

War cost will exceed $60 billion

Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration said Monday that the cost of the Persian Gulf War would exceed $60 billion, meaning that the conflict won't be a profit-making enterprise for U.S. taxpayers as some had expected.

In fact, if the estimate by Budget Director Richard Darman proves correct, U.S. taxpayers will have to pay about $6 billion to defray expenses of the war.

The new estimate, contained in a report sent to Congress by the administration, surprised some analysts who have worked closely with cost estimates in recent months.

"That's a lot higher than the Defense Department had indicated in earlier estimates," said Steve Daggett, analyst for the Congressional Research Service, an arm of the Library of Congress. "I don't see where the additional costs are coming from."

Darman didn't spell them all out yet. In fact, he said the costs incurred through February amounted to $3.2 billion, but added that they "include fuel, petroleum, and don't include many bills yet for construction."

The allies so far have contributed $36 billion in cash and in-kind contributions and are expected to ante up another $18.4 billion, the report said.

"A month ago, it appeared that these contributions would more than pay for the total costs of the war and leave the United States with a small profit, despite the fact that Congress has made available $15 billion in U.S. funds if needed."

Some defense analysts are suspicious that the Pentagon will exaggerate the war costs in order to shore up its armaments budget, which is an era of shrinking budgets for defense and personnel.

In his report, Darman said the $3.2 billion in costs incurred so far did not include equipment repair and maintenance "caused by the high operating rates during this period."

They also do not include the costs of phase down of operations and the return home of the deployed troops," he said.

Further, long-term benefit paid disability costs have not reflected in the estimates.

Daggett and co-worker Gary J. Pagliano had estimated only a week ago that the war would cost about $47 billion, but both said the White House considered this figure low.

Demos' tax bill revives fairness issue

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Top congressional Democrats, seeking to exploit the tax "fairness" issue, are reworking legislation giving tax breaks to average Americans.

A leading option is reviving last year's Democratic plan to slap a surtax on millionaires and using the revenue to increase exemptions and deductions claimed by working families.

With Democrats struggling to answer critics' complaints that they have no clear domestic agenda, no final decisions have been made about the plans' components.

But they hope their package will let them reclaim the so-called fairness issue, which reaped them big political benefits last year. A first attempt at that failed last Wednesday, when the Senate overwhelmingly rejected a proposed cut in the Social Security payroll

Powerful quake kills at least 40 in Soviet Georgia

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A strong earthquake hit Soviet Georgia on Monday, setting off rockslides in mountain villages and killing at least 40 people, authorities said.

The quake also was felt in neighboring Armenia, which was devastated by a 1988 earthquake that killed 25,000 people. There were no reports of damage or injuries in Armenia.

Police spokesman Zurab Kadzhaya in the Georgian town of Kutaisi, near the epicenter, said Monday night about 40 people were killed and buildings in five mountain towns suffered widespread damage. The official Tass news agency earlier reported 30 people killed. It was not immediately known how many people were injured.

There were fears the death toll could rise as rescuers searched collapsed buildings in villages isolated by severed communications.

An aftershock as powerful as the initial quake struck the region at 9:33 p.m. (2:33 p.m. EDT).

Tass said U.S. Geological Survey spokeswoman Est Jorgenson in Menlo Park, Calif., said the aftershock registered 6.2 on the Richter Scale.

Soviet Interior Ministry troops already in the region to quell ethnic unrest were ordered to the disaster area to aid in rescue efforts.

The initial quake struck at 12:13 p.m. (5:13 a.m. EDT) in north-central Georgia among the sparsely populated villages and towns in the Caucasus Mountains. It measured 7.1 on the Richter scale, according to the Soviet Union's Central Seismic Station.

The epicenter was near Dzhasa, a town of 11,000 people about 60 miles northwest of the Georgian capital of Tbilisi.

In a report from Dzhasa, Soviet TV showed collapsed buildings and others with gaping holes. Rescuers standing atop a mound of rubble dug frantically with their hands to remove large stones in search of further victims.

The independent Interfax news agency said a kindergarten, a high school, a hospital and a printing house were among buildings destroyed.

PUC rejects claim of legal violations for Call ID service

The Associated Press

BOISE — State utility regulators have rejected the American Civil Liberties Union's claim that US West's new caller identification service violates constitutional guarantees to privacy and Idaho's wireless law.

But in what has become a continuing battle with the telephone company over what the new service can offer outside state regulations, the Public Utilities Commission on Monday agreed unanimously to reconsider its initial decision that it had no direct jurisdiction over the Call ID service.

The three-member commission also agreed to refer the matter to the formal proceedings on US West's plan to provide the service to its customers.

Commissioners also agreed about the propriety of the utility beginning to charge for the service.

US West attorney Dan Poole said he says every troubled customer has the right to opt out of the service. The commission sets up a full-scale review to determine whether it qualifies as an "information service," as the new service is called under state regulations. Credit errors abound, consumer group says

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — Credit reports are riddled with errors, a study by Consumer Union, which publishes Consumer Reports magazine, released a study Monday that said credit bureaus were late in making pay stubs reports — used by loan officers, employers and landlords to verify the financial history of applicants — are an "extreme torture" for consumers to decipher.

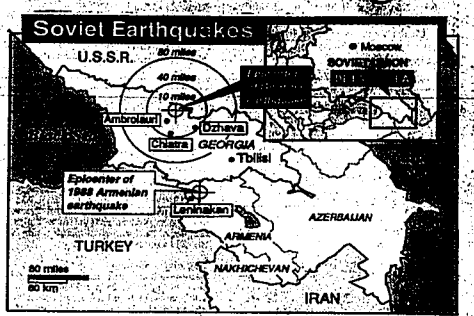

"For a consumer to check his or her credit report for accuracy is comparable to preparing your annual income tax," Consumer Union attorney Michelle Meier said. "It's a very time-consuming process to figure out what all these (billing) codes mean."

But the study said consumers need to do just that: there were mistakes in 48 percent of the credit reports examined, and 19 percent of the reports contained errors that could affect credit ratings. The errors included: misspellings, inaccurate dates, setting a loan as an apartment, "fingerprints" (like across a chalkboard), and "Major errors" that fall into two categories: reports that incorrectly show a person has a credit record, and reports that said a person was late in making pay stubs reports when, in fact, the payments had been made on time.

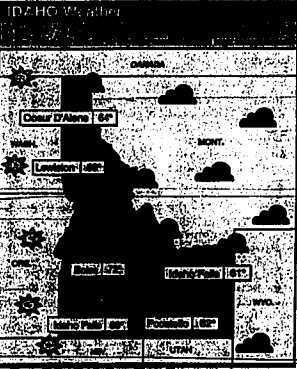

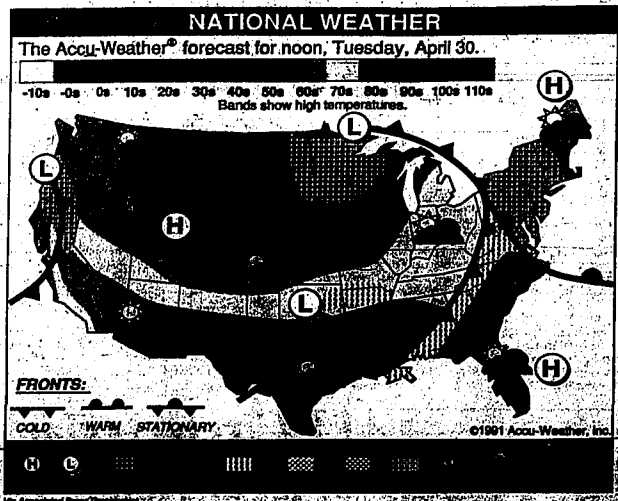

Consumer Union is pushing federal legislation that will guarantee consumers one copy of their credit report each year, so they can check for errors and correct them. Reports now cost up to $20, depending upon state law.

Credit bureaus keep files on nearly 90 percent of all American adults, the study said, and sell more than 450 million files each year, mostly to

Allies demand Kurdish rebels allow refugees to return home

ZAKHO, Iraq (AP) — Allied forces have demanded that Iraqi Kurdish guerrillas stop extorting money from Kurdish refugees and allow them to return to their homes, senior U.S. officials said Monday.

"It's immoral and it's got to stop," said Col. Jim Jones, the highest-ranking U.S. Marine Corps officer in northern Iraq. "They're straight-out bandits."

The Kurdish rebels agreed to the demands, U.S. officials said.

In southern Iraq, meanwhile, the U.S. Army airlifted more refugees to Saudi Arabia, in an operation that is a prelude to the U.S. troops' own departure. The airlift is expected to take about a week.

In wide-ranging interviews on the huge allied effort in the north to aid the Kurds, senior American commanders also said the military hopes to clear the "Turkish border of remaining refugee camps by June 1. By that time, it will be in short supply in the hills."

About 800,000 Kurds arrived at the Turkish border this month, fleeing Saddam Hussein's systematic crackdown on their rebellion. Allied military officials are building camps for them in northern Iraq.

The first Kurdish family arrived Monday in the camp built outside Zakho. They joined 376 Kurds who already there.

U.S. Army Major Gen. Jay Garner who commands the military operation in northern Iraq, said he expected refugees to start arriving in large numbers in the next few days.

Military officials said some of the Kurdish guerrillas had been refusing to allow refugees to go to the camp at Zakho because they feared Iraqis convinced that it was safe from Iraqi attack.

U.S., French, Dutch and British officials met Monday with about a dozen Iraqi Kurdish rebel leaders to tell them to stop preventing the refugees from returning home.

After the meeting, the most senior of the Kurdish leaders, who goes by the name of General, was taken to one checkpoint by a U.S. helicopter. He told his men to let Kurdish refugees pass by.

In addition, the officers said allied forces told Kurdish guerrillas that they will not tolerate violence either in the camps or in the areas declared secure in northern Iraq.

The United Nations said Monday it was sending a convoy carrying personnel and supplies to Zakho on Tuesday, in a first step toward assuming control of the allied camp.

But Turkish President Turgut Ozal said the United Nations could not provide sufficient protection for the camps. He called Monday for a long-term Western military presence in Iraq, defeated last February in the Gulf War.

"If the allied powers do not maintain their presence in northern Iraq, the Iraqi Kurds will start pushing again as soon as they see an Iraqi soldier," Ozal told the Iranian news agency IRNA.

The European Community on Sunday endorsed a British call for a U.N. police force to protect the camps. The five permanent members of the Security Council were to discuss the plan.

But Belgian diplomat Erik Sny, who led a U.N. mission to Baghdad last week, said Monday the proposal would be difficult to implement.

Jones said allied forces have no illusions about solving the long-term problem of the Kurds.

Pentagon has slimmed down its wish list in wake of gulf war

WASHINGTON (AP) — While Pentagon officials have trimmed their shopping lists in deference to the reduced Soviet threat and budget realities, they remain hopeful that the victory in the Persian Gulf will translate into more money for a handful of major weapons systems.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney has emphasized there will be no backsliding on post-Cold War defense cutbacks that through 1993 will reduce the active force of 2 million by 500,000 and cut Air Force tactical fighter wings from 36 to 26.

Pentagon officials and independent defense experts agree that while the success of Desert Storm may add a few years of life to some existing weapons programs, and enhance the prospects of a few future projects, there will be no homecoming spending binge as a consequence of the military's newly won prestige.

In fact, such stars of the victory over Iraq as the F-15 and F-16 fighters, the AH-64 Apache attack helicopter, the Navy's A-6 attack plane, the F-117A stealth fighter-bomber and the A-10 Warthog anti-tank plane have already gone out of production or will soon do so.

The M-1 Abrams tank and the Bradley fighting vehicle are also heading for oblivion, unless their manufacturers can maneuver through the political minefields of finding foreign buyers.

But the Gulf War, they produce some changes within the Pentagon's slimmed-down wish list, and certainly seems to have saved — at least temporarily — congressional support for some programs that were in deep political trouble.

Cheney, for example, said the value of stealth technology "was reaffirmed in very significant ways" by the radar-penetrating performance of the F-117. That, he said, persuaded him to pursue development of the B-2 stealth bomber, which has a far bigger payload and greater range than the F-117 and is designed to replace the elderly B-52 as the nation's mainstay bomber.

But the B-2 also costs $865 million a piece, compared with $106 million for the F-117, and Congress has only grudgingly approved production of 15 of the 75 wanted by the Air Force.

The Gulf War may have saved the B-2 this year, said former assistant secretary of Defense and Brookings

Institution military expert Lawrence J. Korb, adding "it may last a few more years before it gets killed."

The Pentagon has other major weapons programs that were in the pipeline well before Saddam Hussein marched into Kuwait, and that will absorb much of the budget for new hardware.

The Pentagon earlier this month awarded a Sikorsky-Boeing team a contract for a new, lightweight scout-stroke helicopter that could be worth $34 billion through the next century.

And last week, it handed the team of Lockheed, Boeing and General Dynamics a huge development contract for the Advanced Tactical Fighter, an estimated $50 billion prize over the next 15 to 20 years.

At that, just days before announcing that decision, the Pentagon reduced its proposed total buy of ATF's, a stealthy replacement for the F-15, from 750 planes to 650.

