Jones says goodbye to politics — for a while

By Michelle Cole
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones has little more than two months left before he relinquishes his post as the state's chief legal officer, but he hasn't started drafting his farewell speech. If he does utter a few words of wisdom before packing his legal pads and leaving his office in early January, Jones probably won't feed advanced copies of his speech to the press. In fact, in the eight years Jones has been attorney general, he can remember only one time that he ever jotted down a speech in advance. Sometimes Jones' off-the-cuff approach surprises even him.

You never know exactly what you're going to say and so sometimes you're sweating bullets hoping it's going to come out right," he said. "But usually it comes out pretty good." These days politicians rarely go before reporters or a television camera without prepared remarks and they rarely make a cut-and-dried assessment of an issue. Not Jones. Abortion, right to work, school prayer, the lottery — Idahoans know exactly where Jones stands. "It just makes me sick to see these wishy politicians running around," he said. "My whole concept of politics is that you go and lay out your agenda for people. If they don't like it, they don't have to vote for you." The 48-year-old Republican is either out of style or ahead of his time and it's tough to figure out which it is. As one political pundit described him, Jones seems at first to be too mild-mannered, too milquetoast to be a successful politician. Jones wears rumpled brown suits and dusty shoes. Neither looks good on television.

But consider Jones' anti-incumbent strategy against 1st District Congressman Larry Craig in May's U.S. Senate primary and the rumpled Republican begins to look like a visionary. Even before public outcry turned toward limiting incumbents, Jones advocated limiting congressional terms and committed himself to resigning after 12 years of congressional service. He refused contributions from special-interest groups — few were offered, however, because Jones has long been an enemy of big business. As attorney general, Jones harped on oil companies for price fixing. Last spring he nipped at the heels of the meat-packing in-

Bargainers trade offers on budget

WASHINGTON — Democrats and Republicans narrowed differences Sunday over new taxes on the rich, gasoline levies and Medicare cuts, even as Bush administration officials angrily stalked out of deficit-reduction talks. Congressional leaders of both parties negotiated into the evening over a $250 billion package of tax increases and spending cuts in agriculture, student loans and dozens of other programs. "We've made good progress in many areas," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine. But he conceded, "The remaining areas of disagreement are important ones." Weekend bargaining saw the two sides move toward each other in several areas, including the question of how — and how much — to raise taxes on the rich. The talks proceeded on the eve of what lawmakers hoped would be Congress' last week before adjournment for the year. In the scant time left, House and Senate leaders say they will still like to tackle legislation with civil rights, air-pollution and child care.

Democrats to fight any civil rights veto

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress can't accept President Bush's version of civil rights legislation, said Democrats and civil rights advocates on Sunday as they vowed to try and override Bush's promised veto of the bill. "The Congress has spoken. As I understand it, we can't come to an agreement that would satisfy the real requirements of this bill, so I hope that he will sign it. He still can," said House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

Gephardt, appearing on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," said it was unclear whether Congress could muster the votes to override a veto, but he said an attempt would be made. The Senate passed the bill 62-34; the House 273-154. But both votes were short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto. Bush's plan would mark a setback for civil rights, charged Ralph Neas, executive director for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, said Bush's proposal would allow businesses to bar minorities and women for reasons based on "customer relations or other excuses irrelevant to job performance." The president's so-called alternative is dead on arrival (at the Capitol). It's much worse than any previous White House plan, Neas said. On Saturday, while pledging to veto the measure on Monday, Bush also sent Congress an alternate version. Neas labeled the Bush version a "cynical cover up" aimed at masking the administration's opposition to progress.

Survey: Hate crimes rise in Northwest

The Associated Press

SPOKANE — Hate crimes whose victims are chosen because of their race, religion or sexual orientation have increased by more than 20 percent in the past year in the Northwest, according to a regional survey. A total of 320 hate crimes, ranging from cross burnings and a racially motivated slaying to defacement of property, were recorded from October 1989 to September 1990 in Washington, Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Wyoming, the Northwest Coalition Against Mx/pious Harassment reported at its fourth annual convention. A report on the survey was presented here Saturday at the closing session of the two-day gathering of 250 regional human rights groups and public agencies. The survey showed a 20.7 percent increase in hate crimes over the previous reporting period, when 265 incidents were reported. Oregon, which last year enacted a law requiring police to report hate crimes, had the highest tally — 175 compared to 135 the previous year. Washington state recorded 110 incidents during the 12-month period, including one racially motivated slaying. The count marked a decline from the 113 incidents reported during the previous period, but Washington does not require law-enforcement agencies to report hate crimes. Washington Gov. Booth Gardner told the group Friday that he will propose legisla-

U.S. tailing Iraqi ship

Japanese protest plans to send troops to gulf

The Associated Press

A U.S. destroyer was tracking an Iraqi vessel Sunday in the Persian Gulf after the ship defied warning shots and tried to elude American warships, military officials said. In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. Steve Roy said the incident was one of about a dozen cases in which U.S. ships have fired warning shots to enforce trade sanctions on Iraq. The U.S. destroyer O'Brien fired several shots across the bow of the al-Bahar al-Arabi after the ship did not answer its radio and ignored commands to stop, Roy said.

U.S. military sources in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia said the vessel was headed for Aden, Yemen and was being tracked by Indian and U.S. warships. The United States and a dozen other nations are participating in the naval armada in the gulf region to back the trade sanctions with military might. The sanctions were imposed after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. In Tokyo, meanwhile, more than 20,000 people rallied Sunday to protest a government plan to send soldiers to the gulf, police said. It would be the first deployment of Japanese troops abroad since World War II.

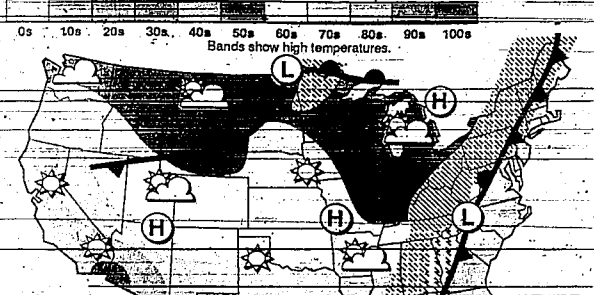

Demonstrators appeal to world peace outside a U.S. base in Tokyo Sunday.

Showers and thunderstorms associated with a slowly moving cold front were over Arkansas, Louisiana, and eastern and south-central sections of Texas during the afternoon, with some locally heavy rain.

Showers and thunderstorms also produced locally heavy rain over northern and central Florida.

Iraq showing evidence that sanctions may be taking hold

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq's decision to ration gasoline and meat to oil-starving Tuesday indicates the worldwide trade embargo on Iraq is finally taking hold where it hurts most: the petroleum industry.

Although Iraq now controls an estimated 10 percent of the world's oil reserves, the rationing reflects the fragility of Iraq's main industry and brings into question how long it can keep its army running.

Even the government admits that the sanctions are beginning to hurt. "Day after day, effects of the economic blockade being imposed on Iraq conspicuously affect it, the formula which was invented by the U.S. administration for building economic, political and psychological pressure on the Iraqi people," said the ruling Baath Party newspaper Al-Thawra said Sunday.

"There is no doubt that this policy has direct impact on the individual and the family," it said.

The report acknowledges government hopes for weeks the embargo would achieve. "We believe it is beginning to have an effect, and that it will have an effect not only on the Iraqi economy, but on this mass of military machines (Iraq) in Kuwait," U.S. Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Thursday.

Kuwaiti economist Jassam Al-Saadoun estimated last week that the loss of oil exports alone costs Iraq $54 million a day.

"Iraq's inability to sell its oil is the cornerstone of the embargo," said Al-Saadoun, head of the Al-Shalbi financial house.

The rationing move constitutes an Iraqi admission of its inability to refine oil on its own. Oil Minister Ali Al-Khatib said that Iraq ordered the rationing to conserve additives that Iraq could no longer obtain because of the ban on imports.

For the moment, food is less of a problem—Iraqi stores and markets are chock-full of fruits, vegetables, fish, canned goods, juice, cooking oil, wheat flour and rice, much of it from abroad. Restaurants do a bustling business.

But milk, sugar, tea, cooking oil, soap and rice have been rationed. Wheat, and farmers have been urged to plant more grain on unused lands.

The two-month-old trade embargo has kept out machinery and spare parts, oil-producing equipment and materials needed for construction work, and farmers have been urged to halt, petroleum production is down 43 percent, and people are being urged to cut back on electricity use. President Saddam Hussein has even appealed to citizens to conserve their clothing.

"My understanding is that the sanctions bite, every day more and more," says Marjatta-Rasi, spokeswoman of the U.N. Security Council's sanctions committee.

The functioning of the society will slow down, because they cannot receive spare parts, even though they have taken everything they could from Kuwait," she said.

"While it is difficult to accurately assess the effects of the sanctions, experts seem to agree that Iraq cannot hold out more than a few months," Kuwaiti economist Al-Saadoun said Iraq likely had consumer and industrial supplies stockpiled to last three months. "This means that six months of the embargo would be sufficient to have the country explode," he said.

The government, which first distributed food ration coupons for two months, will issue them for six months starting in November.

"Psychologically this is important because the Iraqi government is preparing the people for a long embargo," a Baghdad resident said.

The front line of enforcement at the naval ships implementing the two-month-old blockade has intercepted about 2,600 vessels, boarded some 270 and diverted a dozen. Shipping, aviation and military sources say the naval blockade is virtually impermeable.

U.S. Vice-Adm. Henry Mauz, commander of naval elements in Operation Desert Shield, said last week that a small quantity of goods were trickling into Iraq through Jordan. Some goods arrive in Aqaba, Jordan's Red Sea port, and are repackaged and sent on to Iraq, he said.

Gulf

Opponents say the government proposal, introduced in Parliament last Tuesday, violates Japan's constitution, which bars the use of force to settle international disputes.

The bill would allow members of Japan's Self Defense Forces to be used for noncombat roles in keeping operations, such as in the gulf.

Japanese rallied at 17 sites in the capital, including 11,000 at a downtown Tokyo park and 12,000 who joined a march in a human chain around a U.S. air base in Tokyo's suburbs, a police official said.

About 300,000 troops are deployed in Saudi Arabia and the gulf region as part of the multinational force named against Iraq. Saddam Hussein's army is estimated at about 360,000.

A Gulf newspaper, the Sharjah-based Al-Khaleej, said in an unattributed front-page report Sunday that Iraqi troops have been withdrawn from parts of occupied Kuwait over the past two nights.

Sharjah is one of seven sheikhdoms that make up the United Arab Emirates.

The movement was "intensive and quiet" and takes place during the night and until dawn, ceasing altogether at daylight, the paper said.

"Hundreds of tanks and armored vehicles and armored personnel carriers have been sighted heading to the area," it said, specifically to the region of Matruh.

The region is the principal area in the oil, money and land dispute that prompted Iraq's invasion.

Fleeing Kuwaitis said last week that Iraqi troops were fencing off the area.

In Washington, Roy said he had no information on the report, but said "Iraqi forces have been doing repositioning from time to time."

The incident involving the Iraqi ship began Saturday, when the vessel was boarded by American Navy and Coast Guard inspectors. It agreed to turn back to Iraq because its cargo was prohibited under the U.N. sanctions. Navy sources said. It was not immediately clear what the ship was carrying.

But the ship continued to sail southward in the Persian Gulf despite renewed warnings by the O'Brien to stop, the sources said.

On Sunday, about 24 hours after the encounter began, the O'Brien fired a warning shot from its 5-inch deck guns, 50-caliber machine guns and 25-millimeter deck guns in an attempt to halt the 5,200-ton Iraqi ship.

The ship was reported to have ignored the challenges, continuing on.

Late Sunday, the O'Brien was still tracking the Iraqi vessel, according to Cmdr. J.D. Van Sickle, a Navy spokesman in Dhahran.

Van Sickle said the Italian frigate Libeccio was also yamling the ship as it steamed toward Yemen.

Conference participants said the rise in hate crimes reflects increased reporting by victims and "better enforcement." But they also believe there was an increase in the number of crimes committed.

The increase in such crimes was attributed to various factors.

Marvin Stern, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, said that the "influx of white supremacist skinheads in Oregon, the growth of minority groups and a slowing economy that prompts fears of job competition."

"A lot of people are threatened by change," he said.

Hughes also named economic pressure as a factor, as well as drug problems and the breakup of families.

Hate

tion to create a statewide system for monitoring such crimes.

The official told the coalition Saturday that the coalition's third annual survey represents a "gross undercount" of the problems minorities experience in the North.

"I'd assume we're getting, easily, less than half of the incidents occurring," perhaps no more than a quarter, said Bob Hughes of the U.S. Justice Department's Community Relations Service.

"Accurate monitoring of hate crimes is hindered by the reluctance of many victims to report them and the lack of centralized state efforts," said Hughes, who also serves as chairman of the coalition's hate crime monitoring committee.

Asian-Americans seldom report discrimination because of a cultural aversion to complaining, Hughes said. Illegal aliens and homosexuals may be reluctant to call attention to themselves by filing charges.

"All groups take the risk in complaining—that the old fear might come back—that they might come back," he said.

The coalition report found the crime category with the largest year-over increase was violent assault, up 23 percent from the last reporting period. Regionally, 748 assaults were reported, 63 of them in Washington state.

"Other crimes monitored" by the coalition were threats, defacements of property and property damages.

The threats I think are even more real now than they have been in the past," Jones said. "The endangered species—suppliants possess serious threats for Idaho. We may stand to lose a great deal by taking waters we need for development, community growth, industry and agriculture and using them for augmenting fish flows."

A number of politicians view the attorney general's office as a stepping stone to higher office and Jones admits he tried to do a bit of that. But he also liked the job.

"I enjoyed it," Jones said. "I was actually going to run for another term before the Senate thing came up."

him in more newsworthy legal proceedings, but he offered few specifics.

Hughes makes no secret, however, about hoping to double, or maybe even triple his current $48,000-a-year salary. And he predicted he'll seek another public office after stuffing some bills away for his 13-year-old daughter's college education.

Will he return in 1992 to challenge Republican Sen. Steve Symms?

"Oh I don't know. It's hard to tell," Jones said. "I'd like to make some money for a while and I'm sure two years is enough time to do that."

