The cost of garbage looms for Magic Valley

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley residents like Americans in general, are going to have to change the way they get rid of garbage.

They are going to have to reduce the amount of trash they generate, recycle what they manufacture and be more careful about burying garbage.

The reason is cost — much higher costs for disposing of solid waste that will come

The landfill crisis

A Times-News special report with new federal regulations called Subtitle D. Those pending rules, which are aimed at protecting groundwater and air quality by ensuring that landfills do not leak contaminants into the soil or the air, are likely to require local governments to build expensive new, plastic-lined, solid waste facilities, or costly burn plants.

No one knows when the Subtitle D regulations will finally be issued, but when they do come down local governments will have two years to bring their landfills up to standard.

The Magic Valley isn't ready yet, but local officials are getting up to make some drastic changes in solid waste policy.

Some of them recently went to Oregon to view a landfill generally considered to be one of the best in the country.

While it is doubtful the Magic Valley will build a landfill exactly like the one in Oregon, their trip gave them an idea of what it takes to build a landfill that is environmentally safe.

The accompanying stories, part of a two-part Times-News series exploring solid waste issues in the Magic Valley, look at the Oregon landfill and Twin Falls County's landfill to give readers an idea of where we stand and where we need to go.

Landfill: A cross-section of throwaway culture

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Spend a couple of hours at the main Twin Falls County landfill south of here and it becomes apparent why the federal government wants to clean up garbage dumps.

Not that the Twin Falls landfill is worse than most; it probably is not. But a late October tour of the dump, with its squadrons of files and its pervasive stench, makes two things clear.

One is the incredible amount of garbage Twin Falls County produces. The other is the array of products its residents use once and throw away.

This wastefulness is likely to change when new federal regulations on landfills, called Subtitle D, come on line soon. The rules are designed to protect groundwater and air quality. They will make the cost of burying garbage in a landfill much more expensive, meaning everyone will have economic incentive to reduce waste and recycle aluminum, glass, plastic, cardboard and newspapers.

Twin Falls County probably will have to close its current landfills to meet Subtitle D requirements and build a new one to exacting — and very costly — environmental standards.

The county is now talking with the other seven Magic Valley counties about cooperating with them to build one or more new regional solid waste facilities.

Lack of space at the three current Twin Falls County landfills is not a problem, even though the Murrain dump is near capacity. The main landfill still has five or six years left. The one in Buhl has room too.

Mike Peterson, left, and Tomita Gheorghita drop off a load of trash at the Twin Falls County landfill. Magic Valley residents will soon have to adjust to new disposal methods.

Leakage of contaminants into the groundwater probably is not a problem either, at least for now. Darrell Helder, the county's solid waste director, has run 1,000-foot pipes along the perimeter of main dump to check for leaching of contaminated water into the soil.

"I haven't found any liquid in my pipes," Helder said.

The water table under the main dump is deep and the average rainfall in the area is only around 10 inches annually, which further reduces the chances of contaminants leaching through the soil and into the groundwater. But the near Twin Falls County landfill will almost certainly have to be lined with plastic to ensure that polluted water does not seep into the ground.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency estimates America creates 190 million tons of garbage annually. Twin Falls County is doing its part in that profligate effort.

County estimates 150,000 to 300,000 pounds of garbage go into the main county landfill every day. Another 50 tons go into the satellite dumps in Buhl and Murrain.

The county's main landfill encompasses 320 acres about nine miles south of the Twin Falls city limits.

The dump is full of just about everything useless and vile. There are dead animals

High-tech landfill in Oregon is high-cost too

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

ARLINGTON, Ore. — Most landfills do not need a visitors' center.

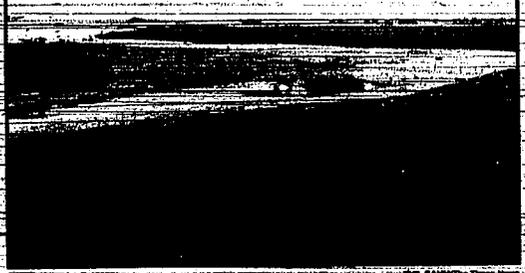

But this is no ordinary dump.

The Gilliam County Sanitary Landfill is the $16.6 million solid waste disposal facility, clean, high-tech, expensive. Thousands of people drive the Columbia River Gorge each year to visit the site in eastern Oregon, 10 miles south of Arlington, to learn how to bury garbage so that it does not pollute groundwater or forever destroy the landscape.

With the Oregon state flag snapping in the wind overhead the visitors' center houses offices, a closed-circuit television security system and a conference room, where people are briefed about the relatively new science of burying garbage.

A receptionist offers coffee and soft drinks. Free souvenir T-shirts and hats are available too.

Visitors come from as far away as Australia to view the dump.

Plastic linings can be part of landfills' sophisticated future.

There won't be one just like it in the Magic Valley, but county commissioners, solid waste workers, government employees and interested citizens from Twin Falls, Minidoka, Lincoln and Gooding counties boarded a bus to the landfill recently to get some ideas for the solid waste facilities they'll have to build soon to meet tough and expensive new federal rules.

With those rules, known as Subtitle D, coming on line soon, Magic Valley commissioners wanted to see first-hand what it takes to build a garbage dump that can meet the pending regulations.

They got an eyeful. The technology impressed them; but also left them wondering if the Magic Valley could afford a state-of-the-art facility to dispose of garbage.

Acres of buried trash

Gilliam County's trash dump encompasses 2,036 acres and cost an estimated $76 million when it opened last January. That cost will climb as more of the landfill is opened and used in the future.

Garbage will be buried in only 636 acres of the facility, but with an average soil depth of 7.5 feet the landfill could take hundreds of thousands of tons of trash each.

GOP heartened by late polls, Democrats project solid gains

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Candidates in Tuesday's congressional and gubernatorial elections hurried through a final weekend of campaigning Sunday while party leaders posted rival predictions of success.

Republicans were heartened by a string of public opinion polls trending in their favor and expressed optimism about the California governor's race, the biggest prize of the midterm campaign.

Democrats remained confident of solid gains in both Congress and the statehouses.

In California, Republican gubernatorial candidate Pete Wilson shrined to a series of public rallies, while Democrat Dianne Feinstein visited several churches, including St. Paul of the Shipwreck in San Francisco.

In the nation's most closely watched

Senate race, GOP Sen. Jesse Helms passed up church services in favor of extra rest. Democratic rival Harvey Gantt attended services and scheduled an evening rally.

Not surprisingly, officials in both parties predicted success when the votes are counted — and defined the term to their advantage.

Ron Brown, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said his party would "pick up the governor's seat. We're going to pick up in the Senate, and we're going to pick up in the House."

White House chief of staff John Sununu possessed Democrats would retain control of both the House and Senate in the 102nd Congress, and perhaps pad their majorities in both houses.

But he quickly added, "What we have set as a goal is to be significantly better than

Iraq rejects withdrawal from occupied Kuwait

The Associated Press

In a new outburst of belligerence, Iraq said Sunday it was ready to fight a "dangerous war" rather than ever give up Kuwait. One European official warned that divisions over the hostage issue are endangering the anti-Iraq alliance.

"We are going to negotiate on Kuwait," Iraq's information minister, Latif Jassim, told a news conference in Baghdad.

He insisted Iraq's annexation of Kuwait, which it overran three months ago, would stand.

"We are going to defend our 19th province on any condition, even if we have to fight a dangerous war," he said, referring to Kuwait.

Iraq also said it was recalling an unspecified number of retired army officers to active duty.

Meanwhile, four American hostages were on their way home Saturday after being freed, and fifteen Europeans arrived in Jordan after being released by the Iraqis.

The new Iraqi vow to keep Kuwait at all costs came only hours after a two-day Japanese prime minister Yasuhiro Nakasone met with Saddam — and said the Iraqi president had demonstrated "great calmness and seriousness" about seeking peace.

President turns to telephones on busy day

HOUSTON (AP) — President Bush worked the telephones hard Sunday, calling British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, five Republican candidates around the country, including Utah congressional candidate Genevieve Atwood and a House member whose name he picked from the phone book on a dare.

"You won't believe this, but this is the president of the United States," he told a woman he identified as Mary Johnson of Houston. "I'm just doing a little work at the polls at the polling operation trying to get people out to vote."

Bush told the woman he hoped she would vote for Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams as well as for other Republicans.

"Will you?" he asked in apparent, albeit misplaced, delight at her response.

The woman told reporters later that she was a registered Democrat, had voted for Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis in 1988 and planned to vote for Democratic Texas gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards.

"I just told him I was going to vote," Ms. Johnson told The Associated Press. "I didn't tell him who I was going to vote for."

Bush made the call as he spent a low-key day pursuing both diplomatic and political telephone in his adopted hometown, where he will vote on Tuesday.

In the morning he phoned Mrs. Thatcher for what White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said was a discussion of Persian Gulf strategy.

He also made pep talks by phone to separate rallies for two GOP candidates in Nebraska and one each in Utah, Maryland and Alaska.

But his most unusual call of the day came as he and Williams attended a GOP get-out-the-vote center and Bush's volunteers in making a phone bank.

After calling a half dozen voters from a list of Republicans given to him by party workers, a reporter suggested that Bush pick a number at random.

President Bush prepares to make a random phone call to Mallissa Johnson in Houston Sunday.

Bush grabbed the book, picking out a name and saying, "this may be tough. This is risky."

"Needless to say, I appreciate it if you could vote for our full ticket, but I'm not going to make a dare to call you on Sunday, but we will call here believing in participating in the political process. I don't know if you're registered, but if you are I hope you'll go to the polls and I hope you'll vote for our ticket," he said.

He told the woman: "They dared me to open the book and just pick out a number, and you're up at the top of the page. ... And so, thank you. I hope I didn't impose on your family."

Bush was less talkative when it came to reporters' questions.

"No questions today. It's Sunday. Been to church. I can't do it. I'm too tired today," Bush said when reporters persisted.

"Dealing with a Congress completely controlled by Democrats is not an easy assignment," the president said in an audio-linkup with

Monday; here, Tyler and Waco, Richards' hometown.

The president made short, upbeat remarks in a succession of afternoon phone calls to campaign workers at rallies across the nation — steering away from controversial issues like his support of a package including new tax incentives.

To the Hal Daub in a former House member, is seeking to unseat Democratic Sen. James Eron, who has been leading in recent polls.

"I need more support" (from Congress, Bush said, delivering his traditional campaign message that if Republicans could wrest control of Congress from Democrats "we would control the agenda — we wouldn't be playing on the defense."

Bush also telephoned a rally for Nebraska Republican Gov. Kay Orr, who is in a tight race with Democratic challenger Ben Nelson.

Speaking to campaign workers in Salt Lake City for Republican congressional candidate Genevieve Atwood, Bush attacked the "tax and spend mentality of the Democrats."

"Good luck on Tuesday. Don't take anything for granted," he told the average result in an off-year election. And we do that it will be a success. Historically, the party controlling the White House loses roughly two dozen House seats in the election midway through the president's first term.

A nationwide New York Times-CBS survey depicts an electorate pessimistic about the economy and unhappy with its government, and the pundits said they were wary of making predictions.

"Definitely a Yogi Berra year, which is it isn't over till it's over," Democratic pollster Peter Hart said on Cable News Network's News-maker Sunday.

One thing was for certain, it was almost over.

At stake in Tuesday's balloting are 34 Senate seats, a new 435-member House and 46 governorships. More than 6100 legislative races are on the ballot, and voters in 41 states and the District of Columbia will decide the fate of hundreds of ballot initiatives.

Adding spice to the mix was increased intensity in the state legislative races. An estimated 19 House seats will move from northern and midwestern industrial states to the Sun Belt before 1992, and millions have been spent to maximize each party's strength in the state legislatures that will redraw the House-district boundaries.

Florida's gubernatorial candidates campaigned on network television. "We're saying no new taxes next year," said Republican Gov. Bob Martinez, appearing on ABC's This Week with David Brinkley. "And that's where Lawton Chiles says we need them."

Confused Chiles, the leader in one late pre-election poll. "Well, I think that I don't agree right now that you have to have new revenue."

Fresh polls pointed to a Republican trend in close races to pick governors in Kansas and Ohio, and even Massachusetts, where a survey showed William Weld in a tight race with Democrat John Silber.

Minnesota Sen. Rudy Boschwitz counted as among the GOP's endangered incumbents, led in an apparently widening edge over Democrat Paul Wellstone according to a survey of voters in their state.

But a new survey in Texas suggested Democrat Ann Richards was gaining on Republican oilman Clayton Williams.

"The politicians" and "the pundits made the rounds of the Sunday's network interview programs, generally agreeing that Democrats would retain control of the Senate and House, and emerge from Tuesday's elections with more governorships than the Republicans."

But beyond there, there was little consensus.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri predicted on NBC's "Meet the Press" that Democrats would pick up six or seven House seats, and two or three in the Senate.

Sunday, in a combative interview on the same network, said the party could lose between four and 12 seats in the House, and predicted the two sides would "break even, plus or minus one" in the Senate races.

To Saudis, the West is repository of decadence

The Chicago Tribune

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia — The young man had a problem, so he wrote a letter to the Islamic advice columnist in the daily newspaper. "I will be going to America in a few months time to pursue my studies. I am worried about what might happen to me there," he wrote. "My worries are based because I often see bad dreams in which I seem to be about to commit some sinful action."

The columnist's response was blunt: Don't go.

"Your own natural desire and the type of society you will be living in will combine to drag you into the path of error and sin," he warned. "But if going to America was unavoidable, the columnist told the young man "to get married before you go ... and take your wife with you." If marriage was not possible, he suggested that the young man think of AIDS every time you feel the temptation very strong." He reminded the young man that AIDS is widespread in America.

In many ways, this exchange seems to crystallize Saudi Arabia's difficulties in coming to terms with the West.

To the Saudis, the West epitomized by the United States is the repository of all that is decadent and dangerous in the world. From the time of the Crusades, the West has been seen as the antithesis of Islam — the path of error and sin.

At the same time, Saudi Arabia's vast oil wealth has drawn it inexorably into the West's orbit. Saudis feel an attraction to the West and its power, technology, consumer goods and pervasive popular culture.

For years, the Saudis have tried to pretend otherwise, but now, with more than 200,000 American residents camped on Saudi soil, the country has been forced into a reckoning of sorts. You have guys running around this country with Ph.D.s from Berkeley whose fathers live in tents and think the world is flat — their great-grandfather, Hajj Assad, was one of the U.S.-educated Saudi businessmen.

Saudi Arabia in the 1990s is a country with one foot in the 7th Century and the other in the 20th.

It is attempting to transit the gap in a single giant step, without benefit of a Renaissance, an Enlightenment, an Industrial Revolution or any of the other stages that produced the modern societies of the West.

Although Saudi Arabia is a modern financial superpower, the sensibilities of tribe and clan remain deeply ingrained.

The military, for example, is equipped with the latest American technology, but it is counterbalanced by a national guard whose members are carefully selected on the basis of tribal loyalties.

