On a monumental scale

With Mount Rushmore as a backdrop, President Bush formally dedicated the monument in the Black Hills of South Dakota Wednesday, 50 years after its completion.

'Proper dedication' at last for famed Mount Rushmore

Knights-Ridder News Service

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL, S.D.
— With Presidents Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson and Theodore Roosevelt looking over his shoulder, President Bush kicked off a monumentally scaled 50th anniversary celebration of this national monument Wednesday. Under a blue sky and with the memorial towering telegenically in the background, the president made brief, patriotic remarks to open a celebration organizers hope will raise $40 million to give the 60-foot granite visages a face lift.

Medal awards for gulf war — A3 Big parade — A5

The celebration was billed as a dedication of the monument, although six previous dedications actually have been held for various parts of the sculpture. Organizers say the entire memorial never received a "proper dedication" when it was completed in 1931. Certainly, previous dedications did not include a jet fighter fly-over, a 120-by-80 foot American flag hoisted aloft by a helium balloon (billed as the largest flag-raising in history), a children's chorus, an Air Force band and a collection of Hollywood celebrities that would have done a Super Bowl proud. Co-hosts for the event were NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw and Entertainment Tonight star Mary Hart; both native South Dakotans. Living national monument Jimmy Stewart introduced Bush and Rosemary Clooney belted out "America the Beautiful." Bush quoted Jefferson. Please see RUSHMORE/A2

Soviets hint U.S. can aid peace effort

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union, increasingly concerned that a Yugoslavian civil war could spread to other European countries, would like a joint effort with the United States to quell the violence, Soviet sources said Wednesday.

There have been diplomatic conflicts between the superpowers that could lead to a meeting soon, between Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander A. Bessmertnykh. The sources said that could serve as a forum for a joint statement on the crisis.

But a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Soviets have made no direct approach to the United States specifically about Yugoslavia.

"Their statements have been very similar to ours," the official observed, when asked if there might be common ground on the issue. "There's always utility in talking."

Baker, expressing rising U.S. fears of a full-fledged civil war in the central European country, said Wednesday other nations should consider imposing an arms embargo and suspension of financial aid to Yugoslavia, which imports some weapons but is a net arms exporter.

A senior Soviet official, speaking with the understanding he would not be identified, told The Associated Press his government has been confused in recent days by an apparent change in the U.S. position on Yugoslavia and is anxious to clarify where the Bush administration stands.

He said the Kremlin would welcome a joint approach such as the one taken in the immediate aftermath of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait last August, when Baker broke off a hunting trip in Mongolia and rushed to Moscow to issue a joint statement with then-Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shvardnadze condemning Baghdad's aggression.

"Under no circumstances, however, would the Soviet Union send troops to Yugoslavia, even as part of an international peacekeeping force," the source said. "The Soviets supported but refused to contribute troops to the multinational coalition that drove Iraq out of Kuwait last winter."

State acts to protect Big Wood groundwater

The Times-News and The Associated Press

BOISE — The state of Idaho moved to preserve groundwater supplies in the parched Big Wood River drainage this week, designating parts of four counties as a groundwater management area.

That means the state will allow more water for consumptive use only if the applicant can prove the water supply is adequate and other water rights will not be affected.

Department director R. Keith Higginson said that since the surface and groundwater in the basin are interconnected, diversion of water from a tributary or well will affect the entire supply.

"The rippled area is located in Blaine, Camas, Lincoln and Gooding counties upstream from the Magic Reservoir.

"Sooner or later you get to the point where ground water and surface water uses interfere with each other," said state Water Allocation Bureau Chief Glen Saxton. "That's probably where we are now."

Because of the uncertainty of exactly how groundwater use affects surface water, the impact of the designation on the Magic Reservoir water supply is not known, said Roger Davis, assistant manager of the Big Wood-River Irrigation District.

More than 70 applications for permits to appropriate groundwater in the area are pending before the water resources department. Protests have been filed against some of those, alleging that continued granting of permits to develop new aquifer users in the upper Wood River basin is interfering with earlier surface water rights.

The department will continue to process applications for non-consumptive, municipal, stock water and domestic uses.

Warming may be shrinking ice cap

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The massive floating canopy of ice that covers the Arctic Ocean recedes over a nine-year period, possibly reflecting the effects of global warming, researchers said.

The canopy, which at times is 70 percent larger than the United States, drew back about 2 percent between October 1978 and August 1987, researchers said.

But scientists cautioned they do not know enough yet to blame global warming, the expected consequence of a buildup in the atmosphere of heat-trapping gases.

Researchers will need 30 years of observation "before you can even think about saying anything definite about the climate," said study co-author Per Gloersen.

Gloersen is a physicist in the oceans and ice branch of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md. The work appears in Thursday's issue of the British journal Nature.

Researchers used satellite observations to track the extent of Arctic and Antarctic sea ice over the nine-year period. The Arctic sea-ice canopy is a collection of many small ice chunks, often connected by thin ice, that fills the Arctic Ocean and spreads into the Bering Sea, Baffin Bay and other nearby bodies of water in the winter.

Universal layoffs herald leaner force for plant

By Cathryn Stephens and Craig Lincoln
Times-News writers

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls' biggest employer trimmed the size of its work force for the foreseeable future this week, and in the process left furloughed employees wondering about their futures with Universal Frozen Foods.

"I think it's a pretty bad deal for us because we're kind of tight on money right now," 22-year-old Robert Hainline said Wednesday.

"We've been looking for jobs, but can't find any," said his wife, 20-year-old Cindy Hainline.

The company laid off 147 workers — 10 percent of the employees at its Twin Falls plant — as the result of changes in schedules.

"With the market the way it is they got to do what they got to do," said 32-year-old Jerry Bennion of Twin Falls, who won't be laid off. "I'm just thankful it doesn't affect me."

Operations Manager Mike Johnston said the layoffs were due to a change in production schedules made possible by mechanical changes — more efficient machinery allows the company to produce more with fewer employees.

So Universal will not rise back up to its former level of employment after this layoff, Johnston said. The company had employed about 1,450 workers.

The remaining employees will receive a pay increase "slightly above" the average of valley businesses, he said.

Layoffs aren't unusual in the seasonal food-processing business, and many employees took the announcement in stride.

"It's normal. Every summer we shut down and they do maintenance work," said Donna Litterer, 32, of Twin Falls.

The seasonal nature of Universal's work makes it difficult to determine the economic impact of the layoffs. Normal turnover from terminations and workers who quit is large enough to bring most of the 147 laid-off employees back into the plant soon, Johnston said.

And about one-third of the workers who got pink slips this week would not have come back anyway, he said.

"It's something that happens every year except last year," said Bethel Harmon, 55.

Please see UNIVERSAL/A2

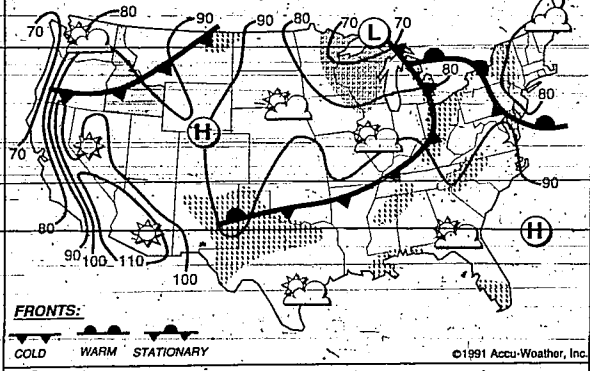

Former employees Maria and Felipe Munoz leave the UFF plant with their daughter, Anna Valentina, after picking up paychecks. The Twin Falls couple says the layoff should not hurt them much. The company plans to rehire them in August, they said.

Weather summary

The National Weather Service in Boise says a ridge of high pressure continues to dominate conditions in the western United States.

The high pressure system will continue for the next several days before weakening and shifting off the west coast during the weekend.

Hot, dry weather will persist through today, before a cooling trend sets in over northern Idaho and spreads to southern Idaho during the weekend.

A few over Idaho Wednesday afternoon were clear. A few fair weather clouds were reported near the mountains due to the warm temperatures.

Surface winds were on the light side, from 5 to 10 mph. 14 degrees, which was also the coldest reading in the nation.

Elsewhere in the nation Wednesday, the highest temperature was 125 degrees at Death Valley, Calif.

Storms rumble across Midwest; gale warnings on coast

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms hit parts of the Midwest on Wednesday, while strong winds raked the North Central states and the Northeast.

Thunderstorms fell from central Kansas to west-central Missouri and over Oklahoma, western Arkansas and extend north-central Texas.

By early afternoon, scattered showers were reported along the Gulf Coast and over the Middle Atlantic Coast states. Light rain and drizzle fell over Minnesota and eastern North Dakota.

Strong northwesterly winds brought cool air into the North Central states, with wind advisories posted in the afternoon for lakes in the Dakotas.

A gale warning was issued for the Washington coast as strong winds in a cold front crossed Oregon and Washington.

Elsewhere, sunny skies prevailed from the Pacific Coast to Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico, the National Weather Service said.

Heavier rainfall totals for the six-hour period ending at 2 p.m. EDT included more than 2 inches at Oklahoma City, Okla., and nearly an inch at Hobart, Okla.

Clouds and rain kept temperatures in the 60s in Minnesota and eastern sections of the Dakotas in the afternoon.

Temperatures warmed into the upper 80s and lower 90s in the Southeast and soared above 100 degrees in the Southwestern deserts by midday.

Phoenix, Ariz., reported an overnight low of 86 degrees following an afternoon high of 112 degrees on Tuesday.

The morning low for the Lower 48 states was 38 degrees at Jackson, Wyo., and West Yellowstone, Mont.

Hearts are Trump as Maria accepts Donald's proposal, ring

NEW YORK (AP) — Live, from New York, it's Donald and Maria — engaged!

Donald Trump's love life, already the source of more stories than the Gulf War, reached its logical (sort-of) culmination Wednesday when he announced — on a live television of course — his engagement to model-actress Maria Maples.

The millionaire developer says he gave Maples a diamond engagement ring Tuesday night, less than a week after Trump publicly dumped her and was linked to Italian supermodel Carla Bruni.

"We've decided this is the thing to do. She's something special. It's worked out great," Trump said in an telephone call broadcast on the syndicated program "Live with Regis & Kathie Lee." Maria had spent the past few days at the apartment of co-host Kathie Lee Gifford.

What kind of ring did Maria get? Ronald Winston, head of Harry Winston, said it worked out great. Winston said in an interview that the ring was a nearly eight-carat emerald-cut gem, set among a row of diamonds.

How much? Mr. Winston won't say. "For her to know this type of information would be like landing on a thumb tack," said Winston.

Norma Federer, a spokeswoman for the Trump Organization, confirmed Trump was telling the truth about the engagement — on-again affair. Trump did not return a phone message.

The betrothal is the latest twist along the road to romance for Donald and Maria, who became an item as Trump's marriage to ex-wife Ivana began crumbling. The Trumps were divorced last December.

Chuck Jones, a spokesman for Maples, confirmed that Maria had accepted Trump's marriage proposal. "That's right. But I can't say anything else about it," said Jones.

One note of caution among all this: No wedding date has been announced, meaning pretty much anything could happen before (or if) they walk down the aisle.

Yugoslavia's breakup

Croatia and Slovenia have declared independence from the rest of Yugoslavia June 25.

Political differences: Slovenia and Croatia are the most Westernized and wealthiest of Yugoslavia's republics, and they fear being held back economically by the rest of the nation.

Historical: Before World War I, Croatia and Serbia were part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire; the rest of what is now Yugoslavia was controlled by the Ottoman Turks.

Yugoslav forces hold fire, return to barracks; crisis seen easing

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Gen. Andrija Raseta, deputy commander of troops in Slovenia, said on Monday that the army ordered troops to hold their fire and some units withdrew to their barracks.

"For tonight, the crisis is over," a senior Slovenian official said.

The official, information Minister Janko Ruzic, told reporters just after midnight Wednesday that armored convoys that left Belgrade early in the day had made no move to penetrate Croatian or Slovenian territory.

Units already inside Slovenia abandoned all the republic's border posts, and other soldiers withdrew to their bases, he said.

"Everything is as before the attack on Slovenia," Raseta said. "The only difference are human casualties, enormous material damage and an experience that the Slovene people and the world... will not forget."

Scattered fighting flared earlier in the day, but major clashes were reported: At least 25 people died Tuesday in the worst battles in Slovenia since the crisis started last week. Federal troops also shot three civilians in Croatia.

Gen. Raseta said the army had no reason not to recognize Mesic and the presidency, who have been elected legally, said Raseta.

Raseta said there were no reports of fighting after 2 p.m. He said the federal army seemed at least to have postponed plans to attack while negotiations — brokered by Mesic — proceeded between the warring parties.

Slovenian officials said the republic was willing to consider suspending its independence declaration and negotiate control of the border posts.

The army's chief of staff, hard-line Gen. Blagoje Adzic, had asked on a June Tuesday.

An earlier attempt at a cease-fire, arranged by the European Community, fell apart. But EC observers arrived Wednesday in Belgrade to help enforce the new truce plan and were to visit Croatia and Slovenia on Thursday.

Rushmore's faces are in the immediate danger, but all four are marred by erosion and cracks, including a 40-foot-long fault running through Washington's forehead employees, at the memorial apply the equivalent of makeup to the faces every fall when they fill the cracks with a combination of crushed granite, white lead and linseed oil.

Although the cracks have gotten worse, the granite has been a problem since sculpting began.

For example, visitors to the memorial may wonder at the significance of Jefferson's gaze being directed higher — lofter, you might say — than that of the other presidents. But the truth is, a crack in the granite forced sculptor Gutzon Borglum to tilt Jefferson's head back to keep his nose from falling off.

The Mount Rushmore Memorial Society, a non-profit group dedicated to preserving the memorial, hopes to raise the millions needed for repairs over the next three years through corporate grants, private donations and the sale of commemorative coins. The money also will be used to improve the visitors center, which handles more than 2 million people annually.

Pulizzi is not one of the employees being laid off.

Pablo and Estela Ortiz are, and they're looking forward to the vacation.

"It's just great. A bit of rest after working so long," 43-year-old Pablo Ortiz said. "We save our pennies and dimes and quarters in a big jar, so we'll be fine with money and we have no house payment."

The Ortizs in Twin Falls, have worked for Universal Frozen Foods for 13 years and have endured many layoffs.

"I think it's nutty. I never signed a contract, but I guess it's that way," said Sherry Wadon, 41, of Twin Falls, asked what would happen if an employee requested vacation time during a different time of year, she said "you'd probably get the opportunity to not have a job."

Other laid-off employees said they don't mind a break from the daily grind.

