Nick Piccard, owner of the Royal Lounge, drove his pickup truck into the home of Wayne Durnil, above, early Tuesday morning in Twin Falls.

Man's midnight snoring saves wife from injury

By Kirk Mitchell Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A Twin Falls man's snoring may have saved his wife from injury Tuesday morning. Jackie Durnil moved to a different room after being awakened by husband Wayne Durnil's loud snoring. A few minutes later, a car driven by Nick Piccard crashed into their bedroom. "I woke to this horrendous noise and all I could see was headlights where my bedroom window used to be," said Durnil, 64. "It was strange." Just after midnight Monday, Piccard, the owner of the Royal Lounge in the Campus Commons shopping center, drove his Nissan pickup across a lane of traffic, over a sidewalk and through a four-inch tree limb, across 30 feet of lawn and through a brick bedroom wall. The truck cracked the foundation, buckled the side-hall bedroom wall by two inches, threw bricks against the opposite bedroom wall and pushed Durnil's bed — which was located three feet from the window — across the floor and against the far wall. It caused approximately $15,000 damage to the house, according to a police report. "If that hadn't been a brick house, he'd have probably been on my lap," said Durnil, who was uninjured. "My first thought was for my wife, who sleeps closest to the window," Durnil said. Several bricks had landed on her side of the bed and Durnil could not see his wife, whom he hadn't seen leave the room. On the floor next to the bed was a four-inch pile of bricks. Durnil said he was relieved when his started wife came into the room. Twin Falls Police Sgt. Jim Milston said Piccard was cited Wednesday for inattentive driving and not wearing a seat belt. Piccard said he jerked his truck left to avoid hitting a parked truck and lost control after looking in a car behind him through his rear-view mirror, according to the police report. Piccard received neck and head injuries, but was not hospitalized. Before the Royal Lounge moved into the neighborhood last year, Durnil said he signed a petition a year ago by neighbors

Subsidy payment limits stay in final House farm bill

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House approved a 1990 farm bill Wednesday that limits commodity subsidies, but not to the low levels that members attacking agriculture spending had sought. The House's 327-91 approval of the bill that sets agriculture policy for the next five years follows Senate passage last Friday of its version with many similar or identical provisions. The estimated cost of the support programs in the two bills is estimated to be between $54 billion and $55 billion. Though the debate over limiting subsidy payments led members to shout at one another about fiscal responsibility, the most emotional moments came when Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., tried to cut spending on food stamps and other nutrition programs that were expanded by the bill. That section of the legislation is called the Mickey Leland Domestic Hunger Relief Act, named in honor of the congressman from Texas who was killed last August in a plane crash in Ethiopia. As chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, he had been visiting refugee camps. "I think it's a sad commentary," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., of the French amendment. "This year there is a 25 percent increase in hunger in our society." The costs of this bill are included in the budget resolution they meet the requirements of the budget resolution, assured Panetta, who is chairman of the House Budget Committee. The House agreed with Panetta, 336-83. Other amendments tacked to the House bill Wednesday brought in some conformity with the Senate breakthrough in food safety and environmental protection, including the ban on exports of pesticides not allowed for use in the United States. Some other provisions of the House bill: Authorize $250,000 annually for research on deer ticks and other pests which transmit Lyme disease. Authorize $10 million annually for a public education program on the hazards of

Iraq invades Kuwait

The Washington Post

KUWAIT — The Ministry of Defense announced Thursday morning that Iraqi troops had attacked Kuwait's northern border and clashed with Kuwaiti forces. The announcement, carried on state radio, said Iraqi forces crossed the border at about 2 a.m., less than 24 hours after the two countries had broken off talks aimed at defusing the crisis in their relations caused by Iraqi demands for territorial and financial concessions. The Defense Ministry announcement did not specify where Iraq had crossed the border. A Western diplomat here said he had been told the Iraqis had taken all border posts between Abadan, where the main highway to Basra crosses the frontier, and Umm Qasr on the Persian Gulf. The scene in Kuwait city was chaotic. A series of explosions, lasting almost an hour, could be heard shortly after dawn. They appeared to be coming from north of the city. The Iraqi border is about 50 miles north of the city. The area near the U.S. Embassy and the Emir's palace was sealed by armed police, and sporadic gunfire could be heard on the streets in the area of the palace early Thursday morning. It was not clear what had prompted the shots. Just before midnight in Washington, the White House issued a statement condemning the Iraqi military invasion of Kuwait and calls for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Iraqi forces. Deputy press spokesman Steve Hart said, "We have conveyed this message to the Iraqi ambassador in Washington and to the Iraqi government through our Embassy in Baghdad. We deplore this blatant use of military aggression and violation of the United Nations charter."

Housing revamp passes

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House overwhelmingly approved a bill Wednesday to revamp federal housing programs and authorize $28 billion for them in fiscal 1991 despite a presidential veto threat. The vote for passage was 378-13. The bill includes most of the Bush administration's initiative for encouraging low-income housing tenants to purchase their homes, as well as provisions sought by congressional housing advocates to offer rental assistance, to help first-time home buyers and to encourage construction of new rental housing.

House Republicans joined Democrats in supporting the bill. But key Republicans said they were doing so in hopes the bill would be changed when it goes to House and Senate conferees to work out differences in the two chambers' versions. Idaho's representatives split on the bill. Democrat Richard Shelby sided with the bill, while Republican Larry Craig voted against it. In all, 246 Democrats and 132 Republicans voted for it and 1 Democrat and 42 Republicans voted against it. Rep. Chalmers Wylie, R-Ohio, ranking Republican on the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, said President

78 senators raise over $1 million from PACs

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — On March 29, 1993, Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., first reported receiving political action committee (PAC) donations — $1,800 worth from nine groups including the savings and loan, tobacco, cattle and dairy industries. In the years since, Dole has been elected three times, risen to become chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senate majority leader, presidential candidate and founder of his own PAC. Wearing these various hats, he has held enough fund-raising events to see his PAC donations rise to $4.6 million, more than any other member of the Senate. A study of campaign reports filed with the Federal Election Commission shows that from 1972 through the end of 1989, Dole's Senate members of the Senate raised more than $158 million in PAC donations. During that period, 78 current members raised more than $1 million each, with five Democrats and five Republicans in the top 10. By mid-1986, 35 senators had crossed the $1 million mark. Idaho's Steve Symms ranks 11th on the list with $2,403,711 in contributions. James

Senate slaps lid on honoraria

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate warned that its public esteem had fallen to "the level of used car dealers," voted Wednesday to hobble the money chase for campaign funds and to ban outside speaking fees. Democrats overrode longstanding public objections to limiting how much candidates can spend to win office to pass by a 59-40 vote, largely along party lines, the first wholesale revamping of election laws since the Watergate era 19 years ago. Immediate skepticism was raised as to whether the campaign reforms of the accompanying elimination of honoraria that now allows senators to keep thousands of dollars in speaking fees each year will clear several remaining hurdles, including the renewed proposal of a veto by President Bush. By a 77-23 vote earlier Wednesday, the Senate had voted to include in the bill Sen. Christopher Dodd's amendment to ban pocketing of honoraria after Jan. 1, 1990 and limit any other outside earned income to 15 percent of Senate salaries. The House voted a similar ban for its members last year. Many senators, like Dole, collect large amounts of PAC receipts because of their committee positions, because they have been through several election campaigns or have come from large states where races are particularly expensive. Historically, FEC records show that senators are less dependent on PAC donations than members of the House. But the amount of PAC dollars in campaigns has grown dramatically. For example, between 1978 and 1988, PAC giving to Senate candidates jumped from $9.7 million, 11.3 percent of total receipts, to $457 million, or 23 percent of receipts. The role of PACs in congressional elections is one of the key areas of campaign reform the Senate is debating. Dole and other Senate Republicans, joined by Senate Democrats last week, are calling for an outright ban on PAC donations in federal elections. House Democrats plan to take measures to the floor this week that would limit PAC donations. Dole said in a statement that "despite the hype about being 'number one,' PAC contributions to Sen. Dole comprise only 17 percent of my total campaign funding during the past 18 years." By contrast, he added, incumbents now receive about 30 percent of their money from PACs. Walt Riker, Dole's spokesman, said the minority leader is "willing to zero out PACs" because of their inclination to give almost exclusively to incumbents.

Weather summary

Blue skies and hazy sun prevailed across most of the northwest interior Wednesday.

Although some cloud development was observed during the afternoon in the north, along the Canadian border, and in the southeast corner of Idaho, the only showers detected by radar were over the higher mountains near the Idaho-Montana border.

Temperatures reported around Idaho at 3 p.m. were in the 80s and lower 90s, except in the upper 70s at McCall and Malheur.

The warmest temperature in the state Wednesday was 96 degrees at Caldwell. Stanley reported the coldest at 36 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Wednesday, the highest temperature was 115 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz. The lowest was 37 in Gunnison, Colo.

Record low temperatures chill Great Lakes region

The Associated Press

Rain was scattered over parts of the central half of the nation Wednesday, and temperatures settled to record lows south of the Great Lakes.

During the afternoon, showers and thunderstorms extended along the Gulf of Mexico coast, across Florida, from Georgia through the lower Mississippi Valley into eastern and southern Oklahoma as well as northern, eastern and southern Texas.

Showers were scattered over southeastern Kansas, from north-central New Mexico across central Colorado, and over central South Dakota.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours up to 2 p.m. EDT mentioned 1.26 inches at McAlester, Okla., and 1.23 inches at Atlanta.

Rain flooded some low-lying highway crossings in the southwest Texas, the National Weather Service said. Record lows included 51 at Chicago, 48 at Mansfield, Ohio. Records were tied at Peoria, Ill., at 52, and South Bend, Ind., at 50. Elsewhere, Alamosa, Colo., tied its record low of 39.

At the opposite extreme, Salt Lake City reached 102 degrees, tying the record high for the date. Miami hit a record high of 96.

Temperatures over Hurricane Bertha was about 183 miles south-southwest of Sable Island, Nova Scotia, moving toward the northeast. Its highest sustained wind speed was near 75 mph.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 58 at Arcam, Calif., to 102 at Gila Bend, Ariz.

Wednesday's low for the Lower 48 states was 37 at Gunnison, Colo.

Moslem militants give up in Trinidad

PORT-OF-SPAIN, Trinidad — Dozens of Moslem militants surrendered Wednesday and freed 42 hostages they seized six days ago in a failed bid to overthrow the government of this Caribbean island nation, officials said.

The attempted coup, which reportedly left at least 20 people dead, began Friday when armed rebels stormed the state television station and the Parliament building, taking top government officials and other captives.

The coup leader, Abu Bakr, had demanded the resignation of Prime Minister Arthur N.R. Robinson, who was among those held hostage. Robinson was freed Tuesday after offering to step down and agreeing to the militants' surrender.

Bakr blamed Robinson for widespread poverty in the nation of 1.3 million people, a former British colony. Witnesses said Bakr was among the rebels who surrendered at the television station, where the first group of hostages was freed.

Government spokesman Gregory Shaw said he believed the militants' surrender was unconditional, but details of the agreement were not immediately available.

Thatcher finds Colorado cool, soggy

ASPEN, Colo. — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher ran into soggy, London-like weather when she arrived at this mountain resort Wednesday to address an international symposium.

Thatcher, arriving in a driving wind and chilly rain, hurried from her Colorado Air National Guard Wing jet to a waiting four-wheel drive vehicle. She did not pause to wave at the small crowd but did shake hands briefly with a group of visiting dignitaries, including U.S. Ambassador to Britain, Henry F. Catto, and Aspen Mayor Bill Stirling, among others.

The prime minister came to Colorado to begin a combined business-pleasure trip during which she is scheduled to give a speech at the Aspen Institute.

She arrived in the country of Altitude Air Force Base in Colorado Springs and changed planes for the hop to this rocky mountain site.

The prime minister was greeted at the airport by Gov. Roy Romer and Gen. Donald Kutyna, head of the U.S. Space Command and North American Aerospace Defense Command. Kutyna's wife, Lucy, gave the prime minister masses when she stepped from the plane onto a red carpet.

Bear mauls 2 hikers in Glacier Park

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, Mont. — Two hikers were mauled by a bear they encountered on a trail in the dark, officials said.

The couple, both summer workers for a park concessionaire, were in stable condition at Columbus Hospital in Great Falls recovering from bite wounds and lacerations Wednesday. Rangers were trying to track down the bear.

The attack took place Tuesday night on Matt Allen, 25, of New Orleans, and Diane McCroary, 22, of Dyersburg, Tenn., were returning from a hike on the Leeburg-Plarmigan Lake Trail and were about a mile from a motel, said park spokeswoman Amy Vanderbilt.

"They weren't wearing bells — sometimes carried by hikers in the park to deter the park's many bears," Ms. Vanderbilt said. When they were attacked, they fell to the ground and played dead to discourage the bear.

Crew of stricken vessel saved

NEW YORK — The crews of ships plucked 21 sailors from heavy seas Wednesday after their cargo ship foundered in the grip of Hurricane Bertha 350 miles off Cape Cod. Six crew members died.

"We have accounted for everybody. 20 in good condition, one alive but injured, six deceased," said Lt. Cmdr. Paul Olivette, a Coast Guard spokesman. He did not know the condition of the injured man.

Three bodies were still missing Wednesday, but witnesses had seen the men in the water as the Coast Guard scanned the three among the six dead, Milligan said.

The crew of 27 abandoned the 593-foot Maltese-registered freighter Corazon (4230) at 11:40 a.m. after reporting the ship was breaking up. Thirty-four waves whipped by wind gusting to 90 mph had snapped its keel, the equivalent of breaking its back.

Soviet, Hong Kong and Norwegian merchant ships steamed to the stricken vessel to rescue crew members crowded in a lifeboat and a life raft. U.S. military aircraft coordinated the search.

Authorities did not know if the ship was leaking fuel by how much was aboard.

Hurricane Bertha churned on toward Canada's Maritime Provinces, carrying 75 mph wind, but was expected to weaken. A swimmer in Florida drowned Tuesday in rough water attributed to the hurricane.

Helmsman couldn't avoid collision

HOUSTON — The helmsman of a Greek tanker testified Wednesday that he swerved but couldn't avoid a collision that caused more than 300,000 gallons of oil to spill into the Gulf of Mexico Bay.

Meanwhile, federal officials approved the use of oil-eating microbes to help clean up the spill, which threatens birds and other wildlife in nesting grounds around the bay.

The Greek tanker Shinoussa collided Saturday with two of three barges towed by the tug Chandyni in the Houston Ship Channel, which passes through the bay. Heavy black oil spilled to spill Wednesday from an crippled barge. The other barge sank and the double-hulled tanker did not leak.

Salvage crews slid a sling under the crippled barge Wednesday to help refloat it as six skimmers and two vacuum trucks cleared oil, said Coast Guard spokesman Dennis Schaefer.

"The oil is significantly disappearing and is being picked up," said Schaefer. By late Tuesday, about 48,400 gallons of oil were recovered, he said.

However, Schaefer said it wasn't known how much oil had sunk.

to tobacco use.

- Require farmers to keep records on pesticide use that could be provided to government agencies or employees and health care professionals concerned about the effects of exposure.
- Establish national standards for labeling a food "organically grown."

Agriculture Committee member Rep. Steve Conte, a Mass., who offered the amendment to the House bill that caps subsidy payments. That proposal, approved 375-45, would impose limits of:

- $100,000 a year on the total deficiency payment paid to a single farmer. These are the direct subsidies paid when market prices are below a target price established by the government.
- $100,000 a year on marketing loans to one farmer. This is the money farmers keep if world prices are less than the government established loan rate paid farmers to cover the cost of planting.

$200,000 a year on all payments to a single farmer.

These cutoffs are not in the Senate bill.

Besides setting subsidy levels for many crops, the farm bill also establishes programs for agricultural exports, nutrition, conservation, food safety, forestry, research and virtually every other endeavor of the Agriculture Department. Congress writes a new farm bill every five years.

Supporters of Huckaby's amendment funded a coalition led by Rep. Silvio Conte, a Mass., who wanted $50,000 limits on the payments and other restrictions.

"This is a major reform," said Conte of his proposal. "It makes the savings everyone admits will have to be made this year to the farm program."

"The Conte amendment is an amendment that says 'if you cannot make it on $50,000 of government subsidy than you are in bad shape and you shouldn't be doing this,'" said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

But Huckaby and other members of the Agriculture Committee said Conte's plan would "stink at the very beginning" of farm programs by creating restrictions that would eliminate so many farms from the program that it would no longer be an effective method of controlling supplies and land use.

"What we are discussing here is a farm bill that encompasses a whole spectrum of American society," said Agriculture Committee Chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, pointing out the conservation aspects of the bill.

The city has denied the claim by not answering the charge and Picard has not filed a suit in district court.

Housing

Bush and Jack Kemp, the secretary of housing and urban development, got 90 percent of their proposal to encourage public housing residents to purchase their homes in some cases.

Stitt, Wylie said, "If the bill come back from conference in its present form, the president's advisers will recommend a veto — we will work to sustain the president's veto."

The Senate has already approved a more modest housing bill after reaching agreement with the Bush administration on key provisions.

The White House threatened a veto because the House version disregards the administration's demand for change in the Federal Housing Administration, requiring a requirement for a larger down payment on FHA-backed home mortgages.

The Senate version includes higher down payment requirements.

The administration maintains that Americans qualifying for FHA mortgages should pay more up front than under current regulations because those who put up more cash will be less likely to default. Opponents argued that the administration's down payment requirements would make it impossible for thousands of Americans to buy a home.

The FHA payments at settlement would vary with the price of a home.

BOISE (AP) — Here are the winning numbers in Wednesday night's Idaho Super-Lotto-Lotto. America drawing: 2-26-46-47-52 (one, two, six, forty-six, forty-seven, fifty-two). The jackpot was $6 million. Lottery officials said.

Yeutter lives up to promise, sells holdings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter has sold his interests in a number of companies as promised at his Senate confirmation early last year. Financial disclosure reports showed Wednesday.

The sales included stocks in WR Nabisco, Philip Morris, IBM, Caterpillar, 3M, ConAgra, Emhart, Upjohn and several others, as part of Yeutter's pledge to avoid conflicts of interest or appearances of conflict.

David L. Spradlin of the Agriculture Department's personnel office said Yeutter had filed the annual disclosure on May 5, but it was returned for additional information and clarification.

Yeutter joined the Reagan administration in 1985 as U.S. trade representative. Previously he was head of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and had extensive business and farming interests, as well as careers in law and economics.

President Bush named him as secretary of agriculture with an eye on 1990 farm legislation and to help in agricultural negotiations during the current trade talks under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The company interests sold by Yeutter made up a fraction of the total assets listed in his financial statement. No exact figures were listed in the disclosure forms, but Yeutter's assets totaled more than $800,000 and possibly much more.

