Bush calls Iraq offer 'cruel hoax'

The Associated Press

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia - Iraq offered a strings-attached plan for a Kuwait pullout Friday, but President Bush dismissed it as a "cruel hoax" and the hour-by-hour bombing went on.

"We've only just begun," a U.S. general said.

Some, however, still saw a glimmer of peace. In Baghdad, joyful Iraqis exploded in noisy celebration, and in Moscow and other capitals, where diplomats labored behind the scenes, the coming days promised possible further twists on a road leading either to ne-gotation or a stepped-up war.

Baghdad's offer sought to link an Iraqi withdrawal with an Israeli pullout from Arab territories, the replacement of Kuwait's emirs with a democracy, and forgiveness of Iraqi debts.

Bush rejected it as "nothing new," and reiterated the U.N. Security Council's demand for a pullout from Kuwait without conditions.

He found general support throughout Washington and allied capitals, but some chose also to focus on the positive: It was Iraq's first explicit offer to withdraw.

Key Democratic senator Sam Nunn called it a possible "opening bid" for peace by Iraq. President Saddam Hussein - The Soviets, in the midst of mediation efforts, expressed "satisfaction and hope." The U.N. secretary-general said the proposal "deserves careful study."

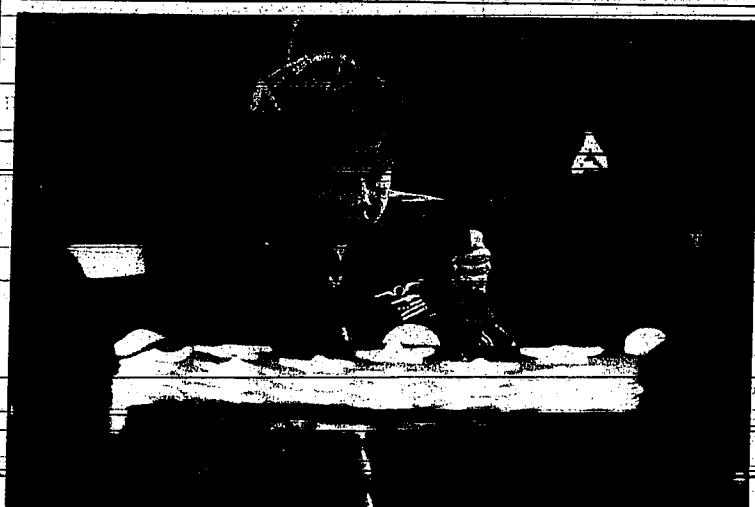

In the desert, where the news flashed by radio to front-line bunkers and rear-echelon offices, American troops reacted with skepticism, but also with hope.

"You've heard the old saying: 'No one wants peace more than a soldier,'" Sgt. Danny Hight of Pasadena, Texas, told a reporter.

But the U.S. command reported no sign of any Iraq pullback Friday, and thousands of those American soldiers, airmen and sailors were at work again on the 30th day of the U.S.-led offensive to end Iraq's 6 1/2-month occupation of Kuwait.

Arlington National Cemetery receives its 1st victim from Persian Gulf War

ARLINGTON, Va. - Arlington National Cemetery, the final resting place of servicemen from every American war, received its first victim from the Persian Gulf on Friday. The cremated remains of Capt. Jonathan R. Edwards, a Marine pilot killed in a helicopter crash, were buried with full military honors in a section of the cemetery facing the Pentagon. Edwards, 36, was born in Germany to an Air Force family and lived in Grand Rapids, Mich. He had been in Saudi Arabia only a month when his helicopter crashed while supporting a medical evacuation mission near the Saudi-Kuwaiti border. His copilot, Marine Maj. Eugene McCarthy of New York City, also died in the Feb. 2 crash.

After a private service in the Arlington chapel, the urn with Edwards' remains was carried to the grave site on a caisson drawn by six white Shropshire horses. The Marine band pro-

Calm, sadness hovers over Mountain Home

MOUNTAIN HOME - Chapel One was empty and quiet Friday, shrouded by trees behind the imposing figure of a retired F-4 fighter jet at Mountain Home Air Force Base.

"The chapel bells will ring soon, however, in remembrance of Idaho's first Operation Desert Storm casualties - two airmen who died when their jet went down in Saudi Arabia after a combat mission Wednesday.

Servicemen in gulf receiving hate mail, Burley man says

By Christopher R. Clark
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY - Though most letters to military personnel in the Persian Gulf are supportive, some contain anti-war messages that tell the troops they should be ashamed of fighting for their country.
Apparently some people who oppose the war have been using the military's "to any serviceman" mail program to deliver negative opinions about the Persian Gulf War.
Schroeder, a Burley resident who has a son serving in the war, has been corresponding with several Magic Valley residents who are stationed in the gulf area. He learned of the hate mail from Jose Corona, a Rupert man serving in the gulf as a cavalry scout.

"Sometimes a hate letter will be among the 'any serviceman' mail telling us how ashamed we should be or how stupid we are for taking part in this operation," Corona wrote in a recent letter to Schroeder.

Corona, 44, was transferred from Leno, Germany, and has been in Saudi Arabia since Dec. 1.

Schroeder said he would never have dreamed that somebody could do such a cold thing as to send hate mail to these servicemen.

But the hate mail is real.

"We have heard of it," said Capt. Pat Ingelhardt, a public affairs officer with U.S. Central Command in Florida.

"But it's not all that common," she said. "There has been overwhelming support for the troops. Not too many such letters get through."

Congressman Richard Stollings, D-Idaho, said he has heard of such letters to soldiers "disgusting."

"I'm shocked that someone would stoop to that," Stollings said. "You have a young man or young woman putting their life on the line and the last thing they need is some character venting their feelings on them. These people are just doing their duty."

Stollings suggested that those opposed to the war spare the soldiers and direct their mail to the president or to their congressmen.

Ingelhardt said that, while the negative mail apparently is meant to lower troop morale, it probably is backfiring, she said.

"Our troops are smarter than that," Ingelhardt said.

She says she has heard of at least one serviceman who has written back to the author of an anti-war letter.

The hate mail has inspired Schroeder to work harder at supporting the troops.
"I'm going to double my efforts now," he said.

Kuwaitis doubtful of Saddam

The Associated Press

DAMMAM, Saudi Arabia - Exiled Kuwaitis were hopeful Friday of an early return to their country, but doubtful that Saddam Hussein really intended to withdraw his troops as announced in Baghdad.

"Some people are happy," said Sattar al-Ammar, a leader of the Kuwaiti refugee community here, "but they still are worried by Saddam because we can't trust that man."

The reaction of the exiled Kuwaiti government was similar. At its base in Taif, Saudi Arabia, Sheik Saad al-Abdullah al-Sabah, crown prince and prime minister, said the Baghdad announcement "adds nothing new to my personal assessment."

Kuwaiti Journalist Farouq Al-Hussayn made a similar statement in Dhahran. "We don't trust Saddam anymore. If he wants to withdraw from Kuwait, he has to withdraw and not say it," said Capt. Awad al-Mutouath, a spokesman. "We shall fight until the last drop of our blood to see our country liberated again."

In Hamad Town, Bahrain, dusty home to thousands of Kuwaiti refugees, Kuwaiti children paraded in the streets shouting "Kuwait is free!" But many of their fathers were more skeptical.

"Don't stop the bombing," said Ahmed al-Kandari, a recent escapee from the occupied country. "Saddam's a snake."

Blood banks bulge with donations

Knights-Ridder News Service

All of a sudden, America is awash in donated blood.

Inspired by patriotism and the mistaken belief that American troops in the Persian Gulf desperately need blood, donors are rolling up their sleeves in record numbers.

The nation's blood banks are bulging with inventory that many donors think are headed to troops in the gulf.

Donations usually slip in the winter, prompting blood banks to resort to emergency appeals.

Not this winter.
"George Bush has been the best donor recruiter we ever had," quipped Charles L. Rouault, president of the Broward County Blood Center near Fort Lauderdale, Fla. "The response has been so great we've actually turned some people away."

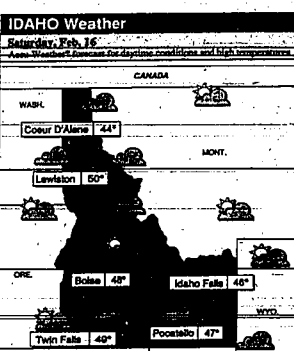

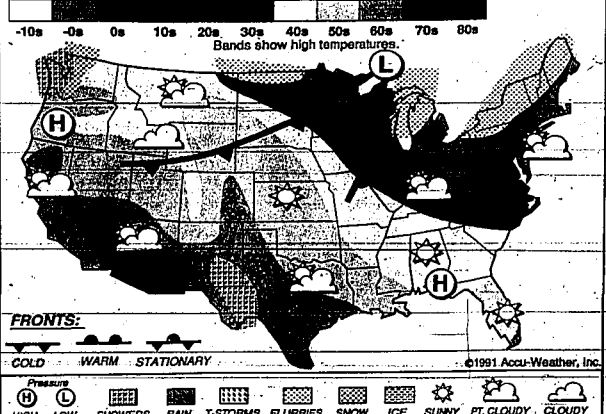

A surplus also has surfaced in Memphis, Tenn., a city that has suffered chronic blood shortages in recent years and has had to buy large volumes of blood from other blood banks to supply its hospitals. Donations tripled at LifeBlood, a regional blood center, the week after the gulf war started. Since then, donations have been averaging Iraqi targets Friday, including 900 against dug-in Iraqi positions and other sites in the Kuwait Theater of Operations—Kuwait and southern Iraq. The air strikes hit bridges, roads, armories, military positions and airfields, among other targets, command spokesman Brig. Gen. Richard Neal reported.

