Senate leaders seek settlement

The Associated Press
BOISE — Republican and Democratic leaders of the evenly divided Idaho state Senate said Tuesday the next step in the effort to reach an out-of-court resolution on control of the chamber is up to their party members.
But after a series of informal discussions, GOP President Pro Tem Michael Crapo of Idaho Falls and Democratic leader Bruce Sweeney of Lewiston still appeared far apart on terms of a settlement that would head off a court test of Republican Lt. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's power to cast the tie-breaking-vote to maintain GOP operating control.

"I don't think you can do too much more," Sweeney said. "I understand his position, and I think he clearly understands our position. At this point we need to talk to our caucuses, see whether there's any other areas that we can explore, and I'm always hopeful that there are."
The 21 members of each caucus will meet Wednesday night to set strategy for Thursday morning's session of the 51st Legislature. Up to now, the GOP, which lost two seats to Democrats in last month's election, has all but agreed to give the opposition equal membership on the Senate's operating committees, a move that effectively gives Democrats power to control what legislation reaches the full Senate for a vote.

But Sweeney, while backing away from an original proposal for his party to hold Senate leadership for one year and the Republicans for the other, said Democrats still want chairmanships of the committees, half one year and the other half the next.
"If you're looking at things equally then we ought to share the responsibility of running the Senate in terms of committee chairmen," he said.

But in an appearance on public television, both leaders indicated that a court test would be a last resort although Crapo was adamant that the GOP would use Otter's vote to retain administrative control of the chamber on Thursday.
"At that point I think that the party that may be dissatisfied with that vote has to wait and see what further develops in the organizational session — to determine whether they are going to be willing to live with the situation," Crapo said.
"But we are working together to see if we can put something into place," he said.

Tape hints DC-9 pilot lost in fog

Knight-Ridder News Service

DETROIT — In the fog-shrouded tower at Metro Airport, a controller for ground traffic walked quickly over to the air controller.

"Hey," he said. "I think there's somebody on your runway. Don't clear anybody for takeoff."
But Northwest Flight 299, already a go-ahead 90 seconds earlier, was already accelerating into its takeoff roll down runway 3 Center.

And Northwest Flight 1482, a DC-9 creeping through the mist in search of its takeoff position, had already indicated in a confused radio message that it was in the path of the speeding Boeing 727 on Metro's main north-south runway.
"Get off it. Get off it!" the tower barked almost as the planes lit.

That account came Tuesday from people familiar with tower talk and cockpit traffic in the moments before the jets hit Monday afternoon, leaving eight people dead and missing, 20 hurt and Flight 1482, the jet, destroyed in a flash fire as it came to a stop, was going to Pittsburgh. Flight 299 was destined for Memphis, Tenn.

One seasoned ground controller said the DC-9 pilot, identified Tuesday as Capt. William Lovelace, 52, admitted that he was lost. He was just trying to feel his way and he made the wrong turn.
Six of the dead had been identified by early Tuesday night.

They were: Heidi Joost, 43, of Dearborn, Mich., a veteran Northwest flight attendant; Thomas Coprina, 30, of Memphis; Daniel Laughman, 40, of Memphis; Fred Zitto, 59, of Clifton, N.J.; Mary Blankenship, 37, of Windsor, Ontario; and Kingsley Brown, 30, of Pittsburgh. Three of the victims died from impact injuries, three from either smoke inhalation or burns and two from some combination of all those factors, said Dr. Bader Cassin, chief medical officer at the crash site.

According to one investigator, "There were only two people (who died) that were in the aisle; the rest were in their seats, primarily on the right side of the plane. They might've gotten a wing in the head."
There were 44 passengers and crew

Shortages of blood, donors create concern for Twin Falls institutions

By Phil Sabm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Fewer Twin Falls residents are giving blood to the American Red Cross lately, and the institutions there that use that blood are concerned about running short.

The Red Cross sets a goal of collecting 240 units during a two-day blood drive in Twin Falls. The latest one, in October, collected 190 units, said Red Cross spokeswoman Mary Ann Wilson.

The last time the Red Cross collected 240 units in Twin Falls was during a blood drive last January, she said.

The Red Cross is the only supplier of blood to the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and to the Twin Falls Clinic and Hospital, and the need for donors is essential, Stutzman and hospital officials said. While the shortage of donors is not critical, health workers breathe easier when blood supplies are up.

"Sometimes it's really up and tuck ... We've been quite nervous around here a few times," said Merle Call, section chief of the hospital's blood bank.

People undergoing surgery need blood, but they are not the only ones. Chemotherapy and radiation treatment drop blood counts in cancer patients, and the local demand for blood has increased since the Southern Idaho Regional Cancer Center opened in Twin Falls.

These people need transfusions. That has increased the demand (for blood) quite a bit," Call said.

The Red Cross delivered 3,003 units of blood to the regional medical center from July 1988 through June 1989, Stutzman said. The clinic and hospital received 962 units during that time. A unit is a little less than a pint and one unit can help as many as four people.

Mary Ann Wilson, chief technologist at the clinic, said the Red Cross services are essential to the hospital operation. "I don't know how we'd function without our blood. If we were forced to find our own donors, it would really complicate things for us," Wilson said.
The Red Cross not only collects blood, it tests blood for acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) and two types

Oil key to Kuwait deal

The Associated Press

LONDON — Iraq may be ready to withdraw from most of Kuwait as long as it is allowed to keep the disputed oil-rich oil field, according to a British news report Tuesday.

British and U.S. officials said they have heard nothing of such a proposal. Sky television news said Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has been spelling out his negotiating position on the Persian Gulf dispute in private meetings with senior mediators, including Soviet envoy Yegheny Primakov, a top adviser on foreign affairs to Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The report pushed spot oil prices sharply lower and propelled the Dow Jones average in New York from a 25-point loss a half-hour before closing to a 14-point gain to 2579.70 points at the end of Tuesday's trading.
In Washington, however, a senior U.S. official said on condition of anonymity that the U.S. would not force Iraq to give up the oil field, according to a British news report Tuesday.

Arguing that it was a matter for the national branches of "governmental," Congress and the White House Assistant Attorney General Stuart M. Gerson asked for dismissal of a lawsuit by 54 Democratic lawmakers that seeks an injunction requiring Bush to seek congressional approval before attacking Iraq.

Slow start for water year

By N.S. Nokkented
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The new water year that started Oct. 1 is off to a slow start in southern Idaho.

"We're starting off the water year dry," said Bill Galkin, of the National Weather Service in Boise. Since Oct. 1, the Magic Valley has gotten about half its normal precipitation, he said.

The storm clouds that moved in Tuesday afternoon were expected to dump rain possibly changing to snow. But high pressure is building and may bring dry weather and higher-than-normal temperature for the weekend, Galkin said.

Precipitation for November was just over one-half inch, which is just under a half-inch shy of normal. So far for the water year, precipitation has been .84 inch or .85 inch below the average. But 1990, with 7.7 inches is only 41 inch below normal.
"It's important high mountain basins the picture is a little less gloomy."
"We're not off to a bad start," said Mike Beus, of the Bureau of Reclamation in Burley, which keeps tabs on Snake River system reservoirs.
"We had a wet October, and a reasonably normal November. It was short some places, long in other places," Beus said.

The Soil Conservation Service's survey in Boise reported the snowpack in the Oakley and Salmon watersheds at Weather summary

A frontal system was moving across Idaho Tuesday afternoon, whipping through Lewiston and then sheering across the southwest before sunrise today, the National Weather Service said.

Winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to around 45 mph were blowing near the front, but will gradually decrease after it passes.

Rain and snow showers were falling over northern and central Idaho in the afternoon, but amounts were light. The activity spread southeast as evening approached, but is expected to decrease today.

The warmest temperature in the state Tuesday was 50 degrees at Lewiston. Stanley was coldest at 4 below zero.

Elsewhere in the nation Tuesday, the highest temperature was 82 degrees at West Palm Beach, Fla., Monticello and Fairbrook, Calif. The lowest was 11 below zero at Brimack, N.D.

Rain, snow, high winds scattered across the nation

The Associated Press

Rain fell over much of New England Tuesday, accompanied by high tides and gale force winds, while snow fell over parts of the Midwest and the Pacific Northwest.

Warnings of 50-mph winds were issued for the northern half of the Atlantic Coast, much of the Great Lakes and parts of the central Gulf of Mexico Coast. Rain fell throughout New England, eastern and north-central New York, and northern New Jersey.

At midrange, light snow was falling in western and south-central New York, north-central and western Pennsylvania; the Maryland panhandle, Ohio, West Virginia; western Virginia, eastern Kentucky, northern and eastern Indiana, Michigan and northern Wisconsin.

Rain also extended over the northern Atlantic Coast, and from eastern Washington state across the Idaho panhandle, changing to rain at higher elevations.

Heavy rain fell during the six hours ending at 1 p.m. EST included 1.8 inches at Portland, Maine, 1.7 inches at Augusta, Maine, 1.35 inches at Providence, R.I., and 1.18 inches in Chatschopie Falls, Mass., and Rumford, Maine. Snowfall during the same six hours included 3 inches at Caribou, Maine, and 2 inches at Houlton, Maine.

Midland, Texas, set a new low for the date with a reading of 19 degrees. Its previous record of 20 was set in 1934.

Yucatan crater ground zero for doomed dinos

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Why did dinosaurs disappear? Scientists wrote 2,000 studies blaming asteroids, volcanoes, slow climate change or even constipation.

Researchers said Tuesday they think they found the smoking gun: a 110-mile-wide impact crater in Mexico. But don't bet the 12-year-long debate is over.

Further evidence suggests other asteroids or comets struck Earth near Manson, Iowa, and in the Caribbean off Colombia or Cuba when the dinosaurs went extinct 65 million years ago.

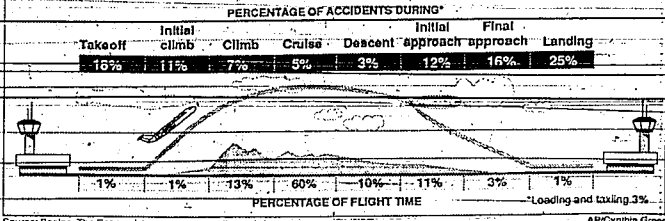

Some scientists say certain basalt rock deposits around the world suggest another object also smacked into the planet to help trigger mass extinction.

"We think we have found the smoking gun, but there may be other guns and maybe a firing squad," said Bill Boynton, of the University of Arizona at Tucson.

The latest theory came during the American Geophysical Union's fall meeting. The conviction of 4,400 Earth scientists leans heavily toward the theory that killer asteroids sent dinosaurs to oblivion.

Aircraft Accidents

aboard the DC-9. Most jumped or slid to safety. All 153 passengers and crew aboard the relatively unscathed 727 survived.

The runway where the crash occurred remained closed most of Tuesday as the wreckage of the DC-9 was towed into a hangar and the 727 continued to sit, leaking fuel. Workers put sand and other absorbent material under the aircraft.

Fifteen National Transportation Safety Board investigators studied the disaster site and interviewed flight crews and witnesses at the airport.

At same time, Federal Aviation Administration officials in Washington analyzed the tapes of conversations between the crew of the DC-9 and the airport control tower and flight data recorders from the DC-9.

The jet's final exchange with the tower was captured on a recording that was played for investigators in Washington Tuesday.

Tony Dresden, public affairs director for the National Air Traffic Controllers Association, said a union representative heard the tape and provided an account.

He said it seemed that "for some reason, the pilot of the DC-9 became disoriented," while taxiing in the fog, trying to get into position behind the 727 for takeoff.

According to the tape, the ground fog prevented the tower from seeing the DC-9, leaving controllers to rely on the pilot as he telling them as to his position," Dresden said. "Along the way he's relaying information as to where he thinks he is, but in fact, he is really not there."

Pilots from Metro's major airlines refused to talk Tuesday, about the Northwest accident, telling them as to his position," Dresden said.

Two flyers who pilot twin-engine jets into Metro weekly for the Holland, Mich.-based corporate airline, Tulip City Executive Express, said taxing can be the most troubling aspect of using Michigan's largest airport, especially in fog.

"Picture yourself in a car on foggy day, looking for a particular street," said Glenn Vogel, 31, of Holland. "You're disoriented."

Although flights were not being allowed to land because of the fog at the time of the collision, planes were still being allowed to take off. According to flight controllers, visibility in the center runway was at least a quarter of a mile; the minimum required for its use.

One federal investigator said that because the pilots and co-pilots of both flights survived and data recorders were recovered intact from the burned DC-9 in Monday's crash, "I'd say we'll probably see a bottom line on this within 90 days."

added, "I'm confident that as we go through this process we can work out something that will work."

Republicans, backed up by outgoing GOP Attorney General Jim Jones, contend Otter has the right to vote any time there is a tie on the Senate floor, including a tie for the election of a president pro tem whose party controls the Senate.

But Democrats got their own legal analysis disputing that claim, arguing that the stalemate must be settled without Otter's vote under a provision that says lawmakers lose their pay until it is settled if it takes more than four days.

Farm issues may wreck trade talks

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — An ambitious effort to overhaul the world trading system appeared on the verge of collapse Tuesday as pressure built on European countries to cut their farm subsidies.

Some European officials indicated they were willing to offer more agriculture subsidy cuts, although it was uncertain whether any new offer would be enough to satisfy U.S. negotiators.

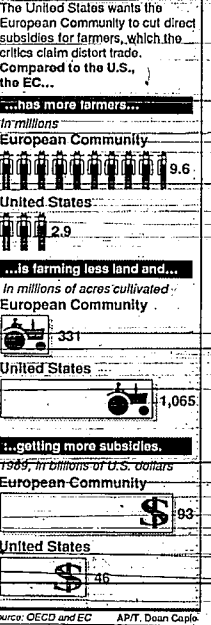

The 12-nation European Community had staunchly resisted a U.S.-backed proposal to slash export subsidies by 90 percent and reduce internal support payments and market barriers by 75 percent over the next decade.

Third World countries viewed lower farm barriers as their No. 1 priority in the discussions.

The talks, known as the Uruguay Round since they began in 1986 in the South American nation, seek to dismantle barriers to trade in agriculture with other major industrial goods and the fast-growing area of services, such as banking and insurance.

"We have a very large stalemate in agriculture and that is unfortunate," said a "disappointed" U.S. official. Representative Carl Albert, a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said even if the farm issue is resolved, it was unlikely a final trade agreement could be completed on schedule this week.

anonymity. "We know absolutely nothing about this. It comes as no surprise to us that these types of rumors will be surfacing more and more."

Britain's Foreign Office also said it knew of no such negotiations, but added "we've got to be a full and unconditional leader from Kuwait, restoration of the legitimate government and a release of hostages."

The Sky-TV report said a source close to one of the negotiations' participants told its reporter the sort of deal Saddam would accept would be for a guarantee against any Western attack on Iraq, he would pull out of Kuwait except for the oil field on the border.

While much of the Rumailah oil field is in southern Iraq, it also crosses into two northern Kuwaiti provinces.

Sky-TV, a 24-hour news channel, is part of the Sky Television satellite system launched by media mogul Rupert Murdoch in February 1989.

Saddam also would give back the strategically important islands of Bubiyan and Warba as long as Kuwait would allow Iraq to lease a port on the Persian Gulf. The Kuwaiti royal family, which fled when Iraq invaded Aug. 2, according to the report.

The report said the Western allies already heard of this Iraqi position.

of hepatitis to meet federal regulations. The next task, weeks, but to expand the donor base. This includes talking to high school seniors about the importance of donating blood to replenish its stock.

Stutzman thinks time and scheduling problems could be reasons fewer people are giving blood.

The organization is considering scheduling appointments to make it easier to give blood. This should prevent the congestion of 15 or 20 people coming in at the same time to donate, she said.

The organization also will work on expanding its donor base. This includes talking to high school seniors about the importance of donating blood. The seniors usually are 17 years old, the minimum age for donating blood.

The fear of contracting an infectious disease, such as AIDS, by donating blood has lessened, Stutzman said. But the Red Cross still works to educate people about that, she said.

The maximum age for giving blood is 70. Besides that, donors must weigh at least 110 pounds. People who have had major surgery or a blood transfusion should wait 12 months until donating. Donors are encouraged to eat a high-protein meal within four hours before giving blood.

Those interested in donating blood can contact the Red Cross to find out specifics about who can and cannot contribute. The Red Cross has scheduled its next blood drive in Twin Falls for Dec. 17-18 at the First Presbyterian Church at 209 2nd Avenue N.

Hours are 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. on the 17th and 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. the 18th.

about 95 percent of normal, said the service's Peter Palmer.

Snowpack in the Wood River and Lost River basins is about 56 percent of normal. In the Upper Snake River basin, it is about 116 percent in the Henry's Fork and Tetou basins, 91 percent of normal.

"But it's really early in the season," Palmer cautioned.

The service is considering daily cutting the percentage figure, pushing it up over 100 percent and a few dry days can drop it below 50 percent, he said.

"We still have 30 percent of the winter yet to come, and that's what's going to make or break us," Palmer said. "We're kind of off to a slow start."

Snow levels look good in the Upper Snake River drainage, but in the areas that feed the Magic Walman Falls and Oakley reservoirs, a good winter snowpack is critical this year to slake those parched reservoirs, he said.

Meanwhile, in northern Idaho, rivers are swollen. The snowpack in the Clearwater River watershed is about 175 percent of normal.

Panel told U.S., Canada bungled military crash probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. and Canadian governments bungled the probe of a crash that killed 256 American servicemen and may be concealing a possible terrorist connection, a congressional panel was told Tuesday.

Rep. Robin Tallon, D-S.C., told the House Judiciary subcommittee on-erime that federal agencies appear to be guilty of "ineptness or the best-contrived cover-up ... ever" in the Dec. 12, 1985, crash in Gander, Newfoundland.

The DC-7 carrying U.S. peacekeeping troops home from the Middle East crashed less than 30 seconds after takeoff.

The FBI and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police "found very serious allegations" but that information apparently wasn't turned over to the Canadian authorities.

The FBI said it has no reason to question the accuracy of the Canadian findings.

"No credible evidence has surfaced" suggesting the charter flight by Miami-based Arrow Air crashed was the result of an act of terrorism, Thomas O'Hara, deputy assistant director for criminal investigations at the FBI, said in prepared testimony.

Arrow Air was one of the subcontractors that hauled weapons to the Contras for Oliver North's secret supply network. It operated in 1983 and 1986 during a congressional ban on U.S. military aid to the rebel force.

"Incredibly, no U.S. government agency, or at least none with official responsibility, demonstrated any determination to find out just what caused the crash," said subcommittee Chairman William Hughes, D-N.J.

"The National Transportation Safety Board, and other agencies of the U.S. government, chose to sit back and watch as the Canadian efforts became embroiled in controversy," Hughes said. "The NTSB

The theory of ice on the wings is "preposterous," said L.T. Pilotas, a Canadian aeronautical engineer who served on the investigating panel and dissented from the majority's finding.

Pilotas said the five-member majority of the Canadian board refused to set aside the ice theory, long "unproven to investigate other possibilities."

Tallon and others suggest the plane "might have been blown up by terrorists in connection with the Iran-Contra affair. The Reagan administration authorized a shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran less than three weeks before the plane crashed.

routinely rubber-stamped the Canadian investigation.

The Canadian investigation attributed the probable cause of the crash to ice on the wings of the chartered military jet.

A subcommittee staff report that formed the basis for Tuesday's hearing said there was no evidence that either the United States or Canada had seriously investigated possible terrorism.

Eyewitnesses say they saw a bright orange object in the sky at the time of the crash, suggesting the plane was on fire.

An anonymous caller later said that Islamic Jihad, a pro-Iranian terrorist group, had put a bomb on the plane.

"When a terrorist organization took credit for this abomination, we in this claim not investigated and we in this claim not the American people," asked retired Army Col. Lewis Millett.

McNamara, senators urge U.S. restraint in Persian Gulf crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara urged Tuesday that President Bush heed a lesson from Vietnam and not go to war with Iraq without prior public approval.

A Republican senator agreed that "we start having body bags coming back, we will have a very serious revolt."

McNamara, who was Lyndon B. Johnson's defense secretary at the height of U.S. involvement in Vietnam, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the administration should continue to rely upon economic sanctions as the main weapon against Iraq for a year or more.

In Uruguay, Bush took issue with the parade of congressional witnesses who have argued for patience with the sanctions strategy. "The notion one of these will bring him to his senses," Bush said of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein.

Two other former Pentagon leaders, Gen. David Jones and Adm. William Crowe, had suggested earlier that Bush give the sanctions up to 18 months to work. As to that, Bush said "I don't agree with them. I can't say how long, but I don't agree with them."

McNamara, meanwhile, asked the Senate committee: "Who can doubt that a year of blockade will be cheaper than a week of war?"

Asked to compare the situation with Vietnam, McNamara said: "I do not believe the president should and I do not believe he will — initiate action without the approval of the American people expressed by the approval of the Congress."

Several committee members, meanwhile, indicated they had not been swayed by Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's arguments to the Senate Armed Services Committee a day earlier that the international sanctions against Iraq were likely to prove futile.

"Sometimes there is more toughness in patience than in heeding out. This is such a time," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the foreign relations panel.

Republican Sen. Larry Pressler of South Dakota said-Americans want peace. "If we start having body bags come back, we will have a very serious revolt in terms of public opinion," he warned.

And Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., added: "We have time. I don't see any hurry. I don't see any doubt that he either gets out, or he gets thrown out, blown out."