Throughout Saudi Arabia's brief modern history, Islam has been the anchor to its past, the compass to its future. In the past decade, as the pace of modernization has accelerated, the retreat back into Islam has actually hastened.

Secretary of State JAMES A. Baker III met with troops Sunday.

Syrian tanks arrive on Saudi soil to check Iraq

YANBU, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Syrian tanks and the lead elements of an infantry division landed Sunday in Saudi Arabia to join the Arab forces sent to the region in response to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

Saudi Prince Khalid, commander of all Arab troops deployed in the sands south of Iraq and Kuwait, saluted and warmly greeted the Syrian troops. "We are all here to fight if it is necessary," said Khalid, commander of the Saudi air force and nephew of King Fahd.

"We are all in the same line," Khalid said at a dockside news conference. "It is really a pleasure to have a Syrian armored division here. That makes me very happy."

The Syrian troops will be under the Saudi flag, the prince said. But he noted they have "a direct line" to their president, Hafez Assad.

Maj. Gen. Ali Habib, commander of Syrian troops in Saudi Arabia, refused to answer questions. But a spokesman said between 2,500 and 3,000 troops were aboard the cargo ship Saudi Qusair. The remaining elements of the 15,000-member 9th Armored Division would arrive in the next few weeks, Saudi officials said.

The Syrian vanguard consisted of some 100 tanks, which are standard fighting armor for Syria but not the top-of-the-line model sold by Moscow. The Iraqis have 200 T-72 tanks, which have more firepower and range.

Baker's pep talk meets grumbling U.S. troops

Knight-Ridder News Service — his diplomatic mission to the Middle East, Soviet Union and Western Europe, he could only offer the troops high-minded rhetoric about the importance of their mission: "Unprovoked aggression should not be rewarded."

That, Baker later acknowledged, was not what they wanted to hear.

"The main question is knowing what the future holds," Baker told reporters after his one-hour visit to the base. "That's the one thing that people are asking more than anything else and of course that's something that right now, can't be answered with a great deal of specificity."

Baker, a Texas native, expects to have a clearer answer in a week, U.S. plans is holding out hopes for a peaceful resolution of the Persian Gulf crisis while trying to rally other nations around the use of military force if diplomacy fails to dislodge Iraq from Kuwait.

The uncertainty and the endless waiting in the desert — a month now for the troops here — appeared to bother many soldiers more than the prospect of going to war against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

And despite assurances from their commanders that morale is good, several soldiers expressed impatience, frustration or anger about spending an indefinite period in so harsh and isolated an environment.

"Let's go get him (Saddam) and go home," said one soldier, who did not give his name.

Actress Mary Martin dead at 76

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Mary Martin, the spunky actress who flew across the Broadway stage and the nation's television screens as Peter Pan, has died of cancer. She was 76.

Martin died Saturday in her Rancho Mirage home near Palm Springs, publisher Richard Grant said Sunday. Grant represents Martin's son, actor Larry Hagman.

Martin, who captivated audiences with her ebullient personality and joyous singing in such musicals as "South Pacific," "The Sound of Music" and "I Do! I Do!" and "One Touch of Venus," was one of the New York theater's leading ladies for more than 30 years.

"I'm going to spend the rest of my life missing her. There's nobody like her. She's a great lady, and a great person on the stage," said actress Carol Channing, who co-starred in Martin's last play "Legends." Channing visited with Martin hours before her death.

Martin was sensational all her life — whether she was Peter Pan or Nellie Forbush or Annie Oakley or Maria Von Trapp. I loved her dearly, and I shall miss her."

The "bright light and good cheer" she brought to the world will not fade merely because of her absence, said William Hammerstein II, who wrote the lyrics for "South Pacific" and "The Sound of Music."

Mary Martin and her son, fellow actor Larry Hagman, performed together in London in 1980.

television of Peter Pan, the boy who never wanted to grow up. "All my life, I wanted to be Peter Pan," Martin once said. "My poor mother never knew what I was going to do with me. I was a child, but she surprised my parents. I was always doing something strange — like at 5, jumping off the garage. I wanted to fly, and all I did was break my collarbone."

Martin, who was born Dec. 1, 1913, made her first stage appearance singing at a fireman's hall in her hometown — of Weatherford, Texas. Her father was a lawyer and her mother a violin teacher.

After a year at the University of Texas, Martin married Benjamin Hagman in 1930. They divorced the following year after the birth of her son Larry, best known for his role as J.R. Ewing on television's "Dallas."

Martin left Texas to pursue a singing career in California and made her professional debut as a nightclub vocalist at the Trocadero in Hollywood. It was there she was seen by producer Charles Schwab, who put her in Cole Porter's "Leave It to Me."

"The musical, which opened on Broadway in 1936, made the unknown performer a star. Each night she sold out, and she was being a coy striptease while singing the musical's best-known song, "My Heart Belongs to Daddy."

Marijuana magazine shutting down

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — Sin Semilla magazine for marijuana users, because of its national anti-drug climate, its publisher says. "Drug hysteria and paranoia" in the United States led to circulation declines for the quarterly magazine, publisher Tom Alexander of Corvallis said recently. The last issue of the periodical, named for a potent strain of pot will be released this month.

Ten months ago, our circulation was 20,000," he said of the quarterly printed in Portland. "Now, it's 4,000."

Corvallis' store in Corvallis, Ore., also was hit by a similar series of raids on stores alleged to be selling equipment used for marijuana cultivation. First published in May 1980, Sin Semilla Tips was printed in Eugene until about 1986, then was printed in Portland. Labeling itself as a "domestic marijuana journal," the magazine featured a variety of marijuana-related news, features and advice columns, as well as analysis of drug issues. The publication's circulation reached its peak of 20,000 in 1987 and maintained that level until last year.

High court to weigh mandatory life for having drugs

The Washington Post

PLYMOUTH, Mich. — Ronald Harmelin, former Air Force honor guard, pool hustler and cocaine addict, spends his days shelving books in the library at the state prison here, his nights watching television in a 108-by-7½-foot cell.

If the state of Michigan has its way, Harmelin will remain in prison for the rest of his life. His crime: possession of 672.5 grams — about a pound and a half — of pure cocaine. When police stopped him in 1986 for driving a red light and discovered the drugs in the trunk of his car, Harmelin had no history of violence. He had no criminal record at all.

A 1978 Michigan law requires that those convicted of possessing more than 650 grams of cocaine be sentenced to life without the possibility of parole. The penalty, the harshest in the country, is the same as that for first-degree murder. Michigan has no death penalty.

A growing number of states and the federal government have turned to lengthy mandatory minimum sentences as a means of combating the drug problem by punishing other serious crimes.

Today, in a case that could determine the future of such efforts, the Supreme Court will reconsider Harmelin's argument that his sentence violates the constitutional ban on "cruel and unusual punishment." As a matter of social policy, the Harmelin case raises questions about the purposes of incarcerating criminals, the role — if any — of rehabilitation and the degree to which sentences must take individual moral culpability into account.

As a question of law, it presents the court with the need to address the scope of the Eighth Amendment prohibition on "cruel and unusual punishment," and the meaning of a 1983 case in which the court ruled that criminal sentences must be "proportionate to the crime."

Harmelin, now 45, pleads for a second chance, arguing that he "wasn't intentionally trying to harm anybody," failed to "realize the threat I was to society" and wants the opportunity to make amends. "I'm not saying I shouldn't be punished," Harmelin, a soft-spoken man in an olive-drab prison uniform, said in an interview. "I should be punished, and I'm being punished. But the sentence doesn't fit the crime, not for what I did."

Prosecutors, supported by the Bush administration, contend that the cocaine drugs — pose to society — makes Harmelin's sentence appropriate and certainly constitutional.

"Drug trafficking is one of the greatest and gravest dangers facing the United States," they told the court in brief. "Michigan's mandatory penalty for those dealing in large quantities of drugs is not grossly disproportionate as a weapon in the national war on drugs."

Harmelin, they note, was caught near a suburban Detroit motel, with the tools of a "curry dealer" — a trade pure cocaine worth between $67,000 and $100,000, 10 small packets of the drug, assorted pills, marijuana, a beeper, a coded address book, a gun and $2,900 in cash.

"Many people will raise that I'm a first offender, and I should have another chance," argument, said Oak-

Helms' old plays losing favor with voters

The Boston Globe

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Fighting for his political life, Republican Sen. Jesse Helms has returned to the recently divisive tactics that charged his first political 40-year fight. This time, however, voters do not seem to be responding.

A statewide poll published Friday showed Democrat Harvey Gantt, Helms' black challenger, ahead 47 percent to 41 percent. The survey by the Charlotte Observer, the first test response by North Carolina voters to Helms' recent series of race-based advertisements, indicated that Gantt had fallen just two points from a poll taken shortly before the ads began.

Analysis said the election will probably be closer and will turn on whether voters are receptive to — or outraged by — Helms' latest ads. The most dramatic one opens with a pair of white hands crumpling a job rejection letter with an "X" over it. They had to give it to a minority because of a racial quota.

The ad ends with head shots of Gantt and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. Gantt, the announcer, warns, "Supports Ted Kennedy's racial quota law that makes the color of your skin more important than your qualifications."

Helms is waging the "1990 version of his 1950s 'wake up, white people' campaign," said Merle Black, a Southern political analyst. "If the polls hold, it will indicate Helms' stuff is just not working. I thought it would catch on."

Race is one of several issues that have made this the nation's most closely watched Senate campaign. Helms, a favorite of the far right, has gained the enmity of environmentalists, gays, feminists and many fellow senators. Gantt, meanwhile, would be the first black Democrat elected to the Senate and already is being talked about in political circles as a potential vice presidential candidate.

"If Gantt wins, boy, oh boy, that will be the biggest news coming out of this election," said William Schneider, an analyst at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., greets supporters in Morganton, N.C.

Jesse Helms is the terminator, and no one could have imagined a black beating him.

Gantt's rise from obscurity has baffled political pros here, too, including Helms. In an interview last fall, the three-term senator delighted in the prospect of facing a self-avowed liberal in a state that voted overwhelmingly for Ronald Reagan and George Bush, and a black in a Southern state where whites cast nearly 80 percent of general election votes.

But Gantt defied conventional wisdom by easily winning a hard-fought primary runoff last summer. Since then, the 47-year-old, MIT-trained urban planner has crisscrossed the state, trying to convince tobacco farmers, textile workers and other traditional Helms backers that it is time for a change — and that the vehicle for change should be a former mayor of Charlotte, a city many North Carolinians regard as a den of crime and drugs.

Gantt's pitch seems to be working. Charlotte Observer surveys have shown the Democrat ahead for several weeks. Earlier polls by the Greensboro News and Record and the University of North Carolina School of Journalism also found Gantt leading, but by just four points, while a recent survey by the Raleigh News and Observer showed Helms ahead by four points.

Challenger Harvey Gantt tells voters it's time for a change.

How has Gantt managed to tap support that eluded even former Gov. Jim Hunt, one of the state's most popular political figures who lost to Helms in a bitter campaign six years ago?

Helms' hotbed issues have lost much of their luster, said Phad Beyle, a political science professor at the University of North Carolina. Helms' hard anti-communist seems an anachronism when communist regimes have crumbled across Eastern Europe, and his opposition to abortion — even a case of rape and incest — does not sell in a state where a substantial majority support a woman's right to choose.

The electorate is shifting, too. Nearly 25 percent of likely voters were not voting here when Helms won his Senate seat 18 years ago, and many of those who did vote are now in their 60s and 70s. These voters have been replaced by a generation more inclined to vote for blacks, a generation that grew up in integrated schools, playing football and singing in the chorus with blacks, Beyle said.

Helms' message, which critics say is "television ads that attacked Gantt for supporting abortion, opposing the death penalty, soliciting money from gays and espousing 'extreme liberal values,'" noticeably absent was any mention of race, although Helms ads did show pictures of Gantt.

Over the last week, however, Helms has come out swinging, with most punches aimed at racial targets.

First he accused Gantt of waging a "secret campaign" by running special ads on black radio stations. Then he dropped up old charges that Gantt used "hate money" to buy a television license, then sold it for a huge profit. He also is running ads linking Gantt to the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson.

When Gantt charged Helms with "race-baiting," the senator fired back that "if he thinks we're going to keep our mouths shut because he's black, then he's got a problem."

Jackson likely to have limited rights in office

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse Jackson is heavily favored to win election as a "shadow senator" for the District of Columbia on Tuesday, but he's likely to find the doors locked when he gets to Congress.

Jackson is one of 11 candidates vying for two "shadow" senator positions. He's making his first bid for elective office other than the two unsuccessful runs for Democratic presidential nomination.

He's not paying "shadow" senators will lobby Congress to grant statehood to the District of Columbia. But by precedent and custom, only senators elected by one of the 50 states are given floor space in the Senate and office rights in the Capitol complex.

"Senator Mitchell has asked the staff to look into precedent, and we're going to see what the House really has done in the past," said a spokesman for the Senate. "It's a matter of understanding, mainly making the Senate and the House realize that there are over 600,000 people in this city who have voting representation on Capitol Hill," he said last week.

Majority leader George Mitchell, "It is a fundamental issue of fairness. The district also will elect a non-voting delegate to Congress, with Democrat Eleanor Holmes Norton favored over Republican Harry Singleton.

But while the delegate's House seat is non-voting, it is officially recognized, and the winner will get an office, floor privileges and the right to vote in committee.

Going back to the 1950s, when the Tennessee territory first was bid for elective office, the "shadow" concept to lobby for the rights a shadow lawmaker or would have.

Helms, Gantt supporters clash at weekend rally

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Supporters of Harvey Gantt and Sen. Jesse Helms screamed insults and two people scuffled at a Helms rally.

"Left-wing Commie pinko fags!" shouted Helms backer Steve Jones, 58, on Saturday after walking through a crowd of Gantt supporters, who were waving anti-Helms signs and screaming "Harvey! Harvey! Harvey!"

"Murderer! Murderer! Murderer!" yelled another Helms backer, in reference to the abortion rights of Gantt and some of his supporters, Gantt's Democrat, is challenging Republican Helms in Tuesday's election.

The confrontation began when about 40 Gantt supporters waved anti-Helms signs in the faces of backers as they entered the school.

A brief scuffle erupted outside between university student Tom Tritton and rally security guard Jim Grice, who said he was working for rally organizers to watch fire doors.

Spokesmen for both campaigns said they were not aware of the confrontation.

Helms was foregoing any campaigning Sunday after a long day on the road Saturday, said his wife, Dot Helms.

PROPERTY TAXPAYERS ALERT!

We the undersigned listened to debate during the 1990 session where the following remarks were made by Gary Robbins while speaking on the merits of lowering the two-thirds voter approval requirement on school bonding.

"If we as legislators would lead out and not keep saying that property taxes are too high, people would not think they are too high. Property taxes never made a single farmer go broke. Property taxes are not burdensome!"