What about the 1994 governor's race?

"It's a possibility," he said. "I've been here all but the last year running for governor. But I don't know as time goes by the idea I live in Washington, D.C. and becoming part of that horrible mess—it becomes less appealing."

But Jones says he has the state attorney general's office with the distinction of serving the longest term in history. He describes it as a tumultuous eight years in which natural resources issues "exploded on us."

"We were dealing with fish issues, water issues, hazardous waste issues, had a number of Superfund cleanup suits," Jones said.

He predicts environmental questions will continue to dominate in the future.

showing this past spring in eastern Idaho, and the Magic Valley where he was born and raised. But he was trounced in the rest of the state giving Craig a solid GOP mandate.

In retrospect, Jones said he is sorry he didn't look at Craig's personal life as reporting duty. "I had various appearances before oil industry and other special-interest groups."

"As a political adversary that would be a nice thing to have in hand," he said.

But Jones has few regrets about taking a sabbatical from politics to return to practice law in Boise and hopes to keep his ties to the Magic Valley by affiliating, at least part-time, with a firm in Twin Falls.

Jones said his interest in anti-trust and consumer issues may embroil

Budget plan assumptions stretch credibility

By Steven Komarow
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Would you believe oil prices falling more than 48 percent next year? How about inflation rates in the 5 percent range by 1992?

Probably not. But those are only two of the predictions the budget writers in Washington have manufactured to tout their $500 billion deficit reduction plan.

All federal budget are, by necessity, built on assumptions of how the economy will perform, because that determines how many dollars will flow into the Treasury, in taxes and flow out for costs such as unemployment claims.

But in trying to get the public to accept a huge package of tax increases and cuts in federal benefits, Congress and the White House have settled on assumptions that, at the least, strain credibility.

By the end of 1993, if the budget is passed, the nation should be enjoying a balanced budget; Treasury bill rates will be 4.4 percent and inflation 3 percent; and the economy will be growing at nearly 4 percent annual growth, they agree.

"From their mouths to God's ears," said Stan Colander, a budget expert at the accounting firm of Price Waterhouse who predicted the $500 billion in deficit reduction "if reality will look more like $20 billion."

Even as Congress was struggling to nail down the final deal over the weekend, government data was emerging that showed the fragility of their house of cards.

On Thursday, the government said the cost of living increase for Social Security and other government entitlements will be 6.4 percent in January.

Last January, the president's budget assumed it would be just 3.9 percent, and the figure is nearly a point higher than most recent estimates. Translated into the budget, government costs increase roughly $2 billion next year and $15 billion over the next five years.

Budget negotiators have yet to find a source for that $15 billion

One of the reasons for the steep consumer price increases is the cost of oil, which has soared to nearly twice the $21.15 average assumed for this year. The budget predicts it will fall back below $25 next year and then below $22 the following two years.

Oil prices affect the government directly, too, with military and civilian agencies operating huge fleets of airplanes, trucks, cars, etc. Continued high oil prices could add billions more to those costs over the next five years.

Economic assumptions aside, some of the budget is just pretend-

The costs of the Persian Gulf operations, $1 billion a month now and many times that if shopping breaks out, doesn't get counted. Nor does the huge savings and loan bailout.

And one of the most questionable assumptions in the budget is that Congress and the administration will abide by its restraints on spending.

"This package will not have the effect on the deficit that the (budget) summitees claim," said Jim Miller, former director of the Office of Management and Budget. "There are just all sorts of loopholes ways Congress can get away with spending."

Clean air bill may have cleared final major hurdle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional negotiators reached a tentative agreement Sunday on the last major section of clean air legislation, requiring controls on acid rain, and set the stage for the bill's likely final approval.

Agreement on cutting about 10 million tons of sulfur dioxide annually by electric utilities came after House and Senate staff members met until nearly dawn to work out a compromise.

The measure will hit the hardest in the industrial Midwest where plants are the dirtiest. It will be the first revision of federal air pollution laws in 13 years, aimed at dramatically curtailing urban smog, toxic chemical releases from factories and businesses, and pollution from coal-burning electric power plants that cause acid rain.

Its cost to the economy has been estimated at between $21 billion and $25 billion a year when all of the new requirements are in place.

Working under a deadline to finish the bill by the weekend, the discussions behind-closed doors turned to a handful of remaining issues later Sunday.

The two most controversial were whether to provide job assistance to people thrown out of work by the tougher pollution controls and whether to impose new pollution requirements to ensure clean air over federal parks such as the Grand Canyon.

Jurors found 2-Live Crew lyrics humorous

Knight-Ridder News Service

From the moment they sat down to a lunch of subs and sodas from Two Guys Pizza, the jurors in the 2-Live Crew case discovered they all thought the same way: Not guilty.

They weren't shocked by the vulgar language. Most of them found the rap band's music funny. And they suspected the whole case was politically motivated.

Several said they might like to buy the banned album that started it all.

The jurors — a retired professor, a one-time musician, a diesel mechanic, a retired cook, a technical administrator and a retired hospital worker — gathered after court was adjourned to talk about their verdict.

They were in a good mood. One of them asked Pedro Dipolo, the prosecutor the best anything all day.

"I think you're so cute," said Susan Van Hemert, 42, an assistant principal at Plantation Middle School. "I think you're a very good attorney."

The jurors became friends over five days in court and five nights sequestered together at Fort Lauderdale's Riverside Hotel.

Once they started deliberations, they found their reactions to the case were much the same.

"We found many of the things very humorous," said juror Beverly Resnick, 65, of Coconut Creek, Fla., a mother of two. "Our feelings were, the musicians in the band were telling the public how they felt inside of themselves and they were doing it with music. We thought it had some art to it."

"It was humorous," said David Gilliland, 26, a mechanic from Davie, Fla., "and I do believe humor is an art form."

This wasn't the conclusion prosecutors and sheriff's detectives were counting on when they secretly tape-recorded a 2 Live Crew concert at Hollywood's Club Futura in June. And they intended to disgust the jurors, not bore them, by playing the garbled tape over and over during the trial.

"It wore us down and got pretty monotonous after a while," said foreman David Garsow, 24, a one-time musician from Miramar, Fla. "After we heard it once, we felt like we didn't need to hear it a third and a fourth time."

With the full weight of the state against a trio of four-mouthed singers in baggy shorts, the jurors suspected the band's arrests were politically motivated.

The juror most disturbed by political aspects of the case was its senior member, 76-year-old Helena Bailor of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., a retired sociology professor.

"Maybe the band felt threatened and they were thumbing their noses back," said Bailor, demonstrating a nose-thumbing gesture to the delight of the crowd of media.

"I got the feeling the sheriff threatened to close them out," she said. "It was like they were saying, 'Get off my back.'" She paused to find the right word, "in negative terms."

The juror said they didn't think the race of the band was an issue in the arrests.

Gertrude McLanore, 61, a retired cook of Fort Lauderdale, the only black on the panel, said, "I like the music and my kids like the music. I don't have the record now, but I might buy it."

She had some advice for Sheriff Nick Navarro. "Check up on crime. Check up on that instead."

Garsow said the jurors also were bothered by conflicting testimony from deputies. They said they felt "something was wrong" with the case.

Garsow cited what he called the "breast incident" in which band member Mark Ross was accused of fondling the breast of a female backup singer.

The deputies provided conflicting locations of Ross on stage, and they disagreed whether the woman's breast popped out of her clothing or Ross pulled it out.

Crime rises in largest U.S. cities

WASHINGTON (AP) — Violent crime soared 10 percent during the first half of the year as police in the nation's largest cities recorded a 20 percent increase in murders, the FBI reported Sunday.

Overall, the number of crimes reported to state and local police departments increased less than 1 percent during the first six months of the year over the same period last year, the FBI said.

But the bureau's Uniform Crime Index reported that violent crimes — murder, aggravated assault, rape and robbery — went up 10 percent during the period that ended June 30.

The jump in violent crime was the largest since 1986, when it increased 12.1 percent over 1985. It was also twice the 5 percent increases posted during the first six months of both 1988 and 1989.

Murders increased 8 percent nationwide but in cities with populations greater than 1 million they were up 20 percent during the period, the FBI said. Murders increased 10 percent in cities with populations between 500,000 and 1 million. By region, the Northeast led the way with an 18 percent jump in murders.

House votes to impose limit on free mail

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted Sunday to limit the amount of mail each member can send constituents, and to force them to disclose how much tax money each spends on postage.

Lawmakers also decided by voice vote to cut a total of $42 million from the $2.2 billion spending bill that pays for the operations of Congress, including elimination of proposed increases in staff salary accounts.

With the popularity of Congress at a new low and elections just 16 days away, the gestures were seen as an effort to shoulder a share of the budget-cutting responsibility.

Their hypersensitivity about spending money on themselves even led members to spend a good part of the day debating whether to spend $500,000 on modular furniture and $350,000 to renovate the House beauty shop. The furniture was fixed, the beauty shop left in place.

Members could boost that by up to $25,000 by transferring money from their office accounts, and each would have to report quarterly on how much had been spent.

Total mailing costs would be limited to $59 million in the year that began Oct. 1.

The move was designed to prevent abuses by some members, who spend upwards of $400,000 a year on mail, including the ubiquitous newsletters town meeting notices designed primarily to get a lawmaker's name and picture into thousands of homes.

Iowa heads to mothballs with heroic, tragic past

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Enemy planes and artillery could not sink the battleship USS Iowa, but the fighting and the damage left by a tragic explosion are sending the proud ship back into mothballs.

The decommissioning Friday will be the third for the Iowa since it sailed into combat in World War II, and crew members are looking on the event with sadness, says the ship's commander.

"This crew today would like nothing more than someone to say, 'That's it. Reverse course. You are to make preparations to sail for the Persian Gulf,'" said Cmdr. John P. Morse.

In an effort to cut costs in face of a rising budget deficit, the Navy has decided the Iowa is expendable. The USS New Jersey also is being mothballed, leaving only two battleships in active service, the Missouri and the Wisconsin.

In addition to the cost of operating a battleship, more than $35 million a year, the Iowa has another scar: of the April 19, 1989, explosion in one of its massive gun turrets that killed 47 sailors.

The Navy concluded the explosion probably was sabotage by a gunner's mate who died in the explosion, but a congressional inquiry found the report to be back.

47 sailors died a year ago on the Iowa

Earlier this year, the Navy reopened its investigation.

The explosion did not seriously damage the ship itself, but it would cost $15 million to repair turret No. 2.

In its glory days in World War II, the Iowa's 16-inch guns hammered shore fortifications on South Pacific islands, hitting 2,000-pound shells more than 20 miles.

Bankers open confab amidst weak economy

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — This year's convention of the American Bankers' Association reflects the times, as the troubled banking industry needs amid soft earnings in a weakening economy.

The attendance of about 4,500 is down 18 percent from last year as some banks decided to forgo the meeting to cut expenses.

Veterans of past conventions say lavish special events have largely disappeared.

There also are fewer exhibitors. Conventioneers' apparent aversion to displaying a degree of fragility: A makeshift marketplace on the convention floor, vendors selling modestly priced items were doing far better than those with big-ticket goods.

Art LaBellman, an Orlando furniture dealer, said Sunday he'd yet to make a sale. "We had a lot of interest yesterday, but no sales," he said.

"But we're selling an expensive luxury item. Someone's not going to spend $500, $1,000, $2,000 very quickly."

The banking industry has been rocked by a spate of losses or reduced earnings caused in part by a decline in the economy and fallout from bad loans.

Those problems are much on the minds of those attending the five-day ABA meeting, which continues through Wednesday.

"I think banks are concerned. They're trying to find every avenue they can to cut back," said William S. Bushnell of Danielson Associates Inc., a consultant from Rockville, Md.

"But there are banks that are doing very well, thank you," said Bushnell, formerly a bank chairman in New Hampshire. "Like everything else in this world, you hear about who's not doing well."

Andrew C. Howe Jr., vice chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., told a meeting Sunday that bankers must emphasize to their customers that banking is much healthier than the S&L industry.

Howe said that, between 1985 and 1987, S&Ls had about $2,400 billion less than zero capitalization and those S&Ls were holding $200 billion in assets. By comparison, he said last year 81 of the nation's 13,000 banks had negative capitalization.

Homecoming turns ugly

BROOKINGS, S.D. (AP) — An estimated 1,000 people roamed city streets and the South Dakota State University campus, setting bonfires and throwing rocks and bottles as a homecoming celebration got out of hand for a second night.

Police arrested about 50 people on charges ranging from aggravated assault and intentional damage to property to rioting arrest and alcohol violations involving minors. They were being held Sunday in Brookings County Jail and bond hearings were scheduled for Monday.

"You always have some incidents that occur as a result of Home Day," the school's homecoming, said university President Robert Wagner. But Friday and Saturday night's events were the most extreme in many years, he said.

Diver dies in wreck of USS San Diego

YAPHANK, N.Y. (AP) — A diver was killed when he ran out of air in the wreck of the U.S.S. San Diego, a World War I cruiser that merged upside down 15 miles off the Long Island coast, police said.

The diver, whose name was not immediately released, became separated from a group shortly after 10 a.m. Saturday while inside the wreckage.

He was found a short time later entangled in a guide line with an empty air tank, Suffolk County police said.

At least seven divers are known to have lost their lives in the 13,600-ton ship, which lies 80 feet below the surface off the coast of Fire Island.

The San Diego is the only U.S. ship sunk by the Germans in World War I. Six crewmen died during the 1918 attack, caused either by a torpedo or a mine laid by a U-boat, and 4,108 crew were rescued.

5 children die in Cleveland house fire

CLEVELAND (AP) — A fire trapped five children in their upstairs bedrooms early Sunday, and all five died of smoke inhalation, authorities said.

A woman and her son survived the fire by jumping from a second-floor window, said Fire Investigator Albert Lugo.

The woman was hospitalized in fair condition with burns.

The blaze began on the first floor of the 2 1/2-story frame dwelling in a working-class neighborhood, Lugo said. Firefighters found the house engulfed in flames when they arrived.

The fire drove back firefighters attempting to rescue people inside, Lugo said. The cause of the fire remained under investigation, he said.

