department records.

Homemade bread among attractions at Basque picnic

GOODING — Gooding County's annual Basque Picnic has been scheduled for Sunday.

The luncheon picnic will be held at West Park and includes a menu of barbecued lamb or beef, steaks, green salad, beans, hot rolls and rice, which traditionally takes the place of potatoes in the Basque diet.

Light eaters may elect to try chorizos, for $1.50 each. Wine, beer and pop will also be served.

The event will begin about 11 a.m. with a Mass in the park. Activities will include games, races and exhibition weight lifting. Homemade bread will be judged and then auctioned off, along with two lambs. There will also be public dancing, following the traditional Basque dancing by local and out-of-town troupes.

State can fine businesses for unscrupulous practices

TWIN FALLS — Consumers with complaints about business practices now have some additional options under the law, according to Attorney General Jim Jones.

The Idaho Consumer Protection Statute, which went into effect on July 1, allows the state to seek civil fines of up to $5,000.

The new law is designed to protect consumers from unscrupulous businesses, Jones said.

It contains an "unconscionable practice" provision that allows the state to move against businesses that prey on individual unable to protect their own interests.

"My office receives an average of 450 to 500 consumer complaints each month," Jones said. "This new bill creates a level playing field for businesses, while protecting the interests of consumers."

A copy of the law is available by writing the Consumer Protection Unit, Idaho Attorney General, Statehouse, Room 113A, Boise 83720 or by calling 334-2424.

INEL plans above-ground site for some waste

The Associated Press and The Times-News

IDAHO FALLS — Buried low-level nuclear waste, a source of concern for Magic Valley residents who get their water from the aquifer that underlies the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, could be moved above ground.

By the 1995 budget year, the INEL plans to spend at least $21.9 million on design and preliminary construction of an above-ground disposal site.

The new low-level complex may be operating by 1997. It could be used to minimize the waste and store it above ground, said Walt Sato, environmental chief for the Department of Energy in Idaho Falls.

No site has been selected for the facility, Sato said.

Design work is scheduled to be finished by the end of the 1993 budget year, with construction due to begin during the 1995 budget year.

Much of the INEL's low-level waste is now being buried at the Radioactive Waste Management Complex. An estimated 2.4 million cubic feet has been buried there already.

The INEL is now working on a "performance assessment" of the waste burial site, spokesman Brad Bugger said. Researchers are studying the effects of burrowing rodents and the flood plain there to determine if another disposal method is needed.

Few details are available from a new Department of Energy five-year plan for cleanup and environmental compliance released last week. But it does add $700 million to DOE-Idaho's waste storage and compliance spending blueprint through 1995.

Snake River Alliance director Kerry Cooke is non-committal about the waste storage project. She said the Energy Department should complete an environmental impact statement on it to explain the effects to the public.

Duck Valley

Tribes gather to celebrate the past, look to the future

The Associated Press and The Times-News

BOISE — The Shoshone-Paiute Indian Tribes who live on the Duck Valley Indian Reservation that straddles in Idaho-Nevada border southwest of Twin Falls are looking for economic alternatives and political muscle.

They hope to find both here this week in an historic meeting of Idaho's six Indian nations which will celebrate their rich cultures and focus the debate on their role in contemporary America.

The All-Idaho Indian Expo beginning today marks the first common gathering of all six Idaho tribes, which have become forces to be reckoned with on issues like the use of reservation land, high-stakes bingo, health care and tribal unemployment.

"To us, this is an historical event," said Sharin Smart, Expo organizer for the Shoshone-Paiute Tribes. "Originally, we were enemies."

The conclave, which runs through July 15 in Boise, could also attract as many as 30 out-of-state bands of the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians.

But the expo will focus as much or more on the tribes' future as it will on their past. An Indian Issues Symposium is slated for Wednesday through Friday at Boise State.

The federal government has threatened to close the hospital on the Duck Valley Reservation, Smart said. That means the Shoshone-Paiutes in need of medical care would have to drive more than 100 miles to reach Mountain Home.

Faced with developments like that, Indian leaders are learning to exert their political force and are being courted by a number of camps, including environmentalists, expo organizer Delbert Farmer, a Shoshone-Bannock from Fort Hall, said.

"The tribes have unique rights on the reservation. They carry a lot of weight on political issues," he said. "I think it's sort of a caution. They need to make sure they're supporting the right issue."

"The tribes have a unique kinship with Idaho and the country. The Indians rely on the government for some things but have suffered the loss of their lands and freedoms at the hands of the bureaucracy. They were not allowed American citizenship until 1924, Smart said.

Reservation land in Idaho has dwindled since the late 1800s as whites altered treaties to usurp more acreage for their own use. The Indians are battling the move to allow the states to apply their laws on the reservation.

"It's been a thorn in the tribes' side," Farmer said. "There's no doubt we're Idaho people. But we have a feeling like the Jews in the Holocaust. There are things we will remember forever." A U.S. Department of the Interior legal opinion sided with the Shoshone-Bannocks as they opened their first bingo game on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation over Memorial Day weekend this year.

The agency since has agreed to review the situation after Gov. Cecil Andrus and Attorney General Jim Jones questioned whether the gaming was legal under state law. "I think it's a bad issue to tackle," Farmer warned Idaho officials. "I think the state could be beaten if it came to that."

Declo summer bash set

By Stacey Kindig Times-News correspondent

DECLO — Declo Days will be just one day this year, but the citizens of this Cassia County town plan to pack 100 years of celebration into next Saturday.

People are encouraged to dress as they would have 100 years ago to join in on the state's Centennial celebration.

At 3:30 p.m. a time capsule will be buried in Kiwanis Park, capping off the day. The capsule is to include a videocassette, "A Day in the Life of Declo," a registrar signed by those attending the Declo Days festivities, the winning essay from a Declo elementary student and other memorabilia.

A Declo alumni breakfast kicks off the morning at 7 a.m. On the menu will be pancakes, sausage, eggs and a beverage costing $3 for adults and $2 for kids 10 and under.

Also at 7, rides begin in the Centennial balloon. Rides will last as long as the weather stays cool and there will be a minimal charge, not yet set.

The town parade begins at 11 a.m. Each year the parade features honored citizens and clubs.

Historic tours through the city, on horse-drawn wagons, will begin after the parade and continue throughout the afternoon.

A modeling show with an old-fashioned theme is planned for the afternoon. Dated fashions from swimwear to wedding dresses are expected to be revealed from the closets and attics of local residents.

Boise woman in fair shape after fall in the Sawtooths

The Associated Press and The Times-News

STANLEY — A 19-year-old Boise hiker who fell on a steep rock slope in the Sawtooth Wilderness was saved early Saturday in a dramatic rescue by helicopter and a team using climbing ropes.

Tama Haynes was listed in fair condition in St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise, where she was flown after the rescue operation involving two dozen paramedics, law enforcement personnel and volunteers.

The Boise State University architecture student suffered a fractured leg and jaw and multiple cuts and bruises in the fall.

"If she would have stayed up there (all night, uncovered, she would have died of exposure)," said Phil Norris, assistant field supervisor with the Ada County Paramedics.

"They just found her crumpled in the rocks. She was conscious but in a lot of pain."

Members of the paramedics' Special Operations Team were dropped in by the hospital's Life Flight helicopter in pitch blackness on a rock near the site.

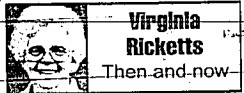

The area is at about 9,000-foot elevation on 70-degree slopes said to be too difficult even for mountain goats to use.

Area's notables helped with the birth of the state

So little has been written about southeastern Idaho's role in the statehood process that it would be easy to assume the area had no influence in the events.

In reality, the area played an interesting and important role in the formation of the constitution and the state.

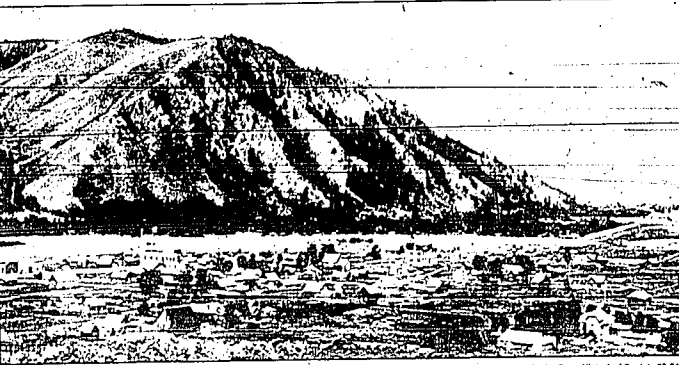

Virginia Ricketts Then and now

Future Magic Valley was composed of only two counties — Alturas and Cassia — prior to February 1889, when Alturas County was divided to dilute its influence in the territory.

The division cut Alturas into three counties: Elmore County in the west, Logan County in the south and Alturas County — a fraction of its former self — in the north.

In spite of all the political maneuvering, or perhaps because of it, 11 of the area's leaders, including Shoshone Journal owner W.C.B. Allen, represented the three counties at the constitutional convention.

When the 64 men from Idaho Territory's 17 counties gathered in Boise on July 4, 1889, to write a constitution, the statehood was still only a dream in the minds of the people of the territory since Congress was showing little enthusiasm for the project.

Kotchum in the 1890s was the home of A.J. Plinkham, the first secretary of state.

Man accused in bombing plot remembered as 'nice' neighbor

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — An Iowa native living recently at the white supremacist Aryan Nations compound in Hayden Lake and remembered by an Arwan neighbor as someone who went out of his way to be nice is facing federal charges in what the FBI describes as a plot to blow up minority hangouts and a synagogue.

John Winslow, a Des Moines native, is accused by federal officials of plotting to blow up homosexual hangouts, bars frequented by blacks, Korean-owned businesses and a synagogue in the state of Washington.

An FBI document filed in federal court in Seattle said the 29-year-old Winslow talked in one of the plots of a "kill zone" — a place to strategically place the bomb to kill the most people as they scurried out of a bar.

"This thing is so bizarre I wish I could understand it," said Winslow's mother, Ann Winslow of Des Moines. "I don't know what to say. I'm sick about it."

Winslow, who was released from the Army in February, is in jail in Boise on charges of conspiracy to bomb, knowingly making, receiving and possessing pipe bombs and illegally carrying firearms. He is scheduled to go on trial Oct. 1 and faces up to 20 years in prison and fines of $750,000.

Rob McKenzie, 57, a neighbor of Winslow's when he was growing up in Des Moines, said Winslow was "Rob was the kind of kid who went out of his way to be nice to you."

Another neighbor, Pat Hardy, said "I'm stunned. He always seemed like he had his head screwed on right."

An FBI document filed in Seattle said the FBI learned of Winslow's plans when it began to electronically eavesdrop on conversations between him and Steven E. Nelson, 34, another Aryan Nations member. It is believed the agents were tipped off by an inside informant.

"On April 8, 1990, agents overheard Winslow and Nelson describe their plans to manufacture a bomb and destroy a gay bar in Seattle," the document said. Court records said agents followed Winslow on April 14 to a mountainous area outside Hayden Lake and saw him detonate a pipe bomb.

The FBI contends that Winslow had targeted the Neighbors Disco, a homosexual bar in Seattle. Also on the list, the FBI said, were the Rain-tree, a bar with predominantly black clientele in Tacoma, Wash., and an unidentified synagogue in Seattle.

Undertaken by the lack of interest in Washington, D.C., the leaders of the territory determinedly and successfully pursued their goal in the 364 days that followed the start of the constitutional convention.

The delegates labored through the hot summer days, ending their task on Aug. 6, 1889, when they each signed the completed document.

Three months later, on Nov. 5, the electors gave emphatic approval of the document by voting 12,398 to 1,773 to ratify the document. And the following April, the House of Representatives accomplished the first of three necessary steps to statehood when it passed the admissions legislation.