Selling prices of the stocks sold varied from $15,000 to $50,000 in the case of ConAgra and Philip Morris, for example, to $5,000 to $15,000 for Caterpillar and Upjohn.

Harassers will benefit from bill, woman says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A woman subjected to two years of obscene phone calls, vandalism and threats from a "telephone terrorist" urged a Senate panel Wednesday not to restrict the new Caller I.D. devices that she play the phone numbers of incoming calls.

Mrs. Steacy Blazer of Olney, Md., said she opposed a bill by Sen. Herbert Kohl, D-Wis., that would require phone companies to offer selective blocking of Caller I.D. for those customers who don't want to reveal their phone numbers.

But privacy advocates say calls should not be required to give away their phone numbers to care-ealemen, mail order houses and the like whenever they make a phone inquiry. Law enforcement officials and operators of battered women centers say blocking is essential.

Steacy's bill, as the company now have Caller I.D., and as many as 22 states are debating whether to allow it, California requires blocking, while a Pennsylvania court has outlawed it as a violation of wiretaps laws.

Rules hinder experimental AIDS treatment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Efforts to develop drugs for AIDS-related diseases are hindered by federal rules which bar hospital insurance coverage for people receiving novel treatments, the government's chief AIDS researcher said Wednesday.

Dr. Anthony S. Fauci and other witnesses told a House Government Operations subcommittee the lack of public and private insurance for hospital care in clinical trials prevents thousands of people from receiving potentially life-prolonging treatment.

Insurers, including the public Medicare and Medicaid programs, do not regularly reimburse for treatments that are considered to be experimental. A person with an AIDS-related infection who does not receive experimental treatment would be reimbursed, according to Fauci and others.

Both AIDS research and the health-care reimbursement programs fall under the jurisdiction of the Department of Health and Human Services.

AIDS and the particularly virulent opportunistic infections that follow it strike largely at people least able to afford hospital care, witnesses said.

The infections strike all organs, including the eyes, lungs and intestines, and along with tumors, cause most AIDS deaths. AIDS weakens the body's ability to resist ordinary bacteria, fungi, parasites and viruses.

Fauci urged the subcommittee on human resources and intergovernmental relations that he has brought up the gap in biweekly meetings of the interagency HIV Leadership Group.

"The response within the department is that 'they were very sympathetic with the difficulties this is posing for us in the conduct of our trials, but a solution is not readily at hand,' Fauci said.

He said the problem is an unwillingness to spend more money on reimbursements that are already stretching the government for non-experimental hospitalizations.

Liberian war victims getting rice from U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States will provide 30,000 bags of rice to help ease victims of the civil war in Liberia, the State Department said Wednesday.

Catholic Relief Services will use commercial channels to sell the rice at a subsidized price to enable poor Liberians to buy it, deputy spokesman Richard Boucher said. The proceeds will be used for relief-related activities.

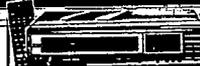

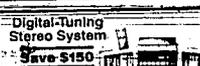

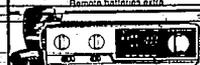

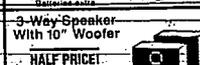

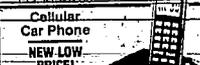

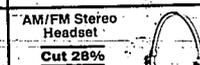

The United States also is providing 29,200 metric tons of rice to Liberian refugees in Cote d'Ivoire, Sierra Leone, and Guinea.

Bush will back funds for defense

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush prepared Wednesday to defend his 1991 defense budget, which Democrats savored the cuts they inflicted on the B-2 bomber program and the Strategic Defense Initiative.

"I was out running at six this morning just because I was exhilarated," Rep. Ron Dillums, D-Calif., told reporters a few hours after the House Armed Services Committee cut $24 billion from the $307 billion the president had requested for defense spending in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

The administration began lobbying Senate Republicans to restore the cuts as the White House said Bush would speak Thursday on "how he perceives the U.S. defense budget."

On Tuesday, the House Armed Services Committee voted to halt production of the B-2 stealth bomber at the 15 planes under construction, not the 75 Bush had asked for. At nearly $865-million each, it is the costliest airplane ever built.

The committee, on a bipartisan vote of 40-12, also stripped nearly $2 billion from Bush's request of $4.7 billion for the Strategic Defense Initiative, or Star Wars; cut military personnel by 129,500; and scaled back on two nuclear missile programs.

The left Democrats on the panel with a heavy feeling.

"There was an image that we never met a weapons system we didn't like and that we would fund anything that they would bring over from the Pentagon," Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., said.

Bush, meanwhile, went on the offensive. Spokesman Roman Popadiuk said the president will speak Thursday in Aspen, Colo., where he will be meeting with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The owners of the crippled Three Mile Island nuclear reactor will seek to have customers pay costs associated with the 1979 accident until the year 2014, according to plant officials.

The unit operated only about four months before it was permanently disabled in the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident on March 31, 1979.

Its twin, Unit 1, was unharmed and was given permission to resume operations in 1985. The owners hope to operate the healthy unit until 2014.

"It's wrong to ask our children to pay for a nuclear reactor that only was in operation for four months," Eric Epstein, spokesman for Three Mile Island Alert, an anti-nuclear group, said in an interview Wednesday.

The costs are the result of the reactor's "unique, post-accident condition," plant officials said in a July 26 report filed with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Billions in S&L assets for sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — The savings and loan agency on Wednesday announced its "great fall inventory clearance sale" to unload $50 billion in assets from failed thrifts by the end of the year.

The sales push marks the second phase of the Resolution Trust Corp.'s cleanup effort. In the first phase, dubbed "Operation Clean Sweep," the agency concentrated on selling the failed institutions and their deposits.

But it ended up keeping a large share of the failed thrifts' securities, problem real-estate, junk bonds and other assets. Democrats in Congress had complained that selling institution franchises represented scant "progress" unless accompanied by substantial asset sales.

Phase 2 — dubbed by L. William Seidman, chairman of the Resolution Trust Corp., the "great fall inventory clearance sale" — is aimed at whittling the Resolution Trust's inventory. Sales proceeds will offset what the agency has spent to pay off depositors or to entice private investors into taking over insolvent institutions.

Among the sales techniques employed will be an international satellite auction of 71 major properties, "bulk sales" of packages of similar properties and the use of 15 special sales offices from King of Prussia, Pa., to Costa Mesa, Calif. The satellite auction is Nov. 15 in Dallas.

Earthquakes this year not unusual

WASHINGTON (AP) — So far, 1990 is just an average year for earthquakes, the government said Wednesday, although the Iranian quake in June was the deadliest in 14 years.

The U.S. Geological Survey said the death toll in Iran, estimated at 50,000 or more, is the highest since a 1976 quake in China killed more than 250,000 people.

Overall, there were 34 significant quakes in the first six months of 1990. That would be close to normal since there are, on average, 60 significant quakes in a typical year, the agency said.

A significant quake is defined as one reaching 6.5 or higher on the Richter scale or a lesser tremor causing significant casualties or damage. The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released in an earthquake as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

Only one significant quake was recorded in the United States from January through June, a magnitude 5.5 tremor that injured 38 people and caused $10 million in damage in Southern California on Feb. 28.

The quake that struck Iran measured 7.7 on the scale, according to Waverly Person, chief of the agency's National Earthquake Information Service in Golden, Colo.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Students at Marshall High School will learn their geography this year, or else — or else they might have trouble finding their classroom.

Each classroom has been transformed into a country, using paint and decor, reflecting the culture of the assigned country. And buildings at the school in southeastern Portland now represent continents.

"I'm going to force the staff and kids to find their way around geographically," Principal Colin Karr Morse said.

Teachers will post daily news articles and other country facts. Country flags and products will also be on display.

Karr-Morse said the idea came after the results of a Gallup poll released last year showed that U.S. residents between the ages of 18 and 24 could only identify seven of 16 countries on the globe. People of the same age group from countries such as Mexico, Italy, Canada, Japan and Sweden all scored higher.

Rubble yields 13 bodies

BAGUIO, Philippines (AP) — Thirteen bodies were recovered Wednesday from the rubble of a hotel that collapsed in an earthquake July 16, and a doctor said one of the victims may have lived a week before dying in the debris.

More than 40 people, including 30 guests, remain unaccounted for at the Hyatt Terrace Hotel, one of nearly 30 buildings that collapsed in Baguio during the earthquake. The quake killed more than 1,600 people throughout Luzon island and left more than 110,000 homeless. About 1,000 people remain missing. The U.S. Embassy said 12 of those missing are Americans of Filipino origin. Gus Baloy, a hotel employee, said the 13 bodies were recovered during a seven-hour period beginning Wednesday morning. All were employees of the hotel, he said.

A doctor who spoke on condition of anonymity said that based on an examination of the body, it appeared one of the victims may have lived for a week after the earthquake. He said the body, that of a woman, bore no life-threatening injuries. Hopes of finding more survivors were raised after Pedro Dy, 27, a hotel cook and part-time gym instructor, was rescued Monday from the ruins of the Hyatt. Dy survived 4 days underground by drinking rainwater and his own urine.

Oil, border dispute talks between Kuwait, Iraq collapse

JDDAH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Iraqi officials on Wednesday walked out on talks aimed at resolving the 2-week-old border, oil and money crisis with neighboring Kuwait and complained that Kuwait was not negotiating seriously.

Kuwaiti officials offered to move the negotiations to either of their capitals. The dispute has been accompanied by a massive show of Iraqi strength at the border, estimated by diplomatic sources at 100,000 troops, as well as hundreds of tanks, because Iraq did not see any seriousness by Kuwait officials in settling the major damage inflicted on Iraq due to their recent behavior and stands against Iraq's fundamental interests.

Hammedi told the official Iraqi News Agency that the talks will continue as agreed with mediators, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt and King Fahd of Saudi Arabia.

In Baghdad, deputy prime minister Sa'doun Hammadi said the two sides failed to reach an agreement because Iraq did not see any seriousness by Kuwait officials in settling the major damage inflicted on Iraq due to their recent behavior and stands against Iraq's fundamental interests.

Oil executives said the price of oil shot up by 50 cents a barrel. In Kuwait, travelers arriving from Iraq said the border checkpoints on both sides were operating normally. Iraqi troops and military vehicles were sighted at areas within Iraqi territory far from the border with Kuwait; the travelers said on condition of anonymity.

Fahd arranged for Sheik Saud and Ibrahim to hug and embrace after their arrival in the Saudi summer capital on Tuesday, and feuded both delegations at a dinner banquet. Crown Prince Abdullah brought the two sides together for two hours of talks, including a late intercession by the delegation leaders. Sources close to the conference said Iraq maintained a hard-line stance. Baghdad insisted the Jiddah session be a prelude of meeting to be followed by a working meeting in Baghdad.

Military charges U.S. drug agents with murder

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The military filed murder charges Wednesday against three American "big game" and 13 Philippine policemen in the killings of three soldiers, including two officers, during an alleged drug bust last month.

Brig. Gen. Gerardo Flores, chief of staff of the Philippine Constabulary, said charges were filed against Philip Neehan of the Drug Enforcement Administration's Bangkok office, Andrew Fenrich, head of the DEA section in Manila, and another DEA agent, Jake Fernandez.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schinger said all three had left the country and "have no plans to return."

Under Philippine law, criminal charges against civilians are referred to a provincial prosecutor, who decides whether to issue an indictment.

Flores said 10 of the Filipinos were charged before a military court. The Integrated National Police is part of the armed forces.

In Washington, acting DEA Administrator Terrence Burke on Wednesday rejected the allegations, saying in a statement: "These charges have no merit."

DEA spokesman Joe Keefe said the Philippines government allows DEA agents to carry firearms, but he added: "None of the weapons was fired on that day."

There are usually two DEA agents assigned to the Philippines, but Fenrich and Fernandez were withdrawn from the country because of the shooting, Keefe said.

Belgian provinces ration water supply

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Two of Belgium's nine provinces have rationed water, and a third asked the public to limit the use of tap water as hot, dry weather continued to affect water supplies, officials said Wednesday.

Limburg, joining West Flanders on Wednesday in barring the use of tap water for watering gardens, washing cars and filling private swimming pools.

Antwerp, also faced with a shortage of tap water, urged the public to use water sparingly.

The three provinces are in northern Belgium.

15 killed in collapse

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A shopping center under construction collapsed Wednesday in western India, crushing to death at least 15 people and injuring 11, United News of India reported.

The fire agency said several more people were feared trapped under the rubble in Neenuch. The town is in Madhya Pradesh state, 310 miles southwest of New Delhi. The shopping center was half completed, UNI said.

Emerging generation may be welcome change

Did you notice something about the two National Merit Scholars announced in Wednesday's paper? Neither of them want to grow up to be a junk-bond trader.

Anne Blackburn of Hailey hopes to serve in the Peace Corps after graduation from college. Jeanna Du Fresno of Twin Falls wants to major in biochemistry and someday do medical research.

Here are two outstanding youngsters, literally among the nation's best and brightest, who share a common trait. Both harbor ambitions not only for personal success, but for contributions to human betterment.

Keep in mind, two youngsters do not a trend make. And their plans easily could change by the time they graduate from college — changing one's mind at that age is no sin.

But their idealism matches what more than one social observer has foreseen for the 1990s. The "Me Generation" that indulged in food processors and BMWs in the '80s may be giving way to a more altruistic, contemplative breed — especially among its highest achievers.

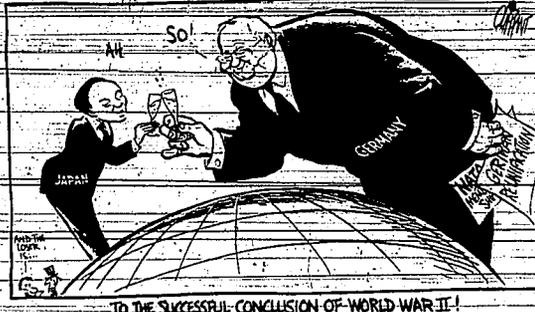

National Merit Scholars, by the way, most certainly fall into the "highest achiever" category. Through the winners of these awards invariably are blessed with brains, intelligence isn't enough to win. The winners combine hard work, ambition and talent for the best in out-of-class activities. They aren't your stereotypical slide-rule nerds.

Du Fresno, for example, practices Tae Kwon Do. Blackburn was in her school's drill team and a musical theater group.

The kids who win these awards aren't necessarily destined for success. But they're odds-on favorites. This year's two winners are a credit to themselves, to their parents and to their teachers.

For the record, the two winners' parents are Fred and Carol Blackburn and Sharlene and Paul (Twin Falls's city public services director) Du Fresno. They deserve applause for their kids' success. So do their schools.

(Unfortunately, Twin Falls public schools can't really claim credit for Jeanna Du Fresno. She transferred here a year ago from Michigan. She is a walking testimony to the importance of a strong background for high-performance students — keeps an eye on these young women, and on the generation they belong to. Good things are coming.

Environmentalists' paychecks are safe

Environmental leaders who draw huge salaries do not worry about losing their jobs or way of life by their involvement in condemning private property for enlargement of national parks. Working to the top 123 million acres more in wilderness areas and promoting protection for the endangered species.

According to George Leaming of the Western Economic Analysis Center, the proposed 123 million acres of wilderness expansion would cost the nation's economy between $300-billion and $1 trillion over the next 40 years.

Let us move the clocks and calendars ahead 20 years. Mr. Jones, the environmentalist, wants to build a home in the beautiful mountain area.

Somewhere, he finds a skinny old nag to make this trip. This is all the transportation available since there are no cars being built due to no mining being allowed. There is no gas, either, since all drilling has been stopped.

To his sorrow, he finds all forest lands wilderness areas. No sawmills, no lumber, only the sad cry of the "green" owl.

By this time, the poor man is starving. Pulling hard on the reins, he filling persuades his skinny old nag to stop in front of the only restaurant for miles around. Climbing stiffly from the makeshift saddle, he I'll have lamb chops, a baked potato and salad," says Mr. Jones.

"Sorry, sir," the cook replies. "We have no lamb chops or mutton of any kind. The grizzly bears and wolves have eaten all of the sheep on the ranches and the ranchers have all gone broke. So we have no supply of mutton."

"Very well, then, I'll have roast beef instead," replies Mr. Jones.

"OK, one roast beef coming up," shouts the cook.

"Here you are," says the waiter and sets the plate before the hungry man.

Jones takes one look at the tough, stringy, gray-looking something called beef, the salad with worm holes in the lettuce and the mungy potato and bellows, "How dare you serve me this horrible mess for food?"

"Sorry, sir, but the cattle that are left — and there are not many — are so poor because there is no grazing allowed. Feed lots are closed because cattlemen are out of business. No one can use bug killers; this is the best we can do."

"I'll just have a glass of water," He takes a swifter and gets:

"So sorry, sir, I know the water is warm; but you see, refrigerators put pollutants into the air and we are not allowed to have one."

Jones waits. "No decent food, the roads are atrocious; my horse has no shoes; there are ruthless criminals lurking everywhere and a mountain lion may jump out of a tree and kill me and my horse."

"Again the restaurant owner apologizes. "We cannot show your horse because there are six or seven miles around; we are not allowed to own guns; and mountain lions are an endangered species so we cannot protect you. There is no money to rebuild the roads or provide law officers because the West has lost its tax base."

The desperate man begins to gasp for breath. "Please say a prayer for me, for I am dying."

"Again I am terribly sorry, sir, but this is a public place and prayers are against the law. However, since this society would know the truth if they heard it, I will quote an old proverb and say it is Chinese: 'Bread cast upon the waters — after many days it will return.'"

Last weekend, the Twin Falls All Stars Association put on a terrific baseball tournament that brought together 22 teams from Idaho and Utah. The majority of the tournament was held at Harmon Park. For entertainment Friday night, the association sponsored a dance on the tennis courts with a special show by the Twin Falls Recreation Department. This dance was for the 9- to 11-year-old baseball players and their families to enjoy. All were having a great time until a police officer came and told us some residents living around Harmon Park had complained about "loud music" and was shutting down the dance at 9:25 p.m.

We, as a group, were very charged that those Harmon Park residents couldn't allow these kids to continue with their fun until 10 p.m. The music was not extremely loud, nor was it terribly late. This was a good, clean and safe activity for all ages participating or watching. Our town has so few activities for young people, and we certainly don't need residents who won't support healthy activities.

To those Harmon Park residents who complained: You let our young people down and gave our kids a bad impression of some local people a very bad impression of some of our Twin Falls citizens.
— JAN LENKER, Twin Falls

Bork upholds Constitution
Judge Bork states that no person should be nominated for or confirmed to the Supreme Court who does not display both a regard for and a devotion to the philosophy of "original understanding."
He believes that the abandonment of original understanding in modern times will have some severe consequences in personal freedoms. It will result in increasingly bitter Supreme Court decisions. They know it really and they turn a judicial body into a political body and upset the checks and balances originally put in place by our founding fathers.