He said one U.S. plane was lost—a Navy A-6 Intruder that crashed on landing aboard the carrier USS America, newly arrived in the Persian Gulf. The two crewmen suffered minor injuries. In one "air-to-air" success, an American F-15 blasted a hovering Iraqi helicopter out of the sky with a laser-guided bomb, Neal said.

The command's new stress on air strikes against the "KTO" is a prelude to an all-out ground offensive widely expected to begin in early February. On Thursday, Neal reported the bombing had made important strides in knocking out Iraq's key weapons. One-third of Iraqi tanks and artillery pieces in the battle zone have been destroyed, he said.

On Friday, Neal told reporters, "The numbers are starting to speak for themselves, and as somebody said a while back, we've only just begun."

The Marine general said Desert Storm pilots will continue to pound away at Iraqi units in Kuwait whether they stay "hunkered down" or emerge from their bunkers.

Asked what U.S. pilots would do if they saw Iraqi troops suddenly heading north in apparent withdrawal, Neal said they would continue their bombing.

"Until our mission is changed by the national command authority, we go on to execute our combat plan to the letter," he said. Any cease-fire or withdrawal timetable would probably be developed in government-to-government talks.

The Iraqi plan was presented in the name of the ruling Revolutionary Command Council, led by Saddam, and was first announced by official Baghdad radio.

It called for a cease-fire to be followed by an Iraqi pullout from Kuwait, as demanded in U.N. Security Council Resolution 660, passed last Aug. 3 after the Iraqi invasion. But it also attached several conditions.

Iraq invaded the oil-rich emirate Aug. 2 after the collapse of negotiations over Iraqi grievances related to territorial disputes, oil rivalries and an estimated $15 billion in Iraqi debt to Kuwait.

As word spread around the Iraqi camp in early afternoon, ordinary Baghdadis gathered in excited groups to discuss it the news, and civilians and militiamen fired off guns in celebration. "The war is going to be over," a joyful hotel staff member told a foreign journalist.

In Washington, the U.S. leadership pondered the surprise announcement for two hours Friday morning, then issued a brief statement pointing out that Iraqis, as they have before, were trying to link other Middle East issues to a resolution of the gulf crisis.

A short time later, addressing a gathering of scientists at the White House, he said he hoped, "It is soon after analysis and reading the statements out of Baghdad in their entirety, there is nothing new here."

He described it as a "crucial hoax," and went on to exhort the Iraqi military to turn their tanks and guns over to their own hands to force Saddam Hussein the dictator to step aside.

Iraqi Conditions

Iraq will withdraw from Kuwait under these terms:

- Withdrawal should be linked to an Israeli pullout from occupied Palestinian, Syrian and Lebanese territories.
- Allied forces must withdraw from the Gulf region within one month of cease-fire.
- Repeal U.N. resolutions that condemn the Iraqi invasion, imposed an economic embargo and authorized the use of force to oust Iraq.
- Kuwait's political future be based on "the wishes of the people" and not ruling family.
- Allies repair war damage in Iraq.

 di-Iraqi border.

They were the first Idaho residents to die in Operation Desert Storm. Houston native Bradt, the pilot, and Eichenlaub, the electronic warfare officer who was from Bentonville, Ark., were assigned to the 390th Electronic Combat Squadron of the 366th Tactical Fighter Wing based at Mountain Home and deployed in eastern Saudi Arabia.

An investigation into the cause of the crash continued Friday as Mountain Home began to recover from Thursday's news.

Yesterday (Thursday) was a tough day for... Capt. John Lahmon, public affairs officer at Mountain Home, said Bradt said, "I think today is a little better."

Most people learned of the deaths early Thursday morning from Cable News Network reports, but the names of the downed aviators were not released until Thursday afternoon so many had to wait until evening for the full story, Lahmon said.

Flags on the air base were back at half-staff in accordance with military regulations, he said.

The Air Force allows for flags to be flown at half-staff for two days following the death of an aviator, Lahmon said. One of those days can be the day of or the day after the death, the second will be the day of the memorial service, he said.

Off the base many flags were still flying at half-mast, and the jet crash was still on everyone's mind.

"It's sorta personal with us because my husband knew both of them," said Nancy Fern, a mother of three. "The boys' station and snack shop just outside the air base."

"He cried. He came in here (Thursday) crying and he told me about what happened," Fern said. Her husband is an Air Force officer who used to be in the 390th Electronic Combat Squadron.

Since everyone who stops at the Three G's is either coming from or going to the air base the reality of war is easier to understand. "On Thursday, but the mood was quieter Friday once the identities of the aviators were widely known, Fern said.

"Everybody talked about it and wondered who the men were," she said. "My teachers didn't really talk about it, not even in world history. It was really weird," said Mountain Home Junior High student Sarah Hebert, 12.

"I'm glad it wasn't someone I knew, but it's still sad," said Cassie Husted, 14. "It's sad no matter whose family it is. Just pray for all of them."

Walking down a flag-lined American Legion Boulevard on his way home from school, 15-year-old Rick Coody said the incident made him think of his father, an aviator specialist currently in Saudi Arabia.

"There are a lot of people with family over there," Coody said. Of the 3,500 military personnel assigned to Mountain Home Air Force Base, about 500 are deployed to the Persian Gulf.

"Anything you're in a war, things like this can happen, but it doesn't make it any easier," he said.

Those of us who have been around know that this can happen," Lt. Col. John Lee, a hospital administrator at the base, said. "I'm actually surprised we haven't lost more men."

Although the deaths rocked the quiet, peaceful community, local folks are still behind the war effort, said Larry Lucas of Lestley's Kwik-Stop.

"Not one person yet has come in and said they don't support what we're doing over there," said Lucas who wore a T-shirt bearing an American flag above the slogan "You can't touch this."

"And the death of the two aviators? That just gets people's anger up more," Lucas said.

 vided cadence for the procession with a slow drum roll.

Following a brief graveside service by Chaplain P. J. Edwards, the Navy, seven Marines fired a three-volley farewell and the bugler played taps. The flag that had been held over the grave by an honor guard was folded and presented to Capt. Edwards by the captain's wife. Folded flags also were given to Edwards' mother and father.

First Mrs. Edwards, then 11-year-old Bennett, 8-year-old Adrienne and 13-year-old Spencer placed single roses on the small platform that held the urn. Then the captain's father, Preston Edwards, also placed a rose. A Marine spokesman said Edwards' mother, Sally Edwards, 67, was in the bitter cold and she remained in a van nearby.

Arlington Cemetery is not the largest national cemetery in the country, but it is the best known. More than 216,000 veterans and their families are buried there, representing every previous war.

In his final resting place, Edwards is in a relatively new section among men from every service, whose headstones show they served in both world wars, Korea and Vietnam.

Edwards had served with the Army in Korea after graduating from Kenston High School in Chignin Falls, Ohio. He graduated from Ohio University in 1980 and was commissioned as a second lieutenant on Nov. 1, 1980.

He left active duty in 1986, becoming an investment counselor. He was a reservist with a light helicopter squadron in Glenview, Ill., and volunteered for active duty in December. He arrived in Saudi Arabia only last month.

 about 40 percent above normal.

"We're very flush right now," said Edward P. Scott, Lifeblood's chief executive officer.

It's surprising so large that a few centers including Lifeblood said they had been unable to use or sell the blood and might have to pour some of it down the drain.

Blood has a shelf life of up to 42 days and which it must be frozen.

"Our inventory is about double what it normally would be," said Scott.

At some point, the outside number is expected to exceed 42 days) is going to go up."

Civilian blood banks are supplying only a few hundred pints of blood to the gulf per week; most of the blood—for Operation Desert Storm is coming from the military's blood-collection program.

The amount of many blood banks that too many individuals have donated is a concern, said Scott at once. That has created a tricky problem for blood banks: Do they turn away potential donors and risk losing them, or invite them to donate and run with an excess of blood?

"We always walk a fine line," said Jeffrey McCullough, director of national blood services for the American Red Cross. "There is a constant need to make the public aware of the need for blood. On the other hand, if we collect more blood than is really needed, then that blood is not properly utilized, and costs go up."

U.S. trade deficit falls to lowest level in 7 years; exports rise 8.3%

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. merchandise trade deficit fell in 1990 to its lowest level in seven years, the government said Friday. Analysts said the report showed the only strong element of an economy in recession.

The Commerce Department said exports rose 8.3 percent last year to a record $394 billion, nearly twice the 4.6 percent gain in imports, which totaled $495 billion, also a record.

The difference between the two resulted in a 7.7 percent decline in the trade deficit to $101 billion, the lowest since a $52.4 billion gap in 1983. Still, it was the seventh consecutive year of $100 billion-plus imbalances.

The figures cover only tangible goods and exclude trade in services like insurance. Services would show a modest surplus.

Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher described the export performance as "the key to leading us out of the recession," adding that "I don't see anything but that it will continue" to improve this year.

Bruce Steinberg, an economist with Merrill Lynch Capital Markets in New York, said the merchandise trade sector "is the only strong sector in the U.S. economy. In fact, it is the only sector still growing right now."

overseas as well. "A strong sign of recession came with the trade numbers," said economist David Jones of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a New York government securities dealer. The deficit is a pleasant surprise but it comes largely because of a large drop in imports.