To complete the process, President Benjamin Harrison signed the act on July 3, 1890, two days after approval from the Senate, creating a new state for the federal union and adding a new star to its flag.

In Idaho, celebrations started immediately, continuing through the Fourth of July.

Following the formal and impromptu celebrations, the new state proceeded to select its first officials.

The strong leadership from old Alturas County that had caused so much jealousy in other areas of the territory was still evident during the election process — almost half of the officials chosen were residents of towns that are now part of the Magic Valley.

A.J. Pinkham of Ketchum was named secretary of state; George H. Roberts of Hailey, became attorney general; Joseph H. Harroun of Albion became State Superintendent of Public Instruction; and Isaac N. Sullivan of Hailey was named the first chief justice of the Supreme Court.

In addition, Charles O. Stockslager of Hailey was named the first district judge and G.C. Barmum of Shoshone, the first district attorney for the 4th Judicial District.

Last week, celebrations were held throughout the state, just as they were a century ago. And each county of the state was once again represented in Boise during a state event, the official centennial celebration.

This time, however, the delegates did not spend their time working on a constitution. Instead, they symbolized the uniqueness of each of the 44 counties that together make up the whole that is our equally unique state of Idaho.

Virginia Ricketts' column on Magic Valley history appears every other Monday.

The full names of Hayes' two climbing companions were not available Saturday, but they were reported to be un injured.

Haynes fell at about 3:15 p.m. Friday while the trio of "totally inexperienced" climbers was taking what they thought was an easier way down from a hike, said Robert Heffner, an assistant paramedics supervisor and one of the first rescuers to reach her.

The three had set up camp near one of the Bench Creek lakes that overlook Redfish Lake, Heffner said.

They went for a day hike around the Hansen resort slope (via a trail), went to the top and figured it was easier to come off of the south face down these rocks," he said.

Haynes' companions were below her when she slipped and fell about 50 feet, Heffner said.

While the male friend stayed with the victim, the other woman climbed down to find help.

"(She) ran into somebody on a mountain hike. He came down and notified the Forest Service ranger station," said Custer County Sheriff's Deputy Steve Stuart.

Gary Gadwa, an Idaho Fish & Game conservation officer, hiked in to help to reach Hayes. An Idaho National Guard medical evacuation helicopter then flew in, but was too large to rescue her in the steep terrain, Stuart said.

Life Flight's Gary Brennan, an experienced backcountry pilot, found a safe place to drop Heffner and paramedic Dennis Putman off from the skids of his aircraft a quarter-mile from where the Fish & Game officer flashed a flashlight.

"Then the rest of the night was hell," Heffner said, describing the operation in breezy 40-degree temperatures illuminated only by their headlamps.

Joined by two other Ada County paramedics who arrived by helicopter, they stabilized Hayes, placed her in a rescue basket, and began lowering her with ropes on the shale rock.

Aided by two volunteers from Sawtooth Outfitters, she was lowered about 80 feet down a ravine to a ridge where the rescuers could walk.

"Most of the time she slept," Heffner said of the arduous hour-long transport over 1,500 feet of nearly vertical terrain to a helicopter landing site. It had been cleared by Fish & Game and Forest Service personnel and outfitters welding chain saws. The supplies were brought in with the help of a pack-horse string.

Haynes was flown at sunrise to Stanley and then to Boise.

"It's a dangerous area for experienced climbers," Custer County deputy Stuart said of the Sawtooth Wilderness. "One of the outfitters said that mountain goats will go into this area, due to the unstable rock conditions," Heffner said.

Some Shoshone-Bannocks threatened to boycott the expo because of the state's bingo campaign, Farmer said, but tribal officials won out and the Sho-Bans will attend.

The Shoshone Nation neither supports nor opposes bingo but recognize there has to be some way for the tribes to earn revenue and employ their members, Smart said.

"Each Idaho tribe will have its own day at the exposition. The Northwest Shoshone Tribe of the Shoshone Nation opens opening day followed in order by the Shoshone-Paiutes, the Nez Perce, the Coeur d'Alenes with the Kootenais and the Shoshone-Bannocks on Friday.

Expo organizers started with five tribes, but the Northwest Shoshone Nation with some members on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation recently was recognized by the federal government, raising the number to six.

Traditional dress, dancing, food, arts, skills and sporting events will be featured each day. The Coeur d'Alenes, for example, will stage a pageant about the coming of the Jesuit priests to the Cataldo area. The Painted Horse Singers' drum group is a chief offering from the Shoshone-Paiutes.

"Our intent is to have the audience close to the participants," said Farmer. "We want to get people interested in knowing more about Indians."

At Boise State University, 20 photographs of Indians shot in the early 1900s but preserved by Idaho photographer J.F. Anderson will be on display, and school officials hope some of the expo participants can help identify the people captured on film by Anderson's camera.

Davis knocks down Breland, takes WBA welterweight title

RENO, Nev. — Aaron Davis dropped Mark Breland in the third round, then put him away for good with a crushing short right in the ninth and took his World Boxing Association welterweight title on Sunday. Davis, whose vision was hampered for most of the fight by a badly swollen right eye, staggered Breland several times with his powerful left, but missed with his right until the final blow with four seconds left in the ninth round. Breland, a 1984 Olympic gold medalist, was an 8-1 favorite to retain his title. He lay still on the canvas for several minutes after the knockout and was taken to St. Mary's Hospital for examination.

Edberg upends sliding Becker in marathon Wimbledon final

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Stefan Edberg, slender and graceful and quietly dangerous, absorbed Boris Becker's power in a furious Wimbledon comeback, then cut him down with one delicate stroke.

Edberg's killer lob, from behind the baseline, as silent and deadly as a knife in the ribs, left Becker broken and stunned and doomed to defeat near the end of their third straight duel for the championship. After three hours of tennis that bounced from boring to brilliant, Edberg's one delf shot gave him his second Wimbledon title with a 6-2, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 triumph Sunday over Becker, the three-time champ.

"This is as good as the first one," said Edberg, who beat Becker for the title two years ago and remains the only player to defeat him on Centre Court. "It is great to go out there and play some really good tennis and then win in a tough fight as it was today."

Edberg's back-to-back victories over Ivan Lendl and Becker repeated his feat at the Masters in New York last December and opened up the question again: Who is No. 1?

The ATP computer says Lendl, with Edberg now second and Becker falling to third. But Edberg, who pocketed $391,000 for the victory, is gunning for the top spot and could reach it by winning again at the U.S. Open.

"I know the No. 1 spot is within reach now, and that's something to look forward to," said Edberg, whose highest year-end ranking was No. 2 in 1987. Edberg struggled against Becker for more than Martina Navratilova did Saturday in capturing her ninth Wimbledon singles title and winning $352,000 by beating Zina Garrison 6-4, 6-1.

If Navratilova's triumph blended artistry and emotion, Edberg's was built on talent and guts. Edberg sailed smoothly through the first two sets, but had to withstand all of Becker's fury in the third and fourth sets before reclaiming control in the end.

Becker never rose to the level of his play when he won in 1985, '86 and '89, and he seemed to have trouble keeping his balance on the slippery, beige turf on the worn Centre Court.

So often did he slide that he could have used some skating lessons from German compatriot Katrinia Witt, who watched the match from the players' guest box.

Edberg won the coin toss and boldly elected to receive, testing Becker's strength from the start two days after Becker had to rally from a set down to beat hard-hitting 18-year-old Goran Ivanisevic.

Becker won the first game but looked sluggish, a half-set late on volleys, as Edberg broke him in the third and fifth games.

Stefan Edberg took his second Wimbledon title in 3 years.

Crisman takes Canyon Springs title by 8 strokes

By Ron Gates Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — James Crisman, entered for the first time in three years, shot his way to the Canyon Springs, Amateur Golf Tournament championship on Sunday with relative ease.

The Boisean, at 65 seven strokes under par on Saturday, nearly matched that in the final round with a 68 that left him with a two-day total of 123, eight strokes ahead of runnerup Jason Meyerhoeffer of Twin Falls.

"I've been hitting it real good for about two weeks, but not making many putts," said Crisman, who became the 15th champion since the event began as the Ore-Ida Tournament in 1975. "But these last two days I've been making my putts."

Hurley's Terry Spackman snapped a tie with Joe Malay of Boise to finish in third place, two strokes behind Meyerhoeffer.

Ted Black and Doug McKay, tied for second a day earlier, sent the first flight to a playoff on Sunday.

The Twin Falls duo again carded identical scores — this time 70s — before Black, by virtue of a 3-5 playoff victory, claimed the title and attending $325 purse.

First day co-leader Duane Schreiber fired a one-over-par 73 in the second round to fall back to third place in that same flight, while Brad Greene ended the two-day tourney fourth at 141.

Kimberly's Greg Hafer outduelled Troy Nelson 61-66 on Sunday, overcoming a two-stroke disadvantage in the process, and capturing the second flight 124-127.

Tom Simmons '62 vaulted him ahead of the pack, his combined 129 good for third place in that division. Bill Durbin, tied for fourth a day earlier, finished the day one stroke off his previous pace, but claimed an undisputed fourth.

In the third flight, Carl Grinstead came from five strokes off the pace, bettering his 65 of a day earlier by six and edging 13-year-old Preston Hafer, a co-leader after one round, 124-125.

Clad Eric of Hansen and Max Wheeler knotted at 127, four strokes ahead of Rick Nelson and Lyle Thorpe, to split the third-place prize.

Mary Fraley took first place in the women's division. Please see CANYON/AT

Thompson holds out; wins Ore-Ida

BOISE — Kathi Riggert of Sudbury, Mass., got her first and only moment in the sun during Sunday's final stage of the Ore-Ida Women's Challenge, briefly stealing the spotlight from overall winner Inga Thompson of Reno, Nev.

It was Riggert's first appearance on the winner's podium during the 17-day, 663-mile Centennial Tour of Idaho. She finished the 30.8-mile St. Luke's/Women's Life Critorium in 1 hour, 13 minutes and 56 seconds.

"I jumped on the second to last corner," Riggert said. "Then I just kept going."

Riggert, riding for the 12th-place Massachusetts Bay Road Club, finished 44th overall among the 57 riders to complete the race.

She held off Ketchum's Katrin Tobin down the final stretch as several thousand spectators cheered.

Riding in the shadow of the Statehouse on a flat, figure-eight course, six riders broke away from the pack with five laps to go and took turns leading until the final sprint. Please see ORE-IDA/AT

W. Germans eke out 3rd World Cup

The Associated Press

ROME — West Germany won the World Cup of penalty kicks with exactly that Sunday as Andreas Brehme scored with six minutes to go for a 1-0 victory over defending champion Argentina.

It was the third world soccer championship for the Germans, tying the record held by Brazil and Italy. And it came in a game marred by fouls in which two Argentines were ejected.

The most critical foul, however, was by Robert Sensini, who hauled down Rudi Voller in the penalty area in the dying minutes with Argentina playing with 10 men. Brehme took the penalty kick and put it in the lower left corner, beating goalkeeper Sergio Goycochea, who had gotten Argentina to the final with two saves in a pair of penalty kick shootouts.

West Germany, which won in 1954 and 1974, also lost in the 1966, 1982 and 1986 finals. Franz Beckenbauer became the first man to captain and coach a World Cup champion.

"We knew we were the best," said

Teammates rush Andreas Brehme, scorer of West Germany's winning goal.

Beckenbauer, who led the Germans to the 1974 championship. "I have to compliment my team, it was full of confidence. It would have been an injustice to reach overtime."

Midway through the second half, Pedro Monzon was shown a red card by referee Edgardo Codesal of Mexico. It was the first ejection in a World Cup final.