In making his argument for sanctions, Moynihan said Iraq relies on imports for items as basic as its own currency. Holding up several Iraqi dinars, he noted that they are printed in London, and wear out in about 12 months.

Moynihan, speaking with reporters, observed that Bush had enjoyed unsplitting congressional support until Nov. 8, when the administration announced a new troop buildup.

Fed relaxes bank reserve requirements

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve relaxed its reserve requirements for banks Tuesday, an unusual move aimed at stimulating the deteriorating economy by easing a shortage of credit.

The central bank said its action, the first change in reserve requirements since 1987, was taken in part for technical reasons but also to encourage banks to increase lending.

"Lower reserve requirements ... will reduce costs to depository institutions, providing added incentive to lend to creditworthy borrowers, thus contributing to some extent to recent tightening in credit terms," the Fed said in a statement.

Michael Boskin, President Bush's chief economic adviser, told reporters the move was "a sensible step."

Richard Kirk, president of the American Bankers Association, called it a "positive step" and "helpful," but said reserves should be reduced further.

Government refutes DEA-terrorist tie

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department said Tuesday that a month-long inquiry had produced no evidence that terrorists who blew up Pan Am Flight 103 five years ago were unwittingly aided by an undercover U.S. drug investigation.

Neither the FBI, which is investigating the Dec. 21, 1988 bombing, nor the Drug Enforcement Administration found evidence to substantiate broadcast reports that terrorists took advantage of an undercover DEA operation to smuggle explosives aboard the plane.

NBC and ABC both reported in late October that security at the Frankfurt airport, where the New York-bound flight originated, had been relaxed to accommodate DEA investigators who were tracking U.S.-bound drug shipments.

But Deputy Attorney General William P. Barr said in a statement Tuesday that "no evidence has been revealed to support any of the allegations that a DEA operation was in any way involved in the Pan Am tragedy."

"DEA had no investigative or operational activity in effect on Dec. 21, 1988 that involved the use of Pan Am Flight 103 or Frankfurt International Airport," Barr said.

A bomb destroyed the plane as it flew over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing 259 people on board and 11 on the ground. The flight originated in Frankfurt with a stop in London, where passengers and luggage were transferred to another aircraft.

Law enforcement officials in Britain and Germany continue to investigate the bombing, along with FBI. Investigators believe the bombing was carried out by members of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, but the FBI has not yet produced enough evidence to bring criminal charges.

Nation Selection of schools promoted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary Luro Cavazos on Tuesday expanded the administration's campaign for local jurisdictions to give parents more freedom to decide which schools their children attend.

Cavazos launched an Education Department office called the Center for Choice in Education, which he said will operate as resource for information and assistance on the issue.

"President Bush and I have long been vigorous supporters of school choice and other empowerment initiatives which allow families a greater voice over their future," Cavazos told reporters. "We believe that choice is essential for the successful reform of America's schools."

Cavazos said the movement is gaining momentum as states explore a variety of ways to empower parents to select the school that suits their child. He noted that Minnesota, Arkansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Ohio were among the first to enact laws allowing parents to choose schools across district lines.

Since last fall, Washington, Vermont, Utah, Colorado and Kentucky also have passed legislation permitting greater parental choice, he said.

Cavazos' action came a day after 10 national education groups took a formal position against "vouchers" as superseding "choice." That was an indirect criticism of a Wisconsin plan which allows disadvantaged children to attend private, non-religious schools in Milwaukee at public expense. The funding provision of the plan has been unlawful, for essentially technical reasons, by a state appeals court.

Singling out the Wisconsin program, Cavazos said "President Bush supports this program, and after visiting one of these schools... I can attest personally to the home and satisfaction such a program can provide, particularly for low-income and minority families."

On Monday, the Forum of Educational Organization Leaders urged the president and other government and community leaders at all levels to join in opposing private school vouchers and supporting the strengthening of our public schools.

Cavazos said the administration takes no position on public support of private schools, and stressed that "how choice programs are financed really is a state or local decision."

"At the present time I do not see the federal government moving in the direction of providing vouchers or direct support for any of these programs," Cavazos said. "The president has made very, very clear that we will not move in that direction."

HUD tightens eligibility rules for homeless

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Housing and Urban Development has tightened its housing eligibility rules after learning that Texas businessmen and church leaders were living in units designated for homeless.

James Forsberg, director of HUD's program of homeless housing, confirmed the situation uncovered by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, but said regional administrators in other parts of the country told him they knew of no similar problem.

"It would appear right now that the issue has been limited to Texas, and probably the northern part of Texas," Forsberg said Tuesday.

The Star-Telegram, in a story in Sunday's editions, reported that a businessman and part-time street minister Roy Gray of Keller rents a $92,500 home in the upscale Dallas suburb of Rowlett for $1 a year.

Baptist minister Bill Robinson has moved into a two-story home in Arlington, Texas, appraised at $92,000, under the program, although the net worth of his non-profit company will soon exceed $1 million.

"Those people were there," Forsberg said. "They shouldn't have been, but nobody can dispute the fact they were." We will move to get them out," Forsberg said. Rules were changed Monday during a series of meetings with HUD officials, including Secretary Jack Kemp.

"We tightened up to say the purpose of the program is to help people who are homeless and had no other resources that they could use to find housing elsewhere," Forsberg said.

Nation FAA rules address fire safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal aviation officials have imposed safety rules over the last six years in an effort to reduce the dangers of aircraft fires such as the one that swept a Northwest Airlines DC-9 in Detroit.

But those officials acknowledge that safety can't be guaranteed in an aircraft propelled by highly flammable jet fuel.

Monday's runway collision of the DC-9 and a Northwest 727 at Detroit's Metropolitan Airport killed eight people aboard the DC-9. The eight apparently died from inhaling noxious fumes before their bodies were burned beyond recognition, officials said.

At least 20 other people were hospitalized with burns, broken bones and smoke inhalation.

Conquest aircraft fire was dramatised in 1977 when two Boeing 747 jumbo jets collided on a foggy runway at Tenerife in the Canary Islands, killing 581 people.

In 1984, the Federal Aviation Administration experimented with an anti-static fuel additive, hoping it would prevent jet fuel vapors from igniting in a crash.

The additive worked in stationary tests. However, when the FAA deliberately crashed a remote-controlled Boeing 720 in the California desert, the jetliner was engulfed in flames.

Eleven months later, the FAA said the concept is not practical for day-to-day airline operation in the foreseeable future.

The experiment was not repeated. But the FAA and the Department of Transportation have tried to make aircraft cabins more flame resistant. The aim, the agency said, is to prevent a fire from spreading for an additional 60 seconds, sometimes all the time needed to evacuate a burning aircraft.

A year after 23 people were killed in a 1983 smoky fire aboard an Air Canada jetliner, the DOT ordered all aircraft with 30 seats or more to install fire blocking material in all passenger seats and floor-level lights to facilitate escape from an aircraft choked with smoke.

In 1988, additional safety rules were imposed after an agreement between the FAA and the aviation industry on more stringent flammability standards for aircraft cabin materials.

Northwest said it could not immediately determine whether the DC-9, the oldest version of the McDonnell Douglas DC-9, was in full compliance with the FAA's fire safety rules.

Scholarships are memorial to crash victims

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Scholarships have been awarded to 35 Syracuse University seniors in memory of the students who died in the terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103.

All 259 people aboard Flight 103 and 11 people on the ground died when the bomb exploded over Lockerbie, Scotland, Dec. 21, 1988. Family and friends of the 35 students who died gathered Monday night to honor the scholarship winners.

Florence Ergin, whose son Turhan died in the crash, said it was "very touching... I think that something good could come out of the murder of 35 students."

Hundreds of students applied for the $5,000 scholarships, which were awarded for the first time Monday. Applicants were asked to write essays about terrorism, said David Smiley, chairman of the award committee.

Mormon apostle's in good condition
SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon Church apostle Howard W. Hunter was upgraded Tuesday from fair to good condition at LDS Hospital, where he is being treated for pneumonia.

The 83-year-old Hunter, next in line to assume the church presidency should 90-year-old Ezra Taft Benson die, has been a member of the faith's Council of the Twelve since 1959.

Church spokesman Jerry Cahill said Hunter was admitted to the hospital on Saturday and "is doing fine." In 1988 upon the death of late Marion G. Romney, Hunter became the council's acting president.

His duties include church correspondence and presiding over council business meetings.

Magellan shows evidence of continuing volcanic activity on Venus

Venus crater at bottom middle of photo has been nearly entirely filled with a lava flow, scientists say. It is 39 miles across.

The Washington Post

SAN FRANCISCO — The Magellan robot-explorer has sent back data showing that the face of Venus is not an ancient death mask, like those of Mars and Mercury, but has been remodeled piecemeal by volcanic flows, scientists reported Monday.

"Venus is not dead," Steve Saunders of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., the project's chief scientist, told a gathering here. "It did not shut down 400 million years ago" as scientists had suspected, but shows evidence of continuing geologic change.

"The planet still appears to be active volcanically," said Roger Phillips of Southern Methodist University. Scientists hope to catch an eruption in progress during Magellan's mission, he said. Only Earth and two planetary satellites, Jupiter's moon Io and Neptune's moon Triton, are known to have any form of active volcanism.

The first major crop of papers based on the data pouring in from the Magellan spacecraft as it circles Earth's hot and toxic sister planet was delivered here at the fall meeting of the American Geophysical Union.

Magellan's radar eyes peered through the planet's wet clouds to show 10 times more detail than previous investigations.

It has completed about 90 days of its $500-million, 240-day mapping mission, but because of an expected interruption when the sun blocked it from Earth and a series of technical problems, it has mapped only about 15 percent of the planet so far, scientists said.

Part of the evidence for volcanism on Venus is that the planet's surface in some areas is "unexpectedly smooth. Magellan's data show significant gaps in the distribution of craters caused by falling meteorites, with vast expanses where there are no craters. Phillips said this indicated that the pockmarks were obliterated by more recent lava flows — upwellings of molten rock from the planet's core — some of which extend over an area the size of Australia.

However, there is an "apparent contradiction," he added.

The gaps in the peppering of craters suggest "the planet is being resurfaced locally," but "we can't find craters in the process of being resurfaced."

One possible answer to the riddle is that "resurfacing is taking place very fast" at a given point.

Globally, the resurfacing process is slow compared to that on Earth. On average, he said, Venus produces about one-tenth of a cubic mile of lava each year, while Earth's output is about 7.7 cubic miles a year.

"Maybe only 10 percent of the planet is active at any one time," he said. "Some large volcanoes have several impact craters nearby, while others have virtually none, and these clues could point scientists to the most highly areas of current volcanic activity," said James Head of Brown University. "This is very exciting. We can track and target," he said.

There appears to be a wide variation in the thickness of the molten rock flowing on Venus, he added.

It ranges from the consistency of toothpaste in craters that resemble pancakes, to "runny" liquid-in-extensive river-channels hundreds of miles long, indicating differences in the chemical composition of the hot rock.

Earth and Venus were blasted out of the same material nearly 5 billion years ago, and are about the same size and distance from the sun, but they have evolved quite differently. Venus's surface temperature is almost 900 degrees Fahrenheit, hot enough to melt lead; its thick, lethal atmosphere has a pressure at the surface 90 times that on Earth.

In order to explode volcanically, Head said, molten lava on Venus must have a concentration of volatile gases high enough to overcome the high atmospheric pressure.

"Venus' quakes also appear likely," said Sean Solomon of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "We see faults" on Venus, like those that cause earthquakes, he said, "but we expect they slip episodically and generate seismic waves."

Scientists have debated whether the crater-known-as-Cleopatra, on the slope of the highest mountain on Venus, was caused by a meteor impact or volcanic activity. Magellan has resolved that question, showing Cleopatra is an impact crater. But it is "fascinating" that it is either very young or that there has been no activity to alter its form in millions of years.

Stealth delays cause Navy to retire officer early

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy announced Tuesday it is forcing the chief of the Naval Air Systems Command to retire early because he failed to inform top Pentagon officials of serious flaws in the proposed A-12 stealth bomber program.

Lawrence C. Eibenfeld, who had been reassigned to other duties and received letters of censure from Navy Secretary H. Lawrence Garrett III.

The Navy's top priority for future aircraft development. The carrier-based airplane is scheduled to enter operation in 1995.

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Charles H. Keating's savings and loan hurtled toward failure, two of the Keating Five senators pushed hard for a sale rather than a government takeover of the institution. A former chief S&L regulator testified Tuesday.

M. Danny Wall told Senate Ethics Committee hearings that Sen. Alan Cranston contacted him four times and Sen. Dennis DeConcini at least twice to urge that regulators not seize Lincoln Savings and Loan.

Wall focused on activities of Cranston and DeConcini from the beginning of January through mid-April 1989 — a hectic period when the Federal Home Loan Bank Board considered and rejected three proposed sales of Lincoln.

Regulators took over the Keating-owned, Irvine, Calif., thrift that April 4.

Two years before the seizure, regulators told Cranston, DeConcini, DeConcini, D-Ariz. and three other senators that criminal referrals on Lincoln were being forwarded to the Justice Department. Testimony in the hearings has shown that only the two senators contacted the bank board after that.

The three other senators whose names were investigated by the Ethics Committee are Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; and John McCain, R-Ariz.

The committee is in its 11th day of hearings to determine whether the five senators improperly interceded for Keating with banking regulators in return for $1.3 million he and associates donated to their campaigns and causes.

DeConcini and Cranston said they contacted Wall about a sale because they were trying to save jobs at the thrift and at its parent company, American Continental Corp., which is based in Phoenix.

Wall said that Cranston "urged the board to give prompt consideration and approval to any legitimate proposals" for the sale of Lincoln.

DeConcini, he testified, sought "prompt consideration but did not state that a particular proposal be accepted."

Wall said all three offers were rejected by the bank board. He said because Keating was not entirely separated from the buyers and it appeared the new Lincoln would not be able to survive economically, the former regulator now a private financial consultant, said, "I don't recall any discussion where details were discussed with the senators."

Wall said Cranston called him three times and they met April 7, 1989, just a week before the takeover. DeConcini called April 7 and again on April 11, Wall said, and added there may have been a third contact with the Arizona not reflected in his records.

In a sworn statement to the committee, Wall said on Nov. 7, "I have stated many times that my decisions regarding Lincoln were not influenced by Mr. Keating, Sen. Cranston or Sen. DeConcini."

During the same January to April period, Keating was pushing hard for approval of a sale. Wall said Keating is asking for an appointment in January 1989 to discuss a subject that was — according to Keating — the "culmination of my life, maybe my fortune."

When the meeting took place on Jan. 17, Wall said, Keating indicated he was trying to sell Lincoln and that it "was not wise for him to get into a regulated business. He wanted to get out of the business."

Cranston told the committee, according to the transcript of his closed-door testimony on May 17, that he never inquired about details of the proposed sales.

"All I wanted them (the bank board members) to do was to make sure they didn't block a sale just because they were down on Keating and wanted — some people may have wanted to drive him out of business rather than let him sell his way out of the business."

EPA panelists mum on grants

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — The tobacco industry has given substantial research grants to the employees of three members of an EPA panel that met Tuesday to decide whether airborne cigarette smoke causes lung cancer in nonsmokers.

The panel members did not mention the grants when they were asked, at the opening of the meeting, to voluntarily disclose anything that might be seen as a conflict of interest.

The EPA panel is meeting for two days at an Arlington hotel to consider two draft EPA reports, one of which concludes that cigarette smoke should be designated a class A carcinogen — a known cause of human cancer.

Meanwhile, Rep. Chet Atkins, D-Mass., and ten other members of Congress wrote a letter to EPA Administrator William Reilly asking that he "require the Science Advisory Board members to sever their ties to the tobacco industry."

They said an EPA rule "prohibits officials from participating in decisions that directly and predictably affect the financial interest of an industry in which they have an employment or financial stake."

David Ryan, an EPA spokesman, said the agency had no immediate response to the letter.

Robert Flauk, the EPA official conducting the panel meeting, said he was not concerned that the panel members had failed to disclose the tobacco grants to their institutions.

"The fact that they left something out is not malicious, I don't think," he said. "The disclosure process is a voluntary one. I don't think they should be pilloried for one or two grants they might have left out."

In materials sent to the panel, Flauk wrote that the issues that might be perceived as conflicts of interest include "the extent to which you or your organization have received professional or personal benefits from any individuals, organizations or groups representing any viewpoint concerning the issues under consideration at this meeting."

Panel chairman Morton Lippmann, in prepared written remarks on potential conflicts of interest, mentioned that he "serves on the science advisory board of a tobacco industry research organization called the Center for Indoor Air Research."

He is one of six panelists whose links with that organization have been previously disclosed in news reports. He did not mention, however, grants to three researchers in his department at New York University.

They are receiving a total of $578,000 from the center this year, with more money likely in the future.

NASA says observatory fixed, but scientists remain skeptical

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts got a balky observatory running Tuesday, but missed important targets and had to revert to manual operations when the star-tracking system failed to work automatically.

Astronaut Jeffrey Hoffman did manage to spot the Soviet Mir space station through binoculars and said it appeared as a small point of light. Mir was orbiting 32 miles above Columbia with the camera.

"It's extremely frustrating," Arthur Davidson of Johns Hopkins University, said of the latest problems.

"We've got this wonderful instrument ready to go and we're not getting it pointed at any scientific targets except for brief glimpses — brief enough to show how great it would be once it locks on, but not long enough to get the science we want to get," said Davidson, principal investigator for one of the observatory's three ultraviolet telescopes.

House drops plan to ease fundraising

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats under fire from Republicans and private groups on Tuesday withdrew a proposal to let lawmakers collect unlimited contributions for their upcoming redistricting fights.

"It will not happen. We're going to review the situation," Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and the speaker of the House, told reporters just a day after his leadership team first made the proposal public.

The 1990 plan will cause many states to change the boundaries of their congressional districts. The new boundaries, which will affect many 1992 House races, could wind up being settled in the courts.

Democratic rank-and-file members were to vote Tuesday on the plan to allow members to set up special accounts, free from fundraising or spending limits, to aid them in their expected legal battles.

Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause, a group that lobbies for tougher ethics standards, urged Democrats to reject it and scuttled the idea wrongheaded and ill-timed.

"It's as if no one there is paying any attention to the Keating Five hearings going on across the street in the other chamber," Wertheimer said Monday, referring to the Senate ethics hearings on alleged influence peddling in the savings and loan industry.

On Tuesday, House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., accused the Democrats of trying to slip the plan by them.

"Why has there been no consultation ... on what could prove to be significant changes in the way political funds can be raised by members of this House?" Michel and Rep. Bill Thomas, R-Calif., said in a joint letter to Foley.

Foley announced that the plan was being withdrawn during a break in the Democrats' closed-door meetings to plan for the new Congress beginning in January.

In addition to considering rules changes, the Democrats on Tuesday ratified Foley's choice of Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., for chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

Fazio, who is also the vice chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, succeeds Rep. Daryl Anthony, D-Ark., in the campaign post.

Lame duck Jones has good ideas on campaign finance

Lame duck though he is, Jim Jones isn't about to waddle quietly away.

Idaho's outgoing attorney general hatched a proposal this week for limiting campaign contributions. His idea is to ban political-action committee donations, curtail "out-of-state" contributions, and limit what any one donor can give to a candidate.

It's a solid set of ideas. When they gather in Boise next month, Idaho legislators ought to use it as starting place for reforming the state's election finance laws.

A need for reform became apparent just before the November election, when the Idaho Education Association's trailblazing spending plans were revealed. One of the chief beneficiaries was Rep. Gary Robbins, whose losing campaign for the state Senate received at least $28,000 from the teachers' union.

Among others, we commented a month ago that such a kind of reform was long overdue. But we did not lay out any specifics. Jones has done that task.

Jones made the proposal in his preferred style, by issuing a news release. Even when he isn't running for office, Jones is Idaho's champion press-release issuer.

The time has come to tighten up Idaho's campaign finance and reporting law to prevent outsiders and special interests from buying an inordinate influence on Idaho elections," he said.

Here's a quick outline of his ideas:

- Prohibit all contributions from special-interest groups to political action committees. He points out, correctly, that PACs have corrupted the federal election system and threaten to do the same at the state level. So why not require that all contributions be made "directly from individuals and businesses to the candidates of their choice?"
- Why not indeed?
- Limit out-of-state contributions to no more than 10 percent of a candidate's total war chest.
- Absolutely. Let candidates rise and fall on how well they can appeal to Idahoans.

We don't need elected officials who are beholden to out-of-state interests. Legislators might want to make an exception for out-of-staters who own property or do business in Idaho.

• Don't allow any contributor to give one candidate more than $2,500. "This would prevent the buying of elections, while requiring candidates to seek a broad base of support," Jones wrote. Amen, brother Jones.

• Close a "gaping loophole" in disclosure laws. Current law doesn't require disclosure of expenditures on ad campaigns aimed at courting public support for pending legislation. Jones says it should.

• Change reporting dates for campaign contributions. Make candidates report earlier more often, so that voters will have time to consider who is paying for what candidate.

A rather good idea, and one that we endorsed earlier in this fall. Jones is not Idaho's only Republican politician beating the reform drum. Former Gov. Robert Smylie also has called for contribution restrictions to "level the playing field."

Cynics might say that Republicans, having encountered a heavyweight opponent in the IEA, are becoming deathbed converts to the campaign-reform cause. But those cynics should be reminded that Jones was getting warmed up on this subject long before the IEA flashed its sword of cash.

In any case, for whatever motive, Jones is right. He should be listened to.

