Irregular heartbeat strikes president

The Associated Press

BETHESDA, Md. — President Bush suffered shortness of breath while jogging at Camp David on Saturday afternoon and was evacuated to Bethesda Naval Hospital for treatment of an irregular heartbeat. A spokesman said the president was "relaxed, comfortable" and in good condition.

The 66-year-old president was diagnosed as having an atrial fibrillation, or irregular heartbeat. The condition can occur for a variety of reasons and does not necessarily represent a serious threat.

Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president was alert, stable and had no complications. He said there was "no indication at this point that he had a heart attack." He said the president's heartbeat was still irregular, however, in initial tests after he reached the hospital.

Bush will take the medication Digoxin for several weeks, Fitzwater said. Digoxin, which is taken orally, increases the strength of the heartbeat while decreasing its rate. It carries no serious side effects.

Bush address assails 'political correctness'

The Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — President Bush stepped into a growing debate over freedom of speech Saturday, saying Americans should be "alarmed at the rise of intolerance in our land."

"What began as a crusade for civility has soured into a cause of conflict and even censorship," the president said. He cited no examples, although professors on some college campuses have complained of pressure to blend what Please see ADDRESS/A2

Fitzwater said there was no contemplation of transferring power to Vice President Dan Quayle. "This was never considered to be that serious," there was never any question of the president losing consciousness and being unable to continue his functions," he said.

The White House went to some lengths to describe the president as alert and able to walk on his own throughout the episode. He walked to the Camp David infirmary, to the helicopter and then into the hospital, aides said.

Bush had dinner with his wife, Barbara, at the hospital and was staying overnight. He joked with aides throughout the episode, and asked one aide to put his briefcase on the helicopter so he could work. He even monitored Fitzwater's nationally televised news conference, and called to interrupt that he had jogged or walked for about 35 minutes. Please see PRESIDENT/A2

New Twin Falls high school would offer students more opportunities, designers say

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Although bricks and mortar alone cannot insure improved education, the proposed $20 million high school would do its part, architects, administrators and teachers say.

The new high school, which will be completed in 1993, will offer students opportunities they don't have at the existing high school, said Tony Wagner, president of Design West, the Boise architectural firm that designed the building.

Schools of tomorrow

Here are some of the major components of the proposed 280,000-square-foot structure:

Academics
Enough room to learn — both within the new high school and across North College Road at the College of Southern Idaho — would be one of the biggest benefits of the new school, TFHS administrators and teachers say.

According to Principal Carl Snow, at present six teachers must cart their books around to classrooms temporarily vacated by other teachers during their preparation hours.

Classes are held where classroom space is available. In the new facility, there would be enough classrooms to go around, and classrooms for each department would be grouped together.

The new high school's location near CSI would improve access to the college's resources, and could have a big impact on upgrading the district's high school offerings, Snow said. The college is planning a new planetarium at the Horrell Museum and is now building new physics laboratories.

CSI, in turn, could use high school classrooms for its own classes, he said.

The proposed new Twin Falls High School, shown in an overhead plan, is designed to easily accommodate expansion.

And unlike the current high school campus, which has limited room for growth, the proposed plan would leave ample room for expansion.

The new building would be constructed so that even as changes in education occur, it would be easy to remodel.

Vo-ed

The vocational department would also have much more room, which would allow it to expand its offerings, said Troy Wright, head of the TFHS vo-ed department.

The new school would include a 7,650-square-foot manufacturing laboratory, a 7,500-square-foot building technology lab, a 7,500-square-foot manufacturing lab, a 6,000-square-foot automotive lab, a Please see SCHOOL/A2

The school would share some classrooms and other facilities with the College of Southern Idaho, located across North College Road (foreground).

Twin Falls 6th-graders get a taste of middle school system

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Like students in middle schools, MorningSide Elementary School sixth-graders already have more than one teacher a day and they like it.

Jennifer Bleu, 11, and Jacob Mabic, 12, said MorningSide's current system — in which students go to three different classrooms a day to study various subjects — allows teachers, who teach either math, reading or English, to specialize.

"They know more about the subjects they teach," Jacob said.

Brent Yorgensen, 12, said having different teachers is good because, if he doesn't like one teacher, he is not stuck with the teacher all day.

Jennifer said staying in the class all day can be boring.

Kristi Demoss, 13, and five of six children interviewed at the school, said they would have preferred going to the middle school this year than staying in elementary school.

Twelve-year-old Crystal Wilcox said she likes the idea of being with older kids in middle school.

Bangladesh death toll tops 125,000; millions in peril

The Associated Press

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Rough weather slowed efforts Saturday to get emergency aid to millions of survivors of last week's devastating cyclone, who now face new dangers from hunger, disease and poisonous snakes.

The official death toll rose above 125,000. Aid officials reported that people were dying from snake bites and cholera. Officials have warned of epidemics in overcrowded relief camps, where water, food and medicine are scarce.

The aid officials said they expect the international community to dig deep into its pockets to help the survivors, many of whom Without shelter along Bangladesh's southeastern coast, despite a chain of tragedies elsewhere competing for funds and sympathy.

The officials also expressed hope that the catastrophe would finally jolt both Bangladesh and donors into action on comprehensive measures to avert such disasters in the future. Such plans have languished for two decades while tens of thousands perished in the tropical storms and floods that periodically ravage the country.

Four days after Tuesday's cyclone, the most powerful hit this impoverished nation, relief officials said hundreds of bodies were still being washed up on the ravaged coastline.

"Our men are finding new bodies all the time, but in a situation like this it is becoming very difficult to give an exact body count," said Emdad Hossain, the director of the Red Crescent, the Muslim equivalent of the Red Cross.

The official news agency Bangladesh Sangbad-Samastha said at least 125,000 people had been killed. The amount of destruction wrought is tentatively calculated at about $1.4 billion. An estimated 1 million homes were wiped out, along with schools, bridges, rice fields, herds of cattle and many of the country's food and medical supplies.

John Mohrhauser of the aid agency CARE International said rain and choppy seas were hampering efforts to reach survivors by boat. One boat sank off Chittagong, killing one person and losing food for 5,000 people, he said.

"We don't see how they can avoid one of the biggest cholera epidemics in the century. With 12 million people out of their homes and carcasses fouling all the water they're not only drinking sea water, they're drinking fouled sea water," said Mohrhauser, of CARE's New York office.

The government has estimated the bill for basic emergency aid would come to about $56 million. Such aid would include safe drinking water, medicine, food and rudimentary shelter for an estimated 10 million people on 65 islands and coastal areas.

Weather summary

The National Weather Service in Boise reported a few light showers in the southeast Saturday, but otherwise partly cloudy over the Gem State.

The storm which brought much needed rain with snow in the higher elevations to southern Idaho the last few days has moved into northeast Montana.

It left just enough residue moisture over southeastern Idaho for a few showers Saturday afternoon. Most of the remaining parts of Idaho had partly cloudy skies. A warming trend is forecast to continue today.

Low temperatures Saturday were mostly in the mid-20s through the 30s.

The warmest temperature in the state Saturday was 74 degrees at Lewiston. Dixie reported the coldest in the state at 21 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Saturday, the highest temperature was 98 degrees at Del Rio, Texas. The lowest temperature was 19 degrees at Truckee, Calif., and Springerville, Ariz.

Cheney explores U.S.-Arab military cooperation in gulf

WASHINGTON (AP) - Defense Secretary Dick Cheney is expected to discuss a framework for U.S.-Arab military cooperation in the region, which Pentagon officials say could include temporarily stationing American officers in the area.

Cheney is expected to discuss Pentagon proposals for placing a group of U.S. Central Command officers in the region "fewer than 100 people," said spokesman Pete Williams.

Pentagon sources say military officials are also looking to station enough tanks, trucks and artillery to support a heavy division of 15,000-20,000 troops for weeks at a time and at setting up a near-constant flow of joint exercises for air, sea or ground troops.

It will be something that will mean it to anybody, in particular, to anybody who wants to mess around, that we will be back again as we are needed - and very, very fast," said a senior Pentagon official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Bush had gone to Camp David directly from Andrews Air Force Base earlier Saturday after returning from a day trip to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he spoke at the University of Michigan in the first in a series of planned college graduation speeches.

Bush, who turns 67 next month, has the last annual physical check March 27 and was proclaimed "in excellent health" by his personal White House physician, Dr. Burton Lee.

At the time, Lee said, "there were no surprises at the physical exam. He remains an extraordinarily vigorous man" who continues to "thrive" on a "great deal of physical activity" and a "rigorous, demanding work schedule."

Fitzwater said there were no admissions before the episode which revealed itself as unusual fatigue and shortness of breath at about 4:20 p.m. He said Bush "mentioned to his Secret Service agents that he thought he should check it out." His doctor recommended Bush be tested further, and the entourage flew to the military hospital on the outskirts of Washington.

He is in good spirits and ready to get back into the game," Fitzwater said of the president.

Vice President Quayle was at his residence in Washington, hosting an evening reception. His spokesman said the vice president was notified of the president's condition "a few minutes" after the episode occurred.

The 25th Amendment to the Constitution outlines a procedure for presidents to pass power to their vice presidents when they are incapacitated. Quayle and Bush met early in their administration to discuss how they would handle such an eventuality, but never disclosed their thinking.

The amendment makes clear that a president can decide to transfer power, but the document is "less clear about what would happen if there is uncertainty as to whether the president is incapacitated."

Quayle called Bush and spoke with him at 7:20 p.m. White House Chief of Staff John Sununu had alerted both Quayle and National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft before Bush left Camp David.

He said the doctors had indicated that Bush "couldn't be jogging in a matter of days," he wishes.

they consider leftist political doctrine into their teaching.

Bush assailed "the notion of political correctness" in a commencement address at the University of Michigan, the first in a series of college graduation speeches.

Tens of thousands of people - students, faculty, faculty-filled nearly every stadium under sunny skies. Amid scattered heckling, the audience gave a rousing reception to Bush and his wife Barbara, both of whom received honorary degrees.

Bush returned to Camp David after the speech, where he suffered shortness of breath while jogging and was transported to Bethesda Naval Hospital for observation of an atrial fibrillation.

The University of Michigan was the setting where President Lyndon B. Johnson, in 1964, unveiled his "Great Society" initiative to help the poor, revitalize cities, protect the environment and combat racism.

Declaring Johnson's effort a failure, Bush said he was "backed" because it depended too much on government initiatives, fed by more and more tax dollars.

We don't need another Great Society with huge and ambitious programs available to the state - at some college campuses," Bush said.

A small group of hecklers shouted from the balcony that Bush was "backed" because it depended too much on government initiatives, fed by more and more tax dollars.

At approximately 4:20 p.m., while jogging at Camp David, President Bush suffered a shortage of breath.

He was taken to the Camp David medical facility and examined by Dr. Michael Nash, one of the president's physicians, and was determined to have an atrial fibrillation.

"He is in stable condition but will require further examination at Bethesda Naval Hospital," Fitzwater said.

Bush departed Camp David at 5:38 p.m. at helicopter and arrived at the hospital at 5:58 p.m.

Blankinson's New Gould Medical Dictionary defines atrial fibrillation as "a cardiac arrhythmia in which the regular heartbeat. Many people suffer them at some point during their lives. They sometimes present a fluttering feeling in the chest that goes away without the person being aware of anything more than a passing sensation."

A prominent sports doctor said jogging wouldn't cause an irregular heartbeat in someone with a history of running like Bush, but "vigorous" activity might bring out a cardiac abnormality.

"It can happen once and never happen again," said Dr. Lyle Micheli, director of sports medicine at Boston's Children's Hospital. "It can happen at that age just spontaneously. Whether it means there is an underlying problem, I really rather doubt it. Atrial fibrillation is really a benign condition."

sixth-graders moving up to new middle schools at O'Leary Junior High School and the existing high school.

Regardless of whether the $20 million cost is paid by the district, plans to go to a middle school philosophy - and has already begun the process of changing.

"We're not putting a hammer over the public's head and saying you pass this or you won't get the great new program," said Dave Thornsbury, principal of Robert Stuart Junior High School.

This year, Thornsbury, who is chairman of a district and community advisory committee on middle schools, has sent two-thirds of his staff to various Idaho middle schools to see how different programs work.

Next year, the district will bring in middle school experts who will train some teachers to hold inservice classes for other teachers.

And in 1992, the year before the new high school would be built if the bond issue passes, Stuart will have a new middle school system, Thornsbury said.

"The only difference between the plans for Stuart and what the district envisions when the new high school is completed, is the grade configuration."

After the high school is done, ninth-graders would move up to the new high school and sixth-graders would move to the two new middle schools.

Officials say the sixth-through-eighth-grade configuration is a more age-appropriate combination than the grade seven through nine configuration in making the transition from elementary school to high school.

Most research comparing junior high schools with middle schools has not shown consistent evidence of superior student achievement in middle schools. And the education system, says a 1986 study by the report by the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development.

However, middle schools typically offer children more important to adolescents that junior high schools don't, like an array of "exploratory" classes," the report said.

Middle school is a catchword that can mean different grade configurations, usually refers to certain teaching approaches and interdisciplinary team teaching which are designed to meet the unique if not rabid needs of adolescents.

Memberships teachers are following a form of interdisciplinary team teaching already.

computer classroom and a drafting classroom.

In proximity to CSI would allow the new school to gather 14 students in an automotive shop and other vocational facilities, all of which the high school could use, Snow said.

Performing arts

Without a performing arts center at the current high school, drama students must serve up performances in a makeshift setting. The students find it difficult to watch and students get an unclear picture of acting, teachers say.

The proposed school includes a 600-seat performing arts center that would be used for school assemblies, plays, music productions, and for community activities and special events, said Steve Abels, TFHS drama teacher.

Twin Falls is among only a handful of Idaho high schools in Idaho that do not have a stage, he said.

Theater is much more than a learning experience, Abels said. It has a lot to do with school tradition and it's hard to get a tradition with spaghetti noodles hanging from props, he said.

When Twin Falls drama students compete against other schools in a regional "high school" basketball team practicing in a gym, Abels said.

"I think Twin Falls is doing an injustice to the program," he said.

music, students worry about where to place their chairs and the differences in sounds their instruments make in a classroom with concrete floors as opposed to a music auditorium with excellent acoustics, he said.

Teachers say that because the current TFHS doesn't have an auditorium, high school students miss much more. Traveling college musical groups don't perform at TFHS because they don't learn concert behavior and some students don't have the opportunity of performing before their classmates.

Physical education

The new school would dramatically increase the district's physical education facilities and allow instructors to expand their fitness-for-life programs, or sports that are designed to be played for a lifetime.

High School Athletic Director Bill Jones said he wants to offer all students four instead of two elective classes.

"That can't be done at the existing facility, where a shortage of equipment is applied to a large gym makes it practical only for team sports," Jones said.

During winter time at the current high school, basketball practice begins at 6:30 a.m. and activities go on for an average of 15 hours a day, or late as 10 p.m., he said.

About 100 students use the gym each hour. For all sports programs, however, Some intramural games and inter-scholastic team practices are held in the district's two junior high schools or in Mormon Church gymnasiums.

The new indoor athletic facilities at the high school include a 15,000-square-foot competition gym, which would seat 2,400 people. The gym also has a large hallway where they make room for two full-sized gyms for physical education classes.

The athletic department would also have a 5,000-square-foot practice gym, a weightlifting room, a room with three storage rooms, a training room and a laundry room.

Because the CSI facility is so large, students never get the chance to practice in a place where they perform, Hadley said.

Shuttle crew succeeds in getting data to earth

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's astronauts succeeded in getting data from three scientific instruments to the ground Saturday after splicing wires and rearranging cables in a 27-step salvage operation. It was a desperate final attempt to retrieve information from the instruments, which became virtually useless after their data recorders failed shortly after launch a week ago. Controllers now hope to obtain about half of what the investigators initially sought in what remains of the flight.

The "Star Wars" research mission is due to end Monday.

"By God, we put it together and it's working great," said Air Force Capt. Lindley Johnson, a program director. "We're getting excellent data."

Johnson said there were a few minor problems still to be resolved, including getting used to the periodic loss of operation.

"That's an operational constraint that we have to live with. We have to play," he said.

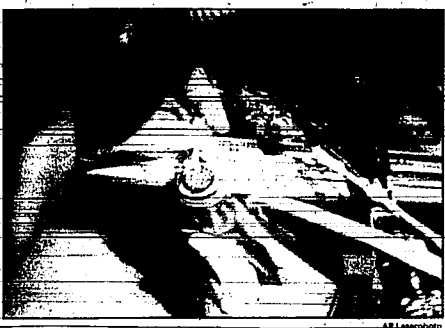

Mission Control's Jan Davis informed the seven astronauts of the strong link between the space shuttle and ground about 2 1/2 hours into the electrical repairs.

"Good work, guys," she said. "That was a super job."

The work involved rerouting data from the instruments through a flight deck computer panel through 20 feet of TV cable, through an antenna, through a satellite to the ground.

"It is one of the more involved things we've ever tried to do," NASA flight director Bob Celsis said.

The link bypassed the two data recorders, which mysteriously stopped working just hours after Discovery blasted off last Sunday into an orbit 161 miles above Earth. Numerous repair attempts failed.

Mission specialist Don McMonagle works on the shuttle's wiring.

Johnson said it appears as though a work being performed by both the tapes to wind off their reels.

A hastily organized team of engineers and scientists came up with the data-rerouting plan Friday. The astronauts got started on it Saturday morning after all seven were awake. Normally, they are splitting 12-hour work shifts in orbit.

As one astronaut pointed a flashlight into the dark confines of the computer panel, stuffed with bundles of cables, another crewman in goggles snipped the designated wire. One of the astronauts then scrunched off the wire's coating and spliced it to two jumper leads.

Video beamed down from Discovery provided close-up views of the

Shuttle door open in-flight cross-country

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA's brand-new space shuttle, Endeavour, traveled partway across the country atop a modified jet with one of its doors open, but nothing was damaged, NASA said Saturday.

The $2-billion spaceship, strapped to the top of a Boeing 747, left Rockwell International's shuttle assembly plant in Palmdale, Calif., on Friday morning.

Officials discovered the open door on Endeavour after the jet landed at Biggs Army Air Field near El Paso, Texas, later Friday.

The small door, located on the side of the shuttle, covers a handle that controls two windows above the crew's cabin. Ground crews would push the handle to open the windows in the event of an emergency.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokeswoman Barbara Schwartz said it was unclear whether the door was simply never latched or whether it opened in flight.

Endeavour remained at Biggs on Saturday because of bad weather in Texas. Weather permitting, it was to continue on to Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio on Sunday and then to its new home at Kennedy Space Center.

U.S. receives Soviet arms in transfer deal

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army imported top-line Soviet tanks and other military hardware last month as part of a secret arms transfer program arranged recently with Germany, according to U.S. and German military and diplomatic officials.

The weapons are expected to improve U.S. intelligence assessments of Soviet military technology while helping the German government dispose of equipment it inherited from the East German National People's Army after East and West Germany merged last October, the officials said.

Some of the equipment is also likely to end up in the arsenal of the "opposing force" at the Army's National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif., where teams of experts in Soviet-style battlefield tactics routinely engage U.S. forces in mock desert warfare, the officials said.

"I don't think (it) fits his scene the light of day," said a staff member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who confirmed the existence of the secret program but declined to discuss it.

Magazine: Air Force developed bomb to attack command posts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force developed and deployed a huge bomb in just 17 days in an effort to destroy hardened Iraqi command bunkers where Saddam Hussein might have been, a defense industry publication said.

The 4,700-pound laser-guided bomb, designated the GBU-28, was dropped by two F-111F fighters on a military bunker complex just north of Baghdad in the last week of February, Aviation Week and Space Technology said in its May 4 edition.