Police arrested about 50 people on charges ranging from aggravated assault and intentional damage to property to rioting arrest and alcohol violations involving minors. They were being held Sunday in Brookings County Jail and bond hearings were scheduled for Monday.

Winds whip forest blaze in California

FONTANA, Calif. (AP) — A fierce wind "fury Sunday" spread a 1,200-acre wildfire through parts of the San Bernardino National Forest, but firefighters began to gain on the blaze later in the day when the wind ebbed.

The fire, which began Saturday, burned through brush and timber in the western part of the forest, said Hal Seyden of the U.S. Forest Service. The cause of the blaze, in an area ravaged by fire two years ago, was unknown. Two firefighters suffered minor injuries, Seyden said.

The blaze began in a rugged Lytle Creek Canyon and burned up 5,000-foot San Sevino Ridge, he said. Blustery Santa Ana winds to 50 mph roared through the mountain canyons, pushing the fire through hundreds of acres overnight and grounding aircraft, forcing crews to chop fire lines by hand.

Day care worker sentenced for spiking formula

HOUSTON (AP) — A former day care center employee has been sentenced to 10 years' probation for spiking an infant's formula with nitrobing alcohol because she was angry at co-workers.

Patricia Ann Escareno, 21, pleaded guilty to mixing the child's formula with the April 24 incident and was sentenced Friday by State District Judge Mike Wilkinson. She also was fined $5,000.

The 4-month-old boy who drank the formula was hospitalized but authorities said he suffered no lasting effects because he vomited the concoction.

Assistant District Attorney Carol Davies said authorities believe Ms. Escareno was angered at the boy's mother, her co-worker at Chuckles & Gine day care center because of a job assignment that day.

Russell W. Newcomb M.D.

Twin Falls, Idaho 83301

Dear Dr. Newcomb:
I went to Boise Monday to tape my segment of the Public Broadcasting Interview on Senate Campaign Race 23B. The incumbent, Senator McRoberts, was invited to appear with me but she refused to show up. I cannot complain because I got the entire fifteen (15) minutes which will be aired October 26th at 6:00 p.m.

Dr. Newcomb, I hope you watch it. Barbara Pulling was the hostess and we had a very nice discussion of issues: grain-and-bean marketing; gasoline-price gouging; warehouse regulation, an extremely nice talk about education at all levels; pro-choice/pro-life, and the other topics which should be discussed this year. I continue with the old-fashioned notion that issues should be part of any election process.

Russ, the reason for this letter is to ask you for a favor! Since you are the designated Republican, perhaps you could help me smoke Senator Joyce McRoberts out of her closet. Even if she won't meet me in that forum called "debate", perhaps you could get her to take a public position on the issues in this campaign. The public has heard absolutely nothing from Senator Joyce McRoberts.

Speaking of issues, Doctor, your massive media campaign certainly proves several things. You are rich, you are tall, and you can dig out every old Republican war-horse to stand beside you and blink in the sun. Mark Stubbs says that your education as a medical doctor and your vast business experience makes you an expert on all public affairs. Mark says in the ad you paid for that your great business background makes you the Republican expert on investing public money and giving financial advice.

In fact, Dr. Newcomb, you seem to be the only Republican in Magic Valley. I don't believe I have seen one Republican political advertisement for which you did not pay. Perhaps, Doctor, you can convince Senator McRoberts that she should speak out publicly on something.

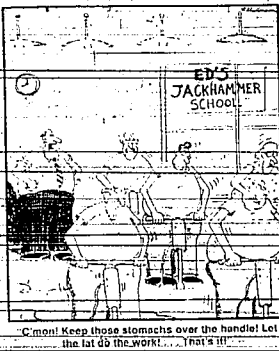

As the designated rich Republican, the Republican campaign seems to be your entire responsibility. What a burden after the mess the 1990 Legislative Session was. Help me give the public a look at Senator Joyce McRoberts.

Thank you, old friend.

2 communities have environment in mind

Way to go, Wendell PTA and Blaine County officials.

Both groups have taken giant steps to encourage people in their areas to recycle. Though they may not make much money from it, the Wendell Parent-Teacher Association has started a recycling program that will show local youngsters that adults do care about the environment.

For people living in Fairfield, Bliss and other communities in the western extremes of the valley, the PTA's new service will be invaluable.

The easier it is to recycle, the more likely people are to participate. Who wants to recycle when the nearest place to drop off the goods is Twin Falls, and when the cash you'll get in exchange for the recyclables may not, even cover the cost of gas to get there? (Not to mention the questionable environmental trade-off of burning fossil fuel to haul small amounts of recyclables.)

People in the Wendell area will be more likely to save their aluminum, glass, newspaper and plastic now that they can get rid of it on the way to the grocery store. The drop-off point will be at Elbow's Repair Shop, 640 W. Ave. F.

Blaine County officials also have succeeded in getting a similar project started. The county commission recently approved sufficient money for a recycling center for the local landfill.

Bins for contributing to the center will be in Ketchum, Hailey and probably in Bellevue so residents can drop off their recyclables close to home.

Though in both cases participants will not get cash for their recyclables, the communities will profit.

The PTA plans to pocket the proceeds from its new service for school-related projects. And PTA leaders say if they make enough money, perhaps the recycling can replace all other fund-raisers.

American Recycling will operate Wood River Valley's new center, paying as much for the recyclables as in Twin Falls.

The money will be paid to the Blaine County Resource Recovery volunteer committee, a group of Blaine County residents, which will churn the money back into the communities in the form of special projects.

As landfills nationwide reach their limits and new federal regulations threaten to make both dumping and incinerating more expensive, recycling is going to have to become a way of life for Americans.

Give the Wendell PTA and the Blaine County commissioners a pat on the back for making it easier.

Vote for J.D. Williams

The recent televised debate between the two candidates for state auditor left me with some critical concerns. Does Richard Williams understand the magnitude of the office of state auditor? Does he understand the complex, sophisticated state computer which is under the state auditor's jurisdiction? Does he understand that he would be responsible for payment of thousands of checks each month — not only payroll and state business but all of those issued for Aid for Dependent Families, Aid to the Aged, Blind and Disabled and many, many others? If he does understand fully this horrendous responsibility, he certainly failed to give a clue during the debate.

I have no doubts that Richard Williams is a fine fellow. In fact, I was a former schoolmate of his and he is that — a fine fellow. But he is way over his head in this auditor's race.

J.D. Williams, on the other hand, has fulfilled the duties of state auditor for the past two years with no criticism from either party. J.D. Williams has the expertise, the education and the experience to skillfully handle the books for the state of Idaho. There is no way to compare the credentials of J.D. Williams with his opponent. The state auditor's race may not seem glamorous, but it is very critical to each and every Idahoan. Don't make the mistake of bringing politics into this race. Please carefully consider just which candidate can best manage this very important office. Then cast your vote for the logical choice — J.D. Williams.

Endorsement baffling

I guess amusement would probably best describe my feelings for your endorsement of Dwight Osborne and Tom Morrison (Oct. 16).

It looks like to me that your reporters go to a lot of work to bring the candidates together so the voters can make an educated choice when the editors don't use these facts to base their endorsements on.

Don't you agree that we could use representatives better than someone that has never made any sweeping proposals and sponsored only a few bills such as Mr. Morrison's? These are your words used in your endorsement.

You used Dwight Osborne's experience on the Hagerman Highway District Board as part of endorsing him. You said he would be valuable as lawmakers talk about the state's immense problems with roads and bridges. Again, these are your words. However, when previously interviewed by The Times-News, Dwight Osborne didn't even acknowledge that there was a problem. Let alone an immense one. He said someone would have to show him.

Now, please explain to me how such a negative attitude will be of help when the man admittedly doesn't even see a problem. It is apparent that your attitude is just maintain the status quo. Don't change anything. Let the good old boys keep doing what they have been. Well, I feel differently. I feel the immense problems should be faced by someone likely to make sweeping proposals and definitely by someone who doesn't need to be shown these problems.

For these reasons, I endorse Clint Stennett and Pattie Nazif.

Enforce laws protecting lands

Regarding some of the articles regarding the ranger and grazer difficulty: I am 100 percent on the side of the ranger. He was doing his job, not his, and so it was; he was correct in all respects.

Anyone who thinks that these violations by the grazers are isolated is very naive. I hope the Forest Service will enforce the laws that protect the public lands to the fullest.

Mental illness concerns all

Community Organization for Rehabilitative Efforts would like to thank you for your excellent article written Sunday, Sept. 30, concerning mental illness in our community. CORC works with the chronically mentally ill and have gained much insight on the great need for mental health care improvements. Miss Hain's story is just one of so many, and success is often challenging but very rewarding.

One out of every 10 families has a member who is seriously mentally ill. Idaho is no exception. When a person becomes ill many times they are jailed because State Hospital South is full and privately owned hospitals won't help them because they have no insurance.

If you are concerned, write your Legislature and express your concern. On Monday, Oct. 22, from 6 to 8 p.m. at O'Leary Junior High School, our legislators have been invited to meet with us and discuss our concerns of mental illness of our youth in the Magic Valley.

Please show your care by attending this meeting.

Money is tight all over — even for the politicians

BOISE — It isn't just the folks in Washington moaning about tough economic times. The candidates trying to raise money for political campaigns in Idaho have been doing it all year.

"It's been tough and we've had to try everything: letters, telephones and midnight visits by the candidate. We may try a tin cup next," says Richard Callow, campaign manager for Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Ron J. Twilgar.

Callow said it's especially daunting for those without congressional franking privileges like those enjoyed by Twilgar's Republican opponent, Rep. Larry Craig. "We could save a whole lot of money if we could just sign Ron's name across a letter and mail it to people like Congressman Craig does," he said.

Indeed, Craig so far is the champion money-raiser. He's gathered $1.2 million from the time he announced in the first week of January through the latest reporting period, just under nine months.

That's about as much as all the other candidates for national office in Idaho combined. But compared with closely contested U.S. Senate races of the past, it's a relatively paltry sum.

In 1980, when Steve Symms moved from the House to the Senate, taking the seat of Democrat Frank Church, the candidates spent a record $3.5 million, tops for an Idaho election.

Six years later, Symms spent that much by himself, without a primary election opponent.

Craig had to spend some of his money early to fend off Attorney General Jim Jones to win the GOP nomination this year.

In fact, spending in the Symms-Jones Evans race in 1986 probably was greater than will be spent on the entire election this time around.

The two candidates running for the job Craig is vacating, Republican Skip Snyser and Democrat Larry LaRocco, between them reported about $500,000 in contributions.

In the 2nd District, Rep. Richard Stallins reported about $250,000 and Republican challenger Sean McDevitt $32,000. Twilgar reported only $284,000, although his campaign staff said he's received a hefty contribution from the national Democratic Senate Campaign Committee that came after the close of the last reporting period.

"Anyway, we'll wind up with enough money to get our message across," said Callow. "Good ideas travel cheaper than bad ones."

For his part, Craig couldn't get into the Senate race until after McClure decided to retire. That left him only months to raise money. In contrast, when Evans ran for the Senate in 1986, he spent nearly two years raising money.

"There are a number of reasons for the dearth of campaign funds," Republicans concluded early that they couldn't beat Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus when all the major GOP figures shunned the race.

"The business community essentially has decided to sit it out," Randy Aves, state Republican chairman, said of the desperately underfunded campaign of GOP gubernatorial candidate Roger Fairchild.

Andrus will spend $1 million-plus, but easily could have raised 50 percent more if he had a strong challenge.

"The national economy also appears to be faltering, which would make the private sector more reluctant to contribute.

What's clear is that in a year of tight money, those who have it will be spending much of it for expensive advertising between now and Nov. 6.

Craig's latest report showed nearly $400,000 for media. That's more than his opponent raised for the same period for all purposes.

The terrifying take of the Watermelon Baby

OK, youngsters. Gather 'round your old Uncle Dave, and I'll tell you the True Halloween Horror Story about the time my friend Don put his wife's rights on his head.

This was my idea. It was the Halloween of 1978, and the community where I lived had decided to hold a party where the neighborhood children would have some traditional Halloween fun such as bobbing for apples, the theory being that they'd do less traditional Halloween property damage if their lungs were full of water. For the highlight of this party, I was going to tell the terrifying story of the Watermelon Baby.

I had a watermelon baby story when I was a youngster at a place called Camp Sharpshooter. My group, consisting of 9-year-old boys, went by the Indian name "Schaghticoke," (pronounced SCA-TA-cooks), which I believe is the Indian word for "boys who are too big to fit through the hole in the tree trunks at night." On camping trips our primitive wilderness pioneer activity was hanging blankets out to dry, the result being that there was no wildlife for 200 miles downwind of our campsite.

This was my last night with my friends around the campfire and most memorable was as the forest became dark and silent, except for the whisper of the wind in the majestic 200-foot pine trees and the occasional distinctive cry of a "Schaghticoke" attempting to eat a marshmallow that was still technically on fire.

Then I'd tell a campfire story, which always started some of my voracious nocturnal friends with a name like the Snake, Witch, or the Toad Man, or the Giant Fanged Pine Cone of Death. Naturally I'd always point out that this creature was known to stalk around in the VERY WOODS where we were camping. As I described the horrible things it did to people and their various physical organs, my voice would get quieter and quieter, until the boys were leaning forward with eyes the size of personal pan pizzas, and my voice would drop to an ominous whisper and ... LOOK OUT! THERE IT IS!!!

Then I'd wash up and brush my teeth while I waited for the boys to climb back down from the tops of the majestic 200-foot pine trees, after which they'd go to bed, although they'd probably never actually sleep again for the remainder of their lives. As a counselor, you like to think you've had an impact on young people.

Anyway, the best Camp Sharpshooter story of all was the one about the Watermelon Baby. This was a monster that looked semi-human except it had a huge head and semi-armor eating everything, sort of like Sen. Edward Kennedy.

For some reason this story always drove the Schaghticoke to new altitude records, and so years later I decided to tell it at the community Halloween party to make it REALLY scary. I devised this plan wherein, at the most dramatic moment, I'd make a Secret Code Hand Gesture, and there, in the window behind me, would appear: THE ACTUAL WATERMELON BABY.

