Warplanes scatter Iraqi unit

The Associated Press

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia - In a fierce assault on Iraq allied warplanes "scattered" a unit of the elite Republican Guards and blew up airfields, tanks and personnel carriers on Saturday, military officers said. Iraqi anti-aircraft gunners shot down two U.S. warplanes - the first lost in two days - but Iraqi air force offered no resistance, American officials said. The U.S. Air Force searched behind enemy lines for its downed airplanes. One Marine was killed and two were wounded, reportedly when their convoy was struck in Saudi Arabia by cluster bombs dropped by American warplanes. Unwounded by the relentless allied bombing raids and the recent defeat in the city of Khafji, Iraq vowed to use every means from "kitchen knives to weapons of mass destruction" to fight the U.S.-led multinational force. President Bush gave a more reflective statement on the war. In a radio address that invoked God and the memory of Abraham Lincoln, he urged Americans to pray for the American soldiers on Sunday. Elsewhere in the United States, the anguish of the war was reflected in the fate of two women: an Army Reserve doctor from Kansas who went AWOL rather than go to the gulf, and a Michigan servicewoman who is missing in action.

Throughout the gulf region, U.S. and allied warplanes took advantage of near-perfect weather to hit targets throughout Iraq and Kuwait on Saturday, the 27th day of the war and six months to the day since Iraq invaded Kuwait. The last 24 hours have been most satisfactory for the British forces and for our coalition partners. British Group Captain Neil Lewis said. In addition to worrying about her husband's safety, Almee Packham has found herself fretting over finances as well.

Marine's wife counts the cost of Operation Desert Storm

TWIN FALLS - Among the American warriors trying to restore Kuwait's billion-dollar ruler to his throne is a Marine whose wife wonders if she will ever be able to pay off a $10,000 hospital bill. "I don't know how he's paying on the rest of my life," said Almee Packham, 20, of Twin Falls. Her husband of five months, 19-year-old Lance Cpl. Shawn Packham, is a Marine mechanic and truck driver in Saudi Arabia. In addition to worrying about her husband's safety, Almee Packham has found herself fretting over finances as the military tried to figure out when to send her husband's paychecks. Her situation is not unusual. - Demographic researchers in the Idaho Senate proposed last week to give military families a pay boost from state funds to address the families' hardships. In the Magic Valley, families of activated reservists are feeling the pinch of having their incomes cut by half or more, and CBS News reported last week that thousands of previous military nationwide have been unable to stave off creditors and are facing repossession of cars and appliances and, in some cases, bankruptcy. Despite Shawn Packham's best efforts to provide for his wife before leaving on Dec. 9, Almee Packham got none of his pay until just two weeks ago. "I panicked me - I had no money." Local economy expected to climb again after rest

By Mark Kind

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Is it the mountain top or is it just a level stretch of trail? The Magic Valley's economy appears to be leveling off. A survey showed that the region's economy probably will begin to climb again in 1991. In 1990's fourth quarter, some of the Times-News economic indicators turned dramatically downward, others climbed, and others stood still.

So what are the indicators indicating? "Not a recession, forecasters say, even as the national wartime economy quavers between a short downturn and a long, deep recession. Here are several opinions on the Idaho economy taken from recent written reports. "Idaho's economy continues to expand, but the pace of growth has clearly slowed," said Kelly Matthews, chief economist for First Security Bank.

The bank's index of indicators released Thursday showed a decline in economic growth in November and December - the first two-month decline since mid-1988. "We are reminded of Harry Truman's observation that 'war is hell, but peace might be worse,'" wrote L. Dwayne Barney and Brian McGrath in a recent survey for the University of Idaho.

"Sometimes war spending can have a stimulative effect on the economy," they noted. The Magic Valley economy has already experienced some of that economic stimulation as the U.S. military has stocked up on canned corn and powdered cheese from food processors in Huhl and Jerome. McGrath is a partner in the Boise financial consulting firm D.B. Fitzpatrick and Associates. Barney is an assistant professor at the BSU College of Business. Idaho business executives are cautiously optimistic about 1991, according to an annual opinion survey by S.M. Ghazianfar, a University of Idaho economics professor. Seventy-eight percent said they expect personal income to grow by 3 percent or more this year; 76 percent expect retail sales to grow by 5 percent or more, and about 70 percent expect positive sales growth for their firms.

Ghazianfar said the survey indicates that business leaders anticipate slower national growth and higher inflation. The opinions reflected in the survey are generally less optimistic than in previous years, he said. The Idaho Division of Financial Management has predicted a 0.6 percent increase in personal income in Idaho in 1991, using real 1982 dollars - a 5.3 percent increase over the 1980-81 period.

The forecast also predicted growth in Idaho's non-agricultural employment of 2.2 percent. "Idaho is also expected to fare better than the U.S. economy during the forecasted recession," the forecast concluded. Because the national recession is a result of flagging consumer confidence, not high

Iraqi Scuds strike Israel

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM - Iraq launched missile attacks at Israel late Saturday and early Sunday, and both Scuds landed in the central area of the country, which includes the occupied West Bank.

Brig. Gen. Nachman Shai said the second missile was fired from western Iraq at 1:30 a.m. (6:30 p.m. EST), about five hours after the first.

The army said both missiles carried conventional warheads, and there were no reports on injuries from either projectile, although the second caused a little damage. It provided no details.

During each attack, residents of Israel were ordered to don gas masks and enter their sealed rooms in case the missile was tipped with a chemical warhead. About 50 minutes after each attack, an all-clear was announced on the radio.

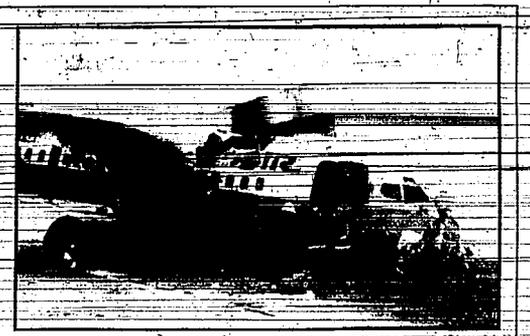

Shai did not say whether the U.S.-supplied Patriot missile defense system was fired in either attack. Reporters in Tel Aviv, who have heard sounds of the Patriots being fired in the past, said they heard no such noise Saturday.

Shai noted that the army does not release details of the impact site, saying such information would help Iraq target future attacks. The army said only that the missiles hit in the central area, which includes the coastal plain north of Tel Aviv as well as the occupied West Bank.

U.S. officials outside of Israel said the first Scud attack on Saturday night landed in the predominantly Arab West Bank, as did the two previous missiles fired at Israeli, on Jan. 28 and Jan. 31.

The missiles are landing short of their intended targets in Tel Aviv, probably because Iraq has been forced to move the launchers eastward to hide them from allied bombers, said the officials. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

The missiles late Saturday and early Sunday were the 7th and 29th fired at Israel since the start of the Persian Gulf War on Jan. 17. Two people were killed and two died of heart attacks in earlier barrages on the Tel Aviv area. At least 270 were wounded, and more than 1,300 apartments were damaged.

Ground war intensity to exceed air war

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON — The United States and its allies are preparing for a ground war against Iraq, forces that will rival the air campaign in use of high-tech weapons and expected in intensity, military authorities say.

Unlike the air war, however, the land campaign is expected to suffer high casualties at the outset as allied armor units infantry clear Iraqi minefields, breach fortifications and penetrate enemy lines on probably multiple fronts.

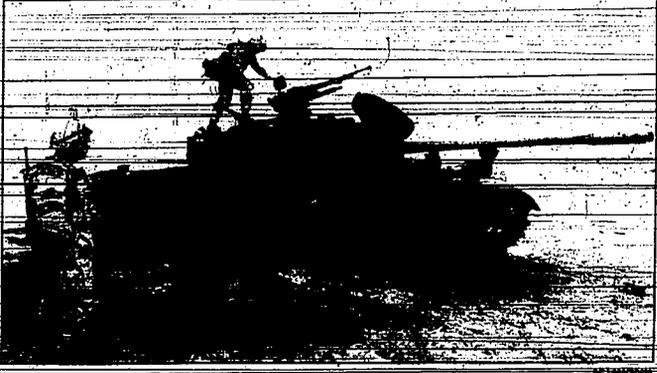

The ground thrust would be closely coordinated with aerial bombing and missile strikes, using advanced Army helicopter-borne weapons as well as those employed since the start of the campaign.

"If the Iraqis think the B-52 bomber is tough," said Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., "wait until they feel the Multiple Launch Rocket System."

Mounted on a tracked vehicle, a single MLRS can shoot from one to 12 rockets at a time to a distance of about 20 miles. Each of the rockets can spew 644 half-pound "bombs" on enemy troops, vehicles or air defenses.

McCurdy, a member of the House Armed Services and Intelligence committees, estimated that the Army had "probably 100,000" of the artillery rockets in Saudi Arabia, deterring Iraq from attacking.

The MLRS, developed to counter the Soviet Union's rocket artillery in U.S. troops inspect the burned-out remains of a Soviet-made Iraqi tank in Saudi Arabia Saturday.

Europe, is just one of the advanced weapons to be brought to bear on Iraqi forces if a combined air-ground assault is ordered.

The Army's primary land weapon — with very large numbers now deployed for battle — is the M1A1 Abrams tank, mounting a 120mm cannon that can shoot while the tank is moving at high speed. It can pick out targets at night with a thermal-imaging sight.

Operating overhead in the land attack would be the new missile-armed Apache helicopter, also fitted with night-vision devices for round-the-clock operations. Its anti-tank Hellfire missile is laser guided, riding toward a laser beam focused on targets by ground teams, other aircraft or the Apache itself.

The latest ground force weapon reported to be deployed in Saudi Arabia is the Army Tactical Missile System, called ATACMS and, according to McCurdy, "incredibly accurate. There is not yet a large arsenal of these weapons, and their use in the Gulf war might come under the heading of realistic testing.

Environment bears scars of wars old, new

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fading scars of old wars can still be seen in the fields of France, the sands of North Africa and the jungles of Vietnam.

Now a foamy slick of crude oil is spoiling the Persian Gulf. It has written a new page in the history of environmental warfare, a sad chronicle dating back at least to 146 B.C., when Roman soldiers sowed salt on the site of defeated Carthage.

It didn't work. Carthage eventually came back to life. But at Verdun, France, where World War I military craters raged on tinned soldiers for months, some patches are still dead.

There's still an area there that's hardly recovered, said Russell Parkinson, staff historian at the U.S. Army's center for military history.

"There's still bands there that are not usable."

In Vietnam, millions of gallons of herbicide was dumped on tropical forests in an effort to bring guerrillas out in the open.

"The Vietnamese lost over 5 million acres of forest and farmland," said Elizabeth Kerin, who recently published a book, "Month of Pure Light," about that country's efforts to reclaim land from wartime devastation.

"The people are still filling in some 25 million bomb craters. People everywhere can be seen planting trees," she said in a telephone interview from Geneva, Switzerland.

But it might take 200 years to regrow the rain forest in its former glory, she said.

And Vietnamese authorities report high incidence of cancer, birth defects and miscarriages in the areas where Agent Orange and other herbicides were employed.

The history of war also records cases of self-inflicted damage.

When the German army moved into the Netherlands in May 1940, the defenders breached the dikes that protected the fertile lowlands from the ocean's saltwater.

"The Dutch flooded the land to impede the advance of the Germans," Parkinson said. "The salt had to be leached out of the earth, which took 20 to 30 years."

For environmentalists alarmed at what the war with Iraq might bring, the huge oil slick in the Persian Gulf looks like just the beginning.

"Deserts are fragile ecosystems without much regenerative power," said Lester Brown, president of the Worldwatch Institute, a Washington think-tank.

Michael Renner, a Worldwatch researcher who has studied the military's impact on the environment, said some implications of worldwide ecological disaster from the Gulf War may be overstated.

"It's much safer to assume that there could be a significant regional effect," he said. "If the Iraqis were to blow up a lot of oil wells at once, it could go on for weeks if not months."

The smoke and soot could disrupt growing seasons and harvests at least as far away as India, where a small imbalance in food supplies could have major effects, Renner said.

In addition, the tanks, jets, helicopters and warships use large quantities of fuel in their daily operations.

Renner estimated that each aerial sortie — and there have been tens of thousands — uses as much fuel as an average American motorist would burn in three years.

Saturday's events in the gulf

The Associated Press

Here are developments in the Persian Gulf war: Around the gulf

• Iraq fired at least one Scud rocket at Saudi Arabia early Sunday, and the U.S. Patriot air defenses destroyed the incoming missile over Riyadh, witnesses said. It was the first Scud attack against Saudi Arabia in nearly a week. Sirens sounded in Riyadh, the capital, and in the coastal city of Dhahran at 12:55 a.m. Sunday (4:55 p.m. Saturday EST). At least 28 Iraqi Scud missiles have been fired at Saudi Arabia, killing one person and causing about 50 injuries, most minor.

• The U.S. Army was inspecting hundreds of its Bradley Fighting Vehicles, its premier armored infantry transport, for a transmission defect that could render it a sitting duck in combat.

• Two American planes were shot down Saturday, the U.S. Central Command in Saudi Arabia said. Marine Maj. Gen. Robert Johnston also said a serviceman was killed, perhaps by allied fire, bringing to 12 the number of Americans confirmed killed in the Gulf War. The planes - an A-10 and an A-6 - were shot down apparently by anti-aircraft artillery, Johnston said. This brought total allied combat plane losses to 22, 15 of them American.

• Allied air attacks on Iraq and Kuwait continued around the clock, with about 2,600 sorties Saturday, the allied command said. Gen. Robert Johnston said one attack on Iraq's elite Republican Guard scattered about 300 Iraqi vehicles. On Friday night, another Scud missile site was destroyed, he said. Johnston said a French military estimate that the Republican Guards remained 95 percent effective seemed "exceedingly high."

• A U.S. command spokesman said there had been little ground activity near the Kuwait border. A Saudi military officer said later that five Iraqi tanks attempting to cross into Saudi Arabia were repulsed by Qatari tanks Friday night. Four Iraqi tanks were destroyed, the fifth fled north, said Col. Ahmed al-Robayan.

• Southerly winds held back the world's largest crude oil spill Saturday while international experts and equipment poured in to protect resources along the Persian Gulf shore. Forecasters expected the favorable winds to continue over the next few days.

• Journalists and the U.S. military have agreed to try a new format for the daily war briefing that provides for a 30-minute televised portion followed by a "background" session with military spokesmen.

Elsewhere

• An Army Reserve doctor who deserted her unit in protest of the war surrendered Saturday after a rally and was whisked away to a military fort. Capt. Yolanda Huet-Vaughn, of Kansas City, Kan., deserted from Fort Leonard Wood after her unit was called to active duty Dec. 20. She was taken back there following her surrender to face possible court-martial. Before surrendering, Mrs. Huet-Vaughn spoke at a rally at a Kansas City, Mo., church attended by 250 people - both supporters of her and people resentful of her actions. The 39-year-old mother of three rejoined the reserves six days before Iraq invaded Kuwait in order to fulfill her obligation to the service, which helped pay for medical school.

DAMMAM, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The U.S. Army is rushing to inspect hundreds of Bradley Fighting Vehicles, its premier armored infantry transport, for a transmission defect that could render it a sitting duck in combat.

"The problem can result in a lack of full speed in reverse and inability to attain third range in forward," initially 10 to 12 miles per hour; according to an Army memo sent to commanders in Saudi Arabia last week.

The 60,000-pound Bradley is designed to travel at speeds up to 38 mph, according to an Army fact sheet.

The memo noted that an inspection to check for the defect takes 45 minutes and repairs less than an hour. The tank-like carrier is designed to carry nine infantrymen into heavy ground combat, in tandem with the army's top-line M-1 Abrams battle tank.

The memo, released to The Associated Press by the Pentagon in response to a query about the transmission problem, said 511 Bradleys are potentially equipped with the defective part.

In a separate memo distributed at the Pentagon on Saturday, the Army said "a large quantity of the suspect transmissions have already been repaired" including "a number" of those now in Saudi Arabia.

An Army official in Washington said he did not know how many "I would suspect more than half."

An Army source in Saudi Arabia, however, said he did not believe the work was that far along.

The inspection order came after three Bradley transmissions failed in heavy testing. The defect was traced to a lever inside the transmission control apparatus. The affected model is the A2 Bradley, the most recent in the production series, according to the memo and a written Pentagon response to questions.

Most of the A-2s are assigned to the Army's top units in Germany, which were rushed to Saudi Arabia beginning in December and now are on the front line in the northern Saudi desert. They represent about one-fourth to one-fifth of the approximately 2,000 Bradleys in Saudi Arabia. The first Bradleys were delivered to the Army in 1982, designed to be faster than the powerful Soviet-style armored vehicles widely employed by Iraq's army.

Analysts consider the Soviet BMP among the world's finest infantry fighting vehicles.

The A2 Bradley began production in 1988, incorporating design improvements that allowed some of the critical repairs - and investigation about the Bradley's combat reliability and survivability.

The latest version of the Bradley includes the TOW 2 anti-tank missile, a 25mm cannon, heavily armored redesigned fuel and ammunition storage and reactive armor in some vehicles. In its statement, the Pentagon said most of the 511 Bradleys were in Saudi Arabia, but did not provide a specific number.

"Obviously the majority of A2 Bradleys are in (Saudi Arabia) so it is prudent that we inspect to determine if the part is present then replace it," the Pentagon statement said.

Iranian president renews call for Iraqi withdrawal

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani expressed dismay Sunday at alleged allied bombing of civilians in Iraq, but said a key to ending the Persian Gulf war was Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait.

Rafsanjani met with Iraqi envoy Saeed Hamadi, a member of Baghdad's ruling "Revolutionary" Command Council, and then summoned his Supreme National Security Council to a meeting, according to the Islamic Republic News Agency.

The council said in a statement that Iran will continue to exert efforts to end the war.

IRNA said Hamadi, who also is a deputy prime minister, handed Rafsanjani a letter from Saddam Hussein. The Iranian leader gave him a written response to "carry back" to Baghdad.

Contents of the messages were not disclosed in the IRNA account, monitored in Nicotia.

Rafsanjani, the agency said, told Hamadi "it is sad to witness the return of human and material resources of Muslim states in destructive wars."

He stressed that the key to a solution is an Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait, which he invaded Aug. 2.

Emphasizing Iran's neutral stand, Rafsanjani warned: "Iran will not allow the use of its airspace and territory by either of the parties to the war."

That was an apparent message to Iran to stop sending aircraft to Iraq.

The juries say about 90 Iraqi civilian aircraft and warplanes have landed in Iran.

Tehran says 16 warplanes have flown into its airspace, and that 11 landed safely.

Crews aboard some Iraqi vessels also have been ordered to take refuge in Iran, according to allied officials, quoting captured Iraqi sailors.

Western analysts have suggested that Iraq might have sent the aircraft to Iran for safety. Iran has said it will impound for the duration of the war any aircraft from either side that lands in its territory.

"Iraq does not intend to create problems for Iran, and the Iraqi air force is in Iran in emergency conditions without prior plans," Hamadi told Rafsanjani. Iraq has never disclosed a number of the aircraft in Iran.

Analysts say Saddam likely to use chemicals

NEW YORK (AP) — Saddam Hussein is likely to carry out his threat to use chemical weapons, even though the weapons are unlikely to pose a significant military threat, analysts say.

His conventionally armed Scuds are having a significant terror effect on the Saudi Arabians.

Elias D. Harris, senior research analyst at the Brookings Institution in Washington, "if he armed those Scuds with chemical weapons, the terror effect would be increased even more."

But it would not be decisive militarily, he said. "I think it's likely he will use these weapons against our ground forces, because they will slow things down," he said. "But he will still lose."

Saddam's failure so far to use chemical weapons could simply mean that he is unable to deliver them, Saudi analysts said.

And even if he does have the capability to mount them on the Scuds, that wouldn't be very effective militarily, said Ezra Lujmpe, a research analyst at the Federation of American Scientists in Washington.

"A high explosive can do more damage than anything," Lujmpe said, "but a Scud missile to deliver a chemical agent is not a very efficient way to deliver it," Lujmpe said.

Father of slain Marine consoles consolors

BOUNTIFUL, Utah (AP) — Had he lived, Dion Stephenson might have made the Marines a career, or been a movie starman, or anything in between. He is already, says according to his father, the best son a man ever had.

Downstairs in his study, James Stephenson fields calls from all over the country — veterans, former Marine buddies from Vietnam, reporters, strangers, reporters, even President Bush.

