Bush, Gorbachev united in actions

President Bush shows a framed cartoon presented to him by Mikhail Gorbachev in Helsinki.

Los Angeles Times

HELSINKI — President Bush and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev issued a strongly worded joint statement Sunday declaring unconditional support for economic and political sanctions against Iraq and warning that if current steps failed they were prepared to take additional ones consistent with the U.N. Charter.

"We are united in the belief that Iraq's aggression must not be tolerated," the leaders of the two nuclear superpowers declared at the conclusion of a one-day summit meeting here.

Iraq seeks closer ties with Iran

The Associated Press

Iraq's foreign minister Sunday sought help from Iran in cracking the U.N.-imposed embargo on Baghdad, but the United States and Soviet Union renewed their commitment to the sanctions.

Syria's official news agency reported that a series of 46 explosions were heard in the Iraqi town of Al-Qaim near the border, resulting in an undetermined number of casualties. ABC News identified the site of the blasts as the Al-Qaim chemical plant.

The official Iraqi News Agency denied the report of explosions in Al-Qaim.

Last month, Polish workers returning home from Iraq reported that about 35 Americans were brought to the chemical plant in Al-Qaim on Aug. 17 under guard. It was not known whether any Westerners are still being held as human shields at the plant.

Meanwhile, more Americans flew to freedom after being held in Iraq and Kuwait. Hundreds are still held as human shields against U.S. and other forces building up in the Persian Gulf region since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2.

Regional cancer center filling up quickly

Despite high numbers, patients aren't expected to be turned away soon

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Just two months after opening its doors, the cancer center at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center is close to capacity, an administrator says. The number of patients being treated in the center already far exceeds earlier projections, said Kathleen Sivulich, administrative director of the Southern Idaho Regional Cancer Center.

When planning the center, hospital officials predicted 20 patients per day would be receiving radiation treatments within six months, Sivulich said. By Aug. 24, the center's linear accelerator was being used by 32 patients each day.

The accelerator is a $1.3 million machine that focuses a beam of high-energy particles at a tumor. The particles destroy cancerous cells, ability to multiply, thus slowing or stopping the tumor's growth.

"I think those were deliberately conservative projections," Sivulich said. "We've been very pleasantly surprised with the response."

The medical oncology or chemotherapy side has also been busy. As many as 30 patients a week come in for treatment that last from two to six hours. The center can handle as many as six patients at one time, and has occasionally been full during recent weeks.

"With cancer, you'd rather see that business would be down," Sivulich said. "But we would rather have them here than having to go somewhere else."

Patients come from all eight Idaho counties served by the hospital and northern Nevada, she said.

Despite the high numbers, Sivulich said it is unlikely the cancer center will have to start turning away patients anytime soon.

"The increase has been steady, but I think we've leveled off," she said. The center's radiation therapy equipment can handle 35-40 patients per day.

"We still have a way to go before we reach capacity," Sivulich said.

After studying the patient statistics of 19 cancer centers, Sivulich predicted MVRMC's patient load will probably hold steady at 35 or 36.

Radiation therapist Paul Shenk is quick in keeping up with the flow of patients being treated on the linear accelerator.

Doctors at the cancer center currently refer a few patients whose cancers cannot be adequately treated here to other facilities, such as the University of Washington, Sivulich said. If the patient load in Twin Falls increased beyond capacity, doctors would continue to refer patients in where they would best be treated, she said.

Another option would be to increase the center's hours, currently 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

That could prove difficult, however, because it is hard to recruit additional radiation therapists. The recent upswing in the number of cancer centers nationwide has created a shortage of trained radiation therapists, Sivulich said.

The high number of patients is having a financial impact on the entire hospital, she said.

"Business is good... That means activity is up in radiology and housekeeping and other areas of the hospital," she said.

Nineteen employees, including the two other cancer centers, Sivulich predicted, volunteers work to make patients feel more comfortable, she said.

The waiting room at the cancer center fills up with patients and family members during therapy hours.

Center gets high marks for mammography program

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Women being screened for breast cancer at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center receive the lowest possible radiation dosage and are treated by the best physicians available, say administrators of the hospital's radiology department.

The department recently passed stringent mammography guidelines established by the American College of Radiology making MVRMC the only hospital in Southern Idaho accredited by the ACR.

"This is a good opportunity to see how we stack up against national standards," said Gary Andrews, medical director of the diagnostic imaging (radiology) department.

Accreditation first became a major issue in the medical community two years ago when Congress first considered requiring accreditation for Medicare reimbursement.

Then NRC's Tom Brokaw reported in June that some American women are dying as a result of inadequate mammograms and faulty equipment.

"It is becoming more and more important that mammographic facilities be accredited," said Gerhard Hoffman, medical director of the department of diagnostic imaging.

Hoffman said the local incidence of breast cancer closely follows the national average, with about one in every 10 women contracting breast cancer during her lifetime.

After Brokaw's program aired, women began calling the hospital to see if MVRMC's facility was accredited.

At the time, it was not, but the process was well underway and the ACR accreditation certificate arrived about a week later, Hoffman said.

The accreditation certifies that the MVRMC facility exposes women undergoing mammograms to the lowest possible amount of radiation — 133 millirads, compared to a maximum allowable dosage of 400 millirads, he said.

The hospital's X-ray equipment was tested using a "phantom" — a simulated breast made of plastic embedded with objects simulating various sizes of cancerous growths.

The film shows that even barely-visible particles can be identified with the X-ray equipment long before they

Immigrants celebrate Ellis Island reopening

NEW YORK (AP) — The "Isle of Tears" cracked a smile Sunday as immigrants old and new celebrated the reopening of Ellis Island, gateway to the New World for the ancestors of two out of five Americans.

There are thousands of different names, thousands of different faces, but you stick all of them together and you have one huge saga, and it's our saga," said Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca, who spearheaded the campaign that raised $156 million to restore the 90-year-old immigration station.

For victory in determination and a lifelong ambition to participate in the pageant, "I want it all," said Miss Vincent, who was on the Boardwalk shortly after 7 a.m. for the parade, "tricking in the surf" picture.

Her victory came the same night as the return of once-fired master of ceremonies Bert Parks. Pageant director Leonard Horn said he has made no decision if the 75-year-old crooner would be invited back next year. Parks was fired 10 years ago by pageant officials.

Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation. Forty-nine new citizens, including three children, were sworn in by Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia and six people who entered the nation through Ellis in the first quarter of the century were singled out to represent the millions of immigrants who passed through the island.

They included Johanna Flaherty, 84, who said she left her native Ireland in 1923 because she didn't want to "wake up and stare a cow in the face every morning." Another was Clara Larsen, who came from Russia in 1913 because she wanted to get an education.