One hit the wrong bunker but the other was on target, creating a huge explosion and reportedly killing a number of senior Iraqi military staff officers, the publication quoted Air Force officials as saying.

An Air Force spokeswoman, Capt. Sylvia Freeman, confirmed the development of the GBU-28, but could not provide details of the program.

Pilot in Iowa crash to retire

SEATTLE (AP) — The United Airlines pilot who crash-landed a crippled DC-10 in Iowa and was credited with saving the lives of more than half the people aboard will retire this summer.

Like a secret, retired, very anonymous career and everything was going just as I had hoped it would until that 41 minutes over Iowa," Capt. Al Haynes, 59, said Friday night in describing his 35-year career.

One of the plane's engine flew apart, severing hydraulic lines that controlled the aircraft's flight. The crew used throttles on the two remaining engines to make a crash landing in which 112 people died but 184 survived.

No grass grows at barren Grassy Mountain waste landfill

GRASSY MOUNTAIN, Utah (AP) — It seems a fitting place for the 32 boxcars of contaminated soil dumped by several states and excoriated by environmentalists. Dirt, some of it, stretches as far as the eye can see, within and around the recovery equipment, the PCBs and the industrial wastes buried in what was once the floor of prehistoric Lake Bonneville. No grass grows at the Grassy Mountain Landfill operated by U.S. Pollution Control Inc. There the 2,400 tons of Michigan dirt tainted with acrylic acid have found a home, along with microplastic sludges, pesticides and industrial wastes that also had nowhere to go. Accepting the parish train dogged by the environmental group Greenpeace across the country was no big deal to USPCI. "The way we look at it we're a waste-management company. We're in the business of solving environmental problems," said spokesman Charles Roberts. "We can properly transport it and dispose of it so that it's no longer on the rails." By Thursday night, it no longer was.

USPCI crews and chemists spent 14 hours testing, incinerating and dumping the soil in "Cell 4," a stadium-size landfill on the 640-acre Grassy Mountain complex used solely for hazardous wastes.

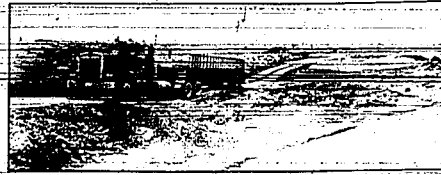

Although the dirt was determined by state and USPCI experts to be a benign solid waste, it was treated as something worse at disposal time.

"When we saw the public concern over the material, we said we're going to manage it as a hazardous waste. The state also required us to do that," said Grassy Mountain General Manager Ken Hall. "It was the conservative approach."

Greenpeace activists had followed the train from state to state in some instances chaining themselves to the locomotive in protest. But after a rally at the Utah Capitol Thursday morning, 10 demonstrators who showed up at USPCI's rail siding 75 miles west of Salt Lake City seemed mostly resigned. "It's horrible that it's our job to change the train through the communities," said Fred Mironov, of the New York office of Greenpeace. Added a colleague: "It's not the most toxic train. This is one train that we know about."

Utah's chief of environmental health, Ken Alkema, and USPCI officials agreed it was not the "Cancer Cannonball" environmentalists made it out to be.

"I picked something else to protest," said Roberts. "There's a lot more things on the rails and highways more dangerous than this that don't even get winked at — diesel fuel, propane, chlorine and sulfuric acid. Why they picked this I don't know."

AP Laserphoto

The Utah landfill accepted 2,400 tons of acrylic acid-tainted dirt after other states rejected it.

Hall said the dirt probably could have spawned some robust tomatoes. It also was safe enough to be handled by the average municipal landfill.

He did not belittle the environmentalists' concern, however, and said USPCI is sensitive to society's wish that someone else, anywhere else, take care of the nation's wastes.

"But where do you stop this attitude of 'I'm not going to take any hazardous wastes'? Are people going to stop buying products?"

Whenever you have manufacturing you're always going to have some wastes," he said.

Like the other wastes at Grassy Mountain, the Michigan dirt is buried natural location for waste disposal. The evaporation of "Lake Bonneville" over tens of thousands of years left the area sitting on 3,500 feet of silty clay. The site averages 6 inches of precipitation a year, making groundwater leaks much less of a problem than at facilities in the damp East.

That's part of the reason Utah officials considered the upsur much ado about nothing. The soil itself was another. "It's kind of dumb that it had to come out here. It could have been disposed of safely in Michigan," Alkema said.

Utah Gov. Norm Bangert, like wise did not make protestors' dreams come true by standing in front of the train to block it.

But he did send a letter to Congress telling lawmakers that one state from assuming too much responsibility for another's wastes.

The latest shipment to Grassy Mountain previously was rejected by three other states. The dirt had been scooped from the ground in Ireland, Michigan, after a CSX Transportation train carrying acrylic acid caught fire in 1989.

Ken Hall, manager at Grassy Mountain, explains the landfill process with the help of a cross-section model on his desk.

Bush says no 'blank check' to keep bases

ABOARD AIR FORCE ONE (AP) — President Bush on Saturday said he will not offer the United States a "blank check" to keep U.S. bases in the Philippines, but expressed hopes that deadlocked talks will still produce an agreement.

"We're having negotiations still going on, but it's still no deal," Bush told reporters traveling with him to a commencement speech at the University of Michigan.

The United States is trying to negotiate a renewal of the agreement to keep Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Base in the Philippines with the current two-year agreement expiring Sept. 16.

The conclusion of the latest round of talks with Manila ended Friday in a stalemate after a year of bargaining.

Manila wants $825 million a year in compensation for a maximum of seven years, while the United States has offered $360 million a year in base-related aid, negotiators said.

The U.S.-negotiating team complained that Manila was asking more money than Washington could afford and was linking trade and other economic issues to the bases.

"They've made it clear that the United States would be forced to leave its bases in the Philippines."

"I don't think so," he replied. "We're having negotiations still going on but it's still no deal. And we've made clear that there are limits beyond which we're clearly not prepared to go."

"This isn't any carte blanche operation, any blank check."

Bush, noting the importance of the U.S. bases in the Philippines, said, "It'll work out."

Company says it paid for family vacations

Sununu urges work for public

MIAMI (AP) — White House Chief of Staff John Sununu encouraged graduates of Miami-Dade Community College Saturday to make an impact on their world by serving in the public sector.

"I can promise you, there is nothing more satisfying or more gratifying than to have the opportunity to do something that gets leverage through the influence of local, state or federal governments," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House Chief of Staff John Sununu accepted payment from a ski corporation for family-ski vacations he said were funded by a non-profit charity.

The payment, apparently a matter of bookkeeping that may conflict with federal ethics requirements, was first disclosed in Time magazine's edition released Saturday, and confirmed by the president of the Waterville Valley ski resort in New Hampshire.

The disclosure came as President Bush told reporters he will announce changes in the travel policy that allowed Sununu to use government aircraft for extensive political and personal travel in addition to official business.

"We're very close to coming out with these changes," Bush told reporters traveling with him to Ann Arbor, Mich.

White House spokesman Sean Walsh said Saturday the White House would have no comment on any new allegations regarding Sununu's travel.

A special account set up by the resort to put on the tournament also reimbursed the government for Sununu's family's airfare, he said. The account receives donations from corporate interests, including Coca-Cola, McDonald's and Siemens Nixdorf, an electronics company that won a $7 million computer contract with New Hampshire when Sununu was governor.

Tim reported that Sununu also accepted corporate payment for airfare for an undisclosed number of family members, when he flew in June to Lawrence, Mass., 10 miles from his Salem, N.H., home.

Sununu family members who attended the banquet. White House spokesman Sean Walsh said Saturday the White House would have no comment on any new allegations regarding Sununu's travel.

"We will not comment until the review is complete," he said. Sununu flew to Florida on Saturday aboard a military plane to give a commencement speech, which Bush said would be considered clearly an official trip.

He did provide reimbursement of $1,920 for family members traveling with him on the military jet, White House records show. That was paid by the newspaper, Time said.

Future of environment in Idaho is looking better

There were two pieces of good news recently in Idaho's uphill battle to protect its natural resources.

The first came from a study done by the trade journal Governing, a publication for state and local government administrators. It shows that per-capita spending for environmental protection in Idaho during 1988 was $61.26, the sixth-highest in the nation.

The other hopeful tidings came from the Division of Environmental Quality of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. DEQ vetoed an application for a commercial fish hatchery discharge permit in Blind Canyon north of Buhl, marking a major shift in its enforcement of Snake River water quality.

These are two hopeful signs in a generally gloomy outlook for the environment nationwide.

As the cost of environmental protection has risen, most recently with the passage of the Clean Air Act of 1990, fewer dollars are trickling down from the federal Environmental Protection Agency. That means that city, county and state governments are spending more of their own money than ever before.

Local, county and state spending on pollution control is the acid test of a state's commitment to environmental protection. That means that pollution control has to compete with demands for scarce dollars from other, more politically popular projects—education, for example, and highway construction.

At a time when sewers and water treatment plants are in need of repair or replacement throughout the country, the phasing out of federal construction grants means that by the end of the decade, EPA expenditures will have fallen by one-third from 1981 levels, according to the study by Governing magazine. And it isn't just the states like Idaho that will have to fill the gap. State governments nationwide are now spending more than $7 billion on environmental protection each year, but their share is about half of what it was in 1980. That means local governments will pick up the difference.

Governing magazine predicts city and county spending on environmental protection will nearly double by 2000.

Idaho's commitment to state, county and municipal to the environment was $61.4 million in 1988, the last year for which figures are available. To put that into context, a state that ranks 45th in per-capita income nationally is 31st in environmental spending.

The bottom line: Idaho spends more on its environment per capita than any major state, including California.

Most of that money goes to protecting drinking water and water quality, and it's encouraging that DEQ is going to spend part of it in cleaning up the Snake River.

You don't have to be an environmentalist to realize something has to be done with Middle Snake, and south of it.

Despite the millions of gallons of water that course down the Snake every day, the river no longer is able to digest all the material cast away by man.

DEQ served notice in the Blind Canyon case that it will take a harder look at proposed projects that would have potential effects on water quality, including new or expanded hydroelectric plants.

The policy will cover all new or expanded projects with a single identifiable discharge point, but it is unlikely to directly affect agriculture.

Eventually, the DEQ will have to tackle the issue of non-point source pollution, but the agency recognizes that the Middle Snake is a working river upon which a majority of southern Idahoans depend for their livelihoods.

But it's something more—an Idaho treasure whose value is best measured in both dollars and sense.

Hypnotism lawsuit is not right

Regarding the recent letters to the editor on the hypnotism lawsuit, I believe that the school spent its $250 well. Jack entertained and educated the students simultaneously. To file a lawsuit with Jack Lythgoe is not right, since he performed a service that was requested by the school.

I believe the lawsuit and notices home if it involves something physical or dangerous. If we don't trust the school's judgment, then we should require the teachers to send home a daily or weekly agenda. I personally do not see hypnosis as an occult. It is a technique that is used by many, but I don't find it to be an occult. I have an example of it being helpful. My mother is allergic to novocaine. Because of her reaction to the injection, she consulted a hypnotist years ago to teach her how to induce self-hypnosis. This allows her to be comfortable while the dentist works on her teeth. She has not joined any strange or mysterious group.

The police use it to unlock mysteries of crimes. Witnesses can recall facts at the scene of a crime such as a license plate number or type of car that was used. It is a great source of entertainment. The entertainer does a tip up Jack and not only puts on a great show but shows you how strong the mind is in controlling your body, such as the demonstration of a 110-pound young woman from the audience. He had her lying on top of two chairs supported only by her neck and lower legs while he stood on her stomach. This is truly an exhibit of the power of the mind.

But if you continue with your lawsuit, you should include a few other groups, organizations and individuals. The following should be included:

The highway department, have you ever traveled at night and fell under the spell of the white line? Don't forget the television stations and all affiliated.

TV puts you in a hypnotic state when you are watching it. Taking your eyes off the show when it's on you is dangerous. You sell to get up only during commercials. The fact that you're hooked on a soap opera such as "Days of Our Lives" or "Dallas" is proof that they have put you into a trance.

You should file a lawsuit on your church. One church states that Buddha is god, while another preaches Hebrew and another Catholic.

ism: Are you not giving your child the power of suggestion when you take them to your church? Have you not told your children when they were little about the Easter Bunny and Santa Claus? Did you not involve them in a hypnotic state of believing?

And don't forget to include the newspapers of America who have brainwashed the public into buying newspapers everyday. There are some 20,000 families in this valley alone that read their paper, including me. We've been hypnotized. We cannot live without our paper. While the idea for using Jack Lythgoe's service was experimental, it was a tremendous educational and continues to be thought-provoking. A child's values are taught at home. Sometimes children may stray, but good values and good parents and love within the home can be the source of a good foundation for a young adult. From that alone, young minds will be able to decipher what is right and what is wrong.

Letter writer is inconsistent

I read Paula Brown Sinclair's letter in which she alluded to my recent article about the conditions at the local Social Security office. I didn't know Ronald Reagan was responsible for the problems until Ms. Sinclair said so. I wonder if he knows why doesn't Congressmen Stallings, who has a well-established track record for action on behalf of his senior disabled constituents, according to Ms. Sinclair, fear down this despicable wall so I can see who's behind it and what they are doing?

In one portion of Ms. Sinclair's comments, she described information furnished by Social Security personnel. And the information provided the lucky few who got through was extremely unreliable. Later, she describes a local Social Security worker. You readers should know that she is a member of a very knowledgeable team of men and women who are expert Social Security workers.

I wondered about these inconsistencies until I read the credits at the bottom of the article. It said, "Paula Brown Sinclair is a Twin Falls lawyer." In other words, she is licensed to be inconsistent.

Tiffany: We have faith, expect a lot of you

Dear Tiffany:

It seems hardly days ago, much less months, that you, mother, sister and I were saying good-bye to you in Portland as you started school for the fall term.

We were all so brave that sunny September day under the oak trees, but your confidence was higher than my own tentative assurances. Yes, even Papaism wistful when their days here were home.

It is said that of magic doorways, there is this: you do not see them even as you are passing through. A few more years in school and college and beyond, the choices seem infinite. It will all pass much more quickly than you imagine.

A century ago, it was common for young people to leave home in their teens, for boarding schools, apprenticeships, marriage, the military, or the vast ocean of travel and wandering.

Economies dictated the pattern. Families were larger then and a young person capable of making his or her own way in the world was expected to do so. There was little time for delay. Life was hard and often short.

Still, the separations were not easy. The archives of our nation's libraries are filled with the simple letters back and forth through generations separated by distance and time.

Come, they seem to say to loved ones, join us in this new land, in our new families, schools, life's challenges and joys. (By the way, Tiffany, they were generally better writers than many people today, perhaps because they lacked television and other diversions.) To see for yourself, go visit the Portland library and look in the archives section on Oregon history. Let them talk to you across the decades. You will see what I mean.

Stephen Hartgen

Though your visits have been frequent and the phone calls common, separation from loved ones is no easier today than it was then.

Your mother and I talk often of how you are doing, about your schoolwork which seems even more demanding than I thought it would be, your friends and all the busy social activities which make up a teenager's daily life.

I know you're anxious to be home for the summer, to visit your friends, and to rest up from a hard, demanding year.

Listening to you tell me about your courses, their reading lists, papers and projects reminds me of what high school was like for people in my own generation.

Sadly, it's not that way today for many young people. Too many parents ask far too little of them than they should. Teachers and administrators know this and they act even less.

But enough philosophy. To your 15th birthday.

This is the first one on which you have been away from home, and both your mother and I, knowing that, have sent both personal letters and a package.

Inside are small things, really. A book or two (What would be a birthday without a book from your parents?), a drawing from your sister Rachel, who has missed you more than she is able to express; an item or two of clothing (Again, what would be a birthday without something to wear from Mom?); and a card with little words of endearing memory.

Enjoy them all, and try not to spend the check in one place.

And of course, we send our faith and pride in the young woman you are becoming, as well as our love.

Happy Birthday, Sweetheart.

Love, Papa

Year-round schooling is unworkable

As the patrons of Twin Falls School District 41 attempt to deal with overcrowding in our school system, is year-round schooling an alternative?

Here are the factors used by the Long-Range Planning Committee to evaluate the year-round school option:

What is year-round schooling? Stated simply, year-round schools operate all year, but only some of the teachers and students are in attendance at any one time. There are various calendar models or tracks.

The most widely accepted plan is the "Four Track - 45/15" calendar model, in which schools operate for 48 weeks a year and students attend school for four 15-day sessions with a 15-day pupil vacation between each session. Entrance dates are staggered with one-fourth of the students starting every 15 days. With this schedule, the district is able to increase capacity by one-third and thereby derive the principle benefit offered by year-round schooling.

What are the impacts of year-round schooling? Year-round schools work best at the elementary level because students and their teachers are easily scheduled on the same track together. But the schedule also requires that every 60 days, students and their teachers change the location of their classes. Students thus lose the familiarity of their own desks and classrooms.

At the junior and senior high levels, year-round schooling presents other difficulties. The major drawback is in the district's ability to deliver equal educational opportunity for all students. Since teachers are on tracks identical to the students, the district must have a teacher-certified in each discipline available for each track to provide year-round capability in each subject.

This requirement for extra teachers will significantly increase the cost of personnel or specific courses may not be offered because of the cost. The committee believes that any potential reduction in course offerings is unacceptable.

On the human side, there are conflicts for students in work schedules, involvement in summer activities and athletics.

For the teachers, year-round schooling makes it difficult to participate in continuing development classes, generally offered during the summer months. Also, teachers run into scheduling conflicts when their own children are on different tracks. Lastly, some teachers lose supplemental income earned during the summer. All of these human factors need to be included in the evaluation of year-round

Lee Wagner and Ken Olson
Reader comment

What are the financial implications of year-round schooling? The cost of year-round schools has two components, capital costs and annual operating costs.

Year-round schooling does not eliminate the need for some capital costs. First, it is necessary to retrofit some of our existing schools with air conditioning to make them usable during summer months. Also, it is necessary to rewire the electrical service at each site to accommodate the additional electrical load. The estimated capital cost to make these changes in Twin Falls is at least $1.5 million.

A second concern results from the community's support for establishing the middle school concept with its optimum sixth-to-eighth grade configuration. This requires the ninth grade to be moved to the current high school campus. At present, the enrollment exceeds the IF and JHS-14 students. At this enrollment level, the district is already short of classroom space; plus, there is tremendous pressure on the physical education facilities and cafeteria.

If we add the present ninth grade population of 492 students to the 1,144 students in grades 10 through 12, the high school population becomes 1,636 students today.

The effect of year-round schooling will place four-fifths of the students in school at any given time would be to increase the average daily population to 1,227 students—83 students more than in today's already crowded situation.

Furthermore, the district would still be faced with the construction of additional physical education facilities in the existing campus, as suggested in previous proposals, at an estimated capital cost of $1.5 million. A performing arts center, as the community strongly supported last fall, will take an additional $1 million.

The result is that, even with year-round schools, the total projected capital cost is $4 million.

The second area of cost considerations lies in annual operating expenses. The district annually expends the following amounts to operate our school system: $1 million per elementary times six schools equals $6 million;

$1.5 million per junior high times two schools equals $3 million; $3 million for the high school; $2.5 million for other support services; $1.5 million for maintenance and administration; Total: $16 million.

Converting to year-round schools will not reduce the cost of administration, as it is already on a year-round basis. However, we project that—based on the experience of other school systems—annual operating expenses will increase in the following manner: 40 percent at the elementary levels, $600,000; 15 percent at the junior high level, $450,000; 20 percent at the high school level, $600,000; 10 percent for other support services, $250,000. Total additional operating costs: $1,900,000.

70 percent of increase for the junior and senior high levels was based on estimates of additional faculty needed to provide equal educational opportunities for all students. Thus the estimated annual cost of capital improvements: $4 million/20-year bond, $390,000. Total annual cost of year-round schools for District #41—$22,290,000.