He bears up, consoling the consolors. It's a kind of therapy of the moment, a delaying action. Having lost his adoptive father, brother and sister in a plane crash at age 12, he knows this about grief and loss; the worst comes later.

"I know what it's like to have the car drive up in front of the house," says Stephenson, whose doberbell be-bow a handsome pair of yellow ribbons, rung at 2 a.m. Thursday.

Five Marines and an Army chaplain Gen. the news, confirming his promotion that one of the 11 Marines killed in the first ground action of the Gulf War was Marine Lance Cpl. Dion James Stephenson.

Before 10-year-old Mike Stephenson had gone to bed the night before, his father had talked to him about the idea of dying in combat for one's country.

"I just had this feeling, see," he says, Stephenson's second son, 19-year-old Shaun, a Marine lance corporal with another unit in Saudi Arabia, is "bearing home the body of his 22-year-old brother."

For James Stephenson, who was adopted as an infant in Pleasantville, N.Y., it isn't enough to say he has three sons. "All parents love their children, but these were my boys, my blood. Everything they did I was there for them," he said.

"The couple seldom hired baby-sitters. My wife would get a little upset. We couldn't go to the movies without the boys."

In sharing time with his sons, Stephenson shared his love for the Marines, his patriotism, his sense of duty. His adoptive father had enlisted in the Navy the day Pearl Harbor was bombed and served for the duration in the Pacific.

"That era was a very patriotic era and that was the greatest town anywhere could be from. A lot of veterans," said Stephenson, who enlisted in the Marines in 1962 and served a tour in Vietnam in 1964-65. "I felt every man should fit his duty."

"At 45, looking to die enough to again don" combat fatigue, he hasn't changed his mind. NPR does the possibility that Dion might have been killed by friendly fire make any difference.

"It doesn't change my beliefs. That can happen. Anything can happen in combat," Stephenson said.

Within hours of hearing of Dion's death, he was on the phone to his congressmen, urging them to convey his support to the nation's top military leaders and to President Bush. Deeply wounded, he advanced.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, honored the request and Bush called the Stephensons Thursday night.

"He gave me his condolences. He was emotionally moved. He's been in combat. He knows what's going on. It made it a lot easier," Stephenson said.

"He assured the president 'he definitely did the right thing' in going to war in the Gulf."

"Remember, above all we're Americans. Nobody has the right to take freedom for granted. Somebody has to stand up to the criminals of this world," said Stephenson, a mechanic for Delta Airlines.

"His patriotism reverberated through me only by the intensity of his pride in his son. At 5-foot-7 and 145 pounds, Dion was slight but athletic, excelling at Marine training that included scuba diving and high-altitude parachute drops."

"He just tie it up," his father said. Only once, when asked how he will remember Dion, is Stephenson forced by raw emotion to pause.

"The best way I can describe my son's life and words is that I used to call him my little giant. My boy meant so much to me and he was so good."

By all accounts, Dion Stephenson was a modest youth in this city north of Salt Lake City, many say their testimonials can't do him justice.

"I know when people pass away like this, especially young men in combat, the inclination is to say how great they were," said Bonni Hobbs, a drama teacher at Woods Cross High School. "But Dion really was."

Before he graduated in 1987, he coached him to a superior rating in a state competition for pantomime. He led the swimming team to state honors and played football with an intensity that belied his size.

"He was a wonderful person, extremely polite, always 'mum' and 'sir.' Everyone who knew him to be astated," Hobbs said.

hich, Dion hadn't decided between staying a Marine or becoming a stuntman as a path to an acting career. Although Catholic in one of the most heavily Mormon communities in Utah, Dion was at ease with every one, friends say, and came elected secretary of the student body.

At most of his neighborhood buddies were going off to serve Mormon missions, Dion "enlisted" but kept in touch through a newsletter circulated by a missionary's mother in December 1989. Dion wrote of similarities in their seemingly dissimilar lives.

"Not only would we have to leave our families and loved ones, being forced into a new lifestyle ... some of us were sent to the off-islands away from everything, only to find that you only have God and your new mission associates."

"I am proud to be associated with a great bunch of guys like yourselves."

If South Carolinians want sole NPR, let 'em have it

When the federal Energy Department's new budget appears Monday, folk in Idaho and South Carolina will be intensely interested in one aspect of it.

A South Carolina congressman said last week that the budget will contain money for one, not two, nuclear reactors to produce weapons material. The only unanswered question, Rep. Butler Derrick said, is which state will get it, South Carolina or Idaho.

As far as we're concerned, South Carolina is welcome to it.

A little background: Since August 1988, the Energy Department has been planning a pair of "new production reactors." One would be near Aiken, S.C., the other at the Idaho "National" Engineering Laboratory.

The Idaho reactor was to be a new style of reactor, using high temperature, gas-cooled technology instead of the standard heavy-water system. It would produce tritium, a radioactive gas used to trigger warheads.

Increasingly, however, the need for the second reactor has been called into question. The Energy Department apparently shares those two reactor doubts.

If there is to be only one new reactor, there are good reasons from Idaho's perspective for putting it in South Carolina.

First, Idaho doesn't need to be in the weapons business; INEL is well-positioned for leadership in development of non-military uses of nuclear energy.

That kind of role promises more long-term economic stability than military production.

Second, we have fewer political headaches than dealing with the secretive and notoriously untrustworthy military-industrial complex, which repeatedly has misled Idahoans about the environmental consequences of its activities.

Second, rather than sending more military production here, the Energy Department should focus its attention on cleaning up the radioactive waste left behind by 40 years of military activity in the state.

Derrick commented last week that he would work hard to land the new reactor for his state, along with the 4,000 construction jobs it could create over the next decade.

Doubtless others from his state will too.

Idaho should leave those efforts untested.

Our two U.S. senators, Steve Symms and Larry Craig, who traditionally have favored military expansion at INEL, may think differently.

But they need to realize that the majority of Idahoans — outside the eastern Idaho cities dependent on INEL — no longer share their view.

The traditional arguments in favor of military development at INEL no longer hold much appeal.

Even if our military does need new tritium supplies (an unproven cost estimate), there's no national-defense reason for making it in Idaho instead of South Carolina. Idahoans can be patriots without making bombs.

As for economic benefits — have you noticed that cleanup is always talked about in terms of cost, while weapons development is always talked about in terms of jobs? Cleanup projects create jobs too.

If South Carolina wants the NPR, Idaho should smile benevolently and get out of the way.

Let's focus our political efforts on more beneficial projects.

Flag protection amendment chilling idea

I respect and love the flag. After I had lived out of the country for a couple of years, upon my return I found it difficult to control my emotions when I heard tape and saw the colors raised. My respect was not diminished when I saw the flag draped over the gray casket of my sister's fiancée in the summer of 1968.

It seems a simple question: whether to honor and respect the symbol of our country or whether to allow certain acts which are expressions of opinion — even though the acts themselves are reprehensible.

But other questions must be asked: Who decides which is more important? Who decides an act, an expression of opinion through an act, is worthy of prohibition? And which acts?

Printing a paper is an act. Passing out a pamphlet is an act. Sitting in the front of a bus reserved for whites is an act.

Dumping trash into the Boston harbor is an act.

It is not the act of burning the flag that deserves our attention. That act is worthy of criticism and disdain. It is the right to act we must protect. Erosion of our constitutional rights does not happen all at once. It happens just one exception at a time.

I respect and love our country and the principles we stand for, and I have no less respect for its symbol, the flag. But I love even more the freedom of speech and expression which that symbol stands to protect.

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas said, "Restriction of free thought and free speech is the most dangerous of all subversions. It is the one un-American act that could most easily defeat us."

Consider this: in his dissenting opinion in United States vs. Eichman, the case declaring the Flag Protection Act unconstitutional, Justice Stevens, arguing to uphold the act, conceded that flag burning was indeed expressive conduct, with no physical harm to anyone nor damage to anyone's property (assuming the burner owned his own flag).

Unlike planting a bomb in a federal building, burning the flag is purely symbolic. It does not risk damage to property of person. Burning the flag is a symbolic act expressing the burner's opinion about some federal policy or another.

A law prohibiting burning, for example, in a public place could be justified on safety grounds. But a law preventing it altogether under any circumstances can only be justified on the basis of the offense felt by the symbolist expressed in the act.

In other words, the purpose of any such law is to prevent the expression of an opinion represented by the symbolic act. That is, the law is designed to stop the expression of an opinion.

When this any legislative body under the U.S. Constitution passes a law specifically to prevent the expression of an opinion, it is simply wrong.

If, as the zoologists say, it is the power of speech that distinguishes man from the rest of the animal kingdom, so it is the freedom of speech that distinguishes our nation from the rest of the free world.

Justice Robert Jackson once stated, "The price of freedom of religion or of speech or of the press is that we must put up with, even pay for, a good deal of rubbish."

We should not commission to the public or to our children that our system is such that if someone does something we disagree with, we can simply go out and change the Constitution. Why not? Because someday, one of us may do something that the majority disagrees with and it may be a matter of speech and their excuse may be that they see it as just an unprotectable act.

We must be tolerant. Or in order to demand tolerance in return. Or as Abraham Lincoln put it, "Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves."

Finally, no amount of words will change the fact that prohibiting a symbolic act which expresses an opinion is a restriction.

Jet skiers scared goose

Last Saturday afternoon (Jan. 26), at approximately 7:30 p.m., I was on the river for the afternoon, we would return home.

While we were waiting, we noticed a large and beautiful flock of geese that were disturbed and flying frantically from under the Perrine Bridge toward the shoreline near the Canyon Springs Golf Course. We then observed two jet skiers (operating personal watercraft) headed down the river approaching the geese, jumping over each other's wakes, etc., until they successfully flushed the geese out again.

The magnificent geese patterned their flight up the river again to the waters below the Perrine Bridge. The jet skis appeared with repeated maneuvers to chase the geese from the canyon. The frustrated, confused geese had no recourse but to depart the area.

During a community meeting held on Jan. 23, a spokesman for the jet skis (personal watercraft) stated to the public attending that jet skis were very compatible to the environment and would cause very little wake or disturbance to the habitat in the proposed park area. The events that appeared to support that the contrary would in fact be a more accurate picture of reality.

I thank goodness for the foresight of our county commissioners who had the wisdom to review the proposed plan for the water park area before any final decisions were made on the project. They thought carefully, and in this situation, will help prevent the blatant harassment of the wildlife in this area, which directly opposes the Fish and Game regulations. It may be well for us to also consider that we could suffer the loss of the young geese as the season approaches for them to pursue their nesting grounds.

Decisions being made now will affect this area for many years to come. May we be encouraged to remember that Idaho's heritage lies in her soil and the beauty we here before we came. Can we preserve it for our future and that of our children and grandchildren?

Trudeau entitled to opinions

The writer of the editorial, "Doonesbury Over the Edge," might not be old enough to remember the World War II and Korean War cartoons of Bill Mauldin. Mauldin also had his problems with the military brass and politicians of that era, and a few editors too, as I recall.

Bill Mauldin was an enlisted man and his cartoons were primarily about two fictitious infantrymen, Willie and Joe. To date, I have found few veterans of the second World War or the Korean "conflict" who didn't enjoy and actually look forward to reading those "Up Front" cartoons in "Stars and Stripes."

The anonymous author, Zorro, is no more critical of the war in the Persian Gulf than Mauldin was of the war in North Africa, Europe or Korea. And I'll know American troops of today. I'm sure they see the humor in and the basis for Zorro's cartoons — as the GIs did with Mauldin's earlier contributions.

In my humble opinion, Trudeau and Zorro are not attempting to demean or criticize the American fighting men and women any more than Bill Mauldin did. Mauldin, Trudeau and Zorro simply point out that the American military person is human, a habitual and chronic griper — frequently with justification. What the uninformed public doesn't know about World War II and the unassurances that go with it would fill a book that everybody, from the secretary of defense to the chiefs of staff would rush to deny, if not squelch publication of.

I commend The Times-News for continuing to publish Doonesbury and hope you will continue to do so, barring obscenity or vulgarity. It is not and never has been one of my favorite strips. On occasion, however, I have been forced to agree with the comments of Mr. Trudeau simply because my own past experience in the military tells me that he is not far off base.

At other times, he has caused me to dislike the same political figures — much to my embarrassment when I discovered later that he was dead right!

In any case, Trudeau and Zorro are entitled to their opinions and we are entitled to agree or disagree with them. The country would be in worse shape than it is if nobody attacked the politicians and the policies or plans of our leaders. If the citizens of Iraq had the right to express themselves freely without fear of government reprisal, Saddam might not be in power today and the Persian Gulf might be just another quiet spot on the map.

Gooding

'Doonesbury' strip welcome

Thank you for publishing the Doonesbury/Zorro cartoons Jan. 27. Only I'm disappointed in your editorial comments about them.

Trudeau has done a good thing, sharing with the public the emotions of many American servicemen. These are great cartoons. And they're nothing new anyone who's served in the armed forces, especially overseas, recognizes them.

Zorro's cartoons comment on the Persian Gulf and give us a peek inside our people there.

GIs love cartoons like these because they illustrate graphically and humorously the typical soldier's strongest feelings — the fear and disillusion and cynicism he lives with every day. One grunt cannot speak to another the words, "I sympathize with your plight." But a Zorro cartoon says, "I know just how you feel, soldier." In a left-handed way that is well-received. The troops enjoy such cartoons almost as much as love letters from home. They need 'em.

My thanks to Doonesbury and Zorro. Please don't censor them just because some ignorant reader or publisher might be offended.

Protesters have every right

The anti-war protesters have every right to protest. They have every right to be drafted and sent to the front lines.

They have every right to protest and carry cute little signs in front of Saddam Hussein's chemical weapons plants.

They have every right to sit in a live electric chair. They have every right under the First Amendment to express their views, especially if it's in front of an Iraqi firing squad. They have every right to protest against the oil companies, especially if it means they have to walk to and from work — assuming, of course, they have the education and dependability to hold down a job.

They have every right to a Domino's Pizza. They have every right to chain themselves to the bumper of a moving vehicle. They have every right to protest the use of our missiles, as long as they're strapped onto me in flight. They have every right to sit in a dentist's chair and have their teeth drilled into without the use of novocaine.

In short, they have every right to express themselves however they wish.

Schools act independently

It seems to me that though they are of one system, the public schools of this county still act separately. Each school board makes rules and regulations for their schools and the schools have separate performance against each other. When they first played this team, they lost by 28 points. On Friday night, they came out and played a great game, winning 63-29. That was due to some excellent coaching and when transferring to other schools. Several schools also change their grading systems so they differ from school to school. In some schools, the students can score an A with a percentage of 90. Yet in others, the students must receive a percentage of 92 to 94 to receive the same A as those who score a 90 percentage.

It is my opinion that issues, such as the grading system and the number of required classes, should be universal across the United States to put the students of the United States on a more even plan with one another.

Coach does best he can

I am writing in regard to the article, "Wendell parents complain JV coach benches their kids unfairly," concerning my husband, Alex Flores.

I am so disappointed to think that the few parents are restless until they're selfish and ungrateful. My husband is an excellent athlete and a fine coach. He has given so much time to these kids; no one could care more or try harder than he has. He is fair with anyone who is straightforward with him. All he expects of his students and athletes is to follow the rules and give 100 percent and try their very best. This is how you can earn anything worthwhile in life.

Another point to remember is that basketball is a competitive team effort, not one for individual glory. Not everyone has the same talent or experience. He is given these kids to work with who have little to no experience and is expected to teach them the game and develop their talents.

This takes time, especially when you only have two returning athletes. This fact is evident simply by reviewing their scores throughout the season. They have improved so much.

A good example might be their performance against Decia. When they first played this team, they lost by 28 points. On Friday night, they came out and played a great game, winning 63-29. That was due to some excellent coaching and

Please, Mr. President, tell Americans how we can help war effort

I wish George Bush would tell us to save fat. People die that during World War II and felt better. I'm not sure where the fat went, but it was collected for the war effort, and our parents are still talking about it.

It would be more than five gallons of fat at a time, but taking public opinion polls, the president to tell us about the importance of saving fat, but he didn't.

He didn't tell us about the importance of driving 50 miles per hour slower, or of buying no more than five gallons of gas at a time, or of taking public opinion polls, or at least once a week, or of keeping our temperatures at 65 degrees, or anything.

Maybe he thinks such things would make the country look weak, but what about making our people feel strong?

Telling us to continue being a thousand points of light isn't enough. We are a frustrated people right now, searching for crisis-related tasks, which may explain why so many of us are buying gas masks.

Some folks are even buying Saddam Hussein voodoo dolls for 10 bucks apiece, so they can relieve their tension by sticking pins in the heart of Baghdad.

A Wall Street Journal story reported that there's a market for Saddam Hussein's head. Some folks are even printing and selling it. It's an avenue of protest that is open to many. I hope the president will tell us to do it. The man needs another avenue. Chuck

We all do. We're watching too much television - not that I'm about to turn off the set. But it's a time-distorting machine that psychologists have called talking about "the CNN syndrome."

We need to get up off the couch and act. The question is - what should we do? The answer lies, the president should tell us.

Franklin Roosevelt told us. He said America should cut back on politics, turn off the set and save it. People need "Alamo Rose" coffee. Buying their grounds twice.

They should eat it, but felt important drinking it.

Children there are watching family and friends go to the desert, watching the instant high-tech war, and feeling very low and unimportant. We can send CARE packages to the troops, but so many boxes of toiletries have gone over already that I think we could probably track Hussein's bunker with Right Guard.

Writing letters to soldiers is a fine gesture, but we need to do more. We need to get into a daily routine that eats a little bit, that is - that's not about eating up someone else's like you do, the president could have said Tuesday night. I know it's a sacrifice, but if you could give up your car just one day a week, this country would save hundreds of gallons of oil.

Friends tell me America is much too cynical to go along with that. They say the press would pick apart the program and have the public arguing about it a few hours after the president opened his mouth. But I think not. I think we are waiting to be led. I believe that if the president told us to consider some form of alternative energy for the house, we'd be out looking at solar panels and windmills on Saturday.

And it wouldn't matter whether we thought Bush was right to attack Iraq or not. We'd have received something that helped us cut our dependence on oil.

We want to count. We are a family in trouble, instinctively groping for a way to be effective.

This is a fine human unit, the stuff that forms a national soul. It shouldn't be left floundering.

Chaplain's simple act of faith touches pilots in the Persian Gulf

IN CENTRAL SAUDI ARABIA - Amidst the pouring of jets and the hustle and bustle of the air force base, the pilots of the 304th Air Force Base are before taking off on a combat mission is Chaplain Raymond Hart.

He is making the sign of the cross. In all that noise and activity, the gesture is making as a "cross" assuming the pilot's position in the booming finale of an Italian opera. Here, he gestures, is the peace that passeth all understanding. Here, he gestures, is a bigger hand than mortal fingers wrapped anxiously around sick and throbbing

Hart, 46, goes through this ritual for every mission. "I've kind of picked up on the different stages of preparation," he said. "I see the pilots moving around the squadron. I can determine what stage they're at if they're leaving momentarily. I can tell by the sound of the engines or look at some of the support personnel around the airfield. I sense the plane is getting ready to depart."

"I get in a certain position where all of them will pass by and I'm able to give a thumbs-up or make the sign of the cross. I'm on a certain side of the airplane where they usually look out of when they taxi past. I'll make sure that's appropriate. What I hope is a meaningful, uplifting gesture," he said.

Hart, a Protestant chaplain on active duty for 12 years, says he's been in the States before giving the pilots "just a quick thumbs-up. But when I do it, it's a very firm, strong, steady, and when I see it, I'm saying, 'You're coming back. I have faith that you're going to get out of there and do it, and you will be back, that God's going to take care of you,'" he explained.

In this extraordinary act of nonverbal communication, the pilots, too, respond with a solid, firm thumbs-up. Or, if Hart has given the sign of the cross, one can see a belated nod.

"I try to keep up with the tail numbers. Where they're located, when they return, to be there to greet them when they come back. I've been told that a chaplain's sense of faith is that people sense I know God. This guy is in touch. This guy is very aware of things that I want him around."

Hart said. "I have a flight plan that I'll make a certain habit of. After a combat mission, a crew chief limped the leader up to the cockpit and grabbed the pilot's hand. This is probably the only part of the day that the pilot and the crew chief have to come to grips with death, with mortality. I was a volunteer chaplain with the Dallas Police Department at one time, and the police have to deal with that. What they they never know if they're going to come back," he recalled. In this respect, the chaplain has been an uplifting experience.