"It's kind of nice to have the summer off," said Leanna Pulizzi, 24, of Hansen. "I don't have any problems with it. I'd kind of like to have the summer off."

"In this kind of job you have to be prepared for layoffs," Pablo Ortiz said.

Universal Frozen is owned by Milwaukee, Wis., Universal Foods. It moved into the frozen-food business, and Twin Falls, when it bought Idaho Frozen Foods in 1985.

Persian Gulf War advisers receive medals

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush on Wednesday bestowed the Presidential Medal of Freedom on Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf and Colin Powell in thanks for their leadership during a Persian Gulf War.

Bush also gave the Medal of Freedom to three of his top advisers — Secretary of State James A. Baker III, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and national security adviser Brent Scowcroft, who professed astonishment when he sprung the award on them during an East Room ceremony.

Bush also conferred the Presidential Citizens' Medal on eight key aides who formed the core policy group developing the administration strategy during the Persian Gulf crisis.

Presenting the awards on the eve of July 4, Bush drew a parallel between the Gulf war and the War of Independence.

"Like that early battle, Desert Storm marks another turning point in America's destiny. The young men and women we've welcomed home from the gulf return to a nation far different than the one they left. They come home to a country that is confident and proud, an America that is sure of itself and strong, an America other nations look to for leadership." Bush told the award recipients who gathered with their families and administration officials for the awards ceremony.

Bush said the war gave the United States "a new-found credibility around the world. Desert Storm proved once more that America's strength of character begins in the heart of every individual."

Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was honored in the civilian room accompanying his medal as "a deft manager and forthright counselor" who "personifies the ideal of the soldier-statesman."

Schwarzkopf, commander of the U.S.-led coalition against Iraq, was cited as one of history's "great commanders."

Baker, Cheney and Scowcroft said they did not know they also would receive medals until Bush announced it at the end of Wednesday's ceremony.

Bush's press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, said the president wanted to surprise them.

"They kept it pretty tight, no leaks," a beaming Baker said after the ceremony.

"I was astonished. I was proud of everybody," said Scowcroft.

"The president never told me," Cheney said. "It's a very special award, special coming from this president."

The recipients of the Presidential Citizens Medal were Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger and Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald J. Atwood, and the members of the group nicknamed the "Small Group" of six who sometimes met several times daily during the Gulf crisis: Deputy National Security Adviser Robert M. Gates, whom Bush has nominated to head the Central Intelligence Agency; Richard N. Haass, a special presidential assistant for Middle East affairs; Admiral David E. Jeremiah, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs; Richard J. Kerr, deputy director of the CIA; Robert M. Kimmit, under secretary of state for political affairs, and Paul D. Wolfowitz, under secretary of defense for policy.

President George Bush offers his glasses to wife Barbara as she peers upward, apparently having difficulty in pinning on Gen. Colin Powell's Presidential Medal of Freedom.

$100,000 staff members defend pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 80 House aides have higher salaries than the $101,900 paid to senators, but they say the pay is merely comparable to that of skilled employees outside government.

Attention was focused on the high-paid aides after Roll Call, a biweekly newspaper covering Capitol Hill, published a survey showing that 130 House members draw six-figure incomes and at least 81 earn more than senators.

Many of the high earners are lawyers. Only a small proportion of the House's 12,100 employees earn top dollar. Salaries are usually much more modest, particularly for lower-level workers.

David Meade, the House legislative counsel, said lawyers in his office are not overpaid if judged by salaries the legal profession commands in the nation's capital, a city with a relatively high cost of living.

"I've seen people walk out of here to a private firm and earn two to three times as much," said Meade, who makes $115,092. "We've got some very skilled lawyers."

The House voted itself a pay raise in 1989, effective in January 1991. Members now earn $125,101 annually, compared with the $101,900 paid to senators.

Because House aides' salaries are linked to their bosses' pay, top House aides in the leadership and on committee staffs can earn up to $115,092. Aides on House members' personal staffs can make $101,331.

Senate staffers have a $97,359 limit.

While they earn more, House members and staffers are barred from accepting money for giving speeches. Senators, on the other hand, can accept $23,680 yearly. And Senate staffers traditionally have an limit on honoraria, according to the Senate Ethics Committee.

Lugar favors strike at Iraq

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., Wednesday advocated the use of military force against Saddam Hussein if he does not allow the United Nations to inspect weapons facilities in which Iraq is allegedly developing nuclear technology.

"Either the U.N. has full access or there will be an attack on Iraq of military character... what is going on now is unacceptable," Lugar said.

His remarks came Wednesday during a wide-ranging press conference, held one week after Iraqi soldiers fired warning shots at United Nations representatives inspecting nuclear facilities.

New Home Sales

Analysts see rough recovery

WASHINGTON (AP) — New home sales sank 3.3 percent in May, the second straight decline, according to a government report on Wednesday which showed the recovery from the housing recession much weaker than first thought.

"We're seeing continued signs of a slow recovery," said economist Kermit Baker of Cahners, Economics, a Newton, Mass., forecasting service. "We're going to see a few bumps along the way."

Most analysts discounted the possibility of a "double dip" recession in which the housing industry sinks back into a hole after a period of recovery.

The Departments of Commerce and of Housing and Urban Development said sales of single-family homes totaled a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 474,000 units, down from 490,000 a month earlier.

And the departments said their earlier estimates for February, March and April were not as strong as they first reported.

Sales in February rose 17.9 percent rather than the 18.1 percent reported earlier. March sales advanced just 0.6 percent rather than 1.0 percent, and April sales actually fell 0.2 percent rather than climbing 1.2 percent.

Still, analysts maintained their belief the housing recession bottomed in January, when new home sales plummeted 10.8 percent to a 414,000 rate, the lowest since the 1981-82 recession.

January also was the low point for housing starts, which fell that month to an annual rate of 847,000, the lowest since an 843,000 rate in the previous recession.

New home sales for the first five months of the year were 16.1 percent below those of the same period of last year. The seasonally adjusted estimate of new houses for sales at the end of May was 301,000, a 7.8 month supply at the current sales rate.

The median price of a new home in May was $121,900, up 1.6 percent from April. The median price means half of the homes cost more and half cost less.

Regionally, the Midwest posted the only sales gain, up 21.6 percent to an annual rate of 107,000 units. That was nearly twice the 11.1 percent drop a month earlier.

But sales fell 13.0 percent to 187,000 units in the South following a 5.9 percent gain in April. They were down 6.7 percent to 56,000 units in the Northeast, where they soared 36.4 percent a month earlier. And they were up 0.8 percent to 125,000 units in the West on top of a 11.3 percent drop the previous month.

NEA flunks Bush for education role

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The head of the nation's largest teacher union says George Bush flunks as education president, but says the president has a chance to boost his grade by endorsing a children's "Bill of Rights."

"Children don't vote, but they ought to have rights just like we have," said Keith Geiger, president of the National Education Association. Geiger plans to spell out those rights Thursday in his opening address at the union's convention.

The proposed rights, to be unveiled at a ceremony marking the bicentennial of the Bill of Rights, would guarantee adequate health care, nutrition and a sound education for all children. Geiger said in an interview before the start of the four-day gathering of about 8,500 teacher delegates.

Price too high to protect spotted owl, timber industry poll states

WASHINGTON (AP) — A majority of people in the Pacific Northwest believes the potential loss of jobs is too great a price to pay for protecting the northern spotted owl and old-growth timber, according to a poll released Wednesday by a timber industry group.

The poll sponsored by the Timber Industry Labor Management Committee also found that resolving the controversy over the spotted owl came in fourth when people were asked which, of a list of problems, was the most important one for officials to solve first.

Improving public education was first, with 37 percent, followed by protecting jobs and reducing unemployment at 19 percent. Balancing the state budget was next at 14, followed by the spotted owl at 12.

The telephone survey of 600 adults in Washington and Oregon was conducted by Cambridge Reports of Cambridge, Mass., by telephone from June 20-23. The margin of error was 4 percentage points.

Those surveyed were asked: "To protect the spotted owl and old-growth timber, is the potential loss of jobs for people in the forest products and related industries an acceptable risk for you, or not?"

Fifty-four percent said no, 37 percent yes and 9 percent not sure.

The Fish and Wildlife Service is working on plans to set aside 11.6 million acres of forests in three Northwest states as owl habitat.

Risk of AIDS-tainted blood transfusion 1 in 61,000, study shows

BOSTON (AP) — The chance that AIDS-tainted blood donation will slip through blood bank screening tests is about one in 61,000 in San Francisco, the city with the nation's highest AIDS rate, a study shows. The researchers speculate that the risk of getting AIDS from a blood transfusion is probably even lower in areas where the virus is substantially less common. The study was conducted to see how often donations are contaminated by "silent infections," bigged from people who carry the AIDS virus but do not have telltale antibodies that reveal the infection. The risk of catching AIDS during transfusions has fallen dramatically since scientists developed tests to quickly reveal the presence of HIV-1, the AIDS virus, but such accidents occasionally happen. "Silent HIV-1 infections are exceedingly rare among screened blood donors," the researchers wrote, "so the current risk of HIV-1 transmission from blood transfusions, even in high-prevalence metropolitan areas, is extremely low."

The study was conducted by Dr. Michael P. Busch and colleagues from the University of California, San Francisco. It was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. The researchers analyzed 76,500 blood donations made in the Bay Area.

Gulf war prompts parade

NEWTON, Iowa (AP) — It took a desert war and encouragement from President Bush, but folks in Newton are preparing their first Fourth of July parade in at least 25 years. There will be a band, 50 to 60 floats, balloons, color guards and lots of red, white and blue.

A real estate company has enlisted the Boy Scouts to help plant 2,000 miniature American flags along the one-mile parade route. The Chamber of Commerce offered about 2,000 free posters reading "Welcome home troops" along with an American flag. These are all gone.

Much of the hoopla is for the 90 or so Jasper County troops who served in the Persian Gulf War. But it's also to honor other veterans — primarily those who were in Korea and Vietnam — who never got a parade when they came home.

"Without a doubt the Persian Gulf War and the return of those service people has spearheaded all this," Mayor Alvin Borchers said. "But this is going to be a day where we're going to recognize many, many others who haven't been given their due. Maybe it's high time they did," he said.

Vietnam veterans are hurrying to get their float ready. It's a helicopter, made to one-quarter scale from napkins, chicken wire and wood, in front of a replica of the Vietnam Memorial wall in Washington. The front and rear rotors will be made from the 1960s and '70s will blast from a tape player.

On the float are camouflaged packs, canteens, boots and ammunition boxes.

Apple, IBM will share technology

NEW YORK (AP) — Apple Computer and IBM, historic antagonists in the computer industry, officially ended that bitter relationship Wednesday with a broad agreement on technology sharing. Breaking their silence after weeks of speculation, Apple and International Business Machines Corp. announced general principles of the agreement, which will combine the strengths of each computer design into existing and future products.

Apple's stock jumped 12.5 cents on the news to $47.50 nationwide, over-the-counter trading this morning. IBM's stock fell 37.5 cents a share to $98.75 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The agreement amounts to a friendship treaty between the two superpowers in the computer industry, which has been particularly hurt by the recession. Both companies have reported sharply lower earnings recently, trimmed their work forces and promoted lower-priced machines to boost sales.

Perhaps more important, the alliance could herald what industry analysts call an era of easy-to-use computers, resulting from the marketing pre-eminence of IBM and the creativity of Apple, which "revolutionized personal computers with its user-friendly Macintosh machines."

Apple and IBM said the agreement calls for a joint venture in computer software aimed at simplifying programming industrywide; integration of Apple's highly successful desktop computer design into IBM systems; the design and application of powerful new computer-chips provided by Motorola Inc.; and the promotion of software for multimedia technology, one of the fastest growing segments of computers.

In a statement, the companies said definitive contracts between the two are expected to be signed later this year and further details would be released later. Products resulting from the deal should reach the market over the next two or three years, the statement said.

Analysts said the software and chip elements of the agreement were particularly significant because they pose a formidable challenge to the current leaders. Microsoft Corp. dominates the market in software, and Intel Corp. dominates in chips, the basic components of a computer.

Saudis claim to have beaten Iraqi oil slick

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Saudi Arabia declared victory Wednesday over the black sludge that has fouled its coast the past five months, saying the oil-trapler hoses in the final days of the Gulf War had all disappeared. Still, Saudi Arabia and neighboring Bahrain will keep some fiber-glass booms afloat around several desalination plants and waterside industries as a precautionary measure. No one knows for sure how much oil spilled into the Persian Gulf when Iraqi troops opened the valves of Kuwait's Sea Island Terminal during the war. Oil also leaked heavily from tankers off the coastal town of Khafji and from other Kuwaiti and Iraqi oil facilities damaged in the hostilities. "It's a victory," said Abdul-Wahab al-Dakak of the kingdom's Meteorology and Environmental Protection Administration. "We certainly have vanquished the slick." At the height of the war, experts estimated 11 million barrels of oil gushed into the gulf. But later air and sea investigations scaled the figure back to a still-devastating 3.5 million barrels. The 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill — America's worst — involved about 300,000 barrels. The oil combat operation was a multinational effort that drew teams from the United States, Japan, the Netherlands, Australia, Germany, Norway and Britain. Ahmed al-Aamri, another Saudi environmental official, said 2 million barrels of "weathered" oil had been mopped up. In weathered oil, lighter components of the substance have evaporated. Al-Aamri said the Saudis deployed 21 skimming boats around the coast for stray oil patches. Much cleanup work remains to be done.

Drug cartel vows to stop terrorism

BOGOTA, Colombia — The Medellin drug cartel announced Wednesday that it is ending its bloody terrorist campaign against the government.

The cartel is led by Pablo Escobar, who surrendered to authorities two weeks ago.

In a statement, the cartel said it had decided to end its attacks because of a constitutional ban on extradition. In a final vote earlier this week, an assembly that is rewriting the constitution rejected the practice of sending drug suspects to face charges in the United States.

"In light of the determination ... by the national constitutional assembly, we have decided to dismantle our entire military organization," said the statement issued by the Extraditables, as members of the cartel call themselves.

Traffickers have fought for years to guarantee that, if arrested, they would be tried in Colombia, where they have been able to bribe, threaten and kill judges.

Lebanese army tightens grip on PLO

SIDON, Lebanon — The Lebanese army tightened its noose around the PLO's main base Wednesday, trying to restore a measure of control in southern Lebanon for the first time since civil war broke out 16 years ago.

Palestinian guerrillas resisted, responding to army tank and artillery fire with mortars and multi-barreled rocket launchers.

Hundreds of Palestinian women and children fled the Mich Mich and Bin el-Hilweh refugee camps on Sidon's eastern edge, where an estimated 5,000 Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas were in. The camps are home to about 60,000 refugees.