One clear winner from the Gulf War was Joint STARS, a surveillance system using redesigned Boeing 707s that allows the Air Force to monitor and transmit to ground troops the activities of enemy forces hundreds of miles away.

Recorder trouble cuts crew's testing

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The astronauts aboard Discovery observed eerie waves of light above the horizon in a "Star Wars" experiment Monday while ground controllers struggled to fix data recorders needed for other tests.

Six experiments were canceled as a result of the recorder trouble, and the Defense Department expected to lose more data if the problem is not resolved by the end of the eight-day flight.

NASA flight directors and Pentagon officials insisted the mission would not be harmed by the loss of what they termed "secondary experiments." Nonetheless, there was disappointment.

"From our view, everything is obviously important," said Air Force Capt. Marty Hauser, a Pentagon spokesman.

The seven astronauts tried four times to activate the two recorders before turning their attention to instruments unaffected by the failure. Engineers on the ground continued to work on the problem.

Three of five scientific instruments that constitute one of Discovery's primary payloads — valued altogether at $160 million — are hampered by the recorder problem. The instrument considered most important by the military has its own recorders, which successfully collected data Monday on atmospheric light, or aurora.

At one point, the astronauts beamed down black-and-white television images of light rippling off the atmosphere, as they flew over the Pacific near Australia. Later, they sent back a videotaped scene of a halo shimmering for thousands of miles along the horizon with the constellation Orion in the background. "Pretty spectacular," said Mission Control's Kathy Thornton.

The crew also took pictures of a rapid-fire sequence of steering jet blasts. They captured that on film with ultraviolet cameras, also unaffected by the recorder problem.

Officials of the Strategic Defense Initiative, better known as "Star Wars," said they need information about naturally occurring phenomena to develop sensors that can distinguish enemy missiles amid such clutter.

Air Force Capt. Lindley Johnson, a program director, said the three affected instruments will be used for observations later in the mission as planned regardless of whether the recorders are fixed. Information will be transmitted instantly from a computer monitor in the flight deck to ground controllers when possible, but much of the data will be lost, he said.

Court will consider rights in abuse cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Monday it will take a new look at the right of alleged child abusers to question their young accusers in court, weighing how far judges can go to protect children from having to testify.

The court agreed to hear an appeal by an Illinois man who said his rights were violated because he was convicted, based on hearsay testimony, of sexually abusing a 4-year-old girl. The child never took the witness stand.

The justices will decide, probably sometime in 1992, whether juries may hear out-of-court statements by children when the young alleged victims are available and capable of testifying but are excused from doing so.

The issue is a recurring one, sometimes arising in disputes in which one parent accuses the other of molesting a child. Reports of child-abuse cases now surpass two million a year, according to the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

In other action Monday, the court: Voted 6-3 to crack down on some people who file frivolous appeals. The court altered its rules so that it can strip some poor people of the privilege of filing appeals without having to pay a $300 filing fee plus significant printing costs.

Agreed to decide in a Louisiana case whether employers may impose wage cuts or other changes in working conditions before bargaining talks with unions formally reach an impasse.

Agreed in a dispute between Yakima Indians and officials in Washington state to decide whether states and counties may tax Indian-owned land on reservations.

Allowed Mississippi juries to be told whether convicted murderers ever would be eligible for parole if sentenced to life in prison rather than death.

The child-abuse case gives the court a new opportunity to provide guidelines for judges seeking to insulate children from potentially traumatic courtroom testimony.

The justices last year said the constitutional right of defendants to confront their accusers is not absolute.

They allowed states to shield young witnesses from face-to-face confrontations with child-abuse defendants by using videotaped testimony, closed-circuit television and testimony by those who interviewed the alleged abuse victims.

The court last year also said judges must have evidence the child faces the risk of serious emotional trauma before barring a face-to-face confrontation.

Left unanswered in those past decisions was whether judges may exclude all testimony by alleged victims capable of testifying — letting the jury decide entirely on the basis of hearsay evidence by those who questioned a child out of court.

That issue will be addressed in an appeal by Randall D. White, sentenced to 10 years in prison for entering a Georgetown, Ill., home in the early morning hours of April 16, 1988, and molesting a girl identified as S.G.

The child did not testify at White's trial. But five witnesses — her mother, a babysitter, a police officer, a nurse and a doctor — said S.G. told them she was assaulted.

An Illinois appeals court ruled that S.G.'s statements to the babysitter, mother and officer were spontaneous declarations made soon after the attack.

The appeals court said the statements the child made to the doctor and nurse some time later also are admissible.

That claim is disputed by some.

Postmaster: Office needs flexibility

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postmaster General Anthony Frank says his agency needs more freedom to compete as it nears the 20th anniversary of being shifted away from the government and told to act like a business.

The long process of raising rates needs to be revamped and the post office needs more flexibility to introduce new services, Frank says.

The 29-cent rate is a case-in-point, Frank said at a meeting Monday.

He complained that the independent Postal Rate Commission has not responded some three months after his agency asked for more information on why it lopped off a penny of the proposed 30-cent rate.

The Postal Service asked for a 30-cent stamp a year ago.

After months of hearings, the rate commission recommended 29 cents in January. That was accepted under protest, with postal officials asking the rate commission for an explanation.

Now they can only wait, complained Frank, since federal regulations prohibit the Postal Service from directly contacting the rate commission.

The ratemaking process must be overhauled, said Frank. "It is too time consuming. It is too constraining in the face of competition. It is too costly. And it simply isn't representing the interests of the Postal Service or our customers."

Frank says in a speech to be delivered Tuesday at a forum at the Brookings Institution.

Frank said he would keep the system of checks and balances available by having an independent commission to study rates, but the time involved must be reduced.

Judge questions Exxon settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge said Monday he wants to make sure Exxon's settlement with the government over the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill does not violate native Alaskans' right to sue for damages.

U.S. District Judge Stanley

Sporkin said during a hearing, "I'm very concerned that people's rights... may well be interfered with" in the settlement.

Another federal judge threw out the criminal portion of the Exxon settlement last Wednesday, saying the $100 million fine was too lenient.

Antarctica delegates pass ban on mining

MADRID, Spain — Delegates at a treaty conference on Antarctica took a step toward protecting the fragile continent Monday, agreeing to consider a comprehensive conservation package that includes an indefinite ban on mining.

The compromise text broke a long stalemate that had pitted France and Australia, leading advocates of a permanent ban, against the United States and Britain, the delegates said. The United States and Britain had sought to keep open the mining option.

The deadlock had held up progress on other environmental measures among the representatives of the 26 consultative and 13 non-voting adherents to the 1959 Antarctic Treaty.

Prospects for peace in Lebanon improve

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Peace prospects in Lebanon appeared to improve Monday when the Christians' main militia agreed to surrender its heavy weapons to the army in line with an Arab League-brokered plan to end the civil war.

The announcement came less than 24 hours before an April 30 government deadline for Christian and Muslim militias to hand over their weapons.

"We have received the necessary guarantees required to carry out this operation," said Roger Deeb, a minister without portfolio who represents the Lebanese Forces on President Elias Hrawi's 30-member Cabinet. Fifteen Cabinet members are Muslims, the balance Christian.

China denies employing prison labor

BEIJING — China on Monday denied reports that it was using Chinese prison labor to increase its exports.

The official Xinhua news agency, quoting an unidentified Foreign Ministry official, accused a U.S. congressman of distorting facts in testimony about Chinese labor at a Senate hearing last week.

U.S. law bars the importation of prison-made goods. The issue could come up in debate on whether the United States, which has a $10.4 billion trade deficit with China, should continue to grant Beijing most-favored-nation trade status. The special trade status must be renewed annually before June 3.

Earthquake shakes up Peru capital

LIMA, Peru — A strong earthquake rattled the capital and a wide swath of the country Monday, causing minor damage and sending people rushing into the streets.

The quake struck at 1:12 p.m. It measured 5.3 on the Richter scale and was centered about 80 miles north of Lima, said Waverly Person, a geophysicist at the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. A police spokesman in Huacho, near the epicenter, said the tremor shattered windows at a hospital.

A photographer said it swayed buildings and knocked plaster loose from walls.

Turkey refuses to reopen oil pipeline

RIVADH, Saudi Arabia — Turkish President Turgut Ozal was quoted Monday as saying his country will not reopen the trans-Turkey oil pipeline for Iraq so long as the United Nations forbids Iraqi oil exports.

The U.N. Security Council clamped an embargo on all trade with Iraq a few days after the Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

The Sanctions Committee, a U.N. Security Council body, is scheduled to meet Tuesday to decide on Baghdad's request to export nearly $1 billion in oil in the next several months to pay for emergency imports of food and medical supplies.

Radicals stage rallies across Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A radical student set herself ablaze Monday and tens of thousands of others fought riot, police and screamed "Murderer!" in nationwide rallies protesting the fatal beating of a student by police.

Riot police fired repeated volleys of tear gas at a Seoul university on Monday night to block about 30,000 students from marching downtown to protest Friday's beating death of 20-year-old Kang Kyung-dae.

The nighttime rally at Seoul's Yonsei University was the largest student protest this year. The protesters — among an estimated 60,000 in scores of rallies nationwide — demanded the ouster of President Roh Tae-woo and his Cabinet.

Kang's death captured national attention and left the government scrambling to contain political damage.

Police said at least 120 students were arrested Monday in the protests. At least five students were reported seriously injured, including the woman who set herself afire in the southern city of Kwangju.

An unidentified student tries to help a female student, Park Seung-hee, shortly after she set herself on fire during an anti-government rally. She was in serious condition.

Protesters demanded Roh fire the Cabinet, jail the outgoing interior minister, make a full investigation of the student's death and apologize to the people.

"Who killed the boy?" dissident Haeng Sang-yul told protesters at Yonsei University. "Was it the police? No, the real culprit was Roh Tae-woo."

riot police fired a barrage of tear gas to stop them. Hundreds of tear gas tracers filled the air of western Seoul, looking like fireworks in the night sky. In a barrage lasting two hours, the tear gas was sometimes so thick one could not see more than four or five feet.

"Overthrow the murderous regime of Roh Tae-woo!" the protesters shouted. "Murderer!" they yelled, jabbing their fists in the air. Winds carried the gas throughout nearby residential and shopping areas, sending citizens scurrying for cover and hiding their eyes and faces. Traffic came to a halt in the western sector of the city of 10 million people.

In the southern city of Kwangju, a student shouting "Overthrow Roh Tae-woo!" peared paint thinner over herself and set herself on fire during a rally by 1,000 students at Chosun University, news reports said. She was rushed to a hospital, and doctors said she was in serious condition. Makeshift altars with Kang's picture, candles and flowers were set up at many university campuses.

Group begins appeal to fight Africa's famine

LONDON (AP) — Princess Anne launched an emergency appeal Monday to help millions of people facing imminent starvation in seven African nations — a famine that relief officials say could be the worst ever on the continent.

"While the Western world has been preoccupied with events in Eastern Europe and the gulf, a crisis has been developing in Africa on an unprecedented scale," the princess told a news conference sponsored by the aid agency Save the Children.

Despite warnings of famine from international organizations last fall, "the international response has been too little, too late. Only a fraction of the food aid needed ... has been pledged. Even less has been delivered," said Princess Anne, president of the relief group.

Other relief officials and a British Cabinet minister, blamed the United States for much of the delay in aid.

The World Bank estimates 27 million people face starvation and hunger in the areas affected by drought, crop failure, mass migration, civil war or corrupt governments.

A report by Save the Children said nearly half of those who will die of starvation in Sudan, Ethiopia, Liberia, Angola, Somalia, Mozambique and Malawi are infants and children.

Zimbabwe complains of too many homeless

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — President Robert Mugabe opened a U.N. conference on housing Monday by telling participants that one-quarter of the world's people are homeless or living in squalor.

The Zimbabwe leader urged the 13th session of the United Nations Commission on Human Settlements to intensify efforts toward providing decent shelter for all people by 2000. He said governments, independent aid agencies and private business should help the 1 billion people that the commission estimates are without homes.

Bengals, Vandal, Bobcat earn week's top thinslads honors

BOISE — Weber State steptechaser Brad Barton and Idaho State University pole vaulter Todd Foster have been honored as the Big Sky Conference men's outdoor track and field athletes of the week. League Commissioner Ron Stephenson says.

Among the women's ranks, University of Idaho distance runner Diane Knudson, Idaho State distance runner Becky Sondag, Boise State shot putter Samantha Cox and Eastern Washington shot put-discus thrower Nancy Kuiper earned the weekly award.

Barton of Salmon won the Oregon Invitational last week in the steptechase with a time of 8:41.25, which meets the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championship qualifying standard.

Pilots, Hornets favored at Canyon meet

By Jeff Hoekson
Times-News writer

JEROME — Thursday at the Bulldog Invitational the Glenna Ferry Pilots showed that they would be the team to beat in this week's Canyon Conference track meet.

Action gets underway Wednesday at 1 p.m. on the Jerome High School track. The Pilots won the Bulldog Invitational by 55 points and are going after their sixth straight conference title.

On the girls side the Declo Hornets will be looking to make it five in a row. As was the case last year the Pilots will get a challenge from Valley with Filer providing the Hornets their stiffest challenge.