"It has affected people here in terms of their commitment to life. The knowledge that they have received is something that helps them to endure, to make them stronger people," he said.

It is a process of self-awareness that cuts across all ranks. As Chaplain Raymond Hart has seen, he was reminding everyone of the filipino of the common humanity of our mortal state.

Continued from A6 performance of team players. If your children cannot function as team players, maybe an individual sport such as wrestling or track where they work for their own win would be the answer.

In conclusion, I would like to say that we know this is not the opinion or attitude of all the parents, students or fans. It is that of only a few who felt the need to discredit and tarnish the reputation of my husband publicly (as well as myself) rather than attend a practice to talk with him and see first-hand why their children were not getting all the playing time they felt was deserved.

With a little communication, good sportsmanship and respect, this matter could have been resolved in a more diplomatic matter. A special thank you to all our friends, parents and fans who showed their support and encouragement. I'd like to know that there are so many people who appreciate all that I do and love me. Woodell Some services mandated Why, asks the Jan. 24 editorial, should workers have to pay for a service they didn't ask for? The obvious answer is that they shouldn't, but fails to observe that such services are mandated by law. Unions are required to serve members and non-members alike. Our currently existing situation in Idaho has a bargaining unit with approximately 11 percent of the work force paying more while 80 percent vote against decertification of the union. One might reasonably conclude that a majority is asking for the services.

The assertion that "in the four years since then (1986), Idahoans haven't shown any sign of changing their minds" is also several rings away from the bill's eye. Perhaps the author of this piece needs to visit a different coffee shop; significant numbers of Idahoans, including people previously identified as rock-ribbed conservatives, are experiencing second and third thoughts about right to work. It's finally dawning on some of these folks that right to work was never intended as anything more than a vehicle for intensifying the disparity between the haves and the have-nots. The frustration that a huge army of laborers was outraged at mandatory payment of dues was then and continues to be a pipe dream.

The Times-News, which hasn't seemed to make up its mind whether this bill is more oriented to the P&L statement, was wrong on right to work in '86. It's still wrong.

Patty McDermott's bill paves the way for a process which would terminate the scab's free ride - it's about time. RICHARD G. PERHAMAN, Bayley Education; learning different

Headline: "Idaho students must learn to think critically," report says. Reports on education are not new. Since the time of Dewey, the education system has been degrading, modernizing and throwing money indiscriminately into the system. The results have been a disaster - corruption follows money as surely as a cat follows a dog.

Less than a month ago, one board member had the integrity, faith, hope and courage to oppose the State Board of Education's approval of the "Impressions" reading series. Consequently, our future citizens will be learning the art of discussing, writing and discussing spells and telling if they ever wanted to cast a spell and also why. And they will be questioned if they would like to be a sorcerer's apprentice and they will take turns playing the roles of the sorcerer's apprentices and they will have groups creating spells and cures for spells and they will be involved and chant to go with the spell.

What kind of learning is that? Chanting and casting spells, participating in rituals and rituals of the religion of Wicca or witchcraft? The critics of the "Impressions" series have a valid reason for saying if you can practice the religion of the Wicca, then other religions should have no reason to have supported the school system with my tax dollars for 72 years. All I see for my money is a slow cancer eating at the core of our system.

In the '70s, death education came into schools via the book on "Death and Dying." Since then, 50,000 teen-agers have died by suicide. Sex is taught and contraceptives encouraged. What happens? One out of five babies are born out of wedlock and millions are slaughtered by abortions. Lesbian history is incorporated in the elementary curriculum in Wisconsin. We are sacrificing the three R's and morals for these 50,000 deaths and 2 million abortions. Now the emphasis is placed on psychology, which is built on psychoanalysis, humanism and thought control. When humanism crops into a society, our sovereignty and rights of our children and the future of society is in danger. Everyone wants a better education, but learning is not necessarily education. Education is the cultivation of wisdom and virtue. That lacking, no satisfactory form of good character may be carried on. We may be the best informed people in history, but we fall far behind in being the best educated. Money will not be the panacea. EUGENE J. MANNING, Bayley

Editorial missed the mark

The editorial in The Times-News of 21 concerning the National Rifle Association is a good example of slanted journalism. The editorial is a concoction of half truths and myths. The court decision cited in the editorial was a technical one concerning the manufacture of machine guns and had nothing to do with the ownership of automatic weapons by the general public.

First of all, assault weapons are not the weapons of drug dealers. This myth was created by television and movies and expanded by the news media. Federal Bureau of Investigation statistics reveal the following facts:

• Kill-related homicide has declined by 25 percent over the last decade.

• Military-type semi-automatic rifles are involved in less than 1 percent of rifle-related homicide.

• Military caliber semi-automatic rifles are used in less than one-half of 1 percent of all violent crime.

• There has not been any assaults on police officers with AK47s or similar weapons in the last two years.

I might add that in the last two years, several police officers have been killed by their own handguns. A case could be made to disarm the police to protect them from themselves.

The use of firearms by the mentally unbalanced is a problem acknowledged by both sides of the firearms debate. The answer is very complicated and elusive.

General public ownership of automatic firing machine guns has been illegal in the United States for over 50 years. A complicated, expensive Class 3 license must be obtained from the federal government to own and traffic in automatic weapons. It is a federal felony offense to alter military semiautomatic to automatic firing capacity without a proper license.

In conclusion, the National Rifle Association has misrepresented that everyone has a right to own Howitzers, surface-to-air missiles and nerve gas, as your editorial stated. This is a fabrication and would appear to be irresponsible journalism. DARWIN PHILLIPS, Bayley

The proposed constitutional amendment will not stop flag desecration. Ironically, such an amendment will only enhance the apparent value of the protester's act.

But another more terrible irony is involved. The amendment passes, we will actually have a constitutional amendment which not only says it is legal for the government to prohibit expression of an opinion, but that it is legal for the government to prohibit an expression of opinion specifically aimed at that very government which has the power to suppress it.

That is a frightening possibility.

Magic Valley

This house of horrors is all mine

You know the gnomes from the movie who melted when they stepped out into the sunlight? They didn't all step into the sunlight. Come downstairs with me. I have a basement with an attitude problem, a veritable street gang of foul-tempered pipes, sullen wiring, surly appliances and a vicious drainage system. When my wife sends me down for garbage bags or canned peaches, I have to search along the ceiling for safe passage and partly to snuff off the water to the latest fractured joint.

Stavo Crump Don't task me

We live in a fairly old house, but heck, so does George Bush. I'll bet he's not down in the Coolidge Sitting Room at 2 a.m. playing scratch and destroy with a secret leak from hell.

Our first hind-dirt there was something unholy-at-work here came as a couple of weeks after we moved in. I went downstairs and found fruit jars floating in 6 inches of water. This was puzzling since we did not own any fruit jars.

Three weeks later, during a heavy rain we discovered a crack in the foundation that could have been the work of Joshua's brass section at the Battle of Jericho. Our mild-mannered washing machine, which had never eaten anything larger than the occasional argyle sock to that point, began swallowing whole towels. We would put sheets in the dryer and take out something that resembled a Merino sheep caught in an electric storm.

In retrospect, I think the contractor who built the house probably erred when he ran the sewer line uphill.

But, hey, these problems are mechanical and whatever is mechanical is fixable. Right?

If you believe that, I'd like to talk to you about some real estate investment opportunities in the Tri-Cities area.

There used to be a double window in the living room of our basement. The kind that catches you on the Adam's apple when you're walking in the dark with an armful of wet diapers.

My wife asked me to raise the clothesline. She said it was a matter of time before it would collapse under the weight of a dump truck.

I bought enough rope to tie the HMS Bounty, grabbed my tool box, screwed my courage up to the sticking point and started climbing.

I knew I was in trouble when I cut the old line and it snapped around the basement like Indiana Jones' bullwhip. After I picked up all the broken glass, I anchored the new clothesline to one wall with a railroad spike and wrapped the other end around one of those steel braces with a wire inside.

Then I let go.

The doctor says the double window should go away. It's a waste of money. I bought a water softener. Our water softener is an early model — J.A. Culligan autographed it himself — which is means it's less of a water softener than a water salter.

The tap water has tasted a little funny for my test kit, but I really didn't think anything about it until my kids started running their bowls of popcorn under the faucet. I called an appliance repair service and the guy had a Model A water softener that was making living conditions and he laughed at me. He did give me a phone number to call, though. Turned out to be the Idaho Historical Society.

The guy at the historical society suggested a shotgun, but I'm an optimist. I got my test kit, took the softener apart, cleaned all the guts with Ultra-Brite toothpaste and put it back together again. Except for a couple of springs and some other stuff that didn't seem to fit any place, I turned the softener back on and everything was fine. I was finally utilizing brine back. And you hardly notice the hole in the living room floor, especially when the water pipes are howling.

Plumbers have been through our house's freshwater system many times. There is no scientific reason why it should sound like a banisher with an impacted wisdom tooth, but it does.

Our neighbor Doris thinks in the photo of Kate Smith, but I'm skeptical. Kate Smith had a better set of pipes than this. For that matter, so did the pyramids.

Ribbons, flags in short supply

Patriotism puts punch in sales of Old Glory, yellow ribbon

By Cathy Stephens Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — If you're in the market for yellow ribbon or the good old red, white, and blue American flag, you may have quite the search.

Operation Desert Storm has caused a patriotic rush on Magic Valley merchants for yellow ribbon, American flags, gas masks, that's nice to see. Gregersen also keeps a stock of gas masks on hand, but said he hasn't had a run on them yet.

"We've always carried them. We sell more of them around Halloween," he said.

But Gregersen said that the dog tags "what he calls 'survivalists' who come in and buy gas masks. Our guy and his wife came and bought gas masks because they were concerned that they were going to be gassed," he said.

Other popular sellers at Koppel's Browzeville include desert camouflage clothing and a "Desert Shield" patch that sports a map of the Persian Gulf. "I've seen a lot of people buying these things," he said.

Tie a yellow ribbon 'round old Jerome

The Times-News

JEROME — The city of Jerome will soon have a yellow ribbon tied around the entire town in support of the financing of military personnel who are a part of Operation Desert Storm.

Spearheaded by Blanc Russell, resource officer for the Jerome School District, the Jerome High School cross-country team will lay the ribbon around the city limits — a circumference of more than 10 miles — on Saturday, Feb. 23.

The runners will leave from Main Street at the South Park early in the morning. Their route will include a run a mile south of Jerome and around the Moore's Business Forms property. The 10 miles of ribbon will be laid along major roads at the city limits, Russell said.

Runners will bring the ends of the ribbon back to the park by 10 a.m., when a ribbon-tying ceremony will be held. Mayor Gerald Oster will give the dedicatory speech and Brett Reid, Jerome law enforcement officer and musician, will sing a song he has written about the event.

After the ceremony, the ribbon will be picked up, clipped into appropriate lengths and given to anyone who makes a donation in support of U.S. troops. The ribbon then will be tied to trees and poles around Jerome, Russell said.

Donations will be used for a project that will benefit both the troops and their families. Details for the project will be available at the Jerome High School. The amount of the donations could not be released in press time.

The 10 miles of yellow ribbon are being donated by Mr. Florist of Jerome.

Sun Valley move irks developer

Christopher S. Coproy Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — The City Council's move to table a subdivision has been denounced as "irritative" by the project's developer.

"I'm holding my feet to the fire," said Tom Dempsey, developer of the proposed Legends condominium complex.

Dempsey must await until the council grants final plan approval before he can sell the units at the Legends development.

City Councilman Steve Luber's suggestion to table the final plan approval was supported by a vote of 2-1 by the City Council at its last meeting.

Luber said he is prepared to put a stop to what he called "a flagrant disregard for the zoning law of Sun Valley."

Council members expressed concern that the curb placement and current landscaping in the Legends Complex affects the flow of water to the street rather than into drainage ditches that run parallel to the road.

In the winter this freezes and causes a safety problem, according to Councilman Dave Wilson.

Doug Clemmons showed the board a sketch of the improvements that he plans to make to correct the problems at the complex. Clemmons estimated that the improvements would cost just over $20,000.

Luber suggested to follow council members to wait until these repairs have been completed before taking any action on the plan approval. The approval has been tabled 30 days until the next meeting.

In the past, the City Council has approved final plans on unfinished projects after the developer issues a bond as a guarantee that the project will be completed.

"The procedure is not working," Luber said. "The last few times we've done this, nothing's been done, despite the fact that we have bonds."

Luber said that several developers have reneged on finishing contracted work, causing the city to pursue legal action to insure the work is completed.

for other business, the council decided to delay its decision on a tax ordinance that would permit a nonexclusive taxi franchise.

A taxi driver from Asti tax explained that taxi operators incur higher costs to operate a year-round door-to-door service and should be protected from those trying to capitalize on seasonal highs.

After hearing objections from taxi bus operator John Concha, the board decided to review a new draft of the ordinance at the next meeting.

Heavy Mideast fighting renews fears of draft

State's changing economy may impact right-to-work law

By Steve Crump Times-News writer

Michael DiNoto, a professor of economics at the University of Idaho, is a specialist in labor relations, the effect of right-to-work laws, unfair labor practices and arbitration.

Following the narrow failure in a legislative committee last week of a bill that would have weakened Idaho's 1985 right-to-work law, which was named in a 1986 referendum, DiNoto talked about the state of organized labor and labor relations in Idaho.

Q: Did the closeness of the vote surprise you?

Q: Last Wednesday, the Senate State Affairs Committee rejected on a tie vote a bill that would have let unions collect fees to represent non-members. Does this mean right-to-work is back as an issue in Idaho?

A: "The only effect of right-to-work laws is to ban the payment of union dues as a condition of employment. If this (bill) had passed, it would have effectively gutted Idaho's right-to-work law."

Draft

of a draft mot. It takes six months to get an inductee trained and deployed.

"We still have very large reserves. We have no need for any more units," said Ronald Reagan and author of a military textbook. Under Reagan, Bandow worked with the Military Manpower Task Force.

During the Vietnam War, Pentagon officials considered the draft a cheap and convenient way to meet their manpower needs, Bandow said. But the draft was discontinued in 1973, and the military began to use more incentives to attract a volunteer force.

Military officials now "have experience with a volunteer military and see its benefits. They are getting a better crop of people who are smarter, better educated and better trained," he said.

"Two occurrences have spawned concern that a draft may be needed in the future. In September, October and November, Army recruiters fell significantly short of their enlistment goals," he said.

Recently, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney has frozen active-duty officers who are nearing retirement and cutbacks getting close to fulfilling their terms of enlistment.

However, Army officials argue that enlistment goals are set much higher than their actual manpower requirement, and that the Army so far has had no difficulty meeting its induction quotas through volunteers.

"If for the most part people that Bush is holding out in the services are trained and experienced people," said Rep. John Spratt Jr., D-S.C., a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

At the height of the Vietnam War, when a draft was in force, the United States lost 58,000 men in Southeast Asia compared to the 500,000 now in the Persian Gulf. But the country had 3 million more active-duty personnel than today. The Vietnam buildup took five years compared to the five months that Operation Desert Storm has required.

"I don't believe that we're not going to have the ability to sustain this level of forces, which is about half of our Army combat forces, about half of our Marines, and about half of our Navy," Nunn said in a recent interview.

"We have to ask, is there danger anywhere else in the world?" Nunn added. "What happens if something else happens in the world that we have the military power to do it, or are we inviting somebody else in the world to take aggressive steps now because America has gotten so committed to this part of the world?"

Webb, who favors a rotation policy that would require troops to stay in the Persian Gulf only a number of months and then be replaced so they could come home, called for resumption of the draft in testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee in December.

"If a bombing campaign does not work, there is no way to predict the direction or the duration of a war in this region," Webb said.

"Two occurrences have spawned concern that a draft may be needed in the future. In September, October and November, Army recruiters fell significantly short of their enlistment goals," he said.

At the height of the Vietnam War, when a draft was in force, the United States lost 58,000 men in Southeast Asia compared to the vide that kind of manpower. "Using the enlistment, shortfalls, and the officer fees to justify the need for a draft is 'laying out the worst case scenario' and 'scaring' military leaders, who requested anonymity."

"One of the biggest unanswered questions at this point in time is the number of people the military will need to prosecute the Persian Gulf war," the staffer said. "They have not told anybody, so we don't know."

As long as the war is short with a low rate of casualties, there will be no need for conscription, he said. But "if we run into a huge need for manpower, there's a disaster over there... I wouldn't rule it out."

A few politicians and writers have called for a draft, maintaining that the current military, and therefore any future war casualties, will include a disproportionately high number of persons who belong to minorities or are poor.

Martin Binkin of the Brookings Institution said today a military is not over-represented by the poor, although it is by Blacks. But, short of a very large draft, the only logical way to overcome the imbalance is to deny entry to qualified young Black volunteers, and to force young whites to serve, he said.

This entails setting quotas, and would be likely to be challenged in court, Binkin said.

One of the obstacles to a draft is the associated civilian unemployment rate. "If we're talking back to the Vietnam era when wealthier men could get student deferments and some men went to fight a war, they didn't believe in it," he said.

Congress would have to pass a law establishing a draft, and that would be no easy task, said Bandow. "Are you willing to force people to fight for the Emir? Are you willing to force young men to trade their blood for it? It would be a very nasty fight."

"It would set off a nationwide opposition," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee and a former Navy pilot and Vietnam prisoner of war. President Bush, he said, has said he strongly opposes a draft, "is fully aware of that," McCain said.

Idaho delegation split on Agent Orange

WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho's senators and representatives on major legislation in Congress this past week.

SENATE VOTES

TO AWARD AGENT-ORANGE VICTIMS BENEFITS

The Senate, 99-0, passed a bill providing permanent disability benefits for Vietnam veterans who suffer from two types of cancer, soft tissue sarcoma and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, as well as the skin condition chloracne as a result of their exposure to Agent Orange, a chemical defoliant.

The legislation also triggers a Veterans Affairs Department decision on whether to award benefits for other diseases which are said to be linked to Agent Orange exposure and extends medical care for victims through the end of 1993.

TO SUSPEND ENFORCEMENT PROVISIONS OF BUDGET

The Senate, 2-97, rejected a measure to suspend enforcement provisions of the five-year budget agreement requiring cuts in government spending.

Under law, this vote was required because of the recessionary forecasts by both the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office.

right-to-work, unions have been feeling more of a financial pinch."

"Q: You mentioned the effect on the economy. How has that changed in unions?"

A: "There are fewer jobs in manufacturing today and more in the service sector, and organizing the service sector is what unions do best. There are also fewer jobs in industries like timber and mining, which were traditional union strongholds."

"Q: Have working conditions changed much in Idaho since right-to-work went into effect?"

A: "I think right-to-work gave management a false impression that it has more power than it actually has. There are many federal laws protecting the rights of workers, and a lot of managers think they know more about labor law than they actually do."

"But as a general observation, I think right-to-work did give management a little more power."

"Workers are in a weaker position for the simple reason that divided you fall. I think it creates more friction in the workplace, (partly) because there is more competition for advancement (in a non-union environment)."

into effect?"

A: "Well, it's been said that the federal government has taken over the role of unions in protecting workers, and there's more than a small element of truth to that."

"The legal protection-of-workers is in the hands of management, doing (labor relations) differently today. (And) there is a just-cause bill before the Montana Legislature (which would require employers to show cause for terminating an employee) and in other states that could make it very difficult to fire someone."

"Q: What's happened to the slogan of the CIO in Idaho?"

A: "It's declined relatively speaking, but Idaho has had limited opportunities for growth in the kinds of industries that have been the traditional strongholds of unions."

"Q: But the political power of at least one union, the Idaho Education Association, seems to have increased dramatically during the past year."

A: "The IEA is one of the unions that represents one of the fastest-growing sectors. You're going to see teachers' unions and public employees' unions grow and become more powerful in the years ahead."

"Q: Service industries seem to be the areas where unions have had the least success organizing. Why is that?"

that?"

A: "It's a question of strength. I'm a skilled worker, management has an investment in me. There's an investment in my training and in my skills, and I'm hard and more expensive to replace."

"If I'm a service worker, that usually isn't the case. I'm easily trained and easily replaced. It's harder for a union to get a foothold in an environment like that."

ANC cautions against lifting of sanctions

The Washington Post

JOHANNESBURG — The African National Congress pleaded with the world community Saturday "not to be lured" into lifting sanctions against South Africa even as it praised President Frederik W. de Klerk's pledge Friday to scrap three of the main legislative pillars of the apartheid system of racial separation.

