This court nominee has a record

WASHINGTON — Unlike President Bush's first Supreme Court nominee, Clarence Thomas has a lengthy record as a federal official that Senate Democrats can comb to find clues to his views on important issues.

Idahoans wait for abortion views

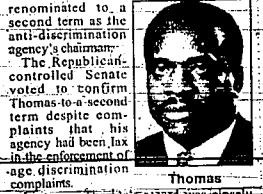

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Idahoans on both sides of the abortion debate drew a blank Monday when they heard the name Clarence Thomas.

Thomas, a judge on the U.S. District Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, was nominated Monday by President Bush to succeed Supreme Court Justice Theogood Marshall.

Marshall, who announced his retirement last week, is one of the liberal members of the Supreme Court and one of the justices who voted in the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision to legalize abortion.

Last year, Thomas' record was closely examined by rights groups when he was nominated to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

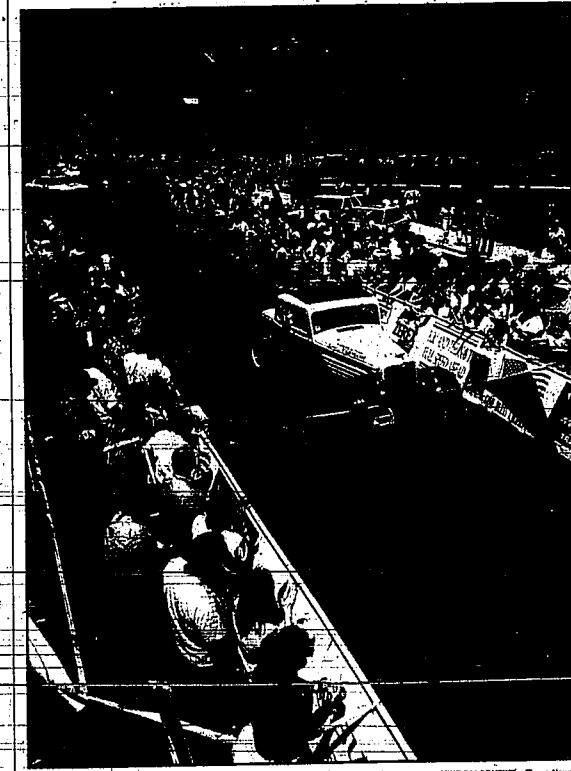

Analysis

of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and his extensive writing on the issue of affirmative action will give civil rights groups political ammunition to challenge his nomination.

In contrast to little-known New Hampshire judge David H. Souter, whom Bush nominated last summer to the high court, Thomas has testified numerous times on Capitol Hill.

The Great American Race rolls into Twin Falls on Monday as a large crowd gathers to greet the contestants.

Vintage automobiles pause in Twin Falls

By Amy Davis
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The banner above the finish line said it all.

"Twin Falls is hooked on the Great American Race."

Between 3,000 and 5,000 people lined downtown streets and packed City Park Monday to welcome a cross-country race of vintage automobiles. But it was more than just a chance to inspect Model-Ts, roadsters and coupes.

It was an exercise in old-fashioned, Fourth of July flag-waving and posturing.

"A lot of these cars are from my time," said C.W. Boun of Hansen. "They were new cars when I was a kid. It's kind of like going down memory lane."

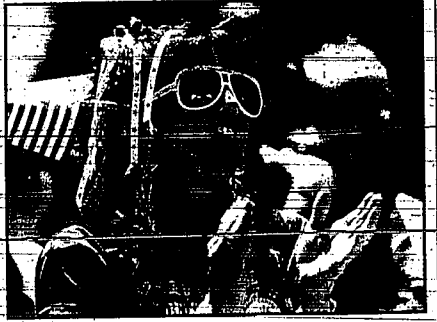

Children slapped hands with drivers dressed as pilots, firefighters and railroad engineers as they passed by the crowd. Spectators accompanied a Navy band in a rendition of "God Bless America" while drivers and pilots threw water from 300-pounds-of-Idaho rainbow trout at a picnic lunch.

The race takes people back to a happy time in their lives. "Middle-aged drivers like Evans," "Middle America really appreciates an event like this."

The ninth annual Great American Race began in Norfolk, Va., on June 22 and will end in Seattle July 4. A purse of $250,000 is awarded to the winner.

Bush talks tough to Saddam

The Associated Press

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush Monday demanded that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein "make things right and satisfy us," by cooperating with U.N. efforts to inspect his country's nuclear facilities.

The president said reports that he was considering renewed military action were "not all warranted." Still, he said the United States would not move on its own if Saddam continues to thwart United Nations inspectors but would act in conjunction with allies.

Bush spoke with reporters at his oceanside home in Kennebunkport, Maine.

He called the news conference to announce his selection of federal appeals judge Clarence

Thomas to the Supreme Court. But he also answered questions on a wide array of other issues, denouncing new Israeli settlements in occupied territories, describing an upcoming meeting with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, defending embattled staff chief John Sununu and praising his mother on her 90th birthday.

Bush's harshest comments were reserved for Saddam, stepping up a war of words touched off by a shooting incident last week in which Iraqi soldiers drove off U.N. inspectors looking for hidden nuclear-weapons materials.

The president would not discuss what he might do if Saddam persisted in obstructing the U.N. inspectors.

"But," he said, "he has to make things right and satisfy us or we'll figure out what else happens."

Headaches mistreated

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Severe headaches afflict tens of millions of Americans whose suffering often is underestimated, misunderstood and mistreated, according to doctors at the largest conference ever convened on the subject.

More than 1,000 experts from 43 nations were gathered Monday for the International Headache Congress, whose organizers said head pain doesn't get the respect it deserves as a serious ailment.

"Fifty to 70 million Americans experience severe headache, which may account for more missed days of work and more visits to physicians than any other condition," said Dr. Joel Saper, president of the American Association for the Study of Headache, the host organization for the congress.

He said no other serious medical condition is more shrouded in myth and misconception, with its victims "shunted down an assembly line" of inappropriate treatments.

'Little House,' 'Bonanza' star dies of cancer at 54

The Associated Press

MALIBU, Calif. — Michael Landon, the boyishly handsome actor who battled cancer with the same affability he brought to roles as "Bonanza" and "Little House on the Prairie," died Monday. He was 54.

Landon, who also starred in the TV series "Highway to Heaven" and whose career was jammed with writing, producing and directing credits, died at his sprawling ranch in his coastal city nearly three months after he announced his illness, said Ronnie Schmidt, a receptionist for Landon's attorney, Jay Eller.

Landon was set to start work on the new CBS series "US" when he was diagnosed with liver and pancreatic cancer on April 5.

"I think every little moment gets more important after something like this," a stoic but congenial Landon said after he learned he was terminally ill.

"It's not like I've missed a hell of a lot. I've had a pretty good luck here."

With Landon's passing, the only original "Bonanza" cast member still alive is Pernell Roberts. His manager, Brian Rix, said Roberts was "deeply grieved by Michael's death."

Liver and pancreatic cancer is almost always fatal, and often isn't diagnosed until advanced stages.

Landon had been treated with experimental therapy, including intravenous injections of bubbles of fat that contained a cancer-fighting drug. He also had been given coffee enemas to relieve intestinal irritation.

"If I'm gonna die, death's gonna have to do a lot of fighting with me," Landon said in a recent interview with Life magazine. "I'm not just gonna lie down and let it happen."

He joked about his cancer treatments, saying he hoped he wouldn't lose his trademark curly locks.

Weather summary

Under clear skies, the Magic Valley and most of Idaho began warming up on Monday.
Temperatures started rising toward summertime levels after a week or more of subnormal readings, and prospects are for 90-degree readings much of the rest of this week.
Readings across Idaho on Monday were generally in the 70s and 80s. The only report of precipitation anywhere in the state was .09 inch at Rexburg.
Summer arrived on June 21, but since then rain and cool air have kept temperatures well below the seasonal levels usually anticipated for late June or early July. The moisture, however, was generally welcomed since it helped extend irrigation water supplies, which are scarce in some districts.
The warmest temperature in the state Monday was 90 degrees at Hagerman. Dixie reported the coldest at 31 degrees.
Elsewhere in the nation Monday, the highest temperature was 117 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif. The lowest was 33 degrees at Jackson, Wyo., and West Yellowstone, Mont.

Thunderstorms spawn tornado over Milwaukee

The Associated Press
Thunderstorms lashed parts of the nation's midsection with heavy rain Monday.
The storms also spawned a tornado in Wisconsin, causing minor damage and one injury in the Milwaukee suburb of Germantown, the National Weather Service said.
A thunderstorm with damaging winds and heavy rain dropped half an inch in diameter near Fortfork, Ky. Trees fell, and the storm dumped 1.9 inches of rain on the area in an hour.
Thunderstorms also developed over other parts of the nation during the morning. At midday, rain showers and thunderstorms extended from Florida through Texas; up through the Midwest along the East Coast to western Virginia.
Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours ending at 2 p.m.

Workers will fight for bases

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The closure of 88-year-old Fort Benjamin Harrison doesn't bother its 400 military personnel. Transfers are part of the military way of life.
But for more than 50,000 civilians and military retirees who either work at the base or depend on it for low-cost groceries and medical care, the decision to close Fort Harrison is devastating.
They spoke bitterly Monday about the closure, which some regarded as tantamount to a broken promise by President Bush.
"We've got a president who ran on an issue of being a family man. It doesn't sound like he's keeping his promise to me," said Arnold Scott, a civilian mechanic who has worked at Fort Harrison for 17 years.
The Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission announced Sunday that Fort Harrison was on the list of military installations to be shut down.
More than 80,000 military and 37,000 civilian workers around the nation would be directly affected by the closings voted by the commission.
If Bush approves the list, it will go to Congress, which will have 45 days to endorse it or veto it.

and a number of other corporate sponsors put in money against expenses and get the exposure via 102 pre-1940 automobiles.
"This is one of the few events where you can actually see the cars go down the road," said Ken Heuring of Ketchum. "Usually it's just a static display; the cars just sit there."
According to race officials, the oldest car entered was built in 1910. All are originals, restored with new brakes, tires and headlight systems for safety purposes.
A prize of $5,000 is given to the community along the race course, with the most enthusiastic reception for the racers. The money is earmarked for local libraries.
"This community is absolutely in the running for the enthusiasm competition," said driver Bill Thompson. "It will be a tough decision for whoever has to make it."
"We really feel good about the turnout," said Kent Judd, executive director of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce. "The crowd is tremendous. We've received high marks from the Great Race organizers. In fact, they say they've never seen a lunch stop as great as this."
About 40 Magic Valley volunteers have been planning the park reception since March, when they juried the Great Race to Twin Falls.
"We tried last year and didn't get it so this year we put in a real good effort. It worked well on their side," Judd said.

State Rep. Ralph Peters, R-Mo., Jerome, described the event as a money-maker for a good cause and as a way to strengthen the community.
"This is the kind of thing that community spirit is built on and it's the kind of thing people here like," Peters said.

Supreme Court nominee Thomas native of Georgia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is a brief biographical sketch of Clarence Thomas, nominated Monday to the Supreme Court:
Age: 42
Born: Pinpoint, Ga., near Savannah.
Family: Wife, Virginia, and son, Jamal.
Education: B.A., Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass.; Law degree, Yale Law School.
Career: Attorney, Office of the Attorney General of Missouri, 1974-77; attorney, Monsanto Co., 1977-79; legislative assistant to Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., 1979-81; assistant secretary for civil rights, Department of Education, 1981-82; chairman Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 1982-90; Bush appointee for U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; 1990-present.

Among youngest choices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Clarence Thomas, at 43, would be one of the youngest justices to join the Supreme Court this century.
Thomas was selected Monday by President Bush to succeed Justice Thurgood Marshall, who is retiring. Marshall turns 83 on Tuesday.
With the retirement of Justice Thurgood Marshall, Justice Harry A. Blackmun, the oldest justice at 82.
Here are the ages of the other justices:
Byron R. White, 71.
John Paul Stevens, 74.
Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 66.
Sandra Day O'Connor, 61.
Antonin Scalia, 55.
Anthony M. Kennedy, 54.
David H. Souter, 51.
With Marshall, the average age on the court was 66. If Thomas is confirmed by the Senate, the average age would drop to 62.

Idaho

"I'm not familiar with him," said Borhite Sharp of Mountain-Home, president of the Idaho chapter of the National Organization for Women.
"But I would suspect President Bush's appointees would be of the same mind (about abortion) that Bush is."
Bush says he opposes abortion except in cases of rape or incest or when the mother's life is in danger. Thomas, a conservative and former chairman of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, has not made his views public.
Idaho Right to Life officials referred questions about Thomas to their national headquarters in Washington, D.C., where Legislative Director Doug Johnson said Thomas has left no judicial "footprints on the abortion issue."
"Judge Thomas has never handled an abortion-related case," said Johnson. "He has not taken a position on Roe vs. Wade as far as we know."
"However, we are pleased that President Bush said today that he would appoint a nominee who would faithfully interpret the Constitution and not legislate from the federal bench," Johnson said. "Judge Roe vs. Wade has no basis in the text of the Constitution, we expect the erosion of Roe vs. Wade will continue."
Most court observers believe there are four firm votes on the court to overturn Roe. The latest appointee, David Souter, has not made his position known.
"It's an excellent choice," said Sen. Steve Wyden, R-Idaho, of the ruling. "Judge Thomas has indicated by his actions that he does not believe in legislating from the bench."

Thomas

Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The groups generally held their fire, preferring to save their political capital for other confirmation fights.
Ralph G. Nease, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, said Monday that many groups that belong to his organization "have expressed serious concern about Thomas' record at the anti-discrimination agency."
"We urge the Senate not to rush to judgment. With so many constitutional rights and personal liberties at stake, the Senate must make sure Clarence Thomas has demonstrated a commitment to equal opportunity and equal justice under the law," Nease said.
Sen. Bill Stribling, D-Ill., said that at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission Thomas had seemed "to go out of his way to find ways to weaken some of the basic civil rights protections that his agency was charged with enforcing."
Simon, who voted to confirm Thomas to the appeals court, said in a statement that he was concerned about whether Thomas "will champion the rights of all citizens, including the powerless in our society."
Democratic senators will also have an opportunity to examine the 18 decisions that Thomas joined in or wrote since becoming a member of the federal high court.
Though evidence in print of Thomas' views on abortion seem scant, there is plenty on his opposition to affirmative action and special preferences for minorities.
In a 1985 EEOC statement, Thomas said, "Federal enforcement agencies ... turned the statutes on their heads by requiring discrimination in the form of hiring an promotion on specific issues such as goals and timetables."
In a 1987 article for the Yale Law & Policy Review he referred to affirmative action as "social engineering ... We're standing the principle of nondiscrimination on its head."
Souter, by contrast, had labored in obscurity as a New Hampshire Supreme Court judge and briefly as a member of the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston before Bush nominated him to replace Justice William Brennan last year.
During his confirmation hearings, Souter gave little satisfaction to Democratic senators seeking his views on specific issues such as abortion and criminal procedure.
Souter's answers were so noncommittal that last week Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., referred to him the "stealth candidate."
In light of Souter's conservative views on major decisions this year, Cranston warned that the Senate would give closer scrutiny to the next nominee.
But Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said he expected that Thomas, too, would remain silent on the issues that would come before the high court.
Hatch said he expected Souter's answers, whose status played a key role in the defeat of Judge Robertork's 1987 nomination, to support Thomas, whom he called a "quintessential Southerner."

Slovenes stand firm

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The army general who commanded the military intervention in Slovenia was reportedly sacked Monday, as the renegade republic held firm in its standoff with the national government.

Lt. Gen. Konrad Kolsek was replaced as commander of the 5th military district by Lt. Gen. Zivold Avramovic, the official Tanjug news agency said, quoting the federal defense ministry.

The army, which used battle tanks and warplanes to battle Slovene territorial troops in three days of fighting last week, has been criticized by the federal government for going too far in trying to re-establish Yugoslav sovereignty.

Some hard-line critics have attacked the military for failing to dislodge the rebels during the fighting. Slovenian territorial forces have surrounded federal barracks, keeping returning troops from returning unless they surrender their arms, and preventing food and other essentials from reaching the bases.

Despite a cease-fire accord with the national government in effect since Sunday, Slovenian authorities Monday said they would keep control of the republic's borders and block federal troops from returning to barracks.

The defiant republic also boycotted the first meeting in six weeks of Yugoslavia's revived collective federal presidency.

Some violence was reported Monday. Slovenian militiamen retook a border post at Opatje Selo on the Italian border after a fierce firefight, killing the federal unit's commander, Slovene radio said.

Ethnic violence between Serbs and Croats was reported in Croatia, which joined Slovenia in declaring independence a week ago.

Webster says farewell to CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) — William H. Webster on Monday said goodbye to employees of the Central Intelligence Agency, saying his four years as director was "a great and worthy adventure."

The agency "worked hard to build the trust and confidence that was so badly needed" in its relationship with Congress, he said.

"In an era of declining budgets, there will be inevitable strain," he told 2,000 CIA workers during a retirement ceremony.

Sho-Bans put more at risk than fish in tiff with state

The Shoshone-Bannock Tribes' insistence on collecting their pound of salmon flesh will hurt the fishery resource, but that's not all. It will damage the Sho-Bans' image in the eyes of their fellow Idahoans.

Tribal leaders have refused to budge from their intention of taking 25 spring chinook salmon, despite pleas from Attorney General Larry Echolslawik and Fish and Game Commissioner Louis Racine.

The survival of this precarious species apparently is less important than claiming a share of the straggling remnant.

A tribal official insisted last week that the Sho-Bans are not to blame for the chinook's fast-approaching extinction. He's right. Hydroelectric dams have depleted the salmon's numbers by disruption their reproductive cycle, and fishermen (both Indian and non-Indian) downriver and in the Pacific Ocean have devastated what's left.

But the problem's root is not the issue. When the overall resource is as wobbly as it is now, every little bit hurts.

This year's run of the increasingly rare fish is estimated at a record low 6,000. The tribal leaders say their 25 won't make much difference. But Racine has pointed out that if 10 of those fish are female, 60,000 eggs could be lost.

Although the species recently was recommended for protection under the Endangered Species Act, Idaho officials can't do much about what happens downstream. Idaho can only do what little it can to protect the few fish that survive to the gantlet to swim this far.

If the dispute goes to court, the ruling may hinge on bewilderingly esoteric scientific evidence. But for those of us without benefit of advanced degrees in biology, here's an unscientific exercise to put the issue into perspective:

If your annual income were only $6,000, would a $25 loss matter to you? You bet it would.