The second came after Brehme's goal, when Gustavo Dezotti was thrown out for arguing and bumping the referee.

The frustrated Argentines had lost control.

Brewers overcome 7-0 deficit, hammer Angels 20-7

The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — All of a sudden, Milwaukee turned what looked like a big loss into a runaway win. And make no mistake, it was a runaway — run after run after run.

"We got seven early runs and felt we were in pretty good shape," California manager Doug Rader said. "We got pounded. It's the worst one I've been in."

Milwaukee, which trailed 7-0 in the third inning, scored 20 consecutive runs in the third, fourth and fifth and beat California 20-7 Sunday. The Brewers set a club record for runs in a game, topping a 19-8 victory over Houston on May 31, 1980.

"It was one of those days that no matter what they threw, everything fell in for hits for us," said Jim Gantner, who singled twice and doubled to drive in five runs.

Things got so bad for California that the Angels brought in infielder Donnie Hill to pitch the eighth. He did better than his predecessors, throwing one hitless inning.

"Donnie said he'd give us three innings with his right hand, five with his right arm and two with his left," Rader joked. "So he was the logical guy to go to."

Hill walked one and struck out Rob Deer in holding the Brewers scoreless.

"I didn't want to throw a fastball and get one of our infielders killed," said Hill, who

Bucs limp into All-Star break 1/2 game up on Mets

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — With a half-game lead over the New York Mets in the NL East at the All-Star break, no one could blame the Pittsburgh Pirates' front office if they started the printing presses for playoff tickets. But the order will not come from Manager Jim Leyland.

"If you could point a picture for a first half, it couldn't be much better than this," Leyland said Sunday after the Pirates beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-2.

National League

"I don't ask my team to win. I just ask them to play hard and play smart. We've played tough, we've played hard and we've worked hard. We had an outstanding record in the first half, and there's a lot of things to be grateful for. But there's 81 big ball games to go."

Barry Bonds and Jeff King did most of the offensive damage, each driving in three runs to support Doug Drabek's first victory in 4 1-2 weeks. But Bonds is tempering his enthusiasm despite the Pirates' surprising first half.

"We're just playing hard," he said. "We've got 162 games and 81 don't mean anything."

The victory snapped a five-game winless streak for Drabek, 9-4, who allowed six hits over seven innings for his first triumph since June 6.

"Today was a complete turnaround from this last month," the right-hander explained. "I was able to get the curve ball over for strikes in the beginning of the count, and that helped me out tremendously. My sinker came back, and I was able to get in on left-handed hitters better than I had in the past."

Despite his recent drought, Drabek is off to the best start of his career. And the Pirates are 1-2 in their last two games. Please see NL/AT

Governor capitalizes on Centennial hoopla

BOISE—Is there anybody in Idaho who doesn't know who Cecil Andrus is? Probably not. After a busy round of Centennial events—usually with Idaho's chief executive playing a prominent role—Andrus has been in the headlines and on the telecasts almost non-stop in the past week.

It's the sort of exposure that's priceless to political candidates, and Andrus just happens to be running for his fourth term as governor. Add in 20-plus years in state and national jobs and you get enormous name recognition.

His Republican opponent, Roger Fairchild of Fruitland, had only a long-shot chance of upsetting Andrus before the recent Centennial events, and that slim prospect appears even dimmer now.

Take last Wednesday's "Here We Have Idaho" parade in Boise. An estimated 50,000 people lined the streets as the parade unfolded. Andrus, as usual, was a featured spot as parade grand marshal.

And it wasn't his first big parade of the day. Andrus, state Auditor J.D. Williams and others also took part in the Idaho Falls parade in eastern Idaho before flying back to Boise for the evening event.

Just a day before, Andrus stood before a crowd of thousands at the Statehouse, again giving a featured speech as part of the Statehood Day ceremony. It was televised statewide, and although there's no way of estimating how many people were watching, the audience must have been enormous.

And before a crowd of 21,000 in Bronco Stadium for the "Celebrate Idaho" show Tuesday night, Andrus got the biggest roar of the night when he swept off his cowboy hat to reveal perhaps the most famous bald head in the state.

Fairchild so far has been waging a mostly unpublicized, underdog campaign. While Andrus was getting widespread coverage, Fairchild had to settle for northern Idaho news interviews in which he attacked Andrus as "ceremonial Cecil" for all the public speeches.

Fairchild took part in the Coeur d'Alene Fourth of July parade but missed the big audience in the Boise parade.

While Andrus was at the center of Statehood Day ceremonies at the Capitol, other political figures shared the platform. But they had to be content with an introduction to the crowd and then standing in a hot sun for all of the speeches.

Sen. Mark Ricks, R-Rexburg, was one. He said afterward he thought Andrus took advantage of the situation to give "a very political" speech, telling everyone Idaho's economy was very strong and the state was in perhaps the best condition it has been in during its first 100 years.

Quane Kenyon
Idaho politics

That would tend to tell voters that now is not the time to change leadership, and that Andrus should be elected to another four-year term.

"But he is the governor," Ricks said, acknowledging that there's nothing wrong with Andrus making the key speeches and appearing at all the public events—just bad timing. The Republicans that the governor race fell during the Centennial.

Other politicians didn't miss the opportunity to follow the governor and his wife, Carol, in the big Boise parade.

Williams rode with Bannock County Prosecutor Larry EchoHawk, who is running for attorney general. Attorney General Jim Jones rode side-by-side with Pat Kole of Boise, his former chief of staff who is running for the job Jones is vacating.

Rep. Larry Craig used a stagecoach for his ride, including Sen. Skip Smyser of Parma, who is running for the job Craig is vacating in the bid for the U.S. Senate.

Some of the major Democrats chose to walk the 2½-mile route in sweltering heat. Larry LaRocco, who is running against Smyser, walked with Ron Twilger, Craig's Democratic opponent.

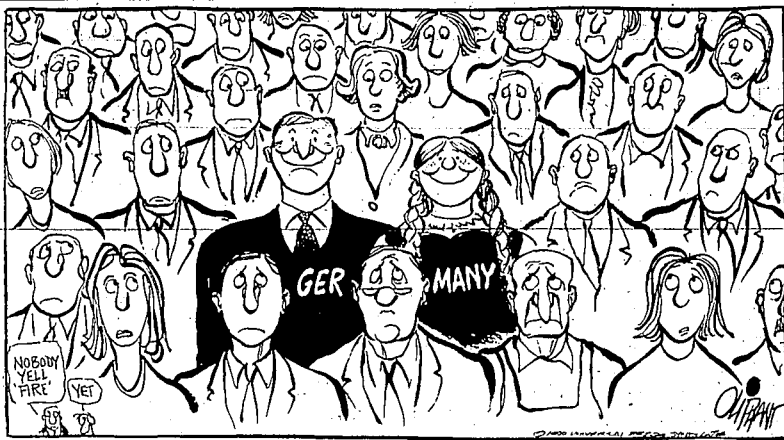

"I'm not hot," said LaRocco, who walked in a black suit and looked like he was. Rep. Richard Stallings also walked the route. While Lt. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter rode horseback. Most of the other political figures in the parade rode in antique cars or wagons.

To show what politicians have to go through during a campaign, consider Smyser's schedule on the Fourth of July. He got up early for a brief appearance at Greenleaf, near his Parma home, before hitting a breakfast in Middleton. Then a quick airplane trip got him to Coeur d'Alene in time for that parade. Another quick jaunt back down the length of the state had him in Boise for the 6 p.m. start of the Centennial parade.

Before the night was over, Smyser made it to the Caldwell fireworks show.

Growth hormone criticism unfounded

Christopher L. Culp

A hormone produced through biotechnology can stimulate increases of up to 25 percent in cows' milk production, but naysayers are already trying to prevent us from taking advantage of these productivity gains.

In April, Wisconsin and Minnesota enacted legislation that bans for one year the sale of bovine somatotropin (BST), also known as bovine growth hormone (BGH). Congress is considering similar legislation that would impose a three-year national moratorium on BST.

Such restrictions are grounded on ideological and economic special interests, not economic and scientific facts. These bans on BST would deprive milk consumers and producers of a useful agricultural innovation.

Two major champions of the anti-BST position are the Foundation for Economic Trends, an ideologically motivated group headed by Jeremy Rifkin, who is opposed to virtually all biotechnology, and Ben & Jerry's Homemade Inc., a Vermont-based ice cream manufacturer.

Their criticisms, while unfounded, hit familiar themes: Innovation is dangerous and benefits only big business. BST's opponents claim that it may be unsafe, possibly inducing premature cancer in infants and possibly promoting breast cancer in women.

A moratorium, they argue, would create time for further research. However, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has already reviewed well over 200 published articles on the subject and has found no credible evidence that BST might prove harmful to humans.

Ben & Jerry's argues that BST is undesirable because it is "unnatural." However, this hormone is a normal component of milk, always present in low concentrations. Whether BST is obtained "externally" or through standard metabolic means, the observed hormone levels in milk are not appreciably changed, industry studies show. Externally produced BST only encourages the cow to do better what God has already made possible.

Criticisms of BST are based more on inference and conjecture than fact. There remains no compelling reason to favor a moratorium. By contrast, it is a well-established scientific fact that BST can increase milk production by 10 percent to 25 percent.

A larger supply of milk would lower dairy prices and benefit consumers. Additionally, the poor would find it easier to avoid caloric deficiency if dairy products were more affordable.

On the producer side, increased productivity could increase farm revenues. Such productivity increases also provide an additional degree of freedom in farming by allowing milk producers more management flexibility. Farmers could increase output or maintain current output with a smaller herd. This added flexibility could actually help small farmers compete better in the marketplace!

Ben & Jerry's is entitled to his opinion, and Ben & Jerry's is entitled to make its ice cream for its own customers. However, it is far from selfless for the manufacturer of a high-price, high-fat ice cream to support legislation that reduces the availability of milk products for lower-income Americans.

The odd combination of anti-technology laws, "socially conscious" ice cream makers and some small farmers should not be allowed to dictate what will or will not "benefit" the American people. Restricting the availability of BST will simply ensure that consumers won't get the chance to decide whether Jeremy Rifkin and Ben & Jerry's might be wrong.

Pan Am Flight 103 victim's father credibly challenges air security

If anyone else claimed to have smuggled a fake bomb, undetected, aboard a scheduled flight from London to New York, the first impulse would be to dismiss the person as a head case.

But when Dr. Jim Swire says he beat the security system at London's Heathrow Airport by doing just that, you have to believe him.

Judging by my own file on Swire, it was just a matter of time before he would put Heathrow's supposedly improved safeguards to the test.

Swire's daughter Flora, 24, was a passenger on Pan Am Flight 103, the jetliner downed by a terrorist bomb over Lockerbie, Scotland, in December 1988, killing all 259 aboard and 11 on the ground.

Although investigators said the bomb—made of Semtex plastic explosive and hidden in a Toshiba radio-cassette player—had been loaded at Frankfurt, Germany, for an earlier leg of Flight 103, Swire refused to packed with harmless marzipan frosting instead of the Czech-made Semtex explosive. Marzipan is a relatively simple composition of ground almonds, sugar and egg white, mixed to a pliable paste that looks and smells like Semtex.

Although Swire declined to name the airline on which he carried the marzipan-packed dummy bomb, it would be stupid to dismiss his claim as the figment of an overwrought imagination.

My personal file on the Pan Am case shows that Swire—a former explosives specialist in a reserve regiment of the Royal Engineers—constructed such a replica, using marzipan, as long ago as May 1989. He then exhibited it during a meeting of Lockerbie victims' relatives at London's Russell Hotel.

"I put in a dummy detonator, timer, batteries and pressure switch," Swire said of that demonstration model. "Any security man could be taught to (detect) it in five minutes."