"Whatever changes have been brought about, or the government intends bringing about, the reality is that apartheid is still in force," ANC leader Nelson Mandela told a news conference here.

"We still have no votes. We can't be members of parliament. The state organs are still dominated by whites. The police are still harassing, persecuting, even killing, our people," he said, speaking of South Africa's 30 million blacks.

The ANC leader made a special appeal to the Bush administration and Congress, saying that "until the reality (of apartheid) changes," the sanctions imposed by the 1986 Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act "must not be relaxed."

What Mr. de Klerk has said.

De Klerk's reform process still could be reversed, Mandela warned.

But in a formal statement reading to de Klerk's opening speech to parliament in Cape Town on Friday, the ANC "commended" the president on his new reform proposals.

De Klerk said he would soon submit legislation canceling the Land Acts of 1913 and 1936, which have reserved 87 percent of all land for whites; the Group Areas Act of 1966, which forces segregated housing and living; and the Population Registration Act of 1950, which classifies people by race.

"The ANC also praised de Klerk's 'Manifesto for the New South Africa,' which was released at the time of his speech.

"The document contains a long list of basic values and principles intended to form the basis for a new non-racial, democratic constitution and political and economic system.

But the black nationalist organization added that it was "impressed" that de Klerk still rejected the ANC's call for an elected constituent assembly and interim government, saying this amounted to an insistence that "a minority regime, which has no legitimacy, in the eyes of the majority of our people, presides over the transition to democracy."

British Prime Minister John Major called upon the international community to end South Africa's isolation and lift "the economic sanctions which impede its economic progress."

Rescuers search for survivors in villages

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Rescuers struggled through waist-deep snow Saturday to reach people trapped by an earthquake that killed at least 300 people and injured more than 500.

Hundreds of people were believed trapped in remote mountain villages where frail straw and mud huts were flattened by the powerful quake, which rumbled across Afghanistan and Pakistan before dawn Friday.

At least 300 homes in the village of Arandur in the foothills of the Himalayas were destroyed by the tremor, said Abdul Sattar Edhi, who operates a Karachi-based emergency relief organization.

Snow, rockslides and avalanches made some of the narrow and treacherous roads into the region impassable, officials said.

"We don't know how many people are dead or injured. We've sent warm clothes, blankets and medicine, but the problem is access," Edhi said.

Officials in Pakistan said the number of dead and injured was still unclear because the worst-hit areas were in remote, rugged mountainous regions of the Northwest Frontier Province bordering Afghanistan.

The official death toll stood at 164, although government officials said the number was at least 300 and would likely rise.

About 2,000 houses collapsed in the quake that registered 6.8 on the Richter scale, an official said.

"I was sleeping when I woke to people screaming. Women and children were begging for help," said Haji Jehanzeb, whose village of Sultan was violently shaken by the quake centered more than 300 miles away, in the Hindu Kush mountains of Afghanistan.

A colony of mud homes, damp from rain and snow, collapsed less than 100 yards from Jehanzeb's shuddering cement-block home.

"We dug 16 people out. Two were dead, a small child and an old woman," Jehanzeb told journalists who visited his village. "Then there was a loud bang and the electricity was gone."

The quake triggered landslides that tumbled down onto entire villages, officials said. Some were entirely wiped out, state TV said.

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif toured some of the quake-stricken areas by military helicopter Saturday and promised compensation and emergency assistance.

In most of the hardest-hit villages, there are no medical facilities and what does exist is antiquated and inadequate.

Officials said the closest hospital was at least 50 miles away in Chitral.

In Afghanistan, state-run Kabul radio made no mention of damage or casualties. The radio reported Friday night that the quake had killed five people, destroyed dozens of homes and damaged some government buildings.

The radio said Afghan President Najibullah sent condolences to Pakistani President Ghulam Ishaq Khan. Pakistan and Afghanistan have been hostile neighbors for the past 12 years.

Pakistan has supported the Muslim guerrillas fighting to overthrow the Soviet-backed government in Kabul.

Officials said the death toll in Friday's quake was high because steep, fragile sun-baked adobe huts when the tremor struck.

The worst quake to strike the area hit the eastern Pakistani city of Quetta in 1935, leaving an estimated 50,000 people dead.

Salvadoran rebels return 8 missiles

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The leftist Salvadoran rebel organization Saturday returned eight out of 28 Soviet-made anti-aircraft missiles that were illegally sold to them by officers of the Sandinista People's Army.

Maria Marta Valladares, a rebel commander, told reporters at the Managua airport that the rebels were "voluntarily" returned, that nine other SAM-7 and SAM-14 heat-seeking missiles were being turned in at two locations in El Salvador and would later be flown back to Nicaragua.

The arms returned in Managua included four SAM-7s and four SAM-14s, both shoulder-fired missiles. The eight packages were wrapped in white rubber foam, placed in bound black plastic bags and covered by black plastic bags, were laid side by side on the cement floor next to the embassy swimming pool.

Ms. Valladares and the other guerrilla leaders made the delivery. "On hand to receive the weapons were officials from the Interior and Foreign ministries, the Sandinista People's Army and Mexican Ambassador Ricardo Gutierrez, who was chosen as guarantor of the missile delivery.

A communication from the General Secretariat of the Partido Revolucionario Nacional Liberation Front, or FMLN, said 11 other missiles from the lot purchased in Nicaragua already had been fired.

Rebel leaders were to have given the Nicaraguan government a list with serial numbers of the spent missiles and the date and place of each of the 11 firings. But reporters were not given access to that information.

Commander Maria Marta Valladares, also known by her nom de guerre, "Nidia Diaz," said that the FMLN also had fired and would continue to use U.S.-made Redeyes, which like the SAMs are shoulder-fired anti-aircraft missiles. She wouldn't say where the Redeyes had been obtained.

There have been reports that the now-disbanded Contra rebels, who were supported by the United States, sold several Redeyes to the Salvadoran rebels.

The Contra were disbanded last year after conservative-Violeta Chamorro, friendly to the United States, defeated the Sandinistas in Nicaragua's presidential election.

Nicaragua's army is still largely controlled by the Sandinistas, however.

The end of hostilities in Nicaragua was not recognized until nearby El Salvador, now in the 12th year of civil war.

"We reaffirm our commitment to continue using all kinds of weapons, including missiles," in the FMLN's fight against the Salvadoran army, said Ms. Valladares.

Lithuanians mourn another victim

VILNIUS, USSR (AP) — Thousands of grieving Lithuanians returned to the streets of Vilnius Saturday, paying their last respects to a young man killed in the Soviet crackdown on the republic's independence movement.

"The land the pope calls Mary's land was drenched in blood this year, but we hope flowers of freedom and justice will now grow in this land," the Rev. Pranaskevicius Vaicikonis told mourners in the 300-year-old Saint Peter and Paul Church.

Several thousand people marched from a funeral home to the city square to mourn Tomas Vaitkus, 21, the 20th person to die in the Baltics since the Kremlin started using force to crush the independence drives.

The crowd was not as big as a mass funeral procession Jan. 16 for nine of the 13 people beaten, shot or crushed to death by Soviet tanks in a Jan. 13 assault on Lithuania's broadcasting center.

One soldier also died in that assault.

There was more violence Friday night. A parliamentary spokesman said a new joint unit of Soviet police and soldiers beat a 22-year-old Lithuanian man on a Vilnius street.

It was the joint repression involving the joint army-police units, which Baltic leaders see as the Kremlin's attempt to strengthen control over their breakaway republics. Vaitkus died Wednesday of a gunshot wound to the head he suffered at a military checkpoint the day before.

Lithuanian officials said soldiers shot him because he refused to get out of his car. The military said a rebel hit Vaitkus.

Regardless of the circumstances, mourners saw him as another victim of the Kremlin's crackdown.

"We remember all those who died for freedom," Vaicikonis told the mourners, one of whom held the flag of independent Lithuania inside the church.

Tautkus' brown and black coffin lay closed on a pickup truck at the head of a memorial procession through downtown Vilnius. Mourners held candles and shielded the flames from the icy wind and a light snowfall.

Some also held red carnations and orange tulips.

Church bells pealed as a half-dozen pallbearers took the coffin off the truck and carried it to the church.

U.S. position unclear on global warming

By Knight-Ridder News Service

As a major international conference on global warming begins Monday in Washington, the overriding question appears to be: Where does the United States stand? For more than two years, the United States has balked at calls for international actions to reduce the worldwide air pollution that threatens to raise the temperature of the planet.

The United States is the single largest source of such pollution, American negotiators have opposed efforts to develop strict country-by-country limitations, arguing that not enough is known about the threat of global warming and climate change to undertake potentially costly pollution controls.

The U.S. stands alone among major industrial nations. It has been a major obstacle, said Daniel Lashoff, a global warming expert on the Natural Resources Defense Council.

But environmentalists and government officials say they expect delegates at this two-week conference, which is being held under the auspices of the United Nations, to begin drafting the broad outlines of an international convention, or treaty, that will lead to the control of global-warming pollutants.

This is the first step in a process that will lead to a convention, regardless of what the U.S. does, said Rafe Pomeroy, an analyst with the World Resources Institute.

As a result of the buildup of certain industrial and agricultural waste gases in the atmosphere, scientists say, the Earth's average temperature will quite likely rise by about four degrees Fahrenheit by 2020 and could rise as much as 10 degrees Fahrenheit by 2070.

Gallery marks 50th with gifts

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Paul and Daisy Soros "Boy in a Red Waistcoat" is among more than 320 gifts being presented to the National Gallery of Art in honor of its 50th anniversary, the museum said Saturday.

An exhibition of the paintings, sculpture, prints and books from 150 donors will begin March 12 and run through June 16, the museum said.

The Cezanne portrait, which is considered one of the artist's finest, has been promised by Paul and Mary Mellon. Mellon is a son of the late Treasury Secretary Andrew W. Mellon, one of the gallery's founders, and was formerly its president.

The Mellons also have promised a 375-year-old still life by the Dutch painter Jan Brueghel the Elder, "A Basket of Mixed Flowers with a Vase of Flowers." They also are donating a 1493 edition of Hartmann Schedel's "Nuremberg Chronicle," a book which contains 1,209 woodcut illustrations.

An anonymous donor is presenting the oldest painting, a recently rediscovered wooden panel of Saint Anthony, the Abbot and Saint Bernardino that Jacopo Bellini, an early Venetian artist, painted in 1459 or 1460.

The gifts also include Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec's "Ballerina" and "Dancing the Bolero" in Chicago, painted by Betsy Cushing Whitney.

J. Carter Brown, the museum's director, is giving a pen and ink drawing, "Study of an Eagle" by Titian.

The exhibition is supported by a grant from the GTE Corp.

1 dead after bus goes off mountain

JOLIETT, Pa. (AP)—A bus carrying a high school drill team plunged over a mountainside early Saturday, killing one adult and injuring 25 other people, authorities said.

The chartered bus lost control as it traveled on U.S. 209 near this eastern Pennsylvania town and slid 150 feet down an embankment, said State Police Capt. Lawrence Kestelbaum. The bus remained upright.

The man who was killed was hurled through the windshield, he said. His identity was not immediately released.

The bus was carrying about 40 students and adults, Kestelbaum said. The injured, including the driver, were taken to hospitals in Pottsville, Hershey and Danville. The extent of the injuries was not immediately known.

The children were from Salisbury High School in Lehigh County, near Pottsville. They were on their way to a tug and train competition in Elizabethtown.

Joliett is about 35 miles northeast of Harrisburg.

The Earth's atmosphere has a natural ability to trap heat and keep the planet warm enough for life, the so-called greenhouse effect. But those waste gases are exacerbating the effect.

Scientists predict that the warming could change weather patterns and lead to droughts, coastal flooding and other adverse effects on large areas of the planet.

The analysis indicate that there are already enough of these greenhouse gases in the air to cause some global warming.

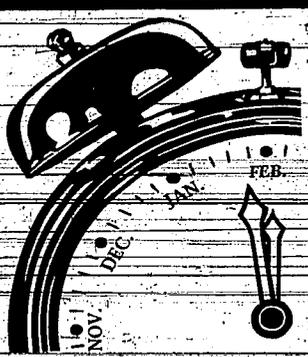

limit the buildup and the future impact of the greenhouse effect.

So, what will the U.S. position be? State Dept. spokesman said, "We want to get a framework agreement... that sets the protocol for international cooperation."

Local groups offer ways to treat your sweeties

With Valentine's Day on its way, it's time to start thinking about treating your sweetie. And several community organizations would like to give you ideas on how to show your love and help a worthy cause, too.

For sweethearts with a sweet tooth, the Twin Falls Junior Club suggests you send a candy box of homemade fudge. The candy and your message will be hand-delivered to your Valentine on Feb. 14, and all proceeds will be donated to the Twin Falls School District for purchase of drug education kits.

Cost is $5 for box. Junior Club members are taking orders now through Feb. 13, or you can call Karen Poe at 733-6664 or Vickie Owings at 734-205.

Jerome Special Olympics will sell Valentine Balloon Bouquets Feb. 13 and Feb. 14 at Jerome High School. Each will cost $3, with proceeds going to support the 1991 Special Olympics Team. Delivery will be available, and a super sweet will be attached to each of the first 50 bouquets sold. To order, call Linda at 324-7990.

An anti-war demonstration takes place quietly at the Ketchum Town Square as a small group offers their opposing viewpoint by displaying an American flag on Monday.

Giving peace a chance

Weekly Ketchum vigils denounce war, not troops

By Julie Fanselow Times-News writer

In the Vietnam era, anti-war demonstrations ripped apart the country and divided the generations. Two decades later, parents and children in some families stand united in opposition to the war with Iraq.

Ketchum physician Randy Herrmann, 46, and his 17-year-old daughter Amy were among about 60 people gathered at Ketchum Town Square last week for a candlelight vigil in support of peace in the Middle East.

The vigils have been held each Monday at 5 p.m. since the start of Operation Desert Storm. Organizers say the vigils will continue weekly until the war ends. There were no flaming American flags and no profane sloganeering as the participants huddled close together in the cold, windy twilight. In fact, the 20-minute event was so quiet that people standing just outside the group had to strain to hear.

A few participants spoke, their tone subdued but their statements resolute. "We are gentle, angry people and we are singing for our lives, the group chanted. Later, forming a circle, many arms linked, they sang "Let There Be Peace on Earth."

A quartet of counterdemonstrators stood about 25 feet away. Two held a large American flag. Another carried a sign that, referring to the Iraqis, read "Nuke 'em 'til They Glow, Shoot 'em in the Dark."

Seven in the peace group invited the men to join the vigil. The counterdemonstrators declined, telling a reporter that although they had nothing against the peace activists, mingling would only lead to conflict.

Such gingerly standoffs are a home

Would-be activists quietly oppose U.S. foreign policy

By Julie Fanselow Times-News writer

In larger, more cosmopolitan cities across the United States, peace activists have held vigils, occupied state legislatures and marched for an end to the war with Iraq.

But in smaller, conservative communities — towns like Twin Falls — the legacy of the Vietnam War has paralyzed would-be activists.

"I'm afraid their opposition will be seen as anti-American, those who disdain the war are doing so quietly and on their own, with no organized support.

"I think generally citizens of the Magic Valley don't really question the acts of government unless it's in relation to domestic or agricultural policy," said Rev. Huston of Twin Falls.

Huston was formerly coordinator of the local Fellowship of Reconciliation. The spiritually based peace-making organization remains active worldwide, but Huston said it stopped functioning in the Magic Valley a year to 18 months ago after peace movement is not a monolithic force. Some who oppose the war are against all wars, but others decry only this particular conflict.

"I don't think anybody cares for Saddam Hussein," Herrmann said. "But how many people are we going to kill to get one man?"

"It's very easy to say this man is bad," Herrmann added. "Every person in the peace movement thinks he is diabolical."

"But we are doing exactly what Saddam Hussein wants us to do. He wants to be in a war with the United States because it is boosting his status as a hero among Arabs," Herrmann said. "The better that America will be able to impose stabilization in the volatile Middle East is a myth," Herrmann said. "We'll be lucky at this point to come out of this with a situation better than we had going in."

He pointed out another difference between the current peace movement and the Vietnam-era protests, and the likely reason protests started even before the war in Iraq.

"We have the benefit this time around of knowing how misled we were in Vietnam by our leaders," he said. "We understand even more clearly how foolish we were."

Another reason peace activists will not blame American troops: Many who oppose the war think scores of U.S. service personnel are only in the military because it seemed more economically appealing than working for $4 an hour at a fast-food restaurant.

"It's none of us who will take the first bullet," Herrmann said. "It's some person who has found it necessary to be in the Army, probably to subsist."

In the war's first few days, many Americans — encouraged by glowing re-

Learning the hard way not to scoff about fire and ice

When the cold weather first hit, I scoffed at those dummers suffering from frozen pipes because they had failed to leave some water running.

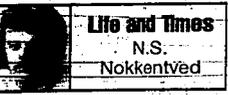

But my high horse soon stumbled. I had left water running on the back porch, secure in the belief that MY pipes wouldn't freeze. But I had neglected to check the cistern that supplies my house.

After two days of a constantly running faucet it ran dry. While little water was left in the pipes froze, and the next time the pump came on it burned out.

That was Friday night. Saturday morning I wandered down into the dark, subzero basement to see why I had no water. Surely my pipes couldn't have frozen? The ice and snow on the steps helped my descent as I skipped the last four steps — unintentionally.

I soon determined the pump had quit working. It was plugged in, turned on, but not turning. Hmm, it said. So did I.

Perhaps the water in it was just frozen. So I set up an electric heater. It ran all day. No luck.

Life and Times N.S. Nokkentved

Sunday I took the pump out, but the water in the pipes that fed the pump was not frozen. I gushed out at me when I broke the seal on the pump.

So on to the mitering. I gurgled hoses from the farm hydrant to the hose spigot on the house. Great idea, but doomed to fail.

The hose was frozen solid with water left from the last summer watering. I wrestled it into the bathtub and poured hot water on it. Finally water gurgled through the foggy green tees.

The spigot of course was frozen as well and in fact broken by the frost. Another day gone and still no water. By now I was beginning to envy those who merely had some freezer pipes.

If I ever got this water running, I would never again look down on people who forget to leave water running in the cold.

Monday I bought a new pump motor, but, alas, it didn't work.

I manged, with the landlord's help, to get the outside spigot thawed and repaired, the hose thawed and connected. But by then, the pipes under the house had frozen.

I placed a heater under the house to thaw those pipes. But then I faced a new dilemma: How to get the water back into the house, it would quickly freeze if it didn't run. With the frozen pipes in the house, the water from the house wouldn't run.

A small leak at the junction, however, created enough flow as well as an impromptu ice sculpture on the outside of the house, and it did enough flow to keep the hose from freezing.

Soon water gurgled and spat in the kitchen sink. Hallelujah.

For the first time in four days, I could wash the dishes and take a shower, to say nothing of a working flush toilet.

After my shower I left for a couple of hours to visit a friend, being careful to leave a faucet running.

When I returned, the hose had frozen anyway, and I was back where I started.

The next day, I bought the right parts to get the pump working — I think. I wonder only what else can be frozen or what else can go wrong.

Let's see else have I scoffed at? What? My notes from the wood stove? — couldn't be a chimney fire. Indeed, I had scoffed at those poor unfortunate who neglected to clean their chimneys before the cold set in. But I cleaned my chimney — carefully.

Outside, thick dark grey smoke billowed from the top of the chimney. A few moments later the smoke cleared and orange flames stood from the chimney's top. It was quite literally on fire.

ISU Middle East class will start at later date

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho State University class titled "Middle East Religion and Conflict" will begin March 15 instead of an earlier date, as previously announced.

Registration remains open for the three-credit class, which will be taught by ISU's Tahmoores Sarraf, author of "Cry of a Nation: The Saga of the Iranian Revolution." The course will continue on a Friday night-Saturday morning schedule through April 14.

The class will deal with the religious problem and the cultural diversity of Islamic societies, Sarraf says. "The disputes of Islamic countries will be examined in the context of the Judeo-Christian societies and U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf area, specifically."

Cost of the class is $217.50 for undergraduates and $274.50 for graduate students. Students will meet from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Fridays and from 8 a.m. to noon Saturdays in Room 106 of the Shiloh Building at the College of Southern Idaho. No classing will be held March 22-23.

For more information, call the ISU Twin Falls Resident Center at 734-4478.