Gary Robbins

We believe that the public is greatly concerned about property taxes and that it is the responsibility of elected legislators to reflect such when handling issues which affect the raising of those taxes. We feel that the remarks of Representative Robbins were flippant and misguided and do not represent the majority views of the voters of the state of Idaho.

Workers' compensation premiums could jump

BOISE - Employers may soon be paying 9.8 percent more for their workers' compensation premiums.

The Idaho Department of Insurance has announced a proposal to increase workers' compensation premiums. The proposal was made by the National Council on Compensation Insurance, a rate-making and statistical organization which under Idaho law sets the premium rates for workers' compensation insurers.

The council made the recommendation in the form of a filing Oct. 15, and it will be held for 60 days by the insurance department. If Director Anthony J. Fagnano doesn't disapprove the application, the rates will be effective.

The public may inspect the filing by the council at the Insurance Department's headquarters in Boise, and the public may comment on it through Dec. 26.

The 9.8 percent proposed increase is an average. Industry groups would be affected by these increases: manufacturing, 9.4 percent; contracting, 17.6 percent; and all others, 7.8 percent.

Firm says state not following national building slowdown

TWIN FALLS - Idaho is still bucking the national construction slowdown, according to a national firm that tracks construction contracts.

According to K.W. Dodge, construction contracts in September were 50 percent higher than in 1989. The year-to-date total is 33 percent higher than in 1989.

Nationally, construction contracts were off 10 percent for the nine months ending September 1990, when compared to the same period of 1989.

Dodge, a division of McGraw-Hill Inc., measures contract of newly started construction that will be brought to completion over the months ahead.

Grain Producers Association sets convention for Nov. 14-16

BOISE - The Idaho Grain Producers Association will hold its 34th Annual Convention and Trade Show Nov. 14-16 at the Grand Lion Riverside.

The main focus will be on Idaho's water. Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones will discuss "Two New Challenges to Idaho's Water," which encompasses the Endangered Species Act petitions, filed with respect to salmon runs and the relicensing of Idaho Power Co.'s Hells Canyon complex.

Anthony Quinn, director of the statewide water projects district of Southern California, and Idaho water expert Ray Getts will speak on "Idaho's Water and Who Gets It."

Other sessions will discuss wheat marketing, transportation, grain processing, barley, "line" and stress management, legislative lobbying, "senior economics," intergenerational farm families, the art of listening, destruction of the "fifth freedom," and "Paradox Politics in Idaho."

Additional information is available from 345-0706.

Federal Energy Department plans 'programmatic' EIS

TWIN FALLS - The Federal Energy Department will develop a "programmatic" environmental impact statement on its program to solve environmental problems and cleanup.

Known as the Environmental Restoration and Waste Management-EIS-it will look at environmental restoration and waste management as "broad programmatic and integrated approaches," instead of the site-by-site methods now used.

The programmatic statement will provide an environmental basis for selecting waste management methods and technologies and the sites at which they would be used.

Detailed effects of alternatives would be covered in impact statements or environmental assessments at individual sites.

Public meetings will be taken through February. Public meetings at 23 locations across the country are scheduled to begin in December.

Two hearings will be in Idaho - one in Twin Falls on Jan. 22, at the Westbank Inn, Idaho Falls and on Jan. 24 at the Red Lion Riverside in Boise.

Group says personal care program needs changes

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Wheelchair bound and elderly people say they are frustrated with the state's implementation of a new program intended to keep people out of nursing homes.

Idaho Citizens Network members complained last week to the local office of the Health and Welfare Department that the newly formed Personal Care Services program was hiring inexperienced care providers at subpar wages.

Personal Care Services is a program allowing disabled and elderly Idahoans to receive at-home assistance like bathing and dressing. Receiving home-based services is an alternative to nursing home care.

The 1990 Legislature passed a law that provided the funding of the new program, which is funded by Medicaid. "It's never been taken by the home and now it's the time," said Pam Howard, an organizer with the Idaho Citizens Network. "I can't wait."

Workers are often people coming off welfare rolls who have no experience, said Steve Hammett, with the Idaho Citizens Network. Once hired, the workers do not receive enough training, he said.

"Because of staff shortages, some provider agencies are having to double up, turn away or even drop clients," Hammett said. "We recommend that you set up an active, direct recruitment capability for PCS providers."

"Pay is a central issue," Hammett said. "Financial compensation of care providers, especially when providing this time, are well below what anyone could call a living wage," he said.

Workers are not merely being paid to satisfy physical needs. They must also be compassionate, reliable, and trustworthy," he said.

"Adequate compensation will help attract and retain additional qualified care providers who are quality people as well," Hammett said.

Duke Morton, formally a community development specialist for the regional Medicaid unit, told Network members that he has already spoken with Gov. Cecil Andrus about the problems the yard raises.

"I don't think you'll find us at odds with the issues you are raising," Morton said. "The issue is how to solve the problems."

Valley Quick Response Unit may get ambulance

By Rebecca Talcott
Times-News correspondent

EBEN - The Valley Quick Response Unit is likely to become an ambulance service.

The state's EMS-Grant Subcommittee approved a $18,000 grant for the unit to purchase an ambulance.

In a telephone interview, Shirley Shute, a member of Valley's unit, said the catch is that the unit must come up with enough money to match the state grant.

This means the unit must go on a fund-raising campaign since the group only has $8,000 in savings and a $1,000 donation from U.S. West through the city of Hazelton, Shute said.

They must raise the remaining $8,000 by Jan. 1; the deadline for receiving grant funds. Though the grant and matching funds will total $36,000, a new ambulance costs about $43,000. But Shute said she feels that the unit can easily make up the $7,000 difference since the ORU will have to charge for transport in the ambulance.

What that charge will be for transport in the ambulance has been settled yet since the area has never had an ambulance before, but the charge figures will be based upon information from other people and other ambulances, Shute said.

She also said the unit's volunteers felt they should accept that grant at this time because "last year the state was only giving $10,000 in grants, and it may be less next year. We don't know if we should wait."

don't know if we thought we should take (the grant) this year."

Jerome County does not support the Quick Response Unit's decision to become an ambulance service because "we can't afford it," County Commissioner George Andrus said.

An ambulance located in Jerome serves Jerome County. The county also collected about $132,000 in ambulance taxes last year to support the Jerome ambulance, according to Commissioner Carl Montgomery.

Montgomery said past residents paid part of that tax money, he said, the commissioners feel they should receive the services of the Jerome ambulance.

Although county officials do not support the unit's decision to become an ambulance service, they do feel the unit provides a very valuable service to the community, Commissioner Veronica Lierman said.

"Appreciation" she should receive the services of the Jerome ambulance.

Support for the unit has been shown from the state. Rep. Maxine Bell-Bergeron, and Attorney General Jim Jones sent letters of support to the Subcommittee, urging the state to act favorably to the unit's grant request.

The unit had a farm sale Saturday to raise funds and has sent letters to community businesses asking for donations.

The Quick Response Unit has also recently purchased a much-needed defibrillator machine, which was funded by individual donations, as well as $4,000 from Jerome County.

2 local schools to receive new special needs training

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Morningside Elementary is one of only 13 Idaho schools to receive special training for children who are at risk of failing.

The 1990-1991 Collaborative Education Program is intended to ease part of the stigma of taking special-needs children out of the classroom, said Morningside Principal Dennis Sontus.

Overland Elementary School in Burley was the only other elementary school in the Magic Valley that qualified for the program, said Linda High, public information specialist for the Idaho Department of Education.

Sontus said 11 Morningside teachers will attend four workshops in Boise during the regular school year and a two-day workshop in the summer. The teachers have already attended some meetings.

"The training has been very beneficial in helping us smooth out our program," Sontus said.

The department did not select schools on the basis of how many at-risk children they had, Sontus said.

He suspects one of the reasons Morningside was selected was because the school was already looking for a cooperative learning model and knew what it was looking for.

"We were willing to make a change and the teachers were well prepared," Sontus said.

The collaborative model teachers will use is an alternative to pulling at-risk students out of the classroom for special attention.

Instead, the new approach stresses ways to accelerate education for those students through peer tutoring, cooperative learning and other innovative techniques in the regular classroom.

Mainstreaming becomes more critical as children get in the fourth, fifth and sixth grades, Sontus said.

"They don't like to be pulled out of class," he said. "There is a stigma to it."

Workshop participants will also learn ways to develop school-based teams to encourage co-teaching by general teachers and specialists, he said.

A resource room teacher or Chapter One teacher will assist the regular teacher in the classroom, thereby reducing the teacher-student ratio.

Chapter One is a federally funded program intended to provide remedial training in math and reading in schools with a certain number of children on the Free Lunch program.

One positive spin-off is that students not in the Chapter One or special needs programs will also receive extra help when needed, Sontus said.

It's time for a change in style that drives some people crazy

It didn't change my driving style, but I don't think it's going to be as easy as getting a perm and changing my hair style.

Actually, I'm fairly comfortable with the way I drive. I can hit the ignition hole every time I drive. I only need one foot for BOTH the gas pedal and the brake. I'm such an ace with a steering wheel, I don't even think about my driving ability.

The run in my panty hose, what to fix for supper, even the budget deficit, those things I think about. Driving just happens.

Other people, some related and some merely affiliated, evidently DO THINK about my distinctive driving style, however. They have made remarks (constructive criticism) and have encouraged me to either take up bicycling to work or make needed improvements.

I don't know if I can though. Can a person change their style of doing anything, really? One time I tried to improve my handwriting and what I got in return for all my efforts was an archaic, surplus, took from a bank teller, examining the check I got signed. I'm convinced the only reason I got out of that bank without handcuffs was because I promised I'd return to my slobby signature if she wouldn't press the security police button under the glass window.

I'm not saying it is a problem with my driving. But if I do have one falling-it probably has to do with the way I stop. I learned how to drive from my mother, Nina, when I was 18 years old and it was she, who taught me my stop.

This is not a retrograde oedipus complex or anything. I still love Nina, even though she insisted I brake at all large, red octagonal signs. To this day, I drive 45 or 50 mph right up to a stop sign - and then stop. Over the years I've grown very appreciative of power brakes.

As accustomed as I've become to lurching and jerking down the road, those people who happen to be in the same car with me seem somehow, uncomfortable. I really do hate putting out my passengers. If I could get some enterprising mechanic to squeeze one another pair of shocks under the car to help the situation? would.

Just last week I went to town with a girlfriend to shop and thoughtlessly offered to drive. My unusual, though effective technique was further exacerbated by the fact I had double seeing because of a new pair of John Lennon sunglasses I was wearing. They looked great on me but they had double lenses which tended to distort my visibility.

When I turned into the gas station to wipe signs, my windshield hoping I could see better, I suddenly felt the rain with rain from the sky. I want to know how to wash the city-think power brakes.

It needs to pour a curb 2-foot high!

My John Lennon sunglasses just about bit the dirt on that one, and my poor girlfriend barely managed to keep her tongue free of her airway by shouting, "What the..."

Somewhat, I have got to learn to drive like everyone else. It's no fun being different. Occasionally I've met some very nice policemen who have concurred with me. So what's the solution? How can I change my driving style? I'm leaving my self open to suggestions - no variants for dress-please - just suggestions.

Malad hydro-plant developers run into opposition at meeting

By Suzanne Huxford
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — Developers of a proposed hydro-electric plant on the Malad River near Hagerman have met with opposition from water experts, county commissioners and the public.

About 75 people attended a hearing held in Hagerman Friday by the Idaho Parks and Recreation Department. The Parks Department had the meeting to gauge public opinion on the proposed plant, which would use 320 cfs from the Malad River and dissect the Malad Gorge State Park at two points.

The project, if approved by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, or FERC, will also force several local landowners to sell or lease portions of their land for project use.

Parks Department Director Yvonne Ferrell officiated at the meeting, which was attended by the project's plant manager Blaine Graff, and Kit Runyan, both of Idaho Energy, Ltd. Runyan is a wholly owned subsidiary of Idaho Power, owns 50 percent of the project. The other 50 percent is being financed by Consulting Associates of Boise. If FERC approves the application for the hydro-electric plant, several local landowners could have sections of their property condemned. The land would then be purchased by the developers.

Ed Larson, who owns land the developers want for the project, said he resents the fact that he cannot subdivide his land because the developers can force him to sell off bits for their project.

"It looks like legalized theft to me," Larson said. "I've seen the river shrinking all the time. I've lived in Idaho," said one man, who ir- raged with water from the Malad. "I sure wouldn't want to have my wealth invested in this."

When asked who would have priority over the water in low-water years, Runyan assured the gathering that there would be less than 75 cfs flowing through the river at the control gate.

That sparked the comment that for the past several years the river has been low enough to wade across during certain times of the year.

Much of the discussion centered around the environmental impact the project would have on the ecosystem and visitor enjoyment of the Malad Gorge State Park.

operating time for hydro-electric plants of 45 percent.

"I know what the fallacy of these records are," countered Newby, who said he has been taking water measurement records for the past 35 years.

Newby and several others in the audience commented that the river is lower now than it was 25 years ago, even taking into account four years of drought.

"I've seen the river shrinking all the time. I've lived in Idaho," said one man, who ir- raged with water from the Malad. "I sure wouldn't want to have my wealth invested in this."

When asked who would have priority over the water in low-water years, Runyan assured the gathering that there would be less than 75 cfs flowing through the river at the control gate.

That sparked the comment that for the past several years the river has been low enough to wade across during certain times of the year.

Runyan claimed that because most of the project will be underground when it passes through the park, the impact will be minimized.

But Gooding County Commissioner Bob Muffley asserted that, although the plant would provide a tax base increase for the county of an estimated $80,000 to $90,000 per year, the tourist revenue the county could expect from the park remained undetermined.

"The park is a unique and fragile resource," Muffley said. "There will be changes in the landscape and there will be changes in the wildlife."

He added that people coming to the park will want to see an unspoiled wilderness.

Muffley went on to say that the tourist revenue expected in the area in the next few years, including visitors to the Fossil Beds Monument, may exceed $100 million per year.

"I can see a project like this benefiting the few," Muffley said. "I can see a project like this benefiting the many."

nomina of national significance," according to Parks Director Ferrell, has recently been chosen as a breeding and release site for birds of prey.

Runyan assured the group that the blasting and digging at the site would not disturb the local flora and fauna, or ruin the unspoiled look of the unusual canyon walls.

He said the main structure will be tucked into the canyon wall and will not be visible from any of the established viewing points of the park.

But Kevin Lynton, park manager, said the structure will be visible from one overlook in the park.

But Reeves said there are already two power plants on the Malad, which have turned the river into a stagnant mist. That coupled with the fisheries and irrigation, has made for enough exploitation of the valley's natural resources, he said.

"We don't need to develop every drop of water in this valley," Reeves said. "Written comments concerning the project will not be received by the Parks Department no later than Friday, when they will hold an official hearing on the subject. Ada County judge denies convicted killer Field's motion for another trial

BOISE (AP) — An Ada County judge has denied convicted killer Zane Jack Fields' motion for another trial, holding that newly discovered evidence offered by the defense would not be believable to a jury.