A Lebanese officer directing troops near the camp said the guerrillas were "totally surrounded, with all escape exits blocked." He insisted his name not be used.

Rabin again seeks to unseat leader

JERUSALEM — Former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has announced that he will again seek to unseat Shimon Peres as leader of the center-left Labor Party.

"The time has come for the person who has failed in leading the Labor Party to initiate party elections for a new chairman within next six months," Rabin said Wednesday.

Rabin blames party leader Peres for Labor's failure to gain the government in the past four elections.

In the last coalition government formed by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of the right-wing Likud bloc in 1988, Rabin served as defense minister.

He is a former general and was army chief of staff during the 1967 Middle East war.

Danish police ticket cyclists, fine $21

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — Stalking their prey in plain clothes, police issued traffic tickets to dozens of bicycle riders Wednesday in what Danes call the Great Summer Bicycle Campaign.

"We must stop the cyclists' traffic terror," said Poul Eefsen, head of the Danish police.

Police arrested and fined out $21 fines to 67 downtown Copenhagen bicyclers in one hour. Offenses included running red lights, riding the wrong way on a one-way street, zigzagging on pedestrian paths and taking shortcuts through parks.

Three-quarters of Copenhagen's 4 million residents own bicycles and 300,000 of them use bicycles daily, says the Danish Cyclist Federation, which supports the police campaign.

Police recover stolen marble busts

ROME — Police on Wednesday recovered five stolen 15th-century marble busts shortly before they were to be shipped to Switzerland.

Officials said the busts of popes and cardinals, stolen from San Salvatore in Lauro church in historic Rome on Jan. 31, were packed and ready for shipment at a Rome railroad station. The works are considered priceless.

Investigators said the works were believed destined for an antiques dealer in Switzerland. An art dealer from Naples was reportedly under questioning.

Thousands flee as volcano erupts

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The Kariakoo volcano on the Indian Ocean island of Grand Comore spewed volcanic ash, and there were signs lava might overflow the crater rim, a news report said Wednesday.

Thousands of people fled their homes Tuesday night as the volcano became active for the first time in 14 years, the independent South African Press Association reported from Grand Comore, the largest of the three islands that make up the Comoros Republic. No damage or injuries were reported.

A race-based nomination for an imperfect society

Judge Clarence Thomas is a walking contradiction, and the coming fight over his Supreme Court nomination challenges the consciences of liberal and conservative alike.

Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch summed up the liberals' quandary perfectly: "Anyone who opposes him is taking him on because they favor quotas and numerical preferences."

But the Utah Republican ignored the second edge of his rhetorical sword: Anyone who supports Thomas is endorsing a quota of sorts — the quota that says one-ninth of our Supreme Court justices shall be black.

Let's face it: If Thomas were white, he probably would not have made the president's short list.

The sublime symbolism of Thomas' bootstrap rise to success obviously appealed to Bush. Thomas is an African-American who lifted himself from bleakness and poverty, and having made it, rejects the liberals' cherished nostrum of affirmative action.

Thomas believes in advancement based on merit, and he is refreshingly right. Yet his own blackness has had much to do with his success.

Why, for instance, did President Reagan choose the youthful Thomas a decade ago to head the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission?

Why, 18 months ago, did Bush elevate him to a federal appellate bench, even though Thomas previously had not presided over so much as traffic court?

And why, with the white-label profession to choose from, does Bush believe that the best candidate for the nation's highest court is a 43-year-old former bureaucrat with barely a year of judicial experience?

Was race never a factor? Bush certainly understands the contradiction. Probably, as he lies in his White House bed late at night, he smiles sardonically at the irony of what he has done.

He has fought fire with fire, and no matter how much the liberals may despise the maneuver, they will be hard-pressed to counter it.

As Benjamin Hooks of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People noted, "we have to compare what might happen if we go against him and he doesn't make it, who will the president appoint?"

Except for Thomas' symbolic value to Bush, the answer doesn't really matter. Whoever Bush might appoint would be much like Thomas.

The appointee might be white or perhaps Hispanic. The appointee might be a woman. But the appointee would still be a color-tinted.

That near-certainty makes all the speculation about Thomas' views on abortion largely pointless. As much as we might wish for a pro-choice nominee, Bush will not oblige.

In fact, if the mysterious Justice David Souter turns out to be the fifth pro-life vote, the current nomination will be irrelevant to that issue. In all likelihood, Roe vs. Wade is doomed, either by Thomas or without him.

Still, on abortion as on countless other issues, Thomas can be expected to be a conservative member of a strengthening conservative majority. And, as the court's first Baby Boomer, he easily could be casting conservative votes well into the 21st century.

It's significant that a young conservative will fill the seat of Thurgood Marshall. The nation's first black justice was both a member and a symbol of a left-leaning court that has helped propel the nation's social progress in recent decades.

During that time, the court often has been more liberal than the presidents and Congresses with whom it has shared power. For the 1990s and beyond, it's easy to foresee a conservative court breaking a more liberal Congress.

Such a shift is consistent with the checks and balances that our Constitution's framers intended. It also seems consistent with the ambivalent mindsets of American voters, who keep electing Democratic Congresses and Republican presidents.

Someday, perhaps, America will realize Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream of a society in which character counts for everything and skin color counts for nothing. But that society is not yet with us.

Realpolitik decreed that Bush should pick an African-American, and so he picked one to his own liking.

Who knows whether Thomas will be a good justice? His record indicates he will be at least an adequate one. He has both sharpness of mind and consistency of principle.

Considering that his selection had more to do with politics than with judicial fitness, that's as much as anyone can ask. We expect that he'll be confirmed, and we expect that he'll turn out right.

Watch that parade with a grain of salt

"This is the first time in 17 years that we'll be away on the Fourth of July," said a friend in town who was leaving for vacation. "We'll miss the parade, but with all the hype that's just as well."

The woman is a straight-arrow, church-going Sunday American. She has a son in the military. But like many people, she's had it with the country's seemingly incessant celebration of the Persian Gulf War.

"Enough with the parades," they say, and when Washington and New York sponsored those twin "anything you can do we can do better" extravaganzas they couldn't watch. "There is reticence in the faces of the soldiers sometimes, too, as the media invade yet another family gathering to photograph The Returning Hero.

"Please," say the eyes in the pictures. "I had a buddy who was killed. I was doing my job."

So, what is going on with us and the hoopla surrounding that short war that doesn't seem to be over?

Little Lahn-Euillan Vietnam. We feel so badly as a country for the shabby treatment we gave the Vietnam soldier that we are overcompensating and trying to make sure that every single military person feels loved this time around.

It's the American way. Hope is our middle name. United (Dope) States. A feeling becomes a fact becomes a myth. Overnight. All the time.

We define the present by the past. And we define the past by the present.

Susan Trausch

looking back we see not only Vietnam, but Tojo and Hitler. We feel pride as well as guilt, even though we know the world's too complex for good guys and bad guys anymore. VE Day. VJ Day. Norman Schwarzkopf!

Politicians make hay of the whole emotional bundle, of course. That's also the American way. A politician who doesn't know how to win points for something he or she thinks is popular should probably go into horticulture.

But I think a lot of us would feel better on our respective parade routes tomorrow if we knew everybody was taking time to remember how scared we were last January. We were, after all, very scared. And a healthy fear is most important in today's world, no matter what FDR may have said about yesterday's.

President Bush looked strained and tired as he started a war six months ago, and that was good for the country. He seemed to find the decision painful, and so did we.

We also should remember that the oil fields are still burning, that Saddam Hussein is still sneering at us in a country full of human misery, and that the Middle East is still a mess.

Some people feel it's less of a mess than it would have been if we hadn't gone over. Others feel it's more of a mess because we could debate that one forever and probably will. But the point is, war is never simple.

Being aware of the complexities and ambiguities should not dim a Fourth. Quite the contrary. The people who started the American Revolution were not robots. They sweated. They doubted. They argued. They were scared. They had a lot of sleepless nights forming a country.

To hold a flag and cheer our neighbors safely home from the Gulf does not mean we are blind supporters of our leaders or that we believe the United States is an international Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Maybe it just means we're glad to see those neighbors and that we're glad to be here in this particular democracy, crazy as it is.

I will miss my friend today. I hope she hits a parade while she's on vacation. This is the Fourth, after all, and a Fourth without a parade is like a beach ball without air. If hope breaks out, I hope she puts it in perspective.

There is room for all of us on Main Street. We can stand together, think individually, and watch with differing visions. Celebrate them, even.

Isn't that what we've been doing for 215 years?

Dare we rely on Japanese industry?

The same year Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence, Adam Smith published Wealth of Nations. This July 4th our leaders will celebrate our successful struggle for independence. The rest of the year they will insist that independence is an outdated concept in a planetary economy.

In the 1990s protection has become a dirty word, but on this July 4th we might recall that for our American colonists and yes, even for Adam Smith, the godfather of capitalism, safeguarding a nation's capacity to defend itself was a necessary condition for political independence.

The government of no great nation, Smith insisted, "even though it could get warships more cheaply built, or guns and ammunition more cheaply manufactured, abroad than at home, and could thereby relieve its own taxpayers, would adopt this course, except in some minor degree. Without dockyards and arsenals of its own, it would feel itself too dependent on the amity of foreign nations, and at the mercy of any large combination of hostile powers."

Smith and Jefferson would both have been incredulous at the recent decision by the Pentagon to buy sophisticated components from the cheapest sources, even if that means becoming dependent on foreign suppliers.

The White House insists that buying cheap should be our overriding objective, regardless of the cost to our technological independence. Budget Director Richard Darman, perhaps the third most powerful person in Washington behind George Bush and John Sununu, chided those who worried that Japan's dumping of underpriced semiconductors within our borders could endanger our own industrial capacity.

"Why do we want a semi-conductor industry?" Darman wondered.

"What's wrong with dumping? It is a gift to chip users because they can get cheap chips. If our guys can't back it, let them go."

Michael Boskin, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, weighed into the debate with a theory of economic development that makes one wonder if the Peter Principle might not be at work here.

"Potato chips, semiconductor chips — what is the difference?" Boskin asked. "They are all chips. A hundred dollars worth of one or a hundred dollars worth of the other is still a hundred dollars."

To which a student of Professor Boskin might well respond, "So's a hundred dollars worth of heroin."

July 4th, of course, is not a holiday in Japan. But Jefferson and Smith might feel more comfortable with Japan's industrial policy than our own. As James Fallows notes in a recent New York Review of Books article, Japan strives for "kokusan-ka" or technological autonomy. When Japan decided to build the T-2 fighter plane in the mid-1960s, for instance, its projected cost was twice as great as it would have been had it bought a plane from American manufacturers.

As the defense production committee of the Keidanren, Japan's leading big business alliance, observed in the mid-1970s, relying on imported weapons "prevents a nation from adopting actions which oppose the intentions of its supplier." Today, 90 percent of Japanese weapons are produced domestically.

Meanwhile, as Fallows points out, the U.S. military has been applying "a kind of reverse kokusanka policy: each year, a higher proportion of the advanced electronic components in its weapons come from Japan."

Semiconductor chips inside Patriot missiles and most other American smart weapons were housed in ceramic packaging made almost exclusively by Kyocera Co. of Kyoto. Crucial components of the Sparrow guidance system must be imported from Japan.

Thomas Jefferson and Adam Smith fervently believed in the benefits of the marketplace. But for the political and economic revolutionaries of 1776, some things just weren't for sale.

Write to us

The Times-News welcomes letters from readers on subjects of public interest. To make sure your letter is published promptly, here are a few guidelines to remember.

Each letter should include the writer's signature, mailing address and telephone number. Typewritten letters are preferred, because they allow faster handling, with less chance of error.

Letters may be brought to our Twin Falls office, mailed to P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, 83303, or sent by fax to (208)734-5538.

Letters considered libelous, obscene or in bad taste will be rejected, as will material expressing racial, ethnic or religious bigotry.

We do not publish verse or poetry, and we generally remove or limit religious quotations. Articles taken from other publications will not be reprinted.

Because of space constraints, please limit letters to 400 words. Longer letters will be shortened. The Times-News reserves the right to edit all letters.

We look forward to hearing from you!

Listen to ranchers' side

I am very concerned about the Saylor Creek bombing because it affects my whole future. A lot of ranchers run their cattle at Three Creek, like Brazzetti, Simons, Hicks, Blossoms, Swans, Patrieks, and Valle Vista Ranch.

It isn't fair to do this to the ranchers. They don't seem to care what the ranchers think. They don't understand that the ranchers help feed the United States.

A lot of people's homes will be taken if this deal goes through. The next thing you know, they will want to store chemical waste out there. They say if the bombing range doesn't succeed, a lot of people will be out of jobs. But if the bombing range does go through, a lot of people are going to be out of homes.

There are other jobs for the people if the bombing range doesn't go through, but what about the ranchers and others who don't have a lot of money and no way to horses to sell?

The ranchers have a lot of money put into pipelines, fences, cattle guards and pumps. There are water troughs and reservoirs so the cows will have water. But the government and everybody says to save the wildlife, save the land, but they won't even take their own advice.

In my opinion, everyone should leave the ranchland alone. The Congress thinks we are taking money from them, when they are really taking it from us. We are supposedly taking money from them by running our cattle on their range and it costs them nothing. The BLM and Congress are the ones raising the grazing fees.

I think it is very inconsiderate of the Air Force and Congress not to listen to the ranchers' side of the story.

The Congress and the other government big shots are always saying that we should watch what we do with the land and how we use it. Well, you think the Congress and Air Force would have the brains to say, "Hold on a second, think of what we have been telling other people in our state. Why don't we take a little of that advice ourselves?"

I may be only 14 years old, but am old enough to see what will happen if nobody tries to stop the Air Force and Congress. So I hope you will think about this and help me to save the wildlife, rangeland, and ranchers.

Help us stop the good-for-nothing Congress. TINA ROW, Three Creek.

Police escorts do good job

The staff of White Mortuary would like to take this opportunity to thank the police officers of Twin Falls for the courteous and professional manner in which they conduct the escorting of funeral services.

Although the police department doesn't hear the compliments paid them by the family members, we felt you should know that they sincerely appreciate this service. It is nice to know that we live in a community where old-fashioned courtesy still exists.

Thank you from all of us and from all the families we serve. LERRY AND SUNDA HOLMAN, JES C. HARPER.

Evans says some getting away with abuse

BOISE (AP) — Some Idaho teachers have been allowed to move to other public schools after being accused of molesting children, state Superintendent of Public Instruction Jerry Evans says.

Resignations were quietly accepted. Police weren't alerted.

But Evans said he aims to stop it from happening again.