We can expect a constitutional law that touches suddenly in one direction or another, as one faction or another gains the upper hand. Our abandonment of original understanding is seen as a reflection of a restless and unprogrammatic radicalism that does not share but attacks traditional values and assumptions.
Judge Bork tells us his feelings about his rejection in Congress for a seat on the Supreme Court. They knew it really and they turn a judicial body into a political body and upset the checks and balances originally put in place by our founding fathers.

Can we honestly say that through our excesses, the failure to show restraint and responsibility both as individuals and government for love of materialism that we have not chosen the road to decadence? A responsible Congress simply does not bow to demands of special interest groups out of fear of not being re-elected as opposed to the right or wrong of the matter.
— MARRIN RUGET

INEL should be watched
A brief rejoinder to Mr. Vreeland's brief response (July 25) to my comment on his remarks on the INEL controversy, if I may. I bow to Mr. Vreeland's expertise in nuclear physics. It's not my field. If the medical community is harmless to bone and tissue, then I suppose one could accept that as a preliminary hypothesis (even though it seems light years from their original conclusion; as well as being somewhat in opposition to the stand of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and its predecessor organization, AEC — or at least what I understood their position to be).

Even so, I cannot say that such a reversal would be sufficient to persuade me to ingest plutonium "just to see what happens." I could not countenance that any more than I agreed with those I know of who carried training capsules of Cobalt-60 around in the pockets because their "radiation was only measured in milliroentgens." It think it is prudent not to be exposed to any more radiation than necessary, and anything more is just foolhardy.
However, all that is actually beside the point, which is: The thing that really concerns me is the invective and hyperbole that is common currency in the INEL debate. It seems that many of those statements begin to take on an air of "can you stop this?"
As far as I know, the INEL is a legitimate scientific enterprise; and heaven knows, Idaho needs all the jobs it can get. On the other hand, having put in over 40 years as a part of the federal bureaucracy, I feel compelled in saying that it is Bork's feeling and the public should insist on suitable safeguards and adherence thereto.
— E.L. WILLIAMS, Hagerman

Questions animal-rights letter

In answer to Leslie Moody's letter on animal rights:

First of all, Ms. Moody, "let's get real." The tremendous wildlife populations in Idaho are not those because of you and your bunny-hugging friends. The all-time high elk, deer and Canada Goose numbers are because of sound management programs and efforts of men like "dumb" Jack Trueblood. The down trend of some upland game bird populations is a shame problem — too many do-gooders want to live wild nature and build their houses in the middle of prime habitat. Without us hunters and conservators to stop them, they would build on or black top everything.

You also make the "dumb" statement, "Animals have an innate intelligence and tend their lives in perfect balance and harmony with each other and their surroundings." when in truth there is not anything harmonious in the predator-prey relationship such as the fox vs. pheasant. Deer against mountain lion, for that matter, behavior of old age. Mother Nature is not free-giving or kind when it comes to management. Have you ever seen a fox or coyote with mange or rabbit with warbles or tularemia?

What makes me, as you put it, "big" is to see the same people in both anti-hunting and pro-abortion stances. I have been told you can't talk sense to an emotional radical and it's best to say nothing. I find this very hard to do.
— MICHAEL L. BLACK, Twin Falls

Fish and Game needs change
How about our illustrious Fish and Game's approach to the pheasant problem, or should I say lack of pheasant problem?

They're going to now spend thousands of dollars for study of the problem and hire more game officers. Isn't that neat? I would like to help them with their study. Open up and Paul says how much it cost them; you assured the state of a decline in pheasant populations. Then, another neat thing happened — you closed the Jerome hatchery. Now you want to spend money to study the problem. Give me a break, please!

Ask the business people (meats, restaurants and service stations) in the Burley, Rupert and Paul areas how much it cost them during these pheasant hunts. The decline in business is up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars each season. Think of the taxes the state has lost.

In the paper now they're proposing to change the season's starting and ending dates. Fish and Game, let me say this. When things aren't broken, they don't need fixing. The confusion out of your laws. Actually, we don't really know from the proclamation if you can shoot a Mallard Drake on Saturday at 4 p.m. or if you have to kill him with a club. Seriously, your new proclamation is ridiculous. It really parties your neighbor to the south — Utah.

Well, our group, called the Americans, keeps track of our government agencies. We track our Fish and Game needs a complete house cleaning, starting at the top and working down.
— DOC YOUNGER, Kimberly

Centennial Park boosts pride

Good first impressions are always important. As a reality, selling specific properties often requires selling the community as well. The new Centennial Park provides that good first impression, as well as a warm, friendly welcome to our town.

Many thanks to all those involved in making that corner of U.S. 30 and Main into what is today: it shows a lot of pride in our town.
— KENT COLLINS, Kimberly

Rich has unwarranted power
How many of you reading this letter make over $250,000 a year? Very few of you, right? Yet, it's that "few" 5 percent that control 85 percent of the wealth in this country.

The people in control keep the rest under control by dividing them; they have the poor thinking that the middle class is rich, and they have the middle class thinking that all poor people are lazy and don't work. This is so far from the truth!

It makes sense that if we, the 95 percent that are controlled by the 5 percent, would unite together and not let the wealthy and political powers divide us then we would have the people power and turn this government back to "government by the people."

Farmers and environmentalists can find common ground; they are both very concerned with feeding people and protecting the water and the ground. Farmers are some of the first environmentalists!

Poor and middle class can find common ground; they both pay too much in taxes and work very hard.

The uneducated and peace activists can find common ground; they both see the need for equal opportunity for education, more dollars put into education and less into the pockets of war!

Women and minorities can find common ground; they both want equal pay and equal opportunity to succeed in small and large businesses.

So let us work together and start mini-summits all over the state that bring together the 95 percent of us that don't make over $250,000 a year. We can come up with some very creative and workable solutions to the many common problems that affect us.

Big-money politicians and big-money business have only made drugs, crime, alcohol, unemployment and illness worse. Together, we the 95 percent, can solve these problems by taking back control from the 5 percent and making a better world.

Keep hope alive! together we will win!
— ELAINE MCLAIN, Candidate for state representative, Bellevue

Dutch group plans to salvage sub

MOSCOW (AP) — A Dutch consortium will salvage a Soviet nuclear submarine that sank off Norway in April 1989, the official Russian agency reported. The Dutch plan is realistic, well-substantiated technically and economically sound. Tass quoted the deputy minister of shipbuilding, Leonid Rezunov. The Soviet navy submarine Komsomolsk, carrying nuclear-tipped torpedoes, sank in nearly one mile of water after a fire broke out on board. Forty-two Soviet seamen died.

Gorbachev, Yeltsin join in revamping Soviet economy

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his main political rival, Boris Yeltsin, have formed a joint committee to revamp the Soviet economy. In a sign that Gorbachev is willing to move faster toward market reforms, the diplomat said. The 12-member committee, which held its first meeting Wednesday, brought together moderate reformers loyal to Gorbachev and more radical reformers supporting Yeltsin, the president of the huge Russian republic who recently quit Gorbachev's Communist Party. A Western diplomat termed the move "rather important" because the national government was in danger of falling far behind economic changes introduced in Russia, the largest of the Soviet Union's 15 republics. "If they don't do something like this, they are going to be left behind," the diplomat said, speaking on condition of anonymity. "Russia is going to move ahead fast." More rapid reform of the Soviet economy also could increase the chances for obtaining Western aid, which Gorbachev says is necessary to reform the economy. Gorbachev's top economic adviser, Nikolai Y. Petrakov, said in an interview that the decision to form the committee was "the most important information of 1990" in Soviet domestic politics. He said Gorbachev and Yeltsin signed the agreement Saturday after several days of talks. The economists appointed to it will develop a common economic policy for the nation. Petrakov said it was too early to say what they might recommend, but their work should be done by Sept. 1, when the national and Russian parliaments reconvene. Economic reforms will be of top priority at the sessions. The committee includes such proponents of reform as Petrakov; Deputy Premier Leonid A. Abalkin, Presidential Council member.

Stanislav Shatalin, economist and writer Nikolai Shmelev, Yeltsin deputy Grigory Yavlinsky and Russian Finance Minister Boris Fyodorov. The Interfax news service identified Yavlinsky as the author of Yeltsin's "500 Days" economic program to move Russia to a market economy. Over Gorbachev's objections, Yeltsin was elected in May to head Russia, which contains three-fourths of the Soviet Union's land and more than half its people. Since then, he has slowly outlined plans to overhaul the republic's economy.

Railroad crossing deaths preventable

BOISE - Many of the nation's 682 railroad crossing fatalities in 1989, including nine in Idaho, could have been prevented by attentive drivers, the American Automobile Association says.

Nearly 300 more people were killed in collisions between cars and trains last year than in all commercial aviation accidents.

The higher rail crossing death rate is largely reflective of driver error, Federal Railroad Administration officials say. Many of those killed at the crossings likely saw the train before diving on the tracks.

Already this year, five fatalities have taken place in Idaho at train-car accidents.

"Most collisions occur when drivers try to save time by crossing in front of a train, instead of waiting for it," said Idaho AAA spokesman Dave Carlson.

"Drivers who see or hear any sign of a train should stay off the tracks."

Well over half of the country's 181,000 railroad grade crossings also have no electronic signals or gates to warn drivers.

Apparent low bidder set for work at Burley crossing

BOISE - Gordon Paving Co. of Burley is the apparent low bidder for a project on 300 West Road in Burley. Their bid was $41,157.

This project involves making railroad crossing improvements and is expected to be finished in October.

Twin Falls Democrats plan to hold yard sale Sunday

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls County Democrats will have a yard sale at the intersection of Filer Avenue and Washington Street Sunday, not Saturday as previously reported, beginning at 10 a.m. Proceeds will be used to help candidates in the fall election. For more information contact Gary Nielsen, 423-4382, Don McMurrin, 733-5841 or Clarice Sather, 733-1930.

Galena Summit highway work likely to delay traffic

KETCHUM - Motorists driving over Galena Summit should expect minor delays for the next four weeks as workers from the Idaho Transportation Department shoulder work on that stretch of Idaho Highway 75.

Workers are correcting shoulder problems resulting from a resurfacing project on the highway last fall.

County pension plan to get 5 percent cost-of-living raise

TWIN FALLS - Retirees on the Twin Falls County pension plan will get a 5 percent cost-of-living raise courtesy of the County Commission.

The commission passed a resolution Wednesday granting the increase this year and for years following. Chairman Marvin Hempleman said the pension's manager, West One Bank, advised them the fund is doing well enough to afford the increase.

Park Service employees will conduct fossil beds tour

HAGERMAN - A guided walk through the Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument will be held Friday.

Those interested can meet at the Hagerman City Park at 7 p.m. A caravan of vehicles will then travel across the river to the fossil beds.

Neil King, Kevin Lyloff and Dave Midgelson, all of the National Parks Service, will guide the one-hour walk. They will discuss the quarry site, geology, ancient history, excavation history and plans for development of the area.

The walk is sponsored by the Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation and is free to the public.

Man draws bigamy charge

By Anita Dennis
Times-News writer

JEROME - A man who a prosecutor says has been married more than 10 times is scheduled to appear in Magistrate Court Friday on a felony charge of bigamy.

Gordon Everett Howell, 45, is charged with marrying a 32-year-old woman six weeks ago in Jerome, while he was still married to a woman in Southern California, court records say.

Howell married Carey Sue Blake in August 1989 in Riverside County, California, records say.

No divorce proceedings have been filed anywhere for that marriage, Jerome County Deputy Prosecutor Hyong K. Pak said.

A call from Blake, 44, led to the filing of the charge, Pak said. It is the first bigamy charge filed in Jerome County, he said.

Howell's current wife, Tamera Lee Shelton, may file his 13th Pak said.

This is the second time Howell has been charged, Pak said.

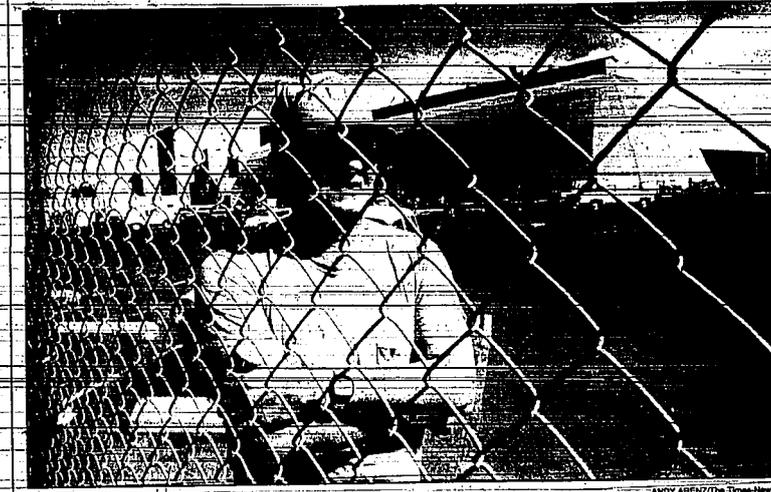

According to a certified criminal history obtained by the prosecutor's office, Howell was booked into the jail in Upton County, Texas, on a bigamy charge in 1977. He posted bail shortly afterward, however, and the Upton County courthouse has no record of proceedings against him.

Howell, whose last known address is 5884 U.S. Highway 93, was served with a summons last week at the Southern Idaho Youth Center, Blake said. Howell works there.

A man by the same name was reached by phone at the youth detention center, but he said he was not the same Gordon Everett Howell.

No one answered a home phone number provided by Blake.

Bigamy carries a maximum sentence of three years in the state penitentiary and a $2,000 fine.

Amalgamated employee Henry Riedeman says, "I don't think anybody is ready for a strike, but they (workers) would do it."

Amalgamated workers get contract news today

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Union workers at four Amalgamated Sugar factories in Idaho and Oregon will learn today if they have won a three-year contract.

About 2,300 employees voted on the contract Wednesday at factories in Twin Falls, Rupert, Nampa and Nyssa, Ore.

Presidents of the American Federation of Grain Millers locals were reluctant to predict how the vote turned out, but indicated it was tight.

A worker leaving the Twin Falls plant yelled "strike!" as he pulled out in his truck onto the road. Another employee said he thought the contract was unanimously rejected. One man said nobody was saying how they voted.

Henry Riedeman, a forklift operator, said he knew of only one worker who indicated he would vote to accept the contract.

"I personally don't feel that the company made us a good offer," Riedeman said.

The company offered possible 4 percent raises each of the first two years of the contract, with a 3 percent raise the final year, Riedeman said. But the raises were tied to keeping medical costs down.

As medical costs rise, the raises would get smaller. The lowest possible raise was 2 percent, Riedeman said.

Attempts were unsuccessful Wednesday night to reach a company spokesman to confirm these figures.

An Amalgamated official offered 2 percent raises the first two years and a 3 percent raise the final year of the contract. But employees also were being asked to pay $57 a month toward health insurance premiums. The union rejected that offer last week, saying $57 a month was too much for workers in the hole.

The company has said its medical costs rose 29 percent last year and that employees had to help absorb those costs. Amalgamated spokesman Tom Martin had said medical costs were the major issue of the contract negotiations.

Desert blaze out of control near Shoshone

The Times-News

SHOSHONE - A brush fire raged out of control Wednesday afternoon near Crater Butte.

The Bureau of Land Management sent eight heavy and six light engines and about 60 people out to fight the 800-acre fire about four miles northeast of Shoshone toward Richfield.

Though the cause is still under investigation, the fire appeared to have started in a grain field. Whipped by winds gusting from 12 to 20 mph, the fire quickly spread to 800 acres of desert rangeland.

Firefighters hoped to contain the fire by midnight Wednesday, fire dispatcher Andy Payne said. They will attempt to set back fires from desert rangeland to keep the fire from getting bigger, he said.

The small controlled back fires burn grass and brush in front of the fire, to create a break that can stop the fire.

Another fire on private land near Silver Creek burned about five acres of brush and grass before it was put out.

Idaho farmers find economy not improving

The Associated Press and The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Unemployment in Idaho's rural areas has declined since the early 1980s, but still is a challenge to make a living there.

In 1982, state unemployment peaked at 9.9 percent, while the national rural jobless rate reached 10.1 percent. Idaho does not distinguish between rural and urban unemployment because so few areas in the state are metropolitan areas.

"We took a nose dive into an agricultural depression not seen since the 1930s," said Jim Nelson of the University of Idaho's agriculture department.

In the next few years, unemployment rates dropped steadily, reaching 5.1 percent in Idaho and 5.7 percent nationally in 1989.

Idaho's recovery was partly fueled by hard times elsewhere. Prices for potatoes and beans soared in 1988 and 1989 as drought lingered on and on in the upper Midwest. Idaho's irrigated farms reaped the benefit of those prices, and farmers spent more money in their communities.

Rural economic recovery may now be losing steam. A recent U.S. Agriculture Department report indicates that in the first quarter of 1990, the rural jobless rate remained unchanged from last year.

To cope, Nelson said, many farmers are growing specialty crops, such as fruits, vegetables and seed crops.

"There is no way fruits and vegetables will replace wheat, but farmers are trying to diversify," he said.

The trend toward one of the spouses working in town has created smaller families, he said. And some farm families are developing home-based businesses to supplement their incomes rather than leaving town.

New Big Wood regulations confuse many fishermen

The Associated Press and The Times-News

BOISE - Confusion over new fishing regulations on the Big Wood River has reduced the number of fishermen on one of its prime stretches, the Idaho Fish and Game Department says.

"A lot of people are totally confused," said conservation officer Lee Frost.

New regulations that went into effect this spring changed the river's catch-and-release stretch from the confluence with the North Fork to the Hidden Hollow bridge on Idaho Highway 75 near East Fork Road.

From there south to the Glendale diversion, a mile south of Bellevue, the former six-fish limit has been reduced to two.

In addition, only fish shorter than 12 inches or longer than 16 inches can be kept. Those between 12-16 inches are considered to be of spawning age, and wildlife officials believe they are critical for the population's survival.

Frost said most fishermen believe that to fish the catch-and-release stretch, they need to use barbless hooks, which is practical only with flies.

But he said fishermen can use barbed hooks and bait to release fish by cutting the line just above the hook. Within a couple of weeks, the hook will dissolve in the fish's mouth.

Gary Peak, president of the Idaho Sportsmen's Association, said it was formed to battle the catch-and-release rules, but now has decided to live with them.

"My impression is that most people have come to the realization that things are changing and that we have to live with the changes," he said. "No one that I'm acquainted with is foolish enough to believe that we can keep fish out of the Big Wood River."