The new evidence, which claims that several inmates lied on the witness stand to gain favor from authorities, lacks credibility, District Judge Gerald Schroeder said.

Schroeder's opinion, released Friday, finally clears the way for Fields to be sentenced. A date has not been scheduled.

Fields, 30, of Boise, was convicted of first-degree murder on May 16, 1988. The defendant was arrested more than a year after the Feb. 11, 1988, robbery-slaying of Mary Catherine Vanderford inside her Wishing Well Gift Shop in Boise.

The 69-year-old Boise woman was stabbed repeatedly with a knife $50. During the trial last May, the inmate witnesses said Fields admitted, on an aggravated assault conviction, that he had a knife on him.

During a hearing on the motion for a new trial, convicted inmate Salvador Martinez testified the rapist witnesses against Fields admitted fabricating their testimony in his presence.

State troopers say they're under pressure to enforce laws unfairly

The Associated Press — Legislators and top state officials are caught speeding by Idaho State troopers are supposed to be given breaks, not citations, a high-ranking officer has confirmed.

"It goes totally against our code of ethics that say we should be impartial and enforce the laws," said Capt. Elias Leija, a four-year trooper stationed in Mountain Home.

Earlier this year, dozens of State Police troopers attending regional briefings in Boise were told by commanding officers not to cite legislators and authority figures, because they control the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement purse strings.

Richardson, who was in Knoxville, Tenn., on state business Saturday and did not return the Statesman's telephone calls, was appointed in December 1986 by Gov. Cecil Andrus. He said there was any such rule. It is gone as of today.

In an interview Friday, Humphreys admitted being "frustrated" by the hands-off directive.

Andrus initially said he had no knowledge of such a policy and questioned its existence.

"If it does exist, he said, the person who makes that policy has a very serious problem with his ability to give direction to the executive branch. Anybody who gives that kind of direction, they're absolutely stupid."

Richardson and Humphreys said that if there ever was such a thing, it came to an end the afternoon the governor said.

"If you can't apply the law equally to everyone, it's not right," said trooper Leija.

However, another trooper told The Statesman he did not feel any undue pressure to treat legislators any differently than the general public.

and an unbalanced roster of "authority figures."

That message was delivered in a series of regional briefings held this year in Boise at a Gowen Field. The briefings were held in the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement meeting room on April 24, titled "Meeting Notes," states "Policy of Tolerance: Don't write (tickets) to legislators; they control the money."

The Jan. 18 "Meeting Notes," which are basically minutes, include this item: "Regarding citing legislators and other authority figures, the director quotes: 'We will take a path of tolerance.'"

Humphreys, a 32-year State Police officer, did not dispute that the "policy of tolerance" directive had been communicated to his 131 patrol officers statewide.

"I'm sure it's been said, but it didn't come from me," the superintendent said of the directive. "I understand their frustration. I really do. In raising allegations of selective enforcement on Idaho's 4,931 miles of highway, troopers point to the following: They have been instructed by their captains to be lax with lawmakers."

California and Arizona reporters review transcripts of the grand jury testimony that led to the indictment of Charles Keating Jr.

Keating headed the Phoenix-based development company American Continental Corp., which owned Lincoln Savings and Loan Association. He is accused in civil suits of looting the thrift.

A grand jury indicted him on criminal charges involving the sale of American Continental junk bonds to Lincoln depositors. Prosecutors say more than 17,000 investors lost $250 million on the bonds. The case focuses on 20 who lost $1.1 million.

Echoing earlier congressional testimony, an Office of Thrift Supervision examiner said Keating continued to have uninsured bonds sold to investors even though he knew the magnitude of Lincoln's problems.

Keating 66 and the others pleaded innocent. They remain free on bail. Keating's former secretary Kathi Richardson, testified that federal bank examiners checked company records in an 11th-floor office at Lincoln's Irvine, Calif., headquarters in 1986, executives worked one floor below manufacturing documents to make Lincoln look healthy. "I was told to check the examiners as much as I could up on the 11th floor so they wouldn't notice the activity going on on the 10th floor," she told the grand jury.

Richardson said she helped Wischer "clean out" documents from bond files to be examined by regulators in early 1986. The files lacked required underwriting summaries and when they arrived from Phoenix, secretaries typed underwriting papers for Wischer to insert, she testified.

Richardson said the office joke was that no one could see the furniture without Keating's OK. She described Fidel and Keating as wary of leaving a paper trail. "Mr. Keating doesn't like files," Richardson said she was told.

Here's how Idaho's D.C. delegation voted

Stamp News Service WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho's senators and representatives on major legislation in Congress this past week.

A "Y" means the member voted for the measure; "N" means the member voted against the measure; an "A" means the member did not vote.

(1) APPROVES BUDGET FOR FISCAL 1991 The Senate, 54-45, approved the final budget package for the 1991 fiscal year. The measure provides for $492 billion in tax increases and spending cuts. Medicare and other benefit programs will be cut by $99 billion in the same five-year period, and $164.6 billion will be generated in new tax revenue.

(2) APPROVES CLEAN AIR ACT CONGRESSIONAL REPORT The Senate, 89-10, approved a conference report for amendment to the Clean Air Act of 1970 setting up a program for reducing acid rain, smog, toxics and ozone-depleting chemicals by instituting strict emission regulations. Implementation of the program will cost $25 billion annually. McClure (R-N) Symms (R-N)

(3) APPROVES DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION CONFERENCE REPORT The Senate, 80-17, approved fiscal year 1991 funding authorization for the Department of Defense. McClure (R-N) Symms (R-N)

(4) APPROVES IMMIGRATION REFORM BILL The Senate, 89-8, approved an immigration reform bill that will increase the number of people allowed to enter the United States by 100,000 percent and change the entry requirements for certain job skills. The number of European immigrants also will increase. Under the law, Salvadoran refugees will be given temporary safe haven. The measure also gives the administration the authority to decide whether people with AIDS or the HIV virus will be allowed to immigrate to the United States. McClure (R-N) Symms (R-N)

The Warning Signs of TEENAGE SUICIDE

Each year more than 5,000 young people ages 15-24 kill themselves. Suicide is now the second leading cause of adolescent death.

A teenager considering suicide may tell you so, perhaps in words, but more likely in changes in behavior.

The following warning signs may indicate a teenager is considering suicide:

- Decreased appetite
Changes in eating/sleeping patterns
Avoidance of normal social activities
Anger/outbursts
Toothbrushing Withdrawal
Personality change (from outgoing to quiet or quiet to active)
Self-abusive behavior (reckless driving, for example)
Use of alcohol or drugs
Preoccupation with death
Giving away prized possessions
Suicidal threats or attempts

Not all of these signs necessarily indicate a young person is considering suicide. But, if several are noticed, a parent or other extended contact time, they should not be ignored.

Blessing draws hundreds of Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — More than 2,000 people pushed past police in Red Square on Sunday to pray and watch the blessing of a cornerstone for a cathedral to be built on the site of a 17th century church razed by Stalin. The event took place under the stony gaze of a three-story portrait of Communist leader Vladimir Lenin erected for Wednesday's Revolution Day parade. Dozens of priests in sky-blue robes carried gold icons marched with Russian Orthodox Church Patriarch Alexi II of Moscow across the square and past the Lenin Mausoleum. Russian Federation President Boris N. Yeltsin and Moscow Mayor Gavril Popov held candles as the patriarch consecrated the cornerstone with holy water. The Cathedral of Our Lady of Kazan is expected to be completed in two years. The original cathedral, built in 1630 under Czar Mikhail Romanov, was destroyed in the 1930s by Josef Stalin. It was replaced by a summer cafe and later a public toilet.

Bhutto, spouse take National Assembly oaths

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto and her husband — both facing legal battles — took the oaths of office in the National Assembly on Sunday in the fifth civilian government in 43 years. Asif Ali Zardari, 38, charged with kidnapping and extortion, was freed from jail to attend the ceremony but must remain where the assembly session ends next week. Ms. Bhutto, who boycotted Saturday's session to protest her husband's absence, faces seven charges of misconduct before special one-judge tribunals probing political corruption during her 20 months in power. She said she is worried about her husband's treatment. "They're keeping him in exactly the same conditions as when there was martial law. He has nothing," Ms. Bhutto, ousted Aug. 6. Zardari, jailed in the southern port city of Karachi since Oct. 10, said his lawyers told him not to talk to reporters. He was elected to represent a sprawling slum district in Karachi.

November 5, 1990

Dear Voter,

Young, old and in between. The campaign season is over and on Tuesday you vote. We are all happy about that.

Many of you are complaining that government just does not work. We hear "throw the rascal out", and of course, I agree with you. But that means you must vote and actually vote for a change.

As you must have noticed by now, I have not asked for anyone to speak for me and for no shop-worn endorsements which have dominated the campaign this year. A typical endorsement reads, "I know Joe or Mary and they are against sin, so I shall vote for them." The endorsements are pure political baloney.

With no request for surrogate speakers and no large campaign contributions my campaign is unique. I would go to Boise without any obligations except to the voters of Twin Falls County.

In education I will vote for the teacher and the student, not the IEA. I feel strongly that the biggest need in education is to restore the school teacher to a role with dignity and not just a grubbing wage earner. In each of our lives a teacher or teachers rank with our parents as having influenced our future. The teacher's influence affects each child's future. Decent wages are a part of the restoration of the teacher as a professional leader.

Government is not working in many areas. I have campaigned long and loud about the State regulation of Bonded Warehouses and the ability of the bean and grain warehousemen to sell the farmer's property without permission from the farmer. That must be changed.

Health and Welfare has total responsibility for the treatment and, hopefully, improvement of troubled children and teenagers. The performance of Health and Welfare is "in crisis".

Senator McRoberts has announced that she will be the next chairman of the Health and Welfare Committee. She has not been able to make any public appearances or statements because she is "studying" the crisis problem. Her refusal to make statements or appearances leaves us in the dark as to the cause of the problem or any suggestion as to correction.

If she becomes the chairman of the Health and Welfare Committee, we get a pig-in-the-poke. Besides she will preside over the appropriation of a huge budget, Two Hundred Twenty-seven Million Seven Hundred Eighty-five thousand Three Hundred Dollars ($227,785,300.00) have been requested. We have no idea if she has the ability to fight off the bureaucratic demands for money.

The relationship of the Fish and Game with the hunter and the fisherman is a battleground.

Governor Andrus has a responsibility to intervene. My political freedom allows me to advise and encourage the Governor to get involved and make government work in those areas where it has broken down.

If the voter wants government to work, they must first vote for a change. Vote for candidates who demand performance from the bureaucracy. The bureaucracy just sits and does not move. We cannot continue sending legislators to Boise who just sit and do not move. Bureaucracy may not move, but it sure slows.

For example, what would happen if Senator McRoberts somehow introduced legislation to correct the problems in agricultural marketing and regulation, and Jack Simplot stepped up and said, "BOO!" One can visualize Senator McRoberts scurrying for her closet.

"I throw the rascals out!" should not just be a slogan, but the voter must actually vote for a change. If the voters send me to Boise, then I become the "rascal". In the next election, if I have not done my job you can throw out that "rascal".

Sincerely,

Lloyd J. Walker

Hindus call end to Mosque dispute

AYODHYA, India (AP) — Hindu leaders on Sunday suspended a campaign to seize a mosque after claiming to reach an accord with authorities, but officials said no concessions were made to end the dispute that has left at least 325 dead.

In New Delhi, meanwhile, moves to oust Prime Minister V.P. Singh grew while opponents worked for compromises to prevent new Parliament elections.

Despite the signs of calm in Ayodhya, about 300 miles southeast of New Delhi, violence linked to the mosque flared in neighboring nations.

At least two Muslims were killed by a Hindu mob in Nepal, and security around Hindu temples in Pakistan was increased to prevent Moslem attacks.

The Hindu militants said they reached a deal with civil authorities to allow them to visit the disputed holy site on Wednesday.

Ashok Singhal, who was at the forefront of the Hindu assault on the mosque last week, called on thousands of pilgrims in Ayodhya to end the siege and hold a traditional Hindu fire ceremony to mark the end of a significant event.

Singhal said a prayer-meeting would start Monday and continue Wednesday with a visit to the 460-year-old mosque, which they claim was built atop the birthplace of the Hindu warrior god Rama. But authorities said they had not yet decided to lift a curfew on Ayodhya that would let the prayer meeting go ahead.

Hindus seek to raze the mosque and erect a Hindu temple on the site.

Some Germans denounce border treaties

The Chicago Tribune

BERLIN — Germany may have forsworn forever the lands that it lost to Poland after World War II, but many Germans who were expelled from there refuse to go along.

They denounce the "capitalization" of the expulsions and refer to the unification of West and East Germany on Oct. 3 as the unification of West and Central Germany. They call Oct. 3 "a day of mourning for Germany."

Der Schlesier, their weekly newspaper, refers to national elections scheduled for Dec. 2, and asks whether the governing parties "can really renounce hundreds of thousands of votes."

The militant position of the League of Expellees, which claims 10 million supporters, undoubtedly will be on the mind of Chancellor Helmut Kohl on Thursday (Nov. 8) when he travels to the border town of Frankfurt on Oder to meet Polish Premier Tadeusz Mazowiecki.

The purpose of the meeting, German officials say, is to lay the basis for a new relationship of trust between two nations whose joint history has been scarred by war, the shifting of frontiers and prejudice.

After their talks, Kohl and Mazowiecki will cross an Oder River bridge into Poland and meet villagers in Stolbice (the former German Demotshett).

But already Germany and Poland are at odds over the timing of two treaties they are negotiating, and this dispute may have arisen from the fact that both leaders are involved in election campaigns.

Support from the League of Expellees may be vital to Kohl's Christian Democrats on Dec. 2, and Mazowiecki is a candidate in Poland's presidential election on Nov. 25.

After some foot-dragging by Kohl, the German parliament adopted a statement in March in which it forever renounced claims to the lands it lost to Poland under the Potsdam agreement in 1945.

These lands east of the Oder-Neisse rivers and comprising Silesia, Pomerania, West Prussia and part of East Prussia, then amounted to one-third of German territory.

In Warsaw last week, the two nations agreed on terms of a treaty covering the border question.

They also opened talks on a more comprehensive treaty on political and economic cooperation and said discussions would resume Nov. 26-27 in Bonn.

3 U.S. sailors injured in Chili bombing

VINA DEL MAR, Chile (AP) — A bomb exploded at a German restaurant in this seaside resort, injuring three sailors from the U.S. aircraft carrier Abraham Lincoln and five other people, police and the U.S. Navy said Sunday.

No group claimed responsibility for the bombing, which occurred shortly before midnight Saturday, according to police in Vina del Mar, 180 miles west of Santiago.

Since President Patricio Aylwin took office in March, ending 17 years of military rule, there have been several bombing attacks, mostly attributed to the far-left Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front.

Two of the injured sailors were treated at a local hospital and released, while the third was treated on board the Abraham Lincoln, said Navy Cmdr. Stephen Honda in Norfolk, Va. Injuries were limited to cuts and bruises caused by flying glass and other debris, Honda said.