Total cost of current bond proposal: Increase in operating expenses, $445,000; Estimated annual cost of a new high school ($20 million/20-year bond): $1,953,000; Total annual cost of current bond proposal for District #41—$2,398,000.

Estimated annual cost difference of these options: $108,000.

Converting to year-round schooling systems will save $108,000 per year, but the public will be aware that the difference in operating expenses between the two options is $1,455,000 ($3,900,000 minus $445,000) per year must be funded through override levies. Should an override levy fail, the district would be unable to operate year-round.

These calculations do not reflect the additional wear and tear on the facilities resulting from year-round schooling or the associated reduction in the useful life of facilities.

In summary, the goal of the Long-Range Planning Committee was to develop the most educationally sound plan for the future of our children and school district.

Year-round schooling offers no educational advantage. It disrupts traditional social patterns, and the current savings does not offset the loss of opportunities our children face by not building a new high school.

Soviet military lets Gorbachev know it's time to keep promises

WASHINGTON — The Russian bargain Mikhail Gorbachev made with the Soviet military is coming unglued. To placate his restive generals, Gorbachev is giving them his car and more money.

This stark assessment comes from Dr. Ilana Kass, a Soviet expert and a professor of military strategy at the National War College in Washington, D.C.

"Remember, it was the Soviet military that called for a perestroika-like program back in the late 1970s," she said, referring to the term that has come to mean, literally, the "restructuring" of the Soviet economy.

"This wasn't a call to provide Soviet consumers with light beer, non-troop pants and jeans," she said. "It was to provide them with the secondary effects of economic reform. The military was calling for reform in order to produce state-of-the-art weaponry of the type the U.S. military just used to dominate Iraq."

Desert Storm was a nightmare for the Soviet military, she said. "The military was calling for reform in order to produce state-of-the-art weaponry of the type the U.S. military just used to dominate Iraq."

David Evans
come true" for the Soviet military, said Kass. "It showcased all the high-tech weaponry they could neither produce nor afford."

Indeed, according to Kass, the Soviet generals concluded more than a decade ago that their massive army built around thousands of tanks and poorly trained conscripts, would be nice on the table, so to speak, for highly mobile Western forces, equipped with all-seeing satellites and precision-guided munitions and manned by volunteer professionals.

To modernize the Soviet military, it was necessary to restructure the Soviet economy — not only to manufacture the weapons of the 21st Century but to produce the motivated, smart troops to use them.

"When Gorbachev ascended to power in 1985, he adopted the military platform," said Kass. "The promise of perestroika was you can't get off the old systems now, but if you wait a couple of years

Mikhail Gorbachev
Desert Storm was nightmare you're really going to have a great, super-tech military. That promise has not been met, because Gorbachev did not realize the magnitude of the problem he faced.

giving a little bit of freedom, he unleashed forces that he cannot control. The pent-up frustration of the population, ethnic rivalries, people literally murdering each other," she said.

"In the clashes in Armenia last year, the combatants had armored personnel carriers and mortars," Kass said. "The military lost control of its arsenals."

And so, true to his position as Numero Uno in the Communist Party (and to his rank as a colonel in the KGB), Gorbachev has permitted, indeed encouraged, the military to resume its place center stage as the guarantor and bulwark of state power.

To Kass, the evidence is abundant. "The first sign of a change in tone was the big military parade last May 9, marking the victory over the Germans in World War II. It was hugely bigger than normal with lots of new equipment," noted Kass.

"At the same time," Yazov got his moment in the sun as the military's promotion to five-star rank of Dmitri Yazov, the Soviet defense minister. In addition, top officers began to publish what Kass characterized as "scathing articles."

"Very senior officers were saying, 'Enough is enough. They were kind of saying 'get off our back' to the softy bed-wetting intellectuals who had Gorbachev's ear," Kass said.

They were essentially reclaiming their monopoly on the national security debate. This is a fundamental point, because initially what happened under Gorbachev is that he was looking for alternative sources of information on national security issues. He turned to the (civilian) think tanks. And for the first time you had civilians writing and commenting and advising on these matters," she said.

The military's counterattack on the newly fashionable think tanks, Kass said, "was truly vicious." The generals hurled barbs such as, "You've never heard a shot fired in guns" and "You're ready to sell out the Motherland."

This assault on the new darlings was successful. "The civilian academics stopped writing about conventional warfare," she said. "They ceased expertise to the military." The academics were left talking about nuclear war, which, of course, is data-free analysis because nobody has any experience fighting with nukes.

"The next thing you saw was Gorbachev cutting the military, almost as if he was truly concerned about a coup," she said. "The courting took the form of a huge increase in the Soviet military budget, and it's going mostly into research and development for new weapons. The programmed increase is on the order of an incredible 75 percent, according to Kass.

The Faustian deal is off. The devil gets his due now. For the Soviet Union, the future looks grim — an economic ghost town, impoverished by the Kremlin's gold-plated hired guns.

Woodward book highlights GOP problems with support for war

WASHINGTON — Last October, when Gen. Colin L. Powell tried to persuade President Bush to stick with a policy of containment in the Persian Gulf, to try to avoid war, Bush told him: "I don't think there's time politically for that strategy."

It is a revealing insight into Bush's thinking at a time when questions of war and peace hung in the balance, as described in a new book by one of the Washington Post's most astute superstars, Bob Woodward.

By Woodward's account, the president of the United States appears to have made a judgment to go to war with Iraq — at least partly — on political considerations.

Woodward's book, called "The Commanders," may radically affect postwar politics. It makes the case that some of Bush's most respected top officials did not want to go to war.

That would pull the rug out from under those Republicans who have wanted to make support of the war a political issue.

The book reports that Powell, the nation's top military officer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, tried repeatedly to persuade Bush and other top civilian officials that war should and probably could be avoided.

Powell favored sticking with economic sanctions and military pressure but found support only from Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

The book does not elaborate on exactly what the president's political considerations were, but several were subjects of widespread speculation at the time.

First, there was the question of whether Bush could keep his international coalition together for any length of time.

There was also the question of whether Bush had painted himself in a political corner by declaring a week after Iraq invaded Kuwait that one of his major objectives was "the immediate, unconditional and complete withdrawal" of Iraqi forces.

The problem was that there was no way Bush could be sure he could achieve that objective reasonably quickly by an economic embargo and military pressures.

By October, Bush had already sent more than 200,000 troops to the Persian Gulf and they would be sitting in the desert for months on end.

Bush had made a quick, almost impulsive decision to send the troops, and he was faced with the question: What do I do now? How long can I keep them sitting there before I begin to look silly?

He was already under attack by a host of commentators, most of them conservatives, who were urging war.

Woodward's Baker apparently were prepared to stick with economic sanctions for as long as a year or two if necessary, convinced that war might be avoided.

The two agreed, in other words, with some of the administration's most vocal critics, particularly Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, who led the campaign to stick with sanctions.

When a vote on the war was finally taken in January, Nunn and other Democrats who favored sanctions had no way of knowing that the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the secretary of state agreed with them.

Gen. Colin L. Powell
Wanted to avoid war. This is not political information for 1992. If Bush tries to make support for the war an election issue, he will have to explain why two of his own top people supported staying with sanctions.

"The point is that the decision to go to war is the most fateful Bush has made or is likely to make in this term, what he himself called "a defining moment."

The decision was widely applauded when the war ended, but it does not look all that glorious right now.

A few days ago, John White, a former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, wrote: "It may as well be called the Democratic leadership, but it is entirely possible that they were right to oppose initiation of military action to drive the Iraqis out of Kuwait."

Those votes against the war were right. This was a Republican war without a planned ending. ... "The hundreds of thousands of dead, the polluted skies and beaches and the ruined oil fields are hardly the 'New World Order' George Bush envisioned. What we have is a Middle East in more dismay than before August."

Acknowledging that his opinion was currently "unfashionable," White said developments since the war ended suggest that Bush will be vulnerable on foreign policy in next year's election.

Bob Woodward's account could help make that Democratic dream come true.

Persian Gulf Cholera outbreak reported in refugee camp

DIYARBAKIR, Turkey (AP) — One of the main Kurdish refugee camps may have to be quarantined because of an outbreak of cholera, aid officials said Saturday — a move likely to delay the return of refugees to the allied-protected zone in Iraq.

Allied officials had been working to repatriate the Iraqi Kurds as quickly as possible.

Turkey's health minister, however, questioned whether there had been an outbreak at all.

In another development, a land mine exploded and wounded three U.S. soldiers in northern Iraq, a U.S. military officer said. One soldier lost his lower left leg and right foot and suffered a severe eye injury.

Also Saturday, a Kurdish official in Tehran said that Kurdish leaders will meet Iraqi government officials in Baghdad Monday to work out details of an agreement that would end their rebellion against Saddam Hussein's rule.

In southern Iraq, meanwhile, the transport of thousands of Iraqis out of a U.S. Army camp in the border area of Kuwait continued, paving the way for the withdrawal of U.S. troops in the area.

The U.S. Army had cared for about 11,000 refugees in Safwan by the U.S. Army since early March. They are being flown to Saudi Arabia, which has agreed to care for them.

An Iraqi woman greets a British soldier on patrol in Amadia.

In the Cukureca camp, along the Turkish border, 143 cases of cholera have been reported with seven confirmed deaths, said Tezir Gabriel, field coordinator for the international relief group Doctors Without Borders. Gabriel, interviewed in nearby Diyarbakir, said a quarantine was being considered.

However, the Turkish health minister said he had received no word of any cholera at Cukureca. He expressed annoyance at the report of the outbreak, first issued Friday by the Doctors Without Borders headquarters in Paris.

Members of this organization say they are here to help, but they are putting on a show instead of working, said Health Minister Hali Sivgin. Doctors Without Borders has 49 workers at Cukureca, spread among several field hospitals.

Gabriel said about 120,000 refugees are at risk. The highly contagious disease could have infected many of them by now, he said.

"They would maybe spread cholera all over Iraq," he said. A quarantine at Cukureca would be complicated by the fact that water supplies in the mountains will become short in a few weeks, when the spring snow runoff ends.

Gabriel said in addition to the cholera outbreak, there are suspected cases of typhoid, although they have not been clinically confirmed.

The cholera broke out primarily because of poor sanitation, even though sufficient clean drinking water is available in the camp, said Gabriel, who works with the group's teams from a base camp in the eastern Turkish city of Van.

Besides the estimated 70,000 people at the Cukureca camp, 40,000 people in the nearby Uzumlu camp and about 10,000 people at a site known as the River Camp are threatened, he said.

"In Uzumlu we have suspicious cases but not an outbreak," he said.

The final decision on whether to quarantine the Cukureca camp will be made by the Red Cross task force, which is coordinating relief actions on the Turkish side of the border, Gabriel said.

Iraqi Kurds to seek homeland when talks resume

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iraq's Kurds will demand international guarantees for an autonomous homeland in northern Iraq when they resume talks on the issue Monday with Iraqi leaders in Baghdad.

The Kurds are at odds with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein over the need for international guarantees, and there also are reports of differences over how to split oil revenues.

Kurdish officials announced on April 24 that Saddam had agreed in principle to grant expanded autonomy to the 3.5 million Iraqi Kurds.

"We don't need an independent state," Banker Fatih, spokesman for the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, said on Saturday. "It's a dream, but it's not reality."

More than 2 million Iraqi Kurds fled their homes when Saddam's forces repelled the latest Kurdish uprising. Kurdish leaders say they hope the talks will coax Kurds home from Iran, Turkey and the remote mountains of Iraq.

Diplomats in Baghdad said the Iraqi government weakened its deal to end the Kurdish insurgency once and for all and assure the world it can do so without outside interference.

"The Kurds have a golden opportunity to get something real," one diplomat said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

When the talks resume on Monday, the main issues are expected to be the size of the Kurdish region, the scope of its autonomy and international guarantees.

One diplomat said that in the first round of talks, the Kurds did not demand international guarantees for an accord.

However, the umbrella Iraqi Kurdistan Front announced in London last week that the Kurds insist on guarantees that Saddam will not renege on a pact, as they claim he did previously.

"We need United Nations support," France has asked the U.N. Security Council to discuss the Kurdish-Iraqi talks. Roberto Formigoni, the vice president of the European Parliament, told reporters in Baghdad on Friday he hoped to meet with the Kurds to relay the European Community's support of guarantees.

Another major issue is whether the northern oil center of Kirkuk, which has a large non-Kurdish population, should be included in an autonomous region. The issue helped sink a 1970 autonomy agreement, but Iraq's U.N. ambassador has said the city is included in the new discussions.

Diplomats and Iraqi sources in Baghdad told Associated Press reporter Walter Pultum the talks may have hit a minor snag over how to share revenue from the Kirkuk oil fields.

Iraq will rely on the relatively undamaged Kirkuk fields when U.N.

economic sanctions are lifted and it can export oil again.

"There may have been a technical delay," one government source said, "but I expect an agreement will certainly be signed."

Sources in Baghdad said the talks were to resume on Saturday but that they were unsure when they actually would begin.

Let's get serious about Puckett

I think we ought to name something after Gary Puckett.

Maybe the Centennial Fountain, the Victory Bridge or the Blue Lakes Double-Decker buses. How about Snake River Canyon — you know, the Gary Puckett Union Gap?

Steve Crump
Don't ask me

Oh, come on, don't pretend you've never heard of Gary Puckett. He's Twin Falls' 10 minutes of fame, the name you mean whenever someone screams "Buskin' mentions Paul Revere (the bass guitarist, not the silversmith) and the Raiders.

He's the only Twin Falls boy ever to have a No. 1 single. The only Twin Falls kid ever to appear onstage at Fillmore West alongside the five guys dressed in U.S. Army uniforms. And the only ex-Twin Falls resident to almost get his picture on the cover of Rolling Stone.

OK, so he was born in Minnesota and lived in San Diego when he formed Gary Puckett and the Union Gap. Union Gap is a suburb of Yakima, Wash., and of no particular significance other than it sounded cool to DJs back in 1967).

But he spent his formative years in Twin Falls, graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1960 and used to drag Flier Avenue with his buddies (Flier, believe it or not, was the local cruise of choice during the Eisenhower administration).

Between 1968 and 1971, this guy and his five sidekicks were rarely off Billboard charts. Back in the Age of Aquarius, Gary Puckett was better known than Eric Clapton, Nolan Ryan or Ronald Reagan.

He was the Vanilla Ice of the Vanilla Fudge generation. His group played at the Van Halen gig, and the Beatles burned to pharmaceuticals and the Stones released "Their Satanic Majesties Request."

Parents of a certain age even liked him; he's one of the biggest hits was "Young Girl," a ballad about a boy over 18 who resists the advances of a girl under 18.

And yet you'll search in vain for a statue of him in City Park.

Going on a generation of young Magic Valleyites, his new hit of "Lady Willpower," but there are plenty of baby boomers in these parts who remember.

You'll find them — in workshops, kitchens and truck cabs listening to "Woman, Woman" or "Over You," on 87.5 (the late, great Bob Seger) or 104.5 (by Lee, '66 GTOs and keggers at Murphree Lake).

About 1,000 of them were dancing in front of the stage in the old Bronco Gym in Boise the last time saw Gary Puckett. The guys affected a cool, muttonchop stubble that the Gappers wore and the girls' hair looked like Goldie Hawn wambles.

Outside, it was April, 1969. Inside, it was '95 degrees. The highway bleachers in Bronco Gym, which is about the size of your brother-in-law's garage, were actually perspiring by the time the opening act got his synthesizer on the stage.

Idaho Congressmen don't embrace Brady Bill

States News Service

WASHINGTON — A congressional showdown this week between two gun-control measures is unlikely to leave gun enthusiasts in Idaho happy.

The Brady Bill, which would establish a national seven-day waiting period for prospective handgun buyers, has been denounced by every one of Idaho's congressmen as a Second Amendment violation.

But some of them like the Stagers initiative, an alternative underwritten by the National Rifle Association. It calls for instant background checks of gun buyers at the point of purchase, but detractors argue the background check system would cost hundreds of millions of dollars and result in an additional tax to be levied on those who buy guns.

Craig

Feighan, D-Ohio, is named for former presidential press secretary James S. Brady, who was badly wounded when John Hinckley Jr. tried to assassinate Ronald Reagan in 1981.

The Brady Bill is scheduled for a House vote on Wednesday. The NRA initiative is sponsored by Rep. Harley O. Staggers Jr., D-W.Va., and may be introduced as a separate bill or as an amendment to the Brady Bill. A House Rules Committee will meet Tuesday to decide which bill should be voted on first. If the Stagers bill comes up for a vote first, the Brady Bill is not expected to garner enough votes to stay alive.

Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, is an NRA board member who supports the background-check provisions of the Stagers initiative. "I don't believe that (the check) tramples on the constitutional rights of the individual," Staggers said. "The Brady Bill is all politics and no reality."

Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, remains undecided about the Stagers initiative, said his legislative aide Glenn Conrad. "Stallings is not convinced he needs to vote for some sort of gun-control measure," Conrad said. A decision to vote for the Stagers initiative would be a vote for "the lesser of two evils," he added.

Rep. Larry LaRocco, D-Idaho, is still studying the Stagers alternative, according to his legislative aide. "I don't know what he's going to do," she said.

Staggers said he would like to see a compromise bill that would require a waiting period of 10 days for handgun purchases, but he said he would not support such a bill unless it also included a ban on assault weapons.

Jerome bond goes to vote Tuesday

How the funds would be spent

Here's what the almost $5 million bond issue would pay for:
• new elementary school: $4,088,000
• new vocational shop: 157,800
• junior high annex remodeling: 129,300
• Washington School remodeling: 66,900
• Central School remodeling: 56,300
• kindergarten center expansion: 291,300

JEROME — Voters will decide on Tuesday whether to build an additional elementary school to relieve crowded classrooms in the Jerome School District.

Residents will vote on a $4,985,000 bond issue that will raise property taxes by about 77 cents per year per $1,000 property market value and will be used to construct a 28-room elementary school, make repairs at Washington and Central schools, build a vocational agriculture building at the high school, expand the kindergarten center and renovate the junior high annex.

This will be the third time the district has asked residents for a new elementary school. The last time around, in October, the bond issue fell on a mere 57 votes short of passing.

The bond will be open from 8 a.m. until 8 p.m. Tuesday at the old Spruce-Keilz building in the Lincoln Plaza and at the Bill Emerson residence 5 1/2 miles west of Jerome.

The need for the waiver in light of the Right to Farm Act passed by the Idaho Legislature in 1981. That law basically eliminates the right to bring nuisance claims against agricultural operations that have conducted business for at least a year.

The waiver as it is structured is challengeable. It's just so poorly drafted. Whether the court would throw it out, I don't know," Walker said.

The waiver consists of one sentence: "One-family homes built subsequent to the date of adoption of this ordinance specifically waive any nuisance claims they may have against agricultural operations including livestock confinement operations."

Walker sees three problems with the waiver. "Agricultural operations are not defined. The waiver refers only to present, not future, nuisance claims. The waiver's language implies that houses are 'one-family homes' — not people, waive their rights."

Proponents of a proposed $5 million Jerome School bond issue have hung a banner advertising their cause in front of Washington Elementary School on Lincoln Street in town.

The Jerome public education committee will hold a rally at 6 p.m. Monday that will feature speakers, the high school band and a march to the Central-Elementary school, where a question-and-answer meeting will be held.

Central-Elementary is one of the district's more crowded schools.

"It's so crowded in here we can't think. There's no ventilation and we're stuck in our seats all day, so kids are turned off to school," said Jennifer Daugherty, 13, a sixth-grade student at Central.

Her class, taught by Connie Klaus, meets in the school pantry. The 12 students have no lockers and students who could handle extra work or projects can't because there is no room, Klaus said.