Newsletter offers information for flashlight collectors

Q. I have some old flashlights dating from the 1920s. Can you tell me where collectors of such things, and if there may be any contacted?

A. Collectors of flashlights can be contacted through the Flashlight Collectors Newsletter, which offers an annual subscription for $10 from Dorsey, Calif. 90241; phone 213-861-6247.

Q. I have a number of Avon bottles. Is there a price guide I can consult to learn the value of such bottles, or is there an Avon collectors club?

A. Send for a copy of the 11th Edition of "The Avon Bottle Collectors Encyclopedia," by Bud Hastings, available for $21.95 postpaid from L-W Books Sales, 806 E. Gas City, Ind. 46933; phone 800-777-6450. Also write to the National Association of Avon Collectors, in care of the editor, Bill Averis, Box 68, West Newton, Ind. 46783, enclosing $15 for an annual subscription to its monthly publication, or send $2 for a sample copy.

Q. What can you tell me about old bewdy house tokens once used in trade for the services of ladies of the night? A dealer has some for sale but cannot tell me anything about them. Also, who deals in old trade tokens from stores, saloons and other establishments, and who can tell me the value of the various tokens I've collected?

A. Bewdy house tokens found at flea markets or collectible shops are for the most part modern creations for the market, many pieces often with legends or words commemorating the shop, although some dealers sell them as genuine original examples or authentic reproductions of originals.

Genuine tokens possibly used by houses of ill repute are usually used at the bar for drinks rather than for the ladies' services. This is not to say that such trade tokens didn't exist, but unless such pieces can be proven to be authentic with positive documentation, one cannot assume they are real.

Examples sold as copies are usually reasonably priced, and they can make interesting novelties as good luck pieces. Bewdy house tokens believed to be authentic include French ones that portray a female, but such tokens are scarce. Tokens from before 1950 have a denomination but little or no indication of the type of business they represent.

Write to token dealer Rich Harzog, enclosing photocopies of the front and back of any tokens you wish to check out, in care of World Economics, Box 144327N, Rockford, Ill. 61110-0643. Also available from Trade Economics Press is the book "Trade Tokens of Illinois: A Second Edition," by Ore H. Vacker, with pictures and prices of countless examples from: hotels, diners, saloons, clubs, taverns, cafes etc. The book is $23.75 postpaid. Or call Harzog at 815-226-0771.

Among his original bewdy house tokens, Harzog has two from Chicago establishments — one from the French Palace at 81 Union St. circa 1880 and the other dating from circa 1910. An embossed Mrs. Feany, 2026 Dearborn St. on the front and 106 on the back, which was probably used in trade for whiskey.

Saloon tokens along with pleasure palaces and related advertisements can be found in "Saloons of the American West," by Robert L. Brown, available for $18.50 postpaid from Sundance Publications Ltd., 250 Broadway, Denver, Colo. 80203; phone 303-777-2880.

Tokens of various sorts, shapes and sizes can be found in a variety of materials, including brass, bronze, aluminum, copper, nickel, steel, white metal, fiber, rubber, silver, zinc, cardboard, lead, plastic, Evers glass. Two dozen brass brooches (most obviously reproductions) are offered for $12 postpaid from Charles Gardner, 7741 E. Shields, Fresno, Calif. 93727; phone 209-291-5620 for information and the availability of such "warehouse finds."

A newly chosen coordinator moved from the area, who is sitting on the sidelines of the Gulf dispute.

"We have so many varying degrees of how people feel," Hondo said, noting that people want peace in the Middle East but they also want to keep the troops now that war has started.

"I don't want to make the same kinds of mistakes," Hondo said. "People carry a lot of guilt about what happened in Vietnam."

A single peace vigil was held in front of the Cassia County Courthouse in Burley on Jan. 14, the day before the United Nations imposed a deadline for Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait. About 30 people attended, Hondo said.

Donald McMurrain of Twin Falls spoke out against war weeks before it began, placing a sign in his front yard, which read: "President Bush: Don't trade young American blood for old Iraq oil."

McMurrain said he took the sign down as soon as the war started, but he's now working on a new one urging a cease-fire and negotiations.

He said many people thanked him for putting up the first sign. But he attributed the lack of an organized peace movement to our conservative view we have in this valley. I feel like the lone stranger here."

McMurrain also said he "support our troops" movement has quieted in public protest of the war. "We support the troops, too, but we want to bring them home safe and alive," he added.

The push to support the troops is one legacy of Vietnam. But McMurrain sees another.

"We have progressed so far in our thinking," he said. "Our past history makes us doubt our government, no matter what they tell us."

"Saddam is a madman. But I have to wonder, as soon as he's gone, will we find another one?"

McMurrain said he has spent many hours watching television accounts of the war. "I'll tell you what bothers me the most," he said. "They treat this war like a video game. There's no human compassion, no human feeling. It's so cold."

"There's nothing more precious than life," he added. "Even Iraq life. They don't help what that man is doing."

"To say all you care about oppression only when it's in your interest — to me, that's very hypocritical," she said.

Ulahwi practices Native American religion and said she and some other people plan a "sweat for peace" when the weather breaks. Sweat lodges are part of Native American religious ceremonies and say the ritual cleanses the body of bad spirits.

In the meantime, Ulahwi said she is praying "that divine enlightenment will come to Saddam Hussein and George Bush... that they will be willing to sit down and talk and say we made a mistake. Let's correct it."

CSI plans 'U.S. Awareness Day'

TWIN FALLS — In response to the war in the Persian Gulf, the College of Southern Idaho plans a U.S. Awareness Day program at noon Wednesday in the Eagle's Nest of the Taylor Administration Building.

A panel will discuss effects of the war on students. Paula Edmondson-Hollnagel will serve as moderator and others participating will include CSI staff Ned Vaughn, John Martin and Dave Perkins, a representative of the National Guard, and two students on call in the guard.

Students plan a wall mural with newspaper and magazine information on the war, as well as photographs of CSI students who have been activated. The CSI Student Senate will send at least 100 letters to students now serving in the Gulf.

The public is welcome to take part in the events.

Old-fashioned quilt-tying bee set

JEROME — An old-fashioned quilt-tying bee is set for 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Feb. 14 in the Lauer Day-Saints stake center in Jerome.

A quilt-tying bee is expected to be completed that day. The quilts will then be donated to the St. Benedict's Medical Center long-term care unit and the Holly residential care homes in Jerome.

Quilt tops will be completed prior to the tying bee. Donations of large pieces of washable fabrics, bonded batting and yarn are needed. Those attending the Feb. 14 event are asked to bring their own thimble, scissors and yarn needles.

Participants in the 11-hour quilt-tying event will be entertained by musicians from various churches and will have a potluck evening meal. Participants should bring their own sack lunches. Nursery care will be provided.

The stake center is located north of the Jerome High School. Additional information can be obtained by calling coordinator Raona Kessler at 324-4952 or Orval Mauldin at 324-8460.

Peace

Stoppel, a member of the Snake River Alliance, added that his organization is likely to increase its anti-war activities in the coming weeks and months.

"As one of Idaho's peace organizations, we can't sit still," he said. "This is every bit as important as nuclear weapons."

"It might take the peace movement to end this," Stoppel added. "That's what it took in Vietnam."

Stoppel said people are now coming out of the shock that accompanied the war's start, and he predicted disension will build.

It's people's responsibility to learn to live with wildlife habitat

DRAWING THE LION: It was bound to happen sooner or later, and finally it did. Two weeks ago, a mountain lion killed a human in Colorado. The author's first presumption was the case for a young man jogging outside the mountain town of Idaho Springs. His body showed signs of a lion attack. The suspected lion was later shot and killed. Within the last two weeks, three of these magnificent wild animals have been hunted down and executed in Colorado mountain communities: the first for killing the jogger, the second for killing a cocker spaniel and, just days ago, the third for being in someone's chicken coop.

It's extremely unusual for a lion to attack a human, but not a dog or chicken. "It's basic wildlife biology," Todd Mahabury of the Colorado Division of Wildlife says. "It's real, hard-living out there. Mountain lions are known as pumas — can be injured or die taking prey or fighting other lions or defending territory. They are extremely efficient predators at the top of the food chain — and extremely opportunistic. If they can take someone's dog they will do it." He says the cocker spaniel incident (in the Colorado Spokane area) was prompted by people feeding raccoons — natural prey for pumas. Lions have been known to come onto people's porches to take a raccoon. "People's actions that result in conflicts between people and wildlife. But the bigger problem is that people continue to take more and more of the wildlife habitat.

Road Closes Earthright

People need to take into account the needs of wildlife when they're considering building roads, houses, trails or any kind of development that invades wildlife habitat. It's people's responsibility to learn to live with the habitat — not vice versa — which means you don't feed the wild animals and you don't let dogs run loose." Add what about keeping animals for business or pleasure in semi-wilderness areas where they become unusual prey for the natural inhabitants? "Normally you're not allowed to build in a flood plain, says a DOW's Mahabury. "It's not inappropriate to look at zoning with respect to wildlife." So where do we draw the line on what lions can really eat? A world filled with coconuts, spaniels, chickens and joggers?

R.I.P. BIODEGRADABLE: For environmentally-minded pet owners (or rather, former pet owners) "You pet deserve the dignity and respect of a Pet Heaven burial," says Bio-Pak Associates of Farmingdale, N.Y., which makes "biodegradable" pet containers. It's a pet coffin made of cardboard. The bird or mouse-sized model costs $3.99; a cat-size one, $9.95.

Of course, the other alternative is to make your own biodegradable pet casket out of a cardboard box or paper bag. "Which I've done for my dear departed kitties," says Bergstrom, "I like pet coffin made of cardboard. Although we don't like to think about it in terms of our favorite furry or feathered friends, it's only natural that they go back into the cycle of life by decomposing and nourishing life again."

RE-FUELLING: The Cima Kagaki Co., a manufacturer of food containers, says it has developed a technology to recycle plastic foam containers into fuel. In February, the company hopes to market a device that will combine plastic foam into a powder that will burn in industrial boilers.

PATRIOTISM AND PLASTIC: As precious (and polluting) oil spills into the Persian Gulf, think about that same precious resource lost forever each time we toss away a plastic container. Think about the earth and sea that must be disrupted to tap new oil fields, and the wilderness and wildlife destroyed by industrial invasion and spills. Think about the blood now being shed in a war caused in large part by our insatiable plastic container addiction. Think about the waste that must be disposed of or recycled. We can avoid disposable plastics by packing our own lunches (to avoid plastic take-out containers), bringing our own coffee mug to work, storing leftovers in covered dishes (not wraps) and shopping for products that are turnable, biodegradable or easily recyclable containers.

A NEW LEAF FOR GREENPEACE: Publishing this magazine is a poor substitute for visiting everyone in the United States and Canada and explaining what counts in the age of environmental crisis — the introduction in the brand-new Greenpeace magazine. The attractive, redesigned publication of the organization that claims a worldwide membership of 2 million, promises to raise consciousness and issues — such as what's really happening at Chernobyl — plus provide the best ideas like how to stop waste incinerators from being built in your neighborhood. Compared to other environmental magazines, Greenpeace will "take the most strident position in defense of the planet," editor Andrea Carothers says. A donation of $20 or more to Greenpeace includes a year's subscription. Write Greenpeace, 1438 U St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20009.

Developing registry for sperm donors is project best left alone

DEAR ABBY: Just before my only child's passing away, he informed me that while he was in college (a medical student) he had been a frequent sperm donor. I cannot begin to tell you how priceless it would be for me to locate some of my genetic grandchildren.

There are many registries for adoptees and their natural parents, but to my knowledge, there are none for sperm donors and their donor offspring. I am hoping to develop such a registry in an effort to locate these precious children and help others in this situation.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

You to discuss the legal ramifications of your idea with an attorney before progressing further with this project.

Donor confidentiality is one of the reasons artificial insemination has been so successful in this country. (Last year, between 50,000 and 80,000 women benefited from artificial insemination in the U.S.) If sperm donors knew there was a chance that their identities would later be revealed, they would not donate - which would greatly reduce the number of candidates (and the genetic characteristics) from which prospective mothers and their physicians would be able to choose.

DEAR ABBY: I am an American Army officer stationed in Korea. I am 38 years old. While I have been stationed overseas, my mother continues to open my mail, even after I have politely asked her to stop.

She reads "Dear Abby" faithfully in the Chicago Tribune, so would you please print this with a little note from you admonishing her for this practice?

CAPTAIN IN KOREA
DEAR CAPTAIN: Gladly. Dear Mother, I'm sure you love your son, but you should also respect his privacy. Motherhood does not give you the right to open your son's mail. So if you want his respect, you will stop this violation of his privacy, which surely must demean you in his eyes. - Abby

P.S. Captain, why not instruct your friends to send their letters to you in care of someone who can be trusted?

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to "Requited in Florida," who found it offensive when fellow diners proceeded to blow their noses loudly at the table.

I, too, have been raised in a family who were taught to excuse themselves to the restroom when they felt the need to do any nose blowing. Let me share this true story with "Florida."

My family and I had gone to dinner at a buffet-style restaurant. The man sitting behind my grandmother began to loudly blow his nose. Grandmother turned to him and asked sternly, "Are you through?"

He then replied, "No, I think I'll go back for some more chicken."

OBESITY IN OLDER CATS

QUESTION: I have an older cat who is on the plump side. Is it unhealthy for an old cat to be too fat?

ANSWER: Fat cats may be amusing in comic strips, but they are not so fortunate in real life. Obesity predisposes the older cat to heart trouble, constipation, thin intestine, and general lethargy. Obesity is one of the greatest causes of shortened life.

Once a cat is overweight, reducing is difficult. It is much easier and healthier to PREVENT this condition. There are no hard and fast rules about how much to feed a cat. Its diet has to be adjusted to its lifestyle. High-strung cats and outdoor cats, for instance, require more food than those which are lethargic or lie around indoors all day.

Weather prophet Punxsutawney Phil is held by his handler Jim Means of Punxsutawney, Pa.

Punxsutawney Phil spies shadow, predicting 6 more weeks of winter

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil emerged from his hole on Saturday to see Punxsutawney, Pa. emerge from his hole, heated burrow and predict six more weeks of winter.

The groundhog cast a shadow over the nation after his handler coaxed him from a specially made tunnel into the clear dawn. "Hopefully, this time he's wrong," said Dirk Boehmer, of Stroudsburg.

The most devoted of Phil's followers, the 14 businessmen who comprise the celebrated rodent's Inner Circle, gathered in-top hats on stage with the town's "seer of seers."

"This is crazy. I'd never do it again. It's too cold," said Mary Beth Papa of "Cresson," whose brother talked her into making the trip.

At 7:27 a.m., the exact moment of the sunrise, Inner Circle President James H. Means copped three times over Punxsutawney Phil's yellow door. Thunder Bud Dumket reached in, gently woke Phil, and lifted the squirming rodent.

Means twice held Phil up to his face and softly questioned him, held the woodchuck to his ear for the answer and signaled for a proclamation.

Judge Edwin Snyder, reading from the scroll, reported to the audience of college students, families, tourists and reporters that Phil signaled in "clear groundhogness: 'There's a shadow-down-there. Not especially dark or strong, but enough-to-call-for-six-more-weeks-of-winter.'"

The crowd, which began gathering about two hours before sunrise, cheered and booped before breaking and drifting back to their cars.

Art Cassidy, 65, of Punxsutawney, displayed the groundhog by his go for on his hands helping to build Phil's year-round home at the public library. He is a devoted Phil fan.

"It's absolutely true. He's never wrong," said Cassidy, accompanied by granddaughters Erin, 9, and Amy, 8.

Some people are cynical about the town's promotion of "Groundhog Day and sale of souvenirs such as woodchuck mugs and T-shirts. But Phil wasn't invented by a marketing manager.

The town first celebrated Groundhog Day in 1887.

Bill Null, secretary of the Groundhog Club, said all of the town's 150 "hotel and motel rooms were booked and many more of Phil's fans stayed with relatives or friends.

Japanese utility wants to get rid of tele-porn

The Baltimore Sun

TOKYO — Telephone sex has come to Japan, and it has gray-suited executives of the world's biggest corporation squirming — with embarrassment.

Scenes of phone-a-moan—lives have taken over more than one-fourth of the information of Dial Q, a monthly direct-dial service that at first provided sports records, advertisements and medical advice that blocks access to Dial Q2—the customer's request.

They also have prompted a flood of newspaper and magazine editorials demanding an end to the pornographic telephone schemes.

Most have made a point of mentioning that, while NTT was legally privatized in 1986, the company has not yet managed to sell most of its stock and is still owned mainly by the government.

Some articles have portrayed the telephone sex lines as the product of attempts by Hisashi Shinto, the veteran executive brought in to guide NTT's transition from public to private, to shake up the mind-set he inherited from the government and inject some life into a stuffy bureaucracy that was about to face competition for the first time in its history.

Minor Keizai Shimbun, the newspaper of Japan's conservative power elite, reported that Shinto brought lingerie advertising to one board meeting and told the company's directors that they should, "have the courage to sell even women's underwear by telephone."

"The daring of Dial Q2 was born of Mr. Shinto's spirit," the article said.

Shinto resigned in March 1987 after being accused and charged with bribery in the Recruit stock-for-firm scandal that rocked Japanese politics that year.

NTT has decided to cancel the obscene call lines, an official of the company's business department told The Baltimore Sun last week.

But making a decision to pull the plug on porn, the phone company and other officials are finding it easier than finding a legal way to carry out the decision.

Japan's legal definition of pornography, which depends heavily on any display of public areas and leads censors to sandpaper out parts of pictures in imported girls' magazines, leaves plenty of scope for a flourishing trade in perfectly legal mid-core videotapes, magazines and other porn media.

Much of that is controlled by the yakuza—Japan's struggling, in-rotted zoot-suited mobsters, who also control most prostitution and drugs here, as well as many kinds of legitimate entertainment.

Most commentators assume that Yakuza syndicates also are behind most of the large-a-moan lines.

Being largely visual in its definitions, the standard has proved difficult to apply to phone lines that charge about $40 to $50 for an hour or so of talking dirty.

"NTT has not yet come up with concrete measures," to unplug the pornographic lines, the business department official acknowledged, partly because it has not decided on "a screening system" to determine what kinds of calls are unacceptable.

Mugger sends thank you note

BOSTON (AP) — A mugger—mouse letter said—"I needed to get wanted his victim to know he home, and I know I had asked was grateful for the money he you to help me, you would have stole, so he sent a thank you note, so I thank you."

Pancare's wallet was stolen about two weeks ago as he walked a friend to a subway stop in Boston. He got the wallet back in the mail on Friday — along with the note.

"I want to thank you for my $13 you had it in it," the anonymous mugger said, he pursued him, but could not catch him.

Giant sarong woven by Thai

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A stitch in Thai has produced a 123-yard-long, men's, white and red checkered sarong, which took 700 women 111 days to produce, was unveiled at a ceremony Sunday in northeastern Thailand and government officials said they believe it is world-record length.

The sarong, which got its final stitch on Friday, was presented at the opening of a new government office building in Nakorn Ratchasima province, whose capital is about 120 miles to the east of Bangkok.

The women voluntarily wove it to mark the opening of the office and to publicize the local weaving industry, said Korn Epparatnong, a minister in the prime minister's office who attended the ceremony.

Sinead O'Connor won't be at awards

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sinead O'Connor, the Irish singer who's generated as much controversy as record sales, says she won't attend the Grammy Awards because she doesn't like the music industry's values.

"I signed my record deal when I was 17 and it has taken me this long to gather enough information and mull it over and reach a conclusion," O'Connor said in a letter sent Friday to the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences.

The 27-year-old singer, known for her distinctive close-cropped hairstyle, was nominated in four Grammy categories for her album, "I Do Not Want What I Haven't Got." She was scheduled to perform her hit song, "Nothing Compares 2 U," at the Feb. 20 ceremony.

"We are allowing ourselves to be portrayed as being in some way more important, more special than the very people we are supposed to be helping — by the way we dress, by the cars we travel in, by the 'glamorificatedness' of our shows and by a lot of what we say in our music," O'Connor wrote.

Academy President Michael Greene questioned O'Connor's decision Friday.

"We applaud that Sinead feels so strongly about these issues and believe that her convictions only add to the seriousness of her work," Greene said. "But she may be misguided."

Nothing has changed but a nap for writer Michener

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Writer James Michener, who turns 84 this weekend, says the passage of time doesn't mean he's put out of lustre. It does, however, make him a little tired. "I don't feel like an elder statesman," said the author of works such as "Hawaii," "Chesapeake," "Centennial," and "Texas." "I am working very diligently. The only change in my life is that I take a nap in the afternoon."