About 40 people were in the restaurant, the Max Moritz, when the bomb went off. They included a group of sailors from the Nimitz-class aircraft carrier, docked in the neighboring port city of Valparaiso for a five-day port stop.

The bomb was placed near the kitchen and damaged the restaurant building, police said without elaborating.

Three British tourists and two also were injured in the attack. One of the Britons was seriously injured, the police statement said.

In London, a Foreign Office spokesman said the three injured British men had been working in Chile.

2 die, dozens hurt in land dispute near Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Two people were shot to death and dozens wounded in a hours-long fray over 160 vacant lots occupied by squatters in a town near the capital, authorities said Sunday.

The Saturday battle involved at least 800 people and pitted squatters from the militant peasant organization Amorcha Campesina against residents of Izapalaca, a city of 137,000 people southeast of Mexico City in Mexico state.

State government spokesman Alexander Najme said in a telephone interview that both of those killed were longtime residents of Izapalaca. He said 24 people were hospitalized.

Najme said the crowd dispersed after 450 police arrived. He said 30 people were arrested.

News reports quoted Aquiles Cordoba Moran, the leader of Amorcha Campesina, as saying 51 people were wounded and claiming that gunfire broke out when police tried to oust the squatters.

STRETCHING THE TRUTH

ROBBINS RUBBER RULER

Former GOP Rep. Gary Robbins continues to run ads claiming credit for all sorts of good things. In several important cases he is using a ROBBINS RUBBER RULER to stretch the measure of his contribution. Here are a couple of cases with which I am personally familiar:

I. Robbins wrongly claims his opponent, Russ Newcomb, opposed state oversight of the INEL. FACT: Russ was not serving in the legislature and therefore couldn't vote when INEL oversight legislation was debated and passed, but he was and is clearly a supporter. Robbins, on the other hand, did not bother to show up on the floor of the House to vote for INEL oversight.

II. Robbins TV ad claims he now lacks support from Idaho Power because he opposed them in the Swan Falls legislative fight over control of Idaho's water. FACT: Robbins was not even in the legislature during the great battle with Idaho Power over subordination. His first legislative session was 1985, following settlement of the dispute through negotiations in 1984. The 1985 legislature simply put in place the statutes agreed to by negotiators representing all sides.

THERE ARE TOO MANY RUBBER RULERS IN POLITICS. THEY SOUR THE WHOLE PROCESS.

IF YOU BELIEVE, AS I DO, THAT CREDIBILITY COUNTS, VOTE FOR RUSS NEWCOMB NEXT TUESDAY

Editorial

The Times-News recommends a balanced political slate

Who's to blame for the morose-in-Washington or the mess in Boise? — Blame yourself if you don't show up at the polls Tuesday.

The Idaho Secretary of State's office is predicting slightly less than half of the eligible voters in Idaho will show up Tuesday. That's depressing news indeed given the current widespread popular discontent for the way our government is working.

There are very real choices to be made Tuesday, choices that will determine how much taxes we will pay, the future of our roads, our economy, our environment, the quality of life for ourselves and our children.

And it's not just the voters who will choose.

Those who sit out Tuesday's election will make a choice as well. They will decide to accept a government elected by a majority of one half of the electorate, or accept responsibility for changing public policy without their own compliance for the next two years.

But William F. Buckley is correct when he says that an "uninformed electorate" is worse than a minority electorate.

Take the time to study the issues and the candidates, and then make your decisions.

It's your civic responsibility, but more to the point it's our community's best guarantee of intelligent, enlightened leadership during the next few critical years that will determine what kind of state Idaho and the kind of economy Americans live in during the 21st century.

Ravaging of resources must not continue

Not so long ago, at least 40 years ago, tens of thousands of bright eyed sockeye salmon would migrate more than 870 miles from the Pacific Ocean to Redfish Lake. By the mid 1970s, the number returning to their traditional spawning grounds was slashed to under 800.

Tragically, last year only two made it back to their native Idaho—and they were young.

We can only hope that the one sockeye salmon that had made it past Ice Harbor Dam on Aug. 1 can finish its long journey.

Sockeye salmon are one of only a few species of anadromous fish. Anadromous fish have the unique ability to adapt from fresh water to salt water and back to fresh again. What a natural wonder in our remarkable world!

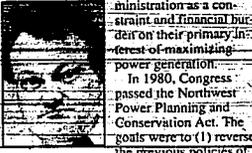

Unfortunately, the sockeye salmon is not the only prized Idaho fish to suffer near-extinction. The story is similar for the coho salmon and the spring, summer and fall chinook salmon. The numbers of steelhead trout are also in a dire decline.

Idaho must not let this ravaging of our precious natural resources continue. These spectacular fish are not only part of our way of life, they are a main attraction for our vital tourist industry.

Our Idaho fish runs have collapsed with the advent of the hydroelectric dams on the main stem of the Columbia and lower Snake rivers. There have been attempts made to mitigate the fish runs around the dams. All right, dams have adult fish ladders and four of the power turbines have juvenile-by-pass screens. Yet, we lose up to 95 percent of the young fish trying to get downstream.

But it is not only the physical obstacle of the dams, it is the very operation of the Federal Columbia River Power System that is killing the salmon. Water for fish and irrigation is seen by the Bonneville Power Adadministration as a constraint and financial burden on their primary interest of maximizing power generation.

Ron Twilegar Reader Comment

In 1980, Congress passed the Northwest Power Planning and Conservation Act. The goals were to (1) reverse the previous policies of dam-building and power generation at the cost of near-extinction for salmon and (2) put fish and wildlife on an equal footing with power production. Ten years later, the Bonneville Power Administration generates 16,000 megawatts of energy and over $2 billion in revenues, yet less than 3 percent of revenues and water flow capacity is utilized for fish.

And that is not "equal footing" in my book.

If the federal government had acted prudently, we wouldn't be in this mess today. Today we are faced with the listing of few anadromous fish as threatened or endangered species.

And everyone is running around trying to effect delay or prevent this.

The real issue is water flow. In order for the salmon to survive, there must be increased flows to enable the young fish to make it through the huge slack water reservoirs.

Therefore, we must insist on operations of the federal main stem hydro projects that ensure adequate flows at peak seasons. We must have the flows to the juvenile survival rate will allow wild stocks to recover.

There are long-term and short-term solutions. The long-term solution is a win-win proposition for everyone: another dam to provide more irrigation storage capacity and increased water flows.

The short-term solution is not so painless, but it is infinitely less painful than any action taken to increase water flow. There are two ways to increase the water flow. One is to add more water to the existing reservoirs. The other is to draw down reservoir levels, substantially.

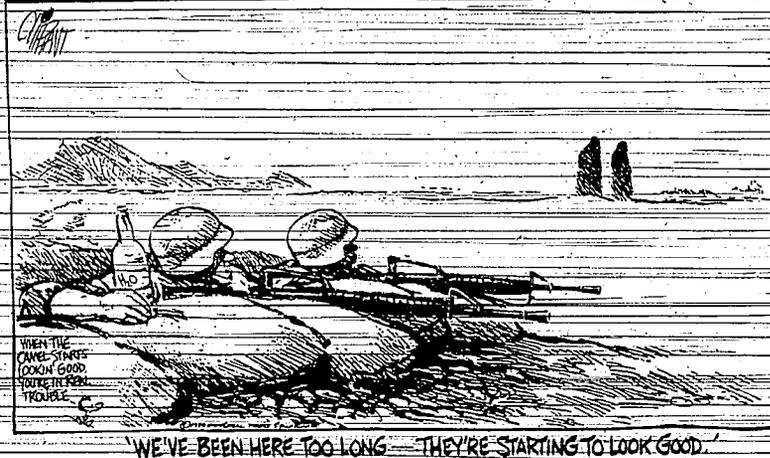

The easiest way to accomplish either method is to provide greater water release flexibility for the upstream reservoirs. The "flood control" levels for Portland, Ore., should be moved from the Snake River to the Columbia River. Idaho currently handles only 4 percent of Portland's flood control, but if it was taken care of on the Columbia River, this would give Idaho the flexibility required to regulate the water flows from two of our dams.

Brownlee and Dvornak reservoirs have flood control guidelines that are determined by both the Army Corps of Engineers and Idaho Power. If these reservoir levels were monitored and adjusted on a weekly basis instead of a monthly schedule, the needs of irrigators and the fish could be provided for.

Undoubtedly, this is a plan to which the Bonneville Power Administration will object. They will balk at a plan that changes in any way their power generation.

Currently, they maximize their profit by using Idaho water to generate electricity at prime time for their highest rates. They sell this power to California, their largest market.

But, quite frankly, what difference is there between channeling our water to California through an aqueduct and channeling our water indiscriminately to Bonneville Power to

Voters fed up with politicians, but incumbents have advantages

WASHINGTON — On one point, at least, politicians agree: voters are fed up with politicians.

But the voters may not do much about it in the congressional elections on Tuesday.

After all, when it comes time to vote, the choice is between politicians. Even when the mood is sour, and people are complaining about Congress, they tend to approve the performance of their own congressmen. It's other people's incumbents they want fired.

In 73 of the nation's 100 congressional elections, at least 80 percent of the House incumbents who count being as safe as those of the 1988 elections, when only seven congressmen ran and lost. The average during the past two decades has been far higher.

But strategists in both parties agree that this year, only about 25, and certainly no more than 30, congressmen are up against challengers who stand a realistic chance of ousting them.

The powers of incumbency are one reason. Another is that the Republicans didn't gain seats in the last election, when they won the White House again. They actually lost three Off-year elections often have reversed the coastal winners-of-the-presidential year. There aren't many House seats Democratic strength at the highest it has ever been, two years into the term of a Republican president.

Sixty-five incumbents are running unopposed, 18 more have no major party challenger.

So, for all the signs of frustration and anger at Congress, it would take an upheaval of historic proportions for incumbent hashing to bloom into wholesale incumbent beating.

But the Republicans' most visible national campaigners certainly are trying. President Bush says voters can "vent their frustration, their anger, and the betrayal they felt" byousting incumbent Democrats.

Bush and Quayle are talking about Democratic incumbents, and while there are more of them, the tactic does have an ironic side. Republican voters bawled early in the session of a strong lineup of Senate challengers, with five GOP House members running against Democratic senators.

Now that undercuts their own incumbent argument — those GOP challengers are part of the same anti-popular Congress. Four of the five

Limit politicians to 12 years, but with absolutely no parole

Recently, in a deviation from Standard Journalism Procedure, I've been talking with members of the public. We journalists generally avoid members of the public because they always tell us that we get everything wrong. Although I recognize that we usually talk about insignificant errors such as identifying James Baker as "the governor of Connecticut" when he is technically the mayor of Connecticut.

So I usually we journalists prefer to obtain our information about the public by walking past our cafeteria windows. "The public appears generally optimistic today," we'll say. Or "Stop the press!" The public appears to be in a pessimistic mood.

But lately, because of car trouble, I have been in very close contact with the public, at least the part of it that operates low trucks. I've been able to "dig up" the following " scoop":

THE PUBLIC IS FED UP WITH POLITICIANS.

Yes, if you don't believe me, just look around you. (Not NOW, you moron! At the end of the sentence) and you'll see subtle yet unmistakable signs of voter dissatisfaction.

In survey after survey, the public ranks "politician" as a profession between a "snort" and a "hookworm."

Many politicians are unable to appear in daylight because the public throws rocks at them. They're forced to campaign in the dead of night, sneaking into voters' houses, creeping into the nurseries, hastily kissing babies and then springing off into the darkness, trailed by aides carrying camouflaged tripods.

Eighty-seven percent of the members of the U.S. Congress now wear special armored socks because they keep getting bitten BY THEIR OWN DOGS.

In a dramatic example of the mobbing voter backlash against incumbents, the two-term governor of Oklahoma was recently defeated by a jar of totally inexperienced mayonnaise.

Our elected leaders are "feeling the heat," but is this really fair? Should the public take all of the blame in the political barrel with the same broad brush just because a few rotten eggs are crying over spill milk?

Of course not. Congress has attempted to do a recent concerted effort to reduce the peckish federal budget deficit, which, shockingly, continues to mount despite the fact that BOTH MAJOR POLITICAL PARTIES have issued sternly worded position papers against it. Day after day, week after week, the top brains of Congress and the Bush administration sat in a conference room, eating pruned Danish supplied by the Prime Danish Division of the Bureau of Pastries of the U.S. Department of Refreshments at a cost of $2,350 per slice.

"What should we do about this peckish budget deficit?" they asked, combing their hair and nibbling from their mouths. "How can we reduce it? If only we had an idea! If only we could think of... "SPEND LESS MONEY. YES! CREATING a new group of cockroaches, who had been listening from the floor and managed to figure out the solution despite the handicap of not being top political brains. That is the beauty of democracy.

More and more politicians, finally getting the message, are using their bloused commercialism to advertise their political TV commercials IN WHICH THEY DENY THAT THEY ARE POLITICIANS. You've probably seen these.

(The screen shows a candidate with his sleeves rolled up, pretending to talk with a group of voters.)

ANNOUNCER: Morton Lamprey is not a politician. Morton Lamprey has NO INTEREST in politics. That's why Morton Lamprey spent $287,000 to make this commercial.

CANDIDATE: I'm Morton Lamprey, and because I am not a politician, I constantly have opportunities to make voters informally rolling up my sleeves and holding exactly the same opinions as they do about everything. Sometimes I even touch them. (He touches a worker.)

One of the workers throws a rock, which bounces harmlessly off the candidate's hair spray.

CANDIDATE (to an aide): Have that worker shot.

ANNOUNCER: Morton Lamprey: He's just like you, assuming that you have a message. (Morton Lamprey: Notice how sincerely I say his name, I also do the infinitesimal commercials.)

So we're definitely seeing some meaningful reform in the area of political advertising. Some politicians, however, feel we need a significant and substantial improvement in QUALITY OF GOVERNMENT. Via simple, common-sense political reforms such as becoming a British citizen again. Another increasingly popular idea is to give politicians terms of a specified length, which I think is an excellent idea. Twelve years, sounds about right to me.

But no parole.

Opinion

Is this going to be the year of the Democrats?

Quane Kenyon
Idaho politics

that this is their year. It spurred a good turnout of Democratic candidates, some in areas where the party simply has given up in the past. One example is Richard Ackerman, the Bonneville County sheriff.

He's a Democrat running for the state Senate against GOP incumbent Lou Staker of Idaho Falls, and Andrus and other top Democrats see the race as a possibility. Democrats finally win in the backseat GOP Upper Snake River Valley. In fact, the local Democratic Party didn't even bother to field a slate of candidates in a recent election.

The same is true in the Magic Valley, where Democratic Rep. Gary Robbins hopes to put another Democrat in what used to be a solid Republican delegation.

Probably the most interested observer of the Senate battle is Lt. Gov. C. Lee "Butch" Oter. If the Senate winds up tied 21-21, Oter becomes a very important officeholder since he gets to cast the tie-breaking votes. That's a highly visible spot for a man who hopes to be the Republican governor nominee in four years.

