2 U.S. ships damaged by Iraqi mines

Knight-Ridder News Service

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — Two U.S. warships were damaged by Iraqi mines Monday as allied naval forces massed in the northern Persian Gulf, off the coast of Kuwait.

The helicopter carrier USS Tripoli struck a mine just before dawn Monday. An explosion tore a 16-by-25-foot hole in the vessel, causing flooding in forward compartments and injuring four crew members. Less than three hours later and 10 nautical miles away, the guided-missile cruiser USS Princeton was struck by a mine that damaged one of the ship's two main propellers. Three injured crewmen were evacuated to a British hospital ship.

Meanwhile, on the ground and in the air, coalition forces continued their stepped-up preparations for a land assault on Iraqi forces in Kuwait and southern Iraq. Skirmishing continued along the northern Saudi Arabian border, and allied pilots flew more than 2,400 sorties against targets in Iraq and Kuwait.

"We are continuing our aggressive patrolling, reconnaissance and counter-reconnaissance efforts all along the border separating Saudi Arabia from both Iraq and Kuwait," said Marine Brig. Gen. Richard L.

Neal of the U.S. Central Command in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

"Although Iraq extensively mined the Persian Gulf waters off Kuwait following its Aug. 2 invasion, no allied ships previously had been damaged by mines.

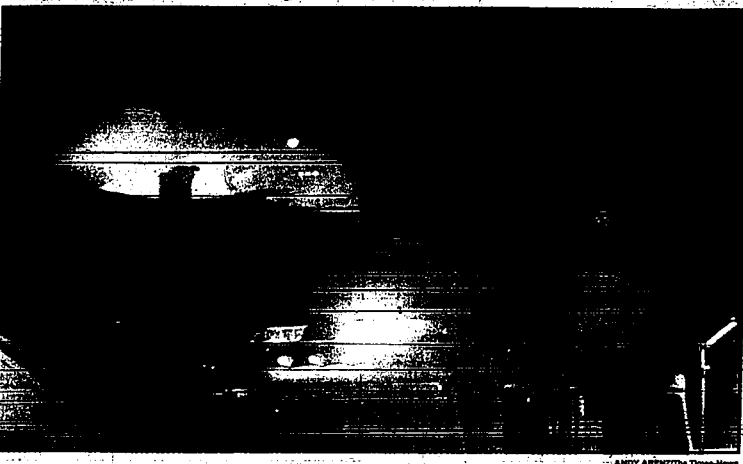

Allied minesweepers have recovered or destroyed 86 mines in the gulf.

"They may have been isolated incidents, although you kind of say

"Geez, two ships within 10 miles of each other?" a senior U.S. military official said.

Fire guts Twin Falls house to tune of $70,000

By Craig Lincoln
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS, — A Main Avenue home burned down Sunday night while its owner was on an Army assignment in West Germany and its occupants were at a rock concert in Boise.

Fifteen firefighters responded to the blaze, which was reported at 11:19 p.m., but were unable to control it in time to prevent total destruction of the home.

Battalion Chief Wayne Campbell said the fire apparently started in the basement of the white house, located at 464 Main Ave. S.

The house is owned by Steve Mitts, who is in West Germany with the U.S. Army.

The occupants of the home, Mary Minker and her three children, were at the New Kids on the Block rock concert in Boise when the structure caught on fire.

Firefighters searched the house after receiving a report that people were in side, Campbell said. They found no one, and no injuries were reported.

The fire department used three fire engines and the city's tower truck while fighting the fire.

The fire gutted the house, causing $70,000 in damage, Campbell said.

The last fire engine left the scene at about 4 a.m.

Investigators are waiting for water to drain out of the basement before continuing their investigation into the cause of the blaze.

U.S. precedes ground assault with bombs, rockets

The Baltimore Sun

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — As a prelude to an all-out ground offensive, U.S. forces are inundating the nearest Iraqi defensive positions with bombs, rockets and some of the heaviest artillery in the American arsenal.

"We're really having a field day taking out U.S. tanks and some of his artillery," a senior U.S. military official said Monday.

According to the military and reporters traveling with ground combat units, efforts toward "battlefield preparation" have advanced significantly in the last few days. And the signs pointing to an escalating ground war are everywhere.

One of the military's immediate goals is to soften Iraqi resistance across the Saudi border, both in Iraq and Kuwait, and on the southern Kuwait coastline, where a Marine amphibious landing may occur.

Over the weekend routine U.S. border patrols and ground reconnaissance missions became more aggressive and attacked the enemy with an array of tanks, armored fighting vehicles and Apache attack helicopters.

The allies also started to use 15,000-pound bombs and fuel-air explosives dropped from a C-130 aircraft in an initial attempt to clear minefields.

For its part, the 1st Infantry Division (Mechanized) fired more than a thousand rockets and eight-inch artillery shells at Iraqi artillery emplacements Saturday, marking what one witness called the heaviest ever ground bombardment of Iraqi territory.

The division's artillery units used one of the Army's newest weapons, the Multiple Launch Rocket System, which fired one round every 4.2 seconds until each launcher emptied a full complement of 12 rockets.

With more destructive power than any existing artillery cannon the MLRS provided saturation coverage on designated target areas.

Each rocket was capable of dropping 64 bomblets on the target. An official said, "E" Col. Scott Lingmiller, executive officer of division artillery, said the rockets should surprise Iraqi troops and devastate their prized artillery defenses.

"We want them to be there dealing cards and eating out of them and all the sudden it's on them," he said. "We want the shock effect. It is time they woke up and smelled the coffee."

Maryland OKs abortion law; opponents pledge legal fight

The Washington Post

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — The Maryland House of Delegates enacted legislation Monday evening to legalize abortion, while requiring physicians to inform minors' parents in some cases, and the measure was promptly signed into law by Gov. William Donald Schaefer.

The 84 to 52 vote in the House came after a wrenching debate about abortion last year in the General Assembly and a fall election season that was dominated by the issue. The state Senate approved the bill by a wide margin last week.

Schaefer, who has said he personally opposes abortion, signed the measure 40 minutes after the House action, but he expressed ambivalence about its central provisions.

"It's not a happy occasion," Schaefer said during a hastily arranged bill-signing ceremony outside his State House office. "I had great difficulty with it (but) I think the bill is right."

Attacked by opponents as the most liberal abortion law in the country, the measure allows abortion without restrictions up to the point at which a fetus can survive outside the womb. Later-term abortions may be performed to protect the woman's health or in the event of serious fetal deformity.

"We will find Maryland to be the abortion mill of the East," said Del. Marsha G. Perry, an abortion opponent.

One supporter of the bill, Del. Peter Franchot, said many abortion-rights legislators were disappointed that it requires parental notification in certain cases.

However, Franchot added, "It establishes Maryland as a national leader in speaking out for women."

Despite Monday's vote, abortion is likely to remain an issue in statewide politics. For instance, opponents of the new law have vowed to gather petitions to challenge it in a November 1992 statewide vote.

"This is only the first round," said Pat Kelly, a lobbyist for the Maryland Catholic Conference. "A referendum is the next step."

In enacting the bill, Maryland appeared to be bucking one current national trend toward stricter abortion regulation. This year,

Milky Way murky due to urban light pollution

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The electronic age is spoiling the vista of the ancient universe by saturating the sky with light and radio pollution, astronomers said Monday.

The glare from street lights, sports fields and other sources already has erased the heavens from the nighttime view in many American cities, said David L. Crawford, an astronomer at the Kitt Peak National Observatory in Arizona.

"The spectacular view of the night sky that our ancestors had above them on clear dark nights no longer exists," he said.

Paul A. Vanden Bout of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory said that radio astronomers, too, are being hampered by the proliferation of man-made emitting radio signals that overpower the faint pulses from distant stars and galaxies.

"Modern society carries with it an electronic buzz from such things as electric motors, portable telephones, garage door openers, welding machines and microwave ovens, he noted.

Andrea K. Dupree of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics said that light pollution from outdoor illumination, similarly, overpowers the faint light from very distant stars.

In a dark sky, she said, a large telescope is able to detect a tiny light source equivalent to viewing a 40-watt light bulb placed by the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia from the Capitol in Washington.

But the burgeoning glow of outdoor lighting makes such detection impossible, she said.

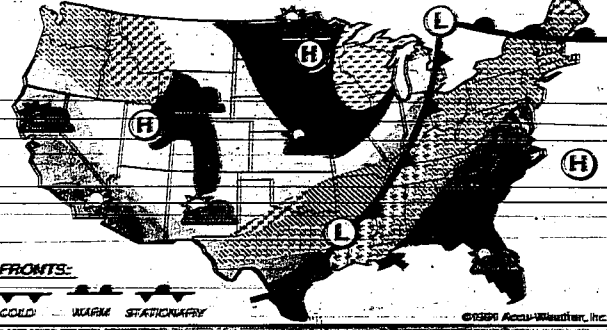

Light from Southern California cities already has put Mount Wilson, a major observatory, virtually out of business, said Crawford.

Snow sweeps northern states; rain-drenches the South

The Associated Press

Snow fell Monday from the northern Plains to New England, with heavy snow in the Midwest. Rain fell from Arizona across the South and over parts of the Midwest.

Snow fell from eastern Wyoming across South Dakota and parts of North Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, northeastern Wisconsin, central Upper Michigan, and from southeastern New York state into southwestern New England.

Western, South Dakota's Black Hills got 14 inches of snow from Sunday into Monday at Spearfish and Deadwood, with 16 inches at Rapid in the town's eastern part of the state.

The South Dakota Highway Patrol said Monday that more than 100 miles of Interstate 90 from Chamberlain to Kadoka, a stretch that includes Rapid, was closed by snow and blowing snow, and Highway 81 from that section of I-90 north to the state capital at Pierre also was closed.

IRA takes blame for deadly bomb

London Bombs

LONDON — The Irish Republican Army, having denied its murder of Prime Minister Jim Major 11 days ago, now claims responsibility for the IRA's explosive blast Monday.

One bomb, apparently set by the IRA, exploded innocently, possibly prematurely, at 4:20 a.m. on Paddington Station. But a second bomb, hidden near ticket offices at busy Victoria Station, killed one man and injured 19 other persons, some critically, when it went off at 7:40 a.m., well into the rush hour.

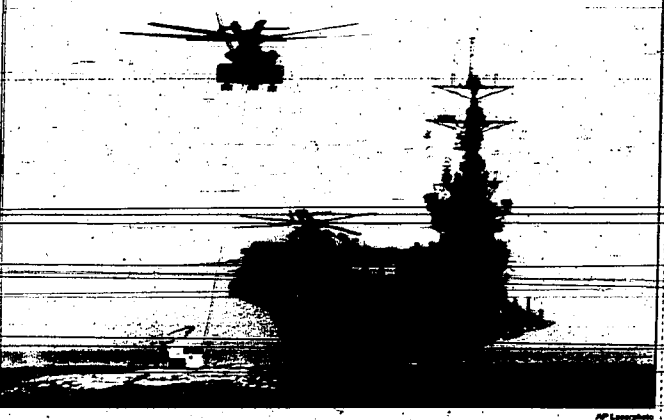

Telephone lines through the closed London's business district for three hours and all 14 railway stations for most of the day. Flights in and out of the British capital were halted. Nearly a half-million commuters either got to work late or not at all.

Government officials said police said they found the terrorism had anything to do with Iraq in the Gulf War.

Scotland Yard's anti-terrorism chief, Commander George Churchman-Ostman, said that neither the bombs went off, a caller who spoke in an Irish accent warned: "We are the Irish Republican Army. Bombs to go off at all mainline stations in 45 minutes."

Because the threat covered so many potential targets, police decided not to close the stations. A search was underway at Victoria and other stations when the bombs exploded.

It was the first time terrorists had aimed at purely civilian targets in London since 1943, when an IRA bomb outside British department stores killed six persons.

A helicopter lowers a mine-sweeping sled near the USS Tripoli, one of two U.S. ships which hit mines in the Persian Gulf Monday.

Mines

The San Diego-based Tripoli was sweeping for mines off the coast of Kuwait when it struck the mine at 4:16 a.m., according to a press pool report.

The explosion jured the 683-member crew into action and left the ship dead in the water. Work crews scrambled to shore up the hole in the forward starboard section and pump water out of a diesel room, a pump room and a dry storage locker on three different decks.

Shortly before noon, in a videotaped message, Capt. Bruce McEwen said he appears to have struck this morning. The ship is still afloat. The mine appeared to be moored just beneath the surface, and said the crew members mounting the on-deck mine watch could not be blamed for not seeing it.

Seven hours after the blast, personnel had been restored. Damage control crews had not determined whether the Tripoli would have to be towed out of the war zone for repairs.

Two crewmen sustained fractures, and one, a 24-year-old, needed a medical consultation, and the fourth, a broken collarbone. All were treated in the ship's hospital.

British and U.S. helicopters from other carriers spotted a half-dozen other suspected mines around the Tripoli.

According to Neal, the Princeton, a Teocondor-class Argo cruiser based in Long Beach, Calif., with a crew of 364, was helping to conduct a search for two of the Tripoli's mine-sweepers, which might have been swept overboard.

Neal said the Princeton was operating at 50 percent of power and that salvage experts were on route to the ship to determine the extent of damage.

"There has been damage done to one of its screws, and to avoid further collateral damage or to increase the damage, they elected to shut down that screw pending evaluation by the salvage experts," he said.

One crewman suffered a head injury, and two others sustained minor injuries, Neal said.

He declined to describe the Princeton's mission.

Abortion

Ohio approved a virtual ban on abortion and similar legislation was passed in the state Senate in South Dakota.

Nine other states are considering such legislation, and about 110 bills seeking a variety of abortion restrictions have been introduced in 47 state legislatures, according to the National Abortion Rights Action League.

Since July 1980, when the Supreme Court gave states more authority to restrict abortion, seven states have enacted restrictive abortion laws.

Only two states — Nevada by ballot initiative and Connecticut by statute — have adopted laws that have provisions similar to Maryland's.

The Maryland bill was approved earlier by the state's House of Representatives last month by an unopposed vote.

Legislators to amend it to ensure that hospitals and health care professionals were protected if they refused to refer a woman for an abortion, either out of religious or moral beliefs.

Abortion rights leaders argued against the "conscience clause" amendment, saying doctors and hospitals would be vulnerable to lawsuits or disciplinary actions only by failing to refer women whose pregnancies posed health risks.

The bill passed in the Maryland House of Delegates on Feb. 10.

During the bill-signing ceremony, Sen. Nease said the would support a separate bill that would clarify the conscience clause.

In large measure, the new Maryland law closely tracks the U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 decision, Roe v. Wade, which established abortion as a legal right.

In pushing the Maryland measure through the legislature, advocates cited their concern that the nation's highest court might one day overturn the landmark ruling.

Monday's victory for abortion rights lawmakers was tempered by the provision requiring parental notification for girls under 18 who seek an abortion.

As long as the Roe decision remains intact, the parental-notification requirement will be the only part of the law that changes current practice in Maryland when the law goes into effect July 1.

Parents will have to be notified unless physicians conclude that the girl is mature enough to make a decision or that the notice could lead to abuse or if it is in her best interest.

Because Maryland does not have a mandatory reporting law, there are no firm estimates on the number of abortions performed each year.

The Department of Health and Mental Hygiene put the number in 1980 at 22,000, but some organizations say the total is about 30,000.

Planned Parenthood officials estimated that women 19 years old and younger account for about 25 percent of the total.

The legislative debate in Maryland has been the focus in recent days of national advocacy groups on both sides of the issue.

Monday's events in the gulf

The Associated Press

Here are developments in the Persian Gulf war:

Around the Gulf

American gunners pounded Iraqi positions with artillery fire. Iraqi mines afloat in the Persian Gulf damaged two U.S. Navy warships — a billion-dollar missile cruiser and a Marine assault ship. And an American pilot went down deep inside Iraqi-held territory, to be plucked to safety by U.S. rescue helicopters.

The U.S. 2nd Marine Division repositioned its forces Monday to prepare for the cross-border assault, and sent reconnaissance teams beyond a 12-foot protective berm and into a no-man's-land between the opposing lines, Associated Press correspondent Denis D. Gray reported from the front.

