A photo retrospective for a day of thanksgiving

It was the biggest event of 1990 — and the biggest of 1991. More than half a million American warriors went halfway around the world to free Kuwait from Iraqi occupation.

This weekend, as the nation celebrates those warriors' victory with national days of thanksgiving, The Times-News presents a special full-color photo retrospective of the Persian Gulf War.

"Images of the Persian Gulf War" features more than two-dozen photographs depicting key events in the conflict. Beginning with Operation Desert Shield and climaxing with Operation Desert Storm, photographers of the Associated Press captured gripping moments of combat, of hope, of grief and of joy.

Here at home, Times-News staff members were present as Magic Valley residents rallied behind the troops, rejoiced in allied success and mourned fallen heroes.

It's all in "Images of the Persian Gulf War," an eight-page memento of America at war.

Andrus signs property tax law

The Associated Press

BOISE — Property taxes, particularly increased in property taxes, will take on an entirely new look in January.

Starting with the new year, Idaho's local units of government will have to use a new system of notifying taxpayers and holding hearings if they want to increase property tax rates.

Gov. Cecil Andrus signed into law Friday a bill repealing the last vestige of the 1978 One Percent Initiative, the 5 percent limit on property tax increases from one budget to the next.

One legislator said it could be "the most significant thing to happen this decade," and House sponsor Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Blackfoot, said it was the most important change in tax law to happen in his seven years in the Legislature.

It was one of 65 bills signed by the governor Thursday afternoon and Friday. Some of them were major budget bills, including the $487.5 million public school appropriation bill. It held the key to adjournment of the 1991 session last Friday night in the 82nd day.

A 1978 taxpayer revolt led to an initiative limiting property tax to no more than 1 percent of market value. But lawmakers could not figure out how to apply it to Idaho's nearly 1,000 taxing districts.

The Legislature settled for a law limiting to 5 percent property tax increases from one budget to the next.

Simpson said that has led to automatic tax increases. The Legislature also has approved special levies outside the limit, so the result has been an annual average increase of 7 percent, he told House members.

Simpson said in Utah, where the new system has been used, the increase in property taxes has declined sharply. Since Utah adopted the law, annual growth in property tax collections has fallen from 12 percent to 3 percent, he said.

He was among those contending the 5 percent cap has not worked. Had the cap

U.S. sends food, shelter to Kurds

The Associated Press

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — President Bush, under criticism that he abandoned Iraq's Kurds after encouraging them to revolt, said Friday he was ordering U.S. planes to drop humanitarian aid in the mountain area where many of them have fled.

He warned Iraq's government not to interfere.

"Beginning this Sunday, U.S. Air Force transport planes will fly over northern Iraq and drop supplies of food, blankets, clothing, tents and other relief-related items for refugees and other Iraqi civilians suffering as a result of the situation there," Bush said in a statement released by the traveling White House.

"The human tragedy unfolding in and around Iraq demands immediate action on a massive scale," he said. "At stake are not only the lives of hundreds of thousands of innocent men, women and children, but the peace and security of the Gulf."

He also said he was having Secretary of State James A. Baker III stop in Turkey en route to the Middle East this weekend. Baker will meet with Turkish President Turgut Ozal and assess the refugee situation which includes thousands of people crossing Iraq's borders with Turkey and Iran.

Later, Bush was asked how the humanitarian aid would help Iraqis who are still being attacked by Saddam Hussein's army.

"I'm very much concerned about the violence and I'm hopeful that that will calm down," he replied. But he reiterated that neither the United States nor its coalition partners from the Persian Gulf War planned to intervene militarily.

"It is heartbreaking when you see these families on the road, pushed out by a brutal dictator," Bush said.

Asked if he were prepared to offer asylum to Iraqi refugees, Bush said: "I think every country should do its part, and we certainly would be open minded. But certainly what I think they ought to do is able to stay in their own area, their own country."

On the second day of a trip to California, Bush was heading to Los Angeles late Friday to help celebrate the 50th anniversary of the USO before flying to Houston for the weekend.

Refugees say hundreds dying as flight goes on

The Associated Press

WITH KURDISH REBELS IN NORTHERN IRAQ — Overcome by the suffering of refugees around him, a Kurdish doctor tearfully pleaded for help.

"Our people are dying. No food. No shelter. We need help now — without an hour's delay if these people are to survive," said the doctor, a former colonel in the Iraqi army medical corps.

He spoke from northern Iraq, where an exodus of tens of thousands of refugees has arisen in the wake of Iraq's suppression of a Kurdish rebellion.

Iran and Turkey said Thursday that more than a million Kurdish refugees had swarmed to their borders, seeking protection from Saddam Hussein's army. Despite some-son-to-arrive Western aid, their situation is "dire," they said.

Iran has also largely crushed Shiite Muslim insurgents in the south who also sought to topple Saddam after the Gulf War that ended Feb. 28.

The Iraqi colonel and other doctors in parts of the region still held by rebels had no accurate figures on casualties from the flight — both from bitter conditions and attacks by Saddam's army.

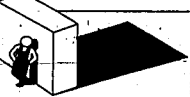

"It is impossible to know exactly, as the refugees are scattered all over the mountain, and we cannot check the reports coming in," said one doctor, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But there have been many reports of deaths, including:

- A rebel official claimed 120 children had died near the city of Rania, 20 miles from the northeast border with Iran.

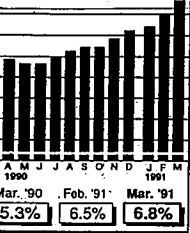

- A doctor said he had heard reports, also unconfirmed, that 500 children died Wednesday night in a violent storm that erupted as refugees fled into the mountains.

Turkish newspapers said refugees there also reported deaths along the route of flight.

Magic Valley jobless rate skids in March

By Craig Lincoln Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley unemployment rate in March returned to a more-normal level as the area's economy continued swelling against the tide of a national recession.

The Idaho Department of Employment's preliminary estimate for the central Magic Valley unemployment was 5.2 percent in March.

The latest jobs report is a sign that the economy in Twin Falls, Gooding and Jerome counties is glowing from its rapid growth of last year but still expanding, department analyst Lon McDonald said.

The March rate was way down from the 8 1/2 percent rate in February, when an unusual layoff at Universal Frozen Foods pushed the rate up, but higher than the 4.8 percent unemployment rate in March 1990.

"The average rate for the area over the last 12 months was also 5.2 percent, showing no particular deterioration in the area's economy," McDonald said.

The underlying strength in the area's labor report continued to be a steady expansion in the labor force. More people working and looking for work means the economy is growing even though unemployment rates may not be dropping.

Utah won't enforce new abortion law

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — State attorneys told a federal judge Friday Utah doesn't plan on enforcing its tough new anti-abortion law pending the outcome of an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit filed Friday.

But they will fight supreme ACLU efforts to prevent parts of the state's current abortion law from being enforced.

The ACLU filed a federal lawsuit Friday challenging the constitutionality of the new law and seeking a preliminary injunction.

The complaint, filed under the pseudonym of "Jane Liberty," claims the law's language is overly broad, violates free speech and religion provisions and denies Utahns their right to know what constitutes a crime under the statute.

Passage of the stringent law, which would make performing illegal abortions a felony, has health officials "afraid to provide the services they were providing," said Cathy Alviss, an attorney with the ACLU's New York-based Reproductive Freedom Project.

Astronaut, former senator die in crash of commuter turboprop

Los Angeles Times

ATLANTA — A twin-engine commuter plane with at least 23 aboard — among them former Sen. John Tower of Texas, his daughter, Marion, and astronaut Manley S. "Sonny" Carter Jr. — crashed and burned while attempting to land Friday afternoon at Brunswick, Ga. There were no survivors.

Officials said that in addition to the 20 passengers and three crew members aboard the plane, three airline personnel may have hitched a ride but not been included on the flight manifest. Local officials said that they could not immediately determine how many had been killed.

Atlantic Southeast Airlines Flight 231 was en route from Atlanta to Brunswick when it went down shortly before 3 p.m. in a heavily wooded area about two miles north of the runway at Glynnco Airport, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

The Brazilian-built turboprop had been cleared to land and apparently was making a normal approach when it pitched forward in a steep dive, the FAA said. The plane hit about 100 yards from a cluster of mobile homes, but there were no injuries on the ground.

Investigators had to clear a path through the woods with bulldozers to reach the wreckage, which was largely destroyed by the impact and fire.

Tower, 65, and his 35-year-old daughter had been on their way to Sea Island, Ga., for a party to promote his new book, "Consequences: A Personal Memoir," according to his office in Dallas.

In 1989, President Bush nominated the four-term Republican senator from Texas to be his secretary of defense, but allegations of heavy drinking and marital infidelity undermined Tower's political support and the Senate rejected him in a 53-47 vote. It was the first time in 30 years that a president had been denied his Cabinet choice.

Kennedy nephew assault case suspect

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Police on Friday identified William Kennedy Smith, nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, as the suspect in an alleged rape at the Kennedy family compound.

"We have identified that particular gentleman as our suspect in this case," said police spokesman Craig Gunkel after stating Smith's full name.

Smith, 30, is a medical student at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., and is the son of Kennedy's "older" sister, Jean Kennedy Smith, and the late Stephen Smith, a former Kennedy family campaign aide.

Gunkel refused to provide more details or say if and when Smith would be arrested.

Police also said in a separate statement that Smith's Miami attorney, former federal prosecutor

Mark Schnapp, "has declined to make his client available for interview by detectives of the Palm Beach Police Department."

Schnapp did not answer telephone calls to his office Friday afternoon.

In a statement from Washington, Kennedy cautioned that "being named a suspect does not mean one has committed an offense. When all the facts come out, I'm confident Willie will be vindicated."

worked in the 11 years it has been in place, property taxes statewide would have been $412 million in 1990; instead they were $460 million.

And counties also have argued for years that they have been crippled by the 5 percent limit in providing services demanded by residents.

Starting in January, a taxing district wishing to increase its property tax rate will have to take out a newspaper ad of at least a quarter-page, notifying taxpayers of the plan. The ad must contain a table showing the annual increase on a home valued at $50,000, a farm valued at $200,000 and a typical business of $200,000.

A public hearing must be held before the increase can be approved. Simpson predicted there would be few taxing districts wanting to "jump through the hoops" to improve high taxes.

The measure already has spurred one possible initiative for the 1992 general election. Ron Rankin of Coeur d'Alene, president of the Idaho Property Owners Association, announced plans for an initiative to reimpose the 1 percent limit and put other restrictions on property tax.

He and his backers need about 32,000 signatures by Feb. 1, 1992, to put the issue on the ballot.

Andrus without comment signed into law the public school appropriation bill approved 43-40 by the House in the final hours of the session. It is about $3.2 million more than the recommended amount, an increase of 7.3 percent over last year's general tax support.

Also approved were the $14.3 million budget for the Department of Law Enforcement; $14.9 million to the Idaho Supreme Court for the state judicial system and $12.5 million for the Department of Transportation. The transportation money will be used for construction only and comes from 3 cent per gallon fuel tax increase which started Monday.