Frost said expanding the area restricted to catch-and-release fishing is the result of a Fish and Game decision to discontinue stock on that stretch and to rely on maintenance of the wild trout population.

He said a department goal is to build wild fish populations when the habitat warrants it.

Frost said habitat loss threatens the Big Wood River's trout more than fishing pressure. Habitat is lost due to trampling, streambank landscaping and clearing log jams.

"Changing the regulations without a decrease in habitat loss is an exercise in futility," he said.

Evangelist Glass prepares for week-long crusade

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Bringing families back together and bringing individuals closer to Jesus are the goals of evangelist Bill Glass, who begins a week-long Christian crusade at Brann Stadium Sunday.

Organizers expect more than 15,000 people to attend the eight nights of the crusade, which will conclude Aug. 12.

Glass, a former All-Pro defensive end for the Cleveland Browns, will return to the football arena to "preach the gospel for the first time since his first visit to Twin Falls in 1965."

"There's more of a God-awareness in Twin Falls and the Magic Valley area," Glass says, "and that brings about a more stable environment for everyone," said Jack Muldoon, chairman of the Celebration for Jesus.

Four celebrity guests will join Glass in this year's crusade, which targets those outside the church as well as inside. Muldoon said.

who was once convicted of murder - will join Glass on stage Monday to tell how his Christian faith turned his life around after he spent 21 years in maximum security prison.

Seven-year pro-football veteran Tom Flick will speak during a special youth night Wednesday. Kellye Cash, Miss-America 1987, will speak Friday, and professional basketball player Tanya Crevier will be on stage Saturday.

"This is especially for somebody who can relate to a football player or an ex-convict - or someone in the public eye - all of us have problems in our lives," he said.

Glass, who played in the NFL for 12 years with the Browns and the Detroit Lions, has a divinity degree from Southwestern Theological Seminary in Dallas. He is an ordained Southern Baptist minister, but the ministry is non-denominational, Muldoon said.

Local churches have been preparing for Glass' arrival for nearly a year. Muldoon said 129 churches covering 35 denominations are involved in the crusade, which is expected to bring people from as far away as Jackpot, Arco, and Sun Valley.

The meetings are financed through donations and fundraisers put on by the sponsoring churches, but Glass himself is paid by the board of directors of the Brann-based Bill Glass Evangelist Association. Muldoon said.

Assessing funds are used to finance Glass' prison ministry, he said.

As many as 4,000 spectators are expected on busy nights, with crowds averaging 2,000-2,500 people, Muldoon said.

In 1985, more than 4,000 people crowded into the Twin Falls High School football stadium to listen to Glass and former football star Rosie Grier on the crusade's busiest night.

The sessions are scheduled to begin each night at 7:30.

Rupert Council to hold budget hearing

By Sissy Kindig
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT—The City Council will hold a public hearing on the city's proposed budget at 7 p.m. Aug. 21.

The city will open bids on farm acreage in the same meeting. The council announced during a special meeting Tuesday.

Mayor Bill Whitton said that the city departments have requested more money for next year and he said he hopes they plan to either pare back costs or increase revenues to make up the difference.

Whitton said the proposed water department budget is $300,000 more than this year's. The garbage department is up $42,000.

Councilman Joel Rogers said $13,000 has already been trimmed from the garbage department's budget by eliminating plans for a new pick-up.

Councilman Ronald Klebe said the sewer department may have to initiate a rate increase in the future to cover increasing expenses. He did not specify an amount or how soon such an increase might occur.

The council will open bids at the same meeting for the lease of approximately 200 acres of city-owned farm ground located north of Rupert.

In addition to legal notices, the council will place an advertisement in the newspaper announcing the property is for lease, as suggested by Mayor Whitton.

The council decided the property lease will have certain strings attached to it, what crops will be grown on the farm land.

City Attorney Donald Christofm recommended the council set standards on crop rotation to ensure soil conservation. And he said that the specifics must be made known to potential bidders beforehand.

The council agreed on a plan that would limit potato and beet crops. Only two crops — one of each of two types — can be grown during a five-year rotation schedule, unless a soil analysis proves a third crop would be beneficial to the grower. The farmer would have to present such a plan to the council for approval before planting the third crop.

Information on bidding for the property is available through Public Works Director Les Hutchinson in Rupert.

Fires didn't harm Yellowstone lakes

Scientists' latest hypothesis is that lakes were contaminated by the fires of 1988, a Rutgers University scientist said.

Richard G. Lathrop presented a paper on the subject Tuesday at the Ecological Society of America's conference at this ski resort east of Salt Lake City.

The fires were fueled by living trees and dead timber built up over decades of fire suppression efforts, forming a conflagration that blackened about half of the park's 2.2-million acres during the drought of 1988.

Scientists had speculated that lakes would be damaged when burning bark and leaves left nutrients in the lakes. But Lathrop said that silt and nutrients can wash out rapidly when burned land erodes.

"The increased amount of nutrients may have a fertilizing effect on phytoplankton (algae) populations," he said. "The magnitude of the 1988 fires present really a golden opportunity."

Using satellites capable of measuring lake transparency and color, the team studied Yellowstone, Shoshone and other lakes within the park, as well as Jackson Lake in the adjacent Grand Teton National Park, which showed satellite photos in which great plumes of smoke from the fires easily could be seen. He also showed photos taken from ground level that showed a floating charcoal scum in Yellowstone Lake the time of sediment carried by precipitation.

"Obviously we can only monitor (by satellite) large lake systems," he said, adding that other researchers are examining the effects on small lakes, which may show more of an impact.

In 1988, satellite photos showed a large plume of sediment reaching into Jackson Lake. At one time, Lathrop said, streams in heavily burned areas "actually ran black, much to the dismay of trout fishermen and local residents who depend on the lakes," he said.

Scientists were used to map sediment concentrations in the larger lakes during the following spring's runoff, he said.

"We have seen significant nitrate levels, although other nutrients, especially after intense summer thunderstorms or hailstorms, Lathrop said.

The National Park Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have monitored Yellowstone's lakes for the past 15 years, adding on a monthly basis, although they skipped the period 1983-88 and only took a few samples last year.

"After studying the increases in nutrients from the fires and comparing them with long-term fluctuations in the amount of mineral nutrition into the lakes, the team concluded there was no real difference in the lakes before and after the fires.

"Even if suspended solids or silt, there's probably some downward trend" overall, Lathrop said.

However, scientists have only one year's worth of data and there could be long-term effects that have yet to be discovered, he said.

Cause of campers' illness narrowed

BOISE (AP) — District health officials said Wednesday they believe either a form of chemical poisoning or dehydration was responsible for the illness that swept through a Civil Air Patrol survival camp near Idaho City over night.

"There's nothing wrong with the water," Tom Turco of the Central District Health Department said.

"We've ruled out food and we've ruled out poisonous plants," he said. He said the investigation now focused on possible chemical poisoning from mixing lemonade in a metal pot or basic dehydration.

More than two dozen of the 43 teen-agers and their leaders were treated at hospitals in Boise and Nampa for the illness and four were admitted for observation, but state officials said the illness was not serious.

Idaho State Police, Boise County Sheriff's deputies, the Lifeflight helicopter ambulance service, an Idaho

National Guard Guardian medical helicopter and the Idaho State Hospital from the Grayback Gulch area near Idaho City, about 35 miles northeast of Boise.

"It was a short-duration type-of-illness," state Health Division Administrator Dick Schullery said. "It's certainly not a life-threatening situation, but most people were feeling better by the time they got to the emergency room."

Scientists look for microbes at INEL

BOISE (AP) — Scientists at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory are looking for "strange" organisms, drilling some 500 feet below the surface in hopes of discovering new types of organisms.

Drilling began at the federal nuclear facility last week. The project is an outgrowth of a similar exploration at the Department of Energy's Savannah River site in South Carolina, where some 100 types of fungi, protozoa and algae were discovered.

About 90 percent of the organisms found could not be identified using standard biochemical tests.

The discoveries created a stir in the scientific world, because unusual types of organisms show a high resistance to antibiotics, and contain unique genetic material. Soil microbes are now used in antibiotics, organ transplant rejection drugs and to decompose materials such as mine waste.

INEL scientists believe the organisms found in the Idaho desert would be different from those on a coastal plain in South Carolina.

DOE's Subsurface Science Program is funding the work of 15 universities and federal facilities that will evaluate the core samples taken from the INEL, as well as other energy projects in Nevada and Washington.

Florencia C. Saldana
BURLEY — Florencia C. Saldana, 45, of Burley, died Tuesday, July 31, 1980, at the Cassia Memorial Hospital in Burley.

She was born Jan. 25, 1945, in Uvalde, Texas, the son of Francisco and Eva Chapa Saldana Sr. She attended schools in Arizona and later moved to Burley in 1962 where she worked until 1980. She became a traveling evangelist, but he and his family traveled throughout the United States and Mexico. He married Doris B. Tenny on March 26, 1967. She was a member of the First Baptist Church and was a member of the Temple Nueva Jerusalem Church in Paul.

Surviving are his wife of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; sons, Florio, Irene Saldana, Randa, Saldana, Florio, Saldana and Crystal Saldana, all of Burley; his mother and five brothers, Sr. Adolfo Saldana and Adam Saldana, all of Burley, and Frank Saldana of Heyburn; two sisters — Evy and Rosie Saldana, both of Burley and the Rev. Arturo Saldana, who died in death by his father and one son.

The funeral will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the Temple Nueva Jerusalem Church, North Main Street and Ellis in Burley. Burial will be at 8 p.m. today at the Temple Nueva Jerusalem Church, with the Rev. Roy Maldonado officiating. The family will receive friends from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. today at the Pleasant View Cemetery in Burley. Arrangements are under the direction of the Payne Mortuary in Burley.

Knudson was a member of the Central Christian Church, where she served as a deaconess for several years. She had also served in the Boy Scouts of America and Girl Scouts programs and was active in the American Red Cross and had practical nursing training.

Surviving are her husband, of Pocatello; two sons, Richard L. Knudson of Pocatello and Kim L. Knudson of Salt Lake City; two daughters, Lynn B. Knudson of Melissa, Great Falls of Pocatello; one brother, Ben W. Sprague of Phoenix; one sister, Elizabeth Sprague of Ketchikan; 10 grand children; and one great-grandson.

She was preceded in death by her parents, one brother and one sister.

The memorial service will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the Henderson Funeral Chapel, 401 N. 15th Ave. in Pocatello. Arrangements are pending with the Central Christian Church, officiating.

Friends may call one hour before the memorial service at the funeral chapel. Memorials are suggested to the charity of the donor's choice.

Mary F. Stocking
DECLIO — Mary Francis Stocking, 89, of Declio, died Wednesday, Aug. 1, 1980, at the Cassia Memorial Hospital in Burley.

Arrangements are pending and will be announced by McCulloch's Funeral Home in Burley.

Photographer files censorship lawsuit

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A District Court claims Rose's first amendment rights were violated by the action and seeks $2,000.

It names as defendants Park City, the Kimball Art Center and its director, Douglas Brainerd, as well as two Park City police officers.

Rose and her attorney, Sue Vogel, contend that while several of her works depicted nude women, officials objected to two photographs in particular because the models were undraped and their public hair was exposed.

"They said they found they were inappropriate for street viewing and that the rest of the work was beautiful," Rose said.

Balaban, however, said Rose was asked to remove the works because they did not represent the work she had submitted to the selection committee.

"Nudity wasn't the issue. The slides she submitted to be judged were beautiful, hand-painted, desert scenes," Brainerd said.

"The woman in question made with a holster and guns and it was totally out of context."

Pocatello teachers' strike may be near

POCATELLO (AP) — A Pocatello school strike may be closer than any year since the last walkout in 1975, observers say.

Several items are being discussed this year, but again the chief concern is money. Negotiators are more than $872,000 apart on a salary increase.

The school board and teachers last week from both teachers and administration on what a fair hike would be.

Pocatello Education Association representatives said the district could well afford the $1.83 million they ask, while the district argues the most it can provide is $960,000.

The fact-finder is supposed to issue a non-binding report well before the Sept. 5 school bell rings. But that does not mean a settlement will be reached.

Negotiations went from impasse to fact-finding, skipping the more urgent talks.

Contact talks in recent years have dragged into fall, but a teacher's union didn't strike before last year's contract was struck. It has filled the educator with resolve.

Sho-Bans go ahead with taxation plan

FORT HALL (AP) — The Shoshone-Bannock Indians have moved ahead to begin tax on non-tribal businesses on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation.

Using authority guaranteed under the tribal constitution, the Sho-Bans plan to begin collecting taxes next year.

The initial charges will include a 5 percent tax on land leased for agricultural use, under a so-called "possessory interest" tax, said William Brower, tribal tax commission chairman.

The Sho-Bans also intend to tax mining, as well as utilities and railroads, which benefit through the use of the reservation.

Of the 534,000 acres in Fort Hall Indian Reservation, some 100,000 are leased to non-tribal members for agricultural use, he estimated.

Early this year, the tribes submitted a proposed tax code to the U.S. Interior Department for consideration.

The agency approved the general provisions of the code in March.

Contract

Twin Falls local 283 President Jim Lee said 207 of the 219 local members voted. Lee did not say how he thought the vote went but indicated that tying the raises to medical costs left workers skeptical.

"It appears like the cards are stacked against us," Lee said. "If the contract passes though, we'll do all we can to bring medical costs down."

The union would like to start negotiating again if the contract is rejected, Lee said.

Rupert local union leader, Kent Warr said he did not know how workers felt they voted, except to say "it's close." Warr also said workers in Rupert would like to renegotiate if the contract is rejected.

"A strike is suicide," Warr said.

The local president at Nampa, Vern Stroebel, said the vote there was "50-50," maybe a little more in favor of the union. Stroebel said there was tense regarding the vote, he said.

Twin Falls local 283 President Jim Lee said 207 of the 219 local members voted. Lee did not say how he thought the vote went but indicated that tying the raises to medical costs left workers skeptical.

"It appears like the cards are stacked against us," Lee said. "If the contract passes though, we'll do all we can to bring medical costs down."

The union would like to start negotiating again if the contract is rejected, Lee said.

Rupert local union leader, Kent Warr said he did not know how workers felt they voted, except to say "it's close." Warr also said workers in Rupert would like to renegotiate if the contract is rejected.

"A strike is suicide," Warr said.

The local president at Nampa, Vern Stroebel, said the vote there was "50-50," maybe a little more in favor of the union. Stroebel said there was tense regarding the vote, he said.

DOE report says Hanford managers 'inaccurate and misleading'

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — Hanford nuclear reservation managers have been "incomplete, inaccurate and misleading" in public comments about safety issues related to slurry growth and 101-SV, the report said.

The report said deficiencies continue to be found in safety analyses, procedures, operations, training, maintenance, and reporting and called that "a serious management failure."

Lack of DOE staff and limited technical capability were partly to blame, the report said.

The report was released to Congress on Tuesday, and most news accounts concentrated on the issue of Hanford contractors knowing for 13 years that the tanks might explode and doing little to lessen the risk.

But the report by the DOE's Office of Nuclear Safety also paid considerable attention to management efforts to minimize the dangers.

The tanks, operated by Westinghouse Hanford Co., hold waste from production of plutonium for nuclear weapons.

The DOE safety team was concerned about the possibility that hydrogen gas buildup inside some storage tanks might cause them to explode and spew radiation into the air.

During a dispute last year involving potentially explosive ferrocyanide in the tanks, Hanford managers falsely told the public a 1984 study of the danger had been suppressed because it failed to pass peer review, the report said.

"In a letter to a U.S. Senate Committee staff member, the (Hanford) manager admitted that these assertions were false," the new report said.

"However, even in this letter, the (Hanford) manager continued to convey the misleading impression that the report had not been cleared for release because it was incomplete," the report said.

The Hanford manager during this period was Mike Lawrence, who is not mentioned by name in the report.

Lawrence resigned effective last week to work for a private government contractor in Colorado.

Tom Bauman, a spokesman for DOE's Richland office, said they had been instructed by headquarters not to comment on the report.

Bob Griffin, DOE spokesman on the tank issue, did not return a telephone message.

"We will respond to every allegation in these reports," said Ron Binas, vice president of waste management for Westinghouse Hanford.

One way they will do so is by asking Congress for more funds to improve management of the tanks, he said.

The report said Lawrence's March

23, 1990, news conference announcing the danger from hydrogen gas buildup gave the impression the findings were from a new Westinghouse study.

"In fact, WHC's predecessor (Rockwell Hanford Operations) had identified and documented the hazard as early as 1979," the report said.

Westinghouse took over management of the tanks from Rockwell Hanford three years ago.

Task forces had been established by contractors in 1984 and 1988 to recommend solutions, the report said.

"Public briefings provided by WHC in March and April of 1990 failed to acknowledge this history," the report said.

The DOE (Richland) manager was not aware of the "new" information on hydrogen flammability until the day before he held a press conference on it, even though the information was actually over a decade old," the report said.

"In response to press inquiries about the delay, he essentially excused Westinghouse's belated notification of DOE by refusing to address the issue," the report said.

The report also said that last October the Richland DOE office and Westinghouse Hanford both denied there was any potential for the generation of explosive substances in tank 101-SV.

"In fact, that potential had been known to exist for several years," the report said.

Government assurances that temperatures inside the tanks were being monitored were also false, because gauges in many tanks were not accurate or not operating, the report said.

Commerce Department has funds for slums

POCATELLO (AP) — Idaho's Department of Commerce has more than $1.2 million available to help revitalize downtown business areas statewide. The only catch: the neighborhood has to be declared a slum or blighted to qualify.

Pocatello, that could create an even more negative impression of its 14-block business district. The downtown is already identified officially at least, as blighted and substandard, although city officials say it is undergoing a rehabilitation.

"It's merely a designation based on national criteria," said Jan Blickenstaff of the Commerce Department. "I think people may read more into the declaration than really exists."

The program is included in the agency's 1991 Community Development Block Grant project, which was outlined Tuesday in Pocatello.

In the past, there was no heading for downtown revitalization in the grant process, but that has changed, Blickenstaff said.

Cities would be able to ask for a maximum $500,000 for specific projects. But they have to qualify as a slum or blighted under description city officials submit on road and water systems, as well as the local economy.

Funding would help improve that infrastructure and "appearances" of buildings, as well as pay for land acquisition.

Judas Priest singer returns to perform encore at trial

RENO, Nev. (AP) — The lead singer for the British rock band Judas Priest returned for an encore Wednesday in a civil trial on charges that the heavy metal music drove two young fans to enter a suicide pact.

Rob Halford, who gave an impromptu 10-second performance on Tuesday, was asked by a lawyer for the group to sing a line from another song that charges a blasphemous obscenity when played backward.

Halford sang, "Deliver us from all the f---s" from the song "White Heat, Red Hot" four times into a tape recorder.