Native Americans' rightful claim to a share of the continent's fisheries resources is well-established, and most whites acknowledge it. But the Sho-Bans' selfish tunnel-vision in this tiny dispute risks eroding non-Indians' sympathy for Native American concerns.

Doubtless the Sho-Bans perceive a high moral principle at stake in their quest to spear 25 fish. But they need to ask themselves what they are willing to sacrifice to do so.

Teacher gives 1% tax initiative an 'F'

As an educator, a teacher in the public school system of Idaho, I must take issue with the observations of Ron Rankin, president of the Idaho Property Owners Association, in regards to the impact of the 1 percent initiative on the education system in the state of Idaho.

His tax limitation proposal ought to be portrayed as it really is, a move to strangle the public school funding in the state rather than a tax limitation. Because, in reality, that is what the tax limitation is, the implementation of the 1 percent initiative will be, not only for schools but for other public services as well.

Mr. Rankin pointed out (Times-News, Wednesday, June 26) that the net loss to school funds would be about 9 percent. However, estimates by the Idaho State Tax Commission indicate that Idaho's public schools stand to lose over $40 million if the initiative is passed.

Idaho's schools cannot afford to lose over $40 million and continue to maintain and offer the fine quality of education that is now afforded our children. Idaho's school population is growing. We simply cannot provide for more children in our schools with less money.

Recently, three separate task forces on education reform in the state of Idaho published the results of their studies. Each pointed to the need for more, not less, funding for our school system if we are to adequately prepare our children to meet the challenges of the 21st century, which is fast approaching.

Merle Jaques
Reader comment

Here in the Magic Valley, many schools are suffering from overcrowding and buildings that need to be remodeled, replaced or added. Some districts find themselves unable to meet current textbook adoptions, and teachers find themselves short of basic classroom supplies. A decrease in funding will only serve to compound the problems that already face our schools.

Additionally, passage of the 1 percent initiative would cause more of the funding of schools to be moved from the local to the state level, effectively removing local control and involvement from the communities and transferring it to the state legislature.

The IEA has been an advocate for changes in the tax structure within the state of Idaho. We have urged lawmakers to consider restructuring the tax system so that one segment of the population is not overburdened, however, to date little movement has been made towards a study of the tax system.

Trying to force change through the drastic measures that the 1 percent initiative would impose, is not an acceptable route to tax equity.

Idaho's public schools continue to offer a high quality of education to its children even though we rank near the bottom of the states in per-pupil expenditures. To ask our students and teachers to learn and teach with less is an affront to the integrity of both.

We must work to ensure that Idaho's children are fully prepared to be contributing citizens of our society. In a world beset with economic, social, and political problems that we can only hope to solve with well-educated people, we must continue to invest in our children — they are our future.

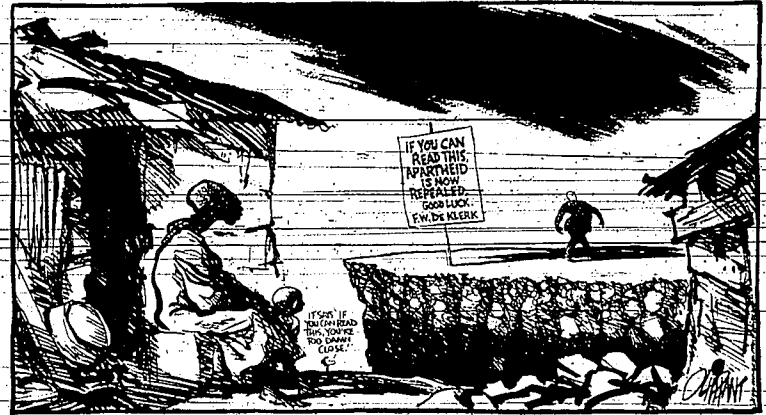

Let's give this initiative the grade it deserves: an F for failure — failure to have a vision of the future and failure to provide for those who depend on us most, Idaho's children.

Sexual harassment is subtle

The real problem of sexual harassment is that many people guilty of this have no idea their actions would be considered harassment. Most incidents of sexual harassment do not involve the boss chasing employees around the desk, but are far more subtle.

The employer refers to "the girls in the office," some of whom are older than the employer.

In a committee meeting, a member agrees to help with "the women's work."

In responding to a comment on the subject at hand, the employer or co-worker responds, "When you look as lovely as you go."

While introducing employees at a public assembly, employees of equal rank are introduced primarily by first name when they are women and by title when they are men.

Jokes focusing on sexual differences (i.e. PMS, blondes, women) are tolerated.

Many guilty of this behavior are totally oblivious to the effect this has on employees and co-workers. Many would respond they were just trying to be pleasant. These actions, however, draw attention away from the business at hand and focus on sex rather than ability, competence and talents which call attention to gender are out of place in the work setting and are sexual harassment.

I believe sexual harassment is alive and well at CSI. I have no doubt it is alive and well at The Times-News and many, if not most, other work places in the Magic Valley.

Personally, I think it is a good sign when the subject is addressed to the public forum and hope the problem will lessen as people think twice about their words and actions.

He sounds like a politician

To Mr. Carl Snow:

I read your "inspired" letter to the Class of '91. It made me sick! All of your "flowery acrobatics" to the graduates, of whom we are all proud, sounds like a politician running for office.

You have an honor student who asked for permission to be 10 minutes late to band class in order to take a French class needed for college entrance. Your permission was not granted. Athletics, music, religion, etc., are excused — why not academics?

Perhaps politics, not education, is your forte.

What did we achieve in golf?

In discussing the golf fair, I made the remark, "It was an exercise in futility." Someone asked, "Why do you say that?"

Let's be honest about it. What good did we do?

Yes, your boys and girls in the military did their job well. They are people to be proud of, even though many of them had no idea why they were in Saudi Arabia. Do you know why?

We did, and out what military machines functioned properly and we found about the ones that were useless.

What else did we accomplish? The main question is, "Was it worth all the deaths and destruction we caused?" We are responsible for a few deaths.

Many people feel that if our government did it should follow along like sheep and say it was a great and glorious feat. Many Republicans feel that it would be disloyal to the party to say it was a waste of human life and property.

Just be honest! If the president had been Democrats, would the Republicans agree that we had the right to kill all those people?

We should put humanity before politics. Thinking people know that wars solve nothing and cause useless destruction. Can you justify this one?

To be a loyal honest American citizen we should analyze our government's actions and correct the blunders and mistakes. We first have to acknowledge the mistakes and make sure that they don't happen again.

We have realized that the Korean War and going into Vietnam was a mistake, but we refuse to learn! What about the invasion of Panama? Lives were destroyed and people's lives were ruined. The taxpayer is paying to keep Noriega in jail. (Are we paying

Be responsible for pets

For the second time in six months, I have rescued a "dumped" kitten from the medical center parking lot. Each time the kitten was so small I could hold it in one hand.

I became a little angry, not I become very angry, when I saw abandoned animals because of irresponsible pet owners. We are supposed to be a caring people, but when I see happenings like this I wonder about some of us.

Spaying and neutering is a one-time cost with many benefits, the main one of course is the satisfaction of knowing that your cat, dog or dog will not produce or be responsible for the reproduction of animals that will be left to die by starvation, disease, or being hit by an automobile and suffering until it finally dies.

Let's take care of our pets for the community, for you, but mostly so we won't have all these "throw-away" pets.

Court needs common sense

The recent decision by the Idaho State Supreme Court resurrecting the 9-year-old lawsuit against two Twin Falls police officers has to rank among the most assinine decisions the Idaho Supreme Court has made in a long time.

I was personally involved in the incident and was also present at the trial, and the jury afforded all the information that could possibly be presented. They arrived at their verdict armed with this information.

To bring this type of suit up on some obscure detail such as a jury instruction is ludicrous. The jury used common sense in arriving at its decision, which is something that is totally lacking in the Idaho Supreme Court.

It has been said that the two most hated professions in the world are attorneys and politicians, and the Idaho Supreme Court embodies the worst of the two. They sit up there in their sanitized environment with no

The usual dreary game is playing out: Each candidate lays claim to a corner of an issue or an idea or a constituency, and that's all we hear about until the candidate falls out of the primary race walk up to a door with an electric eye and the door wouldn't open.

Toward the middle of the group is former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts.

Tsongas has made an obsession of his long-shot status. He seems to revel in being unknown, presenting himself as a kind of political alchemist who fell out of the sky from Venus — or from Lowell, Mass. — with the Answers.

The former one-term senator declares himself to be a "pro-business liberal" which may mean he likes to play golf at desegregated country clubs, or support re-training for workers who lost their jobs to permanent strikebreakers.

If you think Democrats who take millions of dollars in campaign contributions from corporate political action committees aren't friendly enough with business, well, Tsongas might be your chap.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton is the candidate of the group he currently leads, the Democratic Leadership Council. It's an amalgam of politicos, lobbyists and public-policy theorists who basically think that Democratic Party went off the rails about 20 years ago and needs to be righted.

Clinton has been accused of creeping Republicanism, and prominent Democrats, including chairman Clinton, spend many hours disavowing the flats and policy judgments emanating from the group's office in Washington.

For his part, Clinton is affable and good on the stump, and he speaks the fashionable language of vouchers and tax credits.

He's spoken by the Persian Gulf War, however, perhaps because he didn't have to vote on the use of force, as did so many of his potential rivals who serve in Congress.

Clinton looks certain about this group; there will be no surprises.

There are other Democrats on the edges, of course, and by summer's end, some of them will assume their rightful and utterly predictable positions in the lineup. One thing seems certain about this group; there will be no surprises.

Steve Daley is a Washington correspondent for the Chicago Tribune.

Expect no big surprises from (yawn) Democrats

WASHINGTON — The attack figures are in place for 1992. Although it's hard to find a pulse in the coming presidential campaign, a number of Democrats already have staked out predictable positions.

It's a party ritual: To run in the Democratic primary system and to guarantee an ineffective effort in the general election campaign, each Democrat must attempt to distinguish himself from the Republican incumbent but from his Democratic rivals.

Happily, this is not difficult, as the differences can be so small as to be indistinguishable. Go ahead, drive a position paper because Dukakis is a saint and Gephardt and Gore and Biden are the rest.

Remember 1988? Gary Hart was the new-idea guy and Mike Dukakis was the hands-on managerial type and Al Gore was the border-state moderate with the profile and Bushiness of a honest.

Bruce Habitut from Arizona was the dress plane's favorite, and Dick Gephardt was the earnest man of the people, even though he spent more time on corporate jets than a bundle of CEOs.

The same dreary game is playing out among Democrats as we move into summer. Each candidate lays claim to a corner of an issue or an idea or a constituency, and that's all we hear about until the candidate falls out of the primary race.

Making it off to fight we got Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, newly re-elected to the Senate.

Harkin is a feisty sort and, assessing the potential Democratic field, he noticed that no one in his party was preaching the rhetoric of class war, the gospel of Hubert Humphrey, the snuff that wowed them in the union halls.

Of course, when Jesse Jackson carried the gist of this message in 1984 and 1988, he was seen as damaging the party by appealing to narrow constituencies, to "special interests," which means blacks' and other minorities.

When Harkin does it, he's appealing to the party's "progressive wing."

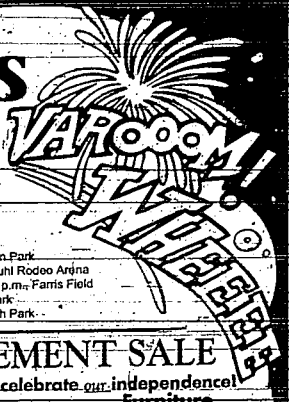

Now, there is evidence — five of the last six presidential elections, for example — that the off-time Democratic message was something that millions of Americans didn't want to hear.

They didn't want to hear it from George McGovern or Walter Mondale or Michael Dukakis, and it can be argued they don't want to hear from the next Democratic candidate, who isn't likely to be Tom Harkin.

Sen. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia has an issue (health care), and all the money on God's earth. This is a good way to start a presidential campaign, especially in a party where posturing a genuine idea is as rare as winning in Utah.

Rockefeller's supporters acknowledge he's got a small problem with charisma, but it's worse than that. He's got a big problem with charisma. You get the feeling he could

Fair board allows 4-H to hire food manager

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County Fair Board agreed Monday to let the 4-H club hire a manager for its food booth at this year's fair.

Club representative Bob Voderka said that because of school or other projects at the fair, 4-H members often do not have time to help out at the food booth.

"They get pretty stretched out," Voderka said. Now that the Fair Board has approved hiring a manager, the 4-H Council must agree, he said. The Fair Board approved the agreement for this year to see how well the arrangement works. Fair Manager Cindy Demoney said the decision did not mean a new policy for concessions at the fair.

July Fourth fireworks display to start behind schedule

TWIN FALLS — Thursday night's Fourth of July fireworks display will start 15 minutes later than usual.

Organizers say it just isn't dark enough to begin the pyrotechnics at the usual 10 p.m. starting time.

Universal Frozen Food buys the fireworks — $2,000 worth this year, about 30 minutes worth of explosives — and volunteers from the Twin Falls fire department set them off at a site on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho. UFF is opening its newly landscaped front lawn area to spectators from the college on Falls Avenue to the east, but the Twin Falls police department asks fireworks watchers not to park on North College Avenue north of CSI. It's too close to the explosives, they say.

Red Cross seeks donations to build up disaster fund

TWIN FALLS — The American Red Cross is asking for donations to bolster its disaster relief fund, drained by an unusual number of natural calamities around the world.

"While this area is fortunate not to have suffered a major natural disaster recently, our Red Cross workers find around the clock to the emergency needs of local people, including those who are victims of family house fires," said Ruth Young, manager of the Sawtooth Chapter. Since July 1 of last year, the Red Cross has received more than $10 million of its $46 million total fund to help victims of floods, tornadoes, fires, ice storms and other natural disasters.

The Red Cross needs to bolster that fund now, because summer is usually one of its busiest times of year with floods and tornadoes. Financial contributions can be mailed to the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund in care of the Sawtooth Chapter, 218 Shoshone St. E., Twin Falls.

Carey resident named by Governor to toddler council

BOISE — June Stocking of Carey has been appointed by Gov. Cecil Andrus to the Infant and Toddler Intercity Council, while Ronald E. Darcy of Gooding has been reappointed to the same position to represent the parents of youngsters with disabilities on the council, which is charged with developing efforts on the state and local levels for planning and implementing services for Idaho's learning or physically disabled young children.

Both she and Darcy will serve three-year terms. Andrus originally appointed Darcy to the commission in 1988.

Twin Falls juvenile has brief holiday from holding facility

TWIN FALLS — Saturday night proved the final evening of a brief holiday for a 16-year-old Twin Falls boy who slipped out of the county's juvenile holding facility last week.

An anonymous caller told sheriff's deputy David Nunez that the boy was walking down an alley near the IGA grocery store on Second Avenue North at 6 p.m. Saturday.

Nunez sent another deputy to the scene where he spotted the boy and gave him to an anonymous caller, grabbed the boy and held him for the deputy, Nunez said.

The boy was returned to the motel from which he escaped Wednesday evening and security there was doubled, Nunez said.

Twin Falls County has held juvenile detainees in motel rooms since August, when the privately-owned Southern Idaho Youth Center closed. The boys currently staying here will be moved to a new temporary facility at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Piler today.

Hawkins' lawyer seeks dismissal of felony charges

By Craig Lincoln
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The attorney for the manager of a failed bean warehouse plans to ask a magistrate judge today to dismiss a 36-count felony complaint against his client.

Boise attorney James G. Reid will make his argument at 1:30 p.m. in 5th District Magistrate Judge Charles Brumbach, on the second day of a pre-trial hearing. Reid is defending Jerry Hawkins, the president of Hawkins Co. Ltd.

Hawkins is charged with writing false checks and falsifying other books to make the warehouse's books balance just before a May 1988 inspection by the state. The state probably would have closed the warehouse then if its inspector knew the extent of Hawkins Co.'s shortage.

Instead, the warehouse closed in November 1988 after farmers had deposited their 1988 crop in the Filer warehouse.

Months before that, Hawkins Co. bookkeeper Sandy Caudill saw Hawkins writing check after check when she came to work on May 2.

"He said he was making all these checks out for growers," Caudill said. "And there was no grower in there."

Hawkins had called the Idaho Department of Agriculture's Dave Sparrow and asked Sparrow to examine the warehouse, but Sparrow didn't give an explanation why Hawkins asked for the inspection.

Meanwhile, Hawkins was writing checks that purportedly paid for beans purchased from farmers. By doing that, he moved beans from farmers' ownership to the warehouse's ownership to cover a shortage in the warehouse, Deputy Attorney General Michael Henderson said.

Henderson also said that Hawkins ordered his warehouse workers to fill some boxes with culls and dirt to stack in the warehouse. Those boxes were stacked inside other boxes containing beans — hoping Sparrow wouldn't see inside the dirt-and-cull boxes but count them during his inspection.

Sparrow still found a 637,500-pound shortage during the May inspection. If he had known of the 3.5 million pounds of beans that were covered by the allegedly false checks, Sparrow said, he may have seized the warehouse then.

"It would have been quite alarming," Sparrow testified.

But Hawkins showed the inspector Sparrow found by covering the shortage contracts transferring title to beans owned by two farmers and checks purchasing some beans.

Nearly seven months later, a Hawkins Co. employee called Sparrow back to the Filer warehouse.

Bike-Aid: Seeing America from soup kitchen to soup kitchen

By Terri McCaffee
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Fourteen young cyclists on a cross-country tour rolled into Burley Monday, but these aren't your average tourists.

They stowed their bikes, unloaded their gear and went to work in the local soup kitchen.

"There is a whole lot more to poverty and we are just amateurs," said Brud Derry of Rockford, Ill. "But poverty doesn't have to exist."

They're part of Bike-Aid, a series of four transcontinental bike treks designed to raise a little money and a lot of consciousness.

"This is for us to learn, a kind of exchange of ideas and knowledge," said Alberto Calzadilla, a rider from Bolivia. El Salvador, Zimbabwe and Ghana provide the international flavor to the project, sponsored by a San Francisco-based student organization called the Overseas Development Network. This group of cyclists that left Portland, Ore., three weeks ago bound for Washington, D.C., is one of four contingents headed

FDIC official seeks bankers' forbearance of 18% premium

The Associated Press

SUN-VALLEY — The vice chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. urged Utah bankers to continue supporting the fund despite an 18 percent increase in premiums.

"As a result of this 28-cent premium rise, we don't want to fall into this problem that the savings and loans had, and have the taxpayers have to bail us out," Andrew "Skip" Howe said Monday at the annual convention of the Utah Bankers Association here.

The increase that became effective Monday means banks will pay a semi-annual premium of 23 cents per $100 in insured deposits up to $100,000.