In the BBC interview, Swire described the replica he smuggled past security three weeks ago as having "a dummy detonator which would have shown up on X-ray, an extra printed circuit board, extra batteries, pressure transducer and so on—all wired up in a form that would have worked if the marzipan had been replaced with Semtex."

Ironically, Swire's flight was actually selected for "special security" spot-checking. His suitcase was opened, and the Toshiba radio-cassette player was personally removed by an inspector, who shook it and then replaced it in the suitcase, which is "now in America," according to Dr. Swire.

But unimproved security at Heathrow is not all that bothers Swire. It is his role in Flight 103 bomb was planted by Ahmad Jibril's Syrian-based Popular Front fraction for a reported $1.3 million commission, which was paid by the government of Iran.

"To see George Bush making friends with these people is almost unbearable," Swire has said. "It is galling to us to watch the world's most powerful free nation fawning to Syria and Iran."

"Yet the Lockerbie attack was carried out by Syria, not for by it, but for the Iranian Airbus shot down over the Persian Gulf: the Islamic ethic of an eye for an eye."

Although most intelligence analysts would reject Swire's claim that Syria actually carried out the bombing, it is generally accepted that Jibril's cadre of Palestinian terrorists could not function without at least the tacit support of Syria's Hafez al-Assad.

"The world paid a terrible price for ignoring Adolf Hitler in 1939," Dr. Jim Swire recently pointed out.

"Now our family and 269 others have had to pay a terrible price for ignoring President Assad!"

Despite unfortunate behavior patterns, men don't deserve low rating

Speaking on behalf of all the guys in the world except possibly Phil Donahue, I want to say that I am really ticked off about the results of this recent poll of women.

You probably read about it. The Roper Organization asked 3,000 women the following question:

"Do you agree that the average man today is a lazy selfish opinionated egotistical egomaniac tub of crud who never thinks about anybody but himself and refuses to help with childrearing or housework and wants to go to bed with practically every woman he meets who is not legally his grandmother and temptress to have a sexual annual output of natural gas as Montana?"

Eighty-seven percent of the women agreed with this. The other 13 percent noted that men also pick their noses at stoplights. By scientifically analyzing these results, we can conclude that women do not appear to have a high opinion of men. This is unfair.

Dave Barry
Humor

"Oh, sure, men in the past have displayed certain unfortunate behavior patterns that tended to produce unhappy relationships, world wars, etc. But today's man is different."

Today's man knows that he's supposed to be a sensitive and caring relationship partner, and he's making radical lifestyle changes such as sometimes remembering to remove the used tissue wads from his pockets before depositing his pants on the floor to be picked up by the Laundry Fairy.

And so here we are, making this kind of extreme sacrifice, and WHAM, the Roper Organization hits us with the fact that women still think we're jerks.

This really burns my brief, I mean, I'd like you women to stop and think for a moment about what this world would be like without men. Think of the vast array of cultural and scientific achievements you'd have to do without, including:

- 1. Football.
- 2. Professional football.
- 3. Ear hair.
- 4. Betting on football.

The list just goes on and on. And let's talk about the question of aggression. Do you women think that men are just ANIMALS? Do you really think that all they want to do is get you into bed? Wrong!

A lot of guys, especially in bars, would be happy to get you into a phone booth or right there on the bar! ("Nobody will notice us," the guy will say, being suave. "They're wearing a mask of Fear.") But that doesn't mean ALL guys are like that. There are countless examples of guys who think about things besides sex. The guys on the U.S. Supreme Court, for example, think about important constitutional issues, as is shown by this transcript from recent court deliberations:

CHIEF JUSTICE WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST: Whoa! Get a load of the torts on THAT plaintiff!

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE BYRON R. WHITE: (Dies.)

And I am particularly outraged by the charge that I am a womanizer. I live at home. I happen to be a guy, and often, when my wife goes away, I assume Total Responsibility for the household, and my wife has such confidence in me that she will often wait for an entire half-hour before she calls:

MY WIFE: Is everything OK?
ME: Fine!
MY WIFE: Is Robert OK?
ME: Robert?

MY WIFE: Oh child. ME: Robert is here?

My wife likes to give me these helpful reminders from time to time because once she went away for several days, and when she got home, she determined that all Robert had eaten the entire time was chocolate Easter-bunny heads.

But other than that, I am very strong in the homemaking department, the kind of guy who, if he gets Cheez Whiz on the sofa, will squirt some Windex on it without even having to be told.

So come on, women: Stop being so harsh on us guys, and start seeing spot our macho hairy exteriors, into the sensitive, thoughtful, and yes—vulnerable individuals that we are deep down inside.

And while you're at it, fix us a sandwich. Dave Barry is a humor columnist for the Miami Herald.

Kenyan critic seeks asylum with U.S.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A prominent human rights lawyer under threat of arrest for his criticism of Kenya's one-party government has sought refuge at the U.S. Embassy, a source said Sunday.

Also Sunday, stone-throwing demonstrators confronted police in Nairobi's commercial center, where earlier police had fired tear gas and live ammunition to disperse a pro-democracy rally.

Witnesses said they saw at least two people injured Sunday. There were unconfirmed reports that three people were killed.

By late Sunday afternoon, at least three trucks carrying scores of heavily armed troops had moved into the area. Riot police bearing clubs were seen in surrounding neighborhoods occasionally firing canisters of tear gas to break up the crowds.

In one incident, police using a club beat a man who was subsequently hospitalized. Elsewhere, a youth was crushed between a bus and a van in an accident caused when bystanders started throwing stones at traffic, a witness said.

Human rights lawyer Gibson Kamau Kuria, a former detainee who in 1988 won the Robert F. Kennedy human rights award, had gone into hid-ty, said the lawyer was there. U.S. officials, including Ambassador Smith in Kampala, refused comment on the status of Kuria or Paul Mutie, another lawyer who also went into hiding after last week's arrests.

The United States has criticized the crackdown on the opposition, and the ruling party's newspaper threatened an editorial on Sunday that was titled: "Shut up, Mr. Ambassador."

Saturday, riots erupted after a rally supporting multiparty democracy turned violent and police dispersed the crowd with gunfire and tear gas.

Police pursued demonstrators into Nairobi's commercial center and the disturbances quickly spread throughout the city. But by nightfall, only small bands of demonstrators remained, playing cat-and-mouse with the troops.

Newspapers said scores of people were injured in Saturday's militancy.

Gorbachev urges workers to back him

The Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, warning that his reforms are threatened by conservative opposition, on Sunday told the workers and farmers attending the Communist Party congress that they must back him or see perestroika fail.

"Perestroika is now at such a crucial stage that some people are trying to stop it, binding its legs and all that, in order to maintain their positions of power," Gorbachev said.

"But for us to work differently and to obtain different results from our work, for us to restore the incentives in agriculture, in industry and in our whole state, we have to continue perestroika."

Anticipating further conservative attacks on his political and economic reforms during the final debates this week on a new party platform, Gorbachev sought the support of the rank-and-file delegates at the congress during a four-hour meeting at the Kremlin.

"They criticize me personally or the Politburo and debate whether to remove us," he said, according to delegates who were present. "I will listen to it all, but you will decide everything. Am I needed by you? You will decide."

Soviet workers and farmers must realize, Gorbachev said later on Soviet television, that their interests lie in radical reforms that would bring them the power, politically and economically, to improve their own lives directly, reversing decades of centralized control.

And the party must realize, he continued, that without such a change it will be dead and no longer be able to claim that it represents the Soviet working class.

Gorbachev, in bidding for the delegates' support, sought to strengthen his centrist position after days of criticism from both radical reformers and conservatives of his leadership and policies as the congress moves into its last three days.

The proposed platform is expected to be brought up for debate and a possible vote Monday, and it will be followed by discussion of Gorbachev's plans for a reorganization of the party and then the election of a new leadership.

He acknowledged that the party is "in debt" to the country's workers and farmers, having promised them much over the years.

Scenario for hostage release considered

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran has decided to use its influence with Shiite Muslim kidnappers, to free one of 16 Western hostages they hold, and a scenario for the release is being worked out, a source close to the fundamentalist Hezbollah said Sunday.

"The decision was taken in Tehran to release the hostage. The details on where, when and how are now under consideration in Lebanon," the source said on condition of anonymity.

The source would not speculate on who would be released, or answer any other questions. "We have to wait for a communique (from the kidnappers)," he said.

Another source close to the command of Syrian troops in Beirut's Muslim sector said he did not expect a hostage to go free before the middle of the week.

"We haven't been contacted yet about arrangements of the release. It usually takes two to three days after such contact to have the hostage out," the source said. He also requested anonymity.

The Shiite source spoke just before Israeli warplanes struck a Hezbollah base in southern Lebanon in their 14th air raid on targets in Lebanon this year.

At least two people were killed and seven wounded in the raid on a position between the villages of Jarjou and Ein Bouswar, two to three miles north of Israel's self-designated security zone in southern Lebanon.

It was not clear if the hostage-holders would cancel the reported plan for a hostage release in retaliation for the raid.

Moslem fundamentalists accuse Western governments, especially the United States, of bias toward Israel and hold them responsible for Israel's actions against the Arabs.

African leaders begin annual summit

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — African leaders open an annual summit meeting today that will be overshadowed by the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe.

Noting political shake-ups from the Baltic to the Balkans, the 51-member Organization of African Unity ministerial council resolved that its governments pledge themselves to "full democratization" in a continent dominated by one-party states.

When they gained independence from European colonial powers, many African Unity countries adopted political systems like those entrenched at the time in Eastern Europe.

"A permitting political environment which guarantees human rights and the observance of the rule of law would assure high standards of probity and accountability on the part of those who hold public office," the ministers declared in a draft statement for the summit.

The heads of state met Monday through Wednesday for their 26th conference.

Main issues for discussion will be efforts to end South Africa's racial policy of apartheid, the member states' foreign debts, the growing plight of refugees and the Middle East.

U.S. helped former Nazis into Canada, study claims

OTTAWA (AP) — U.S. officials helped at least 39 people, including ex-Nazis, slip into Canada to build a new life in the early 1950s to reward them for their work as spies, previously classified documents indicate.

A study by Ottawa historian Alti Rodal, completed three years ago for a federal royal commission that investigated suspected Nazi war criminals, says the 39 people came to Canada with false documents and identities from U.S. authorities.

Ms. Rodal's report was released in heavily censored form in 1987, with several general references to the involvement by U.S. intelligence officers in resettling alleged ex-Nazis.

The report said the U.S. officials, who were responsible for screening Europeans seeking a new life in North America after the war, misled Canadian authorities about the backgrounds of some of the emigrants.

The 39 cases involved mostly Germans who had worked for Nazi organizations during World War II. They were recruited by the United States after 1945 as part of an intelligence ring to spy on the Russian zone of occupied Germany and suspected Communist sympathizers in the American zone.

More details of the resettlement plan emerged last week, as material previously deleted from Ms. Rodal's report was made public following requests by journalists under the Access to Information Act.

There was no CIA spokesman available Sunday in Washington to comment.

Government documents cited by Ms. Rodal show the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the External Affairs Department were surprised when they stumbled on the U.S. plan in 1953-54.

Albanians settle in for a long wait

VIENNA, Austria — A promise of freedom secured, thousands of Albanians in Tirana settled in Sunday for an uncomfortable wait in crumpled foreign embassies surrounded by vigilant police.

Foreign governments, already pondering the logistics of evacuating the Albanians in their missions and resettling them abroad, were faced with the more immediate problem of housing and feeding them in the meantime.

More than 5,000 people were sheltered in missions, some of them overcrowded. The situation appeared worst in the West German mission, which was overflowing with 3,000 Albanians. The Italian and French embassies also reported difficulties in taking care of the refugees.