Aid David Wyss, an economist with DRI-McGrav-Hill in Lexington, Mass., added, "With the consumer still in the doldrums, we expect to see lower imports of consumer goods, at least through the first part of the year."

The deficit peaked at $152.1 billion in 1987. And, while the 1990 deficit was the third consecutive yearly improvement, Mosbacher and many private economists, said the gap would have fallen below $100 billion except for the Aug. 2 Iraqi invasion of Kuwait that sent America's foreign oil bill skyrocketing. Oil prices have fallen in recent months.

Contributing to the 1990 improvement was a huge 29.8 percent decline in the deficit in December to $6.3 billion, the slimmest gap since a $5.3 billion imbalance last June. While exports dropped 2.1 percent from November to $33.5 billion, imports plunged 7.9 percent to $39.7 billion for the month.

Oil imports fell to $5.2 billion from $6.3 billion in November. Volume declined from 214 million barrels to 197.8 million in December, the lowest since 191.5 million in May 1987. At the same time, prices fell to $26.07 a barrel from $29.44.

Excluding oil, the December deficit totaled $1.9 billion, $1.6 billion less than the November deficit of $3.5 billion.

Most other import categories also declined, including foreign car shipments. They were down 10.4 percent to $4.0 billion following a 2.1 percent decline in November and a huge 39 percent gain in October.

Showing the most strength in exports were manufactured goods which rose 9.7 percent, including a 11.9 percent advance in advanced technology products.

Report shows mixed signals on economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices edged down 0.1 percent in January while the country's trade deficit fell to its lowest level in seven years in 1990, the government said Friday.

The Bush administration said these developments should translate into an early end to the recession. Private economists, however, said a third report — showing that output at the nation's factories, mines and utilities fell for the fourth straight month in January — indicates manufacturers remain in the grips of a steep downturn.

"The report on industrial production showed a continuing slide with no end in sight," said Allen Sims, chief economist of the Boston Co. "The bottom line is that we have a deep recession that is entrenched."

Analysts were worried not only by the 0.4 percent drop in January's production level but also by a sharp revision to the December report, showing that output fell by 1.1 percent that month, almost double the original estimate.

"This certainly confirms that the economy is still in a recession," said David Jones, an economist with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. who forecast that overall economic activity would fall at a faster rate in the January-March quarter than the 2.1 percent drop in the October-December period. Private analysts saw at least a glimmer of hope in the reports showing further moderation in wholesale prices and a significant narrowing of the trade deficit.

The trade gap, fell to $101 billion in 1990, down 7.7 percent from the preceding year, as weak domestic demand dampened Americans' appetite for imports while U.S. exports were climbing to an all-time high. The trade gap in December narrowed to $6.25 billion.

Women get children's votes for president

PAWTUCKET, R.I. (AP) — Today's children apparently think it's time for a woman as president.

Ask them who they'd pick as the commander in chief and a number of women will show up on the list: Mom or Janet Jackson or Vinna White.

But that's not to say the voters of the next millennium are going to elect a woman to the White House. Mr. Rogers, that amiable host of children's TV, would wind up as president with 45 percent of the vote.

Michael Jackson's sister, Janet, would be the kids' second choice, with 18 percent of the vote among pre-schoolers polled by toy manufacturer Playskool.

A third of 150 children ages 4 and 5 who were polled at day-care centers in Augusta, Ga., Philadelphia, Seattle, St. Louis, Mo., and Toledo, Ohio, insisted they wanted "someone with experience."

For some of them, however, it's not really clear what experience is required. Almost one-third believe the president is responsible for keeping track of all the money in the world. Another 28 percent think it's his job to keep the peace and 22 percent say he locks up the bad guys.

Others believe the job is a little less demanding. The chief requirement of a president, said 13 percent of the kids, is living in the White House. Eight percent think the president's job simply is to talk to people. But a 5-year-old girl said the job carries weight: "He owns the country," she said.

Playskool frequently solicits the thoughts of its market audience. The results help researchers come up with ideas for new toys, or just provide a refreshing look at a sometimes overexamined topic, said Wayne Charness, spokesman for Pawtucket-based Hasbro Inc., Playskool's parent.

"Children are certainly our market," Charness said. "We spend a great deal of time with them to learn their thoughts on a whole range of issues."

Playskool decided to ask preschoolers about presidents to celebrate the 75th anniversary of Lincoln

Logos. The first version of the notched wooden pieces of varying lengths, based on a man and his birthplace that have become a part of American culture, went on the market in 1916, the creation of John Lloyd Wright, son of the legendary architect Frank Lloyd Wright.

Mortgage rates lowest in years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest charges for 30-year, flat-rate mortgages were at their lowest since falling to 9.07 percent for the week ending March 27, 1987. On one-year, adjustable-rate mortgages, lenders were asking an average initial rate of 7.59 percent, down from 7.68 percent last week.

Charges for 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages were at their lowest since falling to 9.07 percent for the week ending March 27, 1987. On one-year, adjustable-rate mortgages, lenders were asking an average initial rate of 7.59 percent, down from 7.68 percent last week.

Study finds many elderly keep mental youthfulness

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many elderly men are at least as mentally able as the average young adult and some — the most gifted — actually scored better on one test at age 80 than they did at age 70, scientists said Friday.

The new studies do not dispute the longstanding belief that, for most people, mental ability declines with age. What they do show is that some men manage to escape that trend.

The studies also provide intriguing clues to how that happens, said Sandra Weintraub, a neuropsychologist at Harvard Medical School in Boston.

What distinguishes the top performers from the bottom performers in men over 65 is maintenance of high scores on memory and attention tests, she said Friday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Weintraub's findings were based on a sophisticated computer test of 1,101 doctors 28-92 years old. The test measures memory, attention, logical reasoning, calculation and reasoning, she said.

She and her colleagues found that the top scorers aged 75-92 did as well as the average of men under 35. In a separate study, Edwin Shneidman of the University of California Los Angeles tested 35 intellectually gifted men at age 70 and again at age 80.

He found that 77 percent of them increased the size of their working vocabularies during their 70s. Weintraub said her study showed that medical conditions such as high blood pressure, use of prescription drugs or others had no correlation to a subject's ability to do well on the test.

Top scorers were much more likely to have continued working than were bottom scorers, she said. Some researchers believe that working stimulates maintenance of mental function, but Weintraub disagrees. "I don't think it's 'use it or lose it,'" she said. "Some believe the decline in mental ability may come first, and if you don't have it, you can't continue to work."

Shneidman's study was based on the so-called Terman Study of gifted children, begun in 1921 by Lewis Terman, a psychologist at Stanford University.

California governor presents $100 million plan to fight drought

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. Pete Wilson presented a $100 million drought plan Friday that hastens water transfers to parched areas, bolsters fire protection and threatens cities with rationing if they don't cut back voluntarily.

Wilson told a news conference he may use emergency powers to enforce water rationing if communities don't cooperate.

The governor didn't specify how much cities would have to cut back on water use. He said an average cut of 50 percent "is a worst-case scenario, but a likely one."

Nor did he say when the state would begin cracking down on cities. A report on efforts by local agencies will be released in two weeks, he said.

The state's five-year drought shows no sign of abating as the March end of the winter rainy season approaches. With rainfall amounts totaling just one-fourth of normal, Snowpack in the Sierra Nevada range, a major source of water, also is about one-fourth of normal. The state's 35 million farmers are about one-third their normal levels.

Local agencies throughout the state have already imposed a variety of rationing and other water conservation plans.

About half of the $100 million will be spent to help the State Department of Forestry and Fire Protection combat what Wilson said could be the worst fire season ever in California, as the five-year drought shows no sign of abating.

Much of the money is to be used to hire firefighters, especially since war against Iraq has taken away thousands of National Guard and U.S. Army troops who normally join the battle against summer wildfires.

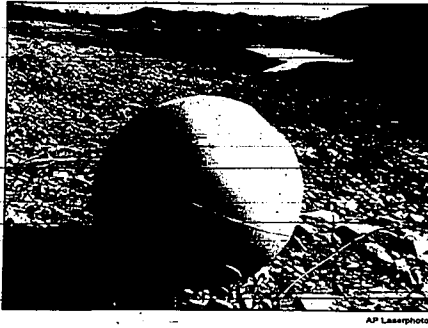

Wilson also said he is expanding the California Conservation Corps, an agency that provides public service jobs for young people, to help with wildlife and fire-fighting efforts.

The governor's plan follows huge cuts in water deliveries by California's two major government water projects.

The State Water Project earlier this month cut off water to farmers entirely and said it may supply only half the normal flows to urban customers. On Thursday the larger federal Central Valley Project, which serves roughly two-thirds of the state and supplies water to farmers by 75 percent this spring and to cities by as much as half.

Those two actions combined are expected to bring water cuts of some 20 percent to most of the state's 85,000 farmers.

About 80 percent of federally distributed water in California goes to farmers, and some cities and industrial districts receive federal supplies. Farmers receive about 5 percent of their water from the state, about 20 percent from the federal government, and the rest from local agencies and groundwater supplies.

This buoy is normally atop 10-20 feet of water in California lake.

Even before the cuts, several hundred thousand acres of farmland were left unplanted for lack of water, said Jason Peltier, who represents Central Valley Project contractors. He estimated that 1 million acres will not be farmed this year, out of the state's 9 million acres of irrigated farmland, unless the situation improves.

Wilson said he would order the State Water Project to continuously evaluate the situation to determine whether flows can be restored to farmers at some point this spring.