"Since we're connected with the kitchen we listen to lettuce being chopped, the hand practicing and other noises from the lunch room," Klaus said. "There isn't time nor space to work with students who need additional help," she said.

"It's very inhumane to expect students to sit and learn in here with only those two little windows for air. But we're doing the best we can with what we have," Klaus said.

State attorney questions county nuisance waiver

By Phil Salm

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County's nuisance waiver is "vague and ill-worded" and can be challenged in court, says a lawyer in the Idaho attorney general's office.

The attorney, Frank Walker, questioned the waiver as it is structured is challengeable. It's just so poorly drafted. Whether the court would throw it out, I don't know," Walker said.

The waiver consists of one sentence: "One-family homes built subsequent to the date of adoption of this ordinance specifically waive any nuisance claims they may have against agricultural operations including livestock confinement operations."

Walker sees three problems with the waiver. "Agricultural operations are not defined. The waiver refers only to present, not future, nuisance claims. The waiver's language implies that houses are 'one-family homes' — not people, waive their rights."

Ketchum attorney joins fight to save trees

The Times-News and The Associated Press

BOISE — Ketchum attorney Andrew Parnes first got involved with the Land and Water Fund of the Rockies when he took on the fight to save some cottonwood trees north of town.

Now he is one of more than 50 lawyers and a handful of scientists who have volunteered to donate help to Idaho environmental groups through the "LAW" fund.

The private, non-profit organization is based in Boulder, Colo., and has an office in Boise. It seeks to provide legal ammunition to causes that have not been adopted by big league environmental groups such as the Sierra Club.

Parnes said the group has provided him with advice and help on the case involving an Idaho Transportation Department project to straighten a road on Highway 75 north of Ketchum.

LAW became involved when the Idaho Conservation League asked for help, said Bob Bartlett, Wendell attorney and member of the LAW advisory board.

"The organization only will take on causes it feels are in the public interest," Bartlett said. "And the Wood River case certainly generated considerable public concern," he said.

"The group has taken on about a half dozen cases around the state," said Dick Juengling, executive director of the Idaho office. He hasn't heard any criticism yet from industry, but he has an answer ready.

"My reaction would be that what we're really doing is leveling the playing field," he said. "We're providing the public the means to participate in the decision-making process."

"There are a number of small environmental groups around the Rocky Mountain West who are facing environmental issues which are important, but which don't attract the attention of the major environmental organizations," Juengling said.

Groups apply to the Land and Water Fund for help. If Juengling decides the problem meets his guidelines, he finds a lawyer or other expert who has agreed to donate time and assigns the case.

About half of the volunteers are from the Boise area, with the rest scattered around the state, including about six lawyers from Sandpoint, Coeur d'Alene and Moscow.

Since opening an Idaho office last year, the fund has received 19 requests for help and has assigned lawyers to five. Attorneys are helping groups fight a hydropower dam license in southeastern Idaho and timber sales in southwestern Idaho.

In northern Idaho, citizens opposed to some aspect of a silver mine on the Clark Fork River have sought help, Juengling said.

Although new, the organization has friends in high places. Gov. Cecil Andrus spoke at the group's $175 per plate dinner on April 26. It attracted 100 people. Andrus, former secretary of the Department of the Interior, was joined by Susan Udall, also a former Interior secretary.

The Idaho budget is $81,000, most of which will be raised through donations.

Group plans survey on grass burning

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Members of a northern Idaho group opposed to grass field burning want to know whether the sensation is widespread.

The Kootenai County Clean Air Coalition is organizing a survey of Panhandle residents. It will begin "Operation Clean Air," seeking to shut down annual field burning and the resulting air pollution, said Mike Rudbeck, activities director.

But if the survey shows that a majority of area residents don't find the smoke offensive, or don't believe that field burning should be eliminated, the coalition's aims might change.

"The first goal of Operation Clean Air is to determine what the public wants," Rudbeck said.

Growers of Kentucky bluegrass seed burn fields on the Rathdrum Prairie and elsewhere in northern Idaho and eastern Washington during fall months.

Many residents complain that the heavy smoke causes respiratory ailments and is bad for the tourism trade.

Farmers say burning is the most effective way to force plants to seed during the next harvest season. Local grass growers say they will attempt to reduce air pollution this year. Al Haselbacher, executive secretary for the Intermountain Grass Growers Association, said.

In Idaho, the Intermountain Grass Growers pledged to reduce smoke emissions by 20 percent by 1992 from 1990 levels, work toward the eventual elimination of wheat stubble burning and restrict burning.

Money also has been pledged for research at the University of Idaho.

The Legislature hasn't been able to do so. The coalition was one of several groups attempting to get the last Legislature to act. Some legislators encouraged a compromise between grass growers and burning opponents, but the Idaho Farm Bureau lobbied against it and nothing was passed.

Jerome

If the bond issue does not pass, the Jerome School Board has voted to begin split sessions at the high school for junior high and high school students. Under the plan, high school students would attend classes during the morning and junior high students would go to school during the afternoon. The junior high then would be used as an elementary school. As part of the campaign for the bond issue, placards posted around Jerome state,

"Vote yes or Jerome students go to split sessions."

"That is a statement of fact. We have a choice and we want everybody to know what the choice is," Superintendent Will Brown replied when asked if the slogan is meant to sound like a threat.

"Split sessions are a short-term solution if the bond doesn't pass," Brown said. "In the long term, we might look at year-round schooling as an option."

In random interviews with 20 junior high and high school students, 18 said they would prefer split sessions to year-round schooling, because they would have more time for jobs and to do other things.

Not all voters are in favor of the bond issue.

"I'm against the bond because only property owners get the brunt of the bill, renters who have kids in school don't have to pay anything," Karin Bolish, a parent, said in a telephone interview. Voter registration has been heavy, which is surprising since many registered for the bond issue that failed last year, according to the county clerk's office.

Fifty-six of those new voters were signed up at the high school when registrars went to the school to register 18-year-old students. This service is provided for general and primary elections also, at Jerome and Valley high schools, Donita Lancaster, registrar said.

Nuisance

After a year and wants to include it as part of a proposed dairy law. Officials hope the waiver can protect dairies and other farms from nuisance claims when people move into the agricultural zone and complain about flies, odors, noise and other unpleasantities that go with farming. At a hearing on the dairy law last week, several people said the waiver unfairly makes homeowners sign away their rights when moving in to the agricultural zone. The waiver should define what the county means by nuisances, they said. County Prosecuting Attorney K. Ellen Baxter said Thursday she would not respond to those comments because she did not go to the hearing, and because the County Commission has not asked her to review the waiver. A couple of weeks ago, however, Baxter said the county purposely left the waiver's wording vague and that she was satisfied it would stand up.

Commissioner Norma Bloss said Thursday that because of comments at the hearing the commissioner will ask Baxter to review the waiver.

"It needs to be outlined what's included as a nuisance," Bloss said.

The waiver takes up one paragraph in a 15-page document and Walker said the law as a whole might clarify the waiver's meaning of such terms as agricultural operation. But the law does not define agricultural operation, said Harry Phipps of the county Planning and Zoning Department.

Are slaughterhouses and hide and cutting businesses considered agricultural operations, Walker asked.

By referring only to present nuisance claims, the waiver might be "inviting problems," he said. "Most voters, such as those used by insurance companies, currently point out the time period, or periods, to which they apply. The county's waiver does not say people are waiving their rights to future nuisance claims," he said.

The county included the waiver in the dairy law to draw people's attention to the Right to Farm Act, Phipps said. But any waiver requiring people to sign away common law right should clearly define what it means, Walker said.

Minorities

And with the 1986 immigration law beginning to result in more and more legalized Hispanic citizens, Pena expects continued growth in the Hispanic populations of Twin Falls, Cassia, Bonneville and Bingham counties, among others.

According to Census Bureau figures Bennon provided, Idaho's total population grew by 7 percent in the 1980s, to just over 1 million people. Its Hispanic population, the largest single minority in the state, grew by 45 percent, to 52,927 people.

Similarly, Twin Falls County grew by 40 percent on the whole, while its Hispanic population increased by 33 percent.

Still, people who classified themselves as non-white only comprise 14 percent of Twin Falls County and 10 percent of Twin Falls County.

As the minority population grows, so theoretically should its political clout. And in the reapportionment process, the Legislature must protect the rights of minority voters and reapportioning district lines that dilute minority voting strength.

"This office recommends that the Legislature take steps to ensure its plan does not impair a racial or language minority's ability to participate in the political process and elect representatives of their choice," Attorney General Larry Echolfaw said in a report to legislators.

"The office suggests the Legislature avoid dividing compact communities primarily composed of a racial or language minority."

"They're a force to be reckoned with," said Chief Deputy Attorney General Jack "Ned" Hagan. "But whether Idaho may have the numbers, it probably doesn't have the concentration needed to impact election outcomes, he said.

Bennon agreed, saying that new districts could have about 20,000 residents each, so any one group would need to be 10,000-15,000 strong to be influential.

"In reality, there's not much minority to even talk about," Bennon said. "Cassia County, for example, has 19,500 people and only 3,000 Hispanics. Bingham County has 20,000 people."

"It's probably not enough to have a weighted influence on elections," she said.

an impact. Minorities, she said, just need to be united and start working for role, models, and representation from the grassroots level.

"I believe the Hispanic population has not realized the impact they could have if they voted," Esquibel said.

Bennon said the U.S. Census may have underestimated Idaho's population by 28,000, and evidence shows that group is mostly minorities. The undercount will be finalized in July.

If the undercount is concentrated in Canyon, Bingham or Cassia counties, it could make a difference, Bennon said.

Pena said census data probably underestimated the Hispanic population by 70,000 or more, including a number of people who aren't yet legal.

Senate votes against cutting payroll tax

States News Service
WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho's senators and representatives on major legislation in Congress this past week.
 A "Y" means the member voted for the measure; an "N" means the member voted against the measure; an "A" means the member did not vote; and a "P" means the member voted present.

SENATE CORRECTION: Last week's vote chart did not make clear that Senators were voting on a motion to table, and thereby kill a measure, which would have reduced the Social Security payroll tax from 6.2 percent to 5.2 percent by 1996. A "yes" vote is a vote to table the measure.

Base

 exact number and types of planes to be deployed at Mountain Home to replace the EF-111 electronic warfare aircraft that are to be sent to other bases under the Pentagon's realignment plan announced last month. Until that decision has been made, the service won't go public with the details of its proposal, Giese said. Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, has speculated that Mountain Home will eventually get F-15 and F-16 jet fighters and fighter-bombers.

After previous plans to expand operations at the Mountain Home base and at nearby Saylor Creek Bombing Range were shelved last year, the governor's office came up with its own plan to help insure the future of the base.

The Air Force has recognized the significance of this Idaho training range for its future operations, and the state is moving forward to play a key role for our base by continuing to work toward opening the range, Gov. Cecil Andrus said in a news release. "This partnership of effort is what will assure a win-win situation for the Air Force and for the citizens of Idaho. The state put together a deal involving state and private land and a swap with the Bureau of Land Management to come up with a 150,000-acre site for a bombing range swap," he said.

The state's proposal, known as the Big Springs Training Range, would not allow the use of live ordnance or permit supersonic flights below 10,000 feet.

The Air Force wouldn't say if the proposed range, and the ground rules under which the service would have to operate it, are acceptable.

The governor's office said that interested groups, including environmental, recreation, hunting and wildlife organizations, had been consulted in the development of the state's proposal.

"The governor wants all those groups to be happy with the outcome," said Scott Peyton, Andrus' press secretary. "But only those directly concerned with the remote stretch of high desert that would be the focus of the range have been involved," said Dave Jett, who developed the plan for the governor's office.

"All I've ever heard has been pretty vague," said Mike McWherry, public lands specialist with the Idaho Conservation League.

Wendy Wilson, executive director of Idaho Rivers United, said her group had not been involved in any discussions. Her husband has an outfitting service on the East Fork of the Owyhee River, which is southern boundary of the proposed range.

The land in question is an important bighorn sheep calving and rearing area, and it is habitat for mule deer, sage grouse and ferruginous pelopole, said Chuck Harris, Fish and Game wildlife manager for Region 3. The canyon rims are favored by birds of prey.

The area also is popular with those seeking solitude. It is one of the most remote areas in the lower 48 states, Wilson said. A canoeist can spend 21 days going down the East Fork and only meet one road.

But even in the midst of all that solitude, the Air Force sometimes intrudes, Wilson said she has been in the Owyhee River canyon when jets have flown over at supersonic speed. The first time it happened, "I thought I'd been shot," she said. But she never saw the plane. By the time she recovered her senses, the aircraft was long gone.

Sgt. Bud McKay of the Mountain Home Air Force Base public affairs office said no supersonic flights are allowed in the area.

Increased Air Force activity would reduce the recreational value in the area, Wilson said.

She will have a chance to make her views known during hearings on the proposal. Those hearings have not yet been scheduled.

But Wilson fears a deal has already been cut, and Jett said public input will have little effect in determining the boundaries of the proposed range. That will be decided by which owners of private land in the area are willing to sell, he said.

The public will, however, have an opportunity to comment on how the area is operated, Jett said. And the Federal Aviation Administration would enforce any airspace restrictions, he said.

Man quits job to pedal bicycle across U.S.

CLIVE, Utah (AP) — He's not your typical Interstate 80 road warrior.

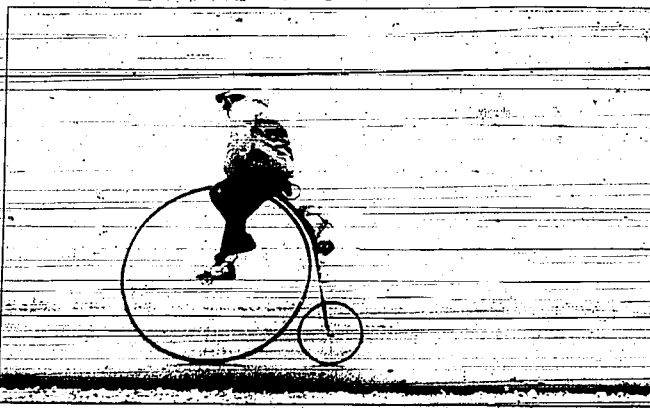

There's his costume of charcoal knickerbockers, a burgundy tie and matching stockings. Get closer and you might hear him singing "Foxy" Orlando tunes.

But the main reason Michael Gabrick draws stares from motorists and toots from truck drivers is his chosen means of transportation — a high-wheel bicycle, circa 1885.

Pedaling briskly east in the emergency lane, Gabrick traveled from the Utah-Nevada border to Salt Lake City in about 12 hours Thursday. He's "shooting for Boston by the first week of June."

No, he's not raising money or calling attention to any particular cause. And it's all right if the Guinness Book of World Records never hears of him.

"I'm doing this because I always wanted to cross the United States on a bicycle like this. I would be the fifth person to do it one of these bikes," he said.

AP Laserphoto

snowstorm in the Sierras' Donner Pass for ferocity.

"You should have seen me. It was blowing so strong I had to grab on to a steel post and hold on tight," he said.

Wind resistance is a critical factor for the big 52-inch front wheel. The smaller rear wheel, in turn, must rotate about four times for each rotation of its front partner.

The original high-wheel bicycles, also known as penny-farthings, were made between 1817 and 1867 and are a valuable collection piece for some enthusiasts.

"I just have one of two, and, for these things had clout," he said.

Wearing 19th century clothes is part of the show.

Gabrick's road bike is a replica of an original Columbia—fixer, a model he says was affordable to people in the 1880s. But some of the bicycles were known to cost about $125 even then.

"It was an elite bike for elite people, so the ones who could buy them were lawyers, doctors and politicians, things like that. The bicycle was the forerunner of highways because the people that rode these things had clout," he said.

Apparently, they no longer do. Gabrick, a public works employee who often rides in parades as a clown, says he took a leave of absence from Fountain City, his employer of 11 years, to make the trip.

"They said 'so long. So I'm in a career change right now,'" he said.

He makes the 147-mile stretch from Twin Falls to Salt Lake City in 11 days, a pace set by Jack Custer of Arizona in 1884.

Disputes stall Kootenai 911 plan

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Police officials in Kootenai County are frustrated that the countywide 911 emergency dispatch system is flourishing a year after voters approved it.

The system remains without a home, a startup date and countywide coverage.

"I'm not ready to throw in the towel," said Coeur d'Alene Police Chief Dave Seales. "But I am frustrated that we seem to be pulling in different directions."

County Sheriff Pierce Clegg is a sued the same warning. "The 911 new building is constructed, the system has the potential to become unwrapped unless some key leaders change that style," he said. "There's a certain amount of politics involved."

Clegg called on county commissioners to deal with Post Falls, where officials insist on operating their own system with money collected from a county surcharge on telephone lines.

"We keep dancing and prancing around Post Falls," Clegg said. "We need to get this resolved."

County officials hope to build a center of about 2,500 square feet rather than temporarily using the basement of the sheriff's office. It is the base of the sheriff's office. It is a county surcharge on telephone lines.

CSI vocational students win 16 medals

College of Southern Idaho vocational students won a total of 16 medals at the Vocational Industrial Clubs of America Idaho State Olympics April 2-5 at Idaho State University in Pocatello.

Competition winners from CSI in the post-secondary division were as follows: Job Skills Demonstration, Michelle Hawkins, Twin Falls; first, Susan Hall, Kimberly; second, Ekimponnigbo Speech, Rose Jordan, Wendell; second and Carol Rubter, Twin Falls; third, Prepared Speech, Hall; third, Job Interview, Belinda Milam, Twin Falls; second, Opening and Closing Ceremony, the CSI team of Jenette Silve, Burley; Joane Brown, Twin Falls; Margarita Hernandez, Rupert; Heidi Davis, Heyburn, Hall, Hawkins and Rubter, first; Practical Nursing Skills, Milam, first; Jordan, second and Rubter, third.

In Automotive Service Technology: John Johnson, Helena; Mount, third; Architectural Drafting, Adrian Acquisto, Twin Falls; second, Cabinet Making, Ron Harris, Twin Falls; first, Carl Eler, Eler, second and Nathan Bishop, Twin Falls; third, Machine Drafting, Kim Nolin, Twin Falls; first.

All first place winners will compete in the nationals this June in Louisville, Ky.

Analise Taylor of Kimberly has been accepted by Youth for Understanding International Exchange as an international exchange student. Analise will live with a family in Japan on YFU's 1991 summer program. Currently, she attends Kimberly High School.

Several area students have recently been awarded scholarships: Heather Lea Hughbanks, a senior at Gooding High School, has been awarded a McPherson College Presidential Scholarship; The scholarship provides two years of tuition at McPherson College in McPherson, Kan. Jeff Vickers, a Twin Falls resident who will graduate from the College of Idaho in Caldwell in June, has accepted a scholastic scholarship to attend Baylor University in Waco, Texas. Neelie Berlin of Rupert, a freshman studying biology at Idaho State University in Pocatello, has been awarded the Mildren Craven Scholarship by the university.

Barbara J. Aston, the daughter of Charles Conrad of Buhl and Betty Conrad of Eler, was honored as an outstanding senior in the College of Agriculture and Home Economics at Washington State University in Pullman. The recognition is based on a student's grade point average, honors and achievements, participation in extracurricular activities and national organizations, community involvement and contributions to the department.

Eryn McKim of Twin Falls has been named to the dean's list for the fall semester at the University of Oregon in Salem, Ore. The dean's list is made up of every student who has a 3.7 GPA or better.