Aircraft operators also will pay more. The governor approved an 11-cent per gallon increase in the state airplane fuel tax, and 1 cent per gallon on jet fuel.

Andrus also signed a bill designed to cope with a Dec. 11 Idaho Supreme Court decision on the "production exemption" from sales tax. The new law is retroactive to the date of the decision.

It reverses the Supreme Court and declares that repair equipment is subject to the sales tax. But it adds certain items of safety equipment, required by state or federal law, to the list of tax-exempt purchases.

Other new laws:

- The state will give a tax break estimated at $75,000 over two years for feasibility studies on converting an unused nuclear reactor at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory into a brain cancer treatment center.
- Salaries for the four members of the Tax Commission will go up about $5,000 to $48,485 on July 1.
- The anti-time members of the Commission on Pardons and Parole will be paid $75 per day instead of $50. It will cost an extra $6,000 per year.

Jobless

The state unemployment rate came in at 6.2 percent, down from February but up from one year ago. The number of workers remained about the same but there were more people looking for work than last year, pushing the unemployment rate up.

The national picture was dismal. The national unemployment rate jumped to 6.8 percent in March, up from 6.3 percent in February. The ranks of the jobless has swelled by 2 million since the middle of last year as a recession kept a stranglehold on the economy.

Some analysts said the national report was so dismal that a full-fledged economic recovery would be years before it.

But Idaho's employment statistics indicate it hasn't fallen into the same economic hole, even though it is slowing.

"Employment growth" was so strong in 1989 and early 1990, that it is sometimes hard to realize that slowdown is not a sign of a weakening economy," department acting director Dick Eardley said.

Unadjusted data for the Magic Valley showed an increase of 587 in the labor force, defined as people working or looking for work. While the number of workers increased by 377, the number of job-seekers increased 210.

The total labor force was 38,683, with 2,343 unemployed and 36,340 employed. Last March, the labor force stood at 38,096, with 2,133 unemployed and 35,963 working.

McDonald said that Blaine County's economic weakness is prompting job-seekers to look for work in the Twin Falls area. The trend is especially evident for residents of towns such as Richfield and Shoshone who used to work in Blaine County.

Blaine County's adjusted unemployment rate came in at 6.3 percent, McDonald said, up from 3.1 percent one year ago.

"The national recession and lack of snow is starting to affect them," McDonald said.

Regionally, the unemployment rates for March, February and March 1990, were:

- Panhandle, 8.9 percent, 9.8 percent, 8.0 percent.
- Lewiston area, 6.4 percent, 7.2 percent, 4.8 percent.
- Canyon County, 7.9 percent, 7.1 percent, 6.3 percent.
- Ada County, 4.0 percent, 3.9 percent, 3.6 percent.
- Pocatello area, 6.8 percent, 6.7 percent, 6.3 percent.
- Idaho Falls area, 4.3 percent, 4.3 percent, 4.4 percent.

Abortion

Utah law requires spousal notification of abortion, a ban on possibly beneficial fetal experimentation, and specifies delivery methods to be used in third-trimester pregnancies where the fetus has little chance of survival.

"It's had a chilling effect," Alvisa said. "Up until now, those pro-life people, how shall we say, loosely interpreted."

Judge Thomas Greene set a scheduling hearing for Monday at 1:30 p.m.

Utah Solicitor General Jan Graham said the state would stipulate to an injunction on the new law. But Utah isn't interested in ceasing enforcement of the current statute, she said.

Earlier, Bud Scruggs, Gov. Norm Bangert's chief of staff, said the administration wouldn't oppose the injunction.

"We have known from the outset that this matter is going to have to be reviewed by the supreme court," Scruggs said. "Right now, Roe vs. Wade is the law of the land, and we obey the law."

In addition to Jane Liberty, a health care worker who fears for her health and cannot afford another pregnancy, the lawsuit names as plaintiffs doctors, clergy and counselors.

The law, which would ban most in-clinic abortions to the state, was passed by the Legislature on Jan. 25 and was signed by Bangert the same day. Unless enjoined, it will take effect April 29.

Both anti-abortion and pro-abortion rights forces hailed the lawsuit as an historic event.

"I believe today is a landmark for the unborn," said Rosa Goodnight, the president of the Utah chapter of Right to Life.

She believes the ensuing court battle will result in the overturning of Roe vs. Wade, the U.S. Supreme Court decision that said states could not ban abortion during the first three months of pregnancy.

Witnessing Iraq's civil war, U.S. troops feel helpless

Ace Barnes, 62, of Odessa, Texas, grimaces as oil from a damaged wellhead gushes in all directions while he maneuvers a 'kill spool' into position in the Greater Burgan Oil Field in Kuwait.

OUTSIDE SAMAWA, Iraq (AP) — At his desert outpost, Sgt. Tadg Kelly's nights are punctuated by streaking orange tracers and staccato bursts of gunfire.

At dawn, Iraqi refugees arrive, begging for help. Stationed about 150 miles inside Iraq, Kelly and other front-line American troops feel frustrated and helpless as they witness the devastation of the Iraqi civil war, but are not allowed to intervene.

Desperate Iraqi refugees, defecting soldiers and defectors all struggle past Kelly's temporary home—a Bradley Fighting Vehicle parked behind a 10-foot sand berm four miles outside Samawa, a key southern town bisected by the Euphrates River.

"It's frustrating to sit here when you know you could take out their army," said Kelly, a lanky 31-year-old from Live Oak, Fla. "You begin to hope (Iraqi troops) will violate the DMIL (demarcation line) so we could go after them."

About 100,000 U.S. troops are stationed in Iraq, including soldiers positioned on the edge of several southern Iraqi cities as a reminder to President Saddam Hussein that there is still no formal cease-fire in the Gulf War.

But the proximity of the Americans has been no deterrent to the vicious crackdown by Saddam's troops on the Shiite Muslim rebellion in the south.

Scores of women and children with gunshot and shrapnel wounds have arrived at U.S. checkpoints, describing thousands of dead in the cities they fled.

More than 50,000 refugees, including several thousand defecting Iraqi troops, have voluntarily entered U.S.-occupied territory in recent weeks, according to American troops.

"We just watched the people stream past, there was nothing we could do except treat some of the injured," said Kelly, a member of the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment's 3rd Squadron. "It really eats us up, seeing all the children who are suffering."

Anti-Saddam resistance in Samawa, one of the last contested southern cities, was crushed several days ago, but there was still sporadic gunfire Thursday, according to the dozen U.S. troops stationed closest to the town.

For some U.S. soldiers, their neutrality in Iraq's civil strife has taken the shine off the allied success in the Gulf War.

"We want to go home, but I don't think we finished the job," said Staff Sgt. David Guajardo. "Just ask these Iraqi people. They're asking us to stay."

President Bush has vowed that the United States will not be drawn into Iraq's civil war, and has refused to commit troops or provide military aid to poorly armed insurgents.

"The rebel leaders begged us for weapons," said Capt. H.R. McMaster, whose unit is about 15 miles outside the southern city of Nassiriya.

Later the rebels asked the U.S. forces to drive into the city, believing that would scare out the Iraqi forces.

"All we could do was wish them luck," McMaster said.

While U.S. soldiers share the rebels' desire to oust Saddam, troops said the insurgents were a rag-tag group without any defined political aims.

The rebels fought in small groups and there was no evidence of coordinated efforts, even among insurgents fighting in the same town, said Capt. Rhett Scott, an intelligence officer with the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment.

None of the rebels they spoke to expressed strong allegiance to any specific leader, U.S. soldiers said.

U.S. troops and other observers believe the lack of organization and leadership among the rebels contributed to the U.S. decision not to intervene.

Unable to fight, U.S. forces in Iraq have become primarily a humanitarian organization, providing food, shelter and medical aid. The U.S. Army is caring for 7,000 refugees in Salman, on the border with Kuwait.

Surrendering Iraqi soldiers sometimes pull out their military identification cards and spit on them, Scott said.

"It makes me mad, but I wish they wouldn't do it," he said. "I love these things."

Other volunteer prisoners rip off military uniforms down to their underwear and stomp on them to show their distaste for Saddam's army, Scott said.

Ajel Dhaif, 23, said he turned himself in to the U.S. forces outside Samawa after talking to freed Iraqi POWs who recently returned home.

"They recommended it," Dhaif said. "They told me the Americans were the good guys and would treat me well."

Battle against oil fires hits recurrent snags

AHMADI, Kuwait (AP) — Firefighters combating the Iraqi-led inferno in Kuwait's oil fields are encountering severe problems, ranging from lack of phone service to delays of equipment by Saudi Arabian customs officials.

Other obstacles include mines planted by Iraqi troops, allied cluster bombs scattered across the blazing desert fields and huge, knee-deep lakes of oil formed since 600 wells were blown up by Iraq's fleeing forces in February.

There also has been some friction among the various U.S. companies engaged in the operation.

About 200 firefighters, engineers and support personnel already are at work, and the force eventually will number 1,000, according to Larry Flak, a Houston oil engineer coordinating the operation from the Kuwait Oil Co. headquarters in Ahmadi.

Among the most troublesome problems are war-disrupted communications systems and the shortage of heavy equipment, Flak said. As many as 30 giant bulldozers could be put to use, but firefighters said only a handful had arrived.

The heavy equipment must come either by ship or overland from Saudi Arabia, but Flak said the Saudis "haven't been all that helpful about clearing customs."

In past years, urgently needed shipments could cross the border within 24 hours, but now — for unexplained reasons — convoys with essential equipment are facing delays of five to 10 days, he said.

The problem "is being talked about at the highest levels of government," Flak said.

Under martial law, any equipment in Kuwait could be expropriated for use in the firefighting operation.

"But there's very little heavy equipment left," Flak said. "The U.S. speeds up troop return; 2 die in crash

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The United States on Friday sped up its troop withdrawals from the Persian Gulf region, and two more Americans patrolling the demarcation line in southern Iraq died in a helicopter crash.

Military sources said advance elements of two major headquarters, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf's Central Command and the Army Central Command, were planning to leave by the end of the month.

Schwarzkopf would go back to the Central Command's headquarters in Tampa, Fla., leaving behind a deputy, Lt. Gen. William G. Pagonis, a supply expert, to oversee the return of equipment. The Army Central Command would return to Fort McPherson, Ga., where it is designated the 3rd Army.

The famed Tiger Brigade of 3,000 Army troops that helped liberate Kuwait City began processing for redeployment to Fort Hood, Texas, to rejoin the 1st Cavalry Division, military sources said. The sources said the Army alone was moving out more than 3,000 troops a day.

"We have a plan that calls for deploying greater numbers in the future," one source said.

More than 175,000 American troops have been redeployed and about 365,000 remain. That's more than 30 percent of the 540,000 who were in the Gulf at peak strength.

The command gave this breakdown by service of troops withdrawn: Army 58,000; Air Force 32,500; Navy 42,500; Marines 42,000.

But as long as troops are still in the theater, the after-effects of war and the occupation of southern Iraq still exact a toll.