"I'd hate to say there's some passing of these people around, but I believe it has happened," said Evans, a former teacher and principal now in his fourth term as state schools chief.

"They've sort of passed into the darkness without anybody noticing... I don't know how many of these cases have been ignored or tolerated, or dealt with by letting someone move on. There just aren't any records or numbers."

The Idaho Education Association, which represents teachers, said Tuesday that it wasn't aware of specific examples of teachers moving on to other schools after being accused of molesting children.

"We believe that teachers have the obligation to abide by the highest moral and ethical standards," IEA Associate Executive Director Jim Shackelford said.

Shocked by a recent rash of sexual-abuse charges against Idaho educators, including a former Horseshoe Bend School District superintendent, Evans has ordered specialized training for top school officials in August.

District superintendents meeting in Boise will be reminded of the state's mandatory reporting law. It requires teachers and school officials with "reasonable suspicion" to pass on child-molestation allegations to authorities, within 24 hours.

Deputy Attorney General Elaine Eberhardt

Maki said failing to report suspected child molestation exposes school officials to criminal prosecution and their districts to multimillion-dollar negligence lawsuits.

In an interview Monday, Evans wouldn't name school districts or officials who have failed to disclose abuse allegations to authorities.

The schools chief hopes the August training, to be presided over by the Ada County prosecutor's office, will filter through the ranks.

"School districts are going to have to get much more aggressive in watching for any kind of inappropriate conduct between teachers and students," Ada County Prosecutor Greg Bower said.

Authorities say about a half-dozen current child-abuse prosecutions involve Idaho educators. Three are in southwestern Idaho alone.

Boise names homeless director

BOISE (AP) — A former priest at St. Michael's Episcopal Cathedral is Boise's first coordinator of services for the homeless.

Bill Brown, 43, took the job Monday, the city's personnel office confirmed Tuesday. Estimates of the number of homeless people in Boise range up to 3,000.

"He's great," said Steve Bertoglio, executive director of the Community Contribution Center, which distributes clothing and household goods to the homeless.

"He has vast experience with the homeless population and at-risk population," he said. "Bill was very involved in the early programs that dealt with the homeless and instrumental in starting soup kitchens in the early '80s," said Ken Monroe, manager of El-Ada Community Action Agency Inc.

Monroe and Bertoglio were on a committee that interviewed three finalists, including Brown.

Hospital, police plan ways to handle violent persons

POCATELLO (AP) — Aspen Crest Psychiatric Hospital in Pocatello has agreed to take in violent mental patients from police, but will transfer them to State Hospital South or to the local jail if they endanger hospital staff, company officials say.

The latter would only be an option if the person commits a serious crime, such as physical assault, according to a "protective custody" agreement drawn up between police, the hospital and Idaho Health and Welfare personnel.

Starting this week, police no longer can immediately take mentally ill people who have committed no crimes to county jails.

The state law now specifies those people must be taken to a psychiatric facility or hospital for evaluation and treatment.

While Blaine County has had an arrangement with Aspen Crest for the temporary holding of such patients for several months, it balked at accepting violent people, claiming it did not have the staff to handle such individuals.

Under the revised agreement, expected to be signed this week, the hospital agreed to accept such patients unless they refused to be medicated, or posed a danger to themselves or others.

Then they may be sent to State Hospital South in Blufffoot or to a local jail.

Hospital South Administrator Stephen Weeg noted that while police do not want to "trump up" a charge to incarcerate them, he said there are legitimate charges that could be filed against someone who is extremely violent and threatening someone's safety.

"If the person tries to kill a staff member, that certainly could be seen as attempted murder," Weeg said.

Arrested driver steals squad car

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A man arrested for drunken driving early Wednesday worked his way out of a police restraint and then escaped in the squad car he had been locked in.

A manhunt was immediately launched in the Idaho Falls area, and Idaho State Police Lt. Danny Bunderson refused to identify the suspect while he remained at large.

Bunderson said Capt. Eric Anderson stopped the man just north of Idaho Falls. Anderson handcuffed the suspect, secured him with a restraining belt in the back seat and then locked the doors of the idling squad car while he inspected the man's car.

The man apparently got his hands in front of him, loosened the restraint, climbed into the front seat and took off, Bunderson said.

A moderately limber person would have no trouble getting the cuffs around his own neck, he said, and "I'm sure this guy was real flexible."

The suspect abandoned the squad car about two miles from the scene of the arrest.

Ex-school trustee McNees dies at 55

The Times-News
TWIN FALLS — Lenore McNees, a former Twin Falls businesswoman and homemaker, died at her daughter's home in Pocatello Monday night, a few weeks after leaving the Twin Falls School Board.
 McNees, 55, was appointed to the board in 1988, but did not seek re-election to her Zone 1 seat in May. Contractor David Sassa was elected to succeed her, but her term did not officially expire until last Sunday.

 Cause of death was a brain tumor.
 McNees, who ran unsuccessfully for the School Board in 1988, was appointed shortly thereafter to replace Lorrie Wilkes.
 "She was a very nice lady who wanted to be involved in School District affairs and was involved in School District affairs," said Board Chairman Steve Tolman. "She will be missed. Tolman said McNees was concerned about kids" and "a very compassionate woman."

 McNees, a Los Angeles native who took courses in drafting and design at Pasadena, Calif., City College, was married for 33 years to Dr. Jack McNees, who served on the Twin Falls School Board in the early 1980s. They were later divorced.

She co-owned and operated the English House in downtown Twin Falls for four years.
 McNees is survived by two sons and two daughters.
 Funeral services are scheduled for Saturday at 2 p.m. at the First Presbyterian Church in Twin Falls. Memorials may be given to the Twin Falls School District.

Shelter has reduced prices for older citizens

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls animal shelter has 50 pets to offer at reduced prices for people in their 50s or older. Shelter spokeswoman Lennie Simmonds said The Junior Club raised $500 to help sell the animals at a reduced rate.
 The pets would be ideal for those who want companionship, Simmonds said.
 Those interested should contact the Animal Shelter.

2 Mexican nationals were sentenced this week in court

TWIN FALLS — Two Mexican nationals involved in a drug case that nearly went sour for local law enforcement officials in April were sentenced in 5th District Court this week.
 Manuel Olivias, who also uses the last name Gonzalez, was sentenced Wednesday to five years in prison for possession of cocaine with the intent to deliver. High District Judge Daniel Mechl ordered Olivias, 24, to spend at least two years in prison before he is eligible for parole. When he gets out of prison, Olivias will be deported, said Twin Falls County Prosecutor Frank Nichols.
 Drug enforcement agents arrested Olivias, fellow Mexican national Jesus Lopez Barraza and Ramon Valdez of Filmore in April and charged all three with numerous drug-related offenses. Barraza and Olivias later pleaded guilty to drug possession with the intent to deliver.

Olivias agreed to cooperate with prosecutors in exchange for a recommendation that he be deported without serving jail time, Nichols said. At Valdez's preliminary hearing, however, Olivias didn't give the testimony prosecutors expected and charges against Valdez had to be dropped. Nichols then withdrew his offer to Olivias, who will now serve prison time unless the case is appealed.

Barraza was sentenced to three to 10 years in prison on Monday, but Mechl suspended that sentence in favor of deportation and 10 years probation. If Barraza is returned to his home in Mexico within 10 years, he will have to serve the jail time.

Hauling trash? County's landfills closed till Friday

TWIN FALLS — People who want to haul trash to Twin Falls County landfills today must wait until Friday.
 The county's three landfills, one west of Buhl, another west of Murtaugh and the main one south of Twin Falls, will close today for the July 4 holiday and will reopen Friday for regular weekday summer hours, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.
 The landfills are open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Saturdays and noon to 4:30 p.m. on Sundays, according to news release from the county solid waste department.

City employees to have 4-day weekend starting today

TWIN FALLS — The City of Twin Falls offices will close for business today and Friday. City Manager Tom Courtney said employees elected to take a vacation day on Friday to make a four-day weekend. Emergency services will operate even though other city offices are closed, Courtney said.

Evening with Mark Twain scheduled for next 2 days

GLENN'S FERRY — An Evening with Mark Twain, part of the Three Island Crossing State Park observation of Independence Day weekend, is scheduled Friday and Saturday nights at the park's amphitheater.
 The performances are slated for 7 p.m. both nights. A historical walking tour of the park is scheduled for tonight at 7 p.m., beginning at the amphitheater.
 Another tour is scheduled for Sunday night at 7.

Meeting for service providers set at Obchain Building

TWIN FALLS — A meeting of Twin Falls-area service providers has been scheduled for July 12 at the Obchain Building.
 The session, scheduled for 9:30 a.m., will be sponsored by the South Central Community Action Agency.
 Representatives of groups and agencies that provides human services are invited to session. Further information can be obtained by phoning the community action agency office at 333-9351.

Rockets' red glare takes care — and money

TWIN FALLS — Ever wondered what's inside a skyrocket or how firefighters make it roar into the sky?
 If so, read on.
 And tonight's "oohs" and "ahs" accompany the annual fireworks show at the College of Southern Idaho, impress your friends and family by knowing all the ins-and-outs of the Fourth of July spectacular.
 Start by learning that most of the fireworks in this show came from China, although a few of the explosives scheduled to be detonated at tonight's 10:15 performance are domestic. Universal Frozen Foods bought about $7,000 worth for a group of volunteer Twin Falls firefighters.

Play it safe when handling pyrotechnics

The Times-News
TWIN FALLS — For those who prefer to do-it-yourself pyrotechnics, here are a few tips for surviving the Fourth of July with fingers and hearing intact:
 • Never allow young children to handle fireworks, not even sparklers, which can burn as hot as 2,000 degrees. Older children should be permitted to use fireworks only with adult supervision.
 • Light fireworks outdoors in a clear area away from houses, dry-leaves or grass, and flammable materials such as gasoline and charcoal lighter fluid.
 • Keep a bucket of water nearby for emergencies and for wetting down fireworks that do not ignite.
 • Do not try to relight or handle malfunctioning fireworks. Soak them with water and then discard them.
 • Be sure other people are out of range before lighting fireworks.
 • Never ignite fireworks in a container, especially glass or metal.
 • Keep fireworks off public land. If you're caught using them on Bureau of Land Management or Forest Service-administered land, you'll face a hefty fine.

Towns feeling jittery over 1% initiative

Twin Falls may lose 26% with initiative passage

By Phil Sabm
Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS — In the best of all possible worlds, Twin Falls, Public Safety Director Paul Du Fresne would hire six new police officers this year.
 But with Idaho residents circulating a petition to limit property taxes to 1 percent of market value, now is not the best of all possible times to hire six officers.
 In fact, Du Fresne is bracing for cutbacks if the 1 percent initiative passes.
 "The police and fire departments are the biggest employers in the city (government). It obviously could affect us," Du Fresne said.
 The Association of Idaho Cities predicts Twin Falls city government could lose $1.25 million, 26 percent of its budget — if the 1 percent initiative gets on the November 1992 ballot and is approved by voters. If the cuts run that deep, even police and fire protection could suffer.
 Mayor Tom Condie said other departments — building inspection, streets, recreation, and administration, for example — would be cut first.
 "Fire and police would be the last to feel the cuts. But we definitely would have to make some choices there," Condie said.
 Sponsors have about half the 32,000 signatures they need to put it on the ballot. They have another year to conclude their petition drive.

 Councilman Gale Kleinkopf said the city's entire general fund would suffer if the initiative passes. Recreation and streets would be among the first services cut — police and fire the last, he said.
 As taxpayers, Condie and Kleinkopf say they understand the move to reduce property taxes. But as elected officials, he both say the 1 percent initiative is the wrong approach because it addresses only half the issue — it reduces property taxes but leaves cities struggling for ways to make up revenues or cut services.
 "The cities had a better idea last year with the local-option tax," Kleinkopf said.
 The Association of Idaho Cities tried to push a bill through last year's Legislature giving residents the opportunity to vote on a local-option sales tax — tied to property tax reduction — but the measure never cleared the Idaho House of Representatives.
 A number of Idaho cities favor a local-option tax of 1 or 2 cents that would be returned to cities or counties where the sales take place. This would be a fair way to tax people because it spreads the burden among many users, not just property owners, city officials have said.
 But counties have been slow to support a local-option tax and some smaller cities say the tax would be unfair to towns lacking the commercial base of places such as Twin Falls.
 The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce has not yet taken an official position on the 1 percent initiative, executive director Kent Just said.
 "We're awfully concerned about

Jerome council will draft 2 different budgets

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent
JEROME — It's not that the Jerome City Council is nervous about the prospect of the 1 percent initiative becoming law, but it's nervous about its options nonetheless.
 The council voted Tuesday night to prepare two alternative budgets for next fiscal year to show the effects if Idaho voters approve the tax-crunching proposal.
 "We need to educate the public and people need to contact their legislators," said City Administrator Larry Paine.
 The city will come up with one set of budget figures that assumes tax revenues will not be reduced and a second to show the effect on services if the 1 percent initiative becomes law in 1992.
 If approved, the 1 percent initiative would limit property taxes to 1 percent of market value. Sponsors need about 32,000 signatures to get the measure on the November 1992 ballot; they have about half that many so far.
 Jerome would lose $2,241,616 if the 1 percent initiative passes, but "we don't want to cry wolf," Paine said.
 Roughly 24 other Idaho cities would lose more than Jerome, Paine told the council.
 "Some counties, like Blaine, won't lose any because of the way they structured their ad valorem tax," he said.
 Services that would suffer most from passage of the 1 percent initiative would be library, parks, administration and to some extent the street department, Paine said.

 "We've spent a lot on administration, but look where we've come in the past four years," said City Councilman Rocky Jackson.
 A budget work session was scheduled for July 11 at 7 p.m. in the City Hall conference room.
 In other business:
 • Postponed until its next meeting a decision on whether to buy equipment to eliminate odor from the waste water lift station south of Jerome.
 The smell has brought complaints from the Keebler Co. and bike riders, plant supervisor Wilford Taylor said.
 "We need to do something about the odor before they protest legally," he said.
 • Unanimously approved an agreement that will make landlords responsible for payment of water and sewer services when renters vacate the property.
 Landlords would not be required to go to the current practice. With the new regulation, a deposit would be required for each piece of property owned by a landlord.
 • Voted to give city residents the option of paying for utility services on a level-pay basis.
 Appointed Bob Culver acting superintendent of the city water department while Ray Barlett recovers from injuries he sustained in a bicycle-pedestrian accident.
 • Took under advisement a request from Trams for support for $2,000 to support the non-profit organization. The request for funds was based on the number of hearings in the Jerome area.

Faculty urges regents to slow search

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — The Utah State University faculty senate has voted to meet to determine whether the Board of Regents is moving too quickly to replace retiring university President Stanford Cazier.