The role of the Watermelon Baby was to be played by my friend Don Stephenson, who met the two major dramatic qualifications:

1. He was around.
2. He had a few beers in him.

To give Don a giant head I hit upon the idea of borrowing a pair of green tights from his wife, Pat, sticking one leg with an entire wadded-up Sunday edition of the New York Times, and then pulling it over Don's head. Don's concern at this point was that he perhaps did not look like a terrifying creature of the night so much as a man with newspaper-stuffed tights on his head. Pat and I tried to reassure him that he was indeed very impressive, but this was difficult inasmuch as we were lying on the kitchen floor, face-down in puddles of laughter-induced drool.

But finally I talked him into going to the Halloween party site, where he hid outside while I went in to tell the story. Many children were there, and I soon had them spellbound by the tale of the Watermelon Baby.

Exactly the right dramatic moment I made the Secret Code Hand Gesture, and there, in the window behind me, was nothing.

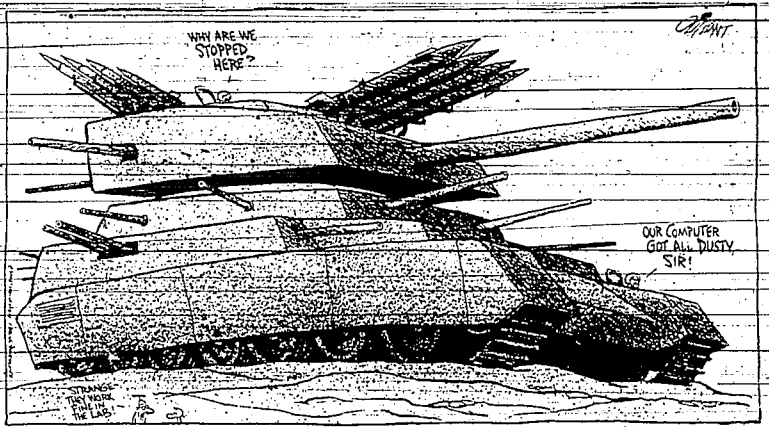

So I made a more obvious gesture. Still nothing. This did not make for effective drama. It was as if, at the crucial moment in the movie "Jaws," when you're finally going to see the monstrous creature after all the dramatic buildup and the spooky music, the dark water had parted and you had popped Kermit the Frog.

As I was waving my arms like a maniac at the top of my lungs, and the children were shrieking, and the window was empty, and somewhere out there, snubling around in the night, was the Watermelon Baby, whose vision had become completely obscured by the Arts/Entertainment Section.

So as you youngsters can imagine, old Uncle Dave wound up looking like a total buck-tooth. But don't laugh too hard, youngsters. Because guess what? Halloween almost here, and Watermelon Don is STILL OUT THERE somewhere, lurking around. He might even be RIGHT IN YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD.

And I bet by now he's VERY annoyed.

INEL sponsoring competition

in science for Gem high schools

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The first Idaho National Engineering Laboratory Scholastic Tournament, pitting 114 Idaho high school students in academic competition through next April, is off and running.

Educators and people in the science community see the tournament as a chance to buck some disturbing trends, like the shortage of students in the science and engineering fields.

But most students seem to see it as a challenging way to have fun — a game show "Jeopardy." "This is really a national crisis," INEL Manager Augustine Pritzol said. "You don't find a role model for an engineer in this country. You do find a role model for a ball player."

Group looks at Utah hospital

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — The president of the Cache County Mayors Association says irregularities have been found in the way many patients have been billed at Logan Regional Hospital.

The mayors also have asked a representative of Intermountain Health Care to explain its policy at their next meeting.

John Stewart, River Heights mayor, said Saturday that administrators at Logan Regional Hospital "blame some of the irregularities on a policy of 'cost-shifting.'" He said that means some patients are billed for services they do not receive to "cover costs that can't be collected from other patients."

"We believe this is dishonest, unethical, illegal and reprehensible," he said. "We recognize that Logan Regional is not the only hospital in the Intermountain Health Care system indulging in this practice, but that does not make it acceptable."

Contacted after the meeting, Thomas A. Walter, senior assistant administrator for the hospital, said the hospital does participate in "cost sharing."

But he added that "the practice is needed to help fund quality health care for all sectors of society."

Demonstrators protest, support Desert Shield

BOISE (AP) — Joining thousands in similar demonstrations across the country, protesters gathered at the Idaho Statehouse on Saturday to condemn U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf.

But later Saturday evening, an equal number of demonstrators lit candles in Nampa, rallied in support of "Operation Desert Shield."

The noon gathering on the Capitol steps drew about 60 protesters, who listened to peace songs, waved banners and heard speakers who urged a U.S. troop pullout from the Gulf region.

Jon Knapp, 20, of Boise organized the protest. He told his audience that Americans must cut its reliance on fossil fuels and increase pressure on President Bush to withdraw U.S. troops.

"In the Persian Gulf, we have our forces lined up to do battle and all for Americans' No. 1 drug of choice (oil)," said Knapp.

The Boise protest coincided with other anti-war demonstrations across the country.

Knapp said neither the Republican nor Democratic party is addressing the increasing problems of poverty and environmental destruction in the country.

In a candlelight vigil at Nampa City Hall, another five dozen Idahoans rallied in response to the protesters at the Capitol.

Candidates meeting set for Blaine County

HAILEY - Blaine County voters will have a chance to meet candidates for the Idaho Legislature and the Blaine County Commission in an election forum Oct. 25.

The forum begins at 7 p.m. in the Old Blaine County Courthouse meeting room on Clay and First Aves. in Hailey. Candidates will address issues in brief speeches and will take questions from the audience. The public is urged to attend and participate.

Commissioners OK grant to help clean up spring water

TWIN FALLS - The county commission has approved a Community Block Grant Application from 27 households that get their water from Banberry Springs, near Thousand Springs. Water from the springs apparently is contaminated at times and the Environmental Protection Agency ordered the families who use it to get it cleaned up. The grant would come through the Region IV Economic Development Council and would be in the neighborhood of $100,000. Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said.

Parks commission seeking people to apply for board

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Commission is looking for people to apply for positions on the board.

Dennis Bowyer, of the city Parks and Recreation Department, said two possible members would be on the seven-member board. Appointments are for a three-year term.

Interested people should send a letter of introduction to the city Parks and Recreation Department, P.O. Box 1907 83301. Those wishing to call the city can contact Bowyer or Chad Browning in the Parks and Recreation Department.

Commission approves bid for sheriff's department pistols

TWIN FALLS - The county commission has approved a $14,084 bid for 37 Smith and Wesson 9mm semiautomatic pistols for the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Department.

The contract also includes 37 holsters and clip-carriers for an additional $3,261. Professional Armament of Murray, Utah, will supply the weapons.

The Sheriff's Department also will get two new patrol cars from Bandy Hansen Chevrolet. After trading in two other cars, the new ones will cost $27,746.

A new Ford extended cab pickup from Roy Raymond Ford-BMW will cost $13,471. The truck also is for the Sheriff's Department.

City seeking 5-year residents to apply for commission posts

TWIN FALLS - The city is encouraging residents who have lived in Twin Falls County at least five years to apply for a position on the Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning Commission.

City Planner LaMar Orton said the commission will have two possible three openings at the end of November. Residents of the city and the impact zone who are interested can contact Orton at the city offices.

State law requires planning and zoning commission members to live in the county for at least five years, Orton said.

Media plans to communicate future school closures

KIMBERLY - All announcements of alternate operating schedules and/or school closures will be communicated via the following radio stations beginning as early as 6:30 a.m. if school will be closed: KLIX, 1310 AM; KTFE, 1270 AM; and KEZI, 95 FM.

KMCT Channel 11 will broadcast evening announcements and The Times-News will have information about extended closures.

Under unsafe busing conditions or bad weather, it may be necessary to cancel school for the day but the district will try to get late starts and will attempt to cancel all school and extracurricular activities.

If an early dismissal is necessary, students will generally run at 1:15 p.m. Students who cannot be transported to their rural homes at that time will be released but arrangements have been made for their supervision.

Buhl man crawls to safety after 200-foot fall

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A Buhl construction worker survived the ride of his life Friday when the front-end loader he was operating slipped over a canyon edge and tumbled 200 feet down a hill near Cedar Creek Reservoir.

He was found 10 hours after the accident, crawling in and out of a ditch along a dirt road. His right ankle was broken and toes on both feet were smashed.

His wife nervously listened to the search and rescue over the police scanner in their Buhl home.

Bill Whitley said Sunday in a telephone interview from his room at Valley Regional Medical Center. He was listed in satisfactory condition.

Whitley was working near Cedar Creek, about six miles downstream from the reservoir, filling dirt over a water pipeline Friday. He was easing the front-end loader near the edge of the canyon when the engine died just before noon. When the engine died, the machine's hydraulic brakes lost power and the front-end loader started slipping down the steep embankment.

Whitley dropped the bucket shovel on the machine, hoping that would stop the slide. But the bucket hit a boulder and glanced off it, vaulting the machine sideways. A tire on the loader bounced off the boulder and suddenly the machine was tumbling side over side.

There was no time to jump. "I knew the only place I could survive was in that cage. I had a hard grip on the steering wheel," Whitley said. He estimated the tumble lasted a full minute.

As the machine started careening downhill an accident of 12 years ago flashed into Whitley's mind. A worker he knew went down a steep hill in a front-end loader. Whitley hauled out that worker's body.

That's the first thing I thought of, he said. During the fall a boulder that Whitley estimated at 20 inches in circumference lurched through the glass of the driving compartment. He placed his hand in front of the face and blocked it, but the rock cut his head and lip, then fell and smashed his right ankle.

When the machine stopped Whitley let the dust settle, then decided his best chance would be to get to the Antelope Springs Road, which passed by the canyon. He tried walking but could not. He crawled - one mile in 10 hours. Fortunately, he was wearing insulated overalls. Only his

New Ward's Cheese plant taking shape

By Mark Kind
Times-News writer

GOODING - The new Ward's Cheese Co. plant is taking shape in the old Blincoe meat packing house, with construction under way and equipment en route.

"We've ordered our vats, drain tables and packaging equipment," said Administrative Manager Jeff Williams. Project funding came partially from $7 million in industrial revenue bonds issued last month by the Gooding Industrial Development Corporation.

Ward's Cheese, owned by the U.S. subsidiary of Ireland's Avonmore Foods, is also purchasing 300 acres beside the plant to build Gooding for its waste water disposal system. The company is adding truck-loading bays and a whey-handling room onto the existing building.

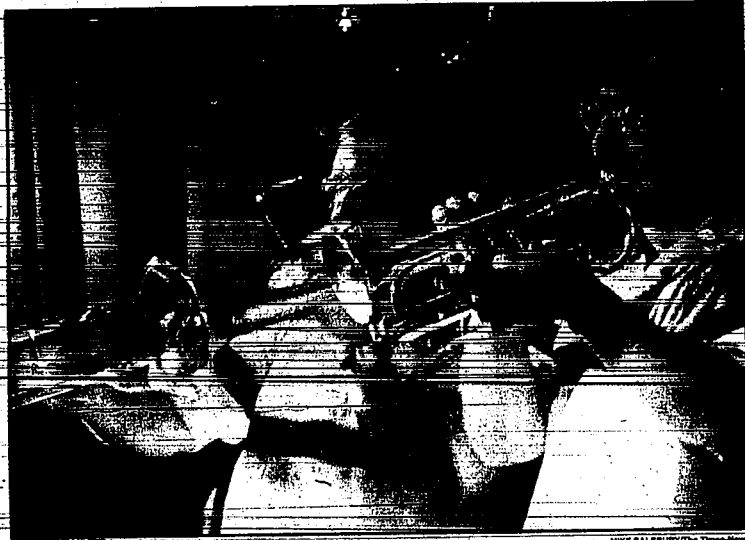

When finished in April, the 80,000-square-foot plant will take in 1.2 million pounds of milk daily, and will eventually handle 1.5 million pounds. Williams said. The plant's capacity will be 2 million pounds of milk per day - roughly the output of 50,000 cows.

At last count, the Magic Valley had 77,000 dairy cows, but much of their milk goes to other states.

"When the plant is complete, the company plans to hire about 25 new employees and transfer 10 others from its Richfield and Carey plants. The company's Magic Valley work force now totals 135.

The Richfield plant will become a whey processing plant after the expansion.

their district covers Cassia, Jerome and Minidoka counties. Incumbent Republican Lynn Tominaga is seeking a fourth term in the seat, but is challenged by Democrat George O. Grant, who runs as a write-in candidate in the spring primary election.

But Grant opposes the Legislature's plan to create more community colleges across the state, including one within each of the four universities.

"I think we have adequate college facilities."

He supports paying public school teachers more based on their accomplishments. "I really don't have anything against merit pay in education or anywhere else."

Tominaga's Republican "career ladder" approach to teacher pay because merit pay creates "competition between teachers."

"Career ladder, I think, is a better system because it helps the teacher plot how to improve themselves."

He also favors higher pay for certain teachers with hard-to-find skills.

He was cautious about spreading out the financial burden of CSI, questioning whether Twin Falls and Jerome counties would be willing to share decision-making duties with the other two counties in "exchange" for spreading out the tax base.

Mom discovers there's more to martial arts than machismo

INDIAN CIVIL - When my brother was in the military, he came to visit us on the farm in 1968, toting a foot-long length of rope with two heavy, wood dowel chunks attached to each end.

He said he needed this device in case he ran into any wildcats at the bus terminal. Then, with a killer look in his eyes, he proceeded to swing this "ninjichuk" in figure-eight fashion under his arms and up between his legs.

Amazingly, he finished his routine with his manliness intact, then made a short bow. At the time, I remember hoping this performance was the last gasp of my brother's adolescence. He, however, considered his performance the epitome of oriental martial arts - Bruce Lee style.

Diana Hoodley Country neighbors

What my culturally, Mennonite-pacifist husband thought about the whole demonstration led to a great deal to be desired. I tried to keep peace among the family unit and downplay the sarcasm ("The chickens are ready to butcher. Maybe your brother'd like to punn-chuck 'em.")

Still, our initiation to the ancient tradition of the oriental martial arts was not good. So, it was with less than enthusiasm that we granted our son's request to take karate lessons.