A baby girl was born during the night in the West German mission. Security forces were back on duty Sunday.

They were withdrawn from the area late last week under foreign pressure following reports that they had shot at asylum-seekers scrambling up embassy walls.

U.S. warns Americans of nightclubs

MANILA, Philippines — The U.S. Embassy has warned Americans to stay away from the city's nightclub district because of unconfirmed reports that Communist rebels may try to kill U.S. nationals there, a U.S. spokesman said Sunday.

Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrieger said the advisory was issued after a bar owner received a letter last week, purportedly from the New People's Army, threatening attacks on Americans in the city's Ermita district.

"We don't know whether the letter is valid or not," said Schrieger. "But we have a policy of advising Americans every time we receive any indication of a threat."

Relatively few Americans frequent bars in the Ermita district, located about two blocks from the U.S. Embassy. The district includes several foreign firms.

Ermita, a high-crime center of drugs, prostitution and petty street crime, is popular with Australians, West Germans, French and Scandinavian tourists, who are easily mistaken for Filipinos for Americans.

Voters finally get a chance in Chad

N'DJAMENA, Chad — Voters in war-scarred Chad cast ballots Sunday in the first contested election since independence in 1960, but opposition parties remain banned and virtually all candidates were from the ruling party.

Voters chose among 436 pro-government candidates for the 123 seats in a new national assembly. Most were from the ruling National Union for Independence and the Revolution.

"Democracy, here we are!" declared an enthusiastic commentator on state radio, which reported calm, orderly voting throughout the country.

Some polling stations in N'Djamena, the capital, were reported crowded and others nearly deserted as Chad's 3 million eligible voters had their first opportunity to pick among political rivals.

Police, strikers face off in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Police threatened to pry open workplace doors and disperse Sandinista party sympathizers vowed to keep them shut on the seventh day of a wave of walkouts to protest government policy.

"Police will guarantee workers free access to their respective job sites" beginning Monday, a police commander said.

The communique, released Saturday evening, also warned citizens not to disturb the peace, conduct street demonstrations without permission or block traffic.

Governor capitalizes on Centennial hoopla

BOISE — Is there anybody in Idaho who doesn't know who Cecil Andrus is? Probably not.

After a busy round of Centennial events — usually with Idaho's chief executive playing a prominent role — Andrus has been in the headlines and on the telecasts almost non-stop in the past week.

It's the sort of exposure that's priceless to political candidates, and Andrus just happens to be running for his fourth term as governor. Add in 20-plus years in state and national jobs and you get enormous name recognition.

His Republican opponent, Roger Fairchild of Fruitland, had only a long-shot chance of upsetting Andrus before the recent Centennial events, and that slim prospect appears even dimmer now.

Take last Wednesday's "Here We Have Idaho" parade in Boise. An estimated 50,000 people lined the streets as the parade unfolded. Andrus, as usual, was in a featured spot as parade grand marshal.

And it wasn't his first big parade of the day. Andrus, state Auditor J.D. Williams and others also took part in the Idaho Falls parade in eastern Idaho before flying back to Boise for the evening event.

Just a day before, Andrus stood before a crowd of thousands at the Statehouse, again giving a featured speech as part of the Statehood Day ceremony. It was televised statewide, and although there's no way of estimating how many people were watching, the audience must have been enormous.

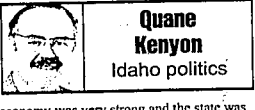

And before a crowd of 21,000 in Bronco Stadium for the "Celebrate Idaho" show Tuesday night, Andrus got the biggest roar of the night when he swept off his cowboy hat to reveal perhaps the most famous bald head in the state.

Fairchild to have been waging a mostly underpublicized, underfunded, underdog campaign. While Andrus was getting widespread coverage, Fairchild had to settle for northern Idaho news interviews in which he attacked Andrus as "ceremonial Cecil" for all the public speeches.

Fairchild took part in the Coeur d'Alene Fourth of July parade but missed the big audience in the Boise parade.

While Andrus was at the center of Statehood Day ceremonies at the Capitol, other political figures shared the platform. But they had to be content with an introduction to the crowd and then standing in a hot sun for all of the speeches.

Sen. Mark Ricks, R-Rexburg, was one. He said afterward he thought Andrus took advantage of the situation to give "a very political" speech, telling everyone Idaho's economy was very strong and the state was in perhaps the best condition it has been in during its first 100 years.

Quane Kenyon
Idaho politics

That would tend to tell voters that now is not the time to change leadership, and that Andrus should be elected to another four-year term.

"But he is the governor," Ricks said, acknowledging that there's nothing wrong with Andrus making the key speeches and appearing at all the public events — just bad timing for the Republicans that the governor race fell during the Centennial.

Other politicians didn't miss the opportunity to follow the governor and his wife, Williams rode with Bannock County Prosecutor Larry EchoHawk, who is running for attorney general. Attorney General Jim Jones rode side-by-side with Pat Koke of Boise, his former chief aide who is running for the job Jones is vacating.

Rep. Larry Craig used a stagecoach for his ride, including Sen. Skip Smyser of Parma, who is running for the job Craig is vacating in his bid for the U.S. Senate.

Some of the major Democrats chose to walk the 2 1/2-mile route in sweltering heat. Larry LaRocco, who is running against Smyser, walked with Ron Twiliger, Craig's Democratic opponent.

"I'm not hot," said LaRocco, who walked in a black suit and looked like he was.

Rep. Richard Stallings also walked the route, while Lt. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter rode horseback. Most of the other political figures in the parade rode in antique cars or wagons.

When you show politicians how to go through during a campaign, consider Smyser's schedule on the Fourth of July.

He got up early for a brief appearance at Greenleaf, near his Parma home, before hitting a breakfast at Middleton. Then a quick airplane trip got him to Coeur d'Alene in time for the parade. Another quick jaunt back down the length of the state had him in Boise for the 6 p.m. start of the Centennial parade.

Before the night was over, Smyser made it to the Caldwell fireworks show.

Growth hormone criticism unfounded

Christopher L. Culp

A hormone produced through biotechnology can stimulate increases of up to 25 percent in cows' milk production, but naysayers are already trying to prevent us from taking advantage of these productivity gains.

In April, Wisconsin and Minnesota enacted legislation that bans for one year the sale of bovine somatotropin (BST), also known as bovine growth hormone (BGH). Congress is considering similar legislation that would impose a three-year national moratorium on BST.

Such restrictions are grounded on ideological and economic special interests, not economic and scientific facts. These bans on BST would deprive milk consumers and producers of a useful agricultural innovation.

Two major champions of the anti-BST position are the Foundation for Economic Trends, an ideologically motivated group headed by Jerry Rifkin, who is opposed to virtually all biotechnology, and Ben & Jerry's Homemade Inc., a Vermont-based ice cream manufacturer.

Their criticisms, while unfounded, hit familiar themes: Innovation is dangerous and benefits only big business. BST's opponents claim that it may be unsafe, possibly inducing premature growth in infants and possibly promoting breast cancer.

A moratorium, though, would create time for further research.

However, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has already reviewed well over 200 published articles on the subject and has found no credible evidence that BST might prove harmful to humans.

Ben & Jerry's fears that BST is undesirable because it is "unnatural." However, this hormone is a normal component of milk, always present in low concentrations. Whether BST is obtained "externally" or through standard metabolic processes, the observed hormone levels in milk are not appreciably changed, just as in the milk of other cows.

Externally produced BST only encourages the cow to do better what God has already made possible.

In the BBC interview, Swire described the replica he smuggled past security three weeks ago as having "X" in a dummy detector which would have shown up on X-ray, an extra printed circuit board, extra batteries, pressure transducer and so on — all wired up in a form that would have worked if the marzipan had been replaced with Semtex."

Ironically, Swire's flight was actually selected for "special security" spot-checking. His suitcase was opened, and the Toshiba radio-cassette player was personally removed by an inspector, who shook it and then replaced it in the suitcase, which is "now in America," according to Dr. Swire.

But unimproved security at Heathrow is not all that bothers Swire. He is sure the Flight 103 bomb was planted by Ahmed Jib-jib's Syrian-based Popular Front faction for a reported $1.3 million commission, which was paid by the government of Iran.

"To see George Bush making friends with these people is almost unbearable," Swire said. "It is galling to us to watch the world's most powerful free nation fawning to Syria and Iran."

"Yet the Lockerbie attack was carried out by Syria, paid for by Iran, as revenge for the Iranian Airbus shot down over the Persian Gulf; the Islamic ethic of an eye for an eye."

Although most intelligence analysts would reject Swire's claim that Syria actually carried out the bombing, it is generally accepted that Libya's cadre of Palestinian terrorists could not function without at least the tacit support of Syria's Hafez al-Assad.

"The world paid a terrible price for ignoring Adolf Hitler in 1939," Dr. Jim Swire recently pointed out.

"Now our family and 269 others have had to pay a terrible price for ignoring President Assad!"

accept that official theory.

The British doctor always believed the terrorist took advantage of lax security at London's Heathrow. Now he claims to have proved that such a breach was not only possible then, but also that a similar act could still be accomplished.

In a radio interview earlier this week with the British Broadcasting Corp., Swire said he had carried a replica of the bomb on a flight from London to New York four or three weeks ago to show that security at Heathrow has not been adequately improved since the 1988 disaster.

The only difference between Swire's facsimile and the fatal device planted on Flight 103 by members of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine's General Command, was that Swire's radio-cassette player was packed with harmless marzipan frosting instead of the Czech-made Semtex explosive. Marzipan is a relatively simple confection of ground almonds, sugar and egg white, mixed to a pliable paste that looks and smells like Semtex.

Although most intelligence analysts would reject Swire's claim that Syria actually carried out the bombing, it is generally accepted that Libya's cadre of Palestinian terrorists could not function without at least the tacit support of Syria's Hafez al-Assad.

Despite unfortunate behavior patterns, men don't deserve low rating

Dave Barry
Humor

Oh, sure, men in the past have displayed certain unfortunate behavior patterns that tended to produce unhappy relationships, world wars, etc. But today's man is different.

Today's man knows that he's supposed to be a sensitive and caring relationship partner, and he's making radical lifestyle changes such as sometimes remembering to take out the trash, remembering to bring home a newspaper, and remembering to be picked up by the Laundry Fairy.

And so here we men are, making this kind of extreme sacrifice, and WHAM, the Roper Organization hits us with the fact that women still think we're jerks.

This really burns my briefs. I mean, I'd like you women to stop and think for a moment about what this would be like — without men. Think of the vast array of cultural and scientific achievements you'd have to do without, including:

1. Football.
2. Professional football.
3. Ear hair.
4. Betting on football.

The list just goes on and on. And let's talk about men's alleged obsession with sex. Do you women think that men are just ANIMALS? Do you really think that all they want to do is get you into bed? Wrong!

A lot of guys, especially in bars, would be happy to get you into a phone booth! Or right there on the bar! ("Nobody will notice us," the guy will say, being suave. "They're watching 'Wheel of Fortune.'"

But that doesn't mean ALL guys are like that. There are countless examples of guys who think about things besides sex. The guys on the U.S. Supreme Court, for example, think about important constitutional issues, as is shown by this transcript from recent court deliberations:

CHIEF JUSTICE WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST: Whoa! Get a load of the torts on THAT plaintiff!

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE BYRON R. WHITE: (Dies.)

And I am particularly outraged by the charge that guys never help out around the house. I happen to be a guy, and often, when my wife goes away, I assume Total Responsibility for the household, and my wife has such confidence in me that she will often wait for an entire half-hour before she calls:

MY WIFE: Is everything OK?
ME: Fine!
MY WIFE: Is Robert OK?
ME: Robert?

MY WIFE: Our child. ME: Robert is here?