Lawmakers lean toward more conventional arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's buildup in the Persian Gulf has given added impetus to proponents of a Post-Cold War defense budget that favors old-fashioned conventional weapons over sophisticated strategic hardware.

Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee.

The House of Representatives takes up the fiscal 1991 defense bill Monday, working from a $283 billion blueprint drawn up earlier to fund 3 invasion of Kuwait.

The summit meeting between President Bush and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev drove home what had already been seen as a diminished Soviet threat. Both leaders expressed confidence that the two superpowers could agree on a treaty to slash nuclear arms by the end of the year.

Detering Iraq aggression and its cost were not a direct consideration when the House Armed Services Committee drew up the plan.

President Bush's original request of $307 billion for fiscal 1991. Among the budget targets were the B-2 stealth bomber, the Strategic Defense Initiative, and two land-based nuclear missiles. Among the programs given a second chance was the M-1 tank.

But some lawmakers say all the measure is geared to equipping U.S. forces for a desert conflict rather than a European showdown.

The restoration project, the most expensive of its kind in American history, was entirely financed by private contributions to the Statue of resentative McCurdy, D-Okla., a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee.

Budget negotiations in 3rd day at Air Force base

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) — Congressional leaders and White House negotiators raced the clock Sunday, trying to reconcile their differences over the budget and reach an agreement for fiscal 1991.

Officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the bargainers could go to the White House Monday morning to try to complete their work. Additional bargaining was likely to be needed after that session, they said, perhaps running through Tuesday.

Democrats and Republicans have clashed all year over how to achieve budget savings.

Democrats wanted to raise income taxes paid by the wealthy and impose new taxes on energy, gasoline, alcoholic products and luxury items such as boats and jewelry.

The two sides worked for a third straight day at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland, 20 minutes from the capital, spending much of their time discussing taxes.

President Bush was scheduled to return to Washington late Sunday after his Helsinki summit meeting with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Democrats offered reductions of $7.2 billion, while Republicans pressed for $15.5 billion.

Republicans were pressing for new taxes on beer and wine, eliminating some income-tax deductions for the rich and cutting the capital gains tax rate.

Congress and the Bush administration have been deadlocked all year over how to reduce the deficit. The bargainers have been searching for a combination of new taxes and spending cuts producing $50 billion in savings for next year and $500 billion over the next five years.

Each side was seeking about $23 billion in new taxes and federal fees, but their components varied. Democrats wanted to raise income taxes paid by the wealthy and impose new taxes on energy, gasoline, alcoholic products and luxury items such as boats and jewelry.

Richfield man remains hospitalized after wreck

TWIN FALLS — A Richfield man was listed in serious condition Sunday afternoon after being transported to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise following a one-car accident. Idaho State Police said Alex Schied, 22, received spinal injuries after being ejected from his car at 11:55 p.m. Saturday at the intersection of Highway 93 and Highway 30.

Schied was driving northbound on Highway 93 when he lost control of his car and his vehicle flipped and rolled, police said.

He was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls before being transported via helicopter to Boise. Police said Schied was not wearing a seat belt.

The accident is still under investigation.

5th Judicial District judges running unopposed this year

TWIN FALLS — All 10 5th Judicial District judges who are up for election this year will run unopposed. County clerk offices around the valley reported that four Magistrate judges seeking to stay on the bench had filed by their Friday deadline without opposition. Those four Magistrate judges are Charles P. Brumbach and R. Michael Redman, both of Twin Falls; Thomas R. Cushman of Gooding; and Roy C. Holway of Burley.

According to the Office of the Secretary of State, the Magic Valley's six District Court judges have filed to be re-elected but nobody has filed to oppose them. Those judges are Phillip M. Becker of Gooding, George Granata Jr. of Burley, J. William Hart of Rupert, James J. May of Halley and Daniel C. Hurlbut Jr. and Daniel B. Mechl, both of Twin Falls.

MVRMC board of trustees mulls buying Doctors' Park

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's Board of Trustees will consider paying $2.25 million for the Doctors' Park complex at its regular meeting 7 p.m. today at the hospital.

Doctors' Park is a conglomeration of two medical office buildings jointly owned by 10 doctors. The main building is 27,000 square feet and is a block northeast of the hospital. The second building is at 526 Shop.

The hospital administration has been making sure that a long list of conditions, including appraisals of the buildings are met.

Critics: Timber sale will result in loss of $100,000

By N.S. Nockentown
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A proposed timber sale northwest of Ketchum is an economic bonanza, according to critics.

The U.S. Forest Service will lose money on the sale, but estimates of just how much it will lose vary greatly.

"We do know that our costs do exceed what comes in," said Fred Dauber, of the Challis National Forest.

The North Fork sale, in the Hunter Creek summit area northwest of Ketchum, will lose about $100,000 according to the Boulder-White Clouds Council of Boies.

But the Forest Service's numbers put the figure at $24,981.84.

Records for the Challis National Forest's timber sale costs for the past 10 years average out to about $32.16 per thousand board feet of timber logged.

The figure doesn't include costs for reforestation or brush disposal, which are usually taken out of the sale receipts.

Dauber said, or the 25 percent of timber receipts paid to counties in lieu of property taxes.

The sale consists of six clear cuts ranging from 5 to 24 acres totaling 92 acres within a 240-acre area. At $32.16 per thousand, the 774,000 board-foot sale would cost the Forest Service — and eventually the taxpayer — $24,981.84.

The sale area includes part of the Boulder-White Clouds Wilderness proposed by the Idaho Wildlands Coalition, the Ketchum-Sun Valley Chamber of Commerce and the city councils of both towns.

According to the Boulder-White Clouds Council, the Forest Service said it is logging the trees to control dwarf mistletoe and pine beetle infestations in the 150- to 250-year-old stand.

Recreation is the primary use of the area including camping, fishing, hunting, hiking and sightseeing, according to the council.

Next while the Challis Forest is losing nearly $100,000 on a single timber sale in the valley, it doesn't have a single timber register book at any of the valley's railroads, the council said in a prepared statement.

The trees were bought by Mount McCaleb Industries Inc. of Mackay for $912,088, and it would bring in about $100,000.

Community rallies to help former rodeo rider adjust after accident

By Suzanne Huxhold
Times-News correspondent

BLISS — Former rodeo bull rider Chris Pruett showed off his new computerized wheelchair by zooming up a ramp built by his rodeo club that leads into his Bliss home.

His mother looked on and laughed. "He was the video king before this happened," Sherry Pruett said. "He got into his new chair and didn't have any trouble. It's just like a video game to him."