Anthony Pellicano, an audio expert testifying in behalf of the band, then played the recording backward, producing a garbled phrase that vaguely resembled the words "the families' attorneys claim it hides."

The families of Raymond Belk-

"do it" are hidden in those words on the 1978 album and are what led their sons to shoot themselves.

Pellicano, the president of Borosonic Audio Laboratories in Los Angeles, said his analysis of the master tape of the song convinced him the apparent words result from a sharp exhalation and inhalation by Halford and an electric guitar.

"When I eliminated the vocals, the sound would go away," Pellicano said. "There are absolutely no subliminals on either that song or any of the other cuts off the album."

Pellicano said he had worked with federal state and local law enforcement agencies across the country to enhance and authenticate various audio tapes including the one by former President Nixon with the missing 18-minute segment, recordings made of the assassination of John F. Kennedy and various surveillance tapes.

The band and CBS Records deny any hidden message.

On Tuesday, Halford bellowed the words, "Better by you better than me; You can tell her what I want it to be," into a courtroom microphone, accenting the end of each line with a characteristic huff of breath.

The families claim the words nap and James Vance sued the band and CBS records, claiming subliminal words masked by the pounding music on the heavy metal group's "Stained Class" album prompted the youths to shoot themselves in a deserted church playground two days before Christmas 1985.

Belknap, 18, died immediately; Vance, then 20, died a year later, bottom half of his face and underwent several operations before he died on Thanksgiving Day 1988 of complications from his injuries and the various medications he was taking.

The band and CBS Records deny any hidden message.

Murderer won't get his freedom

SOLEDAD, Calif. (AP) — Twice-convicted mass murderer Juan Corona's third bid for freedom was rejected Wednesday after he told a parole board he doesn't remember committing 25 brutal machete slayings almost 20 years ago.

"Few crimes in the history of the United States have been as shocking to the public conscience," said Ron Koenig, chairman of the state Board of Prison Terms panel, in announcing the decision.

A psychological report prepared for the board said Corona, 56, didn't appear to understand the motive for his crimes and "therefore remains a danger to society."

The report said Koenig indicates Corona "seems to be living in a world of his own and is extremely dangerous in an unstructured environment."

Sutter County District Attorney Carl Adams told the panel the report makes it clear that "Mr. Corona is unpredictable and presents an unknown threat if released."

Corona's lawyer had previously suggested the Corona would use the hearing to take responsibility for the killings for the first time.

He was convicted of 25 murder counts for hacking, slashing and clubbing farm laborers to death in 1971 and burying their bodies in Sutter County orchards about 125 miles northeast of San Francisco.

Last week, attorney Don Condren told The Associated Press his client might be planning to admit his role in the case. Corona has been criticized at past hearings for declining to speak in his own behalf.

Lately, Corona has "indicated" he is going to be willing to talk about it, Condren said in an interview from his home, while warning his client still might change his mind.

On Wednesday, when asked if he planned to confess, Corona said simply: "No, I don't remember."

Koenig asked Corona how it felt to be convicted of something you say you did not do.

"Very bad," Corona said.

When the murders occurred, they were the worst mass slaying in U.S. history.

John Wayne Gacy Jr., on death row in Illinois, was convicted of more murders than anyone in the nation's history. He was sentenced to death for the murder of 33 young men and boys in 1980.

Leaving a baby alone for even a short while risks losing it forever

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column faithfully for years and have learned a lot from it. After reading today's paper, I just had to write. I have attached an article from this morning's paper about a baby who was left alone in the backseat of their mother's car at 5 p.m. while they shopped at a mall. They returned half an hour later to find their baby missing. The parents are offering $500 and the local radio station a $10,000 reward for information leading to the safe return of the baby.

Abby, I have stood beside cars watching unattended children until their parents returned. I would never forgive myself if I had left anything happened to those children.

Please print this message for parents: You have an obligation to protect your children from harm and you have no right to leave them alone for 10 minutes or 10 seconds. If you have shopping to do, TAKE THE CHILD WITH YOU or use day you may not have that option.

DEAR LOVES CHILDREN: Thanks for caring enough to write. Your message might remind some parents to think twice before leaving their child unattended in a parked car for "only a few minutes."

DEAR ABBY: Several overweight women wrote to tell you of the abuse they took from strangers because they were fat. On the other hand, have had my share of humiliation because I am tall—nearly 6 feet without heels, but I'm well-proportioned. Once when I was wearing a green bikini, I was called "The Jolly Giant." Another time, I walked into a dress shop and the salesperson looked me up and down and said, "We don't have anything in here to fit you." I was crushed at her tone and felt almost in tears.

I am so amazed over other women who don't even want to stand next to me because, as one said, "You make me feel so short and dumpy." Also, I believe my height intimidates them. I order most of my clothes and shoes from catalogs. (I dress in a feminine manner and wear makeup and expensive jewelry so as not to look like a man.)

My husband is not the most companionable person and I'd like to have a good female friend to go to lunch, shopping or to the movies.

with occasionally. Life is lonely at times when you are not loved.

DEAR TALL: Some people may have heard of Tall Clubs International. They are a wonderful group of people who are proud to be tall.

There are 54 chapters of Tall Clubs International in the United States and Canada, with more than 4,000 members, and 32 chapters in Europe. The minimum height for women is 5 feet 10" and the minimum for men is 6 foot 2".

For more information, call the office number: (800) 321-2312. And may your friendships reach new heights!

DEAR ABBY: I can't top Mrs. M.M. Kelly, whose husband was born in 1910 at the St. Francis Sales Hospital in Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada. The total bill was $16.75. They gave her a 75-cent discount for cash.

Well, I was born Dec. 6, 1968 at the U.S. Naval Hospital in Quantico, Va. (My father was in the U.S. Marine Corps at the time.) My mother's bill was $71.10 and that this was to cover the cost of meals while she was in the hospital—a total of five days. I am enclosing a copy of the receipt.

Valley happenings

U of I freshmen can register

TWIN FALLS—All incoming University of Idaho freshmen from the Magic Valley may register for fall classes beginning today. The university is automating registration, enabling students to sign up for classes from locations near their home. For information and assistance in registering, call Steve Abels at 736-0971, before Aug. 9.

Horseshoe tourney planned

RUPERT—The Minidoka County Centennial Open Horseshoe Tournament is set Saturday and Sunday at the county fairgrounds. Registration will start at 9:30 a.m. each day, and the fee is $5 per participant. Prizes will be awarded winners. For more information, contact Gene Brown at 436-0466.

Muzzleloader rendezvous set

RUPERT—The Oregon Trail Muzzleloaders will hold a club rendezvous Saturday and Sunday. The event is for club members and invited guests only. For more information, call Calius Young at 436-0241 or Herb Ashby at 678-7631.

Kansans will hold picnic

TWIN FALLS—The 40th annual Kansas Day Picnic is set Sunday in Rock Creek Park. A potluck dinner will begin at 1 p.m., and participants are asked to bring their own table service. All former Kansans, guests and friends are invited to attend.

Open house honors Garrison

TWIN FALLS—The children of Zelma Garrison invite friends to share with them in honoring their mother at an open house, slated for 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday at 372 Polk St.

The Times-News welcomes news of community events. Send material to The Times-News Valley Happenings, PO Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303-0548. Please submit news at least a week in advance and include a phone number where you can be reached.

CSI plans to offer food science degree

TWIN FALLS—Laboratory Technology, a new program on the basics and applications of food science and technology, begins this fall through the College of Southern Idaho Department of Science and Allied Health.

Full-time students in the program will be able to earn an associate of science degree, according to CSI Academic Dean Dr. Roy Strawn.

All courses meet the U.S. Department of Agriculture guidelines for food technologists.

The first course, "Principles of Food Science and Technology," will be offered fall semester from 7 to 10 p.m. Tuesdays. A prerequisite or co-requisite of General Chemistry (Chem-103) is required. General Chemistry requires a college-level algebra class or permission of the instructor.

Students interested in the program should contact the Science/Allied Health Department or Peggy Stanfield, program coordinator, at 733-2554 ext. 164 after Aug. 22.

Brochures describing the complete program and registration information can be obtained by calling Graydon Stanley in the CSI High School Relations department or Ned Vaughn in the counseling center.

Albertsons donates for library at BSU

BOISE—Thanks to a $6 million donation by Albertsons Inc., Boise State University will have a new and improved library in two to three years.

Albertsons' gift, the largest corporate donation ever made to BSU, will supplement $4 million appropriated by the Idaho Legislature for a $10 million expansion of the facility, which will become known as the Albertson Library.

Plans call for a 70,000-square-foot expansion of the existing 140,000-square-foot building, built in 1963 and enlarged in 1969.

The addition will mean increased space for collections, enlarged study areas and more efficient arrangements of university departments housed in the library. Part of the addition will also be used to house newly housed departments in the School of Social Sciences and Public Affairs, which are currently scattered in several campus locations.

The announcement of Albertsons' donation was made by Warren McGain, the Boise-based food chain's chairman and chief executive officer, at the dedication of BSU's new amphitheater in July.

Anniversary

Elvera and Henry Dockter

The Dockters

RUPERT—J. Henry and Elvera Dockter—the best of friends—will be honored at an open house wedding in observance of their 50th wedding anniversary.

Friends and relatives are invited to call from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Trinity Lutheran Parish Hall, Eighth and J Street in Rupert. The couple requests no gifts.

The Dockters were married Sept. 22, 1940, at the Trinity Lutheran Church in Rupert.

The event is being given by their three daughters, Carolyn Kohls of Ellsworth, Kan., Donna Ball of Salt Lake City, and Barbara Matlock of Jackson, Texas, their spouses as well as their six grandchildren.

Concerns over growth push prices lower

NEW YORK (AP)—Worries about economic growth in general and the banking industry in particular pushed New York stock prices lower in an early session Wednesday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks slipped 2.89 points to 1,023.34, its lowest since Oct. 11, 1987.

Declining issues outnumbered advancing by 1 to 6 in a relatively changeless stock market. Up 77, down 524 and unchanged 1,000.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 176.81 million shares, against 173.81 million the previous session. National over-the-counter volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 716.03 million shares.

Index steady

The Commerce Department reported that the index of leading economic indicators was unchanged in June, rather than posting the annual increase many analysts had been expecting.

Separately, a monthly report from the National Association of Purchasing Management showed a marked dropoff in its measure of activity in the manufacturing sector of the economy.

Those developments reinforced expectations in the financial world that business growth was likely to remain meager at best in the near future.

In that environment, hopes have lagged on Wall Street for any second-quarter earnings of $1.19 a share, up from 24 cents in the corresponding period last year.

That, combined with a 13.5% after-tax, 164-point drop Tuesday, amid reports that at least three banks have withdrawn temporarily from financing plans for a proposed buyout of the airline holding company.

Energy stocks, still responding to signs of upward pressure on oil prices, continued to dominate the new, 52-week high. British Petroleum rose 14 to 70 1/2; Exxon K to 52 1/2; Schlumberger 14 to 66 1/2; Halliburton K to 54 1/2; and Atlantic Richfield 14 to 130 1/2.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $6.57 billion, or 0.19 percent, in value.

President says jobs outweigh late taxes

KELLOGG (AP)—Bunker Hill Mining Co. soon will pay up past property taxes the city of Kellogg badly needs, a company spokesman says.

The Vancouver, B.C.-based company last week posted quarterly earnings of $200,000, a record since reopening its zinc, lead and silver mine in 1986. After-tax earnings were reported as $100,000.

Shoshone County residents criticized Bunker Hill for failing to pay taxes.

The company's annual taxes represent 13 percent of Kellogg's budget, not to mention school districts' funding.

"I'm going to catch up on that as soon as we can," said President Jack Kendrick.

Although the company reported profits of more than $1 million in the last year, Kendrick said property taxes have not been paid because of the huge financial matters involved in getting a mine of that magnitude into and running it.

"The company's tax bill now is about $250,000. The bill for 1987 taxes must be paid by Dec. 20, 1988. See TAXES C2.

Economic indicators unchanged in June

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main economic forecasting gauge failed to budge in June, the Commerce Department said Wednesday in a report analysts said portended a listless economy in the months ahead.

The department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators, designed to forecast economic activity six to nine months in advance, was unchanged for the second month this year. It had risen in March and May and fallen in February and April.

Many economists had expected a small increase in June. If the index were to fall for three straight months, it could signal a forthcoming recession.

David Berson, chief economist with the Federal-National Mortgage Association, said, "Basically, what we've seen over this year is small increases, small decreases, with everything averaging around zero." Berson said, "The economy is going to continue in its slow-growth path."

But some analysts such as David Jones, an economist with the New York securities dealer Aubrey G. Hankson & Co., expressed deeper concern.

"What we have got is an economy that is slowly sinking into possibly mild recession by either late this year or early next," Jones contended.

The Bush administration predicted earlier this month the nation's economy would grow 2 percent this year. But the growth rate as measured by the gross national product was just 1.7 percent in the first quarter and 1.2 percent in the second, meaning the economy would have to expand at an annual rate of 2.9 percent during the second half of the year to meet the administration's prediction.

"Economic analysts expect that amount of growth," Jones said.

Including the National Association of Purchasing Management released its latest survey on Wednesday showing the manufacturing economy slumped in July for the first time in three months.

And the Commerce Department's annual report on Wednesday, said construction spending in June was flat after falling during the previous two months.

Both the building and manufacturing sectors have borne the brunt of higher interest rates as the Federal Reserve continued to lean inflation by slowing the economy.

"The June leading indicators report dashes almost all hope that the economy will pick up steam later this year," said Richard W. Rahn, chief economist with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

"The weak industrial sector will get even weaker by year's end as manufacturers' new orders fall and growth in unfilled orders wanes," Rahn added. "It would take only a mild amount of order cancellations to step growth in industrial production, to turn a weak economy into recession."

Both manufacturers' new orders for consumer goods and unfilled orders were among the negative statistics in the June report. Others were a decline in the retail supply, a drop in an index measuring consumer confidence, a decrease in orders for new plants and equipment and an increase in weekly unemployment claims.

The "consumer confidence" index also was negative, with consumers were retreating. Consumers account for two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

However, Commerce eased these fears Monday when it reported that personal consumption jumped 1.0 percent in June, suggesting consumers would keep the weak economy alive.

Nevertheless, only four of June's leading indicators were positive: an increase in the price of raw materials, higher stock prices, an increase in building permits and slower business delivery times. The length of the average workweek was unchanged.

Taxes

the county may start proceedings to take possession of the property. Bunker Hill waited until 1987 to pay taxes for the two previous years.

"We're not sure where they've been, but we expect them to pay taxes soon. They have too much to lose if they don't."

Kellogg Mayor Merwin Hill said Bunker Hill is just one of many taxpayers whose indelicacy has cri-pled the city's budget.

"It's hurting us pretty badly," he said. "Until some tax money comes in, we'll just have to pay salaries and curtail other expenses."

Kendrick said his company should be credited with bringing back 300 jobs to the county after poor silver prices devastated the local economy. These new jobs have turned in revenue that "outweighs any financial inconvenience" that Shoshone County has suffered," he said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

If you're THE BETTER there he, it acts a full look at the best... Thomas Hardy.

If three key cards are wrong to today's game may fall. That means good odds in favor of the Aces...

North jumped directly to the heart game. A less careful declarer would win the spade ace...

Did 'Jud' go up with her club? West's No; she should understand play than that.

After ruffing the third spade, 'Jud' crossed to dummy in trumps and led a diamond to the 10...

Why settle for good odds when a sure shot is available at the cost of only a possible overtrick?

Jerome boy, Buhl girl awarded by golf group

TWIN FALLS. — Rusty Peterson of Jerome and Elizabeth Fenner of Buhl have been named recipients of the Cole and Participation in the Idaho Junior Golf Association.

Named for a former Twin-Falls amateur, the award symbolizes competition, sportsmanship and demeanor.

Peterson has been playing golf since he was 2 years old and has been active in junior golf the past eight years. Fenner, who started playing at age 12, has won several junior and senior titles this year and earned a spot on the Idaho American Cup Matches team.

Former college hoop coach faces cocaine, DUI charges

CLEVELAND. — Former Cleveland State basketball coach Kevin Mackey, who is undergoing treatment at a Houston drug and alcohol center, was indicted Wednesday on county charges of cocaine use and driving under the influence.

Mackey was arrested July 13 as he and a woman companion drove away from a suburban drug house on Cleveland's east side. He has already pleaded no contest to a city charge for having blood-alcohol content above the legal limit.

The indictment Wednesday was by the Cuyahoga County grand jury. Cleveland State fired Mackey six days after the arrest.

IRVINE, Calif. — Carl Ekern, a former Los Angeles Ram linebacker and volunteer assistant coach, died Wednesday morning of massive brain injuries suffered in a one-vehicle crash on an isolated stretch of highway.

He was 36.

Ekern, who had visited friends at the Ram training camp at LIC Irvine, and sat in on team meetings Tuesday night, was believed to be on his way to his job in Minden, Nev., when he lost control of the Jeep and was thrown from the vehicle.

According to the California Highway Patrol, Ekern was traveling north on Highway 395 south of Ridgecrest and north of Searles Station Road, when he lost control of his 1984 Jeep Cherokee.

SEATTLE. — One coach said the American women's basketball team was unbeatable at the Goodwill Games. She could be right.

The two-time world champions, 1988 Olympic winners and defending Goodwill champs added an 86-78 victory over the Soviet Union on Tuesday night to their record against South Korea the previous night.

"I don't see any team that can beat them here," South Korean basketball coach Chuang Joo-Hyun said.

It's hard to argue with that, particularly the way the Americans stormed back to whip the Soviets. The United States won by a 14-point margin in the first half, then stormed back in the second period to a convincing victory.

Just as convincing was the performance of two-time Olympic silver medalist Han-Liangde of China, who won the Premier springboard by nearly 14 points to win the event and to the forefront of the event series.

Greg Louganis, the four-time Olympic gold medalist, retired.

American boxers split four early fights. Two lost close decisions and complained about it. "Bank robbery," Tony Gonzalez said after dropping a 2-1 decision to Serbian Fedorov of Bulgaria at 119 pounds.

"I thought I won every round," said teammate Rudolph Bradley, who lost 4-1 to Dzhambulat Mutayev at 112 pounds.

There was no doubt about 112-pounder Tim Austin, who stopped Soviet Yezabol Nurtanov in the third round to advance to the semifinals.

American dominated from the opening bell and handed heavy-handed shots in the second round that forced Nurtanov to take two standing 8-counts. He got to the Soviet again in the third round, forcing another two 8-counts and the end of the bout.

In hockey, the United States won more than a loss by three goals or fewer against West Germany in a night game to advance to the medals round. Sweden and the Soviet Union, which beat Switzerland 4-2 in an afternoon game already had qualified.