At military headquarters in Riyadh, the Saudi capital, the U.S. command sounded ready for either a ground war or an extended all-air offensive. "It's probably to our advantage to have the air campaign go on," said command spokesman Brig. Gen. Richard Neal, "because... every day our aviation elements are in the air, they're inflicting casualties."

At the command's daily news briefing, the Marine general reported that partly cloudy weather Monday cut into the number of Desert Storm air sorties, reducing them to 2,400 in 24 hours.

Elsewhere

Iraq's foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, met with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev in Moscow and was presented with what a Kremlin spokesman described only as a "concrete plan" for settlement of the gulf crisis, based on an end to Iraq's occupation of Kuwait. Aziz immediately flew back to Iran, and from there he will head overland to Iraq on Tuesday. The Soviets said they expected a swift response from Saddam.

Desert Storm

U.S. Marines kick up dust as they head to the front in Saudi Arabia. Thousands of Marines on ships await assault orders.

Amphibious assault force of record size

WASHINGTON (AP) — An amphibious landing on the oil-stained shores of Kuwait would be the largest such undertaking since Gen. Douglas MacArthur ordered 40,000 troops into action at Inchon harbor in Korea 40 years ago.

Amphibious warfare, attacking from the sea, is a weapon honed on the seawalls of Inchon, the bullet-torn coral of the Pacific and the gales-lashed rocks of Normandy.

Dress rehearsals for a seaborne invasion of Kuwait have been underway for months on the beaches of friendly nations nearby. A task force of about 17,000 Marines is poised on ships in the Persian Gulf, backed by a flotilla of support vessels.

The operation they have been practicing requires precision.

It uses bombing runs and battleship guns to beat up targets on shore, landing craft to bring in troops, helicopter gunships and low-flying jets to support them, special equipment to clear away mines and obstacles, and tanks, armored vehicles and howitzers to drive the attack home.

Amphibious landings have their roots in the warfare of ancient times. The Persians brought an army in by sea to face the Athenians at Marathon in 480 B.C. Amphibious war in the modern world dates from one of the darkest episodes of World War I — the British attempt in 1915 to force a passage up the Dardanelles, the narrow straits that separate European and Asiatic Turkey.

Major amphibious landings were ordered at Gallipoli in April following the sinking or disabling of six British and French warships in an undetected mine field.

Once ashore, the British, Australian and New Zealand troops were plagued by the mistakes of their commanders and bogged down in murderous trench warfare. They never broke out of their beachheads.

AP Wirephoto

U.S. airmen send off an F-16 fighter plane with chaos. Air support is a critical aspect of amphibious assault plans.

London withdrew its forces in January 1916, with British casualties totaling 214,000. Amphibious landings as a method of war were largely discredited.

But in the United States, Gallipoli was seen in a more positive light. The Marine Corps viewed Gallipoli in terms of possibilities not failure.

In 1921, Maj. Gen. John J. LeFevre, then the Marine Corps commandant, recognized the growing military power of Japan and commissioned a study that resulted in the first detailed amphibious assault plans. The failure at Gallipoli was due to the incompetence of commanders and not the nature of amphibious war itself, according to Edward Beach, a 1986 history of the U.S. Navy.

Amphibious assaults, most of them fiercely opposed by Japanese troops who preferred death to surrender.

At Tarawa in November 1943, the battle left only 17 Japanese troops alive out of 5,000. The U.S. force of 64,500 incurred 1,000 deaths and 2,000 injuries.

In Europe and North Africa, amphibious landings in Morocco, Sicily and at Salerno culminated in the greatest amphibious assault ever, the cross-channel landing on the beaches of Normandy.

On June 6, 1944, the allied invasion fleet of 600 warships and 4,000 supporting vessels ferried a force of 176,000 from a dozen English ports.

Once ashore, the allies built artificial harbors and poured in more troops and supplies. By July 24, the allies had broken through and the battle for Europe had begun.

In 1950, a North Korean invasion drove U.S. and South Korean forces into a tight corner near Pusan at the Southeast end of the Korean peninsula.

MacArthur responded by ordering an amphibious counterstroke of American and South Korean troops at Inchon, just west of the occupied capital of Seoul.

In his 1990 study "Amphibious Operations," Col. M.H.H. Evans of the British Royal Marines describes the move as "a strategic masterpiece, but one fraught with tactical risk."

The approach to Inchon was up a narrow and easily defended channel. Timing had to be exact because local tides rose and fell by 33 feet, exposing mud flats when the tide was at its lowest.

Iwo Jima survivors know costs of assault

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Stephen Rimmer, wounded three times in the first hours of the Iwo Jima invasion, remembers the screams of the dying as Marines stormed a beach held by a dug-in and well-armed enemy 46 years ago Tuesday.

"I saw so many dead Marines I'll never see anything like that this side of the grave," said Rimmer, one of only two in his squad to survive Iwo Jima.

Survivors of one of the biggest and bloodiest battles of World War II, which began Feb. 19, 1945, say there are similarities between two Jima and the battle looming to take Kuwait, and there may even be some lessons for the 17,000 Marines waiting in the Persian Gulf to once again storm an enemy beach.

claiming 6,821 American lives and four times as many Japanese lives. "They have to go in and dig them out just like we did and it's going to cost some lives," said Rimmer, 63, holding the bullet-scared helmet that saved his life at Iwo Jima.

"It brings back all the memories. I saw some pictures of Marines under artillery fire and I felt like I could crawl up inside this helmet and hide."

Iwo Jima, a battle of attrition rather than maneuvers, became a symbol of American valor memorialized by an Associated Press photograph of the flag raising on the island. Kuwait, the veterans said, will be different because there is more room to maneuver, more air cover and better weapons.

But storming a beach is still one of the most difficult and costliest ways to take ground in war.

"Hitting a beach is the hardest thing because you're so vulnerable," said Gene Davis, 67, a Marine supplier from McIntire, La.

"Everyone here can relate to what's going on in the Gulf. If you've been in combat and seen your buddy die, you can relate."

"I have a lot of feelings about this," Davis added. "They don't know what to expect. We know what to expect."

"I hope they don't run into hell and high water when they go in, because our beach was littered with wounded 20 minutes after we landed."

Herman Johnson was one of only five in his company of 300 leathernecks to fight the whole battle — the rest were killed or wounded. He had bullet holes in his shirt and pants but Johnson escaped without a scratch.

"That's why they're not in any rush to go in," Johnson said. "The Marines today have a big legacy to uphold because of what these guys did."

"There was a legacy written in the sands of Iwo Jima. Today's Marines are going to make their own legacy to pass on to another generation of Marines."

Fighting the Gulf War on the ground might be even bloodier, he said, because weapons are more accurate and more deadly.

"We didn't do anything but keep looking forward and that's what those boys need to do now," he said.

"I'd tell them to put their trust in God. That's the big thing. Let God take care of you like he did me."

Marines today study Iwo Jima and every other major battle from the Civil War to Afghanistan.

Iwo Jima helped influence the current emphasis on "maneuver warfare" — bypassing the enemies' strong point to cut him off, according to Lt. Col. Greg Johnson, the official Marine representative sent from the Pentagon to the reunion of 400 survivors.

And like Iwo Jima, Marines today are concerned that the bombing war that won't hurt the Iraqis said survivor Harry Charowsky.

"I hope they don't run into hell and high water when they go in, because our beach was littered with wounded 20 minutes after we landed."

Snow sweeps northern states; rain drenches the South

The Associated Press

Snow fell Monday from the northern Plains to New England, with enough blowing snow in South Dakota to close a major highway, and rain-fell from Arizona across the South and over parts of the Midwest.

Snow fell from eastern Wyoming across South Dakota and much of North Dakota, northern Nebraska, northwest Iowa, much of Minnesota, northwestern Wisconsin, eastern Upper Michigan, and from southeastern New York state into southwestern New England.

Western South Dakota's Black Hills got 14 inches of snow from Sunday into Monday at Spearfish and Deadwood, with 16 inches at Murdo in the south-central part of the state.

The South Dakota Highway Patrol said Monday that Keadoka, a stretch that includes Murdo, was closed by snow and blowing snow, and Highway 83 from that section off 90 north to the state capital at Pierre also was closed.

"I've seen this much snow on one line, but not for about 12 years," said Brett Anderson, who works at Don's Stand in Murdo.

"They've closed the some highways, motels are all full. It's just fun," he said. "We can't even get a wrecker out."

"Most farmers have pretty big smiles on their faces," he said. "We need the moisture."

About a dozen travelers spent Sunday night at the Murdo Fair ground because all motel rooms were full.

As much as 5 inches of snow fell in Nebraska at Valentine and Elkhorn. More than 6 inches had fallen in western Minnesota and snowfall across southeastern North Dakota was generally in the 2 to 4 inch range.

Snowfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. EST included 5 inches at Aberdeen, S.D., and 3 inches at Redwood Falls, Minn., Pierre, S.D., and Spencer, Iowa.

Snow also fell over south-central Colorado, north-central New Mexico, and the mountains of central Washington state. Clouds had accumulated 11 inches of snow since Saturday night.

Firefighters searched the National Seafood Processing Company about 6 p.m., said the dispatcher, who refused to give her name.

Chlorine cloud injures 44 workers at Florida shipyard

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — At least 44 workers were injured Monday when they were caught under a chlorine gas cloud that floated over the Tampa Shipyard, a fire department dispatcher said. The gas cloud ap-

IRA takes blame for deadly bomb

Chicago Tribune

LONDON — The Irish Republican Army, having failed to murder Prime Minister John Major 11 days ago, put London's civilians, its economy and its lucrative tourist trade under siege Monday.

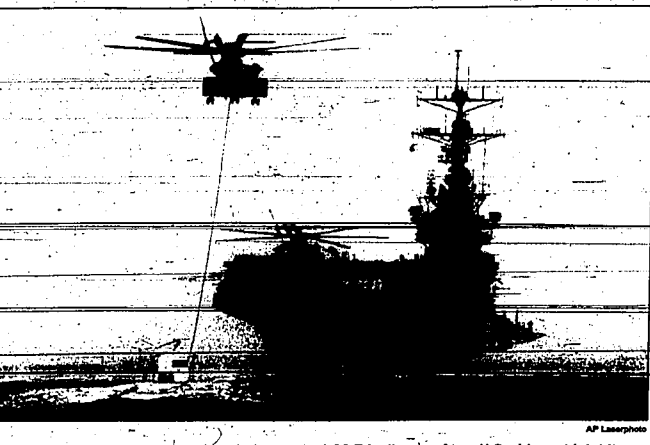

One bomb, apparently set by the IRA, exploded harmlessly, possibly prematurely, at 4:20 a.m. in Paddington Station. But a second bomb, hidden near ticket offices at busy Victoria Station, killed one man and injured 39 other persons, some critically, when it went off at 7:46 a.m., well into the rush hour. Telephoned bomb threats also closed London's Heathrow Airport for three hours and all 14 railway stations for most of the day. Flights in and out of the British capital were halted. Nearly a half million commuters either got to work late or not at all.

Government officials and police said they doubted the terrorism had anything to do with Iraq or the Gulf War.

Scotland Yard's anti-terrorism chief, Commander George Churchill-Coleman, said that before the bombs went off, a caller who spoke in an Irish accent warned: "We are the Irish Republican Army. Bombs to go off at all mainline stations in 45 minutes."

Because the threat covered so many potential targets, police decided not to close the stations. A search was underway at Victoria and other stations when the bombs exploded.

It was the first time terrorists had aimed at purely civilian targets in London since 1983, when an IRA bomb outside Harrods department store killed six persons.

A helicopter tours a mine-sweeping sled near the USS Tripoli; one of two U.S. ships which hit mines in the Persian Gulf Monday.

The San Diego-based Tripoli was sweeping for mines off the coast of Kuwait when it struck the mine at 4:36 a.m., according to a press pool report.

The explosion jarred the 685-member crew into action and left the ship dead in the water. Work crews scrambled to shore up the hole in the forward starboard section and pump water out of a diesel room, a pump room, and a dry storage locker on three different decks.

Shortly before noon, in a videotaped message, Capt. Bruce McEwen said, "It appears to be a very complex minefield that we struck this morning. The ship is stable. ... The ship is at no risk."

He said the mine appeared to be moored just beneath the surface, and said the crew members manning the on-deck mine watch could not be blamed for not seeing it.

Seven hours after the blast, perilous power had been restored. Mine control crews had not determined whether the Tripoli would have to be towed out of the war zone for repairs.

Two crewmen suffered bruises and abrasions, a third sustained a mild concussion, and the fourth a broken collarbone. All were treated in the ship's hospital.

British and U.S. helicopters from other carriers spotted a half-dozen other suspected mines around the Tripoli.

According to Neal, the Princeton, a Ticonderoga-class Aegis cruiser based in Long Beach, Calif., with a crew of 364, was helping to conduct a search for two of the Tripoli's mine-sweepers, initially thought to have been swept onboard.

Neal said the Princeton was operating at 50 percent of power and that salvage experts were en route to the ship to determine the extent of damage.

"There was some damage done to one of its screws, and to avoid further collateral damage, we increased the damage, they elected to shut down that screw-pending evaluation by the salvage experts," he said.

One crewman suffered a head injury, and two others sustained minor injuries, Neal said.

He declined to describe the Princeton's mission.

A U.S. naval intelligence officer said the Princeton might have been damaged by an influence mine. Influence mines, which are typically moored to the sea floor, are attracted to the magnetic or acoustic signature of a passing vessel.

The naval officer said that when an influence mine explodes at or near the surface, it causes a ship to rise up, damaging the keel, sprouting a reverberation throughout the ship and cracking the superstructure.

Following the two explosions, U.S. and British naval forces stepped up mine-sweeping operations in the Gulf.

Meanwhile, Neal said allied ground troops attacked the Iraqis with artillery in skirmishes.

Utah approved a virtual ban on abortions and similar legislation was passed in the state Senate in South Dakota.

Nine other states are considering such legislation, and about 10 bills seeking a variety of abortion restrictions have been introduced in 47 state legislatures, according to the National Abortion Rights Action League.

Since July 1989, when the Supreme Court gave states more authority to restrict abortions, seven states have enacted restrictive abortion laws.

Only two states — Nevada by a ballot initiative and Connecticut by statute — have adopted laws that have provisions similar to Maryland's.

The Maryland bill was approved and sent to Schaefer after an unsuccessful, last-ditch attempt by anti-abortion legislators to amend it to ensure that hospitals and health care professionals were protected if they refused to refer a woman for an abortion, either out of religious or moral beliefs.

Abortion-rights leaders argued against the "conscience" clause amendment, saying doctors and hospitals would be vulnerable to lawsuits or disciplinary actions only by failing to refer women whose pregnancies posed health risks.

The amendment failed this afternoon at a 73 to 61 vote.

During the bill-signing ceremony, Schaefer said he would support a separate bill that would clarify the conscience clause.

In large measure, the new Maryland law closely tracks the U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 decision, Roe v. Wade, which established abortion as a legal right.

In passing the Maryland measure through the legislature, advocates cited their concern that the nation's highest court might one day overturn the landmark ruling.

Monday's victory for abortion-rights lawmakers was tempered by the provision requiring potential non-fiction for girls under 18 who seek an abortion.

As long as the Roe decision remains intact, the parental-notification requirement will be the only part of the law that changes current practice in Maryland when the law goes into effect July 1.

Parents will have to be notified if their daughters are 15 or younger, unless physicians conclude that the girl is mature enough to make a decision or that the notice could lead to abuse or is not in her best interest.

Because Maryland does not have a mandatory reporting law, there are no firm estimates on the number of abortions performed each year.

The Department of Health and Mental Hygiene put the number in 1989 at 22,000, but some organizations say the total was 30,000.

Flannery-Fordwood officials estimated that women 19 years old and younger account for about 25 percent of the total.

The legislative debate in Maryland has been the focus in recent years of national advocacy groups on both sides of the issue.

Monday's events in the gulf

The Associated Press

Here are developments in the Persian Gulf war:

Around the Gulf

American gunners pounded Iraqi positions with artillery fire. Iraqi mines afloat in the Persian Gulf damaged two U.S. Navy warships — a billion-dollar missile cruiser and a Marine assault ship. And an American pilot went down deep inside Iraqi-held territory, to be plucked to safety by U.S. rescue helicopters.