The 17-year-old Bliss High School student arrived home Friday after a three-month stay at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

Pruett was hospitalized June 11 following a car accident near Bellevue that left him paralyzed from the chest down.

The new ramp was paid for by the 5th District Rodeo Club and was built by Larry and Dale Brown. The club also installed a new, wider door into the house for wheelchair access.

Pruett's parents, Jimmie and Sherry Pruett, said the new ramp has small community has done to show its concern for Chris.

"The support we've had has been great," Jimmie Pruett said. "Just about all the schools and clubs around each sent individual flowers to the hospital."

Ho said his sister had come from Spokane after the accident, and had traveled at the small-town concern.

"She told us if this happened in Spokane, you'd be lucky if you got 10 calls," Pruett said. "We get 10 calls an hour every day."

The community rallied around the family immediately after the accident.

Chris Miller, a family friend, put notices at local businesses asking for donations for the Pruett's travel expenses to and from Boise. The children who attended the Vacation Bible School at the Bliss Community Church collected their pennies and presented the Pruett's with $260 for gas and "pizza money."

And the kids Chris Pruett has grown up with, his own car, will hold an auction and benefit dance at the park at 7 p.m. Sept. 22.

During the 4-11 stock sale at the Gooding County Fair, the pig Chris Pruett had sold three weeks before the accident brought $1,000, an unusually high amount that was boosted by donations from many.

The Pruett's said that although insurance has paid for the new wheelchair and some of the medical expenses, the community's help has been a lifesaver, both financially and emotionally.

"After the initial shock of the accident was over, it was the support of everyone that made the difference," Sherry Pruett said.

The Pruett's said they are grateful for all the help and support the community has shown, and said Chris is doing well. He will be back in school Monday, and the school has made arrangements for wheelchair access into the building.

Sherry Pruett said she is slowly getting over being worried about her son.

"He's just plain stubborn, that's all there is to it," she said with a laugh. "If he wants to be president, he will be. He'll do anything he wants to do."

SNF seeking comments on oil, gas leases

The Associated Press

OGDEN, Utah — Officials of the Sawtooth National Forest want to hear from the public whether they can wait until 1997 to finish an analysis of potential oil and gas property.

Recent federal legislation granting new authority to the Forest Service for leasing oil and gas resources in national forests also gives the agency authority to analyze the potential of lands for leasing.

The Sawtooth National Forest is proposing to schedule the analysis to run at the same time as an update of the Forest Land and Resource Management Plan. The revision is set to be completed in 1997.

"What we are interested in learning from the public ... is whether they have any concerns with us waiting until 1997 to conduct the analysis of lands for oil and gas leasing," said Jim Simpson, acting minerals staff officer.

Officials have completed the analysis in 1997, oil and gas leasing in the forest would be suspended, he said.

Comments on postponing the analysis until 1997 should be sent to the Sawtooth National Forest at Twin Falls. Officials said to be most helpful, comments should be received by Oct. 1.

The entire Sawtooth National Forest will be covered by the analysis. The only known areas with potential for oil and gas on the forest are Sublet, Black Pine and Raft River.

A 1987 federal law gave the Forest Service new authority and responsibility for leasing oil and gas resources on national forest lands. Prior to that, leasing decisions were made by the Bureau of Land Management based on recommendations from the Forest Service.

John O'Neil, BLM, will continue to issue the actual lease documents for all federal lands, the Forest Service now will make the leasing decisions for national forest lands.

Girl charged after wreck, police chase

The Times-News

BUHL — Police chased a 17-year-old girl by car and on foot Saturday morning before catching up with her and taking her to the hospital.

The incident took place in the town of Buhl, where the girl had been driving recklessly, but it left when the girl driving saw the police officer, Nunez said.

"She was returning to continue fighting with the woman she had fought with earlier, Nunez said. The teen-age girl sped faster than 70 mph down Melvin Valley Road, then failed to make a turn and crashed into a tree, Nunez said. She ran off on foot into a canyon, where she went to a house and told the residents her car had broken down.

They gave the girl a ride into town, where police tracked her as she ran from house to house. They located her in the garage of the fifth house they searched.

She was treated and released from Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, Nunez said.

The Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office, the Idaho State Police and the U.S. Border Patrol assisted Buhl police with this pursuit and accident investigation.

Jerome couple produces golden music

By H.C. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Betsy Hernandez, who grew up in Jerome, has gone on to become an international story and song-writer and singer.

Under contract with Sparrows Records in Nashville, Tenn., Hernandez and her husband, Frank, were part of a team that produced the children's musical "Bullfrogs and Butterflies" that received the gold album award.

Their production of "Music Machine," also a children's musical, won both gold and platinum awards. Other Hernandez musicals for children have earned four nominations for Grammy awards.

Their newest record, scheduled to hit the music and book stores Oct. 11, is entitled "Hide 'em In Your Heart" with Steve Green singing along with the Hernandez children — Evan Marshall Hernandez, 6, and Tiffany Havel Hernandez, 3. Sparrow Records is the publisher.

The Hernandez couple developed and produced the children's cartoon series "Little Clowns of Happy Town" that aired on the ABC network for two seasons. The main purpose of the television series was to teach character development and concept.

Betsy Hernandez, 34, said

Frank and Betsy Hernandez have made a variety of children's music.

She still makes guest appearances with the musical group "Silverwind," a group she sang with for many years. And she sings with Michael Card in the lullaby "Sleep Sound In Jesus," a tape and book being sold around the world.

In a telephone interview, the Hernandez said they write mostly Christian songs and stories for children. They write the lyrics and music and produce tapes, records, videos and publish books.

Betsy Hernandez is the daughter of Don and Charlotte Jacobson of Jerome. She is Happiness, learning linked as school starts Fair sets new record

INDIAN GOVERNOR - In the category of true, but true, I must reiterate after a week of teaching school that learning is happiness.

When you watch learning for a living like I do, it's a fact that cannot be ignored. I have never seen the genuine act of learning fail to bring a smile and a sense of satisfaction to the person involved in its process.

This past week I watched a couple of hundred seventh-graders - fresh from the secure childhood arms of the elementary school playground - learn the basics of junior high, which, in a few words, is how not to get beat up the first week by your ninth-graders.

In the beginning some seventh-graders, I must admit, are more frustrated than happy with their initiation to junior high learning.

"Uh...uh...are you a teacher?" one seventh-grade student asked me last week. "Could you open my locker for me?"

"I'd be happy to. What's your combination?"

"I forgot. But...uh...I got it written down on a slip of paper in my pencil pack."