The U.S. volleyball team, coming off a comeback victory over the Soviets Tuesday night, faced Brazil Wednesday night in the round-robin portion of their tournament.

The head of the U.S. Olympic Committee's drug testing program, meanwhile, said lack of funds and cooperation from Turner Broadcasting has put a severe strain on testing at the Goodwill Games.

Sponsors normally pay for drug testing, but TBS refused to come up with the $200,000 necessary. So, the USOC came up with the money, said Leung-Chick, head of the USOC program for four years.

"We managed to scrape the money together, but it wasn't easy," she said.

Basketball
 The Americans sailed from a 50-36 first-half deficit, scoring the final six points of the first half, then outscoring the Soviets 19-6 in the first eight minutes of the second half.

The U.S. team got 23 points and 16 rebounds from Katrina McClain. She had 17 points in the first half to keep it close. Terese Edwards, who had only two in first half, finished with 16. The Soviets were led by Natalia Zaslavskaya with 20 points and 10 rebounds.

Speaking in broken English, Soviet coach Evgeny Gomelski said, "American players do fans like to keep it close. They play better. We predicted the teams would meet for the gold medal."

This is an off year for the Soviet women, and with China, Cuba and Yugoslavia missing from these games, the U.S. women are heavily favored to follow up their second straight world championship with another Goodwill gold.

UNR early favorite for Big Sky title

The Associated Press

SUN VALLEY. — Nevada-Reno's veteran offensive backfield and an experienced corps of defensive standouts should keep the Wolf Pack in contention for this year's Big Sky Conference football championship.

UNR Coach Chris Ault says sophomore Fred Gatlin, who passed for an average of 229 yards a game in 1989, remains a starting quarterback, joining him in the backfield will be senior all-conference fullback Ray Whalen.

"Fredy (Gatlin) returns with better understanding," Ault told sports writers during the concluding session of the Big Sky's annual football preview Wednesday.

"I got a great idea last year," the coach added of Gatlin's 5-3 campaign. "This guy's potential is unlimited."

Ault said Gatlin's increased awareness of college football tactics, coupled with his athletic ability, meld nicely with his own plans to give UNR's offense more punch.

That means Nevada-Reno, which ranked No. 2 in total offense behind 1989 champion Idaho, but only fifth in passing, will be putting the ball in the air more often — and deeper.

"The offense will be doing some things more aggressively. I feel confident that we can be down a couple touchdowns and still win," Ault said.

Senior Treanville Taylor, UNR's leading pass catcher, is back at wide receiver. Ault also can look for senior wingback Ross Ortega to slug aerials out of the backfield.

Ault has no doubt that Gatlin, who won conference "Top Newcomer" honors last year, will be able to get the ball down field.

"He can throw it 75 to 80 yards," Ault said, but added: "We're not going to pass it 70 percent of the time. We're going to run it some, too."

In addition to Whalen, the Wolf Pack can count on a talented stable of runners to keep opponents from focusing too hard on the junior running backs Eric Smith and Keith Washington return, along with Whalen's backup, Jason Frierson.

UNR also expects a banner year from its defense, a so-so fifth in the Big-Sky last season.

Wolf Pack returns veterans to its front line and will be led by senior cornerback Bernard Eason, back from injuries. UNR also has a seasoned linebacker corps.

Arkansas Razorbacks moving to SEC

The Associated Press

EVETTEVILLE, Ark. — Arkansas joined the Southeastern Conference on Wednesday, severing its 76-year ties to the troubled Southwest Conference and possibly triggering a restructuring of college football leagues.

"The fans told us, in every way possible, that we ought to go," said chancellor Don Frazier after the university's board of trustees unanimously approved the move.

"We're not really leaving, not tearing down," he said. "What we are doing is building for the future of the University of Arkansas."

The Razorbacks, a charter member of the SWC, will begin competing in the SEC in all sports but football in 1991. The football team will compete in the SWC this year, then operate as an independent in 1991 before moving to the SEC in 1992.

Arkansas becomes the 11th member of the SEC, which also includes Alabama, Auburn, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Mississippi State, Louisiana State, Tennessee and Vanderbilt.

League commissioner Roy Kramer said there was no timetable for adding another school, although SEC presidents have voted to expand the league two teams at a time.

Kramer said Florida State, Miami and South Carolina are potential candidates to join the league. He said the SEC will be broken into two divisions and that geography would be a factor.

"Arkansas athletic director Frank Broyles said Arkansas' move was part of a restructuring of college football. He noted that Penn State recently joined the Big Ten.

Stewart hurls 11-inning, 1-0 shutout in A's victory

The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Pitching a shutout, Dave Stewart was good enough to beat the Mariners in 14 straight starts. He pitched his third shutout of the season.

"You have to pitch a shutout to beat him, and even then you don't beat him," Lefebvre said. "I was talking to (home plate umpire) Rich Garcia on the way back to the clubhouse, and he was telling me Eric had probably as good of stuff he's ever seen in his years in the big leagues. Now that's quite a compliment."

Lefebvre took Hanson out after 116 pitches and Schooler, who pitched the 11th, was made the right decision," Hanson said. "I was pretty tired towards the end. I tossed 10 shutout innings, allowing only two hits and no walks with a career-high 11 strikeouts.

He still hasn't thrown a major-league shutout.

"I'm proud as hell of my guy," Seattle manager Jim Lefebvre said. "He gave us enough. You can't ask him to give any more. But again, you have to take your hat off to Dave Stewart. The guy finds a way."

Stewart (14-8) has found a way to beat the Mariners in 14 straight starts. He pitched his third shutout of the season.

didn't go out there feeling like I had to pitch a shutout to win. Unfortunately, Stewart pitched brilliantly for 11."

"If he threw 116 pitches, I bet 100 of them were strikes," Stewart said. "I could kinda sense I was going to be in a lock-up."

Jennings ended the lock-up with his pinch hit single to score pinch runner Lance Blankenship.

"When the guys are dealing like that," said Jennings, "you just wait for the opportunity. But what made it so nice was no matter how good Hanson was, Stew was just as outstanding."

Mets beat Montreal, take over sole possession of 1st

The Associated Press

MONTREAL (AP) — Pinch-hitter Tim Lincecum, the last nonpitcher available, tied the game with a two-out home run in the ninth inning and Greg Jefferies and Kevin McReynolds hit RBI singles in the 12th as the New York Mets beat the Montreal Expos 6-4 Wednesday night to take sole possession of first place in the National League East.

Leading 4-1, the Expos lost a run in the seventh inning when Tim Lincecum singled with runners at first and second but Dave Martinez was thrown out at third for the third but before Zane Smith crossed the plate.

The Mets then chased Smith with two runs in the eighth and Teufel hit his third

After starter Ron Darling yielded four runs, Kevin Brown and Alejandro Pena each pitched one inning and John Franco went two.

Smith, who beat the Mets twice in April, was staked to a 4-1 lead when Andres Galarraga hit a two-run homer in the sixth, his 13th.

But Miller, Johnson and Jefferies started the Mets' eighth with singles, making it 4-2. Burke relieved and McReynolds' single made it 4-3.

Pinch hitter Strawberry, now 4-6 for 33 as a pitcher, batted for Mark Carraway and scored. McReynolds went out with Jefferies taking third. However, Dave Magrane grounded into an inning-ending double play, with first baseman Galarraga making a tumbling catch of second baseman Delfino DeShields' fly ball.

The Mets argued that the throw pulled Galarraga off the bag and first base umpire Bob Davidson ejected Strawberry and Manager Bud Harrelson. It was Harrelson's first ejection since he replaced Davey Johnson as Mets manager on May 29.

Bucks ship No. 1 pick to Denver for Schayes

The Associated Press
MILWAUKEE — The Milwaukee Bucks sent their top draft pick, Terry Mills, to the Denver Nuggets for veteran center Danny Schayes.

The trade had been rumored since the Bucks picked Mills with the No. 16 selector in the June draft. Milwaukee coach Del Harris said it would be made until Aug. 1 when the NBA salary cap expanded. "Danny's rugged style of play will be a major asset to the physical Eastern Conference," he said.

"Our staff identified our No. 1 pick to be the acquisition of another center to relieve Jack Sikma of excessive minutes."

"In acquiring Danny Schayes we were able to make it possible for Jack to be the backup at both center and power forward when needed."

Mills and Schayes were unavailable for comment. They are both clients of Boston-based sports agent Bob Woolf.

"When they (the Bucks) drafted Terry, they told him not to get excited about Milwaukee," Woolf said.

"Surprise, surprise," Cardinals general manager Dal Maxvill said at a news conference to announce that Torre signed a two-year contract with an option for a third year. His salary was not disclosed.

Torre said he will retain his coaching staff for the rest of the year and will use the time to evaluate the team, which was 13-10 under interim manager Red Schoendienst before Wednesday's game against the Phillies.

"During the selection process, I interviewed a number of very good candidates," Maxvill said. "But I kept coming back to Joe Torre."

Herzog, who had been in his 11th year with the team, resigned July 6. Torre was one of seven finalists for the job, but he always stood at the front of the pack as far as Maxvill's longtime friend was concerned.

Hot weather, light lines go together

Mid-summer fishing is a cornucopia of opportunity. The big streams are cleared of runoff and flows are rapidly falling into the levels a man can wade with confidence.

The spring creeks are into their hatch sequences with a vengeance and the mountain freestone creeks hold the allure of fattened fish in a high elevation retreat from the heat of the valley floor. Reservoirs in a drought year are very low but fishing can be good. In natural lakes, the fish are steadily working through a profuse supply of food.

If you don't fish in the summertime you probably don't fish at all. Summer is not free of fishing frustration, however. The fish may react negatively to excessively long periods of high temperature.

Warren Schöth Fishing

narrowing their feeding cycling to very short periods in the late evening or early morning. More often it is the water that limits fishing success in streams. There are fewer hiding places, fish are easily spooked and food is relatively plentiful so competition by the fish for your fly may be less.

When summer fishing gets into full swing, the angler should give some thought and planning to his rods and especially to his equipment, not just his flies or the length and fineness of leaders but of his rods and lines as well.

A good plan for spin fishermen is to reduce the size of their lines, their hooks and their lures. They can often succeed if they go to very light — or ultra-light — spin rods and reels.

Too often, the fly fisherman stays with the same tired and true rod line combination he uses in high water, runoff and early season turbidity. By learning to use lighter fly lines and rods that throw them, the angler can match his equipment to the requirements of the summer season.

Lightly line are sizes 2, 3 and 4. Ten years ago, the very light lines were not used much. The No. 2 weight is a very recent addition to the angler's box of tools, as a matter of fact.

Current rods of light-line designations are no longer oddities, toys or only for the expert. They are sophisticated and effective tools — especially for summer conditions.

A No. 3 weight line is about 40 percent lighter in weight and much smaller in diameter than the standby all-around No. 6 weight.

The lower mass allows the small line to lay out on the water with much less resistance.

Trout don't tend to feed at midday, but they can be caught using the right combination of flies and tippets.

Light tippets, small fly patterns just the thing for high-noon fishing

By Jim Krulich Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — When I looked at my watch, it was noon — actually not the best time of day to begin fishing. Adding to the likelihood of an unproductive outing, the midday temperature held at 90 degrees, the sun was bright and I couldn't find a cloud, even on the distant horizon.

But today was David's day off from work. And David wanted to go fishing since this was his first open date of the summer.

As I slowed the truck alongside the creek just poured in the cab through the opened windows.

"Ever consider air conditioning?" David joked, "or would that spoil the realism of the outdoor experience?"

"We'll probably need all the dust-coating we can manage," I responded, "with the bright sun, the fish are going to be really spooky."

Standing on the bank of the stream, David pointed to a trout that dimpled the surface of the water.

"Hey, Jim, that's not a bad trout over there."

As David's arm dropped back to his side, the trout shot for the safety of the undercurrent stream bank. "Must have caught a glimpse of movement or reflection," David noted. "Guess this high-noon fishing might not be such a good idea."

After assembling the fly rods, David walked upstream while I took a short walk downstream. While examining the stream, I spotted several minnows fining in the current. After watching the trout for several minutes I noticed that neither of the fish was actively feeding.

A size 12 Royal Wulff may be the ideal fly for fishing in clear, sunny, midday conditions.

Since no insects were hatching, I tied a size 12 Royal Wulff to the end of the 4x tippet. Keeping a low profile and taking care not to throw my shadow on the water, I dropped the fly in front of the nearest trout.

From my vantage point at the edge of the stream, I could see the trout's reaction to the appearance of the fly. The rainbow glided slowly forward into position to intercept the Royal Wulff, but turned at the last instant and rejected the fly. Subsequent casts proved futile. Obviously, this rainbow wasn't interested; I waded into the stream to work one of the distant trout I'd seen earlier. After four unproductive casts over the second trout, I paused to change leaders. Possibly a smaller fly and finer tippet was the answer.

While intently changing leaders, I heard David's voice. "Thought I'd walk down to see how you're doing. I haven't turned a fish."

As I finished attaching the 6x leader and tied on a size 20 calceolus, I turned to face the stream bank where David stood. "I haven't had any luck either. Thought I'd try a finer leader and this little calceolus."

Turning back toward the stream, I made a short false cast and then presented the tiny fly to the finning rainbow. Focusing my attention on the reaction of the trout, I raised the rod tip when the fish moved forward and opened his mouth.

Responding immediately to the bite of the small hook, the rainbow shot beneath the surface of the water. As line rapidly exited from the rotating spool of the fly reel, the trout ran upstream in my direction.

As I turned to counter another of the trout's runs, I saw David step from the stream bank and wade into the water at the edge of the creek. When the trout finally tired, I led him to David's outstretched net.

David measured and then released the fish. "Look like he'll gain a little over 17

Early runs of Steelhead seen as low

The Associated Press

LEWISTON — Warner temperatures have led biologists to predict this summer's early run of steelhead bound for Idaho waters will be smaller than in recent years.

"The weather's been awful hot and the river flows are down," said anonymous fisheries coordinator Steve Yundt of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. "If the weather doesn't break pretty soon, we likely will have many fewer fish than we had last year," Yundt said.

Predictions for the early steelhead run across Bonneville Dam this month, ranged between 110,000 and 150,000. In recent years the count has run as high as 200,000.

The early run, headed mostly for the Salmon River in Idaho and the Grand Ronde River in Washington, began last month and should peak in early August, and Yundt said it has started out slowly.

The count at Bonneville Dam in mid-July was less than 27,000 compared to nearly 42,000 a year ago.

The early run will wrap up about Aug. 25, and biologists will turn their attention to the late run headed for the Snake River that should peak in September or October, but Yundt estimates on its size will not be made until more information is known about the early run.

Late run fish will not start crossing Lower Granite Dam until September, and the weather will again be a major factor in the count since hot, dry summers warm up the Snake to the point that steelhead cannot survive.

"We need the weather to cool," Yundt said.

Last year's late run was threatened by those conditions until heavy rains in late August and high flows from Dworshak Dam cooled the Snake and produced a record count at Lower Granite Dam.

State-wide effort set Saturday to build waterfowl habitat

BOISE — On Saturday, waterfowl habitat will get a lot of improvement in Idaho.

As of 4 will be the second annual Waterfowl Habitat Day. Waterfowl hunters and others will join in efforts to create nesting opportunities, enhance habitat and promote local waterfowl.

Last year, the Idaho Fish and Game Department furnished materials and Ducks Unlimited organized crews for a statewide effort. Forty-four goose nests were serviced and 165 new ones placed, along with 104 wood duck nest boxes.

Idaho waterfowl stamp revenue provides money for the materials.

The state's success in creating outdoor structures has changed the 1990 emphasis. This year, DU hopes to get existing nests cleaned and repaired before new ones go up. An additional goal will be encouraging organizations and agencies to permanently adopt and maintain structures in their areas.

Other events planned by Ducks Unlimited chapters across the state include nest work, habitat improvement and work on wildlife management areas.

Bowhunters say proposed game plan too restrictive

By Larry Hovey Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Department of Fish and Game's proposed five-year deer, elk and antelope management plan has drawn heavy criticism from Magle Valley hunters.

About 140 sportsmen attended a hearing in Twin Falls Monday to hear Fish and Game's proposals for managing the three popular species. They received a statewide view from Lonn Kuck, state big game manager for Fish and Game, and local insight from Region 4 game manager Craig Kvale.

After that, most of the public input came from archers who decried the loss of hunting opportunity during the peak of rut for deer and elk.

The department had proposed slicing eight days off the end of the elk archery season and about 10 days off mule deer. Those days would be reserved for "quality" big game hunts for no more than 2,000 hunters.

The department felt the peak-rut season with a very limited number of people would answer the demand — taken through a hunter survey — for fewer hunters and more mule trophy probability.

At the same time, the department said the reduction of hunting equipment would be general hunting during the breeding season when males were the most vulnerable, should result in an increased number of bucks and bills in most populations.

This, too, was in response to demand in the survey that more mature males made available for the seeing and the hunting.

Although the plan addressed dozens of management issues, the "water" ripples called for reinstatement of the eight-hour hunting days and allowance of archers to participate in peak rut hunting.

When it was pointed out that the special mule trophy hunts would be "any weapon," Greg Rasmussen, of Idaho Falls said "I don't know of any archer dumb enough to put on scent and camouflage and be trying to nibble trees when a rifle hunter is in the area."

Earlier Rasmussen had congratulated department "for consolidating the state's bowhunters" in one weekend, something he (organized bowhunters) have been trying to do for years."

Rasmussen said he felt the department would be better off having the bowhunters participate in some of the other decisions being being studied, such as magnified bow sights, electronics and other technical advancements that are causing some to wonder about the "primitive" nature of such weapons.

The archers also told the department that lumping the deer, antelope and elk seasons together will just about end archery participation in antelope season.

Some of the archers said that deprecia-

Success rate helped hunters take record numbers last fall

The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho hunters set records for big game harvest in several species last fall, the Idaho Fish and Game Department says.

There were fewer deer hunters in the field last fall than the year before, but the success rate was higher, the department said.

In the 1989 season, 142,401 hunters harvested 95,200 deer, a success rate of 67 percent. The year before, there were 148,600 hunters and a harvest of 82,200 deer, a success rate of 55 percent.

Even though there were fewer deer hunters last fall, they spent more days in the field than the year before. Fish and Game said. It compiled reports on big game species from a 12-city survey of license buyers.

Elk hunters also set an all-time record with a harvest of 22,600 elk. With 77,200 hunters in the field, that's a success rate of 29 percent. Last year the harvest was 20,400 animals, a success rate of 26 percent.

A record antelope harvest of 3,500 was reported by 4,408 hunters who spent 12,500 days in the field. The success rate was 75 percent, better than the 72 percent reported in 1988.

A record 400 moose were taken by 464 hunters, and big game hunters produced a kill of 98. The success rate was 48 percent.