The boost is intended to enable the FDIC to cover losses from the closure of 600 banks nationwide in the last four years.

Howe said another 1,000 institutions are on the FDIC's "problem bank" list.

"Our worst case scenario of six months ago is happening in 1991," he said.

The banking industry's troubles are largely centered this year in New England and the East Coast, where declining real estate values have pushed some banks to insolvency, Howe said.

He said the closure of the Bank of New England alone is costing the FDIC $1.5 billion.

In contrast, Utah banks are in excellent shape, Howe said.

"You're the kind of banks we like at FDIC," he said. "You pay your premiums and you don't have any claims."

A bank reform bill approved by the House Banking Committee last week includes $70 billion in new borrowing authority for the FDIC, and Howe said $40 billion would be short-term loans backed by the assets of failed banks.

The other $30 billion will be covered by higher insurance premiums paid by banks. Howe estimated that a 3.5 cent hike in premiums would be necessary for every $10 billion borrowed to cover bank losses.

Richard Kirk, president of the American Bankers Association, said the banking industry's five major trade associations agreed on the expanded borrowing power for the FDIC.

"We clearly recognize that we need a strong fund," he said.

Kirk said the ABA supports most of the reforms included in the new banking bill, which would allow banks to operate nationwide branch systems, affiliate with securities and insurance companies and offer new services.

Harris Simmons, chairman of the Utah Bankers Association, said Congress and state governments should recognize the banking industry's need to compete with less regulated credit unions and credit card companies.

"Banking in Utah is healthy; 1990 was a very good year," he said.

"We're doing well, but running scared."

Hospital to spend $81,000 studying expansion

By Terri McCaffee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley Regional Medical Center will spend $81,000 to find out how much — and where — to expand.

The hospital board Monday night approved a contract with Hamilton KSA, a hospital consulting firm, to study the facility's needs.

A 26 percent growth in emergency room visits and an increasing demand for outpatient surgery services demonstrate the need to expand, officials said.

"The hospital is trying to take a longer-term view of community needs," Administrator John Bingham said.

Hamilton KSA employees will discuss hospital needs with nurses, doctors, administrators and local residents during the course of a five-month study, he said. The firm will then give a final report, including its recommendation on expansion, Bingham said.

Included in Hamilton's recommendation will be long-range expansion plans for the hospital's cancer treatment center.

The facility could begin construction on a new addition by next spring, Bingham said.

The process leading up to the selection of Hamilton took several months. A committee met several times to develop criteria for the kind of expertise consultants should have to be considered, said Jim Murphy, assistant administrator.

The company needed experience with equipment planning, nursing home planning, rehabilitation hospital planning, professional office building planning and acute care planning, he said.

Six companies out of hundreds from around the country had satisfactory credentials, Murphy said.

The committee further narrowed its choices through a three-step elimination process.

"We felt this was our good selection process as possible," board member Jim Herrett said.

In other business, the board approved the purchase of:

- A $204,950 computerized sonography system. The radiography sonography equipment is used for various ultrasonic procedures.
- A $54,500 automated microbiology system. The equipment performs rapid bacterial and yeast identification testing and antibiogram sensitivity testing.
- A $19,900 urological C-arm table.

The portable equipment with radiographic capabilities will mostly be used for urologic procedures.

Former Bellevue librarian decides against suing city

By Deborah Shimkus
Times-News correspondent

Former Bellevue librarian Mary Griffin will not pursue a suit against the city.

According to her attorney, E. Lee Schlander, Griffin has decided against suing after not being rehired last year.

"She felt it to be going through the court process would be hard since the lawsuit people are like her family," said Schlander.

Following her dismissal, Griffin filed a claim of wrongful discharge and threatened to sue the city for up to fifty thousand dollars in damages.

Griffin hoped she would be able to get her job back, according to Schlander.

But she is now working for the school district and is happy with her new job, he said.

Last summer, a mild controversy with the library board, the council did not renew an employment contract with Griffin, who had worked part-time for the city for more than thirty years.

New chapter starting in history of library

New Bellevue city librarian Geri Rosenstein says she has her work cut out for her.

Rosenstein is revamping the library after she took over the position in April.

"I had to redo this whole library," Rosenstein said.

"In a memo to the city council she said that eighty-five percent of the non-fiction books were incorrectly referenced, and the card catalog had to be redone.

Rosenstein also has reorganized the junior, young adult and adult fiction sections of the library.

Rosenstein, a Bellevue resident for more than 11 years, said the council has been supportive of her efforts.

"I see the energy in someone who really cares," she said.

Rosenstein is receiving special direction and instruction from the Magic Valley Library Association and Idaho State University in Pocatello.

She has applied for a Reference Grant through the Idaho State Library.

If awarded, Bellevue will receive $1,650 worth of reference books for $160, according to Rosenstein.

She added in the past, statistics given the State Library regarding Bellevue have been "enhanced."

"This could hurt our chances for this grant," she said.

The Bellevue library is open Monday through Friday 8 a.m. - 5:00 p.m., and on Saturdays from 10 - 1 p.m.

Wednesday nights from 7:30, and on Saturdays from 10 - 1 p.m.

Charitable group must wait a little longer for property

By Phil Sabra
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Habitat for Humanity will have to wait at least 60 days to find out if the city of Twin Falls can help it get property to build houses out. The group, a charitable organization that helps lower-income earners build houses, asked the city in early May to donate land at the corner of Blake Street and Fourth Avenue West. But the property must be put out to bid under state law, City Attorney Fritz Wendlerch told the City Council. So the city advertised public hearing on the proposed sale the hearing was Monday night and only one resident of the neighborhood spoke. Violet Denton, 880 44 Ave. W., said she wanted to know what type of development was proposed for the property. City Community Development Director LaMer Orton said Habitat for Humanity wants to build single-family homes on the land. Denton said she was concerned that someone might build commercial on the land. The city will advertise for bids on the property soon and cannot sell the property sooner than 60 days. The city will retain right-of-way from the property along Blake Street and Fourth Avenue West, Orton said. That will leave enough land for six to eight 4,000-square-foot lots, he said. The Rev. Ed Pangburn, a local director of Habitat for Humanity, said people who live in the houses must help build them and put in at least 500 hours doing it. After that, the residents pay back a no-interest loan.

Wendell rural residents won't receive city water anytime soon

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL—Only city residents may have city water, the Wendell City Council has decided. Jerry Allen had requested a water line to be laid located outside the northeast boundary of city limits. Although the mayor and council members went to Allen's property to study the matter, they decided at a recent meeting to deny the request. "We're having other requests and I don't think we're going to be able to supply them," Allen said if he drills a new well, it will draw from the same water table used by the city, so water shortage should not be an issue.

Mayor George Benson said the city has applied two years for grants to improve the Wendell water system, including more pumps, a new water tank and water lines. The city is not getting any help, Benson said. "We've agreed the city is operating at maximum capacity. This is one of the reasons we are hesitant to let people on the outside have the service," he said. "I'm sorry. I wish we could help you." "We've agreed the city is operating at maximum capacity. business for restoration and retail sale of antique furniture. They asked for council permission to have this business in a residential area. Council members said they would be willing to grant a special-use permit for the furniture business, which will also be the Iverson's residential home. Judy Wahler asked permission to finish building her carport, which may be on city street right-of-way property. Cement footings already have been poured, she said. Council members said Wahler needs to have her property surveyed and then requested a variance in city setback laws to build a carport to her property line. The council voted to install new city streetlights at the corner of Boise Ave. and F Ave. East, and at Hailey Ave. and Fourth Ave. East.

Appeals court upholds denial of credit

BOISE (AP)—Two white supremacists who bombed Coeur d'Alene businesses in 1986 aren't entitled to credit for time they served in jail before sentencing, on state charges, the Idaho Court of Appeals says. The three-judge court on Monday unanimously upheld 1st District Judge James Judd's rejection of requests for credit for time served from David Ross Dorris and Edward Wade Hawley. They were sentenced on April 25, 1989, to 15 years each in prison after pleading guilty to state bombing charges. They later moved to have the almost 32 months between their arrest and sentencing credited against their terms. Dorris and Hawley were convicted of building pipe bombs that were exploded in Coeur d'Alene as a diversion for their planned robberies of two banks and a National Guard armory. The weapons and money allegedly were for a violent splinter group of the Church of Jesus Christ Christian-Aryan Nations. Both men were arrested by U.S. Secret Service and Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms officers and charged in federal court with a number of counterfeiting violations. Warrants for their arrest on state charges were issued six days later in Kootenai County. Dorris and Hawley pleaded guilty to federal charges in the U.S. District Court for Eastern Washington. Hawley was sentenced in April 1987 and was transferred to a federal prison in Tucson, Ariz. Dorris was sentenced the following month and remained in the Spokane County Jail. In September 1987, both men were returned to Kootenai County to answer the state bombing charges. In February 1988, they were charged in U.S. District Court in Boise with racketeering, bombing, firearms and attempted bank robbery counts. Kootenai County was asked to hold both men pending their trial on the new federal charges. "Dorris and Hawley each pleaded guilty on April 7, 1989, to three bombing counts in 1st District Court. They were sentenced later the same month. Idaho judges are required to give defendants credit for time served before sentencing if the time was for the same offense. But the Court of Appeals said in the case of Dorris and Hawley, that did not apply. "Clearly, Dorris and Hawley are not entitled to credit on their state sentences for the time they spent in the custody of federal authorities awaiting disposition, of unrelated federal charges. Now are they entitled to credit on their state sentences for the time they served on the federal sentences while in the custody of federal authorities," Judge Cathy Silak wrote.

Smelter owner files for protection

SPORANE, Wash. (AP)—Federal environmental authorities say it is too early to say whether the cleanup of northern Idaho's Silver Valley will be affected by a major company's reorganization petition. Bunker Limited Partnership, which owns the historic Bunker Hill Magma smelter at Kellogg, Idaho, is seeking protection from creditors' lawsuits under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy laws. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in October 1988 named the partnership one of several companies potentially responsible for costs of cleaning up the 21-square-mile Bunker Hill Superfund site. Those costs were estimated at more than $100 million. EPA officials still had not determined whether the bankruptcy court filing means the Bunker partnership will be able to avoid paying cleanup costs. "It certainly is a factor. How it will play out, I just don't know," EPA Superfund site manager John Meyer said Monday from Seattle. "Bunker Limited Partnership is the major owner of the properties over there. Obviously, it's going to have some bearing on how things continue on this project." In a voluntary petition filed late Friday in U.S. Bankruptcy Court here, Bunker Limited Partnership listed $4.7 million in assets and $33.3 million in liabilities, including $23.6 million in unsecured debt. Company president Jack Kendrick did not return calls for comment.

Seattle lawyer Sarah Weaver filed the documents but referred inquiries to Jerome Shulkin, an attorney with the same firm who also was not in his office. "Bunker Limited Partnership is a mining, real estate holding and timber company controlled by northern Idaho businessmen—Harry Magnuson, Duane Hagadone and Kendrick. Hagadone was not in his office Monday and Magnuson did not return calls for comment Friday afternoon. With southern Idaho businessman J.R. Simpson, the partnership in November 1982 bought the giant mining and smelting complex from Gulf Resources & Chemical Corp. Simpson later left the partnership.

What I know — it's so comfortable," Derby said of the poor. "Those people have found a way to survive. I don't know if they know how many options that they have."

Jerome sheriff says home fire was set

The Times-News
JEROME—A fire that nearly killed a woman and her children two weeks ago was started intentionally, Jerome County Sheriff Larry Gold said Monday. Investigators have discovered that the June 17 fire, which gutted a two-story house at 500 South 192 West of Jerome, was actually started in four different places, Gold said. Maria Lopez and her son and daughter, both under five years old, were charged in their upstairs bedroom by smoke detectors, he said. Lopes tried unsuccessfully to lower her children from the balcony by sheets she had torn and tied together. A neighbor heard her scream for help and drove under the balcony with a pickup and was able to pull Lopes and her children to safety when the fire started. Gold said, adding that neither he nor his wife is a suspect in the case.

for the nation's capital from West Coast states. Bike-Aid is a fund-raiser, but the heart of the project is to teach the young travelers first-hand about poverty and the variety of methods available to help those in need. "ODN" supports small-scale, self-sustaining projects around the nation. "They are self-feeding," said Derby. "The groups have to be able to make them happen." The students supply their bike equipment and $150 a month for expenses. They were not cyclists before they left Portland June 19. The four groups — the other three left from Seattle, Los Angeles and San Francisco — are scheduled to meet in Washington on Aug. 20. They will be riding 40 to 50 miles a day. But across Idaho they are riding 70 miles a day, and by the time they reach Nebraska it will be 100 miles between breakfast and bedtime. The groups stop and works in places like the Burley soup kitchen for a few hours a day. On rest days, they may spend a whole day on a project. From Portland to Burley, they have seen the face of poverty change from inner-city street people to migrant workers. "They have different struggles to over come," Gess said. For Gess and Derby, their strongest impression so far has been how few people are aware of poverty and how hopeless exist in their back yards. "A lack of awareness by people who could help and a lack of awareness of where they (the needy) can go," Derby said. "What I know — it's so comfortable," Derby said of the poor. "Those people have found a way to survive. I don't know if they know how many options that they have."

She was born October 25, 1918, at Euroka Springs, Arkansas, the daughter of George and Mauda Roberts-Dye. She grew up and attended schools at Euroka Springs and graduated from the high school in 1936. They soon moved to Arizona, settling in the Phoenix area until moving to Kimberly in 1951. After a short time there, and in Maricopa, they moved to Twin Falls. She was very active in the First Assembly of God Church in Twin Falls.
Surviving are her husband, Paul, of Twin Falls; three daughters, Lori M. Browne of Las Vegas, Nevada, former Ministry of Bona and Debbie Dye of the Vegas; and Joseph B. Parker of Twin Falls; five brothers, Elmer Dye of Garfield, Arkansas, Richard Dye of Phoenix, Arizona, Bill Dye of Days Creek, Oregon, and W.T. Dye, and Tommy Dye, both of Okinola, Washington; three sisters, Nora-Himily and Mabel Lewis, both of Kimberly, and Margie Cunningham of Clarkston, Washington; eight grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren.
A funeral service will take place Friday, July 5, 1993, at 2 p.m. at Pacific Funeral Chapel in Twin Falls. Pastor John Britton of the First Assembly of God Church in Twin Falls will officiate. No viewing will take place.

Hawkins

"The warehouse was kind of in a chaos," Sparrow said. "An afternoon of hurried meetings with bankers, attorneys and all sorts of people led to a decision by the Hawkins Co. board to close the warehouse. Eventually, the state agriculture department seized Hawkins Co. and found a 114,000-bushel shortage — about 11.4 million pounds. Farmers eventually were settled for a reduced price on their beans after a lengthy bankruptcy case. In addition to the criminal charges pending against Hawkins, a class-action civil lawsuit is pending against the Hawkins Co.'s directors and the state. That suit claims that the warehouse should have been closed after the May inspection, and asks for $5 million in damages. Henderson was appointed special prosecutor in the case at the request of Twin Falls County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter.

Lottery ticket sales drop, but state dividend stays the same

BOISE (AP) — Idaho lottery sales dropped 11 percent during the second year of operation, but outgoing commission maintained the dividend the games paid to the state.

Lottery officials presented Gov. Cecil Andrus a check for $17.2 million on Monday, standing the dividend Andrus received a year ago following the highly successful first year of the games.

Ticket sales that hit $66 million from July 19, 1989, through June 1990 slumped to $52 million between last July and mid-June this year, but Commission Chairman James Bruce said Idaho sales in the second year "have been down less in comparison to other states."

The dividend will be split evenly between public building construction and school building construction, with $500,000 from the schools' share financing a multi-year assessment of education building needs statewide.

And Lottery officials said ticket sales have already started turning around. Director Wally Hedrick said another new lottery game will debut this fall in the agency's continuing campaign to keep the games "interesting, fun and entertaining."

Persian Gulf Crisis and the onslaught of the national recession last winter even though Idaho's economy was one of the few that avoided the downturn. But sales have picked up in the last month, and Hedrick predicted sales in the coming year would increase as much as 10 percent to again approach $60 million.

"For the next five years at least, there should be some growth in the lottery," he said.

Andrus said the state's financial stability has only been heightened by proceeds from the lottery — a proposition he opposed during the citizen drive to authorize it in the late 1980s.

"I was not a big supporter of the lottery. But it has not been a detriment to the state of Idaho. It has not caused the problems some of us feared it would cause."

Wal-Mart makes plans to open 1st Idaho store

REXBURG (AP) — Wal-Mart, the nation's most successful retailer, will open its first Idaho outlet in the new Rexburg shopping center, developers announced.

Western Land Holdings in Salt Lake City advised Madison County zoning officials that the Arkansas-based chain will be part of the 10-store Mountain River Plaza set to open next year.

Wal-Mart officials declined to confirm the Rexburg outlet, speculation that the store may be planned for Idaho Falls. The company, however, did not deny that it has purchased a 20-acre tract in Idaho Falls. The Rexburg Wal-Mart will be 93,000 square feet with an expansion capability of 30,000 square feet, spokesman Steve Pruitt of Western Land Holdings said.

Western Land Holdings will meet with city officials later to get the land annexed into the city limits, although Pruitt said the developer will still open Mountain River Plaza, even if it isn't zoned into the city.

At the meeting last week, zoning officials questioned traffic problems with the development, but Pruitt said

Man surrenders after standoff with officers

ARCO (AP) — A Moore man barricaded himself in a bedroom for several hours after a woman reported being beaten, authorities say.

Brian K. Reed was in the Bingham County Jail in Blackfoot late Sunday awaiting arraignment on a charge of aggravated assault.

Butte County Sheriff Cary VanEiten said the alleged beating was reported to Idaho State Police at 7 p.m. Saturday. He said the woman was able to leave the house, eight miles north of Arco, when a state trooper and ambulance arrived.

Idaho State Police Critical Response Team members converged on the site from throughout southern Idaho to assist with the standoff.

Springfield man's death may not have been accidental

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — An autopsy was being conducted to determine how a farm worker was killed Friday morning near Springfield.

Bingham County Sheriff's Capt. John Cowley said Monday that authorities found Daniel Gregory Rascon, 29, dead about 7:30 a.m. at a farm about three miles south of Springfield on Idaho Highway 39.

Rascon had been moving an electric wheel irrigation line at the time of his death, Cowley said. Investigators at first suspected the man was electrocuted but an investigation was continuing.

Rocky Flats weapons plant union welcomes FBI probe

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — The FBI's investigation into repeated tampering with plutonium alarms at Rocky Flats is being welcomed by the workers' union at the nuclear weapons plant.