The Pilots will be led by senior Sy Farris. Farris is the defending conference champ in the 100, 200, and 400 meter events. Hodge Hamilton will give the Pilots their added power in the 200 hurdles and 800, the same events he won at last year's meet.

Of the two, Farris looks to have the toughest job of repeating as the conference champ. His being able to retain those titles could also play a big part in the Pilots' success.

Keith Yost of Valley has the fastest time in the 100 coming into the meet, 11.3 seconds, in beating Farris at the Bulldog Invitational.

In the 200 and 400 meter races his challenge will come from Valley's Rob Morris. Morris defeated Farris in the 400 last Thursday and has a best this year of 50.6. In the 200 Farris defeated Morris but both recorded the same time.

The only other returning champion is Brian Hardy, Valley, in the long jump. Hardy has already jumped 21-10 inches and will possibly do battle with Farris in that event.

On the girls side of things five names sum things up: Thais Kidd, Brandy Morrison, Rena and Gina Miller, and Brandy Mason.

All five are defending champions and play a key role in their teams' success.

Thompson, Jones pace Bobcat win

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — T.J. Jones and T.J. Thompson led Burley High School to a sub-300 outing and a 14-stroke victory over Twin Falls at the Municipal Golf Course Monday.

Jones finished with a 3-over-par 71, one stroke ahead of Thompson in Burley's 299-313 triumph.

"They have the ability to be a really good golf team," said Twin Falls Coach Paul Stover of the Bobcats. "They've had been putting it all together. I imagine they're pretty pleased with their score."

Bobby McGreer topped the Bruins with a 73. "Bobby is playing really well for us right now," Stover said. "He's definitely our most consistent player."

Pace by Aaron Johnson's 79. Twin Falls won the JV match 330-343.

Instead of playing Boise at Muny Friday, Twin Falls has entered the Gate City Tournament at Riverside Golf Course in Pocatello. The tournament begins with a shotgun start at 9 a.m.

Rickey relishes chance for mark against Yankees

The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Slumping, sore and kind of sour about getting hit by a pitch, Rickey Henderson pulled even with Lou Brock.

But Oakland's Henderson gets warm all over knowing his first chance to eclipse Brock's all-time record comes against the New York Yankees, the only other team he's played for.

"The thought of getting the steal against New York is a dream-to-me," Henderson said after tying Brock's record with his 938th career steal in Oakland's 7-3 victory over California on Sunday. "I thought about that after I was taken out of the game."

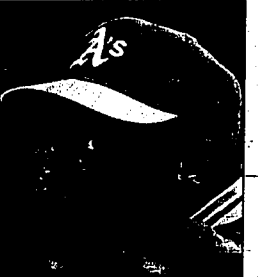

Henderson, in his 13th season, played for the Yankees from 1985-89 and owns the club record for career stolen bases at 326. "I have a lot of friends on the ballclub," Henderson said. "I think deep down in my heart, George (Steinbrenner) deserves something, so it will be nice to steal the base against his team."

With his next stolen base, he'll finally own the record.

"When he gets No. 939 he will have only himself to run against," said Brock, who watched Henderson from a boxseat behind the A's dugout Sunday.

"He will have to push himself to keep going."

Henderson is aiming for 1,500 stolen bases before calling it a career and his record should last a long time before anyone mounts a serious challenge.

Rickey Henderson (Steinbrenner) deserves something

"When he runs away with the stolen base record and keeps going, that's going to be something," said A's first baseman Mark McGwire. "Nobody is ever going to catch him, but if somebody does we won't be around to see it."

Henderson stole No. 938 in the sixth inning Sunday, with Angels reliever Jeff Robinson pitching and Lance Parrish catching. Henderson, who had been thrown out three times in a row and picked off since stealing No. 937 on opening day, reached first when Robinson hit him in the lower back.

Brock's record short of 1,114 stolen by the 'Flint Flash'

Arizona Republic

PHOENIX, Ariz. — If the Oakland Athletics' Rickey Henderson is serious about breaking the major-league record for stolen bases this season, he ought to forget about Lou Brock's paltry 938.

Instead, he should concentrate on the record set by Sophie Kurys, the "Flint Flash."

From 1943 to 1952, Kurys stole a whopping 1,114 bases in the All American Girls Professional Baseball League.

And don't tell Kurys her record does not count because she played in a women's league.

"We were a major-league team," said Kurys, 65, who now lives in Scottsdale, Ariz. "We played just as hard if not harder than our male counterparts, without the benefit of helmets, skin and elbow guards, batting gloves or shin guards."

And the women played in skirts. "They wanted us to be very feminine," Kurys said. "A man designed our uniforms, so you know how much he knew."

Apparently, not much.

Skirts posed a particular hazard for base thieves such as Kurys.

"I got plenty of strawberries," she said, referring to the nasty scrapes that bloomed on her upper right thigh from sliding into bases.

The women's league was developed by Chicago Cubs owner P.K. Wrigley, who feared that World War II would draft players from major-league teams and empty the stands.

He sent scouts into towns throughout the United States and Canada to find what Kurys called "super-great ballplayers" for women's teams in Racine and Kenosha, Wis., South Bend, Ind., and Rockford, Ill.

A scout found 17-year-old Kurys, a veteran of sandlot games, in her hometown of Flint, Mich. She signed with the Racine Belles as a second baseman, and the four carefully chaperoned teams boarded buses and trains to play at military posts and towns throughout the country.

Kurys, still angular and athletic, doesn't have much patience with today's overpaid baseball brass.

"They have all of the luxuries in the whole world, and they still complain," she said. "Their salaries are ridiculous."

California gelding Best Pal may be due at Derby

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Best Pal could be just that to horseplayers who believe in the law of averages.

He is a gelding. No gelding has won the Kentucky Derby since Clyde Van Dusen became the seventh to do it in 1929.

He is a California-bred. No California-bred has won the Derby since Decidedly became the third to do it in 1962.

And, volunteered trainer Ian Jory, "an Englishman has never won it."

There has never been an English owner or trainer of a Derby winner.

The late American jockey Johnny Longden, who won the Derby as a rider aboard Coak Fleet in 1943 and as a trainer with Majestic Prince in 1969, was born in England.

Best Pal, with exercise rider Felipe Guerrero, glides around the Churchill Downs track in a morning workout Monday in Louisville.

"If he wins, they might give me my citizenship," joked the 33-year-old Jory. Two English-bred colts have won the race — Omar Khayyam in 1917 and Tommy Lee in 1959. Jory didn't bring Best Pal to Churchill

Downs, however, because of the law of averages.

The gelding earned his way here by finishing second, a length behind Danard, in the Santa Anita Derby on April 6. He also finished third, a half-length behind winner Danard in the San Rafael on March 3 in his only other start this year.

Danard, also a gelding, probably would have been the favorite in Saturday's Derby but is out with a pulled tendon in his leg.

Before the Santa Anita Derby, owner John C. Mabee said Best Pal would have to win to get to Kentucky.

Best Pal's performance, while not a winning one, was an impressive one. "He was going easy, just loping along," Jory said. "He wasn't blowing when he pulled up."

Suddenly, the gelding was in the Derby picture. "It wasn't my decision, it was Mr. Mabee's," said Jory, who obviously agreed with it.

Cremins passes on Irish coaching job

ATLANTA — Bobby Cremins took himself out of the running for Notre Dame's vacant basketball coaching job Monday, deciding instead to remain at Georgia Tech.

Although he admitted that the Irish job was tempting, Cremins said, "My feeling for my players and the Georgia Tech family and friends was too strong for me to pursue any other interests right now."

"The next step was to go to Notre Dame for an interview. I decided not to do that. It might have been too tempting."

Cremins took over a Georgia Tech team in 1981 that had won only one Atlantic Coast Conference game in two years. Four years later, he led the Yellow Jackets to an ACC title.

Judge upholds judgment for Morgan

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge on Monday upheld a $540,000 jury award to baseball Hall of Famer Joe Morgan, who sued a policeman for roughing him up three years ago at Los Angeles International Airport.

"There was more than enough evidence to support the punitive damages," said U.S. District Judge Maxine Pflaetzler said.

The jury also awarded Morgan $90,000 in compensatory damages during a trial in February.

Soccer federation bans star from game

ZÜRICH, Switzerland — The International Federation of Association Football, soccer's governing body, on Monday officially imposed a worldwide ban on Diego Maradona following his suspension by the Italian league for a positive drug test.

FIFA said in a statement that its member associations would bar the Argentine star from all soccer activity until June 30, 1992.

Spokesman Guido Tognoni said FIFA waited until receipt of the official Italian judgment before announcing the suspension and described the move as a mere formality.

Giants slugger will serve suspension

NEW YORK — Kevin Mitchell of the San Francisco Giants, the National League's leading home-run hitter with seven, has withdrawn his appeal of his two-game suspension imposed by National League president Bill White.

Mitchell drew the penalty by charging pitcher Bruce Hurst of San Diego after being hit by a pitch and brushed back on April 10.

Mitchell will begin the suspension Tuesday night when the Giants play in Philadelphia.

Baseball newspaper beats expectations

WASHINGTON — USA Today's "Baseball Weekly" has sold more than 250,000 copies per week on average since its April 5 debut, USA Today said Monday.

The company, based in suburban Arlington, Va., said the baseball tabloid averaged 10 pages of advertising per 64-page issue. The company initially had hoped to sell about 125,000 papers a week with about eight pages of advertising, spokesman Steven Anderson said.

Irate Reds pitcher nails fan with toss

CINCINNATI — A woman claiming she was injured by a ball Cincinnati pitcher Rob Dibble threw into the stands after a game said Mouldy she has filed a complaint with the Reds.

Dibble hurled the ball into the center field stands at Riverfront Stadium in an outburst Sunday after giving up two runs to the Chicago Cubs. The Reds beat Chicago 4-3.

Meg Porter, 27, said she was packing to leave the stadium when she was hit. She said she never saw the ball. "I couldn't feel anything from the shoulder down. I couldn't talk," said Porter, whose left arm is bruised and in a splint. "He's known for his fastballs, and he could have really hurt somebody a lot worse than he hurt me."

Golf among programs Brown drops

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Brown University announced Monday that it is dropping four varsity sports in an effort to avert a projected budget deficit.

Men's water polo, men's golf, women's gymnastics and women's volleyball will be eliminated in the upcoming school year, saving about $75,000, the university said. The savings will be applied toward the $1.5 million deficit that is projected for the 1991-92 school year.

About 60 students participated in the sports that were canceled. Athletic Director David Raebig, in his first year, said the sports could continue at the varsity club level next year if athletes can raise their own funds.

Ex-pro starts Shawnee State program

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio — Al Oliver, who collected more than 2,700 hits during his 18-year major league career, was named on Monday to begin the baseball program at Shawnee State University.

Oliver, a Portsmouth native who played for Pittsburgh, Texas, Montreal, San Francisco, Philadelphia and Toronto, will be the first baseball coach at Shawnee State, which will begin play during the 1991-92 academic year. Oliver had a .303 lifetime batting average, 2,743 hits and 1,326 RBIs. He won the 1982 National League batting championship with a .331 average while with Montreal.

NBA nears midway in opening round

The Associated Press

Vlade Divac's play in the middle for the Los Angeles Lakers no longer is irritating to teammate Magic Johnson.

Divac, the 23-year-old Yugoslavian center, neutralized Houston center Hakeem Olajuwon as the Lakers took a 2-0 lead in their first-round series against the Rockets.

In the Lakers' 109-98 victory Saturday, Divac had a career playoff-high 23 points, 10 rebounds and three blocked shots, while Olajuwon had 23 points, 11 rebounds and one blocked shot. In Game 1, Divac had 17 points, 11 rebounds and five blocks, while Olajuwon had 22 points, 16 rebounds and three blocks.

Johnson said he's been waiting for two years for Divac to play this well. "I always wanted to see and dreamed about this, because I always knew we were only going to go as far as he can take us," said Johnson, who had 13 points and 21 assists for the Lakers in Game 2. "This inconsistency, we couldn't have, and right now, he isn't being inconsistent."

"He's never been this aggressive. He'd play lackadaisical. Now, he's all over, blocking shots. He's in on every play."

Divac said his first playoff experience a year ago taught him a lot. "You know, playoff and regular season is something different," he said. "Regular season, you can lose one, two games, five, 10, doesn't matter. Playoffs, losing is no good, like last year at Phoenix. We have to make big concentration in the playoffs."

No NBA playoff games were scheduled Monday night. Postseason play resumes tonight with six games. In addition to Los Angeles at Houston, it's Detroit at Atlanta, Chicago at New York, Milwaukee at Philadelphia, Portland at Seattle and Phoenix at Utah.

Wednesday night, Boston is at Indiana and San Antonio at Golden State. Top seeds Portland and Chicago, plus the Lakers and Philadelphia, are leading 2-0. The other best-of-5 series are 1-1.

Philadelphia is in a strong position because no NBA team has ever lost the first two games at home — as Milwaukee has — and then won a best-of-5 series.