The U.S. 2nd Marine Division repositioned its forces Monday to prepare for the cross-border assault, and sent reconnaissance teams beyond a 12-foot protective berm and into a no-man's-land between the opposing lines, Associated Press correspondent Denis D. Gray reported from the front.

At military headquarters in Riyadh, the Saudi capital, the U.S. command sounded ready for either a ground war or an extended all-air offensive. "It's probably to our advantage to have the air campaign go on," said command spokesman Brig. Gen. Richard Neal.

British soldier practices his bayonet charge to use in gulf.

"because ... every day our aviation elements are in the air, they're inflicting casualties."

At the command's daily news briefing, the Marine general reported that partly cloudy weather Monday cut into the number of Desert Storm air sorties, reducing them to 2,400 in 24 hours.

Elsewhere

Iraq's foreign minister Tariq Aziz, met with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev in Moscow and was presented with what a Kremlin spokesman described only as a "concrete plan" for settlement of the gulf crisis, based on an end to Iraq's occupation of Kuwait. Aziz immediately flew back to Iraq, and from there he will head overland to Iraq on Tuesday. The Soviets said they expected a swift response from Saddam.

Washington

President Bush's spokesman, Martin Fitzwater, said the Soviets did not ask Bush to hold up any war action while Gorbachev's proposal was considered in Baghdad — but just not to comment on the plan.

A White House statement noted that Bush promised to treat as confidential a descriptive of Gorbachev's proposal, and concluded, "Our military campaign remains on schedule."

Desert Storm

U.S. Marines kick-up dust as they head to the front in Saudi Arabia. Thousands of Marines on ships await assault orders.

Amphibious assault force of record size

WASHINGTON (AP) — An amphibious landing on the oil-stained shores of Kuwait would be the largest such undertaking since Gen. Douglas MacArthur ordered 40,000 troops into action at Inchon harbor in Korea 46 years ago.

Amphibious warfare, attacking from the sea, is a weapon honed on the seawalls of Inchon, the bullet-riddled rocks of Normandy.

Dress rehearsals for a seaborne invasion of Kuwait have been under way for months on the beaches of friendly nations nearby. A task force of about 17,000 Marines is poised on ships in the Persian Gulf, backed by a flotilla of support vessels.

The operation they have been practicing requires precision.

If uses bombing runs and battleship guns to blast up "targets" on shore, landing first to bring in troops, helicopter gunships and low-flying jets to support them, special equipment to clear away mines and obstacles, and tanks, armored vehicles and howitzers to drive the attack home.

Amphibious landings have their roots in the warfare of ancient times. The Persians brought an army in by sea to face the Athenians at Marathon in 360 B.C. Amphibious war in the modern world dates from one of the darkest episodes of World War I — the British attempt in 1915 to force a passage up the Dardanelles, the narrow straits that separate European

Major amphibious landings were ordered at Gallipoli in April following the sinking or disabling of six British and French warships in an undetected mine field.

U.S. airmen send off an F-15 fighter plane with cheers. Air support is a critical aspect of amphibious assault plans.

and New Zealand troops were plagued by the mistakes of their commanders and bogged down in murderous trench warfare. They never broke out of their beachheads.

London withdrew its forces in January 1916, with British casualties totaling 214,000. Amphibious landings as a method of war were largely discredited.

But in the United States, Gallipoli was seen in a more positive light. The Marine Corps viewed Gallipoli in terms of possibilities not failure.

In 1921, Maj. Gen. John J. LeMay, then the Marine Corps commandant, recognized the growing military power of Japan and commissioned a study that resulted in the first detailed amphibious assaults, most of them fiercely opposed by Japanese troops who preferred death to surrender.

At Tarawa in November 1943, the battle left only 17 Japanese troops alive out of 5,000. The U.S. force of 64,500 incurred 1,000 deaths and 2,000 injuries.

In Europe and North Africa, amphibious landings in Morocco, Sicily and at Salerno culminated in the greatest amphibious assault ever, the cross-channel landing on the beaches of Normandy.

On June 6, 1944, the allied invasion fleet of 600 warships and 4,000 supporting vessels ferried a force of 176,000 from a dozen English ports. Once ashore, the allies built artificial harbors and poured in more troops and supplies. By July 24, the allies had broken through and the battle for Europe had begun.

In 1950, a North Korean invasion drove U.S. and South Korean forces into a tight corner near Pusan at the Southeast end of the Korean peninsula. MacArthur responded by ordering an amphibious counterstroke of American and South Korean troops at Inchon, just west of the occupied capital of Seoul.

In his 1990 study "Amphibious Operations," Col. M.H.H. Evans of the British Royal Marines describes the move as "a strategic masterstroke but one fraught with tactical risk."

The approach to Inchon was up narrow and easily defended channel. Tides had to be exact because local tides rise and fall by 23 feet, exposing mud flats when the tide was at its lowest.

Two Jima survivors know costs of assault

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Stephen Rimmer wounded three times in the first hours of the two Jima invasions, remembers the screams of the dying as Marines stormed a beach held by a dug-in and well-armed enemy 46 years ago.

"I saw so many dead Marines I'll never see anything like that side of the grave," said Rimmer, one of only two in his squad to survive Iwo Jima.

Survivors of one of the biggest and bloodiest battles of World War II, which began Feb. 19, 1945, say there are similarities between two Jima and the battle looming to take Kuwait, and there may even be some lessons for the 17,000 Marines waiting in the Persian Gulf to once again storm an enemy beach.

Gathered at a beer-guzzling, flag-waving weekend reunion, they said the Gulf War has stirred the horrors they have harbored since 1945, horrors of teeping into a hole and landing on eight dead soldiers or looking over at your best buddy and seeing part of his head gone.

At Iwo Jima, a tiny Pacific island that proved crucial to successful bombing of Japan, Japanese troops had time to dig in and wait for the Marines, such as Iraq's Army has done, the survivors said.

And at Iwo Jima, two months of aerial and naval bombardment through the clouds of the Japanese. What was expected to be a four-day sweep turned into 36 days, claiming 6,821 American lives and four times as many Japanese lives. "They have to go in and dig them out just like we did and it's going to cost some lives," said Rimmer, 63, holding the bullet-scarred helmet that saved his life at Iwo Jima.

"It brings back all the memories. I saw some pictures of Marines under artillery fire and I felt like I could crawl up inside this helmet and hide."

Iwo Jima, a battle of attrition rather than maneuvers, became a symbol of American valor memorialized by an Associated Press photograph of the flag raising on the island, Kuwait, the veterans said, will be different because there is more room to maneuver, more air cover and better weapons.

But storming a beach is still one of the most difficult and costliest ways to take ground in war.

"Hitting a beach is the hardest thing," because you're so vulnerable," said Gen. Davis, 67, a marine supplier from Metairie, La.

"Everyone here can relate to what's going on in the two Jima battles. It's in combat and seen your buddy die, you can relate."

"I have a lot of feelings deep down in my own heart for those guys," Davis added. "They don't know what to expect. We know what to expect."

"I hope they don't run into what we ran into," said survivor ... Harry Chatskowsky.

"I hope they don't run into hell and high water when they go in, because our beach was littered with wounded 20 minutes after we landed."

Herman Johnson was one of only five in his company of 300 leathernecks to fight the whole battle — the rest were killed or wounded. He had bullet holes in his shirt and pants, but Johnson escaped without a scratch.

Fighting the Gulf War on the ground might be even bloodier, he said, because weapons are more accurate and more deadly.

"We didn't do anything but keep looking forward, and that's what those boys need to do now," he said. "I tell them to put their trust in God. That's the big thing, 'err, God take care of you like he did me.'"

Marines today study two Jima and every other major battle from the Civil War to Afghanistan.

The two Jima battles in essence the current emphasis on "maneuver warfare" — bypassing the enemies strong point to cut him off, according to Lt. Col. Greg Johnson, the official Marine representative sent from the Pentagon to the reunion of 400 survivors.

And like Iwo Jima, Marines today are concerned that the bombing campaign won't hurt the Iraqis enough.

"That's why they're not in any rush to go in," Johnson said. "The Marines today have a big legacy to uphold because of what these guys did."

"There was a legacy written in the sands of Iwo Jima. Today's Marines are going to make their own legacy to pass on to another generation of Marines."

AFL-CIO convenes with eye on health care, strikebreakers

JACK HARBOR, Fla. (AP) — Labor leaders tried to bridge differences on how much to reform national health care as they opened the AFL-CIO's annual winter meeting today.

But they were unanimous on the 12-million-member labor federation's other top legislative priority: outlawing the hiring of permanent strikebreakers.

The AFL-CIO's 33-member Executive Council, made up of leaders of the nation's largest unions, also was expected to recommend ways the federal government can combat the recession and return the jobless to work.

"Our position is that the Bush administration has no domestic agenda, has not focused on the economy and would not know what to do about it if they did," said John Sturdivant, president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

"Congress needs some prodding (too). We need some leadership from the Democrats and that's what we'll be talking about today," Sturdivant said.

Majority Leader George Mitchell

led off the meeting's opening round. House Speaker Thomas Foley was to follow him.

Before the meeting opened, labor leaders gathered Sunday at this beachside resort to begin hashing out differences over how far any proposed health care changes should go. Union presidents hoped to strike a compromise by Tuesday.

One side wants a government-financed universal health care plan akin to Canada's; the other is backing a more modest plan that provides coverage to indigent Americans but keeps much of the current system in place.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland put himself squarely on the side calling for less drastic changes, the option believed more likely to pass Congress.

Just a few years ago, Kirkland noted, most union leaders backed a full-scale program like Canada's $50 billion program, which guarantees universal health care. Many now back something less than that.

"A new sense of pragmatism seems to be taking hold," Kirkland told a leadership conference of the American Medical Association meeting at a hotel nearby.

"This time, we intend to set real health care reform-oriented into law. Our members simply cannot afford another year of impasse and delay," he said.

Other labor officials contend unions should push the full-scale plan from the start, rather than proposing a compromise to Congress.

"Pragmatism has nothing to do with it," one union official said privately.

Infant deaths higher in urban areas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eighty-four of 172 cities with populations of 100,000 or more registered infant mortality rates exceeding the national average and many smaller cities have a worse record than the biggest ones, the Children's Defense Fund said Monday.

The children's advocacy group said its study calls its question President Bush's budget proposal to reallocate to 10 major target cities to be named later, the federal resources for reducing infant mortality. "Our findings make it clear that the nation's infant mortality problem cannot be solved through improvements in only 10 cities," said Sara Rosenbaum of the group's health division. "There must be a nationwide strategy, such as recommended by the president's own advisers last year," she said.

The organization based its study on National Center for Health Statistics information gathered for 1987, the latest year for which official, comparative figures were available.

Overall, about 10 of each 1,000 infants born that year in the United States died within a year. By comparing the average infant mortality rate for cities with a population exceeding 100,000 was slightly more than 13 per 1,000 births.

The worst cities were New Haven, Conn., with a rate of 20.2; Detroit, 19.7; Washington, 19.3; Baltimore, 19.2; Savannah, Ga., 19.0; Richmond, Va., 17.9; Syracuse, N.Y., 17.8; Portsmouth, Va., 17.7; Memphis, Tenn., 17.7; and Flint, Mich., 17.6.

The Children's Defense Fund noted that 64 of these cities, six have populations between 100,000 to 250,000.

Gunmen hold up Vietnamese church after celebration

WHEAT RIDGE, Colo. (AP) — A gang of Vietnamese-speaking gunmen shot a handyman and robbed about 30 members of a Vietnamese Roman Catholic church following an Asian new year's celebration, authorities said.

Parishioners at the large Queen of Vietnamese Martyrs Catholic Church were angry because it was the Vietnamese doing this to the Vietnamese people, especially the Catholic community, said church member Binh Nguyen.

A volunteer church handyman, The Nguyen, 57, was hit by a shotgun blast in the site early Sunday. Doctors amputated his right leg and he was in serious condition Monday at St. Anthony Hospital Center. He is not related to Binh Nguyen.

Several other parishioners were treated for minor wounds after they were pistol-whipped by the robbers.

The Rev. Ban Nguyen, the parish priest, said Saturday night's party — the second of three nights of celebrations — ended shortly after midnight. About 30 people were discussing the next day's activities when the gunmen burst into the church activity hall, he said.

The Nguyen was shot when he turned to face a gunman. "He heard what they said — 'We're going to shoot all of you' — and he thought it was joke and he just kind of stood around," the priest said through a translator.

The priest, also unrelated to the shooting victim, said the other parishioners quickly obeyed orders to be quiet on the floor, but they were abused anyway.

Governor weighs death-row case

RICHMOND, Va. — On the floor to the right of Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder's desk is the box containing the last hope for Joseph Giarratano's life.

It contains copies of court motions and testimony from a 17-year legal odyssey that has seen conflicting confessions, a lack of physical proof and alleged new evidence.

With the court process exhausted, it's Wilder's decision whether Giarratano lives. Wilder is being heavily lobbied by Giarratano supporters for a conditional pardon that will allow Giarratano, convicted of killing a mother and daughter in Norfolk, Va., in 1979, to be retried on the murder charge.

Wilder said earlier this month that he will decide "as early as possible" so as to end speculation. "And an aide said the decision will be based solely on what Wilder finds in that box next to his desk and the advice of his legal aides."

One question for Wilder is whether the conditional pardon being sought by Giarratano supporters is even possible. Virginia Attorney General Mary Sue Terry has told Wilder that he does not have the power to grant such a pardon.

According to Terry's office, Wilder can set Giarratano free, commute his sentence to life in prison or order a gubernatorial investigation. But the governor cannot intervene in the judicial process and force a new trial, the attorney general said.

Wilder's spokeswoman, Laura Dillard, would not say whether Wilder accepts the attorney general's view, which is not binding. "That's the opinion of the attorney general's office. The governor's office hasn't released an opinion," Dillard said.

The flurry of international publicity generated over the case by activists, Virginia General Assembly members, lawyers and celebrities will have an influence. Wilder and his aide insist.

Wilder's office also maintains that the political advantages or disadvantages of pardoning Giarratano are not a factor. "Whatever he does will be read politically," said Dillard. "But you can't consider how people are going to analyze the decision that you make."

Chemical explosion sends fumes throughout plant

SOUTH CONNELLSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Two drums containing chemicals exploded Monday at a packaging plant, exposing scores of workers and firefighters to toxic fumes, authorities said.

Sixty-six employees of Anchor Hocking Packaging Co. in southwestern Pennsylvania and 22 firefighters were treated at hospitals for symptoms including headaches, burning of the throat and nose, and nausea.

Other labor officials contend unions should push the full-scale plan from the start, rather than proposing a compromise to Congress.

"Pragmatism has nothing to do with it," one union official said privately.

Kirkland's critics spoke on condition of anonymity because AFL-CIO executives want the issue settled privately.

In recent and painful examples for labor, companies have, in essence, fired striking union members by hiring permanent replacement workers at defunct Eastern Airlines, Greyhound Bus Lines and the Daily News of New York.

Ray Shipley, director of the Fayette County Emergency Management Agency, said the other drum later exploded outside the plant.

The drums contained a mixture of hydrazide and a soybean oil called vikokle, Shipley said.

The mixture is used to make the plastic-like seals used inside some metal lids, he said.

David B. O'Casey, the plant's personnel manager, issued a brief statement saying the chemical reaction had occurred.

The plant was closed in the morning, but resumed operations in the afternoon, the statement said.

O'Casey's secretary said he was unavailable to answer questions, and he didn't immediately return telephone calls.

WLAF takes former Mountain Home star

ORLANDO, Fla. — Brent Pease, who spent two years with the Houston Oilers and part of a season in Canada, was the first quarterback selected in the World League of American Football draft by the Birmingham Fire.

Former Notre Dame quarterback Tony Rice, perhaps the best-known player available, went on the second round, the 16th player taken overall. He was selected by Barcelona. Rice finished fourth in the 1989 Heisman Trophy voting.