"The FBI is capable of finding out what is going on. The plant operator isn't," said Jim Kelly, a union representative for the Steelworkers International.

EG&G Inc. operates the plant for the U.S. Department of Energy. The FBI was recently called in to investigate 20 incidents over the past five months in which plutonium alarms either had been turned off or unplugged. The alarms, known as Selective Alpha Air Monitors, measure radioactive dust in the air.

Kelly said although dissatisfaction with plant management is widespread, the union has no room for tamperers.

"There isn't any union guy who is going to take his' feeling out on the plant... If there is a worker like that out there, the union wants that worker out more than anyone."

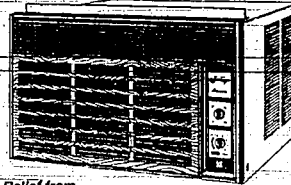

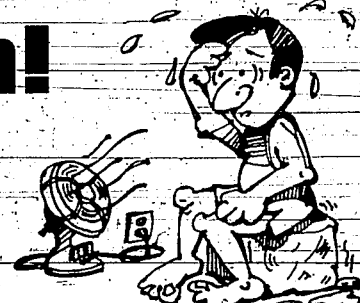

months, the union and EG&G have been feuding over cuts in the union workforce.

Before EG&G became the prime contractor in January 1990, there were 2,800 Steelworkers Union members and 2,600 salaried employees. Today, the salaried workforce is almost twice the size of the union workforce.

"When the FBI makes his findings, it is incumbent upon the FBI and the U.S. Department of Energy, which asked for the inquiry, to make those findings public," Kelly said.

Parolees slip through cracks of state system

BOISE (AP) — A man charged with slaying a Boise couple with a black-powder pistol near Idaho City was forbidden under terms of his parole to carry weapons.

Police say Edward Palmer drank alcohol and carried guns the night he is accused of killing the Madlyns and Keith Enoch near the Clear Creek Lodge.

Keith Wells told police he was dealing cocaine last December, when he allegedly bludgeoned two people to death at a Boise tavern.

Blasphemed "assholes" these slaying have been in common back to the defendants received only minimal parole supervision at the time of the killings.

Last year, Palmer was drinking and tending bar at the lodge, according to evidence filed at a recent court hearing. He owned at least three guns, ATF control, frequenting bars and weapons possession are forbidden on parole.

Wells may have gone even further. According to his statements to detectives, he was dealing cocaine while under the scrutiny.

Idaho Department of Corrections officials say both men seemed excellent candidates for low-supervision parole after performing well during intensive supervision for the first year following their prison releases.

"You watch them as best you can," said Timothy Wilson, a corrections attorney, "but if you can't catch them in the act, you can't catch them."

Rep. Don Loveland, R-Boise, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, has called for a "re-evaluation" of how parole works and fails.

"You're talking about the lives of four people," Loveland said of victims in the two cases.

GOD lawmaker Denton Darrington, Senate judiciary committee chairman, blasted Corrections for taking what he called "unwarranted risks in both cases."

Darrington, of Doctor, said he intends to introduce legislation next session that would give the Commission for Pardons and Parole broader powers in controlling how felons are supervised.

Corrections Director Richard Vernon, meanwhile, welcomed a study of parole practices but doubted its value.

"You can have studies and do all sorts of things, and you'll come to the same conclusions: We're doing the best we can," he said.

"It's not an exact science and a lot of trial-and-error. These cases are two terrible examples, but there are always going to be situations like this. There probably will be them in the future."

Palmer, 35, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder. A judge is scheduled to decide Friday whether he must stand trial.

The 30-year-old Wells faces an Oct. 8 murder trial. He is accused of killing bartender Brandt Rains, 20 and customer John Justd, 23, inside the Rose Pub Tavern.

Palmer, a convicted killer who slashed a woman's throat in 1977, was paroled in April 1988.

Thirteen months later, the murder, charged by Corrections officials as a "model prisoner" was granted "monitored status," the lowest level of parole supervision possible in Idaho.

Under that program, face-to-face contact with a parole officer is supposed to occur once a year. Parolees are required only to file monthly one-page status reports by mail.

Wells, 30, a convicted robber and parole violator, was paroled a final time in December 1989. He carried "minimum" supervision a year later, on Dec. 18, requiring him to meet with a parole officer once every six months.

Two days later, he allegedly robbed the Rose Pub and killed the two.

Palmer and Wells each received glowing evaluations after spending six months on "intensive" supervision.

"The toughest form of parole, it requires several daily contacts by a parole officer and frequent home visits. Barring major additions to parole officer ranks, however, the intensive supervision program could be threatened."

Parole officers are steadily losing ground to rapidly rising caseloads, said Eugene Larson, Corrections field services supervisor. Idaho currently has 73 officers overseeing 4,150 people on probation and parole.

Last minute tax deposit bolsters surplus outlook

BOISE (AP) — A last-minute multimillion-dollar deposit in the state treasury has significantly bolstered the likely cash surplus from the budget year that ended Sunday night.

The $2.5 million in additional personal income tax deposited late Friday combined with improved corporate income tax collections during June should push the surplus to more than $25 million.

Gov. Cecil Andrus said Monday.

But that would still be $4 million to $5 million below the surplus estimate state lawmakers used last winter in reaching spending decisions for the just-ended budget year and the year that began Monday.

The final accounting for the old budget year will not be formalized until mid-July.

"If we're off, we will not be off a large amount," Andrus said after accepting a $17.2 million dividend check for profits from the second year of the state lottery. That money will finance public and school building projects that would otherwise be deferred or would siphon general tax money from other state programs and services. That dividend was also about $800,000 less than the administration expected.

Still, Andrus declared: "We're one of the few states in the nation that can say our bills are paid, we've got money in the bank, and this helps."

Prior to Friday's deposit, administration analysts had projected the surplus would fall $2 million short of the anticipated $30 million — the first time in over four years that the state has fallen short of meeting its revenue estimate.

Power County losing federal drug funds

AMERICAN FALLS (AP) — Operation Crackdown has been quietly putting Power County drug dealers out of business. But federal funding for the program is being cut, so Sheriff Howard Sprague is going public.

"We have a serious drug problem here and Operation Crackdown was really making a difference," Sprague said Monday. "It takes a lot of time and work to arrest somebody and make it stick, but that's what we were doing. That will end if we lose our funding."

Power County commissioners have appropriated about $3,500 for drug enforcement programs and private residents have donated more money, Sprague said. But it took about $32,000 a year from Operation Crackdown to pay for extra drug agent and some investigating expenses.

Power County Prosecutor Henry Boomer said the funding allowed county officers to do a better job of enforcing state drug laws.

Searchers find child who wandered 9 miles from reunion

BOISE (AP) — A 7-year-old Iowa boy is safe after wandering nine miles through the Idaho mountains in inclement weather, authorities say.

Searchers from Custer and Butte counties combed the Pass Creek area for five hours Saturday looking for Guy Warner, who disappeared from a family reunion, Custer County Sheriff's Deputy Jolter Bryant said.

The gathering was on Bear Creek, about 18 miles by road southeast of Mackay.

He was found about 6 p.m. between eight and nine miles away. He huddled from ears when they went by. He was dressed in summer clothes with a short-sleeved T-shirt. There were a couple of sleet storms and rain storms, Bryant said.

His elevation was probably right at 7,000 feet. It's not warm at 7,000 feet," Bryant said.

Lendl bounced out of Wimbledon again

The Washington Post

WIMBLEDON, England — Ivan Lendl is a testototal and a fitness fanatic, but he wants to win Wimbledon so badly that he has promised to drink a Flaming-Hooker when he does: that's pure alcohol in a shot glass, set on fire.

But, yet again, he won't have to live up to his word this year. The third-seeded Lendl, looking like a stray sheep on the Centre Court grass, lost Monday to unseeded American David Wheaton, 6-3, 3-6, 7-6 (8-6), 6-3. The upset marked the 31-year-old Lendl's earliest defeat at Wimbledon since 1981 and further frustrated his hopes of winning the only Grand Slam title to elude him.

"I'm always disappointed when I lose," he said. "But I was beaten fair and square. There is no point to being angry about it."

With seeded men falling like dominoes — Michael Chang, Pete Sampras and Gorn Ivanisevic were upset earlier — the fourth round now will feature rimes like Champion, Volkov, Gunnarsson, Bergstrom, Eltingh. Their ranks respectively: 20, 25, 97, 58, 106.

Once again, the speedy grass courts of Wimbledon are producing unpredictable results and the early exits by high-ranking players. The surface gives an advantage to big servers, speed volleyers and, when combined with the powerful, new high-tech rackets that many players use, the men's game essentially is reduced to raw power. In addition, rain made the courts as soggy as a plate of English peas during the first week.

"The courts are not playing as firm as they would by this time, and you're probably going to see more unusual results," said John McEnroe, the 16th seed who faces defending champion Stefan Edberg in the fourth round Tuesday.

Still going among the top seeds are Edberg, Boris Becker, Jim Courier, Andre Agassi, Michael Stich and Guy Forget. Brad Gilbert, the 15th seed, lost today to Christian Bergstrom, 6-3, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3. Unseeded Tim Mayotte, who downed Chang in the first round, continued his march through the draw, winning in four sets against Patrick Kutenen of Germany.

Agassi provided the only moment of levity Monday, embellishing his all-white outfit with a pair of matching sunglasses.

"I've been having problems pretty much my whole life with dark times, for example twilight," he said. "Today was really overcast, really dark, and I have trouble picking up the serves and connecting cleanly with the ball." Agassi took the glasses off when the sun came out because, he said, "it got brighter and then it was fine."

On the women's side, seventh-seeded Zina Garrison had a scare from a talented young German, Anke Huber. Huber, 17, won the only time the two had played previously, and quickly captured the first set Monday. But Garrison, a finalist last year, regrouped, 3-6, 6-1, 6-0.

Jennifer Capriati, the 15-year-old from Florida, struggled for the second day in a row. The ninth seed-faced Holland's Brenda Schultz, whose racketing serve comes in at about 110 miles per hour, comparable to many men. The two had never played, and, at first, Capriati had trouble adjusting.

"It was a very big serve," she said after coming back to win, 3-6, 6-1, 6-1. "It's pretty hard, and it takes a while to get used to."

Capriati advanced to a quarterfinal meeting Tuesday with the four's grand dame and defending Wimbledon champion, Martina Navratilova. Navratilova, 34, and Capriati have played once, with Navratilova winning. Navratilova seeded third painlessly knocked out Sweden's Catarina Lindqvist Monday, 6-1, 6-3. The top two seeds, Steffi Graf and Gabriela Sabatini also won, as did fourth-seed Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario and fifth seed Mary Joe Fernandez.

A frustrated Ivan Lendl wipes his face near the end of his loss to unseeded David Wheaton on Monday.

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — A garden-party atmosphere returned to the All England Club Monday as pinstriped businessmen reclaimed Centre Court after a one-day break with a century of tradition.

Gone were the high-spirited antics of the 25,000 tennis fans who waited in line for hours to buy cheap tickets, offered when the rain-plagued tournament had to play on its usual rest day on Sunday.

The regular Wimbledon crowd, older and more subdued, did not mimic the Sunday rage's wave that circled the stands of Centre Court. In fact, many seats were empty on Monday.

There was no standing ovation for the ballboys and ballgirls. Jimmy Connors' antics were replaced by civility and bows to the Duchess of Kent, back in a Royal Box that had been abandoned to commoners on Sunday.

Gabriela Sabatini was on Centre Court again, but the wild enthusiasm of Sunday's crowd gave way to the politesse of Monday's champagne set.

Argentine said she plays much better Sunday, but "I feel no matter who I play in front of, you always have to try to play your best."

Although he lumps himself with the worst of the pinstriped tennis dilettantes, John Holt, Sunday's was bored Monday. He said he adored Sunday's.

Steroids bring down mountain of a man

The Associated Press

The image was an alarm, sounded as loud and demanding as a siren, a warning, more eloquent than any words.

To any athlete who watched Lyle Alzado, unable to walk without help, his once booming voice reduced to a raspy whisper, a sad shell of what once was a mountain of a man, the message was loud and clear.

Stay away from steroids.

Alzado's interview with NBC's Maria Shriver on Saturday was a chilling peek into the steroid-induced world of professional sports. Ex-player-turned-author Peter Gent once jokingly called it "better football through chemistry."

There is nothing funny about Lyle Alzado, though, afflicted with an inoperable brain cancer about what he says was a lifetime of popping pills.

A year ago, Alzado tried to defy the ravages of time to make a comeback with the Los Angeles Raiders. He was 41, out of football since 1985, and so he reached for help from an old pal — steroids.

"In my comeback," he told Shriver, "I used a certain steroid that caused me to lower my immune system."

The result, a year later, is a man who has lost 60 pounds from his 230.

Hawks drop 15-year veteran Malone

The Associated Press

Malone, who signed his seventh player in NBA history to score 25,000 points, is a free agent again.

Malone, who signed big free-agent contracts with Philadelphia in 1982 and Atlanta in 1988, had his Hawks' career officially ended Monday when they traded for Denver center Brian Rasmussen and put him on the roster in Malone's place.

The Hawks thus made Malone an unrestricted free agent ineligible to return to the NBA for a year.

Malone, a 15-year veteran, lost his starting job early in the 1990-91 season and averaged a career-low 10.6 points. He still managed to lead all NBA reserves with 8.1 rebounds per game.

The Hawks gave up veteran guards Doo Rivers and Spud Webb and the rights to first-round pick Anthony Avent in three deals over the past week.

"I wouldn't say we're cleaning house," coach Bob Weiss said. "That implies that we didn't like what we had, and that's not true. We see a need to get younger without making the talent base deteriorate."

Sho-Bans sue state over fishing closure

The Associated Press

POCATELLO, Eastern Idaho's Shoshone-Bannock Tribes on Monday made good on their threat to legally challenge the Fish and Game Commission's conservation closure of all but a small reach of the Snake Fork of the Salmon River to spring chinook salmon fishing.

The tribes filed suit in U.S. District Court in Pocatello, claiming the commission's action is unjustified and asking for a court order allowing their ceremonial spear fishing season to begin as scheduled Wednesday.

"The commission's decision is not based upon the necessary conservation purpose," tribal attorney Jeannette Wolfley said. "The order we received doesn't set out any specific data or information as to why they think that particular closure."

A hearing before federal Magistrate Mike Williams was scheduled for Tuesday on the tribes' request.

The decision will allow us greater flexibility, but does not preclude us from signing Rick at a later date,

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Phillies' general manager said Monday that Philadelphia was close to trading Major League pitcher Tim Lincecum to Detroit in return for Pistons center James Edwards, but Mahorn's salary was too high to fit under the Pistons' salary cap.

The New York Knicks ordered a modifying contract offer to guard John Starks on Monday and allowed forward Kenny Walker and guard Greg Grant to become unrestricted free agents.

Starks, who averaged 7.1 points in 61 games after being signed early last season because of restricted free-agent status, has a right to match any offer.

Walker, the Knicks' first-round pick and the fifth selection overall in the 1986 draft, averaged averaged a career-low 4.3 points.

Sho-Bans sue state over fishing closure

The Associated Press

The commission's action was prompted by the Fort Hall Business Council's announcement that tribal fishermen would take up to 25 spring chinook under rights conferred by treaties more than a century old. The council set the season for waters above the confluence of the Middle Fork and main Salmon rivers, exempting reaches where wild salmon spawn.

The season came despite the recommendation that the run be protected as threatened under the Endangered Species Act.

"Every salmon is important although we respect the right of the Shoshone-Bannocks to conduct ceremonial fishing," Gov. Cecil Andrus said as the suit was being filed. "But this is not the year to take more than one or two fish."

After meetings last week with tribal leaders failed to win a voluntary agreement to conduct a symbolic fishery for just one salmon, the commission imposed the closure with the possibility that the tribes could still fish on the Snake Fork above the state hatchery near Stanley where returning adult salmon are held for spawning.

"Limiting tribal fishing to negative stocks in the Snake Fork above the hatchery action we can take to allow for a tribal fishery and still protect our dangerously low runs of native stocks," Commission Chairman Norm Gu of Salmon said.

But the tribes have contended that taking 25 fish under their treaty rights would not allow many fish to be taken from one river is more harmful than spreading it out over many rivers.

The most critical fish are the wild fish, she said, and those had already been excluded from the tribal season.

Major league baseball players union marks 25th anniversary

NEW YORK (AP)—One of the most important anniversaries in baseball history passed Monday with a bang.

It was July 1, 1966, when the Major League Players Association hired Marvin Miller as its executive director. Professional sports has never been the same.

Before Miller, the average salary was less than $19,000 and the minimum was $6,000. Twenty-five years later, the average was $81,000 — a 47-fold increase — and the minimum is $100,000.

Everyone seems to agree that the catalyst for change was Miller, now retired and 74 years old.

"He stole the horse and the carriage before baseball's hierarchy even knew to close the barn door," New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said.

On Monday, Miller joined present and past union officials and players for a party to mark the anniversary and the publication of his book, "A Whole Different Ballgame," which was written by Allen Barra of the Village Voice. Among those who came to honor Miller were former players Jim Bouton, Jim Bunning, Doug Gansler, Buck Martinez, Mike Marshall and Rusty Staub.

Twins know hot month does not make a season

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Even with 22 victories in June, the Twins are aware of how quickly they can fall in the American League West.

"It's still not a long ways to last," first baseman Kent Hrbek said after the Twins closed out June with a 3-0 victory Sunday over the Chicago White Sox. "We've had a great month, but we can't take the month by month. We've got a long ways to go."

The Twins' 22-6 June record catapulted them into first place in the division after they had a three-game lead over Texas and California before Monday's games.

once huge fame, a man whose frame is frail, a man who struggles through diets and slurred speech as a side effect of being treated with radiation, oral cortisone and chemotherapy. It is not a pretty picture.

Could steroids have done this to Alzado in so short a time?

By all means, according to Dr. Forrest Tennant, who was drug advisor to the NFL from 1986 to 1990.

"Anabolic steroids depress the immune system and lymphocytes," Tennant said. "He has leukemia. You don't have to be a rock scientist to figure out the connection."

"More alarming is Tennant's suggestion that Alzado is only the tip of a frightening iceberg," don't think we've even begun to see the consequences of steroid use," he said. "Alzado will be the first of a lot of big names to come down with cancer."

Tennant also charged the NFL with having, until recently, a carefree attitude about steroids. "I tried to start cracking down on steroids in the NFL years ago," he said. "No one wanted to believe steroids could do this."

Lewis beats rival Johnson but loses race

VILLENEUVE D'ASCQ, France (AP) — The great rematch turned out to be a great mismatch. The big showdown was a big letdown.

Carl Lewis easily won the long-awaited duel with Ben Johnson on Monday night, but he didn't even win the race.