Meeting will be held July 10 where faculty member can express their concerns.

The meeting will be attended by a member of the regents and a representative of the Office of the Commissioner of Higher Education, who will answer questions about the process, she said.

College professor dies in rafting accident

RONALD, Wash. (AP) — A 46-year-old Sunnyvale woman was killed in a river rafting accident while trying to rescue her two young children from the swift current.

Cuevas Carrera tried first to rescue her children but was trapped underneath the logjam and pinned under water with the raft holding her down.

The water wasn't deep but it was swift and the boat held her under, Wilson said.

Fabiola Cuevas Carrera, a professor at Heritage College in Tappan, was rafting Tuesday with her two children on the Cle Elum River when her daughter Terel fell into the water and was stranded on a logjam.

Wilson said, Fabiola tried to help Terel but then became stranded, Wilson said. Fabiola was rescued by a U.S. Forest Service crew that arrived cut through part of the logjam, and Fred Fabilo Cuevas Carrera about an hour after she had been trapped. Attempts to revive her were unsuccessful, Wilson said.

In the eye of the storm, Symms faces inner turmoil

BOISE (AP) — A suddenly outspoken ex-wife of a criminally charged son, a formidable opponent and critical media may be conspiring to end Sen. Steve Symms' 20-year political career.

in a person, and I was in love with him, and I believed in him — I believed in his words of confidence and so I will campaign with him. And then after the election, he went a different direction.

The Idaho Republican who spent four terms in the House before beating nationally prominent Sen. Frank Church in the 1980 Reagan landslide, has not said yet whether he will run for a third six-year term. He has promised a decision by Labor Day.

Every news conference and interview includes at least one question about his personal life. He brushes them aside.

It is a Republican seat now, and we would like to see Senator Symms there after the 1992 election," Wendy Burnley of the National Republican Senatorial Committee said.

His supporters complain that the media are treating him unfairly. Symms himself has been miffed. The senator is practiced at handling controversy.

Both have been the subject of news stories and scathing editorials throughout Idaho. One headline above an editorial about Symms' treatment of his ex-wife said, "First he duped her, then he dumped her."

Each time, Symms came away politically intact. "I never claimed to anybody that I am perfect," he said recently. "No matter what people have been saying about me, I have never lost sight of my love for Idaho and my love for America. If I run, I am going to win that election."

But in interviews Symms, 53, seems sincerely undecided or, at least, reluctant to commit to what she is signing being a brutal and quite possibly unsuccessful re-election campaign.

He called South African Bishop Desmond Tutu a "phony." His family's wine-making business was accused and cleared of mislabeling Washington and Oregon wine as an Idaho product. He said in 1988 that he had heard rumors of a Kinky Dukakis burning American flag. He lectured a delegation of Soviet women visiting Idaho on the failings of communism.

He has nothing to say about it," spokesman Matt Powselt said. Symms won't talk about his ex-wife because of suggestions that he was unfaithful to his son Dan being indicted for breaking federal immigration laws at the family fruit ranch.

Officials await new study on slag hazards

POCATELLO (AP) — Pocatello-area officials are satisfied with a federal study that says the public in its investigation into the potential hazards of mildly radioactive phosphate slag.

But they want to see the results of an independent Science Advisory Board study that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency study that said radioactive emissions from slag used in pavement did not increase cancer risks. Those results are due later this summer.

Slag from area phosphate processing had been used in southern Idaho for many years.

The EPA last year urged a prohibition on its use as a building material.

Pocatello Mayor Peter Angstadt issued a ban on its use for city streets. He said he was satisfied with the study, but the city intends to carefully scrutinize the upcoming review.

July 12 is the deadline for public involvement on the slag plan.

The city of Chubbuck's street department is still using slag. It has stockpiled to pave and patch roads, but refrains from buying more since the EPA warning.

Chubbuck Mayor John Cotant said he suspects the health fears are exaggerated.

"We're not scientists, so we can't argue with whatever they decide," he said. "But other studies say it's not harmful. We have a very low incidence of cancer in Chubbuck, and we've had people who worked with it every day since the 1940s at FMC and Simplot (phosphate plants) who are perfectly healthy."

Bannock County Commissioner Val Arvas said the county still uses a small amount of slag on its roads and bridges, but would probably stop if the new review backs up the earlier study.

LaRocco raps Craig for oil spill comments

BOISE (AP) — Idaho environmentalists and Democratic Rep. Larry LaRocco criticized Republican Sen. Larry Craig for blaming environmentalists for the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill.

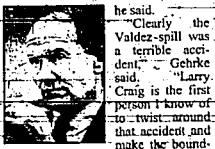

"It's a stretch to blame the environmentalists for an intoxicated captain running (aground)," LaRocco said Tuesday of the spill of 11 million barrels of crude oil that fouled 350 miles of coastline.

The captain of the Exxon Valdez, Joseph Hazelwood, was acquitted on a charge of operating a vessel while intoxicated. He was convicted of negligent discharge of oil.

Craig said Monday that opposition to an Alaska-Canada land pipeline to the contiguous United States forced companies to continue shipping oil in tankers like the Exxon Valdez.

"Had the environmentalists let a pipeline be built, there would never have been a chance for a drunken captain to get his hands on that oil," Craig spokesman John Barclay repeated Tuesday.

But Craig Gehrke, regional director for The Wilderness Society, said environmentalists supported a proposed study of an Alaska-Canada pipeline. They opposed the Trans-Alaska section of the project, he said.

Clearly, the Valdez spill was a terrible accident," Gehrke said. "Larry Craig is the first person I know of to twist around that accident and make the bounding leap of logic that we're to blame for the spill."

— Craig Gehrke, regional director of the Wilderness Society blame for the Exxon Valdez spill, but not for the reason Craig suggested.

"We should have been more diligent in requiring double-hulled ships, and escort ships for safety reasons," said Stewart, who called Craig's comments misguided.

"I'm disappointed to see this kind of attitude from people who are supposed to be our leaders," he said. "We should have a new energy strategy that meets conservation and alternative energy."

Craig also said Monday that he preferred drilling for more oil in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and using more nuclear energy.

"ANWR should be the last place we would develop, rather than the first," said LaRocco, who will deal with the member as a member of the House Interior Committee.

LaRocco, however, had praise for Craig, R-Idaho, for his work on another environmental issue — designating the Lower Salmon River as a federally protected wild and scenic river.

Nurse says she stole drugs for dying husband

POCATELLO (AP) — A former Pocatello geriatric nurse who asked for a change of venue in her sentencing because of media exposure has been turned down in court.

Sixth District Judge Peter McDermott on Wednesday set sentencing for Kathryn Carter, 38, on Aug. 19.

She pleaded guilty to 11 counts of narcotics possession stemming from the theft of morphine, Demerol and morphine from the Bannock Geriatric Center in 1990 and 1991.

A tearful Mrs. Carter told McDermott she had taken the drugs to administer to her terminally ill husband only after the chemicals doctors were prescribing for him were not alleviating his pain.

"I just went crazy. I knew it was wrong," Mrs. Carter said. Her husband died two weeks ago.

Following McDermott's questioning of Mrs. Carter, defense attorney Monte Whittier moved the sentencing be changed to another jurisdiction due to excessive media coverage and its possible effect on her sentence.

Whittier said Bannock County Prosecutor Bill Bacon had for some unknown reason used Mrs. Carter's case as part of his "political agenda" and had been soliciting interest in the case from the media.

Objecting to the motion, a visibly angry Bacon said Whittier had presented no evidence to substantiate his charges and noted it was the media which had contacted him about the case.

"This court does not play to the media," McDermott said.

The judge acknowledged he was uncertain why the case had drawn so much publicity in light of the fact the media had not covered sentences for serious criminal matters, including sex abuse cases.

Mrs. Carter was released on her own recognizance, pending a presentence investigation.

Ontario woman dies in collision

BOISE (AP) — An Ontario, Ore. woman who reportedly veered into the wrong lane of U.S. Highway 95 north of Weiser was killed in a head-on collision, the Idaho State Police report.

Karen Elaine Zeigler, 38, veered into the northbound lane of U.S. Highway 95 about 10:40 p.m. Tuesday, a police dispatcher said. A line of vehicles including a motor home, pickup and sedan were traveling northbound.

Her Camaro missed the motor home, but sideswiped the pickup, which rolled. Pickup driver Tracy Higgins, 23, Weiser, was treated for her injuries and released.

The Camaro hit the sedan head-on. The sedan's driver, 40-year-old Jerry Barnett of Cambridge, was taken to the Weiser hospital and then to Holy Rosary Hospital in Ontario, Ore., where he was listed in critical condition Wednesday afternoon, a nursing supervisor said.

Three passengers in the sedan included Andrew Herrrell, Stephen Herrrell and Paul Sherman, all of Cambridge. They received minor injuries.

Lamont Cutler, 37, Fruitland, was a passenger in the Camaro. He was taken by helicopter to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise, where he was listed in critical condition Wednesday.

Woman discovers that pillars of church have feet of clay

DEAR ABBY: Your advice to the Arizona woman-whose family was banned from the church was right. You told her to complain to someone higher in the church.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

However, I hope she had better luck than I.

I am a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America. The new pastor of my church did not know me, but she refused to speak to me; in effect, she ostracized my children and their terminally ill father from their congregation.

Apparently, my "sin" was providing shelter to another pastor who had two children, no job, no place to live and very little money.

When I complained to the bishop, I was told that since I had given the appearance of having "induced" (defamed or slandered) my marriage vows, my family could be treated whichever way the pastor wanted. The head of the church refused to comment on the matter, saying this was a local issue, and he chose not to get involved. The local synod council did not respond at all.

Abby, please tell your readers that all clergy are human beings. By definition, 50 percent are below average, and sometimes you hit the bottom 10 percent. If the clergy do not practice what they preach, run - do not walk - to the nearest exit, and let them know why you are running away.

- NEW JERSEY

DEAR NEW JERSEY: What an eye-opener my mail has been this week! Most of us were raised to believe that all members of the clergy are somehow closer to God, and therefore superior beings - But, alas, they too are only humans.

DEAR ABBY: I am a woman who has enjoyed your column in the Times-Tribune for many years. I am in my mid-30s, stand 5 feet 11 inches, weigh 155 and appear to be as strong as an ox, so because of my size, I am asked to do some jobs you wouldn't ask a professional mover to do without a helper. I clean houses for a living, and my clients ask, "Would you please move that butch (fully loaded), or the refrigerator, or the king-size bed, or a huge dresser, and clean behind it today?"

This has gone on for 10 years, and until just recently, I never had the right answer to give to these clods until one day, I fit in.

Now when I am asked to move the piano to the refrigerator, I ask sweetly, "Do you have enough insurance to cover any injury I may get from moving this?" They get the picture real fast.

When I worked in an office in my early 20s, I was asked to move desks, filing cabinets and haul in boxes that had been delivered. No more!

Sign me - AINT NO OX. DEAR AINT: Thanks for a great letter as well as a valuable suggestion for big women who, because of their size, are asked to do more than their job descriptions call for.

Capriati ousts Navratilova

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — No offense to Princess Diana, but Jennifer Capriati didn't want to see her.

The new princess of Wimbledon got her wish, dethroning the reigning queen of Centre Court, Martina Navratilova, moments before the Princess of Wales took her seat in the Royal Box on Wednesday.

Diana missed one of the most majestic matches in tennis history, an event that marked the eclipse of a nine-time champion by a teenager achieving her destiny.

The 15-year-old Capriati became the youngest semifinalist ever at Wimbledon with a 6-4, 7-5 victory over Navratilova that spanned two days and tested the nerves of both players.

Shortly before they resumed the rain-suspended match at 1 p.m., Capriati down a break at 2-3 in the second set, a tournament official mentioned that Diana would arrive about 1:50 p.m.

"Well, I hope I won't be able to see her," said Capriati, who didn't want to stay around that long and play a third set. "Hopefully, the match will be over."

Diana arrived in time to see Andre Agassi reach the men's quarterfinals with a 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 victory over Jacco Eltingh, while Boris Becker bent Christian Bergstrom 6-4, 6-7, 6-1, 7-6 on Court 1.

Two Frenchmen, Guy Forget and Thierry Champion, also moved into the quarterfinals by beating Americans Tim Mayotte and Derrick Rostagno, respectively.

John McEnroe also made history by getting slammed with the biggest fine ever at Wimbledon for verbal abuse — $10,000 for a string of obscenities he launched at a line-woman Tuesday. It wasn't McEnroe's worst fine. He got hit with a $17,500 fine plus a two-month suspension for a combination of misconduct and verbal abuse at the 1987 U.S. Open.

But it was the Capriati-Navratilova affair and a woman old enough to be her mother, that marked this day as special.

It was as much an abdication by Navratilova, who double faulted on match point, as a coronation of Capriati, who in Steffi Graf and Mary Joe Fernandez meet in Thursday's other semifinal.

Brothers named All-Stars

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Sandy and Roberto Alomar of the American League on Wednesday became the first brothers elected to the All-Star game's starting lineup since the balloting was returned to the fans in 1970.

Last year, Sandy Jr. became the first rookie catcher ever voted to the starting team and Roberto was selected as an NL reserve.

Add their father, Sandy, who was on the AL team in 1970, and the Alomars joined the DiMaggios. (Dom, Vince and Joe) as the only family with three All-Star members.

Ryne Sandberg of the Chicago Cubs was selected the National League second baseman and led all vote-getters with 2,526,747. Sandberg, who currently has a hand injury, got the most votes since Gary Carter of Montreal — totaled 2,785,407 in 1982. Seattle outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. paced the AL with 2,248,396 votes.

Roberto Alomar, who beat out Texas' Julio Franco at second base by 951,058 votes, was traded by San Diego along with Joe Carter in December to Toronto for first baseman Fred McGriff and shortstop Tony Fernandez.

The trade has been good to both teams and Roberto has exceeded the Blue Jays' expectations. He is hitting .277 with five homers, 36 RBIs and a major league-leading 25 doubles.

It's been a disappointing season for Sandy Jr. due to a rotator cuff injury. He's hitting only .205 with no homers and four RBIs in 34 games for the lowly Cleveland Indians.

"My brother brought me to a Little League practice and I started practicing and that's why I started baseball," said Roberto, 23.

"That's why I love him so much. If not Toronto's Roberto Alomar, here turning a double play against Detroit earlier this year, is slated to start at second base while his brother Sandy, Cleveland's catcher, is behind home plate.

for my brother I might not be in baseball. To see him in the All-Star game is something I will never forget."

Sandy Jr. beat out 43-year-old Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox at catcher with 1,367,734 votes to 998,340.