I watched as this young man rifled through his notebook paper to the back of his zipper keeper. To his zippered pencil pack, which full of fresh No. 2 pencils, he pulled out a slip of paper.

"You look ready to learn," I commented as my friend lifted the zipper keeper up to his mouth and pulled the zipper on his pencil pack with his teeth.

"Yeah, my mom bought me this stuff. She wanted to make sure I had everything I needed for school."

Diana Hooley Country neighbors

I smiled to myself. He had plenty of pencils for pencil fights and he had enough paper to spit-wad the face of every clock in the building. He had everything he needed.

"Nah, I just about got it. It's 'um 28 to the right. No, no that's 23. I couldn't write down my combination very good because I had to write it standing up."

"Do you want me to hold your zipper for you while you unfold your combination paper?"

"Nah, I just about got it. It's 'um 28 to the right. No, no that's 23. I couldn't write down my combination very good because I had to write it standing up."

"Yeah, I reassured him. "It's hard to do two things at once." (Specially when you're 12 and the last thing you'd ever do is set your brand new Dick Tracy Trapper Keeper on the floor - let 'em rip your heart-out first - so you could have both hands free to write your locker combination.)

"After the 23 you go left to the left, then 4 to the right again. Would you hurry please? I think I'm going to be late to my next class and I don't even know where Room 114 is."

"Some kid told me to go down that way, but I ended up at the exit doors. What do they do to you if you're late?"

"For one evil minute, I almost said, 'They home in Indian Cove.'"

(meaning me) will scream at you and throw your Dick Tracy Trapper Keeper on the linoleum and stomp on it, and that is just for starters."

I resisted and said instead, "Don't worry about it. Today is your first day. There's a lot of things you don't know about this school. We're all here to help you learn. Nobody's going to count you out."

He seemed content enough with my response until I opened his locker and shut it back again.

"What'd you do that for?" He seemed hurt.

"Because I know you won't be counted late today so today is the day you need to learn how to open your own locker."

Opening his locker himself was a halting, stumbling, mumbling, sort of experience for this poor fellow wearing a Bart Simpson T-shirt. I don't think he fully realized that I was determined, at least where his locker was concerned, not to let him become an underachiever.

The first time he rolled the dial twice - 23. Then he forgot to go around the dial twice when he went left.

To tell the truth, I think he had trouble with his directions, which isn't at all unusual and didn't bother me as long as he was willing to try.

Finally, on attempt No. 3, my seventh-grader opened his locker. He wasn't just grinning from ear to ear. His grin, I'd say, was around his head and 360 degrees.

As I said, learning is happiness.

Schlapa

Closing day on Saturday drew 23,839. Fair Manager Cindy Demonec said this year's fair attracted 7,212 more people than last year and broke the 1988 all-time high attendance record by 2,350.

The fair also turned out to be a success for Andrea Schlapa, of Nampa, who was crowned Miss Rodeo Idaho 1991 Saturday night. Schlapa, who also reigns as the Hailey Days of the Old West Queen, is a professional model and plans to graduate with a bachelor's degree in rodeo.

public relations. She was named second runner-up and Ann Marie Weaks, of Malad, won Miss Congeniality.

Weeks suffered a broken collarbone Thursday during the horse-riding competition and couldn't ride Friday.

"I've taken hundred of falls, but nothing like that," she said.

But, overall, Demonec said this year's fair had few catastrophes.

"It's too soon to predict whether record attendance will also mean high ticket profits, but we lost less money on the rodeo."

Elmore County citizens, officers capture escapees

The Times-News

MOUNTAIN HOME - Elmore County law enforcement officers and a cadre of citizens hunted 45 minutes Sunday before capturing two men who had escaped from the county jail.

Sheriff Rick Layher said Kenny Larkback, 26, and Jason Sessions, 22, overpowered a jailer at approximately 11:30 a.m. when they were being moved to an exercise area.

The jailer was hit on the face, thrown against a wall and hit on the head, the sheriff said.

"Apparently they had planned this," Layher said. "They had a change of clothes hidden."

Police and about 40 citizens scored a four-block residential area in Mountain Home before they found the two escapees hidden in an empty house at approximately 12:45 p.m.

"The citizens were instrumental in their capture," Layher said.

Larkback was being held on charges involving burglary and auto theft and Sessions was being held on charges involving stolen credit cards, the sheriff said.

State seeking bids for road work near Ketchum

The Times-News

KETCHUM - Bids are being sought for a road project north of Ketchum, according to the Idaho Transportation Department.

The work consists of widening and resurfacing 7.4 miles of Idaho 75.

The project also calls for the realignment of a section of the roadway, installation of a traffic signal at the intersection of Saddle Road, and the construction of a training channel and ponds on the Big Wood River north of Ketchum.

The proposed competition time is on or before Nov. 15, 1991.

The estimated cost of the project is $25.5 million to $35.5 million. All bids will be opened Sept. 25.

774,000 board feet of various grades of timber for an average of $12.81 per thousand board feet.

Figures supplied by the Boulder-White Clouds Council indicate the Forest Service's cost would be about $14 per thousand board feet for a total of $10,620 for the 92 acres or about $110 per acre.

"Dauber said he thought the $130 figure was a little high. Estimates supplied by the Wilderness Society, however, put the cost at $219 per thousand board feet for a total of $169,506, or about $1,842 per acre."

With the money allotted for reforestation, $384 would go to the federal treasury.

Figures for a total loss range from $24,507 to $169,221.

"The proposed cut is a series of selective cuts - the cost is higher for selective cuts."

"It's expected to lay out a clear-cut."

Dauber said.

One of the reasons cited by the Forest Service for the timber sale was to control a dwarf mistletoe infestation. But clear cutting is not the only solution to controlling the small parasitic plant.

An alternative method is fire. It normally costs the Forest Service about $60 per acre to burn an area - under ideal conditions.

The North Fork sale, however, is part of a continuous stand, and a burn would run the risk of turning into a wildfire, Dauber said.

"It's not the alternative we'd like to use," he said. The cost to fight a wildfire in that area could run as high as $1,000 per acre.

Governors set challenging education system goals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Terrence Branstad of Iowa was asked whether President Bush and the nation's governors had set education goals that were impossible to achieve. His response: a chuckle.

Look, Branstad said, "What did you want us to say — that U.S. students will be third, fourth or fifth in the world in mathematics and science achievement by the year 2000?"

The exchange at a recent CBS News education conference reflects a growing concern that the goals approved in January after an election summit between the president and governors may be a bit too lofty.