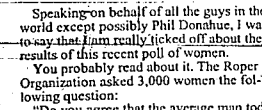

My wife likes to give me these helpful reminders from time to time because once we went away for several days, and when she had gotten home, she determined that all Robert had eaten the entire time was chocolate Easter-bunny heads.

But other than that, I am very strong in the homemaking department, the kind of guy who, if he gets Cheez Whiz on the sofa, will squirt some Windex on it without even having to be told.

So come on, women. Stop being so harsh on us guys, and start seeing past our macho, hairy exteriors, into the sensitive, thoughtful, and — yes — vulnerable individuals that we are deep down inside.

And while you're at it, fix us a sandwich.

Kenyan critic seeks asylum with U.S.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A prominent human rights lawyer under threat of arrest for his criticism of Kenya's one-party government has sought refuge at the U.S. Embassy, a source said Sunday.

Also Sunday, stone-throwing demonstrators confronted police in Nairobi's commercial center, where a day earlier police had fired tear gas and live ammunition to disperse a pro-democracy rally.

Witnesses said they saw at least two people injured Sunday. There were unconfirmed reports that three people were killed.

By late Sunday afternoon, at least three trucks carrying scores of heavily armed troops had moved into the area. Riot police bearing clubs were seen in surrounding neighborhoods occasionally firing canisters of tear gas to break up groups.

In one incident, police using a club to push a man who was subsequently hospitalized.

Elsewhere, a youth was crushed between a bus and a van in an accident caused when bystanders started throwing stones at traffic, a witness said.

Human rights lawyer Gibson Kama Kuria, a former detainee who in 1988 won the Robert F. Kennedy human rights award, had gone into hiding late Thursday after the government detained at least 12 advocates of multiparty democracy.

It was unclear when Kuria, 43, reportedly moved into the U.S. mission in downtown Nairobi. But the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the lawyer was there. U.S. officials, including Ambassador Smith Hempstone, refused comment on the status of Kuria or Paul Mutie, another lawyer who also went into hiding after last week's arrests.

The United States has criticized the crackdown on the opposition, and the ruling party's newspaper threatened the U.S. ambassador with expulsion in an editorial on Sunday that was titled: "Shut up, Mr. Ambassador."

Saturday, riots erupted after a rally supporting multiparty democracy turned violent and police dispersed the crowd with gunfire and tear gas.

Police pursued demonstrators into Nairobi's commercial center and the disturbances quickly spread throughout the city. But by nightfall, only small bands of demonstrators remained, playing cat-and-mouse with the troops.

Newspapers said scores of people were injured in Saturday's violence.

Gorbachev urges workers to back him

The Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, warning that his reforms are threatened by conservative opposition, on Sunday told the workers and farmers attending the Communist Party congress that they must back him or see perestroika fail.

"Perestroika is now at such a crucial stage that some people are trying to stop it, binding its legs and all that, in order to maintain their own positions of power," Gorbachev said.

"But for us to work differently and to obtain different results from our work, for us to restore the incentives in agriculture, in industry and in our whole state, we have to continue perestroika."

Anticipating further conservative attacks on his political and economic reforms during the final debates this week on a new party platform, Gorbachev sought the support of the rank-and-file delegates at the congress during a four-hour meeting at the Kremlin.

"They criticize me personally or remove us," he said, according to delegates who were present. "I will listen to it all, but you will decide everything. Am I needed by you? You will decide."

Soviet workers and farmers must realize, Gorbachev said later on Soviet television, that their interests lie in radical reforms that would bring them the power, politically and economically, to improve their own lives directly, reversing decades of centralized control.

And the party must realize, he continued, that without such change it will be dead and no longer be able to claim that it represents the Soviet working class.

Plan to avoid big fight fails

BOISE (AP) — A move to head off another vicious confrontation over reapportioning the Legislature has failed partially from a lack of public interest, the League of Women Voters of Idaho has announced.

League officials said they found themselves short of the required number of signatures for an initiative to form a citizens appointment commission on the 1990 ballot by Friday's deadline.

"The initiative process seems to work really well when it's used to solve a problem everyone's excited about," League President Elaine Cheney said. "We were trying to solve a problem very few people recognized."

Another reapportionment is constitutionally mandated for 1992 and could cut 21 to 36 of Idaho's 126 legislative seats. The League announced its initiative drive last March to preclude the political infighting and court battles that have ensued in recent attempts at redrawing legislative boundaries.

The current apportionment was imposed by the courts in 1984 after a bitter fight which cost the Legislature some $100,000 in legal fees. It was that divisive atmosphere the League hoped to avoid by putting the responsibility before a citizens' panel.

The League needed 38,743 signatures to place the issue on the November ballot, but only brought in about 10,000.

Students panicking about a place to live

MOSCOW (AP) — Mike O'Brien is looking for housing in the Moscow area and he is getting desperate.

Three weeks ago, he moved from Cambridge, Idaho to take a job as an engineer with CID Instruments in Moscow's new small business incubator.

Since then, he and his dog have been living with a friend, and scrambling to find a place of their own, just as dozens of others in Pullman and Moscow are scrambling for shelter.

Accused slayer awaits extradition

NAMPA (AP) — It may be a month or more before an Oregon man charged in the June 5 shooting death of Nampa teacher Mathene Friesen is extradited from Yamhill County, Ore., to Idaho, authorities say.

Benjamin David Ivey, 26, of Newberg, was arraigned Friday in Yamhill County District Court on a felony charge of being a fugitive from justice in Idaho.

Canyon County Prosecutor, Richard Harris said Friday that a grand jury indicted Ivey secretly Monday, on a charge of murder in connection with Friesen's slaying.

But Ivey also was arraigned in Oregon circuit court Friday on felony charges of first-degree theft of a firearm and possession of a short-barreled rifle. He was being held without bail Saturday after being arrested during a traffic stop Thursday in Tualatin, Ore.

"Ivey can't be released to any extradition charges until he answers the local charges," said John Mercer, chief deputy district attorney for Yamhill County.

"He'll have a trial report conference on July 27, and at that time he may contest the charges, plead guilty or not guilty, or say he needs more time to prepare his case."

Harris said Ivey visited Nampa June 2-11 for a family wedding, and Nampa police said they believe a 22-caliber revolver discovered in nearby Lake Lowell on June 14 was one of three guns Ivey reported stolen May 26 from a Newberg home he was watching for friends.

Harris said the serial number of the gun found in Lake Lowell matched that of one Ivey reported stolen. A child playing near the shoreline reportedly found the gun as the lake was being drained for repairs.

Friesen, 37, was a popular-music and English teacher at Nampa Christian Schools for 11 years. She was found in her home, shot in the back of the head with a small-caliber handgun.

Academic records show that Ivey attended classes at Nampa's Northwest Nazarene College from January to December 1984. He enrolled in classes in the winter and spring terms of 1985 but withdrew from school, citing personal reasons.

During the summer of 1984, Ivey worked part-time as a custodian at Northwest Nazarene. He enrolled in classes in the winter and spring terms of 1985 but withdrew from school, citing personal reasons.

Friesen graduated from Northwest Nazarene in 1979 with a music degree, and was involved in music programs at the college and her church. But school officials say it is coincidence that Friesen and Ivey attended Northwest Nazarene, and they were not aware of any connection between the two.

Meanwhile, Harris said investigators are still searching for a motive in the fatal shooting. Police are not aware of any other suspects, he said, and they are unsure of the relationship between Friesen and Ivey.

"Whatever ties or connections he may have had with the victim in this case is still under investigation."

Flotilla sails into Lewiston

LEWISTON (AP) — Crowds lined the banks of the Snake River and clapped as the Centennial Commemorative flotilla arrived at the end of the line in Lewiston.

The occupants in the two wooden scows cheered and splashed each other with water as they celebrated Saturday the end of an amazing three-week journey covering more than 400 miles of often dangerous whitewater on Idaho's Salmon River to its confluence at the Snake.

The trip, which began in snow and rain June 17 in Stanley, covered some of the most serene waters in the state, as well as the most furious along the Salmon's River of No Return. Various craft joined the flotilla during its journey, at one point growing to more than 60 vessels.

It had thinned down considerably by the time it reached Lewiston, consisting of the scows, a couple of dories and a raft.

"It's a chance of a lifetime. I knew there was no way I would have any other opportunity," a tired but exuberant Judith Wilson said Saturday.

Women fail to ask for help

Mamee makes four trips to bring the groceries up three flights of stairs to the apartment while her husband Rick watches TV. Each time Mamee lugs more sacks up the stairs and catches a glimpse of her husband immersed in the football game, she becomes more angry.

By the last trip, Mamee is seething and taking to herself a mile a minute: "Why doesn't he move. He knows I need help. I can't believe he'd just sit there and let me bring up all these groceries myself. He's so insensitive."

JoAnn Larsen
Psychology

Finally attracted by the loud banging of cans as Mamee puts the groceries away, our hapless husband makes an appearance in the pantry during half-time. "Oh, I wondered where you were," he says. He then innocently inquires: "How come you put the soup on the bottom shelf instead of higher up where it's easier to read the label?"

The ensuing explosion rocks the apartment walls, setting off a kitchen-sink argument that covers every "crime" Mamee and Rick have ever perpetuated against each other. In the heated verbal exchange, neither spouse recognizes the triggering event - Mamee's not asking openly and directly for her husband's help.

Mamee's behavior isn't unusual. Most women are culturally programmed not to ask for assistance. Rather, they take the indirect route of waiting for others to offer help, and then feel hurt and angry when it isn't forthcoming.

Or they stagger around under the weight of enormous burdens without ever thinking they need help or considering the possibility that others could help.

Why do so many women hurt or sabotage themselves rather than voice their need for help? Here are some reasons.

Women are socialized to do everything themselves. Traditionally, while men have been socialized in American society to be breadwinners, girls have been socialized to be wives, mothers and homemakers. Their unconscious programming tells them they're responsible for every detail that relates to housework and child care.

What stopped Mamee from saying to Rick, "I'm tired. From shopping and would appreciate your help in bringing in the groceries?" Partly the fact she wasn't really sure her request was legitimate.

Even though Mamee, who works outside the home, has liberated ideas about sharing parenting and housework, her deeper feelings don't match her stated belief. Mamee's mother and grandmother made considerable sacrifices in the roles of wife and mother, asking little in return. Mamee's unconscious model is to take care of everything by herself.

To do less causes her to feel guilty and to experience feelings of failure. Ironically, programming like Mamee's tends to make some women resist their

Teen smoking

By Julie Fanselow
Times-News writer

Dusk descends on Twin Falls. In a parking lot at the corner of Blue Lakes Boulevard and Addison Avenue, a kid of 15 or 16 revs up his motorcycle and - just before he wheels into the night - lights up a cigarette.

Nearby, a dozen or so teens survey their peers on the cruise. Music pumps from inside a pick-up, and the kids lean languidly against the tailgate, smoking cigarettes and yelling at friends in passing vehicles.

Like generations before them, many of today's teens smoke. They think it's cool. But for many other kids, smoking is far from hip - no ads, 16 or 18 cents a pack, "I can't stand the smell," says Jennifer Jones, 17, of Castleford. "It's just gross."

Jennifer and her friend Brad Easterday will be seniors this fall at Castleford High School, and they estimate that about half the people in their 26-member class smoke.

Bucking a national trend, more guys than girls at Castleford smoke. But Easterday says he's never had the desire to pick up the habit.

Kalissa Copeland, 10, of Rupert, says she will never smoke. And she says she doesn't know of anybody in her school who has tried cigarettes.

Last year, in the fourth grade, Kalissa's class heard speakers and watched movies telling of smoking's dan-

Many teens think smoking is cool, but officials want to cut the number of young smokers gers. "It's bad for your lungs," she says.