Michener is ending his first winter as a teaching assistant at Eckerd College. His birthday is Sunday. Michener and his wife, Mari, moved to the Eckerd campus last fall and plan to spend each October through February here as part of the school's Academy of Senior Professionals.

Powers says Americans are most wasteful of all

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actress Stefanie Powers says the extinction of wildlife is a sign of the wastefulness of modern life.

"The destruction of an animal species is the symptom of a disease that is killing us all," she said Friday during an appearance at a department store to benefit the William Holden Wildlife Foundation in Kenya.

"There is a malignancy of neglect that is destroying the infrastructure of our lives," she said. "In this country, we are the greatest consumers and the largest producers of garbage in the world, and we are more wasteful than any society that ever existed in the history of the world."

Powers is in Nashville appearing with actor Robert Wagner in the play "Love Letters."

Song is just a coincidence, but that's OK, singer says

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Entertainer Louise Mandrell says it's a coincidence that she has a military tribute in her upcoming musical production at Opryland USA while the country is at war.

The show, "Love My Country," was written before war broke out in the Middle East, the singer-dancer instrumentalist said.

"It's going to look as if I put it in because of this — and that's OK because the men deserve it — but the truth is it was already planned because I am really pro-military," she said.

The production includes a military tribute with twirling rifles and uniformed performers representing each branch of the armed forces.

Connecticut governor gets in some zzzzzz's

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — No one can accuse Gov. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of being asleep at the wheel, but he concedes he sometimes snoozes in the back seat.

The governor's sleeping arrangements became a public issue Thursday night when Weicker told an amused audience at an economic conference of a telephone call to his secretary that morning from an irate constituent.

"I'd been traveling along the Merritt Parkway somewhere between Greenwich and Hartford, and he had noticed the governor sleeping in the back seat of the (official state) car and he didn't think that was very appropriate," Weicker said.

"But I've got to tell you people I can't sleep in the governor's residence," Weicker said. "The water's turned off, and there's no sleeping there."

Workers are repairing the leaky plumbing and plaster at the official executive residence in Hartford's West End, and Weicker said he might be unable to move in until March 1.

While renovations continue, the former senator, who left office because the state's first independent governor since before the Civil War has split his time between his home in Greenwich and his in-laws' home in West Hartford, where he frequently stays during the week.

Former winner knocks more than 5 minutes off record in annual event

“We were all together with three kilometers to go... and fifth-place finisher Ken Daigh, and then (Ken) McCarthy made his move.”

SALT VALLEY — As more than 500 skiers gathered around the starting line for the 16th annual Gatorade Boulder Mountain Tour, there was a delightfully familiar feeling in the air, a feeling that has become a trademark of this race. This was cross-country ski racing in the Ketchum/Salt Valley tradition. Fun was in, stress was out.

McCarthy, who won the Tour in 1987 and 1988, turned on the burners to take second place in 1:13:17. Tuck Miller of Boise, Bill Nurge and Ken Daigh of Ketchum took fourth, fifth and sixth places, respectively.

John Aalberg, 30, from Salt Lake City, took advantage of perfect conditions to clock a blazing 1:09:29 on the 18.6-mile course. His time bettered the course record by more than five minutes, set last year by U.S. Ski Team member, Audun Engstad.

Tigers' victory clinches bye in A-2 playoffs

By Brad Drexler
 Times-News writer

JEROME — The Jerome Tigers clinched all the important parts of the Class A-2 basketball season by beating the Wood River Wolves 52-42 Saturday night.

The Tigers assured themselves of a first-round bye against Buhl and Wood River in district playoffs to determine who will go to the state tournament later this month.

Jerome trailed for the entire second and third quarters and finally grabbed the lead near the end with 5:47 on the clock. It took the lead for good with 3:30 left in the game.

The Tigers outscored Wood River 19-10 in the fourth quarter with senior Matt Williams leading the charge with five of his 20 points.

“The same thing happened up there,” said Jerome Jim Snuffer, referring to the game played in Hiley last month.

Wood River held the lead for much of the game in Hiley, but Jerome battled back and won it in the closing minute.

This time about three minutes remained when Williams broke the final 49-49 tie. Nearly a minute later, Bart Hamilton hiked the lead to three, and Brett Walter's field goal took the Tigers out of reach at 54-49.

Walter and Hamilton had late first-quarter buckets to give Jerome an 11-6 advantage. Clint Owen changed that Wrestling powerhouses show no signs of slipping

By Ron Gates
 Times-News writer

WENDELL — If the balance of power is truly beginning to shift in Idaho high school wrestling it was far from evident at the Magic Valley Classic Tournament Saturday.

The strengths of the top powers on hand in each classification from the 1990 state event came to the fore with Highland, fourth among A-1 teams last year, shading A-2 runner-up Kuna 184-174. Four-time defending state A-3 champ Parma finished third with 153 points.

Fourth-tier teams rounded out most of the balance of the top 10 as Minico and Twin Falls truffled Parma in the team standings and Jerome, Burley and Wendell finished seventh through ninth, respectively.

“You never like taking fourth,” admitted the Spartan's Brad Cooper. “But our kids wrestled well this weekend. Our Mijico Invitational (scheduled for Feb. 15 and 16) will be another one just like this. A lot of four-team coming in.”

Despite getting individual titles from just two of five finalists the Rams held off the Kavenum who, led by defending state 152-pound champion Jason Palmer, garnered four championships in as many tries. Kuna saw two more wrestlers place third.

Parma's overall ability was highlighted in 145-pound where undefeated Steve Weber needed just under three minutes to pin an upset on Highland's previously unbeaten Trevor Bell, last year's state A-1 runner-up at 119.

Not everything pretty in Eagles' win

By Larry Hovey
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — College of Southern Idaho continued its march toward hosting the Region 18 basketball tournament Saturday night but it was ugly for a while.

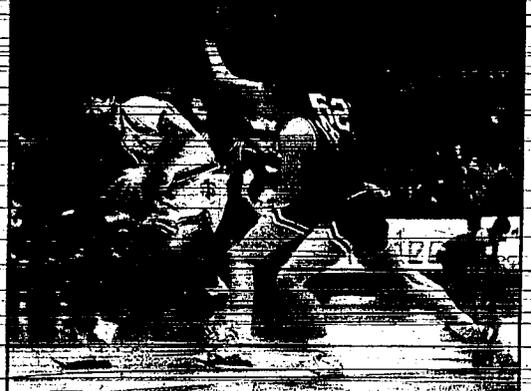

“If we had wanted to win it pretty, we could have,” said Coach Fred Trenkle, pleased to have that 10th conference win of the season in hand. “We didn't have to play the combinations we did.”

What happened was, CSI jumped ahead by as much as 34 points early in the first half and then saw the stubborn Badgers push back with 33 points in the final seven minutes to make it 89-72 at the buzzer.

Those last seven minutes, of course, vexed a large crowd that had Wendy Burgess on its mind.

“I knew what Coach (Elliott) Anderson was telling his guys — we don't want this crowd eating hamburgers on us,” said Trenkle. “I was at the other end telling them we aren't going to stall offensively. You go out and hold them defensively.”

Meanwhile, following up on the neck injury to Dixie guard Quincy Lewis Friday night, Trenkle said it was his understanding that Lewis was discharged from the hospital late Friday night and accompanied the team to Treasure Valley for Saturday night's game. He was not scheduled to play.

Ricardo Valenzuela finds an opening past a trio of Snow College defenders.

Sophomore David Anderson hit nine of his points to help CSI open a 22-12 lead in the first quarter, and that rather quickly mounted to 35-16 before some of fence mistakes hit the Eagles.

After jumping on the air, CSI managed just three points in the losing three and one-half minutes but still held a 43-26 halftime margin.

“Even then we came out in the second half and took control again,” Trenkle said of a Nate Jackson and Larry Shephard sparked spurt that crested at a 31-point advantage.

CSI's 100-90 victory over Snow College was the first since 1987. Snow College's 100-90 victory over CSI was the first since 1987.

CSI women blow lead, climb back

By Larry Hovey
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho women committed the major sin Saturday night of having to win a game twice.

The Eagles jumped ahead of Snow College by 25-10 in the first nine minutes and had to get an eight-point scoring margin in the closing minutes from Cynthia Clinger to claim a 70-57 decision.

The victory gave CSI a 10-1 Scenic West Conference record, leaving it tied in a tie with Utah Valley and moving it another step closer to participation in the Region 18 tournament next month.

“We blew away early and just when we should have been putting them away we went completely flat,” said Coach Bert Strout. “We stopped moving and we couldn't shoot, and we just struggled the rest of the game.”

Snow College led 30-24 by halftime and early in the second half climbed to within two. The Eagles managed to stay ahead but twice more saw nine and 10 point leads dropped to one or two.

With 6:31 left in the game, CSI fielded a precarious 54-50 lead but then

Oklahoma State takes Nebraska by surprise, 81-68

Arkansas pounds Rice, Arizona whips Washington

The Associated Press

Even with a 45-second clock, the showdown between Oklahoma State and Nebraska was a tight one in college basketball.

Oklahoma State upset No. 11 Nebraska 81-68 Saturday, in part because the Cowboys were able to control the tempo.

"In the second half, we tried to shorten the game," Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said. "We went into our offense called 'Clock Cowboy' to take some time off the clock before putting in the shot."

Oklahoma State led 65-63 when Nebraska guard Clifford Scates brought the ball up the floor with two minutes to play. Darwyn Alexander intercepted his pass and scored an uncoupled layup.

"That was exactly what we want to do on defense, cut off passing lanes," said Alexander, who scored half of his 18 points in the last three minutes.

Nebraska (18-4, 2 Big Eight) was no closer than four down.

Arkansas 100, Rice 87

Oliver Miller scored 26 points, including three baskets during an 18-0 run as Arkansas (21-1, 8-0 Southwest Conference) won its 16th straight game.

The Razorbacks' burst started in the final minutes of the first half and continued into the opening minutes of the second half, building a 41-38 lead at 39:31. Chase Mann scored 35 points for visiting Rice (8-11, 3-0).

St. John's 81, Seton Hall 65

Lou Carnesecca got his 500th coaching victory and Jason Buchanan scored 26 points as the Redmen (16-3 overall, 7-3 Big East) avenged an earlier loss to Seton Hall (13-6, 2-5).

Carnesecca, 66, became the 30th coach with at least five years in Division I to reach the 500 mark, and he was a 10th fastest to reach it, needing 683 games.

Seton Hall was within 60-53 with 3:06 left when the Redmen went on a 21-6 run.

Weber pounds BSU, 76-65

By Dave Goins

BOISE. The Weber State University Wildcats made a critical 15-1 run midway through the second half Saturday night.

It proved to be the run that ran the Boise State University Broncos out of the Big Sky Conference basketball tournament.

With their 76-65 victory, the Wildcats, 4-4 and 9-10, moved ahead of the Broncos and into sixth place in the conference.

It was WSU's third straight victory over BSU, the first since a 66-60 BSU winning streak.

The Broncos, now 4-6 in the conference, came into the game fresh from a 77-53 Thursday night victory over their first-place Montana.

"I don't think we were as hot as tonight," said BSU Coach Bobby Dye. "But I'll tell you what, it is a real tight team and they took advantage of us. They played extremely well."

The Wildcats began playing center Tomoka Beard gave the Broncos a 51-47 lead with 13 minutes left in the game.

WSU sophomore forward Al Hamilton, who finished with a game-high 22 points, 12 above his average, made 4-0 free throws and a 10-9 run in the final 10 minutes, was the beginning of the end for the Broncos.

During that stretch, the Broncos were unable to crack the Wildcats' aggressive zone defense, and at one point went 4-0 without scoring.

"We missed some shots and the basket that normally goes for us," Dye said.

The shots were going early in the game when BSU took a 3-0 lead on a 10-9 run by Billy Fikes in the opening minutes and a three-point shot by BSU's winning streak.

Toolson stops Drexler in start for Jazz

SALT LAKE CITY — I have always been impressed with Andy Toolson. I'm even more impressed now.

Brad Breland
Staff writer

I watched Toolson in his high school days and caught an occasional glimpse of him with the Brigham Young University Cougars basketball team.

Thursday night, I witnessed Toolson and his role with the Utah Jazz. The impression stays with me.

I went to the game to watch the Portland Trail Blazers, pick up a few autographs and yell for what was supposed to be the best team in the National Basketball Association.

Settling down in my seat, I watched the Jazz warm up and watched the former Twin Falls star knock-in three-point shots like they were two-foot shots. Swift was all you heard. He played the assist-man for Mark Eaton who practiced his hook shot over Karl Malone. His cousin, Danny Ainge, practiced on the other side with the Trail Blazers.

Portland started in a foul. His start came in the absence of Jeff Malone, who sat out the game with a groin injury. His vault from 12th man to starter is a surprise to most of the faithful and Toolson might have been surprised as well running out on the court just to hear John Stockton's name announced by the public address man.

The Jazz led from the tip and turned the game into a one-sided affair.

Toolson started, but rarely used the shot that he used in practice. The offensive powerhouse for Twin Falls and BYU was in the game as a defensive man.

His assignment was Clyde Drexler. Jazz fans told me that he usually guards the opponent's best man. One of his first experiences this year came against Michael Jordan of the Bulls.

Drexler didn't have a good night. The All-Star shot a dismal 4-for-13 from the field finishing with nine points. Drexler did have an off night. Toolson was everywhere. Drexler was hounding the Trail Blazers wherever he was.

Toolson started and played the first seven minutes of the first quarter and started the second half and played another seven minutes before sitting out and watching the 105-91 victory from the bench.

For Toolson Thursday, he shot the ball twice, made a bucket and missed a 3-pointer that dropped in the basket, rattled around, and surprisingly fell out drawing oohs and aahs from the Jazz sellout crowd.

He had three points in the contest but more important was his defensive pressure on Drexler.

He had a pair of steals and a blocked shot highlighting his statistics in the game box score.

For me, Toolson showed exceptional talent falling in the floor, grabbing loose balls and helping in the transition game on the court.

Toolson is not the scoring machine he was at Twin Falls and BYU, but the Jazz fans like his style. In a packed house that erupted when the University of Utah score is announced, the Jazz fans like this Courtis Justice.

I like his style, Andy Toolson impressed me once again.

ANDY ARLAND/The Times-News
In practice, Andy Toolson keeps his offensive skills sharp but in games concentrates on tough defensive assignments.

Writer, broadcaster Axtelm dies

PITTSBURGH — Pete Axtelm, a commentator on ESPN's National Football League coverage and a newspaper and broadcast reporter on football and horse racing, died Saturday at a Pittsburgh hospital of liver failure. He was 47.

Axtelm entered Presbyterian-University Hospital on Jan. 27 and was in the hospital's intensive care unit awaiting a liver transplant. Hospital spokesman Frank Raiter said.

"We will miss his insightful commentary, incisive reporting and unique literary flavor," ESPN spokesman Mike Soltyz said. "We will especially miss his warm friendship."

Axtelm, who joined ESPN in 1987, provided commentary and picks on NFL games on the network's "NFL GameDay" and "NFL PrimeTime." He also covered horse racing.

He was part of NBC's NFL coverage team from 1980 until 1985. Axtelm, a 1965 graduate of Yale University, joined the New York Herald Tribune as a horse racing writer and sports columnist. He worked at Newsweek magazine from 1968 until 1988 and at People magazine from 1988 until 1989.

Axtelm, who lived in New York City and Fort Lauderdale, Fla., is survived by his wife, Andrea, and daughter, Megan. Funeral arrangements were incomplete.

NAIA record falls as does NNC

NAMPA — Northwest Nazarene College from Nampa has broken a 30-year-old NAIA basketball record, but still managed to lose to opponent Western Baptist, 80-70.

NNC guard Rick Solvason on Friday made his 46th and 47th consecutive free throws. Solvason, who is 112-for-130 from the line (86.2%), has now won 11 games without a miss.

"Nobody ever told me anything about it," Solvason said later. "I was surprised when they stopped the clock. I thought there was a malfunction."

"He deserves it," Crusader coach Gary Matlock said. "It's a great honor and a great accomplishment. He stands in there game after game."

Raines keys AL to all-star softball win

BASEBALL CITY, Fla. — Tim Raines had two hits in two at-bats and scored two runs Saturday, leading the American League All-Stars to a 5-4 victory over the National League in an annual all-star softball game.

The NL took a 3-1 lead on Bobby Bonilla's solo home run and a two-run shot by Cincinnati's Joe Oliver in the second inning. Joe Carter's solo home run in the bottom of the inning made it 3-2.

Barry Bonds, the NL's most valuable player last season, made it 4-2 with a sacrifice fly in the third, but the AL rallied for three runs in the bottom of the third for the victory.

Kirby Puckett's two-run home run tied the game 4-4, before Raines singled, went to second on Wade Boggs' single and scored on a throwing error by Bonds. The game, featuring star players from the two baseball leagues, raised more than $50,000 for the National Association for Sickle Cell Disease.

NFL owes success to TV, not Red Grange

The Baltimore Sun

It's often difficult to separate myth from reality in pro football's distant past.

Red Grange proved that. When he died last week, most of the obituaries noted that he helped popularize pro football in a tour he took with the Chicago Bears in 1925 after his former season at the University of Illinois.

The facts are somewhat different. A book published last fall by Washington writers Dan Daly and Bob O'Donnell titled "The Pro Football Revolution in New York and the Reality of the 'Lion' Doesn't Quite Match the Myth," and that Grange's pro career was as storied as his college career.

Although Grange drew 65,000 at the Polo Grounds in New York and 100,000 in Los Angeles, Calsium, the book points out that the rest of the tour (there were actually two tours, one of eight games and another of nine) wasn't a rousing success. He drew only about 5,000 fans in Washington, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and New Orleans.

He also took a beating on the tour scoring only seven touchdowns in the 17 games (four in one game against his hastily organized team in St. Louis) and getting booed in some cities.

In Washington, he gained 11 yards in eight carries. The promoter lost money, prompting The Washington Post to report the game "settled for all time the major question as to whether the Capital City fans will support professional football."

League in 1983. Walker got a lot of money and publicity, but couldn't stop the league from folding.

Pro football struggled for almost two decades after Grange departed.

What eventually made pro football was not Grange, but television.

But there's no point in even trying to puncture the myth. It's too embedded into the American sports psyche to disprove now. Anyway, it's a better story than this...

Bill Walsh decided he didn't want to compete with his own legend. Despite an unbelievable offer from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, one report said that it was worth $2 million a year, Walsh turned it down last week to stay in broadcasting with NBC, which also decided to let him run a quarterback camp in the offseason. "The network refused to let him run it last year," Walsh said.

The major factor, though, was Walsh's feeling that he has nothing left to prove. If he were to be successful, it would be expected. If he weren't, it would be a tragedy. With the suggestion that he couldn't do it without Joe Montana, Walsh's decision Bues left them scrambling for a coach. Among the candidates are Buddy Ryan, the former Philadelphia Eagles' coach, Bill Belichick, the defensive coordinator of the New York Giants, Gary Stewart, an assistant coach of the Miami Dolphins and Richard Williamson, who finished out the season as the Bucs' head coach after Ray Perkins was fired.

Ryan hasn't changed a bit since last week's Eskalation. After being interviewed by Bucs' owner Hugh Culverhouse, he called it an "excellent" interview.

"I'm sure I'm a strong candidate," he said.

NASCAR comes to Twin Falls

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — The NASCAR Winston Racing Series will expand into Idaho for the first time as Magic Valley Speedway in Twin Falls will join the series for the 1991 season, boosting NASCAR's presence in the United States to 37 of the 51 states.

Magic Valley Speedway is located in southern Idaho between Boise and Pocatello. The one-third mile asphalt oval will be a part of the Great Northern Region of the eighth region series and will operate on Saturday nights from April through September.

"We are thrilled to become part of such a prestigious national racing series," Steve York, owner and operator of the track, said. "I'm especially excited from a competitor's standpoint. It gives them a real opportunity for prize money and recognition. Also, the fans here know NASCAR racing and they can see it right here every week."

The track will feature the Pro

Stock division and also host racing in the Limited Stock, Street Stock, and Pony-Stock classes. Drivers in the feature division will have the opportunity to compete for a share of close to $50,000 in regional point fund awards and the 1991 NASCAR Winston Racing Series National Championship worth almost $70,000.