The league, which opens its season March 23, is conducting position-by-position drafts in preparation for training camps that begin Monday.

Pease, who played prep football at Houston as a "home-grown" player in the 1987 strike.

All WLAF teams will operate similar no-huddle offenses.

Pease, 26, passed for 3,056 yards and 30 touchdowns in 10 games as a senior at Montana in 1986. He was drafted by the Minnesota Vikings in 1987 before going to the Oilers.

The league has given me the opportunity to establish myself as a football player again," Pease said. "It's very exciting for me, as it is for all of these players."

Twin Falls pair help Bruins win

By Larry Hovey Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Behind the timely scoring of sophomore Eddie Trenkle and junior John Nemeth, the Twin Falls Bruins opened the District 4 A-1 basketball tournament with a 60-46 decision over the Minico Spartans Monday night.

Trenkle, who ended the first and third quarters with closing points at the buzzer, ended the night with 13 white Nemeth had 14.

The victory sends Twin Falls to Burley tonight for a "winner to regional" battle, beginning at 8 p.m. Tuesday night's loser will play at Rupert Thursday, with the survivor also moving against either Highland or Pocatello in regional action Saturday.

The Bruins never trailed, although Minico had an 8-8 tie before Trenkle ended the first quarter with a three-point play. But it wasn't until the third quarter when the Bruins, getting a two quick field goal spurt from senior-Riley Boyd, started to pull away.

Twin Falls turned a 26-21 halftime lead into a nearly prohibitive 42-29 advantage going into the final quarter.

"I thought we came out pretty flat," said Bruin Coach John Astorquia. "It wasn't until the middle quarters that our press finally picked up some turnovers and we were able to break out."

It hardly seemed a district tournament game with less than the bottom seating filled at Bruin Fieldhouse. The Twin Falls student section had 89 in its lap and there was no top hand. Only a few seats, ago a fan would have had to have been in the gymnasium by 5:30 p.m. at the latest to be seated.

The Bruins had a chance to break away in the latter stages of the second quarter when Boyd hit a three-point play and Steve Black and Nemeth added field goals to open a nine-point lead. But Spartans Ben Bingham and Justin Garner closed the deficit to five by intermission.

Minico's Jason Scow kept this one in doubt a little longer than necessary when he came up with eight third-quarter points. But in the final two minutes, Scow got two while Nemeth and Stover were hitting two each and Trenkle was adding four more.

That made it 42-29 going into the final period and Nemeth and Trenkle started that off with two points apiece.

"I felt a little better about our rebounding tonight, although they took some away from us after we came down with the fall," Astorquia said.

Victor Sanchez of Twin Falls drives for a shot over Minico's Kenzie Condie.

Twin Falls still has beaten Minico three times this season and owns 5-16 mark. Minico is 1-20. Twin Falls dropped both regular season decisions to Burley.

Positions at state on the line tonight

The Times-News

GOODING — Both sub-district championships finally decided, tonight's A-4, District 4 playoffs will help determine pairings for next week's state tournament.

DEERICK (20-6), the Northside runner-up, has the Gooding college basketball poll Monday, down seven notches from No. 18 to No. 25.

Seton Hall used victories over Georgetown and Pittsburgh last week to squeeze into No. 24, the only new team in the poll this week. The First-Second poll Monday, which split two games last week and slipped out of the rankings.

Defending national champion UNLV remained unbeaten with two more victories last week, running the Rebels' record to 22-0 and keeping them the unanimous choice for No. 1 with a clean sweep of the 63 votes.

Ohio State's double overtime victory over Indiana may have made for great basketball theater but it had little impact on their places in the poll.

The Buckeyes (22-1) remained No. 2 with 1,501 points, and the Hoosiers (22-3) are still No. 11 with 1,377.

Squeezed between those two is Arkansas (25-2), which recovered from its loss to UNLV to punish Texas Tech by 18 points and Texas Christian by 33 last week.

The Bulls have won their last nine games against Cleveland.

The Cavaliers led 50-46 at halftime and widened the margin to 56-48 on Brad Daugherty's 15-foot jumper with just over 10 minutes left in the third quarter.

Jordan's 13-point, 5-for-13 run from the field in the first half, hit two free throws to start the Chicago comeback and eventually tied the game 60-60 on a driving layup with 6:50 left in the period. Seven seconds later, following a Cleveland turnover, Jordan was fouled and made two free throws that gave the Bulls their first lead, 62-60.

Idaho city has winning idea for lessening costs of serving

The city of Pocatello has come up with a good idea for easing the financial burden on the families of servicemen in the Persian Gulf.

The Pocatello City Council last week approved a plan to offer a special payment arrangement to service families whose breadwinners are part of Operation Desert Storm. The city's utility billing office, in cooperation with the local chapter of the American Red Cross, will set up utility payment plans tailored to meet each family's particular needs.

Officials hope to prevent shut-offs and other problems caused by the loss of income some military families are suffering as a result of the Persian Gulf War.

The dependents of men and women who have been called to active duty have often faced financial hardships as a result, but never more than in this conflict.

A substantial number of the servicemen and servicewomen in the gulf are reserves and National Guardsmen — civilians who have had to give up much of their income to serve their country. The discrepancy in pay between military jobs and private-sector jobs has made their sacrifices especially costly.

At the same time, many families of active-duty servicemen in the gulf also are having significant finanacial problems. Some have moved from the state-side bases where they were stationed back to their own hometowns; others are suffering from the military's inevitable delays in getting checks to dependents in a logistically complicated operation like this one.

As a result, a substantial number are in real financial trouble.

The city of Pocatello's action alone won't relieve a large amount of that burden. Pocatello bills only for water and garbage collection services. But it could serve as an example for other cities, as well as for Idaho Power Co. Intermountain Gas and Heating Oil dealers whose understanding could mean far more to these families.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission, which regulates utilities, might even consider proposing its own uniform payment adjustment plan. Non-utility companies that are creditors of service families also might consider lenient plans.

Most of the service families' financial problems are temporary. Helping them would only require that utilities and other creditors show some flexibility and understanding.

This is not a huge sacrifice for these companies. Not when you consider what sacrifice these families are making.

School film shows Satan's device

Responding to the movie shown at the O'Leary school, I was appalled as I watched the news that evening and saw the bad scene before my eyes! I just couldn't believe what I was seeing. Is that teacher or teachers wanting to teach our children to disobey authority and break the Seventh Commandment?

Children at an early age mimic the behavior of those about them. This is why a consistent example from parents, teachers, and others is so important. Children's admiration naturally develops as they grow, choosing right thoughts, motives, actions, responsibilities, and the consequences of the choices they make. This developing process continues through the growing years. Thoughts lead to action, action to habits, and habits to character. Character determines eternal destiny.

Satan is working in many ways to capture our minds and energies in these last days before the closing of his time is short. He seeks to control the avenues to the soul through

U.S. must mount all-out ground assault

LITEL AVIV, Israel — The liberation of Kuwait by force cannot be accomplished by air bombardment alone.

Unless Saddam Hussein declares that he will withdraw from Kuwait unconditionally, the U.S. Army and Marines will have to join the fight.

Anything short of an all-out ground assault, once the land battle has begun, would be a mistake. Any smaller battle can only end in stalemate, and from the standpoint of Hussein and the Arab masses it would be seen as a victory against a "Great Satan" and its mighty military coalition.

The question facing the allied generals is not just when to start, but how best to conduct the ground battle to get it over as quickly as possible.

There is no harm in sustaining the air offensive for now. A further softening of Iraqi forces, especially the Republican Guards, will make things easier for ground forces when the time comes. According to Soviet combat doctrine (and the Iraqis were trained by the Soviets), a unit that has lost 50 percent of its fighting strength is no longer "more than its soldiers" — can no longer be counted as a consolidated fighting unit.

But judging by the success rate of bombardments in Kuwait so far, it is doubtful that this target can be reached in two weeks. After that, the war risks spilling into hot, humid weather and Muslim holy days.

Most worrisome in a ground war will be Iraq's dug-in tanks and artillery, capable of causing great casualties. There is a limit to what conventional softening bombardments from the air can achieve against these well-dug-in forces.

At the same time, however, the decisive air superiority of the allies will put Iraq at a disadvantage if it moves out of its desert fortifications.

Zeev Schiff

Ground battles require commanders to be able to concentrate their forces, but any Iraqi attempt to move tanks into new positions will expose them to allied attack helicopters and fighter planes.

This is the most glaring Iraqi disadvantage on the ground, sharply illustrated when the second wave of the Iraqi attack on Khafji, Saudi Arabia, collapsed under air attack.

The allies must therefore draw the Iraqi armored units out of their shelters and sand bunkers and force them into mobile battle.

The Israelis, in their wars against Arab armies, resolved this problem by quick maneuvering, threatening the rear and the flanks of enemy forces and mounting several simultaneous threats against vital targets. This is a classic indirect approach, and it prevented the Arab forces from making full use of their armored power.

It was the quick maneuvering that crushed them, perhaps more than Iraqi firepower.

The allies arrayed against Iraq have an important advantage that Israel lacked — modern fighter helicopters and precise guided weapons. For the first time, thanks to the fighter helicopters, anti-tank fire is tremendously mobile.

This gives the allied forces a great maneuverability advantage, provided ground forces are well-coordinated.

To cut casualties and make maximum use of the allies' advantages, they should attack costs avoid full frontal assaults and make more use of mobile flanking maneuvers. The armored forces should be first in, in coordination with highly mechanized infantry units.

The Marines, despite their toughness in hard ground fighting, should not take an major breakthrough missions, again in the interest of denying Iraq a high casualty toll and thus an indirect victory.

Allied casualties must also be kept low. To prevent even the consideration of using tactical nuclear weapons.

To threaten a number of vital Iraqi objectives simultaneously, it will be necessary to maneuver on Iraqi territory. This does not mean that allied forces should necessarily be directed toward Baghdad. But heavily armed Republican Guard forces are deployed in the Karbala region between Baghdad and Kuwait and could not be forced into the open if operations were limited to Kuwait.

The most troublesome problem for the allies, however, is Kuwait City. If Hussein were to order a number of special forces divisions and paratroopers to entrench themselves in the city and oblige the Americans to fight there, it could become a smaller version of the bloody World War II battle for Stalingrad. It probably makes little sense for the Iraqis to blow up and destroy such inhabitants before to this.

But armies that experienced door-to-door fighting in World War II are anxious to avoid fighting in built-up areas where they cannot bring in tanks and other large armored vehicles.

The Iraqis want to drag the allies into the city, and if that happens, the Marines and other infantry will be critical to this part of the battle. But if allied ground commanders can be patient enough, they can encircle the city and wait until the Iraqi troops are starved out, or until they surrender.

Lawmakers: Don't raise taxes

Citizens of Idaho stand up and say to the governor and Legislature: "No more taxes! No more partisan spending for special groups!"

One of the governor's re-election promises was responsibility. Economic responsibility with respect to the use of state funds collected from the people. It seems that the governor and the Legislature have forgotten. Members of the Legislature voted themselves over a 90 percent raise. Now why did they do that?

They knew what the pay was before they ran for office. Each has spent hundreds of dollars scrambling to be elected. What they tell us is a post of honor and integrity. Yet, they say it is a poorly paid job. They knew what the pay was before they ran for election. Why not their employees, the people, say what the pay should be. Put it on a ballot. I suspect that the formers of our Constitution did not plan on, or suggest, that our legislators be career politicians.

Educators (IEA), with the governor's blessing, continue to pull exorbitant sums of money from the taxpayer's pocket and he keeps promising more. The salary of $160,000 per year plus what the new president of the University of Idaho receives is outrageous. Still, the quality of education has not increased.

The lottery, backed by the governor, is a tax and ironically a voluntary tax. Principally the funds were supposed to fund education and now Andrew wants more. He wants to increase taxes on gasoline and vehicular licensing to further fuel inflation, so that the highway department can be cleared of money to squander. He has said nothing about cleaning up waste in the department. He said nothing about the millions of dollars wasted in cleaning lava rock out of the medians throughout the state.

Our economy is sliding into a recession and Andrew wants to raise taxes to fund more irresponsible spending. The Legislature, regardless of party, should not permit him to indulge special interest groups through partisan policies at the taxpayers' expense. If various departments within the state were cleaned up and consolidated to function more efficiently, we could have some of the problems he seems to think we mass media, advertising, education, peer pressure. He mixes the good and the bad to entice and confuse. Unless one is constantly studying God's word and seeking divine guidance from the Holy Spirit, one may be swept away by Satan's devices. All we have to do is look around this old sin world today and know, "It's almost time for the Lord to come!"

Parents, teachers, educators and pastors have a duty to instruct those under their influence to act in such a way that their lives will be blessing to others and a satisfaction to themselves. God's ways are the best ways. He has made us and he desires that our lives may be full and rewarding. Sex taught in this way destroys the image of God in our children.

Fish and Game needs review

What happens to due process of the law when it becomes unaffordable to the average citizen? When it becomes necessary to plead guilty to a charge even when you are innocent, simply because you can't afford a trial or lawyer? What has happened to due process of law?

Too many state, city, county and federal agencies use this to collect money from people too often. The Fish and Game are one such agency!

When we speak of political reform, I for one think that Fish and Game should be number one of the list. I-83 calling for election of Fish and Game commissioners would have been a good start, too bad it failed. It took an initiative by the people to get them appointed, now maybe we need one to get them elected.

But really, the people should not have to go through that. A more practical way would be for our state representatives, state senators, and yes even our governor should stand up and review the policy of Fish and Game. Was that what they elected them for? Well, that is my opinion.

Bush not backing 1 government

This letter is in response to accusations by David E. Veitch that President Bush is subverting the Constitution of the United States and "trying to make the United Nations a powerful one world government," in his letter on Feb. 7.

It is doubtful that President Bush has the power by executive order to destroy the very document he swore to preserve. Especially since any constitutional amendment to destroy the Constitution would need congressional ratification. What a ridiculous notion without fact.

The accusation that President Bush is attempting to promote a one world government by coalescing the United Nations through the vehicle of war is even more absurd and without fact. The cliché "New World Order" is far different from the phrase "one world government" since 1917, the "one world government" ideology has been proliferated by the leaders of the Soviet Union, embraced by secular humanism and promoted by left-wing liberals in the United States.

The "one world government" ideology has roots within "The Ideology of Communism" created by an atheist and in 1900s, a world utopia created by force of arms.

"New World Order" is merely a cliché emerging, an attempt by President Bush to fulfill one of his campaign pledges to the American people to become a more compassionate and caring nation. To deal internationally with the global environment and to revitalize a sense keeping initiative, not a police forcing action, all of which are possible through a system of collective economics, security, and agreement under the United Nations.

With the defeat of Communism and the end of the Cold War, the United States is now positioned at a pivotal point in its history to lead the world toward democracy and free market economies or stand in the isolationism of the 1930s, only to face a world threatened by another dictator's idea of "one world government."

An attempt to equate President Bush with some "little group" with historical ambitions to create a one world government suggests that our president is no better than the Communists, and that the presidency is no longer representative of the public. I feel these imputations are unpatriotic and serve no constructive utility. Thank you.

Dangers lie in trade proposals

I am writing in hopes that the local farm communities are aware of the impending legislation before Congress concerning GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trades).

The Bush administration is leading the charge, hoping to convince the world community to adopt "reforming world trade." The agricultural proposals encompass three goals. Phase out all farm programs, end all domestic supply programs, and make import controls illegal.

As a believer of "less government is best government," I believe that the removal of government farm programs, but to eliminate all farm programs and be regulated by an international law, that benefits only multinational corporations is going too far.

Local sugar beet farmers should realize the impact of sugar prices being determined by the world market. You'll be out of business. The government's answer to that is called "decoupling," or in other words, welfare payments.

By eliminating import controls, the beef market will go to hell as fast as the fast food conglomerates buy their beef overseas. Even your hamburger should be able to see if U.S. markets are open to the world, there will be more deforestation in Third World countries as more countries get into beef production.

Another factor to consider is the "harmonization" of food safety laws. Current negotiations led by the administration call for a uniformity of standards for food safety. This would be the end of county, state, or national regulations controlling food safety.