Two crew members were killed Friday when a U.S. Army OH-58C Kiowa scout helicopter crashed, while on a reconnaissance mission over southern Iraq. Military officials were investigating the cause of the crash but they ruled out Iraq fire.

Names of the two crew members were withheld pending notification of relatives. They were operating out of the VII Corps.

About 100,000 U.S. troops from the VII Corps remain in southern

Iraq offers amnesty; refugees still flee

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq Friday offered amnesty to rebellious Kurds but hundreds of thousands of refugees ignored the offer and besieged the borders of neighboring states.

As humanitarian aid began arriving from the West, Turkish President Turgut Ozal, who has closed his country's border, hinted Turkey could take military action against Iraq in response to its attacks on fleeing Kurds.

Iraq's spiritual leader, meanwhile, urged Iraqis to continue their rebellion to overthrow Saddam Hussein.

Iraq's ruling Revolutionary Command Council announced the pardon, which it said applied to all Kurds in the northern region that has been wracked by a more than 300-day civil war.

The pardon covers even deserters from the army or security forces, but not people guilty of premeditated killing, rape or theft, the official Iraqi News Agency reported.

"With their return to the national fold, all their rights would be protected," the council said.

Kurdish guerrilla leader Jalal Talabani of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan said the offer "doesn't seem to be serious" and noted the government had violated similar amnesties after past revolts.

He urged the government to schedule free elections.

Efforts to free hostages reach dead end, Iran says

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran's foreign minister said Friday that efforts to free Western hostages in Lebanon were at a "dead end" because their captors have gotten nothing for releasing captives in the past, Tehran radio reported.

Repeating previous conditions for the release of the hostages, Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said that hundreds of Arab prisoners must be freed by "Israel" and "its proxy," the South Lebanon Army militia. Velayati also said relations between Tehran and Washington, severed in 1979, could improve only if billions of dollars of Iranian assets frozen in the United States were released.

But he did not link that issue to the hostages. Iran denies any involvement with the kidnapers, saying it only has influence with them.

The radio, monitored in Nicosia, said Velayati was speaking in an interview with two U.S. television networks. Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek, who returned from a visit to Tehran on Thursday, said the Iranian government was working to secure the release of Western hostages.

An unidentified hostage holds up his arms after he was released, authorities say, in the doorway of an electronics store in Sacramento, Calif., Thursday. Police say four armed men held about two dozen hostages following the apparent robbery attempt.

Gangs' motives remain unclear

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Asian gang members who orchestrated a terrifying 8½-hour store siege that left six people dead and 11 wounded were angry over hard-ship in America, former hostages and authorities said Friday.

The taking of 41 hostages apparently was "an attempt to gain notoriety and attention.... They were very, very unhappy people," said Sheriff Glen Craig.

Three hostages and three of four gunmen were killed late Thursday when police blasted their way into an electronics store.

The gunmen, who had already wounded two hostages, had been flipping coins to determine who they would kill and were pointing guns at hostages' heads.

Former hostages who met briefly with reporters Friday supported the decision to storm the building.

"At the time when it got critical, when people were about to start dying, the time they stormed the store was exactly the proper thing to do," said Alan Story, 37, who was shot in the chest.

The raid began when a member of the sheriff's assault team fired a shot through the Good Guys store's glass front door. At the same time, officers dropped through the store ceiling and began shooting gunmen. One gunman could be seen methodically shooting several hostages, who were lined up.

Physicians who treated many of the victims said they were shot at close range, which authorities interpreted as proof that police bullets did not hit any hostages.

Authorities said the gunmen were of Vietnamese-Chinese descent and were members of a youth gang, "The Oriental Boys," but apparently were not carrying out organized gang activity.

"They were there strictly to get hostages," Story told reporters while recuperating at University Medical Center. "All of them were dissatisfied with the job opportunities here so they wanted to go back ... to Thailand."

Another former hostage, Dave Risse, the assistant store manager, said the gunmen were "very distressed" about life and complained about getting bad jobs.

Craig said earlier reports that the incident started with an armed robbery proved false. Hostages told police the gunmen "never went near the cash till they never took any money," he said.

The three hostages who were killed were identified by the corner's office as Good Guys employees Kris Sohm, 27, John Fritz, whose age was not available, and Fernando Gutierrez, 28, all from the Sacramento area.

The names of the dead gunmen were not immediately released. Craig said officials were having trouble confirming their identities.

The fourth suspect was in critical condition at the medical center. He was expected to recover, Craig said.

Ten former hostages remained hospitalized Friday, including a 72-year-old man in critical condition with gunshot wounds to the head, neck and chest.

Others were in good and fair condition. One woman suffered a miscarriage while being held hostage but a hospital spokesman said it was unclear whether the miscarriage was caused by the event.

Authorities and hostages said the gunman's demands also reflected anger over Southeast Asian conflicts.

"It was not a robbery gone bad. They knew exactly what they wanted. They wanted to go to Thailand. They wanted a suit of armor and they wanted to fight the Viet Cong," Story said.

Plane crash goes without explanation

MEKONG, Pa. (AP) — Pilots for U.S. Sen. John Heinz III had been told twice their landing gear was OK when the crew of a helicopter took a third look and the aircraft collided, killing seven people, a federal official said Friday.

Susan Coughlin, National Transportation Safety Board vice-chairman, said there was no immediate explanation for the decision by the helicopter pilots to "look" again. There also was no preliminary indication of what caused the collision, she said.

The senator, his two pilots and the two pilots in the helicopter were killed. Two children on a school playground also were killed by the burning wreckage.

Residents of the area questioned why the two aircraft should have been allowed to fly close to each other over a residential area.

"If they had just waited a few minutes, it could have been done over the airport, or the Delaware River, or someplace that would not have endangered the lives of residents' or schoolchildren," said William Parry, an attorney whose backyard is next to the schoolyard.

The twin-engine plane with Heinz aboard was on its final approach to Philadelphia International just south of Philadelphia on Thursday when the pilots reported indicator lights in the cockpit showed the nose gear was not in place, Ms. Coughlin said.

"The air crew made a decision to fly by the tower for inspection purposes," she said. "The tower said it appeared the gear was down."

The plane was sent around and set up for a final approach again. Meanwhile, the crew of the helicopter, on the same radio frequency, "heard the no-gear situation and offered to join up with the Piper to perform a visual inspection," Ms. Coughlin said.

Air traffic controllers helped the two aircraft fly into close formation and the helicopter crew looked once and said the gear was in place.

"It was during a second inspection that separation of the two aircraft was lost and the collision occurred," Ms. Coughlin said.

Ms. Coughlin said close order flying by helicopters and fixed wing planes is "done all the time" and that there are no regulations prohibiting it.

Army chooses firm to build copters

WASHINGTON — The Army has chosen the team of Boeing-Sikorsky as the winner in the holy-contested race to build its newest helicopter, congressional sources said Friday.

The choice could mean $3.4 billion in business for the two firms. Boeing is based in the Philadelphia area and Sikorsky is located in Stratford, Conn. The loser in the contest was the team of McDonnell-Douglas Helicopter Co., of Mesa, Ariz., and Bell Helicopter Textron of Fort Worth, Texas.

FBI tries to stem discrimination suit

WASHINGTON — FBI Director William S. Sessions and top aides met Friday with black agents from around the country to try to head off a possible lawsuit charging the bureau with racial discrimination, an FBI spokesman said.

The meetings are unprecedented in recent bureau history, which has been marked by complaints of discrimination by both blacks and Hispanics. They come at the end of a week in which bureau officials said 11 FBI supervisors and agents face possible disciplinary action in a long-running racial harassment case that was settled with a black agent last August.

Colleges must fight drugs, official says

WASHINGTON — National drug policy director Bob Martinez said Friday that colleges haven't been sufficiently aggressive in fighting drug abuse on campus but he rejected the idea of mandatory drug tests for students. "A university is not a drug-use safehouse," he said. "Compliance with the law of the land isn't too stringent a requirement for American students." Martinez, who was sworn in two weeks ago, said there were plenty of existing tools to combat drug abuse that college administrators should employ before even discussing random drug tests.

Child does well on new gene therapy

BETHESDA, Md. — Researchers said Friday they are encouraged by the progress of a 4-year-old girl whose immune system appears to be responding to intensive gene-replacement therapy.

National Institutes of Health scientists, updating an advisory panel on the status of the experiment, said the youngster has been improving steadily and has had few side effects from the treatment.

"I'm delighted at the way things are going," said Dr. R. Michael Blaese, a National Cancer Institute scientist and co-researcher in the gene therapy experiment. "The patient's immune system seems to be improving."

Baker plans emergency trip to Mideast

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III will make a hurriedly arranged trip to Turkey, Israel and Egypt beginning Saturday to deal with a rising tide of Kurdish refugees from Iraq and a slowdown in the U.S. drive for Mideast peace talks.

Baker notified Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir only Thursday that he wished to see him in Jerusalem and gave no indication he had something concrete to take up, diplomatic sources said.

Government takes blame for deaths

WASHINGTON — The government accepted blame Friday for six deaths at a veterans' hospital in suburban Chicago, where poor care has forced an end to certain surgeries and a shuffling of staff.

The concession followed last week's report by investigators in the Veterans Affairs Department, who said they found improper treatment, untimely tests and unnecessary surgeries at the North Chicago hospital.

Furnace-maker wins $65 million suit against Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) — A New Jersey company that custom-built four industrial furnaces for the Iraqi government is entitled to $64.1 million because the Iraqis lied about the eventual use of the equipment, a federal judge ruled Friday.

However, there is no mechanism to freeze Iraqi assets frozen by the U.S. government to make the award. U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin agreed with Consarc Corp. of Rancocas, N.J., that the Iraqis used fraud and deceit to skirt American restrictions on exporting weapons components — a contention supported by the Pentagon.

"It's clear the plaintiff was misled by the Iraqis," Sporkin said. "I have produced a certificate declaring it would use the furnaces to produce artificial limbs for victims from its war with Iran. However, U.S. defense officials determined the furnaces would be used to produce nuclear weapons and lightweight titanium parts for extending the range of Iraqi missiles."

They became suspicious after following up on a June 1990 tip that several furnaces were destined for the same military-industrial complex outside Baghdad.

No injuries in Friday fire to meeting hall

TWIN FALLS — No one was injured in a fire Friday night that damaged the inside of an oft-used Twin Falls meeting hall.

Twin Falls Battalion Chief Fred Webb said there was partial damage to the interior of the Magic Valley Fellowship Hall at the corner of 2nd Avenue South and 8th Street North.

Webb speculated the fire was started by a burning cigarette. He did not rule out arson, but said he would have to investigate further. He said he could not estimate damages, but that the building's structure was sound.

The manager of the building said it was possible people cleaning up after a bingo game earlier in the evening could have tossed a burning cigarette in the trash. General Manager Ginny Southwick said a group of people waiting for an Alcoholic Anonymous meeting at midnight entered the building and reported the fire to firefighters.

Gem court dims possibility of banning insanity defense

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court has dealt another blow to attorneys trying to overturn the state's ban on the insanity defense before the murder trial of Mitchell J. Odiga.