In their first head-to-head competition since the 1988 Olympics, Lewis finished second and Johnson came in seventh in the 100 meters at the BNP Grand Prix meet.

On a cold, rainy evening before a capacity crowd of 30,000, Dennis Mitchell stole the show, bringing home victory in 10.09 seconds.

Lewis was next in 10.20, followed by Olapade Adeniken of Nigeria in 10.32. Johnson was nearly three meters behind Lewis in 11.40.

So much for drama. "It's like comparing a high schooler with a world champion," said Mark Witherspoon, who finished sixth in 10.29.

Lewis, running on his 30th birthday, blamed the weather for his modest performance.

"I just felt very tight," he said. "I didn't feel really loose. I started well, but I just wasn't able to accelerate. It was very cold and the rain definitely didn't help us."

But Lewis said he was just relieved to have the rematch finally over with.

"Let's be honest," he said. "It would never have ended until we had this race. There would always have been that expectation."

The race, however, did not end the two athletes' feud.

As Lewis went down the line before the race offering a handshake to all the runners, Johnson waved him off.

"I didn't want to give it to him," Johnson said. "As long as we're competing, that can't happen."

Lewis said, "That's his gig. That's his psyche. The last time we got that close, I had to make him shake it and he won that race."

That was at the Seoul Olympics in September 1988 when Johnson beat Lewis in the 100 meter final. But Johnson subsequently tested positive for steroids, lost his gold medal and world record and was banned for two years.

Lewis said Monday's race should help remove the stigma of drugs from track and field.

"This was an important race," Lewis said. "The '80s was the drug era. Now the sport is much cleaner, we're trying to improve things, we're trying to focus more on the athletes. Basically that's what this race was all about. The race was with clean athletes."

Johnson and Lewis avoided all eye contact as they warmed up next to each other.

Lewis, in lane four, and Johnson, in lane five, burst out of the starting blocks and were side by side for the first 50 meters. But Lewis pulled away from Johnson in the last half of the race.

"I didn't see him. I was just focusing on my form," Lewis said. "That's his race, to run the best 50 he can. But we're running the 100."

Johnson said, "At 45 to 50 meters, I tried to change gears but I didn't have enough energy. At the end I felt like I wasn't too far from Carl."

It was Johnson's fifth 100 meters since returning to action after the suspension. In his four previous competitions, he clocked 10.54, 10.69, 10.41 and 10.40 — a far cry from his 9.79 in Seoul.

Johnson had agreed before the meet to return 25 percent of his pay check if he failed to finish 10.17. Both runners were reportedly offered $250,000 for the race.

Johnson said he still needs time to regain his form.

"I've dealt with my problems for two years now," he said. "It's tough mentally for me. It will take a while for me to come back."

Johnson and Lewis are scheduled to run against each other again on Aug. 5 in Sweden.

Florida State joins Atlantic Coast Conference

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida State officially joined the Atlantic Coast Conference on Monday, an addition that will boost the Seminoles' basketball, prestige and give the league a new football player.

School officials handed the ACC a $500,000 check to cover the school's share of a new stadium to be built before 250 guests at Doak Campbell Stadium. Florida State is expected to generate many times the amount of the check because of its football program.

"We've got the best football and basketball combination in the country," said Tom Mickle, assistant ACC commissioner.

Ten new television markets have already committed to the syndicated ACC football package handled by Jefferson-Pilot, eight in Florida.

"Florida State has obviously helped us," said Ken Neat, a producer at Jefferson-Pilot. "In terms of overall impact, it's made the league more competitive, which makes our schedule more competitive."

The Seminoles' football independents for the past 40 years, will not be eligible for the ACC title until 1992 because of scheduling conflicts. But the team's entry into the league has helped a proposed bowl deal that could net all the member schools millions of dollars.

Even without the benefit of a 60 percent ($1) cushion to soften their seats, Sunday's fans were glued to them.

"No one was wandering around," said Susie Westmeyer, 21, attending her second tournament. She said she and her friends stayed put because they didn't want to lose their first-

Champagne corks were popping again Monday after a slow day on Sunday, when sales dropped to half the normal level.

Tables were in demand again at the Wingfield-Restaurant, where a lunch of peared prawns, pointed salmon and strawberries and cream costs 21.95 pounds ($34.50).

A luxury souvenir shop was bustling again Monday. On Sunday it had closed early, "and we really didn't need to open at all," said assistant manager Susie Manby.

"They were really interested in buying things," she said.

Jo Farrington said she was delighted by Sunday's enthusiastic dignified but largely disinterested group that usually fills the stands.

"I'm not into the tradition," she said.

Injured athletes feel lucky to be patients of Dr. Frank Jobe

Los Angeles Times
He was 19 and sleeping in a foxhole near Bastogne, Belgium, when he was awakened by the rattle of German tanks.
He was a soldier, but not a fighter. He was a country boy who would write letters to his parents about being scared to death.

But there he was, looking up at German soldiers who had climbed out of those tanks and pointed their weapons at his head.

He was captured. He and a buddy huddled together and watched as the rest of their platoon was captured as well. They stared at one another. They stared into the thin futures. They wondered what to do.

Frank Jobe censored flight. His buddy shoved one of the disoriented German soldiers. Jobe saw an opening and dived down a nearby hill. His buddy followed.

They rolled to a road, where they spotted an oncoming truck. Without looking closely, they jumped on it.

"I didn't know if it was one of their trucks or our own," Jobe said, called, smiling. "Looking back, I guess I was pretty lucky it was one of our trucks."

It is no accident that nearly 50 years later, if you're a pitcher and your livelihood depends on somebody cutting into your shoulder, this is the guy you want holding the scalpel. After all, he is lucky.

He is one of the most important, visible members of the Dodger organization. Yet to the players, he is known simply as the eyes behind the mask.

"I think that's what many of us think of when it comes to Dr. Jobe," said Jay Howell, a relief pitcher who underwent two arthroscopic knee operations last year. "We don't think of his personality, we think of those eyes, blinking above that mask, blinking, blinking, blinking, and before he goes down to open you up."

Even the athletes who have brought him the most fame feel they barely know him.

"I have been out with Dr. Jobe socially just once," Orel Hershisser said. "But that was only because we were both at the same place at the same time."

Behind the mask there is the face of a renowned orthopedic surgeon who returned to the news this summer after performing landmark shoulder reconstruction that returned Hershisser to the mound for the first place Dodgers.

Jobe has ministered to other injured sports stars such as Tommy John, George Brett, Jerry West, Will Chamberlain, Jim McMahon, Jerry Pate and Andy Messersmith. And he has saved the careers of hundreds of other athletes since joining Dr. Bob Kerlan in 1965 to form what is now the Kerlan-Jobe Orthopaedic Clinic.

Jobe, 65, speaks with the confident authority of a healer—but has the accent and appearance of a country doctor.

"He loves baseball, although he is one of the few fans who cheers not for teams or players, but for limbs."

"We'll be watching a game to-

Today's state of therapy clearly wave of future

Los Angeles Times
James Worthing used it to keep the swelling down in his ankle during the NBA playoffs. It helped Dodger catcher Mike Scioscia avoid shoulder surgery and scotched a painful injury endured by former King star Marcel Dionge when nothing else seemed to work.

It's the latest wave in physical therapy: H-wave electrical stimulation.

Although it has been in use since the early 1980s, the little box that sends electrical waves through the joints and muscles of the injured has caught the public's attention through "60 Minutes" publicized cases during sporting events—such as the recent NBA Finals between the Los Angeles Lakers and Chicago Bulls, when Worthing used one on his ankle while on the bench.

Basically, the box sends an electric current through the injured area, contracting the affected muscle to keep it moving and helping reduce blood flow, thus maintaining reduce swelling and stiffness.

Clive Brewster, director of physical therapy at the Kerlan-Jobe Orthopaedic Clinic in Inglewood, Calif., explained, "It decreases inflammation and gets rid of swelling."

Los Angeles Dodger therapist Pat Sorenson has helped a number of players through career-threatening injuries, said. "We've used it for a number of years. We use it for just about anything. We find it useful, it seems to do a good job for swelling or pain."

Pitcher Orel Hershisser, who has used it infrequently during his year-long rehabilitation from shoulder surgery, said: "It's part of all the dif-gether and he will say, 'Look at that guy's arm. I took on his couple of months ago and worked how good 's doing!'" said son Cameron. "He watches not just the camera, he watches how his work is holding up."

Most of all, Jobe likes the people who need them.

"He is one of those surgeons who once he puts a mark on a patient, along with that goes a piece of his heart," said Michael Mellman, the Dodgers' internist. "If somebody he operated on many, many years ago comes back for a checkup, he is right there for them. It doesn't have to be a sports star, it can be Aunt Hattie. In fact, the majority of his patients are not sports stars."

"And do you know he still makes his hospital rounds on Saturdays?"

Not every big name in this business still does that.

Jobe makes those rounds after a normal week of six operations on Tuesday, three on Thursday and three on Friday. During baseball season, that week is compounded by nightly visits to Dodger Stadium, where Jobe will examine players before the game and then watch the game until about the eighth inning.

"I have to do rounds — if I don't get in there and see my patients before they check out, they might not see me for a week," Jobe said. "I got into this business to help people, and that hasn't changed."

He doesn't help any other group as he helps the Dodgers, who so valued his judgment that he is almost like an extra coach or assistant general manager.

When he says a potential Dodger is not a good physical risk, the Dodgers usually don't sign that particular free agent.

When he says a player should be put on the disabled list, the Dodgers usually do it.

And when basically sound players with histories of physical problems think about changing teams, because of Jobe they often think about coming to the Dodgers.

Said Fred Claire, Dodger vice president: "Put it this way: I've never heard anybody around here second-guess one of Jobe's opinions. We didn't sign Kevin Cross until he had been examined by Dr. Jobe. We didn't sign Jim Gott until he had been examined."

"Frank's judgment is certainly an influence on my judgments."

About the only thing that Jobe cannot affect is a trade. Unlike in the NFL, baseball players do not undergo pretrade physical examinations by teams that hope to trade for them.

"I've said it over and over again why don't baseball teams get the exferent things we do. You have to say it's helpful or we wouldn't use it."

The device was pioneered by Huntington Beach (Calif.) inventor Gene Shapiro and partner Jim Heaney in the late 1970s and brought to market in 1981. The breakthrough, Shapiro said, occurred when he took it to Kerlan, Jobe and Brewster, agreed to try it, testing it on 20 patients with soft-muscle injuries.

"When he first had it, he didn't know what it did," Brewster recalled. "He was one of the few salesmen who didn't try to mislead me, so we used it and it worked."

Shapiro, 57, said that he and Heaney didn't invent the H-wave but were the first to apply it medically.

"It's the only new wave form on the market in the last 25 years," Shapiro said.

In layman's terms, "It fires muscle on both ends so you get motor contraction."

Shapiro said the device has been used to help save limbs from amputation, and to take pain away from cancer sufferers with tumors without the use of painkillers.

"Other forms of electrical stimulation treat the signal of the pain before it goes to the brain," Shapiro said. "We treat the source of the pain. The body identifies with our signal — it's a natural wave form."

"It didn't have much credibility at first because it was so different," Kerlan-Jobe actually put me in business. Recognition is coming now because we're working with so many patients. We've worked on some of the top athletes in the world and it's been very effective. It's a very unique piece of equipment."

pepe with no more battle know-how than basic training. It was there, watching and working with doctors on the front lines, that he decided he wanted to become one of them.

"These guys would be operating in tents with bullets and shrapnel flying around," Jobe recalled. "There was tremendous noise from the shells going off. There was blood everywhere. These guys became my test heroes."

Jobe also picked up a principle that he adheres to today, as irritating as it might be to Dodger fans. He will treat any athlete who seeks his help, no matter if it will help that athlete's team beat the Dodgers.

"If a soldier was wounded, those doctors over there took care of him, even if he was the enemy," Jobe said. "I consider myself a doctor for individuals, not a team. You don't use medicine as a means of winning."

Despite his brief capture and frequent jaunts behind enemy lines, Jobe says he has not even scratched in Europe, which only strengthened his resolve for a career in medicine.

After returning home, he attended a junior college in Tennessee, then came to the Los Angeles area to attend La Sierra College and Loyola Linda Medical School. After spending three years as a general practitioner to pay off his school loans, he did his orthopedic residency at Los Angeles County Hospital, where he met orthopedic specialist Robert Kerlan.

"I told Dr. Kerlan I wanted to work for him," Jobe recalled. "He asked me how much salary I wanted. I told him I only wanted what I would make on each patient."

They called themselves the Southwestern Orthopaedic Medical Group then. Today it is known simply as Kerlan, Jobe, and features 16 doctors and hundreds of patients.

The clinic serves most of Los Angeles' major sports teams, but Jobe concentrates on the Dodgers, who have given him the title of medical director.

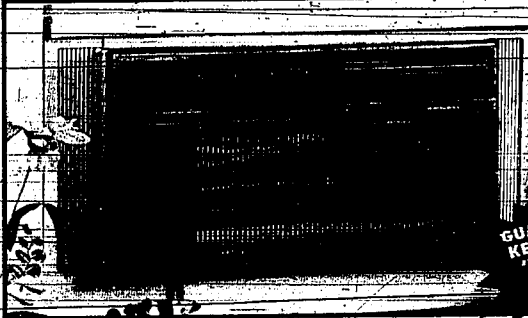

Jobe was happy to work in the shadow of the more established Kerlan, but in 1974 he earned prominence by becoming the first doctor to reconstruct a pitching elbow through the use of a tendon transplant. The elbow belonged to Tommy John, and Jobe's life has not been the same since that operation.

"Frank has been as successful as what has happened to him as anybody," son Meredith said.

His family tells of how a star athlete's son once asked him for his autograph. He looked at the boy and said, "This is ridiculous."

Army takes over party headquarters

The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — The army moved on Monday to silence the opposition and restrict activities occurring at the headquarters of the main Muslim fundamentalist party and retaining hundreds of people.

The actions came a day after the arrests of the two top leaders of the powerful Islamic Salvation Front, which is challenging President Chadli Bendjedid's government.

Spontaneous unrest was reported Monday, and tanks and soldiers with automatic weapons were deployed to the capital. But there was no widespread violence.

During the weekend, at least four people, including a policeman, died in anti-government clashes in the capital and elsewhere. Fifty people were killed in Algeria since June 4, when the Muslim protests started.

Military authorities said 700 people were arrested Sunday and Monday. Fundamentalist Muslim sources said the figures at 2,500.

Officials also closed two mosques that are considered centers of fundamentalist activity.

Armed soldiers on Monday guarded the headquarters of the Islamic Salvation Front following the arrest Sunday of its president, Abbesi Madani, and vice president, Ali Belhadj.

The two men were accused of fomenting, organizing, triggering and leading an armed conspiracy against the security of the state," a military communiqué said.

"The attempt at dissension to gain power, for which they are responsible, has cost human lives as well as the destruction of much property, and has not definitively ended," the communiqué said. It said the men would be put on trial.

Madani and Belhadj called Friday for a "jihad," or Islamic holy war, unless the government lifted the state of emergency. They defied summonses served after their speeches.

Premier Sid Ahmed Ghozali said the Islamic Salvation Front posed "a very serious threat for safety, stability and national unity." The cabinet, which met with President Bendjedid, called for "calm and confidence."

The army, which had a direct role in Algerian politics before the advent of pluralism in 1989, has wide powers under the state of emergency declared June 5.

It can make arrests and searches and can intern people, suspend parties or groups and try suspects before military courts.

Helmed riot police units surrounded the Salvation Front's headquarters at midday Monday; evacuated its personnel and took over the building. Pedestrians were barred from the adjacent sidewalk.

Spontaneous clashes between fundamentalists and police continued Monday afternoon in the Bourouba section of the capital, where hundreds of youths burned a wood depot. Police fired tear gas to disperse the youths. It was not clear whether there were injuries.

Iran's ambassador, Javid Qorban Ughli, was summoned to the Foreign Ministry and told his country should stay out of Algeria's internal affairs, the government said. On Saturday, Iranian spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, said he hoped Algerians would follow the example of Iranian revolutionaries by establishing an Islamic republic.

Soviet Vice President Gennady Yanayev supports his head after formally dissolving the Warsaw Treaty Union in Prague. The move disbanded a once-powerful communist alliance binding the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. To left is Alexander A. Essamertnykh.

Leaders disband Warsaw Pact alliance after 36 years

The Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — The Warsaw Pact formally disbanded Monday after 36 years as the powerful military alliance that bound the Communist regimes of the Soviet Union and eastern Europe.

"A bad marriage has ended and friendship can start," said Hungarian Premier Jozsef Antall.

The protocol signed by the Warsaw Pact's six remaining members cut the final political link between the Soviet Union and its Cold War satellites. The pact's military structure was dissolved April 1, and the Soviet-led Common trading system was ended on Friday.

"We are saying goodbye to the era when Europe was divided by ideological intolerance," said Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel, who presided at the pact's final meeting. "The vision of a united, democratic, safe and peaceful Europe is rising before us."

Havel was a dissident playwright when Czechoslovakia's reformist Communist government was crushed in 1968 by its allies in the Warsaw Pact, which was founded as a counter-weight to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in the West.

Representatives of the Soviet Union, Poland, Romania and Bulgaria also attended the pact's final session. Each country's parliament must approve the formal protocol, which Havel said is expected by year's end.

The protocol advocates a "transition to all-European security structures" through the 35-member Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe and related arms limitation treaties.

The Warsaw Pact was formed on May 14, 1955, at the height of East-West tensions following World War II. Soviet Vice President Gennady Yanayev said Monday that Cold War military organizations were obsolete.

"This is why we accepted the termination of the Warsaw Treaty," he said. "NATO is not going to survive very much longer than the Warsaw Treaty," he said.

NATO leaders are reforming the alliance's structure and goals to reflect the ebbing of the Cold War. But they say NATO is still needed because of economic tensions, waves of economic refugees and potential unrest in the Soviet Union raise significant security concerns for Europeans.

The Warsaw Pact's former members are now floating without a defense structure and are nervous about their security. NATO has not invited them as members out of sensitivity to the Soviets, but it says any infringement on their new freedoms would be viewed with concern by the alliance.

The pact's demise came less than two years after Poland freed eastern Europe's first non-Communist government during the summer of 1989.

The last Red Army troops pulled out of Czechoslovakia and Hungary in recent weeks, although they remain in Poland and eastern Germany.

East Germany withdrew from the pact when it reunited with West Germany in October. Albania quit to protest the 1968 Czechoslovak invasion.

Havel said the former Warsaw Pact countries face a difficult path.