Nearly 150 students participated in Boise State University's annual Leadership Quest, a program designed to recognize established and emerging student leaders on the BSU campus. Those participating from this area were as follows: Jennifer Oregon, Kristina Salazar and Ramon Silva, Burley; John Bellegrano and Diana Garza, Glens Ferry; Steve Thaxton, Julie Willey, Julia Escobedo and Nancy Mitchell, Haxton; Margara Ben Goebha and Jenni Thomason, Jerome; Sandy Friedly, Shannon Hernandez, Diana Knadel, Kristen Knudsen and Rhonda Urcidil, Mountain Home; Lisa Moser and Daniel Ramirez, Rupert; Holly Carpio, Teri Hancock, Alyssa Brown, Kathy Tadlock and Tawna Travis, Twin Falls; Mike Gibson and Jeannie Peterson, Wendell.

The Times-News welcomes items about area residents who receive honors or recognition. Send information to The Times-News Spotlight column, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83403.

Czechs celebrate 70 years in Magic Valley

By Kathy Vittek Waggoner
Times-News correspondent

Members of the Z.C.B.J. Lodge or Western Fraternal Life Association, as it is known today, celebrated 70 years in the Magic Valley as a week ago. For the entire time, they enjoyed Czechoslovakian foods such as sauerkraut and dumplings, pork and hunk, rye bread and tofiky (resent roll), kolache and strudel, sang Czech songs and watched a few couples dance a polka to accordion music, they reminisced about the past, especially the dances and plays at the Fairview Hall.

The program also included a history of the Lodge and three charter members and several 50-year members received recognition. A total of 143 deceased members were also remembered in a brief ceremony. "We have over 50 members in Buhl, and we won't be going so long, so we wanted to have a bang-up celebration," Matilda Machacek said.

Machacek was named a candidate for National Fraternalist of the Year for her efforts in preserving the Czech culture. Machacek organized a group of local Czech folk dancers to perform during the Idaho Centennial year, served on the Idaho Ethnic Committee, submitted a square for the Ethnic Centennial Quilt completed by her and other Czech women in Buhl.

She has promoted Czech culture all her life by being a member of the Lodge and by teaching others to cook native foods, to dance polkas, waltzes and folk dances and to play the Czech language. She also compiled the Lodge history.

In November 1920, Lodge No. 234 was organized in Buhl with 21 charter members. Many Idaho settlers transferred their memberships from other states and the Lodge grew to 400 members during its peak in the '30 and '40s. Today, there are 171 members statewide with a majority living in the Magic Valley.

Czech immigrants established the Czech Fraternal Insurance (Zapadni Ceska Bratrska Jednota) in 1897 to help to preserve the Czech language and culture and to help the immigrants survive in their new land, according to information in the history of the Z.C.B.J. Lodge, compiled by Machacek.

Men purchased insurance policies through the lodge to pay burial expense for themselves and later for their wives and children as the bylaws were expanded to include them. Most members agree that the main attraction of the lodge was to promote fellowship among the immigrants.

Czechoslovakian immigrants settled in the Buhl-Castelford area in the early part of the century because of the agriculture, according to the history.

Czechs started a social and literary society in 1919 (Beseda Lodge) locally to encourage fellowship, enjoy Czech waltzes and to sing and perform Czech plays. They organized a library of books written in the Czech language in 1923, they built the Fairview Hall southwest of Buhl to hold public dances, weddings, meetings, plays and shivares (supper parties for the bride and groom).

Many of the same people belonged to both the Beseda Lodge and the Z.C.B.J.

Eighty-nine-year-old Tom Novacek and 2-year-old Brianna DeGiorgio give the polka a try at the 70th anniversary celebration of the Western Fraternal Life Association in Buhl.

Lodge. Their goals were similar and folk dance. Featherbeds were spread under benches next to a wall or under the lunch counter for sleeping children. At midnight, the children were awakened to enjoy a sandwich break.

"One of my favorite memories," said Alma Schaefer, 65 of Buhl, "was when our parents would dance and there was a kind of shelf in the basement behind the stage. And when we would get tired, we would crawl in that little loft and fall asleep listening to the band music."

She said that she would dance with the other girls before they got sleepy, or she would play behind the stage. The boys didn't want to dance as much. In the '40s, girls still danced together, but many boys were gone to war, she said.

Three-act plays were presented each spring and fall during the '30s and '40s. A dance always followed the performance and they were so well-received that the dance floor was enlarged. More than 10 Czech bands played at the hall during this time period with accordions, brass instruments, bass and drums.

Lost art of journal-keeping scribbles into a new era

By Sam Hodges
Orlando Sentinel

Edward Robb Ellis started keeping a diary 64 years ago. Nineteen million words later, he's still at it. Only half the diary is bound, but that half sags three shelves of his New York City apartment.

Ellis, cited by the Guinness Book of World Records as his diary-keeping, writes a few pages every day. "It helps me to perform Czech plays. They organized a library of books written in the Czech language in 1923, they built the Fairview Hall southwest of Buhl to hold public dances, weddings, meetings, plays and shivares (supper parties for the bride and groom)."

Despite the psychological self diagnosis, Ellis seems a throwback to a slower, more reflective age, when people took pen in hand to record their observations and feelings.

But it's at least as accurate, perhaps more so, to describe him as elder statesman of a new era of journal-keeping.

Journal- or diary-keeping (most people use the terms interchangeably) has made a comeback, thanks to counselors and teachers who consider the practice a valuable tool for self-understanding and writing confidence.

Now, people are told to keep a journal — for their own good.

"Everyone here keeps a journal," said Ann Biddy, director of Freedom House, an Orlando, Fla., center for women battling alcohol and other drug addictions. "We find the women are able to write about their problems easier than talk about them. All kinds of things come out in the journal."

At Valencia Community College, half the writing teachers require students to keep a journal, said Don Tigue, a communications professor and writing program supervisor.

"The best student writing I see is in journals," he said. Assigning students to keep a journal is common in both Orange and Seminole County schools. Myrna Walters, coordinator of elementary reading and language arts for Seminole schools, said first-graders and even kinder-

A belated thank you to a teacher who made life richer

"Sing this note," the teacher said, and played a C on the piano. I was on the edge of breaking a self-conscious sweat, croaked a tentative B flat: "Laaaaaa."

"All right, now try this," the teacher said and moved to a matching B flat.

"Laaaaaa," the boy gurgled, sliding to A. He wanted to run away, but the music teacher persisted.

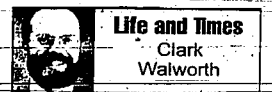

"Once more," he said, and played the C again.

"Laaaaaaa," the boy replied, still stuck at A.

"Hmmm," the teacher said. I was that tuneless boy, and I remember that afternoon with painful clarity. In the history of public education, I surely was the only student kept after school for singing flat.

Twenty years later, as another school year turns down toward another commencement, I scene down back to me. There, squirming beside the piano, my life changed in a small-but-significant way.

Gilbert Timothy was a stubby little leprechaun of a quick laugh, a quicker temper and a passion for playing music out of adolescent throats. I was 14, the age when life goes out of control. Between Halloween and Easter of that year, I gained four inches in height, mostly neck and ankles. My upper lip sprouted. On the telephone, people began mistaking me for my father.

Up to that point in life, music had evaded me. In a family of songbirds, I was a crow. My braying in church encouraged atheism: How could a just God have inflicted this curse on an innocent child?

But one day at school, a classmate said that Mr. Timothy had mentioned me. Mr. Timothy could tell by my speaking voice that I had potential as a singer, my friend said.

That was all the encouragement I needed. I was a Professional Musician thought I had potential, what right did I have to deprive the world? The next fall I took my place in the bass section of Seventh Period Choir.

Seventh Period Choir was the group you joined if you failed the audition for a vocal choir, or if you were too scared to audition at all. We were a pathetic bunch, too ragged

Help honor Magic Valley teachers

Have you had a teacher who made an impact on your life? Did a high school teacher help you unlock the mysteries of calculus? Did you choose your career because of the positive influence of a teacher?

The Times-News would like to honor local teachers. We'll profile some of the teachers in a features story June 2. We'll also publish a selection of your letters.

Send nominations of 400 words or less to: Darlene Hunter, features editor, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83403. Please include your name and phone number. Nominations are due May 23.

He had plenty of other things to do, I'm sure. He could have been helping his real singers, the talented soloists in his better classes, polka star warblers. Instead, he spent the time giving music to a boy who had none.

In that time, this story's happy endings would have been crowing at Carnegie Hall. In real life, I groaned and drooped through three years of music class and crowned my career by winning a seat (just barely) in a choir that had a name.

But there's an eulogie. Twenty years later, I'm still singing. I sing at every opportunity — with the car radio, at birthday parties, at ball games. Maybe not well, but with gusto. In a church choir loft, I met the woman who would become my wife.

Belatedly, this is my thank-you note to Gilbert Timothy, and to teachers every-where. My life is richer because one teacher cared about developing every student's potential, no matter how small a potential it was.

Clark Walworth is managing editor of The Times-News. "Lile and Times" is a column that runs occasionally in the features section.

For war bonds. One man donated potatoes to the White House and another donated tanks to be auctioned for bonds. Czechoslovakia and the men Czech-doll-lapel pins, quilts and berberish is closest. There are 173 liners were sold to the Czech National Alliance for ambulances in Czechoslovakia.

Most of the traditions have been absorbed into American society. Many Czechs become active in gangs and other organizations.

Since 1984, meetings have been conducted in English and are now held bi-weekly at the Lincoln Center in Buhl. Usually 12-15 members ages 60-95 who have kept up the tradition are present.

According to Tim Novacek, insurance agent, past president and national delegate for 20 years, the lodge no longer has an Idaho tie-in. The lodge is now in the men's active lodges in 20 states.

Only two current members, Frank Sedivy, 95, and Marie Sedivy, 87, both of Buhl were born in Czechoslovakia. The rest of the members are second-generation, who have been "very faithful and responsible for keeping the lodge active," according to Machacek.

The lodge is involved in ecology and recycling. The rest of the members are mostly interested in the fellowship, Machacek said.

CSI teleconference features 'Constructive Disagreement'

TWIN FALLS - Herbert S. Kinder, Ph.D., director of the Center for Management Effectiveness in Pacific Palisades, Calif., will conduct a teleconference on "Constructive Disagreement" Wednesday.

The teleconference will be presented from 1:15 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the College of Southern Idaho Development Center Foundation Telecommunications classroom.

Objectives of his presentation are anticipating and preventing destructive conflict; dealing with disagreement before it erupts out of control; expressing differences when confronting them would be beneficial and managing disagreement with skill and assurance.

Cost for this live interactive teleconference is $35 and students can register by calling 733-9354, extension 272.

Journal

gardeners keep journals.

"It's a non-threatening environment," she said, noting that teachers don't "redline" the writing. "We're encouraging children to get their thoughts on paper and to feel good about writing."

Journal-keeping dates to 10th-century Japan, but is more commonly linked with 18th- and 19th-century Europe and America.

Most of the well-known journals and diaries are literary. Samuel Pepys' diary, for example, is as James Boswell's "Henry David Thoreau's and Virginia Woolf's. And Nin's journal inspired the recent film Henry & June.

Women's journals have been important to historians. The recent PBS documentary "The Civil War drew heavily on Mary Chesnut's diary, and the accounts of pioneer women in the West paint a vivid portrait of their hard lives. For a powerful personal account of the Nazi era, it would be hard to beat Anne Frank's journal, published after her death as "The Diary of a Young Girl."

The real growth in journal-keeping seems directly the result of teachers and counselors.

"Using journals has become one of the basic teaching-writing," said Patrick Scanlon, a professor of communications at the Rochester (N.Y.) Institute of Technology, and a specialist in journal-keeping. "In therapy, too, it's an article of faith that people can help themselves by writing about their problems."

Scanlon said journal-keeping is common in therapy, especially with disturbed adolescents.

"The thought is that it will slow them down," he said. "When they're in their troubles," he said. "With the boys, though, you have to call it a journal. They don't want anything to do with a diary. It sounds too much like something girls do."

Journal-keeping in the teaching of writing caught on in the 1970s, thanks largely to composition theorist Peter Elbow.

Elbow encouraged writing teachers to worry less about form, sentences and outlines, more about helping students to enjoy writing and find their "voices" as writers.

Ideas take time to filter out, but assigning students to keep journals has been common for the last eight years, said Millie Davis of the National Council of Teachers of English.

Davis said "journal-keeping in schools has been refined, with teachers more likely now to require students to write journal entries on given subject—such as an assigned novel or play.

But the journal is still supposed to be a space in which the student can relax and enjoy writing, she said.

"Journal rules say that grammar and spelling don't count," she said. "The purpose of the journal is not to perfect English usage, but to get your ideas down before you forget them."

One problem with student journals is how to grade them. In fact, some teachers, such as Scanlon, don't require students to hand in journals. They argue that a journal is, by definition, private unless the author wishes someone else to read it.

A more common approach is for teachers to have students remove or fold over those pages too personal to be shared.

"I only read what they choose to share with me," said Pat James, who teaches journal-writing in the University of Central Florida's community arts program and is organizing an exhibit of women's journals for display at the school library in May. Secrecy has always been an element of the journal.

Edward Robb Ellis, he of the 2-millennium-old diary, the motivation to begin writing decides ago didn't come from a psychologist or teacher. It came from boredom. He and two friends needed a way to make a slow summer go faster.

"I said, 'Let's start a competition to see who can keep a diary longest,'" Ellis recalled. "I only kept two weeks, the other three months. I'm in my 64th year. I think I won."

CAT DANDRUFF

QUESTION: Our cat seems to be suffering from a severe case of dandruff, at least that's what it looks like. What should we do about it?

ANSWER: Dandruff is not a serious disease, does show that the cat's skin is not completely healthy. Cats which are not well-groomed tend to display this condition more than those which are carefully brushed. The friction of grooming helps to keep the skin supple and prevents scaling.

Diet may also be a cause. It can be a good idea to increase the cat's fat intake. If there are other symptoms which accompany the dandruff, it would be a good idea to have your cat seen by the veterinarian.

Methodist Women plan rummage sale

GOODING—The United Methodist Women have set the spring rummage sale for 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday at the Gooding Methodist Church, 305 Main St. The sale will close at noon on Friday. A child and pie luncheon will be served from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Tuesday and Wednesday, and a bake sale is scheduled for Wednesday.

Twin Falls Class of 1971 plans reunion

TWIN FALLS—The Twin Falls High School Class of 1971 is planning a 20-year class reunion. Class members are invited to attend planning meetings, scheduled for 7 p.m. every third Wednesday of each month in the Obichian Insurance community meeting room (back door). The next meeting is set for May 15. For more information, call Dave Sasse at 734-2500.

1st CSI-sponsored tour set for May 18

TWIN FALLS—The first in a series of summer trips and tours sponsored by the College of Southern Idaho will be held May 18. Four guide Virginia tickets will lead the tour along the California Trail. She will trace the trip the '49ers took as they traveled through the Magic Valley on their way to the California Gold Rush. The group will meet at 8 a.m. on campus. Participants should register in the Taylor-Building Records Office. The $30 fee includes lunch, transportation and instructional materials. For more information, call 733-9554, EXT. 270.

6th Paint Magic accepting applications

TWIN FALLS—The sixth annual Paint Magic program is now accepting applications. The extension of 25 hours of qualifying seniors on a limited income will be painted. Work will be done Aug. 10. Applicants, aged 60 and over, who would like to have their homes painted through the program may call 736-2122 for more information. Applications must be postmarked by June 21, and winning homes will be drawn July 19.

Kindergarten registrations set this week around Magic Valley

Kindergarten registrations are planned this week in the Magic Valley. Wendell Elementary School has planned a Kindergarten Roundup to enroll kindergarten-age students for the 1991-92 school year.

The roundup is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday in the kindergarten rooms at Wendell Elementary School. Current kindergarten students will not have school Friday.

Students must reach their 5th birthday by Aug. 15, 1991. Parents need to bring the child's birth certificate, Social Security card, immunization records and the child's appointment is necessary. Contact the Wendell Elementary School office at 536-6611 before the Kindergarten Roundup to give the name of the child.

scoring which will take place Aug. 20-22 at each school.

Registration will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at all elementary schools in Twin Falls.

To be eligible for kindergarten entrance, your child must be 5 years old by Aug. 15, 1991. The parent/guardian must bring the child's birth certificate, immunization record and Social Security number. The new health law concerning immunizations states that no child shall enter public school without proof of up-to-date information.

Open house events for all 1991-92 kindergarten students and their parents are also planned for this week. Times and places are as follows: From 10 to 10:45 a.m. Tuesday at Sawtooth Elementary; from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. Wednesday at Harrison and Morningside Schools; from 3:15 to 4 p.m. Thursday at Bickel and from 4:30 to 4:50 p.m. Thursday at Lincoln and Fernside schools.

At the registration, the parent/guardian will have an opportunity to sign their child up for a kindergarten

Phone company can let you off junk mail hook

MORE JUNK MAIL HANG-UPS: Just when you might think you're off the junk mail hook, guess who's adding your name to new mailing lists—the phone company. Apparently it's common practice for the phone company to sell subscribers' names in mailing lists to other companies. But people who don't want their local carrier adding their name to anyone else's mailing list can call and request that their name be deleted from any future mailing lists.

TOO FEW YEWES: Recently, the medical establishment along with environmentalists announced the discovery that the bark of the Pacific Yew tree contains a substance that has proven successful in treating advanced cases of ovarian cancer. Some 30,000 American women have ovarian cancer, 12,000 of whom are expected to die of the disease this year. The yew extract, called taxol, has been found to have a 30 to 40 percent success rate with patients for whom other treatments have failed. Ovarian cancer patients nationwide are now clamoring for taxol, but the extract is very expensive and difficult to get because the tree has become rare.

Ironically, the yew has long been considered a "trash tree" by loggers. About 90 percent of the yews that once grew in the Northwest have been destroyed. To make matters worse, the yew is a slow-growing tree, which can take 200 years to reach only 40 feet. To further complicate the issue, yews grow only in ancient forests, which are also the home of the endangered spotted owl, now protected under the Endangered Species Act. Various pharmaceutical companies are trying to develop a chemical synthesis of the yew extract, and others are working on extracting the substance from the yew needles, rather than the bark—a process that would save human lives and the life-giving trees alike.

ENERGY-SAVING TIPS: Guess which computer printer uses less energy—a laser printer or a standard office printer? If you guessed the laser printer, guess again—laser printers use about 10 times more energy than less expensive, standard types. So use lasers for presentations, standard printers for drafts.

Freezers work most efficiently when full. So fool your freezer by filling milk cartons half full of water and storing them in the freezer. This energy saving tip also provides handy ice blocks to pull in your cooler. Preheat the oven no longer than 10 minutes—any longer and the energy is just wasted. Conversely, turn the oven off 10 minutes before the dish is done. Food continues to cook as the oven cools slowly.

When driving on the highway, keep the windows of your car closed. Experts say it uses less energy to run the air conditioner than to allow an open window to increase aerodynamic drag.

These tips and others come from "The OMNI Energy Efficiency Guide" in the May issue of OMNI magazine.

GREEN CHOICES OR WHITE LIES: It's getting more and more confusing trying to make environmentally sound choices in the products we buy—especially with all the "green/environmentally friendly" advertising. Some aerosol products proudly proclaim to be ozone-friendly and CFC-free, even though CFCs were banned from most U.S. products 12 years ago, and scientists suspect some of the "new aerosols" in these products endanger the ozone layer as well. One brand of paper towels advertised itself as being "environmentally responsible," despite the fact that the towels were virgin bleached paper wrapped individually in plastic. The paper towels were claimed to be "environmentally responsible" because the cardboard was 50 percent recycled cardboard—which is true of most brands.

So much of what makes a product

"green" isn't on the label," said Joel Green, editor of the Green Consumer newsletter. "If you choose a glass bottle," which can be recycled, rather than a plastic one that cannot, he says, "you've made a 'green' choice that had nothing to do with the label." There are many things consumers can do that are more important than buying products with "green" labels, says Jonathan Schorsch of the Council on Economic Priorities, which publishes the book "Shopping for a Better World."