Odiga, 36, is a Boise man charged with two counts of first-degree murder in connection with the June shooting deaths of two men in Ketchum.

On Wednesday, the Idaho Supreme Court denied a motion to allow a direct appeal of the state's outlawed insanity defense.

After 5th District Judge James May refused to allow Odiga's attorneys to use the insanity defense in the case, the attorneys asked May to allow a direct appeal of the issue to the state's high court. May denied the motion.

Odiga attorney David Nevin then filed a motion in March asking the state Supreme Court to accept an appeal. The case is set for trial July 22.

Boise couple plan to exchange vows before chef race finals

KETCHUM — Chefs from around the nation will race today starting at 10:30 a.m. on Mt. Baldy in the Grand Mariner Chefs Ski Race national championships.

In addition, two of the competitors, Boise residents Aimee-Louise Bell and Karl-Heinz Jakowitsch will exchange vows on the slopes just before the race finals, scheduled for 1 p.m.

The two met during previous Chef Races. Due to weather, however, the wedding and final races may be moved up.

Following the ceremony, the wedding cake, a 7-foot croque-en-broque pastry, made with about 4,000 fillets and unfilled cream puffs, will be unveiled.

Andrus says it's OK for CSI, Blaine County to raise taxes

BOISE — A day after slashing $5.8 million from the state's general tax budget, Gov. Cecil Andrus on Friday signed two bills allowing Blaine County schools and the College of Southern Idaho to raise local taxes.

The first bill will allow the Blaine County School District and two others to pass indefinite supplemental tax levies with a majority vote at an election.

Each supplemental levy would be incorporated into the base budget. Currently, the district relies on overrides for 25 percent of its budget.

The legislation was supported by the district and parents who said their children's education would be compromised if an override ever fails.

The Democratic governor also signed a bill authorizing CSI to levy a property tax for gym and grounds maintenance.

The tax is 25 years old, but the community college wasn't using it when a property tax limit was passed in 1978. CSI was precluded from using it.

The tax is expected to raise up to $140,000 a year for CSI.

Ethanol plant for Twin Falls on back burner

By Anita Dennis
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — An ethanol processing plant in Twin Falls is on the back burner until the state extends its ethanol tax credit, possibly next year.

A bill to extend the credit to the year 2000 died in the Senate Transportation Committee this session, and along with it the chance of a new plant and 120 jobs for Twin Falls.

Plans for a new Idaho plant "are at least on hold until that incentive is acted on," said Mark Dunn, executive director of the Idaho Ethanol Fuel Association, which lobbied for this year's bill.

Idaho currently offers a 4-cent-per-gallon tax credit on ethanol fuel, derived from agricultural by-products, but it is due to expire in May 1992. The bill that died would have extended the subsidy for eight years, when a similar federal tax credit would also expire.

Dunn is optimistic that the credit will fare better next year, saying, "In a year when the Legislature was raising the gas tax, there was a feeling that since it wasn't needed this year, it could wait a year."

Critics of the bill said that in nine years, the tax credit has failed to spur the industry in Idaho and if the credit were allowed to expire, the resulting new state revenue could pay for road and bridge repairs.

Three ethanol producers are interested in opening a processing plant in either Twin Falls or Lewiston, Dunn said. But he said the tax break is crucial to recruiting the industry to the state.

"We are very hopeful that they'll maintain their interests in Idaho projects," Dunn said.

Twin Falls is a viable location for a processing plant because it is surrounded by farmland.

Spring planting can mean danger for kids

Nathan Varin is taking his injury in stride, but a grimace is still appropriate when his mother, Charlie, combs his hair.

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — For an 11-year-old boy, spending the summer in a full-body cast is a real bummer, but Nathan Varin of Gooding got off lucky.

On March 9, Nathan was driving a tractor while helping his family clear rocks from a field north of town. He stepped the tractor and hopped off, but the machine lurched into gear and rolled over his leg. "I watched the whole thing," said Nathan's mother, Charlie Varin. "All I could do was say 'Please dear God, not his spine.'"

Fortunately, Nathan's worst injury was a broken leg, which kept him in the hospital for his 11th birthday. Other farm children aren't always so lucky.

Tips to make the farm safer

The Times-News

With an estimated 300 children killed each year and 5,000 more seriously hurt in farm-related accidents, parents need to take responsibility for their children's safety.

Here are some tips provided by Tom Kankka, University of Idaho farm safety specialist, and by "Farm Safety for Just Kids," a national organization begun by an Iowa woman whose son was killed in a farming accident:

- Don't allow children as passengers

Experts say about 300 children die in the United States each year in farm-related accidents. About 5,000 more are seriously injured, and the Magic Valley has its share of those.

Shelter to be place where children can succeed

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Responsibility and respect will join the traditional Three R's in what organizers hope will become an important piece in the Magic Valley's juvenile care puzzle.

Magic Valley Shelter Care, a home for troubled boys aged 8-18, finally opened its doors this week, a month behind schedule.

Boys will take educational classes while living at the home in the old Costello's restaurant building at 511 Second Ave. W., but they also will learn healthy doses of respect and responsibility. Administrator Bill Amoureux said.

"Children need to learn responsibility for their own actions," Amoureux said. Boys at the home will be required to pick up after themselves, do laundry, wash dishes and help in the kitchen.

The goal is to provide a home-like atmosphere and prepare boys to return home or move on to a permanent foster home, Amoureux said.

A teacher is on staff to provide classes, and boys who were previously in nearby schools may attend their regular schools, he said.

The two-story, four-bedroom home can provide for as many as eight boys, with one employee staying overnight.

Magic Valley Shelter Care is not a detention facility, Amoureux said. Children must agree to be placed in the home and they can

Amoureux is a former administrator at the Southern Idaho Youth Center, which closed in September. Many of the children who spent time in detention at the youth center would have been better served by a shelter home, he said.

"We serve two kinds of kids here: those that are protecting and those that we are teaching," he said. Those that need protection will likely be brought in by the state through the Department of Health and Wel-

If a probation officer or a judge determines that a child convicted of burglary, shoplifting, vandalism or other crime needs supervision rather than detention but can't get that guidance hand at home, the boy can be sent to Magic Valley Shelter Care, Amoureux said.

"That child needs to be in a place where he can be successful," he said. "Once he can taste a little bit of success, then it's contagious."

Counseling and group therapy sessions will be an important part of the shelter care program. In addition to Amoureux, the four staff members include a counselor, an assistant director of educational programming and two youth care workers.

Other therapeutic activities will include completing the renovations Amoureux began more than four months ago. The house is livable, but there still are walls to be re-

Highway worker ends 4 decades on the road

By Diane Schorzman
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Art Hoover's longest day on the job was a 17-hour day "quite a few years ago" when he plowed snow from Ferguson to Murphy's Hot Springs with the mail truck behind him.

Then there was the time he had to clear snowy drifts off the highway to Hansen in the middle of the night so a pregnant woman, already in labor, could get to the hospital.

"The minute we went by their driveway, out they went to the hospital."

Hoover spent 38 years with the Twin Falls Highway District building roads, plowing snow and making sure the school buses could get through.

Members of the highway district presented Hoover with a plaque honoring those 38 years during Friday's regular district meeting.

Hoover, 62, began work for the highway district in May of 1953, when he was 24 years old. He earned $1.30 per hour when he started, "and we didn't have insurance, sick leave, retirement or vacations back then," he said.

All those things have improved over the years, he said.

"And the highway district has been good to us," added his wife, Margie.

Jerome school district to hold survey

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — School district officials want to know what the public thinks about the education the district provides at the junior high level.

The district is taking a survey, which is being circulated throughout the Jerome community. Comments must be returned to the junior high school by Thursday.

The survey results will be used by a citizens' committee to make recommendations for improvements at the school. According to officials, the results will be published.

The survey also will be the basis for an annual report.

A mandate by the state Department of Education requires that each district evaluate its schools through a report card of sorts. Survey results will be used to prepare the report card for the Jerome Junior High School, Superintendent Will Brown said.

"The survey will allow people to comment on students' progress toward meeting basic academic goals, such as reading, writing and arithmetic; school environment; discipline; quality of instruction and counseling; and class sizes.

Teacher workloads, textbooks used, extracurricular activities and school leadership also will be evaluated through the survey.

Survey forms are available at the junior high school, or can be obtained by calling Dan Becker at 324-3174 or the school at 324-8134.

Gay group plans demonstration at Mormon Church conference

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Militant homosexuals planned a peaceful demonstration Saturday against the Mormon Church's alleged "anti-queer practices" as the faith convenes its 161st Annual General Conference.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, noted for its emphasis on family life, considers homosexuality a serious sin and its leaders have characterized the gay lifestyle as "perverted."

Queer Nation, a militant gay organization, with chapters in New York, San Francisco and several other major cities, has often discarded political persuasion in favor of confrontation to combat "oppression in all its forms."

However, QN's spokeswoman Nancy Perez said Friday the demonstration on the sidewalk surrounding Temple Square would be peaceful. She said that between 50 and 100 demonstrators would carry signs and march out leaflets for two hours following the conference's morning and afternoon sessions.

"We don't want to disrupt a religious service in any way," said Perez, a non-practicing Mormon. "We want to be a visible presence."

Visibility will be easy to obtain as some 6,000 Mormons pour out of the Tabernacle on Temple Square following the sessions. Perez said some of the demonstrators had come from out of state but a majority would be Utahns.

She said the group had unanimously agreed to a nonviolent protest and for that reason would not place their posters on sticks.

"We're hoping the police will be there to keep order," Perez said. "If we have our right to defend ourselves and I cannot predict what each person's response will be. The church said in a news release Friday that all sexual relations outside marriage are considered transgressions, but that an individual "with homosexual feelings can be a member in good standing and should not feel an outcast in the church."

"It is the sexual act outside of marriage... that is not condoned and may lead to church discipline," the unsigned statement said.

"The church does not believe that counseling homosexuals to marry will change their sexual preference. Marriage is not doctrinal therapy for homosexuals relations."

Queer Nation's Utah chapter said in a news release it was protesting the church's excommunication of practicing homosexuals, its refusal to sanctify gay marriages in its temples, a doctrine of heterosexual entry into the highest level of the "celestial kingdom" and alleged anti-gay statements by church leaders.

Among those identified by the group was a sermon delivered by Elder Boyd K. Packer, a senior member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, during a church conference last October.

Packer blasted those who justify homosexuality by saying "these impulses are inborn, cannot be overcome and should not be resisted."

"They quote scriptures to justify perverted acts between consenting adults," Packer said. "That said logic would justify incest or the molesting of little children of either gender."

"I believe that homosexuality is an orientation," said Perez. "It is a natural thing for those of us who choose this way. We cannot be complete individuals if we are pretending to be something we're not. We have to be honest with ourselves."

Queer Nation said it also decried exclusion of even celibate homosexuals from church leadership positions and alleged the church "alienates gay and bisexual Mormons from their families."

Perez said a small group of Mormon gays and lesbians planned Monday to go to the faith's office building and present letters demanding excommunication.