"It's ours to lose," said the Sixers' Charles Oakley, who had 22 points, 13 rebounds and 10 assists in Saturday night's 116-112 overtime victory over the Bucks. "If we lose this series, it will be our own fault. If we win this, if we don't wrap it up at home in three or four, it will be a travesty."

The Bucks were seeded fourth in the Eastern Conference, while the 76ers were seeded No. 5. The teams split four regular-season games, each winning one on the other's home floor.

But Milwaukee, 33-8 at the Bradley Center during the regular season, did nothing with its home-court advantage.

Chuck Person was 16-for-24 from the field and 7-for-10 from 3-point range Sunday as Indiana evened its series against the Celtics with a 130-118 victory and took away the Atlantic Division champions' home-court advantage.

"I don't care who you would have put on Chuck, Dennis Rodman or anybody, nobody was going to stop him," teammate Reggie Miller said. Person broke the NBA playoff

NCAA considers new 3-point line

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The NCAA men's basketball rules committee began discussions Monday on whether to move the 3-point arc nine inches farther from the basket.

The 11-member committee is expected to issue a ruling by Wednesday, said Jim Marchiony, an NCAA spokesman.

NCAA and NAIA rules currently draw the semi-circle at 19 feet, 9 inches.

If the committee adopts the 20-6 distance, it would bring the NCAA in conformance with the international standard.

Other rules being considered would expand the use of television replays to assist officials, widen the free-throw lane and abolish the rule giving two free throws on the 10th team foul in each half.

Atlanta's Duane Ferrell makes sure Detroit's Bill Laimbeer doesn't interfere with his basket Friday in Michigan.

record of six 3-pointers held by Michael Cooper and Vernon Maxwell. "Person was unconvincible," Boston coach Chris Ford said. "We were able to score, we just weren't able to defend."

Danny Ainge also was hot from long distance Sunday night, scoring 16 of his 18 points in the fourth quarter as Portland beat Seattle 115-106.

Ainge, 3-for-10 in the first seven quarters of the playoffs, hit all three of his 3-point attempts in the final period as the Trail Blazers extended a two-point lead to as many as 19 points in the final minutes. "I wasn't concerned about Danny," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "I had a feeling he was going to snap out of it."

Jazz split on road, head home

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A split at Phoenix gives the Utah Jazz a chance to wrap up its NBA playoff series with the Suns at home this week.

But coach Jerry Sloan scoffs at the mention of any home-court advantage.

"There is no homecourt advantage in a playoff series like this," he warned Monday. "A look at last year is a good indication of how little the 'home court' means."

Sloan referred to Utah's 104-102 loss to the Suns in the fifth and deciding game of last year's first round. The thunderous Salt Palace crowd could stop Kevin Johnson's winning shot.

Phoenix went on to eliminate the Lakers, then lost the Western Conference championship to Portland.

"The Suns entertain no myths about the home-court advantage after being routed 129-90 in the best-of-5 series opener last Thursday in Phoenix. Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons' slot salvaged Saturday's second game," hammering out a 102-92 victory. "We're equal teams," said Fitzsimmons, who was 2-2 against Utah in regular season. "And even though we're going up there to Utah with a split and playing the next two on their court, I still think we're equal. We're going to go at it that way."

Sloan said it will take a full 48 minutes of gritty defense and patient offense for Utah to stop the Suns in Game 3, Tuesday night. "Defense, to me, is going to be the key," he said. "You can't afford to lose your concentration — even two or three plays, that's the ball game."

In Game 2, the play of Phoenix's guards proved pivotal. Johnson had 10 points and 12 assists on inside drives. Jeff Hornacek, who had just three points in the first game, led all scorers with 25 points.

Meanwhile, the Jazz bench — which scored 48 points in Utah's Game 1 victory — could manage only 15 in Saturday's loss.

Moog stops 35 shots as Bruins oust Canadiens from Stanley Cup play

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins advanced to the Stanley Cup semifinals for the third time in four years, Monday night, beating the Montreal Canadiens 2-0 in the goaltending of Andy Moog and goals by Dave Christian and Cam Neely.

Boston won the "Adams Division final 4-3, the first time in four attempts it has beaten Montreal in a seven-game series.

Moog, the only goalie used by the Bruins in their 13 playoff games, stopped 35 shots. Christian scored at 6:30 of the second period and Neely connected on a power play at 1:59 of the third.

Moog had a shutout until Stephan Lebeau scored a controversial goal with one minute remaining.

Lebeau backhanded the puck over the goal line during a scramble after Moog had knocked the net off its moorings.

Boston will be home Wednesday night for the start of the best-of-7 Wales Conference final against Pittsburgh. Both finished first in their divisions in the regular season. The Campbell Conference final matches Edmonton, which finished third in the Smythe Division, against Minnesota, fourth in the Norris.

In the last three seasons, the winner of the Adams final — Boston in 1988 and 1990 and Montreal in 1989 — advanced to the Stanley Cup final but lost.

Before winning three of the last four playoffs, the Bruins were 2-20 in playoff series against Montreal.

Both teams played cautiously, emphasizing defense, in the scoreless first period. The Bruins got the first break when Christian scored on a 30-foot wrist shot from the left circle. He carried the puck through center ice, and into the Montreal zone, then fired it between the legs of defenseman Alain Cote and under the right arm of goalie Patrick Roy.

Neely got his 12th goal, tying Los Angeles' Luc Robitaille for the playoff lead, 14 seconds after Brian Skrudland was penalized for interfering with defenseman Ken Hammond. It was Skrudland's third minor penalty of the game.

Neely took a hard, but seemingly harmless shot from the right side, five feet behind the Montreal blue line. Roy stuck out his catching glove, but the puck deflected off it and went in the net.

The Bruins nearly got the first goal of the game at 12:18 of the first period, but Ray Bourque's slap shot from the right point hit the right post.

At 14:41, Boston lost Ken Hodge, its second-line center, for the game with a shoulder injury sustained when he was checked from behind into the boards by Eric Desjardins. Results of X-rays were not disclosed.

Just 59 seconds into the second period, Moog stopped a shot by wide-open Russ Courtnall by dropping to the ice and stretching his pads across the crease.

Mike McPhee shot the rebound wide from 10 feet.

"Neither team won back-to-back games in the series."

Names of rape victims don't belong in print

The hottest debate in journalism circles these days is whether newspapers, radio and TV stations should report the names of rape victims.

It's an old controversy, revived by the decision by NBC News, and subsequently The New York Times and other newspapers, to report the name of the woman who accused William Smith, the nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, of raping her outside Kennedy's Palm Beach, Fla., house the day before Easter.

The Times-News as a matter of policy does not report the names of victims of sexual assaults — or alleged sexual assaults. The vast majority of newspapers and electronic media nationwide feel the same way.

We believe that a sexual assault victim, male or female, adult or child, shouldn't be a victim twice. NBC disagrees.

The network says it broke one of journalism's last taboos and reported the name of Smith's accuser because it was in the public's interest to know it.

More importantly, NBC says it could not justify protecting the identity of an individual making a so-far unsubstantiated charge that could ruin William Smith's life.

But the difference between William Smith and his accuser is that Smith will have his day in court, or the local district attorney will announce there's not enough evidence to charge him with a criminal offense and drop the case.

The woman won't have the same luxury.

Having already been humiliated publicly, she'll have her reputation called into question for years to come. The supermarket tabloids are already exploring her personal life, her past relationships, even her credit history.

Regardless of what happens to

Smith, normalcy for his accuser will be years of unwanted public attention and harassment.

And for what? She reported a rape. Some estimates are that fewer than one in 10 sexual assaults in this country are reported now.

It's a safe bet that the wake of the Palm-Beach case will discourage a few more women from reporting assaults.

There may be cases in which the media is justified in naming a rape victim, instances where the public's need to know is so compelling that it outweighs the accuser's right to privacy. But this isn't one of them.

NBC and the news organizations that followed its lead have done this woman an injustice, but they may have done even more damage to the public's perception of the media.

National polls taken since the Palm Beach incident show a large majority of Americans believe the press has a responsibility to protect the privacy of victims of sexual assault.

We think so, too. Some things are more important than selling newspapers or getting good Nielsen ratings.

For that reason, victims of rape and other sex crimes in the Magic Valley can be confident that their names won't appear in The Times-News. Though it's possible we'd feel compelled to publish a victim's name in some extraordinary case, we can't think of what kind of case that would be.

Certainly, if the Palm Beach case happened here, it wouldn't qualify. The suspect's famous name and his high-profile family don't erase the alleged victim's need for compassion.

The media's responsibility starts with putting the facts on the table, but it doesn't end there.

And you thought '88 election was nasty

Uncensored images of the Kurdish tragedy have diminished the euphoria many Americans felt after the victory over Iraq. Nonetheless, Republican strategists looking toward the 1992 elections plan to exploit that triumph to retain the White House and recapture the Senate.

They are not likely to be entirely successful. But the goal already is creating a tone that bodes ill for the political battles ahead. If you thought 1988 was a dirty campaign, you ain't seen nothing.

Willie Horton and the flag were the essential features of the GOP's 1988 strategy. Lee Atwater and Roger Ailes made Horton, the paroled murderer, Michael S. Dukakis' running mate. Appropriating the flag, the Bush campaign "stripped the bark" off Dukakis and his legitimacy as an American. Atwater, confronting death, apologized. His successors seem unwilling to let go of a winning combination.

Sen. Phil Gramm, Texas, chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, set the stage. He branded Democrats opposed to the war resolution "appeasement before-country liberals." Within days of the end of the war, he accused the opposition of trying to deprive Republicans of the spoils of victory. "As you know," he said, "the Bath party in Iraq and the Democratic Party in the United States are both working on their domestic agendas to make us forget the war."

Sen. John H. Sununu, the White House chief of staff, followed. Asked by a "Today" host on March 7, "Isn't there something sort of unavowable" about attacking Democrats "who voted their conscience?" he replied: "Oh, I think the country's going to have to make a decision on people's records in the election process, and I can't believe that the Democrats who fought really on a party basis to resist the president are going to expect that individual candidates may not bring that up. We're not going to bring it up at the White House, but I can't believe that they're going to expect everyone to ignore the vote they cast on the most important issue this country has had to deal with in about 40 years."

Clayton K. Yeutter, the new chairman of the Republican National Committee, kept the theme alive. On April 17, in his first news conference after replacing Atwater, he accused the Democrats of "isolationism." The Democrats' January vote was "one that is likely to be recalled over and over again by American voters as they evaluate candidates."

If Willie Horton personified the Republicans' charge that Democrats are "soft on crime," Saddam Hussein will be hoisted on the Democrats' back as the token of their "weakness on defense." Symbols, not reasonable evaluations of the efficacy of force to solve international problems, will be the content of political discourse — if present plans stay on track.

The brightest symbol of all is the flag. George Bush's visit to the New Jersey flag factory during the 1988 campaign is unforgettable. Crafted by Roger Ailes, Republican impresario, that production and lesser imitations helped wipe out Dukakis. Ailes now has produced CBS television's "All-Star Salute" to the home-coming troops. Though "most people think of me as a political guy," Ailes said, he "just wanted to do something for the troops." He expected "a strong effort on the part of the print media to tear (the shows) down in a cynical fashion. ... I see nothing wrong with flag-waving. I see nothing wrong with being proud of what America did in the war. I see nothing wrong with celebrating it ... for a year, if we want to, or 20 shows. Only the media gets upset by that kind of thing. The American people don't. They love it."

Sen. John A. Cade, R-Md., tried out the theme at a Republican Party Lincoln Day rally against incumbent Maryland Sen. Barbara Mikulski. "Wouldn't it be nice," he asked, "to have a member of the U.S. Senate who supports the president ... who supports the flag?"

Mikulski is feisty enough to take care of herself. Whether her party has the ability — or the willingness — to take care of itself, what promises to be a down-and-dirty campaign is another question. What the Democrats should say is this:

The internal strife in Iraq, the Arabian environmental disaster, and the continuing difficulties of the Arab-Israeli conflict prove once again that making war is easier than securing peace. No matter how heady the military victory, the bills for the latest "splendid little war" remain unpaid.

No point to Jerome math change

Are you aware what is happening to the math program at the Jerome Junior High? Your children who took pre-algebra are going to have to take general math next year instead of going on to algebra, unless they take it as an elective for 30 minutes a day. Thirty minutes is not enough time for these students to really grasp the concepts of algebra.

These students will be taking two math classes in one day. There is more homework in a math class because they have to do some drill to understand the concepts.

Do you want your child to lose one year of math?

The nation is crying for an increase in math and science skills and Jerome Junior High is getting rid of an effective program so all students will be in the same class learning at the same rate.

Colleges are using the college entrance tests (ACT and SAT) to award scholarships. They especially look at math and English grades.

If your child has one less year of math than they usually have, they are going to be competing with students who have had more math and they aren't going to get as much money.

Can you pay for your child to attend college at today's prices without help from scholarships?

If you don't want the algebra or pre-algebra taken out of the junior high call your school board member.

A lot of them are not aware of what is happening. We don't need to decrease students' skills, we need to increase them. These students are working hard in algebra in the eighth grade. Why destroy a good program?