"Listen, Bud," I told him. "Ninjas don't make much money and, trust me here, there's not much room for career advancement. All you do is go around throwing your body at some dumb guy and some dumb guy throws his body back at you. It's a life spent in the hospital."

"Alas, little boys don't care much about money, prestige, or power. All they care about is ACTION. I tried to explain this very basic need of our son to my husband as he was reclining in the easy chair, getting ready to take a nap. Pacifism takes many forms."

The karate issue was brought to a head, believe it or not, by the onset of football season. Peer pressure was at a feverish pitch and everybody was going around cheering.

Everyone that is, but this biologically nurturing noncompetitive mother-type me.

I told Bud that he could take basketball, track, or cross-country, but that I didn't want him head-banging on a football field just because everyone else did it. Bud, of course, acted totally defeated, his life doomed because it had to be lived with culturally and biologically stimulated parents.

Then I happened on an idea. Why not trade karate for football? Bud was overjoyed, but everyone else, remembering the ninjichuk, was a wee bit apprehensive.

Small-business owners need better financial savvy, accountant says

By Craig Lincoln
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS Most small-business owners thrive, and a small percent survive, on an intense belief in their abilities.

But those abilities usually don't include financial savvy, said an accountant who spoke to a group of businessmen last week.

"They have an unbridled amount of enthusiasm," said Robert A. Langdon, a former Twin Falls resident who now runs a consulting business out of Denver. "They have a drive to succeed, and believe that drive to succeed will make up for their lack of knowledge."

Langdon spoke at a day-long conference last week sponsored by West One Bank. His message: Paying attention to the bottom-line means starting at the top of the financial statement.

For instance, Langdon said in a post-seminar interview, most small-business owners think the best way to increase profits is to increase sales. But a more effective way is to cut costs and increase gross profit, often by increasing a product's price.

And most small-business owners don't get around to calculating their return on investment, the key element of their financial success. The return is calculated by dividing the business's net income by the owner's average investment.

That return should be higher than alternative investments — such as a mutual fund or certificate of deposit at a bank.

Langdon hopes that his seminars will start giving small businesses control over their financial direction.

"Many business owners send their records to an accountant once a month and rely on the accountants' expertise to complete financial statements. But the accountant can't run the business, and only the owner can control his expenses and sales," Langdon said.

"Whenever you rely on outside people, you are abdicated control of the business," he said.

The core message of Langdon's presentation is for owners to plan — and he emphasizes the old adage, "I didn't plan to fail, I just failed to plan."

"Most people spend more time planning vacations" than what they're going to do with their business, he said. "Most people look at a business as a baby and a child."

West One has scheduled another seminar with Langdon on March 1.

"We're trying to touch a lot of people — not just customers — who need to hone their skills," West One Vice President and Manager Bill Babcock said.

Authorities seek hunter after man wounded

ANTIMONY, Utah (AP) — Law enforcement authorities were seeking a teen-aged hunter for questioning after a 27-year-old Denver man was shot through the leg in northwest Gardfield County.

Paul S. Bowman was in good condition after being admitted to a Utah Valley Regional Medical Center in Provo.

Sheriff Tom Cooper said officers are seeking a 14- to 18-year-old male or female with long blond hair. Bowman was shot from a distance of about 50 yards, but the rifle bullet passed through his thigh without hitting a bone or artery, the sheriff said.

Cooper said the Saturday-afternoon shooting appeared to have been accidental. The young hunter "ran off when Bowman cried out, 'You hit me; you'd better watch where you're shooting.'"

Bowman was transported by four-wheel-drive vehicle from the rugged terrain where he had been hunting to a nearby miller farm in Antimony where he was met by the Pitkin County ambulance.

After being first stabilized at Sevier Valley Hospital in Richfield, he was taken on to UVRMC, authorities said.

A search of the shooting area failed to turn up the suspect, and Cooper is asking for anyone with information to contact his office.

The incident was one of several shootings that occurred as the opening of Utah's annual deer hunt drew hundreds of thousands of sportsmen to the mountains.

A 10-year-old woman underwent surgery Saturday afternoon at Ashtley-Valley Medical Center in Vernal after she suffered a gunshot wound to her foot in a hunting-related accident.

Two Tongan teenagers were hit during the shooting, suffering wounds to the legs, arms and side from bird shot projectiles.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Crews have been called off the search for a physician who has been missing more than a week after going on a day hike in the rugged mountains east of here.

Salt Lake County Sheriff's Office said Sunday that all searchers have been called off the search for Jake Gradwohl.

She said a two-man team would remain on the case and follow up new information. Gradwohl, a former Denver resident who has been a resident physician at University Hospital for three years.

Gradwohl apparently parked his car near the Broads Fork and Mill B trails in the Gig Cottowood Canyon on Oct. 14 and left on Friday hike. Fellow workers at University Hospital reported him missing Tuesday after he had failed to show up for work two straight days.

As Whitley crawled in the darkness, his wife, Cheryl, wondered where he had gone from work. She had arrived home around 6 p.m. By 8 he still was not home, and her son had gotten word to Whitley's boss that he had not come home from work.

Cheryl Whitley turned on her police scanner at 8 p.m., still not sure where her husband was. Whitley's boss, Dan Weaver, had driven to the sight where the machine had gone over the canyon edge. He saw the tracks of the loader going over the embankment and went to a nearby farm house to call for help.

Neighors and search and rescue workers from several agencies were at the scene.

"I heard them say over the scanner that the loader went over the cliff," Mrs. Whitley said. She thought of going to the site, but she knew she could do little by doing that.

"They said they got the operator was still in the cab of the loader. Then they said he wasn't in the cab," she said. "Oh no!"

Workers at the scene saw blood on the front-end loader. Whitley wondered if her husband had hit his head and wandered off. She wondered if he was under the machine.

Search and rescue workers from Roseworth, Casleford, Buhl, Twin Falls County, MVRV and Lighthouse had converged on the area. About 10 p.m., two workers drove north along the road from where the loader much does it cost? We asked the martial arts instructor not what is the point, but which is the point — violence or aggression?

Our instructor was nonplused by this set of party-waist questions. He told us without indignation that the ultimate point of the kwon do is to develop a person with perfect character and physical conditions.

Through instruction in the art of self-defense, a student will also learn better mental and physical discipline.

It sounded good to me as my gaze wandered to my son standing next to me, attempting to see through his filmy eye glasses that he doesn't feel the need to clean. I was even more impressed by the choreography happening on the exercise room floor.

About fifteen people — men, women and children — were doing these impossible things like lifting their legs above their waist AND kicking.

They were doing this in unison without any groaning or any moaning.

I turned to my husband then and asked, "Wouldn't they be hurt?" He smiled and said he was just wondering the same thing about himself.

Last-second field goal keeps Giants unbeaten

The Associated Press
EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Bill Parcells ran off the field at Giants Stadium looking very much like a kid who had just stolen something.

Which is exactly what he and the New York Giants did. They had stolen a game from the Phoenix Cardinals.

Matt Bahr's 40-yard field goal on the game's final play capped a 10-point comeback in the final 3:21 and lifted New York to a 20-19 victory over the Phoenix Cardinals Sunday, giving the undefeated Giants their best start in franchise history.

"We can consider ourselves lucky and fortunate," Parcells said. "I can't recall us ever being down by that much with that little time to go and coming back like this."

New York (6-0) looked like a beaten team after Al Del Greco kicked his fourth field goal, a 45-yarder, with 5:38 to play, putting Phoenix (2-4) ahead 19-10.

"We struggled but we stayed together," Giants center Bart Oates said. "As long as there was time on the clock we felt we had a chance."

The Giants made good on their final chances because Jeff Hostetler, substituting for the injured Phil Simms, finally started figuring out the Cardinals' new 3-4 defense that had baffled him since he took over in the second quarter.

Hostetler first drove New York 36 yards in eight plays, finishing the march with a 38-yard scoring pass to a diving Stephen Baker with 3:21 to play.

The Giants allowed the Cardinals one first down before getting the ball back with 38 seconds to play.

"I was a little discouraged," Hostetler said. "They were covering us and playing good defense. But at the end everything seemed to come together. The defense held and the offense responded."

With no timeouts and 21 yards to go, Hostetler got New York going on his final drive by hitting Mark Ingram on a 26-yard crossing pattern to the Phoenix 45. A holding penalty advanced the ball five yards.

Three plays later, Hostetler, who hit 11 of 21 passes for 180 yards, found little-used Lionel Manuel on an 18-yard completion with about 13 seconds to go.

The Giants rushed to the line as the clock kept running and Hostetler took a snap and grounded the ball with three seconds to go. But the third walk made the fact that kicked his second field goal of the game and first game-winner as a Giant.

"It felt good going off my foot, but you never know until it goes through," Bahr said. "The kick was a culmination of a total team effort."

It also ruined a fantastic effort by the Cardinals. The Cardinals took a 13-10 lead on an 18-yard field goal by Del Greco and stretched it to six points on a 34-yard following a fumble by Hostetler. Del Greco added his 45-yard following an interception by Tim McDonald.

Simms, the NFL's top-rated quarterback coming into the game, hurt his left ankle late in the first quarter when he was high lowed by Cedric Mack and Ken Harvey while releasing a pass. He stood on the sidelines in a wheelchair the rest of the game while Hostetler tried to find ways to penetrate the Cardinals' defense. He didn't touch the ball.

A furious yard-toutdown run by Anderson gave New York a 7-0 lead after the opening series of the game, but Phoenix responded with a drive to a 39-yard field goal from Del Greco. Bahr's 34-yard field goal in the second quarter stretched the lead to 10-3 before the Cardinals tied the game just before the half.

The win was the Giants' ninth in 11 meetings with the Cardinals, who have not won here since 1983. It also kept New York two games in front of Washington in the NFC East race.

The Redskins, who beat Philadelphia 13-7, are here next weekend.

Canseco's wife calls A's manager a 'punk'

OAKLAND, Calif. — Esther Canseco had some unkind words for Oakland A's Manager Tony La Russa after he benched Jose Canseco before Game 1 of the World Series game. "He's a punk," Esther Canseco was quoted as saying in Sunday's San Jose Mercury News after learning of the benching of baseball's highest-paid player. "Let them sweep what should have won a red dress. Tony's gone too far. He's putting the blame on Jose when it's the whole team." The Cincinnati Reds completed a sweep of the A's with a 2-1 victory Saturday night.

Temple assistant coach still in hospital after collapsing

PHILADELPHIA — Temple defensive line coach Earle Mosley remained hospitalized Sunday, after collapsing on the sidelines during the Owls' 31-28 victory over Virginia Tech. Head coach Jerry Berndt said Mosley was listed in good condition, but his doctors had ordered limited visits for him. "Obviously, they have to do that," Berndt said. "The whole team would like to visit him." Mosley, 43, apparently choked on some phlegm while watching Temple mount its winning 45-yard touchdown drive with 27 left in the fourth quarter of Saturday's game. The game was delayed for about 10 minutes while medical officials worked on him. He remained on the sidelines until after the game, when he was taken to Temple University Hospital for tests. Berndt said the tests were negative, but doctors decided to keep Mosley for observation. "Mostly asked to have a TV monitor in his room to review game tapes and grade his players, and the doctors agreed," Berndt said.

Davis remains in hospital as Reds travel home as champs

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Cincinnati Reds ran off their best start of the century without Eric Davis this spring. They went home celebrating a World Series championship Sunday without him again. The outfielder remained hospitalized with a severely bruised right kidney. Davis damaged it when he landed hard while trying to make a catch in the Reds' Series-clinching 2-1 victory Saturday night over the Oakland A's. Although he couldn't accompany the team on its charter flight back to Cincinnati, Davis got some good news from his doctors. Tests performed overnight, including a CAT scan, found no rupture of the kidney. As a result, no surgery was anticipated. Doctors figured Davis would remain hospitalized for five to seven more days in Oakland before he's allowed to return to Cincinnati. "Team Dr. Michael Lawhorn met with Davis in the intensive care unit at Merritt Hospital on Sunday morning when the rest results came back. "A full recovery is expected," Reds spokesman Jim Ferguson said.

49ers pounce on Steelers' mistakes to stay perfect

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — For the San Francisco 49ers, a little resilience can go a long way.

Like perhaps to a third straight Super Bowl. With Joe Montana limited to a dump-off attack by an aggressive Pittsburgh secondary, San Francisco turned to its running game and its defense Sunday to beat the Steelers 27-7 Sunday and remain unbeaten at 6-0.

Inexplicable mistakes by the Steelers led to 17 points by the 49ers in a six-minute span that broke the game open. Montana, who threw for 476 yards against Atlanta last week, was limited to 20 completions in 30 passes for 157 yards. He was interrupted twice in the 49ers' first three possessions.

But San Francisco rushed for more than 100 yards for the first time this season, getting 90 yards in 17 carries and seven catches for 57 yards from rookie Dexter Carter, filling in for the injured Roger Craig. They took 150 yards rushing overall.

"Dexter's a daring, aggressive, hard-nosed guy," coach George Seifert said. "With a team like the Steelers, you've got to peck away at them and that's what we were able to do."

The 49ers also got off their first two rushing touchdowns of the season, both one-yard runs by Tom Rathman during that telling span late in the third and early in the fourth quarter as they won their 14th straight game over two years and dropped the Steelers to 4-4.

The defense, meanwhile, held Pittsburgh to just 76 total yards after the Steelers had taken an early 7-0 lead on a two-yard pass from Bobby Brister to Richard Bell.

By halftime, the 49ers led 10-7. Montana's two-yard TD pass to Mike Sherman, but the Steelers were still in the game, even after Mike Cofer's 20-yard field goal that gave the 49ers a 13-7 lead with 3:53 left in the third quarter.

Then came the turning point. Coler lofted his kickoff downfield and Pittsburgh rookie Barry Foster walked away from it like a punt returner walking away from a punt he's decided to let roll dead. Except that a kickoff is a free ball — and the 49ers' Mike Wilson snatched it on a hop.

Wilson blocked one, acknowledged Foster who had returned kickoffs in high school and at Arkansas with no problems.

"In a punting situation, obviously, you can let it roll. When I finally realized it wasn't a punt, it was too late. "Three plays later, Rathman bulled in and it was 20-7.

"Obviously I was pleasantly surprised," Seifert said. "But it can happen to any team."