Marty Beaudet, editor of the newsletter for Affirmation, a support group made up of Mormon gays, said that while he agrees with some of the Queer Nation allegations, a demonstration likely won't accomplish anything.

"You don't remove a boa constrictor from around your neck by yanking on it," he said. "The way you have to deal with the church is one on one with people who are receptive, demonstrating to them that they have misconceptions about what it is to be gay."

Beaudet said Queer Nation's complaint that homosexuals are not allowed to hold leadership positions is groundless.

He said about 30 percent of the priesthood members in his congregation in San Francisco are homosexual men, many of whom hold leadership positions and temple passes.

Demonstrations on Temple Square during church conferences were common during the early 1980s when women's rights activists took to the sidewalks, but none has occurred in recent years.

Symms says opponents are on 'campaign of deception'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, contends opponents of his plan to use federal "fuel tax revenue to help maintain the nation's recreational trails have launched a "campaign of deception."

Officials for The Wilderness Society and the Sierra Club in Idaho said Friday that they knew nothing about flyers posted at Idaho State University last week by the Sierra Club. But they oppose the bill, say they'd have to be a suspect too.

Edwina Allen of Boise, who chairs the Northern Rockies Chapter of the Sierra Club, which includes Idaho and eastern Washington, said her group had nothing to do with the flyers. "Our publicity is signed," she said.

But Allen said she does not see the Sierra Club opposing Symms' bill. "We feel it's a bad public policy to raid the nation's highway trust fund for this special use," she said.

Craig Gehrke, Idaho director of the Wilderness Society, said the government wants to improve recreating. They are using terrorist tactics and the big lie technique to try to confuse the public into believing their baloney."

The senator said he had no idea who was behind the flyers.

"They didn't have the courage to sign it, but it's a terrorist tactic, something I'd expect from Earth First!" he said. "I hope and expect the Sierra Club will oppose the bill, say they'd have to be a suspect too."

Edwina Allen of Boise, who chairs the Northern Rockies Chapter of the Sierra Club, which includes Idaho and eastern Washington, said her group had nothing to do with the flyers. "Our publicity is signed," she said.

But Allen said she does not see the Sierra Club opposing Symms' bill. "We feel it's a bad public policy to raid the nation's highway trust fund for this special use," she said.

Craig Gehrke, Idaho director of the Wilderness Society, said the government wants to improve recreational trails it should beef up the budgets of agencies that maintain them, such as the Forest Service and Park Service.

He said he supposed the idea behind the flyers opposed to Symms' plan.

"I don't know who did it, but I think they should be congratulated for bringing attention to this bill. It's a bad bill," Gehrke said.

The Wilderness Society, the Audubon Society and the National Wildlife Federation all oppose this bill, so I guess he could lump us all among the terrorists."

According to Symms' office, about $75 million a year in federal tax collected on purchases of fuel used in recreation, or off-road vehicles is not refunded as the law allows.

His legislation would earmark that money for repair and maintenance of trails, restoration of areas damaged by a lack of adequate trail maintenance, trail linkages and building of new trails.

Tips

- Keep machinery in good repair, especially protective shields, ropes and seat belts.
- Do not permit young people to operate machinery until they have completed safety training.
- Fence farm ponds and manure pits.
- Place fixed ladders out of reach, or fit with special barriers; store portable ladders away from dangerous areas.
- Shield dangerous machinery components and electrical boxes and wiring, or fit with locking devices.
- Store pesticides and other chemicals in a locked area.
- Place warning decals on all grain bins, wagons and trucks.
- Maintain lights and reflectors for all equipment used on roads.
- Devote a day to family safety instructions and rules.
- Even the most careful people can have accidents, so make sure ambulances can find your house. Write down clear directions to your home, check them with local emergency service officials, and post them near your telephone.

Danger

in her face were broken. Also in March, a 10-year-old Twin Falls boy had a finger amputated after his hand was caught in a tractor's front loader.

And there is still more than a month to go until June — statistically the worst month for farm and ranch accidents, according to University of Idaho farm safety specialist Tom Karsky.

Karsky will speak in Twin Falls Monday during a farm safety and first aid seminar at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. A special "Farm Safety for Just Kids" presentation also will be made. The free program begins at 7 p.m. in the hospital cafeteria.

"If we can just get some of these farm kids and their parents in here and if we can prevent one injury, we will have accomplished a lot," said Bob Vodraska, Twin Falls County agricultural Extension agent.

The recent rash of accidents apparently hasn't spurred much interest in child-proofing farms. Response to advertisements for the Magic Valley program has been lukewarm, said Blossom Mathews, director of the hospital's Child Life program.

Farms and ranches have always been dangerous places for children, but the problems are only now beginning to be addressed, Karsky said.

Several factors conspire to create hazards for young people on farms and ranches. According to a 1989 report by Successful Farming magazine, the increased mechanization of American farms means there are more pieces of dangerous equipment on the farm.

Tough education for farmers may be children into working at an older age, often before they have the strength or experience to handle heavy machinery, the report says.

"Sometimes a kid can't quite reach the clutch on a tractor as easily or maybe the seat doesn't fit just right," Vodraska said. "Three- and four-wheeled all-terrain vehicles (ATVs), are common on farms but can be hazardous to young riders, he said.

In addition, safety laws for most farms are less strict than for most other businesses. Kids don't have to be trained or licensed to do farm work, and Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) laws exclude farms with fewer than 11 employees.

"We're talking about cheap labor on some of these farms, but how cheap is a kid's life?" Vodraska asked.

Even though many young farmhands are eager to begin working, parents should consider holding their children back until they are physically and mentally able to handle the rigors of farm work, Vodraska said.

"We have a tendency to start 'em too early," he said. Parents should consider the dangers before putting their child on a tractor. "Would you give that 10-year-old a loaded gun?" Vodraska asked.

There are several simple things parents can do to make farm life safer for their children, Karsky said. Child-resistant door pads for safety devices on equipment is essential, he said.

Children have to be taught that some things are dangerous; often this can be done by touring the farm and identifying possible hazards, he said.

Despite a parent's best efforts, however, there will always be hazards on the farm.

"I thought I was a safe mother," Charlie Varin said. "We had gone through all the dangers and explained them to the kids."

Varin has two small children who are forbidden to go near any farm machinery, and all four Varin children are told to stay off the haystacks.

"You never think something like this can happen to you," Varin said. "Nathan has jumped on and off that tractor a thousand times. We've decided now that we'll just turn it completely off before getting down."

It will be late June before Nathan's cast can come off. After a month of physical therapy, he may be able to ride his bicycle in August.

Burley residents, businesses fight cancer

The Times-News

BURLEY — Due to the efforts of a couple of merchants, today is American Cancer Society Day.

Stokes Thriftway on Overland Avenue is sponsoring the event. "Huff-Puff Puffins" Dragon and McGruff the Crime Dog will be among the celebrities helping with the fund-raiser.

Customers will have their groceries bagged by volunteers including Burley Mayor Frank Bauman, Dr. Joe Petersen; Burley High School Vice Principal Steve Jensen, Overland School Principal Kevin Bushman, and other volunteers from the Mini-Cassia area.

The Cancer Society will be selling hot dogs and pop in the parking lot with all proceeds going to the Cancer Society.

The House of Video will be donating 50 cents to the society for every video rented today.

Thriftway owner Jan Stokes said he has a sister-in-law who suffers from cancer and looks at this as "a way for Stokes and the community to work together to help fight cancer."

The store will donate double the day's profits to the Cancer Society — "so our customers will be supporting the American Cancer Society while shopping at Stokes," he said.

Free food sample tables, balloons for the kids and a raffle for a bicycle and a remote control car are among the other activities planned for the event — proceeds from the raffles will be donated as well.

Hoover was the key operator in the Roseworth area for many years, "and he made the job a lot easier for us," said Clyde Burney, director of the highway district.

"I enjoyed working out there,"

Hoover said. And he said he considers the people who live there to be his friends.

Burney said Hoover was good at working out the boundaries for new roads that were going in — Hoover helped build the roads in both Roseworth and Bell Rapids.

"I remember Roseworth when there were dirt holes in the road so deep they would bury a vehicle," he said.

He "railed," or cleaned, the brush with a blade for the roadsides and he also distributed dump pads for local ranchers to get dirt for the roads.

Now that his snowplow and road-grader days are over, Hoover said he plans to do "a little traveling and a lot of fishing."

"We need another $3,000-$5,000 right away," he said.

Amoureux was granted a provisional license for the facility Wednesday and he hoped to have his first clients by the weekend.

Twin Falls County Commissioners and other local officials will tour the home on Monday, and there will be an open house for the public at 6 p.m. on Tuesday.

Although the project is operating on a shoestring and was a month late in opening, Amoureux said Magic Valley Shelter Care is an example of what can be done for the area's youth with a little determination.

"I'm a firm believer that one man with a typewriter can accomplish more than a whole bureaucracy with a computer," he said.

Applicants should have a minimum of two years' experience and must have a current state license.

The Red Cross will take care of visa and passport requirements.

She's committed to Bible, Christian unity

NEW YORK (AP) — Personal experience with various denominations and her grandfather's influence instilled the Rev. Joan Brown Campbell with two fervent commitments — to the Bible and to Christian unity.

Joan Brown Campbell 'They go together'

"They go together," says Ms. Campbell, the new general secretary-elect of the National Council of Churches, the nation's largest ecumenical organization.

Her formal installation is scheduled for May 14, but she is already on the job as chief administrator of that council of cooperating Christian denominations.

"My grandfather was a Presbyterian minister — he taught us the Bible and an understanding of it as the basis for action," Ms. Campbell said in an interview.

That includes Christ's summons to unity among believers, she added. "We need to understand clearly that unity is a biblical mandate, not a political convenience of the council. We need to realize its urgency."

Her own experience also enhanced that concern — her work for have little understanding of it as a Gospel imperative.

Ms. Campbell, 59, who was raised in Ohio, is "the first clergywoman chosen to oversee the council. She is the seventh general secretary since the council's founding in 1950."

As she takes the reins, the council has just completed a streamlining process in which 11 operational units were combined into four — service and witness; justice; unity and relationships; and education, communication and development.

"The churches together potentially have tremendous influence," Ms. Campbell said. "No other organization has bases in every neighborhood in this country. The tentacles reach through every city and small town."

The council includes most major Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations, with a total membership of 42 million people. Additional denominations, such as Roman Catholicism and some evangelical bodies, participate in some of the council's units.

than the actual membership," she said, noting that efforts also are going on to increase relationships with denominations outside the council.

She said the council needs to "strengthen its domestic witness, to speak more clearly and apply more influence on issues facing us — poverty, health care, moral confusion."

However, leadership on such issues must be fully grounded in the Bible and its principles and that connection must be made clear, she said.

"Actions on policy must always have a biblical basis," she said. "If people don't understand the biblical reasons or mandate for a position, there's a limit to how far they'll go in support of it."

Ms. Campbell was elected by the council's 250-member governing board at its meeting in Portland, Ore., last November.