"I wish us a lot of patience, responsibility, prudence, tolerance and good will," he said. "We will need this in this difficult time."

Is it Democracy or repression? Muslim world watches Algeria

The Associated Press

PARIS (AP) — The Algerian army's forceful effort to crush fundamentalist protest is under close watch throughout the Muslim world.

To some, the army is guilty of repression. To others, it is safeguarding a rare chance for true democracy.

Repeatedly throughout more than a month of protests, military commanders have stressed their determination to guide Algeria through the turmoil to its first multiparty parliamentary and presidential elections. In the past 48 hours, following renewed street fighting and radicals' call for a "holy war," that determination shifted into a harsh crackdown.

The top two leaders of the fundamentalist Islamic Salvation Front were arrested, along with hundreds of supporters; their headquarters was seized; mosques in their strongholds were shut down.

"In neighboring Morocco and Tunisia, where secular governments also fear fundamentalist uprisings, there has been no official second-guessing of the Algerian military's hard-nosed tactics."

Tunisia recently arrested 300 fundamentalists suspected of plotting a takeover.

But in Iran, the world's only Islamic republic, and elsewhere, questions have been raised.

Maamoun el-Huteibi, secretary general of the fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt, said he regretted the crackdown.

"We're afraid this is a kind of plan meant to push Islamic movements toward committing mistakes and violence," said el-Huteibi, whose party is banned but tolerated by Egyptian officials.

Since the Salvation Front's success in the local elections, he said, there has been a campaign in state-run Arab media and the Western media to vilify the movement.

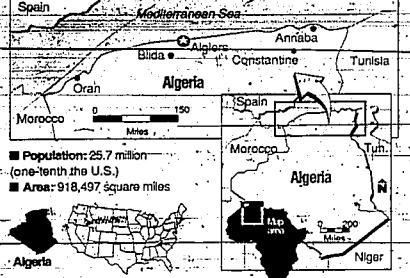

The crackdown means "the end of democracy in Algeria," he said. "The military is the one in control and the tanks are ruling."

In Jordan, one of the few Arab countries to allow fundamentalist parties a full political role, a Muslim Brotherhood spokesman accused Algerian authorities of pushing through election laws aimed at minimizing the Salvation Front's chances to win a parliamentary majority.

"The violent reaction by some Islamic groups could happen anywhere where democracy is hampered," said Ahmed Qaish Azaibeh, the Brotherhood won 22 seats in Jordan's 80-member parliament, the largest bloc of any single party in 1989, during the kingdom's first free elections in 23 years.

Mayor survives ambush

The Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia — The mayor of Cali escaped an ambush by leftist rebels, but at least three of his bodyguards died, and his brother was wounded, police said Monday.

The attack late Sunday apparently was carried out by the Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces, the nation's largest rebel group, police said.

They said it was part of a continuing campaign by the rebels targeting elected officials and various installations to press their political demands.

An unknown number of gunmen attacked a car carrying Mayor German Villegas to his family's farm west of Cali, home of Colombia's second-largest cocaine cartel.

Soviet lawmakers approve law allowing factory sales

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Supreme Soviet legislature scrapped a basic Communist creed Monday and gave government permission to sell most industry to private companies and individuals, including foreigners.

The step is considered critical to the salvation of the Soviet Union's ailing economy, run largely by bureaucrats who fail to respond to the shifts of supply and demand. The goal is to put control into the hands of individuals motivated by profit and ambition, a tenet of the capitalist system.

The Soviet government, which owns virtually all industry, is planning to transfer two-thirds to private hands in less than five years.

Small-scale private enterprise has long been practicing in the nation, reflecting a grudging acceptance that personal profit motivates people to work hard. Privately farmed plots in the countryside, for example, are vastly more productive than state-run farms.

Nonetheless, a need for large-scale privatization has been difficult for Soviet society to accept after decades of Communism, which holds that private ownership of production exploits working people.

Even reform-minded President Mikhail Gorbachev himself long resisted the step, preferring halfway measures such as leasing factories to employees.

But Communist Party Central Committee member Givi Gumbaridze said reporters after the 203-14 vote that the law should have been adopted earlier.

"Finally, we have stepped back from ideological dogma," said Gumbaridze, a legislator and former party chief of Georgia. "Allowing all forms of property to exist, including private property, will benefit people."

Lawmaker Evdora Burditsky said the law would strengthen Gorbachev's hand when he needs to take real steps for privatization of the economy and real economic reform." Burditsky said.

Militia willing to free prisoners; move could ease hostage crisis

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An Israeli-sponsored Lebanese militia said Monday it was ready to free hundreds of Arab prisoners for Israeli missing in Lebanon, a move that could help ease the Western hostages' crisis.

The offer by Gen. Antoine Lahd, commander of the South Lebanon Army militia, came after a weekend of renewed diplomatic efforts by the United States to end the hostage crisis.

Shiite Muslim leaders have demanded freedom for Lebanese Shiite militia members held by the SLA in exchange for Western hostages. Israel says an exchange also must involve its seven troops missing in Lebanon since 1982.

Israel army radio quoted Lahd as saying he was "ready to trade the hundreds of" Palestinian and Shiite prisoners, estimated 300 to 400 inmates are held by his militia at the Al Khiam prison in southern Lebanon.

Reached by telephone, Lahd told The Associated Press: "Yes, it's true what they reported on the radio. But he declined to elaborate."

The radio did not mention the Western hostages, but said Lahd insisted that a swap include all missing Israeli soldiers and his 700 Lebanese militia members. The radio also quoted him as saying he had no official request to free prisoners.

There are 13 Westerners missing in Lebanon, most of them held by Shiite Muslim militants.

They are six Americans, four Britons, two Germans and an Italian. The longest held is American Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

The reported offer by Lahd came as 6,000 Lebanese army troops backed by tanks moved into southern Lebanon and began chasing Palestinian guerrillas' bases in a bid to restore government authority to the region.

Regaining control of the region would allow President Hritto to intensify diplomatic efforts to pressure Israel into withdrawing from the southern border strip, which is patrolled by Lahd's militia along with Israeli troops.

Israel refuses to relinquish the 400-square-mile security zone as long as Palestinian guerrillas are free to launch attacks on Israel from the region.

The Israeli army and the office of Israel's coordinator for southern Lebanon, Uzi Lubrani, declined comment Monday on Lahd's offer.

The SLA, which is financed by Israel, is unlikely to release prisoners without the consent of army officials in Tel Aviv.

Another element in any hostage swap would be the release of Sheik Abdel-Karim Obeid, a Shiite Muslim cleric who was kidnapped by Israeli commandos from his home in south Lebanon in July 1989.

Obeid is believed the spiritual mentor of the Shiite Muslim faction Hezbollah, or Party of God, a suspected umbrella group for hostage-taking groups in Lebanon.

In the past, Israel has offered to free Obeid and Lahd's detainees in exchange for all the missing Westerners and Israeli soldiers. However, any hostage exchange would be complicated since the hostages and the soldiers are apparently held by an array of Shiite and Palestinian factions. Negotiations are also likely to involve the United States, Iran, Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

China's top Reds pledge to fight corruption, reforms

BEIJING (AP) — The aging leaders of China's Communist Party celebrated its 70th birthday Monday, vowing to stay in power by fighting corruption and resisting pressure for democratic reform.
"Victory belongs to the great Chinese Communist Party. Victory belongs to the great Chinese people," Party General Secretary Jiang Zemin shouted hoarsely as he closed a nearly two-hour speech at the Great Hall of the People.
His televised speech climaxed weeks of commemorative activities across China that played down problems facing the party, including widespread corruption and a rejection of Marxism by many young people.
The inside of the hall was draped in red banners with a huge gold hammer and sickle hanging behind the assembled leaders of one of the world's last Communist parties still in power. Televised shots from above showed top union row of white- and gray-haired officials,

Pope extends olive branch to Chinese

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II said Monday that his elevation of an elderly Chinese bishop to cardinal was an expression of his good will toward the Chinese people and his desire for better relations.
Beijing's Communist government has denounced the appointment as interference in China's internal affairs and reportedly arrested the bishop's successor.
"I express the hope that this event...will be seen as a sign of our desire to foster that dialogue which can benefit the cause of harmony and peace," the pope said.
"May God bless the great Chinese family."

Pope extends olive branch to Chinese

The pope made his remarks during a reception for the newly elevated Cardinal Ignatius Gong Pin-mei of Shanghai, 89, and his family. He was one of 23 new cardinals installed last Friday.
Jiang was imprisoned for 30 years in China for refusing to denounce the church hierarchy in Rome.
Jiang warned the party to be on guard against anti-socialist ideas and vowed: "We should not weaken or negate Communist Party leadership, nor should we ever practice a Western-style multiparty system."
The party was founded on July 1, 1921, by a small band of revolutionaries, that included Mao Tse-tung. After a long civil war with the ruling Nationalist Party, the Communists took power in 1949.
Since then, repeated purges and power struggles have left many people cynical about the party's claim to serve the masses.
Consumerism has supplanted Marxism as the dominant ideology. Many youths tune out the party's warnings about Western decadence and spend their free time keeping up with the latest fashions and pop music.
The party also lost the support of many Chinese in 1989, when it used the army to crush peaceful democracy demonstrations.

Bigger Nobel prizes coming in October

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Winners of five of the six 1991 Nobel Prizes will be announced in mid-October, the Nobel Foundation said Monday. Each prize will be nearly $1 million in value — a 50 percent increase.
The foundation said the prize for physiology or medicine will be announced on Oct. 7, the peace prize on Oct. 15 and the prizes for physics and chemistry on Oct. 16. As usual, the Swedish Academy will announce later the date of the literature prize.
The foundation said in its annual report in April that each prize will be 6 million Swedish kronor, up 50 percent from 4 million kronor in 1990 and double the 3 million kronor in 1989.
The sharp increase in prize money was made possible by the sale of real estate, the foundation said. It said future adjustments would be limited to covering inflation.

Sweden bids for its place in EC ranks

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Sweden on Monday formally applied to become a member of the European Community.
It would be the EC's second Scandinavian member nation.
Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson gave his country's application to Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers, whose small merchant country on Monday assumed the rotating presidency of the trading bloc also known as the Common Market.
Lubbers received Carlsson at the Catushuis, an estate that serves as the Dutch leader's official residence. Lubbers is chairman of the European Council, which includes prime ministers of the 12 European Community members.
Another Scandinavian country — Denmark — joined the EC in 1972. Austria, a fellow member of the European Free Trade Association, applied for membership in the European Community in 1989.
Turkey applied to join the EC in 1987. Its application was rejected, although it has an associative relationship with the trade bloc.
The EC has stated it would not begin negotiations on new members until after its single market is established in 1992.
The 12 members of the Common Market are Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Britain, Spain and Portugal.

U.S. airman returns; finds family dead

CAMBRIDGE, England (AP) — A U.S. Air Force sergeant returned home from an overseas mission to find his wife and two young children dead, an Air Force spokesman said Monday.
British press reports said an autopsy found that the English woman died of natural causes about 10 days ago and her 2-year-old boy and 1-year-old girl had died of starvation.
Cambridgeshire police spokeswoman Anne Speechley said the reports were probably correct but had not been confirmed by the officer in charge of the case.
Frank Randall, an Air Force spokesman at the RAF Mildenhall base, said Sgt. Gregory Voelcker, 24, returned from temporary duty Saturday night. Randall said when Voelcker had been and for how long was "operational restricted data."
The Cambridge Evening News said Voelcker, from Friswood, Texas, had been in Athens, Greece. He is an airborne maintenance technician with the 6988th Electronic Security Squadron, Randall said.
Ms. Speechley said the bodies were found in the family's remote cottage in the village of Kirtling, 60 miles northeast of London.

Gift awaiting Bush

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — When President Bush arrives in Greece for a three-day visit later this month, he has a gift from a Greek artist waiting for him.
On Monday, contemporary artist Giorgos Lolosidis gave the gift — a 4 by 5-foot oil painting of his English setter, Filk, and her six puppies — to the U.S. ambassador.
Lolosidis was inspired after seeing Bush appearing on various occasions with his dog, Millic, "for whom he obviously has great love," many older than the party itself.

The audience of 10,000 invited officials, soldiers and "model workers" applauded heartily when Jiang promised severe punishment for party members who abuse their power and solicit bribes.
Petty corruption has become endemic among party and government workers and was a key complaint of protesters during the 1989 democracy movement, which presented the biggest challenge to the party in its four decades in power.

"Successors to the socialist cause should not act like overlords, abusing their power to make a fortune," Jiang said. "If these decadent phenomena are allowed to continue, the party will be doomed to self-destruction."
But Jiang insisted that only a minority of the party's 50 million members are dishonest and that the party's achievements outweigh its mistakes.

"Our party has proved itself to be a great, glorious and correct party," he said.
Jiang claimed that hostile international forces seek to encroach on China by luring it away from socialism, after the example of eastern Europe. Ruling Communist parties there have fallen in rapid succession in the past two years in the face of

LDS real estate empire exceeds $1 billion mark

PHOENIX (AP) — The Mormon Church's real-estate empire easily exceeds $1 billion, including farms and ranches in the West and Midwest, buildings and apartment complexes in the East and a huge chunk of land in central Florida, The Arizona Republic reported Tuesday.

Given its enormous income from tithing and business operations, it appears the church is investing several hundred million dollars a year in securities and real estate, the newspaper said in the third installment of a four-part series on the holdings of the Utah-based church. "I would say they're probably one of the largest private owners of farmland in the United States," said John Scott, professor of land economics and farm management at the University of Illinois, although he hasn't compiled records to prove that.

Officials of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints refuse to disclose information about real-estate holdings, even to members, saying such information would distract from the church's ecclesiastical mission.

Property records are recorded in the 2,825 counties in the United States. And the church holds title to land under a variety of different names, which it also refuses to disclose. So it is virtually impossible to determine independently how much property the church owns, and where.

But in an attempt to gauge the scope of the church's real-estate holdings, The Republic spent more than a month conducting a nationwide search for clues from corporate documents, property-tax records, federal and state income-tax documents, published reports and even water-rights claims.

From that information, the newspaper focused on 20 counties in 21 states examining specific landholdings in person, on computer or by phone.

The picture, though far from complete, is impressive. The church's most valuable land holdings apparently are in Arizona, Utah, California and Florida.

In its home base of Salt Lake County, the church owns $137 million in commercial and industrial properties as valued by banking authorities. It owns large blocks of land in the West, including three high-rise office buildings, a shopping mall, the land beneath other key buildings and at least 250 residential parcels.

California records show the church owns $67 million in commercial properties, including $15 million investment buildings in Stockton and Glendale, a $10.6 million office building in Anaheim and a $4.5-million retail development in Fresno County.

It also owns at least 13,000 acres of California agricultural land worth $20.3 million and vacant land worth $20.3 million.

In Florida, the church owns what Orlando broker Trevor Hall says may be the state's largest piece of privately owned undeveloped real estate.

The 315,000-acre Deseret Ranches, bought in the 1950s, is home to orange groves and cattle. But its location, about five miles southeast of booming Orlando, has caused its value to jump. The church is planning to build a "community with 3,000 homes and 4,200 apartments, plus schools, offices and stores."

In Arizona, the church owns at least $117 million in commercial and agricultural properties and vacant land, including about 6,000 acres of farmland and orchards in Maricopa County.

These properties produce for the commercial market and are managed by Farm Management Co., based in Salt Lake City, which administers the church's commercial farming and ranching properties.

The church pays taxes on properties that are held for investment purposes, records show. But it is exempt from taxes on about 150,000 farms and ranches, mostly in the West, that are operated by its Welfare Services Department.

The church owns about 500 parcels of land throughout Arizona for direct religious use, such as chapels.

In Utah, the church owns thousands of acres of agricultural land, including nearly 5,000 acres in Salt Lake County alone. Along the Wasatch Mountains, it owns a 201,000-acre ranch with 3,000 cattle. It also serves as a hunting preserve with a game population of 4,000 deer, 500 antelope and 500 moose.

The church also has enormous holdings in Washington state, including the state's largest irrigated farm, where it grows corn, wheat and potatoes on 34,000 acres along the Columbia and Snake rivers. Church holdings in southeastern Washington exceed 120,000 acres.

The church also has committed huge financial resources to investments in Midwestern farmland. It has amassed at least 38,540 acres of farmland in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Indiana. Since the land "has been bought" since the 1970s, in parcels of 200 or 300 acres.

In 1989, the church paid about $14 million for 70,000 acres of ranchland in Oklahoma and Kansas, where its Sooner Land and Livestock Co. raises beef. Last year, it bought 4,000 acres of Nebraska ranch for $3.8 million.

These ranches are some of the latest additions to a ranching portfolio that includes large holdings across Western states, an 88,000-acre ranch in Alberta, Canada, and seven ranches in New Zealand and Argentina.

John Creer, who directs the church's Farm Management Co., said the church buys farmland because it is "a good place to put savings-account money." He said most of the land is rented to farmers.

"I think we look at it as any portfolio manager would," Creer said. "You take a portion of your reserve fund and put it in a tangible asset. Among the number of tangible assets that are available to choose from, our leadership is very comfortable with farmland."

Gordon B. Hinckley, first counselor to church President Ezra Taft Benson, touched on the philosophy during a speech in January.

"We have felt that good farms, over a long period, represent a safe investment, where the assets of the church may be preserved and enhanced," Hinckley said, "while at the same time they are available as an agricultural resource to feed people, should there come a time of need."

Garth Mangum, an economics professor at the University of Utah, said the church launched a large-scale land-acquisition program after World War II. But Mangum said that well before the war, the church put unemployed members to work on its farms.

"And even today, when they have most of their land leased out, they think of it as a strategic reserve," Mangum said. "If some kind of calamity happened and we needed to go back to the soil, the land would be there."

Mormon scriptures add theological reasons. "In the 1830s, before Mormons were harassed out of Missouri, church founder Joseph Smith wrote that Missouri was the site of the biblical Garden of Eden and church members should "purchase this whole region of country; its savor as time will permit."

Latest in videos offers an inside look at surgery

WANTAGH, N.Y. (AP) — The friends who attended Karen Bennett's last party got to see a side of her they never had before: the inside.

Bennett, a 22-year-old financial planner, threw the bash last week to screen a videotape of her recent gallbladder operation.

The video was recorded last month by a tiny camera lowered inside her abdomen to guide the surgeons, who provide play-by-play commentary.

"Normally I hate looking at other people's home movies, but this will be different," said Meg Marshall, one of the first guests to arrive at Bennett's Long Island home.

In fact, the video — shot in living color — was a hit, garnering applause and thumbs-up ratings from the entire audience.

"The human body is so wonderful," said Donna Kusell, 39.

Surgons across the country have begun giving out videotapes, and some medical experts think it's comforting for patients and their friends to see what happens during an operation.