Mary Ann Warmerdam, spokeswoman for the California Farm Bureau, said farmers are generally pleased with Wilson's approach, especially his promise to increase supplies for farmers if there is additional rainfall.

"From our standpoint, we would view his comments with optimism. We're pleased with what the governor has said," she said.

Boy's long hair keeps divine vow

PHARR, Texas (AP) — Four-year-old Joshua Garcia sat in the school cafeteria Friday with his shoulder-length hair wild and damp and with his thumb stuck in his mouth, seemingly enjoying the swirl of attention.

Joshua's parents made a vow to God to keep his hair long until doctors assure them he is cured of cancer. But officials contend he is violating a dress code that prohibits pupils from having hair that falls below the collar.

After a two-day hiatus, Carnahan Elementary School allowed Joshua back in the classroom Friday while officials decide whether to expel him.

A television crew interviewed him as he ate breakfast with his kindergarten classmates in the cafeteria. Asked if he knew why he was getting attention, he replied, "I don't know. Because they want me to cut my hair."

Sandra and Manuel Garcia obtained a temporary restraining order last week letting Joshua attend the public school in Pharr near the Mexican border after the school sent the boy home Feb. 5.

But visiting State District Judge Romeo Flores dissolved the order Thursday, saying the family did not prove irreparable harm had been done to the boy. The judge refused to issue an injunction prohibiting the school from expelling the child.

Joshua is enrolled in his half-day school program while the district, lawyers and judges decide what happens next.

"What goes on beyond today will depend on the attorneys," Principal Sylvia Valdez said.

School district attorney Jesus Ramirez recommended that the Garcia family seek an exception to the hair rule on religious grounds. No hearing has been scheduled.

"It's not a hair case," Ramirez said. "It's a First Amendment religion case. It's an important distinction."

The couple's attorney, Aaron Pena Jr., said they want to set a precedent for "the issue of whether hair length is a religious expression and whether or not that is protected under the Constitution."

The Garcias said they made a promise, or vow to God, at a Catholic shrine in November 1987 not to cut the boy's light-brown hair until they were sure Joshua's cancer was completely cured. Doctors feared that cancer removed from one of Joshua's testicles had spread to his lymph nodes.

Marshal cites gas leak in blast

OSAGE BEACH, Mo. (AP) — Leaking propane gas caused an explosion and fire that shattered windows and cracked walls at a resort hotel, injuring 20 people, a state fire official said Friday.

"It's just a miracle that nobody was killed," State Fire Marshal John Coburn said after inspecting the damage at the Lodge of the Four Seasons. "I've never seen that much damage without fatalities."

Twenty-eight rooms in a rear part of the 311-room hotel were "dramatically damaged" by the Thursday night explosion, Coburn said. The blast blew out walls, shattered windows and cracked concrete walls and ceilings, he said.

Investigators believe that propane gas leaking from an underground line filled a hotel wing and was ignited when someone lit a cigar, he said.

Several of the injured guests were in the Wild Times bar about 100 yards from where the fire and explosion occurred.

"when we got out of there," said John Frekking, whose head was wrapped in a bandage.

All but two of the injured were Missouri Highway and Transportation Department employees and were among 600 people attending the 82nd annual conference of the Highway Engineers' Association of Missouri.

Three people remained hospitalized Friday evening, including one man in critical condition in the burn unit of the University of Missouri hospital. Seventeen others were treated at Lake of the Ozarks General Hospital and released, including three who had been hospitalized overnight, said spokeswoman Vanessa Cantwell.

About 300 of the hotel's 580 guests were evacuated within 15 minutes after the fire broke out, said Frank Maloney, the hotel's general manager. The evacuated guests were put up nearby hotels Thursday night.

Mother keeps child she locked in car

ELIZABETH, N.J. (AP) — A judge has returned a 6-year-old girl to the legal custody of her mother, who locked her in a car while she worked, officials said Friday.

Chante Fernandez lost legal custody of her daughter, Anjuli, last year after police found the girl locked in a car in the parking lot of a mall where the mother worked.

offered her jobs and free child care after she told police she had left her daughter in the car because she couldn't find an affordable baby-sitter. Superior Court Judge John Callahan on Thursday also ordered that the New Jersey Division of Youth and Family Services continue monitoring the mother and daughter.

Anjuli was placed in the agency's care on Oct. 20 after police found the girl in the car.

Hard-liners want to overthrow Gorbachev, install dictatorship

MOSCOW (AP) - Hard-liners say they're planning to dump Mikhail Gorbachev and install a dictatorship to deal with the Soviet Union's mounting problems.

Vladimir Voronin, leader of the self-styled National Salvation Committee, said he would eliminate parliament, political parties, the free press and the presidency if his group takes power.

Army Col. Viktor Alksnis, a leader of the hard-line Soyuz group of national parliamentarians wants Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to declare martial law or quit.

Hard-line views like these are finding support among some Soviets because of economic hardships. Top government officials have met with the National Salvation Committee in an indication that hard-liners are a force they cannot ignore.

However, it is far from certain that the majority of the Soviet people would back harsh dictatorial measures even in the hopes it would lead to a better life.

A national poll conducted by the Soviet Center for Public Opinion in January found 22 percent agreed that "harsh dictatorship is the only solution to the current situation," while 61 percent disagreed. The center's Alexander Talitskiy said the survey covered 2,016 people in 47 cities and rural areas, and had a 3 percent margin of error.

Still, the hard-liners claim great influence. Alksnis says his Soyuz or "Union" group with 360 members is one of 22 political factions backing the National Salvation Committee. Voronin expects mounting demands for orderly government will prompt Gorbachev or parliament to pass a law or decree transferring power to the National Salvation Committee.

In fact, he has called all political groups to Moscow on Saturday to discuss how they would peacefully take over Kremlin power.

"It will not be a coup!" Voronin insisted in an interview. "It will be perfectly legal."

He predicted Gorbachev will say, "Take power, please. ... I can't lead anymore."

At that point, "neither Gorbachev nor the parliament would have power," Voronin said. "It would be his last decree."

90 dead from Peru cholera epidemic

A Peruvian fisherman suffering from cholera writhes in pain.

LIMA, Peru (AP) - The death toll neared 100 in Peru's cholera epidemic, and worried South American nations applied emergency measures to stop the disease from spreading across the frontier.

Ecuador on Friday ordered the fumigation of its border area with Peru, and the cleaning of a rubbish-filled canal that divides the two countries.

Argentina and Paraguay have refused to play soccer matches in Peru for fear of contracting cholera.

Other nations have banned fish products from Peru, the world's largest fishmeal exporter. Medical authorities say the vibrio cholerae bacillus that causes cholera also resides in plankton and shore-hugging fish.

The Peruvian government shut down a major fishing terminal in Lima, after several hundred cases of cholera were reported in the area. Many cholera victims said they had eaten ceviche, the national dish of raw fish marinated in lemon, which the government has warned people not to eat due to contamination.

Cholera, spread in feces-contaminated water and food, affects the intestines, causing diarrhea and severe fluid loss. It can be fatal if not treated.

Meanwhile, both Ecuador and Chile, which border Peru to the north and south, respectively, denied news reports that cholera cases had surfaced in their countries.

But officials in Ecuador and Chile have not ruled out closing their border with Peru in the near future if the situation worsens.

Local officials in the northern Chilean port of Iquique on Friday announced a five-day quarantine on all air, land and sea traffic.

South Africa, ANC agree to 'suspend struggle'

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - The government and the African National Congress announced an agreement Friday that President F. W. de Klerk said would allow him to free political prisoners and allow exiles to return home.

The ANC has cited the two measures as its key demands for entering negotiations with the government on ending white minority rule in South Africa.

The United States also has cited release of political prisoners as the final condition for easing sanctions against South Africa.

In statements released simultaneously, the government and the black opposition group gave details of the agreement completed Tuesday at a meeting between delegations led by de Klerk and ANC deputy president Nelson Mandela.

The statements said the two parties had agreed on the terms of the ANC's Aug. 6 decision to suspend its struggle.

The ANC agreed to suspend all attacks and infiltration of guerrillas into South Africa; stop creating underground military structures, and halt military training inside South Africa, the ANC statement said.

In return, the government agreed to "respect the right" of all "South-

Africans to "peacefully assemble to express their views" and would instruct security forces and counter-insurgency units not to harass ANC members and supporters.

Lawmakers question tax idea

BOISE (AP) — Two lawmakers saw it as a bad idea, perhaps repeating the mistakes made on the same issue last year.

But the House Revenue and Taxation Committee still voted approval Friday of legislation creating a new system to handle tax-exempt sales.

"We jumped on the bandwagon last year for something that was unworkable," said Rep. Golden Lindford, R-Rexburg. "I thought it was a mistake at the time."

This bill could cause a lot of heartburn out there yet. I think we've just seen the beginning of the problems that will come about," he said.

"I see a growth in state government that exceeds anything we've seen in the past," said Rep. Myron Jones, R-Malad.

It will require purchasers to register and buy a $20 permit showing their purchases are exempt from the sales tax. Anyone without a permit must pay the tax, then get a refund from the state.

"There are 20,000 tax collectors (retailers) out there," said J. Tim Brennan, president of the Idaho Retailers Association.

"To write a law that covers it all without problems is impossible," he said. Idaho's the first state to try the approach. "I believe this will become a model for the other states," Brennan said. Tax Commissioner Bob Fry estimated it would cost $1.7 million to set up the system, and 50 employees to run it.