The organization and book rate companies for their environmental and social policies. Driving our cars less often, taking our own bags to the store to avoid wasting plastic or paper bags and using low-flow showerheads to conserve water affect the environment's health more than any "green" product purchase. Switching from paper towels to inexpensive cloth towels that can be washed and used again and cleaning with homemade solutions made of non-chemical ingredients such as vinegar, baking soda and soap are much greener choices than the "environmentally friendly" items on the store shelf.

Parents call different tunes for 16-year-old's post-prom party

DEAR ABBY: Our oldest son, "John," is going to his first prom. He is 16½ years-old and a junior in high school.

John and three other couples planned to rent a hotel room for a post-prom party, and, of course, drink beer. I suggested to my husband that we should have the kids back to our house for a post-prom party. No one would have to worry all night about John and his friends being out and drinking. No, we live five miles from the school where the prom will be held. No, it won't cost us a cent because the kids will pay for their own beer and snacks.

I could keep all of the car keys so no one would have to drive. Also, I could give them all coffee in the morning before they leave.

Well, my husband went nuts! He says I am encouraging the kids to drink.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

I tried to explain that this was a special occasion, and they are going to drink anyway. He thinks I am 100 percent wrong in suggesting they come here, and I think I am 100 percent right. Also, I would feel a lot better knowing the kids will be in our house after the prom.

CONCERNED MOTHER
I vote with my husband. To condone teenagers drinking beer or any kind of alcoholic beverage in one's home because "they are going to drink anyway" is, in my view, a feeble excuse. Furthermore, providing minors with alcohol is in violation of the law.

If the children were mine, I would insist on hosting the party in my home and providing the snacks, the soft drinks — and the supervision.

DEAR ABBY: For me, the war in the Persian Gulf and its end have brought to mind that fine film "To Kill a Mockingbird." The story was about Atticus Finch, a Southern gentleman, a competent attorney, a good father and husband, a peaceful man. Some might even call him a boring man.

One summer afternoon, a rabid dog came down the street and sent the residents into a panic. Finch came out of his house with a rifle and calmly and expertly killed the beast with one well-placed bullet.

Finch did not smile, strut, raise the rifle, exchange high fives, or in any other way celebrate his accomplishment. An unpleasant task had been thrust upon him, he did what had to be done, he solved the problem, and then went back to the business of being Atticus Finch.

To those who so expertly performed the unpleasant task, thank you in the Persian Gulf, thank you and God bless you. Accept the appreciation of a grateful nation. We are glad to have you home, and are pained by the memory of those who will not return.

Take a full measure of quiet pride in a job well done. And then, let's all get back to the business of peace.

—CHUCK EVANS, TRIE, PA.

DEAR CHUCK: Thank you for a thoughtful letter. And to all the men and women who will NOT return home for many months (or years) due to their commitment to the military, we owe a special debt of gratitude.

8 Idaho players overcome Montana chess team, 9-7

By Dan Looney
Special to The Times-News

Chess

On Saturday, April 27, eight players from Idaho met the Montana Chess Team for a three-round match at the Little-Tree Inn in Idaho Falls. The scoring for the match is one point for each win, one-half point for each draw and zero points for losses. The game time limits were 45 minutes after the next 30 minutes.

In the first eight-game round, the Montana team surged ahead 5 to 3, winning four games, drawing two and losing two. The Idaho team regrouped in the second round and won four games while drawing four as well, making the overall score 9 to 7 in favor of Idaho.

The final round was not completed until 10 p.m. Saturday night, and when the smoking brain cells cleared, the Idaho contingent scored four wins, three draws and one loss to win the match, going away 14½ to 9½. The Idaho team was led by expert Les Collin (2041) of Boise, 2½; Larry Pond (1791) of Idaho Falls, 2½; expert

Larry Parsons (2127) of Boise, 2; expert Stuart Suttis (2080) of Caldwell, 2; Husea Bradbury (1381) of Jerome, 2; John Downes (1777) of Meridian, 1½; Dan Looney (1620) of Twin Falls, 1; and Bill Gossowar (1980) of Nampa, 1.

This week's game features Jerome's Husea Bradbury's upset win over a higher-rated Montana player in the last round.

Next week, we will discuss different types of chess rotation, how the ratings are determined and the "International Grandmaster" chess game from a recent world-class tournament.

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Jackson is the latest celebrity to get the unauthorized biography treatment, with a 425-page tome that details the alleged bad blood between the gloved one and superstars Prince and Madonna.

"Michael Jackson: The Magic and the Madness" deals with the acclaimed performer's life from his birth, totaling on his surgeries (six, nose jobs, a cleft chin) — and his sex life (not much of one).

Author J. Randy Taraborrelli, whose last biography targeted Diana Ross, focuses on her protege instead this time around. The author conducted more than 400 interviews, including three with Jackson, for the book.

"Jackson may have accompanied Madonna to the recent Academy Awards, but Taraborrelli writes that he has little regard for her abilities."

"She just isn't that good. Let's face it, she can't sing and she's just an OK dancer," Jackson is quoted as saying in the book.

"What does she do best? She knows how to market herself. That's it."

Jackson was also jealous of the acclaim Madonna received as "artist of the decade" in 1989, and arranged for MTV to present him with his own artist of the '80s award.

"That'll teach the heifer," Jackson reportedly said.

He also used the bovine insult against interviewer Barbara Walters, who mentioned Jackson's plastic surgery in a television report.

"She's got her nerve. Look at all the surgery she's had," Jackson is quoted as saying. "Look at those eyes. Look at that nose."

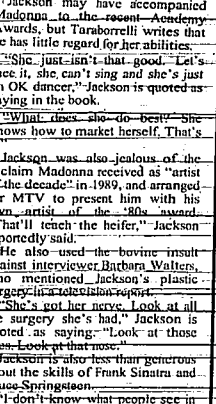

Jackson is also less than generous about the skills of Frank Sinatra and Bruce Springsteen.

"I don't know what people see in the guy. He's a legend, but the man isn't much of a singer," Jackson says of the Chairman of the Board. And the Boss? "They call Bruce the boss, and he's really over-rated. He can't sing and he can't dance," Jackson says.

There's no love lost between Jackson and Prince either. Jackson believed that Prince had attempted to use the supernatural to undermine his career. At a meeting between the two, Prince gave Jackson a small box filled with feathers and medals, the book says.

"That's some kind of voodoo stuff — Prince is trying to put a hex on me," Jackson told his producer, Quincy Jones.

The two superstars were, in a plan conceived by Jackson, going to duet on his song "Bad." But Prince rejected the overture because he felt "the song was garbage," writes Taraborrelli.

97-year-old learns civics in decades of town meetings

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — You could say Ernest Hibbard comes from a venerable New England stock. You could say he's as dependable as the Connecticut River. You could say he likes community affairs.

But it all falls short of explaining why the 97-year-old retired tobacco farmer has made his annual pilgrimage to Hadley's town meetings for 86 years.

Nothing — not even the annual drone of police and fire chiefs — has deterred Hibbard from his self-appointed rounds.

"My father said I would get more out of that than I would go to school. I'm sure he was right," Hibbard said Friday, the day after he attended this year's meeting.

Hibbard's passion for participation started when his father let him play hooky from school and took him to his first town meeting.

"Johnson of Johnson's bookstore said the town was indicted $2,000 a year," and he'd like to see the town get out of debt," Hibbard said.

He said the town eventually solved its problem, but he kept on going to the annual meetings, putting in his two cents. "He always spoke at every town meeting. He always added something," said William E. Dwyer, a 90-year-old lifelong friend who attended many of those sessions himself. "I suppose it's that old Yankee feeling of commitment to the community." Dwyer said. "His father was interested in the community, and I know his grandfather before him was, too. So he's part of the community, and he feels it's very important to maintain that heritage."

Architect bids to buy, restore Wright house

HOUSTON (AP) — A retired architect has made a bid to save a Frank Lloyd Wright-designed house that was slated for demolition.

"The only reason New England is in it is to restore it," Betty Lee said Friday. "I had no intention of living as far out as that."

The 1,800-square-foot house sits on a hill in a heavily wooded lot in a well-tended neighborhood in Houston. The owner offered the house for sale, with no value attached to the house, so the house could be torn down and replaced.

The asking price was $535,000, said listing agent E.J. McCoy. Ms. Lee bid on the Bunker Village Home last week.

Ms. Lee declined to say how much she was paying for the house and the lot, but McCoy said he considered the deal a success.

Closing was scheduled for June 14.

News that the only house in Houston designed by the famed architect would be demolished horrified Wright enthusiasts across the country. Preservationists scrambled for ways to buy the house. One woman looked into having the entire house lifted off the lot and set down on her land.

Ms. Lee, who is offering to buy the house and the lot, said she has long admired Wright's work and had no plans to buy property when she heard about it. "I don't own it yet, but I hope to restore it to about 90 percent of what was," she said.

The home was built by Wright in 1929 for insurance executive William Thaxton, who has since retired to a farm in Hempstead. When new the parallelogram building had no right angles, with walls that leaned inward.

Faithful say goodbye to evening soap king

DALLAS (AP) — Gatherings were held by the faithful of one soap opera as "Dallas" fans congregated around their television sets to say farewell to the long-running nighttime soap opera.

"It's a shame to see it end," said Billie Mozik, who was among several fans gathered at Cardinal Puff's bar to watch the two-hour final episode on CBS Friday night.

"Dallas" brought it all home and made us feel part of it," the 39-year-old Dallas woman said. "It made Dallas seem like (Texas) Hollywood."

The two-hour show was the end of the trail for the saga, which for 13 seasons titillated viewers with tales of the Ewing family's ambition, adultery and even assassination.

The takeoff on Frank Capra's "It's a Wonderful Life," a spirit played by Joel Grey, appeared at the Southfork pool as J.R. was contemplating suicide.

The spirit berated a distraught J.R. for wasting his plentiful opportunities. "I then showed the villainous oil man what life would have been like for friends, family and rivals had he not been born."

J.R.'s brother Bobby, without his brother's evil influence to keep him on the "straight and narrow," was heavily in debt, owing $50,000 in gambling bets.

Others had happier endings, however. Long-suffering ex-wife Sue Ellen flourished, developing a successful television career and happy marriage. Brother Gary became a wealthy lawyer, and half-brother Ray Kinsella, a former professional football player, eventually becoming vice president of the United States.

In typical cliffhanger fashion, the series drew to a close with the spirit shouting to J.R. to shoot himself. The last frame cut in to Bobby's face as he opened the back door.

Network officials were hoping the success of the "Who Shot J.R." episode on Nov. 21, 1980, would rub off on the final show. That show was the most-watched single show in TV history until the first episode of "MASI" on Feb. 28, 1983.

In its better days, the saga chronicling the quest for power among the Texas oil set was America's No. 1 prime-time show.

In fact, viewers in 85 countries would have easily given up such American commodities as blue jeans and CDs for their weekly dose of "Dallas."

Birthday card is still growing; creator hunts more signatures

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — So many people signed DeVon Smith's birthday card for the U.S. Constitution in four years that it more than 2,000 feet long. But he's still hunting for more signatures.

Smith's on the road again, trying to reach as many people as he can before the Constitution's bicentennial ends in December.

Three dozen U.S. senators have signed it, as well as Crow Indians from Hardin, Mont. So have entire schools, hospital staffs and the crew of the USS Constitution memorial ship in Boston.

People from all 50 states and 26 foreign countries have signed the card, which says, "Celebrate History by Making History" and marks the Constitution's 200th anniversary.

"I'd like to see it stretched out some day from the Lincoln Memorial down to 17th Street in Washington, D.C.," said Smith, who intends to present the card to U.S. Constitution Bicentennial Commission officials before December.

"There's a little over 46,000 signatures on it now," said Smith, who estimates the card would be more than 2,000 feet long unfolded. Even folded up like a accordion, it's about 3 feet high and weighs about 50 pounds, he said.

"If it ever fell over — Oh my God!" Smith said.

People may think the Constitution's 200th anniversary celebration was celebrated in 1987, but the ceremonies have continued through the 200-year anniversary of the ratification and the Bill of Rights.

Smith, 35, started working on his card in 1987. He gathered more than 32,000 signatures in nine months. He traveled around the country by bus in 1989 and '90.

Doctors remove cyst weighing 180 pounds

BALTIMORE (AP) — Doctors at Johns Hopkins Hospital removed a 180-pound ovarian cyst from a 40-year-old West Virginia woman in a hospital spokeswoman said.

Thursday's 10-hour operation was led by Dr. John Currie, director of gynecologic oncology at Hopkins.

"That is abnormally, abnormally abnormal," said Dr. Raymond Kaufman, chairman of the obstetrics-gynecology department of Baylor College of Medicine in Madison, Texas.

"That's a rarity."

There are different types of ovarian cysts, but unless the patient is extremely obese, most can be detected with a pelvic exam when they are 3 or 4 centimeters in diameter and a couple of grams' in weight, he said.

Fisherman abandons ship, uses cellular phone to call his wife

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — When fisherman James Clemons' boat started sinking he grabbed his cellular telephone, jumped into a raft and dialed for help.

After "abandoning" his 45-foot trawler, Net Income, Clemons used the portable phone to call his wife and ask her to look up the number for the U.S. Coast Guard station.

"He said 'I'm on a life raft and the boat is sinking,'" Ann Clemons said. "It was a little bit odd."

Clemons then dialed the Coast Guard, said his boat sank and that he was in a raft with his crewman, Lyman Kennedy. He also asked if they'd send someone to pick them up 17 miles out to sea.

"We were pretty surprised," said Petty Officer Robert Van Gorden, who took the call Friday morning — "it's the first time the operations department here can recall a cellular phone call from a life raft with that type of scenario behind it."

NEW YORK (AP) — Andy Williams, the 60-year-old crooner known for his rendition of "Moon River," married his girlfriend Debie Haas, the singer's spokeswoman said.

Williams and Ms. Haas, 36, exchanged vows Friday night in a civil ceremony attended by family and close friends at the singer's Manhattan residence, publicist Paul Shefrin said.

Williams

It was the second marriage for both the bride and the groom, who played to speed their honeymoon in the Dominican Republic, Shefrin said Saturday. They had been dating for four years, he said.

Williams' recordings include "Born Free," "Canadian Sunset" and "The Days of Wine and Roses." His television variety show from 1958 to 1971 garnered an Emmy award.

Simon considers sequel to famed 'Odd Couple'

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Felix and Oscar, the mismatched "Odd Couple" whose wives threw them out and asked them never to return, may be coming back.

Walter Matthau, who played the unkempt Oscar in the Broadway play and the 1969 movie, said Friday that he and creator Neil Simon discussed a sequel. "There may be an 'Odd Couple 2,'" said Matthau, who was in Pittsburgh filming a television movie.

"We'll sit around and Simon was throwing out ideas and I was throwing out ideas and Simon said, 'If you would just shut up, I would have the first act written already.'"

"Actually, I think he's got 50 pages written already," Matthau said. Simon's publicist, Bill Evans, said Saturday that he didn't know anything about the project but didn't doubt Matthau.

"It may well be something they've been talking about through the years while they were just sitting around," he said.

market chain is getting an ad boost from Woody Allen.

The writer-actor-director plans to make five television commercials for Coop, a string of cooperative supermarkets, said a spokeswoman for the chain, Tamara Palombi.

A dubbed Falk squeezed citrus fruit and asked shoppers for advice.

Palombi said she liked Allen's brand of humor and persuaded him to write and direct the spots. He won't appear in them, she said.

Italian newspapers Saturday reported that Allen signed a contract Friday—that's worth between $1.8 million and $2.7 million.

SOLVAY, N.Y. (AP) — A high school senior who secretly videotaped his sexual exploits with two teenage girls was sentenced to 60 days in jail.

Solvay Village Justice Robert Smolinsky showed no sympathy when Shane Heskin told him a jail sentence and probation would force him to miss graduation ceremonies and ruin his chances of going to college in Minnesota.

"I'm troubled that I attend civic functions and people feel the need to tell me that you are a bad person," the judge told Heskin. "You've embarrassed us all. You've humiliated two young ladies."

Smolinsky ordered Heskin to begin serving his time June 19, about four hours after his last school exam.

Heskin, a senior at Solvay High School, pleaded guilty March 27 to one count of sexual misconduct and two counts of endangering the welfare of a child. He was arrested on two felony counts of using and promoting a child in a sexual performance after he videotaped separate sexual encounters with two girls, ages 15 and 16, at his mother's home in Solvay in suburban Syracuse.

Assistant District Attorney Rick Trunfio said Heskin bragged about the tapes at school and showed them to friends.

In addition to the jail term, Heskin was put on three years' probation, and ordered to perform 100 hours of community service.

Horse strikes gold at Kentucky Derby

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Strike the Gold won the Kentucky Derby Saturday, thanks to the winning instinct of trainer Nick Zito and the winning move of jockey Chris Antley.

First, Zito convinced owner B. Giles Brophy to break away from Calumet Farm and buy the colt when it appeared the son of Alydar would go elsewhere.

"I don't want to lose this horse," Zito told Brophy last year. Brophy and two partners took the hint, and Zito had his wish.

"That gave Antley the chance to break wide of the field and find the way to his biggest victory on a horse the numbers said should be a sprinter, not a champion in the biggest event in racing.

Sensing a victory-denying traffic jam ahead of him at the top of the stretch, Antley found a hole and took Strike the Gold six horses wide. It was the path to a 10-length victory over the gelding Best Pal before the usual roaring throng at Churchill Downs, including Desert Storm commander Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf.

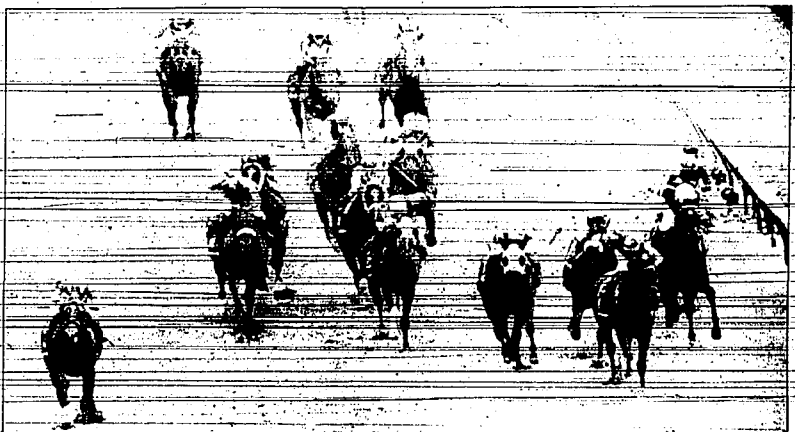

"When we went outside, I thought I had it won at that point," Antley said. "Near the quarter pole, I knew I had it won. He was three or four lengths behind the field but I was grinning all the way."

Antley sensed Strike the Gold was the horse of the moment even before he hit the home stretch.

On the backstretch, the fold Angel Cardozo was being ridden. Quintana, "I've got the horse today."

There was an omen of things to come earlier in the program when Brophy's 3-year-old filly, also trained by Zito, won the Churchill Downs Handicap. Thirty-Six Red finished ninth in last year's Derby.

"How much greater than this does it get for one guy on one day," said Brophy, who besides racing horses, sells Hollywood-caste off over the world. "I think I have the best trainer, the best jockey, and the best horse."

Strike the Gold was the third choice in the odds and the victory in an unexpected Derby jinx.

Manuel S-2 was the 12th consecutive horse to finish in 10th.

Spectacular Bid won the last winning in 1973 and he was also the last third-14 lengths behind Best Pal and a head in front of Green Alligator, a member of the mutual field. The last field horse to win the Derby was Cammeron II in 1971.