The rest of the AL infield has Mark McGwire of Oakland at first base; Cal Ripken of Baltimore at shortstop; and Wade Boggs of Boston at third.

The AL starting outfield is Griffey Jr.,

Rickey Henderson of Oakland and teammate Dave Henderson, Ken Camery and Steve Garvey.

The defending AL champion Athletics placed three starters on the team.

The NL starting infield also has some familiar faces with Will Clark of San Francisco at first base; Sandberg at second;

Will 4th player cost Knicks Ewing?

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Even the NBA is wondering who is the fourth player that Patrick Ewing's agent is claiming will be paid more than the New York Knicks' center season.

Ewing's 10-year contract signed in 1985 contains a clause that allows him to become a restricted free agent any time after the 1990-91 season if he is not among the four highest-paid players in the NBA. If that occurs, Ewing would be free to negotiate with other teams, with the Knicks retaining the right to match any offer and keep him.

John "Hot Rod" Williams of Cleveland,

Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon and Michael Jordan of Chicago are known to have a higher salary than Ewing's scheduled pay of $3,138,000 next season. But a fourth player, that Ewing's agent, David Falk, claims is ahead of Ewing is not known.

"I'm not aware of four more highly paid players," said the NBA's general counsel, Gary Bettman. "My understanding is Patrick Ewing's representatives have been asked repeatedly to name the four players and have failed to do so."

Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics will make more than $7 million next season, but $5.6 million of that is a signing bonus, and signing bonuses reportedly are not counted in Ewing's contract to determining if a player's salary is higher than his.

Asked by the New York Times who the players are that he believes are above Ewing on the salary scale, Falk refused, saying, "It will be up for the arbitrator to decide."

Falk did not return phone calls by the Associated Press on Wednesday.

Ewing has filed for arbitration to decide the free-agent issue, and his case will be heard later this month by arbitrator Daniel Collins.

"We believe that the Knicks will prevail in this arbitration," Knicks president Dave Checketts said. "We look forward to the resolution of this matter."

Like most strong amateur teams, "they lay back and wait for the fastball. In Canada they whipped line-drivers all over the place on fast ball pitches. But later in the tournament when the slow ball pitchers and curveball experts came around, their production fell off," Creek said.

Creek has nominated righthander Matt Homer to start this starting assignment.

"Matt says he wants to give it a try. I believe if he keeps the ball down he'll be okay. But if he gets it up, he might be a little surprised," the coach added with a smile.

CSI-coach makes Frontier Field his pet project

As several American Legion baseball teams will learn at the Cowboy Classic Invitational Tournament this weekend, playing at Frontier Field is something special.

The soft grass and perfectly manicured infield, the landscaping around the fence and the complete facilities suggest something more than a small town junior college ballpark.

Professional scouts and visiting college coaches praise the field regularly.

That's because Coach Jim Walker won't allow anything less than a great ball yard.

"I'm a perfectionist," Walker said during a break while preparing the field for the 20-game, four-day tournament. "Ev-everybody who has played for me or worked for me says I'm impossible because I'm demanding. I want it done right. But they're also the first to brag about the facility."

Edging the grass around lines takes a full day. The park needs mowing three times a week. There is raking and weeding, picking up rocks and planting, in addition to special projects and improvements.

"You just take your front lawn and magnify it 100 times," Walker said.

The reason for the work on the field is simple.

"There's something about walking on a good field that makes you play better," Walker said. "I think kids should have that experience."

CSI controls the field during the school year and the City of Twin Falls during the summer. Maintaining the facility is the full-time and then some job for Walker and Assistant Coach Frank Juliano after the Golden Eagles' season ends. City workers help with the mowing if either coach leaves town.

"The coaches get help when CSI is in session from baseball players who qualify for work-study money. Otherwise Walker and Juliano carry the bulk of the load.

"We don't have the manpower or the equipment," Walker said. "We have to make a do-it-yourself instead of a front-loader."

Now in its 12th year of use, Frontier Field needs more maintenance than improvements. Most of the new projects Walker and Juliano attend to in the summer are cosmetic or to facilitate daily care.

When all the upkeep is kept up, players benefit.

"I've been here five years, and I bet I could count on one hand the number of bad hops I've seen," Juliano said. "The BALTIMORE (AP) — Frank Tanana struck out 12 batters with another marked his 30th birthday with another strong outing. Owl Whitaker homered as Detroit beat Baltimore for their 15th victory in six games.

Yankees 3, Indians 2
NEW YORK (AP) — New York and Cleveland continued feuding in opposite directions as Scott Kamieniecki allowed three hits in seven innings and Steve Sax and Roberto Kelly homered for the surging Yankees.

Red Sox 5, Brewers 3
MILWAUKEE (AP) — Mike Greenwell and Ellis Burks drove in two runs apiece in a five-run first inning Wednesday night as the Boston Red Sox beat the Milwaukee Brewers 5-3 to complete a three-game sweep.

Red Sox, picking up where they left off Tuesday night when they clubbed 22 hits in a 14-1 victory, jumped on Brewers starter Tony Arana (6-4).

Wade Boggs singled, Jody Reed doubled and Mo Vaughn walked to load the bases. One out later, Greenwell hit a two-run single. With two outs, Burks Pena had an RBI single to cap the inning.

Athletes 5, Rangers 0
ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Dave Stewart, who entered the game with a 5.74 ERA, pitched a three-hitter for his first complete game in three years to lead the Oakland Athletics to a 5-0 victory over the Texas Rangers on Wednesday night.

Stewart (6-4), struggling to find the form that made him a 23-game winner in each of the last four seasons, struck out four and walked two while shutting down the hottest-hitting team in the majors.

ended its four-game losing streak while handing Cincinnati only its second loss in nine games.

The Reds, who had 11 hits, tied the game at 5-5 in the top of the sixth inning when Joe Oliver hit a three-run homer off Steve Avery (8-2). Lemke's hit off reliever Don Carman put Atlanta ahead to stay.

Cardinals 4, Phillies 3
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pedro Guerrero had a three-run homer and four RBIs, and Grant Olivares pitched well as Cardinals beat troubled Philadelphia.

The Cardinals trailed 2-1 in the fourth inning when Ozzie Smith doubled with one out and Todd Zentz walked against Jose Delesus (5-4). Guerrero followed with his sixth homer. It was only the 26th by St. Louis, last in the majors in homers.

Olivares (2-1) allowed four hits, striking out three.

Blue Jays 4, Twins 0

TORONTO (AP) — Joe Carter hit two home runs and Tom Candiotti won for the first time with Toronto as the Blue Jays won their fifth straight game by beating the slumping Minnesota Twins 4-0 on Wednesday night.

Carter hit a two-run homer off Allan Anderson (4-7) in the first inning and a solo shot in the third. Devon White homered to lead off the fourth for a 4-0 lead. Anderson hit AL All-Star second baseman Roberto Alomar with the next pitch, causing both benches to empty.

No punches were thrown, but the plate umpire Jim Joyce immediately ejected Anderson.

Brewers 4, Red Sox 1

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jeff Reardon pitched a gem for the Milwaukee Brewers as they routed the Boston Red Sox 4-1 Wednesday night.

Reardon (7-3) struck out eight batters in seven innings, allowing only three hits and one run on two walks.

The Red Sox, who had lost five straight games, were shut out for the first time since May 15.

Western Open leaves 'closed' Butler club

LEMONT, Ill. (AP) — The Western Open, played for 16 consecutive years at the all-male, all-white Butler Golf Club, opens Thursday to the public, disqualifying the club's Golf and Country Club where Michael Jordan is a frequent visitor.

Butler National, in the suburbs of Chicago at Oak Brook, Ill., was born in 1924 and its decision not to accept open membership forced the move to the Dubs-dread course at Cog Hill.

"When a club accepts a tournament, it opens into the public eye," said Corey Pavin, the leading money-winner on the Tour in 1991. "When you move into the public eye, you have to comply with certain rules."

"Butler National didn't want to compete with us. And, as a private club, but it's their right. So we moved on. But it's a shame it had to happen."

PGA Tour policy — established during a racial discrimination controversy last summer at Shoal Creek in Birmingham, Ala. — requires open membership practices at clubs hosting Tour events.

The loss of Butler, generally regarded as one of the better, more difficult courses played on the pro circuit, was minimized by the acquisition of Dubsdread, one of four courses at the sprawling golf complex called Cog Hill.

"It's about equal," Butler in terms of difficulty," Pavin said. "It has an old feel to it, and it's a hard golf course. This course is every bit as good as Butler."

Mark Calacavchia, Tom Watson and Curtis Strange agreed, "If you don't like this course, you don't like good golf courses," Calacavchia said. "It's one of the five best courses we play... just a flat-out good golf course."

"I think we'll forget Butler National in a matter of a day," Strange said.

"This is one beautiful golf course; old style, beautiful old oak trees, a wonderful gallery, golf course," said Watson, who won the Butler National, including his first career victory in 1974.

LPGA tour stop barring women raises eyebrows

Ohio (AP) — Some golfers on the LPGA tour say they are appalled to learn that the country club hosting the Jamie Farr Classic has refused to admit women as members.

"It's not right at all. It stinks," tour player Patty Liscio said Wednesday about Highland Meadows Golf Club's men-only policy.

The Toledo Blade reported earlier, this week that Highland Meadows, a private course in suburban Sylvania, bars women as stockholders, voting members. They aren't allowed to sit on the club's board of directors or attend annual meetings.

The club is one of two courses on the 1991 LPGA tour with such exclusionary practices.

The LPGA said that after this year, it won't conduct any more tournaments at courses that discriminate against women and minority groups.

The Farr Classic, which begins on Friday, is in its third year at Highland Meadows. It raises money for area charities, with the club also receiving some money. Club and tournament officials have declined to discuss how much money is involved.

The four-day tournament, which begins Thursday, raised $100,000 for charities last year.

"I don't think women should be barred from anywhere," Liscio said. "It's like a club being closed to black membership."

Lori-West, another tour member, agreed with Liscio. "It seems odd that they would want to hold a women's tournament here."

Several telephone calls to club president Thomas Bloomer weren't returned Wednesday. He has said he would discuss the situation with the membership, adding the club is open to change.

West said she and other golfers are upset that women have been discriminated against at some country clubs.

Trevino sticking to plan to hang clubs up in '93

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Lee Trevino, the Senior PGA Tour's first $1 million man, is halfway through his three-year plan to break the bank and start taking it easy.

"Then I'm going to lay on the beach and get my left hand tangled," Trevino said Wednesday.

Trevino, a three-time winner already this year, is one of the favorites in this week's Kroger Senior Classic.

The field includes most of golf's heroes of the '60s and '70s, including a Friday pairing of Trevino, Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus. They'll follow defending champion Jim Dent, last week's Senior Tour winner, Jim Colbert, and this year's top money winner, Chi Chi Rodriguez.

"This course is a long hitter's paradise," Trevino said. "You're not going to find a short-hitter winning this golf tournament."

"A low-ball hitter is going to have a very difficult time."

Dent, the distance driving champ on the PGA Tour and now the Senior Tour, won last year's Kroger Classic, which was shortened to two rounds because of heavy rain.

"You like these soft fairways, don't you?" Trevino said to Dent.

"Yeah, I hope it rains," Dent said.

Trevino won seven tournaments and almost $12 million last year. He was named rookie of the year and player of the year on the Senior Tour.

But he already sees the end in sight. "I committed myself for three years," Trevino said. "After that he plans to spend more time with his family."

Only 1 of 4 black athletes graduate

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Nearly twice the number of white athletes as black athletes graduated from 85 Division I schools who entered college the past five years, according to a study released Wednesday by the NCAA.

"This study is the tip of iceberg," said Todd Petr, assistant director of research for the NCAA. "We felt this type of analysis should best support what many colleges have believed all along."

'We found that blacks are less well-prepared. This is the first time we have quantified those differences.'

Todd Petr, NCAA official

The findings are the first part of an academic study of 7,288 athletes from 85 Division I schools who entered college in 1984 and 1985.

"This is a unique study. It's a comprehensive look at graduation — broken down by race, sex and sport; revenue or non-revenue," Petr said.

Black athletes graduated at a 26.6 percent rate, compared to 52.2 percent for whites and 45.7 percent for all athletes in the study.

The women's rate was almost 54 percent, compared with the men's 42.2 percent.

"It's educational literature, a sort of learning tool," Petr said. "The main finding is simply an indexing of test scores and grade-point averages. The study is better than any other single predictor we've tested in the past."

But nearly as many black athletes, 38.3 percent, left school in their fourth or fifth year as did the number who dropped out the first two years.

"We found that blacks are less well-prepared," Petr said. "This is the first time we have quantified those differences."

Black athletes, while posting lower grade-point averages in college preparatory classes and lower scores on the standardized SAT and ACT entrance exams, graduated at higher rates than white athletes who scored similarly.

Kevin Messenger, sports information director at University of the Pacific in Stockton, Calif., said he couldn't comment on the NCAA study but offered some of the school's own statistics.

Among basketball players who entered the school between 1980-81 and 1984-85, Messenger said, three of nine minority students graduated, and 19 of 20 white students graduated. An additional seven white students entered the school during that time but transferred before graduating.

The NCAA study said one in four athletes graduated in four years, but only 9.2 percent of all blacks graduated in four years.

Almost 33 percent of all blacks left the school in less than half of the white athletes, graduated, 28.4 percent left school in good academic standing and 19.6 percent in less than good standing.

The NCAA also found the graduation rates for white and black men were higher in the high-revenue sports of football and basketball than in other Division I sports.

One finding relates to the controversy over the use of SAT and ACT test scores in regard to Proposition 48, which determines an athlete's eligibility for scholarships and competition.

"We felt the 1984-85 sample is an important group to look at since they were not affected by Prop 48," Petr said. "This is a full range of potential student-athletes before Prop 48."

The report endorses a less stringent amendment of Prop 48 than one drawn up by the NCAA President's Commission last week.

"The rule requires at least a 2.0 grade-point average in 11 college preparatory courses, plus a minimum score of 700 on the SAT or 18 on the ACT."

The presidents want the grade-point raised to 2.5, the number of courses increased to 13, and the test score minimum left intact.

That will be voted on in January at the NCAA Association in Anaheim, Calif. It would not go into effect until August 1995.

"Prop 48 is trying to distinguish who can make it in college," Petr said. "It was our statistical look at the variables that will impact the commission."

Nearly two-thirds of the black athletes: 63.7 percent, compared to 15.2 percent of the whites, fell below the proposed new guidelines for Prop 48.

Officials from the University of Minnesota, University of Miami, University of Florida, Michigan State before commenting.

Flying helmet beans Padre skipper Riddock

SAN DIEGO (AP) — There are wild-pitches-and-then-there-are-wild-helmets.