"All of us here at NASCAR are looking forward to working with Magic Valley," Dennis Huth, NASCAR administrative operations manager, said. "There are many NASCAR fans in Idaho and weekly racing there fits the NASCAR tradition of super competition."

The NASCAR Winston Racing Series National Championship system will celebrate its 10th anniversary in 1991. Since its inception, the series has grown to include some 7,000 drivers at about 90 race tracks. Drivers compete for regional championships under a uniform system which awards points based on their best 20 of 22 finishes. A competition index then determines the national champion from a comparison of the eight regional champions' records. The 1990 NASCAR Winston Racing Series National Champion is Max Truettwood Jr. of Lenoir, N.C. The mid-Atlantic region driver won $65,500 for the title.

Feature division drivers at Magic Valley will also compete for a $2,000 track point fund from Winston. The money will be paid to the top five finishers in the final track standings for 1991. The track champion will win $1,000 and a new NASCAR Winston Racing Series helmet.

In addition to the more than $400,000 posted by series sponsor Winston, many associate sponsors also post regional and national print funds and awards. They include AC-DeLoe, Champion, FastTrack, Gafaride, Goody's, Maxx, Race Cards, Mr. Gasket, Moroso, Prestone, STE and Unocal.

A simple way to increase your sales and profits using both the Yellow Pages and The Times-News... at no extra cost!

- ### Yellow Pages
- Yellow pages advertising may be a smart investment but it is often more costly than necessary. While the Yellow Pages directory offers wide distribution, its once-a-year publication limits advertisers in their ability to sell according to market conditions.
- Three Yellow Page books in the Magic Valley split readership, and cut the effectiveness of the ads.
 - Once-a-year copy change limits the timeliness of your sales message... losing flexibility, immediacy & seasonality.
 - Competition side-by-side gives consumers a wide selection of choice.
 - Excessive clutter makes it difficult to read and even harder to make an impact.
 - Limited visibility and questionable usage drives your cost up.

Azinger pops off about course

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Calm, cool and collected Roger M. Azinger took the lead and an exercised Paul Azinger took his shot at Poppy Hills.

Azinger lost three strokes to par — and his lead in the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am — on the first few holes of this controversial course that is making its initial appearance in this tournament.

"I don't want to get flamed," Azinger said Saturday when asked for his assessment of the 4-year-old public course that replaced Cypress Point in the three-course rotation for this unique event.

Then Azinger, rarely critical of anything, reconsidered.

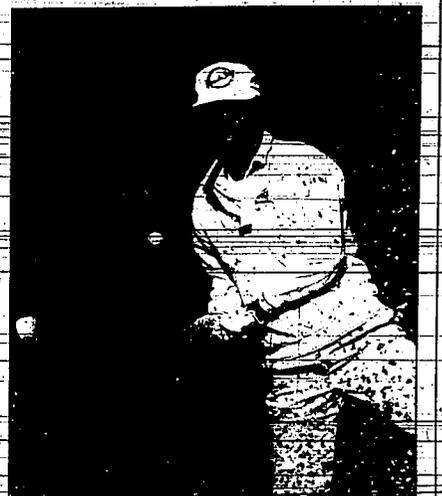

"Let's just put it this way... the best hole on the course definitely is the 19th," he said, offered a wry smile and added:

"That ought to be worth $500."

While Azinger was going from water to sand and, eventually, to a 1-over-par 73 at Poppy Hills, Mediate used a fast finish — eagle, birdie, par — at 55yglass Hill for a 69 and a one-shot lead with 18 holes to go.

Mediate, not yet a winner in six seasons of the Pebble Pro-Am, completed one round on each of the three Monterey Peninsula courses in 205, 11 under par.

And he did it with a composure the bubbly, enthusiastic young

Paul Azinger eyes his shot from the bunker through a spray of sand on the 11th hole.

when he found himself in tight contention.

"I'm more comfortable now," Mediate said. "Sure, I'll be nervous (on Sunday's final 18 holes at Pebble Beach) but I'll be myself — else, I feel like I can handle that now."

"I've just got to go out and do what I'm supposed to do on my favorite golf course in the whole world. I know I can do it. I've just got to get it done."

He was in position to do it in this event last year, when he held second place after 54 holes, then blew to a fat 77 and Mark O'Meara's runner-up triumph in the tournament formerly known as the "Crosby Clambake."

Mediate won't have to worry about O'Meara this time.

O'Meara's 73 at Pebble Beach gave him a 219 total, not good enough to qualify for Sunday's final round.

"Just like the 49ers, I could have played better," O'Meara said, comparing his defeat with that of San Francisco in the NFL playoffs.

The same could be said for Curtis Strange, Lanny Wadkins and Jack Nicklaus. Yes, too, failed to make it to the last round. Nicklaus, in fact, was beaten by his son, Jackie. The 51-year-old "Golden Bear" finished at 228, while son Jackie was at 221.

Davis Love III, completed a 69 at Poppy Hills with a last-hole birdie and remained one stroke behind Mediate at 206.

He was followed by Azinger and John Cook at 215. Cook had a third-round 69 at Pebble Beach. Chilly-Bee was next at 209 after a 69 at Poppy Hills. Brian Clair and Larry Mize, tied at 210, were five strokes off the pace. Clair shot 71 at Poppy Hills and Mize 73 at 55yglass Hill.

Mediate was even par for the day until he hit a 2-iron shot 225 yards to within 30 inches of the cup and made the putt for eagle-3 on his 16th hole.

"Even the eagle didn't excite me like I used to get," he said. "I just thought, 'Good shot, and went on to the next one.'"

On the next one, he produced a 3-iron shot to four feet for the birdie that put him in front.

Shop built on Yellow Pages loss

SPOKANE, Wash. — Jayco Advertising, formed by two men who formerly ran Yellow Pages advertising for GTE Directory Corp., has made a bet on advertising in some places not to advertise so heavily in the Yellow Pages.

"The theory is the bigger the ad, the better off you are, but that's not necessarily so in the phone book," says Jayco's Jay Tonnig.

"I don't think you get any less than 10% of what they are spending with the telephone companies," Jayco's Jay Tonnig, president, said. Mr. Tonnig says that Yellow Pages advertising is generally between 15% and 25% of the amount a business saves by reducing advertising in the phone book.

Companies often run ads larger than needed and list their names under too many classifications, Mr. Tonnig says. "Companies who are using Yellow Pages generally have made up their minds and are looking for phone numbers and addresses, not a fancy sales pitch."

Is Bigger Really Better?

"We find many advertisers can get by on less than half of what they are spending with the telephone company."

"Studies show that people using yellow pages generally have made up their minds and are looking for phone numbers and addresses, not a fancy sales pitch."

Umpires move toward new contract

The Associated Press

Baseball's era of good feelings may be coming to a negotiating with umpires. Richie Phillips, the lawyer for the umpires, says talks are progressing on a new contract.

"The atmosphere is cordial," he said. "I am optimistic we will reach an agreement in light of the fact that we are making progress. I have no intention of recommending that my clients strike spring training."

Under the old agreement, major league umpires started at $40,000 and could make as much as $105,000 when they attained 30 years of service. For now, Phillips won't say how much more he is asking for or how much more time off umpires want during the season.

Everybody's purposes are being fulfilled by sitting together and trying to keep this out of the public light," he said.

Robert Kheel, the negotiator for the American and National League umpires, said "we're trying to keep it quiet and low-key" and that the sides were talking about "mostly technical stuff."

Birthdays

It seems a little odd that will stop Nolan Ryan's birthday celebration his 44th birthday on Thursday, his scheduled to be the Texas Rangers opening day starter on April 8 against Milwaukee.

At 43 with the Rangers, Ryan won 16 games and became the first pitcher to reach 5,000 strikeouts. At 43, Ryan pitched his record sixth no-hitter and became the 20th pitcher to win 300 games.

"Nothing I can do about birthdays anymore," Ryan said. "They just keep piling up. The only thing that makes me feel close to getting to 50, 'Nobody's won a game at 50, and I don't think you'll see it.' No. 34 doing it."

When Ryan starts on opening day, he will become only the 25th major league pitcher to appear in a game at 44 or older.

Seeing Double

Pitcher Fernando Valenzuela has been signed by the Mexican League's Liga Mexicana de Bases Mayaguez. The Dodgers' Valenzuela is also a native of Mexico and started his pro career in Mexico. The Laredo team plays both in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico and Laredo, Texas.

Gene Pina

Reds manager Lou Piniella expects to move Eric Davis back to center field this season. Davis played primarily left field in the second half of the 1990 season to ease strain on his sprained knee. He hurt himself twice again late in the season, bruising his shoulder by running into the wall in foul territory in left field and lacerating his kidney while trying to make a diving catch in Game 3 of the World Series in Oakland.

Mr. Vice President

Al Harazin's main task as executive vice president of the New York Times is just about the same as when he was the club's senior vice president earlier in the week. Harazin has made contract offers to pitchers Dwight Gooden and Frank Viola, and is now waiting to hear from their agents.

Gooden and Viola are eligible for free agency after the 1991 season. Gooden has said he wants to have a deal completed sometime during spring training to avoid the year-long negotiations Darryl Strawberry went through last season.

Gooden may be waiting to see what kind of deal Roger Clemens works out with the Boston Red Sox before making a final decision. Clemens is reportedly seeking more than $20 million over five years.

Expanding

The NL Expansion commit has scheduled to visit the 10 Florida cities on the short list of finalists for the two expansion teams. The committee will visit Miami and Orlando on Feb. 25 and St. Petersburg-Tampa on Feb. 26. The visits to Buffalo, Denver and Washington will be scheduled after the completion of the visits to Florida.

Tea Time

Player-putters past Palmer for 2-stroke lead in Caribbean Classic

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — What better place for a 30-year-old putter than the Senior Tour? Gary Player, wielding a club he's used since 1961, made seven birdie putts in a 6-under-par 65 Saturday for a two-stroke lead in the Royal Caribbean Classic.

"I've had this putter for a long time," Player said. "It's traveled over six million miles, but it's not tired yet."

Going into Sunday's final round, Player was at 10-under 132, a tournament record for 36 holes. Chi Chi Rodriguez, who shared the first-round lead with Bruce Crampton, shot a 68 and was in second place at eight under.

Al Geiberger, winless last year, was third at seven under.

Crampton fell to six under when he drove into a patch of mangroves at No. 18 and took a double bogey to finish with a 70. Defending champion Lee Trevino shot a 66 and was tied with Crampton and three others for fourth place.

The $460,000 tournament is the first full-field event of the Senior Tour season.

Player, seeking his 16th Senior

Tous title, sank a 35-foot putt at the par-4 No. 15 to cap a run of three consecutive birdies. He toured the Links at Key Biscayne with just 26 putts and played the final 11 holes in six under.

The South African said he bought his mystery-brand putter while shopping at a store in downtown Tokyo with Arnold Palmer.

"I saw this putter in a barrel, and it had a $5 tag on it," Player said. "And this one guy heard me say, 'Gee, I love this putter.' But Arnold said, 'Let's try some others and come back.'"

"When I got back, I took the putter out and there was a 16 in front of the five. That salesman had ears like a hawk."

Even at $65, the putter was a bargain. Player almost always uses it, although he said it occasionally goes into "solitary confinement" for a short time.

"If I putt badly, I know it's not the putter," Player said. "It's like your wife: If I'm a marriage, I'll find to choose between my wife and my putter, well, I'd miss her."

Also hot on the greens Saturday was Geiberger, who birdied four of the final five holes to shoot a 65.

Upset marks Davis Cup as Sweden falls

The Associated Press

Sweden, which made the Davis Cup finals for seven straight years in the 1980s, was eliminated in the first round Saturday.

Yugoslavia clinched a victory over Sweden when Goran Ivanisevic and Goran Prpic beat Stefan Edberg and Peter Lundgren in doubles. That gave Yugoslavia an unbeatable 3-0 lead in the best-of-5 competition.

Ivanisevic, the world's No. 7 player, served seven aces and dominated at the net as the Yugoslavs won 6-4, 6-4, 6-4 in Zagreb.

"We didn't think it would be that easy against the Swedes," Ivanisevic said. "This victory came too fast."

The Yugoslavs swept Friday's singles matches, with Ivanisevic beating Jonas Svensson and Yoric Rodriguez. Edberg won his first ATP world ranking to Boris Becker at the Australian Open.

In another opening-round series, Italy took a 2-1 lead over powerful Germany when Diego Nargiso and Christian Panatta beat Boris Becker and Eric Jelen 4-6, 6-4, 7-6 (4-6), 6-3 in Dortmund. The series will be decided Sunday when the reverse singles are played.

The tennis split Friday's singles matches. Becker beat Paolo Cane in four sets and Camporese downed Michael Stich in straight sets.

In other first-round matches, Czechoslovakia, Australia, Spain and Argentina won in doubles Saturday to take unbeatable 3-0 leads.

Czechoslovakia eliminated Austria, Australia downed Belgium, Spain beat Canada and Argentina defeated New Zealand.

Two World Group matches, defending champion United States at Mexico and Israel at France, were postponed because of the threat of terrorism stemming from the Persian Gulf War. They have been tentatively rescheduled for March 29-31.

Six zonal matches also were postponed because of the war.

Bahrain-Bangladesh, Sri Lanka-Syria, Singapore-Kuwait and Malta-Saudi Arabia in the Asian Oceanic group, and Egypt-Senegal and Algeria-Ivory Coast in the African Zone. Countries playing zonal matches are trying to qualify for next year's main draw.

Jaguar holds onto Daytona Beach lead

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Englishman Derek Warwick survived a spin and kept the defying champion Jaguar XR-1i prototype in the lead Saturday night after six hours of the Daytona 24 Hours sports car race.

Warwick, a veteran of Formula One racing, was the first to cross the end of the sixth hour as he successfully avoided hitting a car in the chicane that slows the field at the end of the long back-straightway at Daytona International Speedway.

He was able to continue to the end of his about 80-minute shift before handing the wheel to teammate Dave Jones, one of last year's winners, with a lead over two European Group C Nissan 900C's.

Geoff Brabham of Australia, the three-time defending IMSA Camel GTP champion, was driving the second-place car, while Steve Millen of New Zealand was at the wheel of the third-place Nissan.

All three had completed 177 laps around the 2.5-mile circuit after six hours. The Nissans, which are faster than the IMSA GTP prototypes, have been given a fuel-injection and a slower method of refueling in this race to even things out.

However, a drizzle throughout most of the first six hours gave the Nissans a break by slowing everyone down and helping them reduce fuel consumption.

The Porsche 96C of Rob Dyson, John Paul Jr. and Englishmen James Weaver and Tiff Needell was in fourth, two laps down, followed by the pole-winning Porsche of Frenchman Philippe Walle. World Champion Schneider and Italians Paolo Barilla and Massimo Sigala.

A sudden downpour caused some havoc about 90 minutes into the race, with the Porsche RX-7 of Calvin Fish spinning and hitting the wall on the banking of the oval portion of the 3.54-mile circuit.

Agriculture index falls below '80 benchmark

By Mark Kind
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Times-News quarterly index of agricultural prices reached its lowest level since March 1988 during the fourth quarter. But prices may have bottomed out. "Hopefully, this is kind of the trough for prices for most of these commodities," said Wilson-Gray, Extension agricultural economist.

The agricultural price index was almost 22 percent below the 1980 benchmark used in "The Times-News" economic calculations.

Here is a summary of where the prices went and a forecast of where they might be going. Beef prices are 25 percent above their 1980 level — the only agricultural price that did not suffer in 1990.

Consumer demand shows no sign of relenting despite record high retail beef prices — $2.90 per pound. "Through this spring, I would expect we will probably see some strength in beef prices," Gray said.

But a possible danger sign was January's national corn-of-wheat-in-feed lots — the largest since 1979 — although markets remained strong last week after the numbers were released. In December, overall Idaho beef prices averaged $67 per 100 pounds, according to the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service.

Steers and heifers nearly reached $76 — the highest monthly average in more than five years.

• Potato prices probably won't move much until the remains of a record 1.1 billion pound harvest disappear from storage — perhaps by mid summer, Gray said.

Average Idaho potato prices held steady in December at $4.80 a hundredweight after rebounding from their fall low of $4.65 in October.

The relatively low prices could dissuade overplanting this spring and prevent further price drops, Wilson said.

• Likewise dry bean prices may not sink much further — they're too low to tempt farmers to expand bean acreage this spring.

Also, the 1990 Farm Bill penalizes many subsidized farmers who might otherwise shift from grains to beans or potatoes.

Average Idaho bean prices slipped 30 cents a hundredweight in December to $17.30.

• Wheat prices should strengthen this year for two reasons — fewer U.S. farmers are likely to plant it because of low prices and worldwide weather isn't likely to be as favorable for the crop this year.

The Idaho wheat market lost another nickel from November to December, dropping to $2.38 a bushel statewide. That was $1.55 lower than the average in December 1989 and the second-lowest monthly average since October 1986.

• Sugar beets, though they are fetching less than they did in 1980, remain a profitable crop.

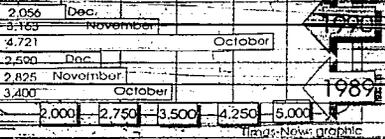

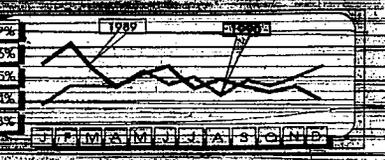

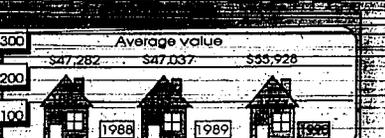

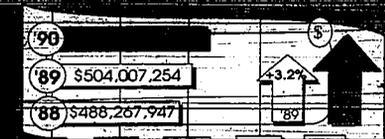

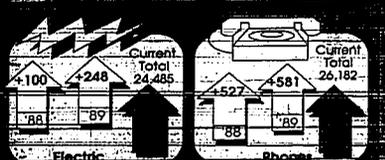

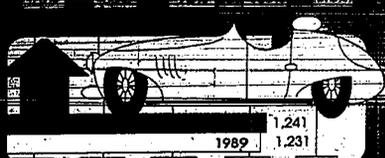

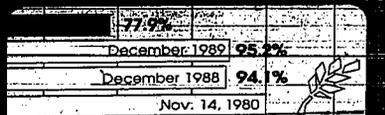

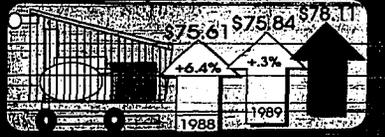

The sugar price is still likely to change, but government decree and isn't expected to.

• Dairy prices took a huge plunge during the quarter.

Better times are still several months off as production continues to increase as much as 13 percent per year in Idaho.

Local cheese plants are paying an average of $9.50 to $10 per 100 pounds of milk, Gray said.

The USDA's $767 million forecast for Idaho net farm income would be the second highest ever, but well behind the record $902 million year of 1990.

Magic Valley economy runs flat

By Mark Kind
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley economy has leveled off, according to "The Times-News" quarterly economic survey.

Some of the economic indicators are up. Others are down. And several are virtually unchanged from one year ago.

• Housing starts in the Magic Valley performed in the last quarter of 1990.

• Inflation, as measured at three Twin Falls grocery stores, did not seriously change from last year.

• Retail sales in the Magic Valley are about the same amount of food now as they could a year ago and pay only 3 percent more for it.

• Farm prices took a dive in the last quarter of 1990. Wheat, dry beans, potatoes and dairy products are all cheaper now than they were in the fourth quarter of 1989.

• New car sales barely exceeded last year's rate.

• Motorists registered only 8 percent more new cars with the Idaho Transportation Department last quarter than they did in the last quarter of 1989.

• City registrations of cars manufactured in 1989 and 1990 were counted.

• Likewise, new hookups of electrical and telephone service were virtually equal to last year's, growing by only 4 percent.

• Bank deposits in Twin Falls grew 6 percent — a $50-million increase.

• Builders took out 27 percent more permits for new homes in the fourth quarter of 1990 than they did a year earlier. The average value of the permits, however, was 19 percent less than in 1989.

• The value of homes sold during the quarter was 19 percent higher than a year ago, according to the Twin Falls Board of Realtors.

• The unemployment rate was higher than during 1989's fourth quarter.

• By December, fewer employers were looking for new workers.

The Times-News carried 21 percent fewer inches of help-wanted advertisements in December than in the same month of 1989.

The help-wanted numbers were rising until December when the number of inches dropped 36 percent to 2,056 inches compared to October's 4,721.