Part of the increased harvest of elk and antelope came from the department's response to depredation problems in agricultural areas.

"We had several areas where big game

With a little help, quality game rifles are available off the shelf

Buying a big game rifle can be as involved as one wants to make it. In the case of a custom rifle, hundreds of variations are possible leaving the rifle enthusiast in seventh heaven.

But for the hunter who wishes to avoid this smorgasbord approach, quality factory rifles can be purchased off the shelf at a local retail store. Here the selection is simplified since rifles carried by these stores reflect the most popular combinations.

A few decisions will still have to be made — so here are some guidelines for making those choices.

First, a general big game gun, almost any of the popular calibers from the .243 to the .308 will do. A "best" caliber may be impossible to identify by selecting one of the popular calibers assures the hunter that ammo will be readily available and often tion should be given to recoil. There is little fog in getting battered by 300 Winchester Magnum when a 270 Winchester is adequate.

Most of the rifles on the shelf will be bolt actions and that is the best choice for several reasons. Bolt actions are stronger, safer, more reliable and inherently more accurate than either a pump or automatic.

In addition to action type, there may be some choice in barrel length with 22-inch barrels having two important advantages and only one minor disadvantage. The shorter barrels reduce weight and are eas-

Salmon's plight focus of planned display

The Associated Press
BOISE — The dwindling supply of Idaho chinook salmon will fall even further unless people understand their life cycle and support protective measures, the Idaho Fish and Game Department says.
For the next two weeks, volunteers will build a boardwalk at Stolme Meadows on the South Fork of the Salmon River, giving visitors a view of spawning beds.
Officials say it will provide a good educational and interpretive experience for people interested in the fish's life cycle.
The Fish and Game Department and U.S. Forest Service are working on long-term educational programs for the South Fork River, planned projects include signs describing the history of the drainage, a walking trail to the fish resting pool, the confluence of the South Fork and Cabin Creek and a local area tramway, which will take low motorists to the river to view trout and forest information.
Volunteers started construction work last week, and other volunteer organizations will continue the work through the end of the month.

Later volunteers include the Cascade Lions Club, the Sierra Club, Variety, Scout Team 166 from Meridian, Fish and Game volunteers, Frank Ranch, Inc. and Alameda County, Calif. The Sierra Club is a U.S. challenge fund-raising group from Boise State University.
Conservation groups have asked that Idaho summer chinook be listed as threatened or endangered.

The South Fork River runs about 17,700 miles a year, but the reason has been listed as "most of the fish are very young."
Although the drainage supports the largest run of summer chinook still spawning in Idaho, it still is only 10 percent of historic numbers.
Officials said the Chinook in the South Fork are the only ones that are not subject to hatcheries.
The lack of water to flush young salmon to the ocean and habitat decline caused by erosion in the watershed have contributed to the decline.

Scott Oviatt was injured Monday in Glacier National Park by a young female cat, who authorities said made an unprovoked attack.
The cat jumped on Oviatt and killed the animal less than 100 yards from where the incident happened.
A young child was killed last year by a mountain lion near Evaro, north of Missoula, and at least two mountain lions have been shot by game wardens this year after threatening people in the Kallispell area.
Such incidents have led to an abrupt change in policy.

Mountain lion reports continue in Montana

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — Just one day after a mountain lion attacked a boy in Glacier National Park, Flathead Valley game wardens reported another attack.
A spokesman for the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks said the agency is giving high priority to reports of problem cats.
"If people call, we're going out," said Mike Adornell, department office manager in Kalispell. "If we hear of any lions, we'll have to look for their fear of people, they will be moved or killed."

A resident northwest of Columbia Falls reported that his dog had been killed by a mountain lion in his yard and the dog suffered a chest wound Tuesday.
Wardens also were sent east of Kalispell along the Swan Range, where another lion was reported killing a field-sparrow.
The dog did not see the lion in the area that could attract deer and the lions that stalk them for food.
A young cougar was killed north of Lake Blaine after it killed a pet dog July 7.

The recent rash of lion attacks and sightings in northwestern Montana has a state wildlife official worried that a dangerous pattern is starting to emerge.
"We started out thinking this was aberrant behavior, a problem with an individual cat, Adornell said. "Now we are starting to see a pattern."
Meanwhile, the 9-year-old Wyoming boy, maulled Monday in Glacier National Park, was released from Kalispell Regional Hospital Tuesday after surgery to stitch and clean head and neck wounds suffered in the encounter.

Such incidents have led to an abrupt change in policy.
Visitors to the Sawtooth Wilderness should obtain a free use permit if they take horses in the wilderness, overnight, or if there are more than nine hikers in a group. Permits may be obtained at the Sawtooth National Recreation Area headquarters, Stanley Ranger Station, Redfish Lake Visitor Center, Lowman Ranger Station or the Boise National Forest.
The SNRA Headquarters visitor center north of Ketchikan has trail information available by computer, and Calena Ledie offers free maps depicting the many trails open for mountain biking, hiking and horseback riding near Glenside Summit.
Camping in the Ketchikan Ranger District has been limited to two consecutive days below continuances of Couch and Trail Creeks and to five days at other locations. Free maps of the area and copies of the special order are available from the SNF office.

er to handle in all types of hunting situations from heavy brush to a saddle-scabbard. Some bullet velocity but most with the shorter barrel but modern powders have reduced this loss to insignificant amounts for most hunting situations.
Also take notice of the barrel shaft. Don't buy a heavy or varmint-style barrel for general hunting as the extra weight will take its toll during a long day in the field.
Since the reason for making a shell purchase is to take the gun from the box to the field, there are several items with which the rifle should come equipped.
First, the stock should be fitted with a recoil pad. Such a pad can prevent a great deal of discomfort on the range and in the field.
Even the mild .243 Winchester can deliver a bite with 60-grain deer loads when fired without the benefit of heavy clothing.

Second, make sure the stock is equipped with sling swivel studs. Buying sling swivels and slings is easy, but installing the stud can be difficult.
Third, if a scope is to be used, make sure that the action has been drilled and tapped for scope bases.
And fourth, select a model with an adjustable trigger. A crisp clean trigger can contribute greatly to shooting accuracy.
One of the trade-offs made in purchasing an off the shelf rifle is that stocks are made to an industry standard design and most hunters so variations are not available.
Nevertheless, the stock still warrants some inspection. Make sure it has sufficient checkering to provide sure handling. At the same time, see that the checkering is not so sharp as to injure the shooter's hand during recoil.
Another stock variation found on factory models involves the magazine. Many hunters spend a considerable amount of time loading and unloading ing their rifles. A magazine with a floor plate which allows the magazine to be emptied from the bottom is a great benefit compared to a blind magazine, which requires the rounds to be cycled through the action for removal.

Some factory rifles now come with synthetic stocks.
Though not as elegant as wood, these synthetic versions are very practical for hunting under adverse conditions and decrease maintenance.
They reduce weight and have a great deal of strength and durability.
With these basic considerations a hunter can make a quality rifle purchase right off the shelf at a favorite local retail store in less than an hour and have a rifle ready for dependable action in the field with little additional effort.

inches. Got any more of those smaller patterns?
In the bright sunlight and low cloud cover, the patterns and light tippets frequently mean the difference between a successful or unsuccessful day of fishing. I haven't conducted any type of "scientific study" to confirm my findings, but the results of frequent trips speak for themselves. When the sun is high the water is clear, the trout is spooky and switches to a smaller pattern and a light tippet. This might be the winning combination.

Plan

along that lines that distributing the tags with any possibility of equal treatment for all hunters would be virtually impossible.
Jim Anderson said he feared out-fitters and guides would get future preferential treatment, particularly if the general public didn't pick up its share of the backcountry quota in the first few years.
Kuck said the quota system was established at 16,000 because that currently is the estimated use. If the quota would not be reached for the first few to several years and during that time the mature bull segment of the population could advance.
"The basic structure of this plan is to bring back the males," Kuck pointed out.
Kuck had prefaced his review of the plan by noting the difficult decisions the commission made in 1976 have proven to be correct and we now are enjoying the greatest elk and deer herds the state has ever had.
"We are confident the proposals we are making now, if they are con-

Control largely unavailable in cafe or glass rods which tended to be short shatter.
Today's light line rods are not little rods, middle rods or fly rods. This generation of rods is easier to cast than the traditional that the cast of small line rods six or seven years ago.
All the attributes of the current crop of light line fishing rods add up to a real summer advantage in fishing. They help overcome the spookiness of the larger, multi-line summer fish and they play the fish completely without triggering the ultra light tippets that help fool the trout when attached to the precise little summer patterns that are often required to catch fish.
Best of all, light line rods are fun to fish with and cast. If you haven't tried one lately, you will be amazed at how competently they can cast that essential 50-60 feet.

If you have broken some tippets lately, spooked a big trout with a line slip or lack the ability to toss a feather-light line, think about some lighter-lined equipment. I'll almost guarantee better success of the low-flowing summer streams and Idaho's famous spring creeks. Remember, the right tools for the job at hand applies to fishing too.

The petition, citing 30 sources of literature that have suspected hybridization between wolves, dogs and coyotes for at least two decades. One of the sources cited was a USFWS Endangered Species Bulletin that said more than half of 72 gray wolves tested in Minnesota may contain coyote DNA, said Bourret.
According to the farm bureau, the bulletin said these test results have "serious implications for the conservation of pure gray wolves in Minnesota."
In their petition to Lujan and Turner, the Farm Bureau asks for a review of the matter and a determination on whether the Endangered Species Act should continue to list species and subspecies which may be subject to interbreeding.
"It is time to recognize that the Endangered Species Act was not intended to protect that which is not capable of being protected, especially when nature itself is at work," said the petition.

disturbance. The smaller diameter makes it less obtrusive to the wary summer trout. These rods are instantly capable of handling much lighter tippets than the mid-range line sizes. This may mean you can actually hook and land a larger fish more effectively with a smaller rod.
You will not so readily snap a fine-diameter summer tippet.
Current technology has given us light line rods that are competent casting machines as well as good anglers.
A few years ago, most small-lined rods just didn't have the finesse of design to cast a tight loop or to drive a fly into a light breeze, let alone a mid-morning zephyr.
The small line rods are longer than in the past. This provides line

On another subject, most of those speaking expressed opposition to the "choose your weapon" proposal that would force a sportsman to pick a rifle, muzzleloader or bow and arrow and stick with it for all species for the entire year.
"What you rifle hunters have to watch out for," said one, "is that if bow hunters are forced to choose there could be about 15,000 more rifle hunters. Almost all archers are gun hunters, too, and out of the 20,000 state bow hunters, only about a quarter of them are really proficient and would engage the bow."
The public will have through Sept. 7 to submit written comments on the plan to the commission.
Those comments can be mailed to the Region 4 office in Jerome, or directly to the state headquarters in Boise.

TWIN FALLS — Most trail roads and campgrounds are open in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area, but fire danger remains very high.
Average temperatures have been ranging from highs in the low 80s to lows in the upper 60s for the southern division of the forest.
Northern division temperatures this past week dipped to 29 degrees at Stanley, but rose to 95 degrees at Choke Creek in the Fairfield Ranger District.
High passes and trails are now open for travel to tourist riding is increasing.
Visitors to the Sawtooth Wilderness should obtain a free use permit if they take horses in the wilderness, overnight, or if there are more than nine hikers in a group. Permits may be obtained at the Sawtooth National Recreation Area headquarters, Stanley Ranger Station, Redfish Lake Visitor Center, Lowman Ranger Station or the Boise National Forest.
The SNRA Headquarters visitor center north of Ketchikan has trail information available by computer, and Calena Ledie offers free maps depicting the many trails open for mountain biking, hiking and horseback riding near Glenside Summit.
Camping in the Ketchikan Ranger District has been limited to two consecutive days below continuances of Couch and Trail Creeks and to five days at other locations. Free maps of the area and copies of the special order are available from the SNF office.

The Fairfield Ranger District has had trail district campgrounds, trails and trails are now open. Water remains limited at Baumgaunter, Campground, and visitors should bring their own drinking water. Fishing is reported far throughout the district.

'90 Buick Riviera is exclusive, reliable

By Al Hess
Knight-Ridder News Service

During the interim between complete body redesigns, automakers typically wrap a car's styling in a relatively modest way.

Sometimes, as with the revised versions of the extremely well-designed 1983 Buick Riviera, the sales pitch diminishes a car's beauty. And sometimes, as in the case of the current Riviera, the changes can make the car look better.

The 1990 Buick's high-quality personal luxury coupe was restyled last year, principally by lengthening and reshaping its back end. In addition to increasing trunk space, the 11-inch extension served to balance the car's appearance, which has been too short in the rear.

The practical improvements afforded by the longer tail were augmented by its sloping, sculpted styling, which added a very stylish and distinctive touch.

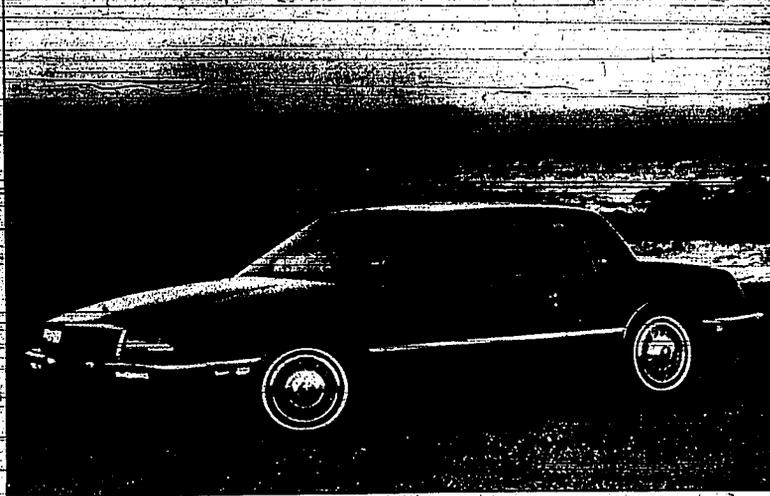

According to Buick spokesman Marty Schorr, making those styling changes and making a few more entries on the car's standard equipment list have made an enormous difference in Riviera sales. More precisely, it has turned a 1988 sales flop into a reasonably successful, low-volume niche car in 1990.

The $25,590 Riviera, with sales of 14,000 so far this model year, is a fairly exclusive, thoroughly satisfying automobile. In a survey of 1989 models by J.D. Power & Associates to determine the most trouble-free luxury cars sold in the United States, the Riviera was the top domestic car, and was No. 2 among all imports and domestics.

Calling the Riviera a "personal luxury coupe" says that it is an American variation on the European-derived grand touring car. The GT is essentially an effort to marry the performance of a two-seat sports car to a somewhat larger vehicle that has room for four passengers and decent trunk space.

The even bigger personal luxury coupe goes the GT one better by adding still more space, luxury and comfort. The front-drive Riviera has a wheelbase of 108 inches and an overall length of 198 inches with its new derriere. Equipped as it is with a gutsy 3.8-liter V-6, a supple, fully independent suspension and a standard, equipment list worthy of a dramatic redesign, the performance ought to satisfy most people's economy and comfort needs.

In truth, the Riviera does an excellent job of balancing the sometimes diametrically opposed requirements of comfort and performance. This is particularly true of the suspension, which manages to be firm enough to provide good handling and still ride nicely. If you want even better cornering, you can order the car with a special performance package that includes a stiffer suspension, faster steering and bigger, higher-performance tires. The test car was equipped with this option and I found it ideal, although I'm sure many drivers would prefer the somewhat softer standard undercarriage.

The nice handling is complemented by the brisk acceleration and plentiful passing pep afforded by Riviera's husky, 165-horsepower V-6. This engine is equipped with a balance shaft to diminish vibration and is buttressed to an equally smooth and manly four-speed automatic transaxle.

The interior of the Riviera is invitingly styled, ergonomically sound, comfortable and delightfully quiet. Road, wind and body noise are at a minimum in this exceptionally tight and solid piece of machinery. Happily, the Riviera has been spared a video-erase dashboard this year. The electronic gauges have been replaced by good old analog gauges.

The hedonist quotient is quite high, even in the Riviera's base form. Standard equipment includes everything from air conditioning and automatic leveling to a leather-wrapped wheel.

Mechanical goodies at no extra charge include the independent suspension and four-wheel power disc brakes. An anti-lock brake system costs extra — and probably shouldn't in a car priced close to $24,000.

four-speed automatic transaxle; fully independent suspension, four-wheel power disc brakes, air conditioning, climate control, power brakes, power windows, power door locks, stereo/cassette with power antenna, electric rear window defogger, automatic side-venting control, console with ammeter, security system, full analog instruments, non-power outside mirrors, 6-way power driver's seat, tilt steering, leather-wrapped steering wheel, P205/70R15 all-season radial tires. Test model includes as major options: leather seats, power front seats (14-way adjustments for driver), keyless entry, automatic headlight control, automatic day-night rearview mirror, heated outside mirrors, electric trunk lid, upgraded stereo/cassette with CD player, anti-lock braking system, performance suspension, faster steering, aluminum wheels, P215/65R13 performance radial tires, price: $24,590. ### Working at home has advantages

If you ever thought you'd like to stop commuting and at the same time find yourself of office politics, you're part of a growing legion of like-minded Americans. There already are about 12 million home-based businesses and about 360 million workers who bring work home from their jobs in the cities. Paul and Sarah Edwards, observers of this phenomenon, expect rapid growth in the '90s at least 10 percent a year.

Sytha Parlor Finances

If you believe you're ready to bring out your own stand, what's the first thing you should do? "Look inside yourself," says Paul Edwards. "What is it you like doing? What turns your head in a conversation or stops your eye in a magazine? How do you feel about the statement, 'Somebody is going to...'"

Self-motivation is the prime requirement in his judgment. You must have a passion so strong that you can't resist it. Yet, having determined to make the move, you need to find something to do. Product or service — people will pay for. Be sure there is a market and the means to reach it.

Paul Edwards is an attorney. Sarah, his wife, is a psychologist. Until his child was born, she rented an office in a commercial building. Wanting more time with her child, she set up her office in her home. A year later, Paul, envious of her schedule, moved his law practice to their home in Southern California.

"So many people asked their advice about home offices that the two concluded there was a big market," says Edwards. "Working From Home," a book that is in its fifth edition, is now run seminars, lecture, work as consultants, write a magazine column, answer questions on the Computerwise computer network and on their own 900 number.

What's behind the home office movement? Paul Edwards says people make the decision to get more control over their lives and more time flexibility. Like Sarah Edwards, many women need good incomes but work at home to be able to rear their children.

Paul Edwards recently surveyed scores of his clients and concluded that the typical income of a home office worker is $50,000. For some, this is an increase. Others are willing to sacrifice income for different values, including taking charge of their own lives. Yet, he says, incomes of $1 million or more are possible.