San Diego's Greg Riddock spent three innings on the manager's disabled list after Benito Santiago threw a baseball at him and it inadvertently hit Riddock in the head.

The Padres have suffered their share of injuries this season, but Riddock's certainly qualifies as the most bizarre.

The Padres were being frustrated by Los Angeles Dodgers ace Ramon Martinez and trailed 3-0 in the sixth inning Tuesday night.

After grounding out to end the inning, Santiago approached the batter and angrily flipped his helmet into the ground. It bounced up, grazed off pitching coach Mike Roark, bounced off the dugout wall and hit Riddock in the temple.

"I was dizzy, and you worry about that a bit. Lwas hit in a spot, that's not a good spot."

Tom Werner, the Padres' chairman and managing partner, had a "Hard Hat Area" sign posted on the dugout wall above the coaches seats.

"My owner did this," Riddock said. "Someone asked me if it would be disrespectful to do that, and I said, 'No, you've got to laugh at yourself.'"

Special fireworks were planned after Wednesday's game, and fans were handed 3-D glasses as they entered the stadium. "I wore mine one night early," Riddock said.

The incident was obviously a mistake, but was also unfortunate because of who was involved.

In a May 30 home game against the Houston Astros, Riddock yanked Santiago after four innings for "lack of hustle" after the catcher half-heartedly ran out a grounder. Riddock also benched Santiago for the following game, and the catcher found out about that through the press.

The two quickly patched up their differences, however.

"It was a freak thing," Santiago said Tuesday night. "But, on TV they're already saying that I tried to hit him, that I did it on purpose. I threw it down and it bounced wild. I apologized to Greg. I don't want to hurt anybody."

Riddock said he spoke to Santiago in the clubhouse prior to batting practice Wednesday, "and he felt terrible about it. We took care of it, though, and we're ready to play."

General manager Joe Mellenave said Santiago, who was named the National League's starting all-star catcher on Wednesday, probably won't be disciplined.

"Our manager's woody, but there's not much I can do. It's a freak thing, but I certainly can't stand here and condone it."

Wimbledon

The 34-year-old Navratilova succumbed to nerves and poor serves, and perhaps the burdens of her troubled personal life, as Capriati ripped returns and groundstrokes past her.

"I was fanned in the first two days as she summed up the emotions she felt leaving Wimbledon so soon after investing so much effort into her bid for a 10th title.

"I hope that the gods are with me so I can come back next year. I'm not hanging it up," she said in a weak voice. "I still feel that I have some really good tennis in me. I just don't know how much of the heart is left. It's been tough."

Offended by the woman she calls "The Legs," Capriati intimidated her by charging boldly five feet in front of the baseline to hammer second serves.

"She had to move in so she could get it on the first bounce. I was so shut," Navratilova half-joked.

"When I didn't get my first serve in, I was on my heels. That certainly didn't help on my second serve. I was so afraid of her return. I ended up double-faulting, which was a total slip."

Fear, a seemingly odd emotion for such an experienced player, gripped Navratilova and broke down her game stroke by stroke until she seemed like an old clunker of a car falling apart.

She hadn't lost before the semifinals at Wimbledon since 1977, when Capriati was 1, and hadn't missed a final since 1981. No one except Stef Graf had beaten her here during that stretch. Yet she began this match with a case of nerves that wouldn't quit.

"When you get older you get more nervous," she said scoffing at the notion that Capriati should have felt more pressure.

"It should get easier, but all the other players say the same thing — it gets more difficult. With entertainers it's the same. Take Frank Sinatra. The pressure builds up the older you get. Even though you don't have that many more years left, things mean a lot more."

Capriati felt no such pressure.

"I was totally focused," she said with gleaming eyes and a broad smile. "I was so anxious to go out there and play my best tennis. I had so much desire in me, that I just didn't think about it."

"No one expected me to win. I had no nerves, and she had everything to lose."

In the men's quarters, Becker, a three-time Wimbledon champion, struggled more than Agassi, who had played only one match on grass four years ago before coming back.

Becker next plays against Agassi, then against Wheaton, who beat Ivan Lendl.

Sho-Bans comply with closure of rivers

Crapples are among the rewards warm-water fishermen find.

Hagerman ponds allow fun fishing

The bass ponds in Hagerman are open and fishermen of warm water species will be working overtime to catch large-mouth bass and bluegill. From time to time the fishing is excellent and the water is heavily utilized by all kinds of anglers. A simple bobber rig can be effective on the bluegill and occasional bass.

Warren Schoth Fishing

The bigger pond west of Highway 30 has very few places for bank fishermen. The one area that is available is along the shoreline which forms part of the east-belted front and the area between the water and the highway guardrail is not very large; it is steep in places and dusty, slick. It is definitely a poor choice to take kids.

A much better system is a small boat or rubber raft. An adult can control the craft and let the kids fish. A couple of small anchors will station a light craft within a cast of one of the many pockets in the rushes and cattails and both the adult and kid can fish.

If dog feces compelled, he can even toss a spinnerbait or plug for Mr. Buck-mouth.

Stay out of the bluegill pocket though - that is for the kid. Of course, after he catches a couple of those little bull nose burrtons, and is allowed to take the bass and join the kid to some serious fishing for bluegill.

Seriously, if you take a kid fishing, take him or her fishing, don't use the opportunity, as simply another day on the water for yourself.

POCATELLO — Shoshone-Bannock tribal fishermen on Wednesday refrained from spearing spring chinook salmon on rivers and tributaries by the state to protect the dwindling run.

"We contacted several groups of tribal fishermen who were camped on the Yankee Fork and had very cordial contact with them," Jerry Mallet, assistant director of the Fish and Game Department, said. "We have no reports of anyone fishing on closed waters today."

The tribes suffered a defeat in their bid to begin their 18-day ceremonial fishing season on Wednesday when Magistrate Stephen Dunn a day earlier refused to overturn the department's conservation closure a day earlier.

Shoshone-Bannock Business Council Chairman Keesley Edmo said council members may meet later this week to discuss future plans. Council member Marvin Osborne said he did not know how long the tribes would continue to recognize the closure. Dunn issued his written decision on

Fisheries service won't speed up process to protect salmon run

The Associated Press

BOISE — The National Marine Fisheries Service refuses to speed up the process of listing the Snake River sockeye salmon as an endangered species in an emergency basis, at least for now.

That means the Idaho Conservation League and Eagle-based Northwest Resources Information Center will maintain their suit filed last week in federal court.

"We do not believe there is sufficient evidence to support an emergency listing at this time," said William Fox Jr., assistant fisheries administrator for the fisheries service.

That agency recommended listing the sockeye an endangered species but a final decision probably will not be announced until next April. The Idaho conservation group says that is not quick enough to save the run. No agency made it to their historical spawning grounds in Idaho's Redfish Lake last year.

"I was all right they were doing some good work," Fox said. "If this suit is successful, it will force us to take action."

Wednesday and called on state and tribal leaders to settle their dispute out of court. "That's really what should be happening. To be perfectly honest with you," he said. A full hearing on the tribes claim that the closure is unjustified and violates their rights under treaties more than a century old was scheduled for next Tuesday. The tribes had planned to take up to 25 fish during the season, a number officials claimed would not aggravate the threat to the run's survival. But state officials maintained even that small number would adversely affect the run that has been recommended for protection under the Endangered Species Act.

"If we damage the resource in the long term, then ultimately it's the tribes who are going to suffer," Dunn said.

Tribal attorney Jeaneette Wolfley said that in addition to improperly abridging treaty fishing rights, the state failed to prove that a conservation closure was justified.

"The position of the tribes is that they regulate themselves," she said. "We don't believe the state has proved closure is necessary for preservation of fishings." Department attorney Stephen Goddard maintained that under extreme conditions the state can step in to restrict treaty fishing, contending the fact that this spring's run is one of the smallest on record meets that criteria.

The state has the right to regulate all fishings, including Indian fishing, to preserve the resource," Goddard said. "We are down to populations that are very small, and you don't have to take many fish to have an impact," he said.

Some owls thrive in timberlands

The Associated Press

CLE ELUM, Wash. — Forester Jeff Jones tramped along a steep hillside, looking for northern spotted owls in a new-growth forest.

With hands cupped around his mouth, he called "Who, who, who, who."

Soon the call was answered from a family of the threatened species.

"Before two years ago I didn't know a spotted owl existed," Jones said.

Now he is part of a team of Boise Cascade Corp. "hooters" who growl the company's forests searching for owls.

Each new owl they find helps prove the company's contention that the species can and does co-exist with logging in this forest of 70-to-90 year old trees, Jones said.

These owls, a grey-coated mother and two fuzzy feathered babies, were the stars of a recent company tour. They hopped across tree branches, bobbed up and down, and turned their huge eyes on the cameras.

Boise Cascade officials say at least six spotted owl nests are in a 50,000-acre tract of their private forest near Cle Elum, and ten others are nearby.

They say that indicates that logging doesn't have to stop on huge portions of Pacific Northwest old-growth forests to save the birds.

They also say that owl habitat is vastly different on the two sides of the Cascade Range, and that protective measures in Western Washington may not be needed east.

"Timber and owls can co-exist in Eastern Washington," said Phil Hess, a forester for Boise Cascade in Yakima. "We don't need thousands of acres surrounding that nest site in order for that pair of owls to remain viable."

The Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund contends that owls are living in newer forests.

But land forester Ardy Stahl said the trick is those newer forests — many in Eastern Washington and Northern California — have many characteristics of old-growth.

"Typically, intensive forest management does not provide that type of habitat," Stahl said.

Boise Cascade's Cle Elum block was logged near the turn of the century to provide wood for fruit boxes in the Yakima Valley. But it has regrown and been selectively logged. It has numerous characteristics similar to old growth.

That includes an abundance of huge old fir trees, as well as pine. There is a canopy of foliage that screens the birds from predators, Hess said.

clared the spotted owl a threatened species last June, citing excessive logging as a threat to the bird's survival.

Since 1982 the spotted owl has been an "indicator species," meaning its condition was used to gauge the overall health of the ancient forest ecosystem.

The Pacific Northwest contains nearly all the nation's remaining old-growth forests, which are those with trees at least 100 years old.

The spotted owl debate has generally lacked an Eastern Washington perspective, Hess said.

Much attention has focused on timber towns in Western Washington that are destined to lose jobs when huge tracts of forest is taken out of production. But the largest single concentration of owls is in the Wenatchee National Forest, along the east slopes of the Cascades.

Salmon prices hit lowest mark since mid-'80s

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Strong salmon runs and weaker foreign demand have sent retail salmon prices in the United States tumbling to their lowest point in half a decade or more, fish retailers say.

Thousands of fishermen in Alaska are keeping their ships in port to protest wholesale prices from processors that are only half of what they were last year.

"This year you're going to see some very cheap fish. Pink salmon will be the cheapest, with a good price likely to come in around a dollar a pound," said Richard Springer, the seafood buyer for Seattle's Associated Process, Seattle, across in Oregon, Washington, Alaska, Hawaii and Guam.

At the higher end of the salmon market, a whole, headless sockeye that would have been five dollars a pound when salmon prices were at their highest in 1988, is now at the $3.89 a pound range, Springer said Thursday.

"I think that salmon, especially reds, were overpriced last year and now it's coming down to reality," said Safeway's Seattle Division seafood buyer Mark Jensen, who buys for 180 stores in Washington, Montana and Alaska. "The fisherman has been able to dictate his prices over the last couple of years, and that's just not the case anymore. Prices were artificially high, so they had to come down."

The Japanese, who are leading consumers of salmon, especially sockeye, aren't buying as much this year and that's helping to keep the market soft, Jensen said Thursday.

Springer said Japanese buyers are still trying to sell from fully stocked freezers of last year's salmon. Meanwhile, he said, the Japanese are diversifying their taste in fish. They are buying other types of fish and buying increasing amounts of salmon from sources outside Alaska, where they have traditionally taken a large portion of the best-quality sockeye.

At the same time, supplies of many types of salmon are at a peak this year, Springer said. "It's probably been at least five years in salmon runs. It's a good year for pinks from Alaska, Canada, and especially Puget Sound. It's also suppose to be a strong year for chums."

Although this year is a good one for salmon, runs arrived later than originally predicted. Retailers had already printed their advertisements, so consumers still got the low prices, but not without some pain to the retailer.

Forest Service's resumption of shoots prompts protests

The Associated Press

BOISE — Environmentalists are upset over the Boise National Forest's decision to let federal Animal Damage Control officers resume shooting predators from the air to protect grazing sheep.

Aerial hunting of predators had been stopped for two and a half years while forest officials conducted an environmental review of the practice.

"The whole program is an anachronism," Jerry Jayne, director of the Idaho Environmental Council, said Thursday. "It allows, of wildlife for the benefit of a few land grazers."

The decision also allows shooting and trapping of coyotes as preventive measures before sheep enter forest lands. But ranchers say the policy still puts too many restrictions on predator control.

"The sheep industry is a real sick industry now, and anything that adds to costs could make a big difference," Emmett rancher Brad Little said.

Predator hunts for bear and mountain lion are limited to proven sheep killers. Aerial hunts are restricted to three areas within the forest, each less than taken steps to avoid killing predators.

But Little said he has taken steps to avoid hunting. He added five guard dogs to protect the 4,000 ewes and 6,000 lambs he grazes in the Boise National Forest. Little said the guard dogs have decreased predation, but "they are not a panacea."

In 1990, predators killed $22,464 worth of livestock in the Boise National Forest. Animal Damage Control agents killed eight black bears and 52 coyotes in sheep grazing areas in the forest last year.

Jayne said ranchers are not doing enough to protect their herds on public lands. "Any one who grazes in public lands, with all the subsidies they get, has to expect some loss," he said.

Fish story doesn't hold water, campus police say

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The man with the five-pound trout near the University of Washington's fish breeding ponds claimed he caught it in nearby Lake Washington. But UW police weren't swallowing that line.

Police said the 24-year-old UW student teacher had a pedigreed "Donaldson" rainbow trout that came from the fenced-in breeding ponds at the university's School of Fisheries. The man was arrested Sunday for investigation of burglary and released Monday on his own recognizance.

Donaldson trout were developed about 20 years ago by the university's Lauren Donaldson; fish hatchery supervisor Glenn Yokoyama said the fish were bred to tolerate high temperatures and grow rapidly.

The hot trout was one of a pedigreed family whose genetic line was being studied, Yokoyama said.

Police said UW researchers reported seeing someone break into the hatchery at 1:15 a.m. Sunday.

The man was arrested a short time later, and told officers he had caught the 21-inch fish in Lake Washington.

But police said he had only half a pedee rod and a reel, and no fishing tackle.