The vehicle the administration is using is called "fast track authority." The 1988 Trade Act gave the administration the right to negotiate trade agreements and forfeits the Congress's role of approving any food safety. Current legislation introduced in the Senate by Kent Conrad of North Dakota revokes the administration's "fast track authority."

Please notify your elected representatives and support Resolution S-342. Make your representatives examine any trade agreement the administration reaches. Thank you.

Death toll rises in Thailand explosion

BANGKOK, Thailand — The death toll after the explosion of an overturned truck laden with electric detonators has risen to 171, police said.

The truck overturned in southern Phang-Nga province Friday and exploded about an hour later, killing many among a larger crowd gathered to watch the accident and injure 116, police said.

The detonators were bound for a stone quarry. Police had earlier described the truck's load as dynamite.

Mexico group says self hits of oxygen

MEXICO CITY — Here's the latest notion to fight this city's smog, widely known as the world's worst: oxygen booths for quick hits of an increasingly elusive commodity.

"We need hundreds, even thousands of them," said the project's promoter, Alfonso Cipres Villareal, of the Mexican Ecologist Movement.

On March 21, Cipres plans to install 10 such booths in the capital's noxious downtown. At that time, for about $1.70 a hit, suffering passers-by supposedly can revive themselves, in approximately 90 seconds. The idea has drawn gasps of hope from residents hacking through a record smog season.

Hundreds of Tamil youths disappear

BATTICALOA, Sri Lanka — Hundreds of ethnic Tamil youths in this isolated, civil war-torn district of northeastern Sri Lanka have disappeared in recent months after being taken into custody by government security forces, according to a registry compiled by Christian missionaries and civic leaders here.

Relatives of the missing Tamils — exactly 2,009, according to the registry — claim that the youths were taken from refugee camps, movie houses and even hospital beds and then executed by security forces or pro-government "death squads" that roam the region in jeeps and trucks. Relatives here say they believe some of the youths may have ended up on the piles of burning bodies periodically seen along roadsides here this winter.

British stunned by Chicago's guns

CHICAGO — A British police officer on a tour of Chicago Police Headquarters left the building's crime lab saying, "I didn't know there were that many weapons in the world."

Jan Yarnham, who doesn't carry a gun on the job, said there were "shotguns, rifles, all the handguns you could think of, it's incredible."

Yarnham was one of four British "bobbies" who visited police headquarters last week and left with the impression that a police officer's lot is very different here than it is in Great Britain.

In 1989, there were 627 homicides in all of England and Wales, with a total population of about 50 million, compared to 849 homicides last year in Chicago, with a population of less than 3 million.

More dead found in Europe snowslides

BERN, Switzerland — Avalanches in various regions of alpine Switzerland killed six skiers over the weekend, police reported Monday, and two more bodies were found from a snowslide in Italy.

In Switzerland, the accidents occurred outside marked trails in the Bernese Oberland, in Central Switzerland and in the Grisons, police said. Authorities had issued repeated warnings that freak weather conditions increased the danger of snowslides.

The deaths raised to 16 the toll in avalanches this season, compared with 28 in all of last winter.

Another victim of Lithuanian crackdown dies

MOSCOW (AP) — A 50-year-old man died today of gunshot wounds suffered in the Jan. 13 Soviet military crackdown in Lithuania, a news agency reported, bringing the death toll from recent violence in the Baltics to 22.

Vytautas Kancevicius, a father of two, died in a hospital in the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius, according to the independent Baltfax news agency.

He suffered gunshot wounds in the stomach and intestines when the Lithuanian broadcaster center was stormed by Soviet troops last month, said Rita Dapkus, a spokeswoman for the republic's legislature, quoting the Health Ministry.

Fifteen people, including a soldier, have died as a result of the assault on the broadcasting tower by the troops, which were asked to take over the site by anti-independence forces in Lithuania. Dapkus said more than 300 people were injured in the attack, with Kancevicius and two others among the most seriously hurt.

Critics blast Filipinos willing to host bases

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Political opponents of President Corason Aquino have criticized his willingness to allow the United States to maintain military bases in the Philippines for seven years if the price is right.

The future of the six bases — which many say violate the country's sovereignty — was the subject of eight months of talks that ended Saturday in deadlock over the issues of compensation and a time frame for new leases.

The current leases expire in September, and the United States has pressed for a new 10-to-12 year agreement on the bases, the critics said.

Mrs. Aquino said Saturday her government agreed to let American military forces stay "for a maximum of seven years," but adding, "We have stressed to the American panel our need for immediate and sizable capital infusion."

Previously, Mrs. Aquino had refused to take a public stand on the issue, although she had said it was time to phase out the American presence.

But opponents of the bases were not pleased. "We have said all along that any and all agreements that would provide for the stay of the bases beyond September 1991 is unacceptable," Crispin Beltran, chairman of the left-wing labor group, the May First Movement said Sunday.

"We deem the presence of the bases in the country not only as an infringement on national sovereignty but ... (a) source of the ills and crisis the country is facing," Beltran said.

Any agreement must be ratified by two-thirds of the 23-member Senate, and opponents claim they have the votes to reject any bases treaty. Thousands of Filipinos have rallied to close the bases, although others — who are employed on the bases support them.

On Saturday, a spokesman for the Philippine delegation, Raul Rabe, said Manila wanted $825 million a year for a "seven-year package" ending in 1998, the 100th anniversary of the U.S. annexation of the Philippines from Spain.

He said the United States had offered $200 million yearly, including $200 million as part of a multilateral aid program for the Philippines and advertising assistance.

Rabe said the Philippines was willing to accept $400 million in cash and the rest in non-budgetary assistance such as debt relief.

Japan: Nuclear plant shutdown not that serious

The Washington Post

TOKYO — The emergency shutdown of a Japanese nuclear power plant earlier this month rates at the bottom — or least-dangerous — end of the international scale of nuclear incidents, the government said Monday.

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry said the Feb. 9 incident at the Mihama No. 2 plant, on a cape jutting into the Sea of Japan about 220 miles west of Tokyo, would be rated as a 1 or 2 on the International Energy Association's scale of nuclear accidents.

In comparison, the Three Mile Island accident in the U.S. rated a 5 and the Chernobyl disaster in the Soviet Union was a 7 on the same scale, the agency said.

The Japanese government said Monday that it would convene a special committee to investigate the Mihama incident, and the agency announced new guidelines for nuclear plant operators calling for closer checks of operating conditions and setting new rules for mandatory shutdown of reactors.

The government and Kansai Electric Co., the Osaka-based utility that owns Mihama, have issued frequent assurances that the incident was not dangerous. It began when a metal tube about as big around as a thumb split open in the steam generator of the Mihama plant, a pressurized water reactor similar to many in the United States. Operators noticed an increase in radioactivity but did not shut down the plant. It later shut itself down.

North Korea cancels talks with South

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Communist North Korea canceled high-level talks with archival South Korea today, saying Seoul was undermining dialogue by holding joint military exercises with the United States.

South Korea immediately urged North Korea to reconsider. The premiers' talks were scheduled Feb. 25-28 in the North's capital of Pyongyang and would have been the fourth round of meetings since last September.

North Korea accused Seoul officials of "turning their back on the hard-won dialogue." The North also said the United States was bringing the dialogue "to the brink of rupture" with the annual joint-military exercises.

The announcement came in a statement carried by the Korean Central News Agency Official Radio, Pyongyang, monitored in Tokyo, carried a similar report.

North Korea had threatened to boycott that talks if the annual exercises went ahead. The maneuvers, which began on Jan. 25 with about 140,000 troops from both nations, were to run through mid-April.

The North has boycotted inter-Korean dialogue to protest the exercises in recent years. South Korea says the maneuvers are defensive but the North claims they are preparations for a nuclear war against that country.

Premiers of the two Koreas have met three times since September. Although no significant progress has been made toward reunification, the talks have been seen as a hopeful sign of easing tension on the divided peninsula. South Korean officials said the premiers' talks might reopen in late April or early May, when the two nations are expected to hold soccer matches to choose a joint team for a world championship.

Officials debate whether to give doctors secret Medicare criteria

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Medicare program has announced a study on whether it would lose money if it revealed to doctors the secret criteria Medicare uses to trigger investigations of whether they are giving patients costly unnecessary care.

The medical profession, which has been campaigning against "the hassle factor" in the Medicare bureaucracy, believes doctors ought to be told in advance how many treatments are considered excessive so they will have some way of judging what causes their names to pop up in Medicare computers.

For years, Medicare has been nabbing potential cheaters by making computerized reviews. A doctor is flagged by the computer if it discovers that the number of times he is billing Medicare for certain procedures on a given patient exceeds secret internal guidelines used by the various insurance companies that handle Medicare payments to doctors. The computer finding is not considered conclusive evidence, but is only a trigger for a careful medical review of practices to see if there is billing of the system.

Some medical analysts have said that disclosing the criteria for such reviews would only allow doctors to increase their treatments up to the known limits but avoid closing them so they won't be investigated.

Commission to discuss new ideas for park

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Advisory Commission will meet at 7:30 p.m. Thursday to discuss recommendations for the proposed Centennial Waterfront Park.

A citizens' steering committee suggested recently that the county not allow water-skiing or jet-skiing in the park and that a 5 mph speed limit be placed on watercraft.

The park would open the Snake River to public boating from the Perrine Bridge to Pillar Falls.

After the Parks and Recreation Board makes a decision, it will recommend a final plan to the Twin Falls County Commission.

Thursday's meeting will take place at the County Annex Building at 246 3rd Ave. E.

Craters of the Moon now open to cross-country skiers

ARCO - Officials at the Craters of the Moon National Monument have opened park roads to visitors because of low snow.

Normally the park is open to cross-country skiers but this year there has not been enough snow. Visitors, however, should check with the park as weather can change quickly.

For information call 527-3257.

Public invited to Wendell School, honoring those in war

WENDELL - Today is "Patriots Day" at Wendell High School and the public is invited.

The day is set aside to honor all those who are serving in the Persian Gulf, said Gay Petersen, a U.S. history and government teacher at Wendell.

The students, she said, are asked to wear red, white and blue clothes and the Wendell Chapter of the American Legion will present a yellow ribbon to each student.

From 10:30 a.m. assembly, American Legion members will present flags and veteran Vernon Mason will give ceremonies. Clark Muscat, a history teacher in Buhl, will talk on a history of the Middle East. Nyle Jones, a former POW from the Korean War, will talk about his experiences, and the Gooding National Guard will give a presentation on protection against chemical warfare.

Petersen will speak on the importance of patriotism and Choir Director Debbie Walsh will lead the students in singing "I'm Proud to Be An American."

Petersen said all students are encouraged to bring yellow ribbons to tie around trees in front of the school.

Medical center adds roster of new fund-raising members

TWIN FALLS - The Magic Valley Regional Medical Center has gained five new members: Edith Robertson and Dr. James Spafford, both of Kimberly; Dr. Ben Katz and Bob Valentine, both of Twin Falls; and Perris Preston of Hansen.

The center will solicit three-year terms and will provide direction for the foundation's fund-raising efforts in support of the county hospital.

During the annual meeting Feb. 7, new officers were also elected. They are: Elaine Phillips, president; Russell Kobbie, vice president; Earl Haroldson, treasurer; Pat Fisher, secretary; and Robertson, Katz and Preston were elected members at large.

The foundation raised a total of $505,590 during 1990. A total of $115,918 was spent on medical equipment and health care programs.

Boise firm to install new signals in Hailey, Sun Valley

HAILEY - Tri-State Electric of Boise is the apparent low bidder on two signal installation projects in Hailey and Sun Valley, according to the Idaho Transportation Department.

The apparent low bid was $98,013.51 and was one of fifty-two bids received.

Signals will be placed at the intersection of Bullion Road and Highway 75 in Hailey and at the intersection of Sun Valley Road and the Saddle/Dollar Road in Sun Valley.

The signal installation is needed due to increased traffic flow through those areas.

Needy kids will get a new chance

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A new clinic for children with learning disorders will improve access to treatment for needy families.

The Scottish Rites Learning Clinic at the Twin Falls Masonic Lodge will charge families according to their ability to pay, said Virgil Telford, a retired physician and clinic board member.

The Boise Scottish Rite Masonic Center Corporation's Board of Directors is funding the clinic and has pledged $100,000 for remodeling and the first-year's operating costs.

The organization maintains more than 70 similar clinics nationwide. This will be the first such clinic in Idaho, Telford said.

Children can receive help at the clinic, which will open the beginning of March, by applying at the clinic or by pediatrician or therapist referral, he said.

The clinic will have a staff of two full-time therapists and a part-time staff of three pediatricians, two child psychologists and several therapists, he said.

"The length of training depends entirely on the progress of the child," he said.

Two rooms at the lodge are being remodeled for the diagnostic and treatment clinic. The rooms have mirrors that allow people to watch training sessions without being seen, Telford said.

"I'm delighted," he said. "We have many more people needing help in the area than are being served."

The majority of children needing help will be those with dyslexia, which is the inability to perceive written language in which images may be reversed or inverted, Telford said.

"These kids are not dumb kids," he said. "In fact, some are quite bright. (Albert) Einstein was dyslexic."

Experts estimate that anywhere from 4 percent to 10 percent of school children struggle with varying degrees of dyslexia, he said.

Until recently most of these children were allowed to pass from one grade to the next even though they were unable to read or write. The children entered the work

Eden man tells the weather in a place far, far from home

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

EDEN - Excitement isn't usually part of a weatherman's job description unless he happens to be in Saudi Arabia predicting desert storms.

Jaime Nava, 23, of Eden is an Army meteorologist currently stationed near the Saudi-Kuwait border, said his wife, Cirila Nava.

Nava's job is to compile weather information and pass along messages to allied bombers, who must rely on that information when carrying out their bombing runs, Cirila Nava said.

Although letters from her husband have been few and far between since the war started more than four weeks ago, Cirila Nava said her husband has told her that being a desert-weatherman is fraught with difficulties.

During the day, the desert sands get very hot, but at night the temperature plunges, she said.

A recent letter from her husband reported one of the computers he relies on for much of his weather information malfunctioned, Nava said.

When that happens, Jaime depends on radio contact with other weather stations, Cirila Nava said.

Jaime-Nava graduated from Gooding High School in 1984. He went to Saudi Arabia in October.

Cirila Nava remains in the couple's home west of Eden with their two children. A third child is due to arrive in June, she said.

Peavey fails to put an end to immunity bill

The Times News

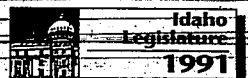

BOISE - A Senate committee has let stand a rule that lawmakers cannot be arrested during the legislative session.

Sen. John Peavey of Carey tried unsuccessfully Monday to introduce a second piece of legislation to remove legislators' immunity from arrest during the session.

The legislation died in the Senate State Affairs Committee on a tie vote, with Republicans voting to hold the legislation in committee and Democrats voting to introduce it onto the floor.

Peavey's proposed constitutional amendment would have deleted language from the constitution that currently grants legislators immunity from arrest during the session and while traveling to and from Boise.

The bill, however, would have allowed to stand legislative immunity from attending civil court proceedings during the session.

Peavey's concern stems from a recent practice by the Idaho State Police to not ticket legislators who violate traffic laws.

By reading the constitution, the police interpreted that "legislators are special people," said Peavey, the Senate Democratic Caucus chairman.

But they shouldn't be treated that way, he said, arguing that the people who make the laws are not above the law.

Peavey said he will try the proposal again next year.

This ain't no dummy

Vinco, the test crash dummy, greets a youngster at the Magic Valley Mall where he was promoting the use of safety belts in automobiles.

The Twin Falls Police and South Central Health Department sponsored the display Monday which featured videos, literature, car seat giveaways and a wrecked Chevrolet. The unrestrained driver of the car died in a December accident south of Twin Falls. Capt. Dave Heidemann, project manager for the Twin Falls Police Accident Reduction Team, said the man would have most likely survived the wreck if he had been wearing a seat belt.

It's a good question, but has a tricky answer

By Anita Dennis
Times-News writer

BOISE - Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, has a question he can't get answered.

How many full-time state positions have gone unfilled after the Legislature has approved money for them?

"It's an interesting question and a tricky answer," Newcomb, assistant majority leader in the House, told the Local Government Committee on Monday.