Carbon dating supports theory Dead Sea Scrolls written by early Jews

JERUSALEM (AP) — Carbon-14 tests of a few Dead Sea Scrolls show they were written from the second century B.C. to the third century A.D., officials said Monday.

The testing, performed in a Zurich laboratory to settle a scholarly argument, appeared to confirm most scholars' belief that the works were those of a Jewish sect, the Essenes, said Magen Broshi, custodian of the Israel Museum's Shrine of the Book.

Robert Eisenman, director of Religious Studies at California State University-Los Angeles, has argued the scrolls may be the work of early Palestinian Christians. He based his theory partly on wording in the documents, and had called for carbon dating at most in an earlier article.

Eight of the more than 800 scrolls were tested, along with six other documents, Broshi said.

The first of the scrolls were found by a Bedouin shepherd in caves at Qumran, overlooking the Dead Sea, in 1947. Others were removed from nearby caves over the following 10 years.

About 80 percent of the scrolls have been translated and published. In recent years the pace of publication has slowed amid a dispute among scholars over the release of some of the scrolls.

Research based on the scrolls has provided insight into the lives and religious thought of the Essenes, and into the roots of Christianity.

None of the scrolls had been carbon dated before, mainly because until a few years ago too much material had to be destroyed in the process, Broshi said.

Governor to name new department chief

Idaho

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus will announce his appointment of a new director of the Department of Employment next week, after firing Julie Kilgrow last week, but he won't say whether it will be a male or female.

The only thing known after a television interview Friday is that the new director will not be Dick Farwig, former director of Boise, who has been named acting director.

"Dick Farwig is not a candidate. That's why I asked him to be the acting one for a short period," the governor said during the taping of a television show to be telecast Sunday.

He said he has someone in mind. "The person is an outstanding administrator," he said.

On March 30, Andrus fired Kilgrow after four years as chief of the Employment agency, saying he had "management concerns" and the department had morale problems. At a news conference a few days later, Kilgrow accused Andrus of sexism and claimed she was fired only because Andrus couldn't stand a strong-minded female administrator who stood up to him.

He has refused to elaborate on the simple statement issued when Kilgrow was fired. "I just don't think the interest of good government is served by airing all of that in the newspaper.

"This person has been terminated; I don't want to cause any further anguish there. The end result won't change."

Andrus said the issue has received much more publicity than would be accorded if a corporate vice president were fired. A reporter asked if there wasn't a difference, since Kilgrow worked for the taxpayers for four years.

"The taxpayers of the state also elected me as governor. They did not elect her or anyone else. They said to me, 'Run the state administration the best way you know how and we trust you to do what is right.' That's what I have tried to do."

"I've got to run a strong administrative part of government. Every person who is hired to serve at the pleasure of the governor knows the ground rules going in," Andrus said.

He continued to defend his vetoes of four bills and parts of two others on Thursday, saying it was necessary to bring the 1992 state budget closer to balance. He said it still is about $7 million in the red.

"Prudence dictates that we be careful. The law requires that we be balanced. It is my responsibility to balance the budget, and I did it," he said.

He said Republicans who are critical of his vetoes are "trying to have it both ways."

He said they went to the voters last fall and promised to be fiscal conservatives, and to hold the free-spending Democrats in check. "And then turn around and vote for all of the appropriations bills that put us out of balance."

He said even a small deficit budget must be stopped.

"The federal government didn't start out $3 trillion in debt the first day. They started over spending a little bit and a little more."

"It has to start somewhere. But in Idaho, we are going to have a balanced budget."

Andrus said it was "hypocritical" for Republican Rep. Gary Montgomery, R-Boise, to go around saying that the GOP gave public schools $3 million more than his budget recommended.

Ex-trooper claims sex discrimination in state police

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A former trooper fired for failing her probationary employment has accused the Idaho State Police of sex discrimination.

In her complaint, filed with the state Human Rights Commission, Connie Martin alleges that troopers repeatedly harassed her because she was female.

Martin was fired March 8 after she refused to resign, Col. Ron Montgomery said.

Connie Martin was terminated from the Department of Law Enforcement, Idaho State Police division, for failing to satisfactorily complete her entrance probation period in accordance with Idaho Personnel Commission rules," Moore said.

"No further comment on personnel issues relating to Ms. Martin is appropriate."

Martin also contends that she was mentally and physically abused during a 12-week state police training academy session last fall. She graduated in December. Two months later, she was told to repeat the self-defense portion of the exam and passed again.

"This discharge suggests to me that she was not given a fair shot at a career with this department," said Martin's attorney, Harvey Richman of Coeur d'Alene.

Martin filed two earlier complaints with the Human Rights Commission in 1989, claiming the state police did not initially hire her because of her gender and because she has diabetes.

There are three women troopers with the Idaho State Police.

Martin ranked third among 150 applicants who took oral and written examinations to compete for nine jobs.

In October 1989, the nine-member commission voted unanimously that the state police probably discriminated against Martin. She was then hired by the state police in March 1990 to begin her training.

Martin alleges that she was treated coolly by her fellow officers when she arrived. She claims that one of her supervisors in Boise told her he didn't approve of the way she was hired, that it was based on her complaint rather than qualifications.

Her nose was broken twice during self-defense training and on one occasion, her supervisors took her to a hospital claiming she had had a nervous breakdown, the complaint states.

Ouster delaying tribe vote

FORT HALL (AP) — The ouster of a key Indian negotiator has delayed a final vote by members of the Shoshone-Bannock tribes on ratifying a water rights agreement with federal and state officials.

Howard Funke, chief negotiator and attorney for the tribes, was voted out of office by members last week, 24-23. The Business Council then rescheduled a referendum on the agreement from April 10 to May 31 to coincide with the business council's general election on the reservation.

Business council member Marvin Osborne said the delay also would give the tribes' remaining attorney, Jeannette Wolfley, time to analyze and present an opinion on the pact.

Funke is not a member of the Shoshone-Bannock tribes, but Wolfley is. She was retained last week by a vote of 432-73.

"We felt that here is an opportunity to get a second opinion from, especially, a tribal member who is a legal adviser," Osborne said. "Her interest is there as well. I'm sure she's going to give an honest opinion after a very close review, and I think that's all the membership wants to hear."

After endorsed by Congress and the Idaho Legislature, the water rights agreement still must be ratified by tribal members. If Shoshone-Bannock members do not approve it, the tribes' water rights claims could be lumped together with others in the massive Snake River Basin adjudication process now under way.

To avoid that, Fort Hall officials likely would go to federal court to block the action and maintain what they contend are the Shoshone-Bannocks' treaty rights to water. The prospect of a long, costly legal battle led to the agreement.

The negotiated plan would grant the Shoshone-Bannock tribes 581,000 acre-feet of Snake River water annually for present and future needs upstream from Hells Canyon.

Citizens joining

ACLU lawsuit

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — A citizens group in support of prayer at high school graduations plans to join the lawsuit by the American Civil Liberties Union against the Grangeville-area school district.

Jay Smith of Grangeville said Wednesday the group has named Boise attorney Stanley Crow and intends to enter the suit as a third-party friend of the court in support of prayer in graduation exercises, Smith said.

The American Civil Liberties Union earlier filed a lawsuit in federal court against the school district, saying it unconstitutionally promotes prayer at commencement and sports functions.

Last week, the ACLU dismissed its suit in federal court and announced it would refile one in 2nd District Court at Grangeville to secure a speedier decision.

Residents requesting summary judgment

ST. ANTHONY (AP) — The St. Anthony residents who have filed a lawsuit to stop the state from using an old hospital for a prison facility are pushing for summary judgment to end the district court case.

But if Blaine and Votis Foster lose at the district court level, they will appeal to the Idaho Supreme Court, says their attorney, Dan Hawley of Boise.

The Department of Corrections wants to use the old Fremont General Hospital for a work center.

The Foster's lawsuit has blocked it, and inmates are being housed at a ranger station near Ashton.

Hawley has asked District Judge Ted Woods to issue a final ruling in the case, saying there are no issues left for trial.

Less test preparation, more education needed

BOISE (AP) — Idaho's teacher of the year contends the education reform movement focuses on standardized testing while ignoring the social problems that plague schools.

"Educational reforms at the national level center on a national standardized test of a national curriculum," said Shirley Rau, a Nampa High School English teacher.

"They center on choice (of schools) and merit pay for meritorious teachers."

"What they don't address are the growing problems facing society that are reflected in our classrooms every day: dysfunctional families, poverty, drug and alcohol abuse, unemployment and illiteracy."

Yeltsin to challenge Gorbachev powerfully

MOSCOW (AP) — Boris Yeltsin emerged from a stormy Russian parliament session Friday with new powers and increased prospects of election this summer to a strengthened presidency. The post would be a powerful platform from which to challenge the leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Yeltsin

After nine days of debate, the Russian Federation Congress of People's Deputies set the presidential election for June 12 and granted Yeltsin temporary authority to pursue more radical reforms than the Soviet president has implemented.

"There are no obstacles now that can get in the way of cooperation between Russia and the union," Yeltsin declared at the end of the extraordinary session.

But reformers in the stalemated parliament failed to amend Russia's Constitution to make the powers permanent under a new post of Russian president that Yeltsin is expected to fill.

They managed only to agree to meet May 21 for another session to try to approve the presidency, and on the election date.

As expected, the session reflected the deep divisions between hard-liners backing Gorbachev, in power since March 1985, and the radicals backing Yeltsin.

Mining strike could spread to industries

MOSCOW (AP) — Striking coal miners ignored an agreement with the Kremlin and stayed off the job Friday, and threats of more work stoppages loomed in other industries to protest steep government price increases.

The miners' representatives initiated an agreement Wednesday that met most of their economic grievances but ignored their demand that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev resign and make other political concessions.

"If our demands are ignored, we do not exclude the possibility of an all-union (nationwide) political strike," Pavel Shushpanov, a leader of the Independent Miners Union, was quoted as saying in Izvestia.

The Tass news agency reported the strikes continued "despite the fact that most economic demands by miners were met as a result of talks between Prime Minister Valentin Pavlov and President Mikhail S. Gorbachev with representatives of miners' work collectives."

Scandal invades official's family

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Premier Hsu Pei-tsun's clean-government campaign is facing its first major political test in a stock-trading scandal that has implicated the wife and daughter of his communications minister.

Hsu, a former army general who took office last May, is expected to face the scandal because of his personal popularity. The fate of the minister, Clement Chang, is uncertain.

Chang, former speaker of the Taipei City Council and chairman of Taiwan's Y.M.C.A. offered to resign last month when the scandal surfaced. Chang, 62, said he did not want to embarrass the government, which has waged a high-profile campaign against official corruption.

2 earthquakes hit Peru; 1 kills 38

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Strong earthquakes struck separate regions of Peru within 24 hours, and one quake in the northern jungle killed 38 people and nearly destroyed a city, officials said Friday.

The first region struck Thursday morning was San Martin, about 400 miles north of Lima, with a quake measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale of ground motion. U.S. experts put it at 6.1 on the scale. Telephone lines were cut and only one man was reported injured.