Checking in again with Mr. Webster we find that the definition of occult is: hidden; concealed; secret; esoteric; etc. If you think about it, Jesus spoke in parables. His disciples even had trouble understanding him often times! If my memory serves me right, when Jesus was before Pilate, he said, hey, check out what I say to the people. I've hidden nothing, done nothing wrong. (Pardon my paraphrase. I wasn't sure which translation was the most correct.)

Even the religious leaders of his day would have been thinking to do with Jesus. He called them vipers! He called their father the devil!

The Bible speaks nothing of hypnotism. Anywhere. But it does mention in Genesis 2:21 that the Lord God put man into a deep sleep, took a rib and made woman (hypnosis). Mrs. Reagan, I believe that man has been in a trance ever since. The Bible doesn't mention waking man up.

Do you suppose that Jesus' message from man to awaken from the trance state of limited thinking, false beliefs, ignorance and to seek the Lord God with all their heart, mind and soul, might apply to you?

I believe that the most powerful words in the Bible, "Jesus wept," means that he looked out into time and space and saw you, me and suffering humanity. It doesn't say he stopped. I can only admonish you to continue your search for truth and knowledge. There has never been a documented case of harm from the use of hypnotism.

However, I thank God for Oprah, Geraldo and Donahue, who expose the occult practices of some righteous God-fearing folks. I invite you or anyone who does not fear truth to attend any of my classes on hypnotism free. You can know the truth, and the truth will set you free.

Dairy articles were misleading

In reference to two articles, "Dairies in crisis," which appeared Wednesday, April 17, and "Farmers group ... discuss dairy troubles," in the April 24 edition, you have reported some information which is very misleading. Idaho milk production did infact increase 15 percent from February to March, according to the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service. But if you take in consideration these factors, the information does not seem so flagrant.

First of all, there are three more days in March than there are in February. Other factors include weather, and also the fact that many dairymen start to calve out heifers in March to avoid winter damage. In short, milk production in March always has been substantially higher than February. Did you report the fact that milk production in February was 9 percent lower than January? You were also given that information from the IASS. This information, in the way it has been reported, makes Idaho dairymen look bad. But if the information had been qualified, the numbers look more reasonable.

I understand you have reported the information just the way it was given to you. After informing the IASS of last Wednesday's article, I was assured that they would take a hard look at the way this information is reported from now on. Also, Mr. Stallings' office informed me that Mr. Stallings advised of the article last Wednesday and told not to use the 15 percent figure.

Mr. Editor, this kind of misleading information can only do harm to the industry and therefore do harm to the entire economies of this valley. You see, it's not only the people directly involved with the production of milk, but the thousands that are affected indirectly. When the dairy industry in this state suffers, everyone loses. The amount of money and business generated from the dairy industry in this valley is staggering.

I believe the dairy industry in this valley has an image problem, and I feel The Times-News has had a big part in that. The information was correct, but reported in a very unprofessional and sensational manner. Other articles that I have read in your paper concerning the dairy industry in particular during the last 12 years, by and large, have demonstrated that same attitude. I would encourage and challenge The Times-News to promote the industry by reporting the kinds of information that would make the public aware of the benefits that this industry contributes to this valley.

DOE's plans may damage river

I want to express a concern that I have. The Department of Energy has plans to build nuclear weapons at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. I am worried because of DOE's past record with the disposal of radioactive waste. Along with their lack of accountability, I am fearful that damage to the Snake River Aquifer may be irreversible. Many people depend on the water from this aquifer for their livelihood. In jeopardizing the health of the public as well as the economic well-being of individuals dependant on the Snake River Aquifer, the DOE shows itself to be incomplete in addressing the concerns of Idaho.

It is up to citizens of Idaho to express their concerns about INEL becoming a nuclear weapons production facility. Please take part in the public hearings on the New Production Reactor. Participation in this process is the only way to ensure a lasting future in Idaho. I hope to see people from various backgrounds speaking out against the NPR at the hearing in Twin Falls on May 23. Registration for testifying can be done by calling 1-800-253-3446. Also, the Snake River Alliance is doing its part to help people become comfortable with their testimony. Call them at 726-7271; they are here for us.

Human life is worth 7 days

I am in favor of the seven-day waiting period on the Brady Bill because I know for a fact that it does save lives.

In January of 1973 a friend of mine who was under outpatient psychiatric treatment at Brentwood VA Hospital, Los Angeles, called me and told me she had bought a gun and that she was going to shoot her psychiatrist. I told her I didn't believe she was going to shoot her psychiatrist. I told her I didn't believe her, so she showed me the receipt from the gun shop where she purchased the gun. She said she had to wait seven days before she could pick it up.

I was concerned about my friend's threat to kill her psychiatrist, so I call the Los Angeles Police Department. The person I talked to said there was nothing the police could do until she committed the crime. So I called the V.A. Security Police at Brentwood and told them the situation. I asked them if they could keep my friend from picking up the gun. They said they certainly could and thanked me for calling.

The police could do nothing to prevent my friend from shooting her psychiatrist, but the seven-day waiting period did. Human life is worth, at the very minimum, a seven-day waiting period.

Local firm should be involved

Well, here we go again. The school district has hired a Boise firm to design our new high school. I wonder what the local architects are doing? Do you suppose it would be too much to ask to spend some local tax dollars on local businesses?

We just went through this whole thing on a bridge.

The local contractor was about $20,000-high, as I recall, so the bid went to a Utah firm. Taxes being what they are today, I suspect that the local company would have paid back the extra $20,000 in taxes right here. Local businesses may have received some benefit as well.

Did we need to spend the money at all? There must be tens of thousands of schools built throughout the nation every year. Are no plans available that are suitable for our purposes?

Maybe we could avoid another debacle like the O'Leary roof if we could see our way clear to use a proven and less costly plan.

Schools throughout the nation are converting to year-round schedules very successfully.

What is wrong with saving money instead of spending it foolishly on over capacity? The current buildings are vacant three months of the year. Yes, folks, that is overcapacity!

Vote ... on the school bond issue. Support the schools when they need it. Put your money in savings when they don't.

Business

WASHINGTON — Consumers increased their spending by 0.6 percent in March, the government reported Monday.

Analysts said the second monthly advance in that critical sector could mean that the end of the recession is near.

But they also noted that the Commerce Department report included a relatively weak 0.2 percent increase in personal incomes, which could restrain pocket books and dampen a recovery.

A second government report Monday said sales of new homes rose 1.0 percent, also the second monthly advance.

Personal consumption spending rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $37.7-trillion, up from $37.5-trillion the previous month, the department said.

And it revised the February rate from a 0.6 percent advance to an even larger 1.0 percent, the biggest gain since a 1.2 percent increase last June. It followed a 0.5 percent tumble in January.

Economists were encouraged by the back-to-back growth in consumer spending, which represents two-thirds of the nation's economic activity and is vital to any economic revival.

Incomes totaled $47.5 trillion, up from $47.3 trillion a month earlier, Commerce said. It was the second consecutive 0.2 percent monthly gain, wiping out a 0.4 percent loss in January.

In their joint report, Commerce and the Department of Housing and Urban Development said new home sales totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 490,000, up from 485,000 the previous month.

The departments also revised the February increase to an even stronger 18.6 percent. February sales originally were reported to have gained 16.2 percent, the first advance since a 3.3 percent gain last November. Sales in January had dropped 11.9 percent.

"It confirms our judgment that the bottom of the cycle was in January," said David P. Seiders, chief economist with the National Association of Home Builders. But he added that the recovery from the two-year housing bust would be moderate.

Disposable incomes — incomes after taxes — also rose 0.2 percent, the same as February's increase, Commerce report said. They had fallen 0.4 percent in January.

But with spending outpacing income growth, Americans' savings rate fell to 3.7 percent of after-tax income in March, the lowest since a similar rate was posted in November 1988.

A key component of the income category — wages and salaries — increased $4.2 billion after falling $200 million in February. It had plummeted $1.3 billion in January.

The spending and income figures were not adjusted for inflation. When adjusted, spending rose 0.5 percent following a 0.8 percent gain in February. Inflation-adjusted spending had plunged 1.0 percent in January.

Disposable incomes, when adjusted for inflation, posted a 0.2 percent advance after remaining unchanged the previous month.

Spending on durable goods — items ranging from automobiles to appliances expected to last more than three years — increased $7.2 billion after gaining $19.6 billion in February. The report said both months' increases were due primarily to purchases of motor vehicles.

Democrats want to field residents' ideas

BOISE — Idaho Democrats say they want to know what residents think and have created a statewide affirmative action committee to field those ideas.

State Democratic Party Chairman Mike Wetherell said Monday the committee will help the party expand its base.

The panel has elected Humberto Fuentes of Nampa as chairman. Fuentes has directed the Idaho Migrant Council, is a member of the Hispanic community and ran for the state Senate in the 1990 election.

School water being tested for toxins

SANDPOINT — Samples of water from the Northside Grade School were being sent to a Montana testing laboratory today to determine whether it was contaminated during an attempt to steal gasoline. About 50 gallons of unleaded gasoline was spilled and leaked onto the school grounds Saturday night, when someone attempted to steal gasoline from a 500-gallon tank, Bonner County School Superintendent Ed Humble said.

The Panhandle Health District was collecting samples of the school's water today to be sent to a lab in Billings, Mont., for analysis. The well was shut off and drinking water was being delivered to the school's 240 students pending completion of the tests, Humble said.

IP tries to keep lights on, save squirrels

BOISE — Idaho Power Co. has installed about 700 plastic covers over electrical connections on pole-mounted transformers in Boise to keep squirrels from short-circuiting lines as they scramble over the equipment.

Final figures are not in yet, but Idaho Power spokesman Jeff Beaman said results so far appear "very successful."

Using computer records to target areas that had been plagued with squirrel-related outages, Idaho Power hired contractors to begin installing the little plastic boxes last winter.

Officers complain of new disclosure law

POCATELLO — Extension of campaign finance disclosure to Idaho's county officers has sparked complaints from local officials because of its impact on anonymous contributions.

"This sounds like the typical legislation we pass in haste and spend five years trying to straighten out," Bonneville County Commissioner Edith Stanger said.

The new law imposes on county officeholders the same requirement as state candidates have operated under since the mid-1970s — public disclosure of the names of contributors of more than $50 along with the recipients of expenditures over that amount.

Man wants to keep island unto himself

COEUR D'ALENE — A Kootenai County man has vowed to "go the distance" to protect his manmade island from dredging in Lake Coeur d'Alene.

Marvin Erickson, a reforestation contractor, said he does not oppose the $1.1 million dredging project, but he wants his 2½-acre island left alone. Earlier this month, Erickson sued the state in 1st District Court, asking he be confirmed as owner of the island. That land sits on lake bottom that has been privately owned since 1875.

The state Department of Lands insists the island is an illegal fill, dredged from the bay 30 years ago, and as such belongs to the state.

Officials try to bring No. 2 city into 1990s

POCATELLO (AP) — In less than 10 years, Pocatello will be entering the 21st century. But at this point, Idaho's second-largest city seems to have been reaching the 1990s, city officials say.

Every time it appears Pocatello is making headway on economic revitalization, or rejuvenation of the downtown business district, or improving the infrastructure on the streets, past problems emerge.

"I think that's our biggest challenge ... being able to look forward for any length of time," Councilman Roger Chase said. "It seems we're always getting hammered because someone didn't think things out sufficiently."

The other five council members share the same concerns, but have different agendas on moving ahead. Take the downtown. Twelve years ago it was bustling with activity with few closed buildings. But with Chubbuck's Pine Ridge Mall construction, Pocatello's downtown hit hard times.

Buildings fell into disrepair, but because of the unique features of many of them, some residents pushed for creation of a downtown historic preservation district to maintain the area and attract commerce.

"We made a mistake when we made it an historic district," Chase maintained. "Some parts of the downtown are worth saving, others aren't. But because of the designation, our hands are tied."

Chase said until less-important buildings are removed, it will be hard to bring people back to the core. Councilman Greg Anderson said less significant structures should be removed for parking.

"But we must also recognize the unrealized potential of the downtown. Once a building is demolished, it's gone. We should give those who are pushing revitalization time to get the plan together," he said.

Saying the downtown does not mean being inflexible about cleaning out unwanted buildings, council members Karen McGee and Earl Pond said.

"We did not create the district to be unwieldy, nor is the ordinance cast in iron. If it is shown a building is not worth renovating, there must be the freedom to make those decisions," Pond said. "You also must remember the council has the last word."

The downtown plans dovetail with the city's program of beautification and neighborhood cleanup. But the council has been reluctant to come down too hard on homeowners.

"I think you're going to see a change in attitude on that," Pond said. "Particularly in the next few weeks."

He said the council may enact a neighborhood improvement ordinance to force violators to clean up their property.

A full-time code enforcement officer would work to ensure municipal codes on weeds, junk yards, and toxic materials are followed.

Caldwell police chief wants to fine-tune curfew ordinance

CALDWELL (AP) — Caldwell Police Chief Bob Sobba is pushing a curfew law patterned after one in Atlanta, Ga., to keep youngsters at home when they have no legitimate reason to be on the streets.