When home office businesses fail it most frequently is because the operator lacks experience. "Working at home" you wear lots of hats," Edwards points out. "You're the chief executive officer, but you're also the filing clerk. Many people in large organizations have no experience managing money. They don't anticipate cash flow problems. Others lack an understanding of marketing. They sit and wait for business to come to them when they should be out aggressively selling their services and their product or service. Most of us were generalists with training in experience to be good employees, not self-managers."

Booster fan helps even out room temperatures.

Booster fan helps heating, air conditioning work evenly

Q. We have one room in our house that doesn't get enough cooling in the summer and too much heat in the winter. What can we do to try to make it more comfortable without increasing our utility bills? K. H.

James Duffy
Cut your utility bill!

A. Your problem is not uncommon with central air-conditioning and heating system. It is difficult to get the proper amount of conditioned air to all the rooms in your house. With ducts with many bends, the central air conditioner and furnace blower just isn't strong enough.

Often, you set your central air conditioner thermostat lower to keep that problem room cool more than the thermostat instructs you. On the summer setting, it automatically comes on when it senses cool air when your air conditioner starts. For a short time after your conditioner stops, it continues to run to pull that last bit of cool air that room. On the "winter" setting, another sensor switches the fan on outlet register. This can increase the flow of cooled or heated air to that room by 50 percent or more.

This small, almost-flat register booster fan has a summer/winter temperature sensor built into it. It only runs when your air conditioner or furnace comes on. The small motor uses 25 watts so it costs only several cents per day to operate.

Woman seeks aid for counseling over painful fatherhood issue

Minneapolis millionaire Percy Ross is internationally known for his philanthropy and his ability to encourage others to help solve problems for those in need. He has earned a fortune and a wealth of knowledge during his lifetime and wants to share both before his death. His motto is: "He who gives while he lives also knows who gives."

thing stopping me is money. I can't ask my husband for it, because we're on a tight budget and he'll want to know what I need it for. If you could even loan me the money for two or three sessions, it would be a tremendous help. You are my only hope.

Mrs. K.L., Akron, Ohio

Dear Mrs. H.: I'm relieved you didn't ask me for advice on how to handle your problem. I will say this much, I'd weigh the consequences of telling your husband the truth very carefully. Receiving positive, loving counseling on which way to turn sounds like an excellent choice, so I'm sending you my checks.

Part of life is that it comes with some painful truth, and sometimes it's more than a person can handle. It's a rare husband who could accept something like this. Good luck.

Dear Mr. Ross: A white-buck I was in a car accident. When I hit the other car, my husband's glasses fell off the dashboard and broke. He cannot see to drive without glasses. This means I have to drive him to and from work every day. Just had a baby, and bonding up with this to drive him is a real chore.

We barely make enough money to make rent, utilities and food each month. We can't afford an eye exam and new glasses on top of everything else. His employer does not offer optical care, either. Life would be so much easier if he could just drive himself. Also, whenever we need milk or bread, I have to make all the quick runs to the store. He can't take the kids anywhere because he can't drive, so I've got a break from them. An exam and glasses would cost $200. I would be grateful if you could help me.

Mrs. C.M., Portland, Ore.

Dear Mrs. M.: Would you feel put off if I send you some checks? All the questions you listed for why your husband needs glasses are based on your inconvenience. However, this granting you is a gift for your husband's sake. For someone I suspect he is a prince of a fellow and deserves it. My $200 is on the way.

Dear Mr. Ross: I'm a 23-year-old inmate in prison and want to get a color TV. I like to watch the news, but I can't afford one. I've been thinking about it for a while, but I don't have any money. I don't want to do some funny stuff to get it. I won't do that because I'm a Christian and I read in the Bible that Christ doesn't like people being gay. So I stay out of other people's cells, but I really miss watching movies, cartoons and the news at night. It's so boring in here.

Will you send me $211 for a color TV? If you want to know why I don't ask my dad — I did, but all he says is to save up the $10 a month he sends. I can't do this because I need my shower stuff that takes up my money. Send me the money I need for a TV. If you don't, I can handle being told "no."

Mr. W.W. Jr., Menard, Ill.

Dear Mr. W.: The answer is "no," but I thank you for the way you're so concerned in prison, by reading the Bible and trying to make a difference. I'm glad you're thinking about it. Ask and you shall receive. Luxuries such as color TVs are an exception. You may write to Percy Ross at the Times News, P.O. Box 35000, Memphis, Tenn. 38135. Include a telephone number if you wish. All letters sent to Mr. Ross are read. Only a few are answered in the column, although others may be so selected privately.

'Government Surplus' ads usually sell what could be gotten free

Q. Can you really buy a government vehicle for $50 by answering one of these government surplus ads?

A. Not hardly. Watch out for ads promoting "Government Surplus Sales." The bait is tempting, but includes a $50 "buying guide," booklets, typewriters and a potpourri of office supplies.

A typical advertisement: "Surplus jeeps, cars, boats. Many for under $50. For info call this number." You may get from the call a $50 "booklet" or "buying guide." It simply tells you how to contact a government agency that might be offering surplus items for sale.

You can, of course, get this very same information for free by contacting a government agency dealing in surplus equipment. However, often this surplus is little more than junk since state and local governments have the first-choice to buy. Bargains can be found, if you have the time to spend hunting for them.

Q. What questions should I ask in comparing contractors for paving my driveway?

A. Before any company starts the job, get the following in writing:

- The material to be used; and if the old driveway is to be replaced, the depth of the base. A good base runs from about four to six inches.
- The type and thickness of the top surface. This runs from about three to four inches, depending on the base and the material used.
- The exact size of the finished driveway. This includes street spread and curbs.
- The exact starting and completion dates.
- Any warranty that is offered.

Asphalt and concrete driveways that are not in top-condition are fairly easy to repair yourself, with a minimum of equipment. Don't be afraid to ask questions about what you don't know.

Q. If you have an old car, what procedures do the BBB recommend?

A. Have your car inspected before leaving on a trip. If something happens on the road, we offer the following advice:

- Phone a dealer or service center that sells or services your make of car.
- If the car must be towed, beware of the repair shop recommended by the tow truck driver. Get a second opinion if possible.
- If the service center suggests mafor repairs, try any way you can to get the car home, to familiar mechanics. If you can't, check with the nearest BBB to find out the firm's reputation.

Get a guarantee in writing for the work that has been done. And get a repair estimate on paper and signed. If the work is covered by warranty, get an itemized copy of the repair order.

If you put the repairs on a credit card slip, make sure each repair item is listed on the slip. No exceptions.

Strong complaints: Yes, we do get them. A lady paid someone to hang wallpaper for her. Later, it began coming down, so she called for paper-hanger-back-to-redo his work. Upon arriving at her home, he had no wallpaper paste in the truck. He asked the lady if he could borrow some styruv to use as paste, which she gave him. In a few days, she called the BBB to complain. Not only was the paper coming off the wall, but it was "stuck," but she now had bugs, too!

Student entrepreneurs sometimes arrive at surprising success

By Mark Engan
Knight-Ridder News Service

WICHITA, Kan. — You graduate from high school, eager to experience college life before venturing out into the real world. You've taken the right classes, earned decent grades and sent in hope-filled applications.

But it all falls through. You can't get financial aid because your parents make too much money and you don't make enough. You've taken the right classes, earned decent grades and sent in hope-filled applications.

"Well, I opened this place," said Fred Yahya, a 22-year-old Kansas State University senior and owner of Fat Freddy's Pizza, a takeout pizza shop south of Wichita.

Fat Freddy's, which opened last December in a gas station's closet, is one of many small businesses started in recent years by collegiate entrepreneurs — eager, aggressive, and sometimes needy — college students balancing academics and economics in the real world.

Although not available on their proliferation are figures, small-business experts say that more young men and women are starting their own businesses than ever before. And college students are doing their share.

"The old career route of waiting 20 years at a company to become a manager is obsolete," said George Solomon, director of business education for the Small Business Administration in Texas. Most are 19. They don't want to wait 20 years to work for somebody else."

Today's student-entrepreneurs are opening novelty stands, cleaning services and T-shirt shops — often right out of their apartments, garages or dorm rooms. Most are directed toward the college community, a market they know well.

Some make a decent profit. A few make a killing.

Take Michael Dell. Six years ago, he was a 19-year-old freshman at the University of Texas. Starting with $1,000, he began operating a computer company out of his dorm room. Today, Dell Computers Corp. has expanded into four countries and last year earned a $5.1 million profit on sales of $388.6 million.

Yahya's success has not been as meteoric, but he's paying his tuition.

"I'm making more now than I would at any summer job," he said. He claims to make a profit of about $1,000 a week. "I'm not going to make THAT with my degree."

With the success of his business, he has decided to remodel another dining space at the gas station into a store. He expects to be serving his deep-dish pizza and gyros to in-house patrons by the end of the month.

"When Yahya returns to school this fall, he'll leave the business in the hands of his girlfriend and three other workers. Although he isn't sure what he'll do after graduation in December, Fat Freddy's is sure to figure prominently in his plans.

"It's hard to leave, especially when you're making money," he said.

His options include expansion or even franchising — not bad for an initial $4,000 investment for a mixer, oven and other equipment bought from a friend of his father's.

"I would've had to buy everything at full price, I couldn't have done it," Yahya said. "A lot of people go broke."

Almost all first businesses begun in college, but just part of small-business education, said Max Haynes, executive director of the Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs, a national group based at Wichita State University.

Because of relatively small capital investment, however, student-owners usually avoid crushing losses when their companies fail.

"You don't have a lot of responsibility — no family, no house loan, no baggage," Haynes said. "It's what you are going to lose, $3,000? It's no big deal.... It's usually a first business, and you go through several different ones before you're finally successful. It's a learning experience, an apprenticeship."

"We encourage them to take the plunge," said Brian Bramhall, co-owner of The Resort apparel store in Towne East Square, dove in five years ago while he was a student at WSU, and he has experienced several stages of business evolution since then.

He started designing T-shirts for his fraternity and high school alma mater, then focused on developing an original line of clothing — "Club Flamingo."

As orders rolled in, Bramhall met Kathleen Barton, a designer with nationwide connections who would become co-owner of The Resort. Together they sold shirts, shorts and jackets to other stores.

Then in 1987, Bramhall talked to some other college students who were designing shirts and selling them in their own shops. It prompted him to open his own store, instead of letting someone else sell his products and control the marketing. Last year, The Resort had sales of $280,000, he expects $500,000 this year.

But the climb was not without its costs. Bramhall's social life in college was transformed from keg parties, basketball games and hanging out to meeting with suppliers, filling orders and balancing spreadsheets.

"I have to be different than everyone else; you have to act different than everyone else," he said. "You have no steady girl, you can't party every night, you have no money. You have to use your resources completely different."

"Being broke," for me, was like nothing."

The academics also seemed to get lost behind the piles of work. He's still one class short of his degree. "I've been a senior for five years," he said.

"While the professors were speaking and all the other students were taking notes, I was writing my agenda for the rest of the week. You have to utilize your time effectively."

But while many student-entrepreneurs drop out of school or put the business on hold, many are moving more to go to class to learn how it's done.

Solomon, who teaches a course in entrepreneurship at George Washington University, in addition to evaluating his students at the SBA, said more than 600 colleges and universities now offer some type of small-business education — education that was virtually non-existent 10 years ago.

"All the professors hate my saying this, but it's not because of their own knowledge or expertise (that students take the classes)," he said. "It's supply and demand. Students want to take the courses, or they're going to go somewhere else."

They don't all take them for the same reason.

Some take them to learn the basics of small business; others simply need a refresher course, he said.

All students, however, gain the expertise of their professors and the resources they command. Students can use university computers to keep track of inventories and payrolls, and they can consult professors for marketing advice.

Solomon, in fact, has served on the boards of directors of more than a dozen companies run by former students. He says they call all the time for advice, a favor or just to talk.

Americans are increasingly making it their business to work at home

By Michele Chandler
Knight-Ridder News Service

DETROIT — Most workers spend their mornings wrestling with rush-hour traffic.

Not Tracy Ohryn.

Since 1988, Ohryn has worked from a computer-equipped office in the lower level of her ranch-style home in Commerce Township, Mich. As office manager of Ohryn & Associates, a construction company, she is assisted by her husband, David, Ohryn regularly puts in six-day weeks.

"I like working here," said Ohryn, taking a break outdoors on the rear deck, which is shaded by mature trees and overlooks a lake. "In the morning, I get up and there's my office. I'll fry my lunch break,

I can toss in a load of laundry. If I can't sleep at night, I get up and do my work. It's more flexible."

Though she works in the relative tranquility and solitude of her home, Ohryn is not alone — far from it.

The number of people with businesses based in their homes is growing, and the trend is expected to continue well into the '90s. The growth in home computers and other support business services, parents seeking flexible hours and high startup costs for new companies are helping to fuel the home-based business explosion, experts say.

More than 10 million people were self-employed and worked at home last year, up from about 9 million in 1987, according to Links Resources Corp., a New York-based consulting firm. A total of 32.8 million people — just over 12 percent of them self-employed — did all or part of their work from home last year, according to Links estimates.

The home work trend is strong in Michigan. About a third of the 200 people who each month call the Oakland County Economic Development Group in Pontiac seeking business advice either operate a home business or want to start one, said "small-business" counselor Ronald Fuslier.

Detroit ranked fifth among cities with substantial numbers of people who work at home, according to Links' 1989 survey of 25 U.S. cities.

"That could be primarily attributed to a sluggish auto industry and the resulting loss of thousands of jobs in the Detroit area in the 1980s," said Thomas Miller, director of Links

Resources', home office research program.

While a few home-based businesses do well, most home-based firms won't make millions and their owners don't expect them to, said George Fiumara, founder of Mothers' Home Business Network in New York. The group publishes newsletters containing tips for companies.

Fiumara said many of her group's 3,000 members see operating a business from home as the best way to balance careers and family responsibilities. "It's possible to make as much or more money working at home as you did in your conventional job," she said.

"A Detroit-area group, Wise Mothers, also publishes a newsletter and sponsors workshops for those interested in running a business from home. One recent workshop attracted 25 people; half of them owners of home-based businesses, including a condominium management company, a bridal-wear designer, a printing company, and a cleaning business.

Other home-based firms are a diverse lot — consulting companies, flower arrangers, class reunion planners, beauty product supply businesses and caterers.

While the advantages of running a business from home are well known, there are disadvantages.

Just ask Linda Boone.

The owner of Yoors For Cleaning in Farmington Hills, Mich., Boone's 4-year-old company, registered $159,000 in sales last year. Then a police officer noticed a lot of traffic coming to her home early one morning, when workers traditionally arrive to load up vacuum cleaners and other supplies they use on cleaning jobs.

Boone said she applied for a zoning variance, but that the board of zoning appeals denied her request and told her to move her business out of her home. "In March, Boone set up shop nearby in a former winery turned office building."

"I had to re-adjust everything financially," Boone said, adding that she paid $270 a month for office rent, plus more for telephone service.

And all's not well at home for her three children, ages 11 to 14. "It's more than one kid who has never been ever through this," Boone said. "I could get them ready for school and when they got home at 3, I could be home and start cooking dinner. I love being at home. It's such a big readjustment for them now."

Others say the temptation to goof off is too strong, or that they have to deal with interruptions from friends or family members who don't understand that they're working.

"The disadvantages? When your partner comes home and says, 'Why haven't you done this and this,' I know you were at home all day," said Sylvia Porter, owner of Shaglow, a cleaning company he started earlier this year in Highland, Mich.

But the advantages of home work outweigh the disadvantages for a growing number of entrepreneurs, including Ohryn, of the Ohryn & Associates construction company.

Lower overhead costs means the company can undercut competing companies vying for the same contracts. The 7-year-old company employs eight. Last year's sales hit $500,000, up from $300,000 in 1987.

"The Ohryns' home work venture is doing so well that when the couple moves into a new home near construction site nearby Salem Township later this year, another home office will await them, and they're considering hiring a secretary."

still to want to plan their future but not enough to know that there aren't desirable jobs in large organizations sufficient to take care of all of them. At the same time, we have become "the information society" and an increasing share of the national income is based on information.

These factors have fueled the home office movement at the same time the revolution in communications technology has made it practical. Personal computers, fax machines, desk top copiers, on-line communications and research services and an array of other sophisticated office products and services have made the central-city office redundant.

let on setting up and maintaining a home office. It will get you started. It also will tell you about Fuji computer products. A discount coupon for "Working From Home" is included. The booklet is free. Write: The Fuji Home Office Guide, P.O. Box 1738, Ridgely, Md. 21681.

Two other helpful booklets are "Directory of Business Development Publications" and "Financial Management How to Make a Go of Your Business." Both are available by writing the Small Business Administration at: SBA Publications, P.O. Box 30, Denver, Colo. 80201.

more focused and concentrated. Other than the small amount of light that escapes through a window, all the electricity that a lamp uses ends up as heat energy inside your house.

Since these lamps better concentrate light where you need it, less total wattage is needed. Overall, they save electricity and produce less heat.

WRONG PRICING LOGIC

QUESTION: Why do so many homeowners go wrong when they try to set a realistic selling price on their homes?

ANSWER: Most people base their price on the only facts known to them: original price, cost of improvements, hoped-for profit and what they think similar homes are bringing. The original price, improvements and hoped-for profit only determine whether you gain or lose, but they have nothing to do with the right price to produce a sale. Prices of other homes. Most of the time you only hear of the asking price, not the selling price.

Consult a local Realtor whose business it is to know what such property can and will bring.

If you don't know how to clean, the IRS will gladly furnish you with a tax table.

Some folks who bring how broadsheeted they are may just be too lazy to find out which side they're on.

If you give what you're doing, I'll say I'm giving.

A bare is someone who tells you facts of stuff about himself that you're going to tell him about yourself.

A hairy man supports up a penny washer: you can't get it out of a line, please.

when it senses heated air from the furnace coming from the register.

Another option is using deflectors over the register. Ohryn directs the cool air out into the room, you feel more comfortable. One effective type of register deflector is tapered to produce a "jet" or "rapid" effect. This speeds up the air flow for better distribution and the cooling effect of a breeze.

You should check the duct dampers in your basement. The damper in the duct leading to your problem room should be completely open. If you have a room that gets too cool, you can close that duct damper a little. This directs more cool air to the rest of your house.

Don't close more dampers too far when you are at comfort level. If your air conditioner needs a lot of air flow through the evaporator coils to operate at peak efficiency, air flow is not as critical for your furnace, so you can adjust the duct dampers more aggressively in the winter.

You can write to me for UTILITY BILLS UPDATE No. 111 showing information and manufacturers of automatic register-booster fans, register air deflectors, instructions for adjusting duct dampers, and a chart showing the savings by setting your air conditioner thermostat higher.