The goals say that beginning in the year 2000:

- All children will start school ready to learn.
- High school graduations will increase to at least 90 percent.
- Students will be first in the world in math and science.
- Every adult American will be literate.
- The goals are set against a backdrop of dismal statistics.
- The Children's Defense Fund notes that every eight seconds a student drops out, every 67 seconds a teenager has a baby, every 7 minutes a child is arrested for drugs.

Tom Saunders answers a question on the rumor hotline.

Rumor control center separates fact, fancy

BALTIMORE (AP) — Sorry, sir, there are no plans for an underwater shopping mall in the Inner Harbor. No, ma'am, a highway is not coming through your living room. And no, pull tabs from soda cans and empty cigarette packs do not pay for kidney dialysis.

For 22 years, operators at the city's rumor control center have been handing out facts and dispelling rumors for confused or curious citizens.

"The rumor was it would be an underwater mall and they would have a restaurant and you could pick out your dinner from behind the glass," said Tom Saunders, who's worked for the hot line for 16 years. "We had contractors calling up wanting to build it."

Rumor control hot lines were opened in several major cities in the 1960s to ease tension in the wake of race riots. Although the violence of that era has passed, Baltimore's hot line still has a place, and some cities that dropped theirs are reviving the idea, Saunders said.

Philadelphia recently opened a rumor-control hot line after a black man was shot to death by a police officer.

Besides handling the frivolous rumors, Baltimore officials say, the hot line keeps the public informed about topics that could affect health or safety and helps the city to keep in touch with its residents.

"We don't try to appease people. We give them the facts from a credible source," said Lillian Jones, head of the community division of the city's community relations commission, which operates the hot line.

Calls from people expressing a desire to "heat" the city helped lead to the scheduled meeting of community leaders in November. The calls followed several apparently racially motivated incidents this summer.

Each day one of the six workers in Baltimore's community relations office takes a turn staffing the hot line.

Cooper Union tops list of U.S. college 'best buys'

NEW YORK (AP) — Cooper Union, which charges its 1,000 students just $300 a year, leads a new list of best college buys in a Money Magazine guide.

Seven of the top 10 schools that offer "the best education for the buck" are in New York, Florida or New Jersey, according to the annual "The Money Guide to the Best Colleges in America," going on sale at newsstands Monday.

The top three values — Cooper Union, California Institute of Technology and Rice University — are all private. The remaining seven are public universities.

"We're thrilled and delighted and honored," Cooper Union president Jay Iselin said in an interview.

The 108-page publication, produced in collaboration with Peterson's Guides, lists 100 public and 100 private schools around the country that emerged as best values in a computer analysis that weighed tuition charges against 17 measures of academic performance.

Public universities were judged on the basis of out-of-state tuition, and private schools were judged at their full price exclusive of any scholarships or financial aid.

Top on the list is Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art, a highly selective private college located in New York City. Students pay only a $200 activities fee.

The rest of the guide's top 10 are, in order:

- California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, Calif., ranked high despite its $13,495 price tag. Faculty and students have won 21 Nobel Prizes.
- Rice University, Houston, uses its $1 billion endowment to keep tuition at a low $7,160 while maintaining an academic reputation rivaling Ivy League schools.
- The New College of the University of South Florida, Sarasota, combines the small feel of a private school with a public college price. $5,488 for out-of-staters, $1,515 for Floridians.
- State University of New York at Geneseo, a strong liberal arts branch of the six-campus SUNY system, charges out-of-staters $4,925, $1,575 for New Yorkers.
- State University of New York at Binghamton, a highly competitive public Ivy, costs $4,914 for out-of-state students, $1,564 for in-staters.
- Trenton State College, Trenton, N.J., offers a strong curriculum for liberal arts students, at a cost of $3,795 for out-of-staters, $2,720 for New Jersey students.
- State University of New York at Albany, with strong programs in administration, criminal justice and health, costs $4,835 for out-of-state students, $1,485 for New Yorkers.
- University of Virginia, Charlottesville, with particularly excellent English and economics departments, charges Virginians 2,966 and out-of-staters $8,136.
- University of Florida, Gainesville, boasts 114 majors in 52 disciplines, charges $4,630 for out-of-state students, $1,320 for Florida residents.

Liberia's Doe allegedly wounded, captured

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — A rebel faction shot President Samuel Doe in the leg and captured him Sunday during a battle in the capital's port, the British Broadcasting Corp. reported.

More than 60 people, including dozens of Doe's bodyguards, were killed in the fighting between the Doe loyalists and rebels led by Prince Johnson, the BBC World Service reported. It said the battle took place outside the headquarters of a West African task force in Monrovia.

Johnson called the BBC and declared himself president of Liberia until an interim government can be installed. Rival rebel leader Charles Taylor of the National Patriotic Front has also claimed the presidency in the past.

The BBC said Johnson pledged to put Doe on trial. Earlier, Doe and Johnson had called an informal cease-fire between their forces.

Rebels in the 8-month-old civil war have accused Doe of nepotism, stealing millions of dollars of state money, they also hold him responsible for the deaths of thousands of civilians killed during the civil war.

Liberia's civil war began Dec. 24, when Johnson helped lead rebels loyal to Taylor in an invasion from Ivory Coast. In March, Johnson broke away to form his own faction. Doe had been building up in his fortified mansion in Monrovia.

Sunday's capture of Doe came after Taylor's rebels launched their own attack against some of the 3,000 soldiers in the West African force at the port Saturday.

The task force had called for relief agencies to return to Monrovia and promised to assure their safety. U.S. Marine helicopters landed Saturday, U.S. Marine helicopter crews from the U.S. Agency for International Development.

10 die in S. Africa; police fire disperses crowds

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police opened fire Sunday to disperse crowds of blacks in Soweto angered by an overnight strike on a squatter camp that killed at least 10 people.

At least three people were wounded during Sunday's confrontations, according to a witness.

A total of 22 people had died in black township fighting since Saturday, reports said. Hundreds have died since the violence in black townships near Johannesburg began less than one month ago.

Residents accused Zulu supporters of the conservative Inkatha movement of launching the nighttime attack with police help. They also said masked white cops took part in the assault on Soweto's Tladi squatter camp.

The head of the South African Council of Churches, the Rev. Frank Chikane, visited the camp and said he had seen enough to know that "police are involved in killing us."

Police fought running battles with residents hurling rocks and firebombs throughout the morning near the camp in the sprawling township southwest of Johannesburg.

At least three blacks were wounded when police opened fire with birdshot and live ammunition, a witness said. Police had fired tear gas and rubber bullets at the residents.

The Independent South African Press Association reported a crowd of about 100 people attacked the camp on Saturday night, resulting in occupants and smashing windows.