California governor forms new task force to fight drought

The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Gov. Pete Wilson on Friday created an emergency task force of top water officials to forge a plan within two weeks on the record drought, and he counseled Californians against panicking.

He stopped short of formally declaring a drought emergency, but directed his new task force to report to him by Feb. 15 on all options. Those choices include an emergency declaration that would give him broad authority over water supplies, regardless of who owns them.

In a Capitol news conference, the governor compared the declaration to imposing martial law — something Wilson said he preferred not to do as long as local agencies continue dealing with a fifth straight year of drought through conservation and rationing.

Wilson has been under pressure from worried state water project customers to declare a drought emergency. But he said the drought — which by some measures is California's worst on record — poses a threat to the economy and the environment but not to human life.

"Californians are worried, and in some quarters that worry is turning to panic."

"This should not be. Let me say it for all to hear: Concern is justified. Panic is not. This is a threat to our livelihoods, not a threat to our lives," he said.

Wilson said strict mandatory rationing may have to be imposed statewide. The rules would be enforced by local agencies, not by the state, he said.

In Los Angeles, residents face a 15 percent cut in water use under a local conservation plan endorsed Friday by Mayor Tom Bradley.

A City Council committee will consider it before it goes to a vote by the full body.

The governor said he formed the task force to prepare for a worst-case scenario: "If water water expert David Kennedy, the state Department of Water Resources director, will head the panel."

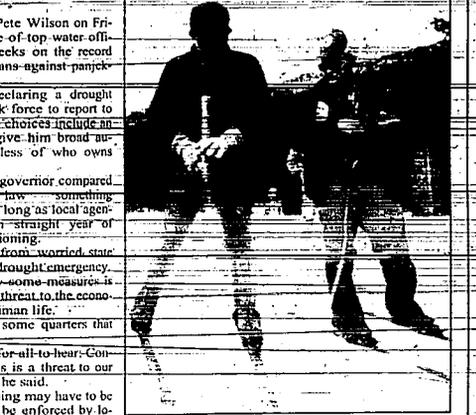

Wilson said that no matter what steps become necessary to conserve enough water for human health and safety, no rationing regulations would unfairly hit any particular sector such as agriculture.

A spokesman for the California Farm Bureau Federation, Mike Henry, said farmers were encouraged by Wilson's announcements.

"We're hopeful that the task force will work with local water agencies to ensure that people who deal with water at the local level will be able to have input into any recommendations," Henry said.

Noting Wilson's call for recommendations by Feb. 15, Henry said it's important to move and move quickly.

"His appointment of the task force, I think, heightens the seriousness of this issue."

California surveyors say this year's snowfall has about 25 percent of normal water content.

Earlier this week, farmers and urban water users protested plans for drastic rationing of water in all sectors.

Local water agencies told the state Water Resources Control Board they want to retain control over their water and promised to fight the imposition of any statewide, mandatory rationing with uniform standards.

The board will make a decision Thursday whether to adopt rationing.

Since the state's rainy season began in July, rainfall has averaged just 28 percent of normal statewide.

The snowpack holds about a quarter of the normal water content, closest to Los Angeles, the snowpack holds just 13 percent. Stream runoff is averaging one-fourth of normal statewide.

The reservoirs, which were intended to carry California through dry times, are at 54 percent of their usual storage this time of year and less than one-third of their capacity.

That level is substantially below the record low levels of 1977.

Farm prices rise 0.7% during December

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prices farmers get for raw products increased 0.7 percent from December to January, the Agriculture Department said.

But the increase was tempered by a revision in the monthly report which showed agricultural prices in December actually dropped 1.4 percent from November instead of the 0.7 percent decline indicated a month ago.

High prices for hogs, broilers and eggs were paid to be mostly responsible for the January increase from December, although lower prices for soybeans, milk and tomatoes softened the gains.

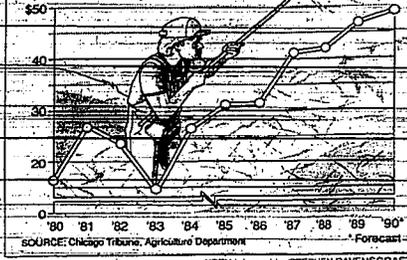

Overall, the price index was down 6.5 percent from January 1990, said the department's Agricultural Statistics Board.

Prices paid by farmers to meet expenses, meanwhile, were unchanged from October's previous reading. But those averaged 3.3 percent more than a year ago.

The fruit index was up 6.2 percent from December 21 percent since a year ago. Higher prices for strawberries were the strongest in the upward climb from December.

Meat animals were reported up 0.6 percent from December and 3.2 percent more than a year ago.

January prices of oil-bearing crops, mainly soybeans, were down 2.7 percent from December but 5.6 percent above the year-ago level.

The livestock index was up 0.6 percent from December but still averaged 4.1 percent below a year earlier.

Poultry and eggs were up 3.9 percent from a month earlier but trailed January 1990 by 3.6 percent.

Attorney general says chain schemes will stop

BOISE (AP) — Two businesses and two individuals have agreed to stop allegedly illegal pyramid and chain-distribution schemes in Idaho.

All the "assurance of voluntary compliance" agreements were reached through negotiation.

He said sometimes they would offer for a token newsletter or other commodity, such as a silver dollar, in exchange for the solicited person's contribution in an effort to hide the fact that it is a pyramid.

So long, however, as the person is promised something of value primarily as a reward for her introduction of other persons into the scheme, rather than from the sale of goods or services, it is an unlawful pyramid or chain distribution scheme under Idaho law, the attorney general said.

MacGregor takes BSU post

BOISE (AP) — Former construction company executive and Ada County Highway District director Tom MacGregor has been named dean of Boise State University's College of Technology, the school announced.

The permanent appointment of MacGregor, who now is acting dean, will be submitted to the state Board of Education for approval at its March meeting. He will continue to receive his current annual salary of $72,875 at least through July, when new pay levels are set.

He said he sometimes they would offer for a token newsletter or other commodity, such as a silver dollar, in exchange for the solicited person's contribution in an effort to hide the fact that it is a pyramid.

Idaho Power reports decline in net income

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Power Co. reported net income for 1990 of $69.2 million, a drop of $15.5 million from 1989 as low snowpack and reduced streamflows continued to hurt the utility's hydroelectric generating capacity.

Earnings per share also declined to $1.91 from $2.37 the year before, and operating revenue was down $51.5 million from 1989 to $464.9 million.

But the company painted an upbeat picture Friday.

"Despite experiencing the third worst year in company history for streamflows and Snake River hydro and increasing our reliance upon higher cost coal-fired resources, virtually all other factors were positive for the company in 1990," said Dewey Hammond, the company's chief financial officer.

"We set a record for retail energy sales, our regional economy continues its robust growth, our generation and transmission system performed well, and we met our customer purchase programs throughout the region were economically priced and readily available," Hammond said.

He said general business sales of electricity in 1990 finished slightly ahead of 1989's record, and contracts for 1991 are very strong.

But "limited generating ability as a result of low water conditions resulting in a 33 percent decline in output sales to other utilities," Hammond said, more than offsetting the gains in sales within Idaho Power's service area of southern Idaho, eastern Oregon and northern Nevada.

"Virtually all of our generation was dedicated to our own customers' energy needs," he said.

"With 2.7 new connections in 1990, Idaho Power sets its largest single-year customer increase since 1979.

The addition of 47,719 acres of pump-irrigated cropland in the com-

As used by the agency, net cash income is simply the difference between gross cash income and cash expenses.

In another way of accounting, 1991 net farm income may be in the range of $44 billion to $49 billion, compared with the 1990 record of $48 billion.

The report said: "Cattle averaged $76 per 100 pounds of live weight nationally, down from $76.10 in December. A year earlier, cattle averaged $73.70 per hundredweight. These are averages for all types of cattle sold as beef."

"Hogs averaged $49.30 per hundredweight up from $47.80 in December. A year earlier hogs averaged $47.30.

"Corn at $2.72 per bushel was unchanged from December but was down from $2.31 a year ago.

"Wheat prices at the farm, according to preliminary figures, averaged $2.32 per bushel, compared with $2.40 in December and $3.71 in January 1990.

"Rice averaged $6.33 per 100 pounds compared with $6.08 in December and $7.44 a year earlier.

"Soybeans were $5.48 per bushel, compared with $5.72 in December and $5.65 in January 1990.

"Eggs were 79 cents per dozen, compared with 76.5 cents in December and 83 cents a year earlier.

"Broilers were 30.9 cents per pound, live weight, compared with 28.8 in December and 30.7 cents a year earlier.

pany's service area also was the largest annual increase in nine years.

"With four out of the five lowest water years on record having occurred in the past four years, we've obviously felt earnings pressure," Hammond said.

"We need improved snowpack in 1991 from $2.37 the year before, and streamflows to build upon operational efficiency and economic growth in order to enhance our financial performance."

"While about 67 percent of Idaho Power's generation is hydroelectric during normal water years, the final nine months of 1990 was 34 percent annual hydroelectric generation."

"There is no denying Idaho's present seasonal snowpack and reservoir storage figures are down."

"By combining that opportunity for economic purchases on the regional market with our proven dependable thermal resources, the company anticipates no difficulty in meeting its projected energy loads during the upcoming year."

"The litigative conditions we're with likely have a less-than-optimal generation mix."

Despite the declines for all of 1990, the fourth quarter ended the year on a positive note, compared with the same period in 1989.

For the last three months of 1990, Idaho Power sets its largest operating revenue increase up $1.4 million to $117.9 million, net income up about $300,000 to $20.6 million, and earnings per share were up 1 cent to 58 cents.

Egypt spends $80 million for Northwest's wheat

SPOKANE (AP) — Egypt is spending $80 million in cash on Pacific Northwest wheat in the past 10 days, boosting wheat prices that Egypt's debt from previous grain has been in a year-long slump, a wheat broker said.

The purchases are nearly equal to nearly $100 million in wheat from the United States to the country's biggest wheat buyers, said the broker, Mike Krueger.

They're not kidding around, said Krueger, editor of the Portland, Ore.-based "White Wheat Report." "This has been one dazzling deal."

Speculation among brokers is that Egypt has come into a windfall. It is one of 28 nations aligned with the United States against Iraq in the Persian Gulf.

Another factor may have been the U.S. decision to forgive some of 10 days, boosting wheat prices that Egypt's debt from previous grain has been in a year-long slump, a wheat broker said.

White wheat, the variety predominant in the Pacific Northwest, is used in a wide range of products, from flour to pasta to soft drinks. Korea, two of the industry's biggest wheat buyers, said the broker, Mike Krueger.

The Egyptian sales pushed the Portland price for a bushel of white wheat to $3.01 on Thursday, up from a low of $2.75 on Oct. 16.

The price is still far below the high of $4.60 a bushel recorded 15 months ago, before prices declined sent the wheat industry reeling.

Maine, Connecticut banks declared insolvent, sold

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Bank branches on Friday declared two New England banks insolvent and at least five healthier banks in Connecticut and Maine to acquire them.

Merchants Bank and Trust's five branches will be closed Saturday. They will reopen Monday as branches of Union Trust, State Banking Commission Howard B. Brown said.

Brown said the bank's $269 million in deposits will be assumed by insolvent and sold by the Federal Reserve Bank, which in turn will receive $126 million from the Federal Reserve Insurance Co. State Banking Commission Howard B. Brown said.

The bank was the fourth financial institution in Connecticut to fail this year. Also Friday, federal regulators announced the Federal Reserve Trust Corp. as receiver for the failed Connecticut-based Savings Bank in Fawcett, Mass.

Union Pacific builds on coal boom

Journal of Commerce
 Union Pacific Railroad Co. will spend $70 million this year in the first phase of a five-year $250 million expansion of capacity to low-sulfur Western coal to the East. The Omaha, Neb.-based carrier will upgrade its lines from South Morrill, Neb., to Kansas City, Mo. The capacity expansion, one of five to recent decades in the railroad industry, results from federal clean air legislation passed last year. Low-sulfur Western coal increasingly is expected to penetrate markets in the Eastern United States as utilities scramble to find coal supplies that comply with tougher new emission standards. "Economics will drive the conversion to low sulfur coal," said Henry Arma, Union Pacific's assistant vice president, energy. "While the capacity expansion serves our existing markets, the growth will be predominantly in the Midwest, Southeast and Northeast." He said western coal can be competitive as far as the East Coast. The predominant market, he added, will be for blending western low-sulfur coal with eastern coal. The mix, at which that occurs, will depend on each operating unit and its individual characteristics," he said. Union Pacific is the principal beneficiary of the 1984 energy of Chicago and North Western Transportation Co. into the Powder River Basin of Wyoming. CNW did not have the financial resources to build the new line into the coalfields and upgrade its main line across northern Nebraska to the East. It obtained financing from Union Pacific to build the line to its junction with UP at South Morrill, in exchange for letting UP haul the coal eastward over its main lines to Omaha and Kansas City. The CNW-UP combination moved 50 million tons of coal out of the basin in 1989, about 27 percent of the total. Burlington Northern Railroad, which developed the Powder River market in the 1970s, carried 138 million tons of Powder River coal last year. Most rail moves to utilities in the Midwest and Southwest, although increasing volumes are moving to new markets in the East. Burlington-Northern and the Union Pacific/CNW combination are competing for a long-term contract worth as much as $130 million a year in revenue to carry up to 11 million tons a year of Powder River coal to a Georgia Power Co. coal plant near Macon, Ga. "Scientists' analysts following the competition believe UP has the edge. It would haul the coal through Kansas City to Memphis where Norfolk Southern Corp. would take it to the plant," said Moore. "BN has a major contract to deliver 8 million to 10 million tons of coal annually to American Electric Power Co. at the utility's Rockport 1 and Rockport 2 facilities in Indiana on the Ohio River. "BN also hauls Western coal to Consumers Power Co. and Detroit Edison Co. in Michigan and North Central Indiana Public Service Co., all in areas once the exclusive preserve of Eastern coal producers. The 1991 work will be in Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri. UP will build more than 15 miles of additional double mainline track. Burlington-Northern and Kansas City, for example, Arma said the main line will be double-track over more than 200 of its 285 miles. The route has only eight miles of double-track line now. In addition, 14 sidings will be made at least 8,000 feet long. In some cases, the company said, an existing siding will be expanded and in others new ones will be built. Sidings that extend 8,000 feet permit freight trains to pull off while coal trains, which are nearly two miles long, continue on the main-line with out delay. In some cases, the company said, existing sidings will be replaced and others new ones will be built. Sidings that long allow freight trains to pull off while coal trains, which can be nearly two miles long, continue on the main line without delay. In addition to the road track work, UP will build $12-million worth of track at its Bailey Yard in North Platte, Neb., for handling coal trains. The carrier also will install 11 miles of a centralized, traffic control/computer aided dispatch, an automated signal system controlled at its Harman Dispatching Center in Omaha. UP's bridge over the Kaw River between Kansas City, Kan. and Kansas City, Mo., and additional yard track and siding capacity will be constructed in Kansas City, Mo. The bridge over the Kaw River between Kansas City, Kan. and Kansas City, Mo., and additional yard track and siding capacity will be constructed in Kansas City, Mo. New games like this one focus on war in the Persian Gulf.

Game makers cash in on Mideast war

NEW YORK (AP) — Heavy artillery lines the border between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Jet fighters home in Baghdad. Oil rigs, air bases and chemical plants are destroyed. It is war in the Persian Gulf in cardboard. The outbreak of fighting in the gulf has brought new business to some toy and game manufacturers, particularly those who create sophisticated war games and scale models of military aircraft and weapons. After Iraq invaded Kuwait in August, TSR Inc., the maker of the popular Dungeons and Dragons game, began work on "A Line in the Sand," a board game based on the U.S. gulf operation. Avaton Hill, another military game manufacturer, brought its "Gulf Strike" board game up to date with recent events. The latest edition of Strategy & Tactics, a magazine about war games, featured a pullout "simulated Arabian Nights" Arabian and Saudi Arabian. "Included are detailed maps of the Persian Gulf region and cardboard game pieces representing troops and weapons of the United States, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and the Arabian Nights." TSR's "Gulf Strike" lists for $40, while "A Line in the Sand" is priced at about $30. War game aficionados, who also play games based on World War II and Civil War battles, are drawn by realistic scenarios, said Tom McLaughlin, a spokesman for TSR. "They are real sticklers for accuracy," he said, adding that information used to create "A Line in the Sand" was taken from public information about Operation Desert Shield. Other companies dejected against linking their products with the war. At Art Co., a manufacturer of model kits and die-cast planes, AWI talked about it. "We just didn't want to be associated with the game," said company President George Volanakis. Big manufacturers Hasbro Inc. and Mattel Inc., now preparing for the toy industry's trade show, Toy Fair, said they weren't making any last-minute changes or additions to their product lines. "We work on such a lead time that it's difficult for us to really respond in short-term events," Steve Garcia, a salesman at a Manhattan branch of the chain, Gibbs

War brings boost to security businesses

NEW YORK (AP) — The threat of Iraqi terrorism in the United States has brought a business boom to companies that supply security services and equipment, company executives say. From traditional companies like Pinkerton's and Wells Fargo to smaller New York-based firms, executives report Saddam Hussein and his call for strikes against the United States are good news in bad economic times. "It's said in a way, but it's certainly been good for business," said Adrienne Burke of CCS Communication Control Inc., a Manhattan-based security firm. Since bombing began Jan. 16 in the Persian Gulf, her company has received an average of 100 calls per day from companies interested in bomb-detection equipment, Burke said. CCS, which does about $15 million in business per year, is also offering free consultation to companies in an effort to drum up more business. Security isn't cheap; the simplest letter-bomb detector runs about $5,000. Burke said. "There's such a fear out there... We're getting calls from banks. Department stores, Major Fortune 500 companies, Building management, some transportation companies. A lot of calls," she said. Business is jumping for Steven D'Andrilli as well. His New York-based Guard Group International has a full line of bullet-resistant clothes. Recent customers include 116 Customs agents, dozens of diplomats in New York, a number of judges. One Middle East diplomat had his bullet-resistant outfit hand delivered to his embassy last week. D'Andrilli said. A top-line model runs the customer about $550. "I hope the war ends, but it's creating business for me," said D'Andrilli. "I didn't create the war... I didn't create the terrorist threats. I'm just addressing the people's direct and immediate needs in a rational manner." Gene Mastrangelo, risk assessment manager for Business Risk International in Washington, received a call from a woman who had saved his business card from a 1989 seminar. The war finally convinced her it was time to dial him. "I'm making a trip to St. Louis to meet with her and a number of firms regarding flight safety," Mastrangelo said. Business Risk, which operates around the world, has added a number of new clients and intensified sales for several old ones, said Mastrangelo.

Increased security is obvious at airports, but Pinkerton's Chairman Thomas W. Wathen said word in the industry is that petroleum companies and utilities are the two other major private sectors seeking help. Pinkerton has seen an increase at its 154 offices nationwide, as well as a boost at its two London offices, said Wathen. The company is calling the boom "not significant," although that could change if the war continues. "Typically, we're uniformly whatever adverb you choose, the longer the war goes on the more impact it will have on our business," said Sonia Luna, Pinkerton's director of strategic planning in New York. While Pinkerton's was downplaying the amount business had increased, Wathen acknowledged that the end of the war won't mean the end of business. "I've hoped for a short war from a personal standpoint. But from a business standpoint, I've told our clients that if the war ends tomorrow, the threat of terrorism doesn't end," said Wathen.

Pat Gallione, owner of Gallione Security Services Inc. in Manhattan, agreed the improvement in business has come from existing clients hoping to boost security. Her company serves clients in New York, New Jersey and Florida. "Right now, everybody's a panicky

Wood products company files for Chapter 11 relief

TIGARD, Ore. (AP) — WTD Industries Inc., which launched a dizzying rise out of the timber crash of the early 1980s, announced Thursday it has filed for protection from creditors under the federal bankruptcy code. "Extreme adverse conditions in our industry combined with severe weather conditions in late December resulted in our being out of compliance with the terms of certain of our debt instruments," company President Bruce Engel said in a prepared statement. "Our inability to resolve this situation with our lenders has left us with no choice but to seek protection under the bankruptcy code," he said. The Chapter 11 filing was made in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Washington. The company said that will give it the opportunity to restructure its debt while protecting its interests as well as those of its customers, suppliers, employees and shareholders. The Tigard-based company, which last year listed as the country's fourth-largest lumber manufacturer, reported an $8.8 million loss for the second quarter that ended Oct. 31. Quarterly sales dropped 40 percent from the previous year.