Yokoyama dissected the fish on the spot, and showed police it had been eating and living in the hatchery, not the wild.

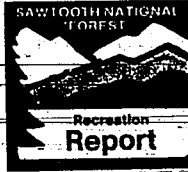

Yokoyama said he thinks the man probably took the fish for eating purposes. But it's not worth it, not at this time of the year, when the warm water makes the meat less tasty.

Forest Service doesn't allow use of fireworks

TWIN FALLS — Visitors to the Sawtooth National Forest over the holiday weekend are reminded it is illegal to possess or use fireworks.

Persons violating this law are subject to a $500 fine and can be held liable for suppression costs and damages resulting from a fire caused by fireworks.

Special guided tours to view and identify wildflowers are scheduled during the next two weekends in the South Hill on the Twin Falls Ranger District. Tours will be offered between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. July 6 and 7 and against July 13 and 14 beginning at the parking area at Magic Mountain ski area.

The annual wildflower tours are sponsored by the Twin Falls Wildlife Federation and the Sawtooth National Forest.

All campsgrounds on the Twin Falls district are open with fees available at Steer Basin, Upper Penstemon and Pettit campgrounds. All major roads are open. Good supplies of firewood are available in prefilled areas at Grouse Springs, Cotton Ridge and Ecklund Creek.

The Burley district reports Thompson Flat Campground is open with water available. Group sites may be reserved by contacting the Burley office at 678-0430. Campgrounds are open at Sublett and Clear Creek.

The Lake Cleveland road remains blocked by snow and probably will remain so for another week to 10 days. Both the Ranger trail and Independence Lakes trail are open.

Ketchum campgrounds are open with water available. Trail Creek summit road is open while portions of Dollarhide road from Warm Springs to Couch summit remain snowbound. Dollarhide summit is expected to be open within another week.

Baker, Norton and Prairie Lakes are now snow free. The high lakes are beginning to thaw out. Trail conditions on the Ketchum district are improving.

Water levels in streams and area rivers are dropping but many upper streams are running fast. High elevation passes still have snow.

The Smokey Bear boat ramp at Alurus Lake will be temporarily closed beginning July 10 for a construction project. Boaters will need to remove their boats from the lake no later than July 9. The launch is expected to reopen July 12.

All SNRA campgrounds are open with full services and fees. Self-guided nature trails are available at the Wood River campground north of Ketchum and at the Redfish Lake visitor center.

The trail at Redfish Lake is accessible for the physically challenged, including wheelchairs.

Visitor centers at the SNRA and Redfish Lake offer a variety of displays, interpretive exhibits and audiovisual presentations.

All Fairfield district campground are open.

The natural hot springs pool at Baumgartner is open from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

The Big Smoky trail near Skillem hot springs remains closed for trail repair.

Biologists nabbing, tagging sturgeon

BLISS — Idaho Power biologists began this week going after Snake River white sturgeon they can catch between Bliss and C.J. Strike dams.

They're out for research, not sport.

To begin unraveling one of the river's biological mysteries, crews are using a variety of catching techniques, including fishing poles, nets and plankton screens to learn more about the prehistoric fish and its activities such as feeding and spawning.

"Over the next five months, our biologists will spend the equivalent of $1,000 fishing hours on the river," said aquatic programs supervisor Christ Randolph.

"We really would like to catch every sturgeon living on that 60-mile stretch of river. That ensures we've got the most complete information possible."

Before being released unharmed, each fish will be measured and tagged with an electronic tag and a numbered wire.

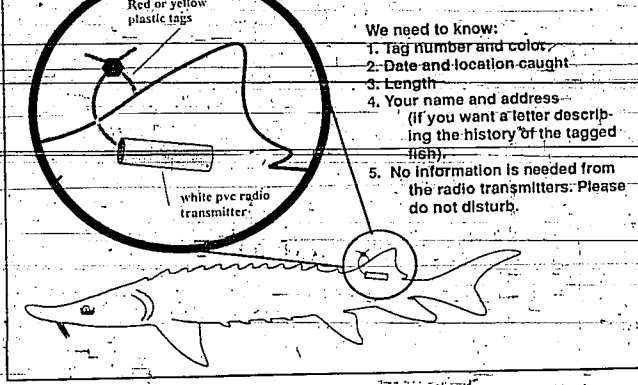

A few sexually mature sturgeon will be inoculated against infection and fitted with radio transmitters.

"The transmitters allow us to monitor the sturgeon's movements. That kind of information, particularly spawning activity, has been pretty hard to come by," said Randolph.

"We're confident our study will provide some of the most thorough information available to date on Snake River sturgeon."

Randolph expects the study to be completed by the fall of 1993.

Please examine your catch for plastic numbered tags or radio transmitters

We need to know:

1. Tag number and color.
2. Date and location caught.
3. Length.
4. Your name and address (if you want a letter describing the history of the tagged fish).
5. No information is needed from the radio transmitters. Please do not disturb.

The company's study — launched as part of its effort to relicense Bliss and Upper and Lower Salmon dams upstream from the research area — is in coordination with a larger sturgeon study being conducted by Idaho Department of Fish and Game and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Council decides gulf, Bering Sea fish allocations

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The North Pacific Fisheries Management Council decided last week how it will divvy up the pollock and cod catch in the Gulf of Alaska and the Bering Sea.

Critics of the plan said it would cost Washington state thousands of jobs.

The council set the pollock allocation for the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands at 35 percent of the total catch for shore-based processors in 1992, 40 percent in 1993 and 45 percent in 1994.

Factory trawlers would get the remainder of the catch. Pollock in the Gulf of Alaska, was entirely allotted to onshore processors, who also got 90 percent of the Gulf cod take.

Opponents of the plan said it would benefit the Japanese, who own all or part of seven onshore processing plants in Alaska. Americans, especially those in Washington state would be the losers, they said.

By one estimate, 10,000 Washington jobs are tied up in factory trawlers and support industries.

"Under the open-access system we operate in now, we were going to see bankruptcies on both sides: factory trawlers and onshore," said Steve Finley of Emeral Resources, a Seattle company that manages three factory trawlers. "This will significantly increase them in the offshore component," Finley said.

Shoreside processors counter that their plants and support industries account for more than 25,000 jobs in Washington and Alaska.

Another part of the plan that drew criticism was the definition it used for the onshore allocation that includes factory trawlers and longliners that are smaller than 125 feet and process less than 18 metric tons a day.

The council's allocation will serve as a recommendation to Commerce Secretary Robert Mospbacher, who will make the final decision on who gets what.

Left: Stephen, a former council member and president of the Kodiak-based United Fishermen's Marketing Association, questioned the definitions used. "I haven't yet analyzed what this means, but it definitely doesn't achieve our purpose of bringing the fish ashore (for processing)," said Stephen, whose group represents shore-based trawlers, longlines and pot fishermen.

gony, I don't know what is," said Fish Klahr, Idaho Conservation League salmon coordinator.

She said the fisheries service listed the Sacramento River winter chinook salmon on an emergency basis with 250 fish. Ms. Klahr questioned heavy assessments of chinook differently from the sockeye.

Fox said existing measures are ad-equated to protect the remaining sockeye through a captive breeding program at the Eagle Hatchery like the California Condor efforts.

The Sacramento River chinook, in contrast, has no protection at the time of listing, he said.

In addition, Fox said the 1992 sockeye migration will not occur until after the final decision on the species is made.

your nose, roast a Weiner, complain about mosquito bites. Profusely expound on the excellence of the kid's efforts. If you do it right, the kid will take you fishing and let you help teach the grandkids.

Perhaps the ideal rig in the Hagerman lakes and ponds for super effective access is the float tube. The small pockets and side channels tend to concentrate fish, especially in the warmer months of the Idaho Navy. A lot of spin fishermen use them, even more fly fishermen use them.

The baitcasters with level-wind reels and their beautiful boxes of gear, bait bins to leave a lot of gear behind to fish out of a float tube. It is emotionally traumatic for these guys to leave gear in the trunk or at home. They feel just plain exposed and futile without their colorful boxes of gear, crank handles, crank baits, spinners, baits, surface chiggers, Texas rigs, etc.

They need a small boat and frankly fish more effectively when they have one. It's awesome what a really good bass fisherman with the right lure at the right time can pull out of these local waters.

The nice thing about Hagerman fishing is that everyone seems to get along. They accommodate each other's rigs, styles, preferences. The waters are small and if you behave like a jerk, everyone on the pond knows.

They will probably know about you at Frog's Lilly Pad or the Red Barn in Hagerman before you get off the water and it just might affect your hangover. So be nice.

The water can be crowded, especially on the early season weekends. Weekends are typically most crowded. If you drive down and plan a couple of days camping, there are dozens of other waters to explore, some small, some with trout some like the river reservoirs — that are large enough for any hot bass and offer variety in fishing opportunity.

Sooner or later you can get on the bass and bluegill ponds for your turn.

Here are a couple of general hints as to techniques for the ponds. For bigger bass, fish very early in the day, the fish are less spooked, pressure is generally less and the mosquitoes are not as bothersome. Under cover of near dark you can fish a little longer. Catching the fish is much more effectively by the way, a swimming fish is always a bigger fish. Releasing some of those bass is a good idea in this water.

For bluegill, the best two choices are a bobber and a worm or a fly rod or very small leech patterns or dandel patterns. Surface poppers are great in white, yellow and frog, if the water is calm and not disturbed by too many previous fishermen.

Fish right to the bull, just before most of the time. Occasionally really caught fish are very hot weather, fish deep in the deepest part of the lake, espe-

The forest contains about 150 of the 440 known pairs of spotted owls in Washington national forests. The Gifford Pinchot, which straddles both-sides of the Cascades, has about 120 — The rest are in the Olympic Mount Baker-Snoqualmie and Okanogan national forests.

There are about 6,000 owl pairs in Washington, Oregon and Northern California. There are about 3,000 on federal lands, with the rest in state, Indian and private lands.

Mercury in Boise's Middle Fork could reach dangerous levels in fish

ATLANTA — Tests conducted by the Department of Health and Welfare show that fish from the Middle Fork of the Boise River could pose health risks in coming months because of mercury levels.

"At this point, the mercury does not exceed the federal healthy standard for fish but we will continue monitoring because it could accumulate to hazardous levels over the next year," said Pat McGavran, state toxicologist.

McGavran said at current levels there should be no adverse effect from eating one or two servings of the fish per week for most people.

Mercury ranged from .18 to .44 parts per million in whitefish and rainbow trout tested at the Kirby Dam, Queens River and Dutch Creek.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration issues warnings at one part per million and some experts believe levels of .5 are unhealthy. Mercury consumed in fish may damage the nervous system. Pregnant women, nursing babies and children under 6 are especially sensitive, McGavran said.

Lab tests also have shown arsenic in the river exceeding federal drinking water standards. Health officials advise people not to use the water for drinking or cooking because arsenic cannot be removed by water treatment tablets.

Biologist doubts wolves being planted

HAVRE, Mont. (AP) — A U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist says he doesn't believe rumors that wolves have been purposely planted near Harlem and Malta.

But if that's the case, Ed Bangs wants to know. Not only would the act be illegal, chances are that the so-called wolves actually are "wolf hybrids," said Bangs. Wolf hybrids, dogs that are part wolf, can't survive in the wild and have been known to attack people, he said.

Hank Fisher of Missoula, a representative of the Defenders of Wildlife, said he also has heard rumors that wolves have been planted in the Malta area. "Wolf hysteria is sweeping across the plains," he said.

He said the rumor was that U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service personnel released the animals and then monitored them from a helicopter for several days.

"I know of no government agency that would plant wolves in that part of the world," Bangs said.

He said that in a few isolated cases, wolves have wandered down from Canada onto the Hi-Line. But as far as he knows, the last time that happened was 14 years ago, when a wolf was spotted near Glasgow.

"That doesn't mean any haven't been dumped off in the area in recent months, though," he said.

He noted that last month, a Tennessee man was caught releasing two wolf hybrids in Glacier Park.

The man was fined $1,000 and given 30 days to find homes for the animals.

Bangs, the project leader for wolf recovery in Montana, said if there have been some wolves or wolf hybrids released along the Hi-Line, it had to have been done by a private organization or individuals.

While the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is embroiled in controversy over the reintroduction of wolves in Yellowstone National Park, "We have no plans of wolf restoration in eastern Montana," he added.

Market responds to Japanese stock losses by drop of its own

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market fell sharply Wednesday, beset by new worries about Japanese stock prices and bank-run problems in this country.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks which had climbed 65.97 points in the week's first two sessions, dropped back 38.02 points to 2,924.70.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Stock prices in Tokyo fell 2.6 percent overnight, resuming their recent slide after a brief rally earlier in the week.

Analysts said that helped touch off a sharp drop at the opening on Wall Street. As the session progressed in New York, prices steadied and volume tapered off on the eve of Thursday's Independence Day holiday.

The markets will be open on Friday, but activity that day is expected to be extremely light, with many business offices closing down for a long holiday weekend.

U.S. stocks have been following a zigzag course of late, registering a large measure of uncertainty about the outlook for interest rates and corporate profits.

Though the economy seems to have rebounded from the recession in the past couple of months, many analysts have warned that midyear earnings reports from many companies may well be disappointing.

Investors also have concerned with a new batch of unsettling news from the banking industry. Security Pacific Corp. announced a widened reserve for loan losses and estimated sharply lower earnings for the second quarter.

Security Pacific shares dropped 11.10 percent to $29.125, the most active stock on the Big Board issue, fell 2 to 39 1/2 in the wake of those developments.

Wells Fargo, traded as high as a record 98 1/2 this spring before a company announcement of increased loan-loss reserves and lower estimated second-quarter profits sent them tumbling.

Though activity focused particularly on West-Coast bank issues, other big bank stocks encountered some selling as well.

J.P. Morgan Chase & 1st, Chemical Bank & Trust, and Manhattan & M., and Manufacturers Hanover & T.

Among the blue chips included Washington Electric, down 1/2 at 27 3/4; Merck, down 2 1/2 at 117 1/4; American Express, down 3 1/2 at 22 1/2; Philip Morris, down 3/4 at 65 1/2; and Exxon, down 1/4 at 57 3/4.

Tyco Toys, traded in the over-the-counter market, climbed 2 1/2 to 20 1/4. The company agreed to buy back stock from a family group in exchange for 10 percent of its shares.

Apple Computer rose 1/4 to 4 3/4 in OTC trading, while International Business Machines dropped 1/2 to 9 1/4.

The two companies announced plans for joint ownership of a new computer software company.

Microsoft fell 4 1/2 to 64 on the prospect of stepped-up competition from that venture.

The NYSE took a new step in its bid to regain the part of the business in its listed stocks that has migrated to overseas markets in recent years.