To get an answer, Newcomb introduced a bill to fund a legislative auditor to evaluate state agencies' performances. The committee voted Monday to send the bill to the floor with a "do-nothing" recommendation.

The auditor would be supervised by a joint legislative oversight committee, comprised of an equal number of Democrats and Republicans, senators and representatives.

At the committee's discretion or when a regular, legislative financial audit shows a discrepancy, the performance auditor would examine how effectively an agency's programs are administered.

More than 40 other states have performance auditors, Newcomb said, and the savings can amount to up to 10 times the investment in the audit.

His legislation "is modeled after Utah's system."

But the goal is to do more than save money, he said. It's to increase efficiency.

"There is a tendency in government or private industry to get middle management heavy," Newcomb said.

And currently, he argued, the Legislature appropriates agency budgets based on the previous year's costs without question.

"And that's a poor way to run a government, in my opinion," he said.

Potatoes, pinball machines. What's next?

Lawmakers are getting into the nitty gritty of things

Anita Dennis Politics

When Rep. Celia Gould's 6-year-old son, J.D., comes to Boise, she takes him to Showbiz Pizza Place. There he binges on Bowler Rollers, Frog Ball, Knock Down of Hoop Shot and wins tickets that he can trade for glow-in-the-dark rubber frogs.

But the amusement games are illegal, Gould learned while working on amending an existing law this year.

"I've been in the business 16, 17 years and it just never dawned on me that someone would drug this thing up and try to force it," said Kevin Mahler of Twin Falls, president of the Amusement and Music

Owners Association.

As the law regarding amusement devices such as pinball machines and video games that offer credit-free games or prizes - are considered gambling, and police can confiscate the machines, Mahler said.

So Gould is trying to rewrite the law to exempt pinball machines and clean up "garbage" language that refers to games she has never heard of.

Sounds simple, but she said it has been difficult to not open the law up to gambling at large.

She wants kids to be able to trade tickets for stuffed animals, but in theory the law could be opened to trade tickets for cars.

But she doesn't want this to get even remotely confused that we're trying to blindside the state and allow gambling," Mahler said. "If they want to gamble, they'll have to go to Nevada or buy lottery tickets."

Legislation like this comprises a fair share of a representative's time, Gould said, and especially this year there seems to be more time for it.

While it's not glamorous, "That's a big part of our job, to solve problems for our constituents," she said.

Rare insects plague ponderosa pines

COEUR D'ALENE — Literally millions of microscopic insects never found before on ponderosa pines in Idaho may be plugging trees all over Coeur d'Alene.

The bug, a soft-shelled scale insect, could be responsible for dying limbs on pines across the region, said John Schwandt, a plant pathologist with the U.S. Forest Service in Coeur d'Alene.

Officials dissected branches over the weekend to determine what is causing the conditions.

Schwandt stressed diploida, a fungus disease, has not been ruled out as the cause. The branches could die from both the fungus and bugs.

Keeping library books could be felony

BOISE — Falling to return overdue library could get serious in Idaho.

The House Judiciary, Rules and Administration Committee is considering Senate-passed legislation making it a felony to refuse to return library material, after proper notification, with a possible prison sentence up to 14 years.

The Senate passed the bill 39-7 last week. Senate sponsor Sen. Karl Brink, D-Boise, told members libraries are suffering "serious losses" and have no good way to require people to return borrowed material.

The bill also covers material borrowed from galleries, museum, collections or exhibitions. It covers books, newspapers, magazines, manuscripts, pamphlets, publications, microfilm, recordings, films, artifacts, specimens, devices, exhibits and related material.

Police disarm small bomb in Utah

PROVO — Police who disarmed a small bomb found taped to a Provo office building say there is no apparent connection to a similar incident in Utah County last month.

The latest bomb was found Sunday on a window at the northwest corner of the building owned by Dean & Peay Construction, which has an office there and also rents space to Wasatch Mental Health.

Police dispatcher Dave Davenport said a janitor found the 5-by-2-inch package and reported it to police at 3:24 p.m.

A bomb squad responded and removed the package by breaking the $300 window. The package was determined to be an explosive device and neutralized by a remote process, Davenport said.

No notes or threats preceded placement of the bomb or have been linked to it. Police said there was no evidence the bomb is connected to one found by a window of the Orem City Library about three weeks ago.

ISU sets enrollment record for spring

POCATELLO — Idaho State University has set an enrollment record, as more than 10,000 students have signed up for spring semester classes for the first time in the school's history, university officials announced.

Mike Standley, interim director of registration and records at Idaho State, said 10,238 students were enrolled for the current semester.

Standley said this is the fourth consecutive semester the school has set enrollment records. Last fall, 9,139 were in class, and during spring semester a year ago there were 8,740 students enrolled.

The number of students at Idaho State has increased 31.5 percent in the past four years.

Officials attributed the increases to better recruitment of high school seniors, more graduate students and more transfer students from junior colleges, especially nearby Ricks College in Rexburg.

Nuclear whistle-blower loses pay, benefits

Seattle Times

SEATTLE — A security expert at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation whose charges of problems at the nuclear-weapons site were made public earlier this month has been put on leave without pay.

Gary Lekvold was notified by Westinghouse Hanford Co. on Feb. 11 that he no longer will receive his salary or benefits. Lekvold was suspended from his job nearly two years ago because of an alleged time-card infraction, but has received full salary since then.

"It's patently unfair, but I've come to not expect fairness from Westinghouse," said Tom Carpenter from the Government Accountability Project, a nonprofit whistle-blower organization in Washington, D.C.

Without a security clearance, most jobs that would use Lekvold's security expertise are closed to him.

"I'm in never-never land here," Lekvold said. "I'm not terminated but I'm not getting any pay."

Last month, Lekvold filed a $33.5 million lawsuit against Westinghouse, which manages the reservation for the Energy Department, alleging that he was harassed and suspended from his job after he raised concerns about the safety and protection of nuclear materials.

Among his charges in a five-page list of alleged security deficiencies is that of years of incompetence and mismanagement could leave certain top secret areas on the 360-square-mile Hanford Nuclear Reservation vulnerable to intrusion. The site stores highly radioactive plutonium, a key ingredient in production of atomic weapons.

Penny Phelps, a Westinghouse spokeswoman, said ending Lekvold's pay was not related to either his filing the lawsuit or going to the media. Phelps said it's tied to the security-clearance recommendation.

Still, Carpenter said Westinghouse's decision is premature because the recommendation is being appealed to the Energy Department. Phelps said a decision on putting Lekvold back to work or firing him would not be made until he has exhausted his appeals.

Lekvold, though, sees the move as a "not too subtle play on their part to starve me out." Westinghouse has a bigger budget than Lekvold.

Panel OKs peyote bill

BOISE (AP) — Legislation making Idaho the 24th state to legalize the religious use of peyote by members of the Native American Church has been sent to the full Senate for action.

The State Affairs Committee, without dissent on Monday, endorsed the measure after backers tightened up its provisions to ensure it would not be interpreted as justifying the use of the drug by other groups or for nonreligious purposes.

"All the concerns that have been raised have been adequately answered," Senate President Pro Tem Michael Crapo, R-Idaho Falls, told his colleagues before some 100 Indians who came from around the state in support of the bill.

Members of the Native American Church outlined in detail for the committee the rites surrounding the use of peyote in their religion and the methods used to ensure the hallucinogenic drug is not misused.

President's bill would hurt state

BOISE (AP) — Although it would boost federal highway spending by nearly $17 billion, President Bush's five-year $105.4 billion transportation plan would hurt Idaho's already deteriorated road system, state and local officials warn.

"That is because the state would need three times as much cash, on average, to qualify for federal matching grants. And local highway districts may need four times as much money to be eligible for federal matching funds.

"If they can double the amount of money we can get, but we've got to triple the amount of money it takes to be able to get those dollars, they really don't do us any good," said Idaho Transportation Director Kermit Kiebert.

"It's kind of like frosting on the cake, except there's no cake," he said.

Idaho officials are confident the alliance of bigger states they have joined, known as the Crescent Coalition, has the votes to stop the measure in Congress. But it is likely Idaho will have to tolerate a less-severe increase in the amount of money it will need to put up in order to get federal backing of highway and bridge projects.

"We recognize that we're going to take a hit, but certainly not to the degree that the administration is talking about," Kiebert said.

About $74 million of the $235 million spent this year on Idaho highways came from the federal government for major projects, such as interstate highway or U.S. 95 construction, the federal government puts in more than $9 for every $1 of state money.

The Bush program would require the state to put up $28 in order to receive $72 of federal money.

At the local level, county highway districts may get $47 for every $15 they generate.

State officials worry it would force them to curtail the $14 million now spent on small, totally state-funded projects such as passing

Rescuers remove 18-year-old Scott Lancaster's body in the foothills near Idaho Springs, Colo.

Attacks by mountain lions on the increase

DENVER (AP) — Man and mountain lion are in the throes of a violent struggle for space at the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. After a jogger was killed last month, some say the huge cats have "gone mad."

Others, however, maintain that's just how things are in the rugged West.

"We can't guarantee anyone's safety out there. There's a certain risk to living, and if you live in this part of the country, this has become a part of it," said Bob Davies, a Colorado Springs wildlife officer.

Recently, there have been mountain lion attacks reported in Montana, Colorado, California, Texas, Arizona, and even British Columbia in Canada. And over the last summer, wardens and searchers killed at least four mountain lions in the region that threatened humans or attacked livestock.

Two fatal attacks in recent years have particularly frightened residents in the West. In all, fewer than a dozen fatal attacks have been documented in the United States and Canada in the past century.

In September 1989, 5-year-old Jake Gardipe was killed by a mountain lion while riding his tricycle in the front yard in the small, wooded town of Evans, western Montana. The boy was dragged from the yard and his body was found nearby several hours later.

On Jan. 14, Scott Dale Lancaster, 18, was attacked by a lion in Idaho Springs, west of Denver. Wildlife officials theorize the running may have triggered a "cat-and-mouse" response in the 3-year-old male cougar, which attacked from above.

The cougar apparently killed Lancaster before he could defend himself. The lion, still in the area when the body was found, was shot and killed.

Not long thereafter, Colorado Springs police shot and killed a 151-pound mountain lion after it killed a dog chained to a porch. In the weeks since Lancaster died, wildlife officials have spent long hours meeting with conservationists and people who live in the mountain foothills.

Forest Service, ranchers at odds in grazing fight

The Washington Post SILVER CITY, N.M. — For generations, cattlemen have grazed their herds amid the parched and rugged mountains of the Gila National Forest, earning private profits from public land in a partnership steeped in the traditions of the Old West. But now that partnership is at risk. Angered by new environmental restrictions on grazing in the 3-million-acre federal forest in southwest New Mexico, ranchers and local governments have squared off with the U.S. Forest Service in a modern version of an old-fashioned range war. "Here's Saddam Hussein, walked in and took Kuwait — and that's how it is with the Forest Service," said O.E. Grubb, 71, who recently was ordered to remove half his 200 Hereford cattle from the 15,000-acre grazing allotment he has occupied for nearly 30 years. "They run you down."

watched by environmentalists and cattlemen's groups, one county government here went so far as to pass a law threatening federal land managers with jail if they impose new restrictions on grazing and logging, and the Forest Service promised to call in U.S. marshals if it were enforced. "We're completely dependent on the management of these resources," said Dick Manning, president of the Catron County Cattle Growers Association and a time mover behind the ordinance. "What we're looking at is protecting our stability." Grazing is permitted on more than 250 million acres of federal forests and grasslands, roughly 12 percent of the lower 48 states. The system dates to the frontier era, when the federal government coaxed settlers westward with promises of ample public range for nomadic life. The evidence, that the century-old grazing system has left lasting environmental scars.

Speed trains touted in Texas

AUSTIN, TEXAS (AP) — Two international groups are vying to link Texas' largest cities with 200 mph trains, and the project's engineers say it could put the state on a fast track to the 21st century. They included the head of an airline that already connects 10 Lone Star cities; say the plan should be finalized if it's going to require public money. The Texas High Speed Rail Authority plane hearings next month and may could award a state franchise to build and operate the $6 billion train. The panel's chairman, Charles J. Wyle, says the Texas contract for the nation if the project is undertaken.

It is the jet age and space age technology embraced in these new rail systems that holds so much promise," said Wyle. "Other states are working on this, but we in Texas have the opportunity to be first." The two bidders, which each paid a $500,000 fee to compete, propose using European technology on a triangular route connecting Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio. The Dallas-Houston leg would be first, running by 1993. The proposals say that 200 mph steel-wheeled, electric trains could carry passengers from downtown Dallas to downtown Houston in 90 minutes. Austin flights from Dallas to Houston take 10 to 55 minutes.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOFF

"Not every man is so great a coward as he thinks he is - nor yet so good a Christian." - Robert Louis Stevenson.

A brave man might make the winning decision in today's minors and he might not. The wisest man is more cowardly; he gives the opponents the first opportunity to make a mistake.

West increases his chances over a straight flight by first cashing, then playing in one minor and then flexing in the other minor if the queen doesn't appear. But how does he know which minor to play first?

West's best shot is to defer any decision about the minors and to play West on lead instead.

Whatever happened between Crawford and Russell?

By Bettelou Peterson
Knight-Ridder News-Service

Q. Are Betty Davis and Joan Crawford sisters? I say yes, my friends say no. — M.B., Newton, Pa.

A. The ladies played sisters in the black comedy "Whatever Happened to Baby Jane" but that's it. Their dislikes of each other was legend in Hollywood and the making of the movie was a tough chore for the director, Robert Aldrich.

Q. What are my chances of getting the video of the 1948 movie "The Search"? I've been to every video store in town with no luck. — Mrs. B.B., Garden Grove, Calif.

A. Currently, "The Search" is not on tape. Not all movies are on video tape but more and more are being released. Keep checking.

"Trapper John, M.D." rerun and there was a doctor with no hands. I said it was the same man. My son says absolutely not. — L.W., Charlotte, N.C.

A. Both roles were played by Harold Russell, now 76. A World War II veteran who had lost his hands while an Army demolition instructor, Russell was cast in 1946's "Year" and won two Oscars (best supporting actor and special achievement). He didn't pursue his acting career. Instead, he became spokesman and worker for the handicapped. The same year he did "Trapper John." 1981, he made the feature film "Inside Moves." Those are his most recent acting credits.

Harris didn't like the material

Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. Why did Irish actor Richard Harris, who had such a run of success in movies like "Camelot" and "A Man Called Horse," leave the business a decade or so ago?

A. Quite simply, he says, "it reached a point where I wasn't being offered anything worth while, and so I virtually retired from the screen. I was substantially rich and thought, 'Why bother?'" Last year, Harris agreed to take on the challenge of the recent film "The Field" with Tom Berenger, and earned a prestigious British award for his starring role in "Henry IV" on the London stage, a play he's preparing for Broadway. "I feel totally revived," confides Harris, 60.

Q. Is the Heidi Perlman who appears on "Cheers" credits related to Rhea Perlman, who plays Gels on the same show?

A. Heidi Perlman, the writer-producer, is Rhea's sister. Besides "Cheers," she also worked on the hit series "Fawlty Towers" (co-starring Rhea's spouse, Danny DeVito) and was an executive producer on "The Tracey Ullman Show."

Q. What is "sex, lies, and videotape" director Steven Soder-

Franz Kafka in a black-and-white movie evoking the German expressionist style of the '30s.

The cast and crew in Regue, Czechoslovakia, include Ion Caramitru (a former post-revolutionary vice president of Romania), Joel Grey, and East German dissident actor Armin Mueller-

Stahl. The story is "ultimately about the continual process of disillusionment," the director explains, "and the sense of disconnectancy between the way things appear and the way they are."

Q. Whatever happened to the real Henry Hill, the gangster whose story was detailed in the movie "GoodFellas"?

A. "Today, I have a new family," Hill says from an undisclosed location. (As portrayed in the movie, Hill, after a drug conspiracy arrest in 1980, chose to enter the federal Witness Protection Program and to testify against his former associates to win immunity from prosecution and a new identity.) "I have a wonderful woman in my life and a wonderful child. I still live in fear at times. I'm still in hiding. It's difficult for the whole family. I still have problems dealing with my past..."