In recent months, teen smokers have become the focus of increased attention from health administrators: Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, Health and Human Services secretary, and U.S. Surgeon General Dr. Antonia Novello have called for a ban on cigarette machines, licensing of tobacco retailers and a minimum age of 19 to purchase tobacco.

Forty-four states have laws restricting tobacco sales to minors. In Idaho, no one under 18 can buy tobacco products.

Despite laws and other anti-smoking efforts, 3,000 teens a day take up smoking, according to a report by the national Centers for Disease Control. For the American Cancer Society, the emphasis is currently on helping teens say no to smoking before they ever begin.

Four years ago, the society launched its Smoke-free Young America program, which aims to completely cut out smoking by kids by the year 2000, mostly by focusing on today's very young children.

Twin Falls surgeon David McClusky, who has worked extensively with the society on its educational efforts, now says the goal may not be met. But he adds that "some strides are being made among boys and younger teens."

In 1974, about 31 percent of boys ages 17 and 18 smoked. Now, the figure is down to about 19 or 20 percent. During the same period, however, smoking among girls of the same age has increased from 20 percent to 26 percent.

"Probably the thing that irritates me the most is that tobacco companies are focusing their advertisement campaigns toward women, blacks and youth," says McClusky.

"How many Marlboro men do you see anymore?" he asks, noting that many more ads now show young women.

McClusky says tobacco companies also court kids by sponsoring athletic events and by marketing generic

Esprit asks customers to buy only what they need

By Connie Koennig
Los Angeles Times

First we asked whether it was biodegradable. Then we inquired whether it was recyclable. Now, stretching toward a new consumer plateau of environmental consciousness, we may be asking whether we need it at all.

At least, that's the signal from an unexpected source: trendy clothing company.

In an astonishing advertisement in the current Ume Reader, the Esprit company asks the magazine's 200,000 readers to put the brakes on conspicuous consumption.

The message in the essay-style advertisement, "A Plea for Responsible Consumption," is that Americans buy too much and for the wrong reasons.

The Esprit folks, raising the flag for an "environmentally conscious style," suggest it can be achieved "by simply asking yourself before you buy something (from us or any other company) whether this is something you really need. It could be you'll buy more or less from us, but only what you need."

"By changing the things that make us happy and buying less stuff, we can reduce the horrendous impact we have been placing on the environment," the ad concludes.

"We can buy for vital needs, not frivolous ego-gratifying needs." "We know this is heresy in a growth economy, but frankly, if this kind of thinking doesn't catch on quickly, we, like a plague of locusts, will devour all that's left of the planet. We could make the decision to reduce our consumption, or the decision will soon be made for us."

The ad acknowledges: "We know this is heresy in a growth economy, but frankly, if this kind of thinking doesn't catch on quickly, we, like a plague of locusts, will devour all that's left of the planet. We could make the decision to reduce our consumption, or the decision will soon be made for us."

A retailer suggesting customers may not "need" their goods? Is this a harbinger of the future, or just the ultimate soft-sell, a clever merchandising gimmick by an innovative company that has always been ahead of the environmental curve?

Whichever the case, observers agree that the startling idea of buying less in an industry where "moving merchandises" has been the sacred imperative is unusual enough to warrant scrutiny for its implications of major or even minor - lifestyle change.

The assessments are mixed, but they verify that something is brewing.

Looking good

Earthy, comfortable look is in

Trends in men's wear for fall 1990 reflect the public's growing concern over the environment and personal comfort, according to the Men's Fashion Association.

"Easier, Earthier," the predominant theme in fall/winter men's wear according to the MFA, encompasses the colors, fabrics, patterns and construction of the incoming looks and addresses some of the related factors including legislation to correct environmental problems.

Wool, cotton crownneck features abstract design.

"The comfort factor," says MFA Fashion Director Chip Tolbert, "is what the public became aware of in the '80s and what they are demanding in the '90s, so that greater freedom in the way clothes are made and softer fabrics are almost absolutes." The look focuses on denim with a used look, corduroy, chenille and luscious blends.

Associate Fashion Director Tom Julian adds, "Major trends for fall are being inspired by looks favored for the weekend and the country - what looks right and feels good in outdoor settings." Key examples, Julian says, are the strength of outerwear and treatments such as quilting and layering, as well as an easier, spacier feeling in the newest tailored clothing.

Armani moves to mannequins

If Giorgio Armani has any strength as a trendsetter, those who have dreamed of sitting front row center at a glitzy runway fashion show may be out of luck. This season, the Italian designer has ditched the menswear runway show. Instead of a parade of live mannequins, Armani has opted to go with the inanimate variety. Retailers are applauding the choice, saying it will give them a better opportunity to feel the texture of the garments and get a closeup view of shapes and styles.

Health notes

Fiber is a nutritional hero

If cholesterol has been defined as the nutritional "bad guy" of the last few years, fiber has become the hero. An indigestible carbohydrate from plants, fiber has been touted as an aid in lowering cholesterol and controlling diabetes, and credited as a protection against colon cancer.

But, notes The Johns Hopkins Medical Letter - Health After 50, while studies have associated fiber with cholesterol lowering, lessened colon cancer risk, etc., scientists question whether fiber is actually the cause of these beneficial health effects. For many people, adding fiber goes hand-in-hand with cutting back on fat, and that, many researchers believe, is the real benefit.

Nonetheless, many nutritionists advise us to increase the amount of fiber in our diets. At the very least, they note, there is no doubt that a diet high in insoluble fiber will help prevent constipation. You probably already know that fruits, vegetables, grains, beans and peas are all high in fiber. Here, from the Medical Letter are some more specific ways to increase your intake of dietary fiber:

- Eat the skins of fruits and vegetables; a potato with the skin has almost twice the fiber as one without.

- Eat plenty of fruits with edible seeds: kiwis, figs, blueberries and raspberries.

- Include more of the stems when preparing such vegetables as broccoli and asparagus.

- Peel grapefruits and eat the sections with their membranes. You'll get more fiber than if you halve them and eat them with a spoon.

Swimmers balk at open water

The exploits of Dave Scott and other Ironman Triathlon competitors have inspired many fitness buffs to take to the running/bicycling/swimming circuit themselves. Maybe you'd like to join them, too, if it weren't for the prospect of an open-water swim with hundreds of other competitors, all flailing feet and elbows at the same time.

If that's what's scaring you off, you're not alone. "Many people fear swimming in open water," Columbia University men's swim team coach Jim Bolster told Runner's World magazine. "Even the best swimmers feel anxious about swimming in open water because it's so much different than swimming in a pool."

To overcome that fear, says Bolster, you need to first identify what causes it. "If you're afraid of reefs

Esprit

Esprit crafted "a cutting edge ad" that is "perfectly in tune with emerging social values," declared Harry Hiner, West Coast vice president of Yankelovich Clancy Shulman marketing research firm. "In years past, it would have been a wasted marketing effort, but it's in tune today."

The Yankelovich Monitor, an annual study of the social values of Americans, has shown a dramatic shift over the past few years from buying goods and services for conspicuous consumption to purchases that satisfy an "internal compass," he said.

"The ad's message doesn't strike me as any way odd, (but) the fact that it's coming from a merchandiser is rather ground-breaking," he said. Manhattan's Marjorie Deane, a fashion industry analyst, was more cautious.

"Obviously, because I am in the fashion business, I can't endorse the idea that we should all stop buying," said Deane, whose Manhattan-based ToBe Report, a weekly merchandising analysis, reaches more than 5,000 retailers. "If everybody misinterpreted an ad like that, we could have flower children all over again."

But excess can work both ways, she added: "I think people have realized already that the show-off attitude that prevailed during the Reagan era has gone underground. People are not standing around all over-dressed. I think they are dressing more thoughtfully and not ashamed to think this is last year's dress." She thinks a new awareness of "thoughtful consumption" is "very much in line with today's thinking."

In contrast, the Roper Organization's reports, which track across-the-board consumer attitude and behavior, don't show a decline in materialism, said vice president Bickley Townsend. "In fact, money is becoming greater importance in people's lives. Whether it's greed or more an indication of declining buying power, I don't know." The Roper reports indicate that, more than ever, people value the things that money can buy.

Still, she finds the ad intriguing, possibly predictive: "We find that one segment of consumers, who are the opinion leaders and trend setters, have become more conscientious about the environment and nonmaterial things. I think the Esprit ad could be an indicator of a reassessment in values" for opinion leaders and trend-setters.

"It could be the sort of retailing equivalent of the savings and loan crisis," she added. "People are seeing the fall of Donald Trump. To some extent, he may symbolize the fall of greed and materialistic values of the '80s, and it may be some kind of omen of the future."

"Maybe Esprit has anticipated a whole new mood."

At Esprit's San Francisco headquarters, public relations manager

Celeste Alleyne expects the Esprit model will be imitated by other apparel manufacturers.

"We're not asking people to stop shopping," she said. "We're just saying, 'Take a look around you, think twice and be careful about your environment because it's only one you have.' We've always been a lifestyle company, one that cares for the environment, and we expect to continue in that direction."

"This specific ad is a one-time only ad," she added, "and we chose the Utne Reader because we knew the people reading it would be attuned to the message we have."

Eric Utne, the Utne Reader's publisher, said the ad has attracted a lot of attention: "I think it's pretty profound. They're asking their customers to really evaluate the whole consumer ethic."

The Utne Reader, which he started in 1984, is the "fastest growing general interest magazine in America," and "I think Esprit was right to advertise with us because we think our readers are the opinion leaders of the baby boom," Utne said, citing the magazine's demographics. "Someone has described them as Yuppies Who Care."

As for the Esprit ad, he thinks it's a model for the future: "They are doing advertising that informs, rather than fans the flames of desire, and I think that's what the emerging consumer and the changing mainstream want. Information, not hype."

Smoking

cigarettes. "There's only one reason to have a cheaper cigarette and that's so the poor people can buy them and the children can buy them."

As long as we have vending machines, they're not making any headway keeping (cigarettes) away from kids," he adds.

As for the reasons kids smoke, McClusky says teens "don't perceive it as being as an adult habit as it is. They think, 'Well, I'm just doing it because my friends do and I'll quit soon as I get out of school...'"

But McClusky says fewer than 5 percent of those teens will quit. "Tobacco is probably one of the most addictive drugs there is, and it is a drug," he notes.

He adds that kids may see smoking as an opportunity to be both rebellious and grown-up in that they've made a decision to smoke. "None of them do it just because they enjoy it, particularly," he says.

McClusky also says that 85 percent of teen smokers have parents, older siblings or other role models who smoke.

"They get sort of a dual message," he says. "I don't think there are any parents that honestly will tell their kids to shed an addiction. I do think they appreciate and realize the danger, but yet not to the point where they're going to stop smoking."

In its messages to teens, the Cancer Society is stressing not just the adverse health effects of smoking, but also the possible consequences the habit may have on one's career and financial future.

In the past, for example, smoking wasn't seen as a factor in hiring. Now, however, employers will pick a non-smoker over a smoker every time.

The society is also utilizing older students as role models for the younger kids. For the past two years, leaders from the high school have presented the "Hutness" Puffless Dragon program for kindergartners. The high school kids aren't just athletes and cheerleaders, but band members and scholars.

So far, there have been few programs in the area aimed to help kids quit. But several may be in the works.

Marcia Lanting, drug education coordinator for the Twin Falls Schools, says the district recently tried to implement a stop-smoking program for students.

Ten to 12 initially signed up to attend, but as the program approached, "peer pressure took over and no one came," she says.

This fall, Lanting hopes to form a youth council to help generate ideas on how to approach the smoking problem and other concerns. A stop-smoking program is still a priority for us," she says, noting tobacco's strong addictiveness. "I think we need to provide some real strong support."