Others are skeptical.

Hawaiian attraction stirs debate over role

PHOENIX (AP) — One of the Mormon Church's most unusual business holdings is the Polynesian Cultural Center in Hawaii, an amusement park of sorts that the church calls a living museum.

Critics, according to The Arizona Republic, call it a tourist trap. The center, 32 miles from Waikiki on the northern shore of Oahu, features replicas of seven villages representing the cultures of the South Pacific islands of Samoa, Tonga, Fiji, Tahiti, Marquesas, Hawaii and New Zealand.

Natives from those islands staff the villages to entertain and educate visitors.

As many as a million visitors a year, paying an $18 admission fee, breeze through the 42-acre park watching dances, listening to native music, making handicrafts, riding canoes, viewing large-screen movies, eating Polynesian food and watching elaborate stage shows featuring a cast of 100.

A non-religious-tourist attraction may appear to be an odd business for a church. However, the center is an example of how The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints uses its many non-religious businesses to achieve religious goals.

In this case, the church's primary goal is its missionary and education programs among Polynesian natives in the South Pacific. The church annually recruits young Pacific Rim natives to church-owned Brigham Young University-Hawaii.

Most of those students are not U.S. citizens, however, and would need special permission from Immigration and Naturalization Service to have jobs in Hawaii to pay for their education.

INS regulations allow students attending school on visas to have on-campus jobs, so the church contends the cultural center is part of the BYU-Hawaii campus.

Up to 70 percent of the center's 1,000 employees are from the 2,000-student school. Most of them work part time at the cultural center as guides, cooks, gardeners, dancers and musicians. They use their income to pay for tuition and living expenses.

So, in effect, Hawaiian tourists, while learning about the islands and being entertained, are aiding the Mormon's South Pacific missionary and education programs.

There are 46,000 Mormons in Hawaii and Guam and 87,000 more scattered among other Pacific islands. LDS membership makes up less than 1 percent of the islands' populations. Exceptions are Hawaii, where 3.9 percent are LDS, and Tonga, where more than 25 percent of the 100,000 residents are Mormon.

Throughout North America, LDS membership is about 1.7 percent.

Financially, the cultural center, which opened in 1962, is self-sustaining, although the BYU-Hawaii campus is subsidized by the church — by more than $17 million in 1989.

The center's income is about $35 million. Excess income, about $23 million, is exempt from federal income taxes. The center pays taxes on its gift-shop sales and a portion of the admission price for certain entertainment shows.

It also pays about $1 million a year in local taxes.

The church, in its application for tax-exempt status, said the cultural center is educational for visitors and natives alike.

"The LDS church views the center and its community as a laboratory of sorts, which, it is hoped, illustrates the ability of religious principles, and Mormon principles in particular, to assist people of differing and antagonistic cultures and races to better appreciate their differences and live together."

We could all learn a few things from teachers like LaRon Smith.

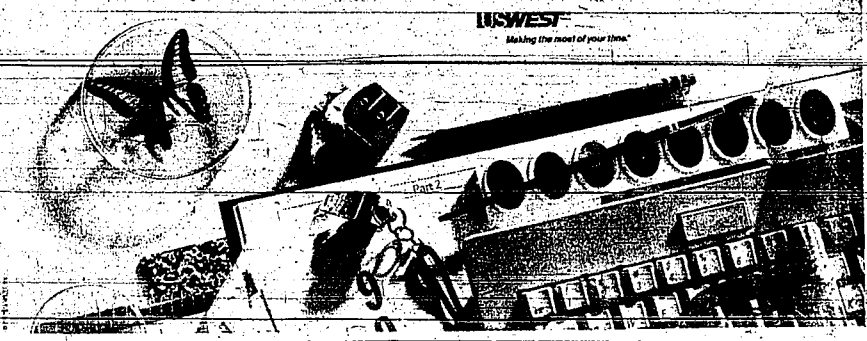

LaRon Smith, Twin Falls High School

At Twin Falls High School, math teacher LaRon Smith really counts. Twenty years ago LaRon discovered an equation for instructing mathematicians' learning units. They're problem-solving situations that more actively involve students. A similar format was adopted by the National Council of Mathematics last year. So it's not surprising that LaRon has been recognized as US WEST's 1991 Outstanding Teacher in Idaho and as one of our sabbatical recipients. And just how many students pursue mathematics after leaving Twin Falls? "I've lost count," says LaRon.

Each spring, US WEST® honors a teacher from each of our 14 Western states. The 14 finalists receive $5,000 awards. And three of the finalists are further honored with one-year sabbaticals and an additional $5,000 to pursue professional development.

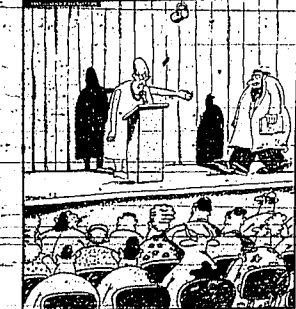

The Outstanding Teacher Program is designed to enhance the teaching profession. It is one of the many commitments US WEST makes as part of our Foundation's Educational Initiative.

At US WEST® we feel that teachers who reach beyond classroom walls deserve a world of gratitude.

Many a small shopping village court "twice" since closed Sundays. Still, Not all for religious reasons, either.

Of tradition, mostly. But now that both husbands and wives work pay-roll jobs weekdays, that "Closed on

Celebration will be U.S. event

WASHINGTON (AP) — To avoid offending Japan, the United States is not inviting any foreign governments to ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

The decision, reached after months of deliberations, was also meant to defuse anger from veterans' and survivors' groups opposed to official Japanese participation in the events. The Dec. 7 anniversary is a delicate issue for the Bush administration, worried about stirring bitter memories and fueling anti-Japan sentiment. Japan, after all, is heavily invested in Hawaii and all over the mainland, is a major American trading partner and holds a significant amount of U.S. government debt.

The State Department's solution to the delicate dilemma: No foreign dignitaries will be invited to the three-day commemoration, and the Bush administration won't have to worry about not inviting Japan.

"We envision no official participation by foreign guests in the Pearl Harbor commemoration events. These events mark a solemn national occasion," a department policy statement said. Some 2,300 American servicemen and civilians were killed when Japanese planes bombed the Pearl Harbor naval base and other targets in Hawaii, drawing the United States into World War II the next day.

Japanese newspapers have speculated recently that the anniversary may prompt a wave of anti-Japan sentiment in this country. The State Department set to work to allay such concerns. "It would be wrong to interpret this commemoration as against Japan in any way. It is not, and will not be, an anti-Japan event," the department said in its statement.

Officials say the State Department has been examining not only the Pearl Harbor anniversary but a host of other World War II commemorations, including up on the calendar. The administration has decided, for example, that foreign governments will be invited to attend the 50th anniversary of the battle of Guadalcanal next year, said an official who spoke on condition of anonymity. The Pacific island was the site of a Marine landing on Aug. 7, 1942 that began six months of bitter fighting to expel Japanese troops.

Man dies after splashing self with gasoline, setting fire

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An Army veteran who splashed himself with gasoline and set himself on fire to protest a reduction in medical benefits died Monday. William Benefield, 40, of San Antonio, died at Brooke Army Medical Center, doctors said.

Benefield was outside the Veterans Administration Hospital in Austin on Friday when he set himself on fire. He ran into the lobby, where two workers put out the flames.

May construction spending drops

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending dropped 0.9 percent in May, reversing direction following the largest increase in more than a year — just a month earlier, the government said Monday.

Analysts were encouraged by an increase in residential construction and relatively stable government spending despite fiscal problems. But they saw no indication of any improvement in private non-residential construction.

The Commerce Department said overall spending on residential, non-residential and government projects totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $403.1 billion, down from $406.6 billion in April.

The revised 1.2 percent April gain was even stronger than the 0.8 percent increase first reported.

Mom struggles with sentence of silence while dad's in jail

DEAR ABBY: Do you believe that a child who is 6 1/2 years old should be told the truth... Here is the situation: Dad is in jail for one year. Please understand, my husband didn't steal anything, nor did he commit a violent crime. However, he was found guilty of driving drunk - it was his third offense. If you think your son should be told the truth, how do you feel about my taking him to visit his father in jail? Or do you think it would be better to tell him that Daddy is away on business, and that he may be gone for a long time?

Dear Abby VanBuren with the same vigor they would use in scrubbing their kitchen floor. And please, tell your readers that exposure to the sun without sunscreen, plus the ordinary pollutants in the air, do far more damage to a woman's skin than cosmetics.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from the director of the Elder Health Program at the University of Maryland. She advised people to "take responsibility for their own health care."

I work in a doctor's office, and you would be amazed at the number of people who call in for refills on their medicines and don't even know the names of them. They ask for "blood pressure pills," or "the little yellow ones." Granted, we have their medicines typed on their charts, but that won't help them if they're in an accident and unable to speak.

Everyone who takes medication, elderly and young alike, should write down the names, and dosage on a piece of paper and keep it in their wallets. And every time the doctor changes the dosage or adds a new medication, the patient should make note of it on the paper he or she carries. Also write down any allergies on the same paper.

Help us health givers keep you healthy. -JUDY G. ORMAND BEACH, Fla.

WITHHOLD MY NAME, PLEASE

DEAR WITHHOLD: I, think you should tell your son the truth, and tell him now, before someone else does. I also believe that you should take the boy to visit his father for his sake as well as for his father's.

These are troubled times for your family. But it is not the end of the world. And this too shall pass.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing this letter without my wife's knowledge. She wears makeup all day, and she never takes it off before going to bed. Instead, she washes her face in the morning, then applies her makeup for that day. She has a very nice complexion, but I wonder if she is doing damage to her skin by sleeping in her makeup every night.

DEAR HUSBAND: I consulted Dr. Arnold Klein, top-notch Beverly Hills dermatologist, who said (much to my surprise), "Sleeping in makeup does no more damage to the skin than wearing makeup all day. Many women feel that in the interest of 'cleanliness' they need to scrub their faces daily."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"I du believe with all my soul
In the great Press's freedom.
To pint the people to the goal
An' in the traces left 'em."
— James Russell Lowell

A primary goal of most bidding systems is to find a 4-4 major-suit fit. In most cases, playing in this trump fit produces at least one more trick than playing the hand in some other denomination. But there are a few exceptions to this rule today's hand provides an example.

Having promised four spades with his negative double, North might well have tried three no-trump over three clubs. With aces in both of West's suits, the negative would have had to pass, and that game would have been unimprovable.

At four spades the play was tricky and the defense had to be accurate. Henry Bair of Dallas got off on the right foot by leading a club instead of a heart, and the jack rode to South's ace. As spade was led to dummy's ace and another to East's queen, East shifting to a heart. South won his ace, led a diamond to dummy's ace and punched a spade post East's K-10. East won and led a heart to West's king, and it was now the moment of decision. Only one card in West's hand would beat the game, and Henry found it. He led his club king, knowing that South could not otherwise. South would have hopped up with dummy's queen at Trick one, and South was forced to ruff with his jack. This promoted East's-10 to the setting trick, giving East-West plus 100 for an excellent score.

Solid hand courtesy to The Aces, 110 Box 1243, Dallas, Texas 75222, with self-addressed stamped envelope for reply.

How can the prince stand it? Davis is Thelma — or Louise

Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. How can Prince Philip stand walking a few steps behind his wife, Queen Elizabeth, everywhere they go?

A. It's just a job, really. Officially peripheral, Philip is heavily influential in the British royal family's personal life and with the queen, inverted queen, according to Roland Flamini's biography, "Sovereign: Elizabeth II and the Windsor Dynasty" (Delacorte).

His brash style never quite fit into courtly circles, Flamini writes, but "there was never any question who was head of the family."

Q. Is Darren E. Burrows, who plays Ed on CBS' "Northern Exposure," really an American Indian like his character?

Prince Philip
It's just a job

A. Burrows, a native of Winfield, Kan., is part Cherokee and part Apache. After high school, he joined his brother Billy Drago ("The Untouchables"), who runs a professional acting workshop with his wife in California.

Burrows has appeared in the movies "976-EVIL," "Casualties of War," "Class of 1999" and "Cry-Baby," as well as in stage productions and on other TV shows.

Q. Why does comedian Judy Tenuta make such a big deal of being a cut figure?

A. It sells. "I'm a religious leader, and people are following me," declares Tenuta, whose recent Showtime special was "Worship Me, Pigs!" "People want to come into this experience to be changed."

They don't want to be like they were out on the street 10 minutes before. They want to be a follower of Judaism.

Geena Davis's films include "Earth Girls Are Easy," "Beetle-juice" and "The Accidental

Davis won an Oscar for best supporting actress for her role in "The Accidental Tourist."

Her most recent film is "Thelma & Louise" in which she stars with Susan Sarandon.

Keep up with soap suds; stay tuned for the latest

By Joey Sasso
Nite-Beat News Service

"Loving" hunk Robert Tyler (Trucker) still uses his real name, Barry Kauffman, when he moonlights as a model. It's the only way, he says, to keep feisty fans at bay. But the play didn't work at a recent Big Apple fashion show.

It all started after Robert had bared his sexy chest and a woman in the audience hollered, "That's Trucker!" And it ended when he raced off the runway to avoid being mauled!

Another casualty has been reported in the bloody ratings battle going on at "General Hospital." Hugo Napier (Lord Ashton) has been let go, insiders say. His role ended in late March.

With Generations off the air, insiders have been expecting Debbi Morgan (Chantal) to return to N.Y. and maybe, her old role as Angie on "All My Children." But sources close to the soap star say Debbi's in no hurry to leave Hollywood.

Family has future

TV Data

It happens all the time: A TV series is put in an impossible time slot and flops in the ratings.

The network may move it to one- or two-hour slots — usually initially at the end — then if there's no improvement, it's goodbye.

So why has CBS renewed "The Family Man," which premiered last fall, performed dismally in the ratings — and was quickly yanked from the schedule — as a midseason replacement for next year? And why is it getting the red-carpet treatment this summer, airing two nights a week — Mondays and Wednesdays?

The reason lies in the show's four producers — Bill Bickley, Michael Warren, Tom Miller and Bob Boyett, who have one of the strongest track records in television. That same team came up with ABC's "Perfect Strangers"

Gregory Harrison and kids think like a family.

Boyett Productions is also responsible for ABC's "Full House."

That's the case in Hollywood, says Bickley frankly. "If you have a show or two on the air that are doing very well, they tend to give you a break. The team secret is that they never stop paying attention to their stories."

Family conflicts, issues mark 'Lancer' western Family turmoil mixes with out-law justice, rough and tumble ranching and romance in the wild, sprawling landscape of the hit series "Lancer," airing on The Family Channel Saturdays and Sundays. The hour-long show begins Saturday.

When Murdoch Lancer (Agnes Duggan), the owner of a huge California ranch, is wounded by band grabbers he sends Pinkerton detectives looking for his two estranged sons to help him save his ranch. Lancer's eldest son Scott, played by Wayne Maunder, is found living in Boston high society. Younger son Johnny, played by James Stacy, is found moments before his own execution in the barrios of Mexico.

The two sons return home and each share 1/3 ownership of the huge ranch they've agreed to defend with their father.

What originally appeared as a

Andrew Duggan plays California rancher good deal for the boys turns out to be a life-threatening challenge as they fight to defend their land from those who would take it away.

Katt recalls all-star games from his past

TV Data

Vote early and often.

That time-honored piece of advice may be a bit outmoded when it comes to municipal elections, but there's one election to which it still applies — the elections by baseball fans of the starters of the All-Star Game.

Baseball's "62nd All-Star Game" airs Tuesday, from Toronto's SkyDome.

Diggs McCalver will be calling the game. Jim Katt, who pitched in the major leagues for 25 years, will be participating in the pre-game show and expects to be providing brief interviews with players during the game. Katt participated in three All-Star Games himself. His most memorable? An unwelcome change in the game in recent years is a growing hostility between the fans and players. "I used to have fun with the guys in the bleachers in Chicago," Katt recalls. "I was about 42 and they'd ask me if I was playing and collecting Social Security tax."

How's your environment IQ?

National Audubon Society Specials are airing on Tuesdays this year on PBS. To get you in the mood, here's a test of your EQ (environmental IQ).

1. The controversial reintroduction of nearly extinct wolf species poses a serious threat to livestock and deer. True False
2. Dolphins have been taught by man to understand complicated sentences. True False
3. Ocean pollution is a critical problem to the U.S. environment. What percent of the nation's population lives within 50 miles of the shore: 10% 45% 75%
4. Proportionally, more woodlands are annually in the United States than in the Amazon Rain Forest. True False

ANSWERS

1. False — Research shows that hunters kill approximately three to four times as many deer as do wolves. In one recent study, there was no appreciable decline in deer when wolves were released in the area. The federal government has established a plan to keep wolves out of areas used for livestock and has committed to compensating ranchers in the event of lost livestock.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

- Dolphins, one of mankind's best friends, fight for survival.
2. True — In an education program conducted by Dr. Louis Herman in Hawaii, the scientist discovered that dolphins understand syntax, the word order that gives meaning to a sentence.
 3. 75% — Nearly three-fourths of Americans live within 50 miles of the shore which is creating an overburden on the environment.
 4. True — More than 400,000 acres of northwest American timberland are cut annually in Washington and Oregon alone to supply the nation's lumber needs. Only 2.8 million acres out of 50 million acres in that region have never been cut. Currently, four million acres a year are cut in Brazil's part of the Amazon Basin.

Subaru Legacy's in the lead Stop, stoop, squint: Catch every puddle

A Subaru Legacy now leads the national PRO Rally Championship on the strength of the second straight overall win by Chad DiMarco and co-driver Erick Haugue. At the Susquehanna Trail event, DiMarco and Haugue bested a field of seasoned competitors to win the third round of the eight-event Subaru PRO Rally Championship.

The Susquehanna Trail route covered nearly 300 miles of rugged roads through the woods of North Central Pennsylvania, and included 146 miles of high-performance stages.

The lone Subaru entry topped the field of 62 vehicles, with a margin of four minutes over the runner-up, Mazda, piloted by Finnish drivers Saku Vierima and Taj Hakinen. The Legacy competes in the PRO Rally Group "A," class, and consistently outperformed and outlasted the

The Subaru Legacy PRO Rally car of Chad DiMarco and co-driver Erick Haugue was proven in national championships; highly modified Audi Quattro which runs in the Open class. DiMarco attributes this success to a vehicle which combines power, traction and handling in a package that provides control over a wide range of situations, as well as good driver/co-driver combination and tireless preparation on the car. The Subaru PRO Rally Championship takes a summer respite and resumes on August 23-25 with the Ojibwa National PRO Rally from Bemidji, Minnesota.