Micro mini motor home has mucho maxi features

FOREST CITY, Iowa — Winnebago's full efficient Spirit micro mini motor home models were among numerous recreation vehicles on display last month at the 1991 Treasure Valley Dealers Show at the Western Idaho Fairgrounds.

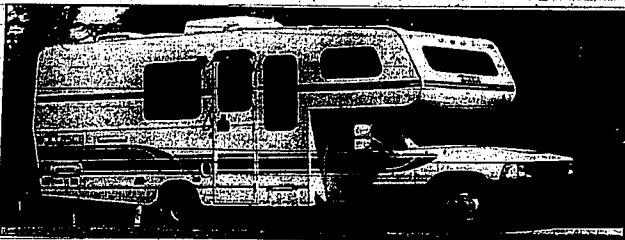

"These new micro mini motor home lines offer cost-conscious, value-conscious motor home buyers all the appeal and resale value of a Winnebago Industries product," says Rex Jacobson, vice president of sales and marketing.

The 1991 micro mini motor homes are built on a Toyota chassis equipped with a three-liter V-6 fuel-injected and four-speed automatic transmission with both power and fuel efficiency. These units obtain as many as 15 to 18 miles per gallon (mpg) of gasoline.

The Spirit micro mini motor home is available in three efficient floor plans. The new 321RB and the deluxe 321DB models feature both a convertible couch and a dinette.

The 321RL and deluxe 321DL have an L-shaped dinette, a convertible couch, and a comfortable swivel lounge chair. The 321ORB and deluxe 321DB have a large convertible dinette and choice of storage cabinet or comfortable lounge chairs.

Itasca Spirit is affordable in both purchase price and fuel economy.

with its up-to-date used car quotes

"How much is the old buggy worth?"

Sure, the "Kelley Blue Book" and other publications provide information and you can get price quotes from banks and credit unions, but sometimes the information can be confusing.

Now, the Auto Priceline, founded in 1987, offers easy-to-understand information 24 hours a day, seven days a week. You can reach it simply by dialing 1-900-741-CARS (2277) on a Touch Tone phone and following the simple instructions. The fee is $1.50 per minute.

In addition to its accessibility and speed, Auto Priceline offers information unavailable elsewhere, president William Kingsbury says.

His quotations are based on industry price guide standards published by the "Blue Book," the National Automobile Dealers Association—and information received from other sources.

For example, when the distributor of the Yugo went into bankruptcy, the value of the car plunged—drastically. "We can change prices instantly, instead of waiting to print a book," Kingsbury says.

"Even if a person got hold of NADA's 'Kelley Blue Book,' the information could be outdated, and there's still a problem of misinterpreting it. Interpreting it wrong could mean several thousand dollars."

Priceline offers the current wholesale and retail values of cars and trucks from 1946 to the present, and because prices vary from location to location, you will be asked to enter the post office's abbreviation of your state.

The values take into consideration vehicle options and are adjusted to the exact mileage that is entered on the Tough Tone keypad. Callers who do not know vehicle mileage receive a quote based on an average yearly mileage of 12,000 miles.

If a caller needs assistance with the system, a customer service extension is available.

Boston Globe

The trucks available from manufacturers are almost always loaded with amenities, options, gimmicks, gadgets.

"So it was with some relief that I got the plain vanilla Ford F150 pickup, a nice taste of common after too much fancy—straight six under the hood, manual gearbox with shifter on the floor, no frills, not even a headliner. Well, maybe not till this truck did have a decent AM/FM radio, but these days that's not exactly frilly.

This Ford 4 x 4—that means it's rear drive only, with 4-wheel drive, it's a 4 x 4—sells for $22,495 plus $275 delivery charge. As stated, it had the good radio amid a package of what might be called work options—swing-away mirrors (a necessity if you're serious about a truck), heavy-duty battery, handling package—sliding rear window, some convenience lighting, a tire upgrade and "super cooling" for the engine. I presume that super cooling means an oversize radiator.

The option package (with a hefty discount built in) brought the total bill to $12,758 delivered. That's a far cry from some of the $20,000-plus beauties I have been driving.

It's a Plain-Jane pickup, but the way it handled, the way it felt, it's probably more of an Adele Astaire among trucks than a Jane Fonda. ACR/RL/BB, but it's got class and real driving appeal. I'd like to own a truck like this.

Is new husband addicted to sex?

Q. Recently I read an article on sex addicts in one of my wife's magazines. I am a little concerned I might be one. We've been married for six months and we're both in our 20s. I want to have sex with her every day and twice a day on the weekends.

We don't actually do it that often, but I'd like to. We do have sex four or five times a week.

Does that amount, and the time I spend fantasizing and thinking about it, indicate a problem? She says she is very happy with our sex life. But after reading that article I see how easily one can be addicted without even knowing it.

She says if I read her magazines all the time I'd realize articles about addictions as like TV movies. There has to be a new disease every week. What do you think?

A. Enjoy making love to your bride and fantasizing about making love to her, and stop worrying about sex addiction! I really don't know what a "sex addict" is, but I do know that the honeymoon phase of a marriage can last a year or more. You are a honeymooner. As long as both of you are satisfied with your sex-life, you don't have any problems.

Q. I've been going with a married man for two yrs. Occasionally he has been able to get away for a weekend with me. But that happened more often in the beginning of our relationship than it is in the past year and a half. He is getting a divorce, but his wife is making it difficult.

They have been working on a divorce for most of the time I've known him. I am wondering if the stress of this is what has caused him to be less interested in me sexually. He is also under a lot of pressure at work. I want to be understanding. Is there anything I can do to make him as excited about me as he was at first? Also, I don't want to make any mistakes with him. When his divorce finally comes through, I want to marry him. What can I do?

A. You can do something for yourself. Take a pad and pen and write the following: "I deserve a good relationship with a man who makes me feel sexually desirable. This is not a good relationship. I will give him 30 days.

If he isn't separated by that time, I will get out of this relationship and find an available man!" You don't need to tell him about the deadline. Promise yourself that you will break up with him when the deadline has passed and he's still married. And I am willing to bet he will bet!

Say it isn't so

War cards: Hardware as hero

NEW YORK (AP) — In the new Operation Desert Storm trading card series, the heroes are hardware and the players' statistics come in miles per hour and rounds per minute.

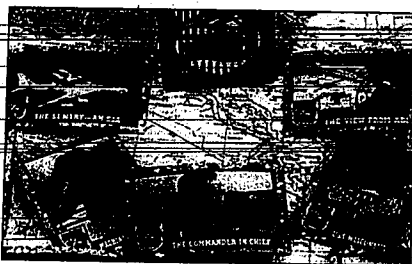

Although the familiarity features are featured in the Topps Co. series, they are outnumbered and overshadowed by cards bearing a photo and brief description of weapons — such as the AH-64 Apache helicopter, the EA-6B Prowler bomber and the F-18 Hornet fighter.

The Apache, described as "the costliest 'copter in service" in the Persian Gulf, "can withstand a 23mm caliber hit" according to the blurb on the back of its card. The TOW anti-tank gun fires projectiles at more than 625 mph.

The weapons look great and sound almost human. The Apache is described as "an indispensable ally" and the UH-1 Huey Navy Bell helicopter is called the "senior member of the 'copter fleet" in the operation.

Operation Desert Storm cards are going on sale around the nation, Topps said. There are 88 different cards and 22 stickers in the series, and nine cards and one sticker in each 50-cent pack.

Boyle, a spokesman for Topps, said the series is neither frivolous nor opportunistic.

AP Imagesphoto

You get eight trading cards and a sticker for 50 cents.

"These cards do not glorify war," he said in a telephone interview. "They offer an encyclopedic look at this military operation (and) — its personalities — and weapons in a non-sensationalistic way." Encyclopedic? "They can be used as an educational tool, especially for children," Boyle said.

If a lot of children will think that NATO has 27 members instead of 16, and that rifles are routinely capitalized. They also will be exposed to redundancies such as "ground-combat infantry," "wheeled truck," and "gun armaments."

Videogames OK, Mom says

"Videogames — introduce children to the technology they'll need to excel in the computer culture," says Konami Mom Charlyne Robinson — a real mom degree in educational psychology. "Along with eye-hand coordination, strategic thinking and confidence with electronics, videogames help develop technological literacy, which is definitely a part of education in the '90s," Robinson says.

Here are some of Robinson's tips:

- Suggest books relating to videogame subjects. For instance, "Mission: Impossible" — a game about preventing international terrorists from stealing scientific research — could spark interest in reading spy or intrigue stories for book reports.

Does your child want "Castle

Parenting

vania-III-Dracula's Curse"? Suggest exploring the myths of vampire bats or the period of the Dark Ages for science or history classes.

Children wishing for "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles II, the Arcade Game" for NES or "Fall of the Foot Clan" for the Game Boy may be interested in studying turtles or the concept of mutations for science class.

Visit museums or other attractions that follow themes of videogames.

For example, if your child asks for "Top Gun, The Second Mission," suggest visiting a naval or air force base to understand the importance of math or science in protecting our country.

Always keep an open mind — and an open window

What's the most common complaint from today's homeowners? Not enough living space. Unfortunately, many homeowners often overlook their attic when they consider remodeling for additional living space.

Or, if they do consider an attic remodel, they worry that the only way to convert the unused space is by constructing dormer windows, which are costly and may interfere with the exterior appearance of the home.

There is, however, an economical and relatively simple way to convert attic space into beautiful light-filled living areas.

By installing roof windows instead of dormers, homeowners will not only save big money in labor and materials, but they'll also add to the beauty of their new upstairs world with an abundance of natural light and fresh air ventilation.

Turn gloomy attic space into light-filled living area.

Homeowners planning an attic conversion would be wise to consider the following factors before they decide between roof windows and dormers:

1. A roof window can be installed and finished in less than a day. A dormer may take two or three times longer to construct.

2. A roof window can be installed from the inside without the need of scaffolding or getting on the roof. A dormer on the other hand would require extensive work from the outside.

3. A roof window can open for ventilation and rotate a full 180 degrees for safe and easy cleaning of the outside pane from inside the room: A sturdy ladder and garden hose will be required when cleaning dormer windows.

4. Roof windows meet the egress code as a second means of escape in case of fire. Dormer windows may be difficult to escape from because of their small size.

5. With roof windows, you add to the resale value of your home at minimal cost. It's harder to recoup the cost of a dormer as it's much more expensive in labor and materials.

6. Roof windows capture 37 percent more light than vertical dormer windows. Dormers restrict light from reaching into the room.

Here are some trouble-shooting tips for those who have stitching on hold

Sandra Betzina describes the sewing addict in her new videos as someone whose sewing room is a wreck, thanks to so many "works-in-progress." Information isn't likely to be a repetition of what's been known in sewing circles for years. As author of three books on sewing, plus five videos, Betzina offers a wealth of fascinating information that anyone who sews from the most experienced to a beginner, could use.

The following tips are taken from her recently released "Trouble-Shooting Seams" which consists of three videos, each one hour in length, and priced at $21.95. For a free brochure, write to Power Sewing, 185 Fifth Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94118. UNDERSTANDING SEAMS A common fitting problem is a shoulder seam that tends to fall off the back of the shoulder. It can happen on a blouse, dress or jacket—according to Betzina, the problem isn't in your body but in the pattern. Evaluate a pattern before cutting by placing the front and back bodice pieces, side by side.

If the distance between the shoulder seam and the underarm seam is identical, there's a problem. The simple solution is to add one-fourth inch to the back and remove one-fourth inch from the front. The tiny bit of extra length in the back will keep the shoulder seam riding squarely on the shoulder where it belongs.

The sleeve must be changed to correspond with the bodice and again it's simply a matter of moving the sleeve cap dot forward one-fourth inch.

POPPING SEAMS Curved seams such as those in a duffel sleeve or in a crotch seam have a way of breaking under stress. Betzina's solution is to "crack" the seam; i.e., gently pull the seam and listen for stitches to "crack." Re-stitch again for a sturdy, no-surprises seam.

EASING Forever we've heard about taut sewing; i.e., gently pulling fabric from front to back as it goes under the sewing machine needle. The best way to ease in fullness, Betzina says, is to stretch fabric from side to side as it goes under the needle. Perhaps you've unconsciously discovered this using the first two fingers on your left hand to guide the fabric under the presser foot. For free diagrams illustrating all of the above techniques, send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Pattern Adjustments, P.O. Box 40425, Cincinnati, OH 45240.

This week's tip is brought to you from Gina Cantarl of Idaho Falls, ID. When sewing with a bulky fabric such as man-made fur, instead of pinning, use clothes pins to clip fabric layers together.

Send your tips to: Sewing Tips, P. O. Box 40425, Cincinnati, OH 45240.

Buy your lime sulfur now

Lime sulfur is on sale now. And it's a good thing, too, because it's time to spray for peach leaf curl right now.

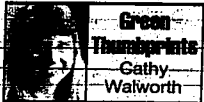

Before the buds begin to swell, often during a mid-spring night about now, and then again in three weeks, we've got to get the lime sulfur on.

Peach leaf curl is a disease that does cruel things to a peach tree. This fungus curls and crinkles the leaves of peach trees so badly that they drop, forcing the tree to send out a whole new set of leaves. The effort weakens the tree.

The infected fruit also drops long before its time.

Peach leaf curl comes from fungus spores which are produced in sacks on the leaf and washed or blown onto twigs and leaf buds. When the buds swell, the spores fall into the buds and young leaves.

That is why timing is the most important element of your spray program. A fungicide spray must be applied during the dormant season. Two sprays are recommended—once now and one in three weeks. Apply the spray too early and it will most likely be washed off before it is needed; too late and it won't cure already infected buds.

Ask your garden center for lime sulfur, Cyrex, or fixed copper. And if you haven't already, rake up all leaves and fruit that fell last fall and put them into the trash. Do not put them on the compost pile.

If the spores are allowed to stay on the ground, they will recycle themselves and the problem will multiply.

Cathy Walworth is an avid Twin Falls gardener.

DALLAS—When CBS Inc. started an unprecedented spending spree for sports programs two and a half years ago, it was a broad-rolling backward. As a result, CBS now is stuck with more than $3 billion in sports programming that it bought since the telecast of its Goodwill Games from Seattle during the summer and recorded additional losses on the first year of its four-year NFL contract. General Electric Co. does not report separately on the performance of its broadcasting subsidiary, NBC, but the network is believed to have recorded a profit decline last year in part because of losses incurred from its NFL package.

Widow Jones' Money

Clifton became the sheriff, and his life became complicated

By Bill White

As Clifton assumed his new duties as town sheriff, he didn't reckon none that one of them would be to investigate a brutal murder the next morning.

"Look, it'll only be one day, maybe two at the most," Sheriff Tucker had maintained, tossing his badge to Clifton. "I'll be back from Boise quicker than a mudder can get off a hot tin roof. Besides, don't you want to impress Emma? She's been wanting you to settle down. This could be a new start

'You're a worthless nobody - a money grubber!' she yelled, leaning over the window sill. With a huff, she sat down in the chair next to the window and resumed working her needlepoint.

for you!"

The thought of settling down didn't set none too well with Clifton, even if it was with the purtiest gal in three western states.

He glanced over at his young sidekick, Art Gibson. "Well, kid, I gussie it'll be just you and me to run this town."

Sheriff Tucker cut in. "Whoa your horses there! Art's agreed to ride shotgun with me, so you're on your own."

"Howdy, Cliff," a familiar voice cut in. Clifton could smell the new imported French perfume that told him Emma had done snuck up behind him.

"I'll take care of him, Sheriff," she said, latching onto Clifton's arm and leading him down the street like she was displaying an award-winning heifer.

"I'll head down to the jail with you," Emma added; "unless, of course, you want a poor defenseless woman to walk these streets alone? Why," she said, pointing to a beggar sitting on the side of the street and playing a harmonica, "guys like that might attack me!"

"Oh, it doesn't look like he's had much of a decent past to know."

"Remember—the stamped—"

"Yes," Emma replied, staring at Clifton's face for sign of the tollate scar.