Democrats, feeling a bit cocky after making gains in November, may be reluctant to support Jones' ideas. That would be a mistake.

Worms turn. Finance reform might benefit one party this year, the other party next year. But it would benefit Idaho every year.

U.S. must help avert Soviet famine

BRUSSELS, Belgium — As winter approaches, fears of invasion are re-emerging in Western Europe. This time, the specter is not of Soviet shock troops advancing across the North German plain, but of hordes of civilians fleeing what could become the worst famine in the Soviet Union since the 1930s.

The prospect of Soviet refugees flooding westward is the inevitable result of the breakdown of order and the economy. The discipline fostered by reasonable certainty about the future is vanishing. Republics within the Soviet empire are engaging in self-serving practices that are producing the penalties of decentralization without the benefits. And the erosion of the system for distributing goods is presenting the irony of want in a year of bumper crops.

Within the next several months, therefore, millions of Soviet citizens, already cut adrift in their own country, are likely to press on the borders of neighboring countries, in many cases aided and abetted by Soviet authorities.

Top Moscow officials are talking about the "export" next year of between 2 million and 7 million people. In response, Finland, the Western country with the longest border with the Soviet Union, is seeking ways to contain an extraordinary onslaught of migrants. The stimulus to migrate toward the promised land of the European Community will be compounded for Germany if, as expected, significant numbers of Soviet soldiers in former East Germany refuse repatriation.

Even West European countries buffered by Eastern neighbors from a direct flow of Soviet refugees cannot escape migration pressures from a similar human crisis in Central and Eastern Europe. In January, East European states will receive another economic blow, when they will be required to pay hard currency for Soviet oil — and at prices inflated by the Persian Gulf crisis.

Western Europe is thus facing the prospect of the most massive refugee influx since the 1940s.

In response to this unprecedented challenge, the European Community has decided to pursue the most humane and efficient remedy: to try providing incentives for people to stay at home. In Eastern Europe, the EC has taken the lead in beginning to provide the "slow — but so far deficient — supply of capital, training and aid needed to reform economies. The EC also has agreed to provide an extra $1 billion in aid to the Soviet Union, and Germany — most concerned about the Soviet future — has begun a major dispatch of food. Even so, these contributions will be inadequate in the face of the enormous requirements of feeding the Soviet people.

As much politics as human concern is involved in European efforts. Since the collapse of Soviet power in Central Europe, the West's basic strategy has been to avoid the historic mistake of 1919, when the victors of World War I exacted reparations from defeated Germany and paved the way for Adolf Hitler. But this political strategy of forestalling Soviet isolation and revanchism may be more effective if it is backed up by genuine expressions of concern for the plight of the Soviet people — an attitude that can be recalled years hence when a successor state assumes a major role in Europe.

Unfortunately, West European wisdom and humanity are unmatched by the United States. Just as the Bush administration is playing a secondary role in the reconstruction of Eastern Europe — a detachment that could prove to be a major strategic folly — it is absent from efforts to help the Soviet Union weather the prospect of famine. This country's preoccupation with the federal budget and the Persian Gulf has inhibited American generosity and diverted the government's attention from events in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe that have no rival today for historic importance.

In 1921-23, Herbert Hoover led a $60-million U.S. famine relief program in Russia that reflected America's moral sense; Franklin Roosevelt's Lend-Lease program in World War II reflected strategic sense; President Bush must recognize today's moral and strategic interests by making good on his vague promises of future food assistance.

Feel-good potential means death for alternatives to oil, forests

Our puritanism always seems to get the better of our environmentalism. At least that's the way I read the last year's of American history, especially the environmental movement and even outside the use of environmentally benign materials simply because they were also capable of giving us physical pleasure. And that has made all the difference. Consider the star-crossed history of ethanol and hemp, better known to the reader as liquor and marijuana.

Alcohol should be our primary fuel. And for one brief historical moment it might have been. In 1861 Cincinnati alone processed 12,000 bushels of corn a day into ethanol. But that year two events occurred which impacted negatively on the day-to-day ethanol enterprise in Pennsylvania. Kerosene, the only valuable petroleum product at the time, became a serious competitor in the lighting market. And Congress imposed a $2.08 tax on distilled spirits, including industrial alcohol, to pay for the Civil War. Kerosene paid only a 10 cent tax.

The liquor tax remained in place for 45 years, effectively halting the development of ethanol technologies. While ethanol sat on the sidelines, the internal combustion engine was born, the first oil pipeline was laid, and the chemical engineering profession came of age. The invention was reported in 1906. Ethanol advanced. Then in 1919 the industry received another devastating blow: Prohibition. Today ethanol is making a comeback. It is by far the superior fuel. But because it can also make us drunk, ethanol must play catchup in a century of petroleum-driven development.

The history of hemp curvily echoes that of alcohol. Hemp fiber is soft, durable, and the plant requires little fertilizer. Cotton replaced hemp after the invention of the cotton gin and it remains our primary natural fiber. But cotton is environmentally destructive. Half the world's pesticides are used to grow cotton. A "cotton jacket" contains the energy equivalent of a quart of oil.

Until 1883, 75-90 percent of the world's paper was made from hemp fibers, according to Jack Herer, in his remarkable book "The Emperor Wears No Clothes." An acre of hemp could produce four times as much pulp as an acre of trees, making paper from hemp could use as little as 15 percent of the chemicals needed to make paper from trees. In 1937 prohibition was visited on marijuana. Since 1937 about half the forests in the world have been cut down to make paper. So here we are. Fouling our atmosphere by burning million-year-old fossil fuels. Cutting down old-growth forests to make this morning's newspaper. Why? Because the alternatives could make us feel too good.

Some news not of much use

It is one thing for a retired Navy admiral to tell a congressional committee that should we go to war with the Iraqis we stand to lose some 10,000 troops — not to mention the wounded and all the money that would have to be spent on this sort of so-called news on the front page becomes something else. I, for one, became vehemently concerned as to just how far the papers will go to fill space on their front pages.

Tell me, please tell me, Times-News, just what is it that you are trying to accomplish by such reporting? Do believe there was a time when putting out such propaganda (true or false) would almost be classified as "aiding and abetting" the enemy.

Also on the same day, on the editorial page you had another doom-and-gloomism how all the way from Boston, telling how a next generation must be sent to die by the thousands.

Now really, Times-News, just how much sympathy are you showing towards the ones who have loved ones over in the Gulf? Do you have another doom-and-gloomism pick up your paper and read that the folks here outside who have loved ones over there, are not sending copies of the hometown papers to their loved ones when they see such front-page stories, being published.

No, folks, don't be thinking that I'm all far war in the Persian Gulf. I want peace and to see our young men and women all come home in one piece. But I do realize that there is a dirty, rotten job to do over there. Without us there, Iraq, not, and we are the ones elected to do the job in one way or another.

It seemed so nice — the Berlin Wall came tumbling down and it felt as though we were going to experience peace in this old world. But no, some kook had to come on the scene and start pushing his neighbors around.

Remember this: From the very first day that the smart boys developed the nuclear bomb, it then became a world threat that one day it might just get into the hands of some kook. So, if it becomes the duty of the United States to be the global police force, then that is the way it will have to go.

Face it, folks; this is a time when knowing all that is going on or what is about to happen may not just be what we really want to know or hear.

Times-News, shape up and for once, just try a little harder to be a hometown paper, putting out the skinny and letting the rest of the world know just "how great we do."

An interesting aspect of the human male is his competitive nature against his fellow man. This nature is manifested at an early age when male children wrestle and fight over toys.

Later, when they are a little older, the format sometimes changes to "my old man can lick your old man" and into adulthood, it's who has shot the largest deer or caught the biggest fish, etc.

Recently, while in Hailey, a friend came up to me and said, "Hey, Capps, did you read in the paper where our city police made a big drug bust?"

Needless to say, this brought my competitive nature to the surface and I reported, "Oh, yeah! Big deal, our Jerome City fathers and City Police paid over $11,000 for three two-way radios for their police cars and get this fellas, the last one cost over $4,200 installed."

I could tell by the stunned expression on his face that I'd really let the air out of his balloon.

Remember Army is volunteer

We heard many reasons over the past three months why American soldiers should not be in Saudi Arabia. A debate is now underway to confirm why a war with Iraq is necessary.

There are, of course, political and economic reasons why we should go to battle. But there seems to be unspoken reasons why we should not, and I reflect on how the military is perceived today.

• Our soldiers are not old enough to fight. We still hear people talking about bringing the "boys," "kids," "sons and daughters" home. We should treat our soldiers as professional men and women, not children.

• War will interfere with school and career. Recruits are shown the "glamor" and benefits of being in the military, such as travel and training for future careers. What was left out in military commercials is that soldiers are trained for one purpose only to kill when called upon.

• Being a soldier can be a dangerous job, the same as being a policeman or fireman. If young men and women are joining for other reasons and get upset when called to fight, then we are dangerously undermining our capacity to fight.

Saudi Arabia is not a nice place to live. The desert is an inhospitable place to live, but soldiers are trained to fight in all conditions. Listening to their gripes, they have forgotten about Valley Forge, the trenches of World War I, the jungles of World War II, the cold of Korea, and the rain and mud of Vietnam.

• Weapons will not work. After spending trillions of dollars for weapons, we keep hearing they won't work. I put this blame directly on Congress and greedy military contractors.

• There are too many minority groups serving. There have been calls to introduce the draft again because of a large percentage of the troops in Saudi Arabia are black, Hispanic or low-income.

The military has always been a ladder for the underprivileged, a way to move up in society. A draft would be more equitable, but since the military is now volunteer, people have a right to choose the job they want.

• Volunteers, today's military personnel have made a choice. They have picked a dangerous job, where their life is put on the line. Hopefully they will have the best weapons and training that money can buy if called upon to fight. That's all they can hope for.

Critics say volunteer military excuses elite from war

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the possibility of war looms in the Persian Gulf, debate is being fanned over whether the all-volunteer force unfairly excuses the elite while the poor and black face the fighting and dying.

Some say a draft would be more fair. "Fewer families are giving more and more," says former Secretary of the Navy James H. Webb.

Caspar W. Weinberger, secretary of defense during most of the Reagan administration, scoffed at such criticism in an interview. "What do we want?" asked Weinberger. "Do we want a sociological experiment or do we want the best military we can get?"

"If you force into the military people who don't want to be there, you are going to have the whole Vietnam scene played all over again, with people wandering up and down the streets with signs and people who never want us to participate in any kind of action," he said.

R. Paul Churchill, an associate professor of philosophy at George Washington University, said much the same thing from an entirely different perspective.

Churchill, a veteran of protest movements who teaches a course in war and morality, said he hasn't completely made up his mind about the issue, but added, "We witnessed during the Vietnam War how threatened a nation that depends on conscription can be

by the apparent willingness of young men to tolerate a great deal of trouble to avoid a draft."

Webb, a Vietnam veteran with three nephews in enlisted ranks, has been one of the strongest critics.

"The elites have excused themselves out of military service beginning with Vietnam, and it's more so now than when we had a draft," Webb told The Washington Times in a recent interview.

"Almost without exception no Washington dinner party guest — liberal or conservative, Democrat or Republican — personally knows a single one of the 1.8 million enlisted Americans serving in our armed forces," syndicated columnist Mark Shields wrote recently.

The Capitol Hill newspaper Roll Call, surviving the 25th Congress, alleged that the children serving in Operation Desert Shield, found two — both Rep. Jerry Costello, D-Ill., and Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, said they did not know when their sons would return home. Both also said they have supported President Bush so far in his deployment of troops.

Selective Service records show that 1,767,556 young men were drafted during the Vietnam war, counting from July 1, 1964, through June 30, 1973. Most went into the Army. In 1966, for instance, the Army took 366,000 and the Marine Corps, 15,500. Other services received only a few.

When the draft was discontinued in 1973, Sens. Sam Nunn of Georgia and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina protested that the action could lead to a largely poor, largely minority force.

Neither Nunn, now chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, nor Hollings could be reached for an interview. Nunn's press secretary, Scott Williams, said, "He may have had reservations back then, but I think he would say now the force is excellent."

Lawrence J. Korb, an assistant secretary of defense for manpower in the Reagan administration and now a senior fellow with the Brookings Institution, said, "Militarily it is the best force we have ever had in terms of quality, it is at least as fair and probably fairer than the draft you had in Vietnam."

"You forced the lower class to go in whether they wanted to or not and offered them very little benefits," Korb said. "These kids were dragged off the street, given a few months training, and sent over there."

Meanwhile, he said, college deferments and other loopholes provided the affluent with "a system that you could drive a truck through to get out of service."

The Pentagon says recruits now receive an average of a year's training before joining their units.

Congressional and Pentagon studies show that blacks are disproportionately represented among recruits but say the force is more representative of the population than its critics have suggested.

In 1987, almost 20 percent of recruits signing up with the military for the first time were black, according to a study issued in October by the Congressional Budget Office. About 15 percent of youths of enlistment age are black.

The study said that about 55 percent of male active-duty recruits that year came from ZIP code areas where average family income was in the bottom half nationally.

"Lower-middle-income areas were most heavily represented; the very bottom of the distribution was only slightly over-represented," the study said. In the top tenth of the income distribution, only about 6 percent of recruits, but even in the highest-income areas in the country some young people enlisted.

A Defense Department study issued in July gave similar figures, reporting that 23 percent of the active duty enlisted force in fiscal year 1989 was black, compared with 12 percent to 14 percent of civilians of comparable age.

"Today enlisted recruits are not drawn primarily from an underclass, as they are sometimes thought to be," said the report. "Survey data indicate that the great majority of recruits' parents are married, own their own homes and are employed."

The report said that by a common measurement of social economic status, the parents of recruits came out nine-tenths as well as a comparison group of parents of youth in the general population.

Weinberger dismissed the argument that the force is unrepresentative as "absurd and highly imbecilic" and "insulting in the highest degree."

"If you really want a definition of a racist," he said, "it seems to me that the critics of this system are the people who are the most racist in the country. Are we criticizing the black population because so many of them want to be in the military?"

Gen. Colin L. Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who is black, told The Washington Post recently, "I don't think it's disproportionate or wrong. I think it's a choice the American people made when they said have a volunteer Army and allow those who want to serve to serve."

Hundreds mobilize against war

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — Nearly 200 people have taken part in an old-fashioned town hall meeting in Moscow to mobilize against war in the Middle East.

They shared their concerns about the troop buildup in Saudi Arabia Monday night, the "appalling ignorance" of Americans and the huge sums of money being spent by the United States over there.

The group also began formulating strategies to raise public awareness, oppose the use of force and, ultimately, to prevent war.

Among their ideas were circulating petitions demanding the withdrawal of U.S. troops, sending a long letter to Speaker of the House Tom Foley demanding congressional debate, holding weekly anti-war vigils, organizing draft resistance and sending thousands of postcards to Iraq to discourage American forces from attacking.

Participants included high school students, professors, retired professors and other townspeople. Their comments included:

"Our government doesn't understand the Arabs very well. It's all... It seems to me that they should be allowing the people of the Middle East to solve their own problems."

"Americans must get off the oil addiction we have. Car-pooling, walking and gas rationing should be encouraged to decrease American demand for foreign oil."

The U.S. government could use a man like Dwight Eisenhower, who said, "When you have an adversary, give him a way to retreat with honor. Otherwise you leave him with no choice than to fight you with every weapon at his command."

A war in the Persian Gulf region would cause the deaths of hundreds of thousands of Muslims, said a Muslim woman living in Moscow. It also would have serious economic repercussions for those nations and would do nothing to help the United States' poor image in the region.

Jewish Iraqi remembers a different Saddam Hussein

OR YEHUDA, Israel (AP) — A Jewish museum in central Israel sees an unlikely place in which to hear about the warm and human side of Saddam Hussein.

Most Israelis know him as the Arab dictator whose threats have forced them to get gas masks. But Vicky, a Jewish immigrant from Iraq, remembers him as the man who helped her when she came to him for help in getting her husband out of prison.

Another woman recalled being protected from anti-Jewish riots by Saddam's family in his home village of Tikrit.

The two women spoke at the Babylonian Jewish Heritage Center in Or Yehuda, an immigrant town outside Tel Aviv, at a discussion Sunday titled "Saddam Hussein's mind-set on Jews, Israelis and Zionists."

"Vicky did not want her surname published because she was worried he has relatives in Iraq. She told her story in Hebrew laced with Iraqi idioms, sitting next to her husband. She believes he was saved from the gallows with Saddam's help."

In 1968, a coup had installed Saddam as Iraq's No. 2 man behind Ahmad Hasan al-Bakr. The previous regime had jailed many Jews, including Vicky's husband and her brother, as alleged spies. She and her sister-in-law, Naima, were desperate.

One day, she recalled, an acquaintance gave her the address of a man named Saddam Hussein. "I said, who is this Saddam? Isn't he against the Jews?"

"The acquaintance reassured her: 'He's not against anybody.'"

Next day she and Naima went to the address next to the Yarmuk mosque in Baghdad. They asked a passer-by where they could find Saddam Hussein. "I am Saddam Hussein," he replied.

She hadn't expected a man wearing a simple Arab robe and living in a relatively humble house.

"I got a fright, of course. I started crying and fell around his shoulders. He said, 'Sister, what's the matter?'"

He invited the women into his house and his wife, Sajida, served coffee. "How do you know your husband is innocent?" Saddam asked.

"I know. A wife has to know everything," Vicky recalled answering. Saddam retorted: "When I made the revolution, my wife knew nothing about it." He promised to look into

'I believe Saddam helped.'

Vicky, a Jewish immigrant from Iraq on her brother's and husband's relatively light prison sentences rather than being hanged the case, and told Vicky to visit whenever she liked.

She came to the house eight times hoping for news. She became friendly with Sajida and Saddam's mother. Saddam had also spent time in prison, and Sajida told Vicky, "I know what you're going through. I tasted it too."

The last time she saw Saddam, he had changed. He wore a Western suit and "faded" the house by Saddam's village of Tikrit and the Yarmuk mosque. He told her there was testimony implicating her husband, and that he would be interrogated further.

"I knew he was being tortured. I said, 'What piece of his body will be left to interrogate?' I was very lucky. He said, 'That's the way it is. We will investigate and every spy we find will be hanged.'"

He spoke sternly, wagging a finger, and told her not to come again.

In January 1969, when the Iraqis hanged 13 Jews, Vicky's husband and his brother were sentenced to three years in prison. Vicky is convinced the relatively light sentence was influenced by Saddam having taken a personal interest. "I believe Saddam helped," she said.

After they were released, the family immigrated to Israel.

How does she feel when she hears President Bush likening Saddam to Hitler? She gaped for words. "I don't know," she said. "To me he was good."

Ryna, who also asked that her surname not be published, grew up along with Vicky's mother and her family members her parents' friendship with his family.

She said her father, a wealthy businessman who brought electrical power to Tikrit, lent his car to drive Saddam's mother to Baghdad to give birth to an older brother of Saddam.

In 1941, when anti-Jewish riots erupted in Iraq, she and her family hid under their beds until the villagers, including Saddam's relatives, came to them to promise them protection.

While fiercely hostile to Zionism, Saddam treats Iraq's tiny 150-member Jewish community benevolently, said Mordchai Ben-Porat, an Israeli-born former Cabinet minister who sat next to Vicky and Naima while they talked.

He said Saddam's attitude to Jews was shaped in part by the kindness of Tikrit's Jews to his mother. "I don't totally influence him," Ben-Porat said, "but it definitely had an influence."

Saddam has said the Israeli-Palestinian dispute should be negotiated along with Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait.

He had threatened to use chemical weapons against Israel even before his August invasion of Kuwait. The Israeli government in October began distributing gas masks to its citizens.

Wendell to hold school despite bomb threat

WENDELL — Wendell school officials said late Tuesday they planned to hold classes as scheduled today despite a bomb threat that prompted them to seal in a team from Mountain Home Air Force Base to help search the school buildings.

The search was still in progress at press-time Tuesday. Police said they have found no evidence of a bomb.

Schools in Wendell were evacuated an hour early Tuesday after elementary school Principal Ken Parker discovered a bomb threat message on the school's telephone answering machine about noon.

"On it was this spooky voice threatening to blow the school up at 4 o'clock (Tuesday)," Parker said.

The low, muffled voice was difficult to understand, he said.

"We made a decision to evacuate the school and not search due to the amount of time allotted," Wendell police officer Gill Carpenter said.

The message did not designate which building allegedly had a bomb, so they all had to be evacuated, he said.

School was dismissed at 2 p.m. and all buildings were evacuated and secured by 4 p.m. School was released "in case it's not a hoax," Parker said.

Burley woman is appointed to state cosmetology board

BOISE — Carol Martin of Burley has been appointed to the state Cosmetology Examining Board by Gov. Cecil Andrus.

Andrus also reappointed Christy Stutzke of Post Falls and Jan Chase to the panel.

Andrus named John Chamberlain of Boise to the vacancy created by the resignation of Ed Thomas of Boise. Chamberlain, a retired state employee, represents consumer interests on the board.

The governor also issued an executive order naming the Cooperative Center for Health Statistics as an agency within the Department of Health and Welfare.

The center is part of the Vital Statistics Unit in Health and Welfare.

The center coordinates the collection, analysis and dissemination of health data.

Rupert photographer gets prison term for sex offenses

RUPERT — A 46-year-old Rupert photographer was sentenced to three to five years in jail for each of three sex offenses Monday.