The best way to find and/or prevent car leaks is to keep the engine clean and check under and around the vehicle periodically for spots indicating leaks. Keeping gaskets, hoses and connections in good condition will prevent most of such problems from occurring.

In a rest stop or parking lot, however, you first have to determine if the leakage actually has come from your vehicle. It could be from the one which was previously sat in that space. Next challenge, to identify the fluid. Color and texture are your main clues:

- Green or yellowish water near the engine is antifreeze.
- Red fluid comes from the automotive transmission or the power steering (although they are not the same).

An oily liquid, usually without much color but with a pungent odor, is likely to be brake fluid.

A thin fluid smelling like gasoline is probably just that. Leaking oil, antifreeze or gasoline around an engine is hazardous, the latter being the leading cause of car fires. It may be necessary to have a gas leak repaired before starting the engine.

Check fluid levels frequently on a long trip. CAUTION: Never remove the radiator pressure cap when the engine is hot.

Campers go modern

The 1991 Itasca Spirit Class C motor home by Winnebago Industries Inc. has just been introduced.

Happy Birthday, Kathleen

Nurse Kathleen had a secret, but surprises were in store

By Helene Lewis Coffey

All that day, Nurse Kathleen Jones wore a secret smile. Her reddish hair seemed to sparkle with energy; there was a special twinkle in her big green eyes.

The other nurses kidded her, saying she must have been up to something during the weekend. As a matter of fact, Kathleen had taken a shift both Saturday and Sunday, somebody had to. The hospital was shortminded.

Kathleen was on a high that busy Monday simply because it was her birthday. She had grown up in a family of tireless holiday keepers. Birthdays were well and truly celebrated. Of course, birthdays away from home were less spectacular. Still, the unailing package from home laid the groundwork and always, there was some surprise. A wire from a friend long out of touch, an admirer's bouquet or an unexpected visit from a gaggle of girlfriends. Birthdays were magic.

Kathleen hurried down the long hospital corridor, dispensing prescriptions, pitchers of ice water and plenty of TLC.

"I knew it was you. I can tell by your footsteps," said old Mrs. Carr. "You go on a dead run."

"Kathleen smiled. She was used

Kathleen didn't have to try to convince anyone that she wasn't tired. She was lithe and strong, blessed with boundless energy. She could work a double shift without strain; indeed, after an ordinary working day, she often went to the gymnasium to work off steam.

to hearing that. "So good for you," she said. "You've got your pain pill," she said.

She administered the medicine and, for good measure, straightened the twisted sheets, plumped the pillow.

"I'm going to feel better now," she promised.

"I always feel better when you come in," said Mrs. Carr. "You look so cheerful... even on a blue Monday."

"It's blue Monday; it's my birthday."

"Well, well. And what great age have you attained?"

"Twenty-four."

By the time the young man returned with the blackened pan, the air in the apartment was lightening.

"So, I could be happy about a birthday, if it were my 24th. Well, make the most of it."

"I will," Kathleen promised, smiling.

Kathleen went her way, thinking, "She's right, I have every thing — work I like, loving folks, good friends, health. And today's my birthday. Something special is bound to happen . . ."

Hours passed. Usually by this time, her friend Evelyn would be nagging. "Take a break, Kathleen! At the rate you're going, you'll have terminal burnout by the time you're 30 . . ."

But Evelyn was home with the flu; it was her shifts Kathleen had taken. So Kathleen didn't have to try to convince anyone that she wasn't tired. She was lithe and strong; blessed with boundless energy. She could work a double shift without strain; indeed, after an ordinary working day, she often went to her gymnasium to work off steam.

In mid-afternoon, one of the nurses nudged her as she passed and jerked a thumb towards the coffee room.

"Munchies!" she murmured.

Kathleen had a happy thought. Months ago, the nurses had gotten into a discussion of their Zodiac signs. Kathleen had quietly noted down each birthday. Since, she had brought homemade cake on those days, with a card for everyone to sign. Maybe someone had decided it was her turn.

She checked to be sure no call lights were on, then ducked into the coffee room. Someone had made coffee and left a box of homemade cookies. That was all.

Kathleen helped herself to a cookie and coffee. She thought, "Oh, well. After all, who knew it was her birthday?" When they had talked about their signs, Kathleen had been too busy taking notes to mention hers. Evelyn would have remembered, but she was much too ill, poor dear, to think of frivolities . . .

Patience care went on past quitting time. Then there were charts to fill out. Kathleen left late. No one had wished her a happy birthday.

No doubt Jennifer, her roommate, would have something planned for dinner. Jen had been overwhelmed when Kathleen surprised her with a party and had blurted the incredible news that it was the first time in her life she had ever been given one.

Jen could hardly forget Kathleen's; she had been commenting about the blizzard of cards from friends, cousins, siblings. Kathleen had shared the funny ones.

Jennifer was not at home. Kathleen searched the mail for the family package. Not even a package notice. Kathleen shook her head. "Mom never failed. There must be a postal strike."

She sighed. Last year at this time, there had been an extravaganza of flowers, John. He had been a good friend, a super date . . . and she missed him. But John had fallen deeply, painfully in love and Kathleen couldn't reciprocate. You couldn't dangle someone, Kathleen thought, even if the parting left you a little lonely.

By common consent, the first girl home started supper. Kathleen took chops out of the freezer, put them under a stream of running water and began a salad.

Jennifer came in. "Oh, don't fix supper for me," she cried. "I have a date."

"On Monday?"

"It's business, sort of. My boss, David Cameron."

She always says his name in italics, Kathleen thought crossly. He was the heir apparent at Cameron Computers and obviously God's gift . . .

"He just asked me on impulse, to talk about some things at work, he said. It means a lot to me."

Jennifer spoke with an aggrieved air. Kathleen was supposed to know this and do something — maybe dance around the room.

"I'm glad for you," Kathleen said, with all the warmth she could muster. "Jen — is this the first time you've been home? I was expecting a package . . ."

"I got the mail. There was nothing for you. Oh, Kathleen!"

Kathleen looked up. "Well, what?"

"Could I borrow you silk dinner suit? It would be perfect . . ."

"Help yourself."

From 7 to 7:30, the interval during which the incomparable Mr. Cameron was being, fashionably late, Jennifer dithered around the apartment. Kathleen supplied moral support.

At 7:21, Mr. Cameron arrived, claiming Jennifer without apology. She left on his arm, smiling tentatively and looking smugly at Kathleen's best dress. Kathleen thought, I should find some cinders to brood in.

Having no aptitude for brooding, she did no such thing. She returned briskly to her supper preparations.

Some unaccounted evening, she thought with a wry grin. Her birthday magic would be a workout at gym. Oh, well. She had to grow up sometime.

While the chops sizzled on the grill, Kathleen glanced over a paper. She became absorbed in a story about a fascinating female scientist. After what seemed a short time, her attention was arrested by an acid smile she identified—unmistakably—as badly burned meat.

"I didn't leave you guys that long!" Kathleen protested to the chops as she hurried to the rescue. "The chops, as it turned out, were crispy brown on one side, just ready to turn and in no possible way responsible for the odor now continued to assault Kathleen's nostrils. It was permeating the apartment; probably brought in, Kathleen reasoned, by the unit which centrally cooled and heated this section of the building. Someone must have left something cooking and gone out. Could such a thing start a real fire?"

Kathleen turned off her stove and went hunting. Nobody was home in the apartment opposite hers and the smell seemed less powerful in the hall than in her own kitchen. Suspicions roused, she raced upstairs to the apartment directly above hers. Here she saw wisps of smoke coming from underneath. She knocked. No answer. She pounded and pounded. Suddenly the door flew open. A young man stood before her, looking not more than half awake. His eyes were puffy and red, his chin darkly shadowed, his clothing rumpled.

He said, "Yes? Did you want something?" Kathleen was practically dancing with impatience. "Can you get me some coffee? Can't you smell that? Cried, waving towards the dark clouds billowing behind him. "You're burning up the place!"

"Oh, my God!" cried the youth as he dived for the kitchen, Kathleen right behind him. He wrenched open the oven door and started to reach. Kathleen grabbed his arm. She screamed, "Hot pad! Get a hot pad first!" Kathleen looked on. He panted long enough to do a well-stained mit. Then he drew from the oven a pan containing nameless blobs of black obviously cremated to a cinder, surrounding it with a mass of black flame, translucent at the last of the process. The whole gave off an eye-watering miasma of noxious black smoke.

The young man eyed the pan with a frown. "What shall I do with it?" he wondered. Kathleen had already reached behind him to seize a box of baking soda she had spotted on the shelf. She doused the flames. "That's all you need to do," she directed. "I'll open all the doors and windows . . ."

By the time the young man returned with the blackened air in the apartment was lighter.

"I can't thank you enough, he breathed, "I guess I really could have burned the place down. You must think I'm on a three-day drunk, but I swear it's not so. I'm Peter Vorheis!"

"I can't thank you enough, he breathed, I guess I really could have burned the place down. You must think I'm on a three-day drunk, but I swear it's not so. I'm Peter Vorheis. I'm a law student. I spent the weekend cramming night and day for the battery of tests I just took."

spent the weekend cramming night and day for the battery of tests I just took. I was so worn out I just got home, I thought I'd just have a nap while dinner cooked. I really created, I could have slept forever."

"You could have, at that," said Kathleen severely. And then to soften it asked, "So what was dinner?" "Pot roast. Enough for two diners."

"He looked up wistfully. Kathleen noticed his eyes—large, brown and inoffensive, like a puppy's. He sighed, "I love pot roast. Kathleen's heart contracted. He was unprepossessing-looking, and apparently none to swift, but he was her neighbor and he was hungry."

She said briskly, "Look, I had started dinner for my roommate and myself and she went out. I don't have anything as fancy as pot roast, but the chops are almost done. There's salad and I can put a couple of potatoes in the microwave."

The brown eyes widened. "That's awfully generous of you. I'd have to clean up first. Miss Kathleen Jones—Apartment 1, just below."

"Kathleen Jones!" "Yes?"

He rubbed his head. "It seems as if there's something I ought to tell you, but it's gone clean out of my mind. I'll try to think of it while I'm changing."

"Don't be too long. I plan to go to my gym and work out after dinner," Kathleen said, craftily laying the groundwork for an early tea escape.

"I won't be but a few minutes," said Peter Vorheis humbly. Kathleen set the table, dressed the salad, finished browning the chops, scrubbed the potatoes and glanced at the clock before setting the microwave. She raised her eyebrows. It had been nearly 30 minutes.

Just then the doorbell rang. Kathleen opened the door, then blinked: Here was no scruffy student, but a handsome, well-dressed stranger, laden with packages. Kathleen must have the wrong apartment.

"Did I keep you waiting?" asked the stranger, in Peter's voice.

Kathleen found him and invited her guest inside, covetously noting his nicely coordinated slacks and shirt, the scent of cologne, the brogue: you could see your face in

Peter put the packages on the counter. He said, "Happy birthday, Kathleen."

Kathleen turned, big-eyed. Peter asked, "Was that the wrong thing to say?"

"No, it was the most incredibly right thing . . . how did you know?"

"It's written on this, large and clear." He pointed to the larger package, a paper-wrapped carton. "The parcel service delivered it this afternoon. They wouldn't leave it unless I signed. That's what I was trying to remember to tell you."

Kathleen's smile lit up the room. "Our menu's upgraded," she said, patting the package. "There'll be a German chocolate cake in here—my favorite."

"Mint, too!" Peter handed Kathleen a paper sack. "You might want to put this on ice."

Kathleen took out a bottle. "Now doesn't this make it festive!" she cried.

"Well, isn't Mumm's," said Peter diffidently. "Just what I could find at the corner store."

"I never met a champagne—I didn't like," said Kathleen. "She opened the box, set aside several gaily wrapped parcels and produced a cake tin."

"This goes in the middle of the table," she told Peter. "They've even sent the candles to go on it."

"Don't you want to get into your presents? Especially the big ones?" Kathleen asked. "No. We'll eat first. I can give the fancy ones. I'll be in a flousy dress. Mein hopes I'll wand dancing."

"Well, why not? I could take you dancing."

"Maybe sometime. Meanwhile, I'd known you were going to dress so nicely, I would have changed out of my uniform."

"Is that a uniform? It looks like a regular dress suit."

"It's my nurse's uniform."

"I thought nurses were strictly white from top to toe. Of course, I'm never in a hospital."

"You'll get there if you don't mend your ways."

"Touché." Anyway, it's nice you can wear pale green. It suits your coloring." He gave her a frankly admiring glance. "I have a weakness for beautiful roadheads."

"Near enough, I'm flexible; I'll settle for merely beautiful."

"You settle down and eat and never mind the blarney," said Kathleen, smiling.

"Settle?" apostrophe him, she paused; just a moment's hesitation, but Peter picked up on it.

"Are you used to having grace?" he asked.

"Yes." "I'll say it if you like. Without lins or formality, Peter offered thanks for the food and asked a blessing for Kathleen on her special day. A lump rose in Kathleen never did go to the gym. After the cake, Peter sprang up and deftly cleared the table, balancing the dishes for one swift trip to the sink. Kathleen watched, bemused. "I thought only experienced waiters and professional jugglers could do that," she said.

Kathleen's throat. It was just what they would have said at home. Kathleen never did go to the gym.

After the main course, Peter sprang up and deftly cleared the table, balancing the dishes for one swift trip to the sink. Kathleen watched, bemused. "I thought only experienced waiters and professional jugglers could do that," she said.

"Behold an experienced waiter," said Peter, presenting himself at her elbow with a flourish. "Since you want to go work out, you don't have time to hear about all the jobs I've held down to earn the money for law school. Shall I light your candles?"

"I don't think I'm ready for dessert yet," said Kathleen. "Why don't we put on some music?"

You can tell me about all those jobs for law school, shall I light your candles?"

"I don't think I'm ready for dessert yet," said Kathleen. "Why don't we put on some music?"

"You can tell me about all those jobs for law school, shall I light your candles?"

"Oh, OK. He really did talk business."

"She stopped short at the sight of the birthday cake left in solitary splendor in the middle of the table. She cried, "Why are you having your cake so early?"

"It's not so early, almost 11. Incidentally, have you met our upstairs neighbor?"

"We met at the gym."

"Hello, Peter," said Jennifer in a preoccupied way, he turned on Kathleen. "This is only the 9th. Your cards said the 24th!"

"That means my 24th birthday. It's today."

"Oh, Kathleen," Jen wailed. "That just spoils everything!"

"I don't understand."

"I'm giving you a surprise party Saturday! All your nice friends are coming, along with everybody else we know!"

"Why, that's terrific," said Kathleen.

"Am I coming?" Peter asked hopefully. "I promised to be surprised."

"Nothing's spoiled, Jen," Kathleen assured her. "You know I'm always ready for a party."

"You must have thought I forgot," Jennifer moaned. "And although you'd gone to so much trouble for me . . ."

"It wasn't trouble; it was fun. Listen, your timing is perfect. Saturday's much the better night for a big party and you're just in time to help us with this impromptu small one."

Peter lit the candles. Kathleen blew them out and served the cake. They finished the champagne while Kathleen explored the parcels for her family.

"I want to see you in that dress," said Peter.

"I'll wear it Saturday," Kathleen promised.

Jennifer, mindful of morning commitments, was out of bed. Kathleen and Peter started to say good night but lingered long at the doorway.

After Peter finally went upstairs, Kathleen drifted dreamily around the apartment, tidying and thinking.

"Plainly, the magic was still there. She'd been granted a wish before she even knew she wished it."

It's too soon to tell, her sensible self scolded. But her heart whispered, I'm delighted with him.

Kathleen took herself in hand and marched herself to bed. It was enough, for now, that she had had a perfectly wonderful birthday.

Time Off

Fight stress with easy projects

This is a good month to take stock of areas in the house that could benefit from new fabric replacement. Sewing is a relaxing and fulfilling way to spend a weekend at home. Here are some suggestions for quick and easy projects that can be completed in a weekend.

1. New potholders. It may seem silly, but how often do you replace your potholders? It's so easy to whip up new ones in bright colors or even shapes and simply toss the old ones away. Quilt patterns done in a typical color combination of black, purple, deep red and dark green looks fantastic.

2. Pretty napkins are easy to whip up from a bundle of remnants. This will give you the excuse to buy a little bit of every fabric print that attracts you. You will need a half a yard for two 18-inch square napkins. This is a nice generous size.

3. A quilted wallhanging is an interesting and inexpensive substitute for a painting. This is another use for pretty remnants. Fabric and fabric shops often sell quarter yard rolls, cut especially for quilt making. Plan to make your project 45 inches square, which is exactly the width of most fabric and you will only need a total of one and one half yards for the top and one and one half yards for the backing (this can be muslin). An Amish design is striking and you will find a variety of patterns in any quilt book. In my book The Weekend Quilt, there is an interesting pattern called "Country Roads" that is good for this project.

Quick Home Design

4. If you make a set of placemats for the patio you'll be glad you did for the summer. Plan a summer color scheme now and check out the new floral chintz fabrics. If your crazy about the more expensive fabrics this is the time to use them because you won't need much. Use a plain fabric backing and save the good stuff for the top. If you have room on the table consider making them slightly larger than the ones you buy and add interest with a second stitch line in a contrasting (but color of the half inch in from the edge) around.

5. A crib quilt, in a simple patchwork or applique pattern is easy, practical and fun to make. Choose a pattern that is a repeat of one shape, such as a rectangle that achieves interest from the way it is pieced together. This way you can cut all the pieces at once and there are no complicated directions. The excitement comes from the choice of fabric and the arrangement of the fabric pieces. I like to use soft pastels on a baby's quilt. The colors and the fabric get softer and look better with each washing. A quilt lined with thin cotton batting is a good lightweight covering.

Plan ahead to fly with your pet

Knight-Ridder News Service

Pets may travel aboard your own flight as excess baggage in the cargo hold. Some lines permit one or two cats or tiny dogs per plane in carriers that fit under passenger cabin seats.

travel rules. Reconfirm your own and a pet's reservations frequently before departure and again during stop-overs.

Though airline "hub" systems now make it difficult, choose non-stop or "direct" flights with no change of plane.

Don't fly with very old infant — the airlines will refuse animals under eight weeks — or chronically sick animals.

You can buy or sometimes rent a regulation crate from most airlines. They offer limited sizes and may not have what you need. Better to buy your own following specifications in the rules pamphlet.

Acclimate the pet to the crate by daily stays of increasing duration for several weeks before departure.

The pet's last feeding should be at least six hours, watering, two hours before take-off. Exercise the animal immediately before loading. Get to the airport at least an hour and a half before the scheduled departure.

Pet air fares vary greatly among carriers, and change overnight. Check around for the best deal.