Then Pittsburgh, which didn't get past the 49ers' 38 after taking a 7-0 first-period lead.

A's manager Tony La Russa talks to reporters in his office after the Reds' stunning World Series sweep.

Glory stolen from A's once again

The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Oakland Athletics, so strong yet so vulnerable, trumped out of the World Series with heads bowed, burdened by a special curse to have their glory stolen and misfortunes magnified.

Gone was the smirk on Jose Canseco's face, the smug gleam in Mark McGwire's eyes, the jaunty strut of Rickey Henderson's gait.

Dave Stewart, the last angry man on the mound, looked worn-out and beat-softer now with his energy spent. He'd given everything he had and it wasn't enough.

Tony La Russa's dark, fiery countenance, yielded to bewilderment, as if that struck before Game 3. This four-game sweep did not compute.

It was time to pack up and go home for Game No. 5 on Sunday. No more games until spring, on plenty of time to think about what went wrong and how to shed this curse.

If the Cincinnati Reds were destiny's darlings this year, winning from start to finish, the Athletics once more were fate's flops, losing spectacularly when everyone was watching.

Even Oakland's biggest triumph — the sweep of Boston in the AL playoffs — was doomed to be overshadowed by a more unusual event — the ejection of Cy Young Award (27-6) may not even get it if the voters leaning toward one of the Bob Welch (27-6) and Dwight Gooden (27-6) — enough voters go for Clemens (21-6).

Former Yankee owner mocks himself in TV appearance

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The last time we saw George Steinbrenner he was being run out of baseball by Commissioner Fay Vincent and out of New York on a rail by Yankee fans.

Only a man with an ego as big as the ex-Boss would come back to the city his team put to sleep and appear on a live television show that appeals to exactly the folks who dislike him the most.

But there it was. The ultimate nightmare of every New York Yankee fan. Live from New York, it was George Steinbrenner — the owner who won't go away. Actually, it was "Saturday Night Live," the master presenter of satire bringing us the perfect caricature of a baseball owner. Only this show would not only invite a sports owner to host the show, but invite an owner who had been kicked out of his game because he hired a gambler to gather dirt on some of his players. And only Steinbrenner would accept. And only Steinbrenner would be so comfortable making fun of the enormity of his ego.

In the opening sequence, he dreams of a sweep of the World Series. And there is George Steinbrenner pitching to catcher George Steinbrenner. In fact, Steinbrenner is playing all of the positions and also managing the team.

A dream on this show, but a recurring nightmare for many a Yankee manager and player for the last 18 years.

The show came on just minutes after the Cincinnati Reds — managed by ex-Yankee manager Lou Piniella and led by MVP pitcher Jose Rijo; another ex-Yankee — finished their sweep of the Oakland Athletics in the World Series, giving Steinbrenner a perfect setup for a joke.

Wyche tries to downplay insult of Cleveland fans

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Sam Wyche doesn't live in Cleveland. He lives in Cincinnati. And he'll find out Monday night whether the people of Cleveland still remember the way they once treated him when he used their city as a synonym for rowdiness.

It's not just an in-state rivalry between two football teams. I think this one transcends that. Wyche said last week as he prepared his Bengals for the Browns in the Monday night game. "It's between two cities that compete just about every way you can compete within the state."

He insists he holds Cleveland fans in high regard, despite the disparaging way he spoke of them during the Bengals' game against Seattle last Dec. 10. When Cincinnatians began throwing snowballs at Seattle's players, Wyche grabbed a public address microphone and scolded them. "You don't live in Cleveland — you live in Cincinnati!" It was an insult that Cleveland fans had coming. Some patrons of Cleveland's "Dawg Pound" bleachers had earned a nasty reputation by throwing eggs, batteries, dog biscuits and other objects at the Denver Broncos last October, forcing the referees to move the Broncos to the opposite end of a field.

Wyche, whose Bengals had won at Cleveland the week before the Seattle game, expects civilized treatment from Browns fans.

Last year was the first time in six years that I wasn't hit with dog biscuits, chicken bones and double-A batteries there," he said. "Those things could have gone in somebody's eye and destroyed a career, or could have gone in a fan's eye and destroyed the sight of a fan. After six years of it, it is now over, I'm told, and that is good." His comment was very clear, that he didn't want to have anything thrown in our stadium, and the reputation that a few people in the Dawg Pound had created for the Cleveland Stadium was not something we wanted in Cincinnati.

New Mexico faces tough task against BYU

The Associated Press

One week Brigham Young routed Colorado State 52-9. The next week CSU routed New Mexico 47-7. If BYU is 43 points better than CSU, and CSU is 40 points better than New Mexico, does that make BYU 83 points better than New Mexico? Kind of so, what has happened to the supposed balance in the Western Athletic Conference?

man Sheppard needs to order another truckload of bricks and support beams. In the only other conference game of the weekend, Utah snapped a four-game winning streak by defeating Texas El Paso 37-23 in Salt Lake City. Utah beat a team in 21st-ranked and winning not just at the Weber State 21-12 in Laramie, and Hawaii whipped Fullerton State 45-21 in Honolulu. BYU, Air Force and San Diego State were idle.

It marked the third straight week in which home teams have had swept all games. In fact, in the last four weeks—involving 20 games—only Wyoming has broken the home-team domination, winning at Utah on Sept. 29.

CSU (5-3 overall and 4-1 in the WAC) expanded its school-record 607 total yards to overwhelm New Mexico, keeping the Rams' hopes for a possible bowl bid and keeping them mathematically in the WAC title chase as well. "New Mexico isn't a bad team," said CSU linebacker Eric Tippecanec, "but it didn't matter who we were way today. If we had beaten BYU last week, it could have been the biggest game in the history of the school. We knew the season was over if we lost again."

A Freedom Bowl representative and Brian Copeland rushed for 116 and 115 yards, respectively. Alfred scored two touchdowns, and full-back Todd Yer had three. The Rams' offensive line spent back-to-back games in Colorado. Linebackers Jeremy Leach and Marcus Goodlee seven times, and safety Robert Strimling intercepted a Leah Pass of UNM's first pass from scrimmage and returned it 28 yards for a touchdown.

Bo helps Raiders keep rolling

SAN DIEGO (AP)—Bo Jackson ran for two touchdowns in his 1990 football debut and Jay Schroeder added a touchdown pass in Los Angeles Raiders' 24-9 victory Sunday over the San Diego Chargers.

Pro football

The win lifted the AFC West-leading Raiders to 6-1 while San Diego, winless in its three home games, fell to 2-5. The Chargers were held without a touchdown for the first time this year. Jackson, an "outfielder" with the Kansas City Royals, joined the Raiders this week. He had 53 yards on 12 carries while splitting time with Marcus Allen at tailback.

ANAHAIM, Calif. (AP)—Jim Everett threw for 302 yards and three touchdowns Sunday to give the Los Angeles Rams their first victory in more than a month, a 44-24 romp over the Atlanta Falcons. The only other victory by Los Angeles (2-4) this season was against Tampa Bay on Sept. 16. They then lost to Philadelphia, had a bye, and were beaten by Cincinnati and Chicago.

Seahawks 19, Chiefs 7

SEATTLE (AP)—Norm Johnson kicked four field goals and Seattle's defense—held—Christian Okoye—and Barry Word tightly in check as the Seahawks beat Kansas City 19-7 in an error-filled game Sunday. Dave Kruger was intercepted four times, but Seattle recovered three Kansas City fumbles. Rufus Porter sacked Steve Deberg and recovered Deberg's fumble on the Kansas City 11 to set up a 4-yard touchdown run by John L. Williams with 1:54 left.

SAN DIEGO'S Henry Rolling grabs Bo Jackson's facemask but couldn't prevent the L.A. Raiders running back from scoring a touchdown. James Lofton, while Scott Norwood kicked a 29-yard field goal, hitting the Bills to a 5-17 record. Norwood missed an extra point after the game-winning touchdown also hooked a 24-yard field goal attempt in the fourth quarter.

Broncos 27, Colts 17

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—John Elway passed for 307 yards and two touchdowns Sunday as the Denver Broncos, snapping their longest losing streak in seven years also spoiled Elway's return to the Colts with a 27-17 victory. David Trethewey's field goal a 42-yarder with 3:45 to go, was his second of the game and ended a three-game slide for the Broncos (3-3). They ended clinching touchdown on a 4-yard run by Steve Sewell two minutes later.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sinn Humphries' two long passes set up the winning touchdown as the Washington Redskins held off the Pittsburgh Steelers 13-7 Sunday. Humphries threw passes of 33 yards to Gary Clark and 44 yards to Art Monk before Gerald Riggs dived for a first down. Sunday at the Redskins (4-2) survived a battle of missed field goals.

Oilers 23, Saints 10

HOUSTON (AP)—Lorenzo White ran for one touchdown and caught a pass for another as the Houston Oilers beat New Orleans 23-10, spoiling the debut of Steve Walsh as the Saints' starting quarterback. The Oilers (4-3) spotted the Saints a 3-0 lead before reeling off 20 straight points. The loss snapped the (2-4) Saints' NFL record-tying streak of 13 consecutive victories against American Conference teams, dating back to 1986.

Russian groups form largest Soviet opposition movement

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — More than 20 Russian groups united on Sunday to form the nation's largest political bloc opposing the Communist Party, and the new movement demanded that Kremlin leaders resign.

National legislators and key officials of the Russian republic attended the two-day founding conference of the Democratic Russia Movement, the broadest grouping yet to openly challenge President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

But the conference glossed over sharply divergent views among the republic's various groups, and gave them the right to pull out of the movement. The movement's chances of becoming a unified political force were uncertain.

Many small parties have been created since the Communist Party surrendered its constitutionally guaranteed monopoly on power last February. None, including the new bloc, have anywhere near the Communists' 18 million members. The new movement — joined Christian Democrats with labor unions, scholars with peasants, and Red Army officers with disabled veterans. They united around a sweeping platform that called for Russian sovereignty, as well as the resignation of Gorbachev and his prime minister, Nikolai Ryzhkov.

The platform underlined growing disenchantment with the Soviet leader.

The conference also formed a commission to organize "civil disobedience" if necessary. It was not clear under what conditions civil disobedience would be used.

It delegated another commission to find ways to create a market economy in Russia, the largest and most populous of the 15 Soviet republics.

A fledgling coalition between Gorbachev and Boris N. Yeltsin, the reformist president of the Russian republic, fell apart after the Soviet

Gunmen assassinate Sikh politician

AMRITSAR, India — Gunmen on Sunday assassinated a moderate Sikh politician in an ambush near the state capital of Amritsar, where Sikh militants are fighting for independence from India, police said. Police said Ghishpal Singh, a former state Cabinet minister and four-term legislator, was killed instantly in gunfire from five or six weapons.

The attackers, hiding in a sugar cane field, fired on Singh's car as it left the farm, seven miles north of the state capital of Amritsar, said police. Superintendent P. S. Gill. Singh's bodyguard, who was in the back seat, returned fire, but the gunmen escaped.

Singh, 70, belonged to the Badal political faction, which has been targeted by the militants for its moderate position.

IRA claims responsibility in killing

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Gunmen killed a former soldier near a crowded Roman Catholic church, police said Sunday. The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility.

The slaying Saturday night was the fourth within a week resulting from religious and sectarian strife in Northern Ireland.

The victim was identified as David Pollock, 30 — a Protestant who left the locally recruited Ulster Defense Regiment several years ago. The gunman, using a car stolen from a family they had taken hostage, rammed the vehicle being driven by Pollock in County Tyrone near the border with the Irish Republic, police said.

The attack took place just a few hundred yards from Melmount Church where more than 1,000 Roman Catholic worshippers were just leaving a service celebrating peace and reconciliation.

Monks end boycott against soldiers

RANGOON, Burma — Rebellious Buddhist monks on Sunday ended a boycott on ministering to soldiers after government troops surrounded their monasteries. Defiant monks were also threatened with death.

Reports reaching the capital, Rangoon, from Mandalay, center of the defiance campaign, said the monks ended their boycott after troops riddled at least six major monasteries.

The monks' apparent capitulation also came as Burma's prime minister, Gen. Saw Maung, gave army commanders the power under martial law to bring monks before military tribunals for activities deemed disruptive to Buddhism, official Rangoon Radio said.

Sentences imposed by such tribunals range from a minimum of three years in prison to a maximum of death.

Thousands protest in Bangladesh

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Thousands of demonstrators held rallies and anti-government marches Sunday to press demands for President Hussain Muhammad Ershad to resign and hold elections under a caretaker government.

Riot police backed by paramilitary forces were deployed in key points in the capital, Dhaka, but did not intervene.

The nationwide demonstrations, which have been held periodically since Ershad assumed power in a bloodless coup in 1982, intensified after eight protesters were killed in Dhaka in clashes with police on Oct. 10 and 13.

Nasim Ahmed, a senior leader of the opposition Awami League party, claimed that processions held in major cities drew hundreds of thousands of activists. A senior police officer said the protests were peaceful.

Sri Lankan troops kill 20 Tamil rebels

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — Government troops captured a strategic coastal village in northern Sri Lanka, killing 20 Tamil rebels in an air, naval and ground operation, officials said Sunday.

The reported capture of Mawaddipuram village on Saturday opened a passage to Kankesanthurai, a vital, rebel-controlled port one mile away.

There was no immediate response to the government claim from the rebel militia, the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam.

Military officials, who cannot be identified under briefing rules, said three soldiers were killed and many more were injured in the taking of Mawaddipuram, 195 miles north of Colombo.

Neo-Nazis demonstrate in Germany

BERLIN — Hundreds of Nazi sympathizers shouted "Foreigners out!" and anti-Communist slogans in a march in the southeastern city of Dresden, the news agency APN reported.

There were no reports of any violence Saturday night as the protesters snaked through the center of Dresden, a former East German city 110 miles southeast of Berlin.

Police estimated that about 350 neo-Nazis took part in the demonstration, ADN reported. It took place without permission of city authorities, the agency said.

The march was led by Michael Kuchmen, a well-known pro-Nazi activist, the agency said.

Man stabs ex-Japanese labor minister

TOKYO — A former mental patient wielding a kitchen knife on Sunday stabbed an official from the governing party as he walked to a ceremony at a military base, police said.