Harry Dennis Murphy, earlier pleaded guilty to two counts of felony possession of sexually explicit material and one count of sexual abuse of a child. He was arrested in May when he picked up photos of a partially clad 5-year-old girl from a pharmacy.

The three sentences are to be served consecutively and the first three years of each sentence must be served before Murphy is eligible for parole.

Fifth District Judge J. William Hart retained jurisdiction over Murphy's case for 180 days, however, meaning Murphy could be placed on probation after being evaluated at the state correctional facility at Cottonwood.

Twin Falls vet to be featured on news magazine show today

TWIN FALLS — "Hard Copy" will air a story today about Twin Falls veterinarian David Stafford and his legal battles with "another veterinarian Robert Monroe.

The nationally syndicated news magazine airs on KMYT, channel 11 (channel 12 for cable viewers), at 3 p.m.

Stafford and Monroe were involved in a long dispute over some buildings Stafford purchased from Monroe. After more than a year of legal wrangling and several unsolved incidents of vandalism, animal poisonings and burglaries, the case was settled out of court last year.

Stafford now awaits a trial date for an aggravated battery charge in which he is accused of pointing a gun at Monroe, and for a burglary charge in which a former client claims he stole her microwave oven.

The veterinarian, who owns an animal clinic on Kimberly Road, also faces a grand theft by deception charge. In that case, prosecutors charge that Stafford received $427 for repairing a dog's fractured leg when no surgery was actually performed.

Respondents favor most of bond issue

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Respondents to a preliminary survey on a proposed $9.5 million school bond issue in Twin Falls were predominantly in favor of the plan except in the case of a proposed ninth-grade center.

Two of three Community Committee subcommittees, which are gathering input on the proposal, reported Tuesday night that those responding to their survey were overwhelmingly in favor of converting Robert Stuart Junior High School into a school solely for ninth-graders.

The Community Committee is a group of Twin Falls residents appointed by the School District and charged with educating the public about the bond issue proposal that is scheduled to go to the voters after the first of the year and with gauging public sentiment toward the elements of the package.

The survey they took asked whether people favored the five elements of the proposal: converting Vera C. O'Leary Junior High School into a middle school and building a new $6-million middle school; creating the ninth-grade center; building 10 classrooms at the high school; and building a high school auditorium and a second high school gymnasium.

The survey did not ask whether respondents would vote for the bond issue as a whole.

The survey is not scientific and early returns may not give an accurate picture of overall community sentiment about the proposal, committee members said.

However, some members, including Community Committee Chairman Curtis Eaton, said such survey is helpful.

"There is some pretty clear directions of

Loose insulator plunges Jackpot into darkness

By N.S. Nokkved
Times-News writer

JACKPOT — Someone pulled the plug on Jackpot early Tuesday morning.

"The lights went out about midnight," Curtis Pele's spokesman Carl Hayden said. "But everything popped back on about 8 this morning and everybody's happy."

Electricity on the Idaho Power Co. main 135,000-volt line between the Upper Salmon Falls Dam power plant and Wells, Nev., was interrupted about 12:30 a.m. Tuesday.

But until the light of day, Idaho Power was "sure who or what" turned off the power, for about seven hours in Jackpot and part of Wells — and for about two hours in Buhl. A crew soon found the problem.

An insulator had broken loose from a transmission tower about two miles upstream from the Upper Salmon Falls power plant.

When the insulator broke loose, the power line shorted out, shutting down the entire line much like a circuit-breaker in a home turns off the power in case of a short circuit.

The power line remained off while repair crews looked for the problem. Meanwhile, the line had been cut and when it was reconnected, the power came back on, Idaho Power Division Operations Supervisor Burry Knoblich said.

Engineers weren't satisfied with restoring the power. They were determined to find the problem so it could be corrected before more damage occurred, he said. So crews searched overnight for clues on the ground below the line. Finally dawn shed its light on the dangling insulator.

The utility turned the power off to Jackpot and Wells about 2:37 p.m. to "reattach the loose insulator," Power was restored once again about 3 p.m., Knoblich said.

Last month an explosion in the substation just north of Jackpot shut the power off for more than 18 hours.

Issue was key, Scanlin says

By Anita Dennis
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — State Senator-elect Cynthia Scanlin learned a lot about people during her campaign.

Going door to door, she met a man whose appearance fit her stereotype of a "Southern redneck," the two immediately asked who she was running against, and she told him — incumbent Republican Roger Madson.

He asked about abortion. She informed the constituent that Madson, a strident anti-abortion advocate, sponsored last session's anti-life legislation, House Bill 625, in the Senate. She said she was pro-choice.

"Roy" snatched her clipboard and said, "If we had been able to talk about abortion 35 years ago, my wife would be alive today," Scanlin told to a Twin Falls audience Tuesday evening.

Analyzing the democratic pro-choice win in District 18, Scanlin said bluntly, "Why did Roger Madson lose? He lost because he was the sponsor of House Bill 625 and he would not compromise."

Scanlin was one of the races that gained the Democrats a tie in the state Senate. The race was defined by the two immediate positions on abortion, and she told her College of Southern Idaho audience Tuesday night that her pro-choice position, "the engine of the campaign," was a key to winning.

"I am convinced we could not have won the race without it ... but I was also convinced we could not have won because of it," Scanlin said.

The United Church of Christ minister, first credited her hard-working volunteer and bipartisan campaign team. Another factor in her win: Republicans crossing over and voting Democratic and pro-choice, she said.

Scanlin said Mormons helped her win.

"There's a significant number of Mormon women who, when they get into the voting booth, don't give a damn about what the church is saying then. I'm going to vote the way my conscience tells me and no one will know," she said.

"For their spirit, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have taken the democratic process very seriously and elected their ranks to office," Scanlin said. But some Mormons are perceived as arrogant and vote out of office, she said. She said she received some anti-Mormon votes, "pure and simple." Madson is Mormon.

The Idaho Education Association also played a major role in Scanlin's campaign, endorsing her and giving her $20,000, which paid for television advertising.

Scanlin said she didn't have won without IEA support, but she said she had hoped and expected greater funding from the national abortion rights groups. The National Abortion Rights Action League gave her campaign $2,000, she said.

Another factor, people just didn't like Roger Madson, she said. He was "a real snail-dither and pompous," she said. He would label her a single-issue candidate, forcing him to reveal his position on the abortion issue, she said. He styled himself as a straightforward Republican, but that wasn't good enough, she said.

Pro-life forces worked diligently and conscientiously for 20 years to gain control of the Idaho Legislature, Scanlin said. "We now have to take every seat back."

Magic Valley residents called to active duty

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The call-up of Army reserves as part of Operation Desert Shield finally hit home Tuesday as several local military reservists began packing for Europe.

At least half a dozen local reservists are part of the 328th General Hospital Unit that will soon leave for Europe to replace active military personnel drawn from hospitals there for duty in Saudi Arabia.

The 700 members of the unit have been ordered to report to headquarters at Salt Lake City's Fort Douglas no later than 2 p.m. Thursday.

Leslie Butcher of Filer got the call Monday.

"It's a real shock, it's real hard, especially for my children," Butcher said. She is a single mother with three boys, ages 10, 4 and 3. She'll miss her son's fifth birthday on Sunday.

The boys will stay with family — the two youngest with Butcher's mother, the oldest with her brother — until Butcher returns. Although she tried to explain it to them, the two youngest boys don't understand why mommy has to leave; the 10-year-old was "quite upset" when she told him, Butcher said.

Her co-workers at Magic Valley Manor were none too pleased, either. Besides being the Wendell retirement center's nursing director, Butcher is also the only registered nurse working there.

A licensed practical nurse will take over many of Butcher's duties, but the Manor staff will have to scramble to find someone to fill the state-required RN position, she said.

Like Butcher, Twin Falls dentist Ken Patterson will be leaving his family and his job behind for the holidays.

"My wife cried the first morning, but now she's tough," Patterson said.

Eight-year-old Ashlee, one of Patterson's seven children, offered a solution.

"She said, 'Can't you just call them up and say 'Hey, he's not at home. He has too many kids,'" Patterson said.

But the Army doesn't work that way, so Patterson will likely be somewhere in Germany for Christmas while other military doctors, nurses and dentists previously stationed in Germany, Great Britain and Italy are in Saudi Arabia.

"I'll have to be relieved about something I guess it is that I won't have to walk around with sand in my boots," Patterson said. "Of course, that could all change."

LT. Col. Patterson, 44, said his impending deployment has been eased by the community support for him and his family. Members of the LDS church to which his family belongs cooked dinner for the family, and many people have offered to help take care of the children.

"On the professional side, local dentists have offered to take turns caring for Patterson's patients. His office will remain open, with the dental hygienist taking care of teeth cleanings and other routine procedures.

"I don't mind going. The Army paid for my dental school," Patterson said. "I know I have a patriotic duty to go and do what I can."

The issues aren't so clear to medicine Wayne Ward of Filer who is also a member of the 328th Hospital Unit.

"I don't think we should be over there (in Saudi Arabia)," Ward said. "That makes it difficult."

"Politics and money play a large role in the American deployment in Saudi Arabia," he said. "It's necessary for the 328th hospital unit to travel to Europe, Ward said.

Any military solution should have been carried out swiftly, or America should wait for the United Nations sanctions to take effect, Ward said.

Despite his reservations about the invasion of Kuwait, Ward, 33, said he has a job to do.

"I plan on doing the best job I can do," he said.

The call-up interrupts Ward's training at the College of Southern Idaho school of nursing, but it didn't come as much of a surprise, he said.

"I knew it might be coming," he said. Kevin Graham of Twin Falls will also have to put off his education plans. The 19-year-old X-ray technician was planning to attend Idaho State University next semester. Instead, he'll be joining Patterson, Ward and the others in Europe.

When Graham got the call Monday, he wasn't told where he will be sent.

"I don't know where I'm going," he said. "I just know I'm leaving."

Although Graham, who lives with his parents, said he wasn't surprised that he was called for active duty.

"I just said, 'Oh well,'" Graham said. "Mom cried a little."

Although he said he isn't scared about leaving, Graham said "I think I probably will be Thursday."

Twin Falls High School grad given a top Albertson's job

By Craig Lincoln
Times-News writer

BOISE — A 1969 Twin Falls High School graduate has been promoted to one of the top spots at Albertson's Inc.

For Craig Olson, 39, working at Albertson's has been a lifetime project. He worked much of his youth as a box boy in the Twin Falls Albertson's store after quickly delivering newspapers for The Times-News.

When he graduated from the University of Idaho, he accepted a position at the Boise-based supermarket chain.

"That's his first job, and he stayed and liked it," said his mother, Mrs. Olson.

Albertson's announced Tuesday that Olson had been appointed senior vice president and chief financial officer in the same announcement, Gary chairman and chief financial officer, Vitz Michael, 50, was named chairman and chief executive officer.

"I think it takes a lot of hard work, and worrying about jobs in progress, today and in the future, and thinking about other things," Craig Olson said.

The moves came after Chairman and Chief Executive Warren McCain, 64, announced he will retire in February.

Olson's parents, Ida and Alfred Olson, own Al Olson's Service Inc. of 1920 Highland Ave. It is a vehicle repair business.

Company's credit woes deprive miners of pay

BURKE (AP) — Star Phoenix Mining Co. owes 120 miners back pay but a lawyer for the company says it's unable to pay now because of a tangled web of suits.
The hard-rock miners say they owed 10 days pay, an estimated $100,000.

Bob Magnuson, an attorney for the Spokane, Wash.-based Star Phoenix, said Monday-blamed Star Phoenix on a bankruptcy filing.
Manning Co. of Coeur d'Alene for his client's payroll problems. He canceled Star Phoenix' lease at a lead-zinc-silver mine in November. The two companies now are in court.
Star Phoenix refuses to turn over the mine to Hecla.

County will issue new permits

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County will issue permits for residential houses in compliance with the Idaho Residential Energy Standards passed by the Legislature earlier this year.
The state will issue the permits, but no one would be allowed to start work for home builders while the county can issue the permits in a couple of days, Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said.
The Legislature passed the energy standards to promote energy-efficient homes. The legislation requires certain amounts of insulation in homes and limits the amount of window space in any one room.
The county will charge $25 to issue the permit, barely enough to cover administration costs, Hempleman said. The state also would charge $25, he said.
Builders will receive the permits through the County Planning and Zoning Department before a home can be hooked up to Idaho Power.
The city of Twin Falls is considering issuing the permits. Building Inspector Jim Leichter told City Council he would rather issue the permit than the state. He cited the same reason as the county: the city can issue them in far less time.
Issuing the permit might add 15 or 20 minutes to the typical residential building inspection, Leichter said.
Council members wanted a little more time before deciding. They wondered about possible legal entanglements if the city refused to issue a permit and a contractor filed suit claiming the standards were unreasonably high, said Leichter.
City Attorney Fritz Wondolich said if a builder filed suit the city might not escape it.
The energy standards take effect Jan. 1.

Out. Another 21 of the respondents filled out surveys at an Optimist Club meeting Thursday at which 25 surveys were passed out.
Optimist Club members were overwhelmingly in favor of every element of the proposed bond issue, except for the ninth-grade center, to which 13 or 72 percent no and 5 or 28 percent said yes. Three Optimists did not respond to the question.
They're definitely against a ninth-grade center," Ashenbrenner said.
Otherwise, those who responded to the survey were highly supportive of the district's plans, he said.
In written comments, 10 respondents said they wanted two high schools. A few said they wanted more information about the proposal, including specific dollar amounts for alternatives. One person suggested "considering year-round schooling."
Of more than 600 surveys delivered to School District employees, 75 or 14 percent were returned. School teachers and other school employees heavily favored all parts of the proposal except for the ninth-grade center, to which 13 or 72 percent no and 5 or 28 percent said yes. Three Optimists did not respond to the question.

The junior high teachers "were more concerned" than elementary and high school teachers, said Desk 244, the education subcommittee. Of 32 junior high respondents, 19 or 59 percent said no and 8 or 25 percent said yes. Five teachers were undecided.
"Generally they mistrusted whether the information is searched and well thought out," Warden said. "They were just not buying off on why the second high school wouldn't work."
Superintendent Terrell Donahut said Tuesday it would cost an additional $1.2 million to operate a second high school. School officials say the district can't afford that.
Adding a second high school to the bond issue proposal would raise the cost to the $16 million range, according to district estimates.
Of the people who attended the meeting of the educational and senior citizens subcommittee last week, 100 percent were in favor of the entire proposal, School Board Chairman Steve Tolman said.
Tolman said he will wait until reconsideration from the Community Committee. Before drawing any conclusions about the survey information,
If any part of the proposal would jeopardize the entire bond issue, the School Board would probably consider other options, he said.
Other subcommittees had not held meetings yet and Community Committee members anticipate hundreds more survey results. The School District will hold a town meeting at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 12 in the high school cafeteria.

Gooding council welcomes Ward's

By Suzanne Huxhold
Times-News correspondent
GOODING — The Gooding City Council voted Monday night to welcome Ward's Cheese with open arms.
At the behest of Mayor Gene Heller, the council approved a resolution of support for the Richfield-based company's plans to expand its operation to an 80,000-square-foot former meat-packing plant in Gooding.
Heller asked for the resolution following what he called "hysterical and inappropriate" comments made at a public information meeting last week sponsored by the Idaho Dept. of Health and Welfare. The Arkosh family of Gooding, which owns property next to the plant site, protested that its quality of life would be damaged by the smell and flies from the wastewater that the plant would produce.
The people of Gooding support the plant and that the resolution should say the city would assist Ward's in any way it could. The resolution will be read at the next council meeting on Dec. 17.

Adams and Carleen Herring, manager of economic development for the Region 4 Development Association, told the council Monday the center needs major repairs in plumbing, air conditioning, heating and in the parking lot. The roof leaks and the kitchen floor is in need of a non-slip coating, said Adams.
The application must be submitted by the City of Gooding no later than Dec. 28. Grants will be awarded in March 1991.
Adams said an exact figure for the grant has not been determined, but she estimated it will be between $20,000 and $40,000. The amount depends on several factors, Adams said, including how much labor and equipment the city will provide for the project. Herring said an in-kind contribution of labor and equipment from the city, along with whatever matching funds the seniors can raise, is important to the process of getting money from the federal government. She said it proves to the federal government that the city's seniors are serious in their efforts and that the money is not for "Cadillacs" or other frills.
The center serves a low-cost lunch to about 220 senior every week. It provides tax preparation, check cashing, a "budgeting" service, information retrieval services, bus transportation for grocery shopping and doctor appointments and many social activities.
Adams is now taking bids on the project. City Superintendent Lloyd Melrod will provide information to the center on the city's commitment of labor and equipment.

The city building inspection charges. The city made the decision following complaints by local contractors that the state inspectors the cited retained to inspect buildings were charging too much.
Jim Leichter of JUB said his company would be willing to work on a hourly charge basis of $30. Heller said the typical plan inspection for Gooding takes approximately 30 minutes, and the cost would be $45 to $50, compared to the nearly $100 the state was charging.
The cost to the city was estimated to be 50 percent of the permit fee. Councilman George Dains said most building inspectors charge between 70 and 90 percent of the fee.
Heller said he would continue to look for a permanent inspector for the city.
In other business, the council agreed to let JUB's Food Town move the location of its beer and wine license to 125 21st Ave. W. The current location of the Idaho Beer and Wine Dispensing Agency's license is on the ground-earlier this year, but its owners are rebuilding at the same location in Gooding. Heller said they would like to take advantage of the Christmas buying season by temporarily moving their beer and wine license until their new building is completed.
The city also adopted a policy that would discourage the use of plastic and plastic foam in city facilities and encourage the use of recycled paper and recycling bins.
Heller told the council that although these types of policies were not yet being mandated, the time for a mandate was coming. "We as a city should at least be resolved to buy paper products that are recycled," Heller said. Heller encouraged community organizations to get involved by setting up recycling bins around the city as fundraising projects.

Ward's, owned by an Avonmore Foods Inc. subsidiary of Avonmore Foods of Kilkenny, Ireland, could more than triple its output of dairy products when the new plant goes on line next year. The facility would bring 25 jobs to Gooding.

In other business, Gooding senior citizens said they're $500 closer to upgrading their center, but they're still looking for help from the federal government and Gooding city officials.
The donation will go toward the matching funds the center needs to apply for an Idaho Department of Commerce grant.
The City Council has agreed to submit an application for an Idaho Community Development block grant on behalf of the center.

In another matter, the council agreed to hire JUB Engineers of Twin Falls as an interim building inspector until a permanent inspector for the city can be found.
Heller said JUB was willing to work on an individual project basis, and its fees would be comparable to

Attorney of condemned killer says there is 'lingering doubt'

BOISE (AP) — The attorney for condemned murderer Charles Irvin Fain contends lost, disputed and circumstantial evidence, along with nagging procedural questions, raise a "lingering doubt" about the validity of the death sentence reimposed against the Nampa man last year. "The defendant has basically been denied due process of law," Canyon County Public Defender Van Bishop said Tuesday during oral arguments on Fain's appeal before the Idaho Supreme Court. But Idaho Solicitor General Lynn Thomas argued in support of 3rd District Judge Jim Doolittle's resentencing of Fain that no lingering doubt exists, and that sentencing judges must be allowed to exercise the limited discretion they have under the state's death penalty law. "None of the things that the defendant complains about has been found by this court or the United States Supreme Court to constitute due process," Thomas said. "If you do not give deference to some degree to sentencing authority, then you could find yourself reversing these sentences again and again." Fain, 42, was convicted in 1983 of first-degree murder, lewd and lascivious conduct with a minor and kidnapping for the February 1982 abduction, sexual assault and drowning of 9-year-old Daralyn Johnson of Nampa, who was seized by Fain while walking to school. Doolittle sentenced him to death, but the Idaho Supreme Court overturned the sentence in October 1988 and returned the case for resentencing. The death sentence was reimposed, and Fain appealed again. The high court stayed Fain's execution on March 5, pending an automatic review of the proceedings. But Justice Larry Boyle said during Tuesday's hearing that the issues raised by Fain seem "the same" as those already considered by the court during the initial appeals process. "Do we revisit these cases again and again?" he asked Bishop. "What value is the precedent established by this case ... if that is the procedure you wish us to follow?" Bishop said he believed a combination of factors raised the question of whether Fain's death sentence was "unmistakably" warranted. Among them, he argued that Doolittle relied solely in resentencing on evidence already in the record from the trial and original presentence report, including "victim impact statements" from Miss Johnson's parents. The Supreme Court ruled in the spring of 1989 that judges may not consider such statements in the sentencing process. Bishop also said Doolittle disregarded previous Supreme Court opinions by finding that in first-degree murder cases, the language of Idaho law creates an "impermissibly mandatory" presumption in favor of imposing death sentences over life imprisonment. "In addition, he said, the judge cited two "aggravating circumstances" in Fain's case to be balanced against mitigating circumstances or factors weighing in his favor. But finding that Miss Johnson's murder was "both heinous, atrocious and cruel" and "exhibiting utter disregard for human life" was redundant and based on the same set of facts, Bishop said. "I believe the court is confused and cannot decipher a difference between those," he said. "We must have guidelines given back to the court as to the meaning of those two aggravating factors." Thomas, however, said the Idaho Supreme Court has consistently applied the difference in previous opinions. As for any presumption for death over life in Idaho law, he said the requirement that judges "shall impose" the death sentence "unless circumstances allow exactly the kind of limited discretion that has been found constitutional." The alternative, Thomas said, would be a "may impose" statute that would give judges complete discretion. "There also is no reason to believe that Doolittle erred in not considering the victim impact statements from the initial presentence report in his resentencing," Thomas said, urging the court to give the judge the benefit of the doubt. Justice Byron Johnson asked whether it might not be better to at least require sentencing judges to "state affirmatively" that they have not used such statements, rather than leaving the issue up in the air. Thomas said that might be a good idea, but that it was a procedural rather than constitutional question that should not be used to overturn a death sentence.