And Republican gubernatorial candidate Roger Farentichuk thinks his party has dumped him.

In the party's latest list of financial contributors is listed a "Ron Pollock" of Caldwell. The report states it doesn't know his occupation and says "information requested."

To clear up any confusion, Ron Pollock, the correct spelling, is the general services manager for Canyon County. And he was entered in the May 22 GOP primary, running for the state audit or nomination against eventual winner Richard Williams and Eldon Goughly.

He didn't win — and apparently was quickly forgotten by the party.

Voters need Craig's ability and ideas in Washington

As we wind down another political campaign with all the politicking, hating and rhetoric, it is time to take a long and hard look at the problems facing this country and at the promises, performances, experience and backgrounds of the candidates who seek our votes. We need to become informed and responsible voters.

During his service in Congress, Larry Craig has been a constant supporter of Idaho's logging, mining, agricultural and small business industries. He knows Idahoans appreciate the beauty and recreational opportunities of this state, and the need to leave this legacy to future generations. But he also understands that a growing population needs jobs and homes, and he has worked for an even balance between industry and environmentalism.

Craig's background in agriculture gives him a big advantage in understanding and defending Idaho's war concerns. Craig has been a strong voice in Congress for fiscal responsibility. He has not been a part of the tax-and-spend group that has brought us to this point.

He is not one of the wealthy members of Congress. He can relate to the concerns of the working people.

Contrary to the current mood in Congress of all incumbents, I think he must be in tune with the wishes of the 1st District electorate for several reasons.

Craig's background in agriculture, experience and common-sense ideas working for all of Idaho as our U.S. Senator.

Robbins' announcement about Newcomb cruel

I have a few words that I would like to scream.

Hold it, Gary Robbins! Your

Wednesday morning radio announcement about Russell Newcomb's investments is cruel.

Mr. Robbins knows full well that our state tax laws are so complex that even the best, most honest, law-abiding citizens, when searching for a financial program can select one that can later be determined as improper.

For several years I have closely watched the political antics which are displayed just prior to our elections. I would like to point out that the use of tainted information has gotten out of hand this year.

When the Robbins family shows pride in receiving an EnrHA write-down of several thousand dollars, something is wrong. Everyone with any business sense at all knows that the tax-payers (that includes you and me — everyone who reads this newspaper) will be picking up the tab.

Gary Robbins has made public statements about his EnrHA write-down and bankruptcy. As a voter, I must question his ability to handle his personal business affairs.

I have spoken to Gary as a legislator. His inability to look at an issue from another view is very apparent.

Our economic health is dependent on people who can make correct decisions and carry them through. Gary Robbins has not demonstrated an ability that I feel comfortable with.

Legislators so they may guide us to the best possible economic health. It is the Legislature, not the governor, that controls the pulse of the state. Dwight Osborne and Tom Morrison live in my county, so I know both of these men. I can assure everyone that their ability and honesty is rated at the top of my scale.

As an informed voter, I will be voting for Tom Morrison, Dwight Osborne and Russell Newcomb.

BOISE — After years in the minority, Idaho Democrats could score their most smashing victories in decades next Tuesday.

Heading into the final days of the 1990 campaign, it appears that the down-trodden Democrats have at least a 50-50 chance of taking control of the state Senate. Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus is safe, and the party could gain one congressional seat and at least one state office.

Larry LaRocco, the Democratic candidate for Idaho's 1st District congressional seat, held the lead early in the campaign, although it appears Republican Skip Smyser will have the momentum in the final weeks. Democrats haven't held that seat since 1966.

It's about the same in the race for attorney general, a job held by Republicans since the 1974 election. Democratic candidate Larry Echohawk also had the early lead in both organization and financing. But like Smyser, Republican Pat Kote has been running hard, has attracted good financing and may have cut the gap in the final days.

GOP Treasurer Lydia Justice Edwards may buck the trend. She's opposed by a well-known Democrat, former treasurer Harpoonee Bush. Some early Democrat polls showed Moon ahead mainly on name recognition because she served 24 years as state treasurer.

But Mrs. Edwards has spent nearly $34,000 on the campaign, working hard for the past several months. Moon, whose spending remained under $10,000 going into the last two weeks, still is recovering from their surgery during the campaign.

That issue is the occasional news release. Mrs. Edwards was considered a strong favorite in the election's final days.

Ron Twilegar, the Democrat running for the Senate seat of retiring Republican Sen. James McGraw, would have to have a huge eleven-hour surge to upset Rep. Larry Craig. But that issue is the occasional news release. Mrs. Edwards was considered a strong favorite in the election's final days.

produce cheap power for California?

They are using our water for their own benefit and destroying our natural fish runs at the same time. California power users are killing Idaho salmon.

We know who is responsible for the near-extinction of this precious resource, and we know what must be tried to save it.

Idaho farmers, ranchers, loggers and miners should not have to bear the burden of restoring what others have damaged. If higher power rates for California are the price, then so be it. Idaho must be able to control its own water flows.

Now is the time. We must attempt a solution before it is too late and we can only lament what we used to have.

We must attempt a solution before a federal one is forced upon us by the Endangered Species listing of one of the four salmon, and 100 hours end up paying an even higher price.

Ron Twilegar is the Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate.

Coalition deals blow to Gorbachev's plans

The Chicago Tribune

MOSCOW — The sweeping victory in the Georgian parliamentary election by a coalition committed to independence from the Soviet Union has dealt a major blow to President Mikhail Gorbachev's drive for Soviet unity and democratic reforms.

The triumph by the reformist Round Table bloc was a double blow for Gorbachev, with ramifications far beyond the borders of Georgia, one of 15 Soviet republics.

At a minimum, the wide margin by which the coalition won re-election in the Oct. 28 elections will enable it to press ahead with plans for economic and political reforms that could ultimately lead to secession from the Soviet Union.

AP Wirephoto

Armenian guerrillas, patrolling the mountain terrain along the border with Azerbaijan, are typical of the increasing number of Soviets taking up arms in an epidemic of political violence.

But the triumph also represented a sharp defeat for the Communist Party despite its efforts to adopt a reformist image, and for its campaign platform, which was more of an apology for past sins than a vision of the future.

The message to Gorbachev, who is in a position to force the Communist Party's role in Soviet society, seemed simple: Give a chance, most Soviets will vote against a Communist candidate no matter how qualified, no matter how thorough.

Although runoff elections will be required for 40 of the 250 seats in the new legislature, the Round Table coalition already has won 114 seats and is expected to win a solid majority of those still at stake.

In contrast, the Communist Party won just 60 seats and got less than 30 percent of the vote in the runoff.

Several independent candidates won seats as well.

"It was a great victory," said Zviad Gamsakhurdia, 51, an enormous popular nationalist figure in Georgia and leader of the victorious coalition.

Speaking in a telephone interview, Gamsakhurdia, known for his defense of human rights and his outspoken views on Georgian statehood, predicted that the Round Table would prevail after the Nov. 11 runoff by controlling the necessary two-thirds majority in parliament it needs to seek constitutional changes.

Among the new parliament's first steps, he said, would be to take up measures to allow the immediate sale of state-owned industries and change the name of the republic to simply the Republic of Georgia, dropping the words Soviet Socialist.

From the outset, the Round Table's campaign platform called for a total Georgian independence carried out through negotiations with Moscow.

As in other Soviet republics, economic reality complicates Georgia's drive toward independence.

Heavily reliant on the Soviet centralized system, Georgia obtains much of its oil and other raw materials from Moscow at prices far below the market rate.

And its agriculture-based economy is starved for the hard currency it needs to pay for imported goods.

But Gamsakhurdia, the likely new president of Georgia, said the republic will not follow the radical path of Lithuania, which voted to secede from the Soviet Union last spring only to compromise later under pressure from Moscow.

Georgia, he said, will negotiate a gradual pace of independence from Moscow.

Regardless of the outcome of any negotiations, the election of yet another republican parliament that plans secession is bad news for Gorbachev.

While allowing the emergence of a multiparty system in the Soviet Union, Gorbachev has tried to preserve the special status of the Communist Party in Soviet society.

For a while, there was some hope. A poll conducted by a Georgian youth newspaper just a few days before the election indicated the Communist Party was on its way to an upset victory.

But it was not to be.

Since the party abandoned its constitutionally guaranteed monopoly on power last February, it has been pummeled at polls across the Soviet Union, blamed for 73 years of mistakes.

Besides being blamed for decades of political bullying and economic mismanagement, many Georgians hold the Communist Party responsible for the deaths of 21 demonstrators when Soviet Interior Ministry troops broke up a pro-independence rally on April 9, 1989.

Those deaths — some victims were stabbed with pointed spades and the crowd to the formation of the Round Table.

Levan Alexidze, a member of the Georgian Communist Party and a professor at Tbilisi University, said there would now be a two-party parliament with the Round Table and the Communists having to find a consensus.

Alexidze said the Round Table coalition victory was largely because of Gamsakhurdia's popularity.

But he admitted that the blunders and mismanagement of the Communists also were behind their miserable showing.

Scientists say quick action needed on global warming

The Chicago Tribune

GENEVA (AP) — Scientists from about 100 countries said Friday that the world's political and scientific leaders should take immediate action against global warming and stabilize carbon dioxide output at current levels by the year 2000.

The panel of about 200 experts, including a U.N. climate conference, unanimously said that over the past decade a "clear scientific consensus has emerged" on global warming expected to occur in the next century.

The report is intended to be used by policymakers to set targets, but environmentalists said its conclusions provide another spur for the United States to act.

Washington says more research is needed before targets can be agreed for cutting emissions of heat-trapping greenhouse gases.

The conference report, scheduled to be forwarded to a landmark meeting of ministers in Geneva from Monday to Wednesday, Heads of government due to attend include prime ministers Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Michel Badier of France.

The conference report, drafted by King Hussein of Jordan, also was posted.

The ministers are due to give formal backing to the launching of global negotiations on warming, scheduled for February.

Daniel Becker of the Washington-based Sierra Club said environmental groups welcomed the "very strong statement by the scientists," but marred the draft ministerial declaration remained under cloud.

Officials drafting the declaration Sunday remained locked in sharp differences of approach, mainly between Washington and the European Community, which urges quick action. The EC wants that nations have economic or technical problems that prevent it from contributing to the effort.

The scientific panel included members from the United States and the Soviet Union, the two biggest contributors of man-made carbon dioxide.

The gas, much of which is released by burning fossil fuels, is believed to warm the earth by trapping half of the heat-trapping "greenhouse effect" that causes global warming.

Countries are urged to take immediate actions to control the risks of climate change, with the emphasis on reducing the rate of emissions, not only from other reasons as well, the report said.

It said "technically feasible and cost-effective opportunities exist due to attend include prime ministers in all countries."

More research is needed but delaying action, the report said, "many thousands of countries" can reduce their carbon dioxide output by at least 20 percent by 2005.

Soviet scientists opposed to an earlier draft that said about 10 percent of man-made emissions, the experts outlined the climate upheaval that global warming could cause. These include flooding of vast coastal areas and islands.

Drug policy may hamper U.S.

The Washington Post

LIMA, Peru — U.S. hopes to eradicate Peru's coca fields soon have faded with a decision by Peruvian officials that the best solution is a long-haul program to convince peasants not to grow coca.

A new anti-drug policy announced last week by President Alberto Fujimori states that growth of coca, from which cocaine is made, must be led to switch crops voluntarily and that any programs to wipe out the coca fields "that leave the peasants without alternatives could easily trigger civil war or violence," he said.

Fujimori proposes an extensive development effort and new talks about aid with U.S. officials, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Melvin Levitsky, the State Department's chief official for anti-drug policy, met with Fujimori and agreed to set up new bilateral "working groups" to shape future aid programs.

Sources said that Levitsky warned, however, that the United States expects tangible progress if U.S. aid is to continue.

Fujimori's new policy confirms what U.S. officials have gradually come to accept — that the prospect of wiping out the coca fields, preferably by spraying them with herbicide, is unrealistic, given Peru's precarious political and economic circumstances.

Peru produces 60 percent of the world's coca, most of it in the remote Upper Huallaga Valley on the eastern slopes of the Andes, a stronghold of the Maoist Shining Path guerrillas.

The government is concerned that cracking down on the estimated 200,000 families that depend on coca for their livelihood will create economic problems for the hundreds of thousands of people who depend on the coca trade.

Guerrillas kill mayor

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Leftist guerrillas have kidnapped and assassinated the mayor of a southern town. He was the ninth mayor slain this year, and the army has blamed most of the deaths on the rebels.

The defense minister was quoted Sunday as saying the violence was hurting prospects for a negotiated peace between the government and leftist insurgents.

The body of Edmundo Munoz, mayor of the southern town of Rosas, was found Saturday, less than 24 hours after guerrillas from the Simon Bolivar Coordination had kidnapped him, according to an army statement.

Image consultant turns author Carol Brockway publishes book of tips for improving appearance

By Julie Paradow
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Carol Brockway has been a model, a model-wife and a radio personality and an image improvement instructor. Now she has a new career—that of an author.

Her new book is "One Minute Tips for Improving Your Image," a 192-page volume packed with simple tips for improving one's appearance. It covers everything from men's and women's clothes to the amount of time man spends shaving.

For example, "African is strengthened by cold, so rinse body in hot water, dry them, then store them in the freezer for longer life."

"The width of the waist from year to year, but the width should correspond to the level width. A wide or narrow, narrow-lapelled suit, or vice versa, destroys the harmony of an outfit."

"Get out of the old breakfast routine and try something new, such as a coffee or a breakfast salad or leftover quiche."

"Too much sleep (as well as not enough) can cause circles under the eyes."

"When purchasing clothing, keep in mind the texture of the fabric because sometimes dry cleaning bills can eventually run almost as much as the garment."

The book, which retails for $7.95, emphasizes outer beauty, fashion and grooming, which is really important. Being that the first thing people see, Brockway says, "I guess how you feel on the outside is important because it makes you feel better on the inside."

But she doesn't ignore inner concerns. One chapter discusses setting goals, another discusses the importance of setting in addition to opening each of the book's 22 chapters with a Bible verse, she concludes the final chapter by talking about what she calls "The Ultimate Image—a relationship with God."

She says she has written the book for people who don't have a strong inner light. Brockway says, "That's why my book is so important."

Carol Brockway says her book is an important inner beauty.

Promotions planned

The Times-News
TWIN FALLS—Carol Brockway will make two in-store appearances this month to promote her book, "One Minute Tips for Improving Your Image."
She will be on hand from 2 to 4 p.m. this Saturday at Waldenbooks in the Magic Valley Mall and from 2 to 4 p.m. Nov. 17 at the Christian Book Store in Centennial Plaza.

spent more than a dozen years teaching image improvement to thousands of people, offering classes in her home as well as at the College of Southern Idaho. She also was a national teaching instructor for James Wallace's "Image of Loveliness" program.

And, in all those years, she got good tips from other people. "Everyone has good ideas," she says. "We learn from each other. There's no way I could make up all those tips."