A total of 26 people were killed in Soweto over the weekend, police said Sunday. Residents and witnesses said 13 died at the Tladi squatter camp, but police could not confirm that figure.

Six other deaths were reported Sunday in other Johannesburg-area townships, including four men found stabbed in a van at a squatter camp near Vosloorus, south of the city.

Fighting between Zulu Inkatha backers and Xhosa and other blacks loyal to the African National Congress has killed nearly 600 people in black townships near Johannesburg since Aug. 12.

Black leaders and others have accused police of fueling the violence by siding with the Inkatha fighters. Police and government officials

A black resident shot by S. African police is taken to a hospital. He denied the charge, saying some police Co. that witnesses would be interviewed.

The leftist ANC and more conservative Inkatha blame each other for the factional fighting. But groups oppose apartheid but differ over tactics and plans for a future South Africa.

PLO guerrillas battle Abu Nidal's men

SIDON, Lebanon — PLO forces claimed victory Sunday in their battle for control of refugee camps in south Lebanon after storming fortified tunnels holding the remnants of troops loyal to terrorist leader Abu Nidal.

Police report at least 75 people killed and more than 200 wounded during the Palestine Liberation Organization's three-day offensive to oust Abu Nidal guerrillas from Sidon and nearby refugee camps.

We have established undisputed control over all the refugee camps in Sidon and the rest of south Lebanon, Youssef Awad, a senior aide to PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, said in the Eln el-Hilweh shanty town, site of the 12-hour battle in the tunnels.

Cambodian factions consider U.N. plan

JAKARTA, Indonesia — The four warring factions in Cambodia appear ready to accept a U.N. peace plan to end their 17-year-old war, Indonesian Foreign Minister Ali Alatas said Sunday.

"We are encouraged by the fact that the four factions have indicated they can accept the document as the basis for settling the Cambodian conflict," the foreign minister said after the opening session of peace talks in the Indonesian capital.

Alatas said "the circumstances for achieving a comprehensive settlement are unlikely ever again to be as favorable as they are now."

Japanese ag secretary blasts U.S. rice

TOKYO (AP) — Laboratory tests show American rice provided by Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter is inferior to Japanese rice, Japan's agriculture minister was quoted as saying Sunday.

Yeutter gave several bags of American rice to Japanese Cabinet members during a visit last month in which he called for Japan's rice market to be opened.

"I thought if I ate all the rice myself it would be a waste, so I had some tested," Kyodo News Service quoted the minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries, Tomio Yamamoto, as telling a meeting of members of the governing Liberal Democratic Party.

"I can't tell you the results, but we found that Japanese rice is far superior," it quoted him as telling the meeting in Ito, southwest of Tokyo.

Mother Teresa says re-election God's plan

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Mother Teresa, whose wish to retire was rejected by nuns from around the world, said Sunday her re-election as head of her charity was re-election of God's own plans.

The balloting was to have been a vote to choose a successor to the frail, 80-year-old nun who is known as the "saint of the gutters" for her work with the destitute and the poor.

"It was expecting to be free, but God has his own plans," Mother Teresa said when she met reporters for the first time after Saturday's election.

The Nobel Peace Prize laureate withdrew her decision to step down as superior general of the Missionaries of Charity after ballots were cast by 103 delegates summoned from missions around the globe.

Calcutta's Vicar General Monsignor Francis Gomes, who presided over the secret balloting, said Mother Teresa had little choice but to accept the unanimous vote.

Mother Teresa said she had been firm on stepping down — until the balloting forced her to change her decision. "These things cannot be decided beforehand," she said.

In March, Pope John Paul II said he was bowing to Mother Teresa's wish to retire from the top post of the order she founded.

Study: Plant extract fights AIDS virus

NEW YORK (UPI) — An extract from pokeweed plants can hamper the production of the AIDS virus within infected cells, suggesting a possible new approach to treating infected people, researchers say.

In test-tube experiments, the extract worked in ways that did not disturb key functions in uninfected cells, researchers said.

The work was reported in the British journal Nature by scientists from Oncogen in Seattle, the Veterans Administration Medical Center in San Diego and the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

Pokeweed contains clusters of purple, white flowers and reddish-purple berries. It grows in North America, and its roots and berry seeds are poisonous.

Researchers purified a substance called pokeweed antiviral protein from the leaves of the plant. They mixed it with proteins called monoclonal antibodies, which targeted the close to cells infected by the virus that cause acquired immune deficiency syndrome. This mixture, called a conjugate, strongly inhibited the production of the AIDS virus in blood cells.

"As the population gets older, a new hierarchy of orientation of aging is emerging, which proposes that there are three 'ages' of man (rather than two), each with its own special focus, challenge, and opportunity. In the first age (birth to 25), the primary tasks of life center around biological development, learning, and survival.

In the second age (26 to 40), the concerns of adult life focus on issues pertaining to the formation of family, parenting, and productive work.

The third age (60 plus), with children raised and many of life's basic adult tasks under control or accomplished, offers a senior the possibility of expanding his intellect, memory, imagination, emotional maturity, and personal sense of spiritual acuity.

This age is also a period for giving back to society the lessons, resources, and experienced wisdom learned and articulated over a lifetime.

Broccoli's nutrition leaves if early on when cooked

Not to worry, if you like your broccoli a bit on the mushy side.

Although raw broccoli is best for nutritional content, if you like it cooked, it's immaterial whether you cook it for 4 or 40 minutes.

It's also immaterial whether you cook it in a jar of water or a little water. Regardless of how it's prepared, cooked broccoli contains about half the Vitamin C of fresh raw broccoli.

Cross-country skiing before the snow

Whether you're a cross-country skier or not, you use essentially the same muscles by mimicking the skier's movements.

Cross-country skiing is a full-body exercise that uses every major muscle group. The hamstrings, quadriceps (front of the thigh), abdominals, trapezius (upper back) and deltoid (shoulder) muscles are all put into action when participating in this rigorous sport.

In addition to conditioning these major muscles, cross-country skiing also provides a great cardiovascular workout.

The following exercise works the quadriceps muscles used in cross-country skiing. Additionally, so the upper torso gets a workout too.

If the movements are done continuously for a minimum of 20

Judi Sheppard Missett mimics the popular winter sport.

Use the left leg while the right arm goes overhead. Alternate sides for approximately 30 repetitions. Repeat as desired.

Don't skip rope-jumping to stay in shape

By Dawn Welch
Los Angeles Times

What goes around, comes around — like jumping rope, literally. More, and more adults are returning to the sport of their childhood.