Symington backers seek to halt February gubernatorial runoff

PHOENIX (AP) — The Arizona Supreme Court on Tuesday turned down a bid by backers of Republican Cife Symington to scrap a Feb. 26 gubernatorial runoff and declare Symington governor by default. The Symington supporters, acting without the candidate's approval, had argued that a constitutional amendment requiring the runoff was invalid because lawmakers had not passed legislation to implement it before last month's general election. "Because the Legislature does not have the power to eliminate by inaction this constitutional requirement," Chief Justice Frank Gordon Jr. wrote. His four-sentence order disposed of the petition for special action less than four hours after oral arguments had concluded. Symington, after initial hesitation, had come out against the lawsuit, saying he didn't think avoiding a runoff would sit well with voters. The lawyer for Symington supporters said he would decide in a day or two whether to go to federal court. Symington did not appear in court Tuesday, but lawyers for Republican state Attorney General Bob Corbin and Symington's Democratic opponent, Terry Goddard, told the justices the runoff was required by the state constitution. The legal battle began when Symington outpolled Goddard by about 4,000 votes in November's election, only to find that the approximately 11,000 written votes cast for other candidates prevented him from getting a majority. Voters amended the constitution in 1988 to require runoffs for statewide offices whenever no candidate gets an absolute majority. State lawmakers had not established any runoff rules by the election but passed an emergency law soon afterward to deal with this year's problem while leaving rules on future runoffs for a later date. Attorney David Eisenstein, arguing on behalf of Concerned Citizens to Save Our State, told the justices the legislature had negated the constitutional provision by failing to pass a law before the election. "That provision is not self-executing," he said. "Even the emergency law did not make things right because the constitution prohibits special laws concerning the conduct of elections," Eisenstein said.

Hickel is Alaska's 1st independent governor

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Walter Hickel was sworn in as Alaska's first independent governor, declaring "a new day for this great land" and promising to protect the resource-rich state from outside interests. "Alaskans are truly independent, regardless of political party," Hickel said at Monday's ceremony. "And we're not awed by outside interests, however big they are or think they are." Hickel returned to the governor's mansion 22 years after he quit halfway through his first term to become U.S. interior secretary under President Nixon. He succeeds Democrat Steve Cowper, who did not seek re-election to a second term. At 71, Hickel is the oldest governor in the state's 32-year history. During his campaign and again Monday, Hickel appealed to "Alaskans' historic sense that they have too little control over the state's vast resource wealth. He promised to take a tough stand in dealing with outside business interests, environmental groups and Congress. "We will not tolerate those who would take advantage of Alaska's people or abuse our beautiful state," he said. "We're going to insist that they play by our rules." Although a lifelong Republican, Hickel ran on the Alaskan Independence Party ticket after that party's primary winner dropped out in September.

Shoshone-Bannock won't tax cigarettes

FORT HALL (AP) — The Idaho Legislature should not keep trying to collect state taxes on cigarettes bought by non-Indians on Idaho's five reservations, the chairman of the Shoshone-Bannock Tax Commission says. William Brower said legislation has been introduced each year for almost a decade aimed at authorizing the state Tax Commission to impose a tax on cigarettes sold on Indian reservations. Because those purchases are not taxed by the state or the tribes, cigarettes are less expensive. The state cigarette tax is 18 cents per pack. During the last session, the Legislature's Indian Affairs Committee asked the tribes to levy a cigarette tax to help offset reservation maintenance costs. Brower said the tribes have gone up to the state Legislature and succeeded in putting a hold on it, until the next year, he said. "I'm sure that another bill will probably originate in the House, and I doubt it will get any further," said Lacy, who served on the Senate-Local Government and Taxation Committee. Settlement of the issue rests on which government has authority to impose taxes on cigarettes. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1980 that Program helps teen mothers, their babies stay in school together

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — When Hope Hochhalter's mother was 16, she gave birth to Hope and quit high school.

Today, Hope is 18, married for more than a year and a new mother struggling to accomplish what her mother couldn't.

"There was no day care program for my mother," said — the Coeur d'Alene High School senior — "unless as she stroked the wispy hair of 3-week-old Allyssa. 'I told her that's not going to happen to me.' I'm going to finish school."

Two weeks after giving birth to Allyssa on Oct. 27, Hochhalter returned to school, baby in arms. Now, while Hochhalter studies English and government, Allyssa sleeps in the Vik Tyke Child Care Center in a roomed-off office area. The center is named after the school's mascot, the Vikings.

"I absolutely couldn't be here without this program," Hochhalter said recently. "There was no way I was going to leave her."

Coeur d'Alene High joined a national trend when it opened its child care center for students and staff in September.

For the past decade, public education has offered free child care for teens enrolled in alternative schools. But standard high schools have been slow to respond to the needs of teen parents.

"There are some students who don't want to go to an alternative setting because they are set up for students with academic or behavioral problems," said Tom Feldhausen, East Valley (Spokane) School District assistant superintendent. "So they drop out. And the district and the kids lose."

In a recent effort to slow the dropout rate, some school districts have opened day care centers in their traditional schools. High schools in Coeur d'Alene and Bonners Ferry offer the service. There is another high school in southern Idaho that has opened a child care center.

Spokane's East Valley district plans to open a child care center next month, which will be the first of its type in Spokane.

"We don't encourage teen pregnancy," said Jan Bowers, home economics supervisor for the Idaho Department of Education. "But child care centers are a need. They increase a kid's ability to stay in school."

They're more likely to stay in school if they have an on-site facility where they can see their children and interact with them throughout the day."

High school economics teacher Tanya Benson created a program that offers high school students occupational training in child care and free child care and instruction for young parents. It also provides low-cost child care for teachers. The 19 girls enrolled spend an hour a day in the classroom and another hour in either the Vik Tyke center or another community child care center.

Idaho Power gets $2 million energy bill

BOISE — The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has told Idaho Power Co. it owes $2 million for more than 50 years of hydroelectric benefits the company received at American Falls Dam, up to 1977.

The assessment is the major remaining issue between FERC and Idaho Power over "headwater benefits," or those hydroelectric generators get as a result of water releases from upstream federal reservoirs.

Under the 1920 Federal Power Act, FERC can charge utilities and others for those benefits. In 1988, FERC billed Idaho Power $5.4 million for benefits the agency believed the utility had received from federal water releases at all the company's projects since passage of the original act. The $2 million assessment for benefits from American Falls is FERC's estimate of benefits received by Idaho Power between the time the original dam was built in the 1920s and its reconstruction in 1978. Since then, the benefits payment has been covered in power generation agreements between Idaho Power and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, which operates the dam.

Autopsy results pending in slaying case

WORKLEY — Autopsy results are pending in the slaying of a 68-year-old man; the FBI says.

Victor Charles Pierre was killed early Wednesday his home on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, the FBI said. An autopsy was conducted Friday at Kootenai Medical Center, Coeur d'Alene, but FBI Agent Carl Shepard said results have not been received yet.

The FBI and Bureau of Indian Affairs refused to disclose details of the shooting, saying that might hamper the investigation. However, a man who identified himself as Pierre's son said his father was shot twice in the back of the head at close range.

Governor fills state board vacancies

BOISE — There was an opening on the Board of Dentistry in Idaho, and Gov. Cecil Andrus filled it Tuesday.

He appointed John Chamberlain of Boise to the vacancy created by the resignation of Dr. Thomas O. Chamberlain, a retired state employee, represents consumer interests on the board.

Andrus appointed Carol Martin, Burley, to the State Cosmetology Examining Board. He reappointed Christy Stutzke, Post Falls, and Jan Chase, Boise.

The governor also issued an executive order continuing the Cooperative Center for Health Statistics as an agency within the Department of Health and Welfare. The center is part of the Vital Statistics Unit in Health and Welfare.

Ada winner may be home to take oath

BOISE — Ada County commissioner-elect and Republican notable Gary Glenn plans to be back from military training in Oklahoma in time to be sworn in Jan. 14 for all.

That is, if the Boise Reservist is not called to the Persian Gulf.

Glenn, an Army Reservist, is undergoing basic training at Ft. Sill and had not expected to return to civilian life until just after the swearing in. But in a letter to the Statesman newspaper from the post, he noted the Army had canceled Christmas leave for troops around the world.

"That should put my basic graduation date around Jan. 3, so I should be home before swearing in."

He added a proviso: "unless Boise reserve unit is activated."

Sho-Ban tribes tackle air quality law

FORT HALL — Members of the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes have not always been in control of their environmental destiny, but things are changing rapidly on the Fort Hall Reservation.

With an air quality ordinance drafted, a cultural resource committee in place and efforts to improve compliance with federal regulations increasing, tribal leaders are stepping up environmental efforts.

"The tribes are just taking much more of a lead in controlling their own destiny," Constance Albrecht, tribal environmental coordinator said, speaking recently to a group at Idaho State University.

The air quality ordinance, set to be considered by tribal leadership, would give enforcement options to the Fort Hall Business Council. The J.R. Simplot Co. fertilizer plant is located outside the reservation.

Idaho retailers reminded to collect tax

BOISE — State Tax Commissioner Robert Fry contends some Idaho retailers are ignoring Oregon regulations to use their driver's license as a means of making tax-free purchases.

Fry said Monday that the problem was called to the Tax Commission's attention by the manager of a large retail store. The manager said several customers had complained about being charged sales tax at his store after making tax-free purchases from a nearby store by showing their driver's licenses to prove they are residents of Oregon.

EchoHawk spent $234,000 on campaign

BOISE (AP) — On Jan. 7, the pay for Idaho's attorney general goes to $67,500.

Democratic Party EchoHawk, who won the job in the November general election, spent more than $234,000 to capture the post.

The attorney general job goes up $19,500 with the start of new four-year terms next month. The pay for governor goes from $55,000 to $75,000 and pay for the other full-time state officers goes from $35,000 to $2,500.

EchoHawk's post-election report, was filed Monday afternoon with the secretary of state's office and showed he spent $234,660 on the campaign through Nov. 16. Included is $2,730 in unpaid debts.

Marjorie Ruth Moon, the Democrat who lost the state treasurer's race to incumbent Republican Lyda Justice Edwards, reported spending less than $19,000 on the campaign.

Moon, who served 24 years in the post before giving up the treasurer's job in 1986 in an unsuccessful bid for lieutenant governor, reported contributions of $18,746 and spending of about the same amount. Moon listed $8,650 of her own funds among the contributions.

EchoHawk received a total of $5,000 from the Democratic National Committee, just over $3,500 from the Idaho AFL-CIO and $2,475 from the Boise-based Lawyers Involved for Idaho.

Boise company

low bidder on prison project

BOISE (AP) — Wensel Construction, Inc., of Boise, has been named apparent low bidder on a $1.9 million project to build a 190-bed dormitory at the main state prison south of Boise.

The Division of Public Works received seven bids Tuesday afternoon, and named Wensel Construction apparent low with a bid of $1,857,880, more than $100,000 under the estimated cost.

Project cost estimator Doyle Allen said a contract is expected to be signed in about two weeks, after paperwork is completed. Site preparation already is under way under a separate contract for foundation work. Construction on the 190-bed dormitory for lower-security prisoners could start three days month, he said. The project is expected to take about seven months, which would make the anticipated completion date about July.

Both sides want wilderness talks closed

LEWISTON (AP) — Two key negotiators for opposing interests in Idaho's wilderness talks agree on one point: The talks should be closed.

Concerns that candor will be sacrificed in the limelight's glare is their overriding concern.

Up to 20 negotiators met Friday in Boise to talk about ground rules for the talks, with apparent general agreement the sessions should be closed.

The gathering also focused on a strategy for pursuing a settlement for one of the state's longest-lived conflicts.

The ground rules to govern the negotiations remained unresolved after the meeting, said James Arthur of The Mediation Institute in Seattle.

"We have a draft set of ground rules that we're still working on," said Arthur, who with Ty Tice of the institute was hired by the Idaho Legislative Council to mediate the talks.

Friday's session was intended to bring the parties together talk about the basics. The meeting was not closed to the public, but neither was it advertised, Arthur said.

Among the points still to be set is whether the meetings will be open or closed to the media.

Craig Gehrke, The Wilderness Society's Idaho director, and Joseph Hinson, Intermountain Forest Industries Association executive vice president in Coeur d'Alene, said they believed sentiment favored keeping the talks out of the public eye.

"I would have to agree with Craig," Hinson said. "I think everyone there felt we would be free to explore options and all the things that are part of the negotiations if we did it simply in private rather than having to read about it the next day on the front page."

Sunday beer Ok'ed in Nampa

NAMPA (AP) — The city council has approved beer and wine sales in taverns and restaurants on Sunday beginning Dec. 16.

In the 3-1 vote adopting the ordinance, Councilman Ernest Starr, a former Nampa mayor, was the lone opponent, citing a public vote over two decades ago in which Sunday beer and wine sales were defeated by 66 percent.

"I felt Nampa would be better off if we stayed the same as we were with taverns closing on Sunday," Starr maintained.

About 200 people, almost evenly divided over the issue, attended the October public hearing at which restaurant and tavern owners made their pitch for Sunday sales.

EPA OKs state fuel tank plan

BOISE (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has approved Idaho's new insurance fund for owners of underground fuel tanks.

But managers of the Idaho Petroleum Storage Tank Cleanup Fund say several changes need to be made before any policies are written.

Even so, Monroe Gollaber, tank fund bureau chief, said, "I think we'll be able to insure tanks that qualify by the time they need insurance. It isn't ready yet, but it will be."

The tank pool is administered by the Legislature this year to create a special state insurance fund because they could not obtain coverage from private carriers.

New EPA regulations require tank owners to have at least $1 million in liability insurance to cover fuel spills and groundwater contamination. They include service stations, school districts, farmers and others.

The fund is financed by a 1-cent gallon fee on all fuel sold in Idaho. While the new fund meets EPA requirements, Gollaber said, the Legislature will be asked to make several changes in the fund, such as softening environmental requirements.

The Idaho Petroleum and Clean Water Trust Fund calls for tank owners to certify the tanks are not leaking with independent tests. In addition, they must prove no soil contamination has occurred around them.

However, petroleum industry officials indicated 95 percent of the tanks were leaking "to some degree," Gollaber said.

The industry will seek a change in the law to allow the State Insurance Fund to insure sites that are "moderately" contaminated. That would mean:

No groundwater contamination had occurred.

LEWISTON (AP) — Monterey VanEngelen of Lewiston is taking Iraqi President Saddam Hussein at his word.

Last month, Saddam said he would free any of his "guests" whose relatives came to Iraq to collect them.

Mrs. VanEngelen left Monday to rejoin her husband, Lourens, in Iraq, almost three months to the day from when she flew home to freedom.

"Saddam said on a television interview with Peter Jennings that anybody who came over peacefully for the purpose of securing the release of a guest, they would not go home empty-handed," said the couple's daughter, Teresa Uptmor of Lewiston.

"I don't think he's going to do anything to hurt them after he's publicly invited them over there."

In addition, the Iraqi embassy in Washington, D.C., directly contacted Mrs. VanEngelen and invited her to the country.

The VanEngelens were among the first Americans taken hostage by Iraq when the Persian Gulf crisis erupted in August. VanEngelen worked in Kuwait as a business consultant. The couple later was moved to Baghdad.

When Saddam released Western women and children during the Labor Day weekend, Monterey went reluctantly, declining interviews after that.

But she authorized her daughter to comment as soon as she had boarded a flight at Spokane, bound first for New York and ultimately to Amman, Jordan.

From Amman, she will take a bus into Iraq.

"She said she didn't want anybody to stop her," Ms. Uptmor said.

Mrs. VanEngelen is traveling with a group known as "Coming Home," which is attempting to secure the release of Americans held in Iraq.

Accompanying the group is a Roman Catholic bishop and two CBS reporters.

Her decision to return to Iraq reflects Mrs. VanEngelen's belief there may be no other way to secure her husband's release, her daughter said. At 53, Lourens VanEngelen is too young and healthy to qualify. The family has some reason to trust Saddam. Friends who answered the Iraqi government's invitation were able to secure the release of relatives, Ms. Uptmor said.

Plans to renovate historic hotel shelved

SPOKANE (AP) — Owners who tried to renovate and reopen a historic downtown hotel have indefinitely suspended the project and blasted city officials in a dispute over a parking garage.

James Hill, president of Davenport Sun International Hotels & Properties Inc., which owns the Davenport Hotel, criticized the city for what he described as a refusal to follow through on a commitment to build the parking garage.

Mayor Sheri Barnard, in a telephone interview Monday from a National League of Cities meeting in Houston, said Ng must have misunderstood discussions about the garage.

"I feel sad that it didn't happen, but I don't think we misled them at all," said Barnard, a longtime booster of efforts to restore the old hotel.

Ng leads a Hong Kong investment group that bought the hotel in March from a Dallas holding company for $5.25 million cash. The hotel had been closed for five years.

Ng and former business partner James Hill had planned to restore and renovate the ornate old hotel, and said they hoped to reopen it at year's end. But they have contended a parking garage for hotel guests is essential to the hotel's success because there is insufficient parking available on nearby streets.

A consultant's study found such a garage would lose hundreds of thousands of dollars in its first few years of operation, a finding that made city officials hesitant to provide public financing for the project.

Ng also criticized bankers and property owners around the hotel for not supporting renovation.

2 more groups oppose tower

ASHTON (AP) — Two more names have been added to the growing list of organizations and individuals opposing construction of a radio tower more than 1,000 feet tall near Ashton.

The Fremont County Sheriff's Office and its Search and Rescue Unit say they are opposed to construction of a radio tower about five miles north of Ashton because it would interfere with aerial search and rescue operations.

T.C. Monte, based in Cincinnati, Ohio, filed an application with the Federal Communications Commission earlier this year for a new FM radio frequency. His company wants to build a 1,033-foot tower on the southern side of Big Red Rd.

"This location is in prime elk hunting area," Chief Deputy Sheriff Butch Thomas wrote in a letter to the

FCC. "This hunting season we had eight persons lost in this area and used aircraft to search the area for six of the lost hunters."

"In talking with our local pilots they state that this tower would hamper an aerial search of the area. There are better locations that would serve the Island Park area that we would not be opposed to."

Paul Lebeck of St. Anthony is spearheading local pilots' opposition to the proposal. He said the Air Force and Montana and Idaho aviation groups also are opposed, arguing that the tower would be directly in one of two major local flyways.

Island Broadcasters and its owners, Howard and Jane McDonald of Ennis, Mont., also have filed a petition with the FCC opposing the project, which has been condemned by the Federal Aviation Administration.

Israeli troops kill guerrilla in clash

TYRE, Lebanon — Israeli troops on Tuesday killed an armed guerrilla in a firefight in Israel's self-proclaimed security zone in southern Lebanon, the Israeli military command and Lebanese security sources said.

Two Israeli soldiers were slightly wounded in the clash, which occurred in the western sector near the village of Ramayah, 13 miles southeast of the southern port city of Tyre, the Israeli army said.

"Israeli forces from the Givati infantry brigade were on an initiated action when they spotted a squad of guerrillas heading toward the Israeli border and they opened fire from a short distance," said the army statement, issued in Jerusalem.

Lebanese security sources said the slain guerrilla was a Palestinian.

Pakistan's president vows to resign

DHAKA, Bangladesh — President Hussain Muhammad Ershad capitulated to a 7-week-old campaign for his ouster Tuesday, promising to resign as soon as the opposition chooses a replacement.

Ershad

State-run radio announced the move in a late-night news bulletin. Soon afterward, hundreds of people thronged the streets, defying a curfew that restricted civilians to their homes.

"Many danced, set off fire crackers in celebration and shouted slogans.

At least 1,000 people attacked a downtown office of Ershad's Jatiya Party, reporters at the scene said. Portraits of Ershad and office furniture were thrown into the street and set on fire, they said.

Security forces did not intervene or attempt to get people to return to their homes. But troops were seen being deployed outside the homes of government ministers to prevent further attacks.

Rebel leader gets interim post in Chad

N'DJAMENA, Chad — Rebel commander Idriss Deby, who ousted President Hissene Habre after three weeks of fighting, was named Tuesday by his own political party as Chad's interim leader.

The move was made by the Executive Committee of Deby's Patriotic Salvation Movement. It was expected to be formally made president shortly.

The Executive Committee also created a State Council under Deby's control and replaced the nation's Constitution.

No other details were immediately available.

Earlier, Deby had said he wanted to establish a democratic government as quickly as possible, the French ambassador said.

An ambassador, Francois Genereau also indicated that France, which has about 1,800 troops in Chad, would not attempt any political maneuver to stop the 38-year-old Deby from taking power.

Kasparov takes slim chess match lead

LYON, France — Defending champion Garry Kasparov defeated Anatoly Karpov on Tuesday to take a one-point lead in the World Chess Championship after Karpov resigned on the 102nd move of the 16th game.

It was the fourth-longest game in final-round history.

The marathon contest ended after almost 12½ hours of play that stretched over four days.

Kasparov has a 8.5-7.5 point advantage in the match. The first player to gain 12½ points wins the championship and $1.7 million of the $3-million purse. In the event of a tie, Kasparov retains the title.

There had been eight consecutive drawn games before Kasparov won.