If approved by the City Council, it would order juveniles under 18 to go home from midnight to 6 a.m. Currently, 16- and 17-year-olds cannot be on the streets between 1 and 5 a.m. For kids under 16, curfew hours are midnight to 5 a.m.

The ordinance change targets curfew exceptions. Juveniles accompanied by a parent or guardian can be on the streets after curfew. Traveling to and from work is also allowed.

The final exception is for any "lawful social activity." But the current ordinance does not define the term and became a problem in a recent curfew case, Sobba said.

A juvenile repeat offender was arrested for firing a gun late at night. But when the case went to court, the judge threw it out because the definition of "lawful social activity" was too vague.

"According to that judge's interpretation and my interpretation of what he interpreted, shooting in downtown Caldwell is a lawful social activity," Sobba said. "Obviously, that's kind of concerning to me."

Sobba liked what he saw in Atlanta's rules. Examples of "lawful social activity" are clearly defined in the new ordinance. It also clearly states parents face a misdemeanor for not supervising their kids.

The enforcement clause is primarily for repeat offenders, Sobba stressed. Kids picked up for curfew violation will be monitored.

"What we're worried about is people that are running around back alleys with baseball bats at 2 a.m. in the morning," the chief said.

Even if parental prosecution becomes necessary, the police department would be happy with a five-day suspended sentence as a warning, Sobba said.

Judge refuses trial for former mayor

ROCKLAND (AP) — A Caribou County magistrate has refused to order the former mayor of Rockland to stand trial on charges of attempting to rape his teen-age foster daughter.

Magistrate Ronald Hart's refusal to press the case against Jon May cleared the way for May to return to his job as a teacher at Rockland High School.

Hart said there was not sufficient evidence to suggest May, 53, had attempted to molest the 17-year-old girl or that a crime had actually occurred.

Twin Falls man in fair condition after accident

TWIN FALLS — A 34-year-old Twin Falls man remained hospitalized Monday after being injured in an accident Saturday night.

Allan J. Knight was in fair condition at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, according to a hospital spokesman.

The accident occurred when his car was hit by a pickup in the intersection of Grandview Drive and South Park Avenue West, a Twin Falls County Sheriff's Department report says.

Knight was unharmed when he stopped at the intersection then pulled in front of the eastbound Christine Wise, 43, of Twin Falls. Wise struck Knight's car, totalling her pickup and causing $5,000 damage to Knight's car. Both were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. Wise, who was wearing a seat belt, was later released. Knight was not wearing a seat belt.

Knight was cited for reckless driving, carrying an open container of alcohol and driving without privileges.

Filer School - not Kimberly-sponsoring parents' night

FILER — The Filer School District — not the Kimberly School District as previously reported — is holding a special parents' night at 7:30 p.m. tonight in Room #9 of the middle school to discuss a three-day series of classes dealing with human sexuality that will be offered to all eighth-grade students.

The series, part of the district's health education curriculum, will include classes dealing with decision-making and will focus on the right to say no.

Margaret Wright, registered nurse with Public Health District V will be at the meeting to review the materials to be presented to the students. And she will answer questions about class content.

For more information, contact Wright at 734-5900 during regular business hours.

Home care business operator gets probation in fraud case

TWIN FALLS — The owner of a home health care business for the elderly and disabled was sentenced to probation and community service Monday for cheating the government out of more than $3,000.

Fifth District Judge Daniel Meehl sentenced Jolene Tuma, 45, to two years probation and 100 hours of community service for the felony charge of fraudulent procurement of public assistance.

Tuma, the owner of Quality Home Care Services, overbilled the state through Medicaid charges for $8,577 between June 1, 1989, and June 1, 1990. According to court documents filed by Tuma's Rupert attorney, Brent Nielson, she has repaid the money.

Tuma pleaded guilty to the charge in March and prosecutors agreed to recommend probation. Meehl also withheld judgement in the case, meaning the conviction can be erased from Tuma's record if she successfully completes her sentence.

He traded his winning tickets, for a $5 Idaho Super Lotto tickets and a $3 Idaho Fantastic ticket. The latter contained all five winning numbers, earning the truck driver, the grand prize.

Explorers locate spelunker during practice cave drill

JEROME — The Magic Valley Grotto cave explorers group spent four hours Sunday locating a spelunker hidden in Spidee Cave northwest of Wendell as part of a practice drill.

The drill was meant to determine the ability of the cavers to find and rescue a person lost in the many lava caves located throughout the Magic Valley.

Fourteen spelunkers and representatives from the Jerome Sheriff's Department participated in the rescue.

The cave exploration group is being trained as an official search and rescue group.

The Jerome County Sheriff Department has endorsed the group to assist with accidents and rescues in Magic Valley caves.

Man faces felony charge in shooting

TWIN FALLS — Bleeding from a shotgun wound, Frankie Medlock begged her ex-husband not to shoot her again and then watched as he turned the gun on himself, the Twin Falls woman told police.

James K. Medlock, 31, of Twin Falls was arrested Monday evening immediately after his release from Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, where he had been treated for a chin wound.

An arrest warrant had been issued earlier in the day on a felony count of aggravated battery with the intent to commit a serious felony. He was taken to the Twin Falls County jail, with bond set at $35,000. His ex-wife, 28-year-old Frankie Medlock, also was released from the hospital Monday after being treated for a

Construction plugs along

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley construction industry hasn't taken off after the winter, but it also hasn't decided whether to participate in the national recession.

The value of building permits went down in seven of 12 Magic Valley locations surveyed by First Security Bank's latest monthly construction report.

The Wood River Valley continues to be slow after several years of a building boom. In fact, Twin Falls County and the city of Twin Falls have taken over as the most popular building area.

Construction throughout the United States may be bottoming out, the national construction-information company F.W. Dodge reported. The company predicts a turn-around in the nation's construction recession around mid-year, and it estimates 1991's construction totals will be only 4 percent below last year.

Field burn run rampant destroys 75 timber acres

By Michael Hofferber
Times-News correspondent

BELLEVUE — A field burn raged into a forest fire in southern Blaine County Sunday afternoon, consuming 75 acres of brush and timber before firefighters from seven separate agencies brought it under control.

As of Monday afternoon, the source and reason for the fire was still being investigated, according to Dan McKenna, fire chief for the Wood River Rural Fire Department. No fire permit had been issued for the site where the blaze occurred.

"It started in an open field and spread to the brush and trees," McKenna reported.

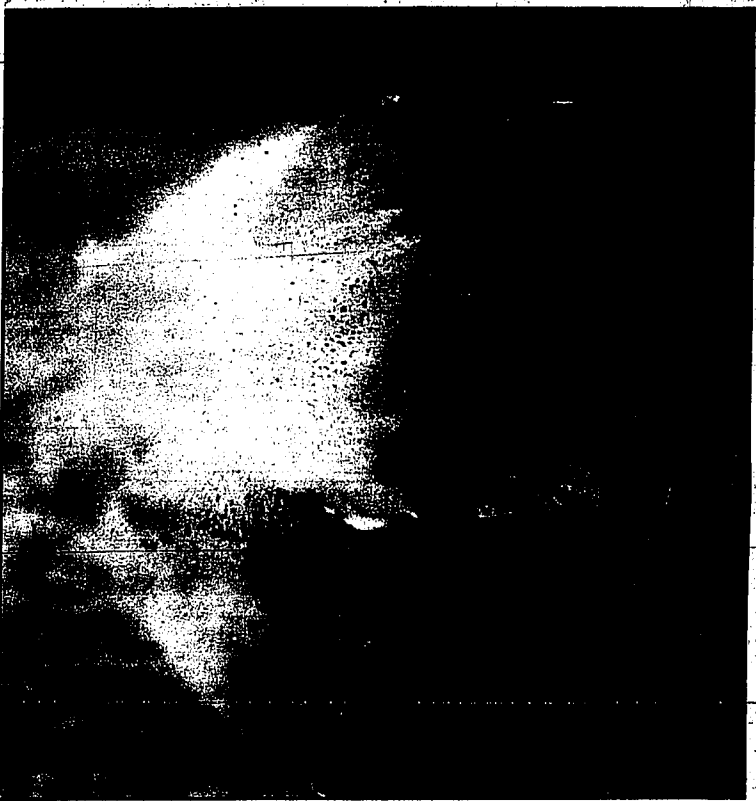

"The wind was really gusting." Trees on several different properties in the Bradford Road area west of Bellevue burned before firefighters from Wood River, Ketchum, Sun Valley, Hailey, the Bureau of Land Management and the Sawtooth National Forest could put out the fire.

The fire was reported at 2:42 p.m. and was brought under control five hours later.

Wood River Rural firemen fought four smaller fires last week, all the result of poorly planned field burning.

"It's a case of people not showing good judgment and not calling ahead to get their permits," said McKenna.

Bleak water year predicted for Upper Snake River

The Associated Press

BURLEY — Boaters and anglers may be left high and dry again this year as water stored in Upper Snake River reservoirs is carefully apportioned to irrigators.

Although cooler temperatures and precipitation this spring have delayed drawdowns from the reservoirs, Bureau of Reclamation officials still predict a bleak water year.

The Upper Snake River system has about 750,000 acre-feet less in storage than last year, with Palisades Reservoir the primary contributor to the deficit, said John Dooley, project superintendent of the Minidoka Project Office. It is 650,000-acre-feet below last year at this time.

"It is not the worst-case scenario, but we are in a fairly severe situation," said Mike Beus, bureau hydrologist in Burley.

To fulfill water rights of irrigators, Jackson Lake will be lowered to ease the shortage at Palisades downstream.

The latter reservoir is expected to be depleted by mid-October, holding only 201,000 acre-feet to support the fish and supply head for hydroelectric generation.

Beus predicted Jackson Lake will fall to 70,000 acre-feet, and the boat ramp at Coulter Bay Marina will be unusable by the second week in August. Others can be counted on to go out of use several weeks later.

However, if irrigation demands are less than anticipated in August and September, releases may be reduced to store water in Jackson Lake.

Dooley said the use of water from American Falls Reservoir will be similar to last year.

The reservoir was at 92 percent of capacity April 15, but probably will be exhausted by late summer.

However, any water savings created by cool or rainy weather will not result in reducing releases from American Falls.

The bureau plans to cut releases only from the upstream reservoirs.

Beus added that his comments are only predictions.

"Ultimately, I think, we are going to be proven pessimistic in our projections and it will turn out to be a little better than we thought," he said.

Residents may have gained ground in street protest

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Property owners near the Falls Avenue and Locust Street intersection might have persuaded the Twin Falls City Council to scale back plans for widening the intersection, adding turning lanes and installing a traffic signal.

About 25 area residents visited the council at its work session Monday to repeat their wishes that the intersection not be widened as the city plans. Residents said they fear losing part of their yards if the intersection is widened, adding turning lanes of way along Falls leading to Locust.

Some people said the city left them out of the $160,000 project's planning.

Cityman Gale Kleinkopf suggested that all but the northwest corner of the intersection be widened. Kleinkopf wants a traffic signal installed but suggested that the city not buy right of way along Falls Avenue to add turning lanes just yet.

Under Kleinkopf's plan, residents would lose far less property. Council members likely will vote on the suggestion next Monday. Whether it passes might depend on where traffic signals for the intersection are placed.

The intersection probably will be widened in a few years. Installing traffic signals now only to dig them up in a few years for a wider intersection would waste a lot of money, said City Manager Tom Courtney.

"The whole idea is to not have to come back four or five years from now and redo what we're doing now," Courtney said.

If residents agree to let the signals be placed far enough back from the intersection — possibly into some of their yards — the signals would not have to be moved in the future and council members might approve the scaled-back plan.

Residents were unhappy with more than just the project plan.

"I never got one piece of information from anyone (in the city)," said Lowell Willis, who owns two pieces of property near the intersection.

Dave McClymonds, of 1426 Falls Ave. E., said some of his phone discussions with city workers were not friendly.

"They seemed to have a 'We can do this, and we're going to do it' attitude," McClymonds said.

Others residents said they learned about the project when they saw workers in their yards staking out the boundaries of the proposed project. They also said city workers had told them that Falls definitely would be widened in a few years.

Widening Falls is part of the city master street plan, but probably will not happen as soon as area residents fear.

Courtney agreed there was a problem with the city notifying all property owners who would be affected by the project.

Mayor Tom Condie disagreed that the project has not received publicity. It was approved more than a year ago, with lively debate, as well as a number of newspaper articles, he said.

Most residents agreed a traffic signal is needed but said they did not want one that

Challis Forest director started as smoke jumper 25 years ago

CHALLIS (AP) — Challis National Forest Superintendent Chuck Wildes, 48, made his first visit to the central Idaho forest a quarter of a century ago — via parachute.

The recently chosen supervisor worked as a smoke jumper during his years in the forest program at the University of Montana.

It was then that he first "dropped in" for a quick, hot, and dirty visit to the forest, never dreaming that 25 years later he would return as supervisor.

"I don't even remember where it was we landed," he said.

But this time around, he intends to stay and get acquainted. Wildes has worked his way up the bureaucratic ladder of public land management in Arizona, including stints as a fire lookout, smokechaser, smokejumper, and on trail maintenance crews.