The rest of the committee sent the measure to the House floor with a do-pass endorsement. It could come up for a final vote next week.

Last session, the Legislature passed a bill to make purchasers, not retailers, responsible for proving they are exempt from Idaho's 5.3 percent sales tax.

But the measure proved unworkable. A coalition of business interests came up with a new version, which if approved will become law starting in 1992.

State court upholds death penalty

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court has upheld the death penalty ordered for Paul Rhoades for what police contended was a series of drug-related robberies and slayings in eastern Idaho. Rhoades' execution isn't likely to be carried out soon, however, as he still can appeal to the federal court system.

Rhoades was convicted of killing Baldwin on Feb. 28, 1987. District Judge James Herndon sentenced him to death.

In a separate case, Rhoades also was sentenced to death for killing Idaho Supreme Court has upheld all three court proceedings against Rhoades for what police contended was a series of drug-related robberies and slayings in eastern Idaho. Rhoades' execution isn't likely to be carried out soon, however, as he still can appeal to the federal court system.

Rhoades was convicted of killing Baldwin on Feb. 28, 1987. District Judge James Herndon sentenced him to death.

In a separate case, Rhoades also was sentenced to death for killing

Idaho Falls teacher Susan Michalbacher.

And in a third case, Rhoades pleaded guilty to killing another convenience store clerk, Nolan Haddon, and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Rhoades was sentenced in the Michalbacher case by Justice Larry Boyle, who was an Idaho Falls district judge at the time. Boyle was replaced in the Baldwin case by Pocatello Judge Lynn Wiannill, who joined with the majority Friday.

2 Utahns survived Vietnam, listed as killed

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Carl Cox and Keith L. Hardy are among as many as 39 Vietnam veterans whose names are engraved in the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington but are alive.

"It's spooky," said Cox, who did not know he was listed on the memorial until he was contacted by a reporter Thursday. "I never even knew anything about it. It kind of makes me proud in a way."

The memorial has 58,175 names carved on the V-shaped wall of those U.S. soldiers reported dead or missing in Vietnam.

The Associated Press reported Thursday that the names carved on the memorial may include as many as 38 Army veterans mistakenly listed as dead.

Robert W. Doubek, the man responsible for deciding which names would be carved on the memorial, said he wasn't positive at the time that the men had been killed because their records were incomplete, but he included them anyway because he didn't know that it would be possible to add names once the memorial was built.

The names of Keith Hardy, left, and Carl Cox are on the plaque, but they are very much alive.

Hardy, who was a specialist four in the Army during the Vietnam War, is living in Kanab. "It's a surprise," said Hardy, a 47-year-old employee of Kanab Custom Meats. "It just makes me wonder how it got there. I definitely will go look at it. I don't know when, but I will."

The two ex-soldiers' names also are on the Utah-Vietnam Veterans Memorial on the state Capitol west lawn. "We got the names from a book by the Department of Defense that listed all of the soldiers who were killed in Vietnam," said Ferry Schow, who organized the building of the Utah memorial. "That was the same book that they used for the memorial in Washington."

Acid scalds fertilizer supervisor

POCATELLO (AP) — A supervisor at J.R. Simplot Co.'s phosphate fertilizer complex west of Pocatello was in stable condition at the University of Utah burn clinic after being scalded by phosphoric acid. Ward Larsen, 39, slipped into the 350-degree acid Thursday afternoon while trying to fix a valve near four enclosed tanks, Simplot spokesman Rick Phillips said Friday. Phillips said he was unsure whether the valve was the source of the acid, which was contained by a 12-inch, high rim around the tank. Larsen, who has worked at the plant for 18 years, received third-degree burns on his feet, knees and forearms. "I knew what he fell into and protected himself," Phillips said. Co-workers quickly grabbed Larsen, stripped off his clothes and thrust him into a nearby safety shower.

Woman charged in lover's death

ST. MARIES (AP) — A Benewah County woman who awoke Monday and listened while her estranged husband allegedly killed her lover tried last month to get a court order to prevent such a confrontation. Court records show that on Jan. 24, the woman — whose identity has not been released — sought police protection from Reuben Rich, asking a judge to bar him from coming to her boyfriend's home, where she was living. She said her husband had sexually and verbally abused her, verbally abused the couple's 24-year-old daughter and physically abused their 18-month-old son during the past year. But 1st District Magistrate Peter Hutchinson denied the request, unconvinced Rich had abused or even threatened the woman.

Symms will appear at 'Homefront' rally

TWIN FALLS — Sen. Steve Symms, a Republican who is Idaho's senior U.S. senator, will appear at the College of Southern Idaho and the Turf Club in Twin Falls today.

Symms will attend the Operation Homefront organizing rally at 3 p.m. in rooms 117 and 118 at CSJ's Shields Building. The operation is designed to show support for U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf and make plans for their homecoming, Symms said.

After that, the senator will attend dinner and address the annual Twin Falls County Lincoln Day Banquet at the Turf Club. A reception runs from 6 p.m. until 7:15, followed by dinner, a reading of the Gettysburg Address, a performance by the Magichords and then some words from the senator.

SAN FRANCISCO — BankAmerica Corp. said Friday it will restructure its Pacific Northwest thrift subsidiary, which includes an office in Twin Falls, into separate state banking operations.

The S&L's nine Idaho branches will operate under a new state banking charter as Bank of America Idaho.

The bank said the move will give customers better service.

BankAmerica, the nation's second largest bank holding company, is the parent of Bank of America. The $162.3 million purchase of Franklin Savings, including the Twin Falls office, was the largest of several major acquisitions the company has made since the end of 1989.

Higher daily attendance nets Shoshone more state funds

SHOSHONE — Shoshone Superintendent of Schools Stef Palaniuk reported to the school board recently that the district will receive about $21,000 more from the state this year.

The increase is a result of higher average daily attendance than last year. The board also is looking into borrowing money from First Security Bank if interest rates are low enough; in the past the district has borrowed money from West One Bank.

The district is not in debt and Palaniuk said with the extra money from the state, the district will probably not need to borrow money.

In other business, the board approved the purchase of a 72-passenger school bus, expected to cost the district about $45,000.

It also decided to stay with the 90 percent attendance policy set by the state and look at exceptions on a case-by-case basis.

Potato harvest disappearing from storage at record rate

TWIN FALLS — The U.S. potato harvest is disappearing from storage sheds at a record-setting pace, according to the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service.

Processors, packers, and landfills have claimed 18.2 billion pounds of spuds so far.

In Idaho, growers, dealers and processors held 6.05 billion pounds on Feb. 1, 54 percent of the record 11.2 billion pounds left in storage.

Last year, growers remaining equaled 52 percent of the 1989 harvest.

Murtaugh principal to move office, structure to change

MURTAUGH — The Murtaugh School Board recently approved a change in the administrative structure of the school district.

Beginning next fall, Superintendent Michael Chesley will also function as the elementary school principal.

Chesley will move his office from the high school to the elementary school and will spend the entire day there.

He said the district was making the change to save money, adding it is small enough for him to handle both jobs.

Chesley added that the district will use the extra funds to hire a teacher and a teacher's aide.

The 1991-1992 school calendar was adopted by the school board with one notable change.

In the past the district took a week off in September for the Twin Falls County Fair, but the new calendar has eliminated this vacation from school.

To catch a thief

Students at Jerome's Central Elementary School gather around an alarm rigged cookie jar during the school's 'Invention Convention.' Students from the 4th, 5th and 6th grades were encouraged to make inventions at home and bring them to the school, said Gifted and Talented Program Facilitator Sharon Peterson. The cookie jar is rigged with an electronic buzzer and a nearby sign reads 'Every mother needs a cookie catcher to catch a cookie thief.'

'It's one of the worst jobs,' Air Force man says

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

MOUNTAIN HOME — The death of two Mountain Home airmen in Saudi Arabia Wednesday meant three air base personnel had to do a job they had prepared for, but hoped would never be necessary — notifying the wives and family of the downed pilots.

"It's one of the worst jobs you can get asked to do," said Maj. Lt. Jerome Gitters, chief of personnel assistance at Mountain Home Air Force Base.

Capt. Douglas Lloyd Bradt and Capt. Paul Richard Eichenlaub II, both 29, became the first Idaho casualties in Operation

Desert Storm when they were found dead in the ejection capsule of their EF-111A jet in northern Saudi Arabia after a combat mission Wednesday.

As soon as word of the deaths came to the base, Gitters said a three-man casualty notification team was assembled — a chaplain, a medical technician and commander or field officer from the pilot's own squadron. The field officer's rank was a major or higher, said Gitters, who could not give names of the team members.

The notification team was briefed on the circumstances of the pilots' death and given the necessary personal details regarding the families, Gitters said.

Once all the information has been received from the Air Force's Casualty Command Post, the team went to the homes of the airmen's wives, Gitters said. The process took about three hours, he said.

Both women live on the base, but their names were not released to the media.

"They are doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances," Gitters said.

Once chosen, the notification team was given a 90-minute briefing on how to handle the grim duty, he said. Team members are encouraged not to be overly sympathetic and to avoid physical contact with the survivors — two orders that can be difficult to carry out, Gitters said.

After the families were notified, Eichenlaub had two children — Gitters said the widows were asked how soon they wanted to be contacted by the personnel affairs office to arrange for payment of benefits.

"The Air Force tries to compensate as much as possible," he said. "They take care of their own."

Counseling and moral support is also available to help the families, Capt. John Lahmon, public affairs officer, said.