Beirut dozer hits small mines in rubble

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A bulldozer roared into the ruined, mine-strewn former urban battlefield in the heart of Beirut on Tuesday to remove the fortifications and rubble of 15½ years of civil war.

Stray dogs emerged from shell-shattered buildings, barking furiously as the huge yellow machine began demolishing an earth embankment that split the Christian and Muslim sectors of the capital.

Martyr's Square and surrounding streets, the former business center of Beirut, were part of the no man's land that became overgrown with bushes and small trees sprouting from cracked pavement.

Two small anti-personnel mines exploded under the bulldozer's chains as it went to work. The bulldozer was not affected by the small blasts, but a Lebanese army captain ordered work stopped until troops cleared the area.

CANBERRA, Australia — A senior Chinese diplomat in Sydney has resigned and he and his journalist wife want to stay in Australia to study, a consular official said Tuesday.

Wang Yushen, the Chinese consul in Australia, confirmed that cultural attache Zhou Hua had left a "letter of resignation" at the consulate before disappearing on Nov. 25 with his wife, Susan.

"His way of doing it is very wrong," Wang said.

Gorbachev: Soviets boost food production

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Tuesday he will crack down on black marketing and boost food imports to feed the nation this winter, and he wants people to plant their own gardens to raise food next year.

"Rural and urban residents should be free to pursue agriculture," Gorbachev told the Supreme Soviet legislature, which has demanded urgent steps to ease the food crisis.

Gorbachev also outlined proposed changes in the government, including the creation of a vice presidency and a Security Council. They also would streamline the Cabinet and strengthen the Federation Council, which includes representatives of the republics.

Those changes require constitutional amendments, and the Supreme Soviet legislature voted 281-17 to recommend that the larger Congress of Peoples' Deputies amend the charter when it convenes on Dec. 17.

Despite the lopsided vote, many legislators said they were disappointed Gorbachev did not give more details on either the food program or government restructuring, which he first outlined on Nov. 17.

"A lot of questions remain," said Vygod Buritskiy, a reformer. "The president explained some general ideas, but we don't know the real functions for the new institutions."

Gorbachev, after fielding questions from legislators, said he rejected accusations that the proposed changes reflected "imperial ambitions" for the strengthened office of president, the official news agency Tass reported.

The president provided the most detailed statistics yet on the food the Soviet Union plans to import with foreign aid he has secured over the past two months.

During the first three months of 1991, he said the government would spend about $1.2 billion on food. That included 10 million tons of grain, 1.9 million tons of sugar, 156,000 tons of flour, 277,000 tons of sunflower oil, 357,000 tons of meat and meat products, 4.5 million tons of milk products and 110,000 tons of groats.

The United States, Germany and Italy have begun sending food aid to the Soviet Union, and other nations have pledged support.

Argentine president's image boosted by crisis

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The bloodiest of four army uprisings in four years was also the shortest, and President Menem's decisive management of the crisis may strengthen his government.

Monday's uprising, two days before President Bush's scheduled visit, was quickly crushed. Menem said Tuesday the rebel leaders will be tried by military court and face the death penalty if found guilty.

Late Monday, after the rebels had fled out of the last of the buildings they had seized before dawn, Menem told a news conference that "my pulse isn't going to tremble" if military officers who had rebelled repeatedly — and killed people in the process — forfeit their lives.

The violent death toll in the uprising rose Tuesday to 14 when a soldier died from wounds suffered in fighting down the insurrection.

Unofficial tallies put the number of wounded at nearly 60 and the arrested at more than 400.

The government did not disclose its figures on casualties and arrests.

Menem and Defense Minister Humberto Romero signed a decree that legally separated the rebel leaders from their followers.

While the leaders could face the death penalty, the followers face charges in civil court, where the worst punishment is life in prison.

Menem was convinced the death penalty should be applied to all these happenings," said Raul Grillo Ocampo, the president's legal adviser.

That attitude found support in this capital city of 10 million, whose residents saw their democracy threatened by the uprising.

In quelling it, air force planes bombed tanks on public roads and a bridge was dynamited. Rebels fired at and hit Vice President Eduardo Duhalde's helicopter.

On Tuesday, rebels who hid overnight at a rural Buenos Aires Province farm gave themselves up, along with three tanks they had seized.

Iraq offers to release Soviet workers, if contracts paid for

What appeared to be another attempt to divide the world alliance against Iraq, Saddam Hussein Tuesday backed away from confrontation with the Kremlin, offering to release the almost 500 Soviet workers held in Iraq.

'There can be no question of negotiations, concessions, partial solutions or linkage to other issues.'

—John Major, British Prime Minister

The Kremlin has not sent any sign that it would have to pay compensation for broken contracts.

Iraq had warned foreign companies and employees it would demand compensation for any contract breached after its Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

In Moscow, presidential spokesman Vitaly Ignatenko said 7,732 Soviets remained in Iraq. Thousands more left in the months after the invasion.

Moscow adopted a harder line against Iraq last week when it accused Saddam of breaking a promise to allow Soviets to leave.

Iraq is holding hundreds of Westerners, many at strategic sites, dead-end after the invasion.

believed among those used as "human shields."

Saddam has said he would free all hostages between Christmas and March 25 provided Washington and its allies do not take military action. That period is considered the optimum for negotiations to drive the Iraqis from Kuwait.

The Iraqi decision Tuesday was seen as an attempt by Saddam to forestall any Soviet military intervention in the gulf that might cement the U.S.-led coalition already poised in the region against him.

But releasing the Soviets is not likely to assuage Moscow's mounting impatience with Saddam over his refusal to leave Kuwait, nor imperil its growing alliance with the West.

In Washington, congressional hearings continued on the Bush administration's gulf policy.

Senate Democrats have repeatedly urged Bush to stick with the economic embargo against Iraq, rather than rush into a war. White House officials, however, have said the sanctions aren't working.

"I've not been one whose been convinced that sanctions alone will bring him to his senses," Bush said Tuesday.

Of Saddam, the president said: "I am convinced that up until now, at least, he has not gotten the message that he must withdraw from Kuwait."

Major addressed his first Conservative Party rally as prime minister and said he supported President Bush's recent offer to send Secretary of State James A. Baker III to Iraq. But he said there should be no compromises.

"There can be no question of negotiations, concessions, partial solutions or linkage to other issues," he said.

Earlier, Gen. Colin L. Powell, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, conferred with British Defense Secretary Tom King.

Turkish president increasingly isolated as opposition to his policies continues

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — President Turgut Ozal, often praised by President Bush as a loyal ally for his strong support in the Persian Gulf crisis, is on slippery ground at home.

The 63-year-old president is increasingly isolated, has little public support and often faces criticism from establishment groups and members of his own Motherland Party.

The resignation of the chief of staff on Monday indicated Ozal also had alienated the military as well — the most powerful establishment group in Turkey.

Gen. Necip Toruntay, who was succeeded Tuesday by Gen. Dogan Gurens, stepped down not so much over a specific issue but to protest a style of government, spurring close to the military said.

Since Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2, Ozal has run a one-man show concerning Turkey's gulf policy, often bypassing Cabinet members and the Foreign Ministry.

A few days after the invasion, for example, reporters told the foreign minister that pipelines carrying Iraqi crude oil through Turkey were being closed to comply with a U.N. trade embargo.

In October, Foreign Minister Ali Bozer resigned, Defense Minister Safa Giray quit the next month.

Some observers fear Ozal may lead Turkey into a Middle East war. "Who else but Bush still supports Ozal's style of government?" asked columnist Turker Altan in the daily Gunes.

"Could a nation of 50 million be pushed into war behind the United States just because Ozal wants it when everyone, from 15-year-olds to the chief of staff, is opposed to war?"

Ozal was elected prime minister in 1983 when the military turned over power to civilians in general elections. He won re-election in 1987 but his party was badly beaten two years later.

The parliament, where the Motherland Party enjoys a large majority, elected him president — his term runs until 1995 — that year. Ozal moved to Cankaya Palace, turning over the prime minister's job to a loyal follower, Yildirim Akbulut.

Opposition politicians say Ozal is running the government even though the president is supposed to be a mainly ceremonial post. They hope to win enough votes in the next elections to change the constitution and unseat him.

Ozal is also opposed by organized labor. At a meeting Tuesday to discuss productivity, labor representatives marched out in protest when Ozal entered the hall. Nationwide, 48,000 miners are on strike to protest the government's insistence on low wages.

Businessmen, once Ozal's allies and supporters of his free market policies, now grumble about what they say is widespread corruption in government and the lack of a coordinated economic policy.

The educated elite and other secularist Turks are demanding an end to government policies and hiring practices deemed favorable to Islamic fundamentalists.

Elegant holiday brunch made easy

Gift ideas from big to small

In the spirit of Christmas, I would like to propose a worldwide gift exchange. Let's even out the world energy inequities with a friendly swap: most trading Western calories for Middle Eastern BTUs.

Jane Slickers Nutrition

A year's supply of peanut butter for a few million barrels of black slime seems fair. A tanker of oil exchanged for a tanker of French fries. World leaders could meet at the United Nations every Saturday morning to discuss bargaining with computers instead of troops.

While I'm finalizing the details of this foreign policy for the White House, I have an alternate plan for domestic affairs.

Choose from the gift list below for all your friends and relatives who are suffering from an excess of energy in the form of calories.

Books: Top numerous to mention all by name: Jane Brody's new book, Good Food Gourmet, is reportedly excellent. Having scanned it at the book store, I am dropping hints.

Look for reputable authors of cookbooks like the American Heart Association. An R.D. following an author's name means registered dietitian, another solid recommendation. Beware of any quick weight loss schemes. Quick as quick in January is usually followed by pit pain in February. Covert Bailey's Fit or Fat books (4 of them) at $3.95 each, are bargains full of good advice.

Appliances: Bread makers were new and novel last year, now you can choose from many brands. Awakening to fresh, loaf bread in the morning, may be worth almost $200. An anti-copper for the snack attack helps ward off a potato-chip frenzy.

A juice squeezer with a fruit's supply of oranges (and vitamin C) would be welcome. Transfer the hand crank models for about $40. (We are trying to preserve energy, remember.) Woks and pizzamaking gear enhance low-fat cooking efforts.

Whips, spoons, peelers and presses stuff stockings with a message to eat more fruit and veggies. Avoid giving ice cream soupoons, butter curlers and other obvious fat-user paraphernalia.

Food: Needless seasonal mixes and dried herbs discourage excess salt use. Fifty pounds of this year's crop of No. 1 large potatoes cost $10.99 the first time checked—delightful with a bright red bow you attach. Include a Mr. Potato head game for a family with small enough children.

I have extolled the virtues of beans in many previous columns. They are still a good gift. Jazz them up by mixing various types complete with a homemade cloth bag. Concoct a seasoning mix for soup or chili and include that with your beans—a meal in a bag.

Fruit in any shape or form is great. Grapefruit, pears, apples or pineapple offer relief from all the nuts, sausage and sweets that abound. My favorite Christmas banjoer-slicker, "Got-a-whip-fruicake." Reserve it for revenge and not reward.

Give a turkey, smoked or plain. Skip the sausage, cheese combos.

While we may not be able to exchange our excess calories for oil yet, we can give our excess calories to the needy. Call the local charities, your church and school. Give calories for Christmas.

Until George Bush and Saddam Hussein are sitting across from each other bartering energy excesses, the effort is up to us.

The holiday brunch is a wonderful way to gather with family and friends at the busiest time of the year. Warm and inviting, this late morning get-together is timed right for fast caterers and allows you to go as casual or as elegant as you wish, while keeping hassle to a minimum.

The secret lies in serving a festive buffet of foods made with simple ingredients. Just reach into the cupboard for tried-and-true products you've trusted for years, and use them to create an exciting new menu for the holidays.

Canned pears, packed in syrup or juice, will enhance any brunch recipe with their refreshing flavor. Stocking your pantry can make holiday cooking easier and give you more time to spend with your friends.

Here is a menu that lets you complete most of the preparation well ahead of the first ring of the doorbell. Make Holiday Holly Nog and colorful Savory Pear Nibbles as early as the day before and refrigerate. One hour before serving time, start the Bountiful Brunch. Bake, baked "upside down" for extra ease. You can nicely double-bake the cake with Festive Confetti.

- ### HOLIDAY HOLLY NOG
- Your friends will ask for more of this cool, creamy nog. Easy to make in advance with pantry-ready ingredients.
- 1 can (29 ounces) pear halves
 - 1 can (16 ounces) whole cranberry sauce
 - 1-3 tablespoons rum extract
 - 1 tablespoon vanilla extract
 - 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
 - 1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
 - 2 cans (12 ounces each) evaporated milk
 - 1/2 teaspoon salt
 - 1 1/2 cups frozen whipped topping with cream, thawed
 - 1 1/2 cups cranberry juice
- In a blender or food processor, combine pears with liquid, cranberry sauce, rum extract, vanilla extract, cinnamon and nutmeg; process until smooth. Cover and refrigerate 2 hours.
- In a 4-quart mixing bowl, beat evaporated milk and salt until slightly thickened and foamy. Mix in whipped topping, cranberry juice and pureed pear mixture. Cover and refrigerate until serving.
- Makes 14 cups.

- ### SAVORY PEAR NIBBLES
- Spark morning appetites with a unique blend of savory cream cheese and succulent pear.
- 1 package (8 ounces) lowfat cream cheese, softened
 - 1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley
 - 1 teaspoon crushed dried basil (or 1 tablespoon minced fresh basil leaves)
 - 1 teaspoon prepared horseradish
 - 1/4 cup sliced almonds, toasted
 - 2 cans (16 ounces each) pear halves, drained
 - parsley sprigs for garnish
 - Radicchio leaves
- In a mixing bowl, beat cream cheese until smooth. Beat in parsley, basil, horseradish and mayonnaise. Stir in almonds.
- After draining pears, set on paper towels

Clockwise from top right: savory pear nibbles, bountiful brunch cake, festive confetti omelet and holiday holly nog.

- ### BOUNTIFUL BRUNCH CAKE
- 1/2 cup packed brown sugar
 - 1 can (12 ounces) evaporated milk, divided usage
 - 1/2 cup light corn syrup
 - 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
 - 1/2 cup pecan pieces
 - 2 teaspoons vanilla extract, divided usage
 - 2 cans (16 ounces each) pear halves, drained, reserving liquid
 - 3 red maraschino cherries, cut in half
 - 5 green maraschino cherries, cut in half
 - 3 cups buttermilk baking mix
 - 1 1/2 cup sugar
 - 1/4 cup shortening

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. In a small sauceman, combine brown sugar, 1/2 cup evaporated milk, corn syrup and butter. Bring mixture to a boil over medium-low heat and boil for 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and stir in pecan pieces and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Pour into greased and floured 13-by-9-by-2-inch pan. Arrange pear and cherry halves on caramel sauce with cut side up. Cool for 10 minutes.

In a mixing bowl, combine baking mix, eggs, remaining 1 cup evaporated milk, sugar, 1/2 cup reserved pear liquid, shortening and remaining 1 teaspoon vanilla; beat on medium speed until smooth. Pour over cooled caramel sauce and fruit. Bake for 30 to 35 minutes until cake tests done. Immediately invert pan on serving platter. Spoon caramel sauce over cake as it cools. Serve warm.

Makes 12 servings.

- ### FESTIVE CONFETTI OMELET
- This golden omelet bakes in the oven, freeing you to be with your guests.
- 5 eggs separated
 - 2 tablespoons sugar
 - 1 can (12 ounces) evaporated milk, divided usage
 - 1/2 cup buttermilk baking mix
 - 1/2 teaspoon garlic salt, divided usage
 - 1/2 teaspoon onion salt, divided usage
 - 1/2 pound pork sausage, cooked and drained

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. In a mixing bowl, beat egg whites until foamy. Gradually add sugar and continue beating until stiff peaks form. In another mixing bowl, combine egg yolks, 1 cup evaporated milk, baking mix and 1/2 teaspoon each garlic salt and onion salt. Fold in egg whites.

In an oven-proof 10-inch skillet, melt butter over medium heat. Arrange cooked sausage in skillet. Reduce heat to low and slowly pour eggs over sausage. Cook until eggs just begin to set (3 to 5 minutes); sprinkle red and green peppers and cheese over eggs. Place skillet in oven and bake 10 to 15 minutes until puffed and slightly browned.

To make sauce: In a small sauceman, combine sugar, remaining 1/2 cup evaporated milk, remaining 1/2 teaspoon each garlic salt and onion salt. Cook over low heat until thickened, stirring constantly. Serve over eggs.

In an oven-proof 10-inch skillet, melt butter over medium heat. Arrange cooked sausage in skillet. Reduce heat to low and slowly pour eggs over sausage. Cook until eggs just begin to set (3 to 5 minutes); sprinkle red and green peppers and cheese over eggs. Place skillet in oven and bake 10 to 15 minutes until puffed and slightly browned.

Expert pie baker serves up a tender, sturdy crust

By Barbara Hansen, Los Angeles Times

Susan G. Purdy knows the troubles home bakers face. She knows the disappointment of rolling-out pie dough only to watch it fall in shreds when it's lifted from the board. She understands the frustration that drives people to ready-made crust and store-bought pies.

That's why Purdy, cooking teacher, cookbook author and expert pie baker, set out to make the perfect, foolproof flaky pastry dough. She came up with a dough that is so tender and yet so sturdy that Purdy, demonstrating the recipe in our test kitchen, is now lifting the rolled-out circle and flapping it in the air.

"I have a real sweet tooth," she says as she puts the dough in a pie pan, "which is why I write about desserts and not what to eat."

She has written two books: "As Easy as Pie" (Collier Books softcover edition; $14.95), first published in hardcover in 1984 and just released in paperback, and "A Piece of Cake" (Atheneum; $24.95), which came out last year. As the titles imply, Purdy believes baking shouldn't intimidate. "As Easy as Pie," for instance, gives the recipe for her foolproof pastry dough, but realizing that pie crust frightens many, she suggests an easier crumb crust for many pies. The combinations of crumbs, sugar and butter are not rolled but merely pressed onto the pie plate and chilled or baked.

A three-page chart in her book tells at a glance how to make a baker's dozen of these:

Fruit cobblers and crisps are another escape from traditional pie crusts that meet Purdy's approval. These are easy because the topping is simply spooned or sprinkled over the fruit.

But for classic American pie, a pastry shell is a must. And if you're ready to tackle one, here is Purdy's five-point guide to success:

- Have everything cold. Purdy stores butter and margarine in the freezer. She knows bakers who keep flour in the freezer and who soften the margarine, slash butter, which they roll out pastry. For liquid, use ice water.
- Use lemon juice or white vinegar and an egg yolk as part of the liquid. The acid agents inhibit the gluten in the flour, and the egg yolk makes the pastry easier to handle.
- Use a minimum amount of liquid. After adding the lemon juice and egg yolk, sprinkle on just a water a tablespoon at a time until the dough just starts to cling together.

- Handle the dough as little as possible. If using a food processor, stop processing as soon as the ingredients form small crumbs. Letting it spin until the dough forms a ball guarantees an overworked, tough crust.
- Place the pie in the oven at high heat — 425 degrees. This will turn the water to steam, which will make the little flecks of fat and flour in the pastry rise and separate. If the oven temperature is too low, the fat will melt and be absorbed by the flour along with the liquid, resulting in a tough, pasty crust. Gauge the heat with an oven thermometer rather than trusting the oven control. "Most home ovens are irregular," Purdy says, and the actual heat will be substantially different from that indicated by the control.
- Purdy typically starts a pie in the lower third of the oven, bakes it for about 12 minutes at 425 degrees, then raises it to the oven center and lowers the temperature to 350 degrees, or for a custard pie, 325 degrees.
- She suggests using a glass pie plate rather than a pan in order to check the browning of the crust. And she avoids heavy black pie pans. "They get the crust too tough," she says.

The basic pastry recipe that follows emphasizes the technique. Please see CRUST/C6

Idaho fan returns with pecan recipes despite Vandal loss

It's a long, long way from Idaho to Georgia. And the very idea of going there for a football game was, well, maybe unreasonable?

But Vandal fans from Magic Valley are well-known for their unshakable enthusiasm and with the airlines giving a one-week two-fer price, a bunch of us flew off to test that famous Southern hospitality.

Nancy Joy Jones Valley cooking

We found warm sunshine and a gracious welcome from Georgia Southern fans. The warm sun was one point short of a win. However, we scouted the area and know we'll go back next year, take some potatoes and have a tail-gate spot bowl for the Southern Georgia fans. We'll see if that great hospitality extends to winners!

As you know many church and fraternal organizations are right now selling

DEAR READERS: In the mood for a trivia quiz?

What do Rudy Boschwitz (U.S. senator from Minnesota), Madeleine Kunin (governor of Vermont), Tom Lantos (congressman from northern California) and Lowell Weicker (newly elected governor of Connecticut) have in common?

Give up? They will never be president of the United States. "Why not?" you ask. Because Boschwitz was born in Berlin; Kunin was born in Zurich, Switzerland; Lantos was born in Budapest, Hungary; and Weicker was born in Paris. And our Constitution specifically states that no person born on foreign soil shall be eligible to hold the office of the presidency. Class dismissed.

DEAR ABBY: I heard that you had a letter in your column many years ago about a young Jewish man who fell in love with a gentile girl. She agreed to convert to Judaism and raise their children in the Jewish faith on the condition that he become a practicing Jew. If you can find it, please run it again.