The former labor minister, Hyosuke Niwa, was in a coma Sunday night, said officials at Aichi Medical University Hospital.

Niwa, 78, a Liberal Democratic Party parliamentarian, was attacked at the Moriyama military base in Nagoya, about 170 miles west of Tokyo.

The assailant was identified as a 47-year-old mental patient. He was immediately apprehended.

A police official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the attacker told investigators he recognized Niwa and "was trying to kill anyone who is a member of Parliament."

Malaysian coalition leads elections

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad's ruling coalition won a parliamentary majority in general elections Sunday over a loose grouping of opposition parties.

In vote counts early Monday, Mahathir's National Front coalition had won 94 seats in the 180-member lower house to 53 for the combined opposition. Four independent candidates were elected.

"We can now form the government," said Mahathir, 64, who won his third election since becoming prime minister in 1981.

Medical research lost in hospital blaze

LONDON — Fire swept through a hospital wing early Sunday, destroying five years of research on muscle disorders and causing damage estimated at more than $1 million, officials said.

Sixty firefighters prevented the blaze at Hammersmith Hospital in west London from spreading to the wards and the adjacent emergency department.

Nurses, police and ambulance crews alerted by automatic fire alarms moved 46 patients, some bedridden, from three wards as smoke from the research department on the top floor of one wing filled the hospital.

One patient suffered from smoke inhalation and was transferred to Charing Cross Hospital, where he was reported to be "quite satisfactory."

Knife-wielding attacker kills 3 Israelis

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An Arab laborer shouting "God is Great!" stabbed three Israelis to death Sunday as he rampaged through a Jewish neighborhood, apparently seeking revenge for the Temple Mount killings, police said.

One victim managed to shoot and wound the attacker, who was then seized by furious residents, ending the rampage in the Baka area of southern Jerusalem, police said.

The attack inflamed tensions in the capital and brought in a stream of police reinforcements as vengeance-seeking Jews took briefly to the streets.

Police spokesman Aharon Elechayani said his forces would bar Arabs from traveling into Jerusalem on Monday.

Two Palestinian factions claimed responsibility for Sunday's attack, but police said they believed the assailant acted alone. The suspect was identified as Omar Abu Sirhan, a 19-year-old Arab laborer from the village of Ubadiyah in the occupied West Bank.

Police said his motive apparently was revenge for the Oct. 8 blood bath on the Temple Mount, in which 19 Palestinians, killed at least 19 of them.

Avi Cohen, the officer leading the interrogation, said the attacker seemed to have chosen his victims at random. He said Abu Sirhan had no known criminal background.

Staunch Auon supporter, wife, 2 children slain

The Associated Press

BAABDA, Lebanon — Five uniformed gunmen on Sunday shot to death a staunch supporter of ousted Gen. Michel Aoun and his wife and two small sons at their home east of Beirut, police said.

The identities of the gunmen were not known and there was no immediate claim of responsibility for the slaying of Dany Chamoun, son of the late President Camille Chamoun.

The assailants came a week after Syrian and Government troops led by President Hafez Assad crushed Aoun's militia in Lebanon's Christian heartland. Aoun remains in the French Embassy, where he sought asylum when his forces were attacked.

Police said the assailants, using 9mm pistols equipped with silencers, riddled the Chamouns with bullets in their fifth-floor apartment in the hilltop suburb of Baabda.

Chamoun, 56, Ingrid Abdel-Noor and their son Tarek, 7, died instantly. The other son, Julien, 5, was taken to a nearby hospital where he died 15 minutes after admission, police said.

The Christian leader's 11-month-old daughter, Tamara, escaped unharmed. Reporters saw her held by her weeping governess at the Chamoun apartment.

The assassins arrived in two cars at the entrance to the nine-story building at 6 a.m. while four guards assigned to protect the Chamoun family were changing shifts, police said.

Chamoun, a Maronite Catholic, was one of the most outspoken critics of Hrawi and Syria's military presence in Lebanon.

Officials impose curfew in northeast Nicaragua

The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The government imposed a curfew in a large area along Nicaragua's northeast Caribbean coast after rioting and looting broke out there last week, an official said here Sunday.

Information Minister Danilo Lacayo told reporters that authorities had taken control of the situation in the autonomous region about 450 miles northeast of the capital. But he refused to disclose what happened there.

Newspapers and other media in Managua said riots broke out Thursday because of food and other shortages in Puerto Cabezas, 450 miles northeast of Managua, and that several people were killed.

News reports from the isolated, sparsely populated Atlantic Coast have been contradictory. The area, inhabited mostly by English-speaking descendants of escaped slaves, and Misquito, Sumo and Rama Indians, has been isolated from the rest of Nicaragua for centuries.

Sources said the 11 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew was imposed Friday. Most government officials refused to provide information about the riots, and there are no telephone links to Puerto Cabezas, the main port in the region.

The newspaper La Prensa and other pro-government media accused the opposition Sandinistas of setting off the riots. The Sandinista media claimed some 300 former Contra rebels of the Vietnam Indian organization did the rioting.

Dear Mr. Wolff: Partner opened one heart and rebid three hearts over my two diamond response. Should this jump be treated as an unconditional force?

Dear Mr. Wolff: We had a squabble about a possible revoke in our "friendly foursome." A kibitzer volunteered some information...

ANSWER: Yes, it should. After a two-over-one response, opener's jump rebid is an unconditional force.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

WOLFF, SOLOFF.

"Often we can help each other more by leaving each other alone; at other times we need the hand-grasp and the word of cheer."

Elbert Hubbard.

Tuesday's South made his own way in both red suits, and things went south. See if you can find a way for South to improve on his plan.

South took the club as it drew trumps, ending in dummy. Then he took a diamond finesse, losing to West's queen. West washed his high club and exited safely with a diamond third round of diamonds, hoping for a 3-2 break, but it wasn't there. Two more heart losers were unavailing and the game suffered one down.

South could have saved himself by leading a low heart toward dummy's jack before cashing dummy's diamond ace. A good guess in hearts would have eliminated one loser in that suit. If West makes his queen, South finesse later. If West doesn't, South's ace drops the queen. However, that's not where South succeeded.

One added chance lies with drawing only two founded of trumps, and giving West the lead in clubs. Luckily West cannot lead a third-trump, and must give up a trick regardless of what he leads.

What if West had held a third-trump? This South would have been in a difficult position. He would have to guess whether to try hearts or diamonds, surely no worse off than he was before.

Confessing to microwave dependence

By Lucille DeViv
Orange County Register

I confess. I'm a microwave junkie. Home—from work—Pop—in a frozen food. Push a button. My cooking is done for the day.

It wasn't always thus. I cooked enormous pots of chili, enormous pans of macaroni and enormous sheets of cookies when my children were young. After they left home, habit prevailed until I tired of endless leftovers.

Then along came the microwave oven, so fast and easy. It suits me fine, though I admit I leap at any chance for a home-cooked meal.

I'm an appreciative guest. The smell of sizzling sausage or steaming soup drives me into raptures. I revert to childhood, remembering when every room in the house smelled of sauerkraut and sausage simmering on the stove; or fried fish; or corned beef and cabbage.

Stews simmered. Roasts took forever. No minute, this or minute, that. We're talking hours.

I recall trudging up to the house on winter evenings and glancing at the kitchen windows, all steamy, promising ambrosia.

I am not alone. Pauline Deutchman of Sherman Oaks, Calif., remembers that her mother, who worked with her father all day, came home and cooked chicken soup with boiled chicken, homemade noodles and sometimes, Matzo balls.

"I can still recall the delicious aroma as I entered our home," she writes. "Mama always made enough food to last two or three days. Sometimes I was tired of eating soup and baked chicken."

"As I write this, my tears are staining this tablet. My mother was a gentle, giving, generous woman."

And there you have it. It wasn't only the smell of food, it was the entire scene—the beloved cook, family rituals. In our house, everyone had to be seated before food was served; no straggling in late, no distractions. Eating on trays in the living room was unthinkable.

Blessings were asked, news of the day exchanged. When we fought, or acted too silly, or didn't clean our plates, we were banished to the next room where we could hear the laughter and imagine the dessert we had forfeited. What torture. Today, I enjoy cooking for guests. But for myself? I enjoy other things more. So did my mother. Once free of daily family demands, her favorite recreation was going to restaurants with friends.

And family gatherings at her house were strictly potluck. Did she yearn for the old days? Not her. She viewed cooking as a full-time chore that kept her from dancing and other good things. I share her view.

So I treasure the memories but salute my microwave.

By following a few tips, the trauma of speaking before others can be lessened.

STAGE FRIGHT

Many of the finest speakers began with a bad case of the jitters

By Julie Fanselow
Times-News writer

Even the best public speakers have horror stories about the first time they were asked to "say a few words."

"I really couldn't answer present to a roll call without feeling inferior," recalls Donna Scott of Twin Falls.

When she had to speak in front of others, she says, "it was something like being in shock." Her mouth would feel dry, like it was stuffed with cotton balls. Her hands would be "so wet they'd drip," and her legs would feel so wiggly she'd think she was doing the Watusi.

But Scott overcame all that and went on to become an Idaho state legislator, author and radio personality.

She received help from International Training in Communication, a group of women (formerly called the Toastmistress Club), who gather to learn about and practice speaking and parliamentary procedure.

"The end result," she says, "is now they can't shut me up."

Tiffany Smith, a top debater from Twin Falls High School, says she, too, was "historically shy." She had trouble speaking in front of people in informal as well as formal situations.

Her fellow debater Frank Kalange, also a senior at Twin Falls High, says he was never really nervous about speaking until he'd actually had to speak.

Then, he'd worry about sounding dumb and feeling self-conscious about his efforts. At his first tournament, he recalls, "my stomach was all over the place."

Both Smith and Kalange say their participation in speech and debate has helped them overcome feelings of fear and inadequacy. Smith helped represent Idaho in last summer's national high school debate tournament in San Jose, Calif., and Kalange ranked in the state's Top 10 last year for cross-examination debate.

Good speakers have a few tips to help take the trauma out of getting up and talking before others.

"Get yourself personally involved in your topic," Smith suggests. The more interested you are in your subject, the better job you'll do. "You'll want to let people know what you know."

Louise Koontz, who is currently president of the Twin Falls ITC group, recalls serving as mistress of ceremonies and coordinator for an event that drew 1,400 to the College of Southern Idaho in 1974.

"The occasion was a rally to encourage the Idaho Legislature to rescind its 1972 approval of the Equal Rights Amendment." "Your best successes come when you're doing something you believe in," Koontz says.

Be prepared. Practice your speech over and over again, "until you can do it in your sleep," Kalange says. He suggests practicing the talk in front of someone with whom you are comfortable—ideally, however, this person should also be willing to give you honest criticism of the speech.

Be a good listener when someone else is.

Looking good

Leather is durable, functional

Leather is functional outerwear at its best, says the Leather Apparel Association, a new trade group organized to educate the public about leather wear and care.

Sporty outerwear designs in luxury fabrics like leather have taken over American fashion by storm. Men and women are wearing armor and duffel coats with their suits and skirts to work as often as they wear them with jeans. In addition to the hooded toggle coats and three-fourths-length field jackets that are so popular, quilted or fringed leather garments are among the hottest new looks.

The leather color story varies from earthy spices and forest shades to neon brights and blocks of vivid colors. New styles often feature soft two-tone contrasts at the collar, cuffs, pockets and sleeve tabs.

Leather's easy-care durability makes it a popular choice for children's outerwear as well. Cold and wind resistant properties, combined with a porous nature which allows it to breathe, make leather an all-weather coat.

Double-breasted still popular

For many men, the double-breasted suit is a matter of such mystery and confusion that they would just as soon leave it alone until the fad passes. But the double-breasted suit is shaping up to be more than one of fashion's fleeting whims. It has been nearly five years since the double-breasted suit began to re-emerge as the stylish man's choice, and its popularity shows no signs of abating.

With double-breasted suits representing anywhere from 10 percent to 30 percent of the suit inventory at many specialty stores, it is worth taking a closer look at some of the most popular myths surrounding what insiders refer to as "d.b.s."

Sporty outerwear gets dressed up for '90s: Jacket in gold-washed, quilted leather.

Myth No. 1: Double-breasted suits are just a fad, that will quickly go out of style.

Myth No. 2: A double-breasted suit must always be worn buttoned-up.

Colas hinder nicotine gum

People who try to cut back on their smoking by chewing nicotine gum may be hindering the process when they drink coffee or colas, according to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The nicotine in the gum is designed to be absorbed through saliva in the mouth, but a study conducted at the Addiction Research Center of the National Institute on Drug Abuse in Baltimore found that coffee and colas change the pH balance of saliva enough to nullify absorption.

The study recommends that any substance more acidic than tap water should be avoided just before or during chewing nicotine gum. The study also says users of nicotine gum should wait at least 15 minutes after eating or drinking to pop the gum into their mouths.

Anti-cavity pill search goes on

It might sound far-fetched, but the search for an anti-cavity pill goes on. Dental researchers believe they may have a workable anti-cavity pill by the year 2000.

And when they have it, it may be possible to give years-old infants a pill to prevent the development of cavities, the Academy of General Dentistry says.

According to Dr. Howard Glazer, spokesman for the academy, researchers have already found that cavity-causing bacteria begins to form in infants only after teeth begin to develop. The goal is to find a vaccine that would stop the bacteria from ever forming.

But, even if the anti-cavity pill is perfected, children will still need to spend time with their toothbrushes. Cavities would be history, but gum disease will still be around.

Mammograms available

By the end of this year, the United States will have four times the number of mammography machines needed to screen women for breast cancer, the Annals of Internal Medicine reports this month.

But there's irony in the oversupply of machines. Because most mammography machines are underutilized, the cost of mammograms is high and this discourages many women from having them on a regular basis.

The American College of Physicians recommends routine mammograms after age 50, but less than 30 percent of women get a mammogram when they should, Annals says.

Kids learn by answering

Where parents expect and encourage their small children to respond to questions, they are teaching them valuable language skills.

Erika Hoff-Ginsberg, Ph.D., a language research scientist at the University of Wisconsin who studies how small children learn to speak, observed that children whose parents ask questions and expect answers acquire language skills faster than their peers.