"Even though the military does not have other families it's always available, but more importantly, other airmen and their family members are helping the wives of Bradt and Eichenlaub cope with their loss, Lahmon said.

Mandatory reporting bill introduced in committee

By Anita Dennis
Times-News writer

BOISE — Gov. Cecil Andrus' proposal to require mandatory reporting of pregnant women who use illegal drugs was introduced Friday in the Senate Judiciary and Rules Committee.

But a sidekick to the governor's legislation that would have expanded the Child Protective Act to include newborns, proposed to drugs as "neglected" was rejected.

In moving to introduce the governor's proposal, Sen. Patricia McDermott, D-Pocatello, warned that she would not support sending the bill to the Senate floor.

"I believe our chief executive has had some very bad advice," McDermott said. "I think it's very misguided."

The legislation, presented by Steve Tobison, director of legislative services for the Idaho attorney general's office, would require health care practitioners report to the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare of pregnant patients suspected of using controlled substances for non-medical purposes.

The person who reports would be immune from liability and Health and Welfare would keep the information confidential but investigate the report and offer treatment services or referral.

"It's a totally voluntary situation," Tobison said.

The proposal is watered-down from an idea Andrus announced in his state of the state address last month. The governor originally wanted legislation to mandate that pregnant women who use illegal drugs receive treatment, even against their will.

But the idea met opposition from women's and civil rights advocates who argued it would deter women from seeking prenatal care.

While an attorney general's opinion upheld the constitutionality of involuntary treatment, this legislation will assess the

Gooding County can get dirty to put out fire

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — State officials will let Gooding County use a cheaper method to dispose of a smoldering landfill fire than the method suggested by engineers.

An Idaho Air Quality Bureau worker had recommended the county be charged with state air pollution violations for its handling of the fire at the county landfill, burning now for more than 50 days.

But the bureau's manager of monitoring and compliance, Dave Pisarski, said Friday that the county will not be charged with violations and can try to cap the fire with dirt.

Some state officials doubt that method will work.

In a Feb. 4 letter to Gooding County Commissioner Bob Tupper, the environmental director of the South Central Health District, Terry Schultz, said capping the fire probably would not dispose it and could create the risk of cave-ins where the fire burns as deep as 30 feet below the 1 1/2-acre surface.

To cover the whole area with dirt, crews likely will have to drive machines over it, running the risk of caving in areas where the fire has not burned all the way to the surface.

Nonetheless, Gooding County opened bids Friday on a plan to cover the burning garbage with 7 feet of soil, to wet and compact the layer, and then to add 2 more feet of dirt.

"That'll be the cheap way to go. It isn't what the federal and state government want, but we have a right to do what we want," Tupper said.

Gas prices dip to 2 cents below national average

The Times-News and The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho motorists began the three-day Presidents' Day weekend with gasoline prices more than two cents lower than the national average, according to a statewide survey by the Idaho chapter of the American Automobile Association.

The latest survey put Idaho's average pump price for self-serve unleaded gas at $1.14 per gallon, but several Magic Valley towns boasted prices substantially lower than that Friday.

In Burley, $1.05 could buy a gallon of gas while up the road in Rupert, stations sold self-serve unleaded gas for $1.07 per gallon Friday. In Wendell, a gallon of gas cost $1.09.

Other Magic Valley areas remained higher than the state average. Ketchum service stations, for instance, were selling a gallon for between $1.34 and $1.39.

According to the AAA survey, southern Idaho's overall average was $1.12 per gallon.

Southwestern Idaho average prices were the lowest found in the statewide AAA survey at just under $1.10. The northern Idaho average was $1.23, and southeastern Idaho came in at a $1.14 average.

An AAA weekly spot check of fuel prices nationally showed an average of $1.164 per gallon, down 1.9 cents since the previous week's survey and the seventh drop in eight weeks.

"Lower prices have been a welcome relief for Idaho motorists who were paying $1.44 just a few months ago," Idaho AAA spokesman Dave Carlson said.

But in February 1990, Idaho's statewide average price was 97.3 cents per gallon, and some southern Idaho stations involved in gas wars at the time had prices in the 80-cent range.

Carlson said the latest average price is the lowest since the first week in August, after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, when prices jumped from $1.15 to $1.23.

Seasonally lower demand, adequate supplies and confident international markets apparently are partly responsible for a steady price drop since December, he said.

Congressmen question honors policy

The Associated Press
And The Times-News
TWIN FALLS - Idaho's two congressmen have written to the Pentagon questioning what apparently is its new policy of limiting honors to troops killed in the Gulf War.
Democratic Reps. Richard Stallings and Larry LaRocco wrote Friday to David Gribbin, assistant secretary of defense for legislative affairs, seeking an explanation for the new policy.

Recent reports from the Pentagon have said casualties from the Persian Gulf will not receive traditional military honors upon arrival at Dover Air Force Base in Delaware.
LaRocco and Stallings said they have heard "quite a few concerns expressed by constituents about this new policy. ... One woman called and said the new policy is a "slap in the face to those people who are giving their lives and to their families." Another said the "idea is ridiculous."

The Idaho lawmakers said they would like to know for certain that the courageous men and women willing to give their lives for this country will indeed receive the honor and recognition they deserve."

Wendell police busy with bad checks

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL - Bad checks, traffic accidents and burglaries topped the list of 1990 investigations by the police department.
In an annual report to the City Council Thursday, Police Chief Kevin Blankmeyer said the number of traffic accidents has declined for the third year in a row, a good statistic that is saving people money, he said.

For the past five years, however, Wendell has seen a 12.6 percent average annual increase in police cases, Blankmeyer said. His department investigated 36 cases during 1990. In 1984, the department investigated only 134 incidents with the same number of officers as today, he said.
In his 12-page report, Blankmeyer said there were 48 bad check felony cases, 41 burglaries, 26 burglaries, 30 thefts, 28 cases of destruction of property, 24 DUI arrests and 24 juvenile problems. Patrol cars logged a total of 42,786 miles.
Following a national trend, the number of violent crimes, 21, was double the number in the previous year, he said.

Of five auto thefts, all five were recovered. In addition, three other vehicles were recovered from thefts in other cities including Denver.
The 1990 investigations included 11 sex crimes, 10 crimes against children, 11 animal control cases, eight drug-related crimes, five deaths and one kidnapping.
In March, the department was involved in one homicide, two cases of rape, two arson, three robberies and six aggravated assaults.
In regular patrol and in response to calls, the Wendell Police Department made 2,278 vehicle checks, investigated 580 complaints, made 501 traffic stops, checked on 361 people and made 142 public assists.
In traffic stops, 278 citations were issued, up from 134 citations in 1989.

In checks on people, about 50 percent of the transients were wanted, Blankmeyer said, but only 10 percent of agencies wanted them taken in to come and get them.
"Quite often, the reason they are wanted is to keep them from coming back," he explained.
Because of liability and interference with private enterprise, the police department is performing fewer public assists, Blankmeyer said. For example, he said, officers no longer open locked cars or jump start cars.

Statistics of the 41 traffic accidents in 1990 show that male drivers were at fault in 24 of the accidents while women were at fault in only 13. Also, men were the victims in 20 accidents and women were the victims in 15. In six cases of hit-and-run, the driver was untraceable.
"What the report indicates is that men are involved in accidents more than women in the city of Wendell," Blankmeyer said.

In charts showing the frequency of arrests by day of the week, Saturday night was the busiest day, while Friday was the least busy. Frequency of arrests by month showed July was the busiest and March was the slowest.
After each busy month, arrests for the following month usually were down because the officers were in court, the chief said.
Most traffic accidents occurred around the end of the school day, between 2 and 5 p.m.
Blankmeyer said that because of ever increasing liability issues, as well as a need to improve record keeping, the police department now, for the first time, maintains employee semi-annual evaluations, employment files, department policy and guideline manuals, vehicle maintenance logs, city map incident locators, officer training schedules, drug evidence destruction records, long-term vehicle replacement programs and a variety of other department plans and reports.

"Councilman Jack Green said the consensus of residents he has talked with is that the Wendell Police Department is doing a good job."
"They know the guys are putting in a lot of work and they appreciate it," Green said.
In other business:
Mayor George Benson and the council decided to have a workshop with engineer Scott Bybee at 7 p.m. Thursday to decide what must be done to the Montrose Well to add it to the city's water system.
Also at the Thursday meeting, city officials will work out a job description for Dennis Barr, the city's animal control officer and city crew member.

Councilman Dale Bunn said citations for dogs should be written only by police officers, not by Barr, so the council can prosecute successfully in court. Also, he said, Barr would not have to leave the city crew short-handed while he spends the day in court.
Benson said he does not believe the council would be short-handed without Barr. He said Barr should receive an official appointment to be an animal control officer. This appointment would give Barr authority to issue citations.
Bunn said the appointment is not necessary.
Participation of a possible irrigation water shortage, Benson advised that the council should not follow the city's usual practice of lessening extra water shares. If the council cuts each share by, for example, 75 percent, the city might not have enough water to go around, Benson said. The council took no action on a request from Myrl Callen to lease extra irrigation water shares the city might have.

State officials and a consulting engineer recommended the county spread burning garbage in "1-foot layers" of water and lay 3 to 6 inches of dirt on top.
Layers of burning garbage would be stacked on each other, with water and dirt added on each one until all the burning garbage had been covered.
"The county's plan might cause the fire for $25,000 to $30,000, while the state's recommendation would cost a lot more," Tupper said. This cost could be in addition to at least $60,000 the county already has spent on the fire.
Cost is a big reason the Air Quality Bureau will let the county pursue its plan, Pisarski said.