Heavy rain hampered rescue efforts in the western northern region of San Martin, civil defense officials said. Aftershocks were felt as far away as neighboring Ecuador, said Ecuadorian officials.

The other quake, on the south coast, reportedly injured one person and toppled walls in Ica, 160 miles south of the national capital of Lima. Geologists said they believed the two tremors were related.

Kremlin talks on the calendar

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet and Lithuanian officials have agreed to hold talks in late April or early May on the republic's relationship with the Kremlin, the Tass news agency said Friday.

on an agenda "for discussion in an ordinary meeting, planned for the end of April or beginning of May," Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said in the statement that although the Soviet side refused to call Thursday's meeting "the beginning of negotiations," the communiqué "specifically" contains agreements on certain principles, the goal and the procedure for negotiations.

Eagles sweep Vikings in double-header

By Mike Mauter
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS— After blowing by Ricks College 9-1 Friday, College of Southern Idaho needed a six-inning rally in the second game to save a 6-3 win for its own.

The twinning started Region 18 play for both schools. The teams return to Frontier Field at noon today for a single nine-inning game to complete the series.

The Golden Eagles, now 16-3, took fourth-inning pitching by Travis Hunter and a first-inning grand slam homer by Mike Beaman to the first victory.

Ricks, 8-11, slipped ahead in the first on a walk and a double into the outfield gap. CSI answered with a run off a drag bunt and Beaman's blast. The Eagles' added single insurance runs in the fourth, fifth and sixth.

Hunter, 3-1, went on to scatter three more hits, give up no more walks and strike out five.

In the third inning of the second game, Ryan Hall bounded a double off the Randy Hansen right-center field to score two runs for a 3-0 lead.

Otherwise, the Eagles straggled with the slow-breaking pitches served by Vikings lefty Mike Smith and watched Ricks work into a 3-2 tie.

"We didn't do the little things that you look for," said CSI coach Jim Walker. "We let the guy (Smith) stay on the mound for five innings with absolutely nothing but off speed."

CSI's Bobby Jenco is safe at second as Derek Freeman of Ricks can't handle the throw.

Accepting a little help from the Vikings in the sixth, CSI scored the first two runs on a wild pitch and a throw into the dirt by the shortstop trying to nail a runner at the plate. Brandt Hanes drove in the third run on a looper to left before getting picked off to end the rally.

The different performance by CSI leave a question as to which route the Eagles will take today.

"This is a test. If we can just come out and play consistent," Walker said. "We really got a glaring weakness in savvy on the bases."

Rose leaves halfway house to begin community service

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose ended his three-month sentence at a halfway house Friday, but didn't leave until three months of his community service sentence for tax cheating.

Rose smiled and joked with the media as he left Talbert House.

"I just want to get my life back on track," Rose said as he got into a red Chevy Blazer and drove away.

The former Cincinnati Reds manager said he will not attend the team's season opener Monday at Riverfront Stadium.

He was given the day off Friday from his community service job as a gym teacher's assistant in the city public schools so that he could make a paid appearance at an autograph show in Birmingham, Ala., on Saturday.

"I got to sleep in a comfortable bed tonight," Rose said, complaining of the spartan beds he has slept on in Talbert House since January.

And he told fans at the card show: "Be patient with me. I'm back in civilization again. The last 18 months I've been away."

Those waiting in line seemed not only patient, but forgiving.

Even long-time horse trainer Jim Jolley, who came to Birmingham two weeks ago from Columbus, Ohio, to work at the city's failed thoroughbred track.

"I've always been a Reds fan," Jolley said as he stood with his 8-year-old son Adam.

"No matter what Pete Rose did in gambling, I'm associated with gambling. He did get in baseball and that's why it's OK."

IRS may tap bowl money

The Associated Press

In this season of taxes, football bowl officials around the country are worried about a big hit by the Internal Revenue Service against the Cotton Bowl that could threaten all postseason games.

The PGA Tour and LPGA also are closely watching the Cotton Bowl case because most of their events, like the bowls, are run by tax-exempt, non-profit groups.

Nobody is predicting an imminent collapse of the bowls or professional golf, even though the IRS rules that millions of dollars paid to the Cotton Bowl by Mobil Oil Corp. is taxable.

But officials of the bowls and golf tournaments fear an extension of the ruling — to include television contracts and other income — would have much broader ramifications that could hurt them.

At conflict initially would be the IRS demand for one-third of the revenues bowls receive from sponsors, and the NCAA requirement that three-quarters of the gross revenues go to the universities.

"If the NCAA says you've got to distribute 75 percent of your gross and the IRS says it wants 34 percent of your gross, then that would put the bowls out of business," Jack French, executive director of the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif., said Friday.

If the NCAA allows bowls to pay out 75 percent of the money left after the IRS takes a 34 percent cut, French said, "it's going to have an effect, but it's not going to close the bowls down."

The Rose Bowl uses 80 percent of its gross to pay-out $13 million to the schools. Unlike most of the other bowls, though, it does not have title sponsorship, so it would be minimally impacted by an adverse ruling by the IRS against the Cotton Bowl.

But there are other worries.

"If the IRS went further and got into revenues from media contracts, then it would have an impact on all bowls. As I understand it, the IRS is not directly looking at media rights fees in the Cotton Bowl case, but I have heard people say that could be a logical extension of this," said Jim Mulli, don, spokesman for the Pac-10 Conference in Walnut Creek, Calif.

And if the IRS is doing this with the Cotton Bowl, is the next step to go to the universities, which have various corporate ties and certainly media contracts that involve rights fees? The trouble is you don't know how far-reaching they're going to become.

Most PGA events, like the bowls, are set up as 501(c)(3) non-profits, distributing their proceeds after expenses to charities.

Edward Moorhouse, vice president and general counsel for the PGA Tour, said a ruling against the Cotton Bowl could "threaten the charitable aspect" of PGA events.

Baseball players' seasonal shift largest on record

The Associated Press

A scorecard won't be enough to tell the players about this week. Better bring a Radar Model 200.

Who has baseball seen such a shift of major talent in one winter. Darryl Strawberry, George Bell, Willie McGee, Vince Coleman, Kirk Gibson and Bo Jackson are among the 30-something free agents who moved while Tim Lincecum, Glenn Davis, Joe Carter, Fred McGriff, Tony Fernandez, Roberto Alomar and Dave Parker are some of the dozen big names that traded places.

No set-off-season moves has ever come close. Put it this way: since Cincinnati finished its surprise sweep of Oakland, 27 players who ranked among the league's top third in runs, RBIs, victories or saves have switched teams.

In the last 10 years, never had more than seven such players changed clubs in one winter. And in the past 75 years, only once had at least 10 such players been on the go — in 1963, when 16 guys moved, including trades involving Luis Aparicio, Hoyt Wilhelm and Moose Skowron.

Of course, the emergence of free agency is the major reason. For so many managers, particularly last winter's crop of "new-look" players set free by collusion rulings — Gary Gaiter, Jack Morris, Brett Butler, Jack Clark, Dave Smith and Danny Darwin were among them, and they all found new homes.

French is Monday's opening day approach, some big names are still out there. Pete Incaviglia, who hit 24 home runs with 85 RBIs for Texas, and Fernando Valenzuela, who went 13-13 with a no-hitter for Los Angeles, are available for whatever amount a team wants to pay them.

Which is why, there's now one big question: Will baseball's balance of power shift, too?

Cincinnati, which will try to become the first World Series champion to repeat since the 1978 New York Yankees, was one of the few teams that did not add a significant player. Instead, the Reds lost Danny Jackson to the Chicago Cubs.

Oakland, trying to become the first team to win four straight pennants since the Yankees in 1964, chose to not re-sign McGee, who won the world National League batting title, and Scott Sanderson, a 17-game winner. Rather, they signed Willie Wilson as insurance for Jose Canseco's bad back; got Eric Show to take Sanderson's spot; got Pate to add Ernest Riles and Vance Law to platoon at third base for Carney Lansford, who was injured in a snowmobile accident and may miss the year.

Pittsburgh and Boston, the other two division winners, went in opposite directions. The Pirates lost Sid Bream, Wally Backman, R.J. Reynolds and Ted Power without adding, while the Red Sox spent millions to sign Darwin, the NL ERA leader, Clark and Matt Young.

Most of active of all, however, was Los Angeles. The Dodgers brought Strawberry back home for $20 million, signed Butler to lead off and play center field, pitcher Kevin Gross to start and Gary Carter to back up at catcher, traded Hubie Brooks to get pitcher Bob Ojeda and did not keep either Valenzuela or Gibson.

"Obviously, we've made a lot of changes," Dodgers general manager Fred Claire said. "But we have to see if it pays off on the field."

Strawberry, who hit 37 home runs with a team-record 108 RBIs for the New York Mets, will be the focal point. His supporters say a change of scenery will do him good, even though he's only a career .225 hitter at Dodger Stadium.

Strawberry's critics are certain he will drop and are convinced the Mets are better off with Coleman in a strength-for-speed exchange. They claim, as do many people that free agents work hard in their final year to get a rich contract, then instantly go downhill with their new team.

Here is the truth: free agents, hitters and pitchers alike, do not fall off in performance in their first year after signing. If anything, they improve slightly.

Here are the numbers: in the past 14 years, free agents batted .261 in their last year with a club and then hit .264 with their new team. Their home-run rates were identical and the RBI rates were almost exact. There was, however, one difference — the at-bats dipped 10 percent. Maybe that was because it became easier to go on the disabled list, with all that security, and maybe it's because many of those free agents were at the end of their careers, like Willie Randolph and Rick Dempsey with Milwaukee this year.

For free agent pitchers, there had a 3.72 ERA and a .513 winning percentage in their last year with one club, and had a 3.71 ERA with a .521 winning percentage in their first year after signing. Again, the major difference was in playing time — the innings pitched dropped about 8 percent.

San Francisco and the Cubs, trying to regain championships they won in 1989, hope there's no falloff in performance. The Cubs signed Jackson to start. Smith to relieve and Bell to hit balls out of Waveland Avenue. The Giants got McGee to play center field instead of Butler, and paid $10 million each to pitchers Bud Black and Dave Righetti.

Toronto and Baltimore, which dualed for the AL East title in 1989, each were busy. The Blue Jays may have pulled off the steal of the season by getting Davis from cost-conscious Houston, and three younger players, and also signed Dwight Evans. The Blue Jays made the trade of the decade, sending Fernandez and McGriff to San Diego for Joe Carter and Alomar, and also sent Junior Felix to California for Devon White.

Detroit, which found Cecil Fielder and his potential for $1 home runs last year, signed another player in Japan, bringing back Tony Bernazard. The Tigers also signed Rob Deer and traded for Mickey Teufel. Atlanta added Tony Pentolotto and Bream. Milwaukee signed Franklin Stubbs and Carter. Malibu traded Parker to the Angels for Dante Bichette.

The White Sox signed Charlie Hough and traded pitchers Eric King and Shawn Hilliges to Cleveland for Cory Snyder.