— BACK TO THE FAITH IN CLEVELAND
DEAR-BACK TO THE FAITH: I had to go back 10 years to find it, and here it is:

DEAR ABBY: I am Jewish, I was raised in the Jewish faith and had the bar mitzvah when I was 13. However, I do not attend services except on the high holy days once a year. Last year I fell in love with a wonderful gentile girl, Connie is 19 and an atheist. I want to marry her, and out of respect to my parents I want to be married in our synagogue by the rabbi who has been a family friend for many years. The problem is, the rabbi can't marry us unless Connie converts to Judaism.

She is willing and even agrees to raise our children in the Jewish faith providing I become a practicing Jew. She says if she takes the Jewish faith she will follow it, but she's not going to be the only Jew in the family. This means attending services every Friday night and observing all the holidays. What do you think?

— DAVID
DEAR DAVID: I think she's terrific. Grab her!

DEAR ABBY: Why are slow eaters in the U.S.A. given the rush out in restaurants? Apparently the staff has been instructed to remove each diner plate as soon as each diner has finished eating.

Unfortunately, the slow eater must finish eating at a table that has been cleared of all the dishes except his or her own.

Abby, you could be a big help by suggesting that the servers follow the European custom of allowing all the plates to remain on the table until the last eater has finished. It would make restaurant dining much more gracious and comfortable.

— SLOW EATER IN TUCSON
DEAR SLOW EATER: I would not presume to tell the waiters and waitresses of Tucson (or any other city) how and when to clear their tables.

If you are eating at a fast-food establishment with customers waiting to be seated, I can understand the "rush out." But in a restaurant where customers come to dine leisurely, if the waitperson starts to remove the dishes before everyone has finished eating, simply say, with the utmost courtesy, "Would you please wait until everyone has finished eating before removing the dishes?"

Nutty fettuccine from 'Cuisine Rapide'

The Baltimore Evening Sun

The following recipe for Fettuccine With Pecans is from 'Cuisine Rapide,' by Pierre Franey and Bryan Miller (Times Books; 1987; $22.50).

FETTUCINE WITH PECANS:

- 1/2 pound fresh or dry fettuccine or other flat noodle.
- Salt to taste if desired.
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1/2 cup finely chopped pecans
- 1/2 teaspoon Tabasco sauce
- 1/4 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
- 1/4 cup heavy cream

- 1/2 cup finely chopped fresh basil, optional
- 1/4 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

Cook the fettuccine in boiling salted water nine minutes if dry and five minutes if fresh or to the desired degree of doneness. Drain, reserving 1/2 cup cooking liquid.

Return the noodles to the kettle and add the butter. Toss and add the reserved cooking liquid, pecans, Tabasco, nutmeg, cream and basil. Toss to blend.

Treasure Island fruit carrot bread.

Bake fresh holiday breads in an hour

During the holidays, the delightful smell of baking bread fills most of us with a sense of nostalgia. As children, we gathered around the oven and anxiously waited while the homemade bread baked in the oven. Even today, when spare time is at a premium, you can recreate those sentimental, "delicious" memories with your own home-baked breads in about an hour. Glace fruit holiday breads, baked in your own kitchen, are a delicious, quick and versatile accompaniment to any holiday meal.

These breads can be enjoyed at brunch; anytime or as an afternoon snack for drop-in guests, and offer an alternative to the usual sweet treats. As further incentive, they can be baked ahead of time and stored in the refrigerator or freezer for weeks.

Treasure Island Fruit Carrot Bread is a must for holiday brunches. The delicacy is brimming with carrots, honey, cinnamon and glace cherries.

- 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, softened
- 1 cup honey
- 2 eggs
- 2 cups shredded carrots
- 1/2 cups orange juice
- 1/2 cups (12 ounces) glace whole red or green cherries, finely chopped (recipe follows)
- Glace, whole red and green cherries, halved
- Glace pineapple wedges, halved
- 1/2 cups flour, baking powder, soda, salt and cinnamon together, set aside. In another bowl blend butter and honey until creamed. Beat in eggs. Stir in carrots, orange juice and glace cherries. Add flour mixture; stir just until moistened throughout. Spoon evenly into two, lightly greased 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pans. Bake in a pre-heated 350 degree oven 50 to 60 minutes until golden brown. Remove from pans to cool completely on wire rack. Drizzle tops with icing and garnish with glace cherry halves and pineapple halves.
- Makes 2 loaves.

TREASURE ISLAND FRUIT CARROT BREAD

- 4 cups all-purpose flour
- 1 1/2 cups whole wheat flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons ground cinnamon

- 1/2 cup butter
- 1/2 cup brown sugar
- 1/2 cup white sugar
- 1/2 cup molasses
- 1/2 cup corn syrup
- 1/2 cup dark corn syrup
- 1/2 cup molasses
- 1/2 cup lemon juice
- 1/2 cup vanilla
- 1/2 cup pecan butter
- 1/2 cup coarsely chopped fresh or frozen cranberries

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease two 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pans. In a large bowl, combine flour, baking powder, baking soda, salt and cinnamon. In another bowl, combine butter, brown sugar, white sugar, molasses, corn syrup, dark corn syrup, lemon juice, vanilla and pecan butter. Beat with electric mixer until well blended. Add cranberries and mix well. Stir in hot molasses, which will melt sugar. Gradually add 1/3 cup rum while beating slowly.

In chilled bowl with chilled beaters, whip 1/2 cups cream until stiff peaks form. Fold cream into gelatin mixture. Set bowl into large bowl of ice water and whisk 10 to 15 minutes. Stir mixture. Feels thick mounds on spoon and looks as if it is beginning to set. Immediately remove bowl from ice water and spoon filling into pie shell. Cover with plastic wrap and chill at least 4 hours to set.

Shortly before serving, whip remaining 1/2 cup cream. When soft peaks form, add powdered sugar and rum, then beat cream medium stiff. Spoon into ring around edge of pie or pipe into rosettes through pastry bag fitted with star tip. Decorate with chocolate leaves, curls or sprinkling of grated chocolate.

Graham-Nut Crumb Crust

 Worcestersthire saze. Add the pecans and stir to coat thoroughly. Combining the remaining ingredients in a large mixing bowl. Add the pecans and stir until all are evenly coated with the sugar mixture.

Spread mixture on a parchment-lined sheet, in a large, lightly-oiled baking sheet. Bake 10 minutes; stir and bake another 10 minutes. Cool and separate nuts. Store in an airtight container. Makes 3 cups.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease two 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pans. In a large bowl, combine flour, baking powder, baking soda, salt and cinnamon. In another bowl, combine butter, brown sugar, white sugar, molasses, corn syrup, dark corn syrup, lemon juice, vanilla and pecan butter. Beat with electric mixer until well blended. Add cranberries and mix well. Stir in hot molasses, which will melt sugar. Gradually add 1/3 cup rum while beating slowly.

MICROWAVE SUGARED PECANS

- 2 cups pecan halves
- 1/2 cup light brown sugar
- 2 tablespoons granulated sugar
- 1/2 cup snur cream
- 1/2 teaspoon vanilla
- Roast the nuts by placing in a single layer on a microwaveable baking sheet. Microwave on high for 9 to 10 minutes. Stir at one-minute intervals. Then after two minutes again and every minute after that. Set aside to cool. Combine the sugars and sour cream in a 4-cup glass measuring cup. Microwave on high for 1 1/2 minutes and stir. Continue to microwave for 30 to 60 seconds. Drain and toss nuts between paper or cloth towels to remove skins.

EASY PECAN TURTLE CANDIES

- 1 package 1/2 pound pecan halves
- 12 ounces dark chocolate chips (actually, regular chips worked fine)
- Heat the caramels in the microwave until soft. Stir occasionally until melted evenly. On a baking sheet, group four pecan halves together about 2 inches apart on the sheet. Drop melted caramels by teaspoon on each group of pecans.
- Melt the chocolate on low in a microwave or over hot water in a double-boiler. Top each piece of nuts and caramel with a teaspoon of chocolate and spread with a spatula if needed. Set in a cool dry place until firm.

PECAN WAFFLES

- 2 cups all-purpose flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1/2 cups chopped pecans
- 2 eggs, separated
- 1 1/2 cups milk
- 6 tablespoons shortening, melted
- Sift together the dry ingredients and then stir in the pecans. In another bowl, beat four eggs yolks until light and combine with the milk and the melted shortening. Add to dry ingredients and mix just enough to mix. In another bowl beat the egg whites until stiff and fold into the batter. Bake in a hot waffle iron according to manufacturers directions. Enjoy!

Crust

 niques that Purdy believes will yield the best results for a beginner. In it, frozen butter and margarine are used and the dough is mixed in a food processor. In her book, the recipe is given in an easy-to-follow, covering all methods for mixing and incorporating ingredients in which to vary the flavor by adding nuts, coconut, cocoa or, for savory pies, herbs and cheese.

BASIC ALL-PURPOSE FLAKY PASTRY

- 2 cups flour, sifted
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 cup unsalted butter, frozen
- 3 tablespoons margarine, frozen
- 1 large egg yolk
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 3 to 4 tablespoons ice water

Measure flour and salt into food processor work bowl fitted with steel blade. Cover and pulse quickly 2 or 3 times to lighten dry ingredients. Uncover and add cut-up frozen butter and margarine. Process 5 to 10 seconds until dough has texture of rough meal.

Through feed tube, add egg yolk and lemon juice. Pulse 2 to 3 times. Add ice water little at a time, following each addition with 2 quick pulses, until dough starts to clump together but still looks rough and lumpy. Specks of yolk and butter may still be visible. If dough appears too dry and crumbly, sprinkle on little more water and pulse once more. Use only as much ice water as needed.

Turn off processor, uncover and pinch dough. If dough holds together, it is done. Do not process until dough forms ball on steel blade or pastry will be overworked and tough. Dough may be rolled out at once. Or turn out onto wax paper, lift opposite corners of paper and press on dough, forming it into ball. Wrap and refrigerate until needed. Makes enough pastry for 1 (2-crust) 8- or 9-inch pie, with some dough left over for trimming, or 1 (1-crust) 11- or 12-inch pie or 9 (4-inch) tart shells.

CRANBERRY-PECAN PIE

- Pastry for 9-inch pie shell
- 1/2 cup dark brown sugar, packed
- 3 eggs

- 6 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted
- 2/3 cup dark corn syrup
- 1 tablespoon unsulfured molasses
- 1 teaspoon lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1/2 cup pecan butter
- 1/2 cup coarsely chopped fresh or frozen cranberries

If desired, make pastry with half each whole-wheat and all-purpose flour, or use any favorite pastry. Roll out pastry and line 9-inch pie plate. Trim overhang to 1/2 inch. Fold over edge and flute as desired. Pierce bottom all over with fork. Chill pastry until firm.

Cut square piece wax paper, parchment or foil slightly larger than pie plate and set over pastry. If using foil, place shiny side down. Fill liner half full with pie weights, rice or beans. Bake at 425 degrees 10 minutes. Cool on wire rack. Lower oven to 400 degrees.

Combine brown sugar and eggs in bowl of electric mixer. Beat until well blended and free of lumps. Add melted butter, corn syrup, molasses, lemon juice, vanilla and salt. Beat well. Pour filling into prepared shell. Arrange pecans and cranberries over top.

Bake in center of 400-degree oven 20 to 30 minutes, until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Cool on wire rack. Serve at room temperature, topped by vanilla ice cream or slightly sweetened whipped cream.

VELVET RUM CREAM PIE

- 1 (10-inch) Graham-Nut Crumb Crust, or 1 (10-inch), completely baked pastry shell of choice
- 1 envelope unflavored gelatin
- 1/2 cup cold water
- 6 egg yolks
- 1 cup granulated sugar
- 1/3 cup plus 1 tablespoon dark rum
- 2 cups whipping cream
- 1 tablespoon powdered sugar, sifted

Prepare Graham-Nut Crumb Crust and chill while preparing filling. Sprinkle gelatin over cold water in small saucepan. Place over low heat

Tortellini is an Italian treat. Yet, with a little imagination and Oriental spiciness, it takes on a new "nationality."

In "Sweet & Sour Tortellini" the home economists at the Kikkoman Kitchens have created a seasoned non-traditional stir-fry combining cheese-filled tortellini with tender beef, onion and colorful bell peppers. And, you can use frozen, dry or fresh tortellini.

To seal in the natural juices during stir-frying and keep the beef tender, it's marinated in a mixture of naturally brewed soy sauce, garlic and cornstarch prior to cooking.

The sauce for this stir-fry relies on bottled sweet and sour sauce for its lively flavor and color. With its full-bodied richness, bottled sweet and sour sauce, a blend of sugar, vinegar, brewed soy sauce, tomato paste, pineapple, onion, green bell pepper, garlic and spicy red pepper, is a wonderful time-saving cooking sauce.

This one-dish meal takes about 30 minutes from start to finish. And, the only accompaniment needed is a loaf of crusty Italian bread.

SWEET & SOUR TORTELLINI
1 package (7 to 12 oz.) uncooked cheese tortellini

1/2 pound boneless tender beef
2 teaspoons cornstarch
2 teaspoons naturally brewed soy sauce

1 small clove garlic, pressed
1/2 cup bottled sweet & sour sauce
1/3 cup regular strength chicken broth

1 tablespoon sugar
2 tablespoons dry sherry
2 tablespoons vegetable oil, divided

1 medium onion, chunked
1 small red bell pepper, chunked
1 small green pepper, chunked

Kikkoman Kitchens

This non-traditional stir-fry features cheese tortellini.

Combine cornstarch, soy sauce and garlic in small bowl; stir in beef. Let stand 15 minutes. Meanwhile, combine sweet & sour sauce, chicken broth, sugar and sherry; set aside.

Heat 1 tablespoon oil in hot wok or large skillet over high heat. Add beef and stir-fry 1 minute; remove. Heat remaining oil in same pan. Add onion and peppers; stir-fry 3 minutes. Add beef, sweet & sour sauce mixture and tortellini. Cook, stirring until beef, vegetables and tortellini are coated with sauce.

Makes 4 servings.

Dry sherry is best choice to go with black bean soup

By Bob Heeman
Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. This month, as part of my own celebration of Hispanic Heritage, I've been enjoying some really great meals at several Hispanic restaurants. One of my favorite appetizer courses is rich black bean soup, but every now I've tried with the soup just doesn't work. What do you suggest? — B.L.

A. The best wine to serve with traditional black bean soup is a dry Spanish sherry called "fino." While most Americans think that all sherry is sweet, the kind of drink your grandmother used to keep in a crystal decanter — the very best sherries from Spain are quite dry, meant to be served chilled and with a variety of foods, including black bean soup.

Some popular brands to look for include La Tina, produced by Domecq, and Tio Pepe; they're usually available by the glass in most Spanish and Hispanic restaurants in the United States. One word of advice: While most table wines have a legal limit of 7 to 14 percent alcohol, sherry can range from 17 to 20 percent, with a 1 percent allowance on either side of the scale.

Q. My business partner tells me they are now producing some very good wines in Chile. Would you recommend some brand names I might try? — G.P., Hartford, Conn.

A. Chile, which has the ideal climate, land and grapes to produce great wines, is making several wines that have attracted international accolades. In addition to the readily available Concho y Toro, two other labels to look for include Cousiño-Macul (famous for its chardonnays, and cabernet sauvignons) and Santa Rita (noted for its sophisticated cabernet sauvignons).

A. The inherent sweetness in many calls for a chilled rose wine, the perfect complement to the meat and all its complex flavors. While several fine roses are produced in France and California, my choice with baked ham is the Simi Rose of Cabernet Sauvignon, a crisp, clean wine with good fruit flavor. Suggested retail is about $7 a bottle.

EASY, FABULOUS FUDGE
This recipe makes five pounds of fudge or more than 100 1-inch pieces. This is sufficient for about six to eight gifts.
12 ounces Baker's German sweet chocolate broken into pieces

12 ounces semi-sweet chocolate morsels
1 (7-ounce) jar marshmallow creme

1 13-ounce can evaporated milk
2 tablespoons butter
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon vanilla
2 cups broken walnuts

Place the chocolate bars, chocolate morsels and marshmallow creme in the large bowl of an electric mixer. Combine the sugar, milk, butter and salt in a heavy 3 or 4 quart saucepan. Bring to a boil over high heat, stirring constantly. When the mixture comes to a boil, lower the heat to medium and set a timer for six minutes. Keep the mixture boiling steadily and stir constantly during this time to prevent scorching.

At the end of six minutes, pour the boiling syrup over the chocolate and marshmallow creme. Beat until the chocolate is melted and the ingredients are well-blended. Beat in the vanilla and walnuts.
Pour into a lightly buttered 13- by 9- by 2-inch pan. Let the fudge cool at room temperature for 24 hours before cutting. Cut it into 1-inch square pieces and pack in airtight containers.

Insulation, moisture barriers important in a crawl space

Q. We have a crawl space that covers about half of the area under our house. There is some insulation between the floor joists over the space. How can I tell if the insulation is adequate? Can I tack a plastic sheet to the bottom of the joists to improve the insulation's performance and keep out moisture? — J. Kerch

A. The amount of insulation recommended for a ceiling (actually a floor) over a crawl space varies with the climate area and can range from R-11 in the Deep South to R-25 in northernmost states. The higher the R value, the better the insulation. In the Philadelphia area, R-19 is generally considered adequate. If in doubt about the correct amount of insulation, contact a utility company or state energy agency.

Fiberglass or mineral-wool insulation is usually used in crawl spaces, and a simple way to measure its approximate insulating value is to measure the depth in inches with a ruler and multiply by 3. If the insulation is 5 1/2 or six inches deep, it is probably standard R-19 insulation, if it is three or 3 1/2 inches, it is R-11.

Insulation over a crawl space should have a vapor barrier or facing, but it should be on top, toward the warm, or heated, side of the floor. This is because heated air from the house, carrying moisture, travels toward colder spaces. If the vapor barrier were on the bottom, moisture would be trapped in the insulation, condense, and possibly ruin or damage the insulation and floor structure. Usually the insulation is simply held in place with stiff wires forced between the joists or with a wire mesh, such as chicken wire. However, it is a good idea to have a second vapor barrier on the floor of the crawl space, especially if the floor is earth or is damp. The floor covering can be heavy plastic sheeting or roll-roofing. Roll-roofing weaves better and stays in place better. The floor covering should overlap at joints and extend up the crawl-space walls a foot or so. It can be held in place with bricks, boards or other weights.

Q. Our attic is insulated with blown-in cellulose insulation. We recently had new roofing installed, and while part of the roof was unprotected, there was a heavy rain, and some of the insulation got wet. The roofer says to just let it dry out and it will be OK. What do you think? — R. DeKemper

A. Wet insulation is useless as an insulator and can cause other problems, such as mildew or rot. If left in place, the wet insulation might eventually stain the ceiling underneath it. Even if the insulation dries, it might be compacted by the accident and lose much of its value.

I'd remove the damp insulation and let the area under and around it dry out thoroughly. Fresh cellulose insulation, which is bits of recycled paper, can be poured or blown into the gaps.

Q. Our basement has a so-called floating slab or floor with channels running around the perimeter and a sump pump. I'm considering finishing the basement and would like to fill in the channels. Is that wise? — B. Schneider

A. A floating slab is used in some areas where there is a high underground water table or other site problems. The slab is independent of the foundation walls, so it can better resist pressures from underneath, such as rising water, without cracking or breaking. The channels around the slab are for drainage, of course, and are intended to carry water to the sump pump. The slab can be pumped outside. For these reasons, I don't think the channels should be filled, at least not without consulting an engineer or experienced builder who can inspect the basement.

Q. The fiberglass floor of our shower stall is discolored. One adviser recommended painting it with rust-resistant paint, which immediately blistered and peeled. Is there a special paint that will work? — J. Craig

A. No paint will hold up very long under the hot water and moisture that reaches a shower stall floor. The best bet is a two-part epoxy of the type sometimes used to refinish boats and bathtubs. Epoxy paints are sold at paint stores, home centers and marine supply outlets. Before it is painted, the floor will have to be thoroughly cleaned of any soap scum and other contaminants.

Indoor plants need regular feeding

Indoor plants need regular fertilization to maintain good color and health. However, overfertilization can be detrimental to plants. Indoor plants grow more slowly during the winter, so they need less fertilizer.

Allen Wilson Gardening

There are several types of fertilizer for indoor plants. Each has its own application procedure to provide an optimum amount of plant growth.

The most popular fertilizers are those which are added each time plants are watered. Directions indicate a few drops or a spoonful per quart of water. If water is applied only when the soil begins to dry, the fertilizer rate is automatically adjusted with the reduced watering need for winter growth.

Timed release fertilizers are also very popular. They are round capsules applied about every three months which release fertilizer each time plants are watered. They natu-

The third type of indoor plant fertilizer is a more concentrated liquid or powder which is applied monthly. Amounts of monthly applied fertilizers should be cut in half during the winter to compensate for slower growth rate. Plant and soil appearance can give an indication when fertilization is either too high or too low. Light green to yellow older or lower leaves generally indicate a shortage of fertilizer.

A general light green color of newer leaves may indicate an early stage of overfertilization. If new leaves are yellowish but retain dark green veins, a shortage of iron may be indicated. Not all fertilizers contain iron. You may wish to check with iron if you notice yellow leaves with green veins.

Another indicator of overfertilization is brown tips and edges of new leaves. Brown tips can also be caused by high fluoride or chloride content of the water. Softened water should never be used for watering indoor plants because it can contain too much sodium and chloride.