States like Virginia and Colorado reportedly own 1982 Wimbledon and U.S. Open trophies in part to a diligent rope-jumping regimen. Pro football player Herschel Walker maintains his agility and stamina by skipping rope. It also keeps the United States Marine Corps in fighting form. And, Helinda Carlisle, the once-pudgy lead singer of the Go-Go's, maintains her slim physique by jumping rope while on tour.

Rope jumping's not just for the fit and famous, though: It is fast gaining popularity as a healthy, readily available fitness option. Research and experience have proved that jumping rope regularly can significantly contribute to building a stronger, fitter body.

Picking up on the trend, IDEA: The Association for Fitness Professionals has conducted rope jumping workshops at recent conventions. And hundreds of new ropes are being shipped to Humbleville, Tex., and Greeley, Colo., to fine-tune skipping skills at the International Rope Skipping Organization's annual camps.

Reports from rope makers support this jump-in-interest. One manufacturer's experts say sales have increased 25 percent over each of the past five years.

Why give rope jumping a whirl? Besides the activity's pick-up-and-go convenience — you can do it almost anywhere, and a rope certainly packs into a suitcase more easily than a viable fitness option. Research and experience have proved that jumping rope regularly can significantly contribute to building a stronger, fitter body.

ing time gradually, starting with five minutes a day, four or five times a week, and alternating with non-jumping activities.

Even if you work out regularly, limit the jumping portion of your workout to a total of five to six minutes. As you gain stamina — and skill, you'll be able to increase the time you spend jumping.

Before you attempt this routine, it's important to have the proper equipment and environment, beginning with:

The right rope: Jump ropes are available in sundry colors and materials: leather, plastic (also known as licorice), beaded, cotton, leather and beaded ropes generally spin most smoothly, while licorice and cotton ones tend to tangle. Avoid weight ropes, which stress upper-body muscles and tend to expect to shatter between $2 and $15.

Your rope should be just the right length, or posture and technique will suffer. To clear a too-short rope, you have to slouch or jump too high. Long ropes force you to rotate your shoulders rather than your wrists and forearms.

To find the best "fit," place one foot on the center of the rope and pull up the handles. They should just reach your armpits.

Smart shoes: Because you'll be landing on the balls of your feet, and eventually doing side-to-side moves, you'll need footwear with ample forefoot cushioning and side support. Cross-training and aerobic dance shoes are ideal.

A safe surface: Best is a flat, even surface that has a little give, such as an asphalt driveway, a suspended wood floor (like those in many exercise studios), or a lightly woven carpet.

Avoid concrete and tile floors, which will not absorb the impact of jumping. Keep off the grass when jumping outside; the rope can catch and trip you up, or you may slip. Give your self plenty of space. An area that's 9-feet by 9-feet, with a 9-foot ceiling, is ample.

Upbeat music: A good time can help to establish a steady rhythm. Choose songs with 120 to 140 beats per minute. Try rock, jazz, reggae, rap, polka, big band — whatever makes you want to move, says Ken Solis.

Flawless technique: The secret to mastering basic jumping is all in the wrists: Rotate them and your forearm, not your shoulders, to turn the rope.

While jumping, stand tall, keep your elbows in and jump only high enough to clear the rope, about one inch. Practice the two basic jumping styles — keeping feet together, as well as hopping from one foot to the other to clear the rope.

FITNESS ON A ROPE
The American College of Sports Medicine guidelines say that for any sport to improve heart and lung health, it must be performed three to five times per week for 20 minutes at an intensity that will get the heart rate (beats per minute) into training range. (To determine your range, subtract your age from 220, and multiply the result by 0.6 and 0.9 for the parameters.) The calorie-burn-off-of-rope-jumping is significant, too. A typical 130-pound jumper burns about 325-350 calories every half hour.

There are many facets to rope jumping's fitness value. The activity calls into play a number of the body's major muscle groups, including the thighs, buttocks and calves, and a lesser degree shoulders and forearms.

Rope jumping won't bulk up these muscles as, say, weight training would, but the work they have to do, turning the rope and lifting the body's weight to jump over it, will strengthen and tone them.

LEARNING THE ROPES
Adults bent on slipping into the benefits of skipping rope often find it frustrating — even if they did it as kids.

They don't realize jumping rope is a skilled activity similar to tennis, or swimming in that it takes instruction and practice. So they pick up a rope for the first time in years, feel klutzy and uncoordinated, tire easily and finally give up after a few attempts at jumping, says Kathleen Hargarten, M.D., assistant professor at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, and one of the sport's leading authorities.

Part of the difficulty stems from being unable to skip up to speed. In order to make fitness gains, pace is important. From an energy standpoint, jumping rope at an efficient clip (about 130 revolutions per minute) is similar to running at 6

Recalling mother's life best honors her after death

DEAR ABBY: I have never written to you before, but after reading the letter from "Sorrow in San Francisco," I cannot keep silent. "Sorrow" wrote of the sobbing presence of visiting the grave of a friend who died 10 years ago, at the age of 21. Her family was distraught at the funeral and buried her in a wedding gown because she never had a real wedding. Apparently time had dimmed their grief, but her grave was neglected, without a single flower to brighten it. Please continue to remind readers to show their love to others while they live, but also remember them in death.

Abby, for many years, I felt compelled to visit my mother's grave, even though it left me overcome with grief to the point of becoming hysterical. With the help of a fine therapist, I was able to resolve the issue.

Now, I do not visit my mother's grave as often as I used to. I have forgiven her, as she was the last time I saw her alive - or as she was during my childhood - and read of that love to me. In remembering her to her grave is to remember her gone, and she will never be gone from my heart.

Dear Abby

Why put myself through the torment of visiting where she is not? Surely not for her. She would be the last person to want me to suffer such pain.

Sign me ... REMEMBER THEM ALIVE

DEAR REMEMBER: I thank you for putting into words what many feel. We don't all handle grief in the same way, so to those who find peace and comfort at the gravesite of a loved one, I say, "Go, and may God be with you, but don't sit in judgment of those who find gravesites too painful to bear."

I published this poem several years ago. I am glad that you do not stand at my grave and weep.

I am not there; I do not sleep. I am a thousand winds that blow. I am the diamond glints on snow. I am the sunlight on ripened grain. I am the gentle autumn rain. When you awaken in the morning's hush, I am the swift uplifting rush. I am the quick birds in circling flight. I am the soft star that shines at night. Do not stand at my grave and cry. I am not there; I did not die. (Author Unknown)

DEAR ABBY: Apropos the letter about the secretary who was looking for "Europe" under "U" in the dictionary:

Back in the '50s, we had a young secretary right out of high school. One day the boss asked her to call Captain Smith at such and such a number in Washington, D.C.