"Well, that feller, Margow Grangefield, was the foreman. Darren said the note on the cattle and had Margow fired without pay, saying the stampede was his fault."

"That's it? That's not much reason to hate a guy." "No, but Margow was counting on that money from working the herd to send his sister to Denver to see a medical specialist. He didn't get the money and she died suddenly. Margow came apart after that, blamed Darren for his sister's death. Messed the just-lives-off-the-charity of others."

"Poor feller," she muttered, walking across the street to put some coins next to him. A loud commotion down the street caused the three of them to look at Darren stomping out the door.

"My own mother, turned down by my own mother," Darren yelled as he stood by the door.

"You're a worthless nobody - a money grubber!" she yelled, leaning over the window sill. With a huff, she sat down in the chair next to the window and resumed working her needlepoint. A mean look crossed Darren's face. He could make an icicle feverish.

"That's odd," Emma said as she watched Darren stomp out the door and then she added, "Is banker Darren having money troubles?"

"Clifton snuffed for a moment and then replied, "Could be... I read in the Gazette - the government is doing an audit of town banks out west. My guess is Darren's probably been skimming some money from the bank for his personal use and he's gonna come up short if he doesn't do something."

"Why'd he go to his mother? She can't have much."

"Don't you know? She got at least $10,000 from her late husband's business."

"Then it'd be in the bank anyway!"

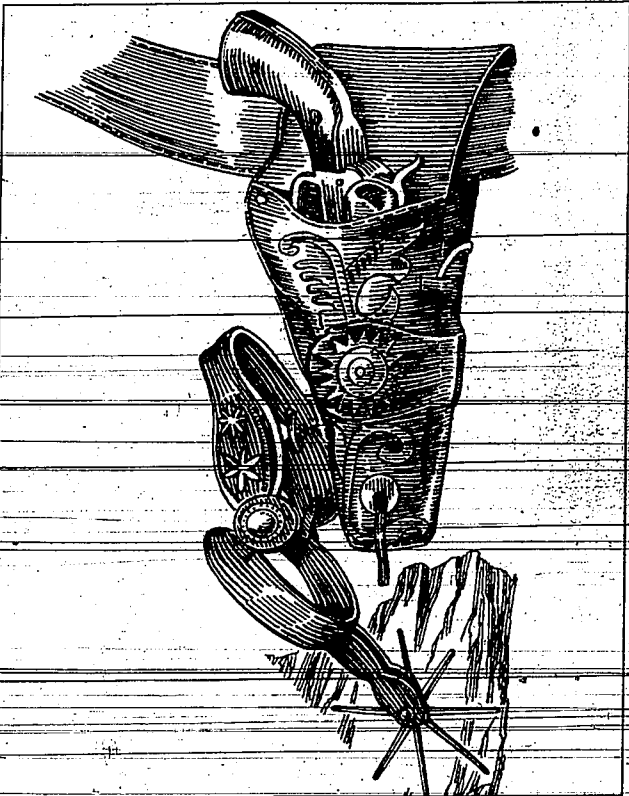

Clifton smiled at her. "She's never been found none for banks - especially since that crook of a son of hers bought controlling interest. It's no secret she took all her money out of the bank when Darren first went to work there! She knows her own son only too well! Word is that $10,000 makes for a very lumpy mattress."

"Is that safe?"

Clifton looked at her with amusement. This wasn't a big city like Denver. Being a sheriff meant settling a few cowboys down when they got in a biff a day. Nothing even a groundchuck with a broken leg couldn't handle.

"I don't think Emma said as they need her house on the edge of town. 'I'll be seeing you tomorrow?'"

Clifton took her hand as they stepped up on the porch. She squeezed it and looked up at him with a smile that sent shivers down and down his spine. His trail riding days were numbered; he could see that.

Hardly without thinking - he helped further seal his own doom with a parting comment, "Polecats running through a family of skunks couldn't keep me away!"

Emma gave him a coy look and gently closed the door.

The morning came early for Clifton in his new job as sheriff. A pounding on the door of the sheriff's office brought him up off a dilapidated cot and racing for his pants and the door.

Clifton followed the frantic clerk down the street to Widow Jones's door. Through the window he could see her - a limp-form lying on the floor. When they entered the room, it was obvious the money from her mattress had been stolen. Several stray bills lay beside her battered body and her sewing materials were scattered on the wooden floor. Two unfinished handkerchiefs with the initials M-W lay on the table next to the window. Probably, she had put up only a short struggle. Blood was splattered across the table top and on the handkerchiefs.

Clifton began checking around town. No newcomers, no wandering strangers, nobody knew of anything out of the ordinary. He was at a loss of where to check next when Emma ran up to him. "Clifton," she said, waving a folded letter. "I found this under my door!"

Clifton examined the short letter carefully. Scrawled in rough letters were the words:

"Darren don't. He got the money hidden in his room."

The note wasn't signed. Clifton folded it and stuck it in his back pocket.

"Let's stop at the saloon; I'm going to need one or two deputies for this."

"What about me?"

"You're a woman!"

Emma bit her lip. That was one she'd have to live with. She was going to have to change. She would see to that.

Darren was sitting on his bed, staring out the window when Clifton and two deputies barged in, guns drawn. Darren was unarmed, so they put their guns away. Clifton glanced down at the pillow lying next to the startled banker. With a quick movement, he pushed the pillow to one side, exposing a pair of bills the banker had been counting.

'Let me come! Let me come! You need me! I'd be one more gun and I can shoot straight. Darren's got it coming,' he added, not bothering to hide the bitter sneer on his lips.

"Hello, Darren, I thought we'd find you with the loot!"

Darren's jaw dropped. Amaze-ment shown on his face. How'd they know he was there? Clifton looked at them with a sly smile.

"Well, now. Word travels fast! Someone had snuffed this news of hills under my hood. I found them this morning. Some of the loot must have thought it safe and then forgot it."

"I'll just bet he did," Clifton said.

The glint of something shiny from under a table caught Clifton's attention and he reached down to pick it up.

"Did you also find this there?" Clifton asked, holding a brooch Widow Jones was known to have worn daily. Darren recognized it and turned bleached white. He started to speak, but his jaw couldn't move.

"Killing your own mother over money? Clifton said, shaking his head. "Let's take him in!" he murmured to his deputies.

Darren snatched a revolver out of the pillow and motioned for them to get back up against the wall, firing it. Quickly, he rushed toward the door.

"You'll never get away with it," Clifton yelled angrily. "The town'll hunt you down."

"We'll hunt you down!" Still no reply. The three men slowly turned around to find Darren had vanished. A second later, the sound of horse hooves reached their ears.

"After him, guys!" Clifton said, and all three rushed out the door and toward the stairs. Halfway down them, they almost tripped over Margow sitting on the bottom step playing his harmonica.
"What's everyone in such a rush for?"

"One of the deputies replied, 'Darren killed his mother and stole her money!'" Margow's face lit up like a cherry. The mighty banker had gone foul of the law.

"Oh . . . you reckon it was him that done it?"

"No mistaken that," Clifton said as he tried to get around the guy.

"Wait 'til the paper gets hold of this one," Margow said with an expression that gleamed with anticipation.

Clifton started at this sorny ex-pression for a human. "Yeah, I reckon they're gonna have a shirttail full of type over it."

"Let me counsel! Let me counsel! You need me! I'd be one more gun and I can shoot straight. Darren's got it coming," he added, not bothering to hide the bitter sneer on his lips.

Clifton didn't like Margow's tone of the expression on his face. He wasn't that short-handed.

But on the other hand, an extra man who could handle a pistol or rifle might make all the difference.

"OK," Clifton said. "You're now a deputy. Come along and you'd better do what I say!"

The four men headed out the door toward the Circle K Ranch. Darren was the first to see the guns to search the hills just north of the ranch. Forty minutes later, just as they were about to look elsewhere, rifle shots zinged past them. Darren dove behind several rocks. Darren was up there, somewhere . . .

It was getting on noon, the sun was baking the leather off their boots and withering the fence posts. They fanned out and slowly circled up toward the hills. Suddenly Clifton saw the glint of a rifle barrel just a hundred feet ahead of him. It was Darren, and he had no notice. Clifton raised his gun to fire, and then lowered it.

"Give it up, Darren. We have you surrounded. You're not going to get out of these hills!"

Darren shot out at the dirt around his feet. There you are, answer, Clifton. You've wanted to bring me in for years; here's your chance!"

Clifton motioned for his two deputies to circle around back and for Margow to come with him. The sun blazed down on them as they slowly made their way up the hill, from rock to rock, narrowly missing stray bullets from rifle fire.

"Give it up, Darren. I'm giving you one last chance!"

"Let me shoot him," Margow said, as he wiped his forehead with a handkerchief, then stuffed it in his back pants pocket.

Darren was now in his view. Clifton inched closer. Margow was just in front of him, his rifle ready to shoot. Darren sensed Margow's fingers tighten on the trigger.
"Drop it, Margow! Don't shoot him!"

"I got him in my sights. Now you just don't fret. I'll kill that murderer deadier than a can of corn before you can blink."

Clifton raised his gun and pointed it at Margow. It was time to put a stop to this.

"Drop it, Margow, or I'll have to take you out!"

Two shots echoed off the canyon walls. Margow's aim had been ruined, as Clifton's bullet tore into him, sending him—as in slow motion—tumbling over the cliff's edge and down 30 feet to the rocks below. The two deputies stared at Clifton in amazement.

Who's side was he on, anyway? If he wasn't gonna shoot Darren, then why was he shooting Margow?

The two deputies raised their rifles as Clifton yelled out, "Hold your fire, men! We were after the wrong person." Then he scrambled down the rocks to get Margow. The two puzzled deputies hesitated, then followed rapidly, while Darren peered up over the rocks wondering what they were up to.

Margow was dying as they reached him, lying partially on his back. His nose was foamy, but still audible.

"How did you know?" he asked, his voice fading.

Clifton glanced down at Margow's back pocket. He slowly pulled out the blood-red handkerchief with the initials H.W. and held it out for Margow to see. The dying man shrugged his shoulders and looked up at him. "Guess I should have left it here."

Clifton leaned closer because Margow's voice was growing weaker. "I'm still glad I killed her," he said with a shallow laugh.

"Too bad you stopped me from getting Wilfred too."
Clifton stared down at the bitter, harsh, lynx eyes.

"Why?"
"Yesss, ago," he said, blood dripping out of his mouth, and laughed in my face when I tried to borrow money from her after he son had fired me."

He coughed once, then continued. "She and Darren as good as shot my sister. I swore that someday, someday I'd get them both. So I've just been biding my time, waiting for the right moment."

"Don't talk anymore," Clifton said, sticking a handkerchief in the bloody wound on Margow's chest.

"No, I must . . . when I heard Darren's argument with her, I thought this was a good way to settle two scores. I couldn't let the killers of my sister get off free."

His head sank back down in the dirt. He sputtered once, then said no more. Clifton felt his pulse. Nothing. Then he yelled up to Darren.

"Margow did it, you're in the clear!"

It was that evening, while having dinner at the Osogone Saloon, that Emma brought up a matter Clifton had overlooked. They could both see Darren sifting by himself across the room, sipping slowly on a bowl of soup.

"I've been thinking . . . Why did Darren and his mom argue in the first place?"

Clifton shrugged his shoulders and crunched down a biscuit.

Emma continued. "Check the church funds—they've never been happy. These funds were kept in Darren's bank. I'd bet Widow Jones had discovered her son had taken part of the funds for his own use."

Clifton glanced across the room at the solitary figure. Then he got out of his biscuit down and got out of his chair.

"Why don't we get this settled so I can finish eating? Let's go ask him!"

Darren frowned and said no word time proving I took anything!"
Emma stared at Clifton. Darren was as slick as a greased snake.

"He's got to put back. What'll we do now?"
"I guess you can," Clifton said, starting to leave.

Emma grabbed his arm and whispered, "I've got an idea!" She turned to face Darren.

"I don't think you've been all that careful. If we did it right enough, I bet we could make things uncomfortable for you and your bank!" She sat down on one side of Darren and Clifton, catching a hint, sat down on the other side.

Darren fidgeted in his chair. "That's possible . . ." he finally replied. "What are you suggesting?"

"Darren, you and I both know that our church has needed a new organ for quite some time!"

"That's a fact," Darren replied. "One the way we got sounds like a 'cow headin'' into labor under a barbed wire fence."

"Don't you think it would be a right good gesture if you, on behalf of your bank, used part of your salary to donate a new organ to the church?"

Darren's jaw dropped. Emma just smiled sweetly at him. Finally, the banker replied.

"Why, yes, I suppose that might be looked on by folks as a generous thing to do . . . providing, of course, you don't stir things up for me." He added, looking at Clifton and Emma.

Clifton said OK and they looked at Emma. Slowly, she nodded yes and rose from her seat.

Hand in hand, Emma and Clifton walked out the door and into the street. Clifton's cowboy boots were numbed, he could feel it.

He looked down the street. At the edge of town, he could just make out what looked like the real them with a wagon load of supplies.

Art spoke first as the wagon came to a stop in front of Clifton. "We had a hard time getting all the supplies we needed," he said, unloading a crate of canned goods. "Silver up at Wood-River. We just got the word from some miners heading there."

Clifton's jaw dropped. What were we waiting for here, let me help you unload that," he said, grabbing one of the larger sacks.

Emma watched them with narrowed eyes. An uncomfortable feeling leaned against her. That new thing to do—a powerful lot of weddings—fore it came time for hers . . .

Beauty queen barred; She's — legally — a boy

GRAND ISLAND, N.Y. (AP) — A 6-year-old girl has been barred from beauty pageants and baton-twirling contests because her birth certificate says she's a boy.

Whoever filled out Dominique Crocitto's birth certificate at the San Diego hospital where she was born erroneously typed in male, authorities said.

The mistake was caught by a Niagara Falls marching and twirling studio, businesses that teach baton twirling and organize contests. Dominique's mother, Sue Crocitto, said the studio called her to tell her Dominique might be disqualified from a contest because her birth certificate says she's a male.

And she'll be barred from all pageants, including the state Little Miss New York pageant in Rochester in April, until the mix-up is corrected.

Mrs. Crocitto said Dominique has won 47 beauty and modeling trophies and nobody has ever questioned her gender before. "It's kind of hard to call her a male," Mrs. Crocitto said. "Here they've got this little princess, and they've got her picked out all wrong." Dominique is first-grader at an elementary school on Grand Island, a Buffalo suburb, took the news hard at first but soon saw the humor in it, her mother said. "You don't have two boys, you have three boys now, Mommy," she told her mother.

If the underwear fits ...

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An Australian tourist sentenced to 10 years in prison for carrying hashish in his underwear was cleared by an appeals court when he proved that the briefs produced in evidence did not fit him.

Andrews Salvador was given the prison term plus a fine of nearly $28,000 by a lower court after his arrest last April. Press Trust of India reported.

It said Salvador was arrested just before boarding a flight from Thiruvananthapuram, in the southern Indian state of Kerala, to Bombay. A higher court acquitted Salvador on Thursday when he proved that the underwear placed in evidence was grossly undersized, the news agency said.

Kerala High Court Justice K. Padmanabhan asked him to wear the underwear in the presence of a court official. The official told the judge that despite all his efforts to wriggle into it, Salvador "miserably failed."

Jet setting days are numbered

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A former Duke University student who posed as a wealthy French baron was a con artist with lavish desires, said a judge who sentenced the impostor to three years in prison for fraud.

"There are various types of con artists," Judge Frank Bullock said in sentencing Maurice Jeffrey Locke Rothschild, who posing as his name from Mario Cortez Jr. and had claimed to be a baron. "I don't see Mr. Rothschild as one who did what he did and laughed all the way to the bank."

But the judge also said that "Mr. Rothschild had lavish desires. His greed as well as the greed of others certainly contributed to this."

Rothschild, 38, who has spent the last year in jail, was sentenced for bilking two banks by posing as a nobleman from France's wealthy Rothschild family.

He could have received up to eight years for four counts of fraud.

The charges involved $12,000. Rothschild received after submitting false information on credit and credit card applications at the Duke Federal Credit Union and Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. He signed applications as Baron Maurice de Rothschild, also listing his mother as Baroness Marie de Rothschild.