Zito certainly had Strike the Gold finely tuned and Antley certainly knew what to do with the pulsing, pounding colt beneath him. Known as "boyfriend" for his playful

Bruin thinclads give Rams scare

By Larry Hovey

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — That little band of Twin Falls boys tracksters almost pulled off a major surprise Saturday but it wasn't to be, as the deeper Highland Rams outlasted the Bruins 96-94 in the Twin Falls Track and Field meet.

In the girls' division, Skyline took the title handsily with 91 points, well ahead of runner-up Pocatello's 69.

The event was the final regular season competition as the teams now begin the elimination process that will carry through district qualifications next week and the state finals May 17-18.

The Bruin boys were expected to rise more toward the top with 13 Class A-1 teams diluting the competition found in a late afternoon meet. But the race to second place even surprised Coach Duane Stands.

The big news was a 13.89 clocking senior Matt Fuller used to set a high hurdles record. The Bruins went on to claim three relays by dominating margins. And they picked up some points in the field events and distances.

"Basically what we get is what the five senior boys and a couple of sophomores can provide," Stands said. "The seniors include Fuller, Carl Ruprecht, Jerry, Thuc, Steve Black and Jared Alexander.

Fuller anchored the winning 400 (43.8) and 800 (1:30.4) relay teams and was second in the intermediate hurdles to round out his day. Ruprecht added a second in the long jump to two relay performances. Sophomore Andy Lyda was third and fourth in the 1,600 and 3,200, respectively, and sophomore Dillon Ward, who ran on the boys' team, found an interesting jump.

Stands said he anticipated past success in the relays, adding "I never speculate on winning margins."

"But that's the way these guys have been running in the Boise Relays and all season. I expect that some schools will be trying to look at ways to spike up their relay teams."

Helping win the 800 relay, Twin Falls' Matt Fuller is well ahead of the competition on the final leg of Saturday's race.

district and state, but I can't imagine them being able to find the quality kids they'd need to make us non-contenders," the coach said.

Meanwhile, Pocatello senior Larshawn Williams set a pair of sprinting marks, taking the 100 in 10.6 and the 200 in 21.5. Highland's Scott Miller, second to Fuller in the 100, won the intermediate hurdles in a record-setting 38.0.

The lone field mark to fall came in the discus where Idaho Falls' Ryan Butler threw 120.0 feet.

In the girls' division, Skyline holder Lisa Minors was totally dominant in those events and lowered the 100-meter mark to 1:17. Jenny Mortenson of Minico, who later was second in the 800, dropped the 1,600-meter mark, previously held by Twin Falls' Jenny Hannah to 5:22.11.

Tigers dominate Class B district tennis tournament

The Times-News

SUN VALLEY — Wood River's Wolf on Lindenau scored the match point in the final set of the Class B District 4 tennis tournament at Elkhorn Saturday.

The Tigers qualified 12 players for the state meet Friday and Saturday at the Sun Valley Lodge.

The boys' "Bunch" up Wood River tallied 87 and the Ketchum-Sun Valley Community School 61.

After losing the first set of the boys' singles championship 6-1 to Jerome's David Perry, Wolf Lindenau fought off a set and rallied to win the match 7-6, 7-6.

The top three finishers in all five events qualify for state.

In the girls' singles title match, the Tigers' Tami Balfour defeated the Minnis of Ketchum-Sun Valley 6-0, 6-0.

Doubles championships went to Ben Binkley-Jeff Wood of Jerome, Ginger Thompson-Crystal Halstead of Jerome and Eschschum-Sun Valley's Adam Smith-Amy Mullerberg.

Indians hammer A's, 20-6; James has record 9 RBIs

The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris James drove in three runs, mostly from home-plate and two singles, breaking Cleveland's club record for RBIs and leading the Indians to a rout over Oakland.

James hit three-run homers in the first and second innings, an RBI single in the fourth and a two-run homer in the sixth. He grounded out in his other at-bat in the sixth, and left the game after the eighth.

James broke the team record of eight RBIs, done twice by Earl Averill in 1930 and matched by Pat Seery in 1945 and Bill Glenn in 1954. The major league record for RBIs is 12, the Jim Thome record in 1924 and the Alvin Dark League record in 1911 by Tony Lazzeri in 1916.

The Indians compiled 21 hits, including Albert Belle's sixth home run, six walks and two errors in stopping Oakland's team record 10-game home winning streak.

Major Leagues

Mark McGwire ended the longest home run drought in his career at 41 games and 129 at-bats and Harold Baines also homered for the Athletics.

Rangers 6, Tigers 5

DETROIT (AP) — Infielder Franco hit a tie-breaking home run off Jerry Dan Gleadon (1-1) in the ninth inning.

Bobby Witt struck out 13, one short of his career high, before firing in the eighth inning. Witt, who walked six and gave up five hits, left with a 5-3 lead, the bases loaded and two outs. Pitcher Dave Bergman tied the game with a two-run single off Rich Gossage (3-0).

Reds 3, Cardinals 1

CINCINNATI (AP) — Barry Larkin and two errors in stopping Oakland's team record 10-game home winning streak.

Blazers blow out Sonics to advance

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Seattle never got closer than the final margin in the second half of the biggest upset in NBA playoff history, the Portland Trail Blazers returned to their strengths.

And the result was no contest. "We got back to the basics," Buck Williams said. "We got back to rebounding, basketball and playing defense, and we won big."

Using a harassing defense and a dominating performance on the offensive boards, the Trail Blazers finally eliminated Seattle 119-107 Saturday in a game that wasn't nearly as close as the first game.

Terry Porter had 23 points, Clyde Drexler added 22 and Porter had 11 assists as the Blazers won the best-of-5 series 3-2 to advance to a second-round matchup against Utah. Game 1 of that series will be Tuesday night at Portland.

The Sonics, trying to become the first No. 8 seed to win a playoff series, beat Portland twice in Seattle to force Saturday's deciding game. But the Sonics never challenged seriously after the second quarter on Portland's homecourt, where the Blazers have lost only five times this season.

Bobcats take pair from Indians

By Ron Gates

BUHL — Troy Meredith twirled a two-hit shutout in a 10-0 run-out opener, and Burley rapped out 11 hits en route to a 1-5 decision in the second game to complete a non-conference double-header sweep of the Buhl Indians Saturday.

"We've got to get ready for the regional tournament and they're a good A-2 team," said Burley Coach Doug Britney, before singing the praises of his star pitcher.

"He lost two games to the Pocatello schools. One 5-4 to Highland in the seventh inning and another by 1-0 to Pocatello with (senior right-hander Avery) Griggs on the mound."

Saturday's result improved Burley, whose regular and post-season Region III fate remains undecided, to 14-13. Buhl slipped to 5-23 with the losses.

Not until the sixth inning, when Indian pitcher Cliff Isom touched Meredith for a double and batted mate Taylor Dennis followed one out later with a single, did the Indians pose a threat in the first contest.

The Bobcats took a 1-0 lead in their initial at-bat when Paul Rasmussen, who had walked and stolen a base, scored on an error. Meredith double in the second inning and Ryan Bloxham's third-inning rally yanked the count to 3-0 before the visitors began stringing runs together.

Rasmussen added a run after opening the Burley fifth with a walk, scoring on Brandon Ormond's two-base hit.

Bloxham got around for his second run of the game as Billy Page connected being a run of three consecutive singles off Isom.

Meredith, Ormond and Justin Robinson made Buhl rue a trio of misuses which ended play after six innings.

Mark Johnson, who went 1-for-3, including a triple in game two and Ryan Bloxham — a solo homerun — helped stake the Cats to a seven-run cushion after four trips to the plate.

Another abbreviated contest appeared likely when Burley batted around for seven runs and a 14-1 advantage an inning later.

But Buhl, paced by the hitting of Brian Kennison with a single and a double, rallied for five runs of their own to extend play to a regulation seven innings.

Kennison's two-bagger came with one out in the Indians' last turn and Buhl's single — he accounted for the final score on a teammate's ground-out — kept it going.

"We're getting better, but we're still a hair away," said Buhl Coach Dave Slotten. "Maybe the district tournament will be the time it's all good. We're young and our record is definitely not indicative of the type of team we are."

The Indians seeded third for district tournament play, host twin event next Friday. Buhl opens against South Fremont at 7 p.m. A victory in that opener would pit the Indians against Shalley at 6 p.m.

For Burley, scheduled to open Region III's post-season tournament on Tuesday, it's still all up in the air — the result of its unplayed regular season regional court with Burley, a match-up twice trained out.

"The thing is that they (Highland High School) are trying to make us play that game on Monday and use our pitchers," Bailey explained. "That wouldn't be fair to (Mimico Coach) Cory (Bridges) or to us. We

Jordan, Pippen help Bulls beat 76ers, 105-92

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 29 points and Scottie Pippen had 24 as the Chicago Bulls beat the Philadelphia 76ers 105-92 Saturday in the opening game of the second-round NBA playoff series.

A hands-up, trapping defense kept the 76ers in check except for Charles Barkley, who scored 34 points before being out the final quarter, when the Bulls were in command. Jordan also sat out the final period.

The Bulls opened a 20-point lead in the first quarter, saw it dwindle to 10 points late in the half, but then built a 14-point margin as they helped build a 23-point lead early in the second half.

Bill Cartwright scored 14 points for the Bulls, all in the first half, and Horace Grant had 12. Andre Turner had 11, and Jerry Seinsinger and Maurice Holtz each scored 10 for the 76ers.

The teams met in Game 2 Monday night at Chicago Stadium, before the best-of-7 series shifts to Philadelphia for Games three, four and five.

The Bulls took an 8-2 lead, outscored the 76ers 11-4 and led the assault for a 19-6 lead. Pippen and Cartwright kept the Bulls' lead as they helped build a 14-point margin.

Jockey wanted different streak to end Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Pat Day, ended off his Kentucky Derby streak Saturday, just not the one he wanted.

For the first time in four years, he wasn't second. For the second year in a row, he won five races on the Derby day card.

But his ninth-place finish on Corporate Report also was his ninth Derby without a winner.

Corporate Report may have had another strike against him Saturday. Trainer D. Wayne Lukas has never had some memorable non-winning days. He has saddled 19 horses since 1981, but has brought home only one winner, the filly Winning Colors in 1983.

Day, who won his 5,000th race at Churchill Downs on Thanksgiving 1990, has always been optimistic about his Derby prospects. "I believe there's a Derby out there somewhere with my name on it. Maybe more than one."

Maybe next year.

Corporate Report, who went off at 8-1, got a cut midway through the backstretch and got as close as second in a quarter-mile to go before fading in the stretch. "I had a good trip; no excuses," Day said.

Day was aboard Summer Squall

last year, favored Easy Goer in 1989 and Early Niner, who made a late rush to Winning Colors in 1988. In 1987 Day rode favorite Demons Begone, but had to pull up when the colt bled badly and finished 17th.

Second-best wasn't cause for second-guessing in the camp of Best Pal.

"I got a dream trip," said jockey Gary Stevens. "I'm very happy with my horse's performance. He gave me everything he had."

Trainer Ian Jory, at 33 only in his fifth year, was also not disappointed. "I would have liked to win it, but second is better than third. I'm pretty young; I will be back here again."

Strike the Gold wasn't the only member of his family to win on Derby Day.

His full brother, Greydar, a 4-year-old son of Alydar out of Majestic Child, held off Irish Swap at the wire in the often-impetuous ninth race at Churchill Downs.

Churchill Downs patrons must have noticed the family resemblance, manner around the barns. Strike the Gold turned into a tiger in the stretch.

Strike the Gold, also owned by William J. Condon and Joseph M. Comacchia, carried 126 pounds. His second straight stakes victory and only his third win in eight career starts was worth a mutual payoff of $11.60, $6.20 and $5.40, and his share of the purse of $905,800 was $655,800. Best Pal, ridden by Gary Stevens, paid $6.40 and $5.40. Mane Minister, ridden by Alex Solis, returned $25.60.

Business beat

Idaho wants tourists despite water levels

TWIN FALLS — It isn't all that dry, tourists.
The Idaho Commerce Department has launched a national campaign to draw tourists to Idaho despite the drought. The campaign has already been launched with a video newspaper release.

The department also will place newspaper ads in selected regional communities shortly before Memorial Day saying, among other things, that a low snowpack means recreational areas will be open earlier.

"We couldn't just sit quietly while the perception of another drought in the West and its potential impact on tourism grew more negative every day," Carl Wilgus of the department said in a prepared statement.

The department also offers a toll-free number with information about water recreation and travel opportunities. The number is 1-800-635-7820.

Twin Falls Chamber has full slate of small-business events

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce is offering several activities this week to commemorate its annual small-business week.

• A workshop on marketing scheduled for 10-12 a.m. Tuesday at the Weston Plaza.

• A luncheon to hand out awards based on U.S. Small Business Administration criteria will be held from noon until 1:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Turf Club. The chamber will also award its "people's choice" award.
• Call the chamber at 733-3974 for reservations.

• Rural businesses will be the topic of a workshop from 3-5 p.m. Wednesday at the College of Southern Idaho (Innovation/Telecommunications Building).

• The new waste management theory, "Total Quality Management," will be explained from 10-12 a.m. Thursday at the Canyon Springs Inn.

Cottage careers suit '90s women

Advance in technology, day-care costs, low overhead, spur boom in businesses run from the home

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Nori Golay sometimes has trouble putting dinner on the table. Not because she is a bad cook, but because her table is covered with jewelry.
Golay, an experienced graphic artist, began making the jewelry, as well as a line of business services.

Among countless other endeavors, these women — also known as "open-collar" workers — landscape lawns, sell ceramics and provide shopping, desktop publishing, fax, health or pet care services. About 55 percent of them offer personal and business making the jewelry, as well as a line of business services.

How to start your own small business

The Times-News

Interested in starting your own business? Developing a business or marketing plan is the road map to success, according to Idaho Small Business Development Center Director Cindy Bond. Here are some of her tips to get you started on yours:

- Do adequate research. (Does your product have a market? Do you have an advertising plan?)
- Check out city, county and state regulations and zoning laws.
- Seek out resources. (Who are your suppliers? Take advantage of free help at the Small Business Development Center.)
- Choose a form of ownership (partnership, sole proprietor).
- Plan your record keeping (bookkeeping procedures, tax records).
- Plan cash flows and budgeting. (What is your initial inventory? Do you need to purchase equipment, such as a computer or answering machine? What about business cards? What about location/rent? What is your sales projection? What about financing? Are you ready to take your business plan to the bank?)

Golay got the idea for her business, Imagin'it, one day when she doodled on a piece of wood and gave it to a neighborhood child, who came back to tell her he had sold it. Each piece of Golay's jewelry is exclusive, hand-numbered and accompanied by a titled card for authenticity.

In Twin Falls, she has placed some earrings and necklaces, ranging in price from $15 to $30, at Verizon Jewelry.

"A business is supposed to be successful if you are making four times your cost," said Golay. "My ratio is between one to eight and one to 16."

Debbie Johnstone, who operates a bookkeeping service from her farmhouse in Jerome, started her business five years ago so she could stay home with her children. Since the farm already used a computer, costs are minimal.

"The work is cyclic," said Johnstone. "Most of it comes the first week of the month, and that is sandwich time to my family."

She charges $8 an hour. "A full-time bookkeeper often makes only $6 or $7 and hour," she said. "So I make as much as if I were working full time at a bookkeeper outside the home."

Other women may start their business at home, but soon outgrow their dens, living rooms and kitchens. Still, considered "cottage industries," several such businesses are housed in "CSI's" multi-unit rooms, space provided for a reduced rate to infant or expanding businesses.

Sandi Howsdon spent two years doing research before launching her mail-order business of clothes designed for premature babies.

Howsdon spent two years doing research before beginning her mail-order business, Premiewear.

"Premature babies actually have very specialized needs," she said. "They have long torsos, large heads and delicate skin — and the doll clothes people purchase for them simply do not work very well."

Everything at Premiewear is made of soft interlock knits because, as Howsdon puts it, "These babies have enough stress in their lives, and they don't need uncomfortable clothing."

"The bulk of all new jobs created in our nation is generated by small businesses, not Fortune 500 companies," said Bond, who works closely with the seven tenants now settled into incubators. "But small businesses failed in the last decade at a rate of 85 percent in the first five years."

Bond is kept busy providing resources, educational services, even a mentoring program, all at no charge, to those who start their own businesses. CSI's small business subcenter is one of six across the state.

As co-owners of The Cookie Basket, Suroy Pfeifferle and Julie Duncan use the resources available at CSI but work out of a small building behind Lynwood Shopping Center to do their baking (100 dozen cookies a day). Their children often spend time with them on the job.

The women deliver cookies and muffins to area businesses, and offer special holiday baskets — currently they are arranging their wares around fishing hats and coffee mugs for Father's Day.

"At this point, we are each drawing a salary comparable to that of a bank teller," said Pfeifferle, "and we have five part-time employees."

Chemical types among items in U of I chemigation course

TWIN FALLS — The University of Idaho will teach farmers how to apply chemicals through irrigation water, at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Weston Plaza, 1350 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Topics will include the types of chemigation equipment, calibration of the equipment and the safe use of chemicals. A chemigation license is now required to apply chemicals through irrigation sprinklers or other methods of irrigation.

For more information, contact Robert Vondrak, Twin Falls Extension agricultural agent.

The workshop will cost $12.

Newspaper editor will talk about new ag publication

TWIN FALLS — A Times-News editor will speak Monday to the local chapter of the Idaho Society of Rural Appraisers and Farm Managers.

Editor Mark Kind will explain the newspaper's upcoming agricultural weekly publication at the society's meeting, 7:30 a.m. Monday at the Depot Grill.

West One Bancorp earnings up 15 percent in 1st quarter

BOISE — West One Bancorp joined other major banks in Idaho with a double-digit increase in earnings.

West One's first-quarter profits increased 15 percent to $10.2 million, or 80 cents per share.

Last year, the bank earned $8.9 million, or 40 cents per share.

A healthy economy stimulated loan demand, Chairman Daniel R. Nelson said.

The bank also made more money from service charges on deposits.

Workshop among events for Small Business Week

The Times-News

The Idaho Small Business Development Center at the College of Southern Idaho is gearing up to celebrate Small Business Week, today through Saturday.

The center, which functions as an educational network to teach small business owners how to accomplish their goals, offers resource materials, comprehensive training in the preparation of business plans and financial analysis, and awards a function in conjunction with a workshop on "Rural Based Business" centers and the "Business Services" are offered free of charge.

The theme for Small Business Week is "Small Business: Building America's Future."

As part of the celebration KMYT-TV is planning a three-part miniseries on small business in Twin Falls to air during the week.

The station also will air views and party line programs on the subject.

The CSI center is offering a workshop entitled "Market Strategies for Small Business" on Tuesday and an open house for its new incubator center on Wednesday.

Also on Wednesday, A Region IV Economic Development Conference and awards function is scheduled, along with a workshop on "Rural Based Business."

The workshop "A Primer to Total Quality Management" is set for Thursday.

For more information on these events, call 733-9551, ext. 477.

Jim Durham of Park City, Utah, figures he's saving up to 35 percent in operating costs since moving his machine products company from California.

Analysts prepare for future

WASHINGTON (AP) — If, as some scientists claim, and others deny, the world is undergoing a warming trend, it's bound to mean changes in food production, grocery shopping and skiny dipping in mountain lakes.

But Agriculture Department analysts, along with many others in the precarious game of predictions and forecasts, say the possibilities are too numerous to pin down.

For some time, one scientific focus has been on the possible effect of certain gases on the Earth's climate, including their "greenhouse effect" as a cause of global warming.

In 1992, a United Nations conference on environment and development is supposed to agree on a framework for reducing the release of those gases into the atmosphere.

Meanwhile, despite the many uncertainties, an International Panel on Climate Change has concluded that global warming over the next 60 years could result in increased warming and decreasing soil moisture in some major grain and soybean areas as they are now defined.