She dialed the number and asked to speak with Mister Captain Smith!

While discussing this later, one of my co-workers mentioned another secretary who typed "Bum" into a typewriter. These figures were detailed with a fly drool. (Back in those days, we used slide rules.)

Another person recalled the time he received a telephone call from a person inquiring why the first person had sent him an envelope containing only three pieces of carbon paper.

It seems that the first person had dictated a letter to the secretary and asked her to send three carbons to the second person.

Another time, the boss had to make a quick trip to Washington, D.C. So she asked his new secretary to get him an airplane ticket.

When he examined the ticket he found that the destination was "San Francisco." Upon questioning the secretary, he was told, "You told me to get a ticket to Washington; but you didn't say where in the state, so I picked a city for you!"

Believe it or not, Abby, these are all true stories.

RAYMOND P. FLSNER
LITTLETON, COLO.

DEAR RAYMOND: I believe you. Nobody could make up anything that good.

What teenagers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Pumping iron risky for some

CHICAGO - The American Academy of Pediatrics says that well-supervised strength training programs for young athletes can increase strength without significant injury. But the Academy cautions that children and adolescents should avoid weight lifting, power lifting and body building until they are physically mature.

The Academy's Committee on Sports Medicine and Fitness says physical maturity is about 15 years old in both sexes, although this will vary with individual development.

The Academy says that strength training programs for children and adolescent athletes should be permitted only if conducted by well-trained adults. The AAP notes that because there is very little existing information available on the safety of different ages, it is difficult to determine when young athletes should be allowed to lift maximal amounts of weight. (This is the amount of weight that can be lifted one time.)

The U.S. Weight and Powerlifting Federation recommends age 14. Other experts suggest age 16.

Research has shown that short-term strength training programs can increase strength without significant injury if younger athletes are trained and supervised by knowledgeable adults.

However, the AAP cautions that these studies did not evaluate the relationship between improved strength, injury prevention or enhanced athletic performance, and no data exist of defining injury risks in less organized programs.

Study links fat kids, high blood pressure

The Washington Post

Researchers have for years believed that fat, unfit adults are more likely to have high blood pressure. A measure of heart disease risk, but now it appears that children as young as 5 or 6, who are fat and unfit also may be at risk.

According to a new study of inner-city 5- and 6-year-olds, the fatter and less aerobically fit a young child is, the more likely he or she is to have high blood pressure.

The study, reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association, found that children's blood pressure increased as their fitness decreased. Children who were fat and who had to work harder to keep up a certain pace on a treadmill were more likely to have high blood pressure.

"Cardiovascular disease is thought of as an adult problem," said Bernard Gutin, the report's lead author. "What we're seeing now is even as young as 5 or 6, one of the key factors for heart disease is related to how fit or fat they are."

Gutin said his study is the first to find an association between fitness and high blood pressure in children as young as 5. Previous studies had found such an association in older children, he said.

One rationale for promoting fitness among children has been that people are more likely to practice healthy habits as adults if they learn them early. But the study's authors said that while that may be true, obesity and lack of exercise may also have an impact that begins in childhood.

The findings say nothing about whether the children with the high blood pressure are more likely to develop heart disease in the future. But earlier studies that followed young children for 10 to 15 years found that those with higher blood pressure who later died in accidents were more likely to show lesions in their blood vessels supplying their hearts than were children who had had lower blood pressure and later died in accidents. The results indicated that high blood pressure may cause heart disease in the 'Cardiovascular disease is thought of as an adult problem. What we're seeing now is even as young as 5 or 6, one of the key factors for heart disease is related to how fit or fat they are.'

— Bernard Gutin, researcher

young as well as in the old, Gutin said.

"There is an implication (from those studies) that high blood pressure even at age 5 or 6 may be causing damage to the arteries," Gutin said.

The study looked at 216 children in New York, most of whom were Hispanic. Researchers judged fitness by measuring how hard the children had to work on a treadmill and determined fitness by using calipers to measure skin folds and by calculating their body mass index, which is a measure of weight proportionate to height.

They then performed a statistical analysis that indicated that as fitness decreased, blood pressure increased.

Gutin and his colleagues studied inner-city children because he said they were more likely to be less physically active and overweight.

"The problem of fitness in children and probably the increased physical activity is most evident in inner-city populations," he said. "The solution for this problem is to figure out a way to make children more physically active so they can still maintain a healthy amount of food but not get fat."

Michael J. Horan, a hypertension specialist at the National Heart Lung and Blood Institute, said the findings did not surprise him. "It's concordant with what we know about adults," he said.

Varicose veins need not stop you

By Dr. Katherine Bianchette
Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Health and fitness to many means feeling good and looking healthy. Varicose veins unfortunately, can have an impact on the recreational and professional athlete.

Even though varicose veins are rarely dangerous, it is important to understand how these develop and what type of activities could contribute to their development. Varicose veins can be painful, but if the athlete follows certain measures he or she does not need to make major changes in their exercise program.

Varicose veins are distended, tortuous veins with valves that are not functioning properly to keep the blood flowing back to the heart. Pregnancy, excessive weight or height, and prolonged weight-bearing are just a few factors that can accelerate the development of varicose veins by increasing venous pressures in the legs. Elevated venous pressures in the legs contribute to distention of the veins leading to incompetent or malfunctioning valves.

There may be a strong family history of varicose veins; and these are referred to as primary varicose veins resulting from hereditary incompetent valves. Also, varicose veins can develop from obstruction secondary to deep vein thrombosis (clots), leading to damage of the valves. In this situation, chronic venous insufficiency can result.

How can an athlete with either primary or secondary varicose veins stay active? An athlete doesn't usually have to make drastic lifestyle changes. Some with extensive varicose veins have no discomfort. Others may have aching pain or easy fatigability of the calf muscles with swelling after exercising.

Jogging on hard surfaces is definitely not recommended. The constant pounding will add to the extra pressure to the veins in the legs. Much prefer swimming because of the low impact and low pressure buildup in the legs.

Some things to remember: Elevate your legs, if possible, with prolonged sitting, and also avoid prolonged standing to prevent pooling in your legs.

Jogging on hard surfaces increases the risk for developing varicose veins more than swimming, cycling or rowing.

Recreational athletes with a strong family history of varicose veins and a tendency toward incompetent or inadequate valves should make swimming a major part of their exercise program. With swimming, the legs are generally level with the rest of the body, keeping the pressures at a minimum.

Excessive pressure in the veins can lead to progressive vein enlargement.

Elastic compression stockings are helpful to keep the pressures in the veins at a minimum.

Women should avoid kneeling because of their potential to constrict venous blood flow.