Although Wildes comes to Challis after a six-year stint in Phoenix as deputy forest supervisor on the Tonto National Forest, the town of 1,200 rates as the second-largest place he has ever lived. So he brings with him an understanding of rural communities and grassroots decision-making.

"I believe in decentralization," he said. "I believe the Forest Service should be out on the ground working with the people it serves."

Wildes says he intends to hire and contract business locally as much as possible, and involve the local public in the decision-making process.

"Developing public trust is the key to public land management," he said.

"I don't think there should be any place out on the forest that we can't take our strongest critic," he said. "If we're doing something right, I think people should see it. But, if we're doing something wrong, I think it should be brought to our attention."

Wildes looks for livestock grazing on public lands to continue to be a key environmental issue, and said the Challis Forest has plenty of room for improvement. But Wildes said he does not buy the rallying cry of some environmentalists, "Cattle Free by '93." He thinks the current stocking numbers on the Challis can be maintained, if range management is improved, by both the users and the Forest Service.

"If we're going to keep grazing, we must do it right," he said. "An area can support a lot of livestock with the right kind of management."

Wildes said he thinks it is time to move past the age-old battle of grazing rights versus privilege.

"The rights versus privilege issue has been determined in the courts," he said. "If we continue to focus on that, we're not going to get very far."

As for the potential effect on the Challis of listing some salmon as endangered species, Wildes said, "My gut feeling is, we won't be affected very much."

Despite the fact that timber sales on the Challis have been marginally profitable at best, Wildes said he does not expect a proposal to eliminate below-cost timber sales to have much effect on the forest's current annual sale level of 3.4 million board feet. If anything, he said, the policy will simply force timber managers to be more attuned to forest health.

Wildes' move to the Challis — now entering its sixth year of drought — has brought him back to firefighting. Only now, instead of hand-and-shovel combat on the ground, he is greasing all the administrative wheels in preparation for a get-tough fire season.

Gem court rules spouse has claim to inheritance income after divorce

BOISE (AP) — The income from an inheritance a spouse receives is community property, even if it arrives after divorce proceedings, the Idaho Supreme Court has ruled.

Upon the death of his father in 1964, Ray Barlow was guaranteed 30 percent of the income from liquidating the family business holdings including ranches in Idaho, Oregon and Washington. The trustee's work to liquidate the trust assets took well over a decade to accomplish.

It was during that time that Ray and Frances Barlow were divorced in 1976. Some $160,000 came in to Ray Barlow before the divorce became official in 1977; he continued to receive distributions totalling $315,000.

Frances Barlow, now McDonald, filed against her former husband, alleging fraud to justify modifying the divorce decree. The trial court ruled part of the $160,000 received before the divorce decree was community property and modified it.

Former Glens Ferry man wins recognition as teacher of the year

FORT HALL (AP) — The Shoshone-Bannock School's science teacher, a former Glens Ferry area man who uses a chemistry flask for a coffee cup, is the 1991 National Indian School Board Association's teacher of the year.

Ed Galindo, 36, said he was very surprised to learn he won the honor because there are 137 tribes in the organization and some tribes, such as the Navajo, have several schools.

Galindo, grew up in the Glens Ferry area, attended the College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls and earned an animal science degree from the University of Idaho, as well as his teaching certificate from Idaho State.

"I've always been interested in science," said Galindo. "I'm naturally curious, and it rubs off on my students."

His students in grades 6-12 have made some remarkable achievements during the six years Galindo has been there.

A high school team in 1986 finished second in the regional academic decathlon. His chemistry students have scored in the 70th percentile on the National Chemistry Exam.

Galindo said he was very surprised to learn he won the honor because there are 137 tribes in the organization and some tribes, such as the Navajo, have several schools.

"Every school should have a Mr. Ed," said Alberta Friday, Sho-Ban education director.

The students trust and confide in him, and he, in turn, builds their self-esteem.

Galindo said his grandmother was leading to the intersection and City Engineer Gary Young said the count showed a strong need for a signal.

Residents said the city should extend Locust to Pole Line road as an alternate route to Blue Lakes Boulevard North and finish other street projects in the area before widening the Locust and Falls intersection.

If it merits widening in the future, the city could again consider the project, they said.

wound to her leg and buttocks.

An argument over the divorced couple's child led up to the shooting early Sunday morning. The Medlocks had been living together in the south Twin Falls apartment, according to James John, one of two witnesses interviewed by police.

Frankie Medlock told police from her hospital bed Sunday that she had returned to her apartment, 25 Pleasant Road, No. 31, at 1 a.m. when John told her that James Medlock had taken their daughter an hour earlier.

ment to find him, she told police. After taking the baby inside the apartment, the couple went back outside to retrieve the baby's bottle from James Medlock's pickup, John and another witness told police.

It was then that Medlock pulled a shotgun from his pickup, Frankie Medlock told police. As she ran back toward the apartment, she heard a shot, she said. The shot hit a parked car, according to a police affidavit filed with the criminal complaint against James Medlock.

A second shot hit Frankie Medlock in the right leg and she fell to the ground, the affidavit says. James Medlock walked up to her and pointed the gun at her while she begged him not to shoot, the affidavit says.

"Frankie said he then put the gun under his own chin and fired the gun," the affidavit says.

James Medlock apparently was trying to shoot himself in the head but tipped his head too far back and shot off part of his chin, said Capt. Gary Corder, commander of the Twin Falls police detective division.

Officer Chuck Dudley was the first to arrive at the scene, according to police reports. Dudley reported he found James Medlock lying on the ground, smoking a cigarette. Medlock told Dudley he had "shot his wife and then shot himself," the police affidavit says.

Building

March, three-month totals were less than in 1990.

But 1991's activity was still 25 percent higher than 1989. The comparison with 1989 suggests Idaho's construction industry remains healthy, First Security said.

First Security collects building permit data from most, but not all, locations in the state.

Its report includes all types of construction.

Here are the total permit and permit values for all types of construction issued during the first three months of 1991 and 1990:

- Gooding: six permits for $85,200 in 1991; four permits for $42,176 in 1990.
- Halle: 36 for $1.4 million in 1991; 34 for $2.4 million in 1990.
- Ketchum: 18 for $684,500 in 1991; 22 for $3.5 million in 1990.
- Suz Valley: 11 for $1.4 million in 1991; 26 for $4 million in 1990.
- Blaine County unincorporated: 13 for $1.4 million in 1991; 26 for $3.1 million in 1990.
- Blaine County unincorporated: 12 for $54,690 in 1991; five for $42,815 in 1990.
- Shoshone: three for $98,000 in 1991; three for $61,200 in 1990.
- Twin Falls City: 75 for $5 million in 1991; 78 for $3.1 million in 1990.
- Twin Falls County unincorporated: 18 for $311,212 in 1991; 14 for $384,319 in 1990.
- Burley: six for $313,800 in 1991; three for $103,000 in 1990.
- Rupert: 12 for $216,368 in 1991; 14 for $508,260 in 1990.
- Minidoka County unincorporated: 22 for $451,940 in 1991; 24 for $893,634 in 1990.

Is 'fish flush' to save salmon waste of time?

The Associated Press

LOWER GRANITE DAM, Wash. — Biologists, politicians and Snake River users continue to debate whether an experiment to flush young salmon downstream is more than water over the dam.

Water levels in reservoirs behind five dams were drawn down three to five feet this past week to help hasten the downstream migration of young salmon.

The idea is that less water-in-lack-water pools will make the Snake River flow faster and flush the young salmon, called smolts, to the sea more quickly.

But the program, which began Wednesday, has critics who say they doubt it will have the intended effect of saving stocks of wild salmon.

"This is really just a demonstration of good faith by the corps. It really isn't going to speed up out-migration more than a few hours," said John McKern, a fish and wildlife biologist in charge of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers programs to get fish past dam turbines and to the ocean.

"With stream flows the way they are now, it takes fish 60 to 90 days to get to the ocean," he said. "The draw down might change that, cumulatively, one day."

Before the dams were built, fish were swept from spawning grounds in central Idaho to the Pacific Ocean in as few as 10 days, he said.

If the drawdown plan is expanded next spring, it could mean costly disruptions of hydroelectricity generation, irrigation, barge traffic and recreation.

Getting wild salmon up and down the river is considered crucial to preserving the species' genetic diversity, but raised in hatcheries are more susceptible to viruses and diseases because of their concentrations, biologists say.

Wild fish also seem to have better survival traits than those raised in hatcheries and fisheries managers think it is important to save wild stocks so those traits aren't lost, Rod Nichols of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game said.

Although the region's hatcheries pump out millions of fish each year, wild salmon stocks have dwindled from an estimated 16 million in the 1880s to fewer than 2.5 million today.

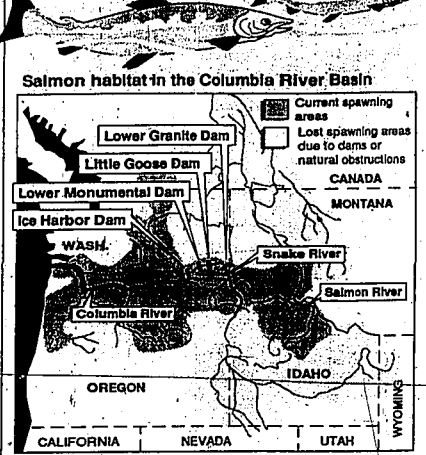

Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus, whose state's wild salmon are being lost and who wanted a more drastic reservoir draw down, said the plan won't work unless more water is spilled.

"Bringing those pool levels to their minimum levels is just the illusion that something is being done for the fish," he said.

The corps, which built and operates the dams, will keep reservoirs at minimum operating levels through May at Lower Granite; Little Goose, Lower Monumental and Ice Harbor dams on the Snake River in Washington.

At Dworshak Dam on Idaho's Clearwater River, the Snake River tributary — the corps will release 400,000 acre feet this month and 600,000 more in May.

Discussions have begun among the states and fish management agencies for an even bigger flush program next year.

But Andrus — whose state has not had a general salmon fishing season since 1977 — said each year the massive flush is delayed means another generation of wild stock that is lost forever.

He blames downstream interests, such as timber and fisheries in the Pacific and commercial and sport fishermen in the Columbia River, for depleting stocks of fish destined for spawning grounds and hatcheries in Idaho.

The fish flush program is part of a recent effort to save wild stocks of Snake River salmon, which the National Marine Fisheries Service is considering for listing as endangered species.

"That decision is expected in early

June, regardless of the outcome of the draw down experiment.

Already, one species of Snake River salmon has been recommended and is being studied for listing. Some say the Snake River sockeye salmon may have been extant as early as 1911, when a dam blocked access to spawning grounds for more than 20 years.

Early predictions that the listings could drastically affect the region's economy were overblown, said Dan Silver, an aide to Gov. Booth Gardner and policy maker.

No one group is expected to suffer the way timber-dependent coastal communities did from decisions to protect the northern spotted owl, he said.

"The economic impacts will be not nearly as severe as the spotted owl was," he said. "Because the problem is spread across such a large geographic area and among so many interest groups, all will share in the rec."

Meanwhile, recommendations from a mixture of river users and conservationists — known as the Salmon Summit — are expected to be sent to Congress soon.

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., who convened the talks, has scheduled a congressional field hearing May 2 at Portland on the group's recommendations.

The draw down plan is but a portion of the fish-saving plans that came out of the summit. Many issues, including long-term strategies such as hatchery enhancements, catch limits and managing Columbia River flows, remain unresolved.

Generator turbines and inefficient fish ladders at the region's hydroelectric dams are blamed for the demise of salmon.

But McKern said screens and programs to truck and barge fish around dams rescue more than 90 percent of the young salmon that show up at the dam's turbine face.

Nichols said results of barging are mixed and young chinook salmon have not survived the rides.

Overfishing, natural predators and depredation of habitat also should share the blame, McKern said.

While Andrus disagrees with McKern's assessment of the fish flush results, he does agree that downstream fishing interests need to do more to help.

"Downstream interests have not contributed one thing to the solution," he said. "People offshore and by the ocean and in the lower Columbia River continue to harvest fish that are absolutely necessary for propagation of our wild stock."

While the experiment continues, the benefits of flushing young fish compared to transporting them around dams continue to be debated.

"Everybody's got a theory, but no one actually knows," Silver said.

One drawback of increasing flows to help young fish get down stream is that they disrupt the upstream return of spawning adult spring chinook, McKern said.

As the draw down began at Lower Granite, about 15 miles west of Pullman, biologists trapped and diverted some 87,000 smolts. Meanwhile, only 14 adult chinook, said past a co. ing station on their way upstream.

Nearby, gulls wheeled and dipped into the turbulent waters in front of the grey concrete dam to dine on the remains of fish that swam around screens and into the six-bladed turbine spinning 90 times a minute.

The corps contends that it is not authorized to draw the pools down below levels considered the minimum necessary to operate locks and dams.

Irrigators, barge companies, mariners and others who built structures based on the corps' operating levels could be left high and dry, missing the threat of costly litigation, McKern said.

Andrus said he would encourage Hatfield and others in Congress to "redirect" the corps to allow deeper pool reductions.

Crews take on Mother Nature to clear highway

SEATTLE (AP) — State highway crews are braving avalanches and towering snowpaks as they scramble to reopen the scenic North Cascades Highway by Friday.