As a further consequence, according to the IPCC, regions in the more northern latitudes could experience greater warming and increased precipitation and soil moisture.

Based on such climate scenarios, crop yields generally have been projected to be reduced in the central and southern parts of the U.S. and in Europe. A new USDA analysis says, in contrast, yields are projected to rise in parts of the Soviet Union and Canada.

Taken overall, if global warming occurs, the estimates show that the net economic impact likely would be positive because of crop yield gains offsetting losses.

But that doesn't begin to describe the effect on millions of farmers and scores of countries as crop yields — and even the kinds of crops — rise or fall with temperatures around the globe. "If the growth of trace gases (in the atmosphere) is unchecked, the climate effects could be larger," the report said.

The possibility of faster climate change by a more dramatic impact on agriculture cannot be ignored.

Concentrations of certain man-made gases help slow the release of solar radiation from the Earth's surface back into space, causing what has become the "greenhouse effect" on global temperatures and plant life.

Tradewinds

The Idaho Escrow Association has elected Reva J. Gunter of First American Title Co., Twin Falls, as president. Other Magic Valley officers include Steve Bach of Land Title & Escrow, Rupert, as first vice president; Robert Benjamin of First American Title Co., Ketchum, second vice president; and Susan Rubel, also of First American Title, as secretary.

Larry Underwood, Linda Munn, and Pauline Meacham of Century 21 Henry's Realty Auction Co., have graduated from the Realtor Institute.

Magic Carpet Travels owners Joe and Mary Salisbury have retired. Their son, Osburn Salisbury, will be vice president and assistant manager. Osburn Salisbury has 15 years of experience in the travel business, and Shuckley has 22 years.

Glenn Schutte of Gooding has been elected to the Western States Angus Association board of directors. Schutte was president.

JEROME — Russell R. Howell III, clerk for the Jerome Post Office, has been selected postal volunteer of the year.

An 18-year postal employee, Howell has promoted native American culture in exhibitions through the Magic Valley, performing Indian dances, displaying artifacts and lecturing on the Indian culture. He also is the founder and past president of the Snake River Indian Arts and Crafts Association.

Howell is a volunteer instructor for firemen safety for the Idaho Fish and Game Department and has been a scout leader for years. Most recently he has been working on putting a translating device in post offices to give visual information for the hearing impaired.

California raised water delivery despite low levels

Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — During the first four years of the 1979-83 drought, the state delivered more water to California farms and cities than in any other four-year period in its history, state records show.

In that same time, reservoir levels dropped to some of their lowest points ever — until finally, the State Water Project, practically ran-bone-dry this year.

While state officials have consistently blamed Mother Nature for the unprecedented drought, they are increasingly laying criticism for contributing to the crisis by releasing massive amounts of water just when many believed it was essential to bank in storage.

State documents show that they made the decision knowing that if reservoirs were not kept full, they could be risking drastic shortages in the later years of the drought.

Moreover, critics point out they failed to come up with an emergency plan to provide water should that happen. "It's inaccurate to say that this (drought) is purely a function of precipitation," the severity of the crisis is simply the result of mismanagement (and) a conscious decision.

The lure of Utah

Work ethic, other factors draw businesses to Salt Lake City area

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (AP) — When Jim Durham resolved to move his machine shop out of California, where the cost of doing business had gone through the roof, he took a hard look at five Western states.

He settled on Utah, where living costs are more reasonable, workers seemed more motivated, and there was a railroad hub, an international airport and interstate freeways heading every direction.

Fortune magazine last year pegged the Salt Lake City metropolitan area as the nation's best for business. Another magazine, U.S. News & World Report, called the area an emerging boom town.

That doesn't mean the Salt Lake City area is immune from urban woes. Planners still struggle with snarled traffic and air pollution.

Utah's classrooms are notoriously crowded. Each year brings a new round of public programs that go underfunded.

"Every state has pros and cons. (But) there were more pros here than cons," Durham said.

Five months after moving his AMS Machine Products Inc. to Clearfield, about 30 miles north of Salt Lake City, Durham figures he has saved up to 35 percent on operating costs over his former location in Anaheim, Calif.

The lower cost of living is one of many reasons companies like AMS Machine Products are moving to Utah, state economic developers say. There also are cheaper utilities, state and local tax breaks, inexpensive or even free land, they say.

In 1990, 29 new companies opened their doors in Utah, while 11 announced substantial expansion plans, adding up to 7,300 new jobs, according to the Department of Community and Economic Development.

Like AMS Machine Products, many companies work through the state's National Business Development Program, an agency of the Department of Community and Economic Development.

State workers and "acquiring" companies in touch with local governments, redevelopment agencies and establish training programs, said program director Marian Hein.

The program also advertises Utah heavily in magazines and at conferences and trade shows.

Cash incentives are rare, although the Utah Legislature recently approved a $10 million "industrial assistance fund" that will principally benefit a McDonnell Douglas subsidiary in Salt Lake City.

Durham had employed about 30 people in California. He has 14 workers now but hopes to hire more. There's certainly plenty of room: For the same rent he paid in California, he quadrupled his workspace in Utah to 27,000 square feet.

More important, insurance costs plummeted. Durham said he paid $32,000 a year in California for workers' compensation premiums, but just $5,000 in Utah.

"It's hard to understand. A machinist is a machinist. He can get hurt working here just as easily," Durham said.

Older, experienced machinists will earn about the same wages, $15 to $20 an hour. Workers with fewer skills will make less than their California counterparts, but he estimates his payroll is about the same to be fair.

Tim Doohar, technical manager of Lucas Western Inc., also depends on skilled workers for his new aircraft component plant in Summit County, about 30 miles east of Salt Lake City.

Lucas' General Systems Division plant opened in 1989. About 190 employees, many educated at the company's training center in nearby Park City or Salt Lake Community College, manufacture high-speed gearing for military and some commercial aircraft engines.

Lucas Western is a spin-off of Lucas PLC, a British company. It added the Utah operation when company analysts predicted the need for more space than was available at the company's City of Industry, Calif., plant. Lucas Western also had seen some erosion of business and couldn't persuade union workers to accept a wage-and-benefit reduction, Doohar said.

Utah offers an excellent work ethic. They're not afraid to work, and they're not afraid of overtime. There's nothing bad I can say about the people who work here," he said.

"If you can get the same amount of work done, or more work done, in fewer pay dollars, it's obviously a huge benefit."

Lucas Western also took advantage of a state sales tax exemption on capital equipment purchases and a sliding local property tax exemption on 10 acres of land that Summit County gave the company.

Besides, Doohar said, it costs less to live in Utah.

PacifiCorp reports earnings up just slightly

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — PacifiCorp says earnings in the three-month period ending March 31 were up 3 percent from the corresponding quarter a year ago.

However, earnings per share of stock declined from 52 cents to 51 cents because of a 5 percent increase in the average number of common shares outstanding, the Portland-based holding company said Thursday.

The company's consolidated revenues totaled $972.5 million, up 7 percent from the $910.2 million reported in the first quarter of 1990.

The company said gains in telecommunications, mining and telecommunications, mining and telecommunications segments offset lower revenue in the financial services segment.

Electric operation revenues totaled $564.7 million, nearly the same as a year ago.

PacifiCorp operates two major utilities — Pacific Power & Light Co. and Utah Power & Light Co. — and is the majority owner of NERCO, a mining and resource development company. Pacific Telecom, a telecommunications company, and PacifiCorp Financial Services.

Telecommunications revenues rose 29 percent, or $41 million, to $182 million.

Mining and resource development revenues were up 18 percent, or $32 million, to $206 million.

Bank directors OK stock split

SALT LAKE CITY — First Security Corp. directors have voted to split the bank's stock.

The three-for-two stock split will be in the form of a 50 percent stock dividend — shareholders will receive one additional share of stock for each two shares held. The split and a 2.8 percent increase in dividends, after adjusting for the stock split, will be paid June 3 to shareholders of record on May 17.

Australian action pushes wool prices down

WASHINGTON (AP) — A massive overhaul of Australia's sheep industry and plummeting prices are being felt by wool producers from South Africa to Uruguay, from New Zealand to Texas and Montana.

A world floor price for wool, since Australia produced 60 percent of the total, Morgan explains the situation in the May issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine.

Australia's action will affect major world wool markets, Morgan said. Exports from the other big producers — New Zealand, Argentina, South Africa and Uruguay — will remain high.

To date, Morgan said, more than 840,000 of the 2.8 million sheep registered under the program have been killed as killed.

California exports more

WASHINGTON (AP) — California was the top farm export state in 1990 for the sixth consecutive year, according to Agriculture Department trade analysts.

Export values of wheat and some other crops have suffered because of lower prices, meaning that states producing them would tend to lose export value.

Morgan said the subsidies for disposing of the surplus sheep are financed by compulsory taxes on producers. The payments for reducing flocks were set at $1.80 per head in Australian currency, which has a current exchange rate of about $1.29 for each U.S. dollar.

Consequently, 90 percent of the registered sheep slaughtered so far have been disposed of in on-farm or community pits, she said. In the short term, meat processors and exporters are having difficulty obtaining the sheep; they need to remain viable.

PALMER, Colo. (AP) — Frost growers drilled in and out of Bill DeVries' Farm Market this past Monday to discuss what they say is the near total loss of this year's peach crop to a killer fog and freeze over the weekend.

While growers in the Grand Valley, which usually produces several millions of dollars worth of fruit each year, were talking of 90 percent losses, officials at the Colorado State University research station here were more cautious.

The agency said the ranch, near Strong City, Kan., about 130 miles southwest of Kansas City, could be designated a national historic landmark or national natural landmark.

Poor drawn to storm-endangered islands

The Associated Press

CHITTAGONG, Bangladesh — Dreams of owning a patch of land and the hope of eating at least one meal a day drive thousands of impoverished people to lead precarious lives on the vulnerable islands of Bangladesh.

Most of the silt islands off the east coast are just a few feet above sea level and become submerged in a normal monsoon tide in the Bay of Bengal. Every few years, a colossal cyclone or tropical storm kills thousands of people.

"To a foreigner, it almost looks like a death wish," said Mohammad Akram Bhuiyan, a government official in the port city of Chittagong. "You need to live in Bangladesh to feel how difficult it is for the poor to survive, even in best of times."

Tuesday's devastating cyclone claimed at least 125,000 lives, by official count. More than 635,000 people have died in storms in the last 21 years alone.

The pressure of land is enormous in Bangladesh, a nation of 110 million people, the size of Wisconsin. An average of about 2,000 people pack each square mile, the third-highest density in the world after Hong Kong and Singapore.

Sixty percent of the people are landless, hungry for even a tiny patch of territory. Reliable estimates say four of every five Bangladeshis live below the poverty line, meaning they cannot afford two meals a day of rice with some vegetables or a piece of fish. The per capita income is just $170 a year.

The islands, which are less crowded, seem an attractive alternative.

Rich landlords in Chittagong organize and encourage new settlers on remote islands. In return, the settlers are bound to give them a percentage from the fish catch.

Often the settlers turn into virtual slaves, through a bonded-labor system where the debt to the landlord goes on increasing and becomes unpayable.

"So you see it is not just nature that plays with the lives of these poor people, but their follow-up after we've got them," said a government relief official in Chittagong, who asked not to be identified.

The islands' romantic names belie the hardship and death many settlers find there. Nijhundeep means Island of Silence. Sonadeep is Island of Gold, and Sonaimuri means Gold Cove.

"Tens of thousands of people migrate to the areas every year in search of a little land," said Karim Dad, one of the directors of the government's Relief Ministry.

poor people displaced by the storm have sought refuge on islands.

Some die horrible deaths as they try this week. "Before we came here life was very very difficult," said Mohammad Kabir, a 30-year-old settler on Sonadeep, one of the worst affected islands along the 250-mile-long coast.

"Since we came here three years ago we've had fish and we had rice."

Trio sentenced in 1985 deaths of U.S. Marines

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — A military tribunal has sentenced three alleged leftists for their role in a 1985 massacre that killed 13 people, including four U.S. Marines, the Supreme Court announced Saturday.

The court countenanced the prison terms, pruned from four to 25 years for the three men, who were convicted and sentenced Friday.

Thirteen people were killed when gunmen in Salvadoran army uniforms fired automatic weapons on two outdoor cafes in the fashionable Pink Zone of San Salvador on June 19, 1985. The dead included four off-duty Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy, two U.S. businessmen in civilian, a Guatemalan and five Salvadorans.

Parliament takes step to end country's 1-party domination

BISSAU, Guinea-Bissau — Lawmakers voted Saturday to end the ruling party's leading role in this West African nation.

Lawmakers voted unanimously to abolish an article in the constitution that describes the African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde as the leading political force in the state and in society. It is the nation's only party and has ruled Guinea-Bissau since independence from Portugal in 1974.

Albanian president complies, quits Communist party posts

VIENNA, Austria — Albania's president quit all of his posts in the governing Communist Party Saturday to comply with a new constitutional requirement.

Ramiz Alia, who in the past year has introduced some democratic reform in Albania, will remain head of state.

State radio reported that Communist Party's Central Committee accepted Alia's resignation as the party's first secretary, as well as his withdrawal from the policy-making Central Committee and the Politburo, the party's executive body.

South African police raids a bid to halt township violence

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police raided workers hostels and squatter camps Saturday in an effort to halt township violence that has killed more than 100 people in a week.

Officials said the raids were at the request of the African National Congress, which has set a deadline of Thursday for specific government steps on halting the carnage in black townships.

Workers hostels have been flashpoints for the chronic fighting in black townships. The single-sex dormitories house migrant workers, often Zulus from their traditional homeland in Natal Province.

Swiss limit anonymous bank accounts; effect seen as slight

GENEVA — The Swiss Banking Commission has announced a new law that will impose some restrictions on anonymous bank accounts, but its practical effects were expected to be limited.

The law, which was published Friday and takes effect in July, closes a loophole that allowed lawyers and fiduciary trustees in certain cases, to deposit funds on behalf of their clients without disclosing their identity.

However, the law will not affect the holders of numbered Swiss accounts.

British Muslim leaders reject Rushdie's conversion to Islam

LONDON — Two Muslim leaders who witnessed Salman Rushdie's conversion to Islam now say his religious change cannot be accepted because the author has not withdrawn "The Satanic Verses," a newspaper reported Saturday.

The two leaders of London's Central Mosque, accompanied by dozens of British-Muslim scholars, reversed their decision following violent protests from some hard-line worshippers. The Independent reported.

Vietnam official says 78,000 purged from party in 3 years

BANGKOK, Thailand — Vietnam's Communist Party has purged more than 78,000 members in the last three years, according to a senior party official.

Official Vietnamese media have reported numerous cases of party members who were purged for incompetence, laziness and corruption.

Mother Teresa brings comfort, supplies to ravaged Bangladesh

The Associated Press

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Nobel laureate Mother Teresa arrived Saturday with sacks of milk powder and biscuits for victims of the deadly storm that ravaged Bangladesh.

"I have come here to give my love and care to the suffering people. It's good to share the suffering with them," said the 80-year-old Roman Catholic nun.

On Sunday, she is scheduled to visit areas damaged by the cyclone, possibly with Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, a Foreign Ministry official said.

Mother Teresa arrived from Calcutta, just across the border in India, where she runs a worldwide organization of more than 400 homes for the orphaned, poor, sick or dying. She won the Nobel Peace prize in 1979.

She set up a branch of her Missionaries of Charity in Bangladesh in 1972 and last year had 1,400 people. More than 125,000 people were killed by last week's storm.

Mother Teresa brushed aside a government offer to stay in a luxury hotel and chose to stay in one of her organization's two missions in Dhaka.

Her organization has six other missions in Bangladesh, but none in the areas affected by the storm.

She brought 1,630 pounds of powdered milk and biscuits, which she gave to Bangladesh relief officials, and said she would stay for two or three days.

Mother Teresa, who is in fragile health, began her work in India in the 1940s. She was born in Yugoslavia of Albanian parents.

Foreign Ministry official Mahmood Ali helps Mother Teresa off the plane.

Gorbachev's concessions don't satisfy Armenians

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has halted plans to deport Armenians from violence-torn areas of Azerbaijan and ordered helicopters to evacuate the wounded, Armenia's president said Saturday.

Tens of thousands of Armenians, meanwhile, jammed Independence Square in Armenia's capital of Yerevan to mourn the latest victims of the ethnic violence. Soviet television showed two coffins heisted shoulder-by-shoulder through a throng.

A press conference, Armenia's President Levon Ter-Petrosian said he won the concessions from Gorbachev in a 90-minute meeting in the Kremlin on Friday. The meeting followed fighting this week that cost 36 lives.

Gorbachev also met separately Friday with Azerbaijani President Ayaz Mutalibov

'Armenia has begun the process of obtaining independence'

— Levon Ter-Petrosian, Armenian president to quell the latest bloodshed between the southern republics. Neither Mutalibov nor Gorbachev commented on the session.

Ter-Petrosian angrily accused the Soviet leadership of waging "state terrorism" against his tiny republic.

He said he had complained forcefully to Gorbachev that mass deportations of Armenians from Azerbaijan would represent an escalation in the conflict. After the meeting, he received a phone call from KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov, who told him the question of deportations has been taken off the agenda. "He said,

Armenian officials have accused Azerbaijan and Soviet troops of deporting some Armenians from border areas and planning to deport many more. No independent figures on the number of deportees or refugees are available.

Ter-Petrosian said 36 civilians were killed and scores wounded when Soviet and Azerbaijani troops attacked the villages of Getashen and Martunashen on Monday. The villages are inside Azerbaijan, but most of their 2,760 residents are ethnic Armenians.

An Armenian lawmaker charged Thursday that people injured in the fighting were dying because Soviet troops were preventing doctors from treating them. Ter-Petrosian said he raised the issue with Gorbachev, who agreed to allow helicopters to evacuate the injured.

Ter-Petrosian, who has been Armenia's president since August, claimed the attack was part of a plan to force Armenians out of disputed areas of Azerbaijan.

He also called it an attempt to prop up the pro-Moscow leadership of Azerbaijan and to punish Armenia's efforts to secede from the Soviet Union.

"Armenia has begun the process of obtaining independence. Naturally, the totalitarian regime in Moscow cannot tolerate this. Punishment must follow," he said.

He compared the recent attacks to notes last year in which scores of Armenians were killed in the Azerbaijani cities of Sumgait and Baku. But he said there were one major difference.

"In Sumgait and Baku, the pogroms were carried out by an enraged mob. In Getashen the pogrom was organized by the Soviet army and Interior Ministry troops. That's a completely new phenomenon and a terrible precedent.

About 10,000 protesters fought police for 3 hours Saturday.

Protesters call for removal of South Korean president

The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Tens of thousands of students, workers and dissidents demanded the ouster of President Roh Tae-woo in nationwide protests Saturday over the fatal beating of a student by police.

About 2,000 protesters marching toward city hall were stopped at a U.S. diplomatic building along the route and driven back by thousands of riot police backed by armored vans and water cannon.

Demonstrators pelted a U.S. military van with stones and broke the rear window. They also kicked and rocked a car carrying two Westerners.

injuries and arrests, but no numbers were immediately available.

The demonstrations and a series of self-immolations by students protesting by the fatal beating have created the most serious challenge to the Roh government since it was installed in 1988.

An alliance of 40 radical student and dissident groups has vowed to keep protesting until Roh fires his Cabinet, arrests top officials responsible in the student death and accelerates economic and political reforms.

Demonstrations involving a total of 50,000 to 70,000 protesters were reported in 21 cities on Saturday. The national news agency Yonhap said 40,000 people turned out in Seoul alone, in the fourth consecutive night of unrest. About 15,000 people chanting anti-government slogans took over Seoul's main railroad station.