Air Quality Bureau compliance officer Casey Meredith said the fire for the first time, maintains employee semi-annual evaluations, employment files, department policy and guideline manuals, vehicle maintenance logs, city map incident locators, officer training schedules, drug Merredith said the county should have sprayed the top layer of garbage and mixed the wet refuse with the burning layer underneath. The same method could be used with soil placed on the top layer, he said.
Besides the South Central Health District and Air Quality Bureau, the state Water Quality and Hazardous Materials bureaus and the federal Environmental Protection Agency want to see the fire doused. The BLM leases Gooding County the acreage for the landfill.
Left to burn itself out, the fire could burn for months, possibly even a year, endangering surrounding property if the burn spreads as it is putting more pollution into the air.

Tupper would not release results of the bid opening Friday until talking with the Gooding County attorney. A possible legal problem in the specifications presented him from discussing it, Tupper said. He expected the county to award the contract Tuesday.
The landfill has been burning since late December.

All of us on the Snake River Plain are threatened," Meredith said. "That's why we have these kinds of (pollution) regulations."
Penalties for violations of the regulations range from hundreds to thousands of dollars a day.
No one knows how the fire started or, even how long it has been burning, although it was discovered shortly before Christmas. Officials think the cause was accidents on a Worksday tug trench around the burning garbage to separate it from the rest of the landfill. They also dumped soil and sprayed water on top of the garbage. Neither method has worked so far.

Bill

size of the problem and whether there is a need for further action, said Scott Bevan, another project secretary, said.
The governor's concern for drug-addicted babies was spurred by the case of a Canyon County infant who was born cocaine-addicted and two months later died of an overdose.
The infant's mother, convicted of felony injecting to a child.
While the newborn was being treated in the hospital, the prosecutor and Health and Welfare tried to assess whether the child was legally neglected.

McDemott said it was an attempt to make a fetus a legal person and to cross-bonuses with the Child Protective Act.
"If you want to put women in jail or criminalize them for using drugs, you ought to have a bill that does that," she said.
Patterson argued that while Tobiason's bill deals with prenatal circumstances, "This deals with born children who show some evidence of chemical addiction or drug exposure at birth," he said.
"The more I hear, the more I think we're dealing with a difficult problem in the wrong way," Sen. Dennis Davis, D-Coeur d'Alene, said. The legislators would force women to aid hospital deliveries, he said. "And I don't think that's protecting the child."

Congressmen question honors policy

The Associated Press and The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Idaho's two congressmen have written to the Pentagon questioning what apparently is its new policy directing bonuses to troops killed in the Gulf War.

Democratic —Reps. Richard Stallings and Larry LaRocco wrote Friday to David Grubbin, assistant secretary of defense for legislative affairs, seeking an explanation for the new policy.

Recent reports from the Pentagon have said casualties from the Persian Gulf will not receive traditional military honors upon arrival at Dover Air Force Base in Delaware.

LaRocco and Stallings said they have heard "quite a few concerns expressed by constituents about this new policy. ... One woman called, and said the new policy is a "slap in the face to those people who are giving their lives and to their families." Another said the idea is "ridiculous."

The Idaho lawmakers said they "would like to know for certain that the courageous men and women willing to give their lives for this country will not receive the honor and recognition they deserve."

Wendell police busy with bad checks

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Bad checks, traffic accidents and burglaries topped the list of 1990 investigations by the police in Wendell.

"In his annual report to the City Council Thursday, Police Chief Kevin Blankmeyer said the number of traffic accidents has declined for the third year in a row, a good statistic that is saving people money, he said.

For the past five years, however, Wendell has seen a 13.6 percent average annual increase in police cases, Blankmeyer said. His department investigated 361 cases during 1990. In 1984, the department investigated only 134 incidents with the same number of officers as today, he said.

In his 12-page report, Blankmeyer said there were 42 check felony cases, 41 traffic accidents, 36 burglaries, 30 thefts, 28 cases of destruction of property, 24 DUI arrests and 24 juvenile problems. Patrol cars logged a total of 42,786 miles.

Following a national trend, the number of violent crimes, 21, was double the number in the previous year, he said.

"Of five auto thefts, all five were recovered. In addition, three other vehicles were recovered from thefts in other districts.

The 1990 investigations included 11 sex crimes, 10 crimes against children, 11 animal-control cases, eight drug-related crimes, five deaths and one kidnapping.

Major cases included one homicide, two cases of rape, two arson, three robberies and six aggravated assaults.

In regular patrol and in response to calls, the Wendell Police Department made 2,278 vehicle checks, investigated 580 complaints, made 501 traffic stops, checked on 361 people and made 142 public assists.

In traffic stops, 278 citations were issued, up from 134 citations in 1989.

"Checks on people, about 50 percent of the transients were wanted, Blankmeyer said, but only 10 percent of agencies that wanted them were willing to come and get them.

"Quite often, the reason they are wanted is to keep them from coming back," he explained.

Because of liability and interference with private enterprise, the police department is performing fewer public assists, Blankmeyer said. For example, he said, officers no longer open locked cars or jump-start cars.

Statistics of the 41 traffic accidents in 1990 show that male drivers were at fault in 24 of the accidents while women were at fault in only 13. Also, men were the victims in 20 accidents and women were the victims in 15. In six cases of hit-and-run, the fault was undetermined.

"What the report indicates is that men are involved in accidents more than women in the city of Wendell," Blankmeyer said.

In charts showing the frequency of arrests by day of the week, Sunday — including the early morning hours after Saturday night — was the busiest day, while Friday was the least busy. Frequency of arrests-by-month showed July was the busiest and June was the slowest.

"After each busy month, arrests for the following month usually went down because the officers were in court, the chief said.

Most traffic accidents occurred around the end of the school day, 2 and 5 p.m.

Blankmeyer said that because of ever increasing liability issues, as well as a need to improve—some of the police department now, for the first time, maintains employment semi-annual evaluations, employment files, department policy and guideline manuals, vehicle maintenance logs, city map incident log files, officer training schedules, drug evidence destruction records, long-term vehicle replacement programs and a variety of other department plans.

Councilman Jack Green said the consensus of residents he has talked with is that the Wendell Police Department is doing a good job.

"They know the guys are putting in a lot of work and they appreciate it," Green said.

In other business:

Mayor George Benson and the council decided to have a workshop with engineer Scott Hybee at 7 p.m. Thursday to decide what must be done to the Monroe Well to add to it the city's water system.

Also at the Thursday meeting, city officials will work out a job description for Dennis Barr, the city's animal control officer and city crew member.

Councilman Dale Bunn said citations for dogs should be written only by police officers, not by Barr, so that cases can be prosecuted successfully in court. Also, he said, Barr would not have to leave the city crew short-handed while he spends the day in court.

Benson said he does not believe the crew would be short-handed without Barr. He said Barr should receive an official appointment to be animal control officer. This appointment would give Barr authority to issue citations.

Bunn said the appointment is not necessary.

"In anticipation of a possible irrigation water shortage, Benson advised that the council should not follow the city's usual practice of leasing extra water each share by, for example, 75 percent, the city might not have enough water to go around, Benson said. The council took no action on a request from Myrl Callen to give extra irrigation water shares the city might have.

Landfill

State officials and a consulting engineer recommended the county accept burning garbage in 11 layers, spray them with water and lay 3 to 6 inches of dirt on top.

Layers of burning garbage would be stacked on each other, with water and dirt added on each one until the burning garbage had been disposed.

The county's plan might double the fire for $25,000 to $30,000, while the state's recommendation would cost a lot more, Tupper said. This could require an addition to at least $60,000 the county already has spent on the fire.

Cost is a big reason the Air Quality Bureau will let the county pursue its plan, Pisarski said.

Tupper would not release results of the bid opening Friday until talking with the Canyon County attorney. Potential legal problems in the bid specifications prevented him from discussing it, Tupper said. He expected the county to award the contract Tuesday.

The county has been burning since late December.

Air Quality Bureau compliance officer Gary Meredith said fire presents a health risk, not only to people in the immediate area but in the region as well.

Noxious and toxic gases from burning plastics and rubber heated in the past and auto parts are escaping into the air. Toxic compounds from these burning substances have been linked to cancer and lung damage, Meredith said. Temperature inversions trapping the pollutants have worsened the problem.

"All of us on the Snake River Plain are threatened," Meredith said. "That's why we have these kinds of (pollution) regulations."

Penalties for violations of the regulations range from hundreds to thousands of dollars.

Not one knows how the fire started, or even how long it has been burning, although it was discovered shortly before Christmas. Officials think the cause was accidental.

Workers dug a trench around the burning garbage to separate it from the rest of the landfill. They also dumped soil and sprayed water on top of the garbage. Neither method has worked so far.

Meredith said the county should have sprayed the top layer of garbage and mixed the wet refuse with the burning layer underneath. The same method could be used with soil placed on the top layer, he said.

Besides the South Central Health District and Air Quality Bureau, the Snake River Quality and Hazardous Materials Bureau and the federal Environmental Management System want to see the fire doused. The BLM leases Gooding County the acreage for the landfill.

Left to burn itself but, the fire could burn for months, possibly even a year, endangering surrounding areas if the burn spreads as well as putting more pollution into the air.

Schultz's letter said the four state officials and the Bureau of Land Management wanted the county to douse the fire within 30 days. Realistically, the agencies probably will evaluate the county's progress in battling the fire in mid-March.