If no new avalanches bury the highway's remote Washington Pass, the road will be open by week's end — about two weeks later than the April 21 target date, said Bob Spratt, a state Department of Transportation engineer in Wenatchee.

The delay has kept cash registers quiet from Twisp to Marblemount. The mom-and-pop grocery stores, restaurants, gas stations and hotels dotting state Route 24 depend on travelers who choose the highway in warm weather for its spectacular alpine scenery.

"You can tell through your (cash register) till when the pass opens and closes," said Gene Walker, Winthrop's Chamber of Commerce president and owner of the Tenderfoot general store.

Efforts to reopen the pass this year have been hampered by repeated slides, record snowpack and equipment breakdowns, according to workers.

Two highway crews are assigned to clear the 63-mile road. One team starts from the east, near the proposed Early Winters resort near Mazama. The other starts digging from the west, near Ross Dam.

Spratt estimates it may cost $200,000, nearly twice the annual average, to clear and repair the pass. Under pressure from Eastern Washington communities, the state Transportation Department had promised to have the highway open for the opening day of fishing season, April 21.

But that was before a three-day blizzard dumped nearly four feet of snow on the road, erasing the crews' progress.

This year's snowpack, the deepest since the highway opened in 1972, towers 11 feet above the roadbed in places.

"It's going to be like driving through a tunnel across the pass this year because of the height of the snow bank," Spratt said.

Heavy snowfall and last fall's torrential rains have washed out several sections of the highway. They are being fixed temporarily so the road can open, but more construction work will be needed this summer. Crews have worked 10-hour days, six and sometimes seven days a week since mid-March to dig out the road. And their efforts will be erased in six or seven months, when winter returns.

Deadline nears for telling us your mom's best advice

Time is running out to reward your mom for all her wise words. We want to hear about the best advice your mom ever gave you. Two entrants will win $10 gift certificates to treat their moms to a great Mother's Day breakfast at Sodbuster Restaurant in Twin Falls. Think back: What words of wisdom from your mom still echo in your mind? (She could have said them yesterday... or 20 years ago or more.)

How has she helped you negotiate life's path? How has she helped you to love, learn and laugh?

One gift certificate will go to an entrant under 18. The other will be awarded to an adult who writes in about her or his own mother. Talk about making Mother's Day gift shopping easy!

Send us your entry by Friday. We'll be featuring your mothers' wise words in a story on Mother's Day, May 12. We'll also announce the winners that day... but the winners will receive their gift certificates in plenty of time to treat their moms to that special Mother's Day breakfast.

Twin Falls boy an Eagle Scout

TWIN FALLS — Morgan Williams, 15, son of Spencer and Valerie Williams of Twin Falls, has earned the Eagle Scout Award. The Eagle is the highest award attainable in the Boy Scouts of America's advancement program.

A course designed to present the award to Morgan is scheduled for 5 p.m. Sunday at the LDS Church, 667 Harrison St. N. Friends are invited to attend the court of honor.

For his Eagle service project, Morgan built two bicycle racks to be used at the LDS Church. He supervised nine scouts in this weeklong project. He is a member of Troop 79 sponsored by the Twin Falls LDS 8th Ward.

Morgan has been involved with the Twin Falls Suzuki Violin Association, Red Cross Lifesaving and in theater productions with JUMP Co., North Side Playhouse and the Dilettantes.

Events celebrate archaeology

TWIN FALLS — The Herrett Museum and the Snake River Chapter of the Idaho Archaeological Society plan to co-host an open house from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Thursday.

This event is being offered as part of Idaho Archaeology Week, April 29-May 4. Idaho Archaeology Week is held each year to help focus attention on the many important archaeological resources in Idaho. Other events are being held throughout the state during the week.

The open house will include demonstrations of flintknapping, beadworking, atlatl throwing and rock art painting. Two videotape programs, "The Earth is Our Home" and "A Search for Vanished People," will be shown on a large-screen projector.

A special feature of this year's open house will include the unveiling of a replica of a northern Great Basin-style prehistoric winter dwelling built by Kevin Wright of Twin Falls. This conical-shaped structure is made of willow and cattails and is an accurate replica of one form of house used by prehistoric people who lived in our area.

The open house is free and refreshments will be served. Contact Jim Woods or Wilma Titmus at the museum, 733-9534, extension 356.

Ex-smoker not silent despite loss of voice

DEAR ABBY: May this 80-year-old Abby fan thank you for your column urging smokers to quit smoking? That column was more powerful than all the anti-smoking campaigns put together. I am a former golf pro who had my vocal cords surgically removed many years ago due to a three-pack-a-day habit.

As a "laryngectomee" myself, I am submitting a poem that I hope you will think worth of printing.

A LARYNGECTOMEE'S LAMENT

"Your life or your voice," sir — you must make a choice, sir."
"My life," I said, feeling quite bitter.

They then cut the larynx, the organs and pharynx
Connecting my lungs, snout and "spitter."

So now, I'm unspoken, silence unbroken, except when I pound, stomp or swallow.

My nose is a coma, I breathe through a stoma, a path no aroma can follow.

Rockclimbing offered in May at City of Rocks

TWIN FALLS — Rockclimbing II, a course designed for intermediate and above-level climbers, is planned for May 11-12 at the Oakley City of Rocks.

The course will emphasize longer and more difficult climbing situations, as well as techniques for use in lead climbing.

All equipment, excluding rock shoes, will be provided. Shoes can be rented from the guide service for $10 per pair. This class will be instructed by a licensed professional guiding/mountaineering/climbing company.

For more information, call 733-9664, Ext. 272, or the instructors at 774-3324. The cost is $135.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

How came I to be, a voice answer?

"An electronic aid is your answer," The doctor did preach in his neat little speech

"Self-pity is much worse than cancer."

— DEAN P. BLUM, PRESIDENT, TRI-COUNTY NEW VOICE CLUB, DENVER, ILL.

DEAR ABBY: How come you never say anything negative about cigar smokers? Numerous articles have been written about how bad cigarettes are, but very few people mention cigars.

My husband smokes one or two cigars a day and claims it isn't harmful to his health because he doesn't inhale. He also insists that the secondhand cigar smoke is not harmful to the people around him. Our smell and car reek from the awful smoke.

What's the story, Abby?

— IRENE IN EL CAJON

DEAR IRENE: Cigar smoke is no less damaging than cigarette smoke, but you are right — there are fewer complaints about secondhand cigar smoke. (Perhaps it's because women identify cigar smoke with their kindly, old grandfathers. Or they are too overcome to speak.)

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I recently lost our cat that we raised from a tiny kitten. We had "Sadie" for 15 years, and because we never had any children, Sadie was our "baby." If we knew how old in human years Sadie would be, perhaps we could deal with her death much better. Please help us. We are both finding this loss hard to get over.

— MISSING SADIE
The first six months of a cat's life equal 13 years; the second six months equal eight years — therefore, the first cat year equals 21 human years. The second cat year equals 10 human years, and each subsequent year equals three human years. Thus, Sadie's 15 years of life are equivalent to threescore and 10 for a human.

Since you are having a difficult time dealing with the loss of your beloved pet, which by no means is unusual, ask your veterinarian to recommend a support group. There is much comfort in sharing your feelings with others who have lived through a similar experience.

Please accept my sincere sympathy.

Important domestic adjustment takes place in June, could involve actual change of residence or marital status.

LARIES (March 21-April 19): What "held you back" loosens grip, you'll have more freedom, you'll make fresh start, and you'll be "rewarded" for individuality. Focus on initiative, courage, experience relating to occult.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Family reunions featured — legal battle won and you'll celebrate as result. Spotlight also on marital status, public image, money held in escrow. Cancer, Capricorn persons represented.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You'll say, "This is my kind of day!" Spotlight on versatility, humor, diversity, different mode of transportation. Relative, once skeptical, becomes vigorous ally. Marital status considered.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concentrate on basic issues, tasks that have been pushed aside. Remove safety hazards, rebuild on solid structure, show the world you have confidence, will succeed. Scorpio plays major role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emphasize creative process, know that change of scene will prove beneficial. Love relationship, temporarily derailed, will be back on track. Key is to articulate feelings. Gemini represented.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Domestic

Attempts at sabotage made in beating case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The trial of four officers accused in the videotaped beating of a black motorist might have to be delayed, in part because of unauthorized leaks that may be an attempt to sabotage the case, a judge said Monday.

Superior Court Judge Bernard Kamins said the law requires a speedy trial but noted that two developments might force postponement of the May 13 trial date. The judge said the prosecution hasn't turned over all of the evidence required to be disclosed to the defense, and leaks of information have created problems.

"If someone is leaking confidential information to the press, they are sabotaging the case," he said. Kamins said the disclosure of secret Police Department internal affairs investigation reports to the Los Angeles Times could be a subtle effort to delay the trial. It also could be aimed at distributing so much information to the public that it becomes impossible to select an unbiased jury, he said.

Kamins said he would decide on May 6 whether to delay the trial or go forward the following week. Sgt. Stacy G. Koon, and Officers Laurence M. Powell, Timothy D. Brown and Theodore Briscoe, innocent to the assault charges, were in the March 3 beating of Rodney G. King during a traffic stop. The beating was videotaped by a witness.

The judge today appointed lawyer Herb Barish as a backup lawyer for Powell despite his objections. Powell's attorney, Michael Stone, who works with the Police Protective League, is involved in another marathon police misconduct trial and may not be available for at least another two months. Powell, speaking in a soft voice, he believed he had a constitutional right to select his own counsel and wants Stone because he has experience with police cases.

Earlier, another defense attorney had requested that charges be dismissed against the officers because four darts fired from an electric stun gun at King were thrown away and can't be used as evidence. This morning's hearing did not concern that request.

Pacific Hospital records indicate the darts were thrown out the night of the beating. District attorney's spokesman Mike Bonita said Sunday, "The prosecution's 'cover' doesn't think this is a crucial issue," Bonita said. "It does not damage our case in any way."

Dut defense attorney John D. Barnett said the laser-stun-gun darts are significant evidence and the state's failure to protect them may have led officers to believe he was under the influence of the hallucinogenic drug PCP, when in fact the darts hadn't penetrated his skin.

Firm rejects buyout offer, seeks cash to reopen mine

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Financially troubled Star Phoenix Mining Co., operator of a shutdown gold mine in Idaho, has rejected a buyout offer and is negotiating for financing to resume operations, company officials said.

Attorney Dan O'Rourke declined to identify the potential buyer, saying the company is not interested in being bought out. "We're not interested in being bought out," he said. "We're interested in getting financing to resume operations." O'Rourke said the company has more than $1 million in cash and is looking for a buyer who would provide financing to resume operations. "We're not interested in being bought out," he said. "We're interested in getting financing to resume operations."

mining executive Jack Kendrick, Wallace businessman Harry Magnusson and newspaper magnate Duane Hagaman are among the potential buyers. Kendrick, Magnusson and Hagaman are partners in the Star Phoenix mine. Kendrick and Duval own the mine.

Duval, who met with creditors to discuss the mine's bankruptcy, said he has no interest in the mine. "I'm not interested in the mine," he said. "I'm interested in getting financing to resume operations." Duval said he preferred to retain his interest in the operation.

Highway slated for reconstruction

SANDPOINT, (AP) — Transportation officials say a 12-mile section of U.S. Highway 2, between Priest River and Sandpoint, will be reconstructed this summer. Construction is scheduled to begin next spring on the $12-million project to level hills, straighten curves and widen shoulders on the accident-prone stretch. The Sandpoint Transportation Department engineers said the reconstruction project already has gained support from residents.

"Definitely, everybody, up here is all for it," said Don Rabe, owner of the Leclaire Store, midway along the section targeted for reconstruction. "It's been waiting for it for years and years. It's probably one of the worst roads in north Idaho."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"We never know how high we are Till we are called to rise And then, if we are true to plan Our statures touch the skies." - Emily Dickinson.

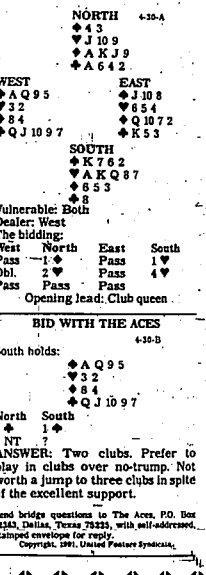

It's not the bad lie of the diamonds that will beat today's game. It is the lack of a solid plan. Look over the layout to see if you can devise a winning plan.

A typically naive plan (West's double warns that he has a two-suit) is to win the club ace and either try for spade ruff or two in dummy or draw the trumps and hope for something good to happen in diamonds.

If South tries for spade ruffs, the defense leads trumps, limiting him to only one spade ruff. Later the diamond finesse fails and South wins only nine tricks.

A much better plan is to reach the goal of 10 winners by scoring the trumps separately.

At trick two, South should ruff a club high, cross to a high diamond and ruff another club high. Another lead to dummy's remaining high diamond allows another club ruff high, and South exits with his last diamond. East wins but has no effective defense. Whatever he leads, South can still ruff dummy's last diamond with an unbeatable trump, and the defense gets only two spades and a diamond.