Kansas City, stung by free-agent flops Mark and Siom Davis last winter, plucked Mike Boddicker. But it's the Royals that did not do that created the most interest and intrigue of the off-season.

Briefly

Bad call costs Flames goal, game

CALGARY, Alberta — Referee Dan Marouelli was wrong to wave off an apparent goal scored by the Calgary Flames in an NHL playoff game they lost Thursday night, a league official said Friday.

John P. Amico, one of the NHL's officiating supervisors, said still photographs and television replays showed Calgary's Joe Nieuwendyk should have been credited with a goal early in the third period that would have tied the game 2-2.

Instead, the goal was disallowed and the Oilers went to win 3-1 in the first game of the Smythe Division semifinal series.

"I feel very sorry for the Calgary Flames or any organization that has anything happen to them," Amico said.

The Flames were trailing 2-1 with about seven minutes gone in the third period when Nieuwendyk baited a puck into the net. But instead of rolling to the back of the goal, the puck seemed to stick in the corner between the goalpost and a pad around the inside of the net.

Older defenseman Charlie Huddy fished the puck out and Marouelli ruled it hadn't crossed the goal line.

Television replays, and a front-page picture Friday in the Calgary Sun, showed the puck had crossed the line.

Fans urged to boycott Dodgers games

LOS ANGELES — Mexican-American leaders urged fans to boycott the Los Angeles Dodgers to protest the club's release last week of pitcher Fernando Valenzuela.

"It appears that the Dodgers don't like Mexicans, but they like their money," Raul Ruiz, vice president of the Mexican American Political Association, said Thursday at a news conference outside Dodger Stadium.

Valenzuela, who rose to stardom from a small village in the Mexican state of Sonora, was released last week after 11 seasons with the club.

During Valenzuela's career, the Dodgers captured two World Series and four National League titles. Along the way, he posted a 141-116 record and was named to the All-Star game six times.

But the last two seasons, the porly left-hander has struggled, posting a 23-26 record and a 4.02 earned run average.

Despite his trouble on the mound, the 30-year-old Valenzuela remained a hero to the city's large Mexican-American population.

Big leagues oppose New Jersey bill

TRENTON, N.J. — A proposal to bring sports betting to New Jersey, seen as a potential boon to casinos and race tracks, is facing resistance from major sports leagues who fear it will hurt their image.

The NFL, NBA, and major league baseball have hired New Jersey lobbyists in an attempt to block proposed legislation for sports gambling.

The action is being taken in response to several bills that have been introduced to propose sports betting as a way to boost New Jersey's sagging casino industry and help financially ailing race tracks.

Sen. Richard Codey, chairman of the committee dealing with gaming legislation, predicted that a sports gambling referendum is sure to be proposed to New Jersey voters, perhaps as soon as November 1992.

PGA tourney postponed until Oct. 23

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — PGA Tour and tournament officials canceled the $1 million Independent Insurance Age Open Friday and rescheduled it for Oct. 23-26, after steady rain had washed out the first two rounds.

It was the first PGA Tour event canceled since the 1966 Houston Open that was rescheduled in November and won by Arnold Palmer.

"We had every case of the weather," Houston Golf Association executive director Duke Butler said. "Even the weather is a fluke. We've done a 20-year study of the weather during this week and this kind of rain just doesn't happen."

Sunday's nationally televised final round will be replaced by a 48-man team scramble with 16 3-man teams competing for $100,000 in prizes.

The rescheduled event will have a minimum purse of $800,000, Butler said, and all 144 players entered this week will have automatic invitations for October.

Defending champion Tony Sills will be among the players competing in the scramble. Others include Paul Azinger, Hal Sutton, John Mahaffey, Ben Crenshaw, Ben Crenshaw, Corey Pavin, Larry Mize and Fred Couples.

Despite the HGA's 20-year weather study, the tournament has been plagued by bad weather in three of the past four years.

Stranger to 1st leads Tradition tourney

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Phil Rodgers, with little experience as the leader of a golf tournament, is finding the feeling to be enjoyable.

Rodgers, still seeking his first victory on the Senior PGA Tour, shot a 5-under-par 67 Friday to build a commanding six-stroke lead over five players after two rounds of the Tradition.

Rodgers was at 132 with the lead in the under-par 138 was made up of Chi Chi Rodriguez, George Archer, Jim Dent, Ben Smith and Jim Colbert.

"There's a lot of good players behind me who can play like I have for the last two days," Rodgers said. "I'm not backing off. Hopefully, I'm going to make them beat me. That's my goal anyway. I'm not going to give up anything."

Rodgers, who set a course record with a 65 Thursday on the 6,864-yard Coehise layout at Desert Mountain, is halfway to a $120,000 winner's paycheck from an $800,000 purse. If he gets it, the check would amount to about half of what the 53-year-old Rodgers has earned in three years as a senior. His best finish is a tie for fourth place at Grand Traverse, Mich., last year.

Thomas returns to lineup with 11 assists

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Isaiah Thomas had 15 points and 11 assists in his return to the lineup after missing 32 games, leading the Detroit Pistons to a 101-82 victory over the Minnesota Timberwolves on Friday night.

Thomas had not played since before his surgery Jan. 29 to fuse three bones in the 10-year-old right wrist, and it was feared he wouldn't be able to return for the playoffs. But doctors cleared Thomas to play earlier Friday, and the Detroit guard started the game and played with a spirit to restore his lost motion.

Mark Aguirre scored 20 points and John Salley 19 for the Pistons, 18-14 without Thomas. Joe Dumars scored 15 but saw his team-record consecutive free-throw streak end at 67.

Detroit won its fifth straight game by outscoring Minnesota 21-8 at the start of the fourth quarter, turning a six-point lead into a 92-73 advantage.

Tony Campbell led the Timberwolves with 22 points.

100-117, Bulls 103

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Reggie Miller scored 17 of his 22 points in the decisive third quarter as Indiana clinched an Eastern Conference playoff berth by defeating Washington Wizards 100-117.

Miller scored nine points during a 15-8 spurt to open the third quarter as the Pacers took the lead for good, 62-56. Indiana went on to lead 72-61 with 5:19 left in the period.

The Pacers made the playoffs for just the fourth time since joining the NBA in 1976 and returned to .500 with their first victory over the Bulls after two overtime losses this season.

Miller's 17 points, which got a career-high 30 points and 12 rebounds from Pervis Ellison and 19 points from Harvey Grant, was playing for the sixth straight game without Bernard King, who has a sore back.

Cavaliers 104, Hornets 101
RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Craig Ehlo led the breaking fire throw with 23 seconds left, then drew a charging foul by Rex Chapman with 9.9 seconds to play as Cleveland beat Charlotte.

The Hornets, who had not won in six games at Cleveland, tied it 99-99 on an 18-footer by Muggsy Bogues with 37 seconds left. On Cleveland's next possession, Ehlo was fouled by Chapman, and made one of two foul shots, putting the Cavaliers ahead 104-99.

After a timeout, Chapman took a pass from Bogues and dribbled around Larry Nance to the baseline, where Ehlo, who led the Cavaliers with 22 points, stepped in front of him and was knocked backwards.

Blaizers 115, Magic 98

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Portland won its ninth consecutive game, wiping out a 12-point second-half deficit with a barrage of 3-point shots against Orlando.

Terry Portner scored 18 of his 29 points in the third quarter when he was 7-for-7 from the field, including three 3-pointers to key a 29-9 burst that carried the Blazers to a 78-70 lead.

Porter hit another 3-pointer to put Portland ahead by 11 and finished 6-12 from the field.

Detroit Tigers cut 3-time All-Star Chet Lemon

The Associated Press
Chet Lemon joined a lot of other high-priced players without a job Friday when the Detroit Tigers released him three days before the first game of the season.

Lemon, 35, was a three-time All-Star while with Detroit and the Chicago White Sox. He had a .273 career batting average.

"He played in a lot of games," Tigers manager Sparky Anderson said. "Sixteen years. He doesn't have to feel bad about his career. No sir. But, they all end sometime. That's the way baseball's always been."

Bruins even series with Whalers

The Associated Press
Cam Neely scored three goals, the first with 3:22 to play Friday night to snap a tie and give the Boston Bruins a 4-3 victory over the Hartford Whalers.

The Bruins' victory at Boston Garden squared the Adams Division playoff series at one game apiece, but the upstart Whalers still have the home-ice advantage after winning the opener in the Garden.

In the other Adams series, Guy Carbonneau scored with 1:21 left to give the Montreal Canadiens a 5-4 victory over the Buffalo Sabres and a 2-0 series lead.

The game was given night for two teams in the Patrick Division side of the Wats Conference draw. Don Beaupre got his third shutout in nine days as Washington beat New York 3-0 at Madison Square Garden and wrested the home-ice advantage from the Rangers.

And at Pittsburgh, rookie Jaromir Jagr scored his first playoff goal at 8:52 of overtime as the Penguins overcame three one-goal deficits to beat the New Jersey Devils 5-4 on Friday night.

Lemon is in the final season of a four-year, $3.7 million contract. He will receive $1.1 million in termination pay — $800,000 for this season and a $300,000 buyout for 1992.

Lemon batted .226 in 13 exhibition games. But he was sore shoulder prevents him from throwing from the outfield. Anderson said the emergence of rookie, Mike Cuyler, plus the off-season signing of Rob Deer, made Lemon expendable.

"He's a good player, but he's coming," outfielder Lloyd Moseby said. "He acted like he knew it."

The Tigers claimed infielder Luis de los Santos off waivers from Kansas City. De los Santos, 24, has played in 10 major league games over parts of the 1988 and 1989 seasons, hitting .220. He batted .284 at Class AAA Omaha last year.

Guillermo Hernandez, the 1984 American League MVP, and Greg Gross, one of baseball's top pinch hitters of all-time, also got cut. Neither played in the majors last season.

Hernandez was trying to make a comeback with Philadelphia. Gross was in camp with San Diego, but was let go when the Padres signed all-purpose Mike Aldrete. Mike Forder found a spot, too, with San Francisco.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

The Guards die, but never surrender.
— Count Cambronne.

Test your courage in the defense of today's heart game. Put yourself in the West chair and choose a lead after cashing both of your top spades.

West cashes two top spades, and when the enemy's queen and jack drop, West knows he must shift. What should West lead?

Should a sure trump trick in sight, West would opt for an innocent-looking low diamond. What happens then?

Declarer ducks in dummy, and East's 10 loses to South's king. South returns to dummy's diamond queen to take a losing trump finesse, and West exits with his last trump (nothing matters now). South wins, drawing the last trump with dummy's 10 and cashes the diamond ace. West's jack falls. South claims his 10 tricks without raking the club finesse.

What does a rummy West lead attract three? He tempts South by leading the diamond jack. A naïve South will believe he has the diamond 10 spotted, so he wins his king and crosses to dummy's ace to take a losing trump finesse. West leads a second diamond, and South takes the bait. He finesesses dummy's nine to East's 10, and instead of 10 tricks, South gets only nine.

Against a routine defense, there was no reasonable way for South to lose his game. West found a way to mislead him, all because he refused to surrender.