"Right now it's a wait-and-see attitude," Schultz said on Friday.

size of the problem and whether there is a need for further action, said Governor Andrus' press secretary said.

The governor's concern for drug-addicted babies was spurred by the case of a Canyon County infant who was born cocaine-addicted and two months later died of overdoses.

The infant's mother was convicted of felony injury to a child.

While the newborn was being treated in the hospital, the prosecutor and Health and Welfare tried to assess whether the child was legally neglected.

"It led to some paralysis of decision-making and the child stabilized and the child went home," Ken Patterson, administrator of Health and Welfare's Division of Family and Children's Services, told the committee Friday.

Andrus asked his Children at Risk Task Force if Governor Patterson is a co-chairman, to study the case.

Patterson on Friday requested introduction of legislation that would specifically define newborns who have been exposed to illegal drugs during pregnancy as neglected, but would allow the department to keep the infant out of the home.

But the committee rejected the idea.

"McDermott said it was an attempt to make a fetus a legal person and at cross-purposes with the Child Protective Act.

"If you want to put women in jail or criminalize them for using drugs, you ought to have a bill that does that," she said.

Patterson argued that while Tobiasson's bills dealt with prenatal care, we're dealing with a difficult problem in the wrong way," Sen. Dennis Davis, D-Coos, at Albany, said. The legislation would force women to avoid hospital deliveries, he said. "And I don't think that's protecting the child."

TWIN FALLS — Rob Noland recently became the new pastor at the Chapel of Praise. Retiring pastors, Sheldon and Mary Chapel, turned the ministry of the Chapel over to Noland and his wife, Pam, also an ordained minister, on Feb. 10.

Noland has been the commanding officer at the Salvation Army for a little over three years.

Before their appointment in Twin Falls, the Noland's pastored a non-denominational fellowship in San Diego, Calif. They bring over 15 years of ministry to the Chapel, as well as an addition to its name, it was now named the Chapel of Praise Christian Community. They are also bringing experience in forming Home Ministry groups and in intimate and personal ministries of healing, nurture, discipleship and worship.

According to Noland, a Christian Community is a group of Christians who have joined together to "walk out" their Christian relationships. A church community is committed to praying for and with one another, submitting to and honoring one another and sharing each other's lives while following Jesus, Noland says.

Widely known

The most widely recognized figure in the world is Saddam Hussein. Mikhail Gorbachev or George Bush. Researchers say it's still a tossup between Mickey Mouse and Superman.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The barking-dog equivalent of "how-wow" in Russian is "gav-gav."

An amorous animal, the male walrus is inclined to mate with any large animal it can pin down, including humans. Divers off the Florida Keys say 300 pound turtles are like that too. One is a mountain reptile they call "Crazy Charlie" repeatedly chases them all over the place.

Twice as many people died in the Holocaust as died in earthquakes world-wide in the last 500 years, it's estimated.

ANCIENT GAME
"Halma" is a Swedish game. Or was. It died out about 1,800 years ago. In 1880, the Swedes revived it. The Japanese picked it up and introduced it to China. By the time it got to North America, it was called "Chinese Checkers."

Elephants in the wild don't need their toenails trimmed. Zoo elephants do.

Lot of good bridge players can't play poker worth a hoot. Lot of good poker players just can't get the hang of bridge. "Card sense," says the experts, "is a combination of interest, concentration and experience."

Never mind the vegetables. When the Bushmen of Africa say they're hungry, they mean they've gone too long without meat.

BIG BIRDS
Those big strom-birds called-Tundra swans must be scared of large bodies of water. Or their annual flight from Chesapeake to Alaska's North slope. They fly around, not over, the Great Lakes.

Chaplain called up

AP Laserphoto

Monsignor John P. McCullagh, New York Police chaplain and Roman Catholic priest, was called to active duty and reported Tuesday to Fort Benning, Ga., for planning and coordination of casualty notification (Army speak for delivering tragic news to a soldier's family).

Old tune hums: Why does God allow war?

NEW YORK (AP) — A stranger approached an Episcopal priest in clerical collar on a Manhattan street corner and said somewhat challengingly, "I see you're a man of the cloth." Then he tossed his zinger: "So tell me, why does your all-powerful God let horrible things like this war happen?"

It's an old question, particularly in a time of travail such as the present war in the Persian Gulf and the Rev. George Keith of Manhattan's St. George's Church tried to offer a simple answer.

"People are the ones choosing war, not God. We all have free will. It's up to us. We're not puppets. God's not up there pulling the strings about it."

That's a peck into the riddle, but it raises complications about why God left people to their own flimsy devising and if he cared for them and wanted their good—why he didn't use his omnipotence to arrange it.

"People keep asking it and we don't always have pat answers," said Bible scholar James Efrid of Duke University Divinity School. "Often, it's a not too thinly veiled attempt to put the onus on God. But God can't be blamed for human evil."

The tendency to fault God goes back to the creation story when Adam and Eve each tried to attribute their failing to another. Adam, in effect, even blamed God by laying it on this "woman whom you gave

"It's part of the human condition," Efrid said in an interview. "We always want to rationalize and transfer guilt." This is especially so "when the issue is so large and causes so much hurt and anguish," he added. Fundamentally, as dramatized throughout Judeo-Christian Scripture, human beings were given intrinsic freedom to do as they themselves decide, to choose good or evil, to pick their own course, often wrong. It's a potentially majestic, almost Godlike prerogative.

"We were given qualities of intelligence and abilities to pick alternatives," said the Rev. Richard McSorley, Roman Catholic theologian of Georgetown University in Washington. "It's the essential note of being human. It even makes us able to defy God. Take it away, and we could be neither good nor bad. We would be just like stones or other inanimate objects. We were made to love God and one another, but we can't love unless we're free to do it. But once we're free, we also can refuse to love and kill and hate."

Without it (freedom), "we'd be automatons or animals," said Jewish biblical scholar Eugene Borowitz of New York's Hebrew Union College.

"God wouldn't be a good God if he didn't make us free: If it's why God's good," he said, "one thing is impossible even for God—to not be a good God. This implies self-imposed limitations on his power. He is all-powerful except in regard to people's freedom," Borowitz said. "God is as powerful as God could be."

Duke University's Efrid, a Presbyterian, said, "When God created us, God limited himself to enter into relationship with us. God agreed to keep his part of the bargain. We are supposed to keep ours. But because of who we are, we don't always keep our part."

Consequently, wrong human choices bring trials and troubles.

disasters and wars, deaths in fire-traps, wrecked dwellings mistakenly situated over earthquakes because of bad judgment and ignorance.

"Efrid said that in those circumstances, such as war, biblical teaching indicates that God also suffers. "I think it breaks God's heart." Yet Scripture holds that "evil always comes to an end," Efrid said.

"God then allows the opportunity for new beginnings."

Churches offer haven to soldiers

SPOKANE (AP) — A Unitarian-Universalist church has declared itself a "haven" for military personnel who object to the Persian Gulf War.

The Spokane Unitarian Church will offer counseling—but will not shelter war objectors on church grounds, the Rev. Linda Whittenberg said Wednesday.

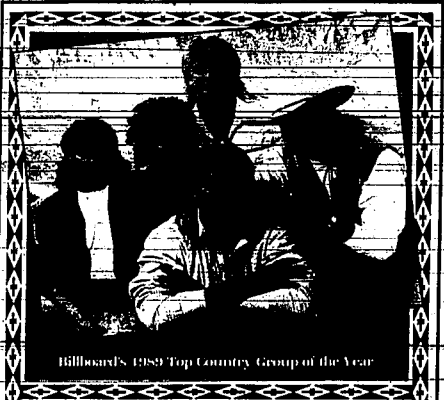

Two Seattle churches, a Unitarian church and the University Baptist Church, have joined more than a dozen nationwide offering sanctuary to war resisters, providing moral, financial, legal support and in some cases temporary shelter to soldiers seeking conscientious objector status. The Spokane Unitarian Church declared itself a haven after a vote by church members Sunday. The proposal was approved by a slim margin, with about 100 of the church's 400 members voting, said

Under the proposal, church volunteers could help find legal services or provide personal counseling to military personnel seeking assistance, Whittenberg said, adding that individuals facing arrest for their views can choose to be arrested at the church to ensure being treated with dignity.

St. Ann's Roman Catholic Church in Spokane will consider offering sanctuary if a full-scale ground war breaks out in the Persian Gulf, the Rev. Peter Kirwinoff said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"Ride on! Rough-shod if need be, smooth-shod if that will do, but ride on! Ride on over all obstacles, and win the race."
— Charles Dickens.

There's more than one obstacle blocking the path to today's game. Averting an early trip-up is relatively easy; dodging the second may be more difficult.

If South puts in dummy's heart queen at trick one, the game goes down quickly: East wins and shifts to spades, and South is held to only eight tricks.

So the ace of hearts goes up at trick one. South expecting to win four diamonds, three clubs (with two finesses) and two major-suit aces. What next?

If the club nine is led from dummy, losing to West's king, South is in for a rough time. West's heart 10 is covered by the queen and king, and East shifts to spades. South wins and runs the diamonds, but when he tries the second club finesse, West's discard leaves South one trick short.

To get three club tricks, South must lead a low club to his 10 at trick two. Later he leads the nine for his second finesse, and the lead remains in dummy to pick up East's uncooperative queen.

It's time to assume that the club honors will be split (or that both will be with East)—the only way to block the suit in case of a 4-1 split.