Another indication of overfertilization is the accumulation of white salts on top of the soil. Excess fertilizer can be leached out of the soil by extra heavy irrigation. Simply apply two or three times the normal amount of water. It will dissolve some of the fertilizer and carry it out through the drain holes of the pot.

Problems to avoid when installing modern kitchen

By Karol V. Menzie and Randy Johnson
The Baltimore Sun

Because putting in a new kitchen is one of the single most expensive things you can do to a house, it's not a thing you want to make a mistake about. Unfortunately, it's one of the easiest areas in which to make mistakes.

If you're hiring a kitchen designer or using a supplier's designer, he should keep you out of trouble. If you're doing a kitchen yourself, you need to work through the process carefully to avoid pitfalls.

Trish Houck, a Columbia, Md. designer who has refashioned many older-house kitchens, says that there are some things that people simply might not think about beforehand.

The following are some of her tips for avoiding the most common problems:

• Don't buy any appliances until you know what the kitchen is going to be like — where everything will go and how it will all work together.

• For instance, Houck says, an extremely large appliance, like a top-of-the-line side-by-side refrigerator-freezer, can put tremendous constraints on the design process — and it may not be the best use of the space. Or, someone who wants a "steak" look may not know that they don't have to buy a cooktop and separate oven. There are stoves on the market without the "backstop" that protrudes over the cooking surface, so they can be installed in an island.

Appliances should be chosen as solutions to design needs, she says, not as impediments the design must fit around.

She also suggests that even if you've decided what the countertop surface will be, you shouldn't get it made up until after the base cabinets are in.

Typically, the wall cabinets go in first, then the base cabinets, then the carefully measured and constructed countertop. However, there's another consideration: Can you get the countertop into the room and set it in place with the upper cabinets already there?

Countertops take a lot of planning. The consistency of the size of the doorways that cabinets, countertops and appliances have to go through. "Don't go out and buy a diagonal Lazy Susan if you don't have plenty of room to get it through the door," Houck says. Tall cabinets, such as pantry units, can also cause problems if they're too tall to stand-up in the room.

"Of course," she says, "people have been known to take out windows to get things in." And there are a few tricks for getting in something you really want, the designer says. "If you're in a kitchen or a bathroom and the cabinet might be sliced off. If the cabinets are custom-made — and you can have even moderately priced cabinets custom-made," she says, "you can have the toe-kick made as a separate part. Just remember that the harder it is to make or to install, the more expensive a piece is likely to be."

Gifts always easy to find for gardeners

By Linda Lowe Morris
The Baltimore Sun

Count yourself lucky if there's a gardener on your holiday gift list. While other people stew over the person who has everything, you probably don't have to worry. There's no end to what gardeners want. There's always a new plant or a new tool or a new something they're dreaming of.

If they're vegetable gardeners, they long for flowers; if they're flower gardeners, they long for vegetables — and such new enterprises they're longing for requires a whole batch of new stuff.

Even indoors they like to be surrounded by things that remind them of gardening.

This year a gardening gift could turn out to be prophetic. When the economy turns bad, gardening always thrives. Next spring you'll probably see a rush of new gardeners (and lots of lapsed gardeners) suddenly getting the urge to stay home and till the soil. You'll look particularly clever if you anticipate this.

Some suggestions:

- Look at your favorite gardener's tool collection. Many people stubbornly labor with old tools that have become uncomfortable to use, so think about replacing anything with rough handles or chipped blades. Look at hardware stores or garden centers for basic tools, but be sure to combine them with something (a plant, a vase, bulbs, a pretty pot) more gift-like.
- A subscription to Organic Gardening magazine ($16.97 for 9 issues) is a good way to get a would-be gardener started in the right direction. You can buy the December issue, send in the subscription card and then wrap up the issue as part of your gift. You can also call the toll-free number, (800) 441-7761 for order.

Garden centers would seem the natural place for garden gifts but this time of year they're all packed with poinsettias and Christmas trees and decorations. You'll have to wade through this to get to some real garden things, but be persistent.

Pitching price soars during winter meet

The Associated Press

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Tim Lincecum zig-zagged toward the Chicago White Sox, Dave Righetti and the money-mad San Francisco Giants zeroed in on each other and the price of pitching zoomed Tuesday when the Boston Red Sox won a bidding battle for 18-game loser Matt Young.

The price tag for a package that would include Young, a lesser deal that sent Dave Gallagher to California, a contract extension for Steve Sax and all-day meetings between Vince Coleman and the Mets punctuated another active day at baseball's winter meetings. Off the field, there was action, too, as National and American League owners wrangled — without success — over how to split up expansion fee costs.

Raines, among baseball's best players for a decade, wants out of Montreal and the Expos, who have entertained offers in the past, might be serious this time. They spent much of the day talking to the White Sox about a package that would include Ivan Calderon and the two sides were said to be close to a deal.

Free agents still were the frenzy, though, and again the free-spending Giants led the way. They turned up the effort to get Righetti, and quickly lured the northern California native back home from New York with a four-year contract.

The Giants already have spent $15 million for Willie McGee and $10 million for Bud Black this winter. Oakland also entered the sweepstakes, offering Righetti a chance to again be a starter, and so did Minnesota. But there was a chance to Twins might have to settle for Steve Bedrosian, who could become available if San Francisco gets its main man.

Righetti, 32, saved 36 games last season and is the Yankees' all-time leader. But his preference is the Giants.

Sax, Righetti's teammate for two seasons, will be staying with the Yankees. The second baseman, who had one year left on his contract, signed an extension through 1995 for $12.4 million.

"Steve loves New York," said Adam Katz, one of Sax's agents. "He's not one of those guys who wants to leave."

Young, like Righetti, has been a starter and reliever in his career. Unlike Righetti, Young does not have a lifetime winning record — 51-78, including 8-18 with a 3.51 ERA last season for Seattle.

'We are thrilled to have Matt Young, and we see him as an important member of our starting rotation next season. He has a great arm, and we believe that he can be a winner on a contending ballclub.'

— Lou Gorman, Red Sox general manager

But these days, even if the pitching numbers are not good, the dollar numbers are particularly for a left-hander. The Red Sox offered Young a three-year, $6.35 million contract, and that was a little more than Detroit and Baltimore wanted to pay.

"We are thrilled to have Matt Young, and we see him as an important member of our starting rotation next season," Boston general manager Lou Gorman said. "He has a great arm, and we believe that he can be a winner on a contending ballclub."

Young, 32, missed most of 1988 and 1989 with elbow trouble, but pitched 225 innings last season. He made 33 starts and had seven complete games.

Dan Schatzeder, 36, made out pretty well, too. The lefty reliever got $700,000 from Kansas City for one year, this after going 1-3 for Houston and the New York Mets.

Milwaukee added relief help in Edwin Nunez, 3-1 in six saves and a 2.24 ERA in 52 games for Detroit last season.

Bruins will try full court pressure on Poky tonight

By Larry Hovey Times News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Bruins are proving the theory that pressure defense works best in the early season.

They've used their platoon-driven full court frenzy to beat Jerome and Minnicus thus far — both in season openers.

And so they'd like to see it work at least one more time when the Pocatello Indians come to Twin Falls tonight for their season opener.

"We are pleased with the defense," understates Coach John Astorquia. "We need to cut down on our fouls and we're reaching way too much. But the players are giving us all the effort we could ask for."

"The defense has done the job when our offense hasn't been doing well. We shot just 18 percent on three and 39 percent on two's against Jerome and we weren't a lot better against Minnicus," Astorquia continues. "But I still believe our shooting is going to come because sometimes we can't really unload in practice."

Tonight's battle is a Region III duel, meaning it will help establish the seeding and home-court designations for the post-season playoffs in March.

Pocatello returns three veterans — one starter — off a team that everyone thought has great state title possibilities until cross-town rival hit an absolute peak and whipped everyone last spring.

The return starter is left Stan Hales, whose two three-pointers late in a playoff game last year had a lot to do with leaving the Bruins out of the state tournament.

"This shows you the kind of starting Hales is," Astorquia says. "The (starting right hand-the third-play of the state championship game and he completed it. I know he's a lefty but he had to be playing with a lot of pain."

Avery Griggs, 6-3 senior, has several starting assignments last year and is considered a good rebounder.

The other veteran is 6-6 Eric Cotton.

"We don't know much about the others except they are good athletes and well coached," Astorquia says.

"We feel certain they will try to take it inside against us and (Coach Ron) Kress has been able to jump in and out of defenses — so we have to be ready for that. They will not give the chance but — especially if they get the lead later on — they tend to get deliberate on offense."

The Bruins will remain home to play the Capital Eagles on Friday night in a non-conference battle.

"It's the same as last year," Astorquia says. "Greg Lords, Mark Landulac and Matt Meyers. Those three players have excellent speed and quickness and Lords and Landulac generally account for the bulk of their scoring."

The Eagles aren't overly big, having Gabe Lemmon at 6-4 and Dave Cassat at 6-5.

"They play a lot like us — they like to run the get-in-your-face full court defense. This will be a very interesting game for us. Lords and Landulac will probably be the quickest guards we'll face this year."

"If we can handle their pressure we have to feel we can cope with just about everything else on the schedule."

Hoise's State Erik Helgeson and University of Idaho's Kasey Dunn were named to the Walt Camp Division I-AA all-American team Tuesday.

Helgeson, a product of Hoise, repeats as defensive end for the Boise State Broncos who will be playing University of Nevada in Reno in the national semifinals Saturday.

Dunn, 6-2, 205 pounds, led all division pass receivers in receptions during the past season.

Although the Big Sky Conference advanced three teams to the division national quarterfinals, Dunn and Helgeson were the only individuals from the conference so

Detroit coach releases linebacker after incident

The Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — Any of the Detroit Lions who thought they might roll over coach Wayne Fontes the way they did Darby Rogers are probably lost deep in their play books today.

Fontes, for the second time this season, sent a clear message that he is firmly in charge of the Lions rebuilding program and secure with club owner William Clay Ford by throwing a key player off the team Monday.

In addition to releasing linebacker Jimmy Williams, the coach also suggested that quarterback Rodney Reede quit whining to the media and start producing on the field.

Williams, the Lions' No. 1 draft pick out of Nebraska in 1982, was released because of an altercation that took place on the sidelines during the Lions' 23-17 loss in Chicago last week. "I was trying to get across him. He's been a very good player here, a fine player. But I don't want anybody here to put themselves ahead of this team."

Fontes said he didn't see or hear the altercation because he was watching the action on the field at the time. He said he learned about it afterwards on the short flight home from Chicago, and told Williams during the flight they would talk early the next morning.

Fontes wouldn't be more specific, but the incident is believed to have taken place in the second quarter shortly after a 10-yard rushing yardage against Williams gave the Bears first down at the Lions' 11-yard line. The Bears scored four plays later to take it 14-10 lead.

Williams apparently had heated words with assistant-coaches and teammates when he came off the field.

"It was something that had to be done, Fontes said. "Discipline and attitude is what right thing," Fontes said. "I have a saying: 'The inmates should never run the asylum.'"

CBS cries foul at baseball after $100 million loss

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — CBS Sports, which may have lost as much as $100 million in the first year of its major league baseball contract, has asked baseball for some of its money back.

CBS Inc. said last month that it anticipated losses in the fourth quarter of 1990, due largely to the baseball contract, and now the network apparently wants major league baseball to help share the load.

"All I can say is we have had ongoing conversations with baseball on a number of issues, and until those discussions are concluded, I can't tell you very much," CBS Sports president Neal Pilson said Tuesday.

A spokesman for baseball, Rich Levin, said basically the same thing.

However, a source close to the negotiations who would comment only if he remained anonymous, confirmed that the network had asked for a rebate on its $1.06 billion, four-year deal that began this past season.

"I'm not going to deny that elements of the contract" were discussed, Pilson said, "but there were other items as well. I'm just not ready to comment."

Published reports also have said that "if baseball is not willing to give CBS a rebate, the network wants more games. CBS showed only 16 regular-season games in the first year of its deal, while ESPN, which paid baseball $400 million for four years, showed 161."

In its economic report last month, CBS said that losses from the baseball contract were anticipated because of the weakening economy and a soft marketplace for advertising.

Those losses were made worse, however, by a four-game World Series sweep by Cincinnati, and a four-game American League playoff sweep by Oakland.

In addition, overnight ratings for the World Series averaged 27.3, lower than all but ABC's 1989 World Series ratings figure of 16.4.

ABC's 1989 figures, however, were severely affected by a two-week earth quake layoff between games 2 and 3.

Pilson said he had seen the reports of his network's rebate requests, but added that he considered his network's negotiations with baseball to be confidential, "and I can't comment until we've resolved our discussions."

In the past year, CBS Sports has spent more than $3.5 billion on such sports as baseball, football, the NCAA basketball tournament, and the 1992 and '94 Winter Olympics in an effort to take some of the sports limelight away from ABC and NBC.

Colorado's Williams wins Butkus linebacker honors

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Colorado linebacker Alfred Williams went from best in the Big Eight to best in the country in one season. On Tuesday, Williams was named winner of the Butkus Award as the nation's top linebacker for his play in No. 1 Colorado's 10-1 season. He had 88 tackles and 12½ sacks. "It was a surprise to see myself as the winner with so many great names and universities — on the list," Williams, a senior from Houston, said. "I'm accepting this award with great appreciation for the committee for recognizing me."

Williams edged Timon Darick Brownlow for the award, in hallooting by a panel of sports journalists and football experts. Both players received six first-place votes, but Williams topped Brownlow 31-28 in points. Players received three points for a first-place vote, two for second and one for third. Notre Dame's Michael Stonebreaker received the other first-place vote and finished third with 12 points, followed by Miami's Maurice Crum with five points and Clemson's level on Kirkland with two. Williams, 6-foot-6 and 236 pounds, consistently disrupted the passing games of most opponents during his four years with the Buffaloes. He gets another chance to play for a national championship when Colorado meets Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl. Williams led the Buffaloes in sacks for four years and finished with a school-record 35. He also forced two fumbles, recovered one and blocked a kick. "This is a proud moment for our program and our fans," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said.

Giants trade Riles to Athletics for outfielder Lewis

ROSEMONT, Ill. (AP) — The San Francisco Giants traded utility infielder Ernest Riles to the Oakland Athletics for young outfielder Darren Lewis Tuesday in a deal that bolstered both benches. A day after the Bay area teams each signed prominent free agents, the clubs did business together at baseball's winter meetings. The Giants also got a player to be named later in the deal. Riles, 30, batted .200 in 92 games last season.

He has a .264 lifetime average in a career that started in 1985 with Milwaukee. "We've been looking for a left-handed hitting infielder with some versatility for several years," Oakland general manager Sandy Alderson said. "We've talked to the Giants about Ernest Riles quite a few times over the years." Lewis, 23, hit .229 in 25 games for Oakland. He spent most of last season at Triple-A Tacoma.

Raik Hannemann says doctors devised drugs; coaches pushed their use

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — Experts in former East Germany developed a doping nasal spray before the 1988 Olympics that was virtually undetectable, a leading swimmer alleged Tuesday. Raik Hannemann, who on Monday admitted taking performance-enhancing drugs, said the spray had the same effect as anabolic steroids and traces of its use would disappear after three days. Hannemann and other athletes on Tuesday accused former East German sports chiefs of developing a perfect, systematic doping program and of offering hard currency as an incentive for taking drugs. Meanwhile, the magazine Stern said East German experts conducted experiments on athletes with drugs designed to improve their performances by influencing their nervous system. The growing doping scandal is shaking sports in united Germany and threatening to cut off support from wealthy corporate sponsors. A newspaper in former East Germany suggested a "general international amnesty" for all athletes, to be followed by tougher controls and stiffer penalties for drug offenders.

Hannemann, writing in a bylined article for the Berliner Kurier am Abend newspaper, said the nasal spray was developed by East German doctors. "This spray will make you unbeatable at the Olympics," Hannemann quoted the doctors as telling athletes. He said the doctors made it possible "that we never had any fear of (doping) controls." On Monday, Hannemann wrote in his column that he started taking anabolic steroids in 1985, at the urging of his club coach. "We all took them," he wrote. Taking drugs, Hannemann wrote Tuesday, "was an obligation. A weapon in the class struggle. And we were all in it." He blamed Manfred Ewald, former chief of the East German Sports Federation, for urging athletes to take drugs. The federation was the all-powerful umbrella organization that ran East Germany's highly successful sports program. According to Hannemann, Ewald had urged East German athletes to take advantage of the country's advanced in-house medicine research to be able to beat Western athletes. Sven Montag, a top canoeist, told the newspaper Sportecho in eastern Germany that the country's doping method was a systematically organized system that went to perfection and ordered from above. Montag told the paper he started taking steroids already as a junior. Joerg Woithe, the 1980 100-meter freestyle Olympic champion, told Sportecho Ewald and his deputy Horst Reuter had urged athletes to take drugs. Woithe was quoted as saying that he was offered hard currency to take anabolic steroids before the 1988 Olympics in Seoul. He said the offer was made during talks with the president of his swimming club and an official from the sports federation. Woithe said the officials urged him to take steroids because they wanted him to swim the 100- and 200-meter races in addition to the 50-meter event in Seoul. "They held out the prospect of hard currency if I went along,"

Woithe was quoted as saying. He said the doping program was meant to be a means of proving its superiority over capitalism, awarded successful athletes with privileges usually unavailable to ordinary citizens. Olympic champions were given cash bonuses, spacious apartments and priority in buying cars. Ordinary East Germans often had to wait 10 years to buy a car. In suggesting an "amnesty" for doping suspects, Sportecho said athletes must be given "a chance to clear up their conscience." But the amnesty should be coupled with a "tougher net of controls and harsher laws without probation." Michael Gross, the swimming star from former West Germany, called for tougher, random controls in training. He told Sportecho that sport officials in united Germany should make sure East German doping practices are never given another chance, but that it was time to forget the past and start looking into the future.

Perkins regrets being fired, understands why

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Ray Perkins said Tuesday he's confident his efforts to build the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in a winner would have paid off if he had been allowed to complete his five-year contract. The fired coach declined to discuss specifics about his inability to produce a winning record in four seasons, but did accept responsibility for the failure of his program. "I'm very disappointed that we have not accomplished some of the things that I felt strongly that we could and that I felt strongly that we would," said Perkins, who was dismissed Monday and replaced by Richard Williamson. "Being the head coach, being the guy that makes all the decisions, I have let our owners down. Needless to say, I understand the workings of the National Football League. I understand those things that go on behind closed doors, and I understand if you don't win that you get fired as a head coach."

The 35-year-old Perkins, who coached the Buccaneers for four seasons, said he was fired because he was not winning. "I understand the workings of the National Football League. I understand those things that go on behind closed doors, and I understand if you don't win that you get fired as a head coach." Perkins, who coached the Buccaneers for four seasons, said he was fired because he was not winning. "I understand the workings of the National Football League. I understand those things that go on behind closed doors, and I understand if you don't win that you get fired as a head coach."

I felt very strongly on Friday that the decision had already been made. That was my gut feeling," Perkins said. "I had no basis for that except 49 years of 100 percent being right gut feelings." Perkins, 49, left Alabama in December 1986 to take over a team that lost 28 of 37 games under Leeman Bennett. Using his unchallenged authority as vice president-football operations, he overhauled the team and began this season with 42 players who were not on Tampa Bay's roster when he arrived. He feels he's leaving behind a good nucleus of talent, including his tight ends Vinny Testaverde, Paul Grober, Broderick Thomas and Keith McCants. "I would like to stay throughout the remainder of my contract to show that it would work, because I still believe my plan will work. But we'll never know."

Perkins made a seven-minute statement and accepted no questions during a farewell news conference at the Buccaneers' training complex. He later met with a small group of reporters and said he hopes to coach again, probably on the college level. "I'm sure I'll have opportunities, and I'm not sure I could do without football," said Perkins, adding he would not accept an offer from Calverhouse to remain with the Buccaneers during the final year of a contract that pays him about $800,000 annually. "I've got a deep burning desire to be in football, but be in a position where I can make a difference. I don't just want to coach football. I don't want to just draw X's and O's. I want to be in a position to contribute. There are always a lot of reasons for failure. There are a lot of reasons for success."

Arizona officials discuss King holiday with Tagliabue

PHOENIX (AP) — Gov. Rose Mofford and Sen. Dennis DeConcini will lead a delegation that is to meet Friday with NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue to discuss the 1993 Super Bowl and voters' rejection of a Martin Luther King Jr. state holiday. Tagliabue said the day after the Nov. 6 general election, in which voters turned down a paid state holiday to honor King, that he would urge NFL owners to move the Super Bowl to another state.

Phoenician spokesman in Washington, said Phoenix Cardinals owner Bill Bidwill also was scheduled to attend the meeting, along with Phoenix Mayor Paul Johnson, Tempa Mayor Harry Mitchell, Phoenix City Council member Skip Rinza, Maricopa County Supervisor Jim Bruner and a representative of the Phoenix Super Bowl committee. "The notion was that it would be a good idea for Dennis to arrange such a meeting," Bidwill said. "He's got a personal relationship with Tagliabue."

Maynes said the purpose of the meeting was to allow Arizonans to "share information with the NFL." Maynes declined to say where the meeting would be held, except that it will be at the Capitol in Washington and not in DeConcini's office. He said it would be private. Maynes said DeConcini's own position on the Super Bowl is that he "always had the position that we should have a King Day and he obviously would like to see the Super Bowl retained in Arizona."

Local officials have said that the Phoenix area stands to lose about $200 million if the game is moved. "I'm not overreacting," Maynes said. "I'm not overreacting."