Most of these tips are really super simple, Brockway says. But others, she adds, are unusual. And even the most mundane ideas will always be new to some people, she says.

Brockway says she had thought a long time about compiling her advice into a book. About a year ago, partly at the urging of her husband, Chuck, Brockway finally sat down and wrote a first chapter and table of contents. She then sent the proposal off to Dove Christian Books.

"They say the average is you go through 80 publishers before finding one to publish a proposal book," Brockway says. But she had a publisher in mind. Dove publisher she approached. Dove published the book under its Harbour House imprint.

Brockway says image guidelines have loosened over the years, and that they'll always be looser in the West than in the corporate east. But, she adds, "I don't think you should ever have a poor self-image. If you can get away with much more in terms of dress and image."

There's more. Inadequate now for individual style, Brockway adds. People can feel free to wear what they like. But she says, "I don't think you should ever have a poor self-image. If you can get away with much more in terms of dress and image."

Boundaries important to relating

Boundaries—The word means "something that marks a limit or border." The concept of boundaries is a simple but vital one when applied to relationships and can aid you in relating to yourself and others in ways that can keep both you and your relationship healthy.

Envision a marital relationship and imagine the couple who have committed to each other, being inside a circle. Now draw a solid line around the couple. This boundary is the first and most important one, including children, on the outside.

Expressing the concept of a marital boundary, one woman says, "My husband and I consider ourselves an team. Everyone knows that we come first, including the kids, and it's a form of security to them to know we care so much about each other. The other day my husband surprised me with tickets to Hawaii for our anniversary, and I was so excited, 'It's because we're worth it!'"

When a couple agrees they want to be "boundaries" (which their marital commitment to each other implies), they can then set guidelines for relating that flow from this concept. For example, they can agree that when they have conversations to say about each other, they'll set the words when they have something bad to say, they'll say it directly to each other with the objective of working out the problem.

Another way to present a healthy boundary is to agree to share only confidential details of each other's life and their partner's personal life.

that they'll refrain from making the other partner the brunt of jokes or in other ways embarrassing that person in front of others.

that they'll act as an executive unit in making important financial decisions.

that each will ensure his or her loyalty to the partner and that neither will ally with an outside against the other.

that the welfare of the partner will be as important to each person as his or her own welfare. An investment in the partner is thus viewed as an investment in oneself.

that if there are problems with "outsiders," that they will act together to solve the problems in the best interest of everyone concerned. The focus will be on "what will help," rather than on "who to blame."

Diagnoses of Alzheimer's disease increase sharply

By Marc Riccio
The Associated Press

ATLANTA—The rate of Americans dying from Alzheimer's disease increased nearly 50 percent in 1988, but health officials say the increase is not necessarily due to more deaths, but to more diagnoses.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control said in its weekly report that 11,311 people, or a 2.2 percent increase, died from Alzheimer's disease in 1987. In 1979, the figure was 10,000, or 0.4 percent of the 2.5 million deaths attributed to the disease.

For the entire 1979-87 period, Alzheimer's disease was listed as the underlying cause of death for 46,202 people in the United States.

Whether the incidence of Alzheimer's disease actually increased during the period because the U.S. population is getting older, he said, it is likely that Alzheimer's disease is more prevalent in the elderly.

It's a little difficult to believe that the number of people with Alzheimer's disease could increase 90 percent in eight years, he said.

One general feeling is "heightened awareness was a more important" in Alzheimer's disease, which usually occurs in elderly people and is characterized by progressive mental deterioration, was first recognized in the early 1900s. But awareness of the disease was fairly limited until the 1970s.

Doctors then, Sun said, realized that Alzheimer's disease was a specific disease, not just a normal process of aging. There was something different about people with Alzheimer's disease.

The disease has gotten much attention during the last 10 years, with television and national magazines featuring Alzheimer's disease as a major health issue.

Sun said the death rate patterns reported in England, Norway, Australia and Canada are consistent with those in the United States.

cases, hardening of the arteries — were going down, he said.

In a separate report, the CDC said that severe chronic diseases accounted for 70 percent of all deaths among the elderly. Chief among them was heart disease, followed by malignant tumors, cerebrovascular disease, lung disease, diabetes, and cancer.

The study was based on 1987 Medicare data, which the CDC said could complement the standard use of mortality statistics to measure the impact of elderly health care. Mortality statistics alone may underestimate the number of people affected by these diseases, the CDC said.

"Chronic diseases affect a large proportion of the elderly and are a major public health burden," the report said, noting that in 1987 nearly one of five elderly people was hospitalized at least once.

Shoulder dusters add dazzle

NEW YORK—First there were doorknockers, says Stephen Alenti, president of the New York-based Jewelry Industry Council. "They were heavy, even though hollow. Short-lived like all extremes, the big square look has now given way to 'shoulder dusters,' also called drops or danglers, large, bright dangly things that come close to or actually scrape your shoulders as you walk."

Shoulder dusters add a touch of dazzle and drama to the night. The duster can be made of metal, glass, or plastic. The duster can be made of metal, glass, or plastic. The duster can be made of metal, glass, or plastic.

Alzheimer's care grueling

November is National Alzheimer's Month and a fundraising new holiday from San Francisco's Family Survival Project shows the heavy burden that falls on families who assume care for brain-impaired adults.

A year-long study done among 1,300 California families found high levels of depression among caregivers: 68 percent of those sampled exhibited clinical levels of depression while 61 percent said they felt burdened by their responsibilities.

The mental health needs of those who care for brain-impaired adults may be a problem of epidemic proportions, says Lynn Friss, the manager for research and information for the Family Survival Project.

Seventy-four percent of the families in the survey found their greatest need was for a "break" from their care. The greatest benefit was that common that brain illness because extra calories from high-fat foods like cream are stored as body fat more readily than extra calories from high-carbohydrate foods like beer, he points out.

Beer doesn't add to bellies

Beer doesn't really add weight, directly to the waistline, Richard Cook, Ph.D., the director of the University of Maine's school of human development at Orono, says in the December issue of Men's Health magazine.

The term "beer belly" is actually a misnomer. Exercise calories don't have to come from beer and they don't have to end up at the waistline.

According to Cook, a man's genes determine where the fat winds up. "It could just as easily be on the legs or the hips," he says. "Every body has its own favorite places."

And, Cook says, the sources of the fat can be anything—too cream, potatoes or beer—that adds more calories than it consumes.

Sexism appears in headaches

The National Headache Foundation has reason to believe that headaches are sexist.

In a survey of 3,000 headache sufferers, the foundation found that 70 percent of the men surveyed got headaches three times as often as women. But while the families surveyed are providing long-term care for victims of such disorders as Alzheimer's disease, stroke, and Parkinson's disease.

Brain cancer up among elderly

WASHINGTON (AP) - Brain cancer has increased by up to 300 percent among elderly Americans, a trend that an expert at the National Institute on Aging calls "alarming" because the disease is almost always fatal.

"It once was considered that brain tumors reached a peak rate (among people in their 30s) and then would rapidly decline in the older population, but it now appears that the incidence continues to increase with age," said the expert, Nigel H. Greig. "I think it is alarming."

In a study published in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, Greig and three co-authors report that the rate of brain cancer among elderly has increased by 183 fold for elderly age groups in 1985 compared to the rates measured from 1973 to 1974.

For persons aged 75 to 79, the rate increased 187 percent, the study finds. For those aged 80 to 84, the rate went up by 294 percent, and the rate of increase was 501 percent for those aged 85 and older.

"Primary brain cancer rates showed little change in 1985 among younger U.S. population groups," said Greig. "In virtually all other age groups, the incidence rates were approximately the same as in 1974," he said. "But these groups (the elderly) had a dramatic increase. It is a large rise over a 10-to-15-year period. Brain cancer is relatively rare in the population as a whole, representing only about 1.5 percent of the total new cancers diagnosed annually. Each year, there are about 15,000 brain-cancer patients in all age groups.

"Incidence of all types of cancer among all U.S. population groups rose 30 percent during the study period," Greig said. The study measured only primary brain tumors - cancers that started in the brain and were not spread there from tumors elsewhere in the body. The most common primary brain tumors among the elderly were glioblastomas, meningiomas and astrocytomas, two extremely dangerous forms of cancer.

"If (the brain tumor increase) is arising from the point of view that it is a lethal disease with a dismal prognosis," said Greig, "it is also alarming because treatment is not particularly good right now. And it's alarming that with the treatment that there is, the survival time of the elderly is poorer than for the young patient."

Half of all patients are dead of such tumors within 10 months, he said. "Improved diagnostic techniques may explain some of the increase in brain cancers found among the eldenly," Greig said. Since the use of X-ray computed tomography, or CAT scan, became widespread in the late 1970s, brain tumors are more easily detected. Precise diagnosis before CAT scans depended upon invasive techniques, such as intracranial biopsies, which were rarely performed on the elderly, he said.

Stanley J. Rapoport, a co-author in the study, said the increase may also come from a greater interest in the health of the elderly above the 1970s. "People then essentially gave up on the elderly," he said. "They didn't spend much time evaluating their mental dysfunction."

Now, with a greater interest in Alzheimer's disease, said Rapoport, doctors tend to seek a precise diagnosis for brain disease symptoms among the elderly.

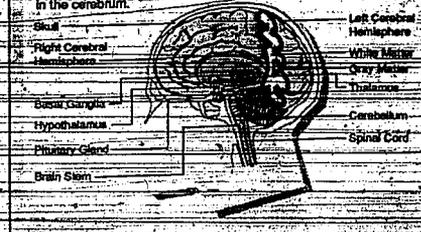

But Greig and Rapoport both said they believe at least part of the detected increase in brain cancer is not a result of sharper diagnostics. "We feel that there is a role in cancer and we're trying to determine just what that is," said Greig.

As to the cause, Rapoport said there is a possibility that it is environmental factors to which we are all exposed, but we don't know that yet.

Brain Cancer Among The Elderly Increases

The Journal of the National Cancer Institute reports that the incidence of brain cancer appears to have increased by up to 300 percent for elderly age groups in 1985 compared to the rates measured from 1973 to 1974.

The most common primary brain tumors among the elderly were glioblastoma multiforme and astrocytoma, two extremely dangerous forms of cancer, which commonly develop in the cerebrum.

Primary brain cancer rates showed little change in 1985 among younger U.S. population groups, while the rate increased for the elderly.

The street fashion parade are balloon or weight-lifter pants. "Weight-lifter pants" have been popular on the West Coast for a while," says Mariska Krause of the Downtown Sports Club of Pro Shop. "But it's only in the past year that they've really taken off here."

These pants have a gathered waist and full legs and are tapered at the ankles. The pants' design allows lots of leg room for expanding muscles. "And they look good, too," says Tom Walski, fitness director of Gold's Gym. "Some guys wear them in the gym and a lot of people wear them outside."

Most of the pants imitate California surfer and skateboard clothes in patterns and colors. They feature loud, bright abstract prints and they have turned out workout rooms into virtual explosions of color.

"I think these pants became so popular because not only are they lighter weight with fun patterns but this is the first time body-builders have had clothes tailored to fit their physique."

Dino for oversized T-shirts that are painted in all sorts of bright, hot colors. Many of the weight-lifters are T-shirts with heavy-lifting graphics or logos that advertise a gym.

The oversized T-shirts and pants are gaining both male and female comfort converts because they are usually made of "breathable cotton or cotton blends," says Nancy Neilson, manager of the Lakeshore Athletic Club pro shop.

Keds' 'suede booties' hit it off with shoppers

They're not exactly chukka boots, which left the polo field and hit the mainstream market in the 1950s. They're not really desert boots, which were introduced in the 1960s.

And they're definitely not floater boots, which are similar to desert boots and chukkas but are a lot more cumbersome. They, however, are fashionable

The masterminds at Keds, who gave the world boots a clean makeover with the signature blue label on the heel, now offer the fashion-conscious "suede booties."

Sure, lots of shoemakers have been coming out with suede ankle boots to go with all the legging and cat suits out there, but who needs to invest 180 bucks on less than half a boot? The folks at Keds offer stylish women a way to have their trend and a healthy bank account too. Retailing for about $40, the booties come in a variety of colors: red, gold, burnt orange and, of course, the ever-popular black.

Be warned. Keds folk say the booties have been setting the gangbusters, so they may be a bit tough to find. Some stores with special ads are worth asking Bloomingdale's one store that bought the booties. If you miss out this year, don't weep. Keds will bring the booties back next fall.

men got headaches more frequently, their pain lasted a shorter time. The survey reported headaches lasting several days; but 53 percent of the men said their agony was only a few hours in duration.

The foundation survey also discovered that the older you get, the more headaches you have. Early in life, 65 percent of the respondents in the 65-and-over age category experience headaches at least once a day, and that's twice the rate of younger people in the survey.

The foundation has a free brochure called "How to Talk to Your Doctor About Headaches" that's available by sending a self-addressed, business-sized envelope with 50 cents postage on it to: The National Headache Foundation, 5252 W. Western Avenue, Chicago, Ill. 60625.

They also have toll-free phone lines for more information about headaches: 800-843-2256 (outside Illinois) and 800-573-8858 (inside Illinois).

Food at bedtime doesn't seem to affect sleeping

Will babies eating solid food around bedtime have a better chance of sleeping through the night than babies put to bed with a bottle?

Conventional wisdom says yes but researchers at the Cleveland Clinic Foundation aren't so sure.

In comparing the sleeping patterns of 54 infants given cereal at bedtime starting at five weeks of age with 52 babies who began bedtime cereal feedings at the age of four months, researchers saw no real differences between the two groups in terms of hours slept without interruption.

Mothers of the infants in the study, regardless of when they were started on solids, slept an average of six straight hours nightly by 12 weeks of age and eight consecutive hours by the time they were 20 weeks old, according to the Tufts University

Diet and Nutrition Letter, which reported the Cleveland study.

The Tufts University newsletter points out that other reports have reached the same conclusion. Parents it seems are back to square one on feeding their babies at bedtime in their quest for quieter nights.

To be "boundaried," however, does not mean that a couple is to become uncommunicative, ego-massive. Though there is a firm boundary permeable, that is, each partner must be free and even encouraged to have appropriate interests outside the relationship. The key is to find balance between a marital and a personal life.

The way for a couple to protect the integrity of their relationship is by committing ample time to nourish that relationship - not by monitoring, measuring and judging the personal movements of the partner. The concept of boundaries can be extended to parent-child relationships. Couples can preserve the integrity of relationships between family members by agreeing to:

- not fight in front of kids; or draw kids into disagreements against the partner; or to form lasting political alliances with a child against a partner.
- not criticize or talk negatively about one family member in front of another. This includes not complaining to a child about the partner or burdening a child with problems belonging to the marital relationship.
- let one child help "parent" another child.
- not form an alliance with one child against another.
- not reveal confidences of a child to "outsiders."

not insist that one partner "side" with the other against a child.