In her research, funded in part by the National Institutes of Health, she also noted that children are more likely to learn some parts of speech like nouns and verbs at a faster rate when parents repeat what they say, varying the patterns slightly.

Dr. Hoff-Ginsberg counsels against drilling children in language with too many questions and constant repetition.

"What's important is getting the child interested and involved in verbal interaction," she says.

Simple precautions can help ensure a frightfully safe Halloween

DEAR READERS: Don't tell me it's time to prepare for another Halloween, again! Well, it is, which means it's time to remind you that:

- Somebody's child will be seriously injured or killed in a Halloween-related traffic accident.
- Somebody's child will be badly maimed or fatally burned due to a flammable costume.
- Somebody's child will become violently ill or die after eating poorly made or an apple containing a razor blade.
- Somebody's child will be

Dear Abby
'Abigail
VanBuren

coated into an automobile or lured into a secluded area and sexually assaulted.

To make sure that child isn't yours, here are some tips to ensure the safety of your children:

- Use flameproof costumes only. If costumes are made at home, use the fabric with a flame-resistant solution.
- Because masks, floppy hats, wigs and veils often interfere with a child's vision; use makeup instead.

- Accessories such as swords, broomsticks, hatchets, wands, etc. should be made of cardboard rather than plastic, metal or wood. Sharp items are dangerous.
- Provide youngsters with flashlights to prevent falls on sidewalks or porch steps. (Positively no lighted candles should be carried!)
- Decorate your child's costume and trick-or-treat bag with reflective tape to make them highly visible to motorists.
- Remind children that they should never enter the home of a stranger or accept rides.

Adults can help by keeping their yards well-lighted.

- Parents should check all "treats" before allowing children to eat them.
- Very young children should never be out after dark unless accompanied by an adult.

$6, make it a safe Halloween, and come Thanksgiving, you'll have more to be thankful for.

DEAR ABBY: What do you give a 78-year-old woman who doesn't need anything and can buy anything she wants? The woman is our mother. The occasion was her birthday, so all five daughters came home to Elgin, Ill., for the weekend to help Mom celebrate. We included her only sister and her grown grand-daughter.

We all got into my station wagon and drove to Sears for a family photograph. Then we drove to Chicago where my father had his business 30 years ago. From there, we drove to our old home from which we moved in 1934. We had dinner at the restaurant where my sister had worked 20 years ago. The next morning we all went out for a farewell breakfast and then went on our way. We made plans to get together again next year.

to visit the Swedish neighborhood in Chicago, since Mom's parents came over from Sweden about 90 years ago.

The memories of that weekend meant just as much to us five daughters as they did to Mom. And the memories will last much longer than any material gift we could have given her.

Just thought I'd like to share this with you because...

GLAD WE DID IT!
DEAR GLAD: I'm glad you shared it with me. A trip down memory lane is a wonderful gift from someone who has everything.

Looks

Myth No. 3. Short, heavy men must never wear them.

Myth No. 4. They make one look stuffy and up-tight and are only suitable for formal occasions.

Sportswear becomes softer for spring season

NEW YORK — Spring will be a soft, even mild season. If sportswear has anything to say about it, fabrics will drap gently, skirts will fall prettily.

New York sportswear for spring looks as if it has finally caught up with the Italian and French designers who have eschewed rigid tailoring and hard fabrics for several years now.

Wearable and easily coordinated, the newest separates often look like old friends — ones that have been in our closet for years.

• Ron-Leal — Leal utilizes interchangeable patterns and subtle fabrications of viscose and linen, rayon and silk. He aims at what he calls "Liz Clarkme" — and younger wearers with Jaxsport line, which is very well priced. A ribbed cotton double-breasted cotton blazer, for instance, trimmed in gold, will retail for $100.

• Liz Clarkme — The active line, Lizwear, contains a great cactus-colored suede jacket and a short, flared flax-toned linen and cotton trench coat. Lizsport, on the other hand, is big on trench jackets, elasticated around the middle. Jaxsport separates such as navy and white Fair Isle sweaters, and white cotton 'field jackets' faced in a tiny floral print.

• Donna Karan — DKNY's successful "weekend" sportswear line has added something new — Donna's Jeans. These are washed-out denim with, finally, a designer look. The best is a jean jacket trimmed with pearl beads.

• Anne Klein — Designers Maurice Antaya and Helen Wong have opted for a pretty and fluid collection of soft crepes and georgettes. Colors come in two ways: muted pinks in "magnolia" prints and silk tweds or neon bright in tri-color "jockey" pullovers, shorts and pants. One model underscored these contrasts by wearing slip-on moccasins in two different colors.

Speaking

speaking. Even if a topic doesn't interest you, say to yourself, this is the most interesting, vital person I've ever heard," says Donna Bach, another ITC member who shares hosting duties of KTLX radio's "Party Line" with Scott.

Listening well to others can help you forget your own nervousness. Don't be thinking what you're going to say next, it's the whole time someone else is speaking.

Try to relax. Smith says she sits down by herself and clears her mind. Kalange says he often prays.

Fran Tanner, head of the College of Southern Idaho's speech and drama department, suggests using a technique often employed by athletes. "Try to visualize your success," she says. In your mind, see yourself up in front of the group, giving the speech and doing it well.

Look the part, dressing appropriately for the occasion. Although more informal attire would be acceptable in many situations, Smith and Kalange suggest the following guidelines for speakers in high-stakes situations — a debate, a politician's speech or a job interview, for instance.

Men should wear a black, dark blue or dark gray suit, a white or blue button-down, Oxford-style shirt and a "power" tie in red or yellow.

Groups teach speaking skills

The Times-News

Interested in polishing your public speaking skills? Here are some groups geared to helping people do just that:

• International Training in Communication, formerly known as the Toastmasters Club, meets the first and third Fridays of each month at the "Wok 'n' Grill," 1188 Blue Lakes Blvd. N., Twin Falls. For more information, call 733-2365.

• Twin Falls Toastmaster's Club #149, meets at 6:30 p.m. each Tuesday at the China Garden, 206 Shoshone St. W., Twin Falls. For more information, call 733-5500 or 733-1422.

The ideal is "conversative with a touch of flair," Kalange says.

Women should wear a business-style suit, again in a dark color, with dark or natural color nylons. High heels help boost the "power" factor. Earrings should be large enough to be seen by the audience, but not too large — or dangling — and makeup should be kept to a minimum.

• Don't be worried if you can't completely reign in your nervousness. Tanner says stage fright isn't so much fear as an anxiety created by the flow of adrenaline through the body.

People should be happy they have the anxiety, Tanner adds; professional performers worry when they don't feel anxious. The trick, she says, is to learn to control the anxiety so you are its master, not its slave.

Marjorie Kramer, another ITC member, recalls the first time she had to speak before the group. "My hands were trembling so hard you could hear the pencil tapping against the plate," she says.

She still feels that nervousness to day, but it's different now.

"You don't get over the butterflies," she notes. "You teach the butterflies how to fly in formation."

• Think positive. When someone is asked to give a talk, "there's a reason behind their being chosen to speak," Spight says.

Obviously, she says, the people who have asked you to talk believe in your ability to succeed, and they already like and respect you. "There's not much chance you can let them down," she adds.

CDC: Vaccinations needed for adults

ATLANTA (AP) - Too few adult Americans get the vaccinations they need to protect their health and maybe even their lives. Federal health officials said.

"Despite the continuing occurrence of vaccine-preventable diseases among adults in the United States, safe and effective vaccines recommended for adults are not optimally used," the Centers for Disease Control said in its "Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report." For example, the CDC said:

While influenza vaccine is about 75 percent effective in reducing deaths in older people at high risk of the disease, a 1987 survey found only 32 percent of adults over age 65 had received flu shots.

Large measles outbreaks occurred on college campuses in five states in 1989; only one state required students to be immunized before they enrolled.

Between 6,000 and 8,000 health care workers are infected each year with the hepatitis B virus. To minimize the risk of hepatitis B and Canadian medical schools required their students to get hepatitis B vaccinations.

Pneumococcal vaccine is more than 60 percent effective in preventing invasive pneumococcal infections, which cause as much as one-fourth of all pneumonia cases and 40,000 deaths a year. A 1985 study concluded that only 10 percent of people at high risk received the shots.

Between 1985 and 1989, adults made up 92 percent of the nation's tetanus patients, 87 percent of hepatitis B patients and 45 percent of cases of rubella, also known as German measles. All those diseases are prevented by vaccine, the CDC said.

The National Coalition for Adult Immunization, which includes the American Medical Association, the American Lung Association, the CDC, other medical groups and drug companies, has set standards for adult immunizations. It recommends health providers routinely make their adult patients aware of the shots they may need.

If the standards are implemented, it would markedly improve delivery of vaccines to adults by the year 2000, the CDC said.

Stress and exercise

Physical activity acts as fine outlet for pent-up energy

It's hard to escape life's day-to-day problems, but there's one way to at least put them on hold for a while: Not only will exercise improve your physical appearance, but it can reduce stress as well.

Bodylessons
Judith Sheppard
Missett

Don't let stress-induced energy stay trapped in your body. Instead of stomping your feet in a fit of rage, put on your workout gear and head to an exercise class, walk around the park or suit up for a swim.

According to David Endler, Ph.D., director of the Stress Center in New York City, vigorous exercise increases blood circulation, uses up adrenaline - a hormone produced when the body experiences anxiety - and, following a workout, relaxes the skeletal muscles.

During activity, the body produces biochemicals called endorphins which have proven to act as a natural tranquilizer.

This aerobic dance movement is a fun and relaxing way to condition your body.

When performing this exercise try to maintain a training heart rate level between 65 and 80 percent of its maximum for at least 20 minutes.

To reap the benefits, your workout program should consist of aerobic activity three to five times each week.

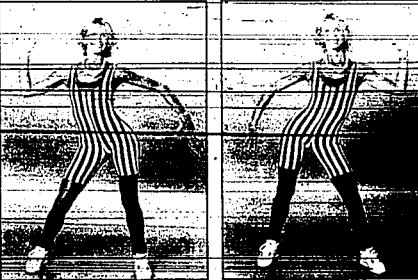

Stand with your feet apart, toes pointed slightly outward. Your knees should be slightly bent. Bending the knees causes the quadriceps and other muscles in the legs to work, thereby increasing your heart rate. (For more energy output, bend your knees more for a less intense version, bend your knees less. If you want a very intense version, you can add a hop from side-to-side.)

At the same time, shift your right forearm upward while the left forearm shifts downward. The arm movements will be a less intense version of the major muscles of the upper body (deltoids, biceps, trapezius).

Next, reverse the hips to left while the left forearm goes up and the right forearm goes down. Alternate the side-to-side movements for approximately 37 sets. Combine.

Study finds accidental deaths have decreased 21 percent for decade

CHICAGO (AP) — The rate at which Americans died from accidents decreased an estimated 21 percent in the last decade, according to a group that promotes safety. Experts attributed the improvement to seat belt laws, stricter firearm requirements and tighter toughened safety regulations.

The National Safety Council, a public service organization with headquarters here, reported the accident toll sank to the fourth leading cause of death, as they were at the beginning of the 1980s.

But the combination of new laws and lower public tolerance for unsafe behavior at home, at work and especially behind the wheel of a car has improved Americans' safety record, said Alan Hoskin, director of the council's statistics department.

"In general, people are demonstrating more concern for safety in all facets of their lives," Hoskin said.

The number of fatal accidents went from 103,312 in 1979 to an es-

'It has become over the last decade much less socially acceptable to drink and drive.'

Alan Hoskin, of the National Safety Council

timaged 94,500 in 1989, a decrease of 10 percent, according to figures the council released in August.

To arrive at the 21 percent decline, statisticians used the overall number of fatalities, calculated a rate per 100,000 people and adjusted that rate for the fact that there are more elderly now — a factor which could tend to inflate the rate.

Nearly half of all accidental deaths occur on the roads, and the council's figures show a 20 percent drop in the rate of motor-vehicle deaths.

"It has become over the last decade much less socially acceptable to drink and drive," Hoskin said. "And working with that is the fact that more states have passed child-safety-seat and safety-belt laws."

The death rate from accidents in the workplace dropped 29 percent between 1979 and 1989, while the rate of deaths caused by public accidents such as plane crashes and drownings declined 22 percent during that time.

The rate of deaths from accident in the workplace, including falls, poisonings and fires — was 16 percent lower for the decade in which home smoke detectors and child safety seats were commonplace, Hoskin said.

The death rate in the home would have been even lower if it weren't for a significant increase in accidental fatal drug overdoses.

"When people think of poisonings in the home, they still think it's a problem of small children getting into the medicine cabinet," Hoskin said. "The problem is actually adults who are accidentally overdosing on illegal drugs."

The growth of the consumer movement began in the 1970s, which has also contributed to the decline in accidental deaths, Hoskin said.

"There's no question that people are demanding more safety now than they were in the past," said Russell Shew, a researcher for the Center for Auto Safety, a Washington-based consumer group. "They're demanding to know crash-test results and to have air bags in their cars."

Americans' changed attitudes also have spurred growth in the safety industry, with consumers' developing interest in everything from no-slip bathmats to safer cutting boards, market researchers say.

"People are just much more vig-ilant these days," said Leo J. Shapiro, chairman of Leo J. Shapiro Associates, a market research firm in Chicago.

"There's an enormous amount of energy associated with extending life, whether it's with diet and health products or more exercise," he added. "After all that effort, people feel foolish if they allow themselves to get smashed up in a car or injured in the home." The safety council, a nonprofit organization chartered by Congress, was established in 1913 by a group of businessmen concerned about educating people about safety in the workplace.

Its safety figures are published every year in a book called Accident Facts, distributed to the public and its 14,000 members.

When seconds count... the enhanced 911 system

Enhanced-911 is an automated routing system for emergency calls (fire, police, ambulance) that instantly routes emergency calls to the proper public safety answering point.

The system displays to the dispatcher the caller's telephone number, address, and whether it is a residence, business, or pay phone. It identifies the proper fire, police, and medical services — all automatically.

The instant display of this information speeds dispatch, helps prevent reporting errors, and allows for single-button call transfer to the appropriate emergency agency.

The system locks on to an emergency call, allowing the caller to then leave, as from a burning building.