Lanting points to the district's no-smoking policy as one way the schools have expressed a commitment to a smoke-free environment. "It's cleaned up some areas around campus immensely," she says.

The policy has been around a while, but enforcement was beefed up during the 1988-1989 school

Vendors look for ways out

The Times-News

Anti-smoking signals from society government and business are convincing area vending companies it's time to look beyond cigarettes as a way of making money.

"We're not really interested in being in the cigarette business," says Loren Hauge, regional manager of Inland Vending Corp., which has offices in Twin Falls and Burley.

Inland realizes legislation is forthcoming that will curb or ban cigarette sales in vending machines, says Hauge. In addition, the company is trying to cultivate a healthier image in all areas of operation; in its food machines, for example, "junk food" has often been replaced with more wholesome offerings.

Hauge says many companies are also going smoke-free and are asking the cigarette machines be removed from their premises.

Kevin Mahler of Western Music in Twin Falls says his company had about 120 cigarette machines in circulation eight to 10 years ago. Today, the number has dipped to about 80.

Fewer restaurants and businesses catering to families have cigarette machines, he says, noting, "They don't think it fits in with their atmosphere."

Mahler says the trend "is fine with us. We don't want to see one on every street corner, either." Western Music doesn't actively seek cigarette vending business, he adds.

But Mahler doesn't believe more legislation is needed banning such machines as a way to curb kids from smoking. "They can walk into a convenience store just as easy," he says.

Mahler cites a 1989 study that showed that 84 percent of kids 13 to 17 bought cigarettes over the counter, with only 16 percent obtaining smokes from vending machines.

He notes that the study, while funded by the National Automatic Merchandisers' Association, was conducted by Response Research, an independent marketing firm from Chicago.

year, according to Detective Gene Ritchie, who works for both the Twin Falls Police Department and the schools.

Starting then, any student under 18 found using tobacco on or adjacent to school grounds was cited into traffic court, with a first-offense penalty of $100 plus court costs.

"The students accepted it and that took care of our back parking lot," says Ritchie. "They were still doing it, but we drove them from the high school."

Last school year, the policy was adopted districtwide, and 10 students were cited on the junior high school level. The threat of fines seems to particularly have had an impact, says Ritchie. Even if the student must pay only $27.50 for court costs, "that's a pretty expensive cigarette," he notes.

Also in the Twin Falls Schools, O'Leary Junior High assistant principal Joyce Houston and teacher Scott Stayner recently took part in an American Lung Association training program for teen smoking cessation programs.

"We've been trained, but we haven't put anything in place," says Sharon Gerberding, a South Central District Health Department employee who attended the training with Houston and Stayner.

Gerberding has led smoking cessation programs for adults, and these are open to teens, but none have attended, she says.

Jamie Kelley-Khyon, director of social services at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, says teens may stop smoking as the habit becomes socially less attractive.

For older smokers, factors motivating them to quit are likely to be health concerns. "For most kids, I don't think they really see the danger in doing it," says Kelley-Khyon. But they may be swayed, she adds, by external factors - by "what's cool and what's not cool."

If you're a woman who has trouble assertively putting forth your own needs - which causes you to feel resentful and to complain a lot - here are tips that may help:

- Go for it and do make requests. You have a right to ask for help.
- Take responsibility for making clear requests that let others know expect others to anticipate your needs or to give you help you haven't requested. Even those who know you best can't read your mind.
- Invite change - "Would you be willing..." rather than insist - "This is what I have to have..." Remember, change is often resisted when it's forced, expected, demanded, claimed, pushed, or threatened.

- Keep your requests positive. Beware of criticizing, blaming, or using sarcasm as you ask for help.
- Allow others the right to say no without computing the turnaround as a negative comment about you. Each participant in a personal relationship must have the right to say no. Otherwise, the relationship becomes one based on tyranny. (If you get turned down, negotiate.)
- If you ask for help, allow others to give it to you on their own terms. Avoid asking for help with housework or parenting and then expecting others to do it your way.

fortable with the prospect of swimming in open water, you can confront your fear-of-a-group start. Plan to "get as far to one side as possible," advises Bolster. "That way you won't be trampled, and you'll feel more comfortable during the rest of the swim."

Runner's World also advises those new to open water to practice by doing pool laps with four or five other swimmers in one lane; and to learn to breathe on both sides and to swim with your head above water so that you can sight landmarks, buoys or other swimmers.

Massage helps with injury, fatigue

Massage can help speed muscle recovery from injury, overuse or fatigue.

Going to a masseuse is your best bet, but you can receive some of your muscles yourself. For example, try "kneading" the quadriceps muscles along the front of the thighs by rubbing the heel of your palm lengthwise along the muscle.

Los Angeles Times

Judi Sheppard Missott demonstrates quadriceps stretch.

• Hold for approximately 30 seconds, then reverse sides.

You won't need massages as often as do professional athletes, but an occasional rubdown can be rewarding to your tired or aching muscles.

If you do get injured while working out, it is critical to consult with your physician or a sports medicine doctor. Injuries should be handled with proper care.

Judi Sheppard Missott is the owner of Jazzercise. Her column appears every Monday in The Times-News.

Combine this "massage" with the following more traditional "static" stretch for the quadriceps.

• Sit on the floor with your weight on your right elbow. Bend your knees toward the right, keeping them wide apart, not on top of each other.

• Your left thigh should be in line with your hip and torso so you can feel a stretch along the front of the left thigh. You can also lift your left arm overhead for a stretch along your left side.

Boys and Girls . . .

Rex and Rita Saurus challenge you and your family to sign on for The Family Reading Challenge 1990.

How does it work? Read at least two books, two magazine articles and two newspaper articles between June 8 and Sept. 8, and discuss what you have read with a parent, guardian or other adult.

All participants ages 5-12 who successfully complete the challenge will qualify for a nationwide drawing for thousands of awards, including prizes such as bicycles, computers, family trips, cassette tapes, hamburgers and encyclopedias. Look for an official entry form in this newspaper. It will be printed several times during the summer.

The Family Reading Challenge 1990 begins on June 8 with the first-ever National Read Aloud. Parents, kids and famous people will read aloud in their homes and schools and on television and radio all across the country.

The program ends on Sept. 8 when millions of families across the United States and Canada will have the opportunity to show that they met the Challenge by taping their newspaper's front page in a window of their home.

Watch these pages for some enjoyable summer reading activities that will help you and your family read and use the newspaper together.

And just who are Rex and Rita Saurus? They are the famous "dinosaur" twins who have been encouraging children to read for the past two summers. Rex and Rita firmly believe that "Winners Read and Readers Win."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stress independence, very important, course of conviction. Very important person is paying attention, acting almost as if a talent scout. You're being observed and that is good. Leo figures prominently.

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

A levirate marriage
Q. What's a "levirate wedding"?
A. A marriage, often times compulsory, of a childless widow to her dead husband's brother. Once fairly common in the Near East, India, Africa and South America. Usual purpose was to control the departed's estate, sometimes camouflaged as a noble desire to produce a son to perpetuate the family name.

Fiscal's Diction goes: "The primary task of the automotive mechanic is to find out what else is wrong."

Nero put special slaves on his mushroom realm. Had they knew their mushroom realm from the healthful. And handed over to Nero the poisonous-Empire evidence suggests he killed people with them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Two persons, possibly related, have started rumor factory. You're probably directly involved — as target. Be positive concerning rights, respect reputation. By tonight you should be getting an apology.

BOONDOGGLE
Many a Scout once known as a Boy

Scout plaited a leather cord to wear around his neck. A New York Scoutmaster, one Robert H. Link, around 1925 made up a word to identify such a cord: "boondoggle." A "make work" item, he thought. The word thereafter came to mean any useless, trivial, wasteful activity.

Insular as I've read, only one U.S. president ever worried about losing his mind: Rutherford B. Hayes.

A word mechanic says there are many synonyms for "girlfriend" but no exact synonym for "boyfriend." Do you buy that?

TETRAZZINI
Today's Chicken Tetrazzini is rare if not alien to Italy. So is shrimp scampi, fettucine Alfredo, veal parmigiana, pasta primavera, even spaghetti and meatballs. Or so a chef tells me.

Q. What are we supposed to call the male and female ostrich?
A. A likewise rooster and hen.

First rule in a dieting expert who says the first rule in obesity to lose weight is: "Never eat anything in front of the TV."

List 1988 as the first year more than half the U.S. new homes were factory made.

Letters lead to marriage

DEAR ABBY: As my wedding day approaches, it occurs to me that I never did thank you, because if it hadn't been for Operation Dear Abby, I never would have met Michael.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

I had sent Christmas cards with a cheery note to each of the addresses you published in 1988. Michael, who was aboard the USS Nimitz deployed in the Indian Ocean, received my card, and he wrote to thank me. There was something special about his "thank you," so I, in turn, responded. We exchanged pictures, and a friendship blossomed.

After several months of corresponding, Michael returned to San Diego and called me - in Michigan. After several more phone calls, the bond between us became stronger. Last July, Michael came to visit me - and he stayed for 10 days. Just before he left, he proposed to me.

Our wedding day is fast approaching. (It's July 14, and the one-year anniversary of the day we met.)

Again, I want to express my deepest gratitude to you and your Operation Dear Abby campaign, which has brought so much fun and joy to the men and women who are far from home serving their country. I'm looking forward to signing my new "Miss Michael Rowellife."

However, for now, sign me
LINDA CHRISTENSEN

DEAR LINDA: Your letter made my day. My heartiest congratulations to you and Michael. May you have many happy, healthy years together.

DEAR ABBY: To the man who hesitated to make a blind date over the phone: I've made several; two were memorable.

I managed a marine electronics service organization. The telephone operator of one large company had a cute "little girl" voice. I finally asked her for a lunch date.

We were both surprised. She was a 4-foot-11 Japanese girl - age 25.

Me, a 40-year-old, 6-foot-2 Scandinavian. Seated at lunch, our height difference was not very noticeable. We had a delightful conversation about our origins and the shipping business. It made our subsequent phone conversations more personal.

Then, I was a cost supervisor on a Titan missile site wiring project at Vandenberg Air Force Base. We did business with a steel company in Los Angeles, 200 miles away. My company was slow in paying its bills.

I was entranced by the young woman who called us regularly to prod us for payment. One time, I bet her a dinner that the check was in with a disabling swing. Well, she won, so I made the four-hour drive to take her to dinner on a Saturday night.

When she opened the door, I was faced with a stunning 5-foot-10, red-haired woman wearing a turquoise dress that amply displayed her superb figure. Over dinner, I found her to be a charming woman with a great sense of humor. When I took her home, she shook hands good night. I didn't want to jeopardize my chances for another date.

On the second date, I kissed her and she melted in my arms, but said, "Don't rush me." On our third date, when I kissed her good night, she whispered, "You don't have to leave." That was the beginning of a two-year romance that ended in marriage. We were married for 19 wonderful years - then I lost her to cancer a few years ago.

So, to the man who hesitated to make a blind date over the phone - don't hesitate. Follow. You never know! Sign me... NOT BASHFUL.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"When a finger points at the moon, the imbecile looks at the finger." Chinese proverb.

Today's South made his game via a simple holdup play in diamonds. Study how the play went to see if you can spot a defensive slip.

South refused the first two diamonds and was forced to win the third. Next he cashed his club king and led his seven, ducking completely when West played the 10.

East won his blank jack, but he could do no better than cash his spade ace, holding South to nine tricks.

You've obviously spotted that West made a crucial mistake when he followed with his club 10 instead of the queen on the second round of clubs. Had he "swallowed" East's jack with his queen...

What did West have to say about his careless play? He alleged that he suspected South of diabolical intent, playing in this way with K-7-7 of clubs. Had West then made the "allowable" play of the club queen...