Other agreements that will help include:

• Allow each partner to manage his or her own problems with a child without intervention - unless the partner is being truly hurtful to a child. Critical differences in style need to be ironed out in private conferences.

Follow the rule that discipline needs to be firm, but gentle, positive and protective of the fragile egos of children.

Manage problems with a child privately as often as possible (which protects each child's privacy and the integrity of each parent-child relationship).

relationship).

Insist that all family members refrain from name-calling, belittling, reminding or otherwise emotionally or physically abusing each other. Aim to be as respectful to each other as you would be to any important visitor staying in your home.

Setting firm boundaries with a child is one well-worth working for - and results in trust and security in relationships.

Sears moving to fashionable, medium-cost women's clothes

By Marianne Taylor

In one of a sophisticated series of magazine ads for Sears, Roebuck & Co., a young woman seated before a personal computer says, "I'm thirty-something" with a difference between my mother and I. "I still think software is a nightgown."

The fact-jacked model, holding a computer "mouse" in her hand, is promoting Sears' electronic products, but she wears Sears apparel and jewelry to deliver a more subtle message to America's women: It's OK to shop for clothes at Sears.

That is one of the toughest challenges Sears faces in its efforts to revitalize its retail business. Sears is not alone. Many manufacturers of moderate-priced apparel many would admit to buying at Sears is a flannel nightgown.

For three years, Sears has been seeking to make its women's fashion selection more appealing to women, ditching many tired private-label goods, which it used to offer to the retailer of brand-name items and replacing them with moderate-price goods becoming more popular among women.

Sears executives report "double digit" sales growth in women's dresses for the last year and a half, and 50 percent growth in sales of junior fashion over two years because of the more extensive and expensive apparel offerings.

But one idea says Sears still has a long way to go before shoppers will consider it on a level with J.C. Penney, which underwent a more drastic fashion revamp and completed its changeover in 1987.

In an unprecedented one-time advertising effort aimed at enhancing its profile among women, Sears was the sole advertiser for an Oct. 29 extra issue of Time magazine, which was devoted entirely to women's fashion, and a major sponsor of a similar one-hour syndicated television show. "The woman consumer today is a parent store," Bern said. There is no good, firmly vacant market for retailers who appeal to the customer who doesn't want to pay more than $100 for a dress, and who now "is walking around looking for a place to shop," she said.

Bern cited an evolution in the apparel industry that has pushed department stores into higher priced lines. "Something of a void in the middle 'moderate' category for retailers such as Sears, Penney's and May. At the low end are discount operations such as Wal-Mart and K-mart."

Sears has added more fashion-oriented goods—prices have risen. Where Sears used to specialize in the $30 dress, it now costs $50, $60 or $70, said Bern, who likes to think Sears "is being pulled up by the customer."

Sears also has worked to redesign its presentation. Key to improving how its apparel areas look was a company-wide change in management structure. The once-powerful store manager no longer controls how clothing is displayed.

An apparel specialist district manager, who knows how fashion manufacturers who sell at Sears also should be displayed. "One piece may discover their merchandise is mangled by the person who is in charge of the display."

Some stores are being remodeled to add better lighting to better showcase clothing lines. Sears has hired talent from other department stores, including 13 joining specialists from Field's. Bern joined Sears three years ago, leaving a Seattle department store firm.

Holidays bring poison into home

November begins the holiday season. Many decorative items find their way into the mouths of children. Some of these items may be harmful if not treated promptly but the majority of holiday decorations are non-toxic.

The most toxic holiday items are those most popular among children: mistletoe, the white berries and leaves. Most mistletoe comes from turkey dressing that was improperly cooked.

Decorations have white plastic berries. They are safer than the real berries, which don't last very long. If one is picked anyway, it takes only a few minutes to get to the doctor.

Real berries are also poisonous. If a child eats a few berries, he or she will be sure to call your physician or the Idaho Poison Center, 800-632-8000.

Real red holly berries are also toxic, but recent investigations do not show the berry to be as harmful as once thought. They are needed to produce toxic symptoms, would probably burn a child's mouth, there is a very little amount of liquid in the berry so unless the amount is ingested, there is usually no problem other than a minor burning or irritation in the mouth.

Many holiday decorations are made from plastic and do not pose much of a problem. Be aware of the size of the object. A small child could choke. In general, the paints and glues used are of low toxicity.

The contents of snow scenes present no toxicity to small children who break open the containers. However, salicylates could be present. If a child ate an upset stomach, this could cause a problem.

Holiday foods, because of their high cream and sugar content, make a good medium for food-borne illnesses. Holiday foods are often rich in fat and calories. If a child eats a large amount, they could get sick.

Children should be kept away from the hot foods and stoves. If a child touches a hot surface, he or she should be cooled down immediately. If a child touches a hot surface, he or she should be cooled down immediately.

Many millions of voters aren't registered Bomber jackets translate well from WW II to '90s

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you because you care for millions of people, and there are millions who need to be reached. Two-thirds of the voting population is not registered to vote. Please, Abby, help reach those people. It is so important for everyone to get involved and be aware of what is going on in our country.

With November elections right around the corner, this would be a great time to make a plea to the majority who are not registered and are, therefore, not voting. Think of the difference they could make.

WENDY NELSON, NORTHOLENN, COLO.

DEAR WENDY: I wish you had written sooner, because even though the deadline for voter registration in this state is statewide, it's already too late to register to vote in tomorrow's elections.

Dear Abby
Abigail
VanBuren

According to the League of Women Voters, two-thirds of the voting population is registered to vote, but a very important one-third is not. Susan Lederman, president of the league, says: "A huge number of registered voters change their place of residence each year, which means they must re-register before they are eligible to vote. Many of them postpone or forget to re-register. Finding out how to register is as easy as calling your local election board, listing in the telephone directory under 'City Hall'." Readers, don't put it off another day.

DEAR ABBY: Nearly 50 years ago, my husband and I "had to" get married. In order to save face with our three children, we back-dated our wedding date by three months. We've had a good marriage and raised three great kids and now have 10 grandchildren.

Our children want to give us a nice family celebration, which we will graciously accept. My husband feels guilty about the date, and I say, "I'll meet everyone, now we should just leave things as they are."

Our pastor says, "Forget it and suck with the date you originally told them, as it is not a major lie." Then he added, "Some things are better left unadorned."

I have written a letter to each of our children to be opened after I die, explaining the situation, trusting they will understand. May we please have your opinion?

DEAR FIFTY-YEARS-LATE: I vote with your pastor. You are to be congratulated for a successful marriage that lasted 50 years. Silence is golden, and so is this anniversary, so give yourselves an anniversary gift—your golden silence.

As for those personal letters to your three children "explaining the situation"—destroy them. Your very wise pastor gave you sound advice when he said, "Some things are better left unadorned."

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Had Enough in Wisconsin," whose husband of 40 years, always introduces her with "Meet my wife—but please don't laugh."

You may get through to this insensitive clod by introducing him in the following manner: "Meet my husband—but please don't laugh; he was much better looking when I married him."

When David Tallichet flew his old B-17 from Anaheim, Calif., to Duxford, England, in the summer of 1990 for the filming of the movie "Memphis Belle," he bundled up in a leather bomber jacket.

"I wasn't the first trip across the Atlantic in a B-17. It wasn't his first bomber jacket, either."

Like the crew of the real Memphis Belle war plane, Tallichet, a World War II aviator, wore a flight jacket one prior to getting my pilot's license.

Planes were not airtight, and the cold air would come in through the holes," said Tallichet, 62.

As modern planes became equipped with adequate heaters, the bomber jacket very well could have almost been forgotten were it not, in fact, he has survived his own battle against osteoporosis.

Today, it's considered a classic by many pilots, as well as by earth-bound people whose experience with flying is limited to airlines.

"It's nostalgic," the general aviation circles. (The bomber jacket is pretty much regarded as timeless.)

Shan Hoel, a certificated pilot who just moved to Dana Point from Seattle.

"I believe it's a tradition for a pilot to own one," said Craig Ballman, also a certificated pilot. "I've worn many." "I've always wanted a leather (flight) jacket, so I bought one prior to getting my pilot's license."

Pilots aren't the only flight-jacket customers, said Jeff Svoboda, owner of Newport Beach-based Boda's.

Arvid Maren, a flight instructor at the Newport Beach-based Boda's, said he wears them for style, more than function now that the original jacket styles, as well as revised designs, are readily available.

The bomber jacket made the transition from a uniform to a fashion staple about 12 years ago, said Glynis M. Smith, a retail buyer for Placerville's CUMBERBEE.

Keep pregnancy exercise gentle

The key to successful exercise during pregnancy is to listen to what your body tells you.

If you plan to work out while you're expecting, be sure to check with your doctor before beginning a fitness program. Certain exercises that are low impact or non-weight-bearing so you don't compromise balance or put unnecessary stress on the joints.

Bodylessons Judi Sheppard Missett

This exercise can be done slowly as a warm-up, or a little more vigorously (after a warm-up) as an aerobic routine of fairly light intensity. Although pregnancy is not the time to lose weight, many women find exercise during this time beneficial for weight control as well as providing a sense of well-being.

Start by standing on both feet. "Stomp" your right foot forward gently on the floor while facing a light mirror or the side.

Let your forearms swing upward. If you face toward the left side, be sure to pivot smoothly on the left foot so your leg does not twist. If you're on a surface where it's hard to angle, omit the movement.

Next, step on your right foot onto your left foot while you face forward again. Pivot smoothly. Let your forearms swing downward.

Reverse the stomp with the left foot. Alternate sides approximately 15 times.

Remember to tune in to any discomforts or changes, such as abdominal pain, muscle aches, fatigue, swelling or an increase in body temperature, and act accordingly.

Steelers' win tightens AFC Central as Saints run all over Bengals

The Associated Press

Pro football

The AFC Central and West met lightened Sunday as division leaders Cincinnati and the Los Angeles Raiders stumbled offensively, scoring only a touchdown apiece.

The Kansas City Chiefs (5-3) pulled within a game of the Raiders (6-2) Sunday behind three field goals by Nick Lowery and an aggressive defense that used bad weather to its advantage.

Craig Heyward and Ruben Mayes each rushed for 100 yards as the New Orleans Saints spoiled Cincinnati's long-awaited homecoming with a 21-7 victory.

The Saints (3-5) simply overpowered the Bengals' defense — statistically the second-worst in the NFL — by running out of their first home game in six weeks, which has dropped the Bengals into a tie for first in the AFC Central.

"I don't think I've ever felt this low as a professional athlete," said quarterback Boomer Esiason, who completed only 15 of 32 passes for 132 yards. "Today it's right on my shoulders. I feel that if I play 10 percent better than I did, we probably win the game."

Steelers 21, Falcons 9

Pittsburgh pulled in a tie with Cincinnati as Bobby Brister threw second-half touchdown passes to Louis Lipps and Mike Mularkey.

The Steelers, shut out for a half by the NFL's worst defense, took advantage of the three Chris Miller-thrown interceptions to beat Atlanta.

Rams 17, Oilers 13

Houston missed a chance to pull even with Pittsburgh and Cincinnati in the AFC Central as Jim Everett threw for one touchdown, Cleveland Gary ran for another and Los Angeles came up with a late goal-line stand.

The game was tied when Rams cornerback Bobby Humphrey intercepted Tony Warren's fourth-and-goal pass from the 5-yard line, dropping the Oilers into a tie for first in the AFC Central.

"I don't think I've ever felt this low as a professional athlete," said quarterback Boomer Esiason, who completed only 15 of 32 passes for 132 yards. "Today it's right on my shoulders. I feel that if I play 10 percent better than I did, we probably win the game."

Dolphins 23, Cardinals 3

Miami won its fifth consecutive game, using its ball-control offense the NFL's top-ranked defense to rout Phoenix.

The winning streak of the Dolphins' longest in five years, tied their 17-record with the half-century point in their best since 1984, the last time Miami reached the Super Bowl. Phoenix fell to 2-6.

Bears 26, Buccaneers 6

Mark Carrier had two of Chicago's five interceptions of Vinny Testaverde and the Bears scored 10 points in the last three minutes of the first half.

San Diego's Ronnie Harmon can't get past Seattle's Melvin Moskinski.

The Bears led 7-0 when Carrier, Chicago's first-round draft pick this year, came up with his interceptions within a two-minute span to help lead Anderson's one-yard touchdown run and Kevin Butler's 30-yard field goal.

Jets 24, Cowboys 9

Rookie Terence Mathis tied an NFL record with a 98-yard punt return, sparking New York over Dallas.

The Jets (4-5) also benefited from two personal fouls by the Cowboys (3-6) in winning consecutive games for the first time this season.

Eagles 48, Patriots 20

Randall Cunningham threw four touchdown passes and scrambled for 124 yards and a 13-yard touchdown pass to Philadelphia's Keith Sherman reached the 500 mark for the first time this season by defeating New England.

first time this season by defeating New England.

Redskins 41, Lions 38, OT

Chip Lohmiller's 34-yard field goal with 5:30 left in overtime clinched Washington's comeback from a 21-point deficit against Detroit.

The field goal followed a 12-play drive from the Redskins-10 to the Detroit 17. Jeff Riggins, who took over at quarterback in the second half, completed five passes, for 69 yards in the drive and finished with 363 yards passing.

Chargers 31, Seahawks 14

Nate Lewis returned a punt 63 yards for a touchdown and Les Miller fell on Dave Kriebel's fumble in the end zone as San Diego broke down a close game with a 17-point third quarter against Seattle.

It was the Chargers' first victory in the Kingdom in a decade. San Diego lost eight consecutive games in Seattle after winning there 34-13 on Sept. 7, 1980. The Seahawks had won 10 of 11 against the Chargers.

Bills 42, Browns 0

Buffalo stayed even with Miami in the AFC Central with its sixth consecutive victory as Thurman Thomas scored three touchdowns.

It was the worst shutout loss in Cleveland's history, beating out a 34-0 trouncing at Kansas City earlier this season, and the worst "home" loss ever. The Browns lost two road games by 48-point margins in the 1960s.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

Though familiarity may not breed contempt, it takes off the edge of admiration. — William Hazlitt

What's the best way to tackle the hearts in today's layout? If you ace only one reasonable wild card, the rest of the column there store the combination in the back of your mind for future reference.

A routine plan is for declarer to win dummy's diamond ace, draw trumps and lead a low heart back to his king. This loses to West's ace and declarer must lose two hearts and a trick in each minor for one down.

Another plan (at the risk of a club shift) is to duck the first diamond, win the second and ruff a third high. South then draws trumps, ruffs dummy's last diamond and plays three rounds of clubs. This wins when the defender who wins the third round of clubs must surrender a free heart finesse (often a guess) or must offer a ruff and discard. In today's case, this loses to West's ace.

The best line is to lead a low heart toward dummy's spade after drawing trumps. If it loses to the queen, a low heart is later played toward the king. If the ace is played toward, South can discard a club from dummy, holding his losses to only three down.

In today's layout, West must win the first heart with his queen, and South is home. The Jack drives out the ace, a club goes on the heart king, and South has his 10 winners.
